Mr. Massey: It is the other way; the British Government take three-quarters of New Zealand's loss.

Sir Robert Horne: Mr. Hughes is going to take a quarter. That is the best way, I think. You take a quarter of New Zealand, and we take a half of New Zealand and a half of Canada.

Mr. Hughes: That is the figure I said, £830,000 something.

Sir Thomas Smartt: Then you come to the question whether we come in at all in this, because I do not know. I see you dividing the bear's skin in this extraordinary manner. I do not know whether we have a claim which, I have no doubt, the Chancellor would be glad to meet.

Reparations.

Suggested basis for all remaining items.

Sir Robert Horne: Mr. Meighen asked how we arrived at these figures of distribution which are in this conglomerate table, the one which gives the 4 and the 4. New Zealand 1·6. Now, if you look at this large sheet you will get in the last column the figures upon which we have made adjustments. I tell you how we do this. Separation allowances are measured according to the amounts actually paid in separation. It is a known figure, practically speaking, as distinct from pensions. We know what we have done in separation allowances, and the United Kingdom, having more of the married people, their percentage is enormously greater than the others.

Damage to property, non-maritime, including damage to civil persons. We get the bulk of that, and I do not think there is any real question of controversy there.

Losses on Shipping. Hulls.

On shipping hulls there was a question arose practically with Canada, as between Australia and the United Kingdom, and New Zealand and South Africa and the United Kingdom there was no difficulty. The calculation is based upon the port of registry of the vessels. Canada, I think, rather questioned that principle, and maintained that it ought to be according to the domicile of the company. That gave rise to horrible difficulties, because if you take your company it is composed of people of varied races and varied climates and varied nationalities. You get, as the list of the owners of a ship, people who are all over various countries, and therefore you could not really arrive at any way——

Mr. Meighen: The shareholders, but not the company.

Sir Robert Horne: I agree, but the only ground for taking the domicile of the company is because the shareholders are the people who have got the beneficial interest but in point of fact, in a company you have the people getting the beneficial interest spread all over. If you take some of these companies that one knows of—the White Star, for instance—a great many of the people would be American.

Mr. Meighen: What are you taking?

Sir Robert Horne: The port of registry of the vessel.

Mr. Meighen: The Canadian Pacific register the vessel here. That would be your loss, not ours.

Sir Robert Horne: Certainly, if they register the vessel here, and the reason why a vessel is registered here is that then all the obligations owed by that vessel are owed by the country with which she is registered—all the obligations to the crew, &c. Suppose the crew are entitled to workmen's compensation; it is at the port of registry, for the most part, that the crew is obtained, they are collected there, and it is there that the obligation is owed to them. It means that the country that is supposed to get the compensation is the country that is under obligation to the ship and her crew. That is where the obligations lie, and that is the basis upon which we have gone, so far as shipping hulls are concerned. I ought to say this, also, that the Reparations Commission has adopted, after consideration and deliberation, the basis of the port registry. They have done that on their own, without any consultation with us.

Shipping cargoes—I think there is no difficulty about that at all. All cargoes, of course, are the property of the people with whom they arrive. That is the basis upon which the total of distribution has been arrived at.

Damage to property.

Mr. Meighen: Did you include damage to property? I see Canada is 1 per cent. Does this include the 30 million dollars loss at Halifax.

Mr. Fass: It depends upon whether it is a loss accepted by the Reparations Commission. These are the figures of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Meighen: Who set up the Reparations Commission?

Mr. Fass: They are under the Treaty of Versailles. The British representative is Sir John Bradbury.

Mr. Meighen: Who was the Canadian representative?

Sir Robert Horne: There is only one for the whole Empire.

Mr. Meighen: Does he decide between us and you?

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Reparations.

Mr. Fass: He did not decide. The Reparations Commission decided. They are an Allied body.

Mr. Meighen: He treated it as a war loss?

Mr. Fass: All your claims were sent to the Board of Trade, the Reparations Claims Department, and this table is merely an addition of the various claims which we sent in as falling within this Treaty and distributed again in proportion. It is mainly, of course, air raid losses and that sort of thing.

Mr. Meighen: I do not see why air raid losses——

Mr. Fass: It is only 1 per cent. of the whole total.

Mr. Meighen: Ours is nothing.

Mr. Fass: Look at the front page of the first document. It only represents 1 per cent. of the total claims. Pensions, 58 per cent.; Separation Allowances, 12 per cent. There is very little in it in any case.

Mr. Meighen: What was coming to my mind, chiefly, was this. You are only getting a part of your loss, a very small fraction in any event, but in the way you have calculated that, are not you getting the whole of that class of loss which you have suffered: Damage to Property, Shipping Hulls and so forth? You are virtually getting the whole thing.

Sir Robert Horne: What was that, again, about Halifax?

Mr. Meighen: A ship carrying T.N.T. collided with another ship. We spent about 30,000,000 dollars. Who would have argued it for us?

Mr. Fass: Sir John Bradbury.

Mr. Meighen: It would not make any difference to him.

Mr. Fass: Oh, but it was part of the British Empire.

Sir Robert Horne: For example, the "Bulwark" blew up, when lying in the Thames. We could not get anything for that.

Mr. Fass: It depends entirely whether it is within the Treaty or not.

Mr. Meighen: In adding those percentages, do not you see the effect? You are getting nearly the whole claim, whereas here we only get a fraction of it. Would it not be fairer to add the total losses in everything, the total capitalised losses in everything, and then take your percentage?

Sir Robert Horne: From an actuarial point of view, is there any difference?

Sir Alfred Watson: It comes to precisely the same thing.

Australian Shipping Losses.

Mr. Hughes: May I say a word about shipping losses? I do not want to labour the question, but you are aware of the circumstances of Australia during the war. We detached the greater part of our coastal tonnage, and I think some 250,000 to 300,000 tons of our overseas shipping, and these were handed over to the British Government for Imperial purposes. We lost nine vessels—I mean the Government—and if you take the distribution of reparation in respect of shipping on the basis of the port of registry, that would be prejudicial to our right to claim the special consideration which our circumstances demand. I want to know exactly where we stand in regard to all tonnage that we have, ex-enemy and otherwise, whether, in agreeing to this 4 per cent. which you have suggested, we can claim in addition for our shipping losses, or whether the latter are covered by the 4 per cent.

You will understand, we have claims for 300,000 tons of shipping. I do not want to labour the question, but it is of great importance to us. As you are aware, we had to sell our freights for very much less than the world's rates, and we were very severely penalised by reason of our remoteness.

If we agree to this 4 per cent. and we find there are claims unsatisfied and made by anybody—it does not matter who they are—then, I say, I shall be in a most unfortunate position. I cannot say: "This figure has been agreed upon." Supposing I am confronted with this table of 7·84—I think it is—and they say: "Why did you agree to 4 per cent. of 22 per cent. of 16,000,000,000 gold marks?"—that is what I think it is. I should reply: "Because it is the basis on which payment for the Army of Occupation was made." That is one answer; but if, on the other hand, I have an unsatisfied claim, I cannot stand up in Parliament and defend it because I have agreed really to cut in half, or nearly cut in half, the Australian share of the reparation claims under Table 1, Column C, so I would like to know where we stand in regard to that.

Reparations.

Sir Robert Horne: So far as this matter is concerned, Mr. Hughes, it would relate solely to general compensations and entirely exclude the ships which Germany gave up.

Mr. Jenkins: They are, of course, being distributed and being allocated between the various parts of the Empire in respect to tonnage. This is the distribution of money and not of ships.

Mr. Hughes: I know.

Sir Robert Horne: This is a distribution not in regard to any particular losses, you see, because it does not meet particular losses. It is only a division of a rough figure that we have arrived at as between France, Belgium, Italy and ourselves. It is not really an assessment of compensation—not really. When we put down ship hulls, we only put that down as a kind of guide of what we have actually lost, so that I do not think this fund can be looked upon as something you are going to use for the purpose of compensating particular individuals at all. On the other hand, there are German ships to which you are entitled undoubtedly, and I imagine you would use these in making such compensations as might be thought necessary to make to individuals.

Mr. Hughes: Well, I want to make the position quite clear. When the war broke out, the United Kingdom and every other part of the Empire and other Allied Powers seized a certain number of enemy ships. During the war, a number of these stayed in the ports of the United States of America. While we were discussing peace terms, the United States of America took these ships. I think it is fair to say they took them without regard to the Treaty—at any rate, it was independent of any allocation under the Treaty. All that I am anxious to make clear is this, we suffered very heavy losses, much heavier losses than the Dominions nearer at hand, by reason of our remoteness and of our failure to sell our goods at market rates. Does this (1) prejudice our claim for ex-enemy ships—the further allocation of ex-enemy ships; and (2) does it constitute a quittance by the United Kingdom by any authority, judicial or otherwise, of that tonnage that we took from the enemy? These are the two points on which I want some information.

Sir Robert Horne: Can you answer that question, Mr. Jenkins?

Mr. Jenkins: The ships were divided amongst the Allies in proportion to the losses, that is to say, when the prizes within their ports had been subtracted from their losses. Australia, I think, detained about 90,000 tons of shipping, and her losses were, I think, 27,000, or something very small, at any rate.

Mr. Hughes: I do not admit that.

Mr. Jenkins: I will give you the exact figures—it may be 40,000, but I think it was a great deal less, and so Australia was written to and it was suggested that she had only a claim on the other ships. If she had any claim for her losses, it would be adjusted out of the 90,000 tons that she had detained in her ports, and so that was how the matter was left.

Mr. Hughes: Well, it was settled, of course, without reference to us.

Mr. Jenkins: No, no. You were written to—at least, I mean to the Government.

Mr. Hughes: I assure you I never heard of it, and, as I am the Minister in special charge of this, it could not have been decided without my knowledge.

Sir Robert Horne: I think, Mr. Hughes, it is irrelevant to this particular thing. Because I mean, whatever be the claims otherwise for compensations or for a portion of ex-enemy ships, this is outside of that. This really is not compensation on any particular item at all. It only happens that, in order to arrive at some sort of basis for distribution amongst ourselves, we took what in general we may be assumed to have lost—at least, the ratio may be assumed amongst ourselves. This is not compensation for any particular thing; this is only what Germany says in general reparations that we are to get.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Reparations.

Mr. Hughes: Yes.

Mr. Jenkins: I would explain one point. The ships you were speaking of were given under what was called reparation in kind. Now, this reparation under that clause is really only in the nature of a food ticket.

Mr. Hughes: What?

Mr. Jenkins: Really like a food ticket that was given during the war for rations. That is to say, if you get ships, you have to pay for them out of your reparation claim, so that any part of the British Dominions who have got ships in that way have the value of those ships deducted from the money payments that are made them by Germany, you see. It is settled against their share of money payments.

Mr. Meighen: This German reparation in kind, that comes off the total indemnity?

Mr. Hughes: After being credited with the actual shipping losses, is that it?

Mr. Jenkins: Supposing that Great Britain—we will say—is given a particular ship as a part of the reparation for its shipping losses.

Mr. Hughes: Well.

Mr. Jenkins: That is settled against Great Britain, who has to pay, in effect, money for the ship.

Sir Thomas Smartt: It is credited with the value.

Sir Robert Horne: Yes.

Mr. Hughes: On what basis is it debited—on the pre-war value, or the present value?

Mr. Jenkins: It is the present value.

Mr. Hughes: Debited on the present value?

Mr. Jenkins: Quite so.

Mr. Hughes: Are losses credited to us on the pre-war value or on the present value?

Mr. Jenkins: The losses were claimed for originally on the Norwegian market values.

Mr. Hughes: The market value at the time of the loss?

Mr. Jenkins: Yes, but as you know, no details of the claims of losses were given by the Reparation Commission, and it is not possible now to say by how much the shipping claim was reduced.

Mr. Hughes: Let me see if I have got it right. This is without prejudice to any claims that we may have in regard to ex-German ships?

Mr. Jenkins: That is it.

Mr. Hughes: Those German ships that were seized by us at the outbreak of war will be debited against our reparation claim, and the 4 per cent. Is that it?

Mr. Jenkins: No; the ships you took (I think they have not gone into the Prize Court yet), but the corresponding British ships that came into the Prize Court have been deducted as prizes so that there is no debit in the reparation account.

Sir Robert Horne: You have this in your pocket without any disadvantage to any of your claims.

Mr. Jenkins: What I was speaking of were ships that Germany has handed over.

Mr. Hughes: Handed over now?

Mr. Jenkins: Yes.

Mr. Hughes: If we get any of those it comes out of our reparation claim on present value?

Mr. Jenkins: That is right.

Reparations.

Mr. Hughes: I understand.

Mr. Meighen: We have none at all.

Mr. Jenkins: You decided not to have any.

Mr. Meighen: Those we got we keep. We did not keep any.

Mr. Jenkins: I think you have one in Canada yet.

Mr. Massey: Have you got any for me?

Mr. Meighen: Was it not principally good fortune where the ships happened to be?

Sir Robert Horne: It happened there were none in Australia, I think.

Mr. Hughes: I do not know how many.

Mr. Meighen: I say on the principle you apply to the Army of Occupation account, you should average the ships that happen to be in your ports, that you should average them for the benefit of the rest of the Dominions.

Mr. Hughes: Germany was not able to say: "Go here or go there."

Mr. Massey: I think that is quite fair.

Mr Meighen: It was only a matter of accident.

Mr. Hughes: No, it was a matter of Providence.

Mr. Meighen: You should not have mentioned that on the same day as the Army of Occupation.

Mr. Massey: I think we had better revive this and see what can be done even now.

A general basis for settlement desirable.

Sir Robert Horne: Can we come to a conclusion upon this general basis? I will tell you the suggestion I will make. Britain's figure at the present time is 87·9. I propose to distribute that point nine (·9) amongst the other claims.

Mr. Massey: What document is that?

Sir Robert Horne: 87·9, and I think it would bring out a fairer proportion in regard to other portions of the Empire if Canada was to get 4·35 and Australia 4·35—that is increasing their proportions slightly—and India 1·2. I think it is a fair distribution, Mr. Massey, between New Zealand, Australia and Canada.

Mr. Massey: Honestly, I do not see much wrong with this.

India and the Army of Occupation.

Mr. Montagu: I want to put to you one consideration that we are entitled to bring into account, relating to the Army of Occupation. We have no claim under the Army of Occupation. How does that arise? It arises from the fact that the "Powers that be" decided that our armies, instead of going to Germany, should go to Palestine; they are still there, and are fighting there. We are still incurring liabilities for their pensions. If we had been lucky and you had wanted some Indian troops in Berlin, there would have been no fighting, and yet we should have got something under the Army of Occupation basis.

Sir Thomas Smartt: Some of our troops also went to Palestine. We are in the same position.

Mr. Montagu: But you have got them home, and we have not.

Sir Robert Horne: You have a paper provision in the Turkish Treaty.

Mr. Montagu: Yes, but you know what that is worth. I will give you that over. If you will put me on the same basis as New Zealand I will give you my claim on the Turkish Army of Occupation.

Sir Robert Horne: I propose giving India 1·2 per cent.

Indian Pensions should, if possible, be increased.

Mr. Montagu: I think that is low. I make two claims and I will leave it at that. The first is a claim in regard to the Army of Occupation, for their army is still in Turkey. The second claim is a point I put to you before, that I had hoped to be able to afford out of this to increase their pensions. We are really being penalised in this matter because of the poverty of the people. Our taxable people have got an

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Reparations.

actual average income of 60 rupees, so that there is not much margin for taxation. Therefore, our pensions are very low, and we are suffering for it. If we could get a little more we could put the pensions up. I hope you will realise that point. This will not all go to the Indian Government. I have to take something off it to pay the native States for their Imperial service expenditure. That has to come out of it as well.

Mr. Meighen: What is the value of the ships that were impounded in Australian waters?

Mr. Massey: Half a million.

Suggestion that Great Britain and India should make a separate settlement.

Sir Robert Horne: I do not know whether it is a feasible proposition, but I think we know rather less about the Indian scheme than we know about any others, for the reason that Mr. Montagu has given, that things are going on still so far as India is concerned, which although the United Kingdom is in them, the other Dominions are out of. Perhaps Mr. Montagu will be satisfied if I said that, as between him and the United Kingdom, I would be willing to reconsider with him any facts which he can bring forward. The Secretary of State for India is always here, but you other gentlemen have to go away in the course of time. We can adjust those things as between ourselves without altering the proportions of anybody else. If India was to get anything extra it would come off the United Kingdom share alone. How does that strike you?

Mr. Montagu: Your suggestion is that I should take your 1·2 per cent. for the present and take my chance?

Sir Robert Horne: You will not get less, obviously. Then in those circumstances the Table will be as follows:—

United Kingdom	...	87·00% (eighty-seven per cent.).
Minor colonies...	...	·80% (point eighty per cent.).
Canada ...	...	4·35% (four point thirty-five per cent.).
Australia ...	...	4·35% („ „ „).
New Zealand ...	...	1·60% (one point sixty per cent.).
South Africa ...	...	·60% (point sixty per cent.).
Newfoundland	...	·10% (point ten per cent.).
India ...	...	1·2 % (one point two per cent.).

Mr. Meighen: I guess I can give up all hope of those ships.

Mr. Massey: There are three very fine ships. I think Canada should have one, New Zealand one and Australia one.

Sir Robert Horne: The Table as it now stands settles everything. It would have been a great misfortune if we had had to say that we had been incapable of settling it.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W., July 13, 1921.

APPENDIX.

Distribution of British Empire Reparation Receipts.

The following Table for apportionment of total receipts is suggested as an alternative to the Table proposed:—

——	As Proposed.	Now Suggested.	Difference.
United Kingdom	88·16	87·90	— ·26
Minor colonies	·77	·80	+ ·03
Canada	3·88	4·00	+ ·12
Australia	4·04	4·00	— ·04
New Zealand	1·57	1·60	+ ·03
South Africa	·55	·60	+ ·05
Newfoundland	·10	·10
India	·93	1·00	+ ·07
	100·00	100·00

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62212 E-1302-3

OFFICE OF
THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE
FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
CANADA.
E.T.

Memorandum for Mr.Beaudry.

With reference to the Prime Minister's wishes respecting the Order of the House of Commons for papers relating to the Conference of Prime Ministers in 1921, I desire to say that as regards the confidential despatches (though of course not their enclosures, which are very voluminous), they can be ready in a day or two after the necessary authority is received for their production.

As regards the non-confidential portion of this correspondence, I have given instructions to have it placed in the hands of the copyists at once. As in the case of the secret papers, the enclosures are very voluminous, and would take a long time to copy, but copies of the despatches themselves can be ready by tomorrow noon.

O.K

Ottawa,20th June,1922

J. Pope

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62213

E-1302-3

Secret portion of Return to

ORDER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

dated 24th April,1922, asking for copy of all correspondence,letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the British and Canadian Governments, leading up to and concerning the Conference of Prime Ministers

in 1921.

(not laid on Table.)

Ottawa,21st June,1922

J.B.S.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62214

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

MEMORANDUM

July 24. 1923

MR. KING:

The Acting Auditor General, Mr. Kearns, reports that there is no record of any official press correspondent's expenses being defrayed by the Government on the Imperial Conference trip with Mr. Meighen. Mr. Kearns said such expenses might have been paid out of either Mr. Meighen's or Mr. Ballantyne's total expenses; but there is no way that he wouldknow of this because the Ministers do not give details of their travelling expenses. Mr. Keamns stated that there was no vote for a press correspondent on Mr. Meighen's trip; and that the various amounts of travelling expenses were charged to the Contingencies of Mr.Meighen's & Mr.Ballantyne's Departments.

WHM

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 52215 E-1302-3 vol. 3 -(a)

PRELIMINARY LIST OF BOOKS GOING TO ENGLAND

Superceded for Imperial Conference of 1923

The Secret of Heroism	3
Industry and Humanity	6
Four Parties to Industry	12
The Making of a Premier	6
Life of William Lyon Mackenzie	2
The Battle with Tuberculosis	2
Nerves and Personal Power	4
Canada and the Navy	6
Canada as a Field for British Branch Industries	2
Map of Canada - British Empire Forestry Conference	1
Bentley's Complete Phrase Code with Appendix	1
The Treaty of Peace between The Allied and Associated Powers and Germany	1
Ottawa Telephone Directory	1
The Development of the British Empire	1
Conference on the Limitation of Armament held at Washington. Report of the Canadian Delegate - Sir Robert Borden	1
Copies of Halibut Treaty Correspondence	20
Copies of Genoa Conference	12
Copies of the Message of Liberalism	15
Parliamentary Guide	1
Canadian Almanac	1
Copies of Ewart's Canada and Foreign Wars	4
Corrected list of Members of Senate and House of Commons	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Books Cont'd

Copies of Sir Robert Borden's "The British Commonwealth of Nations".	2
Copies of the handbook on the "League of Nations"	3
Copies of Mr. Meighen's "Overseas Addresses"	2
Houses of Parliament, Ottawa, Canada	1
Dodd's Parliamentary Companion	1
Discours de Sir Wilfrid Laurier - 1871-1909	1
Copies of the "Contemporary Review" containing an article by W.P.M. Kennedy on "Canada and the Imperial Conference"	4
Who's Who	1
Who's Who in Canada	1
Copies of Grand Trunk Railway replies	50
Who's Who Year Book - 1917	1
Liberal Year Book for 1916	1
Life and Letters of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Vol. 2	1
Laurier, A Study in Canadian Politics	1
Oversea Addresses	2
House of Commons Debates, Ottawa, Friday May 20,1921	1
House of Commons Debates, 1922 Edition	1
5,000 Facts about Canada	1
International Conciliation Canada	1
Commerce and Natural Resources -Canada	1
The Canada Year Book 1918	1
Canada's War Effort 1914-1918	1
Canada and the Peace	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Books Cont'd

Canada at War	1
Canada and the Navy	1
The Future of Canada	1
Canadian Club Addresses 1917-18	1
Au Canada	1
Report of the Department of Immigration & Colonization for the Fiscal year ended March 31,1922	1
Publications of the Natural Resources Intelligence Servi ce	1
Dominion of Canada	1
Canada Descriptive Atlas	1
Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, June 12,1923	1
Budget Speech, by Hon.W.S. Fielding, House of Commons, May 11, 1923	1
Canada Estimates for the Fiscal year ending March 31, 1924	1
Public Accounts for Fiscal year ending March 31,1922	1
Report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the year ending March 31, 1922,1921,1920	1
Report of the Department of Naval Service for fiscal year ended March 31, 1922, 1921, 1920	1
Conference on the Limitation of Armament held at Washington November 12, 1921 to February 6, 1922.	1
The Canadian Historical Review, Vol.3 No. 1,March 1922	1
The Immigration Problem in the United States	1
After the War, 1920-1922	1
Canada - The Customs Tariff 1907 and Amendments with Index to - July 1, 1922	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Books Cont'd

Canada as a Field for British Branch Industries	1
Sixth Annual Report of the United States Tariff Commission, 1922	1
Introductory Survey of Colonial Tariff Policies	1
Imperial War Conference, 1917. Extracts from Minutes of Proceedings and Papers laid before the Conference, 1918.	1
Imperial War Cabinet, 1917, 1918	1
Conference of Prime Ministers & Representatives of the United Kingdom, The Dominions, and India, held in June, July and August 1921	2
Imperial Meetings 1921, Vol. 1 and 2	1
The Spirit of the Saar Statute & the Execution of the same by the Governing Commission	1
Treaty of Peace with Turkey and the Instruments signed at Lausanne on July 24, 1923	1
The Monetary Times 1923	1
Germany's Capacity to pay	1
The Million Dollar Diamond	1
Sea Power in the Pacific	1
Imperial Copyright Conference 1910	1
Further Correspondence relating to the Imperial Conference	1
Correspondence relating to the Imperial Conference 1911	1
Minutes of Proceedings of the Imperial Conference,1911	1
Papers laid before the Conference	1
Papers laid before the Imperial Conference, Naval and Military Defence	1
Precis of the Proceedings	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Books Cont'd

Papers laid before the Colonial Conference 1907	1
Minutes of proceedings of the Colonial Conference,1907	1
Correspondence and Papers relating to A Conference with Representatives of the Self-Governing Dominions on the Naval and Military Defence of the Empire 1909	1
Official Year Book of the Commonwealth of Australia No. 15, 1922	1
The Pomp of Power	1
Relations between France and Germany. A Report by Henri Lichtenberger	1
Official Year Book of the Union of South Africa1910-21	1
Foreign Affairs, March 15, 1923	1
Foreign Affairs, December 15, 1922	1
Tariff Information Surveys on the Articles in Para.322 of the Tariff Act of 1913	1
List of Principal Subjects investigated and reported upon by the United States Tariff Commission	1
Reciprocity with Canada. A Study of the Arrangement of 1911	1
The Relation of the Tariff on Sugar to the Rise in Price of February-April 1923	1
Agricultural Staples and the Tariff	1
Parliamentary Debates, August 2, 1923	1
The Stateman's Year Book 1923	1
Parliamentary Debates, August 4, 1923	1
Labour Legialtion in Canada 1920-1921-1922	1
Colonial and Imperial Conferences 1887-1911	1
The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, May 1923	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Books Cont'd

Dominions Royal Commission Final Report	1
Independence Papers, Ottawa 1921	1
The Round Table, June 1923	1
Report on Foreign Affairs for months of May & June 1923	1
Colonial Conference, 1902, June to August	1
Journal of the Parliaments of the Empire, Vol. 4,No. 1 January 1923, April 1923.	1
Report on the Commercial, Industrial and Financial Situation in Japan, 1922 and up to June 30, 1923	1
The Canadian Bank of Commerce Year Book, Vol.3, 1922	1
The British Dominions Year Book 1923	1
New Zealand Official Year Book 1921-22	1

From Mr. King's Library:

Catalogue of Library.
Industrial Representation Plans (152)
Industrialism vs. Militarism - Mackenzie King (513)
The Naval Question (327)
Canada and the United States (84)
Liberal Pamphlets 1912-15 (303)
Laurier (297)
The Liberal Party and the Tariff (210)
Notes of Speeches - Mackenzie King (504)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62221

List of Books taken by A.G. Doughty.

for Imperial Conference 1923.

1.A permanent League of Nationa. Sir Geo. Paish.
2. A Short History of the Great War. A.F. Pollard.
3. League or War. Irving Fisher.
4. Canadian Almanac. 1923.
5. Whittaker Almanac.1923.
6 History of Canada. Wrong.
7. Canadian Constitutional Studies. Borden
8 British Empire and World's Peace. Rowell
9 Industrial and Commercial History of England. Rogers.
10 Canada's Future. Victor.

---

11. Canada Year Book.1921.
12. Sixth Census of Canada.
13. Constitution of Canada. Kennedy
14. How Canada is governed. Bourinot.
15 The Friends of England.Peel
16. Self Government in Canada. Bradshaw.
17. Canadian Constitutional Development. Egerton & Grant
18 Federation and Union within the British Empire. Egerton.
19 Documents of the Canadian Constitution 1759-1915. Kennedy
20 Political Annals of Canada. Cockburn.
21 History of North America. Munro.
22. Progress od Canada in the 19th Century
23. British Supremacy and Canadian Self Government. Morrison.
24 Annual Review.
25 Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy.(To be obtained in London).
26 A complete set of the Publications of the Natural Resources Intelligence Service. (Sent to England.)
27 5 vols of Public Speeches.
28 The Real Canadian.
29.Where there is no Peace.
30 Canadian Cities of Romance.
31 The Prime Ministers of Britain.
32 A history of European Nations.
33. A Revision of the Treaty
34 Labrador.
35 The Safety of the Nation.
36 Things New and Old. 6
" " 5
" " 4
37. Modern Studies
38. Douglas Present Discontents.
39. The League of Nations. Grey
40 League of Nations and Labour.

Leg. of Canada & Lib. Provincial.
asked for in both.
also Fulford Comms.
Families & Debates

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62222

E-1302-3

Imperial Conference 1923

LIST OF CONTENTS OF BOXES.
Material r Stationery.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62223

CONTENTS OF CASES

Box	Contents	Disposition
No. 1.	Stationery	Hold
No. 2.	Stationery	Hold
No. 3.	Stationery	Hold
No. 4.	Reference Books	Cabin 288
No. 5.	Mr. King's Books Stationery	Hold
No. 6.	Mr. Coat's Books	Hold
No. 7.	Correspondence	Cabin 101
No. 8.	Correspondence	Cabin 332
Black Box Square.	Mr. Kings material, books obtained at the last minute, and sundry items.	Cabin 61U

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62224

LIST OF STATIONERY IN

BOX No. 1.

ENVELOPES : Prime Minister's Office:

250	10½ x 4⅛	-	Red Crest.
1,000	9 x 4	-	" "
250	9 x 4	-	Blind Embossed.
50	9 x 4	-	Red Crest - - - French.
50	8¼ x 5¼	-	" "
50	5⅝ x 4⅛	-	" "
50	" x "	-	Blind Embossed.
500	5½ x 4½	-	Red Crest.
250	" x "	-	Blind Embossed.
500	" x "	-	" " - Crest Only.
250	" x "	-	Plain.

Privy Council:

25	9 x 4	-	English.
25	" x "	-	French .
25	5½ x 4½	-	English.
25	5⅝ x 4⅛	-	French .

PAPER:

1,500 - Lettersize Onion Skin - Glazed.
750 - " Red Crest

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62225

LIST OF STATIONERY IN

BOX No. 2

PAPER:

Foolscap size:
- 2,000 - Onion Skin - Glazed
- 500 - Chaldean Vellum - Plain
- 250 - " " - Blind Embossed
- 250 - " " - Red Crest
- 250 - " " - " " - French.
- 500 - Azure - Plain

Letter size:
- 500 - Chaldean Vellum - Blind Embossed
- 500 - " " - " " - Crest Only.
- 500 - " " - Plain
- 250 - Azure - "
- 750 - Chaldean Vellum - " - Punched 3 holes.
- 500 - Onion Skin - Glazed - " " "

- 50 - Privy Council - English.
- 50 - " " - French
- 50 - " " - Second sheets.

- 50 - Secretary of State for External Affairs.
- 50 - do. - Second sheets.

- 1,000 - Clipping sheets.

Note:
- 125 - Chaldean Vellum - Red Crest.
- 375 - " " - Blind Embossed.
- 500 - " " - " " - Crest Only.
- 500 - " " - Plain.

- 25 - Envelopes, 8½ x 6½ - Red Crest.
- 50 - " - Strong linen.

- 50 - Blotters.
- 36 - Small Memorandum Pads.
- 10 - Large " "

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62226

LIST OF STATIONERY IN

BOX No. 3

1,000	-	Azure Note (With Mr. Mackenzie King's Compliments).
1,000	-	Cards - W. L. Mackenzie King, Laurier House, Ottawa.
300	-	" - W. L. Mackenzie King - (only)
300	-	" - Prime Minister of Canada-----English
100	-	" - " " " " -----French.
40	-	Correspondence Guides.
12	-	Dockets. not there
24	-	Foolscap Folders.
12	-	Filing Pockets - 1¾" Expansion.
12	-	" " - 3 " "
12	-	Pairs Foolscap size Covers.
24	-	Pairs Blue Clipping Covers.
20	-	Large Memorandum Pads.
4	-	Foolscap Pads - ruled.
6	-	Lettersize Pads-, plain.
1	-	6 x 4 Filing Cabinet, with alphabetical index.
500	-	6 x 4 Cards.
24	-	Pencils - Venus H.B.
2	-	Sticks Sealing Wax.
6	-	Typewriters erasers.
6	-	Pencil erasers.
6	-	Typewriter Ribbons - light inked.
1	-	Shannon Punch.
1	-	Hand Punch.
2	-	Scissors.
2	-	Cico Paste.
2	-	Balls of Twine.
20	-	Boxes Paper Clips - Large.
10	-	" " " - Small.
9	-	" Star Paper Fasteners.
1	-	Box Paper Clamps.
2	-	Boxes Rubber Bands - long thin; strong.
3	-	Boxes Pen nibs.
1	-	Box Refills for Eversharp Pencils.
2 Doz.	-	Laces - long.
2 "	-	" - short.
1 Pkge	-	Blank Gummed Index Tabs.
		Adhesive Strips - Blue, Buff, and yellow.
200	-	Memo Cards.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62227

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF BOOKS

In

BOX No. 4.

	No. of Copies.
Au Canada	1
Agricultural Staples and the Tariff	1
Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, May 1923.	1
British Commonwealth of Nations by Sir R. Borden	2
Bentley's Complete Phrase Code with Appendix	1
British Dominions Year Book 1923.	1
Canada and the Navy	6
Canada and Foreign Wars - Ewart's	4
Canada as a Field for British Branch Industries	2
Canada Year Books : 1914; 1916-17; 1918; 1921.	4
Canada's War Effort 1914-1918	1
Canada and the Peace	1
Canada at War	1
Canada, The Future of	1
Canada - The Customs Tariff 1907 and Amendments with Index - July 1, 1922.	1
Canada Estimates for the Fiscal year ending Mar. 31/24.	1
Canada Descriptive Atlas	1
Canada, Dominion of	1
Canada	1
Canada, 5,000 Facts about	1
Canada, Commerce and Natural Resources	1
Canada, Map of : British Empire Forestry Conference	1
Canadian Almanac, 1923.	1
Canadian Club Addresses, 1917-18.	1
Canadian Historical Review, Vol.3, No.1, March 1922	1
Canadian Bank of Commerce Year Book, Vol. 3, 1922	1
Colonial Conference, 1902, June to August	1
Colonial Conference, Papers laid before the - 1907	1
Colonial Conference, Minutes of Proceedings - 1907	1
Colonial and Imperial Conferences, 1887-1911	1
Conference, Papers laid before the	1
Conference on the Limitation of Armament held at Washington November 12, 1921 to February 6, 1922.	1
Conference of Prime Ministers and Representatives of the United Kingdom, the Dominions, and India, held in June, July and August, 1921	1
Colonial Tariff Policies, Introductory Survey of	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Box No. 4 Cont'd.

	No. of Copies
Contemporary Review, June 1923	1
Conference with Representatives of the Self-Governing Dominions on the Naval and Military Defence of the Empire 1909	1
Commercial, Industrial and Financial Situation in Japan, 1922 and up to June 30, 1923	1
Dodd's Parliamentary Companion	1
Foreign Affairs, March 15, 1923	1
Foreign Affairs, December 15, 1922	1
Genoa Conference	12
Halibut Treaty Correspondence	3
Houses of Parliament, Ottawa, Canada	1
House of Commons Debates, Ottawa, May 20, 1921	1
House of Commons Debates, 1922 Edition	1
Immigration Problem in the United States	1
Imperial War Conference, 1917. Extracts from Minutes of Proceedings and Papers laid before the Conference 1918.	1
Imperial War Cabinet - 1917; 1918.	2
Imperial Meetings - 1921, Vol. 1 and 2	2
Imperial Copyright Conference - 1910	1
Imperial Conference, Further Correspondence relating to the	1
Imperial Conference, Minutes of Proceedings - 1911	1
Imperial Conference, Correspondence relating to - 1911	1
Imperial Conference, Papers laid before the; Naval and Military Defence	1
Imperial Conference, Precis of the Proceedings	1
Independence Papers, Ottawa 1921	1
Journal of the Parliaments of the Empire, Vol. 4, No. 1, January 1923, April 1923.	2
Liberal Year Books for 1916 and 1917.	2
Liberal Party and the Tariff	1
Liberals and the Tariff	1
Liberal Party, The Tariff Record of	1
Message of Liberalism	15
Members of the Senate and House of Commons	2
Monetary Times, 1923	1
Ottawa Telephone Directory	1
Parliamentary Guide, 1923	1
Publications of the Natural Resources Intelligence Service	1
Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, June 12, 1923	1
Public Accounts for Fiscal Year ending March 31, 1922	1
Pomp of Power	1
Parliamentary Debates, August 2 , 1923	1
" " " 4, 1923	1
Report of the Department of Immigration and Colonization for Fiscal Year ending March 31, 1922	1
Report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the Year ending March 31, 1922, 1921, 1920	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Box No. 4 Cont'd.	No. of Copies
Report of the Department of Naval Service for Fiscal Year ended March 31, 1922, 1921, 1920	3
Report of the United States Tariff Commission, 1922	1
Report on Foreign Affairs for months of May & June, 1923	2
Round Table, June 1923	1
Relation of the Tariff on Sugar to the Rise in Price of February and April, 1923	2
Reciprocity with Canada, A Study of the Arrangement of 1911	1
Relations between France and Germany. A Report by Henri Lichtenberger	1
Speech, Budget - by Hon. W. S. Fielding, House of Commons, June 12, 1923	1
Spirit of the Saar Statute and the Execution of the same by the Governing Commission	1
Statesman's Year Book, 1923	1
Scientific and Industrial Research, Set of Pamphlets	2
Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Germany	1
Treaty of Peace with Turkey and the Instruments signed at Lausanne on July 24, 1923	1
Tariff Information Surveys on the Articles in Para. 322 of the Tariff Act of 1913	1
The Principal Subjects investigated and reported upon by the United States Tariff Commission	1
Who's Who - English, 1923	1
Who's Who in Canada, 1922	1
Who's Who Year Book, 1917	1
Kingdom Papers	1
British Empire and World Peace - by Hon. N. W. Rowell	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C. 62230

LIST OF MATERIAL

in

BOX No. 5

Stationery:

150 - Manilla Folders
50 - Large Brown Envelopes
2 - 4 Ring Binders for Minutes of Conference
3 - Concertina Folders
2 - Monthly Sets of Correspondence Guides.

Books:	No. of Copies
Australia, Commonwealth of - Offical Year Book 1922	1
Development of the British Empire	1
Dominions Royal Commission Final Report	1
Four Parties to Industry	12
Germany's Capacity to Pay	1
Industry and Humanity	6
Life of William Lyon Mackenzie	2
League of Nations	3
Nerves and Personal Power	4
New Zealand Official Year Book, 1921-22	1
Pomp of Power	1
Sea Power in the Pacific	1
The Battle with Tuberculosis	2
The Making of a Premier	6
The Secret of Heroism	3
Union of South Africa, Official Year Book 1910-21	1

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62231

BOX NO. 6.

Filled with Material for

Mr. R. H. COATS.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62232

LIST OF ITEMS IN BOX NO. 7

E-1106 Naturalization
Naturalization of Married Women
National Council of Women (Dept. of External Affairs)

E-1106 Naturalization
Naturalization in the Dominions
I-1001-O - Naturalization of Orientals
Exhibit "A" - Statement of Winston Churchill (Book from Dept. of Sec.of State Library)
Exhibit "B" - Copies of Imperial & Canadian Naturalization Acts
Exhibit "C" - Resolution at Imperial War Conference 1917
Exhibit "D" - Resolution Mr. Massey - Imperial War Conference 1918
Exhibit "E" - Nationality of children of British subjects born abroad
Exhibit "F" - Copy of amendments Canadian Naturalization Act of Session of 1922-23
Exhibit "G" - Notes of Conference, Home Office 3rd August, 1922
Exhibit "H" - Letters re revocation of Certificates of Naturalization Exhibit "I" - Edvind Haugerud - naturalization of Exhibit "J" - Registration of the child of Peter Dimitry Exhibit "K" - Status of Greeks naturalized in Canada
Exhibit "L" - Revocation of Certificates of Naturalization
Exhibit "M" - List of Revocations of Naturalization Certificates
Exhibit "N" - Naturalization Acts and Regulations thereunder
Naturalization Regulations U.S.(No.346)

E-1300 External Affairs
Parliamentary control of Foreign Policy

E-1301-1 Wireless Telegraph Commission
Radio Telegraph Convention 1912

E-1301-1 Wireless Telegraph Commission
Wireless Telegraphy Commission in London

E-1301-1 Wireless Telegraph Commission
Memorandum - Radio Branch, Department of Marine & Fisheries

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-1302-1-A	Washington Appointment of Sir Robert Borden
E-1302-1-C	Washington Under Conservative Regime
E-1302-1-L	Washington Last communications and despatches
E-1302-1-L	Washington Washington Conference under Liberal Regime
E-1302-1	Washington "C" Mandates - Australia U.S."C" Mandates
E-1302-1	Washington Right to publish secret correspondence
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Conference Prime Ministers 1921
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Memo. Lucien Pacaud International Postal Union Seniority of Privy Councillors Cost of former Prime Ministers' Conferences Official Despatches re Transportation
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Common basis Income Tax Assessments Miscellaneous - Imperial Conference Fred Cook Imperial & Economic Conferences - Hansard References Marriage between British subjects and Foreigners Miscellaneous - No. 11,1911 - Laws of Marriage Foreign Countries
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Main Pyle
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Agenda - Committee of Imperial Defence (2) Imperial Conference Agenda
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Canadian Representation
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Press Representative Confidential Pyle - Press Correspondent
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Good wishes - eve of departure
E-1302-3	Imperial Conference Naval Base - Singapore

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-1302-4 International Labour Organization
International Labour Conference 1923

E-1302-14 International Postal Conference

E-1302-15 Imperial Economic Conference
Main Fyle

E-1302-15 Imperial Economic Conference
Press Representative
Request for appointments
Confidential fyle - Seniority Privy Councillors
Suggested Committee of expert advisers
Enquiry attitude on questions

E-1302-16 Imperial Economic Conference
Canadian Representation

E-1302-16 Imperial Economic Conference - Agenda
Reciprocal enforcements of judgements
Imperial Statistics
Commercial Intelligence
Workmen's Compensation Laws - extension to Seamen
Mineral Resources
Stabilization of Inter-Empire Exchange Con
Confidential Memo. on Agenda
Preferential Tariff
Copyright
Import duty on Catalogues
Report Colwyn Committees - Taxation
Memorandum from Bureau of Statistics
Agenda

E-1303-2 British Empire Exhibition
Main Fyle

E-1304 League of Nations
Limitation of expenditure on Armaments
Canadian Delegation to Paul Mantoux re activity of League of Nations
Lord Robert Cecil's report 25th Session
Requesting information re appointment of Delegates to

E-1305-1 Near East War Situation
Statement to Press, Sept.3, 1922
Exchange of Important Despatches
Private Fyle
Near East Crisis Vol. I
" " " " II

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

B-1305-2	Opinions re Canada's Participation Canada's Participation
B-1305-4	Treaty of Sevres Treaty Series No. 15, 1923 (Booklet)
B-1306	Wrangel Island Noel J. Ogilvie - enclosing complete set of 6 maps Arctic Flight Route Relief to Wrangel Island Party Wrangel Island - ownership of Copies - Departmental Correspondence Hon. Chas. Stewart - Private Fyle
B-1309	Reparations Ruhr Occupation Despatches re - Ruhr Occupation Clippings re
B-1309	Reparations Saar Valley Commission
B-1310	Treaties Loring Christie re Treaties References to Peace Treaty in House of Commons - 1919
B-1400	British Empire Shipping Memo. re Shipping Industry Marine Insurance (4 memos. re.) Resolutions - Council of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom Memo. of the Imperial Shipping Committee Memo. for the Prime Minister "Carriage of goods by Sea" Relations to the several parts of the British Empire
B-1450	Great Britain Removal of Passports John Lewis enclosing quotation Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy
B-1452-1	Applications for Appointments Application for appointments to High Commissioner's Office
B-1452-5	Secretary and Staff Appointment of Colonel Reid Hyde
B-1454	The Press Situation of Reuters Office in London

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-1455 Finance
Dollar Bond transaction
Foreign Debt Refunding Bill

E-1456 Emigration
Empire Settlement Policy

E-1457 Tariff
Trade relations within the Empire
British Preference on Musical Instruments
Preferential Tariffs within the Empire
Federation of British Industries

E-1458 Imperial Defence
Summary of record of National & Imperial Defence Committee
Hansard - House of Lords - Vol. 54 (57 & 42)
Hansard - House of Commons - Vol. 163 (49 Vol.166 No.100)

E-1601 Deputation to Canada
Visit of Sivisawmy Aiyer to Canada
Dinner to Mr. Sastri
E-1601 Visit of Mr. Sastri to Canada
E-1800, South Africa
Indians in Kenya

E-1650 Ireland
Representative of Irish Free State
Cattle Embargo - effect on Irish Free State of the removal of Irish Free State Constitution, Despatches re
" " " " Bill

E-1651 Trade negotiations with Ireland

E-1800 South Africa
Indians in Kenya (charged to envelope E-1601)

E-1825 British West Africa
Trade with west of Africa
West Africa and its opportunities for Canadian trade (Booklet)

E-1850 West Indies
Increase in Cable rates
Merchant Marine route between Canada and West Indies

E-4000 France
Presentation of Porcelain Vase

E-9000 United States
Visit to Vancouver by Pres.Harding (Manitoba Free Press)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-9000 United States (Cont'd.)
W-1006 - International Joint Commission
Migratory birds Conventions Oct. (2 copies)
E-1302-14 - International Postal Convention

E-9001 Canadian Representation at Washington
Can. Representation at Washington - American Views

E-9002 Alcoholic Liquors
Smuggling of spirits between Sweden and Norway
Liquor in Territorial Waters

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62238

LIST OF FYLES IN BOX NO. 8.

E-9007 Rush Bagot Agreement
Naval Vessels Great Lakes
Rush Bagot Official
Rush Bagot Confidential Fyle re

E-9008 Fishing Relations with United States
Fishing relations between Canada and the United States

H-1101 Archives
Moncton Papers
Sir William Schooling - Hudson Bay Co.'s Records

I-1001 Oriental Immigration
Naturalization of Orientals charged to Envelope E-1106

M-1000 Marine and Fisheries
Halibut Treaty
" " Press Comments
" " Copy tabled March 16, 1923

N-1100 National Defence
Asking Canada to suggest immediate disarmament at Imp. Conference

N-1101 Forests
Forests of Canada (Booklet on, issued by Dept. of Interior)

N-1103 Mines
J. Murray Clark

N-1300 National Status
Canada's relation within the Empire
Canada's right to sign Treaties
Clipping on National Status
E-1310 - L.C.Christie's Memo. re conclusion of Treaties
9 Fyles or Memos. on Canada's Status as a Nation

N-1300 Docket labelled "Canadian Status, participation in War" (a) Near East (b) General - 28 Enclosures, clippings, etc.

N-1301 B.N.A. Act and Amendments to Extra Territorial Rights of Canada
Confidential Series No. 38
General Register No. 231
Dept. of External Affairs
Name - Colonial Secretary, London
Extraterritorial Legislation

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62239

R-1100 Parliamentary Work
R-1305-1 - Near East War situation - Official communications and Private Secret Documents re Imperial Conference - Not laid on table
Publication of messages - Confidential file

R-1100 Parliamentary Work
Correspondence re official Correspondence & publication thereof

R-1101 Speech from the Throne
References - Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Speech in reply to Speech from the Throne 1907-8-9-10-11

R-1300 The Press
Having Mr. Brothers remain in London

R-1602 Parliament Buildings
Houseman - invitation to visit foundry

R-1103 G.T.R.Acquisition
G.T.R. Conf. Sir J. Flavelle
G.W.Yates printing of document "Reply to Overseas Criticism"
Claims of G.T.P. 4% Debenture Shareholders
Claims of G.T.R. Company of Canada Shareholders
G.T.R. Replies - 5 copies of each

R-1111 Railway Management
Financial arrangements for C.N.R. - Conf. File

S-1103 Pensions
Mrs. L.C.S.Amery - reduction of Pension of Mary A.Dow

T-1000 Tariff
Hon.Chas. Murphy enclosing "The Tariff Record of the Liberal Party"
Removal duty on New Zealand Honey
Preferential Trade within the Empire
British Preferential - Acetic Acid
British Preferential Tariff - Canadian Manufacturers' Association
Liberal Platform on Tariff - 1919

T-1200 Trade and Commerce

T-1205 Foreign Trade
Status of Canadian Trade Commissioners

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W-1008 Georgian Bay Canal
Sir Robert Perks

W-1006 International Joint Commission
" " " See Folder K-9000

W-1102 Canadian Battlefields' Memorial Commission
Memorial Arch on the Menin Road
Unveiling of Monument - St.Julien

K-1600 Interviews
Leighton McCarthy - requesting interview

K-2100 Photographs

YK-1700 Alberta
Lawrence E. Jones

K-1200 Congratulations received
Major Frederick Lascelles

K-1700 Private
Mrs. Bidwell
Mr. Norman W. Tronholme
Aneurin Williams re Armenian Immigration
Robert Millie - requesting position

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62241

LIST OF MATERIAL IN BOX NO. 8

Personal Files -(Mr. Measures' Drawer)

Laurier House
Conferring of Degrees -- Mr. King Travelling Expenses
Form Letters
Personal Letters
Petty Cash

Two dozen Charge-out Cards

Subject and Personal Index Cards to correspondence

7 Packages of Photographs

Material collected by Mr. Giddens

Departmental Files

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62242

SQUARE BLACK BOX

Annual Report of the Ottawa and Ottawa Valley Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society - Speech by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, page 37.
Canada and British Countries - by John S. Ewart, K.C.
Canada and the United States - by W. R. Riddell
Catalogue of Pamphlets, Reports and Journals.
Conference of Prime Ministers and Representatives of United Kingdom, Dominions and India - June, July and August, 1921.
Edinburgh Review - July 1923.
Engagement Book Refills - Book 104
Cash refills.
Fortnightly Review - July, 1923.
Empire Review - June, 1923.
Empire Review - March 1923.
Imperial Meetings - 1921. Notes of meetings Nos. E 1 - E 4. June 29 - August 25, 1921. With Subject Index.
Imperial Meetings - 1921. Minutes of meetings of sub-committees Nos. E(R) 1 and 2, E(D) 1 and 2 and E(Sc) 1 to 7.
Imperial Meetings - 1921, with subject index.
Industrialism Vs. Militarism - by W. L. Mackenzie King.
Industrial Representation Plans.
An International Experiment - by Lawrence J. Burpee.
International Joint Commission - Waterways Problems.
Journal of the Parliaments of the Empire. Vol 4 - No. 3, July, 1923
Mr. McGregor's Address Books.
Liberal Pamphlets 1912 - 15, Publications 1 - 31.
Naval Question.
Notes of Speeches - Mackenzie King.
Memoranda E series. Papers E 1 - E 56, with subject index.
Round Table - 1923.
Round Table, Vol. 1. November, 1910 to August, 1911.
Treaties and Agreements affecting Canada, in force between His Majesty and the United States of America, with subsiduary documents - 1814 - 1913.
Labour Legislation in Canada, - 1920 - 1921 - 1922.
Mr. King's two Concertinas.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62242

SQUARE BLACK BOX

Annual Report of the Ottawa and Ottawa Valley Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society - Speech by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, page 37.
Canada and British Countries - by John S. Ewart, K.C.
Canada and the United States - by W. R. Riddell
Catalogue of Pamphlets, Reports and Journals.
Conference of Prime Ministers and Representatives of United Kingdom, Dominions and India - June, July and August, 1921.
Edinburgh Review - July 1923.
Engagement Book Refills - Book 104
Cash refills.
Fortnightly Review - July, 1923.
Empire Review - June, 1923.
Empire Review - March 1923.
Imperial Meetings - 1921. Notes of meetings Nos. E 1 - E 4. June 29 - August 25, 1921. With Subject Index.
Imperial Meetings - 1921. Minutes of meetings of sub-committees Nos. E(R) 1 and 2, E(D) 1 and 2 and E(Sc) 1 to 7.
Imperial Meetings - 1921, with subject index.
Industrialism Vs. Militarism - by W. L. Mackenzie King.
Industrial Representation Plans.
An International Experiment - by Lawrence J. Burpee.
International Joint Commission - Waterways Problems.
Journal of the Parliaments of the Empire. Vol 4 - No. 3, July, 1923
Mr. McGregor's Address Books.
Liberal Pamphlets 1912 - 15, Publications 1 - 31.
Naval Question.
Notes of Speeches - Mackenzie King.
Memoranda E series. Papers E 1 - E 56, with subject index.
Round Table - 1923.
Round Table, Vol. 1. November, 1910 to August, 1911.
Treaties and Agreements affecting Canada, in force between His Majesty and the United States of America, with subsiduary documents - 1814 - 1913.
Labour Legislation in Canada, - 1920 - 1921 - 1922.
Mr. King's two Concertinas.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62243

LIST OF BOOKS TAKEN BY A.G. DOUGHTY.

1. A permanent League of Nations - Sir Geo. Paish
2. A Short History of the Great War, - A.F. Pollard
3. League of War - Irving Fisher
4. Canadian Almanac - 1923
5. Whittaker Almanac - 1923
6. History of Canada - Wrong
7. Canadian Constitutional Studies - Borden
8. British Empire and World's Peace - Rowell
9. Industrial and Commercial History of England - Rogers
10. Canada's Future - Victor

---

11. Canada Year Book 1921
12. Sixth Census of Canada
13. Constitution of Canada - Kennedy
14. How Canada is governed - Bourinot
15. The Friends of England - Peel
16. Self Government in Canada - Bradshaw
17. Canadian Constitutional Development - Egerton & Grant
18. Federation and Union within the British Empire - Egerton
19. Documents of the Canadian Constitution 1759-1915 - Kennedy
20. Political annals of Canada - Cockburn
21. History of North America - Munro
22. Progress of Canada in the 19th Century
23. British Supremacy and Canadian Self Government - Morrison
24. Annual Review
25. Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy (To be obtained in London)
26. A complete set of the Publications of the Natural Resources Intelligence Service (Sent to England)
27. 5 Vols. of Public Speeches
28. The Real Canadian
29. Where there is no Peace
30. Canadian Cities of Romance
31. The Prime Ministers of Britain
32. A History of European Nations
33. A Revision of the Treaty
34. Labrador
35. The Safety of the Nation
36. Things New and Old 6
    " " 5
    " " 4
37. Modern Studies
38. Douglas Present Discontents
39. The League of Nations - Gray
40. League of Nations and Labour

Set of Canada and its Provinces arranged for in England, also Fulford's County Families and Debrett.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Coll - Imp. Conferences 1923

C 62244

Collateral

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

.....

The draft caveat attached was shown to Hankey who agreed it was reasonable, but he had an hour's conversation with Lord Curzon, who wholly declined to accept it (as being stated too broadly and not applicable to Ireland or India). Lord Curzon also demurred to accepting the proposed amendation as to Egypt. Lord Curzon will consider it further this afternoon. Hankey suggests that Foreign Affairs be postponed and not taken up in the full Conference at 5, but be taken up privately in a Prime Minister's Committee immediately after the Conference.

(By the way, Hankey does not want his letter of last night mentioned)

After discussion with Mr. Graham and Mr. Dafoe, three alternatives seem possible: -

1. Acceptance by the Conference of the caveat you drew up.

2. Withdrawal of both the Curzon memo and your caveat and just a brief statement to the effect that there was a full discussion of Foreign Affairs.

3. Or that Canada should file a reservation or interpretation along the lines of the caveat.

.....

(Refers to report on Foreign Affairs at the Imperial Conference 1923 etc).

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

O. D SKELTON

O. D. Skelton E-1302-3.
(1923) C 62245 Vol. 2
(1923)

1. CANADA and the CONTROL of FOREIGN POLICY

The fundamental question before the Imperial Conference of 1923 will be the control of foreign policy. The general question and the application of the implied or explicit general principles to specific issues will both come up for discussion. It is doubtless undesirable to discuss general questions at such a Conference except in so far as may be necessary to solve actual and practical problems. On this occasion, the discussion is inevitable. Other Dominions, particularly Australia, have announced their intention to thresh out to the full the question of Dominion share in imperial policy and of imperial control over Dominion policy. The Near East episode and other events of the two years since the last Conference have presented practical tests of the understanding declared to have been reached in 1921. Canada's attitude in the Rush-Bagot and Halibut Treaty negotiations has been vigorously challenged by Australia and New Zealand. Statements of the present position as to control of foreign policy have been made by a British Prime Minister (Mr. Lloyd George) and a British Foreign Secretary (Lord Curzon) which imply a direct reversal of the whole trend of Dominion development in the past half-century, and cannot be allowed to stand as an accepted and unquestioned change in imperial relations.

It seems clear, then, that it will be necessary to present to the Conference Canada's view of the fundamental issues involved. It will not only be a necessity, but a distinct opportunity. There has been so much haziness and confusion on the whole subject that it will be a memorable service to reaffirm the Canadian view of the problem.

Of late years a theory of control of foreign policy of a revolutionary character has been put forward by high authorities,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

namely: That the British Empire can have only one foreign policy; that in the past this policy has been determined by the United Kingdom alone and that the Dominions had no share in shaping it; that now it is determined by Great Britain and the Dominions acting jointly; that the instrument of this joint policy is and must remain, the British Foreign Office; and that, with control, the Dominions have accepted a corresponding share of responsibility for the outcome of that policy; further that, conversely, in no other way can or should or has control in foreign affairs been exercised by a Dominion

These positions may be illustrated by a few quotations:

(a) Mr. Lloyd George, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, in British House of Commons, November 1921: (probably framed by Secretariat):-

> "They (the discussions of the Imperial Conference of 1921) revealed an absolutely unanimous opinion as to the main lines to be followed and a very deep conviction that the whole weight of the Empire should be concentrated behind a united understanding and common action in foreign affairs. Very careful consideration was given to the means of circulating information to the Dominion Governments and keeping them in continuous touch with the conduct of foreign relations by the British Government. It was unanimously felt that the policy of the British Empire could not be adequately representative of democratic opinion throughout the peoples unless representatives of the Dominions and of the Empire were frequently associated with those of the United Kingdom in considering and determining the course to be pursued. All members expressed a vivid sense of this year's meetings in that respect, and a desire that similar meetings should be held as frequently as possible. A resolution embodying the views of the Conference declares that the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and the Dominions and the Representatives of India should aim at meeting annually or at such longer periods as may prove feasible. The existing practice of direct communication between the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and the Dominions, as well as the right of the latter to (nominate resident ministers ?) represent them in consultation with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom are retained.

(b) Mr. Lloyd George, in British House of Commons, December 21: (Mr. Lloyd George's own more informal and more illuminating statement):

> "The position of the Dominions in reference to external affairs has been revolutionized in the course of the last four years. The Dominions since the war have been given

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

equal rights with Great Britain in the control of the foreign policy of the Empire. The machinery is the machinery of the British Government, the Foreign Office, the ambassadors. The machine must remain here. It is impossible that it could be otherwise, unless you had a Council of Empire where you had representatives elected for the purpose.....The instrument of the foreign policy of the Empire is the British Foreign Office. That has been accepted by all the Dominions as inevitable, but they claim a voice in determining the lines of our policy. .....The advantage to us is that joint control means joint responsibility, and when the burden of Empire has become so vast it is well that we should have the shoulders of these young giants under the burden to help us along. ....Our troubles were Upper Silesia, the Ruhr valley, Angora and Egypt, and they came there (to the Imperial Conference of 1921) with other questions, with the problems of the Pacific, Honolulu, the Philippines, Nagasaki and Peking. All these problems were brought into the common stock, and a wide survey was taken by all the representatives of the Empire, who would honour that policy and support that policy when it was challenged. They felt that there was not one of them who was not speaking for hundreds and thousands and millions of men who were prepared to risk their fortunes and their lives for a great Empire."

(c) Lord Curzon, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in public address, London, November 8, 192Z, -

"In former days the policy of Great Britain was the foreign policy of Great Britain alone. Now it is the foreign policy of the British Empire. The initiative, and to a large extent, the executive action must necessarily remain in the Foreign Office, but in the various Imperial Conferences assembled in London full statements were made to the Ministers assembled from all the Dominions on foreign affairs. Every aspect of them was discussed, a foreign policy for the whole Empire was framed, and in the intervals, when the Dominion Ministers were not here, full papers were sent to them, and on no matter of first class importance was a decision taken without their being informed .... This is a great change, and it will readily be seen what enormous strength it adds to the position of the Foreign Secretary. He feels now that he is not only speaking for Downing Street or for the British Isles, but for the State which constitutes the British Empire."

(d) Mr. Hughes, Prime Minister of Australia, in 1921 Conference, Confidential report II, pp.7, -

"We, the representatives of the Dominions, are met together to formulate the foreign policy of the Empire."

Mr. Hughes, Ex-Prime Minister, in London Morning Post, May 9, 1923, -

"From 1916 therefore not only has the right of the Dominions to have a voice in the moulding of foreign and imperial policy been recognized, but an entirely new instrumentality, imperial in its character, has existed, functioning, it is true, only at intervals, by means of which foreign and imperial questions are dealt with by representatives of the whole Empire."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(e) Round Table, June 1923: The New Imperial Problem

So far as foreign policy was concerned, the new view was embodied in the decisions of the meeting of Prime Ministers in 1921. Though it has never been officially set forth in precise language, the present constitutional theory, largely set forth in a speech by Mr. Lloyd George to Parliamanent in the autumn of 1921, (#) seems to be as follows. The formulation of the general policy of the Commonwealth is now in the hands of all the peoples of the Commonwealth represented in the Imperial Conference, acting through their Prime Ministers, meeting as often as possible, and keeping in touch, as far as practicable in the interval by cable and dispatch. Inasmuch, however, as the conduct of foreign affairs calls for constant action and prompt decision, it was recognized that, in the intervals between the gatherings of Prime Ministers, the policy agreed to had to be carried out mainly by the British Foreign Office with such consultation with the Dominions as is possible by cable and dispatch. Because of this, it was also recognized, however, that no Dominion could be committed to approval or support of any new action undertaken between Imperial Conferences, except by its own government and parliament, and that Great Britain, as heretofore must continue to carry the lion's share of the burden. In all dealings with foreign powers, whether they were conducted by the British or a Dominion Government, prior consultation is now the essence of the case, for without it there can be no assurance of agreement or support from the rest of the Commonwealth.

Statement (a) above. It will be noted that the Round Table endeavours to reconcile the L.G., statement of 1921, with the actual developments of 1922.

That is, roughly speaking, the present constitutional theory of the Commonwealth. The theory has received illustration in two recent events - the enquiry by the British Government as to whether the Dominions would support it in the action it had decided to take in offering, if need be, forcible resistance to the crossing of the Dardanelles by the Turks, and the action of the Canadian Government in arranging that the Halibut Treaty should be signed by a Canadian minister alone. These events showed that Great Britain, while carrying out a generally agreed foreign policy. carries also the primary responsibility, the Dominions being free to co-operate or not as they please. They also showed that any of the Governments of the Commonwealth may conduct the negotiations of a treaty with a foreign Power, but that inasmuch as, to quote the Senate of the United States, it applies "to all British nationals", it can do so only after consultation with the Commonwealth as a whole."

Other utterances express the opinion that the Dominions do not now actually control the Empire's foreign policy, but that they should adopt measures to enable them to do so:

(a) W. M. Hughes, continuing in "Morning Post" article:

"Let us see now how it has worked out. Has it given the Dominions an effective voice in directing foreign policy? There is only one answer to this question - as things are, the Dominions have not an effective voice on questions of foreign policy.....In theory, we have a voice in shaping

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

foreign policy. In practice, our voice is generally a mere echo. It can hardly be said therefore that there has been any change of control over foreign policy or that the Dominions have any more effective share in shaping it than before the war. And of course, they have no share in carrying out foreign policy. Now it can hardly be said that this practice is satisfactory or that its continuance is not a danger to the unity of the Empire.

(b) S. M. Bruce, Prime Minister of Australia, House of Representatives, March 1, 1923, -

> "There are some in Australia who think that we can be a law unto ourselves, that since we are 12,000 miles away from Europe we need not worry about what happens in other parts of the world; I remind those who take that view that the distance of 12,000 miles did not save us from being involved in the late War nor will it save us in the future. We have to try to ensure that there shall be an Empire foreign policy which, if we are to be in any way responsible for it, must be one to which we agree and have assented. With full appreciation of the responsibility for what I am saying, I suggest that this question today is not in a satisfactory position, and that unless some better arrangements can be made, the position of an outlying Dominion like Australia will become intolerable. If we are to take any responsibility for the Empire's foreign policy, there must be a better system, so that we can be consulted, and have a better opportunity to express the views of the people of the country. That is a matter that will have to be considered at the Imperial Conference.

(c) In a speech in August, Mr. Bruce stated that he was going to press for an Empire foreign policy, and hoped that if this was worked out satisfactorily certain Dominions would abandon their attempts to work out an independent policy.

As to the effect of this policy, and its complete reversal of Canadian traditions, it is sufficient to quote Sir Clifford Sifton, Ottawa, Canadian Club, April 8, 1922,-

> "This statement is rather startling after Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Borden for fifty years have asserted the right of Canada to have no military or financial responsibility for a war unless her parliament voluntarily takes on that responsibility. We now find the Prime Minister of Great Britain making the statement that we have entered into an arrangement by which we assume responsibility for the wars of Great Britain all over the world in return for being consulted.....Premiers drift into London....discuss a lot of matters casually....drift out again....no one very sure what is decided....and Dominions become jointly responsible for everything the British Foreign Office does in every part of the world.
>
> I consider it an entirely impossible arrangement. I think it a complete abandonment of the theory of Dominion autonomy as it has developed for fifty years. The people of Canada have never agreed to any such arrangement, and

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

in my judgment they never will, I think the people of Canada will demand that responsibility for engaging in any war or contributing to it shall rest exclusively with the Parliament of Canada."

The assertion that the Dominions have now assumed or should assume a share in the control of the foreign policy of the British Empire makes it desirable to consider what is meant by "foreign policy" and what is the nature and position of the "British Empire."

Foreign Policy is simply the course which a country follows in its dealings with other countries. An analysis of the foreign policy of different countries shows that (1) foreign affairs have to do chiefly with economic questions - trade, tariff, coal or oil or railway concessions, international debts, immigration, fishery or power or navigation rights in boundary waters, etc., (2) foreign affairs are largely neighbours' disputes, naturally arising most frequently with the countries which have most intercourse with it; (3) the question whether a certain matter in dispute will lead to war is not so much a question of the character of the specific issue as of the spirit and traditions and supposed general interests of the countries concerned. European states have come to blows over a tariff on pigs.

The British Empire is not a single community, homogeneous, concentrated, with uniform neighbours, problems, needs. It is a league of peoples plus an empire; it covers all the Seven Seas; it includes communities of every conceivable stage in civilization, every variety of resources, every range of neighbours, every combination of problems and interests. The more advanced of these communities have developed rapidly in numbers and trade and international intercourse; they have developed relations with other countries varying with their situation; they have developed distinct problems in external as well as in home affairs, a distinct national consciousness, distinct parliaments and governments to control their affairs.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Some problems are distinct and primarily concern only one or a group of these Empire states; some are of common interest or common menace, and concern the whole Empire and it alone; some are of still wider implications and concern all or a great region of the world, whether organized in permanent Leagues of Nations or in temporary conferences, or not organized at all.

Given, then, these conditions, -- given wide scattered communites within the British Empire growing steadily in numbers, in intercourse with the world, and in the habit of self-government; Given the growth of problems and difficulties especially with neighbouring countries; given the diversity of conditions and of interest and of knowledge which makes these problems in many cases distinct in each country, - it is inevitable that each of these communities should seek to control those foreign affairs which concern it primarily.

This is obviously true, and has long been true of the United Kingdom. Its foreign affairs have been of such overshadowing importance, - it is on the verge of a crowded and troublesome and uneasy continent, it is the greatest trading nation in history, it has dependencies, protectorates, coaling-stations, in every quarter of the globe, - that they have in the past been practically identical with the foreign affairs of the whole British Empire, and are still immensely more important and complicated than the foreign affairs of any other part of the Empire.

It is increasingly true also of the Dominions. In this field Canada has naturally been most active, as the oldest federation and as the community which next to the United Kingdom, is in most intimate and constant intercourse with powerful neighbours, pre-eminently, with one great neighbour. It is unnecessary to review the process by which Canada has steadily widened the range of foreign affairs with which she deals through her own

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

parliament and Government; trade, tariffs, immigration, boundary disputes as to power, navigation or fisheries and other questions which half a century ago were considered beyond her jurisdiction, are now unquestionably matters for her own decision. It will suffice to note one illustration of this wide measure of control - the establishment in 1909 of the International Joint Commission. This permanent body, consisting of three citizens of the United States and three Canadians, is entrusted with the settlement of all the wide range of questions concerning boundary waters, as to navigation, power, irrigation, and the other complicated issues that arise on a three thousand mile border. But further, it is provided (Article X) that "any questions or matters of difference arising between the High Contracting Parties involving the rights obligations or interests of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada, either in relation to each other or to their respective inhabitants, may be referred for decision to the International Joint Commission by the consent of the two parties, it being understood that on the part of the United States any such action will be by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and on the part of His Majesty's Government with the consent of the Governor General in Council.....a majority of the said Commission shall have power to render a decision or finding upon any of the questions or matters so referred." Secretary of State Hughes has recently suggested the still wider extension of this principle to the relations between the two countries. Incidentally, it is significant that every decision of the Commission but one - and that on a minor question as to jurisdiction - has been unanimous.

Clearly then, as regards this wide and growing range of foreign affairs, the Dominions now possess control, and determine the policy to be followed. It is not true to-day

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62253

that all the foreign affairs of the British Empire are controlled from London. It is not possible that this evolution which has proceeded steadily and with increasing acceptance for more than two generations should now be reversed, that Great Britain or Canada should decide Australia's trade policy or that South Africa should determine whether Canada shall join with the United States in the development of the proposed St. Lawrence waterway. Self-government means the right of each part of the Empire to control its own affairs, whether those affairs are domestic or foreign or both. That is the principle on which this Empire has been maintained, that is its unique and distinctive contribution to the world, that is the principle which has been tested in fire of late years and not found wanting. It cannot now be abandoned.

Equally impossible and undesirable is it for the Dominions to control those foreign affairs which primarily affect the United Kingdom. Her geographical situation, her foreign trade, the enterprises of her investors, create many relations, interests, problems which are primarily her concern and which have intimate connection with her domestic problems. As to these affairs the Dominions have not the knowledge, the direct interest, the responsibility, which would warrant their seeking control. Great Britian is also entitled to claim self-government.

Each part of the Empire then, has its own sphere. But at certain points the arcs cut, the interests become common. There are issues which are of fundamental concern to all parts of the Empire: and with these all parts of the Empire must deal; the Governments of the Empire must confer; the Parliaments of the Empire, if need be, must decide.

It is true that there is no clear cut and enduring line of demarcation between these fields, between those foreign affairs which are of primary concern to one part of the Empire and those which are of joint concern. No foreign question affecting one part

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of the Empire is without its influence on other parts, however small and indirect that influence may be, but it is equally true that no domestic affair of one part of the Empire, no foreign problem of any foreign country, is without some bearing on the fortunes of the rest of the Empire and the world. It is a question of degree. Again, issues which were primarily of concern to one part may grow to vast proportions and afford a menace or an opportunity that has substantial concern for all parts; if so, it can then be dealt with by all concerned. In drawing the lines there will inevitably be differences of opinion, as there are in the dealings of province with province, business firm with business firm, but goodwill and common sense will settle these as they have in the past.

The assumption that there must be one foreign policy for the Empire in all relations is, then, not consistent with the facts and trend of past development and present practice. It is not consistent with the needs and interest of the several communities of the Empire. It does not make for the joint welfare of the whole Empire.

It is claimed that this course of action, this endeavour to change the trend of past development and to set up a common foreign policy for the whole Empire means an extension of influence and power for the Dominions. Exactly the contrary is the case. It offers a maximum of responsibility and a minimum of control. It commits a Dominion in advance to an endorsement of courses of action of which it knows little and of which it may not approve, or in which it may have little direct concern.

The real way in which the Dominions may extend their power is the way in which such extension has come in the past - by reserving for their own peoples and their own parliaments the ultimate decision as to their course of action Only in this way

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

can responsibility become real, can enduring friendship and co-operation between the peoples of the Empire develop. The centre of political gravity must remain in each self-governing state of the Empire. If the Dominions are committed to action by blank cheques given the Foreign Secretary by their Prime Ministers they have sham control and real responsibility. If they are committed to action only by their own parliaments and peoples, they will have real influence and responsible control.

Not only is the new programme undesirable, it is not practicable. No scheme has been worked out, no scheme can be worked out, by which each part of the Empire can be not only informed but consulted as to all the relations of every other part of the Empire with foreign countries, and a really joint policy worked out. The range is too vast, the situation too kaleidoscopic, the interests too diverse, the preoccupation of each government with its own affairs or its own existence too absorbing, to make this possible. We must face facts. It is possible to consult on matters of overwhelming and enduring common interest; it is not possible to consult on the great range of matters of individual and shifting concern.

How has it been proposed to work out this joint foreign policy?

(1) By Imperial Conferences. These conferences are eminently helpful; they are necessities, but they cannot do what is proposed. They cannot be in constant session; they cannot, with the constant pressure of home business, the long voyages, the difficulty of finding a relatively free season common to all the parts of the Empire, meet every year. When they are held they are Conferences between Governments, conferences for discussion, and their discussions are subject to ratification by the several parliaments before any action can be taken. British Ministers may and will give freely and lucidly the information

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

at their disposal; they may listen courteously to advice the visiting Prime Ministers may offer, but if the matter is one in which the British Government is primarily concerned, in which that Government will have to take the action and the responsibility, they will have to keep in mind their own parliament, their own electorate.

Such a conference can discuss with advantage one or more concrete and outstanding questions, such as the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese treaty in 1921 or the question of reparations in 1923. But no survey of the world by however able a Foreign Minister before passive visiting Prime Ministers, no casual discussion of intricate issues, can give the Dominions a real voice in the decision. The Dominions cannot afford to drop in intermittently to these ~~international polcar games~~ Conferences, sign blank cheques, and depart.

(2) By resident Ministers in London. If what is proposed is a link, a means of confidential communication and negotiation, between the Government of Great Britain and the Governments of the Dominions, this exists now in the High Commissionship. If what is proposed is not a link between governments, but a new or super-government, if the resident minister is to be a member of an imperial cabinet determining policy and binding all the participants, that is the old policy of centralization which has been definitely and permanently rejected. No Minister or High Commissioner of a Dominion resident in London can speak for and bind his country; he may secure information, he may convey proposals, he may suggest a basis of agreement, he may carry out administrative duties, but he cannot take the place of the Dominion ministry, cannot speak for it.

This proposal was at one time favoured by Sir Robert Borden, and it was agreed in 1918 that any Dominion Prime Minister might nominate a Resident Minister who would be given access to the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

British Cabinet. It is now strongly urged by Mr. Bruce, but equally strongly opposed by Mr. Hughes. The objections to it were well summed up recently by Sir Francis Bell, Attorney General in the Massey Cabinet, speaking in the New Zealand Legislative Council, February 9, 1923:

> "He would ask the Hon. Gentlemen whether they could seriously contemplate having in London a man entitled to speak for the Government of New Zealand? A minister who would consent to leave New Zealand as a member of the Cabinet and reside in London would, in the nature of things, not be a very prominent man in political life. He would not have been away from the country a year before he would be distrusted, in the sense that he would have lost touch with matters that would be alive around them in the Dominion. It was certain that the Minister would never venture to speak on behalf of his Dominion without reference to the Cabinet of his own country; or if he did, he would speak without authority.

(3) Information from British Foreign Office, cable and letter.

This is helpful as one means of information, but it is not consultation; it is not decision. The receipt of such information is of value, but it cannot of itself enable a Dominion to control policy. Nor can the mere receipt of such messages bind a Dominion to acceptance or support of the policy outlined, unless after explicit discussion. This has been definitely and lucidly laid down in recent correspondence between the Canadian and the British Governments.

(4) A Dominion Secretariat in London, or Dominion officials in the Foreign Office in London charged with procuring and forwarding such information. This suggestion has been made by Richard Jebb (Morning Post, May 14, 1923):

> As to a better system of official information, might not a remedy be found by the Dominion Governments having their own officials in whatever Secretariat is charged with obtaining and transmitting information from the Foreign Office? At the Imperial Conference of 1921, and also in connection with British Empire Delegations, Dominion officials have been included in the Secretariat. Could not a similar arrangement be made on a permanent basis? It would then be possible for each Dominion to control the supply of information to itself.

Mr. Jebb's proposal has been taken up by Mr.Bruce.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

This proposal does not meet the situation. It is the business of the British Government or any other government of the Empire to decide as to what information of its plans and activities it shall send to other governments. As for the Dominions, they undoubtedly do require to secure further information about world affairs, but the place to build up Secretariats for the purpose is in the External Affairs Department of each Dominion, where the information from various sources, official and unofficial, will be collected and analysed, and the officials be available for consultation by Ministers.

It is of interest to note a revealing statement by Lord Curzon in the course of the 1921 Conference, which contrasts significantly with his public remarks quoted in (c) above. Speaking of the possibilities of sending F.O. information to the Dominions, Lord Curzon practically makes the distinction between Empire affairs and United Kingdom affairs which has been emphasized above:-

> Mr. Hughes will realize that in the day-to-day conduct of the Foreign Office and of foreign affairs it will be impossible. Take for instance the Upper Silesian question which is now before us. It is a very critical matter. It varies from day to day and a telegram sent out to you from Upper Silesia would be out of date before it reached you. Nor would your views be of any use to us in the matter. You would not understand it. And suppose that we came to business and instead of four battalions we had to move eight battalions, the other four would not be Australian or New Zealand battalions, they would be British battalions. What you want is greater knowledge and greater influence in matters which concern you as parts of the Empire and in which you yourselves, your parliaments and your troops may be involved....A great crisis leading up to war does not develop in a week or two. A war or any great affair in which you are concerned is a result of a process that has been going on for several weeks or months.

The futility of these or similar expedients in securing any real control over the whole range of U. K. policy is coming to be

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

recognized. Mr. Hughes admits that the Dominions have no voice, only an echo; Mr. Bruce admits they do not control. The Near East episode provided the touchstone for the grandiloquent assumptions of 1921. Yet some supporters of those assumptions still contend that in one way or other they may be made good. It is surprising that they do not see that it is not the faulty means but the undesirable end that prevents success. So long as the distinction between foreign affairs of primary concern to one part of the Empire and affairs of joint concern to all or several parts of the Empire is not recognized, the discussion will be futile and endeavours to work out machinery for giving the Dominions control of what is really United Kingdom matters will be beside the mark.

A further unacceptable feature of the Empire one-foreign-policy theory is that it ignores the necessity for associating the parliaments and peoples in the decision of foreign policy. Granted that a measure of secrecy is essential in the course of negotiations, granted that the conduct of affairs must rest largely with an experienced and specialized executive department, still it is true that is not desirable for any Dominion or for the Empire that vital issues of foreign policy should be determined decisively in a small Executive or Conference group. The problem of foreign policy is not settled when provision is made for bringing Prime Ministers together. Each Prime Minister must on important issues, secure the backing of his Parliament and his people.

What is the application of these tried and established principles to the procedure and conduct of foreign affairs?

(1) As regards the great bulk of foreign relations, it follows that negotiations will be carried on by the Kingdom or Dominion concerned with the foreign country concerned. Where these relations are important and continuous, it may

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

be advisable to appoint a representative of the Dominion in the foreign capital; this is notably true in the case of Canada's relations with Washington. It is however, not in harmony with Canadian traditions that this Canadian representative should be merely a clerk of the British Embassy nor that he should be a Chargé d'affaires for the Ambassador during the absence of the latter. Other issues may be dealt with by permanent boards such as the U.S.-Canadian International Joint Commission. In other cases ministers or officials of the Dominion confer with the foreign Government.

(2) Treaty-making. These negotiations usually result in informal agreement or administrative action. Sometimes more formal executive or legislative confirmation is necessary. This may be arranged by concurrent legislation, or by the signing of a convention or treaty to be ratified afterwards. It is now admitted that the Dominions may make conventions or informal agreements without any authorization or consultation with the British Government, as in Mr. Fielding's agreement with Italy as to tariff in 1910. As to treaties, the process has gone through several stages; (a) first, all the Empire bound by U. K. treaties; (b) Dominions not bound unless they expressly agreed, i.e. negative freedom, (as to commercial treaties, as long ago as 1881; as to political treaties, in the Anglo-American-French draft treaty of 1919). (c) next, Dominions empowered to make treaties themselves, at first with the British Ambassador or other plenipotentiary associated with the Canadian plenipotentiary,- in the Halibut case, with the Canadian plenipotentiary alone representing His Majesty. The question still remains whether in the latter case the grant of full powers by His Majesty, is on the motion and advice of His Canadian Ministers, or on the advice of His British Ministers through whom the advice of the Canadian

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Government is transmitted. A consistent autonomous practice might develop in either of two ways: the Dominion Ministers might be entitled to approach and advise the King without intermediary (as e.g. the Manitoba Free Press says is essential) or, the action of the British Ministers in transmitting the Dominion advice should in time by constitutional usage come to be considered automatic and a matter of course. A very able and interesting discussion of this point by Mr. Hughes is found in the 1921 Conference Report, 23rd meeting, p.8.

(3) War-Making. Foreign disputes may lead to war. Not, even in these days, so often as to make consideration of war making and peace-making procedure the outstanding question, but still the possibility remains.

(a) Declaration of War by United Kingdom. The understanding up to the Great War undoubtedly was that (1) technically the Dominions were at war when Britian was at war, (2) the extent to which they actively engaged in war was for them, or conceivably for the enemy, to decide. As to (1) this position has probably been changed by the measure of distinct international recognition afforded the Dominions in the Paris negotiations and the League of Nations, and particularly by the Anglo-French-American draft treaty of 1919. Cf.Ottawa Journal, June 5, 1919: (referring to this treaty)

> "No longer is it true to say what only this week was true, in words famous in our Parliament, 'When England is at war, Canada is at war.' An agreement framed by British statesmen lays down the principle that although England should go to war in a just cause, neither Canada nor Australia nor South Africa has any obligations in the matter except as the representative parliaments of the Overseas Dominions shall decide, each for itself."

This
~~It~~ cannot however, be said to be clear beyond dispute yet.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

As to (2) this principle has been clearly affirmed by the present Government, e.g., in the Fielding resolution of 1919,

> "That in giving such approval (to the Treaty of Versailles) this House in no way assents to any impairment of the existing autonomous authority in the Dominions, but declares that the question of what part, if any, the forces of Canada shall take in any war, actual or threatened, is one to be determined at all times as occasion may require by the people of Canada through their representatives in Canada."

and in the discussion of the Near East episode, notably in the Prime Minister's statement:

> "We have felt and felt very strongly that if the relations between the different parts of the British Empire are to be made of an enduring character, this will only be through a full recognition of the supremacy of Parliament and this particularly with regard to matters which may involve participation in war. It is for Parliament to decide whether or not we should participate in wars in different parts of the world, and it is neither right nor proper for any individual or for any group of individuals to take any step which might limit the rights of Parliament in a matter which is of such great concern to all the people of our country" (Hansard, Feb. 1, 1923)

It has also received recognition in the constitution of the Irish Free State, based on the Treaty between Great Britain and Ireland, Article 48:

> "Save in the case of actual invasion, the Irish Free State (Saarsatt Eireann) shall not be committed to active participation in any war without the assent of the Parliament (Oireachtas)."

Note may be made of General Smuts' statements:

> "The Dominions have, in principle, authority and power not only in respect to their domestic questions but also of their international or foreign relations and the questions of peace and war which affect them. If a war is to affect them, they will have to declare it. If a peace is to be made in respect of them they will have to sign it. Their independence has been achieved... [Again] the self-governing Dominions in future must exercise the right to say whether after full deliberation they will join in a war in which any portion of the Empire may be engaged."

Mr. W. M. Hughes, takes a different position. He declared in a recent article (London Morning Post, May 9,)

> In theory, each of the parts of the Empire may

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

may decide for itself whether it stands aloof or joins hands with the other parts of the Empire in time of war. But although this choice is open to them, they cannot escape their responsibilities as members of the Empire. When Britain is at war they are belligerants, their ships are liable to capture, their territories to invasion. I know, of course, that in certain quarters this does not seem to be realized, but the position is as I have stated."

Mr. Massey and Mr. Bruce would go still further, declaring that when one part of the Empire is at war, all are so technically and should be actively. This position is of course linked up with their views as to a common Empire foreign policy; if automatically the Dominions are to be involved in war by Britain's action, then they must beforehand secure a share in the control of every phase of her policy or accept a position as a helot nation. Contrariwise, if the participation of the Dominions is to be determined by their Parliaments, the occasion for seeking such control is greatly lessened.

(b) Declaration of War by a Dominion. If a Dominion were to declare war or have war declared upon it, it cannot rightly demand that the United Kingdom or other Dominions should automatically take part in the war. That is for their Parliaments to decide.

(4) Peace Making

In the negotiation of treaties ending a war in which all parts of the Empire have been engaged, each Kingdom and Dominion will be represented in the negotiations by its own plenipotentiaries who will sign severally, and the parliament of each country will have to ratify. In practice, the extent to which any Dominion will count in such negotiations will depend on the number of other Allies involved and the location of the interests that are being settled; as to ratification again, if it is primarily a British interest that is involved, the action of a Dominion may be only formal, a technical and legal

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

sign of the end of the war; but the situation would vary according to circumstances and the relative magnitude of United Kingdom-Dominion interests involved.

Certain objections may be raised against the "Canadian" view of foreign policy summarized above:-

(a) "Dominion control of purely trade matters is perfectly legitimate and desirable, but the right of independent action in political matters (e.g. Halibut treaty) is not desirable and has not been conceded" (Substance of Premier Massey's criticism, cable, 1923)

(1) "Merely trade affairs" are the warp and woof of the foreign affairs of most countries to-day.

(2) A generation ago many Colonial statesmen from south of the line deprecated Canadian action in the field in which it is now agreed it is perfectly legitimate. ##

(4) What exactly is meant by political treaties?

Why is a treaty as to Halibut any more political than a treaty as to postal or radio arrangements? ###

(4) Is not the more important distinction to be borne in mind the one referred to above - e.g., between arrangements which concern only one part of the Empire and those which affect several or all parts, a distinction of range rather than subject matter?

Colonial Conference, 1887, James Service of Victoria: "When the principle was first conceded to Canada that she should negotiate her own treaties, I remember well feeling that so far as the retention of Canada within the bounds of the Empire was concerned, that was a step entirely in the wrong direction, and I am quite satisfied that it is not a step to be imitated."

Sir Thomas Upington, Cape of Good Hope, "This proposal will lead to the disruption of the Empire."

Letter of Sir William Mulock,- "Canada is an independent member of the International Postal Union and in accordance with the Union's constitution, is entitled to enter any convention it chooses with any other country. I am satisfied that for years the various conventions between Canada and the United States were entered into by these two countries alone without any intervention by Great Britain by signature or any other participation...If it is "loyal" for

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(b) "How can you distinguish between Empire affairs and Kingdom or Dominion affairs? One part of the Empire may insist that an affair is common which another may say is its primary concern:"

True, there is inevitably a twilight zone, a marginal region as to which there may be some difference of opinion as to jurisdiction. But this is true of every co-operating group; it is true of the relations even between the Allies. If claims such as are referred to are made, they will doubtless be discussed and light reached. Experience and goodwill gradually will solve the problem of marginal cases.

(c) "We cannot have six foreign policies and one Empire: it means the break-up of the Empire, of the united front it formerly presented to the world" -

Why cannot we? That depends on your definition of foreign policy and your conception of the Empire. It was asserted with even greater assurance and in more official quarters two generations ago that there could not be more than one domestic policy for the Empire, that the ultimate decision must rest in Downing Street or the Empire would shatter into fragments. It seems to be surviving these prophecies very well. Responsible government in foreign policy will no more weaken the real springs of union than responsible government in domestic policy.

(Contd)

Canada to make an agreement with the U.S. about letters and newspapers. I do not understand why it is disloyal to make such an agreement about fish."

Radiotelegraph Union in same position (Memo. from G.J. Desbarats) Plenipotentiary powers conferred on Canadian representative in 1912.

To be remembered however, that these Unions consist of Administrations not of States; quite minor Portuguese and French Colonies are also included. Our action here is hardly an argument for recognition of our full and distinct international status but it does at least show that as regards the subject matter of the discussion, action in other fields as important has long been [illegible].

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(d) "If it is so difficult to build up means of common Empire action as indicated, will not this prevent effective co-operation in any field, even in what is admitted to be of common interest?"

True, there are difficulties: but the really big and enduring interests are much more easily discussed, it is more possible to secure public and parliamentary interest in them; they do not arise over night (though party and personal crises may).

(e) "Canada is prepared to accept far-reaching responsibilities at the behest of the Council of the League of Nations, to safeguard Chile or Jugo-Slavia or Siam and is not prepared to accept less sweeping engagements in regard to Britain or Australia."

Not so: Canada is prepared to do what her knowledge and powers permit in the restoration and maintenance of peace, but she has consistently declined to give any blank cheques or promise to commit herself to any programme of intervention without parliamentary sanction.

(f) #Canada is claiming to dictate the Empire's policy as to the United States, simply because nearest that country."

Not so: Mr. Meighen may be interpreted as laying down that proposal in 1921, but it was not in accord with Canadian tradition, and was an unsuccessful attempt to reconcile the theory of one policy for the Empire with the fact that Canada was controlling and must control her own primary relations with the United States, which form 80 per cent of the Empire's dealings with that power. ##

-- No, when a question arises with the United States in

Mr. Meighen's "Conclusions on Foreign Policy, 1921. (6th meeting, June 24, pp.3.):-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

which all or several parts of the Empire are concerned, Canada does not claim to have a controlling voice, though she may be able to contribute to the solution through her knowledge of the United States situation and temperament; it is only when a question arises which affects Canada primarily, that Canada, in the future as in the past, will consider it desirable to carry it on herself.

(Contd)

1. There should be regular and as far as possible continuous conferences between the responsible representatives of Britain and the self-governing Dominions and India with a view, among other things, of determining and clarifying the governing principles of our relations with foreign countries, and of seeking common counsel and advancing common interests therein.

2. That while in general final responsibility rests with the Ministry advising the King, such Ministry should, in formulating the principles upon which such advise is founded and in the application of those principles, have regard to the views of His Majesty's Privy Council in other Dominions and of the Representatives of India.

3. That as respects the determination of the Empire's foreign policy in spheres in which any Empire is peculiarly concerned, the view of that Dominion must be given a weight commensurate with the importance of the decision to that Dominion. Speaking for Canada, I make this observation with particular reference to our relations with the United States.

(Also discussion in meeting 22, pages 7, 10, 20).

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(g) "It is all very well for Canada to assert her right to make treaties herself, but when she gets into trouble over them it will be the whole Empire that will be involved." (Canada Morning Post,

Imaginable, but highly improbable. Canada's policy in foreign relations has been discreet and friendly (with some reservations as to Oriental Immigration) and has been a distinct asset not a liability to the Empire. Canada may rightly claim a considerable share of credit for the improved relations among English-speaking peoples.

Canada has never yet involved any other part of the Empire in trouble; no British soldier has ever fired a shot, no Australian parliament ever voted a shilling, in any war entered upon by Canada or on Canada's behalf, whereas there are a few important entries on the other side of the Empire war ledger. There is no indication that it will be different in the future.

(h) "The theory is a fine theory, but in practice it will not safeguard Canada's interests: if Britain goes to war, whatever the cause or initial justice, Canada will be swept into it by imperialist agitation, by newspaper campaigns, by offers of enlistment, etc., so why not recognise this and try, by taking a moderating part in Empire policy, to avert war, rather than let it develop and then, after going through the paper form of deciding for ~~themselves~~ ourselves, be swept in as before?"

Some force: no question that a real difficulty will arise in Canada if Britain goes to war in a cause that does not commend itself to the Canadian Government of the day. But it will have to be faced, and the Government's action in the Near East crisis will make it more difficult on any

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

future occasion to stampede the country. In any case, the British Government is more likely to moderate its action if it knows it must convince the Dominions than if they are pledged in advance to aid in no matter what cause.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

1493

Empire Boards as Responsible Governments

C 62270

The assemblage of representatives of mother and daughter states united around this hospitable board tonight may be fitly described as a family gathering. We have come together from all parts of the earth, from both hemispheres, and from both sides of the Equator. In England, I presume, this fact in itself presents nothing that is unusual. It is the habit of young men and women born and brought up in this country to scatter themselves over the face of the earth in pursuit of fortune, and a gathering of the whole family under the parental roof, after the first separation, would entail long journeys on the part of some of its members.

But this family gathering of ours is distinguished from all other family gatherings by this unique feature. The British Empire is composed of many peoples and of many different races. Some of its parts have been peopled from the loins of British settlers and colonizers. Others have been brought in by one or other method of adoption. But the blood gives no privileges. All are equally dear to the mother. All sit down together at the family board as of equal right, and each has his own assured place at the family hearth. And, most wonderful of all, every one comes with equal readiness to take his place at the board, and participate in the family councils.

What is the magic by which this island of Great Britain has succeeded in holding together so large a proportion of the dwellers on this globe? One quarter of the population of the earth acknowledge the sovereignty of our King. It is not to be found in the display of power.

Great Britain is wealthy and powerful, but it is not the habit of Britons, either at home or abroad, to be unduly impressed with these attributes. The strong arm, unless associated with the virtue of kindliness, or employed in the defence or furtherance of right commands little abiding

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

respect among men anywhere. The bond is not to be found in written documents, for of these there are none.

Whence then proceeds the virtue that binds mother state and daughter states, and, through her, daughter state to daughter state? There is no tie whatever that is visible to the uninformed eye. To foreigners it is all pure mystery, and to many of our own people it is far from clear. The Empire has been called, sometimes affectionately, sometimes contemptuously a ramshackle affair, which, said some, was bound to disrupt at the first shock. The War has changed opinion on this last point, however far the solution of the mystery may remain out of reach.

But the explanation of the tie holding together the many and diverse parts of this widely scattered Empire is one of those open secrets, whose very patency defies the seeker for truth. Oddly enough, the British people themselves do not seem to have grasped it. But we, who dwell in the outer parts of the Empire, and who recognise the bond, understand the matter better.

Great Britain is beloved at home and revered abroad, because it exhibits on a national scale those qualities, which make the individual Englishman, a distinctive character among the human races- love of truth and fair play, and a tenderness for the under dog, with, at the roots of his being, a serene courage and steadfast patience, before which all obstacles must finally give way. He scorns the imputation of sentimentality, but he responds to the cry of his sentiments, beyand any other human being.

In her wars, she has been impelled by her sentiments, carefully disguised in the garb of self interest. For three centuries- to go no further back- her great European conflicts have been at the head of those powers, which were engaged

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

in repelling the ambitions of some would- be conqueror, who was intent on establishing an overlordship on the continent. The words of Pitt's last public utterance, delivered at the moment when the fortunes of Britain's continental allies were at their lowest ebb, contain the very spirit, with which she has waged all her wars: "England has saved herself by her exertions, and will, as I trust, save Europe by her example."

Capable, then, as Great Britain has shown herself to be in assuring her safety from foreign aggression, she is even more distinguished for the steady development of those institutions, which secure to its people those things most valued by mankind- the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Our Parliament, which is the model accepted by all nations, as they advance towards the establishment of representative institutions, is but the natural ourgrowth of the Parliament summoned by Simon de Montfort to Westminster in 1265. That sovereign security for justice before the courts of law- trial by jury- sprang into being, full orbed, 600 years ago, and its efficacy for the purpose in view has never been seriously challenged, during its many centuries of working.

Thus much, then, of Great Britain, as one of the great nations of the world. These things, together with her contributions to art, literature and those various things comprehended under the term civilisation, stand out for the admiration of all mankind. But I shall now touch a more personal note, one befitting us as members of the family.

Here a Canadian may, if I shall be pardoned for saying so, speak with peculiar authority. Canada was the laboratory, in which the Colonial Office tried out its theories, and evolved the principles, which in their further development, govern the relations subsisting between all the members of the Empire today.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

When the fortunes of war decreed that Canada should come under the wing of Great Britain, the Mother Country was confronted with a situation, which tried her statesmanship to the utmost. There fell into her care a considerable population of highly civilized race, but whose political outlook was radically different from her own. There was the further complication, that this population were ardent devotees of a religion, which at that time was proscribed in England,

If this were all, there would probably have been no unusual difficulty. The French Canadians had been under a system of absolutism, in which the monarch of France had been both the law giver, and administrator. If when the change of regime took place, an English sovereign replacing the King of France, the British had been able to stop short at that point, and simply take over the government as a bequest from the King of France, there is no reason to think that the outcome would not have been satisfactory to every body. The last years of the French rule had been marked by so much corruption and oppression, that it would have been an easy matter to have contented the inhabitants with a much improved administration of the country.

But the English Government destroyed its chances of a quiet life by opening up the country to English immigrants from the Mother Country and the older American colonies. These were not in the least likely to be contented with the absolute rule of a governor, and, indeed, they had scarcely had time to settle down in the new country and look about them before they demanded a representative assembly. Now, it would have clearly been impossible to elect an assembly at this time, without violating every principle of prudence on the one hand or of justice on the other.

There were something like 80,000 French Canadians in the Province, and the merest handful of people of British race.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

If, on the one hand, the assembly had been really representative, it would have been composed almost entirely of members, who were in arms against Great Britain five short years before, not one of whom, moreover, had had the smallest experience with Parliamentary institutions. On the other hand, to have made people of British stock alone eligible would have placed the lives and fortunes of the vast majority in the hands of a few of an alien and until recently a hostile race.

The handful of English saw no impropriety in the latter alternative, and indeed clamored for it, but such a proposal outraged the sense of justice in the British Government, and a government was established as nearly as possible in accordance with that to which French Canadians were accustomed.

Then, the religious differences seemed to threaten formidable trouble. In Great Britain, they were living under statutes, which practically outlawed Roman Catholics, and presdribed ferocious penalties for all, who conducted services in that religion. Furthermore, so far as the plain letter of the law stood, those laws ran into the colonies from the Mother Country.

But the Government had no desire to apply their Anti-Catholic laws in Canada, and so they referred it to the Attorney General to know whether these laws did govern in this country. By some miracle of reasoning, of which he did not disclose the processes, the Attorney General, in the face of the plain words of the Statute, declared that these laws had no application in Canada. A further difficulty arose about the ordination of a bishop. Here the difficulty appeared insuperable, but where there's a will there's a way, and the difficulty was surmounted, by a bit of kindly advice to the bishop-to-be to go over to France to see his mother, and while there obtain his ordination, without, however, any flourish of trumpets. By the additional device of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

appointment of a coadjutor cum successione at the time a new bishop was appointed, the perpetual succession was assured. By these innocent stratagems the deepest wishes in the hearts of the new subjects were respected, and the way paved for future harmony. Soon after, the old French land system and laws were reestablished, much to the satisfaction of French Canadians, but to a chorus of complaints on the part of the British minority, who insisted that the rights inherent in them as natural born British subjects were being violated.

The American Revolution and the foundation of the United States put an entirely new face on the situation. From that momentous event, is to be dated the British Empire as it exists today. It brought the British Government face to face with the problem, which is still in process of solution. The problem may be stated thus; "Is it possible for a British Empire to exist, every part of which will be so free, that it will have no occasion to envy the United States its liberty? Britons, they were convinced, would be satisfied with no smaller measure of liberty. The problem was attacked tentatively, and generally with profound misgivings, until light began to appear in the early forties, which, under the wise hand of Lord Elgin, widened, until by 1849 it seemed to give promise of the perfect day.

In Canada itself the Revolution wrought a change scarcely less important to it. There had been ejected from the newly established States all those persons, who remained loyal to Great Britain. Most of these came to Canada, and were styled United Empire Loyalists. These settled for the most part in what was then known as the Upper Country, far to the west of the French Canadian settlements, on the shores of Lake Ontario. In their old homes, these new settlers had been habituated for generations to government by representative assemblies, and it was unthinkable that they should be subjected to the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

existing system of government by a governor and an appointed council.

On all hands it was conceded that for the colony as augmented by the recent arrivals, there must be representative institutions. The question then arose, should the whole colony be formed into one political unit, or should the new settlers in the Upper Country be given a government of their own. The question was settled in the latter sense, one of Pitt's reasons being, that the French Canadians who were without political experience might see the advantages of representative institutions as worked by a body composed of men familiar with the operation of this system.

The province was divided into Lower Canada, and Upper Canada, and assemblies elected by popular vote for each. These assemblies functioned each after its own genius. That in Upper Canada lost no time in beginning its work of legislation. In the Lower Canadian assembly, there was much more of the school for debate. But there were one or two racial questions that called for settlement before the Lower Canadian Assembly could get down to business. In spite of rather arrogant protests on the part of the English section, a French Canadian was elected speaker, and the French language was placed on a parity with the English in the drawing up of legislative records and papers. A notable fact is that, although the Assembly nearly always contained a disproportionate number of English members, the House had become so far Gallicized that in 1812 a speech in English in the Chamber was something of a rarety.

For a number of years the proceedings in the Assemblies of both provinces exhibited little that was untoward. There was no more contention in either than was to be expected in bodies that breathe the air of contention. But gradually a change became observable. Clashes between the Assemblies

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and the Legislative Councils became more frequent and more acrimonious. Bills that were adopted in the Assemblies to meet pressing needs in the country were mangled beyond recognition, when not rejected altogether, in the Legislative Councils. Deadlocks occurred, money was withheld by the Assemblies, charges of disloyalty, either to the Mother Country on the one hand, or to the land in which they lived, on the other, were flung about. Matters reached a point when the Assembly in Lower Canada was suspended altogether, and in Upper Canada where the Governor by the exercise of undue influences of every sort, had secured an Assembly to his liking, the Province itself was up in arms.

The fault lay in the system of government which was imposed on the Provinces. It was radically vicious. The Home Government, in spite of the experience it should have gained from the revolt of the older colonies, transferred the same system to the new Canadian provinces.

The legislative scheme consisted of a Governor appointed by the Sovereign, a Legislative Council, appointed on the nomination of the Governor, the members of which held their positions for life, and a popularly elected Assembly. The Legislative Council conceiving their chief function to be a buffer between the Assembly and the Governor, removing from him the odium of rejecting Assembly measures, which he disliked, contracted the habit of opposition to the Assembly, and, in this way, became obnoxious to the Assembly; so that the harmonious cooperation between them on which the success of any bi-cameral system depends, became impossible. In Lower Canada, the antagonism between the two bodies was accentuated by racial divisions, the Council being predominantly English in origin, while the great majority of the Assembly were French Canadians.

The Assemblies, who represented the whole body of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

people in their respective Provinces, saw themselves to be little more than petitioners to the Governor, for measures which they believed were demanded by the interests of the people, but whose petitions might be rejected or amended by persons, who represented nobody but the Governor.

Such a state of things could not continue. Apart from the interests involved, it lacerated the self respect of the people and their representatives. The popular discontents culminated in revolts in both provinces, which awakened the Home Government to the perils of the situation.

The outbreak was soon quelled, but something more had to be done. It was not the wish of the Home Government to set up a permanent rule of force, even had that been practicable. In casting about for some person to go to Canada, and devise a system of Government, which would restore contentment in the country, their eyes were providentially directed to the man, who had had a principal hand in the measure, by which the peaceful revolution had been wrought in Great Britain in 1832.

On his arrival in Canada, Lord Durham was deeply impressed, not to say depressed, by the evidences of the prevailing disorder. He had expected to see a war of parties, but found, as he thought, a war of races. The hands of English Canadians and of French Canadians were raised against one another, whenever they came together in contact. Maladministration was rampant in all the departments of government. It is probable, and in the light of later events it seems certain, that he exaggerated the degree of racial animosity which prevailed. His highly sensitive mind laid perhaps too much stress on the symptoms, that came under his observation.

But, with all abatements made, the situation was grave enough to excite alarm, and to arouse him to the necessity for heroic measures. Although it appeared to him that sedition

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

was as rife among the English portion of the community as among the French, he pinned his hopes of saving the country on the English. He would pacify the country generally by giving it responsible government on the model of the system, by which the Mother Country was governed, and in order to secure a preponderant English proportion in the population, proposed to unite all the provinces of British North America under one government. In coming to his decision to recommend a system of Government, in which the administration should be in the hands of only such a body as could command the support of the Assembly, he had before him a masterly exposition of the principles of responsible government as applicable to a colony, by an eminent Canadian statesman, Robert Baldwin. In this paper Baldwin expressed his doubts as to the success of a measure designed to swamp so large a section of the population as the French Canadians, and urged the value of complete self government as the sovereign remedy for the political evils from which Canada was suffering.

Durham's report excited great interest and feeling both in England and Canada. To Liberals in both countries it was an evangel, while Tories, on the other hand, denounced it as pointing the road to Imperial disaster. To them it was but the prelude to a new declaration of independence. Its acceptance demanded a faith in the efficacy of British institutions robuster than was to be found in any but a few British statesmen.

But something had to be done. Further inaction was impossible. A second rebellion broke out immediately after Lord Durham's departure from Canada. To suppress it was not difficult, but permanent military government was not to be thought of.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Government took the plunge. Fortunately, a well-tried Liberal, Lord John Russell, had control of Colonial Affairs. A bill was introduced into Parliament, uniting Upper and Lower Canada, and on its adoption, a ministerial colleague of Russell's was sent out as governor to Canada, to set the new ship of state afloat.

Much foreboding prevailed, and indeed conditions in Canada were not propitious. Upper Canada welcomed the scheme as furnishing the much desired responsible government. Lower Canada, on the contrary, was thoroughly discontented. The union with Upper Canada was avowedly intended to put the French Canadians in a position of subordination to their fellow citizens of British origin, and, to emphasize this fact, French was suppressed by the Act of Union, as an official language in the new legislature. French Canadian temper was raised to boiling point by the methods employed by the first Governor, Lord Sydenham, to secure a majority in Lower Canada favorable to the Union.

The first two governors accepted the principle of responsible governments with reservations, which in the case of the second governor led to a breach with his advisers. He dismissed his ministers, and, on an appeal to the country, secured a majority in the Assembly by methods, which would not could not always be defended, and this heightened the general exasperation.

Things had now reached a pass, when the separation of Canada from the Empire seemed inevitable. It was openly discussed in Parliament, in political clubs and in the press. Some publicists deplored it, others took it philosophically, while others again expressed relief at the prospect of being rid of so troublesome a dependent. When matters appeared to be in extremes, a man was sent out who by his loyal adherence to the principle of responsible government, his

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

faith, in the virtue of British institutions, coupled with political wisdom and tact, in an incredibly short time restored peace and contentment, and inspired hopes of a brilliant future for the country under the aegis of the British Crown.

On his arrival at the beginning of 1847, Lord Elgin found a ministry supported by the Assembly elected under the auspices of his predecessor. It was Tory, and predominantly English. Elgin treated the premier with a perfectly friendly frankness. He told him that he would give him his best advice at all times, and all legitimate support, but would do nothing that would make it difficult to cooperate with the leaders of the Opposition, should they at any time secure a majority of the Assembly. To this policy he consistently adhered. When the Opposite party came into power at the succeeding election, nothing had taken place on his part to prevent immediate cooperation between him and his new ministers.

The first ministry was a weak one, always dwelling within the shadow of impending defeat. As a consequence all its energies were occupied in the unfruitful business of clinging to office. Elgin observed on one occasion to his friendly correspondent the Colonial Secretary that, while the Assembly was fully taken up with the question as to who should be its ruler, the Governor spent his time devising measures for the good of the country.

A little more than a year after Elgin came to Canada, the occasion arrived for putting his principles to the test. His government had been decisively defeated at the polls, and it became his duty to summon as his new premier the leader for the Lower Canadian section of the dominant party, a man who had taken part in the recent outbreak, and whose arrest for treason had been ordered by the Government.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Although he had no idea of faltering, his letter at the time to the Colonial Secretary showed signs of the perturbation with which he looked forward to his first interview with Lafontaine. But there proved to be no cause for alarm. Lafontaine was a statesman with a full sense of the responsibility of the position he held, and he and Elgin met on friendly terms, and thus commenced a union which was satisfactory to both and of great benefit to the country. The new ministry, of which Lafontaine in association with Robert Baldwin, was the head, was strongly supported in the House, and was able to carry through many useful measures. Elgin, later, spoke of it as "the first really efficient and working Government that Canada has had since the Union."

The course events had taken, and the use he had made of the opportunity they afforded him, were matters on which Elgin honestly congratulated himself, 1848 was the year of the Revolution in France with its reverberations throughout Europe. It was also, the year in which the Chartists were creating a panic in England. But while thrones were toppling on the Continent, and England, herself, looked about her with foreboding, Elgin was able to report that "at no period, during the recent history of Canada, had the people of the Province been better contented, or less disposed to quarrel with the mother-country".

Elgin's loyal adherence to the principle of government by a ministry enjoying the confidence of the Assembly was put to the severest trial in the second year of the incumbency of the Lafontaine-Baldwin ministry. And the antagonism he hadto encounter came not from his ministers or from the Crown, the only two powers towards whom he bore responsibility, but from a mob in the capital, an English speaking mob, who arrogated to themselves the guardianship of the British interests and the honor of the Crown.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62283

Elgin, in the course of his duty had given his assent to a measure, which had been passed in the Assembly by a large majority, but which these soi-disant patriots conceived to be a bill indemnifying rebels for losses they had suffered in the course of the rebellion. Despite the fact that this measure had been initiated a few years before by their own leaders, they carried their resentment against Lord Elgin to the point of assault upon himself, and the destruction of the Parliament Buildings by fire. Elgin remained firm; the Ministry in England gave him their steady support, and the net local result was that the capital was removed from the city, which could not protect the government against its own mobs.

But the larger- the constitutional- issue was settled. Thereafter there was no serious challenge to the principle that measures presented by a ministry, supported by an Assembly representing the majority of the people, should become part of the law of the land. There were, indeed, proposals made from time to time which were for one reason or another objectionable to the authorities at Home. But as the result of the friendly remonstrances of the Governor, many of these were suppressed before they saw the light. Others, which were regarded as important to the interests of the country, were pressed forward, notwithstanding the Governor's objections. In these cases, the British Government, after stating their objections, withdrew them and allowed such measures to become law. With tact and goodwill on the part of governor and ministry, the difficulties which loomed so large in anticipation, to hamper the carrying through of responsible government in a dependency, were overcome one by one as they came to be encountered.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

One of the most serious difficulties which confronted Elgin, in his efforts to inspire in Canada a faith in its future as part of the British Empire, was the tone of the public utterances in Great Britain, to which I have adverted.

Ministers themselves did not conceal their opinion that it was only a matter of time, before Canada would separate its fortunes from those of the Empire. Elgin combatted these utterances vigorously. He did not hesitate to condemn certain words of the Prime Minister, Lord John Russell on this point, quoting with approval a statement made to him by Baldwin that if Russell's anticipations as to eventual separation should prove to be well founded his interest in public affairs was gone for ever.

Elgin held his fáth in the British Empire, in the superiority of its institutions, and its capacity to embrace the colonies when they came to maturity with religious fervour, and his was a potent influence to check the separatist tendencies, which were manifesting themselves in many forms, in Great Britain.

Before Lord Elgin left Canada in 1854, the Mother country was satisfied that it had found the solution of the problem set before her by the American Revolution, and that it was possible to have an Empire, every part of which enjoyed a liberty, which feared no comparison with that afforded to its citizens by the United States.

Thereafter, responsible Government was established in all the Colonies, which had reached a status, enabling them to take advantage of it. In the year following the return of Lord Elgin from Canada to his home in Scotland, the system was extended to the several colonies of Australia and to New Zealand. The British American colonies of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were granted the same boon during the period when the experiment was on trial in Canada, and the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62285

evidence of its success in those colonies added weight to the evidence from Canada.

A supremely important consequence of the demonstration of the feasibility and success of responsible government as applied to the colonies, was the disclosure it afforded of the unseen foundations on which the British Empire rests. The basis on which it stands is purely spiritual to be found only in the deep places of the heart. There is a class of worthy individuals who cannot be got to see this. They have before their eyes a great political system made up of mother state and daughter states firmly established, each on its own feet, and in its relations with one another. They see the several states cooperating with one another with a harmony that must surprise even themselves. They have witnessed the great spectacle of the daughter states all rushing to the side of the mother when her honor and safety are in the balance, and staying with her through all the vicissitudes of a great war, and yet, with all these things in full view, they cry 'It cannot last, it will go down unless you allow us to prop it up with a mass of documental underpinning.' Away with such notions. Why can these people not see that parchments, so far from strengthening the bonds, will not only hamper interimperial development, but may well prove fatal to the permanence of the Empire.

The future of the British Commonwealth depends on the success with which each part labors for the prosperity and welfare of the people within its bounds. On this point, and in closing, I cannot do better than to repeat the message sent out by the King last Empire Day, to the young people throughout the Empire:-

"On this day my people in all parts of the world join to celebrate their unity, and to draw closer the common ties which hold them to gether. Each of our many peoples has its

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

own life to lead; each has its own work to do; yet all are members of one family, sharing their sorrows and joys. You have learned how the Empire was built up by brave and wise men and women in the past. It is only by courage, wisdom and unselfishness that it will endure. It is a great inheritance. Your fathers and forefathers made it. Its future welfare and good name are, under the Providence of God, in your hands. Do not think of it as a thing far away from you. Every one of you counts, and what you do and learn now will decide how far you will be able to play your parts worthily when you grow up. Get knowledge; be brave, honorable and kind, thinking of others before yourselves; and always play the game. So will you fit yourselves to hand down this community of free nations to your children and grandchildren as a great instrument of justice, peace and goodwill, which will deserve the respect and esteem of mankind."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62287

NEAR EAST SITUATION.

1. Colonial Office Despatch of Friday, September 15; received Saturday, September 16.

   Facts concerning transmission, delivery, and receipt of.

   Agreement between officials of Governor General's Office and my Office as to time of delivery at office of the Prime Minister - between 2 and 3 o'clock.

2. Semi-official communiqué or manifesto of Colonial Office to Press.

   Facts concerning given out in London, 3 p.m. should reach Canada 11 a.m. (Saturday); appearance in Press of Montreal and Toronto; also replies of Australia and New Zealand.

3. My absence from Ottawa at time.

   Made no difference as to the semi-official communiqué being public in Canada, before receipt by the Prime Minister of the Colonial Office despatch.

4. Circumstances concerning first intimation of any communication from Great Britain respecting a crisis in the Near East.
   Shewen despatch by representatives of Toronto Press about to address patriotic gathering in company with hon. member for West Toronto.

5. Embarrassing situation - whilst semi-official communiqué public - despatch from Colonial Office marked Secret and Confidential and in cypher; impossible therefore to give contents to public; doubly embarrassing in that impression conveyed by semi-official communiqué as to nature of invitation sent out was quite different from that which a reading of the despatch itself conveyed.
   General Smuts, the Premier of South Africa, told the Parliament of South Africa that despatch was not to be construed as an invitation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62287

NEAR EAST SITUATION.

1. Colonial Office Despatch of Friday, September 15; received Saturday, September 16.

   Facts concerning transmission, delivery, and receipt of.

   Agreement between officials of Governor General's Office and my Office as to time of delivery at office of the Prime Minister - between 2 and 3 o'clock.

2. Semi-official communiqué or manifesto of Colonial Office to Press.

   Facts concerning given out in London, 3 p.m. should reach Canada 11 a.m. (Saturday);
   appearance in Press of Montreal and Toronto;
   also replies of Australia and New Zealand.

3. My absence from Ottawa at time.

   Made no difference as to the semi-official communiqué being public in Canada, before receipt by the Prime Minister of the Colonial Office despatch.

4. Circumstances concerning first intimation of any communication from Great Britain respecting a crisis in the Near East.
   Shewen despatch by representatives of Toronto Press about to address patriotic gathering in company with hon. member for West Toronto.

5. Embarrassing situation - whilst semi-official communiqué public - despatch from Colonial Office marked Secret and Confidential and in cypher; impossible therefore to give contents to public; doubly embarrassing in that impression conveyed by semi-official communiqué as to nature of invitation sent out was quite different from that which a reading of the despatch itself conveyed.
   General Smuts, the Premier of South Africa, told the Parliament of South Africa that despatch was not to be construed as an invitation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

6. Necessitated immediate cable to Prime Minister for explanation and permission to make public.
Contents of communication cabled to colleagues in Geneva.
Council called for Monday morning.
Statement given to Press.

7. Reply sent to Prime Minister of Great Britain.
Answer of British Govt. to request to make despatch public.
Subsequent communications.

8. Re Prior Information

A. Sources:

(1) British Empire Report

(2) Foreign Countries Report

(3) Foreign Office Despatches

Nature of.
Method of distribution and receipt of.
Personal and confidential.
Delivered at irregular intervals - 2 to 3 weeks.
No despatches of any kind between September 6 and 16

B. Contents:

Latest reports and despatches reassuring.
Calculated to convey impression Near East situation adjusting itself - an impression quite contrary to that of despatch of September 15.
Was it on strength of these reports that Canadian Govt. was to reply "Ready, aye, ready"
To act on secret despatches . . . would be secret diplomacy with a vengeance, and autocratic as well.
State vs. servant of state.
Secretary of State apologizing for manner in which notification given; says it was due to "suddenness of emergency".

C. Round Table in similar error - p. 19, December number.

D. View of the Government with respect to obligation incurred in virtue of receipt of information.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62289

9. Importance of clear understanding that receipt of despatches conveying information should not be regarded as placing an obligation upon the Government as respects the determination of and acquiescence in the foreign policy of the United Kingdom is borne out by attitude of British Government towards publicity to be given despatches.

In present instance -

Government has expressed desire for fullest publicity:

(1) at the time of receipt;

(b) by Parliament.

British Government's attitude that contents be not disclosed.

Inform House that Government has expressly informed the British Government that it will not regard the receipt of information as necessarily carrying with it an obligation to raise questions, suggest alternatives, etc., or be regarded as acquiescing; nor as in any way placing restrictions upon Parliament with respect to its action in dealing with these matters.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

10. Exact purport of despatch and nature of request of British Government, and attitude of Government of Canada towards:

an inquiry not an invitation

(1) as to approval of policy.

Did Government desire to associate itself with policy of resistance of Turks as decided upon by British Cabinet.

(2) as to desire to be represented by a Contingent in the Near East

We replied ~~to~~ to (1) We should be glad to receive all the information possible.

to (2) It was for Parliament to decide whether Canada should send a contingent or not.
That we would be glad to be advised as to the necessity of summoning Parliament, which we were ready to do at a moment's notice.
That we did not think it necessary to reassert the loyalty of the Canadian people to the British Empire.
That Parliament might be relied upon to see that Canada would do her full duty.

Our action based on the view

(1) Executive a committee of Parliamentto do the will of Parliament - not an autocracy to impose the will on Parliament.

(2) The supremacy of Parliament in deciding upon Canada's participation in Foreign wars.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

11. As to whether we were right in course adopted -

It is only necessary to appeal to facts and subsequent events.

All information that has come to light has shown:

(1) That the Government of the day in Britain (~~=~~) were wrong in their policy - which was to dessociate the British Empire from the Allied Powers, and go it alone in settling matters with the Turks, or .....? the policy during and since the war of joint action on the part of Allied Powers.

(2) That there was no necessity of declaring that we would be represented by a contingent.

We now see it was not assistance to an Empire in distress but to a government in extremis, which was desired

That the Government was wrong in its policy ~~which was~~ desired and mistaken in its action is borne out by:

(1) The Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Cabinet of that day.

(2) By public opinion in Great Britain, and the views of leading British Statesmen, and Journals.

(3) By the verdict of the British electorate at the polls.

(4) By the contrary policy of the present Prime Minister and Government of Great Britain.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(5) By the attitude of South Africa.

That our Government was right is borne out:

(1) By the above.

(2) By public opinion expressed in the press of Canada -Journals as McLean's.

(3) By views publicly expressed by majority of members of this Parliament -Grezzr -Forke .

(4) By the founder of the Conservative party himself insofar as we are able to gather his views.

12. As to any obligation under Treaty of Sevres:

No such treaty in existence.

A document intended to be a treaty; never a treaty in fact; materially changed since signed.

13. As to the wisdom of the course pursued.

A good deal of time has been given by Canada to the affairs of Europe during recent years. The time has surely come when we are justified in giving attention to our own problems, and meddling just as little as may be possible in the affairs of other countries or other parts of the British Empire where our interest is

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

not immediate and direct.

Canada may well follow the advice:

"To thine own self be true".

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62294

Imperial Conference. 1923

Strictly Confidential and Private

Data required for following

1. Short speech at Quebec before leaving - Sept. 21

   In nature of reply to Meighen's speeches-
   Significance of Conferences.
   Departure from Quebec.

2. Interview to be given press on landing at Liverpool - Sept. 29

   Refer to Conferences,
   To Conditions in Canada,
   Economic revival since war,
   Position of Government respecting
   Immigration, Railways, Trade etc.

3. Opening meeting of Conference - October 1

   General Review of Canadian Conditions since last Conference - 1921
   Political considerations of importance
   Relations with United States and other countries.

4. Review of Foreign Policy - meeting of Conference October 2

   Canada's attitude,
   towards Foreign Policy of Great Britain
   " Common foreign policy for Empire
   " European affairs
   " League of Nations

   in re Near East
   The Ruhr
   Graeco-Italian dispute
   Reparations

5. Colonial Institute Dinner - October 2

   Reply to Toast to "United Empire" proposed by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught
   Governor General -
   Development of basis of Empire etc., Form of Government next etc.
   Significance of Conferences,
   Refer to Forestry Conference in Canada
   Imperial Exhibition
   Visit of Prince of Wales to Canada

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

6. London Chamber of Commerce Dinner - October 3

Canadian Trade and Commerce - via Pacific etc.
Economic development of Canada
Investment of Labour and Capital
Building of Empire
Preference?
Removal of Embargo.

7. British Government Dinner - October 8

(Speeches by Prime Ministers of Empire)
Hospitality of British Government
Evolution of Government under British system
Relations - Canada and United States - Treaties, Arbitration etc.
Canada as an interpreter.

8. Dinner Buckingham Palace - October 11

Possible reference to Royal Family -
Victoria, Edward, George, Wales -

9. Freedom of City of London - October 12

Two speeches
1. Guildhall - (IMPORTANT)
. along with Baldwin and Bruce - on significance of British Empire acknowledgment to be on behalf of Canada.
2. At Banquet later.
Significance of Conferences. Place of Canada in Empire etc.

10. Canada Club Dinner - October 18

Canadians in London.
Review of Canadian affairs - Canada's need.
An answer to "Whisper of Death."
" " re G.T.R. shareholders.

11. Canadian Club Dinner - date to be fixed

Similar to Canada Club
(different themes) Britain's opportunity.

12. Association of British Chamber of Commerce Dinner - October 24

Trade, Commerce etc.- (Opportunities for in Canada)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

13. Visit to Fleet at Portsmouth - Speech at Dinner - November 3

14. Overseas League Dinner - November 6

Prince of Wales presiding.

15. Inter-Parliamentary Association Dinner - date to be fixed

Significance of meetings of in Canada.

16. Compatriots Dinner - November 8

Empire, etc.

17. English Speaking Union (Date to be fixed)

On Anglo-American Relations

To be Prepared For:

University Degree - Oxford or Cambridge
Oxford, British-American Club.

Meetings of Women's Organizations.

Dinners to Smuts. Bruce. Massey. Baldwin. Irish Free State Representative

Particulars re careers of each of these.

Possible Church gatherings.

e.g. Methodists, etc.

Visits to Edinburgh or Bristol

Knights of Round Table Dinner

Press Dinner

Meeting of Historical Association. French-English

re Canadian Records and Archives

Visit to Paris - Acknowledgment of gifts by French Government - Vase
France Triumphant - Bronze.
Honateaux - Volume on Canada
On Canadian Exhibition Train partoculars..

Laying of Corner Stone - Canadian Exhibition Building - Imperial Exhib'tn

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62297

Please jot down topics to be marked into speeches and any sources of information or data relative thereto -

Facts and figures of interest etc.,

Stories or Anecdotes etc.,

Incidents etc.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-1312-3

C 62298

Agenda

(1923). 2

(O.D. Skelton)
JC.

Imperial Conference

Data in Preparation.

Memoranda are being prepared on the following points:

1. Organization of the Conferences: relation of the two Conferences: basis and organization of future "Imperial" Conferences.

2. Foreign Policy.

Organization and status

Dominion participation in U.K. negotiations, policies and treaties.
British relation to Canadian negotiations, policies and treaties.
Direct access of Dominion Ministers to the King.
Direct communication of Dominion P.M. with British P.M.

Specific Issues

Ruhr situation.
Reparations and Canada's position.
Near East and Lausanne.
C Mandates

(Also memos in preparation by Capt. Hose and Mr. Pound on territorial waters).

3. Naval and Air Defence.

Present policies and trend of opinion in other Dominions.

(Also memos by Capt. Hose).

4. Naturalization.

1. Working of present act:
   (a) Cancellation of certificates of British naturalization after 7 years absence;
   (b) Re-Admission to Canada of naturalized citizens who have lost Canadian domicile by year's absence.

(Comprehensive memo by Mr. Malvey).

2. Personal Naturalization of women.

3. General review of working of uniformity of Empire naturalization laws effected in 1914.

5. Extra-Territoriality.

Canadian Parliament's request for amendment of B.N.A. Act hanging fire; bearing on Halibut closed season regulations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62299
O.D. SKELTON, 1923.

The Organization of the Conference

In the Preliminary Notes it was stated that there was an evident desire to differentiate the present Imperial Conference from the gathering formerly so known, and to make it a continuation of the War Cabinet. Some basis for this development is perhaps afforded by Resolution XIV of the 1921 Conference, section (b):

> The Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and the Dominions and the Representatives of India should aim at meeting annually, or at such longer intervals as may prove feasible.

It still remains a question whether it is desirable to continue this innovation, which is quite a piece with the conception of a common Empire foreign policy promulgated in the same Conference: the Prime Ministers' Conference would be the main instrument for determining the Empire policy. Unless the Conference is put back on the 1907-1911 basis the tendency will be to develop more and more into a quasi-cabinet or Council of the Empire. It would seem that the question should be raised: what reason can be given for not considering in one Conference, with, of course, sub-committees when necessary, all the matters on which consultation is desirable -- other than the desire to mark out foreign policy and defence as matters to be settled in executive fashion by an imperial cabinet rather than a Conference of Governments?

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

FILE O.D. SKELTON E-1302-3 1923.
2 of 2 - B

C 62309

The Imperial Conference. (O.D. SKELTON)

Preliminary Notes. (1923)

Summary. ✓ Imperial Conference of 1923
✓ Imp. Conf. 1923 - Foreign Affairs
✓ Imp. Conference - Defence
✓ Singapore

1. Relation and Organization of the Imperial and the Imperial Economic Conferences: possible reasons for keeping distinct; 1907 - 1911 precedent not followed.

2. Importance of the Issues before the Conference.

3. Naval Defence: general.

   (a) The proposals for joint Empire action, especially in the Pacific.

   (b) Reasons advanced for such action now.

   (c) " " against such action now.

   (d) Australia's insistent attitude.

4. Naval Defence: the Singapore base.

   (a) The scheme.

   (b) Its History.

   (c) Arguments for the scheme.

   (d) Arguments against it.

   (e) Proposals for Dominion and Colonial assistance: Australia and New Zealand in favour, South Africa opposed.

5. Committee of Imperial Defence: probable suggestion to include permament Dominion members.

6. Foreign Policy: the Question of Control.

   (a) The issue raised by other Dominions.
   (b) The new theory of a single Empire Foreign policy.
   (c) "C" mandates, affecting other Dominions.
   (d) Cecil Treaty of Mutual Guarantee (primarily a League of Nations matter, linked up with Article X).

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62301

The Imperial Conference, October, 1923

Preliminary Notes.

1. Relation and Organization of the two Conferences.

The holding of two Conferences concurrently, and the distinction between an "Imperial Conference" and an "Imperial Economic Conference" are new developments.

The last formal decision as to the organization of a Conference was taken in 1907, when a resolution of the Colonial Conference declared "that it will be to the advantage of the Empire if a Conference, to be called the Imperial Conference, is held every four years, at which questions of common interest may be discussed and considered as between His Majesty's Government and His Governments of the self-governing Dominions beyond the seas." The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was to be ex-officio president, and the Prime Ministers of the Dominions and the Secretary of State for the Colonies, were to be ex-officio members, with such other ministers as the respective governments should appoint. Provision was also made for subsidiary conferences from time to time.

This basis of organization was followed in the Imperial Conference of 1911, and in the main in the Imperial War Conferences of 1917 and 1918, with the addition of a representative of India. The Imperial War Cabinets which met at the same time and which were practically meetings of the British War Cabinet plus one or two representatives from each Dominion and India, were executive rather than deliberative bodies. The proposal to perpetuate the Imperial War Cabinet did not find general favour, but the precedent afforded by its meetings has clearly had its effect on later developments.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The meeting in London in 1921 attended by Mr. Meighen was officially termed a "Conference of the Prime Ministers and Representatives of the United Kingdom, Dominions and India." It is probable that a desire to shelve the question of constitutional re-organization of the Empire which General Smuts and Sir Robert Borden had arranged in 1917 should be dealt with in a special "Imperial Conference" to be held as soon as possible after the end of the war, contributed to the decision to give this 1921 meeting a different name. But other factors, and particularly the precedent of the Imperial War Cabinet, were involved. It was stated in the published report of this meeting that "the greater part of the proceedings, particularly that relating to Foreign Affairs and Defence, was of a highly confidential character, comparable rather to the work of the Imperial War Cabinet of 1917 and 1918, rather than of the Imperial War Conferences of those years." It is further stated that "a precedent created by the Imperial War Cabinet was also revived with valuable results ... the Prime Ministers of the Dominions and the Representative of India present in London this year were invited to meetings of the British Cabinet called to deal with Imperial and Foreign questions of immediate urgency which arose in the course of the sittings." The main meetings in 1921 were held in the office of the Prime Minister, not in the office of the Colonial Secretary as was customary in the former Imperial Conference.

When Mr. Bonar Law proposed in November, 1922, to summon an Imperial Economic Conference, it was intended to hold it well in advance of any general Conference, on account of the urgency of the trade and employment situation in Great

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Britain. The parliamentary situation in several Dominions made it necessary to postpone the Economic Conference, and at the same time the interest of the United Kingdom and of Australia in the Defence question made it seem desirable to consider other than economic matters. Had the precedent of 1907 and 1911 been followed, a single Conference, attended by the Prime Minister and two or three other Ministers from each Dominion, would have been held, and would have dealt with defence and foreign affairs as well as with tariff, shipping, immigration and other economic questions. The decision of the United Kingdom authorities to hold two distinct Conferences, meeting concurrently, and the fact that in the official correspondence the terms "Imperial Conference" and "Conference of Prime Ministers" are used interchangeably, seem to indicate a desire to differentiate and to follow in some measure the precedent of the Imperial War Cabinet. The "Imperial Conference" or "Conference of Prime Ministers" would thus be a small body, exercising at times a quasi-executive capacity, and dealing with the "arcana imperii" as Mr. Asquith termed them, those questions of foreign affairs and defence on which it is considered by the British authorities that there must be a single unified Empire policy. The Economic Conference would be a larger body, deliberative in character, and dealing with questions such as trade and tariff and migration on which it is admitted separate and independent action may be taken.

Whether this development is accidental or is intentional, it seems desirable that the question of the future basis of these Conferences should be considered and discussed at the proper time.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

2. Importance of the issues before the Imperial Conference.

The Imperial Conference of 1923 faces a number of questions which are both important and thorny. Perhaps most insistent will be the question of a common Imperial policy of naval defence, particularly in the Pacific. The demand on the part of Australia that a common Pacific policy should be agreed upon and that Canada should contribute in ships or otherwise as much as Australia to this common cause, and the decision of the British Government to begin at once the establishment of a powerful naval base at Singapore, bring the question to a head. New urgency and point will be given the question of Dominion control and responsibility in foreign affairs by the review of the Near East crisis, the present reparations difficulty, and other issues; General Smuts and Mr. Bruce, speaking from quite different standpoints, have both announced their intention to secure a full discussion of the Dominions' share in imperial policy and a definite understanding or organization for the future. Specific foreign affairs, the Ruhr and reparations, Lord Robert Cecil's Treaty of Mutual Guarantee, (if referred from the League of Nations) the United States proposal to extend territorial waters to twelve miles in case of rum-smuggling, and many other matters, will be brought before the Conference. The status of India and of Indians in the Empire will come up from more than one angle.

3. Naval Defence:

General.

(a) General Proposals It is urged that a common naval policy for the Empire should be agreed upon; that each Dominion should undertake definite and substantial reponsibilities, whether in the maintenance of seagoing squadrons of light cruisers and submarines, in the construction of naval bases, or in the provision of oil-fuel reserves; and that the burden of constructing the new naval base of Singapore, the key to the Western Pacific, should be shared by Australia and New Zealand and possibly by other Dominions and Colonies.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It is not necessary to do more than refer to the statements to this effect by the late First Lord of the Admiralty, Lord Lee of Fareham, and his successor, Mr. Amery; or to the statement of Premier Bruce in March that" the Government believe that to-day for the discussion of the question of an Empire naval defence and scheme, consultation between the Dominions and the Motherland is essential, and, if an Imperial Conference is not summoned, Australia will press for one at the earliest possible moment, believing, as we do, that it is vital to our safety and our whole future welfare;" or to his more recent demand for a common Pacific policy and equal contributions by all Dominions. Note may be made of the confidential memorandum issued by the British Admiralty in August, 1922, "The Admiralty must frankly confess to their great disappointment at Canada's decision to abolish her seagoing squadron and to confine her naval endeavours to such secondary forms of cooperation as can be left to a force maintained on a reserve basis; for reasons already pointed out, these can be of no real assistance in the naval defence of the Empire." The Admiralty urged the maintenance of at least a nucleus of a seagoing squadron and the provision of oil-fuel reserves in Halifax and Esquimalt, to the extent of 150,000 tons.

(b) Reasons which may be Advanced for Immediate Joint action.

i. The Empire is one and the sea is one; defence must be mobile, united and adequate.

ii. This common interest and common obligation have repeatedly been recognized, in resolutions of Imperial Conferences, in resolutions of the Canadian Parliament in 1909, and of other Dominion parliaments, and in the common action taken in the Great War.

Resolution of 1917 Imperial War Conference: "That the Admiralty be requested to work out immediately after the conclusion of the War what they consider the most effective scheme of Naval Defence for the Empire for the consideration of the several Governments summoned to this Conference, with such recommendations as the Admiralty

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

consider necessary in that respect for the Empire's future security.

Resolution of Conference of 1921.

"That while recognizing the necessity of co-operation among the various portions of the Empire to provide such naval defence as may prove to be essential for security, and while holding that equality with the naval strength of any other power is a minimum standard for that purpose, this Conference is of opinion that the method and expense of such co-operation are matters for the final determination of the several Parliaments concerned, and that any recommendations thereon should be deferred until after the coming Conference on Disarmament."

iii. The fact that the Washington Conference set standards for the British Empire as a whole makes it necessary hereafter to consider the activities and strength of all the different parts of the Empire conjointly.

iv. The defeat of Germany and the agreement reached at the Washington Conference have not removed, though they have lessened, the danger of war; the direction of the danger has been changed. The centre of naval rivalry and naval danger has now shifted from the North Sea to the Pacific. It is now the Dominions rather than the United Kingdom that are in most immediate danger, owing to the ambitions and the rising power of Japan. The necessity for a substantial share in the Empire's naval defence is therefore greater rather than less, so far at least as the Dominions are concerned.

v. It was the insistence of Canada, as interpreted by Mr. Meighen, which led to the denunciation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which Lord Curzon and Mr. Hughes insisted was the best safeguard against possible Japanese hostile aggression; therefore Canada should now face the situation created by the repeal of that treaty and the removal of the check upon Japan.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(c) Reasons which may be advanced against immediate substantial joint naval action.

i. The overthrow of Germany, the efforts of the League of Nations and the Washington Conference to remove the causes of friction, and the general weariness of war, make the danger of a world conflict less imminent. The First Lord of the Admiralty, Rt. Hon. L. S. Amery, stated in his speech on the Naval Estimates, March 12, 1923: "If we are content with an easy equality it is just because there are no underlying rivalries or conflicts of purpose which could bring a war within the zone of reasonable probability in the near future, and because there is a widespread desire for peace and for relief from the burden of armaments which we on our part have done everything by our example to encourage." He added, however, "There is a limit to the risk we can afford to run by weakening ourselves in order to promote peace, - if indeed we do promote peace by going beyond that limit - and we have reached it."

ii. At the present moment, the best assurance of peace lies in the continuance of constructive efforts toward international understanding along League of Nations, Washington Conference, and Rush-Bagot lines. Any new step in armament may break the slowly-forming bonds of amity. If the experience of a few years fails to justify these hopes, we can then, with a good conscience, try the old road of competitive armament. The question might be considered in Canada whether on Governmental or private initiative, something could not be done by interchange of visits, tours of representative Japanese business men, educationalists, pressmen, etc., toward creating a friendly feeling.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

iii. There seems no imminent danger of war between Japan and the British Empire. The militarist party in Japan is discredited for the moment, and even if it revives, what permanent advantage would realistic Japan expect to gain from such a tremendous contest? If war came, would not the United States almost certainly, in its own interest, be found on the British side, and with a naval and military effectiveness which, all in all, has been greatly strengthened since 1914?

iv. While Canada has not at present any very substantial naval force, it does not follow, as is frequently charged, that she is "sponging" on Great Britain or Australia for her defence. It should be remembered (1) that Canada, by her situation, is less exposed to serious hostile attack than almost any other part of theEmpire; if Japan cherishes any aggressive designs, they are not directed against Canada; it is not for our defence but for Australia and New Zealand's that the new Pacific forces are demanded; true, our Pacific commerce would be hit in war-time, but it cannot be wholly protected even with the naval preparations proposed; (2) that while comparisons are invidious, it may be recalled if need be that Canada has never involved and is most unlikely to involve a single British or Australian soldier in a war begun by her or on her behalf, while, on the other hand, she sacrificed 60,000 men and nearly two billion dollars in a war entered primarily to aid the Mother Country in a serious crisis; (3) and that Canada may be trusted to assist other parts of the Empire again in a proven crisis, but it must be left to her own Government, parliament and people,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

after careful consultation, to decide as to the reality and extent of the danger, her power to deal with it, and the means to adopt.

v. It was not Canada but the United States that brought the Anglo-Japanese treaty to an end; in any case, a country which can only be prevented from attacking you by making an alliance with it, is a dubious ally.

vi. With the heavy burden of taxation resting upon the people, the depression of trade, the drift of population to the United States, the war-weariness and the hope of advance by other paths, the Canadian people could not be persuaded to sanction a new and ambitious plan of naval armament except by a lurid and sensational appeal, a cry of immediate danger; such a campaign might well do more to bring on the danger it sought to avert, and incidentally lessen the country's unity and effectiveness in other directions.

(d) Australia's attitude. In the light of such general considerations as the above, and of the technical advice of the Canadian naval authorities, the question of what new action, if any, or what extension of existing agencies, naval, military, air, Canada should adopt, will require to be determined by the Government of Canada. There is no doubt that a demand for further action will be put up to Canada, not merely by the Admiralty, but by Australia, and less vigorously perhaps, but equally directly, by New Zealand. A distinct change has come over Australian attitude on the naval question. A dozen years ago Australia was emphasizing the need for a distinct Australian navy, for at that time the primary danger

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

was in the North Sea and the Admiralty was urging concentration of forces and command; incidentally, the "Emden", the "Karlsruhe" and Coronel proved that there was no little strategic as well as political soundness in Australia's position. Now, the primary danger is supposed to be in the Western Pacific; it is greater than Australia can face alone, she believes, and consequently she is now emphasizing the need for common action. Australian pressure on the question may be less subtle and skilful than Admiralty pressure, but it will be outspoken and may be more difficult to meet if echoed, as it may be, by a section of Canadian opinion.

4. Naval Defence: Singapore.

(a) The Scheme. The most pressing single naval question, though one that may not affect Canada so directly as other parts of the Empire, is the Singapore Naval base. This involves the construction, at Singapore, the "gateway of the Pacific", of a strong naval base, adequate for the handling of a fleet of Capital ships, and comprising a graving dock, repair station, oil-fuel reserves, fortifications and garrison; construction costs officially estimated at £11,000,000; time for completion, 10 years; small vote, £300,000, in 1923-24 British estimates and slightly larger vote proposed for 1924-25; further grants from certain Dominions and Colonies expected.

(b) Its History. In its present form, the proposal is a post-war development. It was drawn up by the Naval staff in 1920-1921, approved by the Committee of Imperial Defence, and brought before the Conference of 1921 as one part of a lengthy memorandum on "Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation." It has been stated that the Conference approved the plan: Commander Eyres-Monsell, Financial Secretary to the Admiralty, House of Commons, May 1, 1923:

> "This work was approved by the Dominion Conference in 1921; it was strongly recommended by the Committee

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

> of Imperial Defence; it was approved by the late Cabinet; it has been approved by this Cabinet, and it is most strongly urged by the Dominions." (Hansard, Vol.163, No.49, pp.1233).

L. S. Amery, First Lord of the Admiralty: same debate, Hansard, pp.1273:

> "These proposals were before the Imperial Conference of 1921 and met with the approval of the Imperial Conference. It is no use telling us to wait for another Imperial Conference. The question of principle has been already agreed to by ourselves and by the Dominions concerned. After all, what we are engaged on now are the veriest preliminaries. There is ample time to discuss, and we mean to discuss, the fuller development of the dockyard and of the contribution these parts of the Empire may make. There is every time for that at the next Conference .... I have no doubt the Conference this autumn will endorse the conclusions to which the Conference of 1921 came."

These statements are not wholly confirmed by the evidence available. There is no reference to the plan in the brief summary of the 1921 Conference which was published for public use, and while the confidential report of the proceedings notes a discussion of the question, there is no record of any formal endorsement. (Report not yet fully read). It is possible that the Australian and New Zealand representatives expressed support of the plan, in private interviews, but in any case, as General Smuts points out, definite decision on Pacific naval matters was deferred until after the Washington Conference. Certainly, even had an agreement been reached, Canada could not be considered bound by a decision never confirmed by, nor even reported to Parliament.

The plan was brought before the British Parliament this spring, and after a division, a preliminary vote was passed. It was, and is, vigorously attacked by the Independent Liberals and by the Labour Party in Britain.

(c) Arguments for the Singapore scheme:

i. In the public official statements, it is not

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

directly asserted that there is any definite and immediate danger of war in the Pacific, or that Japan in particular is the likely enemy. In fact, the official advocates of the scheme were careful to say it was directed against nobody in particular: "My answer is that it is not against Japan or any other great Power any more than Malta and Gibralter can be considered as a menace against France or Germany." (Amery) But unofficial supporters in the House of Commons debate, e.g., Commander Bellairs, definitely put forward the rise of Japan and the possibility of war with Japan, as the reason, and in confidential documents the Naval Staff have declared that if Japan should declare war on the British Empire, the position of Australia, New Zealand, India and the Eastern Colonies, would be one of grave danger until the main fleet arrived; for a rapid concentration of the fleet in the East, a secure base at Singapore is essential; the matter is of great urgency.

ii. In the event of war with Japan, United States bases would be of little avail for Western Pacific work, as the Washington Conference forbids the United States to develop bases west of Honolulu. There is not now in the East a British base capable of dealing with Capital ships. Without such a base, the naval authorities emphatically declare, the fleet would be helplessly handicapped. Hong Kong cannot be expanded, as it falls within the boundaries (110° west) within which further fortification is forbidden for ten years. Singapore is the gateway to the Pacific, and on the flank of commercial and strategic lines of communication with Australia and is five degrees outside the forbidden zone. The base should therefore be established

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

at Singapore, and at once.

iii. The construction of a base at Singapore, just outside the forbidden zone, is not a violation of the Washington agreement. It was understood at Washington that Britain reserved the right to develop Singapore. The United States and Japan will not go further than the letter of the agreement; they will build up to the margin of that zone.

iv. "There is no use telling us to wait for another Imperial Conference. The question of principle has already been agreed to by ourselves and by the Dominions concerned. After all what we are engaged on now are the veriest preliminaries. There is ample time to discuss, and we mean to discuss, the fuller development of the dockyard and of the contribution the parts of the Empire may make. There is every time for that at the next Conference." (Mr. Amery, H. of C. May 1, 1923.)

(Repetition)

(d) Arguments against the Singapore scheme.

i. Policy. Such a plan renews the race in armaments. It has already evoked vigorous press criticism in Japan; it is being used in the United States to justify expansion of its bases; it has been put forward in Holland as a proof of imminent danger of war in the Far East, and a reason therefore, for the big naval expenditure the Dutch government is proposing (with much dissension and the resignation of the Minister of Finance in protest).

ii. Honour. The proposal is a violation of the spirit if not of the letter of the Washington Conference (It is not exactly a breach of the terms, Mr. Asquith declares, but, in view of the Washington agreement, new fortified bases

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

should not be erected in that part of the world at all unless in "an obvious and urgent and indisputable case of necessity."

iii. Strategic. The plan assumes that the Capital ship is now the dominating factor in naval war, which some doubt, notably the Scott school, and that it will be the dominant factor in ten or twenty years from now, which, in view of submarine and aerial development, many more doubt.

iv. Cost. Put now at £9,500,000 - £11,000,000, but according to some well informed judges, more likely to cost £20,000,000.

v. Dominion Assent. In view of the resolution of the 1921 Conference and the Washington discussions, the matter should have been left until after the 1923 Imperial Conference. The fact that small appropriations are proposed for the first two years indicates that there was no real need of haste, unless to present critics with a fait accompli.

(e) Proposals for Dominion and Colonial assistance.

It is suggested by the Admiralty that Australia, New Zealand, and India should assist in the development of Singapore, whether by a cash contribution or by the provision of material manufactured locally if that is preferred. The New Zealand Government is apparently prepared to make a grant of possibly £100,000 a year; and the Australian government is undoubtedly prepared to give support, though perhaps on terms. In view of the dissatisfaction in India over the Kenya decision and the Salt-tar, and other factors, no action on the part of India is probable.

The Admiralty is not likely to propose that either

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Canada or South Africa should contribute to this particular scheme. While the sea is one, it may be observed that from Vancouver to Singapore the distance is greater than from Vancouver to London or from Halifax to Madagascar. What will be sought by the Admiralty, so far as Canada and South Africa are concerned, will be an endorsation of the scheme, or at least, on Canada's part, an abstention from opposing it. Australia may not be backward, however, in suggesting a Canadian contribution.

The South African government, in confidential despatches to the United Kingdom and to the other Dominions, vigorously criticises the adoption of the plan before consideration by the Imperial Conference, and in view of the Washington Conference decisions.

5. Committee of Imperial Defence.

It is quite probable, though the proposal is not on the Agenda, that suggestions will be made for reorganizing the Committee of Imperial Defence so as to include permanent Dominion representatives. The Committee now consists of certain members of the British Cabinet and a number of military, naval and air experts. The proposal is the old Central Council idea in a somewhat different form; no conclusive reason appears why Canada should abandon her historic attitude of action by consultation rather than through representation on a London Council.

6. Foreign Policy. The question of Control.

(a) The Issue raised by other Dominions. The general question of the control of foreign policy will be raised from several quarters. The Near East crisis last September has made that certain. Mr. Bruce has declared that "we have to try to ensure that there shall be an Empire foreign policy, which, if we are to be in any way responsible for it must be one to which we agree and have assented; this question is not in a satisfactory position

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

to-day and unless some better arrangement can be made the position of an outlying Dominion like Australia will become intolerable." General Smuts, who is more interested in European than South African affairs, is keen to use the Conference as a pedestal for advising Europe, à la Wilson. Lord Curzon will repeat his bland assurance that the Empire's foreign policy is and must be one and he must be that one.

It may be assumed that Canada will follow its traditional attitude of not propounding elaborate schemes of reconstruction to the Conference. Others, however, are raising broad issues and a statement of Canada's position will be called for.

(b) The New Theory of a Single Empire Foreign Policy.

It has frequently been stated, and by men in high imperial places:

(1) That the Empire has and can have only one foreign policy.

(2) That until 1917 or so control of this policy rested solely with the United Kingdom.

(3) That the Dominions can secure a share in the Empire's foreign policy only by action centred in London, whether through representation in a new imperial parliament or council or cabinet, or by advising the British Foreign Office.

(4) That as a matter of fact within recent years the Dominions have been granted a share in the Empire's foreign policy by Conferences, Cabinets, and daily cabling of Foreign Office views.

(5) And that correspondingly they have undertaken the responsibility of enforcing this common policy.

This position was taken explicitly by both Lord Curzon and Mr. Lloyd George; e.g. Lloyd George in House of Commons, December 1921:

"The Dominions since the war have been given equal rights with Great Britain in the control of the foreign policy of the Empire ... The machinery is the machine of the British Government, the Foreign Office, the Ambassadors. The machine must remain here. The instrument of the foreign policy of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Empire is the British Foreign Office. That has been accepted by all the Dominions as inevitable, but they claim a voice in determining the lines of our policy. The advantage to Britain is that joint control means joint responsibility, and when the burden of Empire has become so vast, it is well that we should have the shoulders of these young giants under the burden to help us along."

Then came the September crisis exposing the hollowness of the claim that the Dominions had any real voice in shaping policy in the Near East. But the doctrine persists. Mr. Bruce, for example, while asserting that Australia does not now exercise that control, thinks she can and must somehow secure it.

(c) The Historic Canadian position: It would not be difficult to show that this theory is a revolutionary reversal of the position which Canada at least has long taken, and that instead of leading to increased control it will lessen control and increase responsibility.

i. "Foreign policy" : an analysis of the term is necessary; it simply means the sum and trend of the dealings of the Government of one country with the Government of another; it is not something found only in London or Paris or Geneva; it means, in the great majority of cases, dealings with neighbouring states, dealings on commercial matters; foreign policy is an extension of domestic policy.

ii. The British Empire is a league of states with the widest diversity of climate, resources, races, economic organization, and neighbours; as each part of the Empire grows in population, unity, consciousness and extent of dealings with neighbouring peoples, it comes to have distinct foreign as well as distinct domestic interests of its own (a point admirably expressed in a state paper of Sir John Macdonald in 1880, and in a speech by Mr. Meighen in London in 1921). In some matters, then, its foreign interests are distinct and it alone can adequately direct a policy to secure these interests.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

iii. As a matter of historic fact, Canada, for example not only has developed and recognized these distinct local interests, but has steadily taken over the negotiations and developed the policy required to settle them, - in trade, tariff, fisheries, post-office, immigration, etc., So must Great Britain deal with those phases of her much more complex foreign relations which concern her primarily; and so may, say, South Africa, deal with those many fewer local issues which face it. It is undesirable and impossible to have a common Empire foreign policy in these matters. What can Australia or New Zealand or Great Britain know of our St. Lawrence waterways question? What can we know of British interest in a railway concession in Turkey? Canada's handling of her own foreign problems has been discreet. She has not merely avoided involving the rest of the Empire in friction or danger by any bumptious or aggressive policy, but has in positive fashion contributed to the strengthening of the Empire by building up a fund of good will in the United States.

iv. Canada will exercise a real control and shoulder an appropriate responsibility if she continues the historic tradition, the tradition of Macdonald, Tupper and Galt, of Blake and Laurier, and Fielding, of deciding as to her action in each case through her own Government and her own Parliament. Any attempt to secure a real control over the Foreign Office and the intricate details of every British foreign problem is futile. In may tickle our vanity to try to guide Europe and Asia day by day, but that will be all. The control would be illusory; the responsibility would be real.

v. In matters which primarily concern one self-governing part of the Empire, it should determine its own policy. In matters which are of common concern to all the parts of the Empire (e.g. in division of reparations or settlement of territorial

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

water limits) their various governments should confer and seek to work out a common policy. In matters which are of general and world-wide concern, the League of Nations offers the machinery for discussion. The assumption that all the foreign policy of the Empire must be handled through Lord Curzon will not bear examination.

Space will not permit at present detailed reference to the various proposals by which it is assumed such control of imperial policy could be secured. A bi-annual lecture to visiting Premiers on foreign affairs, from Lord Curzon, or daily F.O. cables which according to Mr. Hughes usually repeat yesterday's newspaper despatches, may be of value, but they cannot ensure control, and the proposal of a resident Cabinet Minister in London, now revived by Mr. Bruce, has been rejected by the various Dominion Governments on full consideration.

(d) Signature of Dominion Treaties:

A matter of collateral interest is the procedure to be followed in the negotiation and ratification of treaties. It seemed likely at one time that a good deal of attention would be given to Canada's Halibut Treaty action, but as the "Montreal Gazette's" London correspondent cables, the question has now receded into the background. New Zealand, however, may raise a mild query. Mr. Massey declared recently that while it was perfectly right for Canada to negotiate agreements on commercial matters she should not deal herself with "political" affairs. It is interesting to observe that in the very first Colonial Conference, held in 1887, the New Zealand representative took exception to Canada's frisky and dangerous action in negotiating trade treaties for herself, (referring to Galt's and Tupper's activities in Europe), and predicted the fall of the British Empire in consequence. Now after 36 years the British Empire is still going strong and New

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Zealand accepts as a matter of course independent negotiation in "commercial" matters.

In an article in the July "Edinburgh Review", Dr. A. B. Keith, formerly of the Colonial Office, the recognized constitutional authority in Great Britain on imperial relations, and a consistent imperialist, takes the position that the question who signs the treaty is only secondary, and that the real point is, who advises the issue of the power to sign:

> "Pacts recognized by international law ... can be brought about in one way only; the British Crown must issue full powers authorizing signature and the British Crown must ratify. The personality of the negotiators is indifferent to the United States, as are the arrangements within the Empire, but the Crown alone can conclude a treaty. Now, the issue of full powers and the signature of an act of ratification are matters which require under the British constitution, the personal action of the King: His Majesty, however, is a constitutional ruler, and he must act in all political matters on advice,and that advice, unless and until the constitution of the Empire is formally revised, must be that of the Home Ministry ..... The Home Government still controls the treaty powers of the Crown; without its assent no treaty can be signed, or ratified, though it is equally true that, as matters stand, there is a constitutional understanding that it will permit the signature and ratification of such treaties specially affecting the Dominions, unless in its opinion, any proposed convention vitally affects the interests of Great Britain herself or of some other part of the Empire."

In the light of this statement, it is rather surprising to note that Mr. Massey himself, who has always been the white-haired boy of the Round Table, announces that he intends to press for allowing the Dominion Ministers the same direct access to the King, the same power of advising him, as the British Ministers enjoy. Canada should warn Mr. Massey not to break up the British Empire.

7. Foreign Policy: Specific Issues.

During the Conference, certain matters which are considered of common interest will come up for discussion:
(a) The Ruhr and Reparations. Events are moving fast and it is probable that decisive action will be taken before the Conference meets. Whether at the Conference or by communication

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

beforehand, it is probable that the British Government will seek endorsement and support of its policy. South Africa will give emphatic support, Australia more moderate approval. As to Canada, there is undoubtedly a growing feeling that the British Government's criticism of French action is justified; that the occupation of the Ruhr is not making for immediate peace, nor for ultimate peace, nor for substantial reparations; that there is some question whether France wants reparations or a divided Germany; and that Britain's policy, though inspired by her own interests, coincides with the interests of the rest of the world. On the other hand, there is more suspicion of Germany than has survived in Britain; we are not able to take such sharp curves, and there is strong sympathy with France, as evidenced notably by Senator Beaubien's speeches and by Premier Taschereau's East Angus message, "Hold fast, France, we are behind you." These considerations make for caution; incidentally, the situation illustrates the danger of supporting a British policy simply out of racial sympathy with Britain or supporting a French policy simply out of racial sympathy with France; the difference in racial origins is a factor in our attitude to foreign policy which is not present in Britain or Australia or New Zealand, and points the danger of excessive intervention in European quarrels and of putting English-Canadian or French-Canadian sympathies ahead of all-Canadian interests.

As for the proposals which will be made to postpone and cut down Germany's reparations obligations, it is true that the chance of eventual receipt of any substantial sums is remote; Germany is not likely to pay much for some years; on what she does pay, France and Belgium are likely to claim priority; on whatever falls to the British Empire, the expenses of the British army of occupation are a first charge, and hitherto a 100% charge. But it will probably be considered advisable to allow Great Britain

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62322

to take the initiative in proposing any reductions.

(b) Territorial Waters Limits. The British Government is anxious to secure united action on the question of a change in the traditional three-mile limit, proposed by the United States. Probably Canada will be prepared to agree, though as regards the right of search for rum-smugglers any decision reached in the forthcoming conference between the United States and Canadian Governments will have a bearing.

(c) "C" Mandates. The Colonies and other non-European territories taken from the enemy powers, it will be recalled, were divided among the Allies, in accordance with secret agreements effected during the war, but on a new basis of mandates or trusteeship, under the supervision of the League of Nations. These territories were divided into three classes: "A" mandates, such as Palestine, where the country was fairly advanced and the control should be temporary. "B" mandates, such as German East Africa or the Cameroons, not fitted as yet for much self-government; and "C" mandates, such as German South West Africa or Figi or German New Guinea, which were so closely connected with certain states as to warrant being incorporated in their legislative and administrative system.

The United States has insisted that no discrimination should be shown against her nationals in any of these mandates. She takes the ground that such discrimination has taken place in certain "C" mandates; in New Guinea, where Australia limits oil concessions to her own people; in German South West Africa, where British imports have been given the usual South African tariff preference over U.S. goods, etc., These questions primarily concern South Africa, Australia and New Zealand, and should eventually be determined by the League of Nations mandates Commission; one possible point of interest to Canada is whether admission of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

U. S. claim re German South West Africa would involve admission that preferences granted to Britain by the Dominions constitute discriminations against the U. S., and therefore ground for tariff reprisals - probably not, but worth further consideration.

INDIA is raising the question of the admission of Indians into "C" mandates administered by New Zealand. This is only one phase of the very thorny question of Indian immigration and status, which will be much discussed at the Conference. Kenya and South Africa will be the main issue but doubtless the Canadian Government's policy in British Columbia will be noted.

(d) Treaty of Mutual Guarantee. While this item is placed on the Imperial Conference agenda, it will reach it only if favourable action is taken by the League of Nations Assembly in the preceding month. It is closely bound up with the question which Canada has brought before the League, of the abolition or revision of Article X. of the Covenant.

Lord Robert Cecil has proposed a plan for mutual guarantee, to be signed by such nations as desire, obligating the participating powers, on condition of certain reciprocal reduction of armaments, to come to the rescue of any other signatory when attacked, if a two-thirds majority of the Council considers the other power the aggressor. Each state is to earmark at least one-third of its naval and air forces for such joint action, and to furnish each other military forces as may be required. To meet U.S. and other objections, it is provided that non-European states are not required to come to the aid of European states, etc., except as regards naval and air force. This proposal was rejected as unworkable by the Permanent Advisory Commission of the League, in May. It is now (August 6) before the League of Nations Disarmament Commission, probably in revised

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

form, along with an alternative proposal submitted by Colonel Requin, of France, providing for mutual guarantee, but with sanction for alliances of groups of nations within the larger ring. The report of the Commission will be submitted to the Council of the League the end of August and to the fourth Assembly in September.

Canada's position on Article X. seems to cover this collateral question.

(O, D. SKELTON)
J.C.

(This memorandum is by O.D. SKELTON.
See MEMO. OF F.A. McGREGOR TO L.C. MOYER attached)
J.C.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

C 62325

MEMORANDUM

MR. MOYER:

This is a copy of Dr. Skelton's memorandum prepared before the Imperial Conference, 1923. From page 10 on, it deals with the subject of the Singapore Base.

When you are finished with it, will you please return it for the Imperial Conference fyle.

McG.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62326

Memo for the Prime Minister
re Defence
Resolutions.

O.D.

O. D. SKELTON

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62326

Memo for the Prime Minister
re Defence
Resolutions.

O.D.S.

O. D. SKELTON

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62327

O.D. SKELTON to W.L.M.K. (1923) (1)

Imperial Conference of 1923 - Defence c

As to Resolutions re Imperial Defence

1. No resolution is likely to cover and reconcile all the phases of the discussion during the Conference.
2. While concrete and specific problems may suitably be the subject of resolutions expressing an agreed ~~policy~~ solution, the primary purpose of the Conference in reference to broad questions of policy is to provide for exchange of views and information rather than to prescribe ~~policies~~ action in general resolutions.
3. Canada is much more likely to ~~decide~~ take effective and enduring action in the matter of defence if the initiative comes from within; we

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

must continue to develop a sense of responsibility in this as in all other fields of national endeavour; ~~we~~ we must develop a public opinion & technical advisers at home. If defence proposals are brought forward in Canada in accordance with ~~the~~ resolutions adopted at an Imperial Conference in London, they will meet with ~~instant suspicion~~ opposition from many quarters which would not exist, or exist in only a small degree, if they were brought forward as a natural outgrowth of our own conditions and on the full and undivided responsibility of our government.

[I may add a personal note: I am convinced that while striving for international reconciliation, we must meanwhile maintain defence forces;

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

I should like to see a decent Canadian navy, perhaps beginning with shore defences, & air development & Dafoe takes the same position: and he adds that he thinks public opinion in Canada will sanction advance along these lines, provided it does not come as the result of imperial urging and pressure].

4. If it is felt that some public record of the fact that defence was discussed should be made, is not what is wanted, what corresponds to the facts of the situation, a statement to that effect and not a resolution?: e.g. (as rough draft).

"The subject of ~~imperial~~ defence, ~~was all it was~~ naval, military and air, was discussed fully at ~~full~~ general sessions of the Conference and in committees in

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

which the members of the Conference had the opportunity of learning the views of the members of the technical staffs upon the existing defence situation, the principles of strategy involved in meeting it, and methods of organization and coordination".

If beyond this statement any resolution is felt to be required, it may might, after reciting the above or some similar statement, as preamble, continue:

"It is considered that it is for the each part of government and parliament of the Empire, in the light of ~~the discussion this information and other~~ all the information at their disposal, to make such preparations for defence as ~~will~~ after careful and responsible consideration they believe called for."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62331

If the other members of the Conference are not prepared to accept such a resolution, then let us drop the all resolutions or stick to a statement, or make no reference to the question at all.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Imperial Conference of 1923

C 62332

Memorandum for Mr. Christie:

The Prime Minister has directed me to ask you to be good enough to draft a cable reply to the attached message from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor-General, bearing date the 28th ultimo, such reply to take the following general lines:-

1. The Canadian Government would be agreeable to be represented at both the Economic Conference and at the Conference of Prime Ministers.

2. The Canadian Government would approve of the holding of the two conferences concurrently, but consider that neither of these conferences should commence later than October 1st, 1923.

Mr. King would welcome your opinion as to whether the terms "Conference of Prime Ministers" and "Imperial Conference", employed in the attached message, are intended to have the same significance, and whether it would be advisable to mention in his reply the use of these terms.

March 13, 1923.

(Enclosure filed separately)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62333

Memorandum for Mr. Christie:

The Prime Minister has directed me to ask you to be good enough to draft a cable reply to the attached message from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor-General, bearing date the 28th ultimo, such reply to take the following general lines:-

1. The Canadian Government would be agreeable to be represented at both the Economic Conference and at the Conference of Prime Ministers.

2. The Canadian Government would approve of the holding of the two conferences concurrently, but consider that neither of these conferences should commence later than October 1st, 1923.

Mr. King would welcome your opinion as to whether the terms "Conference of Prime Ministers" and "Imperial Conference", employed in the attached message, are intended to have the same significance, and whether it would be advisable to mention in his reply the use of these terms.

(Sgd) L.C.Moyer.

March 13, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62334

3

COPY OF TELEGRAM

FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES

TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

CODE.

LONDON,

February 28th, 1923

Following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister begins:-

Answers to my message of November 29th as to suggested Imperial Economic Conference now complete, and I find that it is generally agreed that it would be of advantage to hold such a Conference. I gather, however, that there is a feeling that the best results would not be achieved if an Economic Conference were held independently of a Conference of Prime Ministers, and therefore that it would be best to hold the Imperial Economic Conference and a meeting of the Imperial Conference concurrently.

Prime Ministers present at the latter would thus be enabled to be in constant consultation with their colleagues who were taking part in the former, and if necessary could themselves attend the most important meetings of the Economic Conference.

This procedure would be quite in accordance with the views of the Cabinet here, and for myself, I should greatly welcome the opportunity of discussing this year with my fellow Prime Ministers, the many urgent problems of foreign

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

policy and defence which confront us.

As to dates - it would be impossible to make the necessary preparations before June at the earliest, and the answers to my message of November 29th indicate that a meeting in the autumn would be preferred.

We accordingly suggest that both Conferences should open about November 1st 1923 in London.

Please let me know, as soon as you can, whether you agree to holding both Conferences concurrently and whether the time suggested will suit you.

As to the Agenda for the Economic Conference --------(?) send you as soon as possible detailed list of the subjects suggested for discussion.

As to Agenda for the Imperial Conference, our idea would be that the arrangements should follow generally those for the 1921 Conference.

Similar telegram sent to other Prime Ministers.

Ends.

(SGD) DEVONSHIRE.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

L.C. CHRISTIE TO WLMK

C 62336

O

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER.

Imperial Conference of 1923

SECRET

In response to Mr. Moyer's memorandum I submit herewith a draft telegram to Mr. Bonar Law.

With regard to the date, I should think it would be helpful to give a reason for requesting an earlier date than November 1, and I have accordingly suggested a sentence in the second paragraph for that purpose.

I feel quite sure that the terms "Conference of Prime Ministers" and "Imperial Conference" as used by Mr. Bonar Law are intended to have precisely the same significance. Strictly speaking the term "Imperial Conference" applied to the former series of conferences held at the Colonial Office; but people have fallen into the habit of using the term for the more recent conferences held at 10 Downing Street - simply I suppose because it is a shorter term. I myself do not see that there is any substantial point in the matter; but it is perhaps better in official correspondence to use the term "Conference of Prime Ministers". I venture to suggest however that when the next conference opens it would be well to raise at the outset this question of nomenclature and to have the thing regularized, since there is at present some unnecessary confusion.

L.C. Christie

L.C. CHRISTIE

Ottawa,

March 13, 1923.

5.10PM.
MAR 13 Recd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62337

DRAFT TELEGRAM FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES.

OTTAWA, March 16, 1923.

Following for Prime Minister from my Prime Minister. Begins.

I have discussed your telegram of February 28th with my Colleagues ~~and~~ we concur in proposal that the Imperial Economic Conference and ~~a~~ the Conference of Prime Ministers should be held concurrently ~~in London~~. ~~The Canadian Government will be glad to be represented at both Conferences~~.

As for the time we are most anxious that both of these Conferences should begin not later than October 1st. A later date than this would greatly inconvenience preparations for next winter's Session of Parliament.

We should be glad to receive the proposed Agenda for the Economic Conference and if possible some more definite indication of the subjects for discussion at the Conference of Prime Ministers.

End.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

P. C. Department.

C 62338

(1924)

13

Imperial Conference - Imperial Economic Conference

At Geneva

Imperial Conference

Liberal point of view triumphed

1. Naval policy
2. Near East (ready aye ready)
3. Treaty-making power
   Citizenship with Empire
4. Copperation in defence
   (see Liberal resolution)
5. Conference not Cabinet

   Supremacy of Governments

   " of Parliament.

428/23

Re Preferences -

Borden to Strathcona.

Liberal features of Budget -economy - consolidation
Tariff.
Constructive policy -re transportation
Taxation Reform -
Senate Reform
Electoral Reform - re transferrable vote

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62339

CONFERENCE a vindication of Liberal principles and polides

1. Laurier - British Empire a galaxy of nations

2. Preference - A policy for the Empire
   Inter-imperial trade
   No bargaining, etc.,

3. Naval services for the Dominions less centralized.
   True of army, navy and air.

4. Attitude on Near East crisis a year ago
   Meighen "ready aye ready"
   Each Government to determine for itself in light of conditions as they arise.

5. Treaty making rights -

6. The approval of Parliaments

7. Publicity

(MACKENZIE KING)
dc.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62340

Schedule of Papers relating to the Imperial Economic Conference and the Conference of Prime Ministers laid before the House of Commons.

(1) Telegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General, November 29th 1922.

(2) Telegram from the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, December 8th 1922.

(3) Telegram from Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General, February 28th 1923.

(4) Telegram from Governor General to Secretary of State for the Colonies, March 14th 1923.

(5) Telegram from Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General, March 23rd 1923.

(6) Telegram from Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General, April 7th 1923.

(7) Telegram from Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General, April 7th 1923.

D.O.S.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62341

"THE COMING IMPERIAL CONFERENCE AND THE NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN"

By Chrystal MacMillan in "Time and Tide," London, England, May 4, 1923.

It was so long ago as 1918 that at the request of the Imperial Conference of that year the then Home Secretary, now the Lord Chancellor, received the deputation of Women's organizations arranged by the National Council of women. That deputation presented a Memorial signed by fifty women's nationally organized societies of the United Kingdom and Dominions asking that the right to retain her nationality on marriage with an alien, a right lost by British women in 1870, should be restored to her and that a woman should be given the same right to retain or to change her nationality as a man. The Home Secretary was to have brought the matter again before the Imperial Conference but no further information of proposals made, or decisions taken, has been made public.

An effort to bring the question before the Imperial meeting held in 1921 was shelved. The Government stated the meeting was not an Imperial Conference but was to be on the lines of the Imperial Cabinets of 1917 and 1918. Five years is a long time to wait to know what reception the views of the deputation have had from the Imperial Conference, but its forthcoming meeting gives an opportunity again to bring the question of the nationality of married women before a body representing the whole Empire. Since the time when a Colonial Conference first passed a resolution urging the adoption of uniform nationality laws throughout the Empire, and then proceeded to draft a Bill in which the nationality rights of married women were uniformly denied, special vigilance has been required. It has been necessary to urge upon both the Imperial and the Dominion Governments that in future the uniformity ought to be that of recognizing the claim of a married woman herself to the same nationality rights as other people.

But, if there is no definite legislative improvement to record, things really have begun to move. Last year the Bill promoted by the National Council of Women with the support of many other organizations was introduced by Sir John Butcher. It passed its second reading without a division and was being considered by a Select Committee when the dissolution prevented its further progress. The new Parliament has now appointed a Select Committee of the Lords and the Commons to consider the whole question of the nationality of married women, to take evidence and to make recommendations as to the amendment of the law. When the Imperial Conference meets, therefore, the British Government will have a considered report on which to base its policy.

The treatment of this question through the Imperial Conference illustrates the danger to the parliamentary control of legislation if the present method of procedure is allowed to crystallise. The matter is serious. I wish there was space for a digestion on this point. The Empire policy on any important legislation of this kind should not be produced in a so-called agreed shape before the different Empire parliaments have themselves had an opportunity of expressing their opinion on the matter. Without such a discussion the individual representatives at the Imperial Conference are not in a position to express the views of their respective countries. What has happened in Canada reads like comic opera. During the absence of the Canadian Minister of Justice in 1919 the Parliament there passed an Act which gave to married women the right to their own nationality. On his return this law had to be repealed because, forsooth, it was contrary to an Imperial Act which it had been arranged was to be a model for the Dominions.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Could the Canadian member of the conference which framed the Model Act really be considered as representative of his country? Were the other members any more representative of their countries? And yet the Bill was called an agreed measure. And the Governments of Canada, South Africa, Australia and this country when asked to amend the law have sheltered themselves under this so-called agreement. Who is it who have agreed? Certainly not the Parliaments of these countries. The danger of this method of procedure which is creeping into the working of our constitution is by no means grasped by the general public.

Fortunately Canada and Australia are the only two Dominions which have adopted the whole of the model uniform laws of this question. Well, Canada as represented by its Parliament and not by the individual who attended the conference has shown that it is only this supposed agreement which is preventing it doing justice to its married women. The British Parliament, too, when given the opportunity passed without a division the second reading of the Bill to give women equal nationality rights. The Imperial Conference does not need to abandon its idea of uniformity. But this time it should recommend uniformity on the lines of equality between men and women.

Outside the British Empire definite legislation on the right lines has recently been adopted. The United States in September last passed an Act giving to a married woman the independent right to her own nationality and to naturalisation. Soviet Russia has adopted a similar law. And last year a new Belgian nationality law gave to the Belgian woman the right to remain Belgian after marriage with a foreigner.

To improve the law in individual countries, however, is not enough. There are many conflicts between the laws of one country and of those of another. No country can do more than decide who shall or shall not be one of its nationals. To declare that one of its women nationals who marries a foreigner belongs to the same nationality as her husband does not of necessity produce that effect under the laws of his country. Some persons have two nationalities, others have none. To prevent overlapping and the hardships which arise from being without nationality some international agreement is necessary. It is important that any such agreement should be on the lines of ensuing the due consideration of the rights of married women. It is for this reason that the International Woman Suffrage Alliance at its conference in Rome is going to discuss on May 12 the Draft of an International Convention with a view to recommending the promotion of legislation in all countries on a co-ordinated plan.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62343

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

MEMORANDUM

Agenda. Imperial Conference

1. "Statement on a general review of the main issues of Imperial policy"

2. Review of foreign affairs since 1921 conference present problems. - foreign policy

Discussion on Naval, military and defence

3, " re Treaty of mutual guarantee
(a) Treaty of mutual guarantee attitude of U.S. to the 'B' mandate including admission of India into 'B'
Mandate territories
(b) Common conference policy re territorial matters
(c) Position of Dominions in India in relation to signatures of treaties

4 Issue of naval defence resulting from naval conference - consultation in all branches of defence

5. Imperial air services committee

6. Marriage with foreigners
Naturalization measures to ensure

WLMK
(1923)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62344

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

MEMORANDUM

Imperial Conference
Expert advisers
Secretarial arrangements

Note May 10th despatch.

Naval Air Experts

Hankey = Secretary of Imperial Conference

Committee of Economic ministers of Secretariat

Cabinet Office accountable to London & part from Nov 1st

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62345

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Economic Conference

MEMORANDUM

3 delegates
Secretary, Experts, advisers } Sir Thomas Comi
Hon Geo. P. Graham
Hon Chas. Stewart

Secretary, Experts, advisers

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Self governing dominion — Assembly of League of Nations

C 62346

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

AGENDA

(Contained in cable from Secretary of State for the Colonies dated May 10., 1923).

1. "Statements as to the general position on the main issues of Imperial Policy".

2. (a) Review of foreign affairs since 1921 Conference;

Consideration of present problems and future policy.

(b) Discussion on Naval, Military and Air Defences.

Not to be Published →3. (a) Questions connected with League of Nations, including:

Treaty of Mutual Guarantee;

Attitude of U.S.A. to "C" Mandate, suggested by N.Z. (India desires to bring up question raised at last Assembly of League of Nations, viz. admission of the Indian into "C Mandate" territories).

(b) Question of common Imperial policy regarding Territorial Waters.

(c) Position of Dominions and India in relation to Signature of Treaties.

4. Review of Naval situation resulting from the Washington Conference, and arrangements for future co-operation in all branches of defence.

5. Imperial Air and Wireless communications
(As one of questions of principle to be referred from Imperial Economic Conference).

6. Marriage with Foreigners ; Nationalities married to women.
(Suggested by Australia).

NOTE - (extract from above cable):

"Similar telegram sent to other Prime Ministers and to India, and question of publication of any part of the Agenda for the Conference must, I think, stand over until replies complete. I assume, however, that there will be a general desire to announce outline of the programme and this telegram has been framed accordingly, though I should not contemplate publication of paragraphs 3 and 8." (8 refers to publicity of proceedings).

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62347

COPY OF TELEGRAM

FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES

TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

CODE. LONDON

May 10th 1923.

CONFIDENTIAL

My telegram of April 7th. Following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister begins:-

Paragraph 1.

We have now further considered the question of the Agenda for the Imperial Conference. We suggest that, as in 1921, opening meeting should include statements as to the general position on the main issues of the Imperial Policy.

Paragraph 2.

These preliminary statements might be followed by (i) Review of foreign affairs since the 1921 Conference and consideration of the present problems and future policy; (ii) Discussion on the Naval, Military, and Air Defences.

Paragraph 3.

Former headings would also cover (a) Any questions connected with the League of Nations, including Treaty of Mutual Guarantee, and the attitude of the United States to the "C Mandate", which has been suggested by New Zealand; We understand India desires to bring up in this connection, the subject which has been raised by the Indian representative at the previous meeting of the Assembly of the League of Nations, viz, admission of the Indian into "C Mandate" territories, (b) Question of common Imperial policy regarding territorial waters, which we are anxious to have discussed, (c) Position

11:30 am
MAY 11 Recd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(c) Position of the Dominions and India in relation to signature of Treaties.

Paragraph 4.

Heading (ii) would comprise review of the Naval situation resulting from the Washington Conference, and arrangements for future co-operation in all branches of defence.

Paragraph 5.

Among the subjects which will also require attention on the part of the Imperial Conference at some stage of the proceedings on questions of principle referred from the Imperial Economic Conference, will be Imperial Air and Wireless communications, and probably certain economic questions of special importance.

Paragraph 6.

Lastly, Australia recently suggested the discussion at an Imperial Conference of the question of marriage with foreigners and we may wish to bring up the question of nationalities married to women.

Paragraph 7.

Should be glad to know as soon as possible whether you are in agreement with the Agenda outlined above and whether you have any further subjects to add?

Paragraph 8.

We should also like to make it clear that the Cabinet here, while recognizing the importance of fullest publicity consistent with the entire freedom of discussion, are strongly of opinion that the precedent of the 1921 Conference should be followed; that is to say, that in cases of questions such as Foreign Policy or details of Imperial Defences, where secrecy is essential to complete freedom of discussion, the result only of the deliberations should be published, discussions themselves being kept secret.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Similarly we trust that any documents forwarded to you in advance of the Conference will be regarded as strictly confidential.

Paragraph 9.

Similar telegram sent to other Prime Ministers and to India, and question of publication of any part of the Agenda for the Conference must, I think, stand over until replies complete. I assume, however, that there will be a general desire to announce outline of the programme and this telegram has been framed accordingly, though I should not contemplate publication of paragraphs 3 and 8.

Paragraph 10.

I am telegraphing separately as to the attendance of expert advisers and secretarial arrangements.

Ends.

(sgd) DEVONSHIRE.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62350

Imperial Economic Conference 1923
Imperial conference of 1923.
(ANONYMOUS)

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE.

1923

November 29, 1922:

Code message from Colonial Secretary indicating intention to hold Imperial Conference in 1923.

February 28, 1923:

Cable message from Colonial Secretary suggests Imperial Conference open concurrently with Imperial Economic Conference November 1, 1923.

Agenda:

"Arrangements should follow generally those for the 1921 Conference".

March 14, 1923:

Governor General cables Canada favours October 1st for opening date. (Fixing of this date decided April 7)

The following despatches from the Colonial Secretary have not yet been acknowledged:-

May 10, 1923:

Code message from Colonial Secretary containing suggested Agenda of Imperial Conference.

May 10, 1923:

Confidential message from Colonial Secretary containing detailed references to certain subjects contained in Agenda (files covering these subjects enclosed in docket herewith).

May 10, 1923:

Code message from Colonial Secretary suggesting naval and air experts accompany representatives at

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62351

-2-

Imperial Conference.

Canada asked to nominate member of Secretariat and to indicate office requirements in London.

May 17, 1923:

Confidential message from Colonial Secretary, suggesting that Conference itself should decide question of publicity of its proceedings.

Canada again asked to nominate member of Secretariat.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62352

OFFICE OF
THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE
FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
CANADA.

15

Memorandum for the Prime Minister on
Mr. Larkin's cable of the 19th June, 1923.

In regard to Mr.Larkin's suggestion that the Canadian representatives to the Imperial and Economic Conferences should decline the offered hospitality of His Majesty's Government, I would observe that I am afraid such an act might be misinterpreted and regarded as ungracious, particularly as we have accepted this hospitality for some years past without question. Moreover, it is to be further considered that the hosts are upon their own ground, and that it is not altogether infrequent for prominent English public men visiting Canada to do so as the guests of the Canadian Government, whose hospitality they accept in the spirit in which it is offered. I would therefore respectfully suggest that Mr.Larkin might be replied to in the terms of the accompanying draft cable.

(Sgd) J. Pope.

Ottawa, 25th June, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

copy kept for c. C 62353
August 22/1923.

Imperial Conference

Possible question for consideration of P.M. and Council.

Reparations.

The recent reparations controversy raises the question of the Dominions' share in German payments. Lord Curzon's note published on August 12, stated:

> "The principle of the British plan is that Great Britain is ready, subject to the just claims of the other parts of the Empire, to limit her demands for payments by her Allies and by Germany together to a net sum approximating 14,200,000,000 gold marks ($3,550,000,000), representing the present value of Great Britain's funded debt to the United States. The concessions the government may be able to offer in respect of inter-allied debts must accordingly depend largely on the percentage of this sum which it can recover from Germany."

The share falling to Canada from the German reparations payments depends on several contingencies:

1. The total payment made by Germany. The total amount demanded by the Allies has been reduced steadily in the course of the negotiations of the past three years, in which Canada has not been directly represented. It is clear there must be a still further reduction; with what moratorium and what guarantees and supervision, is the question now at issue. The total demanded in 1921 was $30,000,000,000 plus certain sums depending on the surplus of German exports over imports. Recent discussion tends to the sum of $12,000,000,000 as basis of discussion.
2. The proportion of this total falling to the British Empire. It was agreed at Spa that the British Empire

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

should receive 22 per cent of the total German payments. The recent Baldwin-Curzon note practically abandons this basis and suggests as Germany's payment to Britain an uncertain proportion of a lump sum equal to Britain's debt to the United States, that is, Germany will pay Britain X per cent of $3,500,000,000 and France will pay her Y per cent. At the Conference of 1921 it was assumed that Germany's payments to the British Empire would total $7,070,000,000. France's debt to Great Britain is (from memory) another $3,000,000,000. Now the British Government declares its willingness to accept as its share (or the British Empire's share) $3,550,000,000 in satisfaction of both payments, or one-third of the total assumed in 1921.

3. The proportion of the British Empire's share to be assigned to Canada. It was agreed at the Conference in 1921 that the United Kingdom should receive 86.85 of the British Empire share, Canada 4.35 per cent, Australia 4.35 per cent, and so on. Does this proportion stand? If so, on what sum is it to be calculated? It is not clear from Lord Curzon's statement whether he assumes that the Dominions' share is to be included in what Britain now demands from Germany plus France, or whether, as is more probable, it is to be additional; if so, how computed?

4. The possible deduction of the costs of the British army of occupation in Cologne, from any payments made by Germany, before the Dominions receive a share. Thus

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

far the costs of the British army of occupation have equalled or exceeded the amount received by the British Empire from Germany as reparations payments. I have not found in the Conference reports any agreement by the Dominions that these costs should be deducted from reparations: has any such understanding been reached?

It is not possible with the situation changing so rapidly from day to day to decide definitely what aims Canada should ask. Doubtless the Finance Minister has not been counting very definitely on receiving anything from this source, and public opinion would agree that peace is more important than shadowy reparations payments. At the same time, if Britain and other countries are exacting payments, though on a reduced basis, the Canadian people and government will doubtless expect a share. As a basis for discussion it may be noted that Canada's share as set by the Spa Conference and the Imperial Conference of 1921 is approximately 1 per cent of Germany's total payment (4.35 per cent of 22 per cent or .957 of 1 per cent). If the Allies continue to act jointly, this percentage of any reduced total might stand if, as is possible, though certainly not desirable, they take separate action, France and Belgium looking to the Ruhr for her returns and Britain, and Italy making a separate agreement with Germany, a different basis of calculation will have to be adopted to meet the circumstances.

(O. D. Skelton)
J.C.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

C 62356

MEMORANDUM

Friday,
September 7,
1923

MR. KING: Liberal Party & the Imperial Conf. 1923

I had a talk this morning with Tom Fraser about the Overseas proposition and find that he is in very much the same position as Bishop. He represents a great many Tory papers throughout the Dominion, and could not very well, therefore, undertake a mission of the kind without prejudicing himself in the eyes of the papers he represents.

Fraser was very appreciative of your thought of him and hoped you would not misunderstand his inability to accept. If it were not for the circumstances mentioned he would be only too eager to arrange for the trip.

McG.

WLK

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E.1302-3:

O - C 62357 225

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

MEMORANDUM

Saturday,
September 8,
1923

MR. KING:

In talking further with Tom Fraser last night he suggested that you could not do better than arrange to have Mr. Grange make the trip with you Overseas. Fraser thought he could make connections with a number of good papers.

McG.
F.A. McGREGOR

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62358

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

SECRET.

E. 67.

65

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

GRANT OF NATURALISATION TO PERSONS RESIDENT IN MANDATED TERRITORIES.

Joint Memorandum by the Home Office and Colonial Office.

THE Commonwealth Government have asked that the question of amending "The British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914," so as to permit of the grant of naturalisation to persons resident in mandated territories may be brought before the Imperial Conference. It is understood that the Commonwealth Government have in mind Imperial naturalisation, and the amendment which they suggest is one to the effect that residence in "B" or "C" mandated territories should count as residence in His Majesty's dominions for the purpose of qualifying by residence for naturalisation.

2. In this connection, the Commonwealth Government have referred to the proposal submitted to the Council of the League of Nations by the Permanent Mandates Commission in August 1922, which was in the following terms:—

> "It is open to mandatory Powers to whom 'B' and 'C' mandated "territories have been entrusted to make arrangement in conformity with "their own laws for the individual and purely voluntary acquisition of their "nationality by inhabitants of these territories."

3. The matter was considered by the Council of the League in April 1923, and the following resolutions were adopted:—

(1.) The status of the native inhabitants of a mandated territory is distinct from that of the nationals of the mandatory Power, and cannot be identified therewith by any process having general application.

(2.) The native inhabitants of a mandated territory are not invested with the nationality of the mandatory Power by reason of the protection extended to them.

(3.) It is not inconsistent with (1) and (2) above that individual inhabitants of the territory should voluntarily obtain naturalisation from the mandatory Power in accordance with arrangements which it is open to such Power to make with this object under its own law.

4. Hitherto naturalisation, except on the ground of service under the Crown in foreign countries, has depended on residence in British territory, and it has been considered undesirable to allow naturalisation on account of residence in protectorates on the ground that it is contrary to sound principle to exercise such a high right of sovereignty as that involved in changing the nationality of an inhabitant in a territory which does not form part of His Majesty's dominions. Only two exceptions to this principle have been admitted, namely, in South and Northern Rhodesia, where local naturalisation has been provided for by Orders in Council.

5. If provision is to be made for Imperial naturalisation in mandated territories, and it would appear from the resolutions of the Council of the League of Nations quoted above that the League entertains no objection to this as regards "B" and "C" mandated territories, it will be necessary to make similar provision in protectorates to which these territories are analogous.

6. The position is different as regards protected States where there are local rulers and the native inhabitants are subjects of those rulers. It would hardly be

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

possible for His Majesty to take power to enable such subjects of the local rulers to transfer their allegiance to himself, and even if naturalisation in such territories were confined to persons who were not subjects of the local rulers it is probable that the local rulers would object to such action as an infringement of their own sovereign rights and powers. Somewhat similar objections would apply to a proposition to provide for Imperial naturalisation in "A" mandated territories, the position of which is analogous to that of protected States.

7. If a general desire is expressed for such a change in the law as is proposed by the Commonwealth Government, the most convenient method of procedure would appear to be that, when next legislation amending the Act of 1914 is introduced, provision should at the same time be made enabling the Act to be applied by Order of His Majesty in Council (or, in the case of territories mandated to dominions, Order of the Governor-General in Council), to the territories in question, subject to such modifications and adaptations as may be necessary. Having regard to the difficulty which arises in connection with protected States and "A" mandated territories, it would be desirable not to provide generally for the application of the Act to "any territory under His Majesty's protection or in "respect of which a mandate on behalf of the League of Nations has been "accepted by His Majesty," but to provide for its application to certain individual territories specified in a schedule to the Act. This schedule would include "B" and "C" mandated territories and most of the protectorates, as to which no difficulty in regard to sovereignty occurs, but would not include "A" mandated territories or protected States.

8. Nationality of Children Born to British Subjects in Mandated Territories.—Somewhat similar considerations underlie another question which arises out of the scheme for the continuance of British nationality amongst successive generations born abroad contained in "The British Nationality and Status of "Aliens Act, 1922." It would appear that, as regards the children of British subjects born in "B" and "C" mandated territories, there is no necessity to go through the procedure contemplated in the Act of 1922 in order that they may obtain British nationality at birth and retain it at majority. It would seem that they are to be deemed to be "born in a place where by treaty, capitulation, grant, "usage, sufferance or other lawful means His Majesty exercises jurisdiction over "British subjects," and they therefore acquire British nationality at birth in their own right under the proviso to section 1 (1) of the Act of 1914, as amended in 1922. Children born in protectorates appear to be in the same position. On the other hand, children born in protected States and in "A" mandated territories would appear not to acquire or retain British nationality except in pursuance of the procedure laid down in the Act of 1922 in regard to registration at birth and assertion of British nationality at majority.

September 10, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62360 227

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

MEMORANDUM

Imperial Conference 1923
The Press

Tuesday,
September 11,
1923

MR. KING:

I just had a talk with Mr. H.E.M. Chisholm. He was greatly pleased that you had thought of him, but explained that on account of Mr. Dafoe's going to England, it would be practically impossible for him to consider it. He thought that Mr. Dafoe would rather resent his raising the question, which, of course, he would have to do. He explained that Mr. Dafoe would probably be sending reports to the Toronto "Globe" - and just possibly the Vancouver Province - as well as to the Manitoba "Free Press".

Another consideration which presents difficulties is that there are no papers, other than those which have already been provided for, which are big enough to take such a special service.

McG.
F.A. McGREGOR

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

S.C.

Prof. Cudmore:

C 62361 E-1302-3
2-1900

Attached is a typed copy of Mr. King's memorandum of the various occasions on which he will be expected to speak in the course of his pending Overseas trip. Mr. King requests that you suggest topics to be touched on, and assemble helpful material for his assistance in the preparation of each of these addresses. He is counting on having your copy not later than the end of the present week.

Sept. 11, 1923

Private Secretary.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Please return C 62362
this mems. when finished.

Strictly Confidential
and Private

Data required for following

1. Short speech at Quebec before leaving - Sept. 21

In nature of reply to Meighen's speeches-
Significance of Conferences.
Departure from Quebec.

2. Interview to be given press on landing at Liverpool - Sept. 29

Refer to Conferences,
To Conditions in Canada,
Economic revival since war,
Position of Government respecting
Immigration, Railways, Trade etc.

3. Opening meeting of Conference - October 1

General Review of Canadian Conditions since last Conference - 1921
Political considerations of importance
Relations with United States and other countries.

4. Review of Foreign Policy - meeting of Conference October 2

Canada's attitude,
towards Foreign Policy of Great Britain
" Common foreign policy for Empire
" European affairs
" League of Nations

in re Near East
The Ruhr
Graeco-Italian dispute
Reparations

5. Colonial Institute Dinner - October 2

Reply to Toast to "United Empire"
proposed by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught
Governor General -
Development of basis of Empire etc., Form of Government next etc.
Significance of Conferences,
Refer to Forestry Conference in Canada
Imperial Exhibition
Visit of Prince of Wales to Canada

9/3

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

6. London Chamber of Commerce Dinner - October 3

X Canadian Trade and Commerce - via Pacific etc.
Economic development of Canada
Investment of Labour and Capital
Building of Empire
Preference?
Removal of Embargo.

7. British Government Dinner - October 8

(Speeches by Prime Ministers of Empire)
Hospitality of British Government
Evolution of Government under British system
Relations - Canada and United States - Treaties, Arbitration etc.
Canada as an interpreter.

8. Dinner Buckingham Palace - October 11

Possible reference to Royal Family -
Victoria, Edward, George, Wales -

9. Freedom of City of London - October 12

Two speeches
1. Guildhall - (IMPORTANT)
2. along with Baldwin and Bruce - on significance of British Empire acknowledgment to be on behalf of Canada.
2. At Banquet later.
Significance of Conferences. Place of Canada in Empire etc.

10. Canada Club Dinner - October 18

Canadians in London.
Review of Canadian affairs - Canada's need.
An answer to "Whisper of Death."
" " re G.T.R. shareholders.

11. Canadian Club Dinner - date to be fixed

Similar to Canada Club
(different themes) Britain's opportunity.

12. Association of British Chamber of Commerce Dinner - October 24

Trade, Commerce etc.- (Opportunities for in Canada)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

13. Visit to Fleet at Portsmouth - Speech at Dinner - November 3

14. Overseas League Dinner - November 6

Prince of Wales presiding.

15. Inter-Parliamentary Association Dinner - date to be fixed

Significance of meetings of in Canada.

16. Compatriots Dinner - November 8

Empire, etc.

17. English Speaking Union (Date to be fixed)

On Anglo-American Relations

To be Prepared For:

University Degree - Oxford or Cambridge
Oxford, British-American Club.

Meetings of Women's Organizations.

Dinners to Smuts, Bruce, Massey, Baldwin, Irish Free State Representative

Particulars re careers of each of these.

Possible Church gatherings.

e.g. Methodists, etc.

Visits to Edinburgh or Bristol

Knights of Round Table Dinner

Press Dinner

Meeting of Historical Association. French-English

re Canadian Records and Archives

Visit to Paris - Acknowledgment of gifts by French Government - Vase
France Triumphant - Bronze.
Honoteaux - Volume on Canada
On Canadian Exhibition Train particulars..

Laying of Corner Stone - Canadian Exhibition Building - Imperial Exhib'tn

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62365

Please jot down topics to be marked into speeches and any sources of information or data relative thereto -

Facts and figures of interest etc.,

Stories or Anecdotes etc.,

Incidents etc.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62366

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

E 68.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

57

Imperial Airship Scheme.

Statement made in the House of Commons, by the Secretary of State for Air, on July 26, 1923.

(Extract from Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, Vol. 167. No. 105, Thursday, July 26, 1923.)

THE question of the development of airships has recently been considered by the Committee of Imperial Defence and the Imperial Shipping Committee. The Committee of Imperial Defence attaches considerable strategic value to airships, whilst the Imperial Shipping Committee considers that it is by means of an airship service that the carriage of mails can most cheaply be expedited to the Far East and Australia.

The Government have, therefore, decided to resume the development of airships and to proceed, if possible, by means of a commercial service rather than by State operation.

Proposals have been placed before them by the hon. and gallant Member for Uxbridge (Lieut.-Commander Burney), under which a bi-weekly service of six large airships to India will eventually be set up. The Government have accepted the scheme in principle, subject to the details of the contract being satisfactorily settled by the Treasury. The House of Commons will have an opportunity of considering the scheme when the details have been provisionally agreed.

The Dominions are being informed of this decision, and it is hoped to discuss the question at the Imperial Conference with a view to their co-operation in the scheme.

The administration of the scheme in so far as it is a matter of commercial aviation will come under the Air Ministry.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
September 20, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62367

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

SECRET.

E/64. REVISED.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

Report of Inter-Departmental Committee on the Limits of Territorial Waters.

AS the result of correspondence between the Foreign Office and the Admiralty, an Inter-Departmental Committee was convened for the purpose of preparing, for reference to the Dominions and India, a draft memorandum regarding the adoption of a common policy for the Empire in respect of the limits of territorial waters. It is anticipated that this question will receive consideration at the Imperial Conference to be held in October 1923.

2. The Committee met at the Admiralty on the 4th, 11th and 22nd January, 6th and 22nd February, and 16th April. Representatives attended from the following Departments :—

Home Office.
Foreign Office.
Colonial Office.
India Office.
Admiralty.
Board of Trade.
Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries.
Board of Customs and Excise.
Scottish Office.
Fishery Board for Scotland.

3. The accompanying memorandum has been drawn up as the result of the deliberations of the Committee.

4. In view of recent war experience, the Admiralty representatives emphasised the paramount importance of opposing any recognition of territorial waters beyond the 3-mile limit. So far as the open coast is concerned, the Committee were unanimously in agreement with this view, which is in accordance with the traditional policy of the British Empire.

5. With regard, however, to the question of bays and other inlets, it is unanimously recognised that exceptions to the strict application of this rule must be made in the case of certain areas described in paragraph 16 of the memorandum as territorial inlets. It is also agreed that in the case of bays whose width at the entrance does not exceed 6 miles, universal practice is in favour of placing the limit of territorial waters 3 miles to the seaward of a straight line drawn across the entrance.

6. It has also been proposed by the representatives of the Scottish Departments concerned in fishery administration that a further exception, applicable to fishery purposes only, should be made in the case of bays. They consider that British policy should be directed to obtaining universal recognition for the 10-mile bay rule, as embodied in the North Sea Fisheries Convention of 1882, as a general rule for all countries, but applying to fisheries only ; in other words, that the 3-mile limit in bays should have as its starting point a line drawn across the bay at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles.

7. The arguments adduced by them in support of this proposal are briefly :—

(1.) The special practical significance of the 10-mile bay rule in the case of fisheries, which is referred to in paragraph 9 of the memorandum ;

(2.) The recognition by British practice and certain utterances of British statesmen and by international jurists of the view that the 3-mile limit is subject to some qualification in its application to bays of a certain width ;

(3.) The desirability of substituting a general rule in place of the limited measure of uniformity already attained by separate international conventions, which they regard rather as giving formal recognition and definition to an existing principle than as introducing a new one ; and

(4.) The special importance of the proposed rule to Scotland, whose coast is much indented by bays and inlets and is inhabited by a large fishing population.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

8. The other members of the Committee feel that if the British Delegates at an International Conference took the initiative in proposing this rule for fishery purposes it would render it more difficult for them to oppose wider claims not necessarily limited to fisheries. These difficulties would not arise in the same degree if the policy adopted were not to put forward this rule, but to accept it, for fishery purposes only, on its being proposed by other Powers with substantial support; and on these lines the Committee have found it possible to reach an agreed conclusion, which is expressed in paragraph 20 of the memorandum.

(Signed)	F. C. LEARMONTH, Rear-Admiral and Hydrographer (Chairman)	Admiralty.
	J. V. CREAGH ...
	W. H. HANCOCK ...
	R. T. GOULD
	M. SHEARMAN	Foreign Office.
	JOHN RISLEY	Colonial Office.
	J. C. WALTON	India Office.
	P. J. ROSE	Scottish Office.
	G. A. STEEL
	DAVID T. JONES ...	Fishery Board for Scotland.
	HENRY G. MAURICE	Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries.
	H. S. MOSS-BLUNDELL
	G. E. BAKER	Board of Trade.
	A. E. LEE
	B. HAWKINS	Board of Customs and Excise.
	WILLIAM CHRISTIAN
	L. S. BRASS	Home Office.

June 1923.

(Confidential.)

Memorandum regarding a Common Policy for the British Empire on the Question of the Limits of Territorial Waters.

The question of the extent of territorial waters is of the greatest importance to the British Empire, particularly in time of war, when any considerable extension of territorial waters would gravely hamper the exercise of naval power. As is well known, the views of this country and of a number of other Powers are by no means in agreement, and it is probable that it will be impossible to avoid an international conference on the subject in the near future. It is therefore essential that a common policy for the Empire with regard to all aspects of the question should be arrived at by mutual agreement, thus enabling a united front to be presented to any proposed alteration of the present conditions which would operate to the disadvantage of the Empire.

2. While fully recognising the importance which must be attached to the other aspects of the questions (fisheries, customs, &c.), it is considered that the naval aspect is, from the Empire point of view, of pre-eminent importance, and that consequently the object to be aimed at is, generally speaking, to reduce as far as possible the restrictions placed by territorial waters upon the exercise of naval power.

3. His Majesty's Government have always opposed the recognition by this country of the claim of any other Power to exercise jurisdiction outside a 3-mile limit, which has generally come to be understood as the envelope of all circles of a radius of 3 nautical miles whose centres are on the low-water mark of the coastline.

4. This limit has also been adopted by most other Powers, but some exemptions from its rigid application are generally claimed, particularly as regards bays, while several Powers refuse in toto to accept this limit and put forward varied claims to wider limits.

5. The following are the principal Powers that recognise the 3-mile limit :—

Great Britain, United States of America, Japan, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Portugal and Austria.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62369

. Wider limits as shown below are understood to be claimed by certain Powers :—

Power.	Extent of Territorial Waters Claimed.	For what Purposes.	Remarks.
Spain	6 miles	All	Old-standing claim.
Norway	4 miles	All	Old-standing claim; mutually recognised by the three countries named, but not by other Powers.
Sweden
Denmark*
Norway	10 miles	Customs...	Recent claim; intended to aid enforcement of prohibition.
Russia	12 miles	Mainly fisheries ...	Recent revival of unsuccessful claim made in 1911.
France	6 miles	Fisheries (in Morocco) and Neutrality	Accepts 3 miles for exclusive fishery limits in the North Sea and in the English Channel under Fishery Conventions.
Italy ...	10 miles	Control of merchant vessels	Law of 1912.
	6 miles	Neutrality	Decree of 1914.
Greece	10 miles	Neutrality	Put forward in 1913
Uruguay	5 miles	All	Put forward in 1914.
Ecuador	12 miles	Neutrality	Put forward in 1914.
Colombia	12 miles	Fisheries. Deposits of hydrocarbons	Put forward in 1923.

* Denmark has accepted the 3-mile limit for purpose of exclusive fishery limits in the North Sea.

7. In addition to these claims to a greater limit of territorial waters than 3 miles, special territorial rights over certain bays, &c., are claimed by various Powers, including both those who do, and those who do not, accept the principle of the 3-mile limit.

8. There also appears to be a growing tendency to claim for all purposes the application of a rule laid down in various Fishery Conventions that for purposes of fishery protection the 3-mile limit in bays should have as its starting-point a line drawn across the bay at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles.

9. In the case of fisheries, as distinguished from other purposes, a practical basis can be adduced in support of the 10-mile rule for bays. In a bay of 10 miles or less in width, fishing in the narrow limits of the free waters between the 3-mile lines drawn on each side of the bay would be impracticable. If foreign fishing craft were allowed to fish in such a small space, there would be a constant risk of their violating territorial waters. They are, therefore, in certain cases excluded altogether from such bays by International Convention.

Policy proposed for Adoption.

10. After careful examination of the question, four draft resolutions are put forward as embodying the policy proposed.

Resolution 1.

It is essential that the general limit of territorial waters should be fixed at a distance of 3 miles from low-water mark.

11. This resolution is in accordance with the policy of this country for upwards of a century past. So long as the Empire depends upon Naval supremacy it is essential that any extension should be vigorously opposed, as it would gravely interfere with the successful conduct of naval operations, both those of a military nature and those connected with the extremely important and difficult operations for cutting off an enemy's sea-borne commerce.

12. One of the principal reasons, apart from the consequent restriction of the "high-seas," against widening the present 3-mile maritime belt is that the difficulty of determining with accuracy, either by observations taken on board or from shore, whether a ship is within the maritime belt or not is found in practice to be considerable even before the 3-mile limit is reached while it increases very rapidly beyond this limit.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

13. From the point of view of a neutral Power such extension is also objectionable, as increasing the responsibilities imposed upon that Power by the necessity of preserving its territorial waters from violation by belligerents.

14. The starting-point of the maritime belt (i.e., whether the latter should be measured from low-water mark, high-water mark, or any other definition) is to some extent a moot point, but the general consensus of opinion amongst the various Powers is that the low-water mark should be adopted.

Resolution 2.

The limit of territorial waters should be the same for the purposes of belligerency, neutrality, customs, fisheries, control of vessels, and all other purposes.

15. It is considered than when rights outside the 3-mile limit are once conceded for any purpose, it becomes more difficult to refuse to recognise similar rights for other purposes. Any jurisdiction beyond the normal 3-mile limit must be based on special international agreement.

Special areas may, however, be defined by International Convention, in which, with a view to the preservation of fish, trawling or other particular methods of fishing are prohibited to vessels of all countries that are parties to the Convention. The closing of such special areas would not involve any assertion of territorial rights over the waters in question.

Resolution 3.

The limit of territorial waters should, in the case of bays whose width at the entrance does not exceed 6 miles, be 3 miles to seaward of a straight line drawn across the entrance.

Similar territorial rights may, in addition, be admitted in respect of a certain number of larger bays or inlets, to be known as territorial inlets, which should be specifically enumerated and geographically defined.

16. Where the width of the entrance of an inlet (or, if there is more than one entrance, the widest) does not exceed 6 miles, it is generally recognised that the whole of the inner waters, however great their lateral extension, are territorial.

Territorial rights are, however, also claimed over certain inlets the width of whose entrances in many cases much exceeds twice the ordinary territorial limit

Those inlets include openings of all kinds, i.e., bays, gulfs, estuaries and straits, and it is proposed to describe them by the special term " territorial inlets."

Such claims have in the past been based on :—

Configuration (that is, the shape and degree of enclosure of the area of water in question, with special reference to the extent to which it penetrates into the land), either by itself or combined with one or more of the following reasons :—

(a.) That territorial rights are essential for reasons of national defence, safety or neutrality.
(b.) That sovereign jurisdiction has been exercised for a long period.
(c.) That territorial rights have been claimed for a long period.
(d.) That exclusive rights are necessary for the maintenance of the country's food supply, or for some other adequate economic reason.
(e.) That the waters in question are remote from general sea traffic routes.

17. It is recognised that it would probably be impossible and undesirable to obtain a general renunciation of these " historical " claims, or of similar future claims based on reasons mentioned in paragraph 16, and it is accordingly proposed that a schedule of such inlets within the Empire should be drawn up, stating the grounds on which exclusive jurisdiction is necessary or desirable, for consideration at an Imperial Conference. The policy of the Empire should, however, it is thought, be to restrict such claims as much as possible in order to prevent excessive claims by foreign Powers, which, if upheld, would seriously limit the exercise of naval power.

18. In the accompanying Appendix particulars are given of claims which have actually been made by foreign Powers. It is to be observed that in most cases they have not been substantiated.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62371

19. It has been proposed that the "10-mile bay rule" should be put forward as a general international rule applicable to fisheries only. In other words, that the "exclusive fishery limits" in bays should be generally recognised as including in all cases the waters within a distance of 3 miles measured from a straight line drawn across the bay in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles. This rule would be strictly limited to fishery purposes, and would not affect general territorial rights in bays.

20. It is however considered that while no strong objection can be taken to the 10-mile rule for bays being generally adopted, for fishery purposes only, if agreement to this effect can be negotiated with the other countries concerned, it is undesirable that the British Empire should take the initiative in any such negotiations.

Resolution 4.

The coast-line from the low-water mark of which the 3-mile limit of territorial waters should be measured is that of the mainland and also that of all islands. The word "island" covers all portions of territory permanently above high water in normal circumstances and capable of use or habitation.

21. The definition of the word "island" in the foregoing resolution is advanced as the best solution of an almost insuperable difficulty. On the one hand, it is essential that the area of territorial waters should not be unduly extended, firstly, on account of the consequent restriction of the action of His Majesty's ships in war, and, secondly, on account of the serious increase in the practical difficulty of determining a vessel's position if objects are low or indefinite; on the other hand, there are certain legal decisions bearing on this question which cannot be ignored.

22. The phrase "capable of use or habitation" has been adopted as a compromise. It is intended that the words "capable of use" should mean capable, without artificial addition, of being used throughout all seasons for some definite commercial or defence purpose, and that "capable of habitation" should mean capable, without artificial addition, of permanent human habitation.

23. It is recognised that these criteria will in many cases admit of argument, but nothing more definite could be arrived at in view of the many divergent considerations involved. It is thought that no criteria could be selected that would not be open to some form of criticism.

September 27, 1923.

APPENDIX.

Extension of Foreign Maritime Jurisdiction over (1) large Bays and (2) Straits.

(Prepared by Foreign Office, January 1923.)

1. Bays.

Ecuador.

Gulf of Jambeli.—In 1915 the Ecuadorean Government claimed territorial jurisdiction over the waters of Jambeli channel from inside a line drawn 1 marine league west of Punta Salinas Point to 1 marine league west of the mouth of the Payana. The Gulf of Jambeli is an inlet of the sea between the mainland of Ecuador and the Island of Puna; at its extremity it would appear to be upwards of 20 miles in width. The Government of Ecuador was informed that His Majesty's Government were unable to recognise territorial jurisdiction as extending beyond the usually recognised limit of 3 miles, whether along the open coast or in bays.

It may be observed that the waters at the mouth of the Payana are also claimed to be territorial waters of the Republic of Peru.

France.

Granville Bay.—By the Anglo-French Convention of 1839 a considerable stretch of water, containing oyster beds, in the Bay of Granville on the French coast, between

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62372

Cape Carteret and Point Meinga, south-east of Jersey, and extending far beyond the 3-mile limit, was reserved exclusively for French fishermen, the boundaries being defined and laid down on a chart annexed to the Convention; British fishermen were prohibited from carrying on any kind of fishing, even for floating fish, within this area. The bay thus appropriated is over 17 miles in breadth, and the closing line passes in some places about 14 miles from the shore. This concession to France was a recognition of the principle that fisheries of this nature—that is, for objects which are attached to or stationary on the bottom—require special treatment.

Greece.

By a law of the 8th April, 1913, the Greek Government sanctioned the exclusion, in war time, of shipping from a zone of 10 nautical miles from the coast, and, in the case of gulfs and roadsteads, the zone was to be measured along a straight line drawn across the indentation and at the outermost part thereof where the width of the opening did not exceed 20 miles. The usual protest was made by this country.

On the 15th August, 1914, the Greek Minister intimated that his Government had fixed the limits of Greek territorial waters, for neutrality purposes, at 6 nautical miles. The Admiralty, who were not prepared to make the same concession to the Greek Government as they had done in the case of a similar claim by Italy (see under that country), concurred in the proposal that no reply should be returned to the Greek announcement, the Foreign Office view being that it would be impolitic to differentiate more than was absolutely necessary between the two cases.

Subsequent events proved that Greek steamers were arrested by His Majesty's ships in waters within the 6-mile limit.

Italy.

An Italian Royal Decree of the 10th August, 1914, stipulated that, for purposes of neutrality, territorial waters in bays, creeks and gulfs extended as far as a straight line drawn at a tangent of the circumferences of two circles of 6 marine miles radius, having as their centres the extreme points of the opening of the bay, creek or gulf, provided the distance between these points does not exceed 20 marine miles. If this distance is exceeded the territorial waters were stated to be comprised within a straight line drawn between the two farthest points, which are 20 marine miles apart.

His Majesty's Ambassador in Rome was instructed to intimate to the Italian Government that the British Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean had been instructed to respect rigidly the neutrality of Italy, even to the extent of not approaching within 6 miles of the Italian coast. It was pointed out, however, that this act of courtesy did not entail any abandonment of the principle of the 3-mile limit for territorial waters. Any further action was, for political reasons, deprecated at the time by His Majesty's Government.

It may be added that in 1911 when a Bill providing for the extension, when considerations of national defence rendered it necessary, of territorial waters to the limits just referred to, was presented to the Italian Parliament, the Italian Government were informed that His Majesty's Government could not recognise any claim to jurisdiction over, or to interference with, British vessels beyond the 3-mile limit. A further protest was made on the passage into law of the Bill.

Norway.

The question of the limits of Norwegian territorial waters, which are claimed to be "an ordinary sea-mile" (4 English geographical miles) seawards from the outermost island or rock which is not washed over by the sea, together with the Varanger Fjord, Vest Fjord, and certain other "internal waters," was raised in a somewhat acute form by the arrest of the British trawler "Lord Roberts" on the 11th March, 1911, and by the refusal of His Majesty's Government to admit the right of Norway, in the absence of any specific agreement to the contrary, to exercise jurisdiction in waters outside the 3-mile limit. His Majesty's Government proposed at the time to call an international conference for the settlement of maritime limits, but chiefly owing to the opposition of Germany it was impossible to arrange for its meeting.

The question still remains unsettled; but mainly out of regard to the services of Norwegian seamen during the war, the British Government has not wished to raise the matter in recent years.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62373

Russia.

Gulf of Bothnia.—In 1915 the Russian Government called the attention of the Swedish Government to the legal status of the waters of the Gulf of Bothnia. By the Russo-Swedish Treaty of 1810 the frontier between Finland and Sweden was defined as following a certain line somewhat to the west of the middle of the gulf, so that all the waters to the east of that line must be considered, in any case as between Russia and Sweden, as Finnish, and all the waters west of that line as Swedish.

The Admiralty considered that Russia and Sweden jointly could make out a strong case for the waters of the gulf being territorial, unless there was an international custom of long standing to the contrary. During the war the matter was one of almost exclusively Russian interest, and if at some later date it should be to our interest to claim that the waters of the gulf are the high sea, it would be enough that we should have expressed no opinion on the matter.

Gulf of Finland.—The Russian Ministry of Marine having issued a notification in 1913 respecting the area over the mouth of the Gulf of Finland which was prohibited for flying craft, His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires was instructed to call attention to the fact that the area in question, measuring 120 miles by 60 miles, completely closed the whole entrance to the gulf over a considerable distance, and that the gulf being at its neck 30 miles wide on the average, the order of the Ministry of Marine claimed jurisdiction in the air over waters outside the territorial limits—a claim which His Majesty's Government were unable to admit. The treaty of Dorpat between Soviet Russia and Finland makes special provision in regard to the territorial waters of Finland within this gulf

White Sea.—In July 1910 the British trawler "Onward Ho!" was seized for fishing in the White Sea, but on representation being made by His Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh the vessel was released.

In 1911 the Russian Government having introduced into the Duma a Bill forbidding foreigners to fish in the White Sea south of a line from Cape Kanin to Cape Svyatoi (a distance of 102 miles), and also anywhere within 12 miles of the coast of the Archangel Government, mainland or island, His Majesty's Ambassador was instructed to point out that it was not generally admitted that foreign fishing vessels could be prevented from exercising their avocation beyond the ordinary 3-mile limit, and that His Majesty's Government certainly would not accept a limit extending as far as 12 miles.

A voluminous correspondence took place, and the Bill was withdrawn in 1912.

In 1919 the provisional Government of Northern Russia passed a decree prohibiting trawling for fish and sealing within the coastal waters of the Northern Territories. The limits of those waters were laid down as 12 sea miles from the outstanding points of the Murman coast, the Ainof Islands and Kildin Island being reckoned as extensions of the coast. As regards the White Sea the limits extended to a line running 12 sea miles north of Capes Kanin and Svyatoi.

M. Nabokof, Russian Chargé d'Affaires in London, was told that His Majesty's Government saw no reason to depart from their consistent policy of opposing any extension of territorial waters beyond the 3-mile limit. They recognised, nevertheless, that the circumstances affecting seal hunting were somewhat different from those affecting ordinary fishing, and would consequently be prepared to consider a convention specifically dealing with that question, provided that the wider question of the extension of the existing territorial limits for normal kinds of fishing was not affected thereby.

In May 1921 the Russian Trade delegation communicated to the Board of Trade a telegram from M. Chicherin pointing out that fishing and hunting in Russian territorial waters, especially south of a line from Kanin Nos to Svyatoi Nos, had been prohibited to foreigners since the 1st May, 1920, and adding that compulsory action against British vessels for infraction of the order would be regretted.

M. Krassin communicated, in June 1921, a Soviet Decree of the 24th May of that year, imposing the same restrictions as regards the White Sea. A reply, in similar terms to that given to M. Nabokof in 1919, was sent to M. Berzin, the Soviet representative, on the 27th August, 1921. It was arranged on the 13th October following that the negotiations for a convention dealing with seal fisheries should be carried on in Moscow.

Nothing more appears to have transpired in regard to the White Sea, although a lengthy correspondence has taken place respecting the arrest of British trawlers off Murmansk.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It may be of interest to recall that the Norwegian Government has intimated to the Russian Government its willingness to agree to an area for fishing and whaling of 1 geographical mile (7,420 metres), reckoned from low-water mark on the mainland and islands, and to negotiate in regard to the recognition of the White Sea as a closed area for Russian fishing and whaling within a boundary drawn closer in than the line from Svyatoi to Kanin Nos, at a point where the distance between the coasts is appreciably less and where it would be easier for Norwegian whalers to take the necessary precautions against entering Russian territorial waters

The area of the White Sea is approximately 38,000 miles.

United States.

Delaware Bay.—In 1793 the French frigate "L'Embuscade" captured the British ship "Grange" in Delaware Bay at a distance from the shore of more than 3 miles. Declaring that the whole of the bay was within its jurisdiction, the United States required the restoration of the British vessel. France complied. The bay has a headland width of 10½ miles.

Chesapeake Bay.—In 1885 it was held by the United States Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims that Chesapeake Bay was American territory and that seizures made by the Confederate cruisers within any part of Chesapeake Bay were not made on the high seas. The headlands of Chesapeake Bay are 12 miles apart, and its length is over 114 miles before its waters narrow to 6 miles. The fishing in this bay is controlled by State legislation.

2. STRAITS.

Chile.

A Chilean Decree of the 15th December, 1914, laid down that, for purposes of neutrality, the interior waters of the Strait of Magellan, and of the southern channels even in those places where the distance from shore to shore was more than 3 miles, were to be considered as a jurisdictional sea.

After some correspondence the Admiralty accepted the Foreign Office view that the question of jurisdiction should not then be raised with the Chilean Government. They placed it on record, however, that they were not disposed to go as far as the Foreign Office in admitting the validity of the Chilean claim. They considered it to be arguable that, in a natural international highway, the internal waters of which open out so as to include a tract of water more than 3 miles from the nearest land, such an area should be regarded as outside territorial limits. The Admiralty pointed out that His Majesty's ships had, on occasion, performed acts which disregarded the Chilean claim, and which, if called in question, His Majesty's Government could and should justify.

Denmark. (See Norway.)

France.

The French Government having, in October 1912, passed a Decree relating to neutrality in maritime war, which Decree fixed the limits of French territorial waters at 6 marine miles from low-water mark, the Admiralty, after some correspondence, pointed out that the case of France being neutral in a war between this country and a North Sea State was the very one in which British interests as a belligerent would be most affected by an extension of the French territorial limits. If France established the right to force belligerent warships to keep outside a 6-mile limit, it would be almost futile to station a British patrol force in the Straits of Dover in such a war. As matters stood, the off-lying shoals between Calais and Dunkirk compelled large vessels to keep more than 3 miles from the French coast, or at least render it very risky for them to keep closer in. With a 3-mile limit, therefore, a British patrol could act effectively, but a 6-mile limit would clear many of the dangers to navigation and enable an enemy's ship, or a contraband-carrying neutral, to pass with comparative impunity.

His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris was instructed on the 19th May, 1914, to intimate to the French Government that His Majesty's Government did not recognise the claim to extended territorial waters, and that any such extension beyond the customary 3-mile limit must be a matter for special agreement.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62375

Norway.

Skaggerack.—At the North Sea Fisheries Conference of 1881 it was agreed, in deliberating on the boundaries of the North Sea for the purposes of the Convention, to exclude the Skaggerack (whose waters are nowhere less than 60 geographical miles in width) the fisheries of which it was stated by the President were not international, but were " essentially within the jurisdiction of the States to which the shores belong."

It should be stated, however, that neither Denmark nor Norway appears to have asserted since the conclusion of the Convention exclusive jurisdiction in its moiety of those waters, where in fact both British and German vessels are believed to carry on an extensive fishing.

Spain.

Straits of Gibraltar.—The Admiralty have pointed out that the effective control of the Straits of Gibraltar has been greatly weakened through the acquiescence of His Majesty's Government in the extension of the Spanish protectorate in Morocco to the westward, which carried the right of territorial waters with it, and gave an enemy a 3-mile gap through the straits in which to pass in safety from attack.

United States

Fuca Straits.—A case in which the principle of the sovereignty of the riverain Powers over straits seems to have been recognised by Great Britain and the United States in 1873, when, in carrying out the award of the German Emperor, the international boundary was carried along the middle of the Fuca Straits, which are about 70 miles long and from 15 to 20 miles wide. The treaty of the 15th June, 1846, lays down that the boundary is to continue through the middle of the channel which separates the continent from Vancouver Island and of Fuca Straits. The commissioners appointed by the two Powers were unable to agree upon this portion of the boundary, i.e., as to whether it should run through the Canal of Haro. This definition of the boundary is finally established by Article 8 of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States respecting the demarcation of the boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, signed at Washington on the 11th April, 1908. This agreement is naturally binding only on the parties to the treaty; and in that respect it corresponds to the Russo-Swedish Agreement of 1810, whereby the frontier of the two countries was defined as following a certain line somewhat to the west of the middle of the Gulf of Bothnia.

---

o

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62376

(Mr. King's note. 1923)

jc

Opening of Imperial Conference

Reference to Mr. Baldwin's opening address.

Welcome in name of the Dominions the Irish Free State into the Community of Nations.

This Conference a Conference of His Majesty's governments, not a super government or cabinet or Council for executive action; value in exchange of information, in consultation on matters of common concern.

Further, along line of consideration of Canada's general position on Empire foreign policy, or reference to European situation and Canada's attitude to European situation and Canada's attitude to that problem (probably the latter, as Mr. Baldwin is likely to deal largely with the Ruhr and reparations).

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62377 Imp. Conf. Evolution of affairs
Private notes.
Imperial Conference

PRELIMINARY REVIEW.

Appreciation of review by Prime Minister of United Kingdom.

Thanks for invitation to be present at Conference of Prime Ministers of British Empire.

Privilege and advantage of personal acquaintance and direct conference.

Precise Status of Conference - terminology loose and inexact.
In 1921 Conference expression frequently used "we don't know what we are, or what weshould call ourselves - a Conference, a Cabinet, a Council (successor to Imperial War Cabinet), a Meeting".
"A meeting of Representatives of the United Kingdom, the Dominions and India" - designation fiven the Conference of 1921.

To the word Conference no expeption can be taken from any quarter.

Conference expresses exact nature of gathering it is in accord with spirit of times it recognizes the equality of status for purposes of discussion of those present.

Cabinet is not a correct designation not known to the constitution, but has a definite significance - it implies in British Parliamentary practice a body that acts as a unit with a single policy on all matters of State, selected by a Prime Minister whose spokesman he is, assuming and resigning office with him.
It is chosen from the representatives of the people in relation to the policies with which it is concerned.
It retains office in virtue of its retaining the confidence of the people to whom it is responsible - responsability to the people - the electorate - is of the essence of its being. In this capacity alone is it competent to advise the Sovereign.
It is related to a Parliament, which derives its authority from the people; it sits as a part of that Parliament.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

If Imperial Cabinet ever formed it will grow out of Imperial federation.

Imperial Federation, ~~whether~~ necessary, desirable or possible to-day may in the course of years become all three. The agencies of transportation and communication are multiplying in a variety of directions. They may yet eliminate both time and space to such a degree that the members of an assembly sitting at Westminster may be sufficiently in touch with their constituencies, as to be able to intelligently to ascertain their views upon the problems that arise for consideration, and from their member select such outstanding figures as may command the confidence of the whole in a Cabinet concerned with policies which govern the whole - but that day at best is remote. If there are it is brought about, Imperial federation will be a natural growth, not forced and artificial. Till (?) it is present, it would be usurping the rights of the people, for any group of men, not elected by, nor responsible to the whole to assume to constitute themselves a Cabinet. The analogy from war-time is not applicable. The war was fought and carried on by the executive usurping the rights of the people in many directions with no sanction save that of necessity. It was a reversion back to autocracy. To attempt to press this movement in peace times would be to disrupt rather than unite the Empire.

Council. This word is even more objectionable than Cabinet in that it does not suggest the delegated authority from or responsibility to the representatives of the people. It is suggestive of power from above, not from below. It is associated with the beginnings not the consummation of Governments by free peoples. An Imperial Council to have powers at all would have to be in a position to enforce its decrees or findings or resolutions, whence is this power to come? Only from the people by whom payment of bills must be made. "No taxation without representation" is a sufficient answer to any attempt at formation of an Imperial Council. The self constituted authority of a few men, temporarily in office in their respective countries, men with the sanction of their colleagues, would not be sufficient to bring such a body into being; representation to be effective must be relative to the particular policy or project concerned. Council begins at the wrong end - it is autocracy not democracy, government bya few not the people - in reference to the people's affairs.
It has never been discussed before the people - there is no

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

mandate to any one attending the conference to ask for anything of the kind, no parliament of the Empire has pronounced in favour of it. This conference might recommend its consideration, to do so would be to ensure its quietus.

To substitute a Council for a Cabinet is to revert to the days prior to responsible government, and create on an empire scale, the difficulties that gave rise to revolution in United States and rebellion in Canada.

Terminology.

British Empire

British Commonwealth
neither term exact nor adequate.
Both suggest single administration, a legislative and administrative unity.

Empire - is associated with autocracy - hence use of Commonwealth

Imperial - has some significance - Prussianism.

The reason we find it difficult to get a term to describe what we wish is thatour condition is a new one - never existed before- not a federation
"q" union
" " Commonwealth
" an Empire
a community of States under British Flag.

Community of British Nations, Colonies and Protectorates.

As a Community we have interests in common.
Whatever affects the honor, integrity or common interest of the whole is of concern to all the parts.

As nations we claim equality of rights and privileges in matters of immediate and direct concern.

British, a better term than Imperial, to descrive our community of interests, i.e. British flag, British Sovereigns, British justice, British fair play, British traditions.
English, Scotch, Irish, Canadian, Australian, South African, etc. all British the only term to descrive what we hold in common.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Note differences - Self-Governing Dominions
Dominion of Canada
Commonwealth of Australia
Dominion of New Zealand
Union of South Africa
Irish Free State
Dominion of New Foundland

Comment upon presence of representative of Irish Free State

" " " " " of India
underlying significant factor in British Empire is self-government

Entire evolution of Government within Empire is towards self-government.

Herein lies solution of Irish problem
Hope of solution of problem in India.

Comment upon illness of Mr. Bonar Law

Comment upon personel of Conference - absence of familiar figures, e.g. Lloyd George, Bonar Law, Sir Robert Borden, Mr. Hughes. -Mr. Massey a link with the past - General Smuts - The advantages of having new men not filled with war methods, etc.

Canada's position at the Conference.

Were pleased to accept invitation of Prime Minister of United Kingdom to meet himself and Premiers of other self-governing Dominions in Conference.

Ready to consider and express our views upon any subject that have been placed on the agenda or may be brought forward.

Are in happy position of being satisfied with existing conditions and relationships as between ourselves and other parts of the British Empire.

This is not to be taken as implying that there may not be room for improvement in any direction, or that great good may not

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

come from more perfect understanding.

We can think of no finer spectacle to offer the world than that the Conference should disclose we were all in hearty accord.

It does imply, however, that we seek neither constitutional change, nor alteration in the methods by which in the course of a natural evolution, influenced by events, we have "here a little, there a little, line upon line, precept upon precept", worked out a development within the Empire which has led to even fuller recognition of their national status as regards the self-governing Dominions, and of unity and community of interest as regards the whole.

It implies further that we have no grievances for which we seek redress.

It has always been so. - Note Mackenzie's grievances Report - Could there be a better guarantee of unity than this. I regard it as of significance to the whole future of the Empire that it should be possible for the grandson of one who presented to the Colonial Office the grievances of the Canadian people, number some in all, to be able to say that to-day as respects his relations to the British Crown and British Government, Canada has no grievances to present; none for which she seeks redress. That she has found in the British connections, in British institutions, the guarantee of the liberties and rights she has claimed.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62382

It has also this further significance. It questions the wisdom of raising at this time or creating issues where none at present exist.

It is not as though all parts of the Empire had not been left by the war with problems of their own sufficient to tax their resourcefulness, ingenuity and powers.

The public are in a very unsettled frame of mind, they are chary and fearful of new ventures, they do not wish to be drawn into situations which are likely to involve new dangers or new expenditures.

Their loyalty requires no assertion. Anything by way of resolution or otherwise which would appear to demand such would be resented.

It may be well to remember that an ill in one part of the Empire will not be remedied by creating in the effort to cure it, a condition of unrest or discontent in another.

It recognizes that that the ties which bind and unite the Empire are ties of sentiment; of common tradition, aim and aspiration; of common conceptions of government of law and of right and honour, of a common allegiance - not a matter of bargaining. It means we have nothing to demand as the price of our loyalty, allegiance or efforts - bargaining is an impossible basis of union.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Canada's Present Position or (Secure recent speeches from Throne at beginning and close of Parliament).

Situation in Canada at present.

Economic:

An emergence from the depression which followed the war, and which found expression in unemployment, cessation of immigration, continued increase of public debt, heavy railway obligations, greatly increased taxation, trade dormant, depressed agricultural conditions.

A distinct economic revival occasioned by conditions relatively more settled, bountiful harvests 1922-1923, revival of industry and trade, diminution in unemployment, promise of reduction in annual deficit of Government railways.

People as heavily taxed as circumstances will permit.

Local, Provincial and Federal taxation.

Demand for reduction of taxation.

Margin within which reduction can be made exceedingly narrow

Interest on public debt
Payment of pensions
Expenses incident to Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment
" Land Settlement
Payment to Provinces of subsidies:
1. General
2. Technical Education
3. Aid to agriculture
4. On roads
5. Loans for housing

(All a first charge - and equal 1/2 of total budget.

Little or nothing thus far done by way of meeting national requirements public buildings, lighthouses, etc.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Branch lines of railways - especially on prairies.

Proximity to United States

A factor to be taken into consideration re increase taxation.

Policy of United States in maintaining an aloofness from European situation, attratice to many people.

Prosperity of United States an important consideration - has advantages of geographical position, climatic conditions, variety of resources, etc., cheaper country to live in.

Tendency ever present for Canada's population to drift U.S.-ward - quite noticeable at beginning of present year.

3,500 to 4,000 miles of frontier - invisible boundary.

Prices of Agricultural machinery etc., lower on U. S. side.

Canada's problem to retain her population - to build up the Dominion, with this power of attraction ever present at her side. This is not a factor which is present in case of United Kingdom, - Australia, Africa, New Zealand, S. Q., or India.

To impose upon Dominions burdens incidental to British connection, not felt or known by the peoples of the United States is to lose Canadian population to our neighbour, and to alter sentiment.

Canada's strength to Empire lies first and foremost in her own unity, prosperity and solidarity. Numbers, etc, etc...

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62385

An important factor in reviving Canadian industry and trade - the removal of the embargo on Canadian cattle going into the United Kingdom - Action of the British Government greatly appreciated all over Canada.

(Get particulars of - dates, scope of agreement, effect on shipments, prices, etc.)

The increase in preference on British goods coming to Canada via Canadian Ports - 10% reduction on Customs dues = 2½ per cent increase in preference which ranges 33 1/3 to over 50% on numerous articles - In part, a return for improved facilities in trade with United Kingdom in cattle import, a development of our preference on British goods. No bargaining in this matter. No demand on British Government or public. To our own advantage, as well as to British trade. Encourage shipments by Canadian ports and on Canadian Railways.

Trade via the Pacific - is a new and important consideration. The opening of the Panama Canal has created a new trade route to Europe. Our Pacific Coast cities Vancouver, Victoria and Prince Rupert have acquired a new significance in their relations not only to the Orient, Australia and New Zealand, but also to the British Isles and Europe.

(Get particulars of grain shipments via Vancouver - recent years -)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

This likely to have a far reaching effect upon settlement and development of the Middle West - Alberta,and Saskatchewan will also give new significance to trade on the Pacific, and help to bring home to Prairie provinces their interest and concern therein.

We have witnessed new development in transportation of goods from Eastern and Western Canada by all water route instead of by rail - (Get particulars vessel leaving Montreal for Vancouver with Eastern shipments to Western Canada returning with cargoes lumber, etc. -)

Immigration is beginning to revive (Get particulars of)

During war naturally ceased, after war with unemployment no effort made to stimulate. Change in administration, time required to recommence efforts. Special efforts made to bring back settlers from U. S. to Canada - to set tide of immigration from British Isles to Canada. Europe no longer the recruiting ground ~~for~~ it was for immigrants. We have sought to avoid the errors which have been apparent in settlement of United States. We have been careful as to the non-admission of undesirables, of dependents, defectives and delinquents - but we have extended a welcome and do welcome men and women who are able and ready to work and who desire to improve their lot by coming to the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62387

new world to help in building up, not in adding to our problems.

(Get particulars of immigration policy)

Trade and Commerce:

Particulars re growth of at present and since war.

Revenues:

Particulars as to by sources, etc. showing trend.

Railways - particulars of.

Bank clearings, deposits, etc.- P. O. deposits.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-1302-3
Vol. 2 - (a)C 62388

Pub list of previous conferences.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE
CANADA

Chronological sheets.

Canada & Navy handbook.

Developments during the war.

Procedure of Royal Colonial Institute - Election of previous decisions
Delhi of Parliamentary Union etc.

References - Canada Year Book

Work on obtaining -

Previous visits to England.

Search articles in English
Editorials & other papers.

Search writings

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62389

Notes for Prime Minister

re

Opening address, Imperial Conference.

O.D.S.

O.D. SKELTON, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Imperial Conference. C 62390

Opening Meeting

Mr King's position.

Speaking first as representing the oldest Dominion;

A new comer personally in Conference affairs, as are most of our colleagues — Mr Warren of Newfoundland, Britain's oldest colony and Canada's nearest British neighbor; the representatives of ~~the East~~ India, now passing through a most promising evolution, and the Prime Minister of Australia; fortunate that we have with us a veteran of the Conference in Mr Massey, and a statesman of wide experience of world affairs in General Smuts.

~~For if a new comer, Mr King feels that he is among friendly and discriminded~~

As new comer personally, Mr King represents a long established Canadian tradition, happy to be privileged to carry on attitude and policy developed through two generations of ~~a~~ pioneer experiment in the reconciliation of empire and liberty, self Government and cooperation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Imperial Conference.

Opening meeting. C 62391

Goodwill to Irish Free State.

Pleased to associate Canada with Mr Baldwin's welcome to Irish Free State, as newest member of the Community of Nations; ~~the recognizing a community; and youngest state~~ the youngest member in this ~~for~~ present organization, but also the oldest in the ~~creation and~~ development and spreading of Christian civilization; confidence that ability and initiative of the Irish people will be displayed in the successful attainment of peace and prosperity - and in distinctive contributions to the world's store of political and social achievement.

Canada's special interest because of the ~~definite~~ honour of being specially and definitely linked with the Irish Free State in the Treaty.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Imperial Conference.
Opening ~~Address~~ Meeting.

C 62392

Mr Baldwin's address: (re Europe):

Congratulate Mr Baldwin the Conference on the clarity & forcefulness of the statement, the sincerity and feeling ~~he~~ shining through it

No question as to the seriousness of the situation. - Civilization ~~trembling~~ of a Continent trembling in the balance. - Complexity increased by fact that the strife is not merely of nation against nation but ~~between~~ of class against class and social creed against social creed. - Yet must recognize also that much energy much regenerative force released by developments on the Continent: permanent and effective rebuilding must come from within, though it may be possible to aid in creating the machinery and the atmosphere.

Obvious that we cannot in the few minutes available in this opening session consider in detail any of the complex and momentous issues surveyed by Mr Baldwin. They will be discussed at length in future meetings, after the further survey by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. What solution is ~~most~~ practicable, what should be the attitude of the several Dominions to ~~on~~ this question and on the ~~more~~ general question of participation and control in foreign affairs, can then be considered. At

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

this stage we can only : — express our appreciation of the help afforded in framing an opinion by Mr B.'s impressive statement ; cherish the hope that ~~it will~~ Europe will find it possible to reconcile peace and justice, the lessons from the past and the calls of the future and express the belief that some measure of the good will and mutual understanding which ~~has~~ prevailed during the war not only among the ~~several~~ members of this ~~British~~ Empire but among the Allied and Associated powers will continue and will aid in opening the ~~same~~ path desired.

[Perhaps add reference to League as instrumentality in regional understanding.)

As to monetary phase of reparations, ~~some~~ believe dominions would be quite prepared to consider, along with Great Britain reduction of total expected, as part of general satisfactory settlement ~~and of reached by agreement~~.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Imperial Conference. C 62394

Opening Address.

France:

Pleasure in learning of the reknitting of good friendly relations between the British and the French governments; in no part of the Empire are these good relations more desired than in Canada, where men of British blood and of French blood are working side by side in the endeavor to build up a common national life. Clear, that enduring good will must rest on frank acceptance of facts, on mutual recognition of the others needs, not merely on phrases.

United States.

Policy of Canada, irrespective of sections or parties, in the constant and dealings private and public which our three thousand mile common border make inevitable, is, while conserving our own just and vital interests, to maintain and develop friendliest possible relations with the United States. No part of Canada's activities in the field of foreign affairs so important as the possible service she may do, and how we may say she has done, in building up a fund of goodwill, a measure depth of understanding, which will be of vital moment for those good relations of all parts of the English speaking world upon which the world's peace so greatly turns. [Will have occasion later to discuss/refer to ~~our~~ her service in these specific transactions relations

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Imperial Conference.
Opening meeting. C 62395

British Empire unity. [If Mr Baldwin brings it up]

Desirable to explore fully and ~~thoroughly~~ all practical possibilities of strengthening ~~and linking this~~ the nations of the Empire and increasing their mutual service; should not be bound by old ~~doctrines~~ catchwords, but neither should be carried away by new catchwords; ~~investigate~~ should consider, with open mind ~~the various proposals made~~ in this ~~the~~ final Conference, what substantial and ~~real~~ advantage may be secured from any or all of the varied proposals which are to be brought forward.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Canada's position re status. C 62396

(Briefly - non-provocatively:)

Canada desires no special privilege. The decision of Great Britain on any important public issue, domestic or foreign, will be made by the people of Britain, their representatives in Parliament, and the government responsible to that Parliament. So, the decision of Canada on any important public issue, domestic or foreign, will be made by the people of Canada, their representatives in Parliament, and the government responsible to that parliament. Where a question arises which is of direct and immediate concern to more than one part of the Empire, it will be necessary, as a preliminary step, to provide for consultation, ~~whether through~~ ~~conferences, agencies through special visits of representatives~~ followed ~~if need arises~~, by consideration by the several parliaments and governments, and such action as they may deem necessary.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Peoples of parliaments : good will or pledges.

C 62397

Essential as are those Conferences between members of ~~the~~ His Majesty's ^ several governments, it is still more essential to ensure communication and discussion and understanding on the parts of the parliaments and ^ the peoples ~~of the~~.

Without this understanding and good will no enduring cooperation can be effected.

With that understanding, all desirable things are possible.

~~Confirm~~ The desire to multiply contracts and pledges, to have ~~the~~ detailed promises as to action in all possible contingencies, rests on a misconception of the human character and ~~t~~ the Empire's history.
Irksome pledges do not bind ; a people's enthusiasm cannot be requisitioned.
Imperialists should learn to have faith in the Empire.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62398

SECRET

E.72.
(also)
E (T.C) 1.

55

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF THE DOMINIONS AND INDIA IN RELATION TO THE SIGNATURE OF TREATIES AND THE QUESTION OF TERRITORIAL WATERS.

At the Meeting of the Imperial Conference held on Wednesday, 3rd October, 1923, at 11 a.m. the Conference agreed (E. 2nd Meeting, 1923) that a Committee should be formed as follows:-

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (in the Chair)
The Secretary of State for the Colonies
A Representative of Canada.
" " The Commonwealth of Australia
" " New Zealand.
" " The Union of South Africa.
" " Irish Free State
" " Newfoundland
" " India

to consider and report to the Imperial Conference (a) on the position of the Dominions and India in relation to the signature of Treaties, (b) on the question of Territorial Waters.

The Committee has now been constituted as follows:-

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (in the Chair)
The Secretary of State for the Colonies.
The Prime Minister of Canada.
The Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.
The Prime Minister of New Zealand.
The Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa
A Representative of the Irish Free State
The Prime Minister of Newfoundland
The Secretary of State for India

The

OCT 29 Read

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Prime Minister of Canada (for Dr Skelton)

C 62399

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

E-9002

CONFIDENTIAL.

E. 74.

41 25

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

[A 5909/116/45]

PROHIBITION AND LIQUOR-SMUGGLING IN THE UNITED STATES.

Memorandum by the Foreign Office.

THE stages of the prohibition question in the United States as affecting Anglo-American relations are briefly as follows:—

1. The enforcement of prohibition (January 1920) was followed by liquor-smuggling, at first sporadic and then continuous, particularly from the West Indies.

2. From the end of 1922, cases of the seizure of British vessels outside the 3-mile limit grew more and more frequent, the United States Government basing their action on a section in their customs laws (akin to the old British "hovering" laws), which gave them jurisdiction (including the right of search, but not explicitly of seizure) within a 12-mile limit.

3. His Majesty's Government lost no time in formally reserving their right to protest against seizures of British vessels outside the 3-mile limit, and a series of protests in individual cases followed. In the summer of 1922, seizures became increasingly frequent (owing to the strengthening of the prohibition flotilla), and a clause was surreptitiously introduced into the United States Tariff Act of 1922 expressly affirming the right of seizure for customs purposes within a 12-mile limit. His Majesty's Government therefore intensified their diplomatic pressure; the United States Government gave way, and the United States Cabinet in September 1922 promulgated a ruling that no seizures were to be made outside the 3-mile limit unless the small boats of the vessel concerned could be shown to have entered that limit for an illegal purpose. His Majesty's Government have refused to accept the principle of international law implied in this reservation.

4. Prior to their abandonment of the claim to a right of seizure within a 12-mile limit, the United States Government addressed to His Majesty's Government a request (in June 1922) substantially identical with that which they have now put forward. This request Sir A. Geddes was instructed to reject in a despatch, dated the 30th September, 1922, on the grounds that His Majesty's Government had in the past consistently opposed any suggestion for the extension of territorial waters, and that they felt unable to reverse their attitude on an important question of principle in order to meet an emergency which they were confident would prove a temporary one.

At the same time Sir A. Geddes was instructed to affirm that "His Majesty's "Government are desirous of assisting the United States Government to the best of "their ability in the suppression of the traffic and in the prevention of the abuse of "the British flag by those engaged in it."

5. The United States Government have made various proposals as to the steps which could be taken to assist them to check smuggling. They suggested that His Majesty's Government should give information of shipments of liquor from British ports, that transfer to British registry of United States vessels should be refused unless permits from the United States Shipping Board had been obtained, that exporters under bond should be required to land cargoes at places specified in the clearance papers, and that the export of liquor from the United Kingdom should be prohibited except under licence. After careful consideration of these proposals by the departments of His Majesty's Government concerned it was found impossible to give effect to any of them. On the other hand, the United States Government were informed that His Majesty's Government were prepared to stop fraudulent transfers to British registry when the ownership in fact remains American, to stop the issue of double clearance papers and to delay the survey of vessels in suspicious cases until enquiries had been made in London. Moreover, the attention of the Governor of the Bahamas was drawn to a number of irregularities which had occurred.

6. It must be admitted that the cumulative effect of these measures has been to interfere little, if at all, with the use of British facilities by the liquor-smugglers and their financial "backers." The revenue statistics of the British West Indies (particularly the Bahamas) since the introduction of prohibition in the United States show (a) an enormous increase in the quantity of imported wines and spirits, (b) the inauguration and development of an entirely new export trade in these commodities. There is no secret about this and the statistics are readily available to the United States Government.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

At the same time the more highly organised of the smuggling "rings" have discovered, especially since our championship of the 3-mile limit in the controversy with the United States referred to in section 3, that the easiest and cheapest way of disposing of liquor is to fit out vessels of some size and despatch them directly to lie outside the 3-mile limit opposite New York, &c. There the liquor is sold to small vessels coming out from points on the coast. The place where these vessels (nearly all under the British flag) lie has come to be known as "Rum Row," and they are stated to constitute danger to navigation lying as they do, often without lights, in the path of incoming ocean liners. One of these vessels, the "Istar," has returned some months ago to Glasgow boasting of a net profit of over £100,000 on her five-months' trip.

7. The present phase of the controversy started at the end of April, when the United States Government suddenly obtained a decision from the Supreme Court (where the question had previously been dormant for a good many months) interpreting the Volstead (Prohibition) Act as prohibiting the transportation of liquor by foreign vessels within United States territorial waters, even when such liquor was placed under seal on the vessel entering these waters. In spite of representations on the part of His Majesty's Government and of the other maritime Powers, on the grounds of international comity, regulations enforcing this decision came into effect on the 10th June, a few minor concessions alone being made to permit the carriage of liquor for medicinal purposes and for the use of the crew when such use was enjoined by the law of the vessel's country.

8. The following day Mr. Hughes communicated to His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington a draft treaty* consisting of two articles, of which the substance is as follows :—

Article 1. The two parties, without attempting to extend the limits of their respective territorial waters, agree that the authorities of the other party may, within the distance of 12 geographical miles from its coast, board the vessels of the other and make enquiry whether such vessels or the persons controlling them are attempting to violate the laws of the party making the enquiry, and prohibit or regulate the unlading near, or the importation into, its territories of any articles. An officer of one party may examine a vessel of the other party and make enquiry of the master with respect to the cargo and destination. If such officer has reason to believe that the vessel or the person controlling it is engaged in the wilful commission of acts which constitute the violation of the laws of the State of which such boarding officer is an official, he may institute a search of the vessel and an examination of any articles on board. If there is reasonable cause to believe that the vessel is engaged in the commission of acts which constitute a violation of the laws of the State whose officer is conducting the search, the vessel may be seized and brought in for an adjudication and subjected to imposition of penalties established by law by the party whose laws and regulations are found to have been violated.

Article 2. Any article, the importation of which into the territories of either party is prohibited, but which is listed as sea stores or as cargo destined for a port foreign to either party, on board a vessel of either party destined for a port of the other party, may be brought within the territorial waters of the other party on condition that upon the arrival of the vessel within 12 geographical miles of the coast of the other party such article shall be placed under seal.

9. On the 14th July, Mr. Chilton informed Mr. Hughes that although theoretically the international validity of the 3-mile limit might be strengthened by a treaty making an exception for a special purpose, in practice such a treaty would weaken the principle, because it would form a precedent for the conclusion of similar treaties. For this reason the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs felt bound to state in Parliament that His Majesty's Government could not accept Mr. Hughes's proposal. In the opinion of His Majesty's Government Mr. Hughes's proposed treaty would not provide for any immediate remedy, seeing that it could not be ratified until Congress meets, when an amendment of the Volstead Act could equally well be introduced if the United States Government so desire. Moreover, even if the 12-mile limit were accepted, cases would inevitably occur liable to cause serious friction between the two countries, owing to the difficulty of deciding the position of a limit usually out of sight of land, at any rate on the Atlantic coast. Mr. Chilton added that the Hovering

* See Annex.

Acts in the United Kingdom were entirely superseded by "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1876," by which British municipal legislation is made to conform to international law.

On the 19th July Mr. Hughes replied that it was not his intention to propose an extension of the limits of territorial waters. He was unable to agree that the conclusion of a treaty making an exception for a special purpose would weaken the principle, and there could be inserted in the treaty any qualification deemed desirable to show that it was definitely limited to the particular situation in view. No assurance could be given as to the action of the Senate or with regard to the prospect of securing from Congress an amendment of the Volstead Act in relation to ship liquor and cargo liquor destined for foreign ports, but it was believed that the solution of the present difficulty through the making of a fair and reasonable agreement would be the most promising method of securing early action. With regard to the difficulty of determining the position of the 12-mile limit and the friction which His Majesty's Government contended would therefore arise, Mr. Hughes felt that the treaty would do much to eliminate the present cause of friction. He emphasised that the treaty would not interfere with vessels bound to United States ports when engaged in legitimate commerce, as they would in any case come within 3 miles of the coast. He confidently asserted that there would be no disposition on the part of the United States authorities to interfere with a British vessel, save within the limits proposed and when it was clear that a vessel was engaged in smuggling.

10 On the 22nd August an interdepartmental committee, under the chairmanship of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, which had already examined the possibility of introducing legislation to stop smuggling, reported that in their opinion, His Majesty's Government have strong ground for complaint that British vessels are no longer allowed to carry liquor in United States territorial waters even under seal. They considered that His Majesty's Government could hardly be expected to adopt measures to assist the United States in suppressing smuggling unless the latter is prepared to remedy the British grievance. With regard to the possibility of retaliation, it was felt that this, to be effective, would have to take the form of the exclusion of United States vessels from the ports not only of the United Kingdom, but of the whole Empire, and that no steps in this direction could be taken without the concurrence of the Dominions and India. In any case, the Empire has much more to lose than the United States by such a contest, as it possesses a far greater amount of tonnage.

11. The committee next examined Mr. Hughes's proposed treaty. The Board of Trade representative said that the Liverpool Shipowners' Association and the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom were in favour of the proposal. A fear was expressed that opposition to the proposal might result in His Majesty's Government losing the support of the United States to the principle of the 3-mile limit for general purposes, and it was suggested that the proposed treaty might strengthen the doctrine if it were reaffirmed in the text. The precise distance from the shore at which the search should take place was not regarded as of great importance, provided that the right were exercised bonâ fide and not abused. The committee thought that there was much force in the suggestion made by Sir C. Hurst that no limit should be fixed, and the term "in the vicinity of the coast" substituted, subject to an interpretative clause. They also thought that the omission of mention of the 12-mile limit would have the advantage of emphasising the exception to the recognised limit of territorial waters and of avoiding the adoption even for this exceptional case of a limit which certain nations claim for all purposes. They believed that a treaty on the lines suggested by Mr. Hughes offers the only satisfactory solution, but as any such agreement would be applicable to all British vessels, it was agreed that it would be necessary to consult the Dominions and India. Hence the placing of this subject on the agenda of the Imperial Conference.

12. Inasmuch as it was desirable, pending the meeting of the Imperial Conference, that a reasoned reply should be returned to the United States Government, His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington was accordingly instructed to address a note to the United States Government containing the following points: The amount of smuggling of liquor into the United States by sea is admitted by the United States Prohibition Commissioner to be exaggerated by anti-prohibitionists in the United States in order to discredit prohibition. This makes it the less justifiable to weaken the authority of the general rule of international law. The 12-mile limit would be almost impossible to observe, at all events on the Atlantic coast of the United States, which lies low. The British Hovering Acts were modified in 1876 to bring them into harmony with the principle of international law. It is no violation of any law to sell

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

liquor on the high seas. The export of liquor from the United Kingdom could only be regulated by measures similar to those in force during the war. His Majesty's Government could not be expected to revive such measures, more especially as the United States had refused to ratify the Arms Traffic Convention of 1919 for this very reason. All other countries must adopt similar measures if they are to be effective. It would in any case be impossible to recommend such measures to Parliament so long as British ships are prevented from carrying liquor under seal in United States territorial waters. His Majesty's Government claim the right to exercise jurisdiction over all vessels in British territorial waters, but it is only exercised in the interests of the safety and welfare of the ship, crew and passengers. As a matter of international comity, the maritime Powers refrain from imposing their jurisdiction except for these purposes. The United States Government had themselves in the past made representations to the Spanish Government on this basis and had recognised it recently in exempting vessels trading between the United States and Italy from the strict application of the Volstead Act, on the ground that Italian law requires the provision of liquor on such ships. In view of the difficulties of the case, His Majesty's Government could not agree to an extension of the 3-mile limit even for a limited purpose until the matter had been submitted to the Imperial Conference.

13. The conclusions to be derived from the above narrative would appear to be as follows: On the one hand the case for concluding such a treaty as has been recommended by Mr. Hughes may be thus stated :—

(a.) Although no breach of international law is created by vessels under the British flag hovering on the verge of United States territorial waters with liquor on board notwithstanding the fact that it is admittedly the intention of the owners to sell the liquor to United States citizens: yet inasmuch as the failure of His Majesty's Government to stop the practice has necessarily given rise to strong criticism in the United States, it is in the interests of the continuance of cordial relations between the two Governments that a settlement of this troublesome matter should be reached. It has been found impossible, for various reasons, for His Majesty's Government to take any effective action by legislation or otherwise to assist the United States authorities. Hence the acceptance of Mr. Hughes's treaty in some form may lead to the avoidance of an open quarrel, in which His Majesty's Government would be represented as the champions of an odious traffic, while British vessels would remain exposed to the confiscation of any ship or cargo liquor which they might bring into United States ports and waters. On the other hand, if Mr. Hughes's proposals were accepted, British vessels would in future be able to carry liquor under seal in United States territorial waters.

(b.) The fear that the extension of the 3-mile limit for a limited purpose would weaken the principle of the 3-mile limit for general purposes, might be met by the actual terms of the treaty itself.

(c.) The further objection that United States prohibition officers might abuse the powers accorded to them under the proposed treaty and interfere with innocent vessels, could also be met by limiting the duration of the treaty to a short period, e.g., one year in the first instance.

14. If the idea of a treaty be favoured, it will be necessary to settle whether a limit of 12 miles shall be fixed, or whether Sir Cecil Hurst's proposal be accepted, that the right of search should be conceded "in the vicinity of the coast," with an interpretation clause limiting the "vicinity of the coast" to so many hours' steaming. An "hour's steaming," which has been suggested, seems too vague a definition even for this purpose, and a fixed limit of distance would, in spite of the objections which will be mentioned presently, in all probability be preferable.

15. It will also be necessary to decide whether the treaty if concluded should be reciprocal, as proposed by Mr. Hughes, or non-reciprocal. Of these alternatives the latter seems preferable, since it would be undesirable to give the United States Government the opportunity to claim that they have made us a concession which would, in fact, be valueless.

16. Such is the case of those who advocate a settlement by treaty on the lines proposed by Mr. Hughes On the other hand there are arguments in the opposite sense :—

(i.) The object of the United States Government in making these proposals is to secure the right to search and arrest ships from which spirituous liquors are sold just outside the present limit of territorial jurisdiction. The extent of this traffic seems, however, to have been exaggerated, judging from the following statement published by Mr. Haynes, the United States Prohibition Commissioner, in the "New York Times" of the 18th July last :—

> "The moonshine-still is the bootlegger's chief source of supply. "From what other place can he get his liquor in quantity? Surely "not from the rigidly controlled bonded warehouses—they are "eliminated at once. As to smuggled liquor, some, it is true, is "brought into the country, but not one-tenth as much as the illegal "traffic would have us believe.
>
> "When reports of huge smuggling operations are circulated it "should be remembered that the illicit liquor interests are conducting "a great and elaborate propaganda campaign to discredit law enforce-"ment and that the spreading of such reports is part and parcel of "that campaign. No bootlegger, of course, is willing to admit that "he can obtain only adulterated moonshine. Hence, fanciful tales of "the wet wave sweeping in on our coasts and other related falsehoods "pass from mouth to mouth to hide the real and dangerous origin of "what the bootlegger has to sell."

(ii.) It may further be argued that it is for the United States to enforce their own laws, and that His Majesty's Government cannot be expected to hamper a lucrative export trade carried on, so far as British subjects are concerned, without any violation of municipal or international law, and that there is no reason why the British Empire should alter its laws because another country has altered its social system.

(iii.) Further, there is the less reason for purely disinterested action on our part, seeing that the United States Government have seized a considerable number of vessels under the British flag outside the 3-mile limit in entire violation of the accepted principles of international law.

(iv.) The view which has hitherto been uniformly held by the British Government is that jurisdiction over foreign vessels in territorial waters should not be exercised except to restrain acts calculated to disturb public order and safety. Upon this point the comity and practice of nations were clearly defined in the judgment of the Supreme Court in the "Wildenhus" case. In that case the jurisdiction of the United States was extended to cover an act committed on a foreign ship. Yet, even so, the Supreme Court recognised the existing international doctrine on the subject to be as follows :—

> "And so by comity it came to be generally understood among "civilised nations that all matters of discipline and all things done on "board which affected only the vessel or those belonging to her, and "did not involve the peace or dignity of the country, or the tranquillity "of the port, should be left by the Local Government to be dealt with "by the authorities of the nation to which the vessel belonged as the "laws of that nation or the interests of its commerce should require."

The regulations issued as a result of the judgment of the Supreme Court afford an example of the kind of issue that might be raised all over the world if the existing comity and practice were abandoned. Ships of all nations frequently pass through the jurisdiction of other nations, even when not entering their ports. For example, to reach Antwerp a vessel must pass through Dutch territorial waters, to reach the Baltic through Danish or Swedish waters, to reach the Black Sea through Turkish waters. The principle was well stated in the despatch of the 28th October, 1852, from Mr. Conrad, when Acting Secretary of State, to the United States Minister at Madrid, which contained the following passage :—

> "You will state that this Government does not question the "right of every nation to prescribe the conditions on which the "vessels of other nations may be admitted into her ports. That "nevertheless those conditions ought not to conflict with the received "usages which regulate the commercial intercourse between civilised "nations. That those usages are well known and long established

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

" and no nation can disregard them without giving just cause of " complaint to all other nations whose interests would be affected by " their violation."

The British Hovering Acts were modified in 1876 precisely in order to bring them into harmony with international practice, and His Majesty's Government can therefore hardly be expected to admit that the municipal legislation of any country can override this practice.

The action of the United States in not allowing vessels to carry liquor in United States territorial waters affects not only passenger vessels, more particularly in regard to their homeward-bound voyages from the United States, but also cargo vessels, especially those plying in the Pacific between the ports of Australia, Canada and Hong Kong, which, if they have cargoes of liquor on board, as is probable, are unable to use United States ports.

(v.) The United States Government maintain that they have no choice but to enforce the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court, and that they can exercise no dispensary power. Nevertheless, they have exercised such power in the case of French and Italian vessels which are allowed to carry wine on the ground that this is necessary under French and Italian law, although there is no proviso in the judgment of the Supreme Court to meet this necessity. They have also allowed British ships in the Italian trade to carry liquor for third class passengers in order that Italian law in this respect may be complied with.

(vi.) Friction would not be avoided by the acceptance of a 12-mile limit, owing to the difficulty of deciding the position of the limit, usually out of sight of land, at any rate on the Atlantic coast. Indeed, the present difficulty would be revived, though in a different geographical area, for larger vessels could easily be employed which would lie further out from the land. It has already been proposed that vessels with liquor on board should lie 20 or 25 miles from the United States coast.

(vii.) That the general validity of the 12-mile limit could be strengthened by making an exception to it for a special purpose, appears to be very doubtful reasoning. It is much more likely that the exception thus conceded would be made the precedent for similar treaties and that a serious inroad would thus be made in the principle itself.

(viii.) Further, the fixing of a 12-mile limit is particularly open to objection, because France and Italy are in favour of this limit being fixed for all purposes.

It is, in any case, essential that all countries should accept the 12-mile limit, if this were agreed to by His Majesty's Government. The result would otherwise merely be to penalise British vessels for the benefit of their trade rivals.

(ix.) It has been suggested, for whatever the point may be worth, that the loss to the Bahamas would be so serious were the traffic effectively stopped, that, however illogical it may be, impetus would be given to the movement to transfer the islands to the United States.

(x.) Finally, the view has been put forward that, if Sir C. Hurst's proposal to accord to the United States the right of search " in the vicinity of the coast " were adopted, prohibition agents would seize vessels all over the Western Atlantic in the confident expectation that no protest would be made. Congress might then defer their approval of the treaty, and His Majesty's Government would not obtain the proposed concession with regard to the carrying of liquor under seal in United States territorial waters.

17. The above statement of the arguments pro and con will perhaps assist the Imperial Conference in arriving at a decision on this exceedingly complex subject.

Foreign Office,
October 1, 1923.

Among the above objections could be met by making the treaty from year to year until reference is granted. See par. 13.(c).

[A 3778/116/45] ANNEX.

Sir A. Geddes to the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston.—(Received June 26.)

(No. 751.)

My Lord, Washington, June 14, 1923.

WITH reference to my telegram No. 260 of the 11th instant, I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith copies of the draft treaty in regard to the extension of the limit of territorial waters to 12 miles, which was handed to Mr. Chilton by Mr. Hughes on the 11th June.

I have, &c.
(For the Ambassador)
H. G. CHILTON.

Enclosure in Annex.

Draft Treaty in regard to the Extension of the Limit of Territorial Waters to 12 Miles.

ARTICLE 1.

THE high contracting parties, without attempting to extend as between themselves the limits of their respective territorial waters adjacent to the high seas, agree that the authorities of either high contracting party may, within the distance of 12 geographical miles from its coasts, board the private vessels of the other and make enquiry of the masters thereof as to whether such vessels or the person or persons controlling them are engaged in any attempt, either with or without the co-operation of other vessels, or persons on board the same, to violate the laws of the high contracting party making the enquiry, and prohibiting or regulating the unlading near, or importation into, its territories of any articles.

An officer of one high contracting party boarding a private vessel of the other may examine the manifest of the vessel and make enquiry of the master with respect to the cargo and destination thereof. If such officer has reason to believe from the statements of the master or from documents exhibited by him or otherwise, that the vessel or the person or persons controlling it, either with or without the co-operation of other vessels, or persons on board the same, is or are engaged in the wilful commission of acts which constitute a violation of the laws of the State of which such boarding officer is an official, with respect to the unlading or importation of any article or articles, he shall impart his belief to the master of the vessel, and thereupon may, with the aid of the master, institute a search of the vessel and an examination of any articles on board. The search shall be conducted with the courtesy and consideration which ought to be observed between friendly nations. If there is reasonable cause for belief that the vessel or the person or persons coutrolling it is or are wilfully engaged, with or without the co-operation of other vessels or persons on board the same, in the commission of acts which constitute a violation of the laws of the State whose officer has conducted the search, forbidding or regulating the unlading near, or importation into, its territories of any article or articles, the vessel, cargo and the person or persons controlling it or them may be seized and brought in for an adjudication, and subjected to the imposition of the penalties established by law by the party whose laws and regulations are found to have been violated.

ARTICLE 2.

Any article or articles the importation of which into the territories of either high contracting party is or are for any purposes prohibited by its laws, but which is or are listed as sea stores, or as cargo destined for a port foreign to either high contracting party, on board a private vessel of either high contracting party destined for a port of the other high contracting party, may be brought within the territorial waters of such other high contracting party on condition that upon arrival of the vessel so destined within 12 geographical miles of the coasts of such high contracting party whose territorial waters are about to be entered, such article or articles may be placed under seal by the appropriate officer of that party, and shall be kept sealed continuously thereafter until the vessel enters and during the entire stay of the vessel within those waters, and no part of such article or articles shall, during that period, be removed from under seal for any purposes whatsoever. Upon the departure of the vessel from such territorial waters destined for a foreign port, such article or articles under seal may be released therefrom either by an officer of the vessel or by an officer of the party affixing the seal.

o

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62406

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

SECRET.

E 76.

E-1302-1

55

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

The Position of the United States in Relation to "C" Mandates.

Note by the Colonial Office.

AT a meeting held in June 1921 the Council of the League of Nations decided that a letter should be addressed to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers requesting them to negotiate direct with the United States Government on various points at issue in connection with Mandates. As a result the United States Government were asked to formulate their views, and this they did in a Memorandum dated the 24th August, 1921, a copy of which was communicated to the Governments of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa in a despatch dated the 1st September, 1921. Some of the points raised affected all Mandates; others were confined to Mandates of particular types.

So far as "C" Mandates were concerned, the points raised by the United States Government were as follows:—

1. Article 5 of the Mandates (which deals with the entry and residence of missionaries) should be changed so as to embrace nationals of the United States (and not merely nationals of States Members of the League of Nations), and so as to avoid ambiguity as to the right of missionaries to exercise charitable and educational activities in the Mandated Territories.
2. The terms of the "C" Mandates, if not qualified, would permit discrimination in commercial matters. The United States Government desired a guarantee of most-favoured-nation treatment in all "C" Mandated Territories, and, in addition, special rights in Samoa based on Article 3 of the Treaty of the 2nd December, 1899.
3. There should be provision prohibiting monopolistic concessions by the Mandatory, or the monopolising of natural resources by the Mandatory itself.
4. Modification of the Mandates should be subject to the assent of the United States.

His Majesty's Government replied to the points raised by the United States Government in connection with "B" Mandates and the Mandate for Palestine, but no reply was returned to the representations as regards "C" Mandates.

At the Washington Disarmament Conference of 1921–22 some discussion of the question took place, and the Four Power Treaty of the 13th December, 1921, relating to the Pacific, was accompanied by a Declaration (pp. 40 and 41 of Cmd. 1627) that the making of the Treaty should not be deemed to be an assent on the part of the United States to the Mandates for the Pacific Islands, and should not preclude agreements between the United States and the Mandatory Powers in relation to those islands.

A further Memorandum on the subject of "C" Mandates was submitted by the United States Ambassador on the 26th July, 1922. This Memorandum repeated the four suggestions contained in the Memorandum of the 24th August, 1921, and quoted certain instances of alleged discriminatory treatment in "C" Mandated Territories, as to which enquiry was desired. These were as follows:—

1. The introduction of a tariff in Western Samoa giving preference to imports from the British Empire.
2. The inclusion of South-West Africa in the Union of South Africa for Customs and Excise purposes, the effect of which would be to give preference to certain British goods imported into South-West Africa over similar United States goods.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

3. Regulations promulgated by the Commonwealth Government as to the sale of ex-enemy properties in New Guinea, under which sale to persons other than British subjects or British companies was prohibited.
4. A statement made in the Commonwealth Parliament that it was proposed to reserve the oil deposits of New Guinea for the exclusive use of the Mandatory authorities.

The United States Government also asked that, pending the conclusion of a definite agreement as to "C" Mandates, they might receive duplicates of the reports submitted to the League of Nations on the administration of "C" Mandated Territories.

This Memorandum was communicated to the Governments of the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa for consideration in a despatch dated the 18th August, 1922. The New Zealand Government suggested in reply that, as the Memorandum raised questions affecting all three Governments, the points raised should be left in abeyance until they had been considered by the Imperial Conference. A similar view has been expressed by the Commonwealth Government. No comments have been received from the Union Government.

As regards the points of principle raised in the United States Memorandum of the 24th August, 1921, it may be noted that similar points were also raised, though in a slightly different form, as regards "B" Mandates, and have been substantially met :—

1. As regards missionaries, His Majesty's Government have undertaken to grant to United States missionaries equal treatment with that guaranteed by the Mandates to missionaries who are nationals of States Members of the League of Nations. This ensures that United States missionaries will in "B" Mandated Territories enjoy the right to erect religious buildings and to open schools, subject to such measures of control as may be necessary for the maintenance of public order and good government.
2. The "B" Mandates expressly provide (unlike the "C" Mandates) that nationals of States Members of the League of Nations shall enjoy, on the same footing as British nationals, complete economic, commercial and industrial equality, and further, that concessions for the development of the natural resources of the territories shall be granted without distinction on grounds of nationality between the nationals of such States, but on such conditions as will maintain intact the authority of the local Government. Here again His Majesty's Government have undertaken to grant to United States nationals the same rights and privileges as are granted to nationals of States Members of the League of Nations.
3. The "B" Mandates (unlike the "C" Mandates) prohibit the granting of concessions having the character of a general monopoly (subject to the right of the Mandatory to create monopolies of a purely fiscal character in the interest of the territories, and in certain cases to carry out the development of natural resources either directly by the State or by a controlled agency).
4. His Majesty's Government have stated their readiness to give an undertaking that they will not propose or accept any modifications in the terms of the "B" Mandates without previous consultation with the United States Government, and to make provision that the rights of the United States and its nationals in "B" Mandated Territories shall not be affected by any modifications in the terms of the Mandates unless such modifications have been assented to by the United States.

His Majesty's Government have also undertaken to supply to the United States a duplicate of each of the Annual Reports on "B" Mandated Territories made to the League of Nations.

It may be observed that the third of the points of principle raised (the monopolising of natural resources by the Mandatory) has a bearing upon the arrangements made by His Majesty's Government and the Commonwealth and New Zealand Governments for exploiting the phosphate resources of Nauru. Neither of the two United States Memoranda refers expressly to Nauru, but it seems evident from conversations between Lord Balfour and Mr. Hughes, the United States Secretary of State, at the Washington Conference on the subject of "C" Mandates, that the United States Government have the case of Nauru in mind. The Permanent Mandates Commission, at its meeting of August 1922, devoted some attention to this topic, and its observations on the Nauru Report expressly raised the question "whether the establishment by the three "Governments concerned of a State organisation enjoying the sole rights of develop- "ment of the only natural resources of the area is fully in keeping, although no formal "provision under the Regulations for 'C' Mandates forbids it, with the disinterested "spirit which should characterise the mission of the Mandatory State." It was pointed out in the report of the Sixth Committee of the 1922 Assembly that the position in this connection was merely that the three Governments had acquired, by direct purchase through voluntary sale on the part of the owners and not through the Mandates, exclusive rights granted before the war by the German Government to a private company.

October 1, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62409 W. Mackenzie King

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

E-1302-3
Vol. 1-(a)

SECRET.

E. 78.

41

CANADIAN RESIDENT SECRETARY
25 OCT 1923
IMPERIAL CONFERENCES (1923)

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

PUBLICITY ARRANGEMENTS.

Memorandum as the Basis for Discussion.

In the course of the preliminary correspondence as to the Conference the view has been expressed by the representatives of some of the Governments that as much publicity should be given to its proceedings as is compatible with the necessity for secrecy on questions such as foreign policy or the details of naval, military and air co-operation.

In previous years, the practice has been to issue daily communiqués, sometimes stating only that a meeting has been held, sometimes giving a brief outline of the subjects discussed. These were supplemented in 1921 by—

(a.) Verbatim reports of certain discussions given to the Press, in the course of the proceedings, at the wish of the Conference.

(b.) A summarised report of the discussions as a whole, drawn up for, and approved by, the Conference before it separated, and subsequently published.

It is suggested for consideration that this procedure might be somewhat expanded. There would seem to be great advantages in arranging that Press correspondents should be able to go to some specified person or persons to get what may be called the "atmosphere" of the Conference and any particulars which could safely be communicated and are likely to prove of interest to the newspapers overseas and here.

It is thought that it might be convenient to the Members of the Conference if a British Minister were made generally responsible for the publicity arrangements (subject to the special arrangements as regards the discussions on foreign policy and defence which are suggested below). He could attend the meetings of the Conference with a "watching brief," and at the end of each meeting, subject to any special ruling from the Conference itself and any necessary consultation with the individual speakers, he might have discretion to arrange for communication to the Press, in the most convenient manner, of such information as could properly be given regarding the work of the Conference. As regards the discussions on foreign relations and defence questions, special considerations arise. As to the former, it is thought that the most satisfactory arrangement might be that any information as to such discussions which the Conference might decide to make public should only be given to the Press under the express authority of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and through the Foreign Office machinery. Stafements relating to Imperial defence should, it is thought, before publication, be referred to the office of the Committee of Imperial Defence.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 1, 1923.

C 62410

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

SECRET.

E. 78.

61

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

PUBLICITY ARRANGEMENTS.

Memorandum as the Basis for Discussion.

In the course of the preliminary correspondence as to the Conference the view has been expressed by the representatives of some of the Governments that as much publicity should be given to its proceedings as is compatible with the necessity for secrecy on questions such as foreign policy or the details of naval, military and air co-operation.

In previous years, the practice has been to issue daily communiqués, sometimes stating only that a meeting has been held, sometimes giving a brief outline of the subjects discussed. These were supplemented in 1921 by—

(a.) Verbatim reports of certain discussions given to the Press, in the course of the proceedings, at the wish of the Conference.

(b.) A summarised report of the discussions as a whole, drawn up for, and approved by, the Conference before it separated, and subsequently published.

It is suggested for consideration that this procedure might be somewhat expanded. There would seem to be great advantages in arranging that Press correspondents should be able to go to some specified person or persons to get what may be called the "atmosphere" of the Conference and any particulars which could safely be communicated and are likely to prove of interest to the newspapers overseas and here.

It is thought that it might be convenient to the Members of the Conference if a British Minister were made generally responsible for the publicity arrangements (subject to the special arrangements as regards the discussions on foreign policy and defence which are suggested below). He could attend the meetings of the Conference with a "watching brief," and at the end of each meeting, subject to any special ruling from the Conference itself and any necessary consultation with the individual speakers, he might have discretion to arrange for communication to the Press, in the most convenient manner, of such information as could properly be given regarding the work of the Conference. As regards the discussions on foreign relations and defence questions, special considerations arise. As to the former, it is thought that the most satisfactory arrangement might be that any information as to such discussions which the Conference might decide to make public should only be given to the Press under the express authority of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and through the Foreign Office machinery. Stafements relating to Imperial defence should, it is thought, before publication, be referred to the office of the Committee of Imperial Defence.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 1, 1923.

[10701]

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62411

S E C R E T.

E. 78.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

PUBLICITY ARRANGEMENTS.

61

(Memorandum as the basis for discussion).

In the course of the preliminary correspondence as to the Conference the view has been expressed by the representatives of some of the Governments that as much publicity should be given to its proceedings as is compatible with the necessity for secrecy on questions such as foreign policy or the details of naval, military and air co-operation.

In previous years, the practice has been to issue daily communiqués, sometimes stating only that a meeting has been held, sometimes giving a brief outline of the subjects discussed. These were supplemented in 1921 by

(a) verbatim reports of certain discussions given to the Press, in the course of the proceedings, at the wish of the Conference.

(b) a summarized report of the discussions as a whole, drawn up for, and approved by, the Conference before it separated, and subsequently published.

It is suggested for consideration, that this procedure might be somewhat expanded. There would seem to be great advantages in arranging that Press correspondents should be able to go to some specified person or persons to get what may be called the "atmosphere" of the Conference and any particulars which could safely be communicated and are likely to prove of interest to the newspapers overseas and here.

It is thought that it might be convenient to the Members of the Conference if a British Minister were made generally responsible for the publicity arrangements

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(subject to the special arrangements as regards the discussions on foreign policy and defence which are suggested below). He could attend the meetings of the Conference with a "watching brief", and at the end of each meeting,. subject to any special ruling from the Conference itself and any necessary consultation with the individual speakers, he might have discretion to arrange for communication to the Press, in the most convenient manner, of such information as could properly be given regarding the work of the Conference. As regards the discussions on Foreign relations and defence questions special considerations arise. As to the former it is thought that the most satisfactory arrangement might be that any information as to such discussions which the Conference might decide to make public should only be given to the Press under the express authority of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and through the Foreign Office machinery. Statements relating to Imperial Defence should, it is thought, before publication, be referred to the office of the Committee of Imperial Defence.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.

1st October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62413

The following will be added to the Committee when the question of Territorial Waters is under consideration:-

The First Lord of the Admiralty (or a representative)
The President of the Board of Trade (or a representative)
The President of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (or a representative)
The Secretary for Scotland (or a representative)

Mr.C.W.Dixon, M.B.E., Colonial Office.
Mr.F.E.F.Adam, Foreign Office and Professor O.D.Skelton, Dominion of Canada Delegation

will act as joint secretaries to the Committee.

The place, date and time of the first meeting of the Committee will be notified in due course. It is requested that all communications on the subject of the Committee should be addressed in the first instance to Mr.C.W.Dixon, Colonial Office, Whitehall,S.W.

(Signed) M.P.A.HANKEY.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.

9th October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62414 335

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE 1923.

SECRET

E.71.

NATIONALITY COMMITTEE.

At the Meeting of the Imperial Conference held on Wednesday the 3rd October, 1923, at 11 a.m. the Conference agreed (E.2nd Meeting 1923, Appendix B. Resolution I.) that a Committee should be formed as follows:-

The Secretary of State for Home Affairs (in the Chair)
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (or representative)
The Secretary of State for the Colonies (or representative)
The Secretary for Scotland
The Attorney-General
The Registrar General
A Representative of Canada
" " the Commonwealth of Australia
" " New Zealand
" " the Union of South Africa
" " the Irish Free State
" " Newfoundland
" " India

to consider and report to the Imperial Conference on the following questions:-

(1) The Grant of Naturalisation to Persons resident in Mandated Territories.

(2) The appointment of Committees of Enquiry in connection with the revocation of Certificates.

(3) The re-admission to British nationality of British-born women married to aliens.

(4) Marriages with foreigners.

The Committee has now been constituted as follows:-

The Secretary of State for Home Affairs (in the Chair)
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (or representative)
The Secretary of State for the Colonies (or representative)
The Secretary for Scotland
The Attorney General
The Registrar General
The Hon. Sir Lomer Gouin, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Dominion of Canada
The Hon. R.V.Wilson, Honorary Minister in charge of Departments of Health and Migration, Commonwealth of Australia
The Prime Minister of the Dominion of New Zealand
The Hon.N.J.de Wet,K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa
A Representative of the Irish Free State
The Prime Minister of Newfoundland
His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar
Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, India.

OCT 29 Rec'd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62415

Mr.R.L.Bickn ll of the Home Office and
Sir Robert R.Garran, Australian Secretary to the Imperial Conference

will act as Joint Secretaries to the Committee.

A Notice of the place, date and time of the first Meeting of the Committee will be circulated later.

It is requested that in the first instance any communications respecting the Committee should be sent to Mr. R.L. Bicknell at the Home Office, Whitehall, S.W.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.
9th October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62416

55

O

SECRET.

E.73.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE ANGLO-FRENCH CONDOMINIUM IN THE NEW HEBRIDES.

At the Meeting of the Imperial Conference held on Wednesday, 3rd October, 1923, at 11 a.m. the Conference agreed (E. 2nd Meeting, 1923, Appendix A, Resolution III) that a Committee should be formed as follows :-

Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair).
Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
First Lord of the Admiralty.
The Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.
The Prime Minister of New Zealand.

to consider the question of the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides.

Mr. N.E. Archer, Colonial Office, and
Mr. F.D. Thomson of the New Zealand Delegation,

will act as joint secretaries to the Committee.

The place, date and time of the first meeting of the Committee will be notified in due course. It is requested that all communications for the Committee should be addressed in the first instance to Mr. N.E. Archer, Colonial Office, Whitehall, S.W.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY .

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.

9th October, 1923.

OCT 29 Rec'd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(2) COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF THE DOMINIONS AND INDIA IN RELATION TO THE SIGNATURE OF TREATIES AND THE QUESTION OF TERRITORIAL WATERS.

(Reference E. 2nd Meeting, 1923, Appendix A, Resolution II)

TERMS OF REFERENCE

To consider and report to the Imperial Conference (a) on the position of the Dominions and India in relation to the Signature of Treaties and (b) on the question of Territorial Waters.

PERSONNEL.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (in the Chair)
The Secretary of State for the Colonies.
The Prime Minister of Canada.
The Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.
The Prime Minister of New Zealand.
The Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.
The Minister for External Affairs, Irish Free State.
The Prime Minister of Newfoundland.
The Secretary of State for India.

The following will be added to the Committee when the question of Territorial Waters is under consideration.

The First Lord of the Admiralty (or a representative)
The President of the Board of Trade (or a representative)
The President of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (or a representative)
The Secretary for Scotland (or a representative)

Secretaries -
Mr. C.W. Dixon, . Colonial Office
Mr. F.E.F. Adam, Foreign Office, and
Dr. O.D. Skelton, Dominion of Canada Delegation)

(3) COMMITTEE ON THE ANGLO-FRENCH CONDOMINIUM IN THE NEW HEBRIDES

(Reference E. 2nd Meeting, 1923, Appendix A, Resolution III).

TERMS OF REFERENCE

To consider the question of the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides.

PERSONNEL.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair)
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs
The First Lord of the Admiralty
The Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia
The Prime Minister of New Zealand

Secretaries -
Mr. N.E. Archer, Colonial Office, and
Mr. F.D. Thomson, New Zealand Delegation.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.,
13th October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62418

E-1302-3
Vol. 5-(a)
76

London, October 14, 1923.

A copy of "The Times" of Saturday, October 13, 1923, has been sent to each of the following:

J. E. Atkinson, Esq.,
273, Warren Road,
Toronto.

Mrs. George E. Barchett,
Route "A", Box 130,
Belfield Farm,
Anapolis, Maryland.

W.H.S.Cane, Esq.,
Newmarket, Ont.
Canada.

Rt. Hon. Sir Robert L. Borden, K.C.M.G., Wurtemburg St.,
Ottawa.

Rev. George Duncan, D.D.,
161, Stanley St.,
Montreal, P.Q.

Rev. Thomas Eakin, Ph.D.,
116, Madison Avenue,
Toronto.

Col. John G. Foster,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa.

Hon. Peter G. Gerry,
408, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Edward R. Hewitt,
127 East 21st St.,
New York.

Mrs. William Hendrie,
Gateside House, Aberdeen St.
Hamilton, Ont.

Mrs. W. T. Herridge,
Rideau Apartments,
Ottawa.

L. G. Jackson, Esq.,
Newmarket, Ont.

Mrs. D. Macdougall King,
966, Washington St.,
Denver, Col.

Mrs. H.M.Lay,
Barrie, Ont.

Gerald R. Larkin, Esq.,
11, Elm Avenue, Toronto.

John Lewis, Esq.,
237, Silver Birch Av. Toronto.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62419

✓ Ivy L. Lee,
Room 3127,
61, Broadway, New York.

✓ Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, K.C.,
265, O'Connor St.,
Ottawa.

✓ Mrs. Robert McGregor,
435, MacLaren St. Ottawa.

✓ Mrs. Godfrey B. Patteson,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa.

✓ John D. Rockefeller, Esq. Junr.,
10, West 54th St.,
New York.

✓ J. M. Walton, Esq.,
Aurora,
Ont.

✓ J. F. Welborn,
1065, Logan Street,
Denver, Col.

Posted at Dover Street. p.o.
9.0.A.M. 15/10/23.
A. Neville

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62420 E-1302-3
Imperial Preference Vol. 2-(a)
Imperial Conference of 1923

MEMORANDUM of Conference, or General Discussion, of Issues under consideration at the Imperial Conference, 1923, held today at the Ritz Hotel.

At the invitation of the Prime Minister, who took the chair, supported by the Hon George P. Graham and the Hon. Sir Lomer Gouin, the following attended:- Hon. Peter C. Larkin, Lucien T. Pacaud, John Howard, Agent-General for Nova Scotia, F. E. Percival, representing the Agent-General for Ontario, Lieut-Col. J. P. Pelletier, Agent-General for Quebec, F. C. Wade, Agent-General for British Columbia, Harrison Watson, Chief Trade Commissioner for United Kingdom, Obed Smith, Supt. of Emigration, London, Dr. O. D. Skelton, Mr. F. C. Blair, Dr. Camsell, Mr. R. H. Coats, Major-Gen. J. H. McBrien, Commodore W. Hose, Dr. Grisdale, Lieut-Col. O.F.Brothers, Lieut-Col. J. Reid Hyde.

Mr. Duncan Marshall, Commissioner for Agriculture, was unable to attend.

The Prime Minister invited general observations by all present on matters germane to the Imperial Conference, and indicated that he would welcome as of general assistance any suggestions on such matters as trade and commerce or immigration interests.

The Hon. Mr. Graham stated he would be glad to hear comment upon such subjects as immigration, postal service, wireless communication, cables, tariff preference, etc.

The Hon. Sir Lomer Gouin referred to the statement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer at a meeting of the Imperial Economic Conference on the 9th October, to the effect that certain proposals had been put forward from the British Government point of view, he said, "we have come here, as I understand it, to take counsel together and give one another information as to the manner in which Imperial Trade can be helped by adjustment of arrangements between us, and therefore we have avowedly framed our proposals as our contribution to the task of increasing inter-Imperial Trade, and if these proposals in any way fail to carry out the object which we have in view, then we want to know it".

Oct. 16/23 (J. REID HYDE)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The High Commissioner submitted that in his opinion the Prime Minister and his colleagues had adopted a safe and proper course; if Great Britain will give a preference on foodstuffs or any other article, raw or manufactured, Canada would do well to accept it, but Canada should have due regard to what might possibly follow or be expected from her in regard to such concession.

Sir Lomer Gouin indicated that Canada's policy would be to name certain articles which, if preference were accorded, would benefit Canada, but at the same time to impress upon the British Government that these were not bargaining proposals, but offered in the spirit of the statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer quoted above.

Mr. Percival, representing the Agent-General for Ontario, referred to the tariff preference already announced on dried fruits, vegetables, fish, etc., and emphasized the benefit which would accrue to Ontario if fresh fruits, apples, peaches, etc. could be all included in the list of preference.

Mr. F. C. Wade, Agent-General for British Columbia, hoped that the Conference would deal with the all-important question to export of Canada, namely, the/grain (using an inclusive term) to the United Kingdom, and stated that he had formed the opinion that the open door within the Empire as against the closed door for foreign grain would find a large sympathetic following in the United Kingdom. He also referred to the benefit which would accrue to British Columbia if fresh fruits were included in the Preference scheme, and informed the meetingthat the fruit growers in British Columbia must face complete ruin if some relief was not afforded. He gave certain

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

reasons, e.g. the U.S.A. crop was earlier, and filled up the market in Canada for preserving jams, etc., and when the time came to market Canadian fruits sales were extremely difficult and prices consequently bad. Furthermore, he pointed out that U.S.A. firms exporting to Canada citrous fruits invariably included a clause in their contract with the dealers in Canada stipulating that they must also furnish, and Canadians must buy, fresh fruits through the same channels. He submitted that the Dominion Federal Government in co-operation with the Provinces might profitably study a scheme to provide cold storage or cooling sheds in the United Kingdom, wherein consignments would be deposited and held pending favourable market conditions, or for seasonable trade, on this side. Further, he made reference to the necessity of supporting the Act to be introduced into the British House of Commons, namely, the Merchandise Marks Act, the provisions of which would compel all imports from the Empire or foreign goods to carry a Trade Mark such as "Empire Product, Canada" as against "Foreign Product".

Mr. Pacaud promised to send to Mr. Graham a copy of correspondence with the Colonial Office on this subject.

Mr. Blair made a general statement on the proposals under consideration at the Conference for Overseas Settlement, and indicated certain new measures, also extension of provisions under certain of the present regulations.

Col. Obed Smith submitted certain points which might be summarized as follows:

(a) Children of families should get a grant of a like sum to that now made to the individual children emigrating to Canada through the offices of Institutions, Homes, etc.

(b) That some scheme should be adopted to recruit the farm labourer in connection with the assisted passage scheme, and that steps should be taken to secure this type of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

emigrant, having regard to his seasonable occupation in this country, and in reference also to the season he would be required to start work in Canada.

(c) He thought improvement was possible in the present arrangements for reception, care and placing of emigrants, and recommended that a regulation adopted many years ago, but not now in force, should be reintroduced, i.e. to "book" the emigrant to his destination in Canada.

(d) He referred to the length to which the Dominion Governments were carrying out emigration propaganda, how every field was exploited, and in this connection indicated that an enquiry might be addressed to the British Government as to what it was doing of a like character to stimulate emigration to the Dominions.

Mr. Percival made further observations on behalf of Ontario in connection with immigration, as follows:-

The experience of the Ontario Government had been that farm workers' wages in United Kingdom were so low as to prohibit any possibility of saving toward the cost of emigrating to a Dominion, yet such a type of emigrant was desirable for Canada, and he submitted that consideration should be shown wherever possible on the question of the amount of advance paid to assist such men to go out to Canada. The amount of the advance should be proportioned on the probable time of repayment, based on a reasonable expected wage in Canada and the savings therefrom. He thought an emigrant should be allowed only so much as he could repay comfortably in from 12 to 18 months.

He informed the meeting that New Zealand was contemplating a new

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

measure which would permit (a) free passage of children in a family up to 17 years; (b) 17 to 19 years £50 each, and of this advance 50% must be repaid; (c) parents standard passage of £11, which had to be repaid.

Col. Pelletier, Agent-General for Quebec, made further reference to the suggestion by British Columbia that Federal and Provincial Governments might appropriately consider co-operation to build storage warehouses in this country. It was pointed out by the Hon. Mr. Graham that such a measure would almost commit the Government to a commercial trading scheme, for the goods shipped to this country would have to be sold, and the only method of doing this would be through a Government organization. He thought that private enterprise would be justified in considering the situation, and if necessary could discuss with the Governments the question of an appropriate grant towards construction. Mr. Pacaud stated in this connection that some correspondence had passed through the High Commissioner's Office, and he would refer to same with a view to further discussion if desirable.

J. REID HYDE.

October 16, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62425 E-1302-3

C

SECRET

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

Schedule of documents transmitted to the Acting Prime Minister, Canada.

E.57. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. Copy No. 56

E.58. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. Australia. Copy No. 56

E.59. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. New Zealand. Copy No. 56

E.60. Establishment of Naval Base at Singapore. Copy No. 56

E.61. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. Canada. Copy No. 56

E.62. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. South Africa. Copy No. 56

E.63. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. Newfoundland. Copy No. 56

E.64. (Revised). Report of Inter-Departmental Committee on the Limits of Territorial Waters. Copy No. 67

E.65. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. India. Copy No. 56

E.66. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. Irish Free State. Copy No. 56

E.67. Grant of Naturalization to Persons Resident in Mandated Territories. Copy No. 65

E.68. Imperial Airship Scheme. Copy No. 57

E.69. Recommendations of the National and Imperial Defence Committee. Copy No. 57

E.76. The Position of the United States in Relation to "C" Mandates. Copy No. 55

E.78. Publicity Arrangements. Copy No. 61

OCT 17 Recd Mr Fielding has seen.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-1302-3

C 62426

59

E. 80.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

BEFORE the Conference comes to consider this thorny subject, I wish my colleagues to consider the following suggestion of a way out of the difficulties in which we find ourselves. In India the position of Indians in other parts of the Empire seems to be adding to the political agitation and unrest, while in those other parts the atmosphere for the solution of the difficulty is not improving but on the contrary getting worse. This latter change is in some measure due to the Sastri mission. Mr. Sastri by his mission and his speeches has undoubtedly made matters worse. He has, for instance, never failed, whenever opportunity presented itself, to attack the Indian policy of South Africa, and has thereby greatly exasperated public opinion in that Dominion, already very sensitive on this issue. In other Dominions he has made people alive to the issue—indeed he has largely created it. The claim he has everywhere vigorously pressed for equal franchise rights for Indians over the whole Empire has not only gone further than the local claims of the Indians themselves, but has tended to raise opposition in quarters where it did not exist before. It is because I foresaw this development that I did not invite Mr. Sastri to include South Africa in his mission. It is not alleged that the economic position of Indians in other parts of the Empire is bad. It is admitted that they are successful and thriving under the laws of the Dominions, and are in most respects economically better off than they would be in India. But the claim is put forward for equal political rights throughout the Empire, and its denial is looked upon as a stigma, as an affront to our Indian fellow-subjects. And no questions are more difficult and dangerous than those involving national dignity and honour.

The Indian claim for equal franchise rights in the Empire outside of India arise, in my opinion, from a misconception of the nature of British citizenship. This misconception is not confined to India, but is fairly general, and the Conference would do not only India but the whole Empire an important service by its removal. The misconception arises, not from the fact, but from the assumption that all subjects of the King are equal, that in an Empire where there is a common King there should be a common and equal citizenship, and that all differences and distinctions in citizen rights are wrong in principle. Hence it is claimed that whether a British subject has or has not political rights in his country of origin, he should, on migration to another part of the Empire where British subjects enjoy full political rights, be entitled automatically to the enjoyment of these rights. It is on this basis that equal political rights are claimed for Indians who live in the Dominions or Colonies outs id of India.

It is, of course, clear that the assumption on which the claim is based is wrong. There is no equality of British citizenship throughout the Empire. On the contrary, there is every imaginable difference. In some parts British subjects have no political rights whatever; in others they have modified rights of one kind or another; in others, again, they have the fullest political rights. In the same part you may find British subjects with little or no political rights, and others with full rights. There is no common equal British citizenship in the Empire, and it is quite wrong for a British subject to claim equality of rights in any part of the Empire to which he has migrated or where he happens to be living. There is no indignity or affront at all in the denial of such equality. Once this is clearly recognised, the stigma above referred to falls away. Indians in those parts of the Empire where they do not enjoy equal franchise rights cannot justly or fairly claim that their national dignity or status is involved.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62427

I go even further. The newer conception of the British Empire as a smaller League of Nations, as a partnership of free and equal nations under a common hereditary Sovereign, involves an even further departure from the simple conception of a unitary citizenship. British citizenship has been variable in the past; it is bound to be even more so in the future. Each constituent part of the Empire will settle for itself the nature and incidents of its citizenship. The composition and character and rights of its people will be the concern of each free and equal State in the Empire. It will not only regulate immigration from other parts of the Empire as well as from the outside world, but it will also settle the rights of its citizens as a matter of domestic concern. The common Kingship is the binding link between the parts of the Empire; it is not a source from which private citizens will derive their rights. They will derive their rights simply and solely from the authority of the State in which they live. Hence Indians going to Canada will not be entitled to claim equal political rights with the other citizens of Canada, no more than Canadians going to India or Australia could claim equal political rights there. The conception of the Empire as a League of Nations ought to do away with these claims, which are so disturbing and unsettling in the Empire.

From this point of view the Indian resolution passed at the last Imperial Conference was a profound mistake. It was not only impracticable, but it ran counter to the new conception of the Empire, as not a unitary State, but a partnership of equal States. It has both theoretically and practically landed us in a false position, and the sooner we get out of it the better for the future good relations of the different States of the Empire. The political claims of Indians arising under that resolution should not be allowed to create difficulties for the Governments of the Dominions, which would not have arisen if the constitutional position had been properly appreciated.

The Indian Government should not claim from the other Empire Governments what (say) the friendly Governments of Japan and China would not claim. And the fact is that with neither of these Governments have we any difficulties in the Dominions, while the difficulties with India are notorious and growing.

We must get to the right constitutional conception, which I take to be the absolute and unquestioned power and authority of each part of the Empire to settle such questions for itself. India has threatened retaliation as a method of reprisal against Dominions which do not concede equal rights to her nationals. This is, again, a false position arising out of the misconception which I have explained. There should be no question either of retaliation or reprisal. India should be free to deal with nationals of the Dominions on a basis of reciprocal treatment, and neither on her part nor on the part of the Dominions concerned should there be any resentment or ill-feeling in the matter. Our relations in this regard should be practically those of friendly sovereign States towards each other Unless this readjustment of viewpoint is brought about it is feared that the question of the position of Indians in the Empire may continue to grow in gravity.

I would therefore suggest that for the resolution of the last conference on the subject there be substituted a resolution affirming the right of each portion of the Empire to regulate citizenship as well as immigration as domestic questions for its own handling and not affecting the status or dignity of other portions of the Empire, and expressing the opinion that provisions for reciprocal treatment of the nationals of the States of the Empire should not be looked upon as unfriendly or otherwise affecting the good relations of these States inter se. It would thus be left to the good sense of each State of the Empire to say what citizen rights shall be enjoyed, and by whom, within their territorial jurisdiction, and no State of the Empire should have claim to force its citizens on any other State or resent their exclusion or special treatment by the latter.

(Signed) J. C. SMUTS.

South African Delegation, Savoy Hotel, W.C. 2,
October 18, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. Mackenzie King 40C 62428

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

S E C R E T.

E. 80.

THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

(Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Before the Conference comes to consider this thorny subject, I wish my colleagues to consider the following suggestion of a way out of the difficulties in which we find ourselves. In India the position of Indians in other parts of the Empire seems to be adding to the political agitation and unrest, while in those other parts the atmosphere for the solution of the difficulty is not improving but on the contrary getting worse. This latter change is in some measure due to the Sastri mission. Mr. Sastri by his mission and his speeches has undoubtedly made matters worse. He has, for instance, never failed, whenever opportunity presented itself, to attack the Indian policy of South Africa, and has thereby greatly exasperated public opinion in that Dominion, already very sensitive on this issue. In other Dominions he has made people alive to the issue, indeed he has largely created it. The claims he has everywhere vigorously pressed for equal franchise rights for Indians over the whole Empire has not only gone further than the local claims of the Indians themselves, but has tended to raise opposition in quarters where it did not exist before. It is because I foresaw this development that I did not invite Mr. Sastri to include South Africa in his mission. It is not alleged that the economic position of Indians in other parts of the Empire is bad. It is admitted that they are successful and thriving under the laws of the Dominions, and are in most respects economically better off than they would be in India. But the claim is put forward for equal political rights throughout the Empire, and its denial is looked upon as stigma, as an affront to our Indian fellow subjects. And no questions are more difficult and dangerous than those involving national dignity and honour.

The...

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Indian claim for equal franchise rights in the Empire outside of India arise, in my opinion, from a misconception of the nature of British citizenship. This misconception is not confined to India but is fairly general, and the Conference would do not only India but the whole Empire an important service by its removal. The misconception arises, not from the fact, but from the assumption that all subjects of the King are equal, that in an Empire where there is a common King there should be a common and equal citizenship, and that all differences and distinctions in citizen rights are wrong in principle. Hence it is claimed that whether a British subject has or has not political rights in his country of origin, he should on migration to another part of the Empire where British subjects enjoy full political rights, be entitled automatically to the enjoyment of these rights. It is on this basis that equal political rights are claimed for Indians who live in the Dominions or Colonies outside of Indi

It is of course clear that the assumption on which the claim is based is wrong. There is no equality of British citizenship throughout the Empire. On the contrary there is every imaginable difference. In some parts British subjects have no political rights whatever; in others they have modified rights of one kind or another, in others again they have the fullest political rights. In the same part you may find British subjects with little or no political rights, and others with full rights. There is no common equal British citizenship in the Empire, and it is quite wrong for a British subject to claim equality of rights in any part of the Empire to which he has migrated or where he happens to be living. There is no indignity or affront at all in the denial of such equality. Once this is clearly recognised, the stigma above referred to falls away. Indians in those parts of the Empire where they do not enjoy equal franchise rights cannot justly or fairly claim that their national dignity or status is involved.

I go even further. The newer conception of the British Empire as a smaller League of Nations, as a partnership of free and equal nations under a common hereditary sovereign/involves...

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

involves an even further departure from the simple conception of a unitary citizenship. British citizenship has been variable in the past; it is bound to be even more so in the future. Each constituent part of the Empire will settle for itself the nature and incidents of its citizenship. The composition and character and rights of its people will be the concern of each free and equal state in the Empire. It will not only regulate immigration from other parts of the Empire as well as from the outside world, but it will also settle the rights of its citizens as a matter of domestic concern. The common kingship is the binding link between the parts of the Empire, it is not a source from which private citizens will derive their rights. They will derive their rights simply and solely from the authority of the state in which they live. Hence Indians going to Canada will not be entitled to claim equal political rights with the other citizens of Canada, no more than Canadians going to India or Australia could claim equal political rights there. The conception of the Empire as a League of Nations ought to do away with these claims, which are so disturbing and unsettling in the Empire.

From this point of view the Indian resolution passed at the last Imperial Conference was a profound mistake. It was not only impracticable, but it ran counter to the new conception of the Empire, as not a unitary State, but a partnership of equal States. It has both theoretically and practically landed us in a false position, and the sooner we get out of it the better for the future good relations of the different States of the Empire. The political claims of Indians arising under that resolution should not be allowed to create difficulties for the Governments of the Dominions, which would not have arisen if the constitutional position had been properly appreciated.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Indian Government should not claim from the other Empire Governments what (say) the friendly governments of Japan and China would not claim. And the fact is that with neither of these Governments have we any difficulties in the Dominions, while the difficulties with India are notorious and growing.

We must get to the right constitutional conception, which I take to be the absolute and unquestioned power and authority of each part of the Empire to settle such questions for itself. India has threatened retaliation as a method of reprisal against Dominions which do not concede equal rights to her nationals. This is again a false position arising out of the misconception which I have explained. There should be no question either of retaliation or reprisal. India should be free to deal with nationals of the Dominions on a basis of reciprocal treatment, and neither on her part nor on the part of the Dominions concerned should there be any resentment or ill-feeling in the matter. Our relations in this regard should be practically those of friendly sovereign States toward each other. Unless this readjustment of viewpoint is brought about it is feared that the question of the position of Indians in the Empire may continue to grow in gravity.

I would therefore suggest that for the resolution of the last Conference on the subject there be substituted a resolution affirming the right of each portion of the Empire to regulate citizenship as well as immigration, as domestic questions for its own handling and not affecting the status or dignity of other portions of the Empire, and expressing the opinion that provisions for reciprocal treatment of the nationals of the States of the Empire should not be looked upon as unfriendly or otherwise affecting the good relations of these States inter se. It would thus be left to the good sense of each State of the Empire to say

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

what citizen rights shall be enjoyed, and by whom, within their territorial jurisdiction, and no State of the Empire should have claim to force its citizens on any other State, or resent their exclusion or special treatment by the latter.

(Sgd.) J.C. SMUTS.

South African Delegation,
Savoy Hotel, W.C.2.

18th October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62433

60

SECRET.

E.81.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON INDIA'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE LEACUE OF NATIONS.

At the Meeting of the Imperial Conference held on Friday, 19th October, 1923, the Conference agreed (E.10th Conclusions (3)) that a Committee should be formed as follows:-

The Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair)
The Lord Privy Seal (if able to attend)
The Chancellor of the Exchequer (or a representative)
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (or a representative)
The Prime Minister of Canada (or a representative)
The Prime Minister of Australia (or a representative)
The Prime Minister of New Zealand (or a representative)
The Prime Minister of South Africa (or a representative)
A Representative of the Irish Free State
A Representative of India

to consider and report to the Imperial Conference on the question of India's Contribution to the League of Nations.

The Committee has now been constituted as follows:-

The Secretary of State for the Colonies, (in the Chair)
The Lord Privy Seal,
Mr. O.E. Niemeyer, C.B., Treasury,
The Rt. Hon. Sir Rennell Rodd, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O.,
The Hon. Sir Lomer Gouin, G.C.M.G.,
Canada,
Sir Robert Garran, K.C.M.G.,
Commonwealth of Australia,
The Rt. Hon. W.F. Massey,
New Zealand,
Captain E.F.C. Lane, C.M.G.,
Union of South Africa,
A Representative of the Irish Free State,
Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, K.C.S.I.,
India.

Mr. Rowe-Dutton, Treasury, and Professor Rushbrook Williams

will act as Joint Secretaries to the Committee.

The place, date and time of the first meeting of the Committee will be indicated later. It is requested that any communications on the subject of the Committee may be addressed in the first instance to Mr. Rowe-Dutton, Treasury Chambers, Whitehall.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY,
Secretary.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.,
25th October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62434 E-1302-3 Agenda

30

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF THE DOMINIONS AND INDIA IN RELATION TO THE SIGNATURE OF TREATIES AND THE QUESTION OF TERRITORIAL WATERS.

CONCLUSIONS of Meeting October 25th, 1923.

(1) POSITION OF THE DOMINIONS AND INDIA IN RELATION TO THE SIGNATURE OF TREATIES

The Committee decide to recommend for adoption by the Imperial Conference the Draft Resolution relative to the Negotiation, Signature and Ratification of International Agreements (See E (T.C.) 2) subject to the amendment of the last sentence of Part II (c) to read as follows:-

"In the case of treaties negotiated at International Conferences, where there is a British Empire Delegation, on which, in accordance with the new established practice, the Dominions and India are separately represented, such representation should also be utilised to obtain this object."

The Complete Resolution in its amended form appears in Appendix A.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs undertook to circulate to the Committee a short historical memorandum on the position of the Dominions in relation to the signature of treaties (See Appendix B.).

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(2) PROHIBITION AND LIQUOR SMUGGLING IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Committee recognised the importance of no action being taken which might tend to impair the principle that the three-mile limit should be the general limit of territorial jurisdiction. At the same time the sense of the Committee was that it was desirable, first on moral grounds, secondly with a view to maintaining good relations with the United States of America, and thirdly in the interests of British commerce, that action should be taken, if practicable, to assist the United States Government in suppressing the smuggling of liquor by British vessels.

It was noted that the Interdepartmental Committee, which had examined the question in Great Britain, had been unable to recommend any satisfactory method of assistance apart from an agreement with the United States Government on the general lines of Mr. Hughes's proposal. It was felt, however, that the form of Treaty suggested by Mr. Hughes was not wholly suitable and that it would be better to frame a counter proposal on similar lines designed to obtain from the United States Government a formal affirmation of the general principles of the three-mile limit and to ensure their support of that principle at any International Conference on Territorial Waters.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs accordingly proposed that the British Government should take the initiative in suggesting to the United States Government an exchange of notes by which the principle of the three-mile limit of territorial waters would be affirmed on both sides; at the same time it would be arranged on the one hand that no objection would be raised, as a special concession for a limited period, to the search of British vessels engaged in liquor smuggling outside the territorial waters of the United States, and on the other hand that British vessels should be permitted to carry liquor under seal in the territorial waters of the United States.

It was agreed that a draft note to the United States Government should be prepared on these lines and circulated to the Members of the Committee for consideration.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

CANADIAN RESIDENT SECRETARY
SECRET
IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

W. Mackenzie King

C 62437

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923

NOTICE OF THIRTEENTH MEETING.

8

E.(23).

The Thirteenth Meeting of the Imperial Conference will be held at 10, Downing Street, on Monday the 29th October at 11 a.m.

AGENDUM.

Status of Indians in the Empire; continuation of discussion.

Papers
(E.77. Political Status of British Indians in the (Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories.
(E.80. The position of Indians in the British (Empire. Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the (Union of South Africa.

Copies of this Notice have been sent to the following representatives:-

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Prime Minister.
The Lord President of the Council.
Secretary of State for Home Affairs.
Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
Secretary of State for the Colonies.
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

CANADA.

The Prime Minister.
The Minister of Railways and Canals.
The Minister of Justice.

COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

The Prime Minister.
Honorary Minister (Senator Wilson).

NEW ZEALAND.

The Prime Minister.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

The Prime Minister.
The Minister of Finance.

IRISH FREE STATE.

Vice President of the Executive Council.
Minister of External Affairs.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

The Prime Minister.

INDIA.

The Secretary of State for India.
H.H.The Maharajah of Alwar.
Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1. (Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY.
26th October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62438

Mr Mackenzie King

SECRET.

E. (Ind.) 1st Meeting.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

The Meeting of the above Committee arranged to be held in the room of the Secretary of State at the Colonial Office, S.W., on Tuesday, the 30th October, 1923, at 12 noon has been postponed to 12.30 p.m.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.

29th October, 1923.

Re publicity re Indian ~~debate~~ discussion.

OCT 29 Recd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62439

This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the Committee of Imperial Defence. October 1923.

E-1458

SECRET.

E 70.
(Also C.I.D. No. 206–C.)

This Memorandum was approved by the Committee of Imperial Defence at their 177th Meeting, held on the 12th October, 1923.

58

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE 1923.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF DOMINION AIR FORCES.

Introduction.

Note by the Secretary of State for Air.

THE following memorandum prepared by the Air Staff is circulated in continuation of the corresponding paper (C.I.D. No. 132–C),* prepared for the Conference in February 1921.

It will be noticed that this memorandum deals at some length with the present position of the Royal Air Force, and the scheme of expansion that has been authorised by the Imperial Government. It was thought that the representatives of the Dominion Governments might desire to be put in possession of the latest developments in the Royal Air Force, with a view to seeing how far and in what way it is possible to devise a scheme of co-operation between the various Governments of the Empire. I hope, therefore, that the paper will form a basis of discussion, and will lead to an interchange of views between representatives of the Dominions and the Air Staff.

The Air Staff paper deals almost exclusively with the problems of military aviation. It may, however, be noted that I have already circulated to the Economic Conference a paper (I.E.C. (23) 1) upon the Imperial aspects of civil aviation, certain of which, as for instance the carrying of mails and geographical survey, are already being developed to some extent by the air forces of the Empire.

S. H.

Memorandum by the Air Staff.

Preparation in Peace.

It is an essential to success in air operations that the forces employed against the enemy should be based on a secure foundation of peace organisation. Air forces cannot be extemporised. A practical illustration of this is furnished by the experience of the Americans on their entry into the war in 1917. Referring to the matter, the Chief of the United States Air Staff wrote :—

> "Owing to the many technical problems which had to be solved, to the many "difficulties connected with the procurement of equipment which had to be "overcome and to the considerable time that it takes for training, it has been "shown that it takes longer to place an efficient air service in the field than is "the case with any other arm of the Service. In all planning for the future this "fact must be given full consideration."†

2. Adequate preparation in peace is therefore essential to the success of air operations in modern war, the conditions of which make it probable that great events will immediately follow, if they do not actually precede, a formal declaration of hostilities. If organisations have to be improvised, staffs created, aircraft and equipment provided and plans matured after the outbreak of war, the value of air co-operation, however willingly and enthusiastically given, will be greatly lessened.

Policy. Royal Air Force.

3. Since the war the Air Force has been reduced to the absolute minimum compatible with the immediate needs of the Navy and the maintenance of units for overseas garrisons.

* Also Paper No. E. 7.

† Final Report of the Chief of the Air Staff, American Expeditionary Force, February 15, 1921.

[10619A] [10714A]

OCT 29 Redd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The actual distribution of the Royal Air Force throughout the Empire (exclusive of Home Defence), together with the duties of individual units, is given in Appendix (A) to this paper.

In addition to the above, however, the Government decided in 1922 to institute a small force for the purpose of Home Defence against Air attack. This force was to consist of eighteen squadrons.

Mr. Bonar Law on assuming office appointed a representative Sub-Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence to investigate certain aspects of National Defence as affected by the last war and by modern development of mechanical weapons. This Committee recommended the increase of the Home Defence Air Forces to a total of fifty-two squadrons, and this recommendation has been accepted by His Majesty's Government.

In announcing this decision to the House of Commons on the 26th June, 1923, the Prime Minister outlined the policy which would govern the strength of British air forces as follows :—

"The Government have come to the following conclusions with reference to "British Air Power :—

"In addition to meeting the essential Air Power requirements of the Navy, "Army, Indian and Overseas commitments, British Air Power must include a "Home Defence Air Force of sufficient strength adequately to protect us against "air attack by the strongest Air Force within striking distance of this country.

"It should be organised in part on a regular and permanent military basis, "and in part on a territorial or reserve basis, but so arranged as to ensure that "sufficient strength will be available immediately for purposes of defence. The "fullest possible use to be made of civilian labour and facilities.

"In the first instance the Home Defence Force should consist of fifty-two "squadrons, to be created with as little delay as possible, and the Secretary of "State for Air has been instructed forthwith to take the preliminary steps for "carrying this decision into effect. The result of this proposal will be to add "thirty-four squadrons to the authorised strength of the Royal Air Force. The "details of the organisation will be arranged with a view to the possibility of "subsequent expansion, but before any further development is put in hand the "question should be re-examined in the light of the then air strength of foreign "Powers.

"In conformity with our obligation under the Covenant of the League of "Nations, His Majesty's Government would gladly co-operate with other "Governments in limiting the strength of air armaments on lines similar to the "Treaty of Washington in the case of the Navy, and any such arrangements, it "is needless to say, would govern the policy of air expansion set out in this "statement."*

Necessity for a Common Doctrine.

4. Meanwhile, however, there appears to be no immediate probability of any general limitation of air armaments. It is, therefore, necessary, not only for this country, but also for the Dominions, to consider the strength of Air Forces which the circumstances of the Empire require and the form of organisation which would best promote their mutual assistance and support if the necessity arose.

THE SITUATION OF THE ROYAL AIR FORCE WITH REGARD TO PERSONNEL.

5. It is desirable first to describe briefly the present position as regards the supply of personnel in the Royal Air Force.

(i.) The Situation of the Royal Air Force with regard to Officer entry and Reserve.

It has been an accepted principle that the great majority of pilots of the Royal Air Force shall be officers. From this principle and the nature of the work it follows that there must always be in the General Duties Branch of the Royal Air Force a very large number of junior officers for whom it is impossible to provide permanent careers.

* "Hansard," Vol. 165, No. 83.

Again, owing to the limit in age above which an officer cannot be expected regularly to fly, officers leaving the Air Force in middle life will not be available for the active flying reserve in the event of war.

To counter these two problems two systems of commissioning officers have been adopted in the Royal Air Force, namely :—

(a.) A system of permanent commissions granted mainly to boys between 17 and 19 who pass through Cranwell, the Royal Air Force Cadet College, and who look to the Force as a permanent career.

(b.) A Short Service system by which commissions are granted for five years, at the end of which period officers are transferred to the Reserve with gratuity.

In addition it is contemplated that a considerable number of Naval and Military officers will be seconded to the Air Force for periods normally of three or four years, returning thereafter to the duties of their parent Service.

The principle in view has been that 50 per cent. of the Flying Officers and Flight Lieutenants in the General Duties Branch should be officers holding short-service commissions. To achieve this at the present strength of the Royal Air Force there is required an annual intake of from 250 to 300 officers. When the expansion foreshadowed in paragraph 4 above has been fully achieved, the required annual intake will be about 400 to 450 short-service officers.

(ii.) *The Situation of the Royal Air Force with regard to Airmen.

There is a disinclination on the part of the mechanic class of tradesman to offer himself for service under peace conditions in a disciplined force at service rates of pay and with the liability for overseas service. In this respect a country which relies on voluntary enlistment is at a disadvantage compared with one which has compulsory service.

It has, therefore, been found necessary to enlist boys and train them as airmen, in addition to the ordinary enlistment of skilled and semi-skilled mechanics.

The terms of service of these boys are ten years on the active list and two years on the Reserve. The boys are trained on lines similar to those for apprentices in civilian trades, and their training is regarded favourably by the various Trade Unions. They should not, therefore, meet with opposition when they seek employment in skilled trades on discharge from the Service.

Personnel Problems of the Dominions.

6 It is presumed that, in the supply of skilled personnel for their reserve, the Dominions would be confronted with a similar problem. In addition they would have to contend with the maintenance expense of training establishments for their permanent air forces. This expenditure on training may prove to be out of all proportion to the size of the force to be maintained, and it is in this connection that the Royal Air Force and the Dominion Air Forces may be of mutual assistance.

Proposals for Dominion Co-operation.

7. As a basis for discussion it is therefore suggested that a scheme of mutual co-operation might be worked out on the following lines :—

Short Service Officers—

(a.) The Dominion authorities to recruit candidates for Short Service Commissions in the Royal Air Force.

(b.) The Royal Air Force to grant short service commissions to these selected candidates and to employ them on the active list of the Royal Air Force for five years

(c.) On conclusion of their short service engagements these officers to pass into the Reserve of the Dominion concerned to complete their four years' reserve engagement.

* The term "airmen," as used in the Royal Air Force, excludes officers of commissioned rank, who are always termed officers, but includes all warrant officers, non-commissioned officers and men, irrespective of the duties on which they are employed.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(d.) The Dominions to be responsible for the organisation of a system of Reserve training on lines similar to the present Royal Air Force system. This arrangement might also provide training for officers of the Royal Air Force Reserve who have emigrated to the Dominions.
(e.) The financial arrangements to be discussed between the representatives of the British and Dominion Governments.

Permanent Commissions—

(a.) The Dominions to nominate suitable entrants to Cranwell.
(b.) The Royal Air Force to train these entrants at Cranwell and employ them for some four years. They would then be given permanent commissions in the Air Force of the Dominion concerned. The British Government would bear the cost of their pension rights for the period of their service with the Royal Air Force.
(c.) Any officer trained under this scheme who, at the end of his four years' service with the Royal Air Force, was found to be surplus to the requirements of the permanent Air Force of the Dominion concerned could be retained in the Royal Air Force.
(d.) The financial arrangements to be discussed between the representatives of the British and Dominion Governments.

It will be remembered that the Governors-General of the Dominions have already the privilege of nominating Dominion candidates for entry to the Royal Air Force Cadet College with a view to their making a permanent career in the Royal Air Force. No candidates have, so far, been forthcoming from this source, and it is thought that it may become more attractive to Dominion candidates if it is made to include, as suggested in paragraph (b), an ultimate return to service with the Air Force of the parent Dominion.

8. To allow for specialist training it would probably be necessary for some officers to extend the period of their time of service with the Royal Air Force beyond the four years suggested, but the advantage would lie in the fact that these regular long-service officers, when they had reached an age at which they would no longer be of great practical value as pilots, would be in a position to do useful work as Commanders or Instructors in the more specialised branches of air force work.

If a scheme on these lines could be mutually agreed upon, the career of an officer cadet selected by a Dominion for training at Cranwell and subsequent attachment to the Royal Air Force prior to returning to the Dominion Regular Air Force would be somewhat as follows:—

Age.	Employment.
17½–19½ .. Cranwell..	.. Disciplinary, educational, general technical and service-type flying training.
19½–21½ .. Service squadron	.. Continued flying training in service types, general training in bombing, fighting and formation flying, &c., Army or Fleet co-operation course, and/or seaplane training and/or flying instructors' course.
21½–22½	.. If selected as suitable, any of the twelve months' courses detailed in paragraph 16.
22½–23½	.. Service squadron overseas—probably employed on duties in connection with the technical training just completed.
23½	.. Returns to Dominion Regular Air Force.

A scheme on the above lines would confer many advantages; for example:—

(a.) It would bring about a constant interchange of personnel and ideas between the Dominions and Great Britain, and would ensure a community of doctrine and method between the various air forces of the Empire which would greatly facilitate their mutual co-operation.
(b.) It would provide the Dominions with a reserve of highly-trained pilots at a smaller cost than if each Dominion provided on its own behalf full facilities which would necessarily be elaborate and costly.
(c.) It would assist the Royal Air Force in maintaining a flow of temporary junior officers.

The foregoing suggestions would involve charges and liabilities both on the Imperial and the Dominion Exchequers. Should they be accepted in principle the incidence of such charges would require careful consideration by the financial authorities on both sides.

TRAINING.

9. In order to fit air forces for war, training in peace must be organised to produce the following main categories:—

(i.) Commanders and Staff Officers.
(ii.) Personnel to fly aeroplanes and operate their armament.
(iii.) Personnel to supervise the provision and accounting of stores and pay.
(iv.) Higher technical experts in aircraft, armament and allied technical matters.
(v.) Personnel for the maintenance of aircraft.
(vi.) Reserve for (ii) above.
(vii.) Reserve for (v) above.

All officers of the above categories, with the exception of those in (iii), who belong to a "Stores List," are on a "General List," and are trained pilots, thus ensuring that all concerned with the more technical aspects of equipment have had air experience.

10. Commanders and Staff Officers will eventually be drawn from officers who have passed through the Royal Air Force Staff College at Andover.

The subjects taught at this college are as follows:—
Air Strategy and Tactics.
Organisation and Training of the Royal Air Force.
Imperial Strategy.
Elements of Naval and Military Strategy and Tactics.
Organisation of the Army, Navy and Dominion Forces.
Writing Appreciations.
Operation Orders.
Drafting of Letters.
Staff Organisation and Staff Work in General.

There are at present twenty Royal Air Force officers, two military, two naval and one officer from each of the Canadian and Australian Air Forces, undergoing the twelve months' course at Andover. The next course begins on the 1st May, 1924. The attachment of an officer of the Australian Air Force has already been arranged and the attendance of an officer from other Dominion Air Forces as a student will be welcomed.

11. The sources from which are drawn the personnel to fly aeroplanes and operate their armament have been explained under the heading of "Personnel."

The system of training is as follows:—

(a.) Permanent Commissioned Officers.—Before receiving their commissions these officers undergo a course of two years as Cadets at the Royal Air Force Cadet College, Cranwell. The course comprises instruction in all the duties of a pilot officer, including the flying of a service aeroplane.
(b.) Short Service Commissioned Officers.—These officers are obtained by a system of direct entry from civil life for a period of five years' service in the Regular Air Force followed by four years' service in the Reserve. On appointment to Short Service Commissions they are sent to one of the four Flying Training Schools for a course of one year and are trained in the duties of a pilot officer including the flying of a service aeroplane.
(c.) Airmen Pilots.—These are trained on a course of one year at a Flying Training School on lines similar to the Short Service Commissioned Officers above. They are drawn from the "skilled" ranks of the Royal Air Force, and, while under instruction at Flying Training Schools, and subsequently when with a Service Squadron, they keep in touch with their original "trade."
(d.) Aerial Gunners.—These are drawn from the non-commissioned and other ranks of the Royal Air Force and are trained both at home and abroad in a course of ground gunnery, and in camera gun practice in the air. Conditions abroad permit of aerial firing being carried out in the unit, but at home this part of the training has to be done at the Armament and Gunnery School at Eastchurch. This school also carries out the elementary training of a certain proportion of the aerial gunners required for home units.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Service Training.

12 At Cranwell and the Flying Training Schools pilots are taught to fly a service aeroplane, but are not taught to fight in it, still less to fight in flight and squadron formations; this and all the service knowledge necessary for a pilot is obtained in the Service Squadron and is the responsibility of the Service Squadron Commander.

13. The Air Ministry endeavours to keep all pilots for a term of four years with the same squadron in order to enable both pilots and squadrons to become efficient in their own particular duty, and in order to foster "esprit de corps" in Squadrons.

14. There are a number of specialist schools in the Royal Air Force at which pilots during the course of their employment with the service squadrons can attend short courses in the various more technical aspects of flying. These schools are as follows:—

Training School.	Nature of Course.	Duration of Course.
School of Army Co-operation, Old Sarum ..	Army co-operation	3 months.
Seaplane Training School, Lee-on-Solent ..	Fleet spotting and reconnaissance ..	5–6 „
Armament and Gunnery School, Eastchurch ..	Aerial gunnery and bombing ..	2 „
Central Flying School, Upavon	Training of flying instructors ..	3 „
R.A.F. Base, Calshot	Air pilotage	3 „
„ „	Seaplane training	3 „

These courses not only serve to train individual pilots, but also enable certain selected officers to be employed as instructors in service units.

The Air Staff would welcome the attachment of a certain number of Dominion officers to service squadrons, and also to undergo some of the short courses outlined above.

Training of Technical Experts.

15. A number of officers on the General List are selected for training in the higher technical subjects concerning Aircraft, Armament and Equipment. For this purpose there are a number of long courses at Service Specialist Establishments and at the Universities. Details of these courses are as follows:—

Training School.	Nature of Course.	Duration of Course.
School of Photography, Farnborough ..	Aerial photography	40 weeks.
Electrical and Wireless School, Flowerdown ..	Wireless telegraphy	12 months.
Armament and Gunnery School, Eastchurch ..	Armament	11 „
Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough ..	Engineering, A	12 „
Cambridge University	Engineering, B	2 years
Imperial College	Advanced, C	1 year
Cambridge University	Signal officers	2 years
Imperial College	Research course	1 year
„ „	Meteorology	1 „

NOTE.—The three engineering courses follow one upon the other. Officers from Course A provide the engineer officers for squadrons and training units, &c., with the exception of a few of those who pass out highest, who go on to Course B, which provides even more highly qualified officers for the various technical establishments. Again, a few of the best from Course B continue into the advanced Course C, and are available for the higher technical staffs and for research work.

The Air Staff consider that the Dominions would derive considerable advantage from these courses and they recommend that selected officers of the Dominion Air Forces should go through some of them.

Training of Maintenance Personnel.

16. The training of airmen is undertaken at Flowerdown for electrical trades and at Manston and Halton for the remaining skilled trades. Men enlisted as aircraft hands (unskilled) undergo a disciplinary course at Uxbridge, the Royal Air Force Depot, and then are posted direct to units.

Training in skilled trades at Flowerdown and Manston is completed within a period varying from four to twenty-four months, according to the trades and the initial skill of the individual.

Aircraft Apprentices (Boys) are trained at Cranwell, Halton and Flowerdown, the length of the course being three years.

While in a squadron, unskilled men are encouraged to learn a trade, and if considered likely to progress they are recommended for a course in one of the skilled trades.

With a view to the provision of skilled technical instructors the Dominions would no doubt derive benefit from the attachment of certain non-commissioned officers to these Technical Training Schools.

Training of Reserve Pilots.

17. It is essential that pilots of the Reserve should carry out a certain amount of flying annually. For this purpose four Civilian Training Centres have been formed as follows:—

Location.	Firm	Machines.
Stag Lane, Hendon ..	The De Havilland Aircraft Company	Avros and D.H.9 a's.
Filton, Bristol	The Bristol Aeroplane Company	Bristol Lucifer and Bristol Tourer.
Coventry	Armstrong, Siddeley Company	Avros and Wolf machines.
Renfrew, Glasgow ..	W. Beardmore and Co. ..	Avros and D.H.9 a's.

This system, in addition to relieving the Regular Force of a duty which at present it is too much occupied to carry out, is of direct benefit to the aircraft industry.

Each school can handle seventy pupils per annum. Pilots who have not flown for some time are first instructed on a school type of machine, and subsequently on a service type. In order to qualify as reserve pilots they must each carry out five hours solo flying on a service type machine and also pass certain tests of efficiency.

Pilots with more recent experience of flying are given quarterly training and must carry out three hours solo flying per quarter on a service aeroplane. It should be understood that the direct entry of ex-officers of the war period into the Reserve is a temporary measure to provide an immediate increase in the number of trained reserve pilots. The main source of supply for the Reserve will be the short service officers who have completed the active list portion of their engagements. Officers so entered need only the ordinary quarterly training to keep in practice in flying.

Reserve officers of Class B (technical and observer officers) are liable to be called upon to carry out fourteen days' training per annum with an Air Force unit.

It is suggested that training of Reserve pilots on the lines indicated would prove satisfactory in the Dominions.

Training of Reservists (Airmen).

18. Airmen on the Reserve of the Royal Air Force are liable to be called upon for twelve days' training per annum with an Air Force unit.

EQUIPMENT AND STORES.

19. Aeronautical equipment is one of the most important factors in the efficiency of a flying force, and it will undoubtedly play a large part in assuring the security of the British Empire. It is manifest, therefore, that no opportunity should be lost of improving aeronautical equipment in every way, and of developing the resources of the Empire in this respect.

Aircraft Production.

20. At the present time practically all aircraft production for the equipment of the various air services of the Empire is carried out in the United Kingdom. In time of peace this may not be disadvantageous, but in the event of a serious threat to

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the security of one of the distant dominions this state of affairs might have grave results. From the military point of view it is important that there should be no undue delay or exceptional risks involved in transporting aircraft equipment to any threatened part of the Empire. But so long as practically the whole of aircraft manufacture is carried on in the United Kingdom it is beyond doubt that considerable delay would take place in transporting stores for the defence of a Dominion, even if the maritime risk involved could be satisfactorily overcome. The constant flow of equipment from an assured source would be essential to meet the heavy wastage which would inevitably take place in extended operations. It is a matter of importance therefore that the development of a healthy aircraft industry should be encouraged in the Dominions, or at least that a nucleus industry, capable of expansion in an emergency, should be established and maintained.

Standardisation of Aircraft.

21. In considering the question of the efficient utilisation of the resources of the Empire for the defence of any threatened Dominion, the question immediately arises as to the best method by which the maximum co-operation in the supply of aeronautical equipment could be achieved. If the types of aircraft and aircraft parts could be completely standardised throughout the Empire it would be undoubtedly true to say that a very great stride would be made in this direction. Production would be facilitated and cheapened; the confusion resulting from non-interchangeability of equipment, which so frequently attends combined operations, would be very largely, if not completely, eliminated; pilots from all parts of the Empire would be familiar with all types of machines in use, and one country would be enabled to come to the assistance of another in the supply of equipment without the great preliminary delay which would otherwise almost certainly take place. Standardisation would thus be attended by great military advantages.

There are, however, obvious difficulties in the way of complete standardisation. Local conditions in the Dominions would probably dictate considerable alteration to the design of machines constructed for operation in, for example, the United Kingdom. Moreover, there is always the risk that standardisation may restrict originality in design, and thereby hamper the progress of aviation.

It would seem, therefore, that the realisation of the ideal of complete standardisation might prove to be impracticable; but the advantages of standardisation are so great that the failure to attain this ideal completely should not be allowed to obscure the possibility of achieving some step in its direction. It is for consideration, therefore, whether partial standardisation could not be brought into force with advantageous results, and without acting as a drag on aircraft design. Careful consideration of this matter leads to the conclusion that partial standardisation could undoubtedly be effected.

Partial Standardisation.

22. It is important that only such aeronautical equipment and stores should be standardised as have reached some degree of finality in design. It is most undesirable to standardise equipment which might require to be scrapped owing to obsolescence during its useful life. It is considered that there would be little risk on this account in the standardisation of aircraft spares, such as A.G.S.* parts (bolts, nuts, screws, &c., which are common to all types of machines), wheels and tyres, propeller hubs, bomb racks, &c. Standardisation, it is thought, could also be effected in the matter of photographic equipment, plates, &c., and in the case of machine guns, ammunition, bombs, &c., and perhaps wireless equipment.

It is also desirable that common specifications for materials should be adopted throughout the Empire, e.g., for fabric, dope, metals, petrol and oil.

It is unlikely that any very material advantage would be derived from the standardisation of instruments, such as speedometers, &c.

Nomenclature.

23. Wherever standardisation of equipment is possible it is suggested that standard nomenclature should be adopted in order to obviate confusion.

* Aircraft General Stores—Stores common to all aircraft.

Supplies of Raw Materials.

24. It is obvious that one of the most important factors in the problem of aeronautical supply at any time of emergency where increased production would be required at short notice is the existence of stocks of the raw materials necessary for aircraft construction. In particular, the supply of spruce would be a difficulty in the event of any great expansion of aircraft manufacture. The development of the all-metal machine may, in the near future, alter the situation, but at present, spruce, which must be of the best grade and well seasoned, is essential to the manufacture of aircraft. There is a shortage of stocks of wood of the right quality, not only in Great Britain, but also in the world markets generally. Measures are being taken by the Air Ministry to build up a small reserve stock, but this far from providing a complete solution to the problem. Further measures are greatly to be desired for the development of stocks of spruce from the potentially abundant supplies which exist in Canada.

RESEARCH AND EXPERIMENTAL WORK.

25. The Air Member for Supply and Research at the Air Ministry is responsible, through the Director of Research, both for the direction and co-ordination of pure research in aeronautics and for the conduct of experimental work and the construction and development of experimental equipment, both for the Royal Air Force and Civil Aviation.

26. The Aeronautical Research Committee was set up in 1920 to take the place of the Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. Its principal functions are to advise the Air Ministry on scientific and technical problems relating to the construction and navigation of aircraft; to initiate any research work which it considers advisable; to assist the aeronautical industry by scientific advice and research; to prepare for the approval of the Air Council a scheme of work and estimate of expenditure for the year, and to make reports from time to time to the Air Council.

The research work initiated by the Committee is principally carried out at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough, and the National Physical Laboratory, Teddington, but in addition there is some research carried out at the universities and at commercial research establishments.

Aerodynamical Research.

27. Pure research in aerodynamics is carried out in the Aerodynamics Department of the National Physical Laboratory (wind channel and theoretical investigations) and at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough (wind channel and full scale investigations). The problems investigated include the plotting of pressure areas on the wings and other parts of the aeroplane, the measurement of the forces exercised by the various controls, questions of stability, the aerodynamic properties of various forms of construction, and the problem of control flight above the stalling angle. For full scale research on many of these problems the development of special instruments is necessary to secure accurate results, and the development of these instruments is carried out entirely at the Royal Aircraft Establishment.

28. There are Sub-Committees of the Aeronautical Research Committee for the more detailed investigation of special problems which may be referred to them, such as the Engine Sub-Committee and the Accidents Sub-Committee.*

Engine Research.

29. Engine Research is carried out under the supervision of the Air Ministry at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, at Messrs. Ricardos, and in some cases at the works of engine constructors. The Air Ministry Laboratory is responsible for research on thermodynamics.

Armament Research.

30. Research on Armament is to a great extent carried out jointly on behalf of the Admiralty, War Office and Air Ministry by the Ordnance Committee. The

* This must be distinguished from the Accidents Investigation Branch of the Air Ministry whi investigates all accidents however caused. The Accidents Sub-Committee only investigates such accidents as are referred in order that the aerodynamic aspects of the question may be considered.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Air Ministry is, however, directly concerned in research upon the aerodynamic properties of bombs, the composition of bombs and pyrotechnics, and the development of special guns suited for use in aircraft. Efforts are being made to develop guns of a larger size than have hitherto been used. The question of special ammunition is also continually under investigation.

Wireless Research.

31. Research on wireless telegraphy and radio telephony is carried out by the three services jointly under the supervision of co-ordinating bodies, each service concentrating on the development of apparatus specially designed to meet its peculiar requirements. The Air Ministry has for some years carried out special research on oxygen and oxygen apparatus for use in aircraft, while a great deal of work has been done in the development of special navigating and course-setting instruments, more particularly for use in Naval gunnery work.

32. Considerable work has also been done in connection with the design of other accessories, such as radiators, petrol pipes, tyres and shock-absorbing components, with a view to evolving a type of equipment capable of resisting extremes of temperature ranging from the heat of Iraq, India and Egypt to the intense cold of great heights in northern latitudes.

33. In order that the Dominions may secure the full benefit of the work which is being done by the Air Ministry, the first essential is that there should be some machinery by which the results of this work may be communicated to the technical officers of Dominion Air Forces or to Dominion aviation companies.* To a great extent the results of pure research can be communicated by the transmission of reports and papers such as are produced by the Aeronautical Research Committee; but if the Dominions are to be kept in touch with the experimental work and also with such research work as does not always become the subject of formal reports, it is desirable that Dominion liaison officers should have sufficient technical experience to enable them to select on behalf of the Dominions such points as are likely to be of interest to them. The present difficulty experienced in arranging for the common investigation of certain problems of interest to all concerned or the investigation of special problems by the Dominion whose climatic conditions make such investigation particularly desirable or easy would thus be overcome. Co-ordination of this kind is essential if the best results are to be obtained without unnecessary duplication of effort.

34. If, however, some indication is required as to the type of problem which might be investigated more particularly by the Dominions, the following suggestions are made :—

Canada—

The effect of extreme cold on material of all kinds.
The effect of extreme cold on air-cooled engines.
Air Survey.

Australia—

The effect of extreme heat on materials.
The effect of extreme heat on engines. (This might overlap to some extent with the knowledge already acquired by the Royal Air Force in Iraq and Egypt.)
Effect of heat on dopes, fabrics and glue.
Air Survey.

35. A certain degree of co-operation has already been obtained in the past with regard to Canada and Australia through the medium of the Aeronautical Research Committee. The Secretary of the Committee has been for some time in direct correspondence with both these Dominions, and has until recently sent copies of aeronautical papers direct to the Director of Research on Air Matters in Australia. He has also received copies of the programme of research in hand in Canada and has answered questions referred to the Aeronautical Research Committee by Canada. While this degree of co-ordination has undoubtedly been useful, it clearly cannot be so effective as the maintenance of close touch by the appointment of technical liaison officers.

* In the latter case, subject to such reservations as may be necessary on military grounds.

Use of Naval and Military Aircraft in Peace.

36. Air forces developed on the lines indicated are not only an insurance against external aggression in time of war, but can also be economically used for other purposes in time of peace. Thus, in the intervals of war training aircraft may be employed with advantage on coastal survey, land survey, forest fires and postal work.

In the United States of America military aircraft are extensively employed on survey duties with most beneficial results.

In Canada, air patrols have been found to be the most efficient and most economical method of locating forest fires. The Canadian Government is now almost entirely dependent on aircraft for this work.

The employment of aircraft in peace on duties of the above nature is not only an excellent method of developing the art of airmanship in the flying personnel of an air force, but may be in many cases an economical method of carrying out certain services of a civil character, especially in undeveloped or unsettled areas. Owing to such causes as the greater distances between centres of population, superior climatic conditions for flying, &c., the Dominions may be expected to have considerable advantage over Great Britain as regards opportunity for useful auxiliary employment of aircraft primarily provided for national defence. It may be observed in this connection that the employment of military aircraft for carrying mails between Cairo and Bagdad has effected an average saving of seventeen days on the time taken for mails between London and Bagdad.

Air Staff, October 4, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62450

APPENDIX (A).

Distribution of the Royal Air Force.

(Service Units.)

United Kingdom—
2 squadrons, army co-operation.
2 squadrons, reserve (probably to become army squadrons).
1 squadron, communications.

Navy—
3 flights, reconnaissance.
3 flights, fleet spotters.
3 flights, ships' fighters (for embarkation in three aircraft carriers).
2 flights, torpedo aircraft.
1 flight, flying boats.
(All naval flights comprised of six aircraft each, except the boat flight which is comprised of five.)

Malta, navy—
1 flight, reconnaissance.
1 flight, fleet spotters.
1 flight, ships' fighters (for embarkation in Mediterranean Fleet aircraft carrier).
1 flight, seaplanes.

Egypt—
3 squadrons, under General Officer Commanding, Egypt, for operations.

Palestine—
1 squadron, internal security under Air Ministry.

Transjordania—
1 flight, internal security under Air Ministry

Aden—
1 flight, under General Officer Commanding, Aden, for operations.
(Also available for operations in Somaliland.)

India—
6 squadrons, under Commander-in-chief, India, for operations.
(The expense of these squadrons is borne by the Indian Government.)

Iraq—
8 squadrons, internal security under Air Ministry.

Note.—In addition to the above, there are now authorised a total of 52 squadrons for Home Defence, to be stationed in the United Kingdom. Of these—

3 are already formed.
15 are in process of formation.
34 are recently sanctioned.

---

o

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62451 E-1302-3

SECRET

Ref: No: C.A./A./15.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

58

LIST OF COMMITTEES.

The following statement gives the Terms of Reference and Personnel of the Committees formed in pursuance of Decisions of the Imperial Conference up to Saturday, 13th October, 1923, inclusive. It is proposed to issue revisions of the statement from time to time during the sitting of the Conference as may be necessary.

(1) NATIONALITY COMMITTEE. (Reference E. 2nd Meeting, Appendix B, Resolution I).

TERMS OF REFERENCE.

To consider and report to the Imperial Conference on the following questions:-

(1) The Grant of Naturalisation to Persons resident in Mandated Territories.

(2) The appointment of Committees of Enquiry in connection with the revocation of Certificates.

(3) The re-admission to British nationality of British-born women married to aliens.

(4) Marriages with foreigners.

PERSONNEL.

The Secretary of State for Home Affairs (in the Chair)
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (or a representative)
The Secretary of State for the Colonies (or a representative)
The Secretary for Scotland.
The Attorney-General
The Registrar-General
The Hon. Sir Lomer Gouin, Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Dominion of Canada
The Hon. R.V. Wilson, Honorary Minister in charge of Departments of Health and Migration, Commonwealth of Australia
The Prime Minister of the Dominion of New Zealand
The Hon. N.J. de Wot, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa
Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald, Minister for External Affairs, Irish Free State.
The Prime Minister of Newfoundland.
His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar and
Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, India

Secretaries -
Mr. R.L. Bicknell of the Home Office, and Sir Robert R. Garran, Australian Secretary to the Imperial Conference.

OCT 29 Recd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

CANADIAN RESIDENT SECRETARY
29 OCT 1923
IMPERIAL CONFERENCES (1923)

Prime Minister, Canada
C 62452

SECRET.

E. (Ind.) 1st Meeting.

2

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

A Meeting of the above Committee will be held in the room of the Secretary of State at the Colonial Office, S.W., on Tuesday, the 30th October, 1923 at 12 noon. changed to 12.30

A G E N D A.

CONSIDERATION OF PUBLICATION OF SPEECHES.

Copies of this notice have been sent to the following representatives:-

GREAT BRITAIN. - Secretary of State for the Colonies.

CANADA - Prime Minister.

COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA - Prime Minister.

NEW ZEALAND - Prime Minister.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA - Prime Minister.

IRISH FREE STATE- Minister of External Affairs.

NEWFOUNDLAND - Prime Minister.

INDIA - Secretary of State for India.
- H.H. the Maharajah of Alwar.
- Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2, Whitehall Gardens,

29th October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62453

59

CONFIDENTIAL.

E. 84.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

Committee on Spahlinger Treatment of Tuberculosis.

At the Meeting of the Conference on October 31st. it was decided to form a Committee as follows:-

The Minister of Health (Chairman).
The Chancellor of the Exchequer (or Representative).
The Secretary of State for the Colonies (or Representative).
A representative of Canada.
" " " The Commonwealth of Australia.
" " " New Zealand.
" " " The Union of South Africa.
" " " The Irish Free State.
" " " Newfoundland.
" " " India.

Joint Secretaries) Mr. J.N. Dark,) (Ministry of Health)) Mr. F.D. Thomson.) (New Zealand Delegation).

The first Meeting of the Committee will be held in the room of the Minister of Health at the Ministry of Health on Thursday, 1st November, at 11 a.m.

A copy of this notice has been sent to:-

GREAT BRITAIN — The Minister of Health. The Chancellor of the Exchequer. The S/S for the Colonies. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

CANADA. — The Prime Minister.

COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA. — The Prime Minister.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62454

New Zealand	The Prime Minister.
Union of South Africa.	The Prime Minister.
Irish Free State	The Minister of External Affairs.
Newfoundland	The Prime Minister.
India	The S/S for India.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.
31st October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr Mackenzie King

C 62455

CONFIDENTIAL.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

Meeting of Committee held on Tuesday, October 30th, 1923, at 12 - 30 p.m.

(E. (Ind.) 1st Conclusions)

The Draft Conclusions of the above Meeting are enclosed herewith for favour of approval or amendment.

It is requested that the attached copy may be returned to me by noon on Saturday, the 3rd proximo. After this time, unless a communication is received to the contrary, it will be assumed that no corrections are desired.

The attached copy should, in any case, be returned immediately on receipt of the FINAL COPY to the Secretary of the Conference, at 2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.

(Signed) G.H. CREASY.
Joint Secretary to the Committee.

2 Whitehall Gardens
~~Colonial Office~~, S.W.

31st October, 1923.

NOV 1 Rec'd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62456

2

S E C R E T.

E. (Ind.) 1st Meeting.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

DRAFT CONCLUSIONS of Meeting of the above Committee held in the Room of the Secretary of State, Colonial Office, S.W., on Tuesday, October 30th, 1923, at 12 - 30 p.m.

P R E S E N T:-

His Grace The Duke of Devonshire, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies. (In the Chair).

Sir James Masterton Smith, K.C.B., Permanent Under Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. E.J. Harding, C.M.G., Deputy Secretary, Imperial Conference.

The Right Hon. W.L. Mackenzie King, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Right Hon. S.M. Bruce, Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Captain E.F.C. Lane, C.M.G., Secretary, South African Delegation.

Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Right Hon. Viscount Peel, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel H.H. The Maharajah of Alwar, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, K.C.S.I.

Lieut.Col. Sir Wolseley Haig, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., C.M.G., C.B.E., Political Secretary to H.H. The Maharajah of Alwar.

Prof. L.F. Rushbrook Williams C.B.E., Secretary, Indian Delegation.

Lt.Col. C.W.G. Walker, D.S.O., Asst.Secretary,.....) Joint Committee of Imperial Defence,)
Mr. G.H. Creasy, Colonial Office.....) Secretaries.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Committee considered the question of the publication of the speeches regarding the status of Indians in the British Empire, which were made at the 12th and 13th meetings of the Imperial Conference.

It was decided that :- > it would be advisable that these speeches, together with those with which the discussion should terminate at the 14th meeting to be held on the 31st October, should, subject to the omission of:

> (i) the reference to Mr. Lloyd George's speech delivered at the 1921 Imperial Conference;
> (ii) the last two sentences of the quotation from the Viceroy's speech on the Kenya decision, and;
> (iii) such parts of the concluding speeches as may be considered unsuitable for publication, > be issued to the Press, in extenso, on the 1st November, for publication on the 2nd November.

The Committee also decided that it would be advisable that :- > the two memoranda circulated to the Conference on the subject, viz: E.77, Memorandum by the Colonial Office on the political status of British Indians in the Colonies, Protectorates, and Mandated Territories, and E.80, Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa on the position of Indians in the British Empire, should be issued to the Press at the same time.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies promised that he would ask the Editor of the "Times" to see that these speeches were published in full in that newspaper.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.

31st October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62458

SECRET

E. 85.

59

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

Publication of Correspondence.

Status of High Commissioners.

At the meeting of the Conference on October 31st it was decided to form a Committee to deal with the above questions constituted as follows :-

The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Chairman)
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (or representative)
The Lord President of the Council.
A representative of Canada,
" " " The Commonwealth of Australia.
" " " New Zealand.
" " " The Union of South Africa,
" " " The Irish Free State,
" " " Newfoundland.

The first meeting of the Committee will be held in the Secretary of State's room, Colonial Office, on Friday November 2nd at 12 noon.

A copy of this notice has been sent to -

Great Britain :	The Secretary of State for the Colonies, The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, The Lord President of the Council, The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.
Canada :	Prime Minister.
Commonwealth of Australia :	Prime Minister.
New Zealand :	Prime Minister.
Union of South Africa :	Prime Minister.
Irish Free State :	Minister of External Affairs.
Newfoundland :	Prime Minister.

(Signed) M.P.A.HANKEY

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.
31st October, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62459

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

(Paper "E. 80").

It is requested that the attached print may be substituted for the typewritten version of the above paper issued on the 22nd inst. and the latter returned to this Office.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.,
31st October, 1923.

NOV 2 Rec'd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62460

W. Mackenzie King

E. 80.

39

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

BEFORE the Conference comes to consider this thorny subject, I wish my colleagues to consider the following suggestion of a way out of the difficulties in which we find ourselves. In India the position of Indians in other parts of the Empire seems to be adding to the political agitation and unrest, while in those other parts the atmosphere for the solution of the difficulty is not improving but on the contrary getting worse. This latter change is in some measure due to the Sastri mission. Mr. Sastri by his mission and his speeches has undoubtedly made matters worse. He has, for instance, never failed, whenever opportunity presented itself, to attack the Indian policy of South Africa, and has thereby greatly exasperated public opinion in that Dominion, already very sensitive on this issue. In other Dominions he has made people alive to the issue—indeed he has largely created it. The claim he has everywhere vigorously pressed for equal franchise rights for Indians over the whole Empire has not only gone further than the local claims of the Indians themselves, but has tended to raise opposition in quarters where it did not exist before. It is because I foresaw this development that I did not invite Mr. Sastri to include South Africa in his mission. It is not alleged that the economic position of Indians in other parts of the Empire is bad. It is admitted that they are successful and thriving under the laws of the Dominions, and are in most respects economically better off than they would be in India. But the claim is put forward for equal political rights throughout the Empire, and its denial is looked upon as a stigma, as an affront to our Indian fellow-subjects. And no questions are more difficult and dangerous than those involving national dignity and honour.

The Indian claim for equal franchise rights in the Empire outside of India arise, in my opinion, from a misconception of the nature of British citizenship. This misconception is not confined to India, but is fairly general, and the Conference would do not only India but the whole Empire an important service by its removal. The misconception arises, not from the fact, but from the assumption that all subjects of the King are equal, that in an Empire where there is a common King there should be a common and equal citizenship, and that all differences and distinctions in citizen rights are wrong in principle. Hence it is claimed that whether a British subject has or has not political rights in his country of origin, he should, on migration to another part of the Empire where British subjects enjoy full political rights, be entitled automatically to the enjoyment of these rights. It is on this basis that equal political rights are claimed for Indians who live in the Dominions or Colonies outsid of India.

It is, of course, clear that the assumption on which the claim is based is wrong. There is no equality of British citizenship throughout the Empire. On the contrary, there is every imaginable difference. In some parts British subjects have no political rights whatever; in others they have modified rights of one kind or another; in others, again, they have the fullest political rights. In the same part you may find British subjects with little or no political rights, and others with full rights. There is no common equal British citizenship in the Empire, and it is quite wrong for a British subject to claim equality of rights in any part of the Empire to which he has migrated or where he happens to be living. There is no indignity or affront at all in the denial of such equality. Once this is clearly recognised, the stigma above referred to falls away. Indians in those parts of the Empire where they do not enjoy equal franchise rights cannot justly or fairly claim that their national dignity or status is involved.

[10768]

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62461

I go even further. The newer conception of the British Empire as a smaller League of Nations, as a partnership of free and equal nations under a common hereditary Sovereign, involves an even further departure from the simple conception of a unitary citizenship. British citizenship has been variable in the past; it is bound to be even more so in the future. Each constituent part of the Empire will settle for itself the nature and incidents of its citizenship. The composition and character and rights of its people will be the concern of each free and equal State in the Empire. It will not only regulate immigration from other parts of the Empire as well as from the outside world, but it will also settle the rights of its citizens as a matter of domestic concern. The common Kingship is the binding link between the parts of the Empire; it is not a source from which private citizens will derive their rights. They will derive their rights simply and solely from the authority of the State in which they live. Hence Indians going to Canada will not be entitled to claim equal political rights with the other citizens of Canada, no more than Canadians going to India or Australia could claim equal political rights there. The conception of the Empire as a League of Nations ought to do away with these claims, which are so disturbing and unsettling in the Empire.

From this point of view the Indian resolution passed at the last Imperial Conference was a profound mistake. It was not only impracticable, but it ran counter to the new conception of the Empire, as not a unitary State, but a partnership of equal States. It has both theoretically and practically landed us in a false position, and the sooner we get out of it the better for the future good relations of the different States of the Empire. The political claims of Indians arising under that resolution should not be allowed to create difficulties for the Governments of the Dominions, which would not have arisen if the constitutional position had been properly appreciated.

The Indian Government should not claim from the other Empire Governments what (say) the friendly Governments of Japan and China would not claim. And the fact is that with neither of these Governments have we any difficulties in the Dominions, while the difficulties with India are notorious and growing.

We must get to the right constitutional conception, which I take to be the absolute and unquestioned power and authority of each part of the Empire to settle such questions for itself. India has threatened retaliation as a method of reprisal against Dominions which do not concede equal rights to her nationals. This is, again, a false position arising out of the misconception which I have explained. There should be no question either of retaliation or reprisal. India should be free to deal with nationals of the Dominions on a basis of reciprocal treatment, and neither on her part nor on the part of the Dominions concerned should there be any resentment or ill-feeling in the matter. Our relations in this regard should be practically those of friendly sovereign States towards each other Unless this readjustment of viewpoint is brought about it is feared that the question of the position of Indians in the Empire may continue to grow in gravity.

I would therefore suggest that for the resolution of the last conference on the subject there be substituted a resolution affirming the right of each portion of the Empire to regulate citizenship as well as immigration as domestic questions for its own handling and not affecting the status or dignity of other portions of the Empire, and expressing the opinion that provisions for reciprocal treatment of the nationals of the States of the Empire should not be looked upon as unfriendly or otherwise affecting the good relations of these States inter se. It would thus be left to the good sense of each State of the Empire to say what citizen rights shall be enjoyed, and by whom, within their territorial jurisdiction, and no State of the Empire should have claim to force its citizens on any other State or resent their exclusion or special treatment by the latter.

(Signed) J. C. SMUTS.

South African Delegation, Savoy Hotel, W.C. 2,
October 18, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(Nov. 1923)
2c.

Mr King's first draft of proposed addition to Draft 2.

C 82462

In the conduct of foreign affairs care must be taken to differentiate between matters especially affecting the interests and responsibilities of the individual countries of the British Commonwealth or Great Britain, and those which may be regarded as of common concern, as respects a. The former it was recognized that each part of the Empire, which ought to be entitled to act on its own responsibility and initiative, must decide for itself; such decisions as regard matters of common concern it was recognized should be taken only after the fullest consultation with the other governments (or endorsation) of the parliaments concerned to which they are responsible. Such understandings as to policy were arrived at in the course of conferences between governments concerned

While conclusions of this character were understood to be arrived at

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

~~matters of importance~~ as regards matters of common concern it was recognized that ~~powers exercised~~ by which action based upon policies arrived at in conference or by other forms of consultation ~~should~~ being necessary ~~be subject to~~ the result of conferences or other forms of consultation concerned action therein was necessarily subject to the approval of the Parliaments concerned to give binding effect to policies arrived at as a result of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62464

~~Document as to~~

In the discussion of foreign affairs care must be taken to maintain the distinction between ~~conference~~ of views expressed by the representatives of the respective governments that neither the opinion of the governments of the Dominions represented nor the opinion of the conference as a whole is expressed.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

In the discussions of foreign affairs, care was taken to differentiate between matters especially affecting the interests and responsibilities of the individual Dominions or Great Britain and those which may be regarded as of common concern.

With respect to the former, it was recognized that the Governments and Parliaments of each part of the Empire might, with due regard to the possible contingent interests of other parts, be expected to act on their own initiative and responsibility.

As regards matters of common concern, it was felt that policies with respect thereto should, as far as possible, be an expression of the general consensus of view likely to be arrived at after consultation or conference with the several Governments concerned.

It was recognized, however, that to the extent that conference or consultation did not permit of a considered and explicit judgment being given by the Governments of the countries concerned, the ~~common~~ understanding arrived at in conference with their representatives ~~or otherwise~~ could not be held to ~~bind~~ their respective Governments or Parliaments ~~and that any action arising out of the same must necessarily be subject to their express assent and~~ approval.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

POOR
COPY

Mr. Mackenzie King - rough draft - 6.XI.23

C 62466

3 copies

In the discussions of foreign affairs, care was taken to differentiate between matters especially affecting the interests and responsibilities of the individual Dominions or Great Britain and those which may be regarded as of common concern.

With respect to the former, it was recognized that the Governments and Parliaments of each part of the Empire might, with due regard to the possible contingent interests of other parts, be expected to act on their own initiative and responsibility.

As regards matters of common concern, it was felt that policies with respect thereto should, as far as possible, be an expression of the general consensus of view of the countries affected likely to be arrived at after consultation or conference with the several Governments concerned.

It was recognized, however, that ~~to the extent~~ as explicitly stated that conference or consultation did not permit of a considered and explicit judgment being given by the Governments of the countries concerned, the ~~common~~ understanding arrived at in conference with their representatives ~~or otherwise~~ could not be held to bind or commit their respective Governments or Parliaments. ~~and that any action arising out of the same must necessarily be subject~~ without the ~~in their~~ express sanction or ~~assent and~~ approval of the latter.

in regard to the action of the delegates

19

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

POOR
COPY

C 62467

3 4

As revised by Mr. Skelton - Nov. 6

In the discussions of foreign affairs, care was taken to differentiate between matters especially affecting the interests and responsibilities of the individual Dominions or Great Britain and those which may be regarded as of common concern.

With respect to the former, it was recognized that the Governments and Parliaments of each part of the Empire might, with due regard to the possible contingent interests of other parts, be expected to act on their own initiative and responsibility.

With respect to matters considered of common concern, it was recognized that consultation was required, by conference or otherwise. The present Conference was a meeting of representatives of Governments primarily for the purpose of exchanging information and opinions, and proposals made thereat did not commit the Governments so represented or the Parliaments to which they were responsible, without ~~full~~ their consideration and express consent.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

A.

In the discussions of foreign affairs, care was taken to differentiate between matters especially affecting the interests and responsibilities of the individual Dominions or Great Britain and those which may be regarded as of common concern.

With respect to the former, it was recognized that the Governments and Parliaments of each part of the Empire might, with due regard to the possible contingent interests of other parts, be expected to act on their own initiative and responsibility.

With respect to matters considered of common concern, it was recognized that consultation was required, by conference or otherwise. The present Conference was a meeting of representatives of Governments primarily for the purpose of exchanging information and opinions, and proposals made thereat did not commit the Governments so represented or the Parliaments to which they were responsible, without their full consideration and express consent.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62469 5-5-

N-1102

S E C R E T.

E.83.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF THE POWERS OF THE IMPERIAL WAR GRAVES COMMISSION.

Note by the Secretary.

With reference to the application of the Imperial War Graves Commission for an extension of their powers, I am directed by Mr. Baldwin to circulate herewith the draft of certain paragraphs which he suggests should be incorporated in the Report of the Imperial Conference.

The question will be placed on the Agenda at an early meeting.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.,

2nd November, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62470

8

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF THE POWERS OF THE IMPERIAL WAR GRAVES COMMISSION.

SUGGESTED DRAFT PARAGRAPHS FOR REPORT.

During the course of the Conference a proposal was received from the Imperial War Graves Commission that the powers conferred upon the Commission by the Charter of 10th May, 1917 and the Supplementary Charter of the 10th August, 1921 should be extended so as to enable the Commission to comply with a request based on public expediency and economy that they should undertake the public duty of the future maintenance of such Cemeteries and Graves as the Old Military Cemetery at Tel el Kebir, the Crimean Cemetery at Scutari, which is in the same plot of ground as the Commissions's War Cemetery, and the older Cemeteries in Turkey which could more conveniently be maintained in conjunction with the War Graves.

This proposal was submitted to the Representatives of the Dominions and India and the Colonies and Protectorates, all of whom have indicated their acceptance of the proposal as outlined in the following Memorandum:-

> The Commission, if in their absolute discretion they deem it desirable, may, at the request of any Government of any part of our Empire responsible for or desirous of maintaining any place of burial or memorial whether or not of or relating to such officers or men as may fall within the descriptions contained in Our Original Charter of May 10, 1917 or Our Supplemental Charter of August 10, 1921 or of or relating to any other officers men or civilians whatever, exercise with regard to such place of burial or memorial as aforesaid and the graves in such

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

8

place of burial all or any of their powers as if the said Original and Supplemental Charters were applicable to the said burial place or memorial and graves, provided that the cost of or incidental to any exercise of the additional powers given of this Our Charter be provided by the Government making the aforesaid request.

The necessary steps will be taken forthwith to incorporate the above Memorandum in a further Supplementary Charter for submission to His Majesty the King.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62472

Friday,
November 2, 1923.
10 a.m.

MR. KING.

Sir Maurice Hankey telephoned me this morning to say that the Prime Minister is anxious to have a confidential and informal talk with some of the other Prime Ministers on Monday afternoon next at 3 o'clock on the subject of Reparations and one or two other things. At one of the early meetings of the Conference, Lord Curzon undertook to prepare some resolutions. He wishes to talk about them at the meeting on Monday, and it may be that there are some other matters which the Prime Ministers would like to have discussed. What will be said in the Report on Foreign Affairs will depend very much on what takes place at this meeting on Monday afternoon.

You have an appointment to visit Cliveden on Monday afternoon. I presume you will wish to arrange another time for this engagement.

McG.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Nov 5/1923 Berlin conclusions of Foreign policy of Labour Govt

C 62473

10, Downing Street,
Whitehall, S.W.1.

Upon adjournment to meet Lord Curzon

Papers to attend Conference

Have to confer with Sir Maurice Hankey

Decision to confer
if Any important communication or question

Lord Curzon

Foreign Policy of Labour Govt

Should there be two Conclusions or perhaps two decisions merely of this policy

File
(Lord Curzon)

3.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62474

Secret
November 5, 1923

Lord Curzon's
Written draft.
Nov. 5, 1923. (a.m.)

Foreign Relations

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs on October 5th, who gave the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and secondly, those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that certain parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, namely, the situation in connection with the reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British Representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State, and the three members of the Indian Delegation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Conference met at a time when foreign problems of the greatest importance to all parts of the Empire were engaging attention. The British Government warmly welcomed the participation of the representatives of the Dominions and India both in the discussion of these subjects and in the settlement of the action to be taken upon them, being not merely anxipus to proceed upon the principles of mutual co-operation and responsibility laid down at the last meeting in 1921, but also conscious that in all international affairs where Great Britain was conducting negotiations affecting the British Empire, she would speak with a more powerful effect if it were known that her voice was that not of herself alone but of the entire body of States composing the Empire.

That principle does not contravene, but is, on the contrary, in strict harmony with the practice by which individual Dominions of the Empire negotiate directly with foreign Governments in matters especially affecting their responsibilities.

Frequent and detailed examination took place not only of the main features of the international situation, but of the different aspects of the situation as they developed from day to day, nor did the Imperial Conference terminate its sittings until each subject had been fully explored and an agreement arrived at upon all the main heads of foreign policy.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It was while the Conference was sitting that the President of the United States renewed the offer of the United States Government to take part in an international Conference or enquiry to investigate the European Reparations problem, and to report upon the capacity of Germany to make the payments to which she is pledged. The Conference cordially welcomed, and decided to take immediate advantage of, this overture; and communications were at once entered into with the Allied powers to obtain their co-operation.

The Conference, while approving the Policy that has hitherto been pursued was convinced that the European situation could no longer be allowed to drift, that it could only be lifted on to the plane of a possible settlement by the united action of the Powers and by the co-operation of the United States of America, and that if the scheme of common enquiry to be followed by common action were to break down, the results would be disastrous both to the peace and to the economic recovery of the world.

(It felt that in such an event it would be desirable for the British Government to consider very carefully the alternative of summoning a Conference itself in order to examine the financial and the economic problem in its widest aspect).

The Conference registered its profound disagreement with the attempts being made in different parts to break up the unity of the German state. It regarded such a policy if persevered in, as being inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. It agreed that the strongest representations on this subject should be made to the Allied Governments, and these were accordingly made.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe, and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

It remained to pursue a policy that would stimulate the peaceful development of the Middle East and encourage the Turkish state in the policy of reconstruction upon which it has embarked.

The Conference, so mush of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations which have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

It recognised the loyalty with which Japan had carried out her obligations under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem. It noted with approval the agreement that was arrived at in February, 1922, and of the reservations by which it was accompanied. And it held that, when the four reserved subjects which were safeguarded by

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

that agreement came up for examination and settlement, the utmost importance should be attached to the freedom of the passage through, and the security of, the Suez Canal, which constitutes the central and vital link in the chain of Imperial communications, and that adequate guarantees must be taken to secure and safeguard these objects.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public opinion or of official action was seriously debated. The Conference arrived at the conclusion that, while affirming and safeguarding as a cardinal feature of British policy the principle of the three mile limit, it was yet both desirable and practicable to meet the Americal demand for an extension of the right of search beyond this limit for the above purpose, and negotiations were at once opened with the United States Government for the conclusion of an experimental agreement with this object in view.

Finally the Conference after listening to a detailed exposition of the work of the League of Nations during the past two years, and more particularly of the recent sitting of the Council and the Assembly at Geneva, placed on record its emphatic approval of the action that had been taken by, and the support that had been given to, the representatives of the British Empire on the latter occasion. There was full accord that the League should be given the unabated support of all the British members of the League as a valuable instrument of international peace and as the sole available organ for the harmonious regulations of many international affairs.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

41

C 62479

SECRET.

E.86.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

1923

The paragraphs enclosed are circulated for consideration at to-morrow's Meeting of the Imperial Conference, as a basis for the Section of the Report of the Conference dealing with Foreign Affairs.

(Signed) M.P.A.HANKEY.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.
5th November, 1923.

9.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62480

2nd draft

Foreign Relations.

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced on October 5th by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs who gave to the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and secondly, of those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that extracts from those parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, viz., the situation in connection with the Reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State and the three members of the Indian delegation, took part.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Frequent and detailed examination took place not only of the main features of the international situation, but of the different aspects of that situation as they developed from day to day. Nor did the Imperial Conference terminate its sittings until each subject had been carefully explored and a common understanding reached upon the main heads of foreign policy.

It was while the Conference was sitting that the President of the United States renewed the offer of the United States Government to take part in an international Conference or enquiry to investigate the European Reparation problem, and to report upon the capacity of Germany to make the payments to which she is pledged. The Conference cordially welcomed, and decided to take immediate advantage of, this overture; and communications were at once entered into with the Allied Powers to obtain their co-operation.

The Conference, after careful consideration of the policy which has been pursued, was of the opinion that the European situation could only be lifted on to the plane of a possible settlement by the co-operation of the United States of America, and that if the scheme of common enquiry to be followed by common action were to break down, the results would be inimical both to the peace and to the economic recovery of the world.

It felt that in such an event it would be desirable for the British Government to consider very carefully the alternative of summoning a Conference itself in order to examine the financial and the economic problem in its widest aspect.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Conference regarded any policy, if persevered in, of breaking up the unity of the German State, as inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers, and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. ~~It agreed that~~ the strongest representations on this subject must ~~should be made~~ to the Allied Governments, ~~and these were~~ accordingly made.

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and ~~recorded its~~ learned with satisfaction ~~at~~ the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe; and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

It remained to pursue a policy that would stimulate the peaceful development of the Middle East and encourage the Turkish state in the policy of reconstruction upon which it has embarked.

The Conference, so much of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference, which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations which have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It recognised the loyalty with which Japan had carried out her obligations under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem. It noted ~~with approval~~ the agreement that was arrived at in February 1922, and the reservations by which it was accompanied. And ~~it~~ held that, when the four reserved subjects which were safeguarded by that agreement come up for examination and settlement, the utmost importance should be attached to the freedom of the passage through, and the security of, the Suez Canal, which constitutes the central and vital link in the chain of Imperial communications, and that adequate guarantees must be taken to secure and safeguard these objects.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public opinion or of official action was seriously debated. The Conference arrived at the conclusion that, while affirming and safeguarding as a cardinal feature of British policy the principle of the three mile limit, it was yet both desirable and practicable to meet the American request

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

for an extension of the right of search beyond this limit for the above purpose, and negotiations were at once opened with the United States Government for the conclusion of an experimental agreement with this object in view.

Finally the Conference after listening to a detailed exposition of the work of the League of Nations during the past two years, and more particularly of the recent sitting of the Council and the Assembly at Geneva, placed on record its emphatic approval of the action that had been taken by, and the support that had been given to, the representatives of the British Empire on the latter occasion. There was full accord that the League should be given the unabated support of all the British members of the League as a valuable instrument of International peace and as the sole available organ for the harmonious regulations of many International affairs.

5th November, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

WALTER HOSE TO WLMK C62484-A.

London, November 6, 1923.

WLMK

MEMORANDUM TO THE PRIME MINISTER:

Imperial Conference of 1923 Defence

The attached memorandum from the Admiralty was handed to me this afternoon.

This memorandum deals with co-operation between the Imperial and Dominion Naval Services as regard War Staff Training and War Staff Duties with a view to obtaining similar administrative methods in peace time and thereby ensuring more effective co-operation of the Navies themselves in the event of combined strategy and operations in time of war.

The proposals are in entire accordance with the principles agreed to between the Imperial and Canadian Governments in 1910, and are, as regards details of procedure of exchange of officers, command, etc., the same as now carried out in practice.

The principle that the training system should be uniform and that there should be exchange of officers has been accepted always for all three services.

The only item which I consider open to question is the wording of paragraph 13(a). It would perhaps be better if it were to read as follows:-

(a) In order to obtain continuity of Naval policy and to ensure that the best advice on questions concerning the Naval defence of the Empire is always available for the British and Dominion Governments, British and Dominion Naval Staffs should be built up by uniform staff training and a free interchange of officers between the British and Dominion staffs.

The new proposal contained in paragraph 14 is recommended for concurrence.

The remainder of the proposals are in accordance with existing procedure as far as Canada is concerned, and are recommended for concurrence.

Walter Hose

Commodore, R.C.N.,
Director of the Naval Service of Canada.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Memoranda and Notes 1922-1932 (M.G. 26, J 4).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62484-A-1

October 6, 1923. 3

NOTES ON NAVAL DEFENCE POLICY.

The following is the extent and the organization of the Canadian Naval Forces with a view to meeting the requirements of the first phase of Naval Defence functions, i.e. the defence of local waters.

Ships.

Two torpedo boat destroyers, the Patriot and Patrician are maintained in sea-going commission, one on each coast.

Four trawler minesweepers are maintained in commission, two on each coast.

All the above vessels are utilized mainly in training young personnel of the R.C.N. and in the annual training of ranks and ratings of the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve and of the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve.

H.M.C. Submarines C.H.14. and C.H.15. are laid up in Halifax.

H.M.C.S. Aurora, Light Cruiser, is laid up at Halifax, her guns and fire control gear are being utilized in shore gun drill sheds for training purposes.

Establishments (other than Headquarters, Ottawa)

HALIFAX, N.S. A naval barracks with very efficient gun drill shed lately equipped with modern control apparatus, drill shed, parade ground, workshops, etc.

Repair base capable of very considerable repair work. This is not kept in full operation but a nucleus personnel is maintained and portions of the plant operated when necessary. Organized and maintained in condition to expand to full capacity on short notice.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Memoranda and Notes 1922-1932 (M.G. 26, J 4).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Store base in operation and capable of stocking and operating sufficient naval and victualling stores for a light cruiser squadron. At present stocked with considerable surplus of stores beyond immediate requirements.

Naval Ordnance Store Base: In operation capable of moderate expansion in quantities of ammunition beyond present Canadian Naval needs.

Oil Fuel stocks: quantity 3,735. tons in rented tanks.

ESQUIMALT B.C. Naval Barracks similar to that maintained at Halifax.

Repair Base in same condition of readiness for expanded operations as at Halifax. Not capable of carrying out quite so extensive repairs.

Store Base: in operation and capable of stocking sufficient naval and victualling stores for a light cruiser squadron. Few surplus stocks on hand.

Naval Ordnance Store base: in operation, capable of moderate expansion in quantities of ammunition beyond present Canadian Naval requirements.

Oil Fuel Stocks: quantity 4,105 tons in rented tanks.

ESQUIMALT, VANCOUVER, CALGARY, EDMONTON, REGINA, WINNIPEG, HAMILTON, TORONTO& OTTAWA, MONTREAL, QUEBEC, CHARLOTTETOWN, ST. JOHN and HALIFAX.

Company Headquarters of R.C.N.V.R. companies or half companies, with accommodation and equipment provided for carrying out their proper drills and instruction.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Memoranda and Notes 1922-1932 (M.G. 26, J 4).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62484-A-3

P E R S O N E L.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY: Total ranks and ratings 400, of these a certain proportion of officers and men of all branches are always under training in ships and establishments of the Royal Navy.

The remainder form the complements of H.M.C. ships and establishments.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVAL RESERVE: Authorized complement 500. Recruiting for this force is just commencing, but full complement is anticipated by the close of financial year.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVAL VOLUNTEER RESERVE: Authorized complement 1,000.

Recruiting commenced in April, 1913, and 750 have been enrolled. Over 500 have carried out annual training this year at Halifax or Esquimalt.

N A V A L INTELLIGENCE.

Naval Headquarters at Ottawa is also the Headquarters of what is known as the Ottawa area of the Admiralty world-wide system of Naval Intelligence.

Working under the supervising Intelligence Officer there are District Intelligence Officers at Ottawa, Halifax and Esquimalt.

The Ottawa area includes, in addition to all Canadian territory, Newfoundland and the United States coasts as far south as Charleston on the Atlantic and Panama (including Central American Republics) on the Pacific and also the Great Lakes.

Walter Stone

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Memoranda and Notes 1922-1932 (M.G. 26, J 4).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E - 145-5

C 62484-A-4

The Ritz Hotel,
London, November 7, 1923

Commodore Walter Hose, R.C.N.,
Director of the Naval Service of Canada,
Ritz Hotel.
L o n d o n .

Dear Commodore Hose:

I received this morning your memorandum enclosing the attached statement from the Admiralty, handed you yesterday afternoon. I share with the Director of Training and Staff Duties Division the regret expressed in his communication to you that as the Conference will practically come to a close tomorrow, the enclosed paper on Empire Naval Co-operation can only be dealt with by correspondence by the Dominion Naval representatives putting the subject before their political chiefs with as little delay as possible.

Unfortunately, the Minister of Defence is not one of our delegation to either of the Imperial Conferences, and the time at my disposal will not permit of my communicating with him by cable with respect to any of the matters referred

W. Mackenzie King Papers, Memoranda and Notes 1922-1932
(P.A.C., M.G. 26, J 4).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62484-A-5

to in the memorandum. If they are unimportant, such delay as may be involved by correspondence should not prejudice any aspect of the situation. If, on the other hand, the considerations to which the memorandum gives rise are important, there should, I think, be afforded to the Minister of Defence an opportunity of considering them before approval or disapproval of any feature is given on behalf of the Canadian Government.

Under the circumstances, I would ask you to explain to the Director of Training and Staff Duties Division that in my opinion the limited time available for a consideration of the memorandum will not permit of immediate concurrence being given the proposals, but that it will be necessary to have such further action with respect to them as may be desired taken up by correspondence with the Minister of Defence.

I would ask you kindly to see that the memorandum and communications in reference thereto are brought immediately to the attention of Mr. Macdonald, on your return to Ottawa.

Yours sincerely,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING

Prime Minister.

W. L. Mackenzie King Fonds, Memoranda and Notes 1922-1932
(M.G. 26, J 4).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

O.D. SKELTON C 62485 Nov. 6. (1923) P.C.

4b.

F O R E I G N R E L A T I O N S.

.....

The draft caveat attached was shown to Hankey who agreed it was reasonable, but he had an hour's conversation with Lord Curzon, who wholly declined to accept it (as being stated too broadly and not applicable to Ireland or India). Lord Curzon also demurred to accepting the proposed emendation as to Egypt. Lord Curzon will consider it further this afternoon. Hankey suggests that Foreign Affairs be postponed and not taken up in the full Conference at 5, but be taken up privately in a Prime Minister's Committee immediately after the Conference.

(By the way, Hankey does not want his letter of last night mentioned)

After discussion with Mr. Graham and Mr. Dafoe, three alternatives seem possible: -

1. Acceptance by the Conference of the caveat you drew up.

2. Withdrawal of both the Curzon memo and your caveat and just a brief statement to the effect that there was a full discussion of Foreign Affairs.

3. Or that Canada should file a reservation or interpretation along the lines of the caveat.

.....

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

POOR
COPY

In the discussions of foreign affairs, care was taken to differentiate between matters especially affecting the interests and responsibilities of the individual Dominions or Great Britain and those which may be regarded as of common concern.

With respect to the former, it was recognized that the Governments and Parliaments of each part of the Empire might, with due regard to the possible contingent interests of other parts, (be expected to) act on their own initiative and responsibility.

With respect to matters considered of common concern, it was recognized that consultation was required, by conference or otherwise. The present Conference was a meeting of representatives of Governments primarily for the purpose of exchanging information and opinions, and proposals made thereat did not commit the Governments so represented or the Parliaments to which they were responsible, without their full consideration and express consent.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62487

6. (Nov. 1923)
J.C.

Final Revision of last A. Foreign Affairs report by Mr King. General Smuts Lord Curzon

This conference is a conference of representatives of the several Governments of the Empire; its views and conclusions on Foreign Policy as recorded above are necessarily subject to the action of the Governments and Parliaments of the various portions of the Empire, and it trusts that the results of its deliberations will meet with their approval.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62488

W. Mackenzie King

CONFIDENTIAL.

E. (Ind.) 1st Meeting.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON THE POSITION OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

No amendments having been received to the Draft Conclusions of the Meeting of the above Committee held on Tuesday 30th October, 1923, at 12.30 p.m., it is requested that the copy issued on the 31st ultimo may be regarded as the FINAL version.

(Signed) G.H. CREASY.

Joint Secretary to the Committee.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.
6th November, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62489

SECRET.

E.86 (Revise)

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The attached revised paragraphs on Foreign Relations for the Report of the Imperial Conference are circulated in substitution for the earlier draft, and will be brought up for consideration at the Meeting of the Imperial Conference on Thursday afternoon.

(Sgd.) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.,
November 7th, 1923.

NOV 8 Recd 31

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. Mackenzie King

C 62490

CANADIAN RESIDENT SECRETARY
8 NOV 1923
IMPERIAL CONFERENCES (1923)

Revise.

Foreign Relations.

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced on October 5th by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs who gave to the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and secondly, of those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that extracts from those parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, viz., the situation in connection with the Reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State and the three members of the Indian delegation, took part.

Frequent

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. Mackenzie King

C 62499

CANADIAN RESIDENT SECRETARY
8 NOV 1923
IMPERIAL CONFERENCES (1923)

Revise.

Foreign Relations.

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced on October 5th by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs who gave to the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and secondly, of those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that extracts from those parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, viz., the situation in connection with the Reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State and the three members of the Indian delegation, took part.

Frequent

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Frequent and detailed examination was given not only to the main features of the international situation, but to the different aspects of that situation as they developed from day to day. Nor did the Imperial Conference terminate its sittings until each subject had been carefully explored and a common understanding reached upon the main heads of foreign policy.

It was while the Conference was sitting that the President of the United States renewed the offer of the United States Government to take part in an international Conference or enquiry to investigate the European Reperation problem, and to report upon the capacity of Germany to make the payments to which she is pledged. The Conference cordially welcomed, and decided to take immediate advantage of, this overture; and communications were at once entered into with the Allied Powers to obtain their co-operation.

The Conference, after careful consideration of the policy which has been pursued, was of the opinion that the European situation could only be lifted on to the plane of a possible settlement by the co-operation of the United States of America, and that if the scheme of common enquiry to be followed by common action were to break down, the results would be inimical both to the peace and to the economic recovery of the world.

It felt that in such an event it would be desirable for the British Government to consider very carefully the alternative of summoning a Conference itself in order to examine the financial and the economic problem in its widest aspect.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Conference regarded any policy, which would result in breaking up the unity of the German State, as inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers, and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. The strongest representations on this subject were accordingly made to the Allied Governments.

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe; and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem, which will safeguard important communications between several parts of the Empire.

The Conference, so much of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfacti on/

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference, which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations which have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

It recognised the loyalty with which Japan had carried out her obligations under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public opinion or of official action was seriously debated. The Conference arrived at the conclusion that, while affirming and safeguarding as a cardinal feature of British policy the principle of the three mile limit, it was yet both desirable and practicable to meet the American request

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

for an extension of the right of search beyond this limit for the above purpose, and negotiations were at once opened with the United States Government for the conclusion of an experimental agreement with this object in view.

Finally the Conference after listening to a detailed exposition of the work of the League of Nations during the past two years, and more particularly of the recent sitting of the Council and the Assembly at Geneva, placed on record its emphatic approval of the action that had been taken by, and the support that had been given to, the representatives of the British Empire on the latter occasion. There was full accord that the League should be given the unabated support of all the British members of the League as a valuable instrument of International peace and as the sole available organ for the harmonious regulation of many International affairs.

This Conference is a conference of representatives of the several Governments of the Empire; its views and conclusions on Foreign Policy as recorded above are necessarily subject to the action of the Governments and Parliaments of the various portions of the Empire, and it trusts that the results of its deliberations will meet with their approval.

7th November, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr King's proposal for reservation by Canada C62495 5

November 7, 1925

As far as Canada was concerned, it was explicitly stated that, as the procedure of the Conference did not permit of the consideration by the Canadian Government of the questions of foreign policy discussed at the Conference, the views and opinions expressed by the Conference on matters of foreign policy could not be held to bind or commit the Canadian Government or parliament without the express sanction or approval of the latter.

In the discussion of foreign affairs the Conference proceeded throughout upon the principle that any policy to be adopted on behalf of the Empire in matters of common concern should be formulated by an expression of the general concurrence of the countries chiefly to be affected, arrived at by the method of consultation or conference between the several governments of the Empire.

2c

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62496

In the discussion of foreign affairs, the Conference proceeded throughout upon the principle that any policy (to be adopted) on behalf of the Empire in matters of common concern should, as far as possible, be an expression of the general consensus of view of the countries likely to be affected, arrived at as the result of consultation or conference between the several Governments of the Empire.

As far as Canada was concerned, it was explicitly stated that, as the procedure of the Conference did not permit of the consideration by the Canadian Government of the questions of foreign policy discussed at the Conference, the views and opinions expressed by the Conference on matters of foreign policy, and in particular matters respecting the Near East and Egypt, could not be held to bind or commit the Canadian Government or Parliament without the express sanction or approval of the latter.

November 7, 1923

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62497

W. Mackenzie King 5

E-1452

SECRET.

E.(P.S.) 2.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

CANADIAN RESIDENT SECRETARY
8 NOV 1923
IMPERIAL CONFERENCES (1923)

COMMITTEE ON PUBLICATION OF CORRESPONDENCE AND STATUS OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS.

STATEMENT AS TO PRIVILEGES AT PRESENT GRANTED TO

(a) Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers

and

(b) Dominion High Commissioners

in the matter of British Taxation.

I. INCOME TAX.

(1) The privileges in regard to Income Tax enjoyed by an Ambassador or Minister of a foreign State are secured to him by International Law, and depend on the fact that he represents a foreign Sovereign. Thus a foreign Government, and equally the permanent individual Head of a foreign State, are regarded as wholly exempt from British Income Tax.

The representative character of an Ambassador or Minister so far invests him with the personality of his Sovereign as to entitle him, not indeed to complete exemption from Income Tax, but to very wide immunities. These immunities are only one aspect - and an inseparable aspect - of the general diplomatic status accorded to him under International Law: another aspect is his immunity from legal proceedings.

(2) In the case of High Commissioners for the self-governing Dominions prior to 1916/17 no special relief was granted. From that year onwards relief from Income Tax on official emoluments has been given and this relief has now been made statutory by Sec.19 of the Finance Act, 1923. The concession made in 1916-17 was analogous to that made

NOV 8 Recd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

made to the Consular and certain other representatives of foreign States. (From 1922/23 onwards Consular representatives are the only class of foreign non-diplomatic representative to enjoy such relief).

(3) The comparative position may be tabulated as follows :-

Nature of Income.	Ambassadors & Ministers.	High Commissioners.
(a) Income from earnings.	Diplomatic emoluments exempt.	Official emoluments exempt.
(b) Income from investments etc.	Remittances from abroad exempt.	Remittances from abroad liable.
	Income from investments in the U.K.(except from British Govt.securities) liable.	Income from investments in the U.K. liable.
(c) Income from house or land property in U.K.	Exempt, if occupied for diplomatic purpcses. Liable, if either (1) occupied for purely private purposes, or (2) let to a tenant. (Similar reliefs apply in the relatively trifling matters of I.H.D. and Land Tax).	Liable (but property relieved from tax, if owned by the Dominion Govt., and occupied for Governmental purposes).

II. CUSTOMS & EXCISE DUTIES.

(4) As a matter of international practice foreign Ambassadors or Ministers are granted exemption from customs duties in respect of articles required for their personal use.

The

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The main articles now coming under the exemptions are motor-cars, tobacco, spirits and wine.

(5) Dominion High Commissioners are accorded relaxation in the examination of their baggage, and are also exempted from payment of all Customs Duties on first arrival.

No further exemption from Customs Duties is granted, except as regards motor cars for official use.

(6) Remission of Excise Duties has never been granted, either to foreign or Dominion representatives.

In the case of foreign representatives, however, there is an old-standing exemption in respect of the relatively small matter of Establishment Excise Licence Duties. e.g., the gun licence and the licence to employ a male servant.

III. RATES

and MOTOR CAR LICENCE DUTY.

(charges assessed and levied by the Local Authorities).

(7) Under reciprocal agreement with nearly all foreign countries, foreign Ambassadors or Ministers are relieved of the part of the Rates referable to services not of direct benefit to them (poor relief, police rate, etc.)

(8) There is no corresponding relief applicable to Dominion representatives.

(No exemption is given in respect of property owned by the Crown: the Crown in this country voluntarily foregoes any claim, in order to avoid adversely affecting other ratepayers in the neighbourhood).

(9) Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers are exempted from Motor Car Licence Duty whether their cars are owned by themselves or by their Governments.

Dominion/

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Dominion High Commissioners are exempted from Motor Car Licence Duty in respect of Government-owned cars used by them for official purposes.

(10) It may be added that no privileges at all are given in regard to Stamp Duties, or in regard to Death Duties, except that any movable property which may be actually situate in an Embassy or Legation is exempt from Death Duties.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.
7th November, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62501 E-13.2-3 Vol. 1-B 20

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE,

1923.

SUMMARY OF PROCEEDINGS.

(Appendices published separately in Cmd. 1988.)

Presented to Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

November, 1923.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.

To be purchased through any Bookseller or directly from H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE at the following addresses:
IMPERIAL HOUSE, KINGSWAY, LONDON, W.C.2, and 28, ABINGDON STREET, LONDON, S.W.1
YORK STREET, MANCHESTER; 1, ST. ANDREW'S CRESCENT, CARDIFF; or 120, GEORGE STREET, EDINBURGH.

1923.

Price 6d. Net.

Cmd. 1987

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

CONTENTS

	PAGE.
I.—Preliminary Note	4
II.—Opening Statements	7
III.—Message to their Majesties the King and Queen ...	7
IV.—Message to Japan	8
V.—Death of Mr. Bonar Law	9
VI.—Publicity	9
VII.—Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories ...	10
VIII.—Foreign Relations	10
IX.—Negotiation, Signature and Ratification of Treaties ...	13
X.—United States and "C" Mandates	15
XI.—Condominium in the New Hebrides	15
XII.—Defence	15
XIII.—Status of High Commissioners	17
XIV.—Position of Indians in other parts of the Empire ...	17
XV.—Contribution of India to the Expenses of the League of Nations	20
XVI.—Nationality Questions	21
XVII.—Validity of Marriages between British Subjects and Foreigners	22
XVIII.—Proposed Extension of the Powers of the Imperial War Graves Commission	23
XIX.—Address to His Majesty the King, Emperor of India ...	23
XX.—Concluding Resolution	24

LIST OF APPENDICES.*

I.—Opening Speeches.

II.—Statement by the Secretary of State for the Colonies as to the Colonies Protectorates, and Mandated Territories.

III.—Statements by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs as regards the Turkish Treaty and the Reparations Problem.

IV.—Speeches regarding the work of the League of Nations.

V.—Speeches regarding the position of Indians in other parts of the Empire.

VI.—Papers regarding Nationality questions.

VII.—Address by His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar on the Dussehra Festival, 19th October.

VIII.—Reply from His Majesty the King, Emperor of India, to the Address from the Conference.

* Published separately in Cmd. 1988.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62504

I.—PRELIMINARY NOTE.

THE proceedings of the Conference opened at 10, Downing Street, on October 1st, 1923, and were continued until November 8th. During that period 16 plenary meetings took place, which were normally attended by the following:—

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, M.P., Prime Minister, (Chairman).
The Most Hon. the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.
The Most Hon. the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

CANADA.

The Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, C.M.G., Prime Minister.
The Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals.
The Hon. Sir Lomer Gouin, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General.

COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

The Rt. Hon. S. M. Bruce, M.C., Prime Minister.
Senator The Hon. R. V. Wilson, Honorary Minister in Charge of Departments of Health and Migration.

NEW ZEALAND.

The Rt. Hon. W. F. Massey, Prime Minister.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

General The Rt. Hon. J. C. Smuts, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister.
The Hon. H. Burton, K.C., Minister of Finance.
The Hon. N. J. de Wet, K.C., Minister of Justice.

IRISH FREE STATE.

Professor John MacNeill, T.D., Minister of Education.
Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald, T.D., Minister of External Affairs.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

The Hon. W. R. Warren, K.C., Prime Minister.

INDIA.

The Rt. Hon. Viscount Peel, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India and Head of the Indian Delegation.
Colonel His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.
Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, K.C.S.I.

C 62505

SECRETARIAT.

Great Britain.

Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B.
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

Canada.

Dr. O. D. Skelton.

Commonwealth of Australia.

Sir R. R. Garran, K.C.M.G.

New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. Thomson, C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.

Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.

Mr. P. McGilligan.

Newfoundland.

Mr. W. J. Carew.

India.

Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

Other Ministers took part in the proceedings at one or more meetings.

These were:—

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Rt. Hon. Lord Robert Cecil, K.C., M.P., Lord Privy Seal.
The Rt. Hon. Neville Chamberlain, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer.
The Rt. Hon. W. C. Bridgeman, M.P., Secretary of State for Home Affairs.
The Rt. Hon. The Earl of Derby, K.G., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for War.
The Rt. Hon. Sir Samuel Hoare, Bart., C.M.G., M.P., Secretary of State for Air.
The Rt. Hon. L. S. Amery, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty.
The Rt. Hon. Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame, K.B.E., M.C., M.P., President of the Board of Trade.
The Hon. W. G. Ormsby-Gore, M.P., Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

IRISH FREE STATE.

Mr. W. T. Cosgrave, T.D., President of the Executive Council.
Mr. Kevin O'Higgins, T.D., Vice-President of the Executive Council.
General R. Mulcahy, Minister of Defence.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62506

Mr. J. C. C. Davidson, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and Minister in Charge of Publicity, and Sir J. Masterton Smith, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office, were present at nearly all the Sessions of the Conference.

The following also attended for the discussion of subjects which particularly concerned their respective departments :—

GREAT BRITAIN.

Admiral of the Fleet Earl Beatty, G.C.B., O.M., G.C.V.O., D.S.O., First Sea Lord and Chief of Naval Staff, Admiralty.
General The Earl of Cavan, K.P., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., K.C.B., Chief of the Imperial General Staff, War Office.
Air Chief Marshal Sir Hugh M. Trenchard, Bart., K.C.B., D.S.O., Chief of the Air Staff, Air Ministry.
The Rt. Hon. Sir John Anderson, G.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Home Office.
Mr. R. G. Vansittart, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
Mr. A. W. A. Leeper, C.B.E., Assistant Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
Mr. T. Jones, Principal Assistant Secretary, Cabinet Office.
Lieut-Colonel C. W. G. Walker, D.S.O., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.
Commander H. R. Moore, D.S.O., R.N., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.
Major L. A. Clemens, O.B.E., M.C., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.
Major-General Sir Fabian Ware, K.C.V.O., K.B.E., C.B., C.M.G. Vice-Chairman of the Imperial War Graves Commission.
Major C. K. Phillips, O.B.E., Land and Legal Adviser, Imperia, War Graves Commission.

CANADA.

Major-General J. H. MacBrien, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Chief of General Staff, Canada.
Commodore Walter Hose, C.B.E., R.C.N., Director of Naval Service, Canada.

COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Vice-Admiral Sir Allan F. Everett, K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., C.B., First Naval Member of the Royal Australian Naval Board.
Rear-Admiral P. H. Hall-Thompson, C.M.G., First Naval Member Designate of the Royal Australian Naval Board.
Brigadier-General T. A. Blaney, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Australian Representative on the Imperial General Staff, War Office.

NEW ZEALAND.

Commodore A. G. Hotham, C.M.G., R.N., Naval Adviser to the New Zealand Delegation.

C 62507

IRISH FREE STATE.

General Sean MacMahon, Chief of Staff, Irish Free State.
Major-General J. J. O'Connell, Assistant Chief of Staff, Irish Free State.
Mr. O. Esmonde. (acting for Mr. McGilligan).

INDIA.

Lieut.-General Sir Alexander Cobbe, V.C., K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Secretary, Military Department, India Office.
Lieut.-Colonel Sir Wolseley Haig, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., C.M.G., C.B.E., Political Secretary to His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

In addition to the meetings of the full Conference, there were eleven meetings of Committees, and technical discussions on Defence Questions at the Admiralty and Air Ministry.

II.—OPENING STATEMENTS.

In opening the Proceedings on October 1st, Mr. Stanley Baldwin, as Chairman, extended a welcome to the Representatives of the Dominions and India, and referred especially to the enlargement which had taken place in the circle of the Imperial Conference by the constitution in 1922 of the Irish Free State.

Mr. Baldwin then made a general statement on the Imperial and International situation, in which he reviewed the chief events which had taken place since the Conference of 1921, and outlined briefly the agenda of the Conference and the main problems which would come before it.

Speeches were made in reply by the Prime Ministers of Canada New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, and Newfoundland, by the President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State, and by the Maharajah of Alwar for India. The cordial greeting extended by Mr. Baldwin to the Representatives of the Irish Free State was warmly endorsed by other speakers, and Mr. Cosgrave expressed his deep appreciation of the welcome which he and his colleagues had received.

These opening speeches were published in full immediately afterwards.*

The Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia was not present at the opening meeting: he was unable to reach London until October 5th.

III.—MESSAGE TO THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN.

The first official act of the Conference, in accordance with the

* See Appendix I in Cmd. 1988.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

practice on previous occasions, was to send a message of greeting to Their Majesties the King and Queen.

The words of this message were :—

"The Prime Ministers and other Representatives of the British Empire assembled in Conference, at their first meeting and as their first official act, desire to express their respectful greetings and fidelity to the King, and fervently hope that His Majesty and Her Majesty the Queen may be long spared to strengthen those ties of love and devotion which unite the peoples of the British Commonwealth."

His Majesty's gracious reply was read aloud by the Prime Minister of Great Britain at the meeting on October 5th and was in the following terms :—

"I sincerely thank the Prime Ministers and other Representatives of the British Empire for the generous terms of the message which they have addressed to the Queen and myself on the occasion of the opening of the Imperial Conference. I sincerely trust that their deliberations will lead to a solution of those many and grave problems the settlement of which is so essential to the future welfare and prosperity of the Commonwealth of the British Nations.

GEORGE R.I."

IV. MESSAGE TO JAPAN.

It was also resolved at the first meeting of the Conference to send the following message of sympathy to Japan :—

"The Prime Ministers and Representatives of Great Britain, the British Dominions and India, assembled at the Imperial Conference, desire at their opening session to send to their old and faithful ally, Japan, an expression of their profound sympathy in the terrible calamity by which she has been assailed; their admiration of the patriotic energy and unconquerable spirit with which the Japanese nation have met the blow; and their confident expectation that Japan will rapidly recover from a shock that might have overwhelmed any less courageous people and will pursue, undismayed, the great part that she is destined to fill in the social and economic progress of the world."

In reply to this message a note was received from the Japanese Ambassador in London. This note, which was read aloud by the Prime Minister of Great Britain at the meeting on the 11th October, was as follows :—

"Under instructions from the Japanese Premier, I have the honour to request Your Lordship to convey to the Right Honourable Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister, and his eminent colleagues on the Imperial Conference, the Japanese Premier's sincere thanks for the touching message of sympathy in the calamity which has befallen Japan. Count Yamamoto desires to assure Mr. Baldwin that the manifestation of cordial sentiment coming as it did so promptly from the representative statesmen of the British Empire, the old and never failing ally of Japan, has deeply moved the Japanese nation in their great distress and will give them encouragement and reassurance in taking up the tremendous task of reconstruction.

I have, etc.,

HAYASHI."

V.—DEATH OF MR. BONAR LAW.

The Rt. Hon. A. Bonar Law, Prime Minister of Great Britain from October 24th, 1922, to May 21st, 1923, died on October 31st. One of his first acts on assuming office had been to have a message of invitation sent to the Dominions and India, which resulted in the calling of the Imperial Conference and of the Imperial Economic Conference this year.

The following resolution was passed by the Conference at its meeting on the afternoon of October 31st :—

"The Members of the Imperial Conference have learnt with the most profound regret of the death of the Rt. Hon. Andrew Bonar Law, at whose invitation, issued on his assuming office last year, the present Conference is now meeting.

"They desire to express to the members of the late Prime Minister's family their deep sympathy in the irreparable loss which they and the Empire have sustained by his death."

VI.—PUBLICITY.

The Conference gave special attention to the question of publicity for its proceedings. There was general agreement that at meetings of this nature, where questions of high policy and of the greatest consequence to all parts of the British Commonwealth are surveyed and dealt with, it was of the first importance that the representatives present should feel able to speak among themselves with the utmost freedom and in a spirit of complete confidence. Hence, it was considered essential that nothing should be published without the approval of the Conference as a whole and under its directions.

At the same time it was felt that the proceedings of the Conference would cause wide interest among the peoples of the countries represented, and consequently that, as opportunity offered, information regarding its deliberations should be made public.

It was decided to place the general arrangements as to publicity in charge of a British Minister, and, at the unanimous wish of the Conference, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Mr. J. C. C. Davidson, C.H., C.B., M.P., was asked to be present at the meetings and to undertake the necessary work.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

This procedure, though of an experimental character, turned out to be of much value and at the conclusion of the meetings the Conference expressed to Mr. Davidson its great indebtedness for his valuable help.

A discussion also took place, at the instance of the Prime Minister of Canada, as to the desire of the Parliaments of the various parts of the Empire to be afforded the fullest information possible on all matters concerning which negotiations were going on, or discussions taking place, between the various Governments. It was felt that as many as possible of the communications passing ought to be made available for the use of the Parliaments, and a general understanding was reached as to the principles which should govern the publication of correspondence between the Governments.

VII.—COLONIES, PROTECTORATES AND MANDATED TERRITORIES.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies gave to the Conference, on October 3rd, a comprehensive review, subsequently published*, of the situation in the Colonies, Protectorates, and Mandated Territories.

A general discussion followed on various aspects of policy in regard to the development of the Colonial Empire and the Mandated Territories, and great stress was laid by the representatives of the Dominions and India on the economic importance of these parts of the world and, in particular, on the value to the Empire as a whole of the great tropical territories in East and West Africa and in Eastern Asia.

One question touched on was the recent arrangement concluded with the Belgian Government for the rectification of the Ruanda Boundary, and it was made clear that this rectification still left available a strip of the British mandated territory of Tanganyika west of Lake Victoria, which could be utilised for the construction of a line north and south.

The Prime Minister of Newfoundland expressed his interest in the researches about to be undertaken in the Antarctic by the late Captain Scott's ship "Discovery." It had already been arranged that any information obtained from these researches should be made available to the Government of the Union of South Africa, and the Duke of Devonshire undertook that the information should be supplied also to the Newfoundland Government.

It should be added that the further developments in the Middle East, and particularly in Palestine, which occurred during the sittings of the Conference, were placed before it.

The Conference took note of these developments.

VIII.—FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced on October 5th by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who gave to the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and, secondly, of those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

* See Appendix II in Cmd. 1988.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the Representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that extracts from those parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, viz., the situation in connection with the Reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.*

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State and the three members of the Indian delegation, took part.†

Frequent and detailed examination was given, not only to the main features of the international situation, but to the different aspects of that situation as they developed from day to day. Nor did the Imperial Conference terminate its sittings until each subject had been carefully explored and a common understanding reached upon the main heads of foreign policy.

It was while the Conference was sitting that the President of the United States renewed the offer of the United States Government to take part in an international conference or enquiry to investigate the European Reparations problem, and to report upon the capacity of Germany to make the payments to which she is pledged. The Conference cordially welcomed, and decided to take immediate advantage of, this overture; and communications were at once entered into with the Allied Powers to obtain their co-operation.

The Conference, after careful consideration of the policy which has been pursued, was of the opinion that the European situation could only be lifted on to the plane of a possible settlement by the co-operation of the United States of America, and that, if the scheme of common enquiry to be followed by common action were to break down, the results would be inimical both to the peace and to the economic recovery of the world.

It felt that in such an event it would be desirable for the British Government to consider very carefully the alternative of summoning a Conference itself in order to examine the financial and the economic problem in its widest aspect.

* See Appendix III in Cmd. 1988.

† For speeches on the work of the League of Nations see Appendix IV in Cmd. 1988.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62512

The Conference regarded any policy which would result in breaking up the unity of the German State as inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers, and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. The strongest representations on this subject were accordingly made to the Allied Governments.

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension, of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe; and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem, which will safeguard important communications between several parts of the Empire.

The Conference, so much of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference, which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations that have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

It recognised with satisfaction the progressive fulfilment of the obligations incurred under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public opinion or of official action was seriously debated. The Conference arrived at the conclusion that, while affirming and safeguarding as a cardinal feature of British policy the principle of the three mile limit, it was yet both desirable and practicable to meet the American request for an extension of the right of search beyond this limit for the above purpose, and negotiations were at once opened with the United States Government for the conclusion of an experimental agreement with this object in view.

Finally the Conference, after listening to a detailed exposition of the work of the League of Nations during the past two years, and more particularly of the recent sitting of the Council and the Assembly at Geneva, placed on record its emphatic approval of the action that had been taken by, and the support that had been given to, the representatives of the British Empire on the latter occasion. There was full accord that the League should be given the unabated support of all the British members of the League as a valuable instrument of international peace, and as the sole available organ for the harmonious regulation of many international affairs.

C 62513

This Conference is a conference of representatives of the several Governments of the Empire; its views and conclusions on Foreign Policy, as recorded above, are necessarily subject to the action of the Governments and Parliaments of the various portions of the Empire, and it trusts that the results of its deliberations will meet with their approval.

IX.—NEGOTIATION, SIGNATURE AND RATIFICATION OF TREATIES.

The principles governing the relations of the various parts of the Empire in connection with the negotiation, signature and ratification of Treaties seemed to the Conference to be of the greatest importance. Accordingly it was arranged that the subject should be fully examined by a Committee, of which the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs was Chairman. The Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Prime Ministers of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and Newfoundland, the Minister of External Affairs of the Irish Free State, and the Secretary of State for India as Head of the Indian Delegation, served on this Committee. With the assistance of the Legal Adviser to the Foreign Office, Sir C. J. B. Hurst, K.C.B., K.C., the following Resolution was drawn up and agreed to:—

> "The Conference recommends for the acceptance of the governments of the Empire represented that the following procedure should be observed in the negotiation, signature and ratification of international agreements.
>
> "The word 'treaty' is used in the sense of an agreement which, in accordance with the normal practice of diplomacy, would take the form of a treaty between Heads of States, signed by plenipotentiaries provided with Full Powers issued by the Heads of the States, and authorising the holders to conclude a treaty."

I.

"1. Negotiation.

"(a) It is desirable that no treaty should be negotiated by any of the governments of the Empire without due consideration of its possible effect on other parts of the Empire, or, if circumstances so demand, on the Empire as a whole.

"(b) Before negotiations are opened with the intention of concluding a treaty, steps should be taken to ensure that any of the other governments of the Empire likely to be interested are informed, so that, if any such government considers that its interests would be affected, it may have an opportunity of expressing its views, or, when its interests are intimately involved, of participating in the negotiations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62512

The Conference regarded any policy which would result in breaking up the unity of the German State as inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers, and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. The strongest representations on this subject were accordingly made to the Allied Governments.

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension, of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe; and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem, which will safeguard important communications between several parts of the Empire.

The Conference, so much of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference, which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations that have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

It recognised with satisfaction the progressive fulfilment of the obligations incurred under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public opinion or of official action was seriously debated. The Conference arrived at the conclusion that, while affirming and safeguarding as a cardinal feature of British policy the principle of the three mile limit, it was yet both desirable and practicable to meet the American request for an extension of the right of search beyond this limit for the above purpose, and negotiations were at once opened with the United States Government for the conclusion of an experimental agreement with this object in view.

Finally the Conference, after listening to a detailed exposition of the work of the League of Nations during the past two years, and more particularly of the recent sitting of the Council and the Assembly at Geneva, placed on record its emphatic approval of the action that had been taken by, and the support that had been given to, the representatives of the British Empire on the latter occasion. There was full accord that the League should be given the unabated support of all the British members of the League as a valuable instrument of international peace, and as the sole available organ for the harmonious regulation of many international affairs.

C 62513

This Conference is a conference of representatives of the several Governments of the Empire; its views and conclusions on Foreign Policy, as recorded above, are necessarily subject to the action of the Governments and Parliaments of the various portions of the Empire, and it trusts that the results of its deliberations will meet with their approval.

IX.—NEGOTIATION, SIGNATURE AND RATIFICATION OF TREATIES.

The principles governing the relations of the various parts of the Empire in connection with the negotiation, signature and ratification of Treaties seemed to the Conference to be of the greatest importance. Accordingly it was arranged that the subject should be fully examined by a Committee, of which the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs was Chairman. The Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Prime Ministers of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and Newfoundland, the Minister of External Affairs of the Irish Free State, and the Secretary of State for India as Head of the Indian Delegation, served on this Committee. With the assistance of the Legal Adviser to the Foreign Office, Sir C. J. B. Hurst, K.C.B., K.C., the following Resolution was drawn up and agreed to:—

> "The Conference recommends for the acceptance of the governments of the Empire represented that the following procedure should be observed in the negotiation, signature and ratification of international agreements.
>
> "The word 'treaty' is used in the sense of an agreement which, in accordance with the normal practice of diplomacy, would take the form of a treaty between Heads of States, signed by plenipotentiaries provided with Full Powers issued by the Heads of the States, and authorising the holders to conclude a treaty."

I.

"1. Negotiation.

"(a) It is desirable that no treaty should be negotiated by any of the governments of the Empire without due consideration of its possible effect on other parts of the Empire, or, if circumstances so demand, on the Empire as a whole.

"(b) Before negotiations are opened with the intention of concluding a treaty, steps should be taken to ensure that any of the other governments of the Empire likely to be interested are informed, so that, if any such government considers that its interests would be affected, it may have an opportunity of expressing its views, or, when its interests are intimately involved, of participating in the negotiations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"(c) In all cases where more than one of the governments of the Empire participates in the negotiations, there should be the fullest possible exchange of views between those governments before and during the negotiations. In the case of treaties negotiated at International Conferences, where there is a British Empire Delegation, on which, in accordance with the now established practice, the Dominions and India are separately represented, such representation should also be utilised to attain this object.

"(d) Steps should be taken to ensure that those governments of the Empire whose representatives are not participating in the negotiations should, during their progress, be kept informed in regard to any points arising in which they may be interested.

"2. Signature.

"(a) Bilateral treaties imposing obligations on one part of the Empire only should be signed by a representative of the government of that part. The Full Power issued to such representative should indicate the part of the Empire in respect of which the obligations are to be undertaken, and the preamble and text of the treaty should be so worded as to make its scope clear.

"(b) Where a bilateral treaty imposes obligations on more than one part of the Empire, the treaty should be signed by one or more plenipotentiaries on behalf of all the governments concerned.

"(c) As regards treaties negotiated at International Conferences, the existing practice of signature by plenipotentiaries on behalf of all the governments of the Empire represented at the Conference should be continued, and the Full Powers should be in the form employed at Paris and Washington.

"3. Ratification.

"The existing practice in connection with the ratification of treaties should be maintained.

II.

"Apart from treaties made between Heads of States, it is not unusual for agreements to be made between governments. Such agreements, which are usually of a technical or administrative character, are made in the names of the signatory governments, and signed by representatives of those governments, who do not act under Full Powers issued by the Heads of the States: they are not ratified by the Heads of the States, though in some cases some form of acceptance or confirmation by the governments concerned is employed. As regards agreements of this nature the existing practice should be continued, but before entering on negotiations the governments of the Empire should consider whether the interests of any other part of the Empire may be affected, and, if so, steps should be taken to ensure that the government of such part is informed of the proposed negotiations, in order that it may have an opportunity of expressing its views."

The Resolution was submitted to the full Conference and unanimously approved. It was thought, however, that it would be of assistance to add a short explanatory statement in connection with part I (3), setting out the existing procedure in relation to the ratification of Treaties. This procedure is as follows:—

(a) The ratification of treaties imposing obligations on one part of the Empire is effected at the instance of the government of that part:

(b) The ratification of treaties imposing obligations on more than one part of the Empire is effected after consultation between the governments of those parts of the Empire concerned. It is for each government to decide whether Parliamentary approval or legislation is required before desire for, or concurrence in, ratification is intimated by that government.

X.—THE UNITED STATES AND "C" MANDATES.

Certain general questions concerning the territories in South West Africa and the Southern Pacific administered under "C" Mandates had been raised by the Government of the United States of America, and the opportunity of the Conference was taken to examine these questions.

XI.—CONDOMINIUM IN THE NEW HEBRIDES.

The developments in the New Hebrides since the Conference of 1921 were examined and the present situation and possibilities of action further discussed by representatives of the British Government in consultation with the Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth of Australia and New Zealand.

XII.—DEFENCE.

The Conference gave special consideration to the question of Defence, and the manner in which co-operation and mutual assistance could best be effected after taking into account the political and geographical conditions of the various parts of the Empire.

The Lord President of the Council, as Chairman of the Committee of Imperial Defence, opened this part of the work of the Conference by a statement outlining the main problems of Defence as they exist to-day. He was followed by the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Secretary of State for War and the Secretary of State for Air, each of whom explained to the Conference the aspects of defence which concerned his special responsibilities.

In addition to these statements there was a full and frank interchange of views in which the standpoints of the various representatives and the circumstances of their countries were made clear. There were

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

also discussions at the Admiralty and Air Ministry at which Naval and Air Defence were dealt with in greater detail. The points involved were explained by the Chiefs of the Naval and Air Staffs respectively and were further examined.

In connection with Naval Defence one matter of immediate interest came before the Conference, namely, the projected Empire Cruise of a squadron of modern warships. The First Lord of the Admiralty explained that the project was that two capital ships, the "Hood" and the "Repulse," together with a small squadron of modern light cruisers, should visit South Africa, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand, and return by way of British Columbia, the Panama Canal and Eastern Canada. The light cruisers would accompany the battle cruisers as far as British Columbia, but would return to England by way of the west coast of South America and Cape Horn. The Dominion Prime Ministers expressed their appreciation of this proposal, and assured the Conference that the ships would be most heartily welcomed in their countries.

After the whole field of Defence had been surveyed, the Conference decided that it would be advisable to record in the following resolutions its conclusions on the chief matters which had been discussed :—

"(1) The Conference affirms that it is necessary to provide for the adequate defence of the territories and trade of the several countries comprising the British Empire.

(2) In this connection the Conference expressly recognises that it is for the Parliaments of the several parts of the Empire, upon the recommendations of their respective Governments, to decide the nature and extent of any action which should be taken by them.

(3) Subject to this provision, the Conference suggests the following as guiding principles :—

(a) The primary responsibility of each portion of the Empire represented at the Conference for its own local defence.

(b) Adequate provision for safeguarding the maritime communications of the several parts of the Empire and the routes and waterways along and through which their armed forces and trade pass.

(c) The provision of Naval bases and facilities for repair and fuel so as to ensure the mobility of the fleets.

(d) The desirability of the maintenance of a minimum standard of Naval Strength, namely, equality with the Naval Strength of any foreign power, in accordance with the provisions of the Washington Treaty on Limitation of Armament as approved by Great Britain, all the self-governing Dominions and India.

(e) The desirability of the development of the Air Forces in the several countries of the Empire upon such lines as will make it possible, by means of the adoption, as far as practicable, of a common system of organisation and training and the use of uniform manuals, patterns of arms, equipment, and stores (with the exception of the type of aircraft), for each part of the Empire as it may determine to co-operate with other parts with the least possible delay and the greatest efficiency.

(4) In the application of these principles to the several parts of the Empire concerned the Conference takes note of :—

(a) The deep interest of the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, and India, in the provision of a Naval Base at Singapore, as essential for ensuring the mobility necessary to provide for the security of the territories and trade of the Empire in Eastern Waters.

(b) The necessity for the maintenance of safe passage along the great route to the East through the Mediterranean and the Red Sea.

(c) The necessity for the maintenance by Great Britain of a Home Defence Air Force of sufficient strength to give adequate protection against air attack by the strongest air force within striking distance of her shores.

(5) The Conference, while deeply concerned for the paramount importance of providing for the safety and integrity of all parts of the Empire, earnestly desires, so far as is consistent with this consideration, the further limitation of armaments, and trusts that no opportunity may be lost to promote this object."

XIII.—STATUS OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS.

Certain questions were discussed relating to the status of the High Commissioners in Great Britain, particularly in connection with precedence and with exemption from taxation, Customs duties, etc.

The representatives of the British Government undertook to examine the points raised, while explaining that any alteration of the existing rules of precedence would require the approval of His Majesty the King.

XIV.—POSITION OF INDIANS IN OTHER PARTS OF THE EMPIRE.

The position of Indians in other parts of the Empire was reviewed by the Conference in the light of the developments which have taken place since the Resolution which formed part of the Pro-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62518

ceedings at the 1921 Conference.* The subject was opened by a general statement from the Secretary of State for India as Head of the Indian Delegation. He explained that the intensity of feeling aroused in India by this question was due to the opinion widely held there (which, however, he did not himself share) that the disabilities of Indians were based on distinction of colour and were badges of racial inferiority. This statement was followed by a full presentation of the case on behalf of India by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

It was found possible to publish these speeches, and those made in the course of the discussions by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Dominion Prime Ministers and the Minister of External Affairs of the Irish Free State, shortly after the speeches had been delivered.† In this respect the procedure differed from that at the Conference of 1921 when only the Resolution adopted was made public. It is unnecessary in the present Report to do more than refer to the main proposal made on behalf of the Indian Delegation and the views expressed and conclusions reached with regard to it. The Indian proposal was to the effect that the Dominion Governments concerned, and the British Government for the Colonies and Protectorates, should agree to the appointment of Committees to confer with a Committee appointed by the Indian Government as to the best and quickest means of giving effect to the Resolution of the 1921 Conference.

In the case of the Union of South Africa, which was not a party to the 1921 Resolution, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru expressed the hope that the Union Government would agree to the Government of India sending an agent to South Africa who would protect Indian nationals there, who would serve as an intermediary between them and the Union Government, and who would place the Indian Government in full possession of the facts regarding Indian nationals in South Africa.

The Conference expressed its high appreciation of the able and moderate manner in which Lord Peel and his colleagues had presented the Indian case. The opinions expressed and the conclusions reached with regard to the above suggestions were, in brief, as follows :—

The Prime Minister of Canada observed that, so far as he knew, Indians now domiciled in Canada did not suffer any legal or political disability in eight out of the nine provinces of Canada ; as regards the ninth province—British Columbia—he was not aware of any legal disability, and even the political disability that existed in the matter of the exercise of the franchise does not apply to all Indians because the federal law relating to the franchise lays it down that any Indian who served with His Majesty's military, naval or air forces is entitled to the franchise. He explained the present difficulties in conceding the franchise to Indians generally in British Columbia which are due not to distinction of colour but to economic and complex political considerations, and he reiterated what he had already said to Mr. Sastri on the occasion of the latter's visit to Canada in 1922, namely, that the question whether natives of India resident in Canada should be granted a Dominion Parliamentary Franchise on terms and conditions identical with those which govern the exercise of that right by Canadian citizens generally was necessarily one which Parliament alone could determine, and that the matter would be submitted to Parliament for consideration when the Franchise Law comes up for revision.

* Cmd. 1474, P. 8. † See Appendix V in Cmd. 1988.

C 62519

Mr. Mackenzie King added that he was somewhat doubtful whether the visit of a Committee appointed by the Government of India would make it easier to deal with this problem in Canada, but that, should it be desired to send a Committee, the Canadian Government would readily appoint a Committee to confer with the Committee from India.

The Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia explained the principles underlying the present attitude of Australia on this question. He stated that the representatives of every shade of political thought in Australia had shown sympathy with the claim that lawfully domiciled Indians should enjoy full citizen rights, and that he believed that public opinion was ready to welcome, so far as concerned the position of such Indians, any measure conceived in the interests of the Empire as a whole.

The Commonwealth had the right to control the admission to its territories of new citizens, and its immigration policy was founded on economic considerations. He felt that, in view of the position which existed in Australia, there was no necessity for a Committee, but assured the Indian representatives that he would consult his colleagues on his return to Australia as to what action should be taken in connection with the Resolution of the 1921 Conference.

The Prime Minister of New Zealand said that the New Zealand Government would welcome the visit of a Committee from India such as had been suggested should this be desired ; New Zealand practically gave the natives of India now resident in the Dominion the same privileges as were enjoyed by people of the Anglo-Saxon race who were settled there.

The Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa intimated that, so far as South Africa was concerned, it was not a question of colour, but that a different principle was involved. He stated that the attitude of thinking men in South Africa was not that the Indian was inferior because of his colour or on any other ground—he might be their superior—but the question had to be considered from the point of view of economic competition. In other words, the white community in South Africa felt that the whole question of the continuance of western civilisation in South Africa was involved. General Smuts could hold out no hope of any further extension of the political rights of Indians in South Africa and, so far as the Union was concerned, he could not accept Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's proposal.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies, on behalf of the British Government, cordially accepted the proposal of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru that there should be full consultation and discussion between the Secretary of State for the Colonies and a Committee appointed by the Government of India upon all questions affecting British Indians

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

domiciled in British Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories. At the same time the Duke of Devonshire was careful to explain that, before decisions were taken as a result of discussions with the Committee, consultations with the local Colonial Governments concerned, and in some cases local enquiry, would be necessary.

Further, while welcoming the proposal, the Duke reminded the Conference that the British Government had recently come to certain decisions as to Kenya, which represented in their considered view the very best that could be done in all the circumstances. While he saw no prospect of these decisions being modified, he would give careful attention to such representations as the Committee appointed by the Government of India might desire to make to him.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, while taking note of the above statement of the Duke of Devonshire, desired to make plain that the recent Kenya decision could not be accepted as final by the people of India.

The Secretary of State for India, summarising as Head of the Indian Delegation the results attained, pointed out that the discussion had demonstrated that it was a mistake to suppose that Indians throughout the Empire were given an inferior status or that such disabilities as might be felt to exist were based on race or colour.

XV.—CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO THE EXPENSES OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The question of the contribution of India to the expenses of the League of Nations was raised by the representatives of India at the Conference and was referred to a Committee under the Chairmanship of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. It was there explained by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru that India was assessed far higher than any other part of the Empire, except Great Britain. In 1922, Lord Balfour had stated publicly at a meeting of the Assembly that the various parts of the Empire represented on the League would settle among themselves the exact amount which each would find. India desired to ascertain whether, in view of this statement, some relief could be afforded by the other parts of the Empire.

The members of the Committee representing Great Britain and the Dominions, while expressing sympathy with the difficulties of India, explained that their Governments were not able to agree to any variation from the standard of contributions already laid down by the Assembly for 1923 and 1924.

In the circumstances it was, of course, impossible for the Committee as a whole to make any recommendation. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru intimated that India must necessarily reserve the right to raise the question of its contribution at the League Assembly of 1924, and the Secretary of State for India, as Head of the Indian Delegation, affirmed this attitude when the matter came up before the Conference.

The Conference took note of the position.

XVI.—NATIONALITY QUESTIONS.

Certain questions connected with the law of British nationality were brought before the Conference at the instance of the Commonwealth Government and were referred to a Committee under the Chairmanship of the Secretary of State for Home Affairs.* These questions were shortly as follows :—

(1) The grant of naturalisation to persons resident in Mandated Territories.

Apart from certain special cases, there is under the existing law no power to grant an Imperial Certificate of Naturalisation to a person who is not qualified by residence in His Majesty's Dominions. The Commonwealth Government proposed an amendment of the law, so as to provide for the grant of certificates on the basis of residence in " B " or " C " Mandated Territories, i.e., the territories administered under Mandates in Africa and the Southern Pacific. To this proposal (which accorded with certain recent decisions of the Council of the League of Nations) the British Government added the suggestion that similar provision should be made, generally speaking, in the case of persons resident in British Protectorates.†

The Committee decided to recommend that the power of granting Certificates of Imperial Naturalisation be extended so as to cover persons resident in " B " and " C " Mandated Territories and also in Protectorates.

(2) The appointment of Committees of Enquiry in connection with the Revocation of Certificates.

A self-governing Dominion which has adopted Part II of the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, as amended, has power in accordance with the provisions of Section 7 of that Act to revoke certificates of naturalisation. Provision is made in the Act for investigation of the circumstances, in given instances, by a Committee of Enquiry, presided over by a person who holds or has held high judicial office. The Commonwealth statute adopting Part II of the Imperial Act laid down a definition of high judicial office which it is now anticipated may cause difficulty in some cases, as persons of the prescribed standing may not be available. The Commonwealth Government accordingly contemplated the adoption of a somewhat wider definition.

The Committee came to the following conclusion :—

> " Having heard the reasons for which the Commonwealth Government is disposed to provide that the presidency over such Committees of Enquiry may, where convenient, be taken by persons holding judicial office of lower standing than that prescribed at present by the Commonwealth statute, the Committee see no objection to a question of machinery of this nature being settled according to local circumstances and needs, if after examination of the experience of the Committee of Enquiry, and of the practice which has grown up in the United Kingdom, the Commonwealth Government desires to make an alteration."

* For the memorandum prepared by the Commonwealth Government see Appendix VI, Part I, in Cmd. 1988.

† For a joint memorandum on this subject by the Home Office and the Colonial Office see Appendix VI, Part II, in Cmd. 1988.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62522

(3) The Nationality of Married Women.

The Commonwealth Government proposed an amendment of the Imperial nationality law as to the nationality of British-born women married to aliens. Under the present law the national status of the wife follows that of her husband; a British woman becomes an alien on her marriage to an alien, and there is no power to naturalise her during the continuance of the marriage. The Commonwealth Government have found that the wife's loss of British nationality tends to give rise to hardship in cases where the wife is separated from, or has been deserted by, her husband, and they accordingly suggested an alteration of the law to cover such cases.

This proposal raises wider questions of principle and policy in regard to the national status of married women, which have attracted considerable attention in recent years both within the British Empire and in certain foreign countries.* A number of arguments for and against maintaining the existing rule that "The wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject and the wife of an alien shall be deemed to be an alien" will be found in the two draft Reports† prepared by Members of a Select Committee of both Houses of the British Parliament who examined this question earlier in the year in connection with proposals which had been made for a fundamental alteration in the law.

The discussion of this question by the Committee of the Conference did not disclose any opinion in favour of altering the existing law as to the nationality of husband and wife; and the following resolution was passed:—

> "The Committee are of opinion that the principle of the existing law that the nationality of a married woman depends on that of her husband should be maintained. They nevertheless recommend that power should be taken to re-admit a woman to British nationality in cases where the married state, though subsisting in law, has to all practical purposes come to an end."

The conclusions of the Committee were reported to the Conference and received approval.

XVII.—VALIDITY OF MARRIAGES BETWEEN BRITISH SUBJECTS AND FOREIGNERS.

Another matter suggested by the Commonwealth Government for consideration by the Conference concerned the law relating to the validity of marriages between British subjects and foreigners. The main difficulty appears to be that such a marriage, although validly contracted in British law, may nevertheless in certain circumstances be invalid in the law of the foreign country concerned.‡

The Committee, under the Chairmanship of the Home Secretary, to whom this question was referred, came to the conclusion that, having examined the action which is being taken by the Foreign Office and

* The subject in its various aspects is dealt with briefly in a Memorandum prepared by the Home Office, for which see Appendix VI, Part III, in Cmd. 1988.

† Published in House of Commons paper 115 of 1923.

‡ For the correspondence see Appendix VI, Part IV, in Cmd. 1988.

C 62522

the Home Office to carry into effect the Marriage with Foreigners Act, 1906, they had no recommendation to make. The Committee's resolution to this effect was laid before the Conference and accepted.

XVIII.—PROPOSED EXTENSION OF THE POWERS OF THE IMPERIAL WAR GRAVES COMMISSION.

During the course of the Conference a proposal was received from the Imperial War Graves Commission that the powers conferred upon the Commission by the Charter of 10th May, 1917, and the Supplementary Charter of 10th August, 1921, should be extended so as to enable the Commission to comply with a request, based on public expediency and economy, that they should undertake the public duty of the future maintenance of such Cemeteries and Graves as the Old Military Cemetery at Tel el Kebir, the Crimean Cemetery at Scutari, which is in the same plot of ground as the Commission's War Cemetery, and the older Cemeteries in Turkey which could more conveniently be maintained in conjunction with the graves of those who fell in the Great War.

This proposal was submitted to the Representatives of the Governments concerned, all of whom have indicated their acceptance of the proposed amendment of the Charters by the addition of a clause to the following effect:—

> "The Commission, if in their absolute discretion they deem it desirable, may, at the request of any Government of any part of Our Empire responsible for or desirous of maintaining any place of burial or memorial whether or not of or relating to such Officers or men as may fall within the descriptions contained in Our Original Charter of May 10, 1917, or Our Supplemental Charter of August 10, 1921, or of or relating to any other Officers, men or civilians whatever, exercise with regard to such place of burial or memorial aforesaid and the graves in such place of burial all or any of their powers as in the said Original and Supplemental Charters were applicable to the said burial place or memorial and graves, provided that the cost of or incidental to any exercise of the additional powers given by this Our Charter be provided by the Government making the aforesaid request.

Accordingly the necessary steps will be taken forthwith to incorporate a clause on the above lines in a further Supplementary Charter for submission to His Majesty the King.

XIX.—ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING, EMPEROR OF INDIA.

The following Address to His Majesty was moved by the Prime Minister of Great Britain at the concluding meeting of the Conference and was unanimously adopted.* Mr. Baldwin, as Chairman of the Conference, was asked to submit the Address to His Majesty.

* For the reply from His Majesty see Appendix VIII in Cmd. 1988.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62524

To His Majesty the King, Emperor of India.

"We, the Prime Ministers and Representatives of the British Empire, who have been assembled to take counsel together during the past six weeks, desire, before our meetings come to an end, to give expression once again to our affection and respect for Your Majesty and Her Majesty the Queen, and to reaffirm our fidelity to the Crown.

"We have had to face, in the course of the deliberations at both our Conferences, many and serious problems which confront the sister nations and the peoples of the British Commonwealth. We shall count ourselves fortunate if we have been able to contribute towards the solution of these problems, even to a small degree.

"Yet as we look back on the years which have passed since the Great War, we are proud to feel that, amid the economic and political convulsions which have shaken the world, the British Empire stands firm and that its widely scattered peoples remain one in their belief in its ideals and their faith in its destiny.

"To the task of promoting that unity, of which the Crown is the emblem, Your Majesties have long devoted your strength and labours. We pray that the consciousness of the devotion of the peoples and the members of your Empire may encourage and uphold you in that task for many years to come."

XX.—CONCLUDING RESOLUTION.

The Conference at its concluding meeting placed on record the following Resolution:—

"Before the meetings of the Imperial Conference terminate, the Prime Minister of Great Britain and his colleagues desire to express their great pleasure at having been able to welcome in London the Prime Ministers of the Dominions and the other Representatives from overseas, and their appreciation of the readiness of other members of the Conference to travel so far in order to take part in its sittings.

On their part the Prime Ministers and Representatives of the Dominions and India wish to place on record their thanks, first to the Prime Minister of Great Britain for his conduct of the business of the Conference, and secondly, both to him and to the other members of the British Government for their constant attention to its work, in spite of the pressure of other duties.

The members of the Conference are unanimous that the hours spent in consultation have been of the greatest value, and will do much to facilitate the work of achieving unity of thought and action on matters of common concern to all parts of the Empire."

London.
8th November, 1923.

Printed under the authority of His Majesty's Stationery Office,
By Harrison & Sons, Ltd., 44–47, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.2.
(B 3/589)Q C. 517 5M 11/23 H & S. Ltd. Gp. 3

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr Mackenzie King.

C 62525

39

SECRET.

E. 91.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STATUS OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

(Ref:- E. 12th, 13th and 14th Meetings.)

The accompanying telegram from the Viceroy of India to the Secretary of State for India is circulated to Members of the Conference at the wish of Lord Peel.

(Sgd) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.
16th November, 1923.

From Viceroy, Department of Education, Health and Lands to Secretary of State for India.

Dated Delhi, 7th November, 1923.

Received 7th November, 1923, 8 a.m.

Priority A.

We have now the completed text of the speeches delivered at the Imperial Conference on the position of Indians overseas, and hasten to express to you and your colleagues on the Indian Delegation our grateful appreciation of all you have achieved by the strength and cogency of your advocacy of the Indian case. It is a cause of deep gratification to us that on this momentous occasion, the Government, Princes and Peoples of India have spoken with one voice. We desire also to express our appreciation of the spirit in which India's representation was received by the Conference as a whole, and the sympathy shown generally towards our claims and aspirations. To you personally we tender warm thanks for your efforts on India's behalf, and for your powerful presentation of her case. Please convey our warm thanks to Alwar and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. We owe to you and to them a deep debt of gratitude. We are publishing the above portion of this telegram, and also our telegrams to Maharajah Alwar and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62526

S E C R E T.

E. 91.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

40

STATUS OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

(Ref:- E. 12th, 13th and 14th Meetings.)

The accompanying telegram from the Viceroy of India to the Secretary of State for India is circulated to Members of the Conference at the wish of Lord Peel.

(Sgd) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.
16th November, 1923.

From Viceroy, Department of Education, Health and Lands to Secretary of State for India.

Dated Delhi, 7th November, 1923.

Received 7th November, 1923, 8 a.m.

Priority A.

We have now the completed text of the speeches delivered at the Imperial Conference on the position of Indians overseas, and hasten to express to you and your colleagues on the Indian Delegation our grateful appreciation of all you have achieved by the strength and cogency of your advocacy of the Indian case. It is a cause of deep gratification to us that on this momentous occasion, the Government, Princes and Peoples of India have spoken with one voice. We desire also to express our appreciation of the spirit in which India's representation was received by the Conference as a whole, and the sympathy shown generally towards our claims and aspirations. To you personally we tender warm thanks for your efforts on India's behalf, and for your powerful presentation of her case. Please convey our warm thanks to Alwar and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. We owe to you and to them a deep debt of gratitude. We are publishing the above portion of this telegram, and also our telegrams to Maharajah Alwar and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62527

S E C R E T.

E. 91.

59

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STATUS OF INDIANS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

(Ref:- E. 12th, 13th and 14th Meetings.)

The accompanying telegram from the Viceroy of India to the Secretary of State for India is circulated to Members of the Conference at the wish of Lord Peel.

(Sgd) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.
16th November, 1923.

From Viceroy, Department of Education, Health and Lands to Secretary of State for India.

Dated Delhi, 7th November, 1923.

Received 7th November, 1923, 8 a.m.

Priority A.

We have now the completed text of the speeches delivered at the Imperial Conference on the position of Indians overseas, and hasten to express to you and your colleagues on the Indian Delegation our grateful appreciation of all you have achieved by the strength and cogency of your advocacy of the Indian case. It is a cause of deep gratification to us that on this momentous occasion, the Government, Princes and Peoples of India have spoken with one voice. We desire also to express our appreciation of the spirit in which India's representation was received by the Conference as a whole, and the sympathy shown generally towards our claims and aspirations. To you personally we tender warm thanks for your efforts on India's behalf, and for your powerful presentation of her case. Please convey our warm thanks to Alwar and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. We owe to you and to them a deep debt of gratitude. We are publishing the above portion of this telegram, and also our telegrams to Maharajah Alwar and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru.

DEC 5 Recd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62528

Mr. Mackenzie King

S E C R E T.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

E.(P.S.) 2.Revise.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLICATION OF CORRESPONDENCE AND STATUS OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS.

The enclosed Statement as to privileges at present granted to

(a) Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers

and

(b) Dominion High Commissioners

in the matter of British Taxation is circulated in substitution for the paper on the same subject already circulated (E.(P.S.) 2).

Corrections have been found necessary in the first and second paragraphs.

It is requested that the original document may be returned in the accompanying envelopes.

(Signed) M.P.A. HANKEY.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.1.,

29th November, 1923.

DEC 12 Recd

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62529

6

SECRET.
E.(P.S.) 2.
Revise.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLICATION OF CORRESPONDENCE AND STATUS OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS.

STATEMENT AS TO PRIVILEGES AT PRESENT GRANTED TO

(a) Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers

and

(b) Dominion High Commissioners

in the matter of British Taxation.

I. INCOME TAX.

(1) The privileges in regard to Income Tax enjoyed by an Ambassador or Minister of a foreign State are secured to him by International Law, and depend on the fact that he represents a foreign State. Thus a foreign Government, and equally the permanent individual Head of a foreign State, are regarded as wholly exempt from British Income Tax.

The representative character of an Ambassador or Minister entitles him, not indeed to complete exemption from Income Tax, but to very wide immunities. These immunities are only one aspect - and an inseparable aspect - of the general diplomatic status accorded to him under International Law; another aspect is his immunity from legal proceedings.

(2) In the case of High Commissioners for the self-governing Dominions prior to 1916/17 no special relief was granted. From that year onwards relief from Income Tax on official emoluments has been given and this relief has now been made statutory by Sec.19 of the Finance Act, 1923. The concession made in 1916-17 was analogous to that made

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

made to the Consular and certain other representatives of foreign States. (From 1922/23 onwards Consular representatives are the only class of foreign non-diplomatic representative to enjoy such relief).

(3) The comparative position may be tabulated as follows:-

Nature of Income.	Ambassadors & Ministers.	High Commissioners.
(a) Income from earnings.	Diplomatic emoluments exempt.	Official emoluments exempt.
(b) Income from Investments etc.	Remittances from abroad exempt.	Remittances from abroad liable.
	Income from investments in the U.K.(except from British Govt.securities) liable.	Income from investments in the U.K. liable.
(c) Income from house or land property in U.K.	Exempt, if occupied for diplomatic purposes. Liable, if either (1) occupied for purely private purposes, or (2) let to a tenant. (Similar reliefs apply in the relatively trifling matters of I.H.D. and Land Tax).	Liable (but property relieved from tax, if owned by the Dominion Govt., and occupied for Governmental purposes).

II. CUSTOMS & EXCISE DUTIES.

(4) As a matter of international practice foreign Ambassadors or Ministers are granted exemption from customs duties in respect of articles required for their personal use.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The main articles now coming under the exemptions are motor-cars, tobacco, spirits and wine.

(5) Dominion High Commissioners are accorded relaxation in the examination of their baggage, and are also exempted from payment of all Customs Duties on first arrival.

No further exemption from Customs Duties is granted, except as regards motor cars for official use.

(6) Remission of Excise Duties has never been granted, either to foreign or Dominion representatives.

In the case of foreign representatives, however, there is an old standing exemption in respect of the relatively small matter of Establishment Excise Licence Duties, e.g. the gun licence and the licence to employ a male servant.

III. RATES.

and MOTOR CAR LICENCE DUTY.

(charges assessed and levied by the Local Authorities).

(7) Under reciprocal agreement with nearly all foreign countries foreign Ambassadors or Ministers are relieved of the part of the Rates referable to services not of direct benefit to them (poor relief, police rate &c.)

(8) There is no corresponding relief applicable to Dominion representatives.

(No exemption is given in respect of property owned by the Crown: the Crown in this country voluntarily foregoes any claim, in order to avoid adversely affecting other rate-payers in the neighbourhood).

(9) Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers are exempted from Motor Car Licence Duty whether their cars are owned by themselves or by their Governments.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Dominion High Commissioners are exempted from Motor Car Licence Duty in respect of Government-owned cars used by them for official purposes.

(10) It may be added that no privileges at all are given in regard to Stamp Duties or in regard to Death Duties except that any movable property which may be actually situate in an Embassy or Legation is exempt from Death Duties.

2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.

November 29th, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr Lakeside
Q. Mr Geddes
ok

E-1302-3
Printed

C 62533

LIST OF PAPERS SENT TO:- THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

E. 15th Meeting (1923). Stenographic Notes of the Fifteenth Meeting of the Imperial Conference, held at 10, Downing Street, S.W., on Tuesday, November 6, 1923, at 5 p.m. (2 copies).

E. 16th Meeting (1923). Stenographic Notes of the Sixteenth Meeting of the Imperial Conference, held at 10, Downing Street, S.W., on Thursday, November 8, 1923, at 4.30 p.m. (2 copies).

E. 61. - Corrigendum. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. Canada. Revise of paragraphs 7 and 8 on page 5. (2 copies).

E.11478/199/44. Despatch from Mr. Henderson to the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston. (Received December 3).

- - - -

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

E-1457
Duplicate

C 62534

COPY

MEMORANDUM OF EXTRACTS FROM SPEECHES BY CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES AT THE IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE IN RESPECT OF CANADA'S ATTITUDE TO -

IMPERIAL TARIFF PREFERENCE

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62535

MEMORANDUM OF EXTRACTS FROM SPEECHES BY CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES AT THE IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE IN RESPECT OF CANADA'S ATTITUDE TO:

IMPERIAL TARIFF PREFERENCE

OPENING STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.
Mr. Mackenzie King said:-

"Perhaps I had better leave the question of Preference for more mature and careful consideration at some sitting of the conference when that subject will be specially discussed. I should like to say this, however, with regard to trade by Preference, that Canada feels not a little pride in the circumstance that she was the Pioneer in granting a Preference to British goods. At the present time we are giving a Preference averaging 33-1/3 per cent. or more, on all goods coming from Britain and also from different parts of the Empire. In the last session of Our Parliament, we made a slight additional increase in the Preference by undertaking to give a discount of ten per cent. of existing duties on any British goods that came through Canadian Ports. We had in mind there development of trade by the "All Red" route, but we had also very much in mind the action of the British Government in undertaking to remove obstacles to the importation of our cattle into the British markets here. Throughout the Canadian attitude in the matter of Preference has been one of goodwill; it has been based on goodwill; bargaining has not been the basis of it. We have done what we have done believing it would be to our advantage, but believing also that it would be helpful to the countries to which the Preference was extended and especially to the Mother Country, and I would like to repeat the action we took at our last session in increasing the Preference was due primarily - and I can speak with a knowledge of the circumstances which governed it - to the action of the British Government in meeting us as they did meet us, with respect to an important commodity of trade and commerce. Now that spirit of seeking each other's mutual advantage will, I believe, go further than anything else to help to build up the trade and further the industrial development of the Empire"

.....

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

5th Meeting, October 9th 1923.
Hon Mr. Graham in his statement in reply to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said:-

"Mr. Chairman, as you rightly remarked some time ago, we have never approached the question of Preference in any kind of bargain spirit. To my mind the proposals you have made must have been decided by your Government as the ones you should make in the interests of all concerned. So far as Canada's representation is concerned, they are not to criticise your propositions. They are your propositions made by the British Government on behalf of the British People. We placed our Preference on the Statute Book in 1897, increasing it gradually until in some cases it reaches over fifty per cent., and I am bound to say that, that was not altogether the result of an altruistic motive to help the British Empire; it was to help the Canadian people. We believe that it is your function to do things to help your people, and if it helps the British Empire at large, so much the better for the British Empire. I think it would be out of place altogether for me, as a representative of Canada, or my colleagues, to attempt for a moment to dictate what the British Empire should do in the way of its tariff. It is dangerous ground; it is your business. We are willing to accept what you give us and, so far as you wish to go, we will not stop you. But to attempt to drive you along faster than you feel it is in the interests of your own people to go, I think would be altogether out of place so far as we are concerned.

Further in the same speech Mr. Graham said: -

"We should like to develop wider trade in every respect with our relatives within the Empire, in all parts of it, but, for practical purposes, as it is your duty to look after the interests of your people, we are compelled at every step to keep in view as the paramount question the interests of the people of the Dominion of Canada.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

20th Meeting, November 7th 1923.
The Hon. Mr. Graham, in commenting upon the re-introduction of the question of Preference by the Chairman, and, in reply to the offer of Tariff Preference on specific articles (see I.E.C. paper (23)-22 said:

> "The preferential proposals which have been mentioned today and which , it has been observed, are within the framework of the existing fiscal system of Great Britain, will, we are certain, be received in Canada with due appreciation as of distinct value to Dominion producers."

At this same meeting Mr. Graham referred to a statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the 5th meeting, October 9th, 1923. The statement was as follows:-

> 'We want you to tell us whether what we have proposed is going to heop you; whether our proposals can,,in any way, be improved, and, if so, in what direction. That does not bind us to accept any suggestions that you make to us, any more than you are bound to accept any suggestions we may put to you as to what we might desire as to increasing our trade with you; but, it does give us the opportunity at any rate, or realizing what the position is, and then it will be for us to say whether, consistently with the interests of our own people here, we can carry out what you have suggested to us. '

In response to this overture, The Hon Mr. Graham said:

> "Canada has given preference in her own interest, as well as what she conceived to be the interest of the rest of the Empire. It has never hitherto, in the case of the United Kingdom, been made conditional on the grant of an equal preference in return. We have at all times recognized the importance of conceding to each Government concerned the right to legislate as its own interests might demand, on tariff matters, or, in other words, complete control over its own fiscal policy. Should the British peoples decide at any time that it will be in their own interestd, as well as what they conceive to be the interests of the Empire to make far-reaching changes in their p resent

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62538

fiscal policy, Canada will naturally expect that, in the establishment of a tariff, full and adequate consideration would be given, through preferential duties, to the interests of Canada's producers and th the substantial preference which Canada accords to British goods."

He continued:-

"The Prime Minister of Great Britain has recently announced that the new fiscal policy of the British Government will include a substantial Preference to the Dominions, not as a matter of bargaining, but as a free-will offering. This has been the spirit in which Canada has approached the question, and it was, we believe, the only position possible to take under the circumstances. If, however, a general tariff is established in Great Britain, as well as in the Dominions, and reciprocal trade relations are negotiated with foreign countries, as the Prime Minister has forecast, it is plain that, in some measure a new situation will be created, and bargaining on a business basis, with weighing of reciprocal advantages, will tend to become the rule inside as well as outside the British Empire, though we hope that this will not involve any less ning of the forces of sentiment and imperial policy which have operated in the past and which animate the proposals of the British Government today.
Coming specifically to the proposal of the Chancellor of the Exchequer that we state what preferential duties would be of the most advantage to our producers, and noting that the Chancellor quite properly observes it will be for the British Government to consider whether such duties would be in the interest of the British people, I now outline some of the chief Canadian exports to Great Britain in which an effective preference would be of most value."

This List included Wheat; Barley, Flour: General Agricultural products, e.g., fresh fruit, apples, peaches, pears and plums; Dairy Produce, e.g. cheese, butter and eggs, bacon and hams; canned vegetables, flax, linseed, Sea Foods; In Mineral Resources and manufactured articles, reference was made to about fifty items which included the principal Canadian manufactured articles.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62539

At this same meeting (20th) Resolutions were submitted, in support of Tariff Preference, by jointly The Prime Ministers of Australia and New Zealand as follows:

(1) That the greatest economic development of each of the several countries and territories composing the British Empire, is to be found in the promotion of their mutual trade and in the development of the resources of the British Empire as a whole.

(2) That the further extension of the policy of Imperial Preference, which was inaugurated by Canada in 1897 and which was accepted in 1917 by all the Governments represented at the Imperial Conference, offers the most effective means of acheiving this end.

The discussion on these Resolutions was continued to the 21st. Meeting held the same day (November 7th 1923.) and, in speaking on these Resolutions, the Hon Mr. Graham said:-

"I hesitate to take a position that might be construed to mean that I was not in favor of Preference, because Canada has been always in favour of Preference, in the Empire and has extended it as rapidly as she could. I think the first resolution is hardly accurate and must be a question of opinion. It is a sweeping statement to make - "That the greatest economical development of each of the several countries, territories, etc:"
The second portion of the resolution,is, I think, unnecessary, because, I am of the opinion that anything that we are doing does not need a Resolution to say that it is right. In our country we have adopted Preference; all the parts of the British Empire have adlpted it, and why pass a Resolution to say that what we did was right? The suggestion that there should be an extension of Preference is dangerous, to my mind, in the form of a Resolution, because, you must leave every portion of the Empire to work out its own policy as to Preference.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62540

We are gathered here as a Conference, not as an executive. I know that what we are all after is, the best interests of the various parts of the Empire, and are all anxious to develop trade within our own borders. I would much prefer in the interests, I believe, of all parts of the Empire, that we should not, at the present moment particularly, pass a resolution of this kind."

The following resolution was at this meeting subsequently adopted.

"This Imperial Economic Conference, holding that, especially in present circumstances, all possible means should be taken to develop the resources of the Empire and trade between the Empire countries, desires to reaffirm the Resolution on the subject of Impreial Preference passed by the Imperial War Conference of 1917."

.....

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

At the 19th meeting, held on November 6th, 1923, a Resolution was offered, it s purpose being the establishment of an Imperial Economic Committee on the lines of the Imperial Shipping Committee. The Canadian attitued, as expressed by the Hon. Mr. Graham was:-

(1) He thought it would be a mistake to go on organizing permanent Bodies as the outcome of a friendly Conference, as to the conditions existing in different parts of the Empire. Such Committee, to his mind, would take away much of the freshness and originality of the Conference and would be an impediment to its work, rather than a help.

(2) Fiscal policy was not a matter about which the advice of any Body of that kind would be sought; nor would Canada, at any rate, submit to advice being tendered to her on that subject by such a Body. The suggestion, so far as that portion of the work of the Committee was concerned, seemed

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62541

largely to resolve itself into a proposal for a Tariff Commission for the Empire, but tariffs and dumping were matters for the Governments themselves and their constituents to consider.

At this meeting the following Resolution was adopted.-

That in the opinion of the Imperial Economic Conference (Canada dissenting) -

(1) It is desirable to establish an Imperial Economic Committee, comprising representatives of the Governments represented in the Imperial Conference, and responsible to those Governments.

(2) The function of the Committee should be to consider and advise upon any matters of an economic or commercial character, not being matters appropriate to be dealt with by the Imperial Shipping Committee, which are referred to it by any of the constituent Governments, provided that no question which has any reference to another part of the Empire may be referred to the Committee without the consent of that other part of the Empire".

J.R.H.
14.XII.23

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62542

CORRESPONDENCE,

PRIVATE and CONFIDENTIAL

of

RT. HON. W.L. MACKENZIE KING

VOL. II. - Part II.

E - 1302-3 - Imperial Conference - 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62543

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

E (1923) Series: Stenographic Notes of Meetings.

LIST OF CONTENTS.

Number of Meeting.	Date.	Principal Subjects Discussed.
1st	Oct 1, 1923, at 11 A.M. ...	Opening Speeches.
2nd	„ 3 „ 11 „ ...	Statement by Secretary of State for the Colonies. Publicity. Programme of Arrangements. Appointment of Committees. Joint Secretariat.
3rd	„ 5 „ 10·45 A.M. ...	Foreign Affairs: Statement by Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
4th	„ 8 „ 11 A.M. ...	Foreign Affairs: Statements by Prime Ministers of Canada, Australia and New Zealand.
5th	„ 8 „ 3·30 P.M. ...	Foreign Affairs: Statements by Prime Minister of South Africa. Vice-President of Executive Council of Irish Free State, Prime Minister of Newfoundland, Secretary of State for India, Maharajah of Alwar, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru.
6th	„ 11 „ 11 A.M. ...	Italian-Greek Crisis, 1923. League of Nations.
7th	„ 11 „ 2·30 P.M. ...	League of Nations.
8th	„ 15 „ 3 P.M. ...	Imperial Defence.
9th	„ 17 „ 11 A.M. ...	Naval Defence. Armistice Day Arrangements.
10th	„ 19 „ 11 „ ...	Foreign Affairs. Military Defence. Air Defence.
11th	„ 22 „ 3 P.M. ...	Defence.
12th	„ 24 „ 11 A.M. ...	Position of Indians in other parts of the Empire.
13th	„ 29 „ 11 „ ...	Foreign Affairs: Reparation. Position of Indians in other parts of the Empire.
14th	„ 31 „ 3·30 P.M. ...	Foreign Affairs: Rhineland. Position of Indians in other parts of the Empire. Reports of Committees.
15th	Nov. 6 „ 5 P.M. ...	Imperial Defence Resolutions. United States and Liquor Traffic. Extension of Charter of Imperial War Graves Commission. Reports of Committees. Appointment of Drafting Committee.
16th	„ 8 „ 4·30 P.M. ...	Palestine. Address to His Majesty the King. Draft Report of Conference. Publication of Report. Concluding Resolution. Appreciation of Work of Secretariat.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62544

SECRET.

E. 1st Meeting (1923).

57

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE FIRST MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1923, AT 11 A.M

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. Sir PHILIP LLOYD-GREAME, K.B.E., M.C., M.P., President of the Board of Trade.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Mr. W. T. COSGRAVE, T.D., President of the Executive Council, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

R. K. SARDAR SINGH, Private Secretary to His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.

Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B., (Secretary.)

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.

Mr. P. McGILLIGAN.

Canada.

Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

Union of South Africa.

Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

India.

Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62545

OPENING SPEECH BY Mr. STANLEY BALDWIN.

Question of Reporting Proceedings.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we begin our business I think I should just announce that, subject to no objection being offered, we shall follow the precedents of previous years in the matter of reporting and publication of what passes here. The usual practice has been that there should be a verbatim note taken of the general discussions, circulated amongst the members; but in matters of a highly confidential kind only one note is made and is preserved by the Secretary. What should or should not be given out for publication after our discussions is a matter which we shall discuss on Wednesday and come to a conclusion upon. The proceedings to-day being more formal, I think the general practice has been that they should be fully reported, and the observations which I shall have the pleasure of making to you now will be printed just as they are delivered, and I imagine that that will be the case with any replies which any members of the Conference may think fit to make.

Welcome to Oversea Representatives.

I have great pleasure in extending to you all a very hearty welcome to Great Britain. General Smuts and Mr. Massey are no strangers to this historic Council Chamber. They took an important part in the deliberations of the last Conference, and indeed in those of all similar meetings held here since 1917. The same is true of Lord Curzon. The rest of us, with the exception of Mr. Burton, are, I believe, here for the first time at an Imperial gathering of representatives of Great Britain, the Dominions and India.

I have at the outset to draw your attention to the enlargement which has taken place in the circle of the Imperial Conference by the constitution last year of the Irish Free State. I am sure you will wish that I should, on behalf of all His Majesty's Governments who have in the past been entitled to attend these meetings, extend to Mr. Cosgrave, as President of the Free State Executive, and to his colleagues, a cordial welcome on joining our counsels.

We welcome Mr. Mackenzie King, and we shall rely on him to continue the high traditions of his predecessors. Especially shall we be glad to benefit by his knowledge of industrial problems. Mr. Warren is almost as new to his high office as I am to mine, but he is no stranger to this country. Nor is Mr. de Wet, to whom also I extend a cordial greeting. Mr. Bruce is unable to be with us at the opening of our deliberations, but we shall welcome him a few days hence.

It is a great pleasure to have with us distinguished representatives of the Indian Empire in the persons of His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. His Highness is widely known as an enlightened ruler deeply interested in the educational and material progress of his State—a State which rendered valuable help in men and money during the war. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru has long been a conspicuous figure in Indian public life, and we recognise in him a brilliant lawyer and wise statesman.

German Reparation and Ruhr Occupation.

In his review of the state of the world at the opening of the last Conference in the summer of 1921, the British Prime Minister struck on the whole a moderately hopeful note. At home he observed a sense of strain and exhaustion after the prolonged struggle of the war; there was labour unrest and unemployment, though no actual privation amongst our people. Abroad there was turmoil and tension, but some of the most troublesome and menacing problems of the peace had either been settled or were in a fair way of settlement. One of these was the disarmament of Germany, the other was reparation. The former was in process of being accomplished. The schedule of reparation liabilities drawn up in accordance with the Treaty of Versailles by the Reparation Commission had been forwarded to the German Government on the 5th May, 1921. When Mr. Lloyd George spoke six weeks later it had been accepted by Germany, so that, as he told his colleagues at this table, the two most troublesome problems were either settled or in a very fair way of being adjusted. Nowhere is prophesy more difficult than in politics, and especially in the field of foreign affairs.

C 62546
62546

As is well known, it proved impossible to hold Germany to the fulfilment of her reparation obligations under the scheme evolved in May 1921. The Allies at various times granted alleviations and postponements, but the German payments grew ever less, until at the end of last year we were faced with the possibility of total default. Definite proposals for a complete and final settlement were made in January last by Mr. Bonar Law. These proposals involved heavy sacrifice by the British taxpayer in the direction of writing off debts for which we hold the unconditional obligations of our Allies. Our proposals would involve the writing off of the greater part of the Allied obligations amounting to over £1,200 million sterling and leaving the British taxpayer to face the resulting burden without himself receiving payment. We deeply regret that so generous an offer to effect a final settlement did not receive more favourable consideration.

This difficult problem of reparation was complicated by a difference of opinion amongst the Allies as to the measures to be taken to secure the payment of what was due to them. It need scarcely be emphasised that there was no difference of opinion whatever on the principle that Germany should be made to pay to the utmost limit of her ability. The French and Belgian Governments decided to seize and exploit the Ruhr Valley, and they claimed that, Germany having been reported in voluntary default by the Reparation Commission, they were entitled to do this under the Treaty of Versailles. His Majesty's Government could not share this view, and were, moreover, convinced that such action could not but prejudice the prospects of the Allies ultimately securing the bulk of reparation. The French and Belgian Governments, however, with the acquiescence, though not very active support, of the Italian Government, proceeded to put their plan into execution. His Majesty's Government decided that, being convinced of the inexpediency of such action, they could take no part in the execution of the Franco-Belgian measures. The German Government, refusing to recognise the legality of the occupation, ordered and organised passive resistance, which has been practised up till now, and has, in its turn, called forth ever stronger measures on the part of the occupying authorities. His Majesty's Government have had no easy task, while remaining in occupation of part of the Rhineland, in carrying out their policy of neither helping nor hindering the action of their Allies, but they dare to hope that they have succeeded in the main in maintaining an attitude of strict neutrality. The Notes which have been exchanged between us and the French Government since the January Conference have more and more revealed an honest divergence of opinion as to the best method of obtaining reparation and of advancing the cause of permanent peace in Europe. That divergence reflects differences of temperament and outlook between the two nations which it would be foolish to ignore, but the last twenty years have shown that they are not incompatible with whole-hearted co-operation in the face of grave danger.

We have strained every nerve to preserve the solidarity of the Allies and especially the Entente with France. We have done this believing that any rupture between us might still further postpone the peace which Europe so sorely needs. I am aware that the patience we have shown in trying to preserve good relations with France has laid us open in many quarters to the charges of indecision and weakness. But at least it has borne witness not only to our wish to act, in the words of Disraeli, as "a moderating and mediatorial Power" in the Councils of Europe, but to our ardent desire to preserve our friendship with France.

At this moment it seems that we are entering on a new phase with the collapse of German passive resistance, which appeared to be imminent when I met the French Prime Minister in Paris not many days ago. How the new situation will develop I shall not venture to predict, but one thing was clear to us in Paris, and becomes daily clearer; it is only by the closest co-operation and complete confidence of the Allies in each other that we can hope for a settlement of Europe's difficulties.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62547

A fuller and more detailed statement of the situation will be made to you by the Foreign Secretary when we come later on in the week to the discussion of foreign affairs.

The Janina Murders and Occupation of Corfu.

Within the last few weeks, we have been faced by a sudden crisis in the relations between Greece and Italy which threatened at one moment to assume serious proportions, but which, I am glad to say, has now been settled. I do not desire to anticipate what will be said later upon this subject, but I wish in my present speech to call your particular attention to the very useful and, in my opinion, effective part played in this crisis by the League of Nations. I am aware that there are many people who consider that the League has missed a very obvious opportunity of establishing its prestige in quarters where it has hitherto been either derided or ignored. The temptation to react dramatically and violently to the present crisis is one to which a less statesman-like body than the League Council might pardonably have succumbed. I consider that the members of the Council deserve the greatest credit for having placed the permanent interests of peace above what might have seemed the immediate interests of the League itself. And in this moderation they have been amply justified: there is no single person possessing real knowledge of the recent crisis or any settled experience of similar crises in the past, who does not realise to-day that, had the League not existed and acted as it did, a resort to arms would almost inevitably have taken place, and that, had the Council not shown the wise discretion for which in some quarters they have been assailed, the outcome of the crisis might have been very different. The League by its moderation and common sense may temporarily have disappointed the expectations of its more ardent and impetuous supporters; but the exhibition of these qualities in very trying circumstances has strengthened its hold upon the confidence of reasoning men in all countries.

I think we have every reason to be satisfied with the part played by our Delegations at Geneva in contributing to this happy result.

Treaty of Lausanne.

Peace with Turkey was signed at Lausanne on the 24th July last, after a Conference lasting seven months, with a suspension of sittings from the 2nd February to the 20th April. Various reasons—the delays of the Paris Peace Conference, political changes in Greece, the difficulty of maintaining a united Allied policy, the development of a strong military and nationalist movement in Turkey—compelled us to negotiate a treaty with Turkey on a different basis and of a different nature from those concluded with our other enemies of 1914. The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will shortly explain to you in greater detail the genesis of the treaty and its main lines, but I think that after hearing his statement you will agree with me that, broadly speaking, this treaty not only safeguards the essential interests of the British Empire, without damage to British prestige, but has done something to reconcile those different national and religious interests which have so often troubled this quarter of the world, and may have laid the foundation of a period of comparative tranquillity and economic reconstruction.

Debt to U.S.A.

Thanks largely to a mutual determination to arrive at an agreement, arrangements have been concluded with the Government of the United States of America for the gradual repayment over a long period of the sums we borrowed from that Government to ensure the successful prosecution of the war. It must be remembered that on our debt we were liable, apart from any question of repayment, to pay 5 per cent.—amounting to over 200 million dollars—for interest alone. The funding arrangement has reduced the burden for interest and repayment combined to 161 million dollars per annum. The burden, despite the various provisions intended to assist us in shouldering it, is very heavy; it amounts to 7*d.* in the £ on income tax; it equals three-quarters of our total receipts from that tax before the war. The repayment of this debt is going to call for all our energies. But we considered that funding the debt was the only possible course consistent with the supreme standard of British credit; and that it was an essential preliminary to the restoration of the normal economic life of the world. The debts of Great Nations must be recognised if the foundations of commercial progress are to stand.

C 62548

Imperial Defence.

It will be remembered that when the last Imperial Conference was held in 1921 the chief question with regard to Imperial defence under consideration was the future of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and its bearing on the relations of the British Empire with the United States.

Washington Conference.

It was during these discussions, which extended over several days, that the invitation from the President of the United States for a Conference on Disarmament was received.

The Conference on Limitation of Armaments assembled in Washington in November 1921. I do not think I exaggerate if I say that the results achieved exceeded our most sanguine anticipations. If these were due in great part to the dramatic proposals with which the United States Government confronted the Conference at its opening meeting, by general admission they were also in no small degree attributable to the skill, tact and diplomacy of Lord Balfour, ably assisted by the delegates from the Dominions and India.

It may not be out of place to remind you that these results included:—

1. The Treaty for the Limitation of Naval Armaments.
2. The Quadruple Pacific Treaty.
3. The Nine-Power Treaty regarding China.
4. The Nine-Power Treaty regarding the Chinese Customs Tariff.
5. The Treaty for the protection of the lives of Neutrals and Non-combatants at sea in time of war and to prevent the use in war of noxious gases and chemicals.
6. Many supplementary Resolutions and Declarations.

I think we may justifiably claim that these results, which are not only a real benefit but also contain a promise in the future for the whole Empire, are in no small measure due, first, to the last Imperial Conference, which was so largely concerned in initiating the Washington Conference, and, second, to the British Empire Delegation, which co-operated so successfully with the United States and other Governments in bringing it to fruition.

The ratification of the Quadruple Pacific Treaty has now been completed, and thereupon the agreement concluded between Great Britain and Japan in 1911 automatically terminates.

We have all been deeply moved by the news of the recent earthquake in the East, and I am sure you will wish me to express our profound sympathy with our faithful Ally in the terrible calamity which has befallen her and our recognition of the brave spirit in which she has met it.

Air Defence.

The other chief questions of Imperial Defence which have been dealt with in the interval since the last Conference will be reviewed later by the Lord President of the Council. Problems of Empire Defence will necessarily occupy a considerable share of our deliberations. It will be within your knowledge that we decided with great reluctance to add to our defensive Air Forces. When announcing this increase in our programme to Parliament, I said, and I should like to repeat here, that, in conformity with our obligation under the Covenant of the League of Nations, His Majesty's Government would gladly co-operate with other Governments in limiting the strength of air armaments on lines similar to the Treaty of Washington in the case of the Navy, and any such arrangement, it is needless to say, would govern our policy of air expansion.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62549

Unemployment.

The impoverishment of the world consequent on the ravages of the war has been immensely aggravated and prolonged by the unsettlement of Europe which I have described. Contraction of trade in Europe is felt throughout the world, in India, in Canada, in Australia, in South Africa, on all of whom the European market reacts. All countries of the world are burdened by debt, by taxation, by budget difficulties, by exchange fluctuations. We here at home as a great trading and exporting country feel the result with especial severity.

Since the summer of 1921 there has on the whole been some improvement in the state of employment in this country; but unfortunately the numbers unemployed remain still very large, and the depression in trade which revealed itself in the autumn of 1920 has not passed away.

In the spring and early summer of the present year there were signs of an early revival of trade. Unhappily the improvement then promised and partly realised has suffered a check. Recently the figures of unemployed have taken an upward turn, and it is to be feared that this increase will continue during the coming winter months. We have roughly a million and a quarter out of work as compared with a little over a million and a half when the last conference met.

Inter-Imperial Trade.

The efforts of the Government to cope with this situation have been and will continue to be directed on three main lines. In the first place, relief works of a useful and practical kind and costing many millions are set in operation with Treasury assistance through Local Authorities and otherwise. Secondly, provision on an unprecedented scale is made through the National Unemployment Insurance Scheme for those in the insured trades who are unavoidably unemployed; and, thirdly, every practicable step is taken to stimulate and encourage the revival of trade at home, with the Dominions, India and the Colonies and with foreign countries.

An Agenda for the Conference has been prepared and it embraces a number of topics in addition to foreign affairs and defence which it is desirable we should examine together, but I think you will agree that one of the most important items on it is this question of inter-imperial trade. The whole subject will be gone into by the Economic Conference under the Chairmanship of my friend, the President of the Board of Trade, and we shall have before us here some of the major questions which are involved. I am confident that we shall be able to devise measures which will be to our mutual advantage by way of redistributing the population, improving transport and means of communication, and, generally, increasing the facilities for the growth of trade within the Empire.

The economic condition of Europe makes it essential that we should turn our eyes elsewhere. The resources of our Empire are boundless and the need for rapid development is clamant. I trust that we shall not separate before we have agreed upon the first steps to be taken to create in a not too distant future an ample supply of those raw materials on which the trade of the world depends. Population necessarily follows such extension, and that in its turn leads to a general expansion of business from which alone can come an improvement in the material condition of the people.

India.

Upon the peculiar problems presented by India I do not now propose to dwell, however briefly. Doubtless they will be authoritatively interpreted to us, as occasion arises, by the Members of the Indian Delegation. But it does seem to me important to remember that this great country stands at the moment in special need of all the sympathetic understanding we can give her. She is engaged, under British guidance, in the stupendous task of educating one-fifth of the human race to the burdens and privileges of responsible government; and the period of transition between the old traditional régime and the emergence of self-governing institutions must necessarily be both delicate and difficult. Moreover, her relationship with other component elements in the British Commonwealth presents a problem at once complex and critical, for in it are involved the contact of civilisations, so varied in history and tradition, and the future harmony of East and West. I am convinced that we may look with confidence for the co-operation, not merely of the peoples of India themselves, but also, in so far as may lie in their power, of the Dominion Governments.

C 62550

Closing Survey.

Contemplating Europe as we do to-day and comparing what we see with what we hoped for three or four years ago, we can find little to encourage us in our labours. The size of armies and the money spent on munitions are greater than in 1914. Economic solidarity is rent asunder. Is it not amazing that after an exhausting world-wide war all efforts should not be directed to reconstruction, to the building up of the wealth spent in war and waste, and to the re-creation of the economic machinery which war has put out of joint? The only consolations I can draw in a situation so charged with unrest are to recall the history of the past and to reflect on the unity of our own Empire and the deep and universal desire of our people for peace.

All the great European wars have been followed by a recrudescence of militarism and the nations have taken far more years to recover from the shock of war than the years which separate us from the Treaty of Versailles. It took France a couple of centuries to recover from the Hundred Years' War; a long and dreary period followed the Thirty Years' War, in Germany. The years which followed Waterloo were among the darkest in our national history. After the Congress of Vienna there was no organised demand for schemes of disarmament.

Compared with a century ago, we have, at least within limits, a League of Nations, and no one can have studied the transactions of its Assembly at Geneva without becoming aware of a growing international moral sense, and a determination to confront the problems of the reduction of armaments, difficult as they must be. What can be achieved by international co-operation and reconstruction on sound economic lines is shown in the case of Austria, where nine Governments have joined to guarantee a loan. No one who knew Austria eighteen months ago would recognise the new spirit which now prevails there. Compared with a century ago, there is a powerful friend of peace in the United States. In this room on this occasion it is natural that we should be most conscious of that League of Nations in whose name we are assembled—the British Commonwealth—that system of States spread all over the world, far greater, as General Smuts once truly said, than any Empire which has ever existed, "a dynamic system growing, evolving all the time towards new destinies."

The British Empire.

The British Empire, whose representatives are assembled here to-day, has often been described as the product of accidents. It is, in fact, the natural and spontaneous product not of its own necessities only, but of those of mankind. Scarcely four centuries have passed since the continents of the world swung like new planets into each other's ken. When Columbus discovered America and Vasco da Gama opened the routes to the East, all nations and kindreds of the earth were presently brought into intimate contact. A few years later a political writer of the sixteenth century remarked: "Henceforth the world is one Commonwealth." In a sense his words were prophetic. Our ever increasing control of natural forces has so knit the nations together that whatever affects one for good or ill affects them all. They are as organs of one body. But the mastery achieved over physical forces has completely outdistanced the control acquired over human forces. The fact is that our minds learn far more quickly than our characters change; so the social and political structure of the world has not kept pace with the growth of its knowledge. I am not saying that no progress has been made in applying moral ideas to political facts. Before me I see men who together can speak for a world commonwealth containing one-quarter of mankind. The peoples you represent are drawn from all the continents, from all their races, from every kind

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62551

of human society. Like a network of steel embedded in concrete this Commonwealth holds more than itself together. It held through the greatest cataclysm that has ever shaken the foundations of the world. Dissolve those ties and civilisation itself would collapse.

We are often told that self-interest binds the Empire together. A half truth presented as the whole is a dangerous falsehood. I have likened the ties which unite us to steel, but steel of the wrong temper may be brittle as glass. The only element which can give a tensile quality to human ties is a sense of duty in men to each other. We, gathered in this chamber, will strengthen the bonds which unite us so far as we are able to keep in mind the needs of others than those for whom we speak. We stand here on an equal footing and no Government present in this chamber can bind the rest. We can act with effect so far as we agree, and no further: but I weigh my words when I say that we shall achieve agreement and so strengthen the bonds which unite us only in so far as each and all of us is seeking how to relieve not only our own difficulties and troubles, but those also of a distracted world. The British Empire cannot live for itself alone. Its strength as a Commonwealth of Nations will grow so far as they unite to bear on their shoulders the burdens of those weaker and less fortunate than themselves.

OPENING SPEECH BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Prime Minister and Gentlemen: The Prime Minister in his opening remarks made reference to precedents which have been established at former gatherings. I understand that the representative of the senior Dominion has been the first to speak after the Prime Minister of Great Britain. In these circumstances, I venture to say just a word or two. Personally I could not but wish that one of the more experienced and older members of the gathering had been the first to address his remarks to this Conference, my friend Mr. Massey, or General Smuts, who have been at similar gatherings in the past; but it may be well that precedents should be observed, and the procedure at former Conferences followed.

Welcome to Representatives of Irish Free State.

May I thank the Prime Minister very cordially for the heartiness of the welcome which he has extended to us? I am sure we all join with him in experiencing pleasure at the presence at this gathering of the representatives of the Irish Free State. Coming from the Dominion of Canada, the close association of the name of our Dominion with that of the new Irish Free State in the Treaty and Constitution makes it a special pleasure to me to have the privilege of meeting at this table the representatives of that State.

Comments on Mr. Baldwin's Speech.

Having regard to the short time we expect to occupy this morning, it would scarcely, I think, be advisable for me in any way to attempt to comment upon the clear, comprehensive review which has been made by the Prime Minister of the situation in Europe, and of the mention made of other parts of the world, except to say that the information which has been given to us to-day, and particularly the elevated note which has been struck, will, I believe, be welcome not only to members of this gathering, but to the countries that are represented here, and, indeed, should be helpful in the wider field of international relations. The subjects that have been touched on are, of course, among the most important with which the British Empire is concerned, the issues with which they deal and to which they give rise are far-reaching, and it would not be advisable therefore to attempt to comment in any particular upon any phase of the questions at this stage. During the sittings of the Conference I assume ample opportunity will be afforded to all of us to make such references and comment as we may think would be necessary and helpful.

Value of Imperial Conferences and of Personal Consultation.

I feel it is a very great privilege to have the opportunity of meeting in this personal way members of the British Government, the heads of the Governments of the Self-Governing Dominions, and the representatives of India, to discuss matters, many of which are of common concern. In matters of government the value of personal contact and association cannot I think be over-estimated. Some of the gentlemen present, most in fact, I am having the opportunity of meeting for the first time to-day; some little acquaintance has been formed by correspondence and cables, but I think a personal meeting is worth more than all the cables and correspondence combined. In so far as I have the privilege of speaking for the people of Canada, I would say that at this Conference we have only one aim and purpose, that, namely, which actuates all of us, of meeting together with a view to being mutually helpful, in doing what we can towards solving as far as may be possible many of the great problems which are of concern to us all. I think as we each speak our minds clearly with reference to matters in which some of us have perhaps a special interest and to other matters of general interest, we will find that no problem is incapable of being at least in some way appreciably solved if the spirit of goodwill is present, as it is certain to be in this gathering.

C62552

Value of Publicity.

May I just say this one word—it is a thought which has come to me more forcibly as I have listened to the Prime Minister's review—important as it is that those of us who represent Governments and are members of Governments should have the information which has been given to us to-day, and should have a common understanding among ourselves, more important I believe it to be that the Parliaments of the Empire should have equal advantage, as far as may be possible, of the fullest information with respect to such matters as are of concern to us all, and not only the Parliaments, but still more important, I would say, as far as this can be attained, the peoples of the various Dominions from which we come. For that reason I am glad of the publicity which is to be given to to-day's proceedings.

As a common sentiment, a common feeling, is developed among the peoples of the component parts of the British Empire, the solution of the questions that arise will be found appreciably easier. I can think of no greater service any of us could find it possible to render, than that perhaps of taking back to our Parliaments, and through our Parliaments transmitting to our people, much of the information which we will gather here, information which will be helpful in interpreting to those whom we represent the difficulties and problems with which other parts are concerned. Similarly, I feel positive that no contribution can be rendered to this gathering of greater value or of greater permanent worth than that as representatives we should seek not merely to express our own individual views, but, so far as we can do it, set forth the views of our Parliaments and the views of the people represented in our Parliaments, with reference to the affairs of the Empire, and of the different countries that compose it.

Empire stands for Peace.

I think, Prime Minister, that throughout the British Dominions there will be very great satisfaction at the emphasis which you have placed upon the desire which actuates us all here, not only to further goodwill and harmonious relations between the different parts of the Empire, in working out our own problems, but also to make what contribution we can towards peace and justice in the world. That, I think, is the pride we all feel in the British Empire, that it has stood for peace, justice and goodwill among men, and, in so far as we can make a contribution that will be of benefit to mankind, it seems to me that it will come in largest measure through the circumstance that, representing different countries, scattered in different parts of the globe, we nevertheless are all one in our aims and in our purpose, and that the purpose which you have just set forth in such eloquent terms.

OPENING SPEECH BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Mr. Massey: Prime Minister, I do not intend at present to comment upon matters to which you have referred in the very clear

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62553

and very exhaustive statement which you have just given to the Conference. I say that because I think better and more suitable opportunities will offer later on, and I would just like to express a hope that before this Conference comes to an end we shall be able to do something definite and satisfactory in the way of solving as many as possible of the problems that have arisen during the last few years. I just wish to join with you, Prime Minister, and with the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Mackenzie King, in the welcome which you have extended to each and every one of the new members who have appeared at the Conference table to-day for the first time. I have no doubt they will be able to do good work, and as one of the older members I can say for myself, and I know General Smuts will join with me, we shall be very pleased to have their assistance in the many matters that are certain to be brought before us during the next six weeks or two months.

OPENING SPEECH BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Welcome to Representatives of Irish Free State.

General Smuts: Prime Minister, I join with my colleagues here in expressing with what great interest we have listened to you. I also join with them in welcoming our friends from Ireland to this Conference. You have painted a very dark picture of the present state of affairs in Europe, and yet the presence of the Free State here goes to show what the spirit of goodwill can effect. Two years ago, when we had our last Imperial Conference, the state of affairs in Ireland was about as black as anything which exists in Europe to-day; but the difficulties were resolutely grappled with and as a result we have the Irish Free State represented here at this great Conference, sitting at this Board of our Commonwealth and collaborating with us on the problems which face us all. A case like this is to me a proof that nothing is really as bad as it looks, nor perhaps is Europe as bad as it looks. I join most heartily and most sincerely in welcoming our friend President Cosgrave here to-day. He will find in this Conference, I am sure, sympathy and support from all of us. The difficulties which Ireland has passed through and will continue to pass through are difficulties which are not peculiar to her. He will find that many of those questions which confront Ireland are common to the whole Empire. Here he will find help and assistance and sympathy in the consideration of his own problems, and he will find that this Conference, this High Court of our great Commonwealth, is the best forum for the discussion of his problems.

I am also glad that Mr. Massey has been able to come. I know he has had to face great difficulties in coming. However, he has triumphed, as he always does, and I hope that, now we shall have a full Conference, we shall be able to do really good work and that a real advance will be registered on this occasion.

Situation in Europe.

This is a most important and solemn occasion in the history of our great Commonwealth. The picture which the Prime Minister has painted to us to-day in his able and interesting speech is a very black one. The world is undoubtedly in a bad way. Instead of the peoples drawing together as we hoped they would after the War the tendencies are the other way, the passions which the War has let loose are still rampant everywhere, and if ever there was a time when a helping hand was needed by the world, and Europe especially, it is now. Our Commonwealth is still there; it has stood many a storm; it has laid down many a great precedent in the history of the world; and the present situation in Europe more than any previous one calls for a great united effort on its part. I trust it will really pull its weight and make a great contribution to the solution of the questions which are confronting the world.

Washington Conference.

You were right, Prime Minister, in pointing out what was achieved with regard to the Washington Conference. There is no doubt that the inception of the Washington Conference was brought about in this Chamber. It originated here in our deliberations, and owing to the subsequent great initiative of the Government of the United States.

C 62554

That Conference marked greater advance for peace than any other Conference which has been held after the war. In that way the last Imperial Conference became very fruitful. I hope that this Conference will be as fruitful, and even more fruitful, in the contributions which it will make towards a settlement of the questions which are now distracting the world.

With regard to the Empire questions to which you have referred, I am sure that in one way and another they are all capable of solutions. At least, we can, as Mr. King has said, make an advance towards their solution. The spirit of goodwill and friendship in which we meet here makes every question soluble. We can register an advance even if we cannot arrive at definite solutions. In saying this, I do not wish to enter into a discussion of details; we will do that as the Conference progresses.

Prime Minister: Yes, on Friday.

Power of the Empire.

General Smuts: Yes, Friday. I await the statements of the Foreign Secretary and other gentlemen who are going to address us. But let me say this here and now; I have the feeling that our Commonwealth is a very great and powerful one. The British Empire can exert a force such as possibly no other agency on earth to-day to pull the world together, and I am anxious, so far as it can be done with goodwill and firmness, that whatever influence there is in this Empire, this greatest machine on earth, should be used to the full in order to assist the settlement of Europe. We have no reason to speak with bated breath. For centuries this country has, on every critical occasion in the history of Europe, spoken with the voice of authority, and the other Nations have always in the end had to listen to that voice.

My feeling and my desire is that on a unique occasion like this, without using threats or violent language, and in a spirit of complete goodwill, we should once more do what has been done before and speak with a voice that will be listened to in the affairs of the world. I am not going into details now because we shall come to them later in the course of the week.

Janina Murders and Occupation of Corfu. Position of League of Nations.

You have made reference to the League, and I agree with what you have said. At the same time, I think there is much misunderstanding as to what happened quite recently at Geneva. I have the feeling that the League has strengthened its position. The League has in the face of what threatened to be a very grave crisis in Europe acted with moderation and wisdom.

But the general view is that the crisis in Southern Europe has constituted a check for the League. The impression is that the League in a first-class crisis has not pulled its weight and has been inefficient, and whatever good work there was was done by other agencies. It is most important to clear up the position and remove this erroneous impression. I hope Lord Robert Cecil, when he comes back, will be able to explain to this Conference what has really happened. It would be lamentable that the impression should gather that the League has been pushed aside. Our object should be to strengthen the League and support it in every way; there is nothing else to do. If there were some other agency holding the nations together and working for peace, I would back that up. It is not a question of any particular form. So far we have devised one form and one form only for holding the nations together in a brotherhood of peace. As the real nature and interest of the British Empire is peace, I think we should support the League to the full and strengthen her hands as far as possible and add whatever weight we can to her counsels. I hope the misunderstanding which exists at present will be cleared up and that people will recognise that the League has really come with credit out of the Italian business.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62555

Debt to United States.

As regards the American debt, I have expressed my cordial agreement with what you have done in funding that debt. The British Empire carries out its contracts. At the same time, I fear that, unless there is a real recovery of the world, unless you can succeed in re-establishing the trade and commerce of the world, you may find that you have undertaken an intolerable burden for this country. What you have done should therefore be followed up with equal decision in a great attempt to restore the trade conditions of Europe. Otherwise you may find that what you have undertaken is perhaps more than this nation can bear. Some people seem to regard their debts very lightly nowadays. I am glad that the British Government has been consistent. At the beginning of the war in 1914, it insisted on the fulfilment of International obligations. It staked the existence of the whole Empire on that. Similarly after the war, you said, we shall honour our bond and pay. That is right and proper as a policy, but, at the same time, I think it would be almost an intolerable burden to this people unless you can really have peace in the world.

Need for Peace in Europe.

Our duty, therefore, not only to the world, but to this people who are going to carry this obligation, is to move heaven and earth in having peace re-established in Europe. Some people think that Europe does not concern us, that it is mere philanthropy or meddlesomeness to concern ourselves with her affairs, that we should leave Europe alone in her present stress. That attitude seems to me quite hopeless. You cannot have even the possibility of paying your American debt unless you can restore peaceful conditions in Europe. We can go far to extend Empire trade, and I hope that everything will be done to do so. Without any revolutionary departure from the settled fiscal policy of this country, I think a great deal can be done to foster inter-Empire trade, and I hope that this Conference will register a very great advance in that direction. But it will naturally take many years before the British Empire could take the place of Europe in your trade. In the meantime, you will have to carry all your burdens; you have to carry the present internal burdens and also to carry the weight of this intolerable external debt. It is clear to me you will not be able to do it unless peaceful conditions are restored in Europe. I do not want to say any more, Mr. Prime Minister. I only wish that this Conference will be successful—that it will achieve not only the objects it has in view with regard to the Empire, but also with regard to that larger and more difficult situation which confronts us in Europe. It is not only you who wish to re-establish trade—we in the outer Empire want to do the same. We also had our markets in Europe, and they are largely gone. Therefore, even if there were no higher motive than mere self-interest, we should still try our very best to establish conditions of peace and quiet in Europe. But there is much more. Deeper human motives appeal to us. The same motives that carried us into the war continue to guide us in the peace. It is quite impossible for us to disinterest ourselves in the awful conditions which exist all around us as a result of the war. We shall require much patience, and it may be that it will take much longer than we thought possible to have the world restored to normal conditions. Let us exercise patience, but at the same time let us really pull our weight. There is a rapid worsening of conditions all over Europe. It may be that this will still continue for years and become an irremediable set-back to Western civilisation. Even at this moment fundamental changes are taking place in Europe which will largely affect the future status and relations of the nations. I only hope that it may be possible to stay the rot before things have gone too far.

OPENING SPEECH BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, IRISH FREE STATE.

Acknowledges Welcome extended to Representatives of Irish Free State.

Mr. Cosgrave: Mr. Prime Minister, I wish to express my very real appreciation of the welcome you have extended to us and of the pleasing references you have made to our inclusion in this Conference. I also appreciate very highly the cordial welcome extended to us by Mr. King, Mr. Massey and General Smuts, and the great interest in Ireland shown by General Smuts in his speech. He is perhaps the best able to appreciate the difficulties through which we have passed, as he also gave ready and most valuable assistance to bring about the position which leads to our presence here to-day.

C 62556

Position of Free State.

In your statement, Sir, you have referred to problems which, both in size and number, overshadow our own immediate difficulties, and it gives us hope that, besides settling our own affairs, we may give some assistance in the solution of problems affecting the whole world. We come to this Conference in good faith, with an earnest desire to render what assistance we can in the solution of the problems to be faced, and to carry out with good faith and goodwill our part of that undertaking which you on your side have faithfully honoured in the past, realising that it is only in the exercise of these great attributes that it is possible for us to reach the desired end. This business is new to us and it is not possible for us to express opinions upon the many great and important matters which have been mentioned in your speech. The troubles and difficulties of our present situation and the circumstances surrounding it make my immediate association with the Conference less than I would wish. You, Mr. Prime Minister, will appreciate that, and I am sure His Grace the Duke of Devonshire will do so also. I would say it is a very real pleasure for me to be here and to have witnessed such a cordial and wholehearted reception. We realise our responsibilities and we are prepared to take over and shoulder the burdens, which are common burdens. I was very much gratified with the concluding paragraphs of the Prime Minister's speech and with the statement made by General Smuts that the real objective of this Conference is to further the cause of peace.

OPENING SPEECH BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Welcome to Representatives of Irish Free State.

Mr. Warren: Mr. Prime Minister and Gentlemen, I just desire to thank you, Sir, for the very cordial welcome that I have received. Perhaps as representing Britain's first-born, it might come well from me to congratulate the newest Dominion, the Free State, and to assure Mr. Cosgrave, on behalf of Newfoundland, that he has many of his countrymen there who have the greatest sympathy for him, and they all sincerely hope that he may be successful in the task he has undertaken.

Position of Newfoundland.

I should like to say, Sir, that the fact that I am here at all is a sign of what Great Britain has always stood for. I represent a small community, but we have never been impelled, coerced, not even, as far as I know, asked to merge our political independence into that of a larger Dominion. We have been allowed to plough our own furrow and we have every confidence that we shall be allowed to do so in the future. Perhaps after I have attended as many Conferences as my friend on my right, Mr. Massey, I may be able to speak with more confidence than I do this morning. I have to thank him for his reference to us. We all know that among Dominion Prime Ministers he is the father of us all and, sitting as I do so close to him, I hope that I may learn from him how to acquire a title to Prime Ministership by prescription. There are a vast number of people looking to this Conference and looking to us to show some results. I feel sure that we are all imbued with one idea, and that is to do everything we can to achieve the results which are expected of us, and I am sure that we are all ready to make any sacrifice that may lead to those results.

OPENING SPEECH BY THE MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, ON BEHALF OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION.

Lord Peel: Mr. Prime Minister, I will ask my colleague, His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar. to reply for the Indian Delegation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62557

The Maharajah of Alwar: Prime Minister of Great Britain, your Lordships and Gentlemen, I come to-day as the nominated representative of the Princes of India. You know that they rule over one-third of the Indian Empire and most of them are connected by treaties and engagements with the British Crown; but they are perhaps best known for their united loyalty and attachment to the Throne.

To-day, however, I am privileged to speak in the name of the 300 millions of peoples of my country. I speak on behalf of one of the oldest civilisations within the Empire, but who in the race of self-government have still much leeway to make. In the name of India, I thank you, Prime Minister, for the very felicitous terms in which you have extended your welcome to us on behalf of the British Cabinet. I thank you, and through you those on whose behalf you speak, for the expressions of goodwill for my country. I thank you all, friends, for the hopes that have been expressed that the Conference may achieve harmonious results. I can only say that I sincerely share that hope myself and, in conclusion, I trust that it will be permissible for me to thank the Prime Minister for the kind remarks he has made about myself and my State. I appreciate them particularly as I take them to be compliments paid to my Order, through me as their representative.

I will only speak about one word more. On such an occasion as this, I ask myself what is to be our attitude? Surely it is on this factor that the ultimate results of our Conference will mainly depend. The answer I receive to my question is in unhesitating terms. Surely is not this Conference composed of brother delegates from the sister Dominions? We assemble round the hub of the Empire as members of the family of nations, all united in one cause—namely, the uplift of the British Empire—all cemented together by one force, namely, the British Crown.

Gentlemen, the recent great war has left behind its aftermath of which the Prime Minister has given very lucid expression. Wounds and sores are still festering in many parts of the world.

With a little sacrifice, with a little toleration, with a little understanding, all this world can, I believe—and firmly so—still be made a playground for God's children. With a little willingness to give—and it does not require much willingness to take—mountains can certainly be converted into mole-hills.

On the completion of this Conference, I ask myself—would we rather say that we were able to achieve and gain this or that for our individual country or that we were in the privileged position of being able to subscribe, however little or great it was, for the unity of the British Empire. It will be a proud moment indeed if we can subscribe to the latter sentiments eventually. I do not mean to say that there will not be questions during our discussion and deliberations on which there may be differences of opinion, or on which it will be our responsibility to seek gain for our individual territories and nationalities. But in carrying out that responsibility, all we have to remember is that we have something greater to look to than our own country, namely, the British Empire, and that there is something even greater than the British Empire, namely, Humanity. Why is it then that we wish to subscribe our little quota to make that British Empire, which is already great, if possible even greater? It is because we like to believe that it will be, with every individual component part working out its own destiny in mutual harmony with others, and even with all our different nationalities, creeds, castes and religions existing—that the British Empire is going to fulfil its great object of leading humanity, not only towards peace, not only towards right understanding, but ultimately towards the great Divinity of which after all each one of us are but active sparks. That at least is my idea for the attitude at our Conference; to fulfil it shall be my endeavour.

MESSAGE TO THEIR MAJESTIES.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I think I will stand, for I am to propose the following resolution, which I feel it is a great honour to have the opportunity of doing:—

"The Prime Ministers and other representatives of the British Empire assembled in Conference, at their first Meeting and as their first official act, desire to express their respectful greetings and fidelity to the King and fervently hope that His Majesty and Her Majesty the Queen may be long spared to strengthen those ties of love and devotion which unite the peoples of the British Commonwealth."

C62558

Mr. Massey: I am going to follow the good example set by the Prime Minister of Canada and I want to say I have the honour to second the motion which he has moved. Needless to say I endorse every word of it, but I would go the length of saying that had it been worded in stronger and even more definite terms it would not have exaggerated the sentiments, respect, affection and esteem which the people of the different Dominions and countries of the Empire feel for Their Majesties, King George and Queen Mary. I second the motion.

(Carried unanimously.)

MESSAGE TO JAPAN.

Prime Minister: I thought it would probably fall in with the wishes of all the members present if, on the occasion of this first meeting of this conference, we were to send a message to Japan from the conference, and Lord Curzon has very kindly drafted this, which I think will meet with everyone's approval:—

"The Prime Ministers and representatives of Great Britain, the British Dominions and India, assembled at the Imperial Conference, desire at their opening session to send to their old and faithful ally, Japan, an expression of their profound sympathy in the terrible calamity by which she has been assailed; their admiration of the patriotic energy and unconquerable spirit with which the Japanese nation have met the blow; and their confident expectation that Japan will rapidly recover from a shock that might have overwhelmed any less courageous people and will pursue, undismayed, the great part that she is destined to fill in the social and economic progress of the world."

(Agreed unanimously.)

FUTURE ARRANGEMENTS.

I made allusion to the meeting on Wednesday—that will be at 11 o'clock—before I made my speech. We have to discuss arrangements as regards publicity and business and reference to committees and so forth, and the Secretary of State for the Colonies will fill a gap that we rather left to-day by making a statement in connection with the Colonies and Protectorates. It will be such a short day's business that it seems it would be very useful to occupy the time by a statement of that kind, which will be of very great interest to all of us. Friday will be the Foreign Secretary's statement on foreign affairs, which necessarily must be somewhat lengthy, and undoubtedly the discussions that follow that will last for some time, probably a matter of two or three days, possibly more.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE.

There is one thing before we go. It has been suggested to me by Sir Maurice Hankey, and I think it is a good idea, that we should circulate a communiqué this afternoon in the evening papers just mentioning that we have held this meeting, stating who was present, and giving the two resolutions, the one about the King and the one about Japan, merely saying that I welcomed the representatives and that speeches were made by different members, the speeches to be published in full in the Press to-morrow—they cannot get into the Press to-night. I think a communiqué of that kind which Sir Maurice Hankey has drawn up would be the right thing.

That concludes the business of this meeting.

(The Meeting then adjourned until Wednesday, October 3, at 11 A.M.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 1, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

SECRET.

C 62559

57

58

E. 2nd Meeting (1923).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE SECOND MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1923, AT 11 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. Sir PHILIP LLOYD-GREAME, K.B.E., M.C., M.P., President of the Board of Trade.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Sir JAMES MASTERTON-SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

The Hon. W. G. ORMSBY-GORE, M.P., Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

KHAWAS RAM TAL, Private Secretary to His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.

Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B., (Secretary.)

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Canada.

Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

Irish Free State.

Mr. P. McGILLIGAN.

India.

Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62560

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES AS TO THE COLONIES, PROTECTORATES AND MANDATED TERRITORIES.

The Duke of Devonshire: I understand that it is the general wish of the Conference that, as Secretary of State for the Colonies, I should give a brief account of the manner in which the responsibilities entrusted to the Colonial Office for the Colonies and Protectorates have been discharged during the two years which have passed since the Conference last met. Although the destinies of these great dependencies of the Crown are the immediate responsibility and trust of the British Government, it would be wrong if it were to be supposed that the moral and material progress and development of these large areas were not of increasing importance to all the partners in the British Empire, and it is the constant aim and endeavour of the Colonial Office to foster the interest of the Oversea Dominions in these great territories and so to stimulate inter-Imperial trade.

I do not propose to attempt to deal in any detail with the economic aspects of the Colonial Empire. These aspects, important as they are, come more properly within the purview of the Economic Conference, on which the special interests of the Colonies and Protectorates will be represented and advocated by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Mr. Ormsby-Gore, who will have associated with him Sir James Stevenson and Sir Gilbert Grindle, aided by an Advisory Committee composed of persons possessed of special and practical experience of the industrial life of the several Colonies and groups of Colonies concerned.

Economic Depression Slowly Lifting.

In the statement which my predecessor, Mr. Churchill, made to the Conference of 1921 about the Colonies and Protectorates, he referred to the creeping paralysis which had overtaken almost all their industries after the artificial prosperity of the war period. They still suffer under the general depression of trade, but I think I may say that, taken as a whole, the Colonies are "pulling through." The financial position of some of the smaller Colonies is a constant source of anxiety to their Governments and to us, but there are indications that the larger tropical areas for which we are responsible are recovering. Much, however, remains to be done before the trade of the Colonies can be said to be in a satisfactory position, and it is to trade within the Empire that we must look to regain at least part of the ground that has been lost during recent years. Proposals will be placed before the Economic Conference with the object of increasing inter-Imperial trade with our tropical possessions and of fostering their development. But action by Governments alone, however beneficial if rightly directed, is not in itself sufficient and needs to be aided and reinforced by private capital and private enterprise; and this all-important aspect of the question is being explored by an expert Committee under the Chairmanship of Lord Ronaldshay, the late Governor of Bengal.

British Empire Exhibition.

It may not be thought inappropriate if I refer in passing to the British Empire Exhibition, with which I am associated in an unofficial capacity as Chairman of its Council. In common with the Dominion Governments the Colonial Governments are taking a considerable share in promoting the success of the Exhibition, and my anticipations will be disappointed if the Exhibition does not achieve the results expected of it and if it does not open the eyes of the world to the tremendous material resources contained within the ambit of the British Empire. I am looking forward to meeting members of the Conference at Wembley next Saturday, when they will be enabled to see for themselves the scale and scope of this great enterprise.

With this brief preface I now propose to touch upon certain aspects of the progress which has taken place in the political and industrial life of the Colonies since last their affairs were under review at a Meeting of the Governments of the Empire. The British Colonial Empire, with its two million square miles and a population of fifty millions, distributed in every quarter of the globe, presents a panorama of ever-varying interest and romance; and I must emphasise what was said by my predecessor two years ago that it is impossible in the time at our disposal to attempt to do justice to this theme.

C62561

West Indies.

I will turn first to the oldest group of British Colonies—the West Indies.

The visit to the West Indies and British Guiana in 1922 of the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Mr. Edward Wood), who was accompanied by Mr. Ormsby-Gore, gave an impetus to the movement in progress there, as in other parts of the Empire, for constitutional development. At the same time it enabled the Secretary of State to deal with West Indian problems with the aid of the sure knowledge which comes from personal touch with the representatives of every shade of opinion on the spot. I feel confident that I carry the members of this Conference with me when I say that the written and cabled word is no substitute for direct personal contact. It is the fixed policy of the Colonial Office to follow the precedent so successfully established and to take every opportunity of repeating in other parts of the Colonial Empire similar official visits. I have already invited Mr. Ormsby-Gore to pay a visit to the British West African Colonies this forthcoming winter, and I hope that he will be leaving in the middle of December.

As a result of Mr. Wood's visit constitutional reforms are in the course of being carried out in Jamaica, Trinidad, Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia and Dominica.

The economic position of the West Indian Colonies is far from satisfactory. It has been necessary for several Colonial Governments to come to the assistance of their staple industries in order to enable them to tide over a period of grave depression. Both the sugar and the cocoa industries have experienced great difficulties, and the oil industry of Trinidad, from which so much was hoped, has not hitherto come up to the expectations that were formed in regard to it.

Telegraphic Communication with West Indies.

Telegraphic communication between and with the West Indies has given rise to dissatisfaction for some time past, both in those Colonies and, I believe, in Canada. The question was discussed at the Conference held at Ottawa in 1920, but at that time the existing contract with the West India and Panama Telegraph Company had still some years to run and no immediate solution of the problem was possible. We have recently put before the Canadian Government and the West Indian Governments concerned a scheme for an all-British cable from Turks Islands to Barbados, with subsidiary connections by cable and Wireless Telegraphy to the other Colonies. This scheme, which is based on the continued co-operation of the Government of the Dominion and of the Colonial Governments with His Majesty's Government, has now been accepted in principle by all the contributory Governments, and I hope that it will be carried out during the coming year.

This scheme will afford an opportunity for an even wider measure of inter-Imperial co-operation than the existing arrangement for joint contributions to the West India and Panama Cable Company's subsidy. The proposed cable is to be laid and maintained by, or on behalf of, all the Governments concerned, and as it is impossible for them to undertake directly an enterprise of this nature we propose, if the Dominion Governments represented on the Board see no objection, to ask the Pacific Cable Board to undertake the management of the cables and wireless stations which will be maintained under the scheme. We do not, of course, suggest that the Board should undertake any financial responsibility in the matter. All we ask is that they will extend to this new all-British route the skilled management and control which has been so successful in maintaining the all-British route across the Pacific. If our proposals are accepted, as I sincerely trust they will be, this new development of the activities of the Pacific Cable Board will form an interesting example of a Board, constituted for one inter-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62562

Imperial purpose, being subsequently employed for another kindred inter-Imperial purpose and will show in practice how co-operation between British administrations once started in any sphere tends inevitably to grow. We could ask for no happier augury of the outcome of the first Economic Conference.

Agricultural College.

Another Imperial development which emanates from the West Indies is the recent change in the scope and title of what was formerly known as the West Indian Agricultural College. At a meeting held at the Colonial Office this summer under my Chairmanship it was unanimously agreed that the scope of the College should be Empire-wide, but it was felt that the prospect of obtaining the necessary funds would be gravely impaired if the College retained a title suggesting that it was merely a local institution. It was, therefore, recommended that the title should be changed to the Imperial College of Tropical Agriculture, and our aim is that it should provide for the needs of all tropical dependencies by becoming the chief centre of agricultural research and staff training.

British Guiana in particular presents a special problem. Our only Colony on the Mainland of South America is rich in mineral and forest resources. In area it is as large as Great Britain, but it has a population of only 300,000. It is to be hoped that immigration, without which the Colony cannot be developed, may be resumed.

Africa.

I now turn to Africa. The British West and East African colonies both in area and population provide our greatest opportunity and the widest scope for sustained development. In those large tropical territories the improvement of communications and the advancement of education are the foundation of moral and material progress. New railway construction is now steadily proceeding in Nigeria, Gold Coast and Kenya, while important harbour works are being carried out at Takoradi in West Africa (Gold Coast) and at Kilindini in East Africa (Kenya). It is also hoped that the last link in the connection by railway of Lake Nyasa with the coast at Beira will soon be undertaken.

Kenya.

In Kenya political questions have recently overshadowed all others. It has been no easy task to provide an equitable adjustment of the several interests concerned in the political future of the Colony, but, after very careful consideration, the British Government has taken certain decisions which have been made public and which I need not here repeat. I sincerely trust that the settlement which we have made will enable all its inhabitants to devote their utmost energy to the development of the great resources of the territory in which they live.

In the administration of Kenya, as in other African Colonies and Protectorates, we regard ourselves as exercising a trust on behalf of the African population. Whatever measures we take must be considered in their relation to that paramount duty. We propose to continue the general policy of moral, economic and intellectual development of the African. Within the limits of their finances the East African Governments will continue, side by side with the great work of the Missions, to do all that is possible for the advancement of the natives. Considerable progress has already been made, and the Uganda Railway Administration is now paying special attention to the training of natives for mechanical work on the railways. It is confidently anticipated that in time mechanical work of this kind and the ordinary clerical work of Government will be carried out by Africans.

Tanganyika Territory.

In East Africa we administer, under a mandate issued by the League of Nations last year, a territory larger than any Colony, that of Tanganyika. The country's prosperity depends mainly upon agriculture and it has suffered from the general trade depression, besides having much lee-way to make up owing to the wreckage caused by the War. Progress is, however, being made, though revival is necessarily slow. Revenue is steadily increasing, and the relations between the native population and the Government are excellent. It has been found possible to make a considerable reduction in the military garrison. The system of administration which has been adopted is to support and supervise, with the least possible interference, the established native authority. It is recognised that, except to a very limited extent, the country is not suitable for European settlement, and this has been recently affirmed by the adoption of a Land Law modelled closely on one which has stood the test of time in the Northern Provinces of Nigeria. "Compulsory servitude," which is the same thing as slavery, has been abolished without any of the social disturbance that was dreaded in some quarters, and, I may add, without expense. This was a step which our German predecessors had never ventured to take. We are now able to spend more money on native education—though not so much as I would wish—and also on Agriculture, thanks to the liberal assistance afforded by the Empire Cotton Growing Corporation, who regard the Territory as a promising field for development.

C 62563

Rhodesia.

In Rhodesia important constitutional changes are now taking place.

As explained by Mr. Churchill, the position when the last Conference was held in 1921 was that a delegation from Southern Rhodesia was due to arrive shortly in this country to discuss the terms of the future constitution. As the result of this visit, draft Letters Patent providing for the constitution of responsible Government were prepared with a view to submission to the electors in Southern Rhodesia. Subsequently discussions were also held in South Africa between the Union Government and representatives from Southern Rhodesia regarding the alternative policy of entry into the Union.

Following on these discussions, a referendum was held in October of last year on the question whether the territory favoured entry into the Union or the grant of responsible government. The referendum having resulted in a vote in favour of the latter alternative, the new Constitution has accordingly now been completed and came into force this week on the 1st October. Difficult questions which had arisen with regard to the unalienated lands and the rights of the British South Africa Company on the termination of their administration have now been satisfactorily settled by means of agreements which have been arrived at with the Company and the Elected Members of the present Legislative Council of Southern Rhodesia. The settlement with the Company involves a substantial contribution from Imperial funds in addition to the amount for which the new Administration will make itself responsible. The settlement should be of material assistance to the new Government in the discharge of its responsible task. Under the new Constitution certain powers with regard to native administration are reserved to the High Commissioner for South Africa, but in other respects the people of Southern Rhodesia will have a full control of their Government and administration. In Northern Rhodesia, under the agreement made with the British South Africa Company, the British Government will relieve the Company of the administration on the 31st March, 1924, so that on that date the whole of the administrative side of the Company's great work in Rhodesia will come to an end.

I turn now to the East.

Ceylon.

In Ceylon the new Constitution granted in 1920, under which the unofficial element in the legislature is given a majority, has justified the hopes of its advocates and has worked successfully for three years, although some further modifications of the Constitution are now under consideration. Ceylon's tea and copra trade is flourishing, and there has recently been a substantial improvement in the position of the rubber industry as the result of the measures for the restriction of output undertaken jointly by the rubber-growing Colonies.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

962564

Malaya.

I am glad to report that the economic depression in Malaya, especially in the two main exports of tin and rubber, would seem to be passing.

The revenue has improved, and the financial stringency, which was especially severe in the case of the Federated Malay States, is to some extent relieved. A large loan of £10,000,000, of which £9,000,000 have already been issued on the London market, has enabled the administration to be carried on and important public works to be proceeded with. The loan has been entirely applied to Federated Malay States purposes, but in order that it might be a trustee security it was found necessary that it should be issued by the Colony of the Straits Settlements, which has re-lent it to the Federated Malay States.

The Colony itself has come through a severe period of adversity without having to borrow for its own purposes.

Hong Kong.

The disturbed condition of the neighbouring Chinese province of Kwang Tung and of China generally has naturally had a bad effect on the trade of Hong Kong as a distributing centre for South China, but in spite of this the trade returns for last year would have shown a considerable increase on those of the previous year had it not been for a very serious strike of Chinese labourers which paralysed the port for several weeks in the spring of 1922. A large scheme is under contemplation at present for an extensive reclamation undertaking, designed to increase the facilities of what is already, from the point of view of tonnage entered and cleared, the biggest port in the world.

Of all parts of the Empire, Hong Kong has probably come through the recent acute period of trade depression with the least loss and suffering. This is due to the fact that, as the entrepôt of South China, she profits from every branch of the huge and varied export trade of China, as well as from its European imports. It is also true that political unrest in China has diverted much wealth and capital to the neighbouring British Colony, in which the merchants and well-to-do classes of Chinese have implicit confidence.

Fiji.

Fiji has suffered from the loss of the Australian market for its principal export products, namely, sugar and fruit. But thanks to New Zealand, which now takes the bulk of the sugar crop, these islands, which are of great importance to our Imperial position in the Pacific, have passed the worst. I have recently learned with interest that there is an expectation of important new developments in trade and shipping communications between Canada and Fiji which cannot but be of mutual benefit to both. The demand for labour in Fiji exceeds the present supply, but the impetus of the new Canadian trade may attract both capital and labour to the South Pacific group.

Falkland Islands and Antarctic.

It may interest the Conference to know that the late Captain Scott's Antarctic ship, the "Discovery," has been purchased on behalf of the Government of the Falkland Islands for employment mainly in research into whaling in the Dependencies of the Colony, which include South Georgia, the South Shetlands and Graham Land, the South Orkneys, and the South Sandwich Islands.

In these Dependencies the Empire possesses a whaling field which in recent years has been more productive than all the rest of the world combined.

Existing scientific knowledge of the numbers and habits of the whale is inadequate; and we are anxious to devise a system of control of the industry which will prevent the practical extermination which has taken place in other whaling areas. The expedition will also afford opportunities for adding to scientific knowledge in many other directions.

Evidence that the investigations are also of interest to the Dominions is afforded by the opinion expressed by the Government of the Union of South Africa that the efforts which are contemplated in regard to the study of whaling off South Africa will gain immensely from the operations of the "Discovery."

962565

Middle East.

This concludes what I have to say to-day about the Colonies and Protectorates, but my survey would be incomplete without some special reference to developments in the Middle East. The supervision of this area, which includes Iraq and Palestine, was assumed by the Colonial Office in the spring of 1921.

In the statement made to the Conference by Mr. Churchill in 1921, a general outline was given of the Middle Eastern policy of the late Government, which was directed towards reducing expenditure both in Iraq and Palestine. This policy has been steadily pursued both by the late Government and the present Government, and the result is that the total expenditure this year on these two countries is estimated at £8,548,000 as against the actual expenditure of £26,695,364 for the year 1921-22.

Iraq.

To take Iraq first: On the 23rd June, 1921, the day after Mr. Churchill made his statement, the Emir Feisal, third son of the King of the Hejaz, arrived at Basrah as a candidate for the throne of Iraq. He was well received by the people, and on the 11th July the Council of State passed a unanimous resolution declaring him King of the country, provided that his Government should be a constitutional, representative and democratic Government, limited by law. Sir Percy Cox, who was then High Commissioner, took steps to obtain a confirmation of this resolution by means of a referendum, of which the results were known on the 19th August. In an electorate of about 1,000,000 the votes for King Feisal represented a proportion of 96 per cent., and he was accordingly recognised as King of Iraq by His Majesty's Government. The next step was to place our relations with him on a proper footing. Our position as mandatory was regulated by the terms of the draft mandate (though that document had not then, and has not yet, been formally approved by the League of Nations); but it was felt that a stage had been reached, with the establishment of constitutional monarchy in Iraq, when some more appropriate instrument was required as between ourselves and the mandated State. Accordingly a communication was made in November 1921 to the Council of the League of Nations, informing them that the British Government had been led by political developments in Iraq to the conclusion that their obligations vis-à-vis the League could be most effectively discharged if the principles on which they rested were embodied in a Treaty to be concluded between His Britannic Majesty and the King of Iraq. This Treaty would serve merely to regulate the relations between the mandatory and the Iraq Government, and was not intended as a substitute for the Mandate, which would remain the operative document defining the obligations incurred by His Majesty's Government towards the League of Nations. Negotiations with King Feisal were opened at the same time. After somewhat lengthy discussions a Treaty of Alliance was eventually signed on the 10th October, 1922. You will note the date, which was just before Mr. Lloyd George's Government went out of office. The Treaty provided for the conclusion of a number of subsidiary Agreements in which the precise degree of obligation undertaken by His Majesty's Government was to be defined. It was originally to remain in force for twenty years, but the present Government, after a most careful review of the whole question of policy in Iraq, arrived at the conclusion that this period was too long. On the 30th April, 1923, a Protocol was signed at Baghdad, providing that the Treaty should terminate upon Iraq becoming a member of the League of Nations, and in any case not later than four years from the ratification of peace between Great Pritain and Turkey. It was further stipulated that nothing should prevent a fresh agreement being concluded with a view to regulate the subsequent relations between the High Contracting Parties, and that negotiations for that object should be entered into between them before the expiration of the above period.

The present position is that the elections for the Constituent Assembly in Iraq, whose approval is necessary before the Treaty and

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62566

Protocol are ratified, commenced on the 12th July. The electoral procedure is a cumbrous one, with an elaborate machinery of primary and secondary elections based upon the Turkish system. It is not expected that the Assembly will be in session much before the end of the year. It is hoped that before its first meeting the various subsidiary Agreements now under negotiation with the Iraq Government will have been provisionally concluded.

Future of Mosul Vilayet.

There is one important point with regard to which the future of Iraq is still unsettled. You may remember that, during the first Lausanne Conference, an acute controversy arose over the future of the Mosul Vilayet. The Vilayet has been administered as part of Iraq since the end of the war. On economic and racial grounds the case for its inclusion in the Iraq State is exceedingly strong.

Nevertheless, the Turks, though their arguments were entirely refuted by Lord Curzon, held tenaciously to their claim that the Vilayet should be restored to Turkey. It was finally agreed that a decision on the boundary question should be held over for the moment; that a period of nine months should be fixed (as from the date of the ratification of the Treaty of Peace with Turkey) during which the frontier between Turkey and Iraq was to be laid down by "friendly arrangement" between the British and Turkish Governments; and that, failing such agreement within the period specified, the matter should be referred to the Council of the League of Nations. This arrangement was embodied in Article 3 of the Treaty as eventually signed at Lausanne on the 24th July last. We hope to start negotiations with the Turks at a very early date.

Although this question is still outstanding, it may, I think, be claimed that the policy initiated by the late Government and adopted with the modifications explained above by the present Government, has on the whole succeeded beyond expectation. Relations between the British representative at Baghdad and the Arab Government are good. Our hope is that, within the maximum period of four years, we shall have discharged in full our obligations to the Iraq State. We also hope that we shall have established such strong ties of friendship with the Government and people of the country that they will be glad to make fresh arrangements with us, at the termination of the mandatory period, in which our special position, as the Power mainly instrumental in achieving Arab liberation, will be freely recognised. That is our confident hope. If it is realised, Iraq may yet constitute a stable factor in the East. I do not wish, however, to take too sanguine a view of the present situation. There are many difficulties still before us. The Iraq Constituent Assembly has still to be elected. It is impossible to predict with any certainty what will be its general attitude and complexion. Its first task will be to ratify the Treaty concluded by King Feisal and the subsidiary Agreements which I have already mentioned. Also to enact the Organic Law which the Mandatory is required under the terms of the draft Mandate to frame for submission to the Council of the League of Nations. Until these stages have passed it is difficult to speak with full confidence.

Tribute to Sir Percy Cox.

I should not like to close this part of my statement without paying a tribute to Sir Percy Cox, who recently retired from the High Commissionership for Iraq. He possessed a knowledge and experience of Middle Eastern affairs that can only be described as unique. They were built up on a quarter of a century's arduous and successful work in the Persian Gulf region, where he acquired an influence that can never have been surpassed. We have been very fortunate in having been able to count on the assistance of this distinguished public servant in dealing with our Middle Eastern difficulties. He was succeeded last month by Sir Henry Dobbs, an Indian civil servant with a distinguished record, who had served previously in Iraq.

Palestine.

With regard to Palestine there is one direction in which the situation has greatly improved since Mr. Churchill spoke in June

C62567

1921. The garrison has been largely reduced and the cost correspondingly diminished. The actual charge to the British Exchequer in respect of Palestine was £2,024,000 in 1922–23. The estimate for 1923–24 is £1,500,000, while we have undertaken to reduce the figure to £1,000,000 in 1924–25. The figure of £1,500,000 is, of course, included in the amount which I mentioned above as the total estimated expenditure in Iraq and Palestine for this year. Beyond 1924–25 we have not given any explicit undertaking, but we hope that the progressive reduction of expenditure will go steadily on until the figure has been reduced to very small dimensions indeed. But our success in this direction must depend on the economic development of the country, which in its turn depends upon political stability. I wish I could report to you that there has been a substantial improvement in the local political situation during the last two years. In one sense it would be true. Since the Jaffa outbreak in the early part of 1921, which Mr. Churchill mentioned in his speech, there has been no serious disturbance of the public peace. We have now got a very efficient gendarmerie in Palestine which could be trusted to deal promptly with any emergency that might arise. But political unrest is by no means a thing of the past. A solution of the Jew-Arab controversy has still to be found. Perhaps I may be allowed very briefly to sketch the events of the last two years.

Zionist Policy.

You are aware that our policy in Palestine is based upon the Balfour Declaration of November 1917, by which we undertook to promote the establishment of a National Home for the Jews, subject to the conditions that the civil and religious rights of the rest of the population were not to be prejudiced. We have been doing our best to honour both parts of that declaration. Our High Commissioner, Sir Herbert Samuel, has displayed not only administrative abilities of the highest order, but also the strictest impartiality in dealing with the conflicting interests of the inhabitants of Palestine. A Jew himself, he has never been accused of showing undue favour to the Jews. On the contrary, his high sense of justice is recognised and applauded in every quarter.

Nevertheless, opposition to the so-called Zionist policy has continued. It came to a head in May 1921, when the Jaffa outbreak took place. In the following June the late Government published a definition of what was meant by the "National Home," with a view to allaying Arab apprehensions. The Arab spokesmen were not satisfied and decided to send a Delegation to London to place their case before the Government. The Delegation stayed in London for nearly a year, but in spite of much discussion it was not found possible to come to terms with them. What did happen was that a fresh statement of policy was issued in June 1922 which made important advances towards meeting the Arab views. The statement was officially accepted by the Zionists, but not by the Arab Delegation, who returned to Palestine after its publication. The new policy included the establishment of a Legislative Council on a partially elected basis. The elections for this Council were fixed for the early part of this year. Owing to Arab abstentions, an insufficient number of secondary electors were returned and the project of setting up a Legislative Council had to be suspended. The Arab politicians have, in fact, adopted an attitude of non-co-operation with the Government. They have received a good deal of encouragement from various quarters, both in England and elsewhere. We shall, of course, continue to carry out our obligations. There can be no doubt whatever on that point. But the present unrest is undoubtedly doing harm, and we should be glad to see it brought to an end without delay. The matter is engaging our active attention.

I should like to tell you, for your confidential information, what we are doing. For reasons which you will appreciate this part of my statement will not be published, and I would ask you to treat what I say as quite confidential. A Committee of the Cabinet was appointed last summer to go into the whole Palestine question. Their recommendations, which have been approved by the Cabinet, aim at modifying certain features of the present system that have

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62568

the appearance, not I think the reality, of unduly favouring the Jews as compared with the rest of the people of the country. No public announcement has yet been made on this point, but a despatch on the subject is on its way to Sir H. Samuel, who has been authorised by telegram to approach the local Arab leaders with a view to securing their acceptance of the settlement proposed. Any premature disclosure at this end might very adversely affect his prospects of success. If we should succeed in obtaining the concurrence both of Jews and Arabs in the new proposals, we shall have overcome the political difficulty that has hitherto so greatly retarded all our progress in Palestine. That is what we hope; but I cannot at the moment put it higher than a hope.

Transjordania.

Perhaps I ought to add a word about Trans-Jordan. To this region, though it is covered by our Mandate for Palestine, the Zionist policy does not apply. We have there an administration under an Arab ruler, assisted by a British adviser. The ruler is the Emir Abdullah, a brother of King Feisal of Iraq and a son of the King of the Hejaz. On the whole the experiment has worked well, though the position is not altogether free from anxiety.

That is all that I wish to lay before the Conference this morning. I shall be very glad to supply further information on any point connected with the Colonies and Protectorates or with the Middle East in which any member of the Conference may be interested, and I need not say that we shall welcome any advice or counsel which may be forthcoming from any of the Delegates in the handling of the large and complex responsibilities which devolve upon the Colonial Office.

Wireless Communication between Canada and West Indies.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Prime Minister, if I am expected to lead in a few remarks, beyond expressing very sincere appreciation for the most interesting and comprehensive review which the Secretary of State for the Colonies has presented, I would just say that I have not any particular comment to make at the moment. The only matter among those referred to of immediate and direct interest, so far as Canada is concerned, is the question of wireless and cable communication between Canada and the West Indies. The proposal that the management of this should be placed under the Pacific Cable Board is, I think, both practicable and desirable and, so far as Canada is concerned, would be entirely acceptable to us. Of the other subjects, while they are most interesting, I would say that the affairs to which they relate, speaking candidly, seem so remote to the matters to which we have been giving attention in our Government and country, that it would be presumptous for me to give an expression of opinion by the way of either suggestion or counsel with respect to them.

Pacific Islands.

Mr. Massey: Just a few words, Prime Minister. I would like to say that I listened with a great deal of attention to the very interesting statement made by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. New Zealand is interested to a certain extent in some of these Islands within the Tropical Zone in the Pacific, and, so far as our Islands are concerned, I am glad to be able to say they are fairly prosperous, much more prosperous than they were some little time ago. In coming to this country on the present occasion, the steamer on which I travelled called at Raratonga. It is not the most important of the Islands, but it is representative of the others, and I am glad to be able to say that good feeling prevails in Raratonga, and I gathered from what the people told us there that the same feeling prevails throughout all the Islands under the control of New Zealand. I do not suggest that it is because New Zealand controls them. Most of these Islands produce fruit, of very fine quality, and, in the last revision of the tariff some eighteen months ago, we gave a preference to fruit imported into New Zealand from other Islands. This has hit Fiji to a certain extent, but it has done good to our own people. The islands are in quite a good financial position. There is another interesting point arising out of this.

C 62569

While I was at Raratonga, I was met by practically the whole population—at all events some hundreds of people, including the whole of the British residents—and they asked me to convey a message of stedfast loyalty and affection to King George. I have not done that yet, but the matter is in progress and I intend to put it through the Colonial Office in the ordinary way. I wish to say that these people are not savages. There is an impression which ought to be got rid of that they are still savage or only half civilised. That is not the case. The people of Raratonga are civilised. It is one of the countries where the missionaries arrived a little over a hundred years ago, and did splendid work, and the effect of the work done by the missionaries is visible to-day. I have been informed that a larger proportion of the population of Raratonga are churchgoers than the population of any other part of the British Empire. It is an extraordinary thing, but I believe it to be the case from what I heard. Taking our Islands, I mean the Cook Group, we have connected some of them with wireless and it is a very great advantage to them in the way of getting their produce away. The steamers call; the people know when they are coming and they have the opportunity of getting their produce ready, whatever it may happen to be. I think it is chiefly fruit and copra—copra hardly comes under the heading of fruit—but copra is really the most important article of export. There is a difficulty about copra. There is no market for it, so far as I know, within the boundaries of the British Empire. There is a market for cocoanuts, but not the prepared article. I do not know why that is. I have not looked into the possibility of establishing a manufacturing concern in New Zealand, but I will have an opportunity of looking into that later. The copra produced in these Islands has to go to the United States. I would sooner see the business done within the boundaries of the Empire, and, if it is possible to do it, it will be attended to a little later.

British Empire Exhibition.

So far as the Exhibition is concerned I am very strongly in favour of the Exhibition. I think at a time like this it is a splendid idea and by bringing the resources of the Empire before the public showing what the Empire is capable of I think a very great deal of good can be done. Now is the time to extend our industries if it is possible to do so, and I do not need to remind you, Sir, and the other gentlemen who are present, that anything that can be done to help the heart of the Empire at the present juncture, helps the whole of the Empire. I do not like the outlook here. If the depression continues it is going to affect every part of the Dominions. Britain is our principal market and as the purchasing capacity of Britain goes down it most certainly will affect the other countries. I do not want to take a pessimistic view of this, and nobody will be better pleased than myself if I am wrong, but the present position makes it all the more necessary to push and extend our industries, trade and commerce wherever it is possible to do so.

Fiji.

Reference was made in the statement with regard to the sugar industry in Fiji. I mentioned that, I think, yesterday. There is a field for the extension of the manufacture of sugar in Fiji. When you speak of Fiji the impression is that you are speaking of one Island and that there are no others; there are many islands in the Fijian Group—I really do not know how many, but I should think at least a couple of dozen or perhaps many more than that. Some are quite large islands and are suitable for the production of sugar. That has been proved by what the Colonial Sugar Company has done there. At the present time the sugar industry is somewhat under a cloud, but the outlook is improving and I think it is going to come out all right. The company have a contract with us to supply sugar, which has recently been renewed for twelve months, but it has become necessary for them to get sugar from Java. Java is outside the Empire—it is Dutch. Sugar is one of the things in which New Zealand was very fortunate right through the war period. When people in England were practically unable to get sugar, it was being sold over the counter in New Zealand at 3½*d.*

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

062570

a pound. It is not quite so good as that now. Owing to their having to go to Java for it, sugar is dearer, but I think that it is probably being sold in New Zealand even now over the counter at 4½*d.* a pound or something like that, so the people there have no reason to complain of getting sugar at anything like that price.

Ross Sea Territory.

I am interested in what was said about the Ross Territory. Again New Zealand comes in. We have taken over the control of the Ross Territory on behalf of the Imperial Government—I am afraid later on it will be necessary for us to patrol the territory. I believe everything that has been said about the great quantity of oil which has been produced in the Ross Territory. We have all heard, although much was not said about it, that during the war huge quantities were sent from that territory to Norway, and thence to Germany. Even in peace time we do not like that sort of thing, and it is very important that the territory should be controlled. The whale fishing industry there should be conserved. There is also the seal fishing industry in those seas, which is of very considerable importance, and we know that seal fishing poaching, or whatever you like to call it, has been going on very largely for a number of years. We know that vessels have been down there and have come back loaded—they do not come to us—with oil and seal skins. We cannot hope to put things right at once, but we will endeavour to do our best so far as control of the industry is concerned, and make it, if possible, of more importance than it is at present.

Iraq.

With regard to Iraq, I have read the despatches that have come to hand, and I have also read the statements in newspapers, and I am glad to see that matters are fairly satisfactory there. I have a high opinion of the ability of King Feisal. I do not know whether Colonel Lawrence is still in that part of the world, or that he is assisting as he did previously. I consider that the work done by Colonel Lawrence was exceptionally valuable.

Palestine.

So far as looking upon the position from the point of view of the Middle East is concerned—Palestine—I never understood what was being done there, and I am bound to say that I do not understand what is being done there now. I only know this, that the Arab population of Palestine exceeds all the others put together. I have no doubt it is in capable hands, and I am not going to interfere—please understand that—but we have to remember that Palestine is practically under British control. I know about the Turkish Government and its relations, and, much as I sympathise with what is being done with the Jews, I think we have to be very careful not to do any injustice to the Arab people. The Arabs are extraordinary people to deal with. I know that, and if they are pushed too hard it will make for serious trouble. I am only interested from the Empire's point of view, and I should like to see things go smoothly in the Middle East as much as anybody else; but from what has been said by the Secretary of State for the Colonies we are not out of the wood so far as Palestine is concerned, but I hope with our usual good luck things will settle down and come out all right.

Economic Importance of West and East African Colonies.

General Smuts: I have listened, as I think we have all listened, with the very greatest possible interest to the informative survey which the Secretary of State has made of the Colonial Empire. Many of the points affect South Africa, and I will not refer to them, but I should like to raise a couple of points and ask a few questions. I said yesterday at the Economic Conference that I thought there was a great field for British development on the African Continent, and I will not say anything about that just now. It is a subject which I think requires careful consideration; it is one of our estates which has been least developed, and is the most promising, not from the population point of view, but from the economic and industrial point of view.

062571

Tanganyika Territory.

The Secretary of State said, in reference to Tanganyika, that it was not, except in small parts, an area suitable for white settlement. That is largely true, but at the same time we have to bear in mind that if Europeans are not to be induced to enter it there will be no development at all. It is not a home for white people such as many of the other British Colonies are, and our primary object there should be the development of the natives. But I see this danger, that if we are too much dominated by that point of view—that it is not a white man's country, and that it should be the natives' country—nothing will be done at all. As it is, the territory is largely stagnating; it is a considerable charge to the British taxpayer; it has gone back very much from what it was in pre-war days. The Germans spent a large sum of money upon it. The war meant the expulsion of the Germans, and in a rich tropical country like that everything reverted to the old position of stagnation, and that is very much the state of affairs we have to contend with now. If we want development there, we should have to give the whites some inducement to go there, and we should not look upon it as purely a native country. The best thing you can do for the natives is to get white capital for development there. Without that it is beyond the natives. They have stagnated during thousands of years, and they will continue to stagnate for another 1,000 years unless you can lift them up by the development—the white European development—of their country.

Duke of Devonshire: Can you suggest any means by which we can get white development? We are anxious to have any advice you can give us in that direction.

General Smuts: Yes, Secretary of State, I am prepared to make a suggestion, but I do not think we can do it now. We can discuss it among ourselves. A good deal can be done there, but I wanted to enter that caveat. I think we must not be dominated by the feeling that Tanganyika is a black man's country; and we want to do the best for the natives, and therefore white capital should be given the best inducement to go there. It is the best thing you can do for the natives—in fact, it is the only thing we can do for the natives. Education will be no good to them unless it is industrial education.

Ruanda Boundary.

The second point that I wanted to raise was with regard to Ruanda. Coming over I saw in the press that we have made another agreement with Belgium by which Ruanda has been given to Belgium under mandate. The position at the peace was this, that we had German East Africa and occupied it; the Belgians occupied another bit of country which they had covered in the war, and as a settlement we gave them a substantial part of Ruanda, which was the most important part of German East Africa; but we were very careful, with a view to the future, to reserve the eastern part of Ruanda, because we wanted to have our future communications intact between north and south. The British Empire at present occupies —— Communication between North and South in Africa.

Prime Minister: The whole of the west side of the Lake.

General Smuts: Britain occupies to-day a part of the whole length of the African Continent. They have throughout the whole African Continent a most valuable part, the back-bone, and if we are to have through communications from the extreme north to the extreme south we must have an all-British route, and that involves a considerable part of Ruanda for future communication between north and south. I do not know what has been done, but I saw in the papers that a new agreement has been come to, and I do not know whether it will be carried out.

Mr. Ormsby-Gore: There will still be a contact between Tanganyika and Uganda. Both Governors made representations as to their difficulties in maintaining the artificial frontier proposed in Paris, and an additional strip is going to be given to Belgium which is about 25 miles wide. It will not interfere with the possibility of communication between north and south. Belgium will not come up to Lake Victoria as we retain the Bukoba district.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62572

General Smuts: I am glad to hear that. I knew how anxious the Belgians were to get it. The position in the future may be acute in regard to the communications between north and south, but what you say is very satisfactory. The Union of South Africa has been giving a good deal of attention recently to this question of the development in Central Africa. Uganda and Kenya and Tanganyika are somewhat isolated; they lie far away, and we thought we could lend a helping hand from the south in their development and trade arrangements, developing trade with South Africa as much as possible.

Trade Agreement with Kenya.

We sent up a very able gentleman—whom I have in London with me now—to negotiate with the Kenya Government to see what sort of trade arrangements we could make with them that might be beneficial both to them and to us. It is clear that we can take lots of stuff from them that might be useful to us. Take railway sleepers, which we import on a very large scale into South Africa from other parts of the world.

Well, there you have in Tanganyika and in Kenya big forests of splendid timber and we thought we might lend a helping hand to the development of those countries. We fixed up provisionally a draft agreement with the Government of Kenya, which would be extended to Uganda and Tanganyika also. The convention for equal treatment of all nations within the Congo basin includes our African Colonies and the Protectorates too, and we have now been brought to a standstill by this Treaty, which was reaffirmed after the peace and which now bars the way. I shall be glad if we can overcome this difficulty, because I am convinced, so are the people in Kenya, that it is to their interests if a trade agreement can be made. If trade between South Africa and Kenya can be increased very largely it would give a great fillip to the development of those potentially very rich parts of the British Empire, and I should be very glad to consult Lord Curzon and the Foreign Office to see how we can overcome this difficulty. Any agreement we make with Kenya would be somewhat of a preferential character. That seems to go straight against the clause of equal treatment which has been put into the Congo Agreement. I wish we could overcome that.

The Duke of Devonshire: I think you will find it is probably a great inconvenience in many other directions as well. It is certainly a question we ought most carefully to explore.

General Smuts: It is important to us to some extent, but much more to those countries.

Sir P. Lloyd-Greame: There is another side to it also which one has to take into account. The French and Belgian Congo territories are in the same area, and they equally are precluded from making a trade arrangement which would be to their advantage but would cut us out. The Treaty is not all against our interests.

General Smuts: At the same time, that will not help forward the trade development of a country like Kenya—there are very limited markets there. It is a colony that will grow very fast once it is taken in hand.

British Guiana.

I was interested in what the Secretary of State said about British Guiana, that huge territory with a handful of people in it, opening a very wide prospect for emigration. Some years ago, during the periodical occurrence of our Indian troubles, we had Sir Benjamin Robertson there and we discussed with him at the time the question if it was not possible to find an outlet for many of our Indians who are disposed to become agriculturists in another place. He mentioned British Guiana at the time, and we agreed that a deputation should go to investigate British Guiana and go into the prospects and see whether it was a suitable place either for emigration from India or from South Africa or for both. I have heard nothing further about this interesting question. If it is a potentially very rich country, it is just the sort of country our Indians might be induced to go to. South Africa will welcome any such development.

C 62573

Palestine.

I just want to say a word or two about Palestine, and I register my very emphatic protest against the remarks made by my colleague from New Zealand. I was surprised to hear his remarks. I always looked upon him for the opposite view. I do not know why he has changed his mind. I think the British Empire is definitely committed to a definite policy, and any change of front about the National Home there would require very careful consideration. That formula was verified and it was approved by America, it was approved by the Government of the United States, it was approved by France and the other Powers, and it has become embodied in declarations by this Government. I think we ought to be very careful about changing one of the very important war objects which we achieved and achieved successfully. We have got up against some other difficulty. The Arabs are very tiresome people and the difficulties are very great. The western Government of Oriental peoples is almost insuperable. It is going to be a difficult matter in Palestine, but we are committed to this policy, and I hope that no departure will be made from this policy of a National Home without the most careful consideration. We have other reasons, too, besides, for being very careful in this matter. Our communications do not seem to be very safe now through Egypt. I do not know what is happening in Egypt. I agree with Mr. Massey; we do not know much about it, but certainly there seems to be a weakening on that front and we all know that the position there is most important for the future communications of the Empire. We now hold another frontage further in advance in Palestine. I should be very sorry if we had to abandon this front and fall back on the Suez Canal.

The Jewish influence in the world has been minimised by us. I consider Jewish influence is one of the great influences existing in the world to-day. There is no subtler influence working in the world, I hope for good, than the influence of that international people, full of brains and character, and dominating much bigger nations in many parts of the world through the filtration of their ideas and policies. So far, the British Empire has succeeded in keeping the Jewish influence on its side. We have had no anti-semitic feeling. It has been helpful to us and I hope it will continue in that way, but a departure from the principles has come as such a shock to the world that there is a danger of Jews being set against us. I am sorry, Mr. Massey; I thought we were all agreed that in the British Empire the Jewish influence should be kept on our side. It is not only in finance, but in much greater affairs than finance. I simply wanted to make these few desultory remarks. The dependent Colonial Empire is so vast that it is really beyond the scope of the Dominions. We have enough to do in the struggle with our own little problems of mandatory territories. I am very glad to hear that, on the whole, all is going well in the Colonies, and I hope they will add an enormous weight to the influence of this Empire. It might not be felt here at this table, but their economic importance is far-reaching. In the sum total this Great Empire is dependent upon them for a great deal.

Fiji.

Mr. Massey: My secretary has just informed me that I spoke of Fiji as French; that is altogether wrong. Fiji is British and has been for a great many years past; I should say for at least half a century, and perhaps more. Fiji, I am glad to say, is one of the native countries that sent a contingent for the Great War, and a particularly good one as it happened. The Fijians are not the same race as the other races in the Pacific. They are not Polynesians, but Melanesians. Physically, it is very hard to beat them. So much for that point.

Samoa.

I wanted to refer to Samoa. During my voyage across the Pacific I received a wireless from Samoa asking me to convey to His Majesty the King their loyalty and affection. It was couched in the usual flowery language which the Polynesian can use to advantage. Samoa was taken over by New Zealand from the Germans. Some

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62574

trouble was experienced during the first years of occupation. The difficulties have come to an end. We have a new administrator at Samoa at present, General Richardson, who was in London representing New Zealand Military Headquarters during almost the whole of the years of the war, and he is a particularly efficient officer. He was selected because I thought his character would appeal to the native people. He has been a tremendous success and has gained the confidence of the native people, who are now convinced that the change in control from Germany to Britain, or rather to New Zealand, has been for the benefit of the people themselves. They are settled down already so far as I can judge.

Palestine.

I think that General Smuts misunderstood me to a certain extent with regard to Palestine. Nothing is further from my thoughts than going back upon any arrangement that has been made with regard to Palestine. I think it would be one of the greatest mistakes possible to lose possession of Palestine, and I hope the Turks will never again get a footing there. I have had correspondence from people who have visited Palestine, some of them residents, who have represented that we ought to be careful in handling the Arab population, or there may be serious trouble in the future. I am glad that General Smuts gave me the opportunity to put the matter right. I am certainly not in favour of tearing up scraps of paper. The honour of the Empire must be the first consideration.

Investigation of Whaling Industry in South Atlantic.

Mr. Warren: I would like to express my satisfaction at the action of the Government of the Falkland Islands in sending the "Discovery," with the view to investigating the whaling industry —an industry of recent growth in the Western Hemisphere. It was a profitable one in Newfoundland about twenty years ago, but for lack of information it failed and the whales were depleted. Recently it has come back, enterprised by Norwegian capital. I only mention this because I should be very glad if any information which the Colonial Office gets as the result of the work of the "Discovery" might be made available for us.

Position of Indians in Empire.

Lord Peel: Prime Minister, there is one subject which was alluded to in the statement by the Colonial Secretary which is of profound interest to the members of the Indian Delegation and also to India, that is, the treatment and position of Indians in the Colonies. Of course, it is connected with the wider subject of the treatment of Indians in the great Dominions. Now my colleagues on the Delegation are very anxious that this subject should have a very full, free and friendly discussion at this Conference. I do not know whether this is the opportunity when we should discuss the matter because we are dealing now with the Colonies and Dependencies. I only wish at this stage to say it might possibly be taken when we are on the question of mandates, but whenever it is taken I hope the whole subject will be open for discussion. I should like, if I may, to ask my colleague, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, to support the view I have expressed in view of the strength of feeling in India on the subject.

Prime Minister: I think we should discuss it on some other occasion than this.

Lord Peel: It would be a matter of great satisfaction if this matter could be discussed.

Prime Minister: It is a new point to me, but I do not think we shall have any difficulty in arranging for it to be taken.

Duke of Devonshire: It is such a big subject; we could perhaps put it down for discussion at one of our future meetings.

Prime Minister: I think you might consult with Lord Peel about it.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: It was not my intention to go into the merits of any particular question or to discuss any issue in its details, but, as reference has been made to certain matters in which India is vitally interested, I think opinion in India will be awaiting an expression of the general feeling of the Conference. My intention to-day, with your permission, was, without going into the details or raising any issue of a specific character, just to give expression to the Indian point of view. I am entirely in your hands, and I would like an opportunity, whether now or in the future, generally to express my country's opinion on this question. Whether it will be now or at a later stage, I will leave it to the Conference to decide, but, if you will give me an opportunity generally to express the Indian point of view, I hope it will facilitate our work here, and it may possibly lead to a better understanding among the members of this Conference.

C62575

Prime Minister: I think the Conference would certainly welcome such a statement, and, as the Secretary of State for the Colonies has said, the matter is of great importance and one to which a whole sitting might well be devoted. We shall have to arrange what will be a convenient time for that. This morning we are only touching very generally on the points that have been raised in the Secretary of State's speech, and I feel that the matter to which you have just alluded is one of such importance throughout the whole Empire that it had better be dealt with as a whole in a separate discussion.

The Maharajah of Alwar: That is my opinion, and I think we are agreed that a friendly discussion on the general question at a date to be decided would be of considerable profit both to the British Empire and to my countrymen, and, starting as we have done in an atmosphere of goodwill and friendly feeling, I think it may not prove such a bogey as it may be in the minds of some. I believe that to look at the question from a friendly standpoint, with our difficulties explained, with a willingness to ask whether there are solutions, and, if so, what and how, will go a long way towards easing any anxieties that may exist among my countrymen and may help to arrive at some kind of settlement or agreement which would strengthen the confidence of the people and strengthen their loyalty towards the British throne.

Duke of Devonshire: Perhaps it might be convenient to circulate to the Conference a paper which we can have prepared as to the position in British Guiana, Fiji, and so forth.

Prime Minister: I think that would be a very good thing. I think the Foreign Secretary would now like to say a few words on one or two points that have been raised.

Zionist Policy in Palestine.

Lord Curzon: There is only one point on which I should like to say a word, because it involves the question of national honour and Treaty obligations, the conservation of which, of course, is more particularly in the hands of the Foreign Office. I allude to the question raised between Mr. Massey and General Smuts with regard to Palestine. General Smuts referred to the occasion, now several years ago, in the war, when the question of formulating a policy for Palestine, which resulted in the declaration about the national home, was discussed at length in this room. I forget if he was a member of the War Cabinet at the time the decision was arrived at, but, if so, he will remember that I was one of the few members of the Cabinet who opposed it. The feeling was very strong with the majority of the Cabinet that it was worth while to make this declaration quite apart from the merits of the case as affecting Palestine, because of the influence it would be likely to have on the Jewish population throughout the world and the desirability of winning their sympathy, and not only that, but their active support, during the war. There were one or two members of the Cabinet, Mr. Montagu was one, who opposed it on the ground that it was against their conception of the part to be played by the Jews in the world; and when General Smuts spoke of the great importance of having Jewish sentiment and Jewish support on our side, I think perhaps he to some extent ignored the fact that Jewish opinion is very widely divided on this subject. However that may be, I opposed it at the time for these reasons. Firstly, I was certain, knowing the country, that Palestine did not admit of the extreme economic development which was predicated by some of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62576

supporters of the idea; secondly, I knew that we should have great difficulty with the Arabs who, as Mr. Massey said, constitute an overwhelming majority of the population; and, thirdly, I was very nervous about the interpretation which might be attached by the Jews themselves to the very ambiguous phrase "national home"; perfectly innocent if you regard it from one point of view, capable, however, of being interpreted as going even up to the point of national autonomy at the other extreme. Well, the policy was decided upon, and has since been acted upon; and here comes in my point, the point in which, as Foreign Secretary, I am involved. I agree with General Smuts that it is wholly impossible to depart from that engagement. It is an engagement involving the national honour, an engagement entered into and carried out to its logical consequences before the whole world. The phrase about the national home, much as I mistrusted it, was incorporated in the agreement arrived at between the Powers in which I took part at San Remo. The declaration was itself repeated verbatim in the original Treaty of Sèvres. It has since been embodied in the Draft Mandate. That Mandate has been submitted to and approved by the League of Nations. We have been constituted the mandatories upon that basis, and only two days ago we heard from Geneva that the last obstacle to the definite sanction to the Mandate had been removed by an agreement that has been arrived at between the Italians and the French with reference to the cognate Mandate for Syria. Therefore the Mandate will henceforward be in active operation, and it is wholly impossible for us, without an abnegation of national duty and national honour which it is impossible to conceive, to recede from that position. There are other reasons which render it impossible to recede. Supposing we give up the Mandate for Palestine, do you suppose that the Arabs will be able to manage the country themselves? It is quite true, as Mr. Massey said, that they represent 80 per cent., or perhaps more than 80 per cent., of the population, but they are incapable of constructing a Government and administering the country. They must rely for some time on foreign assistance, and our surrender of the Mandate would not merely mean local anarchy, it would mean that some other Power will come in, and what Power will that be? There is no doubt whatever but that the French would step in. They are already in possession of the Mandate for Syria on the north. They are having considerable difficulty there, and our disappearance from Palestine would inevitably mean that they would join Palestine to their Mandate for Syria, and they would then be on the threshold of Egypt and on the outskirts of the Canal. We should then be confronted with a new political danger and a new strategical problem. That aspect of the case should be remembered. There is another aspect. Palestine, as I have pointed out, is a poor country capable of a certain but not of a very wide development, standing in need at every point of foreign money, foreign resources. The Arabs are quite incapable of providing it themselves, and the only people from outside who have hitherto made any particular contribution to the development of Palestine have been the Jews with their colonies, largely subsidised by wealthy Jews and in a flourishing condition. Let us hope that support will continue. Large sums have been raised in America during recent years for the purpose. You want to build ports, you want to introduce electricity. There are a hundred things you want to do in Palestine, and with the tremendous calls made upon us here you cannot expect large sums to be contributed by the British. It is only from the Jews that it can come. Therefore those are strong practical reasons for continuing the task we have undertaken. What then should be our policy towards the Arabs? Of course, it should be to remove every possible mark of invidious preference for the Jews as against the Arabs which may have crept into the administration. Now undoubtedly in the earlier days of the administration in Palestine the Jewish leaders, the Zionist leaders, said very foolish things. They interpreted the national home in its most extreme sense, and indeed they sometimes talked as if the administration was their own and conducted by them. That was a mistake. They have now been brought to reason, and one of the last acts of Mr. Churchill before he left office was to issue a statement, published as a white paper, accepted by the Zionist leaders, putting things on a proper basis. When the Duke of Devonshire alluded just now confidentially to the proposals that have been made he was alluding to what will transpire presently but must not be disclosed now, namely, the effort being made by us to give the Arabs precisely that measure of official share in the administration, through the creation of an Arab Council, which the Jews now enjoy, which has been looked on as a mark of preference to the Zionists, but if shared by the others should remove a large portion of their discontent. The first thing to do is to be absolutely fair to the Arabs, and the second thing is to be absolutely firm. They have been allowed too much to think that by conducting an agitation here and running round and sending delegations and deputations we can be driven out of the country. We are not going to be driven out of the country, and our policy should be on the lines that General Smuts has so well indicated, to be absolutely true to our Treaty obligations, removing every sign of invidious preference for the Zionists as against the Arabs, and maintaining a firm resolve to pursue what is the only salvation for Palestine, the economic and industrial development of the country. I wanted to make these observations because I have been on the other side.

C62577

General Smuts: I am satisfied with that statement of policy. If that is the policy I am satisfied.

Prime Minister: We have no alternative. Whether we agreed with the policy originally or not we are bound now by questions of honour.

PUBLICITY.

The next question is publicity, and I need not weary the conference on that because a memorandum has been circulated on the subject,* and I will ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies to say a few words in amplification of the concluding paragraph.

Duke of Devonshire: In endeavouring to make what arrangements we could for the conference we quite appreciated that not only in this country but also in the Dominions there was a great anxiety that there should be as much publicity given as possible, and we have made these suggestions for submission to the conference as a means of providing first-hand information and not merely a brief summary of what takes place.

Appointment of Minister in Charge of Publicity.

We suggest having a Minister who, although taking no part in the actual discussions himself, shall make himself au fait with the atmosphere of the conference and be able to give further information to the Press. I think a similar procedure will probably be adopted at the Economic Conference, and if the same Minister could undertake both duties I think it would be a material advantage. He would be in touch with all the members of the different delegations and he could give a great deal more real information than can be gathered from the official summary.

Prime Minister: It is a delicate work, and I think you had someone in your mind when you spoke to me about it.

Duke of Devonshire: Mr. J. C. C. Davidson.

Prime Minister: The Foreign Office would arrange for their own publicity—that is essential.

Duke of Devonshire: Obviously so.

Prime Minister: When the Secretary of State brought the matter up to me he suggested a name, that of Mr. Davidson, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who was with Mr. Bonar Law for so long. I think he is well known, and I am quite sure if it met with the general assent of the Conference this very delicate work could be in no more capable hands. I know Mr. Davidson feels that it is a very responsible task, and although he would do it he would be reluctant to undertake it unless he felt that his appointment to this duty met with the full assent of every member here. If so, he would do it to the best of his ability, and I am sure he would do it well. But he feels that it is a task which could only be undertaken successfully if at the outset he had the confidence of every member here.

* E. 78.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62578

Mr. Massey: It is a very important matter and one which has to be dealt with very carefully. So far as Mr. Davidson is concerned, I have not seen him lately, but I knew him years ago and I know what a thoroughly good man he is. I think, if it is a matter which should be placed in any official's hands, it could not be in better hands than those of Mr. Davidson. I look upon publication or non-publication, as the case may be, of our proceedings as of the greatest importance. We have had a great deal of talk about open diplomacy and secret diplomacy and all that sort of thing. My opinion is that open diplomacy is absolutely impossible, and if it is adopted it is going to land us into serious trouble. What I mean by open diplomacy is the publication of the whole of our proceedings. Take this morning for instance. There were very awkward suggestions, or the possibility of inferences being drawn from one or two statements made here this morning, which might land us in difficulties very easily.

Lord Curzon: We know, the politicians know, how things like that are distorted for party purposes, and how careful we ought to be in regard to them. And it is not only what has taken place this morning. What Mr. Massey referred to were merely instances that might occur any day, and there is a possibility of statements being made which would be distorted and altered to the disadvantage of those concerned. Personally I do not think these things ought to be reported at all.

Prime Minister: All that you say shows the need for the greatest discretion in any communications that are made, and communications have to be made, and the question is, how can we do it best?

Mr. Mackenzie King: Might I ask if procedure somewhat similar to this was not adopted at Versailles and Washington in respect of the Conferences there? I was not present at either of these Conferences.

Sir Maurice Hankey: At Washington, most certainly it was a precisely similar arrangement. Lord Riddell there was the medium of communication, but also some of the Delegates used to address the press occasionally. That has been followed in other cases.

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame: At Genoa and at The Hague.

Prime Minister: It was from past experience that this suggestion was put forward to-day. I think the Foreign Secretary wants to say a word on that.

Need for Secrecy as regards Discussions on Foreign Relations.

Lord Curzon: As regards the Foreign Office, I think we must make different arrangements. It is true that there are a great many things said at this table, some this morning, which it would be disastrous to circulate to the world; and so strongly do I feel about that, that I would not consent to make the statement which I am going to make on Friday and which will cover the whole ground of foreign affairs except in a spirit of absolute confidence with all those here present. It would be quite impossible for me to make that statement if there was any chance of disclosure, either of the text or the substance of it, to the world at large. What could I say with the necessary candour about France, Germany and other Powers, if the whole of it were to go forth? Our conception of this body is that it is a Cabinet, and has in it many of the powers and all the privileges of a Cabinet, and that involves complete confidence among ourselves. I exercised that confidence, I took advantage of it two years ago, as General Smuts will remember, and I propose to do it on Friday as regards foreign affairs. We had a talk last week with Mr. Davidson, who is thoroughly competent for the task, and he agreed that, as regards foreign affairs, no statement should be made that had not received my sanction as Foreign Minister, since the responsibility is mine. I shall have my Private Secretary at the Foreign Office here with me in the room, and any statements communicated to the press about foreign affairs will be communicated by him after consultation with me; and therefore all I would do at this stage would be to appeal to my colleagues in regard to foreign affairs to respect the confidence upon which I have built, and to ask that none of them, through their delegations or through their secretaries, will make any independent statement. Take, for instance, the question which we shall shortly bring before you, the question of liquor prohibition in the United States and the desirability of making an arrangement with America upon the subject, either by agreeing to the Treaty which has been proposed by Mr. Hughes, or otherwise. Can you conceive anything more unfortunate, if we had had such a discussion, than that there should appear in the papers the next morning that there had been a discussion, that I had said one thing, that someone else had said another, and that certain proposals were on the tapis. It would be absolutely ruinous; and what I say as regards America in that case, applies equally to Egypt—the situation there is delicate—and to many other cases. Therefore, not from any love of secrecy, but with due regard to the vital interests which are in our hands here, I appeal to the Conference, as I am sure they will allow me to do, to publish nothing as regards foreign affairs except by communication from agencies which are under my control.

C 62579

Need for Secrecy as regards Discussions on Defence.

Lord Salisbury: If I may say one word, I do not wish to trouble the Conference at great length, about questions of Imperial Defence. Though they are not on quite as large a footing in point of bulk as my noble friend, Lord Curzon's, particular jurisdiction, they do involve, on occasions, matters quite as delicate and, though I do not know that it is necessary to have the exact procedure which he has described in the case of the Foreign Office, it would be absolutely fatal if some of the things which it will be my duty to say and which it will be the duty of others to comment upon no doubt, found their way into the public press, and I am encouraged by what Mr. Massey said to make an equal appeal on my own behalf when we reach those topics.

Prime Minister: I think it is obvious that what you have to say would be very much on the same footing as what the Foreign Secretary has to say.

Mr. Massey: If my recollection is right when we discussed Empire defence two years ago what was said was not even reported by the ordinary official stenographers. It ceased to exist, except in very short minutes which were got out, I understand, by Sir Maurice Hankey.

Prime Minister: You will remember I said at the opening of that session that what took place on such occasions would not be reported, but there would be just a record kept by the Secretary of the Conference.

Lord Peel: I suppose it is understood that other Secretaries of State will be consulted before communications are issued. To take a particular case, India. I am not questioning the full competence of Mr. Davidson, but it is very difficult unless you are in touch with things in that country, constantly and closely in touch, to know what may be the effect of any particular statement on public opinion, so I take it we shall all have the opportunity of seeing communications before they are issued.

Prime Minister: The last thing he would do would be to circulate anything without consulting you.

Secrecy Essential to Frank Discussion.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Might I say a word on this subject. There are two particular considerations which have to be kept primarily in view. There is the third party, so to speak, the world outside the British Empire and ourselves. It is desirable that here among ourselves things should be said with the utmost freedom, and for that reason I should feel it deplorable if everything that was said here was to be made a matter of immediate publicity. We shall all of us probably say some things to each other here which we would hesitate to say in public anywhere. I believe, if we are to work for the common end we have in view, we must have complete freedom to express our minds and not lay ourselves open in any way to being misunderstood or misinterpreted. Certainly as regards countries outside the British Empire, it is most necessary that a consideration of their vast political significance should weigh, and that they should not be made capable of misinterpretation to or

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62580

by those other countries, and to that extent I am quite in accord with the view that on all these matters, having regard to the nature of the discussion and such like, we should preserve the secrecy that is essential to full and complete discussion.

Status of Conference.

Before referring to the other consideration I have in mind, there is one other point of which I should like to make mention. Lord Curzon used the expression, and I touch on it immediately because I think this is desirable, that his conception of this gathering was that it was in the nature of a Cabinet. So far as respects the procedure to be observed and the attitude to be taken in the matters we are discussing I heartily agree, but there is a definite distinction which, I think, we should have continually in mind between a gathering which has the powers and significance of a Cabinet and one which has the powers and significance of a Conference. I look upon this gathering as a Conference of Governments. We are here as representatives of Governments, I cannot feel that I come with any right or power to be a member of an Imperial Cabinet, using the word Cabinet in the sense in which we understand it as a body necessarily responsible to Parliament and through Parliament to the people.

Lord Curzon: I only meant what you mean, Mr. Mackenzie King. I am the strongest possible advocate of your conception of the nature of the work of this body. When I spoke of a Cabinet I only meant that we should treat each other with the confidence that Cabinet Ministers do; in no other sense did I use it.

Mr. Mackenzie King: That was my reason for bringing up the point; in order to make it quite clear.

Value of Publicity to Peoples of Empire.

May I say this of the other consideration I had in mind. I feel, if the Conference is to serve the end which we hope it will serve, the end for which it is intended, it is most important that the peoples of the countries which are represented here should be interested intelligently in what is going on, in so far as that may be possible. I fear that, if the proceedings are to be wholly secret, and if wise discretion is not used with respect to due publicity, the impression might soon prevail in the Dominions that we were a group meeting round a table and deciding a number of matters which were of vital concern to the people of the Dominions, of which they will have no knowledge, and with regard to which their views in no way could be expressed publicly. For that reason, I hope it may be possible to devise some means whereby as much publicity as is consistent with security will be given, not so much to the expressions used or to the particular arguments presented, but to the procedure and attitudes in a general way, and this one point in particular I would submit for consideration: that, with respect to matters which each of us representing different Dominions may have reason to believe will be of particular interest to our own Dominions, we should feel free to indicate to our press the subject that has come up for discussion and the attitude which we are taking towards it. I say that, having in mind the great care and caution which must be exercised, particularly with regard to questions of Defence and Foreign Policy; but some fundamental issues will be raised here, and the Dominions will wish to know in a general way what they are, what questions are being discussed, and what attitude we are taking towards them. I would like to feel that so far as each of our Dominions is concerned we are to have the right and privilege to see that through our press, in a very careful way, the people are kept intelligently informed of the broad lines of the discussions and the attitudes we are taking. At any stage of the proceedings some matter may come up, and any member of the gathering might well say: "This is something that we do not wish to have publicly mentioned." In such a case, I should feel that it would be the duty of everyone present to respect that wish, but what I have very much in mind is that the people of the Dominions and our Parliaments would expect us to give them some account of what has transpired at the Conference, the questions that have come up, the attitude we have taken, and that we should now feel the same freedom with reference to keeping the people generally and currently informed, as we should feel in our responsible positions in Parliament.

c 62581

Mr. Baldwin: I find myself in general agreement with all you have said, Mr. Mackenzie King, and it all shows that the Secretary of State, and I think the President of the Board of Trade, had these things in mind when they suggested the appointment of a man holding the position of a Minister who would accept the responsibility for this work and who is admirably qualified both by his tact and experience, and, if it seems good to you to agree with the suggestion that has been made, I think you will find that in the working the object you have in view will be attained most securely and most satisfactorily. That is my own view.

Mr. Massey: I do not think there is any difference of opinion with regard to what Mr. Mackenzie King has said. What has been suggested is exactly what has been done by most of the members who have attended these conferences. Speaking for myself, I would like my Parliament to know what has been done. In the first place, we do not commit our Parliaments to anything. Anything done here has to be ratified by the respective Parliaments before it comes into effect, and, so far as giving information is concerned, I have always made a two hours' speech to them, and Sir Robert Borden has done the same for Canada. But the point I want to make is that information does leak out here; there is no question about it. At our meetings two years ago, when very important business was being considered round the table at which we are sitting to-day, certain information appeared in the morning papers in London, and there was very serious trouble arising from it. I got come confidential information about it, which I cannot of course divulge, but certain information did get out, and we cannot be too careful about it. The question of the Liquor Traffic in the United States has been referred to by Lord Curzon. I have never seen it referred to in the newspapers, but passing through the United States I was actually asked to give my support in connection with certain proposals for dealing with that question, and I was told for the first time that it was coming before this Conference. I thought it a very improper thing on the part of those people to come to me and ask for my support in connection with matters of that kind.

Sir Tej Sapru: May I ask, Sir, whether it is open to me to say that you have been good enough, in response to our request, to set apart a special day for the discussion of questions affecting India?

Mr. Baldwin: I was going to mention that at the end, but as you have asked the question now, I may tell you that in the draft communiqué which Sir Maurice Hankey has drawn up, which he has just submitted to me, and which I was going to put to the Conference, it was suggested that we should say: "In the course of this discussion the Conference decided, on the suggestion of the Secretary of State for India, who was supported by his colleagues on the Indian Delegation, to devote a session at a later date to the discussion of the position of Indians in the British Empire."

Sir Tej Sapru: I am most anxious that that statement should be published and that India should know of it.

Mr. Baldwin: That is how it stands. May I take it that there is general approval to the suggestion of the Secretary of State that Mr. Davidson should do this work?

Mr. Mackenzie King: I would suggest, if I may be permitted to do so, that emphasis should be put on the fact that this procedure has been adopted by way of giving wider publicity. I fully approve of the suggestion.

Mr. Baldwin: The paper circulated to the Conference is headed "Publicity Arrangements." That is the whole point of it—what can be given shall be given; but the idea is that the general control of what should be given should be in the hands of some responsible Minister. That is the whole point.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62582

Mr. Mackenzie King: My point is rather to let the Press appreciate that we have made provision for wider publicity.

Mr. Baldwin: I think everybody will recognise that we are anxious to find a conduit of communication from this room to the public so far as it can be done. I do not think any of us have a different mind about that.

Lord Curzon: What Mr. Mackenzie King means is that in the announcement to the Press it should be stated that Mr. Davidson's appointment has been made and accepted by this Conference with a view to giving as much publicity to the proceedings as possible.

Mr. Baldwin: May I take that as agreed?

Sir Maurice Hankey: There is just this point. When I first drafted the communiqué before this meeting I did put in the point that Mr. Mackenzie King has made, but some of my colleagues came to me and said that Mr. Davidson would be so overwhelmed by attentions from the Press that his life would become intolerable.

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame: I should propose, if it is agreed to, that the Economic Conference which meets to-morrow should invite him to attend and at the close of the Conference we should agree among ourselves what should be revealed and what not, and he would have his regular times for seeing the representatives of the Press. That worked admirably at Genoa and other places, and it would save everybody from being bombarded. (Agreed.)

PROGRAMME OF ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. Baldwin: The next business is to submit the proposed sketch programme for the next ten days (see Appendix A*). While the members of the Conference are waiting for the paper to be distributed I might put this question to them. The Foreign Secretary on Friday will be making his most important statement, which will probably take up the greater part of the whole of the morning Session. Now, would the members of the Conference prefer that we should proceed to the general discussion of his statement on Friday afternoon, or would they rather take further time to consider it and open the general discussion on Monday morning? I am entirely in their hands on that, and perhaps they will just consider it for a moment.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I think it would be an advantage to have until Monday morning to reflect on a statement that will be as important as that.

Mr. Baldwin: I thought very probably that would be the decision, because the statement will cover a great deal of ground and it will be of the first importance.

General Smuts: I notice that on this draft programme an Economic Conference meeting is set down for Friday afternoon.

Mr. Baldwin: That is quite true. It is only if the Conference expresses a preference to devote the whole day to Foreign affairs, it would mean putting off the Economic Conference. I thought it was better like this, but I felt it only right to consult the members of the Conference.

Mr. Massey: That is, you should have a meeting of the Economic Conference on Friday afternoon?

General Smuts: Yes.

Mr. Massey: I am not going to raise any objection to this. I am anxious to get as much work done as soon as possible, but I thought we might commence the afternoons' sittings next week. Personally I have some engagements, but, of course, I should be quite prepared to give them up if the other members wish to sit.

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame: We really can do very little to-morrow in the absence of the Australian Delegation, and it would be of great value if we took some subject like "Settlement" before the week closes and get the preliminary discussion on that and get into some of the Committee work. I am entirely in your hands.

Mr. Massey: I am not going to raise any objection.

* For revised Sketch Programme, see Appendix (C).

C62583

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame: Is Saturday possible? I understood that there was to be a visit to Wembley.

General Smuts: Saturday will have to go out.

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame: We could only meet for an hour. I understood that all the Prime Ministers were going to Wembley in the morning and to luncheon there. Is not that so? That would only give us at the most an hour. It is hardly worth it, I think.

Mr. Baldwin: This is only for the information of the members. You see, the work that will come later in the week is subject to further discussion and revision. We seem to have plain sailing for the next few days.

Lord Salisbury: I do not know whether you have noticed that Friday, the 12th October, is the great day in the City.

Mr. Baldwin: We are going to discuss that later on. Sir Maurice Hankey has just put down these notes for our guidance.

Sir Maurice Hankey: I meant to suggest that Friday's meeting should be in the afternoon.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Baldwin: The question has arisen as to whether a number of important but, after all, small questions which may arise might be dealt with by committees. Such questions, for instance, as the Grant of Naturalisation to Persons resident in Mandated Territories, the appointment of Committees of Enquiry in connection with the revocation of Certificates, the readmission to British nationality of British-born women married to aliens, and marriages with foreigners.

General Smuts: Those are not questions for the Imperial Conference, surely?

Mr. Baldwin: Then there is the question of the position of the Dominions and India in relation to the signature of Treaties and also the question of Territorial waters. Those are subjects which Sir Maurice Hankey has brought before me, and they are just put down on the note that I am circulating (Appendix B). I am entirely in the hands of the members of the Conference with regard to these questions if they will be good enough just to glance at the papers.

General Smuts: Committees could deal with all these questions.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the suggestion, and the composition of the three committees is set forth on the paper. I think you have got three sheets there, and you will find two groups of subjects.

Duke of Devonshire: Would it be possible to discuss the question raised by General Smuts as to the Congo Basin at the Committee on Treaties?

General Smuts: I think that we need not raise the point here.

Mr. Baldwin: It is a departmental matter.

General Smuts: It is for the Colonial Office, the Foreign Office and myself to discuss that question between us.

Lord Curzon: I do not think we should have a second reading discussion on the points raised in the reference to Committee No. 1; they are small points.

Mr. Baldwin: No. 2, of course, is very important.

Lord Curzon: Referring to No. 2, the position of the Dominions and India in relation to the signature of treaties, that is very important, but whether it is desirable to have a second reading discussion here before there is a committee depends really upon the view of the Dominion representatives.

General Smuts: If a committee like that is constituted I should like to go upon it myself.

Lord Curzon: The Prime Ministers must obviously be on it.

Mr. Mackenzie King: That is one of the very important questions.

Mr. Massey: Is it necessary to bring that subject before the Conference? It is one of the thorniest you will have to deal with. I am quite certain of that.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62584

Mr. Baldwin: We might ventilate it, at any rate.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I am inclined to think we will find it an easy matter to deal with.

General Smuts: This is a thing we might discuss in a committee, and no doubt the Dominion Prime Ministers will be members of that committee.

Lord Curzon: I think we might refer it to the committee and constitute the committee of the heads of the various delegations. The Prime Ministers must be upon it.

Mr. Baldwin: The wording here is "or representative," but the secretary will see to that.

Lord Curzon: I shall be there. I do not see any advantage in having a general discussion here. The same people will speak here as upon the committee. In that way we should get to business quicker.

General Smuts: The Foreign Secretary might convene the committee. No doubt he will be there himself. He could convene it at any time that is convenient.

Mr. Baldwin: The next committee is on the question of the Anglo-French condominium in the New Hebrides.

Mr. Massey: We cannot do any good on that; I know that perfectly well. The French people have made up their minds, but there are so many people interested that I promised to bring it before the Conference—not for the first time, I may say.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the Conference agree to the setting up of these three committees?

General Smuts: Yes, we agree. Who will call together the first committee?

Sir Maurice Hankey: The Home Secretary.

Mr. Baldwin: The only other business is a point that was raised to me this morning by Sir Maurice Hankey, on which I think it would be well if he were to say a word in explanation; it is the question of a Joint Secretariat such as was established at the British Empire Delegations both at Paris and Washington.

JOINT SECRETARIAT.

Sir Maurice Hankey: At the last Conference we had a Joint Secretariat, and it would be very useful to me if I could have a colleague from each Dominion, and if this Conference would just agree in principle to set up a Joint Secretariat and would allow us to work out the details, subject, of course, to the approval in each case of the Prime Minister concerned. I would not like to dogmatise at this moment until I have discussed it with my colleagues, but, broadly speaking, the sort of suggestion I would make would be that, following the previous precedent, there should be a day "on duty" for each Dominion Secretary. On that day a secretarial representative would sit in my office and would help me in the discharge of all the mass of detail there really is in carrying out the work—in distributing, reproducing and correcting the documents and minutes, and so on, of this Conference. That would be the first point.

The second point would be that a Dominion or Indian secretary should be nominated—one only—to every committee of the Conference. The way we work Cabinet committees is that we get an expert in the department—if it concerns the Home Office, in the Home Office—who acts as a joint secretary. Then we associate someone with him from the Cabinet Office, who carries out the distribution, co-ordination, and the rest of the work of the Cabinet Office. I thought the same principle might apply to this Conference, that a Dominion or Indian secretary might be associated with, say, Resolution 1, the committee there—with a man from the Home Office. They would share the duties in that way. Subject to Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame's concurrence, I thought we might make corresponding arrangements, mutatis mutandis, for the Economic Conference. I think it would help us by giving us some assistance, and it might also assist the Dominions by giving them an insight into the interior working of the methods of the Conference.

C62585

Mr. Massey: You suggest arrangements similar to those which were in operation last time?

Sir Maurice Hankey: Exactly the same.

Mr. Massey: I can endorse what has been said by Sir Maurice Hankey. They worked very well then and gave great satisfaction, and I think it is a good opportunity for the secretaries who come with the Prime Ministers to become properly acquainted with the business of the Conference.

Mr. Baldwin: It strikes me as a good idea. May I take that as agreed to?

General Smuts: I certainly agree to that arrangement.

Mr. Baldwin: There will be circulated after this meeting the various draft conclusions that we have come to, not for present publication, but to help the Secretariat when they come to draft the final report and see that nothing is omitted then.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE.

Sir Maurice Hankey: There is the Press communiqué.

Mr. Baldwin: The Press communiqué. The Secretary proposes to send out, first of all, the names of those present. The communiqué then proceeds:—

"The Secretary of State for the Colonies made a statement to the Conference in regard to recent developments in the Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories. This statement will be published. A discussion followed in which the Prime Ministers of the Dominions and the Representatives of India took part. In the course of this discussion the Conference decided, on the suggestion of the Secretary of State for India, who was supported by his colleagues on the Indian Delegation, to devote a session at a later date to the discussion of the position of Indians in the British Empire.

"The Conference then proceeded to discuss its programme and order of business, and agreed to give its proceedings as much publicity, in the course of the meetings, as the nature of the subjects discussed, and the circumstances of the moment, permitted.

"With a view to making provision for carrying out this decision, the Conference agreed that Mr. J. C. C. Davidson, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, should be placed in general charge of the arrangements for publicity and should be present at the meetings of the Conference for this purpose.

"It was also arranged that a summarised report of the general results of the deliberations of the Conference should be published as soon as possible after its termination.

"Corresponding publicity arrangements will be made in connection with the Economic Conference.

"The questions on the Agenda of the Imperial Conference, which are comprised under the general headings of Foreign Affairs and Defence, will be dealt with by the full Imperial Conference, as will also any questions of principle referred from the Imperial Economic Conference.

"Other matters were remitted in the first instance to Committees of the Conference, including the following questions . . . ."

Then come the questions on the papers which have been circulated.

Sir Maurice Hankey: Not quite all of them. We left out the New Hebrides and the Signature of Treaties.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, I think those might be left out at the moment.

General Smuts: I think that is as well.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: What will be the subjects left to the committees?

Mr. Baldwin: Those we are going to make public are:—

"The Grant of Naturalisation to Persons resident in Mandated Territories.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

062584

Mr. Baldwin: We might ventilate it, at any rate.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I am inclined to think we will find it an easy matter to deal with.

General Smuts: This is a thing we might discuss in a committee, and no doubt the Dominion Prime Ministers will be members of that committee.

Lord Curzon: I think we might refer it to the committee and constitute the committee of the heads of the various delegations. The Prime Ministers must be upon it.

Mr. Baldwin: The wording here is "or representative," but the secretary will see to that.

Lord Curzon: I shall be there. I do not see any advantage in having a general discussion here. The same people will speak here as upon the committee. In that way we should get to business quicker.

General Smuts: The Foreign Secretary might convene the committee. No doubt he will be there himself. He could convene it at any time that is convenient.

Mr. Baldwin: The next committee is on the question of the Anglo-French condominium in the New Hebrides.

Mr. Massey: We cannot do any good on that; I know that perfectly well. The French people have made up their minds, but there are so many people interested that I promised to bring it before the Conference—not for the first time, I may say.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the Conference agree to the setting up of these three committees?

General Smuts: Yes, we agree. Who will call together the first committee?

Sir Maurice Hankey: The Home Secretary.

Mr. Baldwin: The only other business is a point that was raised to me this morning by Sir Maurice Hankey, on which I think it would be well if he were to say a word in explanation; it is the question of a Joint Secretariat such as was established at the British Empire Delegations both at Paris and Washington.

JOINT SECRETARIAT.

Sir Maurice Hankey: At the last Conference we had a Joint Secretariat, and it would be very useful to me if I could have a colleague from each Dominion, and if this Conference would just agree in principle to set up a Joint Secretariat and would allow us to work out the details, subject, of course, to the approval in each case of the Prime Minister concerned. I would not like to dogmatise at this moment until I have discussed it with my colleagues, but, broadly speaking, the sort of suggestion I would make would be that, following the previous precedent, there should be a day "on duty" for each Dominion Secretary. On that day a secretarial representative would sit in my office and would help me in the discharge of all the mass of detail there really is in carrying out the work—in distributing, reproducing and correcting the documents and minutes, and so on, of this Conference. That would be the first point.

The second point would be that a Dominion or Indian secretary should be nominated—one only—to every committee of the Conference. The way we work Cabinet committees is that we get an expert in the department—if it concerns the Home Office, in the Home Office—who acts as a joint secretary. Then we associate someone with him from the Cabinet Office, who carries out the distribution, co-ordination, and the rest of the work of the Cabinet Office. I thought the same principle might apply to this Conference, that a Dominion or Indian secretary might be associated with, say, Resolution 1, the committee there—with a man from the Home Office. They would share the duties in that way. Subject to Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame's concurrence, I thought we might make corresponding arrangements, mutatis mutandis, for the Economic Conference. I think it would help us by giving us some assistance, and it might also assist the Dominions by giving them an insight into the interior working of the methods of the Conference.

062585

Mr. Massey: You suggest arrangements similar to those which were in operation last time?

Sir Maurice Hankey: Exactly the same.

Mr. Massey: I can endorse what has been said by Sir Maurice Hankey. They worked very well then and gave great satisfaction, and I think it is a good opportunity for the secretaries who come with the Prime Ministers to become properly acquainted with the business of the Conference.

Mr. Baldwin: It strikes me as a good idea. May I take that as agreed to?

General Smuts: I certainly agree to that arrangement.

Mr. Baldwin: There will be circulated after this meeting the various draft conclusions that we have come to, not for present publication, but to help the Secretariat when they come to draft the final report and see that nothing is omitted then.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE.

Sir Maurice Hankey: There is the Press communiqué.

Mr. Baldwin: The Press communiqué. The Secretary proposes to send out, first of all, the names of those present. The communiqué then proceeds:—

"The Secretary of State for the Colonies made a statement to the Conference in regard to recent developments in the Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories. This statement will be published. A discussion followed in which the Prime Ministers of the Dominions and the Representatives of India took part. In the course of this discussion the Conference decided, on the suggestion of the Secretary of State for India, who was supported by his colleagues on the Indian Delegation, to devote a session at a later date to the discussion of the position of Indians in the British Empire.

"The Conference then proceeded to discuss its programme and order of business, and agreed to give its proceedings as much publicity, in the course of the meetings, as the nature of the subjects discussed, and the circumstances of the moment, permitted.

"With a view to making provision for carrying out this decision, the Conference agreed that Mr. J. C. C. Davidson, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, should be placed in general charge of the arrangements for publicity and should be present at the meetings of the Conference for this purpose.

"It was also arranged that a summarised report of the general results of the deliberations of the Conference should be published as soon as possible after its termination.

"Corresponding publicity arrangements will be made in connection with the Economic Conference.

"The questions on the Agenda of the Imperial Conference, which are comprised under the general headings of Foreign Affairs and Defence, will be dealt with by the full Imperial Conference, as will also any questions of principle referred from the Imperial Economic Conference.

"Other matters were remitted in the first instance to Committees of the Conference, including the following questions . . . ."

Then come the questions on the papers which have been circulated.

Sir Maurice Hankey: Not quite all of them. We left out the New Hebrides and the Signature of Treaties.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, I think those might be left out at the moment.

General Smuts: I think that is as well.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: What will be the subjects left to the committees?

Mr. Baldwin: Those we are going to make public are:—

"The Grant of Naturalisation to Persons resident in Mandated Territories.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62586

"The appointment of Committees of Enquiry in connection with the revocation of Certificates.

"Readmission to British nationality of British-born Women married to Aliens.

"Marriages with Foreigners."

The communiqué concludes with the following:—

"The Conference decided to establish a joint secretariat on which all the Delegations will be represented.

"The next meeting will be held on Friday, the 5th October, when the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will make a statement on foreign policy."

PROPOSED PUBLICATION OF CERTAIN PARTS OF LORD CURZON'S STATEMENT.

Lord Curzon: I have been talking with the Prime Minister about the difficulties of the statement that I propose to make on Friday. I said just now that it would be entirely of a confidential nature. It is quite clear that the public will not be entirely satisfied to know that I made a statement covering one and a half hours, or whatever the length of time may be, of which they know nothing; and it is quite certain, also, that as regards certain questions which are exciting the greatest public interest—for instance, the question of Germany and France—they will expect a little more; and therefore, what I have been thinking about, and have been discussing with the Prime Minister, is that, while I shall make my statement in a general and conversational way, and while it will be taken down for circulation here, yet on one or two aspects of foreign affairs, in which the public is particularly concerned, I had better draw up something to read which will be communicated verbatim to the Press. That will only apply to two or three cases. It might perhaps only apply to one, namely, the French and German case. Of course, I shall tell the Conference here the real inner history of the matter during the past two years, which it is right that they should know, but when I come to our present position and our present policy, then I think I had better do it in a form which can be communicated to the public, so that on Saturday what would appear in the Press would be this, that the Foreign Secretary made a statement on every aspect of foreign affairs in every part of the world, from which it has been decided to publish the following extracts: and then give those verbatim. That is not what happened two years ago, but there have been so many charges brought against us of secrecy, the public not knowing where we stand in respect of M. Poincaré, and so on, that I think in those cases, at any rate, it would be desirable to indulge in rather greater publicity.

Mr. Baldwin: And this gives a very good opportunity of getting before the public just as much as can in safety be given to them—which has not been done yet.

Mr. Massey: Of what you want to tell them?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

General Smuts: I think this departure from our previous procedure is really necessary. The statements which you made at this Conference previously were not published, but there is so much tension and expectation, and I can see so much feeling on this matter, that I think the Government would be fighting public opinion if some statement were not made.

Lord Curzon: Of course, if the whole thing were published I should have to alter the entire character of what I say.

General Smuts: I think we should have here the fullest and frankest statement of what has happened in foreign policy in the last two years, but the public will want some guidance on certain matters, and, if you prepare in advance those points you are going to give them, it makes the matter easier. You will be forced to publish something.

Lord Curzon: A statement about France and Germany is, I think, very important, and I think also it may be desirable to draw up something for publication about the Turkish Treaty. We have been very much attacked about the Turkish Treaty, and the public really do not know what the position is or what is the defence. I think I can draw up something about that.

C 62587

Mr. Baldwin: That concludes the business.

(The Proceedings then terminated.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 3, 1923.

APPENDIX (A).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE AND IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE.

Proposed Sketch Programme for Next Ten Days.

Thursday, Oct. 4 ...	Morning and afternoon	Economic Conference.
Friday, Oct. 5 ...	11 A.M. ...	Imperial Conference. Lord Curzon's statement.
Friday, Oct. 5 ...	Afternoon ...	Economic Conference.
Saturday, Oct. 6 ...	...	Economic Conference.
Monday, Oct. 8 ...	11 A.M.	Imperial Conference. (Discussion in regard to Lord Curzon's statement on foreign policy.)
Monday, Oct. 8 ...	Afternoon ...	Reserved for continuation of morning discussion, if required.
Tuesday, Oct. 9 ... Wednesday, Oct. 10	Prime Minister away in Scotland	Economic Conference and Committees of Imperial Conference.
Thursday, Oct. 11... Friday Oct. 12 ...	Morning ...	Imperial Conference. Subjects for discussion to be decided on the previous Monday, but probably either some question arising from discussion on Foreign Affairs or Defence.
Saturday, Oct. 13 ...	...	Imperial Economic Conference.

APPENDIX (B).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

Appointment of Committees.

Resolution I.

That a Committee be formed as follows:—.

The Secretary of State for Home Affairs (in the Chair);
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (or representative);
The Secretary of State for the Colonies (or representative);
The Secretary for Scotland;
The Attorney-General;
The Registrar-General;
A Representative of Canada;
A Representative of the Commonwealth of Australia;
A Representative of New Zealand;
A Representative of the Union of South Africa;
A Representative of the Irish Free State;
A Representative of Newfoundland;
A Representative of India;

to consider and report to the Imperial Conference on the following questions:—

(1.) The Grant of Naturalisation to Persons resident in Mandated Territories.

(2.) The appointment of Committees of Enquiry in connection with the Revocation of Certificates.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

062588

(3.) The readmission to British nationality of British-born women married to aliens.
(4.) Marriages with foreigners.

Resolution II.

That a Committee be formed as follows:—

The Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair);
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (or a representative);
A Representative of Canada;
A Representative of the Commonwealth of Australia;
A Representative of New Zealand;
A Representative of the Union of South Africa;
A Representative of the Irish Free State;
A Representative of Newfoundland;
A Representative of India;

to consider and report to the Imperial Conference on the position of the Dominions and India in relation to the signature of Treaties; and (if the Conference desires) the question of Territorial Waters.

Note.

The First Lord of the Admiralty (or a representative);
The President of the Board of Trade (or a representative);
The Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries (or a representative);
The Secretary for Scotland (or a representative);

will be added to the Committee for the latter part of its Terms of Reference.

Resolution III.

That a Committee be formed as follows:—

The Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair);
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;
The First Lord of the Admiralty;
The Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia;
The Prime Minister of New Zealand;

to consider the question of the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides.

APPENDIX (C).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE AND IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE.

Proposed Sketch Programme for Next Ten Days.

Thursday, Oct. 4 ...	Morning and afternoon	Economic Conference.
Friday, Oct. 5 ...	11 A.M. ...	Imperial Conference. Lord Curzon's statement.
Friday, Oct. 5 ...	Afternoon ...	Economic Conference.
Monday, Oct. 8 ...	11 A.M. ...	Imperial Conference. (Discussion in regard to Lord Curzon's statement on foreign policy.)
Monday, Oct. 8 ...	Afternoon ...	Reserved for continuation of morning discussion, if required.
Tuesday, Oct. 9 ... Wednesday, Oct. 10	Prime Minister away in Scotland	Economic Conference and Committees of Imperial Conference.
Thursday, Oct. 11...	Morning ...	Imperial Conference. Subjects for discussion to be decided on the previous Monday, but probably either some question arising from discussion on Foreign Affairs or Defence
Friday, Oct. 12 ...	Afternoon ...
Saturday, Oct. 13 ...	...	Imperial Economic Conference.

062589

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

VERY SECRET.

E. 3rd Meeting (1923).

LOCK AND KEY 45

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE THIRD MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W. ON FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1923, AT 10·45 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Mr. KEVIN O'HIGGINS, T.D., Vice-President of the Executive Council, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, CABINET OFFICE.

Mr. R. G. VANSITTART, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.

Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B. (Secretary).

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Newfoundland.

Mr. W. G. CAREW.

Canada.

Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

Union of South Africa.

Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

India.

Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62590

Mr. Baldwin: We are all very sorry that Mr. Bruce is weather-bound. We should have been glad to have welcomed him to-day, but as it seemed uncertain when he would arrive it was thought that, having regard to the limited time at our disposal, we had better not alter our programme, and doubtless the Foreign Secretary will have an opportunity of discussing part of the subject of his speech with Mr. Bruce when he comes, and we shall hope to see Mr. Bruce here on Monday.

Welcome to Mr. Graham and Mr. O'Higgins.

In the meantime—and I am glad to do so—we have to welcome two more colleagues to our Conference. Mr. Graham, the Minister of Railways in Canada, is here to-day, and Mr. O'Higgins, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of Ireland. We are very glad to see both these gentlemen, and we look forward to their contributions to our deliberations.

His Majesty's Reply to Message from Conference.

Before I call upon the Foreign Secretary, I have to read a message which I have received from His Majesty the King: "I sincerely thank the Prime Minister and other Representatives of the British Empire for the generous terms of the message which they have addressed to the Queen and myself on the occasion of the opening of the Imperial Conference. I sincerely trust that their deliberations will lead to a solution of those many and grave problems the settlement of which is so essential to the future welfare and prosperity of the Commonwealth of the British Nations."

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Lord Curzon: The first appeal I have to make to my colleagues is for absolute secrecy with regard to what I am about to say. Two portions of my address will, according to the arrangement which we made two days ago, be circulated to the Press and published to-morrow morning. They will be the parts relating to the Turkish Treaty and the situation with France and Germany on the Ruhr. The remainder will be of so confidential a character that to publish it would be highly detrimental in the public interest. But I take the view now, as I did two years ago, that here at this table you want to know the truth, that it is no good concealing anything, and that if you are to come here to assist us in carrying on the foreign policy, which is not that of these islands alone, but of the Empire, you should know the whole of the difficulties with which we are confronted, and should be in full possession, not only of the facts which are familiar to the world, but of things which are scarcely known outside the walls of the Foreign Office. Therefore I hope that when my speech is put into print you will be very careful that it does not pass into other hands.

Introductory Observations.

I have to deal with a period of two years since the time at which we last met at this table. They have been two years packed with incidents, crises, alarms and excursions, even with tragedies. Although it is now nearly five years since the Armistice was signed in a railway carriage in France, the tramp of armed men is still heard upon the Continent, and you have only to pick up your daily paper to hear the rumble of almost chronic revolution in your ears. I will endeavour to give you a general summary of what has passed in those two years, to explain to you what has been the policy of the British Government with regard to all the problems that have arisen, and to present you, in so far as prediction is safe, with some forecast of the future. I shall have to take you over pretty well the whole surface of the globe. My remarks will relate to countries that are spread over four Continents. In Asia I shall have to say something about Japan and China and some other smaller countries. I shall have to take you across the Pacific, to America, and to say something about the United States. In Africa there are two problems touching vital Imperial interests—at any rate in one case more particularly—namely, those of Egypt and Morocco. Finally, we shall come to Europe, where, with the exception of the Scandinavian countries, there is scarcely a single State which is not in a position of some unrest, and where British interests are not actively and sometimes perilously involved. And when you realise the enormous ambit of geographical space which I have to cover this morning you could not have a better demonstration of the world position which is occupied by our Empire. I am not going to give you a picture of something which is merely happening to other people and which interests them rather than us; I am going to show you that at each stage we are involved, that we must have a policy, and that in many of these cases we exercise a decisive voice. The fact is, as General Smuts truly said the other day, we cannot, even if we would, extricate ourselves from the entanglements of our duty and our destiny. We are in the centre of a great world whirlpool and we are affected by every movement of its waters.

C 62591

Communications between Governments since 1921.

There is one advantage which both you and I enjoy to-day in excess of anything that existed two years ago, and it is this. Under the system which was started then and has, I think, been successfully followed since, telegrams, papers and despatches have been sent out to you during the past two years in a manner and in a volume which has, I believe—you will tell me if I am wrong—given general satisfaction; and therefore I feel to-day that in approaching these problems there is a good deal of preliminary information which I need not give, because you are familiar with the earlier stages, and indeed with the stages up to the present moment in a good many of the cases with which I shall have to deal. The picture which I am about to draw is, I am afraid you will think, a rather sombre one. The world, particularly in this continent of Europe, is still convulsed with old passions, still on the verge of perpetual explosion, still the scene of lawless violence and crime. Revolutions are frequent. Dictatorships are becoming quite popular. It is almost impossible to take up a newspaper without seeing that some new gentleman has installed himself as Dictator in what was supposed to be a free country. I am afraid that this affords a great and pathetic contrast to the reign of peace and liberty and justice about which so many admirable perorations were made four or five years ago. The dark shadows of my picture will develop as I proceed. Let me not anticipate them now.

Hopeful Factors in Present Situation.

But there are certain points of light to which I should like to call attention at this stage, because they throw a feeble flicker of illumination upon the prevailing gloom. Peace with Turkey has been concluded in circumstances which I shall presently describe, and that festering sore in our relations with Eastern countries, and notably with Moslem populations, has been successfully removed. The Anglo-Japanese Alliance, in discussing which we spent so many hours two years ago, has terminated, but it has been replaced by wider conceptions of international relationship. Another matter which occupied us for long in 1921 was the case of Egypt, about which I shall also have something to say, and although the future is far from being devoid of anxiety, there is a temporary lull there; we have arrived at a solution of the Egyptian question, which, even if it be not free from anxiety for the future, has at least given us peace for the present.

The Polish question, which took up a good deal of my time in 1921, has ceased to be acute. The Little Entente, that is to say, the three States of Jugo-Slavia, Czecho-Slovakia and Roumania, have consolidated both their own security and their mutual friendship, and are undoubtedly an element of stability in Central Europe. The condition of Russia, is, on the whole, less bad than it was. The League of Nations has exercised a wholesome and conciliatory influence in world politics. The British Empire has in this period escaped without any actual recrudescence of war. I venture to think that British prestige and British honour have been maintained. Our policy has been one not of sensation, but of sobriety. It is not one, I think, of which we have any cause to be ashamed. We have endeavoured to exercise a steadying and moderating influence in the politics of the world, and I think and hope that we have conveyed not merely the impression, but the conviction that, whatever other countries or Governments may do, the British Government is never untrue to its word, is never disloyal to its colleagues

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62592

or its allies, never does anything underhand or mean; and if this conviction be widespread—as I believe it to be—that is the real basis of the moral authority which the British Empire has long exerted and I believe will long continue to exert in the affairs of mankind. Our sole object throughout this period has been not the gratification of any territorial ambitions of our own—after all, we have no further conquest that we desire to make—it has been to bring about stabilisation, peace and security among those nations and peoples who are still disturbed.

Difficulties of Present Situation.

I must allude, in a sentence or two, to certain difficulties with which we have had to contend. The first of these is the weakening of our material and to some extent our moral resources. The world knows only too well that when the war was over we disbanded our forces with almost undue alacrity. We have now an Army, in relation to the vast extent of our Empire, of almost insignificant dimensions. There is not only war weariness, but profound moral repugnance to the very idea of war among our people. I am not sure, also, that there is not a certain weakening of moral fibre in this country which you see in the reign of sensation, of excitement and holiday making, that prevails almost everywhere and finds expression in the daily newspapers. Our material weakness has undoubtedly been a source of weakness in our foreign policy. For instance, when I was dealing with the Turks at Lausanne, their knowledge that, apart from the Dardanelles and Constantinople, where we had forces, we were really not in a position to go to war, and that in no circumstances would this country have tolerated war, tied my hands and enabled them to claim much that they would not otherwise have done. Again, it puts us in a position of chronic inequality with France, who, with the great resources to which I shall presently allude, possesses at every stage pieces on the board that I cannot move, and with which, if she chooses to do so, she can check me at almost every turn. Another, but I hope a transient, source of weakness has been a certain disunion in our own ranks. While public opinion in general has, I believe, warmly supported the line of action which the Government has thought it necessary to take in foreign affairs, there are certain elements in the Press, as you know, powerful, wealthy, wholly unscrupulous, which have done their best to weaken our position, to present an impression of disunion, and often to take the side of those who are opposed to us rather than our own. This, although, as I say, I hope only a transient phenomenon, has certainly added to the difficulties of the Government.

Difficulties with France.

But—and here I am about to say something of the most confidential character—our main difficulty during the past two years has been the difficulty of working in absolute sincerity and friendship with our great neighbour across the Channel, the frequent desertions and the almost chronic lack of loyalty in great emergencies of the Government of France.

I will give you concrete illustrations. She has broken away from us over and over again. In M. Millerand's day you will remember her unauthorised excursion into Frankfort and the neighbouring towns. In M. Briand's day she concluded without our knowledge and behind our backs a secret Treaty with the Turks at Angora—the real source of my difficulties at Lausanne. In the war between Greece and Turkey, although we bound ourselves to furnish arms to neither party and faithfully adhered to our pledge, she steadily provided the arms for Mustapha Kemal with which he succeeded in defeating the Greeks. At Lausanne I found her a faithless ally, deserting me at the pinch everywhere, and carrying this attitude and these proceedings to a point at which the leading French Delegate, M. Barrère, left the Conference and threw up his post, sooner than carry out the instructions for surrender over the whole field and the abandonment of our cause which he had received from M. Poincaré in Paris. In January of the present year, as you know, in the face of our opposition, she persisted in rushing into the Ruhr. These are facts; nobody can dispute them, and we have to realise that there is no altruism in the policy of our great neighbour.

C 62593

Desirability of maintaining Entente.

She is out for definite objects. The war gave her the opportunity, and with a defeated enemy and a distracted Europe, she aspires to attain, and she has already attained to some extent, the domination of the European Continent. Her Government is presided over by a Minister of great ability and untiring zeal, but of a stiff and rigid nature. She has a Parliament which is absolutely subservient to his decrees. She has a public opinion that would support him in any measures taken against a defeated enemy. She has the most powerful army in Europe, an air force of overwhelming superiority, a menacing array of submarines, and a large black army in the background. She is pursuing a policy that, in our view, at any rate, is far from being favourable to the recovery of the world.

Now, do not imagine that when I use those words I use them lightly, or that I am inspired by the smallest animus against our great neighbour and ally. No one is a more profound believer than myself in the policy of the Entente; and I do not rest that belief merely on the memories of the war, or on principles of self-interest; my conviction is based on the widest considerations of world peace and world progress. If France and ourselves permanently fall out, I see no prospect of the recovery of Europe or the pacification of the world. To maintain that unity we have made innumerable sacrifices. During the last two years I have preached no other doctrine, and I have pursued no other practice. During the last year alone I spent nearly as much time on the Continent as I did in this country, endeavouring at every stage with laborious hands to build up that unity. I cannot say truthfully that this loyalty has received any encouragement, still less any imitation. These are things which I cannot possibly say in public, but of which I shall give proofs as I go along. Some I have given you already. They make the task of conducting British foreign policy extremely difficult; and the qualities which a British Foreign Minister should now cultivate seem to be those not of cleverness or astuteness, still less of enterprise or daring, but those of endless patience and an equanimity that never falters. When I was in India I used to sit weekly in the Viceroy's chair under the picture of Warren Hastings, and beneath that picture was written the motto—his motto—"Mens aequa in arduis." I have often thought since that a better motto could not possibly be taken for the work that the Foreign Minister of this country has now to discharge.

General Survey.

With this little prelude of a general character I must press on to my survey, and I will take you through the Continents to which I have referred. I will begin first with Asia. I had not much to say about Asia two years ago, but since then, much more than before, she has been swept into the maelstrom, and Asiatic politics touch the Empire at many points now just as closely and require just as great a vigilance as do the politics of Africa or of Europe.

Japan.

Take, for instance, Japan, with which I will begin. Since the last meeting of our Conference there has been a great change in the outlook of the Far East. The Anglo-Japanese Alliance came to an end on the 17th August last, when there were deposited at Washington the ratifications of the four-Power Pacific Treaty between the British Empire, America, France, and Japan, which henceforth takes the place of the old alliance, and also the ratifications of the Naval Treaty. The tension between Japan and the United States of America, which preceded the Washington Conference, is now definitely ended, and Japan has given proof of her desire for peace by returning to China the Shantung Railway and Kiaochau, and by withdrawing her Expeditionary Force from Siberia and her garrisons from Harbin and Hankow. The strategic position of Japan has been greatly strengthened as a result of the Naval Treaty. Now that no Naval fortifications may be extended within effective striking distance of the Japanese shores,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62594

the Japanese can feel that the seas between Japan and the Asiatic mainland are in their sole keeping. The Philippine Islands lie more than ever at their mercy. The Japanese Government could well afford to sacrifice their ambitious Naval programme, since the Treaties secure for them the very object for which the Fleet has to be maintained. Meanwhile, the Army, although reduced slightly in numbers, has been greatly improved in equipment and organisation, and is a more powerful factor than ever. So far as the strategic situation alone is regarded, Japan is at full liberty to take whatever action she wishes in China and Siberia, and there is probably no Power in Europe or America who could effectively interfere against her.

But Japan, though potentially more powerful in the Far Eastern Area, is becoming increasingly averse from complications abroad. Her aggressive action in China in 1915 and her intervention in Siberia have brought her nothing but trouble. The lesson of Germany has not been without effect, and the numerous Japanese, who during and since the war have been travelling in Europe and America, have returned home with an impression that, however powerful Japan may be in her own geographical sphere, she is a long way behind the British Empire and the United States in resources, organisation and development. Meanwhile, agrarian and labour problems are asserting themselves in Japan, and she seems increasingly desirous of remaining on good terms with her neighbours.

There have been several abortive Conferences with the Soviet Government. The Japanese are anxious to come to some working agreement with Russia; but so far they have been prevented by difficulties about the status of Northern Saghalien and reparation for the massacre of Japanese at Nikolaevsk.

The relations between ourselves and Japan remain entirely friendly. I cannot say that I feel they are positively intimate. There is an element of secrecy and mystery about the policy and character of that inscrutable people; but so far as all external appearances go, we may rely entirely upon their friendship and support; and at the various Conferences I have attended, I attach a high value to the Japanese representative, because he always votes on my side. Therefore I do not think that, although the Japanese Alliance has terminated, there is any weakening in the ties that unite us. Further, as regards the case of Singapore, which I dare say will be discussed here, you must understand that the criticism in Japan of the project for extending the Naval Base in Singapore has been aroused much more by comments in the British Press and Parliament than by the scheme itself. There is no reason to think that the Japanese, either as a nation or as a Government, regard the project as an unfriendly act. In my judgment, it would be absurd if they did so.

You must not think that the disastrous earthquake in Japan has in the least injured her position as a Great Power. Her Army is unaffected, her Navy has lost the valuable base at Yokosuka, but no important ships. The social structure of the country is stable, and her credit is very high. The catastrophe, however, is likely to accentuate the present tendency to avoid adventures abroad. The material damage of the catastrophe is estimated to run into 200 to 300 million pounds; and for two or three years at least all her available funds will have to be utilised for reconstruction purposes rather than for strengthening the Army and Navy or for national expansion overseas. During this period, Japan will be very dependent upon the goodwill of the United States and the British Empire for various materials, and probably also for financial aid.

China.

I pass to China. The situation in China is steadily and continuously deteriorating. The two Washington Treaties dealing respectively with the general policy of the Powers in China and with the Chinese Customs tariff, have not been ratified, owing to delay on the part of the French Government. The British Empire has notified its readiness to ratify. Further, we have announced our desire to devote our share of the Boxer indemnity to purposes mutually beneficial to Chinese and British interests. We declared at Washington that we should restore the leased territory of Wei-Hai-

C 62595

Wei. An agreement governing the terms of the rendition has been drawn up by an Anglo-Chinese Mission, and would have been carried out by now were it not for the obstructive attitude of the Chinese Government and Parliament in regard to a few minor points. Apart from the Japanese, who have restored Kiaochau, we alone have taken any action to meet the Chinese demand for the restoration of the leased territories, as the French have shown no inclination or desire to surrender their territory of Kwangchouwan. They maintain that they are under no obligation to do so, since they undertook to return it only in the event of all leased territories being restored to China, including presumably the Kowloon extension and the Kwangtung Peninsula. The foreign postal agencies have also been withdrawn from China. If the Chinese have failed to advance further towards the aspirations expressed by their Delegates at the Washington Conference, they are themselves entirely to blame. The country seems further than ever from unification. There is no President. There were seven Prime Ministers in 1922.

General Smuts: Is there any now?

Lord Curzon: None; and for my own consolation I may add that there were four Foreign Ministers during that period. A shadowy Cabinet still exists in Peking and a shadowy Opposition, whose tactics are to absent themselves from the capital and so make it impossible to form a parliamentary quorum. The power is in the hands of the military chieftains or "tuchuns," and it is difficult at times to distinguish them from the brigands with whom their troops seem to be interchangeable. These "tuchuns" are continually intriguing and disputing among themselves and fighting of a desultory character frequently takes place. But no single man is strong enough to enforce his will upon the others. Meanwhile, during the last two years, China has defaulted upon nearly every one of her foreign loans, other than those secured on revenues controlled by officials of foreign nationalities. She owes large sums of money to foreign firms for materials supplied on credit, and has failed to meet legitimate claims for compensation for damage suffered by foreign firms by brigandage and civil war. Even her contribution to the League of Nations, although she has been a member of the Council, has been in arrears since 1921. Every form of taxation, including many levies on foreign trade in violation of treaty obligations, and scandalous opium exploitation, is resorted to by the provincial and local authorities, but little of the proceeds reaches Peking, and practically the whole is swallowed up in the maintenance of the "tuchuns" and their armies.

The feature of internal chaos which most affects the foreigner is the increasing menace of brigandage and the danger to foreign lives and property. This came to a head last May, when an express train was looted, one foreigner, a British subject, was killed, and twenty to thirty persons, mostly Americans, were carried off into the mountains. Under strong pressure from the Diplomatic Corps at Peking, the last of these foreigners was finally released after five weeks' captivity, but the incident has damaged foreign prestige in China, since it has been impossible for the impotent Government to punish the offenders. Consequently, a strong note was presented by the Treaty Powers to the Government on the 20th August. It calls for damages for losses suffered, demands that vigorous military action be taken, and insists on guarantees for the suppression of brigandage; also on the dismissal of three high officials. The reply of the Chinese Government has just been received. It is conciliatory in tone but entirely unsatisfactory in substance. The future, therefore, in China, is the reverse of encouraging. We must be prepared at any time for news of fresh outrages, and an increasing sense of insecurity is inevitable. We must be ready for an ever-growing volume of reproaches from British interests in China, which find that they cannot secure payment of their just debts; and we may have to make up our minds whether, if the present state of affairs follows its lamentable course, we can afford, in the last resort, to exert ourselves by taking military action, or whether we must retire for shelter to the comparative safety of the Treaty Ports. China has reached a state of collapse and she is a great potential danger to the world.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62596

No one wants to take her in hand, and she seems quite incapable of regenerating herself. Her numbers, the extent of her Empire, her resources, the latent strength of her people, invest her with the illusory appearance of a Great Power. Her representative was admitted to the Council of the League of Nations. The fact is that in no effective sense, except numerically, is China a Great Power. She will steadily go from bad to worse until some strong man arises and cleanses the Augean stable; but in face of a problem so large, a population so vast and disorganised, no single man can cope with the task, and, if he did, his next step would be to picket himself in the principal stall of the stable which he had just cleansed.

Afghanistan.

I must say a word or two—they will only be a few words—about one or two other Asiatic countries. The first of these has great interest for our colleagues from India. I speak of Afghanistan, and I mention it here because it is since we last met at this table that Afghanistan, instead of being a country under the control and within the purview of the Indian Government, has, under a Treaty which we concluded two years ago, acquired diplomatic representation, and is now a part of the area for which I am responsible. Up to and before the war Afghanistan was a semi-independent country with a ruler to whom we had conceded the title of Sovereign, but who, in return for the handsome subsidy that we gave him, was pledged to conduct his foreign policy in accordance with the views of the British Government. Upon the death of the late Amir, who on the whole was a loyal and friendly ally, a younger son of his seized the throne, and, under the bad advice of his Council, indulged in the luxury of a war with us. It was a somewhat indecisive war, as conflicts of that nature in those mountainous countries usually are; but it was concluded at length in 1919 by a Treaty of Peace which recognised the independence of Afghanistan and was to be followed later by a Treaty of Friendship. One and a half years were then spent in tortuous negotiations; and at the very time that the Afghan representatives were in India, a Soviet Mission was in Kabul, plentifully endowed with funds, offering a subsidy, and endeavouring to present itself as the real claimant to Afghan friendliness. In November 1921 we at length concluded a Treaty which we described as one of neighbourly relations, that was to last for three years. No subsidy is now given to the Amir. A British representative is placed at Kabul, and there are British Consuls in the towns of Jellalabad and Kandahar, and there is an Afghan Minister in London. The Afghans enjoy the privilege of importing material, including munitions, through India, subject to the right of the British Government to stop this traffic if they are guilty of unfriendly acts. In return no Russian Consuls are to be employed in Afghanistan in places contiguous to the Indian frontier. Simultaneously, Afghanistan has opened up diplomatic relations with France, Germany and Italy, and has Ministers at their capitals. She has therefore now entered the comity of Nations. But I tell you, knowing them well, and having been there, that the Afghans are a backward, suspicious and intriguing people, and that we are seldom free, as my friend Lord Peel will know well, from anxieties because of the question of the frontier tribes. I can tell you in a sentence what that trouble is. In the mountain country between India and Afghanistan exist these fanatical people, many hundred thousands strong, who are within the political but not the administrative border of India. They are connected by ties of blood and religion with Afghanistan. It is the business of the Amir to keep in touch with them, and not infrequently he foments their raids. Just at present there is a good deal of trouble with him, because of his apparent lack of interest in handing over certain criminals in those frontier tribes—the murderers of British officers and even of a lady within our border. Therefore, difficulties there are chronic and intense; and I merely mention Afghanistan to you now because you can never be quite certain that the storm cloud may not collect again on those hills, as has more than once happened with disastrous consequences to our prestige in the past. I think we shall have further difficulties when the Treaty comes to an end, which it does this year. It will probably be denounced by the Afghans, and then long and interminable negotiations will begin again for some Treaty which will be more favourable to themselves.

C 62597

Persia.

I will now turn to another small Asiatic Power, Persia, a country always hovering on the brink of a dissolution that never comes. She has a feeble and useless monarch, who is constantly endeavouring to exchange the asperities of Persian life for the fleshpots of Paris and Nice. She has a Government which changes every few months, and whose officials regard office as a legitimate and pleasant means of extortion. She has a people who are destitute of any nobility of character or strength. She has a political system that is permeated with every vice. She lived for a century on the rivalry between Great Britain and Russia, and has recently endeavoured to revive the experiment. The Bolshevists have large sums of money at their disposal; they practise an intense propaganda; but, so far as political matters are concerned, and Persia herself is involved, they are not over successful. A local Mussolini, the Minister of War, has been in office since 1921. He shows great vigour and patriotism; he is the first man to have raised a real Persian army. Whether he will turn out to be a King maker, or King breaker, or King himself, I cannot forecast. As regards financial reform in Persia, as the Persians were unable to accept the assistance we offered them, we have encouraged Dr. Millspaugh, the American Financial Adviser, who has been in the country for some time. We have an able and active Minister there, Sir Percy Loraine, who upholds our interests while giving good advice to the Persian Government. Our interest in Persia lies in its geographical position between Iraq, the Persian Gulf and Afghanistan. We cannot ignore it, but it is a source of small consolation and constant trouble.

Hejaz.

In the western parts of Asia there is one other potentate with whom we have to deal, and who causes us a good deal of annoyance. This is King Hussein of the Hejaź. The Conference will remember that in the earlier stages of the War, in our anxiety to bring in the Arabs on our side, we gave a number of assurances to King Hussein, then the Sherif of Mecca, couched sometimes in rather ambiguous terms. A little later, when we concluded the Sykes-Picot Agreement with France about Syria, Palestine, and other countries, and later on when we accepted the Declaration about a Jewish National Home in Palestine, we took steps which were regarded by the King as inconsistent with the pledges we had given to him. The Sykes-Picot Agreement he regarded as barring his claims on Syria—as, indeed, it did. The Balfour Declaration prevented him from satisfying his ambitions in Palestine. Mr. Massey spoke the other day about Colonel Lawrence, and asked if he was still being employed. We sent out Colonel Lawrence two years ago to negotiate a Treaty with this difficult potentate, but even the tact and influence of Colonel Lawrence were of no avail. Since then we have spent two years in trying to come to terms with him, the object of the arrangement being to protect British subjects in the Hejaz, to regulate the annual pilgrimage to Mecca, to settle his boundaries, and to prevent conflict with his Arab neighbours. We were to recognise under this Treaty Arabian independence, and he was to recognise our special position in Iraq and Palestine. So far we have not come to terms, and I am afraid that this erratic and intractable old man will defeat us in the end.

United States of America.

I now cross the Pacific and go to America. One of my colleagues here the other day asked me to indulge in flattering words about the United States. I do not propose to do so. Not that I am unwilling to perform that task—I have performed it on many public occasions, and no doubt shall have to do it again—but I am here not to indulge in empty flattery, but to tell you what is the exact position of affairs. The Prime Minister mentioned the other day the six Treaties of the Washington Conference, particularly those which dealt with the limitation of naval armaments, with the maintenance of the status quo in the Pacific, with China, and with the use of submarines and poison gas in War. No doubt the pro-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62598

ceedings at Washington, and the tact of Lord Balfour in particular, had a great and admirable effect upon our relations with the United States, which have since been of a very friendly and agreeable description. I should also like to say in the presence of our colleagues from Ireland that the settlement of the Irish question and the constitution of the Irish Free State have brought about a very perceptible diminution in the Irish and anti-British agitation in America.

One of the reasons which, in our frequent Government discussions on the matter, had an influence in the solution which we afterwards adopted, was the consciousness that the position of Ireland was a great source of weakness in conducting our foreign policy, by alienating from us the sympathy of our great sister nation across the seas at the very moment when we most wanted it; and the removal of this source of friction has had an even wider effect than I have indicated, because the very people who were at the bottom of the anti-British agitation in the United States on the score of Ireland are the same people who are also running the cause of the Indian seditionists, of which my colleague, the Secretary of State for India, could tell you so much. A further effect of no mean character has been produced by the successful result of the Prime Minister's mission in funding the American Debt, although, as he pointed out, the burden which we have to shoulder in consequence, and which will not be exhausted until the year 1984, is one of the most severe and almost overwhelming character. I will not refer to the question of liquor prohibition and the 3-mile limit, because I propose to circulate a paper on that subject to the Conference, and no doubt we shall devote to it a separate morning. The United States had on the stocks a Ship Subsidy Bill which, if passed, would have dealt a severe blow to British shipping, but which was happily talked out. The existence of State-owned shipping in the United States of America is, I am sorry to say, a frequent and fruitful source of incidents with ourselves. We had an illustration of this the other day in connection with the action of the American Vice-Consul at Newcastle, whom we found exercising a quite improper pressure upon passengers, whom he advised or compelled to go by United States ships. We consequently had no alternative but to withdraw the exequatur of the Consul at Newcastle. This has been a source of inconvenience both to the United States and ourselves. I have had a good deal of discussion with the United States Government upon the matter, and I hope that it is in course of solution, although I need not go into further detail now.

Our relations with the United States are therefore of a very satisfactory description; but I must warn the Conference, as no doubt many of them know, that we make a mistake in this country if we judge of American opinion solely by the American opinion of the East. The seaboard of America, originally colonised from this country and inhabited by people in close contact with Europe, is not America. It may contain the governing cities; it does not contain the weight of opinion; and you will notice that in the United States, if a President goes on tour and wants to be certain of winning an election, it is to the centre and the west that he goes. Therefore, never delude yourselves by thinking, because Boston or Washington or New York takes this or that particular line, that necessarily means the United States. Mr. Mackenzie King will know that just as well as I do, and there is in the centre and in the west of that country an enormous mass of powerful opinion which we can scarcely touch. It is really the regulating force in the United States politics. They are the people we want to get on our side. These are the people who make friendship or enmity with the United States a certainty.

The Conference may perhaps expect me to say one word in passing upon the attitude of the United States towards European problems. Their attitude towards the League of Nations remains unchanged. It is wholly hostile. It is true that the late President was interested in the International Court; but his support of it excited a good deal of opposition even in his own country. They had a member upon the Reparations Commission; they withdrew him. The United States representative with whom I sat at Lausanne was not very helpful at critical stages. The Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, proposed last year a Committee of Experts for enquiring into the financial position in Germany, but he has never followed it up. You must therefore count upon this, that the attitude of the United States Government towards European politics has in it no element of altruism at all. They are governed exclusively by what they regard as their own interest, and by an overpowering fear of being involved in the entanglements, perils and dangers of Europe. That is the policy of the last Administration. During the short time for which Mr. Coolidge is in the Presidential Chair, it will be his. It will be the platform upon which any candidate for the Presidential Chair will have to stand. Even the war debt policy of the United States, to which I have referred, is unfavourable to the general settlement of affairs on this side of the ocean, while their tariff increase is equally unfavourable, in so far as it restricts exports from abroad to the United States. Take as an instance of what I call their non-altruistic policy, their attitude about the cost of their army of occupation on the Rhine. Although they never ratified the Treaty of Versailles, they insisted upon demanding from Germany the cost of their army of occupation and some other charges as well, thus claiming all the profits while unwilling to bear any of the burdens entailed by the Treaty that concluded the war. That is, so far as I see, the exact position in the United States at the present time.

C 62599

Mexico.

I need only allude in a couple of sentences to one other country on the American Continent with which we have close trading relations, and that is Mexico. Mexico, under the rule of General Obregon, is, I think, one of the worst governed countries in the world. We have refrained from recognising his Government because of the corrupt and violent nature of the Administration, and because of his total refusal to settle our claims. The United States Government, more amenable, have just, I believe, resumed diplomatic relations with him. We must get something for our people, some satisfaction for our claims, before we can extend a similar favour. Only yesterday evening I received a despatch from Mexico dealing with a scandalous case of expropriation by the Government of the property of a British subject. Therefore, matters are there in statu quo.

Egypt.

We will now cross the ocean and come back to Africa. The Conference will remember that many hours were devoted two years ago to the discussion of affairs in Egypt. At that time we were drawing up a draft Treaty with the Egyptian Government. Our position had been somewhat compromised by the action taken by Lord Milner's Mission in the previous year, and that Mission and its report had excited expectations which we found it difficult altogether to fulfil. Those of my colleagues who were here will recollect that our discussion rested solely upon our conception of the importance of Egypt and the Suez Canal in the chain of Imperial connections; and I think quite as much stress was laid upon that point by the Dominion Prime Ministers as by the members of our own Government. A draft Treaty was drawn up in the Foreign Office and was brought by me here and was discussed line by line at this table, and those were the general instructions upon which I was authorised to proceed in my impending negotiations with the Egyptian Government. It was while the Conference was sitting that Adly Pasha, who had been on many occasions Egyptian Premier, came over to conduct the negotiations with a representative delegation, and we spent some months in debating the matter over the way. The negotiations broke down because Adly Pasha dared not concede anything from fear of the extremist or Zaghlul party in Egypt, whereas my instructions rendered it impossible for me to meet him on many of the points upon which he was disposed to insist. Accordingly, in the autumn of that year he resigned office on returning to his country.

There then ensued a period of agitation and commotion in Egypt in the course of which Lord Allenby, our representative, had to deport Zaghlul Pasha and some of his agitating friends to

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62600

the Seychelles. This, of course, was a temporary necessity, not a permanent solution. The alternative lay between a policy of armed coercion on our part and one of considerable concession. Lord Allenby and the whole of his advisers in Egypt advocated the latter course. Lord Allenby came home, exerted great pressure upon the Government, and finally we arrived at the Declaration of February 1922. This Declaration terminated the Protectorate, declared Egypt an independent sovereign State, promised the abolition of martial law upon the promulgation of an indemnity law, and reserved for future discussion between the two Governments the following four subjects:—

(a.) The security of the communications of the British Empire in Egypt.
(b.) The defence of Egypt against all foreign aggression and interference, direct or indirect.
(c.) The protection of foreign interests in Egypt and the protection of minorities.
(d.) The Sudan.

Pending the conclusion of agreements the status quo in these four matters was to be preserved. In March 1922 the text of this Declaration was debated in the House of Commons and was approved on a division by 202 votes to 77. The following day the Sultan assumed the title of King Fuad and proclaimed Egypt a Monarchy. Simultaneously His Majesty's Government, in notifying all the Powers with whom they were in diplomatic relations that the British Protectorate over Egypt was terminated, informed them they would regard any interference in the internal affairs of Egypt or any aggression against her territories as an unfriendly act, thus establishing virtually a Monroe Doctrine in regard to that country. During the ensuing weeks almost all the Powers who had hitherto maintained in Egypt only agents and consuls-general raised their representatives to the rank of Minister, and accorded a varying degree of recognition to the new Egyptian Monarchy.

The next year, that is the past year, has been spent in preparing for the new régime in Egypt. The Egyptian Government have been engaged in drawing up a new democratic constitution, while King Fuad, who has strong autocratic leanings, has done his best to whittle down those provisions, even going so far as to discredit his own Ministers by paying court to Zaghlul. We, on the other hand, have been engaged in securing an Indemnity Act to provide immunity for those persons who had taken action under the régime of martial law, which of course, we desired to abolish, and which has since been abolished, and further in protecting the interests of our own officials and securing adequate compensation for those who in the change of circumstances might wish or be obliged to retire from the Egyptian service. During this period Ministries have risen and fallen, three in the past year. Finally, the present Prime Minister, Yehia Pasha Ibrahim, took office and all the above measures were carried.

In the meantime Zaghlul Pasha, whom I left just now at the Seychelles, developed an illness that followed the ordinary course of the maladies of political invalids, for the startling vicissitudes of which medical certificates are apparently always forthcoming. In the Seychelles he was so bad that he had to be removed to Gibraltar. In Gibraltar we learned on medical authority that his life was in peril, unless he went to France for a cure. In France he recovered so rapidly that, martial law having been abandoned, he returned to Egypt, and he is now conducting there a vigorous electoral campaign with all the physical activity and the complete lack of moral restraint that mark the worst tub orator in Hyde Park.

The situation at the moment therefore is that Egypt has acquired the status and rights of a sovereign and independent monarchy in addition to a democratic constitution, but subject to the limitations imposed by the British Declaration of February 1922. Those limitations ensure the maintenance of the status quo where vital British interests are concerned, i.e., in the defence of Egypt, the protection of foreign interests and minorities, the security of imperial communications and the Sudan—until, as I have said, agreements on these subjects can be negotiated between ourselves and Egypt. His Majesty's Government are prepared to fulfil their promise of negotiation with Egypt on these four subjects, but it is for the Egyptian Government to make the first move.

C 62601

I must admit to the Conference that I look forward with no small anxiety, although the sky is now relatively clear, to the future in Egypt. You will presently have a native Parliament, probably very much under the domination of Zaghlul Pasha, who will decline to accept the bases upon which we agreed a year ago, who will proclaim that the independence which we have given them is a sham, who will declare that the continued presence of British troops, of the British garrison, in the country is an outrage, and who will revive and put forward their claims to its expulsion. You will have there a King who must be carefully watched, and who, while protesting loyalty to us, will always be courting popularity with the extreme party. His own character and convictions will in all probability produce a conflict between him and the Parliament, and he will therefore try to divert the struggle into one between the Parliament and ourselves. Our policy in Egypt I have always felt, with due loyalty to the concessions we have made and the constitution we have set up, must, broadly speaking, be guided by large imperial considerations; and it is from that point of view that the Foreign Office regard the problem which will be placed in a few days before you by Lord Salisbury, namely, the question of the defence of Egypt viewed from the Imperial standpoint. At the same time I warn you here that we shall have trouble in Egypt, and that we shall in all probability have to stand very firm. If I am in office for any length of time, I think that this will be one of the chief anxieties with which I shall be confronted.

Morocco and Tangier.

At the other end of Africa, I must mention in passing the question of Morocco and of Tangier. You all know from history the enormous strategical importance of Tangier, which was at one time a British possession, and you will already have realised, our naval advisers will at any time tell you, of what supreme strategical importance Tangier, facing as it does and almost opposite to Gibraltar, is to the British Empire. In virtue of that position and of its past history, Tangier has acquired an importance which nothing else would justify. A few years ago, when we agreed to recognise the French Protectorate over Morocco, we only did so on condition that the town and zone of Tangier should be placed under some general international administration; and this was definitely provided for in agreements which were on the verge of being concluded between France, Spain and ourselves, the Powers principally concerned, when the war broke out. Ever since then the French have been doing their best to repudiate those agreements, and to secure the complete incorporation of Tangier in the dominions of the Sultan. This is a policy which we have strongly resisted, for I need hardly say that the final acquisition of North Morocco and of Tangier by France would imperil the whole of our position in the Mediterranean, and place our imperial communications practically at her mercy. For the past three years, since I have been at the Foreign Office, I have been endeavouring to settle this question, about which I have had much correspondence and conversation with the French and the Spaniards. Things have been very unfavourable until last week. We have had sitting here a Committee of experts to see if we could find a basis for a larger Conference to deal with the question in the broadest possible manner; and, greatly to my surprise and much to my satisfaction, the French representative, only three days ago, came back with instructions from Paris of a quite different character from any which he had hitherto received, providing the basis of a possible arrangement in the future. Great pressure has been brought to bear upon the French Government by their colonials and their traders at Tangier, which has suffered severely from this long period of indecision. Therefore I am more hopeful now of coming to an agreement than I have been at any previous date.

But with the question of Tangier is bound up the question of the Spanish zone. If you will look at your maps you will see a long belt of territory which is under the Protectorate of Spain and which

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Q 62602

fringes the southern shore of the Mediterranean. Spain, of course, is bound to that country by every tradition of long connection, and national pride; but she is wholly unable to deal with the problem. She is incapable either of handling, of defeating, or of ruling the tribes. She suffered a terrible disaster a year or two ago, and her position there is a source of constant anxiety. What the Military party who have just seized power in Spain will do in Morocco I do not know. I think it is quite likely that after re-establishing, if they can, the military prestige of their country, they may propose to withdraw, because Morocco is a sink into which so much of the treasure and life of Spain has been poured fruitlessly for years. But their retirement would at once open up another and more serious danger because, undesirable as it is to have there a weak country like Spain, Spain could only be succeeded by France, and the extension of French power along the whole southern shore of the Mediterranean, from Tunis and Algiers, to Morocco, would be a very grave matter. You can understand therefore how anxious I am to settle the Tangier question, and what great importance I attach to the success of the negotiations which are taking place on this subject.

Spain.

Here I cross the Straits and take you into Europe; and perhaps you may ask for a word about what has been passing recently in Spain and what is its meaning. Our own relations with Spain are good, and only last year we concluded a Commercial Treaty with her of a very favourable character, to which the Dominions and India can accede if they desire to do so. The weakness of Spain lies in the appalling corruption and depravity of her Government and her parliamentary institutions, and it was the public recognition in Spain of the vices of this system, which has gone on unchecked for years, and in which every interest in the country has been deeply involved, that brought about the successful military revolt the other day. Although carefully organised it had been successfully concealed. It took most people, including the King of Spain, by surprise; but it was so completely successful that the whole parliamentary and public and governmental system of Spain collapsed in an hour before the attack. This was not because the people of Spain loved the soldiers, but because they detested the politicians; and they would have grasped at any alternative in order to get rid of the parliamentary system by which they have been afflicted during all these years. You must not believe that this was a revolt of what they call the juntas in Spain. It was not a military revolt. It was a revolt headed by Generals, because they thought and knew that they were the only people to deal effectively with the special circumstances of the case; and then it became a revolt in which everybody acquiesced from sheer disgust at the system which it was designed to destroy.

The King himself had no alternative but to accept the victorious General as his Counsellor, just as King Victor Emmanuel had to take Mussolini in Italy; but the real bearing of the revolt in Spain may be the impetus that it will ultimately be found to have given to the Republican movement in that country. The Generals declare that they are only there to purify the system, and that they will then retire. First they said in four weeks. Then the four weeks became four months. It is much easier to take up power than to lay it down in cases like this. I think that at the end of the four months they will find it not easy to go. The change back again from a military or dictatorial régime to a constitutional one is exceedingly difficult to carry out in practice.

Portugal.

I now turn to the little country next door to Spain, to which we have in a sense just contributed a President, by the election to that Office of the recent Portuguese Minister here. Portugal remains on very friendly relations with ourselves, and—an almost unique instance in its history—it has a Portuguese Prime Minister who has been in office since February 1922. There is a genuine desire on the part of the Portuguese Government to settle our claims. They are now negotiating with General Smuts on the question of Lorenzo Marques. The Minister, before leaving here to take up the Presidency of the Republic, said that he thought there was no reason why those negotiations should not lead to a satisfactory conclusion, provided only that Portuguese sovereignty was generally safeguarded.

Q 62603

Russia.

I now come to the remaining and more important European countries. You will expect me to say something about Russia. In June 1921 I ended my remarks on Russia with these words: "As to the future of Russia, I will refrain from speculating. It is still the great mystery of Europe, the great dark cloud of the world, and what new forces are germinating behind it, I do not know."

That cloud has not yet been either dissipated or pierced. I can only say that the storm which it seemed to portend has not actually burst, and that Russia remains under a form of Government which, though detestable in its principles and in much of its practice, is quite unlikely to be displaced, and is strong because every body or agency that could dispute its strength has been eviscerated or destroyed.

There are certain chapters in the recent history of Russia which are already known to the Conference, such as the International Conferences of Genoa and The Hague. The Dominions and India were represented at those Conferences, and they will be familiar with the reasons which rendered them abortive. It is sufficient to recall that the Soviet Government refused to give any explicit recognition of the claims made against it, refused to restore any of the property confiscated from foreigners and refused to table any practicable scheme by which further credits to Russia could be adequately secured. It has since then shown no disposition to revise its attitude, and in these circumstances His Majesty's Government have been unable to agree to any fuller measure of recognition than was entailed by the signature of the Trade Agreement. As to the Trade Agreement, we have proved ourselves absolutely loyal to its provisions. I do not think that it has done very much good to our trade, but it has been of enormous benefit to Russia. It has given them a position and a prestige which were vital to their interests, and it has been the real corner stone of their policy. This was visible in the controversy with Russia in which we were involved this year, over the question of their propaganda and their violations of the Trade Agreement. You must realise that, whatever pledge or promise they may give, the Soviet Government are quite incapable of refraining from propaganda. It is the strength and secret of their existence. They have been practising it relentlessly for years, and have directed it particularly against India and the British position in the Near East. Ever since the conclusion of the Trade Agreement we have collected the evidence of these activities, and their cumulative effect was such that a few months ago our patience was exhausted and we decided to strike. It was then that with the approval of the Government, and after informing the Dominions, I issued what was practically an ultimatum to Russia, and said that, unless this insidious system of anti-British propaganda ceased, we should recall our trade representative in Russia and the agreement would come to an end. We further called upon them to desist from certain most violent and illegal proceedings in which they had indulged against our fishing vessels, and to give compensation, which they had long refused, to certain British subjects who had been imprisoned in Russia. In one case there has been an execution of a most disgraceful character. This brought about an exchange of correspondence with the Soviet Government, and resulted in one of the most abject capitulations on their part that I think has even been recorded in diplomatic history. We received from them the full execution of the demands which we made, and we called upon them to sign an even more explicit pledge about desistence from propaganda in the future. I do not pretend for a moment that they will keep it, because, as I said just now, they are incapable of doing so; but we now know from experience that we have the whip hand, and that the threat of denunciation of the agreement will always bring them to heel.

Perhaps the Conference may like me to add a few words about the present condition and trade of Russia, and the degree to which it is likely to affect our policy in the future.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62604

The internal condition of the country has improved. Life is getting easier, more shops are open, there are more things to buy, more food is being produced, and there are fewer provincial disturbances. Foreign trade is slowly increasing. The total imports and exports for 1923 will probably amount to about the same figure as those of 1922, viz., about 25 millions sterling, but the proportion of exports to imports has increased. The Soviet Government has succeeded in putting into limited circulation a new currency which can be sold in London at par. On the other hand, it must be remembered that this improvement is in relation to a condition of extreme misery and poverty, that it is least perceptible or not perceptible at all in regard to certain fundamental industries such as the production of iron and steel goods or of raw cotton and wool, that the capital resources of the Russian Government in specie and precious stones and metals have been almost exhausted, and that the agricultural industry is not in a position to produce the large surplus of cereals which was formerly exported. As to the future, it seems probable that the improvement shown in Russian internal conditions may continue, but at a retarded rate of progress, but that without a change in the character of the Government Russia cannot resume her place as a great trading nation.

As to the Government, there has been a gradual movement away from the practice of Communism. But the Government has not abandoned its complete control of foreign trade—a fatal obstacle to commercial intercourse—nor has it freed the judiciary from the executive. The gradual retreat from the economic theories of 1920 has not, however, been accompanied by any moderation of the political views of the leading Bolshevists. Indeed, they seem to find the frequent and violent expression of these views to be necessary for the maintenance of their position in the country. That position is at present unassailable. They represent but a fraction of the population, but they have no rivals, and it is not easy to see how they can be displaced except by death itself. On the other hand, death, illness and overwork are gradually thinning the ranks of the thorough-paced Communists, and no fresh blood is being infused into the party. They have themselves expressed apprehension that their ascendancy will thus gradually disappear from natural causes.

As to de jure recognition, for which the Soviet Government would sell their souls, I see no reason for departing from our present attitude. So long as the Bolshevists repudiate every foreign liability, a Government like ours, which represents hundreds of expropriated claimants, and is itself a creditor to the amount of £650,000,000, could hardly with any show of decency shake hands with the expropriator, or recognise him as a suitable recipient either of further credits or of diplomatic recognition.

Poland.

Next door to Russia, and for a long period a part of the Russian system, is a country about which I spoke in 1921 in rather despondent, and almost in despairing, tones. I am referring to Poland. The Conference will remember that the re-creation of Poland was one both of the objects of the war and the achievements of the peace. For some time things went very badly in Poland; the country itself and its Government were animated by foolish territorial ambitions; they were totally without administrative experience; they became involved in conflict with the Bolshevists; Warsaw itself was within an ace of falling, and at one moment the State seemed on the brink of disappearance. During the last two years there has been a marked change for the good. Poland has acquired a greatly increasing measure of stability, and this has been due partly to the increasing experience and the greater wisdom of her Government, partly to the fact that, by accident rather than by design, she has succeeded in realising the greater part of her territorial ambitions. Her frontiers have now been determined. She obtained more of Silesia under the decision of the League of Nations than she had any right to expect; she practically acquired Eastern Galicia, subject only to a nominal form of autonomy that she has had to give to the people. She seized Vilna by a bandit stroke two years ago, and it has been impossible to turn her out.

C 62605

No doubt she would like to have Lithuania, and Memel as well, and to get a firm hold upon Dantzig. But she has bitten off quite as much as she can chew, and for the moment we must hope that she will be satisfied with her good fortune, and that, profiting by experience, her statesmen will conduct the affairs of their country —as I trust they are doing now—with circumspection and prudence. Poland is very much in the hands of France, for reasons that you know. She is now seeking the assistance of an English financial expert in order to put her finances on a satisfactory footing, and we hope that the effort will be attended with success.

Esthonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

The little conglomeration of Baltic States, Esthonia, Latvia and Lithuania I need not allude to here. Some of them may one day be swallowed up again by the greater country from which they split off; but as time passes they gain strength, and possibly in some form of federal union they may find salvation.

Italy.

I turn to Italy. I am not going to say anything to-day about the recent Corfu incident, because I think that what I have to say on that matter I had better reserve for the occasion when Lord Robert Cecil will be amongst us, and when I can give you the political history of the case.

I am sure, however, that you will want to know something about Italy, and the strong personality who has laid hold of the helm there, and with whom I had a good deal to do at Lausanne last year. I am afraid I have been very long, but you must remember the area I have to cover.

Mr. Massey: I hope you will not think of stopping.

Lord Curzon: The history of Italy during the last two years can be divided into two distinct periods, divided by the Fascista revolution of the autumn of 1922. The triumphant success of that revolution is attributable to the widespread exasperation caused by the futility of every Government in Italy since the armistice. One and all had proved incapable of keeping order at home or upholding the national prestige abroad. Far from improving during 1922, things had grown steadily worse, so that the coming of Mussolini was hailed throughout the country as the coming of a saviour.

Since then the lack of energy that had characterised previous Administrations has given place at home to a feverish reforming activity, and abroad to a policy of grandiloquent chauvinism. Among M. Mussolini's administrative reforms may be mentioned civil service reform, housing, army and railway reorganisation. But much of his action has been of a more purely political character. He has challenged the whole system of government associated with the last century. Liberty, democracy, and parliamentary government are for him outworn catchwords, which must give place to the living creed of Fascism. His more immediate interest has been to see that the Fascisti party remain all-powerful in Italy. Accordingly, he has organised a National Militia of 500,000 Fascists, which is declared openly to be a political police, to keep the peace and to suppress every attempt at sedition against the Fascista Government. It is for the service of God and the Fatherland, under the orders of the Prime Minister. Meanwhile all other militias of a similar character have been abolished. He has thus secured his position as against all other parties, though at the moment there is no other party fit to challenge him. The Socialists have not recovered from their break-up last year. The Nationalists are now fused with the Fascisti. The Popular party have more or less disintegrated, and M. Mussolini is trying with some success to win the favour of the Vatican for himself. There only remain the old democratic parties, which in their heyday were never more than small agglomerations of politicians serving particular leaders. In fact, M. Mussolini's difficulties are far greater inside his party than outside, and in the summer there were signs of a coming disruption. This has been healed for the moment by the Greek crisis, but whether Mussolini will be able to hold either his country or his party together without external coups is another matter.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62606

He has also introduced and passed an astonishing electoral reform bill, based on the novel idea of making the whole country into a single electoral district, and giving two-thirds of the seats in the Chamber to the party which polls the largest number of votes. Elections have not yet taken place to show how the system will work in practice.

As to the foreign policy of Italy, the régime of M. Schanzer, Italy's Foreign Minister during most of 1922, was a period of ineffective intrigue. M. Schanzer claimed that friendship with England was the keynote of his policy, but he never hesitated to perpetrate any petty intrigue behind our backs, e.g., the sending of a special envoy to Angora at an inopportune moment; the attempt to establish Italian predominance in Austria; the breach of the Dodecanese engagement. Consequently, when he came to London last year, to try and score a concrete success, he returned home after a few weeks a sadder, though perhaps not a wiser, man.

M. Mussolini claims that realism is the keystone of his policy—nothing for nothing. His main preoccupation is that Italy shall play her part as a Great Power. He is careful not to identify himself either with French or British policy. He bolted with the French from Chanak, but only sent three engineers to follow them into the Ruhr. Since then he has been inclined to side with us on that question. His realist principles leave no room for treaties or other obligations. Soon after coming into power he signed an agreement with Jugoslavia to amplify the Treaty of Rapallo, but has never paid any regard to either document since. He has shown every sign of annexing the Dodecanese in spite of the agreements of his predecessors to the contrary. His recent seizure of Corfu and defiance of the Covenant of the League are fresh in our memory. I propose to deal with them when we devote a day to the discussion of the recent history of the League.

I may add that I heard yesterday, on what appears to be good authority, that when he took this action with reference to Corfu and Geneva, he had never read the Covenant of the League, and was not even aware that such a document existed.

Mussolini is, in fact, a law unto himself and may be diversely regarded as a national hero or as a public danger to Europe and the world. In reality, for all his strength, he is hardly master of his movements. He has created an enthusiasm that he can no longer direct, and he has not the force, or even perhaps the vision, to turn Italy's thoughts to peace and retrenchment, which are her one hope for the future. Quite recently the British were the object of Italian enthusiasm, and the visit of our King and Queen to Rome was the occasion of an extraordinary demonstration. The French were, at that time, equally disliked, and even abhored. With the line that was taken by the Press and public opinion in England over the Corfu incident, and which was greatly exaggerated in the Italian Press, there was a sharp revulsion of feeling, and for the moment we are the villains of the piece.

I attach no importance to this. Italian opinion is as mercurial as the aneroid when exposed to the British climate, and one day we shall be the favourites again. But I impress upon the Conference that Italian policy is conducted exclusively on the bargaining principle—that they do nothing except for a return, and that, while they are willing to take anything as a gift, they are also willing to extort anything by blackmail. We have no desire to be other than friends with Italy, but we object to being called upon to pay through the nose on each occasion that we are reminded of that privileged position.

Bulgaria.

Bulgaria's post-war place in Balkan politics was suddenly and violently changed last summer by the revolution which overthrew M. Stambolisky's agrarian Government and set up in its stead a thinly disguised military régime, made up mostly of the elements who had brought Bulgaria into the war.

M. Stambolisky was a barbarous dictator, but quite an attractive man. I used to have long conversations with him at Lausanne, and he told me, inter alia, that his two tests of the good government of a country were the state of its hospitals and the state of its prisons, and when I asked him why he selected the latter, he said because he had spent so much of his life in them, that he was a good judge. When he came to London he came and saw me at the Foreign Office, and the one thing he asked for was a pass to our prisons, which he asked to be allowed to visit without any previous warning being given to the prison authorities. I handed him the document, and he at once went out to Wandsworth or Wormwood Scrubbs, and when he found everything in spick and span order there, he came back, and said to me: "This is a great country. This is the greatest country in Europe." On the other hand, when he went to Italy, he received an order, but was not given admission. He told me at Lausanne that he thought Italy was quite the worst governed country in the world.

C 62607

This curious phenomenon was a peasant who governed for the peasants. During the past year he was being led more and more into the extremists' camp, so that before the end he had not only put the leaders of every opposition party in gaol, but he had expelled from the Government every member of his own party who held views less extreme than his own. But, whatever, his shortcomings, he was at any rate wise enough to see that Bulgaria's most formidable neighbour was Serbia, and that as long as Bulgaria's army was restricted to the numbers imposed by the Treaty of Neuilly she must cultivate Serbian friendship. To that extent he did have a definite foreign policy, and in spite of the bitterness sown by the war he had, before he died, succeeded in bringing the two countries closer together. His efforts were crowned by an agreement signed at Nish last spring, which provided for joint action against the Macedonians. It was a brave act, for the Macedonians had threatened him with death for months past, and he did not long survive it. The Macedonians were a strong element in the revolution.

Apart from his pro-Serbian policy M. Stambolisky's foreign policy was not marked by anything of note, except obstinacy and persistent propaganda. While evading every obligation under the Treaty that he possibly could, he did succeed in persuading the unknowing that Bulgaria alone of the ex-enemy Powers was observing the Treaty of Peace. His continual quibbling over the military clauses of the Treaty exasperated the Powers, and his obstruction over the reparation clauses very nearly led to a definite breach. This was, however, avoided at the last moment, and his last act of foreign policy was to secure a resettlement of the reparation terms by which Bulgaria escaped paying three-quarters of the sum laid down in the Treaty, the rest being reserved for discussion thirty years hence.

While M. Stambolisky was evading all his obligations under the Treaty, he never ceased to complain of the bad treatment accorded to Bulgaria in regard to the outlet to the Ægean. But over this he finally over-reached himself at Lausanne. M. Venizelos, acting upon the advice which I gave him, offered the Bulgarians very generous terms, but the latter refused them, with the result that they are now worse off than before, because the railway connecting Bulgaria with Dedeagatch now goes through the territory of two foreign countries instead of one (that is Turkey as well as Greece).

The new Government under M. Tsankoff do not appear to be very firm in the saddle. They have put all their opponents out of the way, it is true, and are now arresting Communists by the hundred, but they are divided among themselves and not very happy over the task they have set themselves. I do not think they will last, and I expect another revolution to take place before long. Bulgaria has in fact become again a danger spot in the Balkans. Hitherto the new Government have made no difficulties in their relations with the Great Powers.

Greece.

Greece during the past two years has been the victim of the mistaken policy that at the Paris Conference in 1919 tempted her with the Nessus' shirt of Smyrna and continued at later stages to egg her on to futile hostilities with the more powerful Turks. Her position in 1922 was unenviable. Her troops were unable to advance and destroy the Turkish army, retreat was out of the question, seeing that it meant leaving the whole Greek population of Asia Minor to the mercies of a Turkish army; while the State's

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62608

finances made it more doubtful every month whether it would be possible even to retain the territory already won. The Great Allies had proclaimed a policy of neutrality in the struggle, but whereas Great Britain abode by that undertaking, the French and Italian Governments never ceased to give Turkey material aid in the way of arms and munitions. The Greeks tried in vain to induce His Majesty's Government to assist them financially, and, when their efforts failed, were reduced to the most drastic forms of taxation, such as the forced loan.

The Greek Government further attempted to overcome their difficulties by putting their case in the hands of the Allies; and twice I went to Paris with the special object of bringing about a cessation of hostilities. But we were never able to offer terms acceptable to both parties, and the French at that time were deep in the pocket of the Turks. No compromise could bridge the dispute. The end was hastened by Mr. Lloyd George's famous speech in August (encouraging the Greeks), parts of which were issued as an army order among the Hellenic troops. The Turks derived the impression that they must strike at once. They launched attacks all along the front, and within a few days the Greek army had ceased to exist, and only the intervention of the Allies, by securing an armistice, saved Greece from still further humiliation.

In Greece proper the war did not avail to heal the old feud between Constantinists and Venizelists, nor even to hold the various Constantinist cliques together. No less than four separate Ministries held office between January and September. The most prominent politician among them was M. Gounaris, and it was he whom the revolution singled out for their principal victim.

The Asia Minor disaster was quickly followed by revolution. The ground was prepared in the army, and the movement spread to the navy. The objects were at first purely national, to save the country from the Gounaris influence, heal the great internal feud, and save Thrace. The movement was, however, soon captured by the extremists, who forced King Constantine to abdicate and initiated a policy of revenge. Five ex-Ministers and the Commander-in-chief of the Asia Minor army were tried and shot. The crime might have been prevented if the Corps Diplomatique had been unanimous; but the French Minister received orders not to interfere, while the French military mission did their best to spur on the revolutionaries to extreme measures.

After the judicial murders, which were in the majority of cases a travesty of justice, had taken place, the British Minister, in accordance with the previous warning given to the Revolutionary Government, was recalled and we have been represented at Athens ever since by a Chargé d'Affaires. We have announced that we can recognise no Government so long as those responsible for the murders are in power, and until a new Government has been installed by popular vote.

One of the first acts of the revolutionaries was to appoint M. Venizelos as the Greek representative in Europe. He was thus Greek delegate at the Lausanne Conference, where he behaved on the whole with dignity and restraint. Greece, by the Lausanne Treaty, gave up all Asia Minor and Eastern Thrace, but after her military disasters she could hardly have expected more.

Since then Greece has been overwhelmed with the problem of the Greek refugees, turned out, often in the most cruel circumstances and by hundreds of thousands, from Asia Minor. A scheme is on foot to float a refugee loan, under the auspices of the League of Nations, and it is hoped that something may come of it. While she was still reeling under this accumulation of blows, Greece was suddenly confronted with the Corfu crisis. In spite of the failure of the policy pursued by the late Prime Minister and the unfortunate consequences of his advice, Greece still regards Great Britain as her chief, indeed almost her only, friend in the world. Perhaps the greatest mistake that she has made has been in losing the services of M. Venizelos, who, although in some respects a rather impetuous character, has many of the qualities of a statesman, and is certainly the most considerable figure, although he is a Cretan, that she has produced for half a century, and who might have been trusted far more effectively than any of her present rulers to guide her fortunes in the future.

C 62609

Austria.

Two years ago, I drew a pathetic picture of Austria, in a complete state of exhaustion, with a shattered currency and an impoverished people. The only friend who at that time had given any substantial assistance to her in her trouble was Great Britain; but even that had been of little avail, and union with Germany, which had been vetoed by the Allies, was freely discussed. Since then a great change for the better has taken place, and Austria is one of the encouraging features to which I just now alluded. She appealed to the League of Nations; the Council of the League took up her case; a loan was made which was guaranteed by Great Britain among other Powers; the fluctuations of the currency have been arrested; the Austrian finances have been placed under drastic foreign control; the Austrian Government has co-operated with loyalty and efficiency; they have also wisely cultivated good relations with their neighbours. Austria is, in fact, incredible as it would have seemed two years ago, becoming a stable element in the fortunes of Central Europe, and this change for the better is one of the most hopeful signs that have occurred since the termination of the war.

Hungary.

Hungary, terribly mutilated and pulled about by the Peace Treaties, is a country which excites in equal measure the enthusiasm of its friends and the wrath of its opponents. Rightly or wrongly, she has profoundly disgusted all her neighbours, who are convinced that she is attempting to recover her lost provinces at their expense. Accordingly, scares on the frontier are always taking place or being invented, and I am afraid Hungary will for a long time be a source of unrest in Central Europe. The Conference will remember the second abortive attempt of the ex-Emperor Karl to recover his throne in 1921. He was, however, not of the stuff of which heroes are made, and the attempt was foredoomed to failure. But the Little Entente took advantage of the occasion to wring from the Hungarian Government the pledge that no Hapsburg should ever be elected to the throne. The Regent of Hungary is Admiral Horthy, who seems to possess many of the sterling qualities of loyalty, sincerity and commonsense which one associates with that admirable profession. The main problem of Hungary is now the financial problem, and here we have proposed to apply to Hungary the same treatment that has been so successful with Austria, that is, a loan conducted under the auspices of the League of Nations. For the moment the matter is at a standstill, since France is hostile and the Hungarians themselves are not showing good faith.

Little "Entente."

Among the points of light I mentioned at an earlier stage the existence of the Little Entente and their influence in Central Europe, that is to say, the States of Jugo-Slavia, or Serbia as it sometimes continues to be called, Czecho-Slovakia and Roumania. I have not time to go into their respective histories and politics; but perhaps the most remarkable feature about this little block of States is the personality of the statesman who is the Foreign Minister of the Czecho-Slovakian State. The President of that State is a wise and learned man, Professor Masaryk, who will be in this country in three weeks' time. He is coming to pay us a visit here. But the individual to whom I am alluding is Dr. Benes, who has a very comprehensive grasp of the European situation, constantly moves about among the European capitals—I see him here every three or four months—and has been able, by his activity and his general sagacity, to weld the Little Entente into a formidable engine of stability and prosperity, making for peace in Central Europe. He is the real creator of the Little Entente, the object of which is to defeat any Hungarian aggression, to carry out the peace settlement to which these States owe their present form and existence, and to ensure their own continued stability in the future. They are, as is well known, greatly encouraged by France, who likes the idea of a ring of satellite States round Germany, which will effectually close Germany in. Therefore they are very much under the influence of France, who provides them with armaments, munitions, officers and money. But they sometimes show signs of breaking away from

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

French control. Their relations with us are entirely friendly, and we give them every encouragement in our power.

Statements for Publication.

I think I have now covered the whole field with the exception of those two parts of my statement which are going to be published in the Press, and which I would therefore ask your permission to read from the paper that lies before me. They relate chiefly to the Turkish Treaty, which has been a good deal (and, as I think, very unfairly) criticised and attacked in this country; and, secondly, the present very critical position in relation to the Ruhr.

I will first deal with the Turkish situation.

Turkish Treaty.

Two years ago, when I spoke here about the position in Anatolia, where the Turkish and Greek armies were ranged opposite to each other, hostilities between them had just recommenced. The fighting began with a preliminary success, but ended in an early check, to the Greeks.

My object throughout, for I acted as representative of His Majesty's Government in the many Allied conversations and Conferences that took place, was to bring these ill-judged and ill-fated hostilities to a close. They could do no good to either party. They were desolating one of the fairest regions in Asia. The Greeks were unlikely to win, and, even if they did win, had neither the men nor the resources to maintain an advanced position in Asia Minor. The Turks would probably triumph in the long run, but only at a heavy cost.

Throughout 1921 and 1922 therefore my time was largely consumed at Conferences in London and in Paris in the attempt to bring about Allied intervention, and to persuade both parties to place their case in our hands. I was a firm believer in united action, i.e., in Allied action. His Majesty's Government at no stage had a policy as distinct from the Allies, and to this policy we loyally and unswervingly adhered. But my task was not rendered easier by the notorious Agreement concluded in October 1921 between a French agent and the Angora Turks, known as the Franklin–Bouillon Agreement, which undoubtedly led the Turks to think that the French Government was unreservedly on their side, and which greatly encouraged their pretensions. All our efforts to bring about negotiations, or mediation, or an armistice failed. Finally, the Turkish Army, imbued with a revived national ardour, well led, and taking advantage of the increasing weakness and demoralisation of the Greeks, made a sustained advance and practically drove the Hellenic forces out of Asia Minor.

This was followed by dramatic events. There was a revolution in Greece which resulted in the enforced abdication of King Constantine. The victorious Turkish army, elated by its successes, conscious of Allied disunion, and resolved to push forward even at the cost of a war with Great Britain, practically destroyed Smyrna and advanced towards the Straits, then held by Allied forces. The French withdrew their troops to the European shore, being resolved in no circumstances to become involved in hostilities with the Turks. Great Britain alone saved the situation and prevented the invasion of Europe by rushing a powerful force, military, naval and air, to the Dardanelles and to Constantinople. But it was by a hair's breadth only that the renewal of war was avoided. Presently I found myself again in Paris, engaged once more in the attempt to build up Allied unity and to obtain even at the eleventh hour a pacific solution. The Mudania Armistice followed in October 1922, and the stage for the peace negotiations was set

Just, however, as the Greek defeat had cost Constantine his throne, so the victory of Angora cost the Sultan his Kaliphate. He was deposed by Angora and fled to Malta, and his successor, appointed by the Grand National Assembly, was permitted only to enjoy a purely religious authority.

On the 20th November the first Lausanne Conference began, and there I met the representatives of France, Italy, Japan, Roumania, Jugoslavia and Greece. Thither came the Turks, with whom we were to negotiate the Treaty, and the Bulgarians and others when their interests were involved. Thither the Americans sent observers. There, for the purpose of discussing the future status of the Straits, in which they were vitally interested, Russian representatives also were admitted. There we sat for eleven weary weeks, engaged in daily, and often in nightly, negotiations. At the end of that time we were on the brink of concluding a Treaty—indeed, the pen and ink were ready and the draft was lying on the table ready for signature, when at the last moment difficulties about the financial, economic and capitulatory clauses of the draft Treaty arose—features in which the French and Italian, but particularly the former, were more actively concerned than ourselves, but in respect of which I stood unflinchingly by my colleagues—and the Turks, calculating, in view of the many concessions that had been made to meet them, that they had only to hold out to obtain even more, declined to sign. I had no doubt myself that in the long run, after some more palavering and after extracting some further concessions from the fatigue and war-weariness of the Allies, they would come to terms, and this view I expressed confidently on my return to England in February of the present year.

The discussions were resumed at Lausanne in April, and lasted for another three months, our chief representative on this occasion being Sir Horace Rumbold, the British High Commissioner at Constantinople. There were many anxious moments then as before, and the process of haggling was continued with pertinacity and at a length that recalled the palmiest days of Oriental diplomacy in the past. Finally, a Treaty was signed on the 24th July last, which has since been ratified both by Turkey and Greece, and only awaits ratification at the hands of the remaining Great Powers as soon as their Parliaments have reassembled. Since then, it having been decided by the terms of the Agreement that the Allied forces, which have remained in occupation of Constantinople ever since the war, should evacuate within a period of six weeks—which period terminated two days ago—the British troops, ably commanded by Sir Charles Harington, who has shown the most conspicuous tact and self-restraint in very trying circumstances, have withdrawn. Our Turkish entanglement is now at an end, and it rests with the Turkish Government, having re-entered into possession of their capital, to demonstrate what use they can make of their recovered position.

I have seen the Treaty thus concluded severely criticised, as a rule by those whose motives in making the attack are not free from suspicion. Undoubtedly, the Treaty is not such a Treaty as could have been concluded in 1919, had the Allied Powers at Paris devoted to the Turkish problem one-fiftieth part of the attention that they bestowed—I might almost say squandered—upon problems and peoples of vastly inferior importance. It is not such a Treaty as was concluded and signed, though not subsequently ratified, at Sèvres in August 1920. It is not such a Treaty as might have been signed at Lausanne had the Powers at all points maintained the united front which they displayed on some. But I should like to explain how and why it was that it was the best Treaty that could be obtained in the circumstances.

In the first place, I would remind the Conference that when I went out to Lausanne in November last it was not generally believed that a Treaty could be concluded at all. Such was the temper of the Turks, elated by their overwhelming defeat of the Greeks, profoundly suspicious of Allied and notably of British intentions, and convinced that their arms were unconquerable, that the majority of my colleagues here condoled with my mission and expected very soon to see me back again. Secondly, the principal problems, whether of the Straits or the Islands, or the frontiers, or the capitulations or finance, seemed almost insoluble, unless the Allies were prepared to dictate their terms at the point of the bayonet.

Such had been the case with all the previous post-war Treaties. These had in each case been drawn up by the victorious Powers, sitting, so to speak, on the seat of judgment, in the absence of the culprit, and imposing what penalty or what settlement they chose. Only when the terms had been drawn up was the beaten enemy admitted to be told his sentence and to make the conventional protest of the doomed man.

Such indeed was the environment in which the original Treaty of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62612

Sèvres was drawn up and signed, though never ratified, by the Turkish representatives. Far otherwise was it at Lausanne. There the Turks sat at the table on a footing of equality with all the other Powers. Every article of the Treaty had to be debated with and explained to them. Agreement had to be achieved, not by brandishing the big stick, but by discussion, persuasion and compromise. The Turks knew very well that the Allies had no stomach for further fighting. The Allies were never certain how far the genuine desire of the leading Turks for peace would control the unruly Nationalist and Extremist elements, who had a quite exaggerated estimate of their strength.

What then did the Treaty achieve? Territorially it lopped off from the Turkish State the whole of Syria, of Palestine, and of what is now called Iraq. Turkey ceased to have any hold or power over Arabia. Her possessions were confined to the Anatolian plains and highlands from which the Ottoman Turks originally came, and to the narrow European territories of her former Empire up to the confines of Bulgaria on the one hand and Greece on the other. She recovered Eastern Thrace and two or three of the Islands, but beyond the River Maritza, except for the tiny enclave of Karagach, she was not permitted to go.

But I draw special attention to the arrangement about the Freedom of the Straits, that great international safeguard, for which thousands of brave British and Dominion soldiers fought and died. When I went out to Lausanne, I doubt if anyone thought that we could secure more than the freedom of commercial passage. I came away with an arrangement by which free access from the Ægean to the Black Sea, for foreign warships and aircraft, as well as merchant ships, subject to a reasonable limitation of numbers, was guaranteed to the States of the world. The Black Sea ceased ipso facto to be a Russian preserve. Demilitarised and unfortified zones were created on both sides of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus. Turkey was given an international guarantee for the safety of her capital and the territories round the Straits, and was allowed to maintain a garrison at Constantinople. Who can doubt that this was a solution eminently favourable to those British Imperial interests which I was sent to Lausanne to guard?

In the course of the discussion about the Straits, to which Russia had been admitted, but which at that time she indignantly refused to sign, I was fiercely criticised by advanced organs at home for alienating the Power whose acquiescence in any future règlement of the Straits was essential, and was charged with sowing the seeds of future war. My concluding remarks at Lausanne, when the Powers, with the single exception of Russia, had signified their adhesion to the Straits Convention, were as follows :—

> "M. Chicherin has announced to us that Russia will have no voice and take no part in this Convention. The responsibility for that rests on the Russian Government, and even if it be their present decision I hope the time may come, perhaps not in the distant future, when, on reconsidering the matter, they may find it in their own, as well as in the public interest, to give the signature which they refuse to-day."

Those words were prophetic. Five months later the Russians, quietly and without saying much about it, affixed their name to the very Straits Convention which they had repudiated and denounced, and which is now therefore a part of the accepted law of Europe. But I have never received a word of apology or vindication from the critics who were so certain six months ago of my sanguinary and sinister intentions.

In the course of the discussions at Lausanne, remembering all that my countrymen and fellow-subjects throughout the Empire had suffered at Gallipoli, I insisted upon the handing over, the proper maintenance and the safeguarding of the sacred soil on the Gallipoli Peninsula, which had been stained with their blood, and where their bodies lay. When the Turks realised that I would break up the Conference sooner than cede this point they gave way.

We laboured hard at Lausanne to secure for the minorities, particularly the Greek and Armenian minorities in the future Turkish State, a protection even in excess of that guaranteed to them by the minority clauses of the European Treaties which we adopted and confirmed in ours. I cannot say that in this I was successful. The records will show the nature of the fight that I put up for these unhappy peoples. But the Turks, in their passion for a self-sufficing and self-centred national existence, were resolved upon purging their State of all alien elements—a policy which, in my view, was grossly mistaken, which has been attended by incidents of great cruelty and hardship, and which, as time passes, they will often have occasion to repent. I did, however, obtain this much, that Turkey undertook to apply for membership of the League of Nations after the ratification of Peace; and at the hands of that tribunal the afflicted minorities will receive such protection as it may be in the power of Europe to afford.

C 62613

A troublesome question arose about the future possession of the Mosul Vilayet on the northern border of the Iraq State. To that province the Turks put forward what I conceived to be quite untenable claims, which I was called upon vigorously to contest. The dispute ended in an agreement to refer the matter to amicable discussion between Turkey and ourselves during the period of nine months after the evacuation of Turkish territory by the Allied forces. If we cannot come to an agreement, the matter will then go to the League of Nations.

The financial and economic clauses of the Treaty, which concerned France much more than ourselves, ended in considerable concessions to Turkish pertinacity, as did those parts of the Treaty which related to the conditions under which foreigners will in future reside and trade in Turkey. I do not pretend to be satisfied with those conditions. But in my view the chief sufferers will not be the foreign communities so much as the Turks themselves, who will soon learn from experience the extent to which even an emancipated Turkish State is dependent upon the resources and assistance of the foreigner. At Lausanne Turkey was consumed with jealousy for her own sovereignty, which none of us had any desire to impugn; and when the alternative was presented, as it frequently was, of ceding a point which though important was not vital, or of breaking up the Conference, and reverting to a state of war, diplomacy was, I think, rightly reluctant to adopt the latter alternative.

Perhaps from the British point of view the most satisfactory result of the protracted discussion and the final agreement was the resumption of friendly relations between ourselves and a people with whom we had many connections in the past, and who went to war with us, not we with them. A second result which I do not think will be disputed by a single foreign Delegation at Lausanne has been that the Power which emerged from the proceedings with the largest access of prestige in Turkey was our own. This prestige, coupled with the strong financial position of Great Britain, should enable this country to play such part in the financial and economic reconstruction of Turkey as the stability of the future Turkish Government may justify and our own interests demand.

If then we survey the whole field, I think that the final restoration of peace in the Near East, where our troops have now been engaged for exactly nine weary and costly years, the Freedom of the Straits, the liberation of the entire block of Arab countries, the enhanced prestige of Great Britain in Turkey, together with the appeasement in all Moslem countries which is already following the reconciliation between Turkey and ourselves, are results sufficient to justify our labours at Lausanne, and to silence the not always disinterested and frequently ungenerous critics who have derided our handling of a problem which they were powerless to compose themselves. But I repeat that the destiny of Turkey lies with Turkey herself far more than with anyone else. The future which she has planned for herself, whether she become a Republic or not, whether she rules from Angora or Constantinople, will be mainly of her own creation. A very heavy task in the disbandment of her forces, the reorganisation of her civil service, the husbanding of her economic resources, the resuscitation of her industrial and commercial life, lies before her. I think that she will experience great disillusionment and many disappointments, and that some of the fruits which she claims to have garnered will turn out to be Dead Sea apples in her mouth. But in making what will be a great experiment she starts with a complete absence of resentment on our part and with the sincere expression of our goodwill.

57 58 59 4 60 5 61 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62614

European Situation. General Observations.

Now I come to the concluding part of my address, which relates to the position in Europe, and before I read the passages which will be circulated and printed, I want, in the utmost confidence, in a few words, to enable you to grasp the relative positions and personalities of the factors in this case, because in order to understand, you want to know what the nations involved are driving at and by what forces and motives they are being impelled. I say this to you, which I dare not put in print. The countries and Governments involved in this European problem are France, Belgium, Germany and ourselves. I omit Italy for the moment from consideration, because her part in the business was very reluctant and has turned out to be infinitesimal. Let us try and understand the position of France. She is a country whose blood is still boiling with the memories of the War, who can never obliterate from her mind the terrible sufferings of her people, the evidence of which is every day before her eyes. She is conscious of the enormous strength which she has acquired as a result of the War, and which I described in an earlier portion of my remarks. She is profoundly suspicious of Germany, and she is determined to crush and effectively destroy all chances of recovery or resuscitation on the part of Germany within the time of the youngest child at the period when the War came to an end. Accordingly, you see her inspired by those views, pressing for payments which can never be recovered, imposing conditions which cannot possibly be satisfied, sacrificing future advantages for the sake of a momentary triumph, claiming on the one hand to rest her whole case on the Treaty of Versailles, and yet on the other, openly saying that she intends to evade one of the principal obligations of that Treaty, namely, by remaining in the Rhineland after the fifteen years have expired, sowing as we think by the above policy, the seeds of certain retribution in the future. We must, however, understand and allow for the depth and naturalness of the feelings which I have described and which guide her action.

Then we pass to Belgium, a Government, nervous, irresolute, and vacillating—I am speaking of their political attitude, not of their natural characteristics—dragged into the operation of the Ruhr with France because they could not afford to stand out, very much disliking the company which they have to keep, disapproving heartily of the methods which are being employed, longing to break away, but powerless to do so; terrified at the thought of being encircled by France, making almost every week little hesitating overtures to me, and yet, the moment the stern voice of M. Poincaré is heard, coming back to heel with their tail between their legs.

Next we pass to Germany, defeated, hopelessly defeated, in the war, impotent, conscious of her impotence, but burning with an unslaked wrath and thinking of future revenge. However, just as Germany in the war always did things in the wrong way, so she is doing them in the wrong way now. Her mentality strikes me as being at once the most formidable and the stupidest in Europe. They are absolute children in diplomacy. They make every conceivable blunder in dealing with France, and, for the matter of that, with ourselves; and, in dealing with them and with their methods and system, one never knows whether they are really perfidious or merely perverse, whether they are actually dishonest or merely dull, whether they are friendly or whether they are hostile. You cannot like them, but you do not quite know whether your feelings are those of distrust or positive dislike. Our policy towards them since the war has been perfectly straightforward and simple. We have no sympathy with an enemy at whose hands we suffered so terribly, and whose characteristics we know so well. But the moment peace was signed we felt it a part of our duty to recognise Germany as a member of the comity of Nations, who had been readmitted, and to give her a chance, not so much in her own interest, or even in our interest, as in the interest of the recovery of the world.

When I see in the papers of this country the Government accused of being pro-German I am shocked. But if I am accused of being pro-German in the sense of being fair and holding the scales even and of giving Germany, in common with every one of our recent enemies, a chance to recover, then I should not resent the charge.

C 62615

The fourth of the Great Powers entangled in this mesh is ourselves. I do not know if I can successfully diagnose our own symptoms, but it appears to me that we are a people very war-weary, longing for peace on almost any terms consistent with honour, most anxious to set things straight, almost tremblingly desirous of getting on with our neighbours, willing to make the greatest sacrifices financially or otherwise in order to secure that end, but baffled at every turn by the shortsightedness, sometimes by the treachery, of some of our neighbours, and by what appears to us to be the obstinacy or the stupidity of others.

These seem to me to be the characteristics of the parties that are standing in the ring of action which I am about to describe.

Franco-German Relations.

I proceed to deal with the Franco-German, or as I should prefer to call it the European, problem; for it is one that concerns not two or three States alone, but the whole of those Powers that were engaged in the war, and to whom reparations were allotted, and not least among them the British Empire. His Majesty's Government have consistently held the view that the final settlement could only be achieved by common action and common consent, and that the dispute is not merely a military or political conflict between contiguous States.

I cannot in the small space of time available to me narrate in detail all that has happened since we last met at this table in June 1921. At that date the German Government had just yielded to an Allied ultimatum which covered a schedule of payments for the discharge of the reparation debt, as well as undertakings by the German Government for the early execution of the military disarmament and other clauses of the Treaty. The Reparation Commission, who had under the Treaty been charged with the task of fixing the reparation debt, had estimated it at £6,600 millions—a total which has since in some quarters assumed an almost sacrosanct character, but which in reality bore no relation to what Germany could pay, but was arrived at by lumping together the demands of the various claimant Powers. This total, which is well known to be a quite impossible sum, and which no sane person has ever expected that Germany would be able to pay in full, can only be altered by the consent of all the Powers. For a time in 1921, the ultimatum having been accepted by Germany, and the policy of Dr. Wirth's Government being the fulfilment of the Treaty, payments were regularly made. But the situation in Germany was unstable; the mark began the first downward movement of its finally catastrophic descent; German industry and high finance were stubborn and hostile; assassination found its first victim in Erzberger—to be followed at a later date by Rathenau. Before the end of the year Germany made her first application for a reduction of the payments due in 1922. This request was discussed at Cannes in January 1922, and certain concessions were made; more were then asked for, involving the grant to Germany of a more complete Moratorium for the rest of 1922 and for the whole of 1923, 1924.

This was the situation when the Allied Premiers met in London in August 1922 to consider the request. M. Poincaré declared that if there was to be a further Moratorium he must have productive pledges, i.e., the yield of certain taxes and industrial undertakings, as well as the forests and mines in the Rhineland and the Ruhr. These proposals were declared to be financially and economically unsound by the majority of the expert Committee who advised Mr. Lloyd George in the matter; and no decision was arrived at.

In the course of the autumn Dr. Wirth's difficulties increased; in November he resigned; and with his disappearance the policy of fulfilment, which had been his watchword, receded into the background. He was followed by Dr. Cuno.

At the end of the year, when a decision by the Powers was necessary, since the next payments were due, a further Conference

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62616

of Allied Prime Ministers was held in London, followed a little later by a renewal of the meeting in Paris. By this time Mr. Lloyd George had ceased to be Prime Minister, and Mr. Bonar Law had taken his place. Now it was that the Ruhr, which had been in the background of all the French plans and proposals for two years, emerged into prominence as the sole French specific—the Ruhr to be occupied, preferably by the Allies, if not, then by France and such of her Allies as would go in with her, France's object in the move being to obtain immediate payment of the £1,300 millions which she claimed, plus whatever sum might be required to pay off her debts to Great Britain and the United States. Put in another way, France would agree to no reduction of the total of the German reparation debt save as a set-off against the cancellation of her war debts to Great Britain and America.

The British view on the other hand was that Germany was incapable of making large immediate payments; that the occupation of the Ruhr was not the right way in which to secure such payment; that by reducing the capacity of Germany to pay, owing to the loss of her most important industrial and economic centre, payment would be indefinitely postponed, and further exasperation and probably at a later date internal disruption in Germany would be produced; and that grave economic loss would thus be entailed, not merely on the occupying Powers, but on Europe, viewed as an economic unit, in general. Mr. Bonar Law therefore declined to join in the occupation, and proposed an alternative plan for the reduction of the total debt to £2,500 millions with an accompanying issue of bonds, a moratorium for a short period of years and the institution of a drastic control over German finance. Further, if this proposal were accepted, he made the offer, startling though unrecognised in its generosity, to cancel the French and Italian war debts to us in toto.

The French refused, and on the 11th January the Franco-Belgo-Italian occupation of the Ruhr began. It cannot, I think, be denied that the sanguine expectations with which it was entered upon have been largely falsified by the results. An extensive and prolonged military occupation was far from being contemplated, and, indeed, as soon as it appeared inevitable, the Italians retired from the scene. The sustained obstinacy and fury of passive resistance were not foreseen. The anticipated payments, whether in deliveries of coal and coke or in reparation payments, were presently shown to be not forthcoming. Meanwhile, as the net yield of the Franco-Belgian occupation became increasingly disappointing, so the treatment of the inhabitants by the Franco-Belgian authorities became increasingly severe. Thus there grew up a sort of deadlock, or, if the metaphor be varied, a condition of embittered stalemate between the rival forces. The Germans took the view that the occupation was in direct violation of the Treaty. They refused all voluntary reparation payments to France and Belgium, and they threw every possible obstacle in the way of the industrial exploitation of the region. The work of the military disarmament of Germany, provided for by the Peace Treaty, also came to a standstill.

In the meantime Mr. Bonar Law, in a generous anxiety not to frustrate by British action the success of a policy in the practical application of which he disbelieved, but the principle underlying which, viz., the desire and necessity to obtain reparations, was equally accepted by ourselves, while wishing the French good fortune in their undertaking, took up an attitude of strict neutrality. That attitude we have maintained throughout the summer, retaining our army of occupation in the area the custody of which had been assigned to us by the Treaty, endeavouring to hold the scales between the rival parties, and hoping to bring them to an ultimate arrangement. The fact that we learned from our Law Officers, after Mr. Bonar Law's return from Paris, that the occupation was not, in their opinion, justified by the terms of the Treaty, thus confirming the wisdom of the British attitude, was never concealed by us from our Allies. On the other hand, public use was not made of it until M. Poincaré himself raised the legal issue by basing his case on the alleged illegality of the German action in resisting the occupation.

I am not here to apportion praise or blame between the various parties in the conflict. Our sentimental sympathy would always have been and was with our old and trusted ally. We had not the smallest desire to take the side of Germany, or to let the Germans down easily, or to deprive France of her just due. On the other hand, we also had to consider our due, and, viewing the matter not through the glasses of sentiment, but from a severely practical angle, we regarded with increasing anxiety the prosecution of a policy that seemed to us to be productive of no good results, and to be leading on to disaster and ruin.

C62617

In the course of the spring the German Government under Dr. Cuno made a number of rather ill-advised suggestions for compromise, which I need not summarise because they were in each case inadequate and stillborn. I did not think that their diplomacy in this respect was wise; and in my various interviews with the German Ambassador I never failed to impress upon him this point of view and to urge that the duty of his Government was threefold: (1) to pay their just debts, (2) to agree to the fixation of the payments by competent authority, (3) to offer specific and adequate guarantees. Simultaneously His Majesty's Government never wavered in the assertion of their broad and general loyalty to the Entente, and more than once indicated to the French Government that if security rather than, or in addition to, reparations was in their mind, we should at any time be willing to discuss it. The first definite move, again halting and ill-conceived, was made by Germany in the opening days of May last. It was promptly turned down with scorn by France and Belgium and met with no approval from us. Then in response to a suggestion made by His Majesty's Government their second offer of the 7th June came. This was more substantial; for the German Government now offered to accept the decision of an impartial international body as to the amount and methods of payment, they proposed certain specific guarantees, and they asked for a Conference to work out a definite scheme. Here at least seemed to His Majesty's Government to be both the chance of progress and the material for a reply. Prolonged conversations with our French and Belgian Allies left their views and intentions veiled in some obscurity; and accordingly we decided, with their knowledge, to draw up the draft of a joint reply, with a view to securing the inestimable advantage of concerted action.

By this time the question of passive resistance, which had been continued with unabated intensity and had baffled all the French expectations, had assumed the first place in the outlook of our Allies, and M. Poincaré more than once laid down with uncompromising clearness that not until it was abandoned would he enter into discussions as to the future. For our part we continued to give advice in a similar sense to the German Government; and in the draft reply which we submitted, its abandonment, entailing the gradual resumption of civil administration and the progressive evacuation of the Ruhr, was put in the forefront of our scheme. In our explanatory letter to the Allies we further made concrete proposals, viz., for the examination by a body of impartial experts, acting in conjunction with, and if necessary under the orders of, the Reparations Commission, of the question of German capacity and modes of payment, a similar examination into the question of the proposed guarantees, and the summoning of an Inter-Allied Conference to bring about a general financial settlement. I do not think, therefore, that it can be said of His Majesty's Government that they were either backward in initiative or barren of suggestion; and certainly our proposals appeared to us to be characterised both by impartiality and goodwill. They were unfortunate, however, in receiving an unfavourable reply from France, and a not much more favourable reply from Belgium. These replies have been published to the world, and I need not recapitulate their nature. It is enough to say that not until passive resistance was definitely abandoned by Germany would our Allies agree to make any move; our proposal for an expert enquiry was rejected; the French and Belgian claims for repayment were restated in unqualified form. I confess that my colleagues and I were greatly disappointed at the result of our sincere but thankless intervention. Once more we stated our case in the British Note of the 11th August, a note revised with meticulous care, first by the Cabinet and then by the Prime Minister and myself, and once again we offered as the price of a settlement to cancel the whole of our claims except for the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

sum of £710 millions sterling to meet our debt to the United States Government. Moreover, if we could get a portion of the sum from German reparations, our demands upon our Allies would be proportionately reduced. The replies of the French and Belgian Governments have been published. They indicated not the faintest advance from the position already taken up. Our capacity for useful intervention was manifestly exhausted.

Meanwhile, as time passed, it became apparent that the German Government could not, even if they desired, persist in the policy of passive resistance; and at length, only a week ago, Herr Stresemann, who had succeeded Dr. Cuno a few weeks earlier, decided to surrender. I think myself that this surrender should have been made three months ago and was unwisely and foolishly postponed. But I have always been told, and I suspect that it is the truth, that no German Government could at that time have survived which made the surrender. Whether Herr Stresemann, who had the courage and the wisdom to take this step, will survive is uncertain as I speak these words.

And now what is the point to which we have come? We do not grudge our Allies the victory—if victory it be. On the contrary we welcome, just as we have for long ourselves advised, it. But are we any nearer to settlement? Will the reparation payments begin to flow in? What is the new form of civil administration or organisation that is to be applied to the Ruhr? These are questions which it is vital to put, and vital also to answer.

One of the results at any rate that we anticipated has already been brought about. For we see the beginnings of that internal disruption which we have all along feared, but which we have been consistently told to regard as a bogey. And let it be remembered that disruption is not merely an ominous political sympton. It has a portentous economic significance, for it may mean the ultimate disappearance of the debtor himself.

What therefore should be the next step? I have made no concealment of our view in my conversations with the French Ambassador, and it has the approval of the Prime Minister, who recently did so much by his visit to Paris to recreate a friendly atmosphere after the rather heated discharge of the rival guns. We have repeatedly been assured by the French Government that as soon as passive resistance definitely ceased, the time for discussion between the Allies would have come. So far as I can gather, the German Government are sincere in their intentions, and have taken the steps required of them. What may be the attitude of the local population in the Ruhr I cannot say. But if the French contention be valid that it is only in obedience to orders from Berlin that they have hitherto resisted, there should be no difficulty about their conduct now. I would merely remark that while passive resistance has, as we hoped and desired, been replaced by passive assistance, it may be too much to expect it to be followed all in a flash by enthusiastic co-operation.

The French Government know therefore that we await and expect the next proposals from them. The contingency of the cessation of passive resistance must have long been anticipated at the Quai d'Orsay, and the consequent measures doubtless exist in outline if not in detail. We shall be quite ready to receive and to discuss them in a friendly spirit. Our position at Cologne in the occupied area gives us a right to be consulted in any local arrangements that may be proposed, and that position we have no intention to abandon. Our reparation claim, willing as we have been to pare it down in the interests of settlement, renders it impossible that any such settlement could be reached without our co-operation. Our stake in the economic recovery of Europe, which affects us as closely, and in some respects more so, than the immediate neighbour of Germany, makes us long for an issue. We have already shown our willingness, by unexampled concessions, to contribute to it.

I have now finished, and in concluding I must express my apologies for the inordinate length of time for which I have detained the Conference, and thank them more than I can say for the very patient hearing that they have been kind enough to give to my words.

Appreciation of Lord Curzon's Statement.

Mr. Mackenzie King: It was understood at the last session that any consideration and discussion of this statement of the Secretary for Foreign Affairs would be postponed until Monday. I think, however, that we should not permit this session to rise without expressing to Lord Curzon our thanks for the profoundly impressive review which he has just given us of foreign affairs, and which, if I may be permitted to say so, has been expressed throughout in language the strength and dignity and adequacy of which is comparable only to the supreme importance of the subjects covered.

Mr. Massey: I should like to endorse that, and I am very glad the suggestion has been made by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Press Communiqué.

Prime Minister: Gentlemen, before we separate it is just necessary I should read to you the communiqué.

(See Appendix I.)

May I take it that that is approved, and we will just add a little note to say that Mr. Bruce was unavoidably prevented from being here.

(Agreed.)

(The proceedings then terminated.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 5, 1923.

APPENDIX I.

THE Imperial Conference met at 10, Downing Street at 10·45 A.M., when the following representatives were present:—

[See heading of E., 3rd Meeting.]

The Right Hon. S. M. Bruce, Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia, who had been delayed at Calais by bad weather, was unable to be present.

The Prime Minister communicated to the Conference the gracious reply which the King had been pleased to make to the address to His Majesty which the Conference adopted at its first meeting. The King's reply was as follows:—

[See above.]

The Prime Minister then welcomed to the Conference the Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada, and Mr. Kevin O'Higgins, Vice-President of the Executive Council, Irish Free State.

The Foreign Secretary occupied the entire morning in giving a review of the foreign situation in all parts of the world. The greater part of what he said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving to the Representatives of the Dominions and India orally the inner history of the period and explaining to them the springs of British policy since 1921. But it was decided that certain parts of his speech which related to subjects of urgent interest and importance should be given verbatim to the Press, and passages dealing with the situation in the Ruhr and with the Turkish Treaty will accordingly be published later in the day as they were delivered.

This is a departure from the practice of all previous Imperial Conferences, when the statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been treated as confidential.

The Conference adjourned until 11 A.M. on Monday next, when the discussion on Foreign relations will be continued.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

C62620

SECRET.

E. 4th Meeting (1923).

45

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE FOURTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1923, AT 11 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada (for Mr. Mackenzie King's statement only).

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Senator the Hon. R. V. WILSON, Honorary Minister in charge of Departments of Health and Migration, Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Mr. KEVIN O'HIGGINS, T.D., Vice-President of the Executive Council, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON-SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Mr. R. G. VANSITTART, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Mr. A. W. A. LEEPER, C.B.E., Assistant Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62621

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B., (Secretary.)
Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir R. R. GARRAN, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Newfoundland.
Mr. W. G. CAREW.

India.
Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

WELCOME TO MR. BRUCE, SENATOR WILSON, AND SIR LOMER GOUIN.

Mr. Baldwin: Since we last met I am glad to say that our numbers are now complete in spite of some of our friends having been weather-bound at the end of a long journey. We have to welcome our delegates from Australia, Mr. Bruce and Senator Wilson. We are also glad to see Sir Lomer Gouin from Canada, whose name is well known to all of us.

I think our Conference is complete now and I will call upon Mr. Mackenzie King to open the discussion following the statement made at our last meeting by the Foreign Secretary.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

Appreciation of Lord Curzon's Statement.

Mr. Mackenzie King: The survey of activities and problems which have engaged the attention of the Foreign Office during the past two years, as given by the Foreign Secretary on Friday, was deeply impressive, in the range, the intricacy, the delicacy of the issues, and the ceaseless shifting of the panorama, in the strong evidence afforded of the desire of the British Government to act as a moderating force, and in the skill and knowledge and imperturbable temper displayed in the conduct of these affairs.

Review of Canadian External Affairs.

Before proceeding to make any observations on the great issues raised by the Foreign Secretary's statement, I may be expected to give a brief review of some of the external affairs of primary concern to Canada which have developed since the last meeting of this Conference. Our direct international relations are preponderatingly, though not wholly, with a single country. The issues in this connection are not unlike those which arise among European States, and which often prove very difficult to solve. If ours have not proved insoluble, it is due mainly to the fact that in the settlement of differences between the United States and Canada we have the inestimable advantage of speaking (for the most part) the same language, and that not merely in the linguistic sense, for we have, in larger measure than is the case of Continental Europe, the same values, the same standards, in part the same traditions. And we are fortunate again as compared with the peoples of Continental Europe in having less history and more geography, fewer traditions of ancient wrongs to redress, larger space and elbow room for our expansion.

Relations with United States.

The United States is not, as the Foreign Secretary has very rightly implied, always easy to deal with. The great diversity of occupation and cultural background in that vast area, the frequent lack of co-ordination among the branches of its Government, the power of unscrupulous politicians and newspapers to create a sudden stampede, must all be taken into account. But as far, at least, as Canada is concerned we have found the United States of late years an increasingly friendly and dependable neighbour. It has been our aim, the aim of all Governments, irrespective of party, in the last quarter-century, to maintain and develop this good feeling. That does not mean that we are prepared to sacrifice vital interests on the altar of American friendship, that is not the way to deal with our United States friends. But neither do we believe in a policy of pinpricks such as perhaps characterised relations during the previous quarter-century. We have our differences, we thresh them out, and usually a solution develops. It is our firm belief that there is no contribution that Canada can make to the fair and peaceful settlement of international affairs, no way in which she can so strengthen the Empire of which she is a part, as by so handling our relations with the United States as to build up an enduring fund of goodwill, and work for that common understanding among the English-speaking peoples which is the chief hope of the world. That is our primary task; the task assigned to us in the division of Imperial labour, by our proximity, our constant intercourse, our knowledge of their idiosyncrasies. I think it will long remain our primary task.

C 62622

International Joint Commission.

Perhaps of first inportance in the field of Canada's external affairs is the International Joint Commission. This body is unique, I believe, in its range and composition, and not without significance for wider fields. It was devised to meet a very difficult situation. In the three thousand miles and more of common boundary between the United States and Canada, constant disputes were arising, particularly as to boundary waters, navigation rights, water power rights, irrigation rights, and so on. Many of these problems contained possibilities of serious trouble; with thousands of farmers in irrigated areas on each side of the boundary dependent for their prosperity on the development or diversion of a given river basin, or with corporations with capital running into tens of millions jockeying for water power development rights, international incidents might at any moment occur. Accordingly, some fourteen years ago, provision was made for the establishment of an International Joint Commission, consisting of three members appointed by the President of the United States, and three appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the Governor-General-in-Council, or Cabinet, of the Dominion of Canada. Upon this Commission is conferred authority to enquire into and decide upon any operations as to use, obstruction or diversion of boundary waters which would affect interests on both sides: a majority of the Commission has power to render a decision binding on the Governments and private interests affected: if it is evenly divided, a report is made to the two Governments, which will then endeavour to reach a solution. It is interesting to note that in the many cases which have come before the Commission there has been absolute unanimity of finding in every instance but one—that is out of about twenty cases, I think—and in that instance the difference of opinion was as to jurisdiction rather than as to the merits of the case. This remarkable result is in large part due to the permanent character of the Commission; its members come to know one another well, and realise that a principle which may tell against their country to-day may tell for it in another case next year. The Commission is not narrowly legal in its procedure. Any private citizen of either country may bring his case directly before it, without the intervention of the Government, a procedure which lessens political tension and permits the emergence of several different points of view on the same side of the boundary.

A reference to the map will show the wide range of cases covered. I thought it would be possibly of interest to the members of the Conference present to glance at leisure at the number of cases that have come before that Joint Commission, as illustrated by a map that I should like to have placed on the record.* It shows how considerable is the number and variety of the subjects with which this Commission has to deal. Time will not permit detailed reference to the many intricate questions of navigation and power and irrigation rights, each of which might otherwise have provided a distinct diplomatic incident.

I may illustrate by reference to a difficult case now under consideration. The City of Chicago, some years ago, began the con-

* Annexed.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62623

struction of a canal from Lake Michigan across the ancient portage to a river flowing into the Mississippi. It was originally devised for sanitary purposes, but other possibilities soon developed; far-reaching plans for power installation and the building of a Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico waterway took form. In brief, Chicago was calmly proposing to drain the Great Lakes into the Gulf of Mexico instead of through the St. Lawrence. It was given permission to divert a certain amount of water, but it has without authority exceeded this diversion. It now asks to be allowed this excess and to erect compensating works on the Great Lakes. The Canadian authorities have opposed this diversion, and so, it is interesting to note, have the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, which are equally concerned with Canada in maintaining the level of the Lakes. The matter will be considered further during the coming year.

But the powers of the International Joint Commission are not limited to boundary water questions. It is provided further that any questions or matters of difference whatever "involving the rights, obligations or interests of the United States or Canada, either in relation to each other, or to their respective inhabitants," may be referred for decision to the Commission by the consent of the two parties, any such action being taken on the advice and consent of the United States Senate, on the one hand, and of the Canadian Governor-General-in-Council, on the other; a majority of the Commission shall have power to render a decision upon any matter so referred. Thus far the necessity has not arisen for referring any such general issue to the Commission, but the existence of this machinery to meet any sudden emergency is a very valuable safeguard.

Disposition of United States to Enlarged Scope of Commission.

At the Bar Association dinner in Montreal last month, Secretary of State Hughes strongly endorsed the Commission idea and said that personally he would be in favour of even a fuller extension to cover all possible grounds of friction or dispute.

I think perhaps it would be worth while to insert here the words used by Mr. Secretary Hughes in the address before the Bar Association delivered on the 4th September of this year. They indicate very clearly the attitude of the United States towards us in the matter of the settlement of differences between us, an attitude which I may say is heartily reciprocated by us; if, indeed, we did not initiate this point of view in the first instance. I will now quote Mr. Hughes: "While I do not undertake to speak officially upon this subject, I may take the liberty of stating as my personal view that we should do much to foster our friendly relations and to remove sources of misunderstanding and possible irritation, if we were to have a permanent body of our most distinguished citizens acting as a commission, with equal representation of both the United States and Canada, to which automatically there would be referred, for examination and report as to the facts, questions arising as to the bearing of action by either Government upon the interests of the other, to the end that each reasonably protecting its own interests would be so advised that it would avoid action inflicting unnecessary injury upon its neighbour."

In this connection, a personal incident of much interest was the visit to British Columbia of the late President, Mr. Harding, in the course of his Western tour. His extremely cordial and sympathetic addresses produced an impression which was deepened by the sudden illness and death which followed a few days later. I should like to quote the concluding paragraphs of a speech made by the then President in Vancouver: "It is the public will, not force, that makes for enduring peace, and is it not a gratifying circumstance that it has fallen to the lot of us of North America, in living amicably for more than a century under different flags, to present this most striking example produced, of the basic fact that peace can always be kept, whatever be the grounds of controversy, between peoples who wish to keep it.

"What an object-lesson of peace is shown to-day by our countries to all the world. Only a scrap of paper, recording hardly more than a simple understanding, safeguards lives and properties on the Great Lakes, and only humble mile-posts mark the inviolable boundary line for thousands of miles through farm and forest.

C 62624

"Our protection is in our fraternity; our armour is our faith, and the tie that binds more firmly year by year is an ever-increasing acquaintance and comradeship through interchange of citizens. The compact is not of perishable parchment, but of fair and honourable dealings, which God grant shall continue for all time."

Goodwill between Canada and United States.

I place these on record largely because I think they help to illustrate the new-world point of view that is in very striking contrast to the old-world attitude of the past, if not of the present, that force is always essential in the preservation of peace. The emphasis the President has placed upon the will to peace, that peace can always be kept, whatever the grounds of controversy may be, between peoples who wish to keep it, is a fact to which we on the North American continent are inclined to give a great deal of attention. We believe that by frequent intercourse between the public men of both countries, by the constant interchange there is between the populations of the two countries, we are developing a common attitude towards each other in the matter of solving our differences by machinery arranged for purposes of conciliation and arbitration, and that in that way we are perhaps rendering the greatest service that it is possible for us to render as a part of the British Empire in maintaining the friendly relations so essential between the United States and the British Empire. A fund of goodwill is being built up, and to appreciate its real value one has to consider what is gained by the elimination of the enormous cost and waste involved in competitive arming, which would be the other alternative. If we started on a policy in America which meant that we were looking to force for the solution of our difficulties with the United States, and began to fortify our boundaries from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I am afraid we should not have public funds left for any other purpose. Neither America nor ourselves is put to any material expense in the matter of international frontier cost for armed purposes.

Improvement of St. Lawrence Waterway.

A somewhat broader boundary question, involving the possibility of joint Governmental action, has been raised by the advocates of an elaborate improvement scheme on the St. Lawrence which would permit large ocean-going vessels to pass to the head of the Lakes, and incidentally would develop great quantities of electric power. The heavy freight rates on farm products have aroused a strong feeling in support of any feasible means of lowering transportation costs. A joint commission was appointed some time ago to enquire into the feasibility and cost of the plan, and the advisability of joint contribution by the two countries. We were recently asked by the United States Government if we were prepared to enter into an agreement to carry out the recommendations of the Commission. We have thus far declined to take up the proposal, but the desirability of appointing a joint Board to report to the respective Governments upon the practical application of the recommendations of the Commission is under consideration.

Postal Convention with United States.

A comprehensive revision of the postal convention between the United States and Canada was effected this past year by the efforts of the Postmasters-General of the two countries, Mr. Hubert Work and Mr. Charles Murphy. It has put the postal relations of the two countries on a very efficient and satisfactory basis.

Canadian Representation at Washington.

During Sir Robert Borden's term of office, an agreement was reached between the British, Canadian and United States Governments for the appointment of a Canadian representative at Washington. No appointment was made during Sir Robert's term of office or that of his successor, Mr. Meighen, and no appointment has thus far been made by the present Government. We shall probably suggest some revision of the original agreement, particularly in the way of omitting the provision that in the absence of the British Ambassador the Canadian Minister should take charge of the Embassy. I might add that I recently spoke with General Sir Arthur Currie about the possibility of the Government securing him for the post of Canadian

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62625

Minister at Washington. He has informed me that personal and financial factors would prevent his acceptance should the position be formally offered to him. The matter stands in that way at the present time.

Settlement of Fishery Questions.

The regulation of our fishery resources has, as usual, raised some difficult points.

Negotiations have been under way for some years looking to a closer regulation of the salmon fisheries of the Pacific Coast. It has not yet been found possible to secure agreement, largely owing to the attitude of the salmon canners in the State of Washington. We are in hopes, however, that an agreement will be effected before long.

Halibut Treaty.

The threatened depletion of the halibut fisheries on the same coast has been met, on the initiative of the United States, by an agreement between the two Governments concerned. The agreement provides for the establishment of a close season during the winter spawning season—November to February—and the establishment of a joint scientific Board to study the life history of the halibut and make further recommendations as may be required for its preservation. The treaty was signed on the 2nd March, by Plenipotentiaries representing the parties. Mr. Hughes for the United States, and Mr. Lapointe, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to whom at our request, conveyed through the British Government, Full Powers had been issued by His Majesty. The treaty was then laid before the United States Senate, which was to come to the end of its statutory term on the 4th March, and approved by that body. At the last moment, on the suggestion of a Senator from Washington, and in pursuance of the custom which is oddly termed "senatorial courtesy," a reservation was added providing that "none of the nationals and inhabitants and vessels of any other part of Great Britain shall engage in halibut fishing contrary to any of the provisions of this treaty." While, as a matter of fact, no other British nationals have taken part in these fisheries, or are likely to do so, Canada did not desire to undertake on their behalf that they should so act. The Canadian Government was, therefore, unwilling to accept this reservation. The Parliament of Canada has given its approval to the treaty apart from the reservation and has passed an Act, to come into effect by Proclamation, forbidding all persons to fish for halibut in our territorial waters during the closed season, forbidding Canadian nationals to fish in prohibited waters beyond the territorial limit, and barring the use of our ports by any persons as a fishing base during the closed season, which under the conditions existing there will effectively bar any operations. Since we arrived in London, information has been received through the British Embassy that the Under-Secretary of State of the United States has stated confidentially that the President had agreed, as we anticipated, to reintroduce the Halibut Treaty as originally signed, without Senator Jones' reservation, and that the presumption was that it would pass. In the meantime, the beginning of the close season will be postponed until next year.

We are setting apart, I think, a special time for the discussion of treaties, and perhaps I should not go further into the Halibut Treaty matter at this moment; perhaps, however, it might clear up a misconception in the minds of some of the members present as to the significance of our action in negotiating an agreement with the United States over the conservation of halibut, were I to point out at once the real character of the subject-matter of the treaty. It relates entirely to the conservation of the halibut in the Pacific Coast waters of the United States and Canada. It is as much to our interest as to the interest of the United States, as much to their interest as ours, that we should try to conserve the halibut, and the most effective way is to bring about an agreement between the two of us that neither of us will permit fishing from our ports in those waters during a certain close season. I have seen the question asked, what will be done if the United States does not carry this out; whom will Canada look to to see that the treaty is enforced? A question of this kind reveals a lack of appreciation of the subject-matter and the purpose. Of course, if the United States do not carry out their part we will not carry out ours, and vice versâ; both of us will be losers; we shall lose some of our fish, a valuable resource; the whole Empire will lose to that extent, inasmuch as some of its resources will be depleted in part, but the factor that would compel enforcement of that treaty is the one referred to by the President—the obvious mutual interest of the two countries to see that it is carried out. Let me make this also clear, that by no conceivable construction could it be shown that any other part of the British Empire would be affected in any adverse way by our action. Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Newfoundland—no part of the British Dominions could be other than helped by the agreement we have made. Their rights are in no way affected; the rights of the British Isles, the citizens of the British Isles, are in no way affected. I might further point out this, that, had we wished so to do, we could have referred—and I speak of this more particularly in connection with the signing of the treaty—we could have referred the whole subject-matter of this treaty to the Joint Commission to which I have just made reference, and asked its members to deal with it. Had they dealt with it under the powers which have been given to them, three of the citizens of the United States and three of the citizens of Canada—or rather the chairman on each side—could have signed that agreement and it would have had the same force as the signatures of the Ministers which are on it at the present time. In other words, two gentlemen, neither of whom has any powers other than those they derive from the Governments themselves, could have done all that has been done by a Canadian Minister and an American Minister in signing the treaty. It is perhaps as well to mention those points at once, as apparently, judging from what I have seen in the press of comments from different parts, there appears to be a fear that we in Canada have sought in some way to invade the rights of other parts of the British Empire.

C 62626

Revision of Rush–Bagot Agreement.

One of the most far-sighted international actions to which either Great Britain or the United States has been a party was the conclusion of the Rush–Bagot Agreement in 1817, to restrict naval armament on the Great Lakes. The agreement provided that the armament by either country on the border lakes should not exceed four 100-ton vessels, armed with 18-pounders, I think one 18-pounder each. This understanding has unquestionably contributed greatly to the prevention of a competition in armament, and to the maintenance of a 3,000-mile frontier practically without a fort. The agreement has become obsolete, however, so far as the details of construction are concerned. The United States Government, usually after request, but occasionally without notification, has stationed there vessels, which, though small and lightly armed at first, have gradually been increased in size and efficiency until they now number from fifteen to twenty. They are used as training ships for the naval militia of the States bordering on the Great Lakes. The Canadian Government has had no doubt that this was their sole purpose, but felt the danger of misunderstandings and recriminations. The pressure of shipbuilding firms on the Great Lakes to secure naval contracts had also to be taken into account.

After considering these and other points laid before us by our naval advisers, the Government reached the conclusion that the matter should not be allowed to drift. Accordingly, in July 1922, my colleague, Mr. Graham, at the time Minister of National Defence, and I visited Washington and discussed the question with Secretary Hughes and President Harding. Our reception was very satisfactory, and it was agreed that the best solution would be to prepare a draft treaty which would preserve the full spirit and effect of the agreement of over a hundred years ago, but would adapt its principles to present-day conditions. I may add that the British Embassy cordially co-operated with us and greatly assisted in facilitating our interviews. On our return our technical officers prepared a draft treaty. We then, in August, sent a copy of this treaty to the British Government, asking for any comment and suggestion, particularly of a technical character, concerning the safeguards that should be incorporated. The Prime Minister responded on the 19th October, expressing entire sympathy with our proposals for revision, and offering valuable technical considerations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62627

A draft was then sent to Washington. In May of this year the United States replied, accepting some articles and proposing substitutes for others. We desire to take advantage of being in London on this occasion to discuss the matter further before taking final action. The prospects are excellent for a limitation which will be reasonable and effective.

I might say, in regard to what is proposed, that we have new problems of police on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River which arise out of the prohibition laws of the United States and some of our own Provinces, that will necessitate possibly putting police vessels on the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes. There are additional difficulties in enforcing the revenue laws of the respective countries, and we have to come to some definite understanding as to how far we will permit any kind of armament for these two purposes, revenue and policing. We will have no difficulty with the United States in reaching an understanding, as whatever is done will be with our knowledge and with our approval. I think we can work out an agreement wholly satisfactory in that line. Then, in regard to shipbuilding, during the period of the war a number of shipbuilding concerns at the head of the Great Lakes found that they might develop a profitable industry in the matter of building small warships; the Americans have sometimes a real difficulty in controlling their people, particularly where these large industries are concerned, and it may be that we will have to work out with a little more care what should be permitted to those shipbuilding companies in the way of the building of the ship itself, apart from any armament to be placed on it in other waters. There again, I believe we can work out with them an arrangement which will be satisfactory to both of us. As matters now stand, however, while the Rush–Bagot Agreement in name is being quoted and held up to the world as a great example, and to a large extent the spirit of the agreement is kept, the letter is being violated to a considerable degree, and it seems to us that we should revise that agreement in a form which will preserve its spirit and its effectiveness, but which will meet the necessities of the new situations that have arisen.

United States Tariff.

The United States tariff changes of the past two years have been distinctly protectionist, and have hampered Canadian trade, particularly in agricultural commodities. There is no prospect of immediate improvement. It is possible, however, that the Democrats will seek to make a downward revision of the tariff the main issue in the election of 1924, and there are signs that the Western farmer, in whose supposed interest the tariff was raised, is realising it has availed him little; the organiser of the farm bloc—Gray Silver—has recently pointed out that the United States farmer gained rather than lost by the import of Canadian Western cattle, which were really stockers and feeders well adapted for finishing on the corn lands of the States.

Coal and Pulpwood.

The possibility of an embargo on shipments of coal to Canada during the recurrent coal strikes has been imminent, but fortunately has been averted. We are trying to develop imports of Welsh coal to lessen our dependence on Pennsylvania anthracite. On the other hand, the Canadian Government has been strongly urged to place an embargo on the export of pulpwood to the United States, and the question is now being investigated by a Royal Commission.

The two points I have just mentioned help to illustrate the kind of difficulties that might very quickly develop a serious situation, unless they were handled by those on the spot who appreciate their significance. We depend during our winters, in large part, upon the coal we receive from the United States. They have been hard put to it, on account of strikes, to get sufficient coal for their own people. They have been generous in their treatment towards us. I really think the Government of the United States have gone out of their way to try and help us, in every particular, in the supply of coal for the winter.

Now we come to this matter, to the depletion of our forests through the export of pulpwood, and there we are up against this, that the United States newspapers are practically dependent upon our forests. Mr. Hughes told me in conversation the other day that from representations which had been made to him it would appear that if we stop the supply of pulpwood summarily within a year the Dailies of the United States would have to cease publication (laughter) and we can imagine the kind of stir there might be expected through action of that kind.

C 62628

Position of Canada.

I mention these facts simply to illustrate what I am going to speak of, perhaps more particularly near the end of this review, why in Canada we feel very strongly that in these matters of international relations we must to some extent have a foreign policy of our own, if I may use that expression in this connexion—not a policy necessarily distinct from the policy of the British Empire—rather, I should perhaps say, we feel that we cannot confine our rights of self-government to matters of a purely domestic character, but that any questions which we have with our neighbours, or with others, which are matters of immediate and direct concern to each of us, we must have freedom in negotiating and settling. May I say at once that I do not wish to imply that we have thus far experienced any handicap or restriction from the British Government in any particular in this matter?

Liquor Traffic.

The existence of legal prohibition of liquor traffic in the United States has put a premium on the smuggling of liquor from Canada. Recently the United States has requested a Conference with our Customs Authorities to discuss means of checking clearances. The situation is complicated by the variation in the laws of our various provinces, six having prohibition themselves and three permitting sale under Government control or through Government agencies, and also by variations in the attitude of the provincial Attorneys-General, who are responsible for the enforcement of the local regulations. A conference between officials of the United States Government and our own has been arranged for November.

There again an illustration is afforded of what I tried to indicate a moment ago. This matter of clearing from our ports shipments of liquor has reference more particularly to Customs Regulations. That is something which is of immediate concern to our Government and to the Government of the United States. I do not think it is a matter of any particular concern to any other part of the British Empire. There we would feel, and I should be inclined to think all parts of the Empire would feel, that we should deal with that purely local situation ourselves. It is a matter that relates to the North American Continent.

Three-Mile Limit.

On the other hand, when it comes to the question of the 3-mile limit and proposals for extension to a 12-mile limit, we would recognise in a moment that here is something which affects the entire British Empire, here is a matter which is of concern to all of us. It involves a new principle and so we would not think in any way of expressing a final opinion or, so far as we are concerned, attempting to deal in any final way with that situation, without the closest co-operation with the other parts. Indeed, I should think, on a question as large as that, we should feel that the decision should be made here, and made in the light of views expressed by representatives of all parts of the Empire.

Inter-relations of Canada and United States.

In completing this hasty review of our relations with the United States, I might refer to the very true observation which Lord Curzon made on Friday as to the power of the West in United States politics. The same thing is observable and increasingly true in Canada; the prairie provinces are coming to hold the balance of power. They are largely influenced by the same factors which influence the Western States. In fact our neighbourhood to the United States is a factor which comes into nearly every equation of ours. It has a direct bearing on the question of our policy towards Europe. There is no question that, if the United States persists in its policy of isolation, and if we were to go to the other extreme of assuming daily responsibility for settling the affairs of Europe, the result

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62639

would be a distinct growth of Continental sentiment which would have grave danger for the Empire and afford a renewed stimulus to emigration to the United States. That is a consideration which may be overruled. If a great and clear call of duty comes, Canada will respond, whether or no the United States responds, as she did in 1914, but it is a most important consideration against intervention in lesser issues.

True Basis for Foreign Relations of Empire.

May I say, Prime Minister, that, in what I am now going to take up, I feel the great wisdom of what Lord Curzon said at the outset, as to the importance of the truth in all matters which we are here to discuss. It would be very pleasant and easy for me to say that Canada would do this or would do that as occasion arises, but ill-considered statements will not help in what we here are all most concerned about, namely, laying the basis of the British Empire in an enduring fashion and furthering the development of its strength. Whatever I have to say will have that end primarily in view. I think we should differ, some of us who have discussed these questions in our own countries, as to how our objects can best be effected, but I will give to this gathering what my colleagues and myself believe to be the basis on which foreign relations can be most satisfactorily worked out.

Relations with Far East.

Just before I touch that, however, I have a note which deals with the Orient. I am following Lord Curzon's example in travelling about the world. So far as the Orient is concerned our relations are mainly on the question of immigration. There our policy has been in every way in our power to relieve the possibility of friction between the peoples of the Orient and ourselves, to let them understand that we appreciate their difficulties, and on the other hand to prevent difficulties arising in our own country which might create a very serious situation abroad. We can take it, I think, for granted that it will not help to solve any difficulty in any part of the Empire by creating a new difficulty in another part. The more we can circumscribe the difficulties that exist the better.

Japanese Immigration.

To come to Japan. The one problem there is that of immigration. Some years ago we adopted the plan of trying to work out an agreement which would allow the Japanese themselves, in accordance with their expressed wish, to restrict the numbers of their coolie labourers coming to our country. In the consideration of this question throughout it was the economic phase we had in mind; it was not the question of race, but a matter of maintaining a certain economic standard for our industrial population. Once the Japanese fully appreciated what our difficulty was, they expressed a willingness themselves to limit their numbers. They did not wish, however, to tell their own people how far they were limiting their numbers. An agreement was reached through the co-operation of the British Foreign Minister in Japan to the effect that immigration from Japan would be limited for certain classes, and a very definite number was fixed. The numbers were brought down to a few hundreds. These Orientals have the capacity for increasing their numbers once they get into the country. The children of Japanese and Chinese families on the whole are much more numerous in British Columbia than are the children of white families. The people of British Columbia—I speak of that province particularly—are very much alarmed over this situation, and have demanded that we should absolutely prohibit Japanese immigration, notwithstanding the numbers admitted each year are small. I have had something to do with this question and I think I appreciate its difficulties. I ventured to take the position very strongly that if we could avoid legislation altogether we should be helping in maintaining good relations with Japan. The thing the Japanese Government fears most is invidious legislation. The only way to avoid it was to get the Japanese to make further restrictions. We happen to have in Ottawa as the representative of the Japanese Consular Service—there is no diplomatic service represented there—a very good man with whom personally I have friendly relations, and I explained to him very thoroughly the position we were in, that unless we could get a guarantee that the Japanese Government would further restrict their numbers we would have to pass restrictive legislation. After personal conferences and an exchange of communications with his Government, he said that he thought I could be sure the Japanese Government would limit the number of labourers to 150 a year. With this assurance, I felt justified in mentioning in Parliament that I saw no necessity for any legislation. We shall let the facts speak for themselves; if in another year the numbers are what we expect they will be, probably the necessity for legislation will disappear altogether; so at the present time we have left the matter of immigration from Japan to Canada in that position.

c 62630

Chinese Immigration.

In regard to the Chinese we have had what seems to many of us an undesirable system of restricting their numbers by imposing a head tax of 500 dollars a head. It meant that many were sold into virtual slavery. They came into Canada to work under contract. At any rate, the tax has not had the effect of restricting their numbers. They have come in in very large numbers. This year we passed legislation doing away with the obnoxious head tax altogether but made arrangements between China and Canada virtually similar to those between Japan and Canada. We prohibit altogether certain classes coming into the country and allow others, subject to restriction of classes and numbers, to come in on a passport basis. We are attempting more and more so to arrange matters as to ensure that before men leave their own country they are fit and entitled to come into ours; thereby endeavouring to prevent a number of them coming across and having to be sent back through one disappointing reason or another.

Status of Indians.

With regard to India, I understand we are going to discuss a little later the question of franchise of Indians in Canada, so I will leave that for the moment. I would just mention that we had the pleasure of a visit from Mr. Sastri last year. The Government did what it could to further Mr. Sastri's mission, and we welcomed his speaking publicly in all parts of the Dominion, to make clear to our people the concern of the people of India in our dealing with this question. We invited him into a meeting of our Cabinet and talked to him intimately and freely of the different considerations of which we had to take account, and we sought to have him feel that we were quite as anxious as he was, in so far as it was possible for us at all to do so, to solve this difficult problem. I will have more to say about that later.

Commercial Treaties with France and Italy.

Now in regard to Europe. The two factors of immediate interest in the last two years have been the commercial treaties we have made with France and Italy. Agreements have been concluded securing minimum terms on the most important Canadian products in return for our intermediate tariff rates on certain French and Italian goods.

Relations of Various Parts of Empire in Foreign Policy.

From this brief survey of some of the external affairs which have occupied the attention of the Canadian Government during the past two years, I may now pass to some general considerations as to the relations of the different parts of the Empire on questions of foreign policy. I have thought it well to bring this matter up at once, because it arises out of the remarks of the Foreign Secretary on Friday, and, if we are going to discuss any further phases of it, it will perhaps present our point of view. The question is involved in the Foreign Secretary's opening remark as to our coming here to assist in carrying on "the foreign policy which is not that of these islands alone, but that of the Empire," but it has been raised many times and in more specific fashion.

Public opinion in Canada was surprised some time ago by a statement of the late Prime Minister, Mr. D. Lloyd George, in the House of Commons in December 1921 to the effect that the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Q 62631

position of the Dominions in reference to foreign affairs had been revolutionised since 1917, that the Dominions had been given equal rights with Great Britain in the control of the foreign policy of the Empire, that the instrument of this policy was, and must remain, the British Foreign Office, and that the advantage to Britain was that such joint control involved joint responsibility.

If any such sweeping and general agreement as Mr. Lloyd George assumes has been made, implying, if it means anything, that all the foreign affairs of the whole Empire are to be carried on through a single channel, the people of Canada have no knowledge of it. This arrangement has never been sanctioned by our Parliament. It may be sufficient to quote a comment made by Sir Clifford Sifton, who, it may be recalled, organised the campaign against the Laurier Government on Reciprocity in 1911, and the campaign for conscription in 1917:—

> "This statement is rather startling after Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Borden for fifty years have asserted the right of Canada to have no military or financial responsibility for a war, unless her Parliament voluntarily takes on that responsibility. We now find the Prime Minister of Great Britain making the statement that we have entered into an arrangement by which we assume responsibility for the wars of Great Britain all over the world in return for being consulted . . . . Premiers drift into London . . . . no one very sure what is decided . . . . and the Dominions become jointly responsible for everything the British Foreign Office does in every part of the world.
>
> "I consider it an entirely impossible arrangement. I think it a complete abandonment of the theory of Dominion autonomy as it has developed for fifty years. The people of Canada have never agreed to any such arrangement, and in my judgment they never will. I think the people of Canada will demand that responsibility for engaging in any war or contributing to it shall rest exclusively with the Parliament of Canada."

General Smuts: Who are you quoting from?

Mr. Mackenzie King: From Sir Clifford Sifton, formerly a member of the Government of Canada. Sir Clifford has been giving a number of public addresses in Canada, and these statements seem more precisely than any other I have yet read to present the point of view of our country, as I understand Canadian opinion, on the question of foreign policy.

Lord Curzon: I suppose he spoke without official authority, did he, though he is an influential and powerful person?

Mr. Mackenzie King: That is quite right, Lord Curzon. I am merely quoting his speech as an illustration of a view widely held. Speaking after conference with my colleagues in the Cabinet, we would feel that those statements substantially express the Canadian Government's view.

Implications of Phrase "Foreign Policy of the British Empire."

May I take a few minutes to examine briefly into the implications of both halves of a phrase frequently used, "the foreign policy of the British Empire"? As to foreign policy (the sum of those dealings or relationships or policies which the Government of one country carries on in connection with other countries), a few observations may be hazarded. May I say that I speak with very great deference? My reason for presenting these views is that there may be no mistake in appreciating our particular position. If we are wrong in that position, I hope, as the result of the Conference here, we will see our mistake. On the other hand, it may be that in using phrases such as "foreign policy" there are different things in the minds of each of us. As I have tried to make clear, we have the moment we go beyond our own boundary to deal with a neighbour next door to us, and so we must have a foreign policy. We must meet him either with a smile or with a frown in the relations we are going to have. Take the whole question of International Agreements between the two Governments, such as the work of the Joint International Commission—that is an expression of our foreign policy. It is true it is a part of the foreign policy of the British Empire, as it is acquiesced in by the others. In one sense we are prepared to agree that the policy of Great Britain is the policy of the British Empire, but what we want to know is how far the obligations arising out of that policy are material and how far they extend in reference to ourselves.

Q 62632

Foreign policy, I take it, is in a large measure an extension of domestic policy. It depends upon the balance of social and political forces, upon the industrial organisation, upon the racial aspirations, upon the whole background of the people's life. As an illustration I may refer to a matter briefly touched upon by the Foreign Secretary on Friday—the attitude of the United States as to the seizure of liquor on ships in territorial waters or hovering outside the presently recognised territorial limit. This attitude arose out of the policy of prohibition adopted as a domestic policy without any thought of the international complications which it might involve later. So, in the same matters, with ourselves; some provinces in Canada have adopted prohibition, some have rejected it. It makes a great deal of difference in our relations with the United States what the precise policy of each province is upon this matter. Again, foreign affairs nowadays have to do very largely with economic questions—trade, tariff, coal or oil or railway concessions, international debts, immigration, fishery or power or navigation rights in boundary waters, &c.

They are largely neighbours' disputes, naturally arising most frequently with the countries which have most intercourse with it.

The question whether a certain matter in dispute will lead to war is frequently not so much a question of the character of the specific issue as of the spirit and traditions and supposed general interests of the countries concerned.

The British Empire, again, is not a single community, homogeneous, concentrated, with uniform neighbours, problems, needs. It is a league of peoples plus an Empire; it covers all the Seven Seas; it includes communities of every conceivable stage of civilisation, every variety of resources, every range of neighbours, every combination of problems and interests. The more advanced of these communities have developed rapidly in numbers and trade and international intercourse; they have developed relations with other countries varying with their situation; they have developed distinct problems in external as well as in home affairs, a distinct national consciousness, distinct Parliaments and Governments to control their affairs. Some problems are distinct and primarily concern only one or a group of these Empire States; some are of common interest or common menace, and concern the whole Empire and it alone, some are of still wider implications and concern all or a great region of the world, whether organised in permanent Leagues of Nations or in temporary conferences, or not organised at all.

Given then these conditions—given wide scattered communities within the British Empire growing steadily in numbers, in intercourse with the world, and in the habit of self-government; given the growth of problems and difficulties especially with neighbouring countries; given the diversity of conditions and of interest and of knowledge which makes these problems in many cases distinct in each country—it is inevitable that each of these communities should seek to control those foreign affairs which concern it primarily.

This is obviously true, and has long been true of the United Kingdom. Its foreign affairs have been of such overshadowing importance—it is on the verge of a crowded and troublesome and uneasy continent, it is the greatest trading nation in history, it has dependencies, protectorates, coaling-stations, in every quarter of the globe—that they have in the past been practically identical with the foreign affairs of the whole British Empire, and are still, and must long remain, immensely more important and complicated than the distinctive foreign affairs of any other part of the Empire.

It is increasingly true also of the Dominions. In this field Canada has naturally been most active, as the oldest federation and as the community which, next to the United Kingdom, is in most intimate and constant intercourse with powerful neighbours, preeminently with one great neighbour. It is unnecessary to review

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62633

the process by which Canada has steadily widened the range of foreign affairs with which she deals through her own Parliament and Government; trade, tariffs, immigration, boundary disputes as to power, navigation or fisheries and other questions which half a century ago were considered beyond her jurisdiction, are now unquestionably matters for her own decision, as my opening observations concretely indicated.

Clearly, then, as regards this wide and growing range of foreign affairs, the Dominions, or some of them, now possess control, and determine the policy to be followed.

Right of each Part of Empire to Control its own Affairs.

It is not possible that this evolution which has proceeded steadily and with increasing acceptance for more than two generations should now be reversed, that Great Britain or Canada should decide Australia's trade policy or that South Africa should determine whether Canada shall join with the United States in the development of the proposed St. Lawrence waterway. Self-government means the right of each part of the Empire to control its own affairs, whether those affairs are domestic or foreign, or both. That is the principle on which this Empire has been maintained, that is its unique and distinctive contribution to the world, that is the principle which has been tested in fire of late years and not found wanting. I can hardly think that anyone would now propose that it be abandoned. I repeat, Canada has perhaps been more active than other of the newer parts of the Empire in assuming direction of such foreign affairs as distinctly affect her own interests. This is an outcome partly of our longer history, but much more of geography; the outcome of the fact that for 3,000 miles we lie side by side with a great foreign country which is yet of English speech, and with which our people have constant and unending business and social intercourse. Possibly, if we were in the position of some of the other Dominions, we would regard the question somewhat differently; possibly, if they were in our position, they would take the stand that we do. We are not asking that these differences be overlooked, or that the same policy be adopted by Dominions which differ in their circumstances.

I may say that, listening to the discussion of the questions that come up here, I have been more and more impressed with the part that geographical situation plays in determining the point of view in many of these matters. When I heard General Smuts the other day refer to matters that concern him in Africa and Egypt, and when I thought of the route that he and his colleagues have had to take in coming from Africa to Britain, I could see that many questions might arise in the area between London and South Africa which for him could not be satisfactorily solved without considering many aspects of British foreign relations with countries between here and there; and, similarly, perhaps in a more far-reaching manner in the case of Mr. Massey and Mr. Bruce in coming from Australasia. This aspect of means of personal and trade communication between Britain and Australia or New Zealand, and the consequences arising out of it, brings to the fore the whole question of their possible desire to express views about British foreign policy as it relates to any of those countries which they must pass in a way which does not come up at all so far as Canada is concerned. That has to be considered, because, after all, the people themselves are the ones who are doing the thinking on these questions, and it is not sufficient that those of us who have the privilege of attending this Conference should have views as individuals. We should, in all we express, indicate the views of the people we represent; they are the most concerned about the matters of which we are speaking. It would be simply ludicrous for me to say, for example, that the people of Canada have, as a whole, given any thought to some of the matters which are perhaps of vital concern to General Smuts—they have not. It is in the nature of things that they could not, neither could General Smuts, nor Mr. Massey, nor Mr. Bruce, in such a matter as the development of the Chicago Canal or the level of our Great Lakes express opinions representative of the views of their people who would be likely to be interested in such matters.

If it is not possible or desirable that Great Britain or other Dominions should control these foreign affairs which are distinctly of primary concern to one Dominion, so it is equally impossible and undesirable for the Dominions to seek to control those foreign affairs which primarily affect Great Britain. Her geographical situation, her foreign trade, the enterprise of her investors, create many relations, interests, problems which are primarily her concern and which have intimate connection with her domestic problems. As to those affairs, the Dominions have not the knowledge, the direct interest, the responsibility, which would warrant their seeking control. Great Britain also is entitled to claim self-government.

C62634

Need for Consultation on Fundamental Issues.

Each part of the Empire, then, has its own sphere. But at certain points the arcs cut, the interests become common. There are issues which are of fundamental concern to all parts of the Empire; and with these all parts of the Empire must deal; the Governments of the Empire must confer; the Parliaments of the Empire, if need be, must decide.

It is true that there is no clear cut and enduring line of demarcation between these fields, between those foreign affairs which are of primary concern to one part of the Empire and those which are of joint concern. No foreign question affecting one part of the Empire is without its influence on other parts, however small and indirect that influence may be, but it is equally true that no domestic affair of one part of the Empire, no foreign problem of any foreign country, is without some bearing on the fortunes of the rest of the Empire and the world. It is a question of degree. Again, issues which were primarily of concern to one part may grow to vast proportions and afford a menace or an opportunity that has substantial concern for all parts; if so, it can then be dealt with by all concerned. In drawing the lines there will inevitably be difficulties, but goodwill and commonsense and experience will settle these as they have in the past.

Again, were it considered desirable to establish a unified foreign policy on all issues, it would not be practicable.

No scheme has been worked out, no scheme, I venture to say, can be worked out, by which each part of the Empire can be not only informed but consulted as to all the relations of every other part of the Empire with foreign countries, and a really joint policy worked out. The range is too vast, the situation too kaleidoscopic, the interests too diverse, the preoccupation of each Government with its own affairs or its own existence too absorbing, to make this possible. We must face facts. It is possible to consult on matters of overwhelming and enduring common interest; it is not possible to consult on the great range of matters of individual and shifting concern.

Concern of Parliaments and Peoples in Foreign Policy.

A further questionable feature of the Empire one-foreign-policy theory is that it ignores the necessity for associating the Parliaments and peoples in the decision of foreign policy. Granted that a measure of secrecy is essential in the course of negotiations, granted that the conduct of affairs must rest largely with an experienced and specialised executive department, still it is true that it is not desirable for any Dominion or for the Empire that vital issues of foreign policy should be determined decisively in a small executive or Conference group. The problem of foreign policy is not settled when provision is made for bringing Prime Ministers together. Each Prime Minister must on important issues secure the backing of his Parliament and his people.

May I say, Prime Minister, the reason I have spoken as I have here to-day is primarily the one I have already referred to, the desire to face the truth regardless of how it may affect the feelings of any of us, and also in part because I feel that if we are to render any service to each other we must let each other know very frankly what we can do and what we cannot do; what we may expect and what we have no right or reason to expect. There are many things right in principle which are not possible in practice. I was struck in looking over the 1921 Conference report by a remark made by Lord Curzon in regard to what had been the view taken in England as to what should be done with the Kaiser and certain of the German war criminals. It was right in principle that they should be tried,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62636

and I think Lord Curzon mentioned that, but he also stated that where a short-sighted attitude had been taken, and where the Government was in the wrong, was in assuming that it could be done. If there is one thing above another which must have impressed all of us it is the deplorable condition in which ex-President Wilson has brought himself and his country in view of the part he took at the Versailles Conference. President Wilson went there with high ideals, believing in certain principles which he thought were right; he did his utmost to have certain views accepted, and he had them accepted, but he left out of account one factor of vital concern, namely, the extent to which the people of the United States were behind him. I do not wish to come to the Conference and say to the gentlemen gathered round this table, "Yes, Canada will do this and Canada believes that," unless I am sure that I can say the same thing in Canada on my return and get the same amount of applause there as I do here. That is the sole reason I have for dwelling at such length on this question of foreign policy. We must speak here in regard to the extent to which we are going to be able, through our Parliaments and by our appeal to the people, to make good every single undertaking we give and every implication for which we are responsible.

Recent International Conferences.

I must say just a word about International Conferences. When we came into office the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments was being held at Washington. Sir Robert Borden was representing Canada. His report was made to the Government, and later I would like to draw the attention of the members of this Conference to two or three of its pages, more particularly where Sir Robert Borden sets forth his views on the matter of treaties. It is a point of view I think we all hold in common.

At Genoa and at The Hague we were represented. We had been invited to be present at these Conferences and, considering their nature, we felt it would perhaps be not only of interest and benefit to ourselves, but also to others if we were represented there. At Lausanne we were not represented; we were not invited. We took and we take no exception to not being invited. We felt that the matters that were being discussed there were not of the same immediate and direct interest to ourselves as they were to those who were represented at the Conference and we have no exception to take to the course that was adopted.

Near Eastern Crisis, September 1922.

In referring to the Lausanne Conference, perhaps I should say just a word or two about the circumstances surrounding the manner in which we were asked if we would like to associate ourselves with the British Government in its policy towards the Near East, and, in particular, if we would participate by sending a contingent. I mention this because I think it shows the great necessity for our working out, with a little more care and caution than has thus far been exercised, the means by which communications are to pass between the different Governments concerned. The first intimation I had that Canada was being asked to participate in a situation as serious as that in the Near East was when a press reporter came and showed me a despatch which he alleged had been given out by the British Government and asked what Canada was going to do in this matter. I did not wish to embarrass the situation by saying I had not received any communication from the British Government whatever on the situation in the Near East, and I fell back on a phrase I had frequently used in a previous political campaign, that it was not a one-man Government, that when I had had a chance of conferring with my colleagues we would decide what action we would take. I then communicated with Ottawa—I was away at the time in my own constituency—to find out if any communication had been received from the British Government, and none had been received at the time I communicated. This was on Saturday. On Sunday morning I came down immediately to Ottawa; I went to my office and ascertained that a communication had been received at noon on the previous day by the Governor-General's Secretary, the communications coming, of course, in that way. It had to be decyphered, and it came to my office during the latter part of

c 62636

Saturday afternoon. But in the meantime the entire press of the country, the Saturday afternoon press, had the alarmist appeal that there was likely to be war in the Near East and that New Zealand had already undertaken to send a contingent. When I called my colleagues together on the following Monday we all felt that until we had more in the way of information it would not be wise to say to what extent we were prepared to associate ourselves with the policy of the British Government. As to participation in any war by the sending of troops, as a Government we felt that Parliament must decide on that point, and I communicated accordingly. Lord Curzon spoke on Friday of the despatches and telegrams which we had been receiving from the Foreign Office. I am inclined to think that there is a doubtful value to be attached to them. They have been helpful in some particulars, but, if I may cite this case, a reference to the despatches will indicate that a couple of weeks prior to the telegram being sent, to which I have just referred, one despatch indicated that the crisis in the Near East seemed to have passed, that there was not much danger of any trouble arising of a serious character. That was the last despatch I had to place before the Cabinet before the telegram referring to possible participation in a war. These despatches come in in a bundle a week or two after the events to which they refer, and actually the information we had at that time on the Near East situation would seem to indicate that there was no crisis.

Lord Curzon: You get telegrams.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Since then, Lord Curzon, we have been receiving telegrams in regard to the Lausanne Conference and some other questions. At that time we did not; at that time we were not receiving daily telegrams. We were receiving the printed despatches which came by mail and which reached us a couple of weeks afterwards, sometimes even later.

Lord Curzon: You know, of course, Mr. Mackenzie King, that the particular manifesto to which you are referring was not a normal occurrence, and that it was issued without the knowledge or approval of the Cabinet.

Mr. Mackenzie King: So I understand. I have no desire to do other than just present to the Conference some of the embarrassments we had at the moment, and I raise the point more with a view of indicating what we may wish to consider later on very carefully, namely, the best means to be adopted as between the Governments concerned of being informed on questions which are likely to be of real concern to us all.

I want, however, at this moment to say a word about the great care that should be exercised in respect to issuing any statements from the British Government or departments of Government to the peoples of the Dominions over the heads, so to speak, of the Governments concerned. I think whatever is to be done with regard to our affairs must be done through our own Government. It will certainly create all kinds of difficulties were a practice to be adopted of having memoranda or appeals sent out from any department of the British Government to the Dominions which had not received in the first instance the authorisation of the Government of the Dominion concerned.

European Situation.

Now just a word in conclusion about the general attitude towards Europe.

The Dominions are undoubtedly concerned in the present situation. Their material interests, their humanitarian interests, their interest in the preservation of peace and of fair and honest dealing among nations, make it impossible to say we are not concerned. In fact, no part of the world, whether within or without the Empire, can be without concern, though there may be, and are, wide differences in degree.

The practical question, however, is whether any effective remedy for the situation is within our reach, and whether our peoples are agreed upon the value and the necessity of this remedy. Because our interests are prejudiced by the situation it does not follow that it can be set right at once, or that the setting right is to come from outside. This is particularly true in view of the fact that

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c62637

much of the disturbance is internal rather than international, civil war, class war. the war of social creeds. The question for consideration is the practicability of any specific proposal, the balance of losses and gains, interpreting both, of course, in no narrowly materialistic sense.

As to the diagnosis of Europe's trouble, the British Government, supported by the dominant public opinion of the country, appears, while blaming Germany for much stupidity and lack of good faith, to place the main responsibility for the present unsettlement upon the chauvinistic ambitions and unscrupulous intrigues of France. I cannot say that there is any clear Canadian opinion on that point. A large portion of what may be called, in the general sense, liberal opinion is inclined to agree, and believes that the policy France has pursued is calculated to ensure neither her own security nor Europe's welfare. But there is also, so far as the question has been considered at all, a strong sympathy for France. I want to say that this remark has reference to the feeling we have in the light of the knowledge that we have of the European situation. I confess that since coming to England it has been a surprise to me to have heard the strong expressions about France's indifference to her obligations. The extent of that feeling has come as a shock to me. Little of that is known to the people of Canada. We are so remote from Europe; we have not the knowledge of the situation, and the view that our people take must continually be in the light of the knowledge that they have. I think there is a large body of Canadian opinion which feels that France has taken a mistaken course from the economic point of view in occupying the Ruhr as she has; that she has stood in her own light as well as in the light of what is best for Europe and the world. On the other hand, I believe that the preponderating sympathy of the people in Canada is still with France. They feel that, having been treated in the way that she was by Germany, no one can wonder at her attitude being extreme. It would be exceedingly difficult to get the people of Canada to feel that France was deserving of blame, and that it should be part of their duty to try and pass judgment upon her. Suspicion of Germany is still strong. We were led during the war to paint France 100 per cent. white, and Germany 100 per cent. black, and it is not easy to depropagandise a people. The curve is rather sharp. That, I think, broadly is the way in which the country generally would view the situation. Also, I may here mention this. Lord Curzon spoke of the American point of view, and mentioned that the Americans were filled with terror at being drawn into a European situation. I think that is perfectly true of the United States. I believe that is almost equally true of Canada. I am sure the people in the Dominion would view with great alarm the possibility of their being involved in any European situation at the present time. As to remedy, I gather from the statement of the Foreign Secretary that the British Government does not propose at this stage to suggest any definite plan of action, but rather to let France make the next move.

Our attitude is not one of unconditional isolation, nor is it one of unconditional intervention. It depends upon the specific situation in Europe and also in our own country. It would be worse than useless for the representatives of Canada here to pledge themselves to policies which may have no effective backing in the country.

Reparations.

As to reparations, in the narrower sense, Canada, I am sure, will not make her small share in the sums promised by Germany a stumbling-block to a solution. We are prepared to agree to a proportionate scaling-down of our allotted amount, if that will materially smooth the return of peace to a distracted continent.

Canadian Conception of Imperial Relations.

It is sometimes asserted that Canada or the Canadian Government has latterly put forward new principles of imperial relationship, and claimed special privileges in status. That is not the case. Canada is not putting forward any new principles, though, naturally, every new year and every new problem may make it necessary to apply the old principles in somewhat new fashion or in a wider range. Canada stands on the old principle of responsible democracy. She still believes in democracy, in representative democracy, in the rule of the people through, in large part, their representatives in Parliament. She still believes in responsible government, self-government, the right of each part of the Empire, as it attains a fitting degree of strength and capacity and experience, to undertake the control of its own affairs. For seventy years our most honoured leaders have done what they could to develop the basic principle of responsible government, and to apply it in steadily increasing measure to the whole range of domestic and foreign affairs. That principle, which Canadians are proud to remember was, in notable measure, pioneered and developed by their leaders in the past, has proved itself beyond dispute in the testing times of these later years.

c62638

Canada desires no special privilege. We believe that the decision of Great Britain on any important public issue, domestic or foreign, should be made by the people of Britain, their representatives in Parliament, and the Government responsible to that Parliament. So the decision of Canada on any important issue, domestic or foreign, we believe should be made by the people of Canada, their representatives in Parliament, and the Government responsible to that Parliament. Some of these questions will be of direct concern to more than one part of the Empire, and in that case consultation, in formal conferences, like that of to-day, or in more informal discussion, is necessary to give the Government and Parliament and people of each country an understanding of the needs and point of view of the others, so that their decision can be made in the light of this knowledge and the sympathy that is born of knowledge.

I hope I have made it clear that in speaking for Canada as to what we feel should be the extent and scope of our rights in matters of government, whether they pertain to domestic or foreign affairs, I have had wholly in mind only the point of view of how to help to make the relations between all parts of the Empire of a character that will tend towards permanency of relations and the successful working out of a wise development in matters pertaining to foreign policy. Also, I hope I have made it clear that, while we do feel strongly that there are some matters which more immediately affect us than they do other parts of the Empire and over which we desire an immediate and direct control, nevertheless, we are equally appreciative of the fact that there are great common interests in which all of us have an equal concern and are equally ready to share.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Reply to Mr. Baldwin's Welcome.

Mr. Bruce: Prime Minister, I have, in the first place, to thank you very much for the welcome you have been good enough to offer to me and my colleague and to express our gratification that we are able to be here and to discuss these questions of very great moment to the Empire as a whole with the leaders of Great Britain and of the other Dominions. I regret very much that we were delayed and were not here at the beginning, and we appreciate the courtesy that was shown in holding back the final consideration of matters, as far as could be done, without delaying the Conference, and so enabling us to be present before any definite decisions were arrived at.

Interest of Australia in Foreign Policy.

To this matter that we have to discuss to-day, foreign policy, Australia attaches the very greatest possible importance, because the voice of the Parliament and of practically the whole of the people of Australia is in favour of world peace, and of Australia's efforts and the efforts of the whole Empire being directed towards trying to achieve that end. I agree very cordially with what Mr. Mackenzie King has said with regard to the great example that has been set to the world by Canada and America, whose common border extends for some 3,000 miles without any fortifications or any defensive measures at all; but I cannot say that I agree with some other things that Mr. Mackenzie King has said, and particularly I do not agree

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62639

with the view that he apparently takes, that there is nothing at all to be done, that in no questions of foreign policy should there be any real concerted Empire policy directed towards the attainment of a common end.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Excuse me; I hope my remarks were not capable of that interpretation.

Mr. Bruce: They left that impression on my mind, because there was certainly no suggestion as to reaching agreement here upon a policy of any sort which was to be the governing policy for the whole Empire; and the chief stress seemed to be placed on questions of local importance which the Dominions would naturally desire to handle for themselves.

Determination of Local Questions.

There are a number of questions with which every Dominion is faced, on which they are quite capable of coming to an unaided decision, and I do not know that there has ever been any sort of action by Britain which interfered with that in any way. We have to remember that the Empire has gradually evolved, and constitutional practice has been determined without laying down any hard and fast lines; and I am certain that, with regard to those matters of primary importance to a particular Dominion, we shall find in course of time that a solution will be found. But I rather gathered from what Mr. Mackenzie King said that his view was that the attitude we ought all to take up was more or less that of separate nations.

Need for Common Empire Policy.

I do not think, remembering the facts of the Empire and the relations in which we stand to the rest of the world, that we can maintain that position at all. The rest of the world regards us as one and indivisible, in our international aspect, and I think that we must all appreciate that point and—although we all claim a very full measure indeed of autonomy, and I think that Australia is just as determined to claim it as any other part of the Empire—we must recognise that we may be involved in obligations of the most serious character by reason of the action of some other part of the Empire, and particularly of Great Britain herself; and I would like to indicate to the Conference how the present feeling with regard to this matter has grown up in Australia. Prior to the war I do not think Australia took a very great interest in foreign policy. She regarded it as a matter that concerned Great Britain and for which Great Britain had to be responsible. We did, indeed, occasionally voice very definite opinions with regard to some major matters, and we also pointed out on some occasions that Great Britain did not appear to recognise the importance of questions which, in our view, were of great interest to the Dominion, but, generally speaking, we took no real part, and I do not think any of the Dominions took any real part, in the foreign policy of the Empire. I think we generally desired to place the whole responsibility for foreign policy upon Great Britain. And here I may interpose that it appears that is somewhat the position which Canada takes up to-day. The major partner in the foreign policy of the Empire is the United Kingdom; and the suggestion seems to be that we should revert to the position which existed before the war, that we are not going to be in the very least responsible for what that policy is. Well, that would be a position that might have commended itself to us if we had not had the experience of the war, which has changed all our points of view and has made us all recognise that we are equally involved in any trouble that may come upon Great Britain as the result of her foreign policy. I do not think that before the war we had really considered that point at all; but the war came and suddenly we were involved in it as a result of a treaty that had been entered into by Great Britain as part of her foreign policy guaranteeing the integrity of Belgium. I think there were very few Dominion statesmen who appreciated what that treaty meant or the obligations under it; and the bulk of the Australian people certainly had no knowledge even of the existence of the treaty.

The truth is that as soon as war broke out we all woke up to the fact that, owing to a policy which we had had no part in framing, we had got to make the maximum effort that was possible for our own safety and the preservation of our own integrity. I do not put that forward in any way as a complaint. I think the part played by the Dominions during the war frees them from such a suspicion. I am merely pointing out that it is a fact that we were involved, and there were no limits to the effort we would have to make. That having been brought home to them, in all the Dominions, and certainly in Australia, a very strong public opinion has grown up that no country ought to be involved in war without the consent of its own Parliament and people. I think that every Dominion would subscribe to that. In actual fact these things can happen to us. If Britain does become involved in war we are all involved; and that is one reason why there should be some common Empire policy framed to which all the Dominions would be willing to subscribe. I say with all respect that that will to some extent safeguard Great Britain as well as the Dominions from a foreign policy which may lead to war; I think the remarks of Mr. Mackenzie King emphasise that point very much. He pointed out that in the North American Continent, where they are further removed from the old-standing disputes of Europe, they perhaps take a different view of these things to the views held by the old country. Similarly, in Australia we have a different point of view also. With all respect I say that we in Australia feel that our peace loving instincts may possibly help towards the foreign policy that may keep the Empire out of war.

C 62640

Results of Declaration of War.

I know that the view is taken in some Dominions that the fact of Britain being at war does not necessarily involve the whole of the Empire. Australia does not take that view at all—I am certainly expressing the opinion of the people as a whole. They do not, after the experiences of the war, believe that position can be maintained. They think that, though we might indicate that we were not at war, the facts of the case would prevent us being able to maintain the position. Suppose that Britain is at war with a Power or Powers that are in a position to take definite action against one of the Dominions. We suggest that an expression by that Dominion that it does not approve of the Empire's policy on that particular occasion, and does not want to participate in the war, would not in any way save the Dominion if those Powers could, by attacking it, strike a vital blow at Britain. They would not fail for one moment to take the action which would bring about that result and which would, of course, strike a paralysing blow at Britain's prestige amongst the nations of the world. Another case might be that there was a Power that was not able to take offensive Military or Naval action against the Dominions. It would certainly take measures against the commerce and against the nationals of the whole Empire and would not discriminate between the different parts. Australia really sees the position only in one way, and thinks that if at any time, under very regrettable circumstances, she found herself in the position where she could not agree to the action of the rest of the British Empire, there would be only one way of safeguarding her position, that would be by seceding from the Empire. That is a situation which fills us with nothing but horror and alarm. So Australia sees very clearly that it is necessary to have a definite foreign policy which is acceptable to the Empire.

Meaning of Phrase "Foreign Policy."

I wish to make what I meant by foreign policy perfectly clear. I am not suggesting that everyone of the things which Mr. Mackenzie King has referred to are questions which you should incorporate in an Empire foreign policy. Time will evolve the manner and way in which those questions of primary importance to a particular Dominion can be handled by that Dominion. But we must have a foreign policy on important questions, and on the broadest lines, which is the foreign policy of the whole Empire, to which we all would be prepared to subscribe. Unless we can get something of that sort, I personally, and the people of Australia generally, see the very gravest dangers to the future of the Empire. Then, too, it is said that the distances between the different parts of the Empire make it almost impossible that we should have a policy of that kind.

Suggested Basis of Policy.

While I certainly agree that the distances make it extraordinarily difficult for a policy, once it is determined upon, to be altered, and

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62641

difficult to carry out the necessary consultations with regard to its being carried out, I do not see that there are difficulties in the way of laying down the outlines of foreign policy now, when the representatives of the Dominions are here. It should be possible to lay down, on the very broadest principles, a policy for the Empire to which we would be all able to subscribe, and to obtain for it the support of the whole of the peoples of the different Dominions. It seems to me that that is the task we are faced with. It is possible that at a later stage we shall have to consider some improvement in the method of machinery of consultation which will be carried on after these Conferences are broken up, but, with regard to the policy itself, I see no reason why it should not be laid down. It has to be on extraordinarily simple lines, so that it is perfectly easy of understanding, and gives effect to the wishes and sentiments of the whole of the people of the Empire. It must be a policy that can be announced, for, if we cannot announce the outlines of our policy, it is quite hopeless for any of us to go back to the Dominions and say we are prepared to take a share of the responsibilities for the Empire's foreign policy—when we cannot say what the character of the policy is. I am not suggesting that we can go into the most delicate diplomatic questions and announce them in public, but I do believe we can lay down some basis which it would be quite possible to announce. It would be to the benefit of the whole of the Empire, and I am certain to that of the whole world at the present time, if a United British Empire after a meeting of representatives of all of her parts could announce the foreign policy that she will be prepared to follow during the coming year. The points which would certainly have to be considered or the principles which would have to govern such a policy, as far as Australia is concerned, are really, I think, four in number. The policy would have to have, as its underlying principles—

That the British Empire is determined upon maintaining the peace of the world and in ensuring the freedom of all;

That we are determined upon maintaining the integrity and security of the British Empire;

That we believe in the League of Nations, and are resolved, in so far as lies in our power, to support it and give it the fullest possible help towards attaining the ideals for which it was established;

That we take as a basis the closest possible co-operation between the great English speaking countries of the world.

I quite appreciate that these things appear perfectly obvious, and that they follow the lines of diplomacy to which we have been accustomed in recent years. With these four principles as the corner stones I think it would be possible for us to frame a policy here which could be accepted by the whole of the Empire. At the same time there are a great many questions of outstanding importance on which we would have to get some sort of common understanding. If it were possible to announce that we had arrived at this it would be very desirable. If we could not, it could not be helped.

Ruhr and Reparations.

One question that stands out above all others at the present moment is the question of reparations and the occupation of the Ruhr by France. That question, it seems to me, has to be considered by this Conference, and we have to endeavour to try and come to some clear understanding as to what are our views about it. Lord Curzon the other day intimated that the next move rests with France, and, if I may say so with every respect, I entirely agree. I think it does; but we have to consider where we stand if France fails, or takes steps of such a character that we cannot agree to them. In this matter, we have come to recognise that the Dominions have a strong responsibility in the matter of foreign policy. I do not think any Dominion wishes to avoid its responsibility. We were all in the war, we were all signatories to the Peace Treaty and we have all got a direct obligation to see that Germany is made to carry out the responsibilities and obligations which she incurred as a result of the war.

As to what action can be taken, provided that nothing further is done by France or that she makes proposals which are as unsatisfactory as those which she has made in the past, that of course is very difficult to see. It does, however, appear to me that it might be possible to consider the question in one way. The present British proposals are that an independent tribunal should be established, or probably the Reparations Commission strengthened in some way, to assess Germany's capacity to pay at the present time. The French object very strongly to that, and I must confess that I have very great sympathy with them in the objection they take, for the reason that if that were done and Germany's capacity to pay were assessed to-day it would really mean a triumph for Germany's policy of artificial depreciation which she has carried out for some time now. But I do suggest—I do not know whether this will be the line, although we have to find some line—that it might be possible to agree to some arbitrary figure as to what Germany should pay. It is generally recognised now that the figure which has been taken is too high; and also one has to remember that Belgium and Italy have shown some disposition to agree to an arbitrary figure. It is perfectly true that France would probably object to any arbitrary figure which was any lower than the figure as it exists to-day. But if it were possible to get an arbitrary figure generally agreed to by the countries concerned, other than France, there might be the possibility of putting pressure upon France to agree to the figure that was determined upon. If a figure could be determined upon, it could then, I think, be a matter for consideration whether an independent tribunal, or the Reparations Commission strengthened, as has been suggested, could consider the question of how Germany was to pay. But the primary essential is to make it perfectly clear to Germany that, however she pays and whatever she pays, there is a fixed and definite amount that she will have to pay. From the point of view of German mentality, about which we learned a good deal during the war, that is apparently the only thing that would make her try and live up to her obligations, if she once definitely knew, without question, that the Allies were determined to make her pay a definite amount and that there would be no weakening or changing from that. I only throw out that suggestion because I do feel that this particular question is certain to arise, either during the sitting of this Conference or soon after the Conference is over. If it arises during the sitting of the Conference, there is really no need to have dealt with it at this moment; if it arises after the Conference is over, I think it would be a very disastrous thing that this Conference should have sat to discuss the questions of vital importance to the Empire at the present moment, and should have dissolved without having come to any sort of decision as to what our action should be with regard to this question of Reparations and the occupation of the Ruhr by France. If the question of Reparations could be determined upon on the basis of a fixed amount or an arbitrary amount, then I should imagine that the question of the occupation by France of the Ruhr would assume a very much more simple aspect than it has at the present moment. There would no doubt be involved questions of guarantee for any payments, but the situation would be clearer and better.

C 62642

Dangers from Intervention in European Affairs.

Then there are one or two things which I wish to say with regard to the speech Lord Curzon made; but before I do so I think there is one aspect of foreign policy which has to be recognised, and it is that the overwhelming sentiment of the Dominions at the present time is that they are opposed to constant intervention by Britain in the affairs of Europe and the disputes that almost daily arise between different small countries in Europe. We do recognise that for centuries Britain has taken up the attitude of trying to adjust the affairs of the world, but the Dominions know that there is now a League of Nations—whether it is successful or whether it is not is beside the point—and they consider that Britain should try to avoid as part of her policy constant intervention in Europe in the affairs of the smaller nations. The general view of the Dominions certainly is that Britain's policy should be as far as possible one of non-intervention in Europe, and that we should concentrate now as our primary objective upon trying to build up our

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62643

commercial strength and our wealth by the development of our own Dominions. If we do so we are doing a great deal towards ensuring the peace of the world, because it is recognised that the strength and power of a nation in the Councils of the world do not depend entirely upon its naval and military strength, but to a great extent depend upon the position of commercial pre-eminence which it may have established.

Comments on Lord Curzon's Speech.

Now with regard to the speech that Lord Curzon made, I certainly think we should all be very grateful to him for the very great amount of information he has given us as regards practically all the countries with whose policy Britain is in any way concerned. It was a most masterful review of the position of the countries of the world to-day in so far as they are concerned with the foreign policy of Great Britain. But I must also express a certain feeling of disappointment, because I say, quite frankly, it was not exactly the type of speech I expected to read when I heard that he had made his pronouncement. I rather expected to find in that speech more indication as to what Britain's foreign policy is, but the information that we have got deals almost entirely with what the facts of the position are, and gives very little information as to what Britain's policy with regard to these matters is and how far that policy is affected by the circumstances which he set out.

I think it is really quite impossible for the Dominions usefully to discuss the statement that was made by Lord Curzon in the form in which it is at present, and I would suggest, for the consideration of the Conference, whether it would not be possible for the Foreign Secretary to amplify the statement that he has made, in the direction of indicating what the policy of Great Britain with regard to the various countries whose affairs have been discussed is, and I would stress this point very much because I am certain that, if the discussion continues on the present basis, we are going to achieve nothing at all with regard to consultation as to foreign affairs.

Need for Enunciation of Broad Principles.

For my own part I say quite frankly that if we cannot here agree on a policy, as I have suggested, as that of the Empire, on very broad lines and of such a character that it is possible to announce it to the world and say: "This is the policy of the Empire with regard to the present position of the world," it is quite useless for me to go back to Australia and say: "Well, we discussed foreign policy, we considered the responsibility of the Dominions with regard to it, but there is nothing else I can tell you; I was told an extraordinary amount about our present relations with different countries, but that is all of a confidential character; I cannot tell it to you, but everything is perfectly right with regard to consultation between Britain and Australia upon that foreign policy." As the position is at present, I cannot go back and say there is a policy, and give it in broad outlines, and indicate what it is; and really one is forced to the position that, unless we can change the character of this discussion and can look for some broad principles of our policy which can be discussed, and on which the Dominions, if they wish, can express their opinion, I am afraid we shall not get anywhere. If that is the result, that there is no policy laid down, one has to go back in that situation. One is almost brought to the point of having to say: "There is no necessity for us to go further to see if we can improve the methods of consultation between Great Britain and the Dominions, because there is no policy that such a consultation can be based upon; it is apparently impossible to evolve anything of that character, and consequently, as far as we are concerned, we really think it would be better that we did not get this information which at present we are receiving with regard to foreign affairs. We must leave the whole thing to time, and hope for the best, and, as far as each Dominion is concerned, we must leave ourselves in the position of determining what action we must take if at any time any serious difficulty should arise." I am sorry to put the position in that way, but, as Mr. Mackenzie King said, it is necessary, when we come here to discuss matters, that we should put them exactly as we see them; and, from Australia's point of view, I have to say that, unless as a result of the discussions which take place we can evolve some policy on broad lines which we can say is the policy of the Empire, the attempt to build up consultation and the supply of information to the Dominions are of very little use, and probably it would be better that the whole system should be discontinued.

C 62644

Mr. Baldwin: I think it might be to our advantage if Mr. Massey would make his observations before lunch; that would make a fairly even division between the various speakers.

Mr. Massey: I am afraid if I occupied an hour and a half in telling the Conference the view-point of New Zealand with regard to foreign affairs, it would not be for the convenience of the representatives here to-day. I am quite willing to go on, but I do not quite know how long I may speak. I will endeavour not to go into details to any extent, but I know how easy it is to occupy half an hour or more in connection with the many important subjects which have been mentioned in Lord Curzon's speech.

Mr. Baldwin: We adjourned at a quarter to two the other day, and if you come to a convenient place in your remarks to break off, we could continue afterwards. If we do not utilise this half-hour, it may throw us behind with all our programme.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Mr. Massey: I am quite willing to meet the convenience of the members of the Conference.

Appreciation of Previous Speeches.

I would like to say, by way of preliminary, that I listened with a very great deal of interest—and I think every other member of the Conference may say the same thing—to the speech delivered by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a few days ago. In my opinion, it was the most important statement ever made by a Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to the representatives of British citizens either in Britain or in the oversea countries of the Empire. So far as the two speeches we have heard this morning are concerned, I may say that I listened with much interest to both of them. I may not agree with every opinion that has been expressed, and I will take the opportunity of referring to one or two of the points where I hold a slightly different opinion from either the Prime Minister of Canada or of Australia. So far as the Prime Minister of Australia is concerned, just let me say this. There may be a little difference of opinion between us, but I am quite satisfied, from what Mr. Bruce has said, that at any rate the present representatives of Australia and New Zealand will be able to work together heartily, for the benefit of the young British nations in the South Pacific, and, I hope and believe, for the benefit of the Empire.

I want to say this in case there may be a little misunderstanding; one cannot be too careful at times. With regard to the gentleman who represented Australia at the previous Conferences when I have been present, we may have had some small local differences occasionally, if I may so express myself, but, so far as Empire matters are concerned, I am glad to be able to say that Mr. Hughes and I nearly always found ourselves in agreement, and I am looking forward to finding myself also in agreement with the present Prime Minister of Australia.

Personal Position.

Just let me say a word with regard to my position here as representing New Zealand. I think I mentioned, if not at this Conference, then at the Economic Conference, that I was here not exactly in the position of a delegate, but in the position of a representative, subject to one qualification. I have a free hand, I am glad to say, so far as the people of New Zealand are concerned, up to a certain point. That one point is this, and I agree with my fellow citizens whom I represent, that anything that is done here requires to be ratified by the Parliaments of the different countries of the Empire, and that principle applies in the case of the Parliament of New Zealand. I think in this respect the other representatives here to-day are similarly situated; but there is one point which was impressed upon me by the Parliament of New Zealand

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62645

and by the people of New Zealand, whom I had the opportunity of meeting just before I left.

I do not need to say that, when Parliament is sitting and doing its best to wind up its business as quickly as possible, it is necessary that the Prime Minister should be there. I was with my Parliament until almost the last hour of the session. The one point which was impressed upon me, as might be expected from the people of New Zealand, because their characteristics in this respect are well known, was that whatever happened I was to stand for a united Empire, for the unity of the Empire in every possible way, and for strengthening its influence not only for the benefit of its own citizens but for the benefit of the whole Empire, and also for the benefit of humanity. Subject to the conditions I have mentioned, I use my own judgment.

Comments on Lord Curzon's Speech.

Now, Sir, I said that I was not going to deal with the whole of the points that have been raised, but in following the statement made by Lord Curzon I could not help thinking what a tremendously anxious time Lord Curzon and his colleagues must have had during the years since the war came to an end. I am sorry to say that many of those difficulties are still in existence and many problems are still waiting to be solved. Just one word here with regard to a remark made by the Prime Minister of Australia. He expressed alarm and anxiety lest this Conference should come to an end and we had not been able to achieve anything. Well, I hope that will not be the case, and I do not think it will be the case. I hope when this Conference comes to an end and we go back to the people whom we represent here, we shall be able to tell them that we have achieved much. Even in connection with the present European difficulty—and I shall speak about that later—I do hope that the counsel and opinions expressed and the advice given by the representatives of what may be called the overseas countries of the Empire—for that is a more expressive term than "Dominions"—will be of great value in settling the very serious difficulty that has arisen in Europe, a difficulty which I hardly think many of us contemplated during the time when the peace negotiations were going on. As to that, I speak with some authority, because I happened to be present during the very serious months during which the Peace Conference sat in Paris.

Need for Maintaining Entente.

Before I leave that point I want to say this. I know there has been a certain amount of friction between Britain and France, not serious friction, but there has been a certain amount of friction between those two great nations during the last few years, and especially during the last few months—especially since the trouble with regard to the Ruhr commenced or assumed serious shape. I do hope that whatever happens we and everyone concerned will do our best to maintain the Entente. We are not exactly a similar people, so far as race is concerned, to the people of France—I am speaking now more particularly of the people of the United Kingdom and not of the overseas Dominions. We are not exactly the same race, but geographically there is no question about it that the interests of Britain and France are almost identical. There is no question about that. We have been Allies now for a long time past. Now and again some little trouble flares up, but I am glad to say that wiser counsels prevail and it dies out. We are none the worse friends for a little plain speaking.

We have had some candid speaking during the last year or two and during the last month or two, and it is likely that there will be more plain speaking before this difficulty is settled. I think, from what I know of my colleagues here to-day, and everyone present is a colleague of mine, that we shall be able to present some opinions, if not to-day on another occasion, which will assist towards a solution of the present European difficulty.

Need for Empire Development.

I have one other word to say with regard to an opinion expressed by the Prime Minister of Australia. I do think it would be better for Britain and, with the exception that I have made, for France, if we interfered less with European politics and Britain took a more important part with the other countries of the Empire in looking after its own affairs. There is plenty of scope there for all the abilities that we possess, and if we go on building up a great nation —I will not use the term "Empire" at present—if we go on assisting to build up a great nation, we shall have done a great work not only for this generation but for many generations to come. Prime Minister, I leave the Entente for the present, and I want to say a word or two in the order in which the Foreign Minister referred to some of our difficulties in other countries of the world.

C62646

Japan.

I think I am right in saying that the Foreign Minister made a statement that Japan was seeking for a working arrangement with Russia. Japan has been a very loyal ally of Britain for the last twenty years. We have little or no fault to find with the actions of Japan. I am not going into detail now, but as the representative of New Zealand I am under an obligation to Japan, and I do not mind saying so. But I do say this, and it is as well that we are able to speak our minds plainly, bearing in mind that what we say in this room is confidential; I do say that a combination between Japan and Russia, or anything in the way of an alliance for offensive and defensive purposes, would be a very serious matter and might lead to similar difficulties to those which we have experienced during the last seven or eight years. I do not think we can do anything to prevent it. I am glad to say that Japan is still our ally—not as it was before the Washington Conference, but Japan is still in alliance with Britain, along with America and France—four great nations, wielding, if they choose to exercise it, and I hope they will, enormous power, and I hope their influence will be used in keeping the peace of the world so long as it is possible to maintain it, and I trust that will be for many a long year to come.

Singapore.

While talking about Japan, I am reminded of what is proposed with regard to Singapore. I know perfectly well that we are going to have the opportunity of discussing the defences of the Empire, and especially the naval defence of the Empire, and I am not going to deal with it at any length; but I take the opportunity of saying that I do think it is in the interests of the British nations on the other side of the world, and, therefore, in the interests of the whole Empire, that we should have some better protection in the Pacific. I am not sufficiently expert to say whether there is anything better than Singapore. I do hope that the proposal to go on with a British naval station at Singapore will be proceeded with, because in the event of war breaking out—and one never knows where war may come from, war has come very suddenly in past years—a naval station, an impregnable naval station, such as our American friends have at Pearl Harbour in the vicinity of Honolulu, would be invaluable—there is no question about it, it would be invaluable so far as the defence of the Empire is concerned—and I cannot imagine that any objection would be taken to our doing something of the kind by the other countries with which we may be associated. Certainly there is nothing in the Washington Agreement to prevent this being done. That is quite clear.

China.

Now, another possibility of trouble was pointed out by the Foreign Minister. We are apt to overlook these things, and I am bound to say, after what I heard from the Foreign Minister, that I do not attach a very great deal of importance to the conditions in China. But when we think of a great nation like China with a huge population, an intelligent people—I do not mean to say that they are a martial people, I do not think they are, but an intelligent people and an industrious people—when we think of a country like that being practically left—without a Government, without sufficient control, without a President, it leads one to think that some of the great Powers of the world will find it necessary to interfere there before long. If so, I venture to predict that Japan will take a foremost place in anything that may happen, I do not know whether Britain will be called upon to interfere, I sincerely

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62647

hope not—but, if any interference is necessary, one never knows where it is going to end, because it is quite certain that jealousy and friction will come in between the different countries. I do not know whether it is possible, so far as diplomacy is concerned, to avoid anything of the sort; I doubt it very much, and I do not think we can do anything at this Conference with regard to it.

Afghanistan.

Then the danger of the position of Afghanistan was referred to. It is not the first time we have heard of Afghanistan in connection with the frontier troubles. It is not one of the great Powers of the world—nor is it ever likely to become one—but the danger is that Afghanistan is practically one of the gates of India, and, after all the Bolshevistic propaganda that has been circulated in many of those Eastern countries, and, I think, especially in Afghanistan and Persia from communications that have reached me, we do not know what may come from that. It points—and I repeat this—it points to the necessity of not being altogether unprepared so far as coming trouble is concerned. None of us wants war. Whatever we thought before the last war broke out, I think most of us are praying now for peace, and that anything that may be proposed will be to maintain the peace of the world rather than to cause trouble or promote war. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the position in India and the position in Afghanistan to say anything further. As a British citizen I have read a great deal of what has taken place in those countries and the possibilities there, and perhaps our friends who are representative of India will have something to say later on with regard to that particular point, if not now, then when they are discussing the defence of the Empire, although I think I am right in saying that one is intended to discuss, not the military, but the naval defence, which, I believe, under existing circumstances, to be the much more important point of the two.

United States.

The position of America was referred to by both the previous speakers, particularly, and I think not unreasonably so, by the Prime Minister of Canada. The United States, of course, is just over the boundary from Canada, and, naturally, what interests the one, and what is of importance to the one, interests and is of importance to the other. I just want to say a word about the Washington Conference that was held about a year ago. I think it has done a great deal of good. I honestly believe that it has promoted a very much better feeling as between the British Empire and America than existed prior to that Conference being held. I believe it has removed the suspicion—everybody must have known it who came into contact with American citizens, that, if they were friendly—and I am glad to say most of them were friendly—to our countries and ourselves, there was always the feeling that they were suspicious—I will not say jealous because I do not think that was the feeling; they were always suspicious of what was going to be the next move of Britain, or what Britain was going to do. I have had the opportunity of meeting a good many American citizens during the last few weeks. I am not one of those who believe that a man can go to a country and write a book about it that is of any value after he has been there a week; I do not think that at all, but on this occasion I took the opportunity, which came to me for the first time, of landing in United States territory and travelling across the American continent to New York. One cannot do that, and stay a few days on the way, without meeting a great many people who take a great interest in public affairs, and I am glad to say that the impression conveyed to me by those American citizens whom I met was a very very good one indeed. I do not pretend to be an important representative of the Empire, coming from almost the other side of the world, and representing perhaps a small country of the Empire, but, on landing at San Francisco, I was amazed at the interest which was being taken by the people there in the mere fact that a representative British citizen had arrived, and would be likely to be in their country for a day or two.

It is only an indication, but in several sections of the community that I met with from San Francisco to New York, including Washington itself, nothing but pleasure was expressed at the fact that a man, who, to a certain extent, is a representative British citizen, was passing through United States territory, and everything that they could possibly do to show that I was welcome there was done. I am glad to be able to say that left a very pleasant impression with me, not only in San Francisco, where the Chamber of Commerce laid itself out to give me a very hearty welcome, and where the members of its leading Club did practically the same thing in a different way, and a similar experience awaited me at Washington. I hoped to have the opportunity of an audience with the new President of the United States. I got the opportunity without the very slightest difficulty and I would like to say this, I am speaking to the representatives of the Empire, that I believe in the present President—and the same remark applies to the late President, they have got a man who will "fill the bill," as far as the United States is concerned, and who will prove to be a good friend to the British Empire. That is my impression of President Coolidge. I had the opportunity of meeting some of those associated with him in the Government. Unfortunately Mr. Hughes was away from Washington, but I came away feeling that, so far as the opinion of the United States is concerned, I believe we have made headway. When I say we, I am not speaking of my own country particularly, but of the British Empire as a whole. I am sorry to say the American tariff is against us, but we cannot interfere with the right of the American people to arrange their own tariff. We arrange our tariffs and arrange our taxation. Their tariff is against us for the moment, but what will happen at the next election is not for me to say and I will not express any hopes. I would like to see a more satisfactory tariff between the different countries of the Empire and the United States than that which they have arranged at present.

C 62648

Influence of Western States.

There is one point which has been mentioned this morning by the Prime Minister of Canada, and that is with regard to the influence of the West. Now one cannot speak positively after only a two or three days' visit, but, so far as San Francisco is concerned, I do not think there is any doubt of the feeling there. I have had communications from some of the other States and I had a cordial invitation from the Governor of Oregon to come along as a British citizen and accept an official reception and the hospitality of the people of Oregon. I could not accept it but again the indication was good. I am not at all certain that the whole of the people on the eastern side are friendly to us. I think I had better not mention names of places, but there are two cities which I did not visit this time—I had the opportunity of passing through them—where the feeling is not quite so good as in many other places in the United States. I will not elaborate that point here, and will leave it so far as this gathering is concerned.

Egypt.

As to Egypt, naturally I am quite certain that the Prime Minister of Australia and I take a good deal of interest in the affairs of Egypt, not only on account of its ancient history, but because one of the main arteries of the British Empire passes through Egypt. I am speaking of the Suez Canal and I cannot forget that our tenure of the Canal is leasehold. I am glad that the lease is not coming to an end in the near future, but I personally do not like the position in Egypt, and I think it will take all the diplomacy of Lord Curzon, and those associated with him, to keep the peace in that country, so far as the British Empire is concerned.

The wish is not father to the thought—far from it. I hope our relations with the authorities in Egypt will continue to be good, but we cannot help recalling that the British interests are very important in Egypt and will have to be looked after very carefully and I think very firmly. The same thing can be said in connection with the Sudan. It is not nearly so important as the Canal, but any giving away of British territory in the Sudan might encourage the authorities in Egypt to ask for a great deal more than they have asked for up to the present and I think that would be doing a very great deal. I think it would be a request which would hardly be agreed to by British people overseas.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62649

Russia.

I come next to Russia. I look upon the position in Russia as one of the most serious influences from our point of view of all the nations of the earth. I have kept hoping for a long time past, ever since the change in the system of Government took place in Russia, that a strong man or a strong party would come to the front and that Russia would again come under what might be called a constitutional government. That time seems to be as far distant as ever and in the meantime Russia seems to be going, as far as we are able to judge from outside, from bad to worse. One thing puzzles me with regard to Russia. Everyone at this table knows perfectly well that huge sums have been expended by the present Government of Russia in Bolshevic propaganda which has found its way into every country of the Empire. I know it has, I have seen it in New Zealand, and, if we get it there in the outposts of the Empire, we may be sure it has been expended elsewhere. We have proof of the money being expended and that it was Russian money. Honestly I would like to see the present Government in Russia break down. I think it would be a very good thing for everybody, but there it is and it seems likely to continue to exist. I am glad to think that the Foreign Minister speaks more hopefully of the present position in Russia, I hope he is correct in his way of thinking, and, while we do not look with any sympathy on the present form of government in Russia, I should be glad to think that we are not going to have serious trouble with Russia, but instinct rather than anything else has caused me always to be afraid that the next European war will come from the north of Europe. I do not want to be a prophet of evil—far from it—but all the same I think the position in Russia requires, perhaps, more watching and more careful attention than the position of all the other countries, except the immediate difficulty as between France and Germany. That I shall deal with presently. The Russian indebtedness to Britain was mentioned I think by Lord Curzon, and I should be glad to think there was some possibility of that indemnity being paid off by Russia. I do not think it would affect us very much in the overseas Dominions because Great Britain itself takes all these responsibilities and liabilities upon its own shoulders, and so far it has been a most generous thing to do. I hope it has been a wise thing to do—I sometimes doubt it—but there it is. Russia is supposed to owe Britain 650 millions, and I do not hear a word of any part of that enormous sum of money being repaid to the country from which it was borrowed.

Poland.

Then as to Poland. I was very glad to hear what the Foreign Minister said about Poland. We naturally take a great deal of interest in Poland, which has been an oppressed country for centuries. It has recovered to a certain extent now and it is holding its own. When the Peace Conference was sitting a great deal was heard about Poland which was intended to become a sort of buffer State, especially as between Germany and Russia, and I hope Poland will be strong enough to ensure that. If it keeps Germany and Russia apart in years to come it will have done a great service to Europe and to mankind.

Austria.

I was glad to hear that Austria was endeavouring to get back to normal. If the people of a country do not attempt to help themselves, it is not of very much use for other countries to endeavour to help them. I hope that position will arise before long with regard to Germany and with regard to France.

Near Eastern Crisis, September 1922.

I will come to France presently; before doing so I want to say a word or two with regard to Turkey. I think the thanks of the whole of the Empire are due to Lord Curzon with regard to the present position in Turkey. I know what a difficult position it was. I heard this morning, and I think not for the first time, that the British Cabinet was not made acquainted with the telegram sent to the overseas Dominions asking the overseas Dominions what position they would take up in the event of war with Turkey. Of course, I accept unreservedly the statement made by Lord Curzon, but I cannot help thinking that there may have been serious reasons for sending that telegram to Australia and New Zealand.

C 62650

It came to New Zealand first; that was probably more an accident than otherwise; I do not go back on it in the very slightest degree. There was a gathering that evening at Government House in Wellington. I and my colleagues were there, along with many prominent members of the public. Of course they were not made acquainted with its contents. As soon as the Governor-General saw what the telegram contained, he sent for me. It then became my duty to convey the contents of the telegram to my colleagues who were present. There was no occasion to summon the Cabinet, because there was no difference of opinion between the members of the Government with regard to Empire matters. We were all of one opinion. At that gathering, before we left Government House, we decided that our answer would be in the affirmative; and it went out accordingly. I do not go back upon it. Australia would not go back upon it. Australia and New Zealand will never forget what took place at Gallipoli; we cannot forget that within the boundaries of that territory there are the graves of many thousands of the very best of Australia and New Zealand, and the first thought that occurred to us in New Zealand—I am not referring to Australia—was this: what is going to happen to the cemeteries where our boys are buried there. Parliament was sitting at the time; I would not like to say that there was no note of disapproval, because there was, but what I do wish to say is that when I submitted the matter to the New Zealand Parliament on the following Tuesday it was agreed to unanimously. There was no vote against it. Opposition members may think it their duty to criticise whatever comes along—when I was in Opposition myself, I did it; but there was no dissentient vote; and if the question was raised to-day in New Zealand, I feel certain that, so far as my fellow citizens are concerned, the opinion expressed would be exactly the same as it was in those days. Of course, we were all very glad when the danger was past—do not make any mistake about that—but if the Government of New Zealand had wanted 50,000 men, we could have got them within a week; fortunately, they were not required. I thank heaven for it. But, to put it in the vernacular, it was a close shave. If war had broken out, it might not have been confined to Britain and Turkey. If it had, it might not have lasted very long, but it might not have stopped at that; it might have been a war of races; it might have been a religious war—a war between the Moslems and the Christians, a war between the Cross and the Crescent, and, if so—well, it might have been far more serious than most people contemplated. I honestly believe that but for the offer of assistance which came promptly to the British Government at that time things might have been different, but that fact helped to open the eyes of Turkey and those associated with it to the danger of going to war. I leave it at that. I consider that, looking at it from the Empire point of view or in any other way, that it is just as much of importance to the commerce of the world as to a very great extent the prosperity of the Empire that the freedom of the Straits should be maintained, and that mercantile vessels—or warships, if you like—of all countries should be allowed to pass through unchallenged.

I hope there will be no attempt to reinstate these forts at the Dardanelles, about which we had such a discussion before, and which not only did a great deal of damage locally, so to speak, but affected distant countries as well, but I would like to say this, and I do not think I can leave these subjects without a word of appreciation of the valuable services—I am leaving Lord Curzon out for the present—rendered by General Harington. I had an opportunity, like other representatives, of meeting General Harington when the war was going on, and I formed a very high opinion of that gentleman's services, both his services as soldier and his ability as a diplomat, and I could not let this opportunity go by without referring to General Harington.

Ruhr and Reparations.

Now about the Ruhr and reparations. This is the most immediately urgent question that we have to deal with, there is no doubt about that. I have already indicated that I was present, along with General Smuts, at the Peace Conference, but I was not on that side

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62651

the negotiations that were going on: other duties were assigned to me, and I had not the opportunity of taking part in the negotiations with regard to a possible settlement of the difficulty so far as Germany was concerned, and the fixing of the amount of the reparations. As a member of the British Delegation, I was familiar with what took place. I take my share of the responsibility, but I am justified in saying that I felt at the time when the amount of reparations was being fixed that we were going too far, that we were asking Germany for more than she would be able to pay. It is not a case of being wise after the event, but I say it now as I said it before. At the same time, I want to say this, that my sympathies were then and are even now with France. We have to remember that the French people are a proud people, highly-strung, and very sensitive, that their country has been invaded twice during the last fifty years and practically by the same nation. In 1870 it was spoken of as the Franco-Prussian War; this time it might be called the Franco-German War. It was not a war between France and Germany together, because other countries were brought into it, but I had experience of what had taken place in France. I was there in 1919 for nearly six months; we were there on previous occasions; we saw the devastated territories, which I shall never forget if I lived for one hundred years. We knew the misery that had been brought to millions of French people by the action of the Germans, and I do not wonder at their feelings now and their intense anxiety. If we can do something to get rid of the present difficulty in Europe as between France and Germany—I feel in my soul that they will never be friends; it is almost too much to expect—but if we can do something to relieve the tension and get over the present difficulty, then I think this Conference will have been justified. I am sorry to have to call your attention, Mr. President, to the clock; I am quite willing to go on for another ten minutes, if you wish. I am in the hands of the Conference.

Prime Minister: I think we had better finish and have our afternoon session at 3·30, rather than trouble you to pick up the threads again.

Mr. Massey: I am quite willing; I am in the hands of the Conference.

Prime Minister: I think that will meet our wishes, Mr. Massey.

Mr. Massey: Very well. I have not many more remarks to make.

Freedom of Action of Self-Governing Dominions.

I do want to say a word on the opinions that have been expressed both by the Prime Ministers of Canada and of Australia, and again I say, if we cannot agree, well, we shall just have to agree to differ, and I hope any differences of opinion that may be expressed here or that we may feel will not make the slightest difference or be of any importance to the people we represent or to the Empire as a whole. We are here to draw the Empire more closely together if we can possibly do so and we are here to avoid anything in the way of friction and I hope anything I may say will not leave any uneasy feeling on the part of the members with whom I do not quite agree.

The Prime Minister of Canada, I have not quite got his words, referred to the possibility of any of the different countries of the Empire being compelled to engage in a European war, whether they liked it or not, or to be involved in war in which Britain was engaged. My feeling is just this. We of the overseas Dominions value our freedom and our liberty. We have never been compelled to take part in any way against our wishes. There are representatives of countries here to-day, several of them, whose soldiers took part in the South African war. I think on one occasion Australia sent a contingent to the Soudan many years ago, I believe that is correct. We know what took place when the recent war broke out. There was no compulsion brought to bear; there was no coercion brought to bear; we were asked what we were going to do.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I hope I did not convey the idea that we were compelled, certainly we never have been. Whatever Canada has done she has done entirely from voluntary motives and with pride in our relationship with Britain. Britain has not coerced us.

C 62652

Mr. Massey: I accept that unreservedly and I did not think anything else, but the point I was going to make was this. As no attempt has ever been made to compel the overseas countries of the Empire to send soldiers or sailors, to send fighting men, to any war in which Britain has become involved, as nothing of the sort has taken place in the past it is a million to one chances that anything of the sort will never be attempted in the future. It would be the most stupid mistake that could happen. Supposing at the commencement of this last great European war we had had a Government in office in Britain—we must not forget that the sovereignty of the different countries of the Empire rests with the head of the State, it rests with The King—but supposing an attempt had been made to compel New Zealand, and I say New Zealand because it is the country with which I am specially concerned and a country the enthusiastic loyalty of whose citizens is well known, supposing any attempt had been made to compel us to send 100,000 men to the war, as we did, supposing we had been told we were to send them and provide their equipment and their pay and all expenses connected therewith, it would have caused a very ugly feeling in my country and in every other country of the Empire. I think there is too much statesmanship on the part of the people who look after the affairs of Britain to attempt that sort of thing. They will never do it. If in the future they get into difficulties—I hope it will not be in this generation, I hope not at any time, but if similar difficulties occur again they will be met in the same spirit. We owe a great deal to Britain and the British people and we do not forget it. We are of British stock ourselves and we cannot forget the British strain that runs in the blood of every one of us.

I shall never forget the way the native races rose to the occasion in every part of the Empire on the outbreak of the Great War without being asked, and the difficulty of the Government of New Zealand was to hold back the people under their control—I am speaking of the native races—and insist on their being trained. A good many of them went to the war and did their duty there and if people who are only half civilised are willing to do their duty in that way I am certain those of us who belong to older nations, I include my friends on the left, will have no hesitation in doing again what we did in the late war. There has been a change in status. We have accepted that. There is no written document with reference to the change of status; there is nothing to show it except conversations around this table in this historic room, but it was understood at the time when the Imperial War Cabinet, as it was called, was convened and it did useful work, it was understood that instead of being dependencies we were taking up the position of partners in the Empire and we meet round this table as partners in the Empire. If we were not partners in the Empire we should not be here now.

Results of Declaration of War.

That being the case, let us suppose that some sudden emergency arises, and some foreign country lands its troops on British territory or sends its warships to attack our mercantile marine. There is no time to get the different Parliaments of the Empire together. It cannot be done. The men at the head of affairs here must take the lead in this country; they say to the attacking nation that they are committing an act of war; they are responsible for it and must be punished accordingly. There is no time to communicate with each other, though I hope our Empire communications will be much better in the future than they are now. War, however, must be declared and the Governments of the different countries of the Empire must take the responsibility to their Parliaments. I could not imagine any Parliament being convened and discussing a thing like this for any length of time. It is the easiest thing in the world to discuss matters connected with foreign policy and keep on discussing them—I am not speaking of what happens round this table—but from the point of view of overseas countries it cannot wait; action must be taken, and the overseas Governments must take the responsibility of acting for their people. The constitutional law—I am not a lawyer, I leave law to General Smuts—but constitutional law is to this effect, as I understand it, that when the sovereign goes to war the whole of his subjects are

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62653

at war. It cannot be avoided, and do you think the enemy, I am not going to mention a supposititious enemy, do you think the enemy with whom the Empire went to war would allow any overseas Dominion to withdraw its allegiance to the British Crown or if they were victorious would they say to any of the overseas Dominions, we do not want any indemnity or reparation? That is not human nature as I understand it; far from it.

Need for Improved Methods of Consultation.

I sympathise with the idea put forward by the Prime Minister of Australia, that we want a council or conference—I do not care what you call it—an Empire council or Empire conference that can act quickly in an emergency, and I do think before this Conference comes to an end we should decide whether it is in the interests of the Empire and of our respective countries to meet at intervals of not less than two years. I know the difficulties in the way of meeting every two years because of triennial Parliaments, and triennial Parliaments do not fit in with two-yearly conferences, but I hope some more businesslike arrangement than the present one will be brought into operation. I am not looking out for more power for my own country and I do not want to interfere with the sovereignty of the other nations of the Empire; far from it, but I do think we are not making the progress we ought to make in regard to constitutional matters and I can see very clearly we shall not make much progress in constitutional matters this session. If, however, we make some progress on the other matters to which I have referred, the difficulty in European affairs, in regard to trade and commerce, and with naval defence of the Empire, we shall be able to tell our people when we go back that we have made progress in regard to these matters and I think we shall have done very well indeed.

Relations with United States.

One other point. I want to say this, and it is only an amplification of what I have said already. I think we should not lose any opportunity of cultivating friendly relations with our kindred on the other side of the Atlantic, with the Americans; the same race again, English, Irish, Scottish and Welsh, speaking the same language. We do not want to interfere with their Government and they do not want to interfere with ours, but if we were able to stand together and say to the rest of the world, we are combined for the peace of the world and we are not going to allow war to take place if we can avoid it and if a weak country is attacked by a stronger country we will see the former does not suffer injustice, I think we should do better in keeping peace in the world. So far as I am concerned, I want to make it perfectly clear that I stand for the old saying—Peace on Earth and Goodwill as between the Nations of the Earth. I have nothing more to say.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE.

Prime Minister: I propose to communicate to the press the fact that three Ministers have addressed the meeting, giving a list of the members present, nothing more.

(Adjourned until 3·30 P.M.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.,
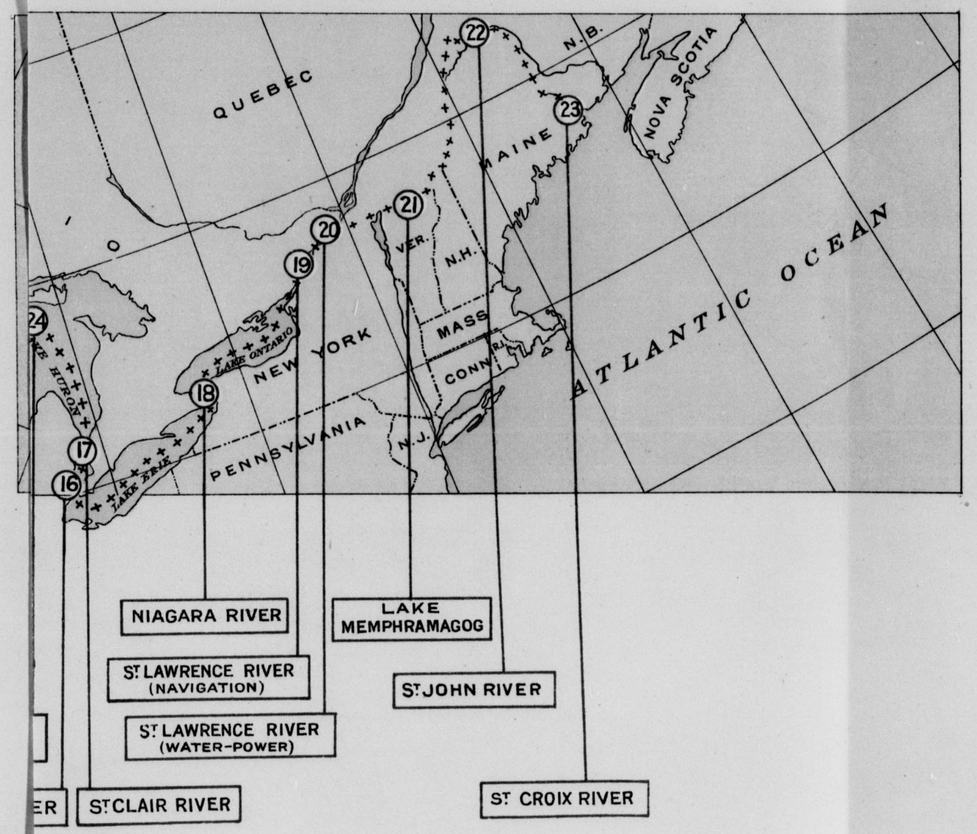
October 8, 1923.

---



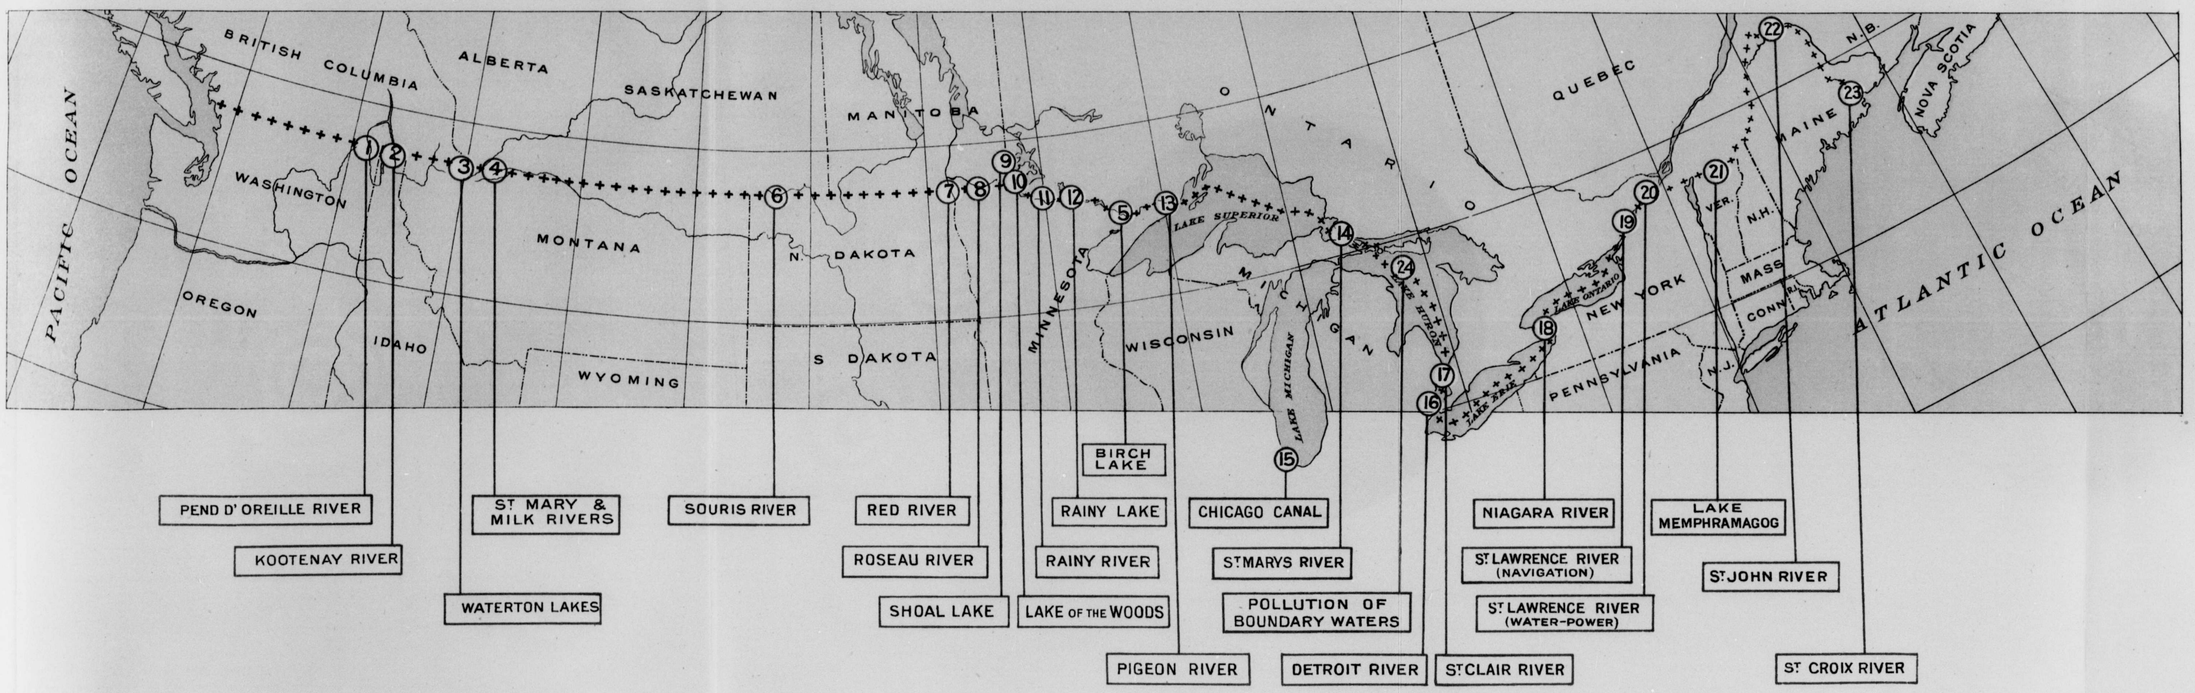
o

57

58

C 62654

MISSION



W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62654

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION
WATERWAYS PROBLEMS

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

C 62655

SECRET.

E. 5th Meeting (1923).

44

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE FIFTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1923, AT 3·30 P.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Senator the Hon. R. V. WILSON, Honorary Minister in charge of Departments of Health and Migration, Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Mr. KEVIN O'HIGGINS, T.D., Vice-President of the Executive Council, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Mr. R. G. VANSITTART, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62656

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B., (Secretary.)
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir R. R. Garran, K.C.M.G.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. Skelton.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

India.
Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Non-publication of Speeches.

Mr. Baldwin: There is one question on which I should perhaps say a word before we proceed this afternoon. Of course, the discussions to-day, as those of Friday, are and must be secret. With the freedom with which we speak here, and the divergence of the views expressed, it would be particularly undesirable that accounts should go forth to the public, but if there is a feeling on the part of any of the Prime Ministers that it is desirable that any portions of their speeches should be made public, I hope that they will be good enough to confer with the Foreign Secretary on the subject, and doubtless a common agreement can be reached as it was reached on Friday, when the Foreign Secretary advised the Conference of those portions of his speech which he thought might safely be made public, and they were made public, and it was after he had made that statement, and assent was given by the Conference to it, that two particular portions of his speech were published. I think probably everyone will agree with what I have said about that.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Wasn't it understood that Mr. Davidson would give out what was to be given to the Press? I rather gathered the impression that that was the understanding we had, that Mr. Davidson would indicate to us what should be published.

Mr. Baldwin: That did not apply to foreign affairs.

Lord Curzon: I made a special reservation. You see how careful we have to be. Take for instance what happened on Friday. I addressed the Conference then, and I took it to be my duty, as I am sure you will all acknowledge, to make you acquainted with the condition of affairs that has grown up since we last met in 1921, and therefore I gave you a narrative leading up to the present moment. Then we decided, in view of the great public demand for a knowledge of our proceedings, to publish those parts of my speech which related to two subjects. You know what followed. In France they altogether ignored the circumstances under which the speech was delivered. They do not realise that I have to keep you in touch with everything that has passed and lead you to the present moment, and they look upon it as a pronouncement directed exclusively to them, and in some ways directed against them. That shows the sort of misapprehension to which we are liable, and therefore I support what the Prime Minister has said, and I suggest that, if you desire any portion of your speeches to be published, they should be very carefully looked through before any circulation is authorised to the Press.

Mr. Massey: Are we to understand that that means, Lord Curzon—supposing I make a speech by way of illustration, and supposing I think afterwards it ought to be made public, and supposing something I have said reflects upon or puts someone else in a false position, where is the other man going to be?

Lord Curzon: Who is the other man in this case, me or somebody else? It is more likely to be me.

Mr. Massey: The man whom I mean is not here. Supposing I put him in a false position and then say I want this part of my speech published? It all goes to show how extraordinarily careful we ought to be. I think we cannot be too careful when discussing subjects such as those discussed on Friday, and which have been referred to this morning.

C 62657

Lord Curzon: Are your remarks directed to publishing nothing at all?

Mr. Massey: Personally I should prefer that nothing should be published from a debate such as this. That is my own opinion.

Lord Curzon: I thought a desire had been expressed in the other direction.

Mr. Massey: I know. We have had experience of too much publicity in past years, and I want to avoid it, if possible, this time.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I am all in favour of publishing at present as little as possible. I think we ought to speak very freely here and have it distinctly understood that what we say will not go out.

Lord Curzon: I am only too willing.

Mr. Bruce: As far as I am concerned I agree also. A great deal of what I said this morning I would be only too pleased to allow to go out, particularly as it expressed where Australia stands in the matter, and no doubt Australia would be very interested to have that stated, but I see there is a great deal of difficulty associated with it, because incidentally one refers to other members' views, and it is quite possible that some of the statements one hears are misunderstood. If it is the general feeling that it is undesirable to publish, I quite agree with that.

Lord Curzon: The general conclusion is that we publish nothing. Is that so, Prime Minister?

Mr. Baldwin: I think that seems to be the general view.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Relations of Various Parts of Empire in Foreign Policy.

General Smuts: Before I come to the main discussion of our foreign policy I should like to say a few words on a preliminary point which has been raised here by the Prime Ministers of Canada and Australia. I did not come here prepared to discuss constitutional questions to-day, which I did not consider really part of the specific question of our foreign policy, but they have raised the matter, and I should like just in a word to say this. I think that there is some misunderstanding in Canada about the purport of the statement that was made by the British Prime Minister in 1921. I never took it to refer to every possible question of foreign policy affecting, not only the British Empire, but every part of it. I think that the Prime Minister in 1921, when he made that statement, was referring to questions of our general foreign policy, questions which do not affect any locality, any part of the British Empire in particular, but affect all together in the same way. There is no doubt that we have our local questions in every part of the Empire. The Prime Minister of Canada has said to us that he has a great deal of Canadian foreign policy to conduct with the United States, and I am sure that he will continue to conduct it in the future, as he has in the past, and the British Prime Minister never wanted to detract from his rights in that respect. Similarly, in regard to South Africa, we have been for years now dealing with our neighbours, the Portuguese, the Belgians, and others who are our neighbours and with whom we have continually points of foreign policy arising. The British Government has never concerned itself in those questions unless invited by us, and we have very often invited their assistance in order to see us through. But besides those local questions, we have general questions of foreign policy which concern us all equally. Take the very questions which we have been discussing, the question of reparations, and the Ruhr and similar questions. They arise out of the Treaty, which we all signed. It is not merely a British question. It is a question for the whole Empire, for every Dominion who is signatory to that Treaty, and therefore it is quite right that questions of that character, affecting all of us equally, should be considered by us,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and we should try to see whether it is possible to hammer out some common policy to which all can agree. I think on that we are all agreed. I suppose the Canadian Prime Minister is quite in agreement with the position which I am stating, and there is really no difficulty if the matter is properly understood. In dealing with general questions of foreign policy we want to state our special points of view, so far as the Dominions are concerned; we can all, in that way, make a great contribution, just as the Canadian Prime Minister made a great contribution, to this question of foreign policy, by telling us what the attitude in Canada is, not only in the East, but also in the West, a difference which was not known to me. We can be helpful in other ways. We represent equal States in the British Empire, and we can make a contribution to many of the questions which have to be decided in relation to our foreign policy. Take this very question which we are dealing with. I am sure that we can be helpful. We can be helpful to the British Government in easing the intolerable burden which they are bearing. We can be helpful to them by the attitude we take. We can strengthen their hands in a crisis which is of first-class importance to the whole of the Empire. As far as I am concerned, Prime Minister, I am here as far as possible to help you, to strengthen your hands, and in whatever I am going to say this afternoon, even when I am going to be critical, my whole object is simply to strengthen your hands, to help you, and to see that our Empire pulls its full weight in the situation which is of cardinal importance for the whole world.

Comments on Lord Curzon's Speech.

I do not quite agree with the Prime Minister of Australia when he said that the Foreign Secretary had made no statement of our foreign policy. Naturally, the real discussion is still to follow. I understand that what has happened here is a very full and unreserved and candid statement of the facts and developments in regard to our foreign policy of the last two years. The discussion on that will still take place. I took it, not only that a general discussion was likely to follow, but also that every point mentioned by the Foreign Secretary was really foreign policy. His statement showed what particular line we had taken in regard to every one of those countries and those questions during the last two years, and, therefore, I think he has, with ability which is beyond praise, stated to us the foreign policy of the Empire, such as it has been during the last two years. The policy for the immediate future remains now for discussion, to which I now proceed.

General Observations on Foreign Policy.

Prime Minister, I have listened with the deepest interest to the Foreign Secretary's masterly survey of the whole world-wide field of the Foreign Policy of our Commonwealth. In offering some remarks on that statement and on our Foreign Policy as a whole I wish to emphasise in advance that I do so with much diffidence. The subject is so difficult, my knowledge of the facts is so imperfect, the problems appear baffling and almost insoluble that one really hesitates to offer any opinion at all. Besides, one feels the enormous responsibility of offering any advice in such matters. The present conditions of the world are so difficult to understand, the future appears so dark and unpredictable, any course of action now embarked on may have such far-reaching and unexpected consequences, that the temptation is very strong to leave the whole matter in the able and experienced hands of yourself and Lord Curzon. However, I shall not shirk the duty which is imposed on me of putting my views with all frankness and sincerity before the Conference. And if I sometimes appear somewhat critical I beg you to believe that my object is not to criticise but to be helpful and make constructive suggestions in the task which lies before us all, the task of discovering a wise general direction which our Foreign Policy might pursue in the great crisis of history through which the world is passing.

Question of Withdrawal from European Affairs.

There are several possible courses before us. One is to cut ourselves out from European affairs altogether. The Foreign Secretary has quoted with approval the remark which I made on the first day of our meeting to the effect that we could not disinterest ourselves in the affairs and the fate of Europe. The difficulties and embarrassments of our European policy are, however, so great that there are many thinking people who believe that the only wise course for us is to clear out of Europe and all its entanglements and possible dangers. It is therefore worth while to explore this suggestion for a moment. It is put in two ways. In the first place it is said that our European policy does more harm than good, it irritates France without helping Germany. It simply prolongs the agony and prevents the two parties mainly concerned from coming together and settling their affairs between them. So far from being helpful it is said we are really a disturbing factor, and the wisest thing would be that neither party should rely on us or look to us. It is also said that there is grave risk of our getting further entangled and becoming in the end hopelessly involved, with perhaps the most embarrassing consequences to ourselves. The other and more attractive way of putting the policy is as follows. It is said that European commitments are fatal to our world-wide Commonwealth. None of the great Dominions will accept them or stand for them, and therefore Great Britain as the senior partner should not stand for them either. She has quite enough to do with India, Egypt, and the innumerable problems raised by her Colonies, Protectorates and mandated territories. Our foreign policy should, therefore, become a Commonwealth policy and not a British or European policy, and it is up to the Imperial Conference to see that this matter is put right. This is, of course, the form in which the policy will appeal most widely to Dominion sentiment, and I am sure that in the days to come, days of ever increasing difficulty and embarrassment, this doctrine of a purely Commonwealth policy will become more and more popular not only in the Dominions, but also in this country.

Speaking for myself and on behalf of South Africa I would say that we would most strongly deprecate a European policy likely to involve this country or our Commonwealth in a European war. Our people want peace and will insist on peaceful policies, and it would, indeed, require an overwhelming case to be made out before the South African Parliament is ever likely to sanction active participation in a continental war. The clear and direct interest of South Africa in the matter would have to be shown. Any entangling alliances or commitments likely to lead to war would, therefore, be a most serious matter and require the gravest consideration from the Dominion point of view.

Policy of Isolation Impossible.

But to say this is not to say that there should be a retirement from the continent and that we should abandon Europe to its fate and leave it to work out its own salvation, or what is more likely its own damnation, without any reference to our Commonwealth. Not only our deepest interests but our membership of the Society of Nations make such an attitude impossible. As long as our policy is peace we should bear our weight in that great body of civilisation of which we form members. Our active support and moral backing might make all the difference between a ruined or a restored Europe, and a policy of selfish isolation on our part may in the end recoil on us and our interests with the most disastrous effects. If one lesson more than any other has been stamped indelibly on the conscience of mankind by the Great War, it is the unity, the moral and material unity of our European civilisation, and the lesson was, perhaps, great enough to have been learned at such a cost. Do not let us now go back to wild talk of isolation. As I said in this room two years ago, let our gaze not be too exclusively fixed on Central Europe, let our foreign policy have due and close regard to the interests and view-points of the Dominions also, and of the Empire as a whole. But, subject to that governing consideration, let us by all means avoid a policy of selfish isolation in Europe.

Need for Maintaining Prestige of Empire.

But I would add this. If we cannot stand aside, if we must bear our part, let it be an honourable, a decisive part, a part worthy of this Commonwealth and the position it occupies in the world. Our Commonwealth is much too great to be made subservient to the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62660

policies of other more ambitious States. We can lead, we can march abreast with others, we have not learnt to follow.

This great Commonwealth rests not merely on a basis of common interest and on common ties of blood or language; it is based just as much on profound sentiments of self-respect, and pride, and honour. Its peoples are proud of its prestige and jealous of its honour. It cannot afford to see its policies waived aside or ignored or treated with contempt by others. It cannot afford to speak with an ineffective voice among the nations. Whatever injures its prestige in the world not only lessens our influence abroad, but also helps to that extent to loosen the ties which bind us all together. And I would say this: If we cannot make our voice heard, if our counsels are to be ignored or flouted, if we are to have no real effective voice in the reshaping and reconstruction of post-war Europe, then let us rather retire and not expose ourselves to rebuffs which no community of nations such as ours should or could stand.

I ask on what ground should France have a greater voice in the post-war settlement than this Commonwealth? We raised far more men and produced far larger resources than any of the other Allies, and in the final result our contribution proved the most decisive in winning the war. To-day this country is groaning under far heavier burdens than any of the other Allied countries. Yet its advice in the European settlement is treated with ill-concealed impatience. Or let us compare Belgium with a British Dominion like, say, Australia. Australia came to the rescue of Belgium in the war and raised larger armies and suffered heavier casualties than Belgium; with Canada it broke the Hindenburg line in the end. It incurred a war debt of over £300 million, which it is proudly paying. Belgium's war debt of £300 million to the Allies has been cancelled and she has, in addition, been accorded a priority of £100 million from reparation payments, most of which has already been paid. I speak in full friendship and goodwill for Belgium when I ask on what ground of justice or equity of sacrifice has Belgium an effective share in the settlement or rather unsettlement of the post-war Europe while Australia's voice is not to be heard at all?

In spite of all their disappointment and disillusions and intolerable burdens, the people of this country have remained loyal to their old Allies, and I fear advantage has been taken of that loyalty. Perhaps they have been too complacent, and advantage has been taken of their complacency. I think the time has come for complete frankness and plain speaking and for removal of all possible misunderstanding and ambiguity about our real attitude.

Need for Strong Policy.

I do not put the blame merely on others, and I trust you will forgive me if I point out where I think we have gone wrong. We are by no means free from blame for the present state of affairs. At innumerable conferences since the peace we have virtually played with France. We have seldom been really frank with her and dealt honestly and faithfully with her as a friend. We were always heading her off, appearing to agree but really thwarting her at every turn. France really never knew where she was with us. Hence her growing distrust of us. Hence her finally ignoring us, and going her own way since last January. And we have committed an even more serious mistake. Where we differed from France we have not seriously and resolutely stood up to her. We have thus seriously misled France as to the length she might safely go in enforcing her will and having her own way. France never knew when we were really serious, because we never declared to her in unmistakeable terms how far we were prepared to go, and no farther. We kept talking of the sacredness of the Entente, of the Entente as the pivot of our foreign policy, and she took us at our word and went ahead, knowing that we would follow. To some extent we have followed, where we should have held her back with all the influence and prestige which we have in the world. And there is a risk that our prestige with the other States of Europe may be affected. They see a resolute, determined France, working on a definite plan and having her way from point to point, and a benevolent, well-intentioned, but complacent Great Britain pursuing a colourless policy. They naturally look at the externals of the situation and may come to think it safer to go with France.

C 62661

There is no decline in our power to justify this. In my opinion, we have never, during the last two centuries, been more powerful relatively to other European Powers than we are to-day. And yet our prestige may be affected, and that would be a most serious business in a world where our prestige means the principal guarantee of world peace. We get credit for goodwill and good intentions. But that is not enough if we have to play our proper part in the world. The fact is, we have been undecided and uncertain in our minds, and therefore weak in our policy. We have been halting between two loyalties—loyalty to France and the Entente on the one hand, and loyalty to something far greater and deeper on the other. That has been a mistake, an honourable and pardonable mistake, but a profound mistake nevertheless.

Occupation of Ruhr.

The result has been that our position has remained obscure and even ambiguous. I shall mention two instances of what I mean. In January last, when France announced her intention of occupying the Ruhr, we disapproved of her policy in the strongest terms and dissociated ourselves from it, and yet we managed to convey to her the clear impression that she had our blessing in that terrible enterprise. Could any attitude be weaker or more calculated to be ineffective? But that was not all. We were advised that France's action was a breach of the Peace Treaty. Here was a matter which went to the very root of things. In 1914 we had gone into the war because of the breach of a treaty. The Great War had been fought and untold suffering and loss inflicted on the human race to vindicate the sacredness of public law and the maintenance of international obligations. The peace itself was based on the root idea that in future any breach of the public law or peace of the world should be prevented or avenged by a combination of the nations. Here in January of this year France violates this fundamental principle of the peace and breaks the Peace Treaty in an act which, unless God forbid, may within a generation prove even more devastating to the world than the invasion of Belgium in 1914. Yet out of regard for France we have kept quiet until all the evil has been done and the Ruhr business has sown the dragon's teeth of the future. This may be loyalty to France, but it is not loyalty to Europe or the great ideals for which we fought the Great War.

Question of Reparations.

Let me mention another instance of the obscurity of our position. After the Ruhr business had run its course for some months we were appealed to by the German Government to come forward and assist in a settlement. We publicly advised the Germans to make an offer to France. An offer was ultimately made which we considered a basis for further discussion and negotiation. We said so publicly. We even hinted separate action to enforce our view. France and Belgium flatly refused our proposals, and we have been sitting passive ever since while, as Lord Curzon says, the break-up of Germany has begun and Europe is once more thrown into the melting-pot. All through, with the best intentions and out of loyalty to our friends in the Entente, we have declined to come to grips with the solution, and the situation has developed until it is now almost beyond remedy. We have blamed France, and I believe rightly blamed France, for going too far, but at the same time we are also to blame for letting her go so far in a matter where we had exactly the same say as herself and the power to make our will good. This Conference affords a unique opportunity for a review and reconsideration of our position, and I trust as a result of our deliberations we shall once more be able to resume our proper note and proceed to make a contribution worthy of this great Empire to the cause of European peace and restoration Possible Line of Action.

The moment appears favourable for many reasons. In the first place you, Prime Minister, have smoothed the way for happier personal relations with the French Government. I think you have done a very great service there. Then again an appreciation appears to be dawning in French responsible quarters of the extreme difficulties in future of the Ruhr policy. The moment appears favourable for another and more important reason. The Ruhr occupation and

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62662

the extreme lengths to which the French are evidently prepared to go have at last brought the Germans to a frame of mind which renders a large settlement possible. They have been made to see at last the spectre of Germany's political and economic dissolution, the undoing of all the work of her great statesmen half a century ago, and the complete defeat of all her great national aspirations. Complete national disaster stares her in the face. A Government is at last in power in Germany prepared and anxious to come to an agreement with France. This is a very great advance, and if French policy will now be wise and moderate it can score a success such as has hitherto been impossible after the war. Undoubtedly, up to now, Germany has been pursuing a policy of evasion and irresponsibility. Convinced that the reparation sum was beyond her capacity to pay, she has made no real honest attempt to put her house in order, and as a result her whole financial position is now rapidly crumbling. The Mark has gone and much else threatens to go. This is fully realised, and she is now prepared to come to terms with her creditors. The moment has therefore arrived for action, and, unless it is at once made use of, a great and perhaps final chance of European settlement will disappear. For events are marching at a great pace, the process of break-up and decay is proceeding very fast, and soon there may not be a Germany to negotiate with at all.

Possible Results of Break-up of Germany.

I am afraid that in the dense fog of European relations through which we are passing the public do not realise what the break-up of Germany will mean. Mr. Bonar Law, in his conference with M. Poincaré in Paris last January, said something which, coming from such a high quarter, may seriously have misguided public opinion here. He said that it was arguable that the break-up of Germany was to the advantage of this country, because Germany was our greatest industrial competitor and our greatest industrial danger, or words to that effect. And many will no doubt rush to the conclusion that, if that is so, then France is doing this country a great and signal service by smashing up Germany.

Nothing could be further from the truth, nor, I am sure, did Mr. Bonar Law express his own opinion by the point he raised. The industrial decay of Germany will not mean industrial prosperity or security for Great Britain. Just the reverse is true. That is already being realised in all responsible quarters, such as, for instance, the great Federation of British Industries.

There are two other grave dangers likely to follow from a break-up of Germany which I wish to mention. In the first place, it will upset the political equilibrium of Europe to an extent which may be fatal to its future peace. The relations of the European nations have their roots deep in the past, and the Great War has not torn up those roots, much as it has destroyed the trees or rather the branches. There remains the secular problem of Slav and Teuton. There remains the historic rivalry between this country and France. Do not let us water the roots of ancient hates and ambitions. By destroying Germany we are going to give a new meaning to the Russian menace in future in Eastern Europe. The revival of Russia is a certainty which nothing can prevent. Before a revived Russia grave dangers must arise for the Little Entente and Poland and Finland and all the little Baltic States. Nothing could effectively help them except the counterpoise of an existing Germany, the backing and support of a united Teutonic Power! The break-up of Germany will not only mean political and economic chaos for the present for a large part of the continent, but also the opening of the flood gates of destruction in the not distant future. If we sincerely desire the peace of Europe, let us now stabilise whatever is still left of a European equilibrium. Let us uphold Germany in the day of her weakness and fainting, for the sake of Europe (if you will) even more than for her own sake.

Attitude of France.

I have mentioned the old rivalry between this country and France. Let me put my point quite frankly.

I very much fear that the impotence and dissolution of Germany will tend to revive that rivalry. France has already an unrivalled political and military position on the continent. She may be tempted to attempt too much. Military power is in the last resort nothing unless backed by still greater financial and economic power. That at any rate the Great War taught us, though the lesson does not seem to be generally realised yet. France admittedly has not the financial power to support the great military and political system which she is founding. Her very procedure is destroying the chance of reparation payments by Germany and thus still further emphasising her financial weakness. It is therefore to her own interest as well as to the interest of our future good relations that she should be dissuaded or prevented from proceeding too far with her German policy.

c 62663

Relative Financial Positions of Great Britain and Germany.

So much for the political danger of a break-up of Germany. There is another danger to which we should be very much alive, in this country especially. I refer to the financial danger. This country, by an heroic and colossal effort, and at a cost which it is almost impossible for people outside to realise, has saved her great position as the financial centre of the world. She has worked up the pound sterling until it is now within a few per cents of the dollar or gold. By taxation and deflation, which has been a crushing burden to her industrial system, she has succeeded in saving her financial system which means so much to her. In the execution of this great policy she is paying her huge internal war debt and substantially reducing it. She has in addition honoured her bond and is paying her debt to America, which must in some ways be as difficult a matter as paying her vast internal debt. The keeping up of sterling, the payment of the American loan in addition to the internal debt, constitutes a burden on British industry which forms and must continue to form a fearful handicap to it in its competition with others.

Now compare this position with that of Germany. Through the printing press she has cancelled her internal debt. Her industrial equipment, great as it was before the war, has been vastly improved since. If she were now to escape just reparation payments she would in future be free of all the tax burdens which weigh down industry in this country, and will ultimately be in a position to deliver a knock-out blow. If Germany is not destroyed, she can pay a very large amount of reparations. But what is to happen if she is destroyed, if there is no Government to speak for her as a whole, and we have to start badgering a number of weak and insolvent States into which she has been dissolved? We could no doubt have got substantial sums of reparation out of an intact Austria-Hungary; what have we got or are we ever likely to get out of the fragments into which she has been dissolved? It must be clear that if we want reparations from Germany, if we do not wish to place our industries under an intolerable handicap with future German competition, we must now uphold Germany and prevent her collapse. If she collapses now she will assuredly arise again in future, but it will be at a time when the reparation issue will be dead and gone in the politics of Europe.

Immediate Steps to be Taken.

I have stated the general viewpoints by which I think we should be guided in our foreign policy. I wish now to say a few words on the practical steps which I think should be taken in order to promote a general settlement. The matter is immensely difficult, and it might almost seem an impertinence on my part to venture into so dangerous a field. And yet I am going to make certain suggestions for what they are worth. I know the position is very fluid and shifting and any actual steps to be taken must depend largely on the situation at any given moment. But even so we ought to have a general plan of settlement towards which to work, just as the French have been more or less consistently following a general plan in their German policy. It is on that general plan of settlement that I wish to say a few words.

Let me first refer to what Lord Curzon has called "the next step." The French Government have been informed that, without prejudice to the position taken up in our recent correspondence, we await and expect the next proposals from them, now that passive

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62664

resistance in the Ruhr has ceased. On this I venture to utter a word of warning. The French Government have every possible inducement to involve us in this Ruhr business, and I fear they will now invite us to participate with them in the fruits of their so-called victory in the Ruhr. They will say that after all the event has proved us in the wrong, they have successfully beaten the German resistance in the Ruhr, and they will magnanimously invite us to share in the spoils and to collaborate with them in the exploitation of the resources of the Ruhr. I trust that the offer will not tempt us to depart from the policy which we have followed since the beginning of this year. Whatever profit there may be in the business, the humiliation would be more than we could bear before the world. It will be said that when there was a grave risk to be run we adopted the high ground of principle and abstention, but, when there is a profit to be made, we are not above taking it. Our moral prestige, which stands high in the world to-day, would suffer a grave eclipse.

Besides, I do not think there is any profit to be made in the Ruhr. The restoration of industry there will, under all the circumstances, be very slow. The burden of feeding that great population will be very heavy. I fear wholesale unemployment and starvation in the coming winter. Our hands are clean, let them remain clean in this matter. If we are to have anything to do with the Ruhr at all, it must be as part and parcel of a general settlement in which the Ruhr will form merely an incident.

But indeed it would be impossible for the British Government to participate in the Ruhr business after their declaration that the Ruhr occupation is a breach of the Peace Treaty. I have already pointed out that this raises an issue of fundamental importance, on which no compromise is possible. The scrap of paper brought us into the war, the scrap of paper is the symbol under which the future of Europe is going to be hammered out. Let us not compromise ourselves there.

Proposed Tripartite Agreement.

With regard to a general settlement, I wish to express my opinion that the only satisfactory form of settlement will be a Tripartite arrangement between Great Britain, France and Germany.

Lord Curzon: There is Belgium, of course.

General Smuts: Yes, I am leaving out some other Powers, but an arrangement which includes those three—Great Britain, France and Germany—should be come to, and any separate action or arrangement on our part with Germany should only be resorted to in the very last instance and then only as a means of forcing the hands of France. I dislike a separate agreement between us and Germany, and I fear a separate agreement between France and Germany. I anticipate a repetition of the Angora incident. Our whole object should be to bring about a Tripartite arrangement, and we should exhaust all the resources of our diplomacy and influence to bring it about.

Italy should also be invited to join it, and in due time Russia, as the only other Great Power in Europe, should be made to join it too. In the meantime we should in our relations with Russia, quietly but actively, pave the way towards such a conclusion and make Russia realise that it is our wish to be friends.

Unless Great Britain, France and Germany can be made to work together the future of Europe is hopelessly compromised; its economic recovery will be impossible, and its suffering populations will in the end once more seek a way out of their miseries in a life-and-death struggle.

Support of United States Essential.

In order to bring about such a settlement we should do everything in our power to enlist the sympathy and support of the United States. In fact I fear that without strong backing from the United States it would be most difficult to carry any arrangement with the present French Government. The attempt is worth making and if it succeeds it may carry us far to success in the great cause of European appeasement.

c62665

Reparations: Suggested Solution.

With regard to Reparations, I believe the recent correspondence has brought us within sight of a solution. In fact, there seems to be a fair consensus of opinion that the Reparation scheme should be £2,500 millions, that is, confined to the "A" and "B" bonds under the Peace Treaty, and that a moratorium should be given Germany for its payment. The chief difficulty arises from the claim of M. Poincaré that the balance, consisting of "C" bonds, should only be cancelled if Inter-Allied debts are also cancelled. Italy also makes a strong point of the cancellation of these debts, while the creditor Governments, the United States and Great Britain, have not agreed to cancellation. We are now so near a solution, and the Reparation question is so urgent and so fatal in its effects on European restoration that I would suggest some such compromise as the following, based on the treatment which has been accorded Bulgaria in her Reparation troubles.

The Reparation sum should be provisionally fixed at £2,500 millions and a moratorium should be given Germany before payments should begin. Ten years after such payments have begun, the Great Powers concerned should at a conference decide the question of any additional payment over and above this amount. They may decide either for additional payment or against it or for further postponement of the question. At the same conference in the future, where the United States of America will also attend, the question of Inter-Allied debts will also be considered and decided. The effect of this proposal will be that Inter-Allied debts will not be cancelled but only a long moratorium will be given, which will in any case have to be given as no European Government other than Great Britain will be able to repay their indebtedness for many years to come, if at all.

I feel convinced that the concession suggested will be a fair and wise one for this and the American Governments to make, and I have little doubt that with it we shall be able to settle the Reparation amount provisionally with the German Government, and thereby obviate the necessity of a further enquiry into German capacity to pay which the French Government have already vetoed. If my suggestion is ruled out, we shall have to fall back on the enquiry proposed in our correspondence.

My suggestion has also the advantage of not ousting the Reparation Commission and it leaves a settlement in the hands of the Governments concerned in accordance with the provisions of the Peace Treaty.

Steps to be taken by Germany.

As part of the settlement Germany should undertake to reform and stabilise her currency, to balance her budget, and to close her printing press, and should submit to Allied and American supervision of her financial administration for the purpose. In order to assist Germany to re-establish her currency and credit, the Allies and America will support her generally on the lines on which Austria has been helped, although I am informed that a guarantee of her bonds may not be actually necessary.

Inter-Allied Conference and Appeal to United States.

The scheme here proposed would involve the calling forthwith of a conference of the Powers represented on the Reparation Commission. To this conference the United States Government should also be invited. If necessary, a solemn appeal should be made to her, not only by the British Government, but by this conference representing the whole Empire. The desperate position of Europe should be laid bare to her, and her moral responsibility should be emphasised on the grounds of the glorious and decisive part she took, not only in the Great War but also in the shaping of the Peace settlement. Her collaboration in such a conference and her active participation in the Reparation Commission may have a decisive effect.

Position if France will not attend Conference.

Should the French Government decline to come to such a conference or refuse to accept any reasonable settlement on the above or similar lines, a very serious situation for Europe and for

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62666

this country will undoubtedly arise. In that case the whole character of our foreign policy may be affected, the new situation may have to be laid very frankly before the people of this country; and the battered Entente will finally go and this Government may have to resort in real earnest to that separate action which has been hinted. My conviction is that our position morally and materially will be a very strong one. In Cologne we hold the key to the Ruhr position, and, if we are determined to assert ourselves and resolutely use our position there for the purpose of saving Europe from chaos, France will be prepared to talk to us once more.

I do not think we should raise the question of the Ruhr or of security with France at this suggested conference. One problem at a time. If we could settle the Reparation question now, we should be thankful and content to leave the thornier question of security to be raised thereafter.

Settlement of Ruhr Question.

But after the Reparation question has been disposed of the Ruhr problem will have to be dealt with in real earnest. You will not get Reparations as long as the French are in the Ruhr. But the occupation of the Ruhr is far more than a Reparation question. Unless that illegal act is undone, Europe will be undone. There is not only the penknife in the works of the watch but the poison in the soul of Europe. The Ruhr has been rapidly followed by Corfu. And so it will go on unless the reign of law and international justice is once more re-established among the nations.

I confess that personally I go much further. When the Peace Treaty was being drafted at Paris I looked upon the occupation clauses as the one really fatal blot on the document. They put a temptation before France which was sure to prove too much for her. And so they have proved. First it was the illegal seizure of Frankfort and other places; then came the seizure of Düsseldorf, Duisburg and Ruhrort, in which most unfortunately we compromised ourselves; finally, came the invasion of the Ruhr. French occupation of German territory is more likely to prove the cause of the next great world war than any other matter I can think of. And the greatest service we could render to the cause of European peace in our day would be the substitution of some other system for these fatal occupations.

Security for France.

France must have her security in some other, more innocent, more effective form.

It is somewhat difficult to raise the matter with France because she is extremely sensitive and secretive on it.

Lord Curzon: That raises the question of the Treaty, and that is a serious thing.

General Smuts: It is difficult to raise it because whenever during the last two or three years the matter has been mentioned the French representatives have always waived it aside. In the recent correspondence M. Poincaré has politely bowed us out. M. Poincaré does not want to discuss French security for the present. The master of many legions is not afraid. I am afraid. I am horribly afraid, not only for France, but also for Europe. And the sooner this matter can be dealt with, the better for the future peace of Europe.

Suggested Neutralisation of part of Western Germany.

The suggestion which appeals most to me is that, in exchange for the occupation of the Rhineland and the Ruhr, a substantial part of Western Germany shall be neutralised under effective international supervision. If France has a population of 40,000,000 and Germany of 60,000,000, the position between them should be equalised by the perpetual neutralisation of an area containing 20,000,000 of Germans. The neutralised area to be an integral part of Germany under German administration, but to have neither military training nor fortification nor munition factories of any kind whatsoever. This will probably be agreed to by the German Government and will give France much more effective security than the present dangerous occupations, which are simply hate factories for the two neighbouring peoples. I think the matter is well worth careful exploration, and, even if it does not appeal to France at once, it may do so as soon as circumstances have somewhat changed.

C 62667

Peace must be based on Law and Justice.

Let me in conclusion add this one word more. In the Reparation and the Ruhr problem is involved the question which goes to the root of the whole thing; shall we have peace based upon law and justice? Shall we have a peace which will give the world an opportunity to look forward to the future with hope and the determination to repair damage done to its present civilisation; or shall we have peace based on fear and force and the rule of the strong? Infinite sacrifices have been made to establish the ideal of a peace between the nations based on justice and the faithful observance of international law and treaty obligations. For that ideal the young men fought and died in their millions. And the root question for us, on whom the responsibility rests to-day, is whether that sacrifice shall be a total loss, or whether with our earnest backing it shall yet be saved for the future. Great is the responsibility especially upon this Empire, which made the keeping of their word by the Nations the fundamental issue of the Great War. I feel sure we shall do our best to be faithful to that great responsibility.

STATEMENT BY THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, IRISH FREE STATE.

Mr. O'Higgins: Prime Minister, I feel some difficulty in speaking on this matter of Lord Curzon's statement, and I intend to speak very briefly indeed.

Position of Irish Free State as regards Foreign Policy.

It scarcely needs to be stressed that the position of Ireland is not exactly the position of other countries represented here. The relations between Ireland and England have not been the same and have not been as happy. A Treaty of Peace has been concluded between the two countries, and it is hoped here, as in Ireland, and in Ireland as here, that there has been opened up a chapter of goodwill and peace and growing friendship between the two countries. But, dealing with conditions as they stand, it is to be remembered, for one thing, that the European situation to-day arises very much from the Versailles Treaty, and we were not at Versailles.

Neither have we any mandated territory arising out of the settlement arrived at at Versailles.

On the question of this Conference generally, and on the constitutional points raised by the Prime Ministers of Canada and Australia, I have only this to say, that we have not hitherto regarded ourselves as particularly concerned with the matter of British foreign policy. It is true that despatches and occasionally telegrams have been sent, but I would be ashamed to say how little of the time of the Executive Council of the Free State has been given to the consideration of these. They were forwarded to a particular Minister of the Government and I think that in reading them that Minister considered merely the extent to which we were concerned or affected by the matters dealt with in the despatch. We have not regarded ourselves, and we do not regard ourselves, as having any special mandate from our people in the matter of the foreign policy of Britain. We do not consider that we have responsibility to them for that. I think that that point needs to be stressed, and also the point that no British Minister can be supposed to have any particular responsibility to our people for the conduct of their foreign policy. Sometimes, when those despatches were sent along, I wondered what exactly would be the effect if, for instance, we found ourselves in emphatic disagreement with a particular line of British foreign policy. We at all times appreciated the courtesy of the sending of those despatches, and I listened with great interest to Lord Curzon's statement on foreign policy here the other day. It was most interesting and most illuminating, but I could not agree that either the sending of the despatches or the making of the statement imposes upon our country a kind of "post factum" responsibility. This would be pretty much the position as outlined by Mr. Mackenzie King, that we believe in democracy, we believe in representative government, and we recognise that we have not a mandate from our people to concern ourselves with the foreign

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

policy of Britain. Unlike England, we have a written constitution. It may be an advantage or it may be a disadvantage. Occasionally we find it a disadvantage, but the effect of that constitution is that all authority in Ireland, legislative, executive, and judicial, is derived from the people, and we who for the time being form an Executive Council—President Cosgrave and myself and the others—have not taken the view that our people wish us to concern ourselves particularly with the foreign policy as carried out by the British Foreign Office.

Preoccupation of Irish Free State with other Problems.

Now, there were many matters dealt with in the statement the other day. The position in Afghanistan was one of these. I can scarcely conceive it possible that the position in Afghanistan was a matter of intense interest, let us say, to the Government of Newfoundland, and I can scarcely conceive it as possible that the Government of Newfoundland have given less consideration to that matter than we have. We have been preoccupied with our domestic problems and we think that we are doing the best thing for the world and for the Commonwealth in concentrating on those, in directing our efforts to restoring order and decency of life there, in developing the resouces of the country, and, for the present at any rate, in taking up that attitude which General Smuts has described as one of selfish isolation. If I were asked, frankly, what is the view in Ireland, what is the public opinion of Ireland on this matter of the Ruhr, I could not say. I have heard both views outlined and explained eloquently and emphatically by people in Dublin, but I do not know that one particular view predominates or has crystallised and, certainly, we of the Executive Council have not felt ourselves compelled to discuss the matter seriously or to arrive at any very definite or any very emphatic view. That, quite frankly, is the position of Ireland at the moment on the question of foreign policy. In so far as we have foreign relations at the moment, they arise largely from the fact that our race, to a very large extent, is a mother race, that our people are far-flung, and our external relations would, for the most part, be with the countries whose representatives sit here, and would arise from the fact that so many of our people reside in those countries—with the countries whose representatives sit here and with one other, with America..

Effect of Irish Settlement on United States.

We noted the statement in Lord Curzon's address that anti-British feeling in America was less intense by reason of the Irish settlement. We noted that with satisfaction. In greater or less degree according as circumstances varied in Ireland, there has always been in America amongst the Irish and the Irish-Americans a feeling of distrust and suspicion of Britain, and, much as you and I might deplore that, we have to advert to the relations that have existed back through the ages between the two countries, and we have to advert to the circumstances in which so many of these people or their parents or, mayhap, their grandparents, left their native land, carrying with them these seeds of inflammation and distrust to the new country in which they found their home. Now, we are glad that that is lessened, we are glad that that is to a great extent neutralised and cancelled by this new relationship so recently brought about. It is a feeling that, by the nature of the case, we can do more to lessen than even the British themselves, and we who are standing over this treaty that has been signed between the two countries, standing over it because we believe that it contains the seeds of future good for both countries, will do all in our power to lessen any inflammation, any distrust, any suspicion, that there has been of Britain wherever we have influence. We have stood over that treaty and stood over it in the face of very great difficulty among our own people and in the face of very painful tasks at home, because we believe that the five Englishmen who set their hand to that treaty set their hand to as big a thing as it was politically possible for them to carry. What we can do to allay ill-feeling against England in America we have done and we will continue to do, but people must not fall into the mistake of simply regarding the whole position as if the relation between our country and England had been the same or had been as happy as the relation between England and other countries that are represented here. They have been totally different. We can only hope that the settlement that has been arrived at will lead to very much better relations than have existed in the past.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Appreciation of Lord Curzon's Speech.

Mr. Warren: Prime Minister, it would almost be presumption on my part, in the position I occupy, and with the limited experience I have had, to criticise in any way what has taken place here during the last two Sessions, but perhaps the views of an onlooker, more or less, may not perhaps be altogether out of place. I want, first of all, to associate myself with what has already been said by my colleagues from overseas in regard to the very lucid and enlightening statement as to our position in world politics given by Lord Curzon.

Position of Newfoundland.

Newfoundland has no entanglements. Years ago, we figured in, I think, nearly every treaty that was made between Great Britain and France, and it always seemed to me that if they really wanted to arrive at a settlement, and something was required to make up the balance, Newfoundland was handed in, either from the one side or the other. All that is over. We have settled down to peace and harmony, with the exception of some treaty rights which the United States have on our shores. We no longer consider ourselves as being very much involved in world politics. I was going to say, also, that we have no frontier, but I would be wrong if I said that; we have an unexpected frontier in Labrador, about which my friend Sir Lomer Gouin and I propose to have some words later on. The territory there is about the size of Germany and Austria-Hungary put together, and if we cannot settle the matter between ourselves we are going to refer it, not to the League of Nations, but to the Privy Council, to say where the frontier should be.

Proposed Treaty with United States.

Of what Lord Curzon said, I am only interested in two things. One of them will come up for discussion later on; that is the question of the three-mile or twelve-mile limit in the territorial waters of the United States. Anything that I have to say about that I will reserve until the matter comes up.

Ruhr.

We are also interested in the Ruhr. We export a large amount of iron ore to the Ruhr, and the recent occupation there has cut our export down from where it ought to be—1½ million tons a year—to about 150 thousand tons, the last figures I saw. I am personally quite satisfied to leave our interests in the hands of the present Foreign Minister.

Relations of Various Parts of Empire in Foreign Policy.

Before I finish, I would like to mention one thing, because it seems to me to be rather important. I listened with a great deal of interest to what Mr. Bruce had to say this morning with regard to this matter. Mr. Bruce said that he thought we ought to formulate a policy. That more or less brings up the functions of this Conference, and, while I personally would hesitate very very much even to take part in formulating a policy, I am rather concerned as to what that means. I take it that this is purely a Conference of overseas Prime Ministers, and is not in any way a War Cabinet or an Empire Cabinet, or that we have any authority really from those who sent us here to take upon ourselves the responsibilities of formulating a policy. I took it that when Lord Curzon addressed us on Friday he was merely—to use an expression that we have on our side of the world—"putting us wise" as to the present condition of affairs all over the world; and I, for one, would like to say that I never expected him to formulate a policy in that speech—in fact, I was very much struck with something he said as to the formulation of a policy, which has really been borne out by General Smuts here this afternoon. It is no good formulating a policy unless you can enforce it, and I think, from my experience in the last three or four years, that the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62670

whole Empire is so war-weary that it is hardly worth while formulating a policy you will not be really able to carry out. General Smuts, this afternoon, asked on what grounds the French were taking such a prominent position in post-war policy. Well, I think General Smuts answered that question in an earlier portion of his speech, in which he said, as far as South Africa was concerned, "they wanted peace," and from his words I gathered they want, not only peace, but peace with a capital "P." My friend, Mr. O'Higgins, asks me, or suggests, or wants to know, what interest Newfoundland should have in Afghanistan. To be perfectly frank, I am not giving away any secret when I say we have not any direct interest, but indirectly we have as much interest in Afghanistan as we have in Ireland or in Canada. If our policy in Afghanistan were to be interfered with, it might not affect me as a Newfoundlander, but as a Britisher it would, and I would feel it my duty to go to the help of Afghanistan, if it required my help, just in the same way as I should expect the citizens of the Indian Empire to help Newfoundland, if anyone came to interfere with us. I have nothing more to say, Mr. Prime Minister.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Lord Peel: Prime Minister, I do not wish, speaking for the Indian Delegation, to comment generally on the very broad questions which have been raised by the Prime Ministers of the Dominions, but I wish to comment on one or two of the observations in Lord Curzon's statement, and to deal with them from the purely Indian point of view. The two points on which I wish to say a word are what I may call the Bolshevik menace as regards India, and a word upon the Turkish Treaty.

Bolshevist Menace in India and Afghanistan.

Now, as I think Lord Curzon said, the Bolshevists must "bolshevise," that is the essence of their existence and their life, and we know that the Third International is only another aspect of the Soviet Government itself. I realise very thoroughly, from the Indian point of view, that the diplomatic success to which Lord Curzon has alluded, our diplomatic success over the Soviet Government, had an exceedingly wholesome effect upon Soviet propaganda connected with India. It had, I might say, also a very useful effect upon that country in which Mr. Warren and Mr. O'Higgins take no interest whatever, i.e., Afghanistan. They regarded us in a far more important light when they felt that Russia, who had been attempting such active propaganda in Afghanistan, humbled itself so completely and thoroughly before the power of Great Britain. Now the attack, or the Bolshevist menace of propaganda in India, takes two forms and runs through two channels. It is first of all a propaganda carried on in India itself, through Indian revolutionaries, and by the methods of Indian revolutionaries, or by persons who are not Indians, coming from different parts of Europe subsidised by the authorities of the Third International. The second way in which it acts is by creating difficulties in those countries which adjoin India. I wish to say a very brief word on both those points. Of course, in 1919, during the time we were engaged in the War with Afghanistan, the Soviet Government had a splendid opportunity of posing as the great friend of Afghanistan, and it made an arrangement and treaties with Afghanistan of that ostentatiously self-denying type, which are generally made by the Soviet Government in their first relations with countries which they would like to influence or possibly to absorb. Well then, unfortunately for Russia, its actions in Bokhara and the countries so closely adjoining Afghanistan threw rather a different colour upon the altruistic aspirations of the Soviet Government in Afghanistan, and then the pendulum swung very much our way. Now I am not going in detail into this question, but I will mention two points. One is this. Whatever propaganda, whether in money or influence, is carried on is dealt with through the hands of the Afghans themselves. In fact, you may say the Emir regulates the ebb and flow of Soviet propaganda, whether it goes by way of influence or of money. He has a pretty good control over it, and not only in order to assist his relations with the Government of India, because he himself has learned by experience the dangerous effect that propaganda of this kind may have upon his own citizens. But I certainly could add this, I think, that of course we are anxious to be, and desire to be, on the very best terms with the Government of Afghanistan. We are trying to settle our difficulties there. We are trying to place our arrangements on a solid basis of good faith and sincerity, but our work would be immensely assisted, very much assisted, if all this Soviet intrigue in Afghanistan were entirely cut away.

C 62671

Then as regards the propaganda in India itself, it is carried on, of course, through agents subsidised by the Soviet Government, who by various ways, by the traditional ways in which India has been invaded in the past, seek to get a footing, and also by a great deal of literature, some of which is printed in Hamburg. Newspapers and so on containing these various Soviet propositions are carried into India. I presume that the Soviet Government itself or the Third International thought that during the years 1921 and the beginning of 1922 some success had been obtained, because in 1922 they voted a large sum of money for the further carrying on of the Indian propaganda. Fortunately, there are two sets of people, both rivals, who are anxious to do the work in India. They vied with each other, and by their rivalry each often neutralised much of the work which the other has done. I understand the Third International is very impartial and throws its weight to the side of the one who will do the work the better. The Government of India has taken measures, partly by preventing the literature coming into India and partly by arresting the emissaries, but some small cells have been formed in the big towns, in Bombay and in Lahore. Latterly the Soviet Government have attempted to introduce their propaganda and their newspapers into India by influencing Indian sailors on vessels which touch at Indian ports.

Like other disturbers of the peace, the Soviet Government is always ready to cast its line on to waters that are already troubled. Much unrest has been caused in the Punjab through the activities of the Akalis, a Puritan reforming sect of the Sikhs. There again Soviet influence has been active in trying to turn what was originally no doubt a religious movement into more worldly political paths, and one of the notorious Sikh revolutionaries was largely subsidised by the Soviet Government. I should add, of course, that this propaganda, and more especially among the Moslems both in the East and in India, has taken a nationalist and revolutionary, rather than an economic, colour. The propagandists do not so much preach the pure Communistic doctrines which they were taught in Russia, and this is of some relief to many of the preachers who probably have ceased entirely to believe in the doctrines of Communism. So much for what I may call the Bolshevist menace. I do not think it has gone very far at present in India, but it is a thing which always has to be watched, and the Government of India was anxious that I should give some indication of the methods and the extent to which it has already proceeded.

Turkish Treaty.

The only other point I wish to mention is the effect of the Turkish Treaty in India. Of course, the settlement with Turkey has had an admirable soothing and calming effect upon the large Moslem population in India. There has been some criticism here, and in other places, no doubt, of the details of that Treaty, but the details of that Treaty are not closely scanned by the Moslems in India. They are satisfied that the Treaty has been made and that good relations have been restored between this country and an important Moslem Power, and that Turkey, free from what they would call the Treaty of Sèvres, has once more taken its place as an independent sovereign Power. This settlement has done very much to relieve one of the many anxieties of the Government of India.

STATEMENT BY THE MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR.

Maharajah of Alwar: Prime Minister, no doubt my colleagues must be somewhat surprised at my attempting to speak on this gigantic subject of foreign policy and foreign relations of the British Empire, but I am not surprised at their being surprised as I feel somewhat surprised myself at finding myself speaking on this proposition. I will only say a very few words.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62672

Appreciation of Lord Curzon's Speech.

In the first place, I should like to add my tribute to the numerous compliments already paid to Lord Curzon for the very lucid and interesting statement given to us, explaining the policy of the European events and the part that the British Empire is playing in them. I am speaking here to-day as the representative of one-third of India, where we may perhaps not hold exactly the same ideas on such problems as are held here, but which on that account are no less important. Being in touch with people of my own State as well as of my countrymen, I think I may claim to speak on certain aspects. The part that the British Empire has played in not only European politics but world politics has been discussed to-day by the various Dominion Prime Ministers and representatives, and the part that the British Empire has to play has, after all our meetings, I am sure, left no doubt in any one's mind how united it is likely to be. The British Empire as a whole, I feel sure, expects that the British Government may take such action as will achieve peace as the fruitful result of that gigantic enterprise—war. When we boil all the problems down that face us to-day, I try to see what is the outstanding question that really prevents us from achieving as rapidly as we should like to do those fruits.

European Situation.

Without making any further ado, it seems to me that the whole question, looked at from the material political point of view, rests primarily on the Ruhr. When war did take place and when the British Empire did put its whole might into it, I must say I should like to have seen that the British and the Allied forces had marched into Berlin, in the words of Lord Curzon, we should like to have seen that the Gurkhas had camped in Potsdam and the Bengal Lancers had marched into Berlin. Of course, that was a compliment to India, but I take it really to mean that Lord Curzon wanted to see the Allied forces march right into the enemy capital. It would no doubt have been a great achievement for the British Empire as well as for the Allies, but the Armistice was signed in the meantime and it became somewhat prolonged. In the case of Turkey, it lasted even for some years. If by providential dispensation and by our effort we should have succeeded in what I have said, we should then have been able to make the enemy acknowledge their defeat without any doubt in their own minds; we should then have been able to dictate terms to them, and in dictating these we could then have afforded to be generous. Those terms would then have to-day been fulfilled. I am speaking, I admit, in ignorance of the events in this and other countries that might have prevented this event taking place, but I only speak from the knowledge available from the newspapers. When the armistice lasted so long, it no doubt gave the enemy countries an opportunity to devise means and seek means to find out how they could evade at least some of their responsibilities, with the result that in some cases the final settlement was prolonged for several months; and in one case even for a number of years. I believe that France to some extent realised this position, and therefore penetrated into the Ruhr in order that they might get Germany to acknowledge defeat unconditionally. From this point of view I must admit—and I am talking quite frankly and candidly—I should like to have seen the British Government take part in the same enterprise, because then they could have controlled France, and they could have prevented Germany from being shattered and from being screwed down for the benefit of France alone. As General Smuts has very ably said in his speech, Germany, who were our enemies, are nevertheless important from the point of view of trade, and in order to keep Europe in a prosperous condition. Purely from that point of view, I think that if the British Government had taken the same action as France, they could have controlled France in what she was doing, and they might have been able to control Germany from heading to its downfall, which is bound to affect the whole of Europe.

Future Policy.

But now all that is past history. The question remains: What is to be done in the future? It would indeed be presumptuous on my part to dictate any particular policy or any particular action, but I must admit I agree with the able speech delivered by Mr. Bruce, the Prime Minister of Australia, wherein he said that it was imperative that the Empire should know, and the Dominions and India should know, what is to be the definite policy of the Imperial Government, so that we may all be certain of what line of action is likely to be followed, and so that we can prepare for it with every goodwill and with wholeheartedness. I quite realise—having had some experience in my own sphere in ruling my State—how difficult it is to prejudge events and to form policies in advance. Nevertheless, in the present case, as Mr. Bruce said, a definite firm policy is very necessary to be formulated.

C62673

I must express my regret at having occupied your time in expressing my views, but as I have come here in a Conference, the principal object of which, I understand, is to confer and interchange ideas and views. whatever mine are, I have given with the best intentions, because I am as anxious as anyone else is to see the British Empire achieve peace, progress and prosperity as quickly as possible, and thus to help the star of human progress to shine with even greater vigour and greater radiance than it has done in the past.

STATEMENT BY SIR TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU.

Sir Tej Sapru: I do not propose to make a long speech, because I hesitate to rush in where more experienced, more trained and wiser statesmen of the Empire are afraid to discuss this important question.

Position of India.

Unfortunately, or fortunately, the position now in India is that she cannot occupy the position of isolation which she might have done before the war. She has now been drawn into the vortex or world politics, she is an integral part of the British Empire, and has taken a share in the war—a very humble share, I admit. Indirectly, if not directly, she feels interested in the settlement of these questions. India is not in a position to give you any advice or to formulate for you any foreign policy, for the very simple reason that India cannot formulate her own policy. I will only tell you one thing, and that is that there is not a single movement in Europe or England or any part of the British Empire which is not watched by my countrymen, which is not studied from day to day carefully, and you would be greatly mistaken if you were to think that that had not somehow or other its effect on the masses, though they might not be able fully to understand those matters.

Appreciation of Lord Curzon's Speech.

I do not propose to express any opinion upon your foreign policy. I will only say that I have listened with unbounded admiration to the great speech of Lord Curzon, and I feel that I have realised something by coming over to the Conference which I never realised in India when Lord Curzon was Viceroy. I never had the privilege of hearing him before, but I have had the privilege of hearing him now.

India's Interest in European Settlement.

I think, however, that it is my duty to interpret to you the political mind of India in regard to your own policy, and I think you ought to know it. It is very often said that Indians cannot settle their own quarrels. Indians reply to you by saying: "You set your house in order." That is their criticism. It is affecting your prestige in India. It is affecting the prestige of Europe and its civilisation; I may tell you that I received a letter which I read only during the recess in which a very intelligent Indian politician writes to me—I can give you almost the words—"This material civilisation of Europe is going to lead the world to absolute ruin." All that may be hyperbolic language, but that is the state of the Indian feeling. We say that you have not been able to settle your differences, and you have no right to blame us for not settling our differences. India is, however, very much interested in the settlement of your differences. Therefore, I think, that, although we have no right to advise you, we are very much interested in the settlement which will really restore peace to the world. There is only one more remark that I will make so far as this Ruhr question is

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62674

concerned. It is being followed with the greatest possible interest in India, and the one comment that is being made is that the whole action of France in its relation to Germany has been extremely high-handed, and that it is time that England did assert herself to set Germany on her legs. It is not that India has any particular weakness for Germany now, but she views these questions not merely from a political point of view, but also from an ethical point of view. That may be the bane of my countrymen, but there it is, and they feel that it is time England did something really to settle the question because India is vitally interested in the settlement of this question for more reasons than one, for commercial reasons and for other reasons. I do not wish, therefore, to say anything more in regard to your foreign policy; only I wish you to bear in mind that your prestige in Eastern countries is at stake.

Bolshevist Propaganda.

I will only add a few more remarks in regard to the question of Bolshevism to which Lord Peel has referred. I have had, if I may say so with all modesty, exceptional opportunities of following the political situation vis-à-vis Bolshevism in India as a member of the Government of India—a position I held until ten months ago. I had access to confidential documents and I used to study them carefully. As a private politician, directly in touch with my countrymen, I know the trend of political thought and the direction in which the political mind is running. I do not for a moment deny that there are agencies of the character to which reference has been made by Lord Peel, but there is one thing I would ask you to bear in mind. You hear a good deal about political unrest in India. I will be frank with you. You hear a great deal of disloyalty and political agitation in India, but you must make a distinction between that kind of unrest and Bolshevism. Do not mix up the two. They are absolutely different. So far as political unrest and political agitation relate to domestic matters they are of an entirely different character from Bolshevism. I will only ask you to bear in mind one important fact in regard to India and that is as to what chance Bolshevism has of success in India. Assuming that the Soviet Government succeeded in pushing its propaganda about Bolshevism either through Afghanistan or some other source, what chance has Bolshevism in India? You may have trouble in India but I do not think that Bolshevism has the slighest possible chance of success in India and I will tell you the reason why. The reason is to be found in our mentality, in our history, in our traditions and in our law. We may have our grievances against the British Government. We have grievances and I wish to tell you frankly that our ambitions are neither few nor small, and that we are keenly looking forward to the day when India will occupy the same position as those other countries whose Prime Ministers are on this side of the table. The institution of property is a very sacred institution and we are a country of big landlords and small landlords, and if the Soviet Government, if the Communists, or the Bolshevists, expect that we are going to allow our institution of property which has come down to us through thousands of years, and which is a living institution and part and parcel of our law, to be destroyed, they are deluding themselves. They may create riots or troubles of similar kind, but, so far as Communism as understood in Russia is concerned, I do not think that there is any chance of success. At the same time I do not wish you to entertain a false sense of security. There is every need for being alive to the danger and for taking active steps to prevent the poison spreading, and we must be forearmed. The only thing I would now say is that there is no country which required more or greater development of publicity or propaganda on sounder lines than India does. When I was a member of the Government I was a strong supporter of publicity and propaganda. I do not think that I succeeded entirely. I think, if I may say so in the presence of Lord Peel, that the value of it has to be recognised here in Whitehall, and you can undo a great deal of mischief and prevent a great deal of Bolshevism spreading in India if you develop propaganda and your publicity on the right lines and let the people know really what the dangers of Bolshevism are. That is the only way in which you can proceed in regard to that matter.

C 62675

Afghanistan.

I do not think that I should be justified in taking more of your time. I will only venture to make one observation in regard to Afghanistan, in which our colleagues from Ireland and Newfoundland said they were not very much interested directly. We are more interested in Afghanistan possibly than Australia and New Zealand are interested in Japan. Afghanistan is very much nearer to us than Japan is to Australia. It is only about five hours by motor car from us. We have signed a Treaty. I know a great deal about that Treaty because I was a member of the Government at the time it was settled, the Treaty passed through my hands and I had to advise the Government of India on its legal aspects. For the time being we are I hope safe, but the Treaty of friendship has to be revised in three years and in Afghanistan things change far more rapidly and friendship has not that element of stability which you and I would like to have. There has not been much stability on our side either in regard to our Afghanistan policy. It means a great deal to us. It has a great effect on our internal progress and development and on our Budget, and although the conference itself may not be prepared to give any advice or to formulate any policy in regard to Afghanistan I do make an earnest appeal to His Majesty's Government that a stable and careful policy in regard to Afghanistan should be adopted, because unless you do so we shall never have real peace on our border and, what is more to my mind, we cannot realise the ambitions we have in regard to our domestic development.

Main Questions before Conference.

Lord Curzon: I only want to say one word before we adjourn at this stage the Foreign Office discussion. Broadly speaking to-day two aspects of the case have been touched upon. The first is the general question of the control of the Dominions over the foreign policy of the Empire, and the means, if any, and machinery to be adopted for improving it. That is, as General Smuts pointed out, not the question we came here to discuss this morning, and I hope we shall resume the discussion upon it at a future date.

The second question was a résumé of the general position throughout the world and the foreign policy adopted by this country in regard to it. That is the question which I think was really the topic set down for discussion. Mr. Bruce seemed to think that I had not given sufficient indications of the policy of the British Government in all these respects. Now, if he will allow me to say so, Mr. Bruce enjoyed the extraordinary advantage, owing to the special interposition of Providence, of not hearing my remarks, and perhaps if he reads what I said when it goes into print he will find I am not really open to that charge. Anyhow I had two defenders who sprang to my rescue to-day. One was General Smuts, who found that on the whole I had given or attempted to give some indication of policy; the other, Mr. Warren, who said it was not my business to give it at all. The truth lies midway between the two extremes. My duty was twofold. Firstly, to give a general account of the situation and, secondly, to give some indications of policy. I did not pursue the latter aspect of my duty to the final stage, because I thought it only respectful to this Conference to wait and hear what you had to say, and because the discussion will be resumed at a later date when I have had the opportunity in the Foreign Office of considering very carefully the extremely useful and valuable suggestions which have been made by many speakers, notably by General Smuts to-day. Definite propositions have been put before us. They will require most careful examination at the hands of the Foreign Office, and in a few days time, Prime Minister, when the discussion is resumed I hope to be in a position to give my opinion upon them. We can then have a resumed discussion upon foreign affairs, and can arrive at the results which everyone really desires.

FUTURE ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. Baldwin: The Economic Conference will meet to-morrow and Wednesday. We propose a meeting of this Conference on Thursday morning to hear a statement from Lord Robert Cecil on the work of the League of Nations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

062676

PRESS COMMUNIQUE.

That concludes the business. I would only say in the communiqué for the Press, after the names of those who addressed the conference, the conference came to the unanimous decision that the whole of the proceedings should be treated as absolutely confidential. The words "for the time being" had been inserted, but I think it wise to cut them out because people may expect immediate publication.

(The proceedings then terminated.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.,
October 8, 1923.

0

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

062677

SECRET.

E. 6th Meeting (1923). 45

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE SIXTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1923, AT 11 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. LORD ROBERT CECIL, K.C., M.P., Lord Privy Seal.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Professor JOHN MACNEILL, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Mr. R. G. VANSITTART, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B., (Secretary.)
Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir Robert R. GARRAN, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

Newfoundland.
Mr. W. G. CAREW.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.
Mr. P. McGILLIGAN.

India.
Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

WELCOME TO PROFESSOR MacNEILL.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we begin I should like to say a word of welcome on behalf of the Conference to Professor MacNeill, one of the Irish Delegates, who has not been able to be with us before. We are very glad to see him here.

JAPANESE REPLY TO MESSAGE FROM CONFERENCE.

I should now like to read a Note which we have received from the Japanese Embassy in answer to the message of sympathy we sent from the Conference on our first day. It is as follows:—

"Under instructions from the Japanese Premier, I have the honour to request your Lordship to convey to the Right Honourable Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister, and his eminent colleagues on the Imperial Conference, the Japanese Premier's sincere thanks for the touching message of sympathy in the calamity which has befallen Japan. Count Yamamoto desires to assure Mr. Baldwin that the manifestation of cordial sentiment, coming as it did so promptly from the representative statesmen of the British Empire, the old and never failing ally of Japan, has deeply moved the Japanese nation in their great distress and will give them encouragement and reassurance in taking up the tremendous task of reconstruction.

"I have, &c.
(Signed) "HAYASHI."

Baron Hayashi is the Japanese Ambassador.

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS REGARDING ITALIAN-GREEK CRISIS, AUGUST–SEPTEMBER, 1923.

Lord Curzon: Last week, when I spoke upon foreign affairs, the Conference will remember that I postponed dealing with the question of the recent incidents at Corfu because I thought it would be better to deal with them en masse with Lord Robert Cecil here, who would explain that part of the situation which arose in connection with the sittings of the League of Nations at Geneva. It seems to me that it is important that the Ministers here assembled should have some knowledge of what passed, because of the interesting light that it throws, firstly, upon the post-war mentality and moral standards of Europe; secondly, upon the character and personality of the Italian Dictator, Signor Mussolini, about whom I said a good deal last week; and thirdly, upon the procedure and authority of the League of Nations. I will confine what I have to say to the political history and aspect of the case, leaving Lord Robert Cecil to deal with what passed at Geneva when the matter came into the hands of the League of Nations.

Janina Murders.

The boundary between the small new State of Albania and Greece was being determined by an International Commission appointed under the auspices of the Ambassadors' Conference of Paris, whose duty it is to see to the fulfilment of the terms of the Peace Treaties. There were British, French, Italian and Greek members of this Frontier Commission. They were engaged in tracing the line in difficult and mountainous country. The Head of the Italian branch of the Commission was General Tellini, a man, I believe, of considerable military standing and attainments, but who had, by his attitude, incurred the suspicion, if not the hostility, of both the Greek and Albanian peoples. At nine o'clock in the morning of the 27th August, the Italian Section of the Commission—the different sections were working apart from each other—consisting of this General and some of his Staff, was ambushed while travelling in motors, and shot down in the most cold-blooded and heartless manner.

Action of Greek and Italian Governments.

As soon as the Greek Government heard of the crime, they sent the head of their Gendarmerie, with a number of judicial authorities, to make an enquiry upon the spot. On the other hand, the Italian Government on the 29th August, as soon as they heard of it, jumped at once to the conclusion that the guilt for the crime was exclusively Greek; they drew up and issued an ultimatum in which they demanded what seemed to the world at large to be extravagant compensation for the lives of the persons who had been slain, and they attached to it very humiliating conditions to be fulfilled by the Greek Government itself. They demanded a reply within twenty-four hours. The Greek Government accepted the greater part of these conditions without a murmur, but deprecated, at any rate until the matter had been enquired into, the payment of this exorbitant indemnity and the fulfilment of the humiliating conditions as regards the Fleet, to which I have referred, and then said that if their protest was not listened to they must appeal—as they had a right to do under the Covenant of the League—to the League of Nations.

Bombardment of Corfu.

The Italian Government rejected this appeal and sent their Fleet to Corfu, where the Italian Admiral who was in command, after calling upon the Greek General who was in command of the defenceless and unoccupied fort to surrender the place in half an hour, and without giving him time (because he knew nothing about it) to get his instructions from the Government in Athens, proceeded to bombard this defenceless place, the bombardment resulting in the slaughter of something like twenty men, women and children, mostly of the refugee class, who were collected in some of the old buildings on the hill behind the harbour. The Greek Government had, in the meantime, before the bombardment had taken place, made the appeal to the Council of the League of Nations to which I just now referred.

League of Nations and Ambassadors' Conference.

Thus, you will see that at this stage two controlling international bodies were involved. The Greek Government had made their appeal to the Council of the League. The Ambassadors' Conference, which had originally appointed this Commission, and under whose instructions, therefore, it was serving, were involved at Paris. Directly the outrage occurred they had met and addressed a letter to the Greek Government protesting against the crime and demanding an enquiry. This duplication, involving, of course, some overlapping of functions, was a source of anxiety and inconvenience from the start, but you will see that it was quite inevitable in the circumstances of the case. When the matter came before the Council of the League, Signor Mussolini instructed his representative absolutely to deny the competence of the League, because it was a matter in which Italy's honour was involved. He declared that it was an affair that concerned Italy and Greece alone, and that the action of his Admiral at Corfu was not an act of war.

Effect on Public Opinion in Great Britain and France.

Meanwhile, public opinion in the various countries concerned had been a good deal stirred. In this country the Press, which is very sensitive on matters of this sort, took an almost unanimously

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62680

unfavourable view of what was regarded as the high-handed and inexcusable conduct of the Italian Government. I happened to be in France at the time, and the same attitude was taken up by the French Press for twenty-four hours, until it was closed down by orders from the Quai d'Orsay, M. Poincaré realising that this was a favourable opportunity, if he showed some friendliness towards Italy, of enlisting the favourable attitude of Italy in his difficulties in regard to the Ruhr. Therefore, after twenty-four hours, there was rather a sharp change of attitude in the French Press. In Italy, of course, there was an outburst of flaming indignation at this outrage committed upon their officers, and this insult, as they regarded it, to the nation as a whole.

Attitude of His Majesty's Government.

Our attitude here was, as it seemed to me, quite clear. So far as the crime was concerned, the murders on the frontier at Janina, it was a matter for the Ambassadors' Conference. So far as an appeal to the League was involved, we had no doubt whatever as to the competence and right of the League to deal with the matter, and it seemed to us to be our duty to give to Lord Robert Cecil the support for which he asked. If it were necessary he could read to you the telegram that I sent to him on the 1st September. It was sent by me in France after consultation with the Prime Minister. Without taking sides in the matter, it said to Lord Robert Cecil that we would uphold him in his defence of the Covenant of the League and of the rights which it entailed.

Action taken by Council of League and by Ambassadors' Conference.

Meanwhile, the Ambassadors' Conference at Paris began to lay down the conditions of the enquiry which they thought ought to take place, and, in the course of this, they also laid down the rather doubtful proposition in International Law that it is a principle of International Law that States are responsible for political crimes and outrages committed on their territory without any reference to the question whether they had any measure of culpability or not. At Geneva, as Lord Robert Cecil will tell you, feeling ran very high, and the little States who constitute the majority of the League stood together, feeling that their chances of protection at the hands of the League were gravely imperilled if a great Power like Italy were allowed, as it appeared to them, to trample upon and to ignore the elementary principles upon which the League itself rested. I will not follow with what passed at Geneva, because that belongs to Lord Robert Cecil rather than to me; but the outcome at this stage was this, that Lord Robert Cecil finding it impossible, owing to the attitude of his Italian colleague, to send definite proposals from the Council at Geneva to the Ambassadors' Conference at Paris, which was dealing with the matter, very cleverly, as I think, secured that in a communication that was sent to Paris the Minutes of the proceedings at Geneva should be forwarded for the information of the Ambassadors.

With equal tact and wisdom, in my judgment, the Ambassadors' Conference at Paris accepted almost without exception these suggestions, thereby paying a very proper compliment to the authority of the Council of the League. They agreed to appoint an International Commission of Enquiry under a Japanese president; they required Greece to deposit the indemnity demanded—50,000,000 lire—with a view to payment of such portion of it as they might afterwards be adjudged to have to find, and they referred the adjudication of the final sum to the Permanent International Court. At the same moment, the Italian Ambassador agreed to evacuate Corfu if these conditions were fulfilled. Then ensued a somewhat troubled period at Paris, from which it emerged that Signor Mussolini was bent in any circumstances upon extracting his big fine in order that he might have something to show to his people for the action that he had taken, should he be compelled eventually to retire from Corfu. Accordingly, he began by declining to evacuate until he was satisfied that the Greeks had finally executed the whole of the terms, a condition which, of course, admitted of a good deal of controversy; and when his Ambassador in Paris, Baron Avezzana, agreed to evacuate in any case on the 27th September, he practically threw him over, and declared, shifting his attention for the moment to Geneva, that, if the League chose to regard the controversy as within its competence, he would be absolved from the promise given by his Ambassador at Paris to evacuate.

C62681

What then passed at Geneva I leave Lord Robert Cecil to say. But in the meantime the Ambassadors' Conference at Paris had really given away their case by somewhat incautiously accepting a formula which was suggested by the Italian Ambassador and which enabled the Italians to escape from the obligation with regard to evacuation, not if it were established by the enquiry that Greece were culpable, but if it were not established that Greece had not been negligent. Those were very dangerous words, as I will presently show.

Report of Commission of Enquiry.

The enquiry took place. I read only last night—it only came last night—the report of the British officer who was a member of the Commission of Enquiry. The Italian representative on this Commission conducted his case with shameless partiality. He announced that he was not only a member of the Commission, but that he had come with a special mission from Signor Mussolini—which was only too true—with special instructions from Mussolini—which was only too true; he assumed throughout the guilt of the Greeks; he acted upon the hypothesis that a Greek colonel, Colonel Butsaris, was the person responsible; he threw every possible obstacle in the way of his colleagues who were united on the other side. The Commission sent a preliminary report that they could not fix the responsibility for the murder, that there had been some negligence on the part of the Greek local authorities in conducting the enquiry and making the necessary search for the criminals, but whether the Greek Government had any responsibility for this they were not agreed. It now transpires that the three of them were agreed that no responsibility attached to the Greek Government at all, but that in order to get the unanimous consent of all parties on the Commission they put the thing in that negative and ambiguous way, not knowing what had happened at Paris and not realising for a moment that this ambiguity would be taken advantage of there, in view of the words that had been accepted at Paris, to afford the excuse to the Italian Government to escape from their obligation with regard to the evacuation.

Decision of Ambassadors' Conference.

Thereupon, this preliminary report having been received, Italy declared that she was relieved of her obligation to evacuate, and that she intended to remain. This was the situation in Paris. The Ambassadors had ignorantly, I think, and certainly unwisely, given away their case by the formula they had accepted. Meanwhile, M. Poincaré, the French Premier, had swung over to the side of Italy, and was voting for her. Lord Crewe, our Ambassador, stood absolutely alone, and there would have been placed upon his shoulders the responsibility of being overruled by the majority of his colleagues, or, if he persisted, of being responsible before all Europe, solely responsible, for the continued presence of the Italians in Corfu and for the disastrous consequences that might have ensued—and how disastrous they might have been arises from our knowledge of the fact that the Fiume question at the north of the Adriatic was unsolved, that Signor Mussolini was believed to be on the verge of a coup there, and that the possession of Corfu, if indefinitely persisted in, would not only enable him to carry out that coup with greater success, but would, if persevered in, have meant a very crucial and dangerous disturbance of the balance of power in the Mediterranean.

Instructions sent to His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris.

Accordingly, the Ambassadors having given away their case by the language they had accepted, we had no alternative but to instruct Lord Crewe to defer to the attitude of the remainder of the members of the Conference. We felt very greatly the responsibility that might devolve upon us if any action on our part, however justifiable, were responsible for a great European conflagration, a

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

062682

conflagration which really was on the verge of bursting out. Once again, as I said to you so often the other day, we decided upon this attitude—or we made, if you like to call it so, this sacrifice—in order to maintain what I have always held to be the cardinal principle of European policy at this moment, namely, the entente between ourselves and our allies. The result was that the Greek Government was ordered to pay the whole fine of 50,000,000 lire, and the reference to the Permanent Court at The Hague, to fix the actual sum, was dropped.

Comments on decision of Ambassadors' Conference.

I am bound to say to you, in confidence here, that I think the decision of the Ambassadors' Conference was unjustified by the evidence, that it was a political and not a judicial decision, and that its justification, and indeed I think its sole justification—and many will think an adequate justification—was that it saved, as I think it did save, Europe from the chances of very grave complications. The general feeling was that it was worth paying this sum, or asking Greece to pay this sum, in order to escape more serious consequences, and I really believe that Greece, badly as she has been treated, rather thinks so herself, because she was terribly nervous at what might have happened had the Italians found some excuse for remaining in Corfu. On the other hand, as regards Geneva, I think Lord Robert Cecil will be able to tell you, in what he is going to say, that our support of the Covenant there had a great effect, because it prevented the French at a critical moment from swinging round to the side of the Italians at Geneva, and M. Poincaré was thus prevented from repudiating in any way or even weakening the authority of the League, all the more so because had he done so he would have been impugning the Treaty of Versailles out of which the League arises and upon his case with regard to which his whole position in relation to the Ruhr depends. I think, therefore, that Lord Robert Cecil will be able to make out a very good defence, not only of what passed at Geneva, but of our policy in relation thereto.

It only remains for me to add this. As I said, I read last night the report of our representative on the Commission of Enquiry. I should have added just now that when the Conference of Ambassadors came to their regrettable decision they straightaway dissolved the Commission thinking it had nothing more to do, although no final report had been received. The Commission were very angry at their work being suspended in this way, and when the news came to them that Paris had taken advantage of those rather ambiguous words in their report to which I referred, in the words of our representative there, the French representative on the Commission of Enquiry said that they had been duped; the Japanese representative said: "Our enquiries have been futile throughout, since a decision was evidently taken in advance"; and the only person to express gratification at the issue was the Italian, who had succeeded in engineering it.

Net Result of Dispute.

The net result is that Greece has suffered what I cannot help thinking is a grave injustice, because from the report of the Commission there is no reason to suppose that the Greeks committed the crime any more than the Albanians. They have been unable to find out who committed it; it may have been Greece, or it may have been Albania, but certainly there is no evidence to show culpability in either case: Italy has set an example to the world of what a Great Power is capable of doing in an emergency of this description; the League of Nations has suffered, but I think has successfully survived, the considerable shock that was attempted to be dealt to its authority; and Europe has escaped by these means—which I cannot myself applaud—the chances of a renewed conflagration.

I need only add that yesterday the Italian Ambassador came to see me. The attitude of the Press in England, because no public pronouncement was made at any stage by the Government, had excited great fury in Italy, and articles of the most passionate nature have been directed against us during the past two months.

062683

The Ambassador came to say that now that the whole thing was over he hoped that it might be forgotten, that his people were a very mercurial people and said things in the heat of the moment which do not count for very much and are soon repented of, that Italy had not swerved in the smallest degree from the position of complete accord with us which she had held for many months with regard to the question of the Ruhr, that she was anxious to resume that accord and that friendly spirit, and he hoped that this incident would be forgotten and that we might walk side by side as we had done until lately in the solution of the larger European problem. Of course, I responded at once to this advance on his part. I said that, like him, we were anxious to let bygones be bygones and wipe the matter off the slate, that I fully accepted the loyalty of his Government with regard to the bigger issues to which he referred, and that I hoped we might henceforward, as we had done before, march side by side in the more difficult and critical issues that arise out of Reparations and the Ruhr.

That is, briefly, my case on the political side. I hand over the statement of the Geneva aspect to my colleague, Lord Robert Cecil.

STATEMENT BY LORD ROBERT CECIL REGARDING THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Lord Robert Cecil: Prime Minister, I am in a little physical difficulty and I hope the Conference will pardon me if my statement appears to be inadequate to the importance of the cause.

I propose, with your permission, to deal a little generally with the topic of the League and not merely to confine myself to this particular issue of the Italo-Greek crisis, unless the Conference desires me to do so.

I do not propose to give you, or attempt to give you, a review of the history of the League proceedings during the last few years, or during any other period, because, in the first place, I have so recently joined the Government that I should not be qualified to do it from the inside point of view, and from every other point of view everybody is equally qualified with myself, because the whole of the proceedings, as you know, are always published either immediately or at a very short interval after they have taken place.

Aims and Position of League.

What I would like to try to do, if I may, is to make some kind of estimate of the present position of the League and what place it ought to occupy, and does occupy, in the foreign policy of the Empire. I do not pretend to hope that I can deal with that adequately, but I will try and say what I can on the subject. And it is necessary, though I should have hoped it would not have been, to begin by one or two elementary observations, owing to certain criticisms from highly-placed quarters, which have been passed on the recent proceedings of the League. It seems necessary to emphasise once again that the League is not a super-State and it is not there to give laws to the world; it is not an organisation which either legislates for or administers other countries, nor is it a mere debating society, a collection of more or less eminent persons who go there to indulge in futile oratory. I think it may be defined as an international organisation, to consider and discuss and agree upon international action and the settlement of international difficulties and disputes. Its method is not, therefore, the method of coercive government; it is a method of consent and its executive instrument is not force, but public opinion. Now, I am sorry to insist upon what to many of my hearers must be very elementary observations, and I only do so, because, in connection with this crisis, there was published a very strong criticism of the League and the action of the British representatives, on the authority of an ex-Prime Minister, which seemed to me to show that there was a considerable misapprehension, even in the highest quarters, of what the League really strives to do. It was asked whether I had the authority of the British Government to commit the British Fleet to action, and it described the proceedings of the League as an experiment in adjudication.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62684

Object of League is to promote Agreement among Nations.

Well, of course, that seems to me an entire misconception of what the League was to do. The League's business is not to impose a settlement, even when a controversy is brought before it; it is to promote agreement. The controversy was brought before the League under Article 15, as I shall show in a minute, and its business was to get a settlement of the controversy and an agreement of the parties, and, if they did not agree, there was no power under the Covenant, nor would it have been at all in accordance with the general principles of the League, for the League to attempt to enforce what the Council of the League might think was the proper settlement. As everybody, I imagine, in this room knows quite well, there is only one occasion in which, under the Covenant, force is to be used, i.e., under Article 16, and the object of that is not to enforce any particular settlement or a particular action, but to prevent nations from fighting, especially until an opportunity has been given for discussion, and consideration, and agreement. It is rather important, I think, that that should be realised in considering the actions of the League, and not least its action in connection with this Italian-Greek crisis. There ought to be no doubt about it, because the very words of the Preamble describe its objects—"To promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security." Those are the two objects of the League and they are to be accomplished, as I say, by inducing the nations to agree and act together, and not by any attempt by a group of nations, or by the majority of the League or, indeed, by the whole League itself, to enforce on any particular nation any particular line of conduct which is approved.

Results Already Achieved.

Now I would like—I will be as brief as I can—just to ask whether this conception, because it is necessary to ask it in view of what has recently been said in some quarters, whether this conception has, in fact, worked out successfully. Let me just take the first object of the Preamble—international co-operation. I do not think the severest criticism of the League will deny it has achieved an immense amount of co-operation of the most valuable kind and of the most multifarious description. I only propose to mention—I do not propose to discuss or describe—what it has done, but, when we come to consider the enormous number of different ways in which it has acted in order to promote international co-operation, I think there will be no doubt in the minds of anybody in this room that it has carried out this part of its duty with very remarkable success. Take its humanitarian exertions: the repatriation of hundreds of thousands of prisoners of war, the relief of hundreds of thousands of refugees, the organisation of a defence against the epidemics from the east of Europe, achieved with very little expense and with absolutely complete success. Or you may take its social activities: the great efforts and the successful efforts it has made to strengthen the fight against opium, to extirpate the horrible traffic in women and children, which is one of the disgraces of our civilisation, the assisting and protection of native races, and a very large part of its work which is subsidiary to the League, but in a sense a part of it, its work in the International Labour Organisation.

Or you may take its economic work: the great amount of work it has already done to facilitate the increase of transit between nations, or the smaller matters that it has had something to do with, to relieve the hindrance caused by passport regulations, or the work which it has done quite lately, the other day, to induce the nations to agree on a convention for the enforcement of commercial arbitration, a thing of immense importance to the commercial interest all over the world. Or you may take its financial work: I need not go back on the old Brussels Conference of 1920, although I still think that was a very considerable effort towards the financial re-establishment of the world, and that it deserved better practical success than it actually achieved. Or you may take the better known and more striking success, the very, very considerable steps that have been taken towards the financial rehabilitation of Austria, very remarkable work—I have not time to deal with it in any detail, but the Conference is well aware of the very remarkable success that has been achieved in that direction. So remarkable is it that Hungary is asking us to help her in the same kind of way, though, I hope, with less contingent financial liability than in the case of Austria; and unhappy Greece, which has been saddled with a terrible financial problem of providing for a million refugees, i.e., a quarter of her whole population, in addition to the existing population, is asking us to facilitate the raising of a loan for that purpose, and the establishment of a scheme for the settlement of these refugees on a sound economic basis. Or you may take its administrative work: the administration of Danzig, the administration of the Saar, the various administrative duties which have been thrust upon it, or have been offered to it, by the Lausanne Treaty; or you may take the number of other cases—I will not weary the Conference by enumerating any more—from what is called the intellectual co-operative work, which I think perhaps has more the sympathy of our continental neighbours than ourselves, down to a conference for fixing the movable feasts of the Church so as to have a fixed holiday instead of a movable one. All this work has been done, and, I think, with very great and remarkable success, and, considering the immense amount of advantage that has accrued to the populations of the world, with wonderfully little expense. I do not believe it could have been done in any other way than by the existence of the League.

C 62685

Improvement on Previous Procedure.

If anybody who is familiar with these things considers what, under the old system of a diplomatic correspondence and special conferences perhaps called of a partial kind, which have no machinery to carry them out between their summoning, if you consider that, I think you will agree that the work could not have been done except by the League. And I venture to recount a curious bit of evidence as to the value of the League, which I have come across personally. When I was in the United States and Canada, a few months ago, I found myself in controversy with Mr. Stephen Porter, who is the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the House of Representatives, over the opium question, in the course of which he denied that the efforts of the League in the matter had been of any value. He was a very open-minded man, and he accepted the suggestion of the United States Administration that he should lead a delegation from the United States to Geneva, to discuss, with the Advisory Committee of the League on Opium, the opium question, and he went there. He is a Republican and, of course, a strong opponent of the League. He was very much altered, let me put it mildly, in his attitude towards the League, or at any rate towards their opium activities, and left Geneva last summer—at least we think so—certainly very much less hostile than he was, at any rate as regards opium. So much so was this the case that, at his own suggestion, he came back officially from the United States to attend the meeting of the Assembly as a kind of special delegation to deal with the opium question. This is the thing I am leading up to. Some conference was to be summoned, and the question arose as to whether it should be summoned by the League or not, and Mr. Porter then made this observation: "He recognised that it was desirable that the League of Nations should convene the conference, which could not fail thereby to be invested with a much more considerable importance." I think that is rather an interesting example of the effect of the League's organisations in these matters on a perfectly unprejudiced mind from outside. The truth is that the League really has done splendid work in all these respects, and, as Lord Curzon said the other day, the League has exercised a wholesome and conciliatory influence in world politics. I do not think it is right to underestimate the immense importance of all these kinds of activities in that conciliatory influence on the larger political questions which have to be transacted between nations. But, of course, all that is comparatively a minor matter.

Status of League in International Disputes.

The second object of the League is the object of achieving international peace and security, and anyone may well say how

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62686

can you make any claim for the League if you consider the condition of Europe now, after the League has been in existence for three or four years.

I feel the force of the observation. But, in the first place, I must point out that the League is only what the Governments composing it choose to make it. It is for them to say. As I have already explained, it is not a super-State, it has no coercive jurisdiction—it is for the Governments to say how much or how little work they entrust to the League. The League was not asked to deal with the Russo-Polish war, and it was not asked to deal with the Turco-Greek war; it was not asked to deal with the question of Reparations; and it is those three big questions more than anything else that have been responsible for the unrest which still prevails in Europe. No doubt, of course, it may be said that if it had been asked to deal with those three big questions it would have failed. All one can say is that that may be so, but the organisations which have attempted to deal with them have not been pre-eminently successful. On the other hand, as everyone knows, in the number of smaller questions which have been entrusted to the League, the League has succeeded in allaying the difficulties and disputes which have come before it. I need not recount the circumstances of those disputes, the question of the Aaland Islands, the question of Upper Silesia, the question of Albania and Serbia, which was a very dangerous question, and even the question of Vilna, which many people regard as one of the least successful matters; but war between Lithuania and Poland was prevented. I think no-one can deny that the work of the League did not meet with complete success, yet it did do this, it prevented any fighting on the subject, and stopped the fighting which was already in progress.

Italian-Greek Crisis.

But all these are smaller questions, and that is why the recent Italian-Greek question is of such enormous importance in the history of the League. It was the first occasion on which an International Dispute of the first order—one which might easily have led to serious wars in Europe—it was the first big question that had come before the League, and it is for that reason that I hope the Conference will allow me just to go through the dates and events, and point out exactly what the League did do and what the League did not do.

As we have been told, the murder of General Tellini took place on the 27th August, and the Italian ultimatum was issued on the 29th August. The Greek reply was the next day—the 30th August—and after acceding to the first three or four demands and explaining that the Greek Government was not able to accede to the other three, without abdicating its sovereignty—that is, undertaking to hang somebody, to allow another Power to take its place in trying the criminals, and, above all, to undertake to pay 50,000,000 lire whatever happened—those three demands the Greeks refused and concluded by saying that, if their reply was not deemed to be satisfactory, they were quite willing to submit the whole matter to the League; and they bound themselves beforehand to accept whatever the League should suggest. On the same day, the 30th, came the Ambassadors' note making their demands, for the Ambassadors were parties to the dispute; they made their demands on the same day, and also on the same day the Italian Government intimated that they would not accept the League. It is rather important that that should be emphasised, because it has been suggested that it was something which the League did which induced the Italian Government to reject it, but, as a matter of fact, they rejected it before the League had done anything. On the 31st the Ambassadors' note was delivered and the bombardment and occupation of Corfu took place, and articles appeared in the Italian press hostile to the League.

Appeal to League by Government of Greece and Action taken by Council.

On the 1st September the Greek request for a hearing before the Council of the League was received in Geneva. The Council of the League happened to be in session already. It immediately met on the morning of the 1st in private; it is an illusion of some of our critics to suppose that the first meetings of the Council to deal with this matter were in public. It met in private, and the Greek representative, M. Politis, presented his request for the consideration and decision of the League. He read Articles 12 and 15, or at any rate the material parts of them, and under those articles anyone can see who refers to them that there is an absolute right given to any member of the League to submit to the League any dispute likely to lead to a rupture with any other member of the League, and it becomes the absolute duty of the Council to take that matter into consideration and endeavour to effect a settlement of it, and, if a settlement is impossible, then to hear and report upon the issue submitted to it, the parties agreeing that they will not resort to war until the dispute has been heard and reported upon.

C 62687

In making his speech M. Politis disclaimed any desire that Article 16 should be applied. Article 16, as everyone knows, is an article which provides for economic pressure and blockade, and ultimately stronger measures, in case a country resorts to war without having submitted its dispute to the League. In other words, M. Politis did not claim that there had been a resort to war. I think he was right in the attitude he took. There had been an act which might have been treated as an act of war, but in fact was not treated as an act of war by the party against whom it was directed; and, therefore, there was technically no resort to war, and M. Politis very explicitly said that he had no desire that Article 16 should be applied.

Question of Competence of League.

I do not know whether the Conference may have noticed a letter by Sir Frederick Pollock in yesterday's "Times" in which that distinguished jurist explains his view that there was no resort to war in this case. The Italian representative, Signor Salandra, said that he had no instructions, and asked for an adjournment, but incidentally called attention to the fact that, since the matter was also an offence against the Conference of Ambassadors, they were involved, and it was a question—he did not actually say that the League had no competence at that stage, but suggested that it was a matter that the Conference of Ambassadors ought to deal with. That was not accepted at that stage by the Greek representatives, and on behalf of the British Government I said we had no doubt at all as to the competence of the League, and I, while deploring deeply the murder—which I, of course, did—said on behalf of the British Government that we felt there was no question as to the duty of the League to entertain the request of the Greek Government under the clear terms of Article 15. I think the Conference would agree that the position was clear. There was a dispute, if ever a dispute existed which could be described as likely to lead to a rupture; it was a dispute of that nature; it was a dispute which at any moment might have caused war between the two countries. Any hasty action on the part of the Greek Commander might have precipitated the two countries into a war, and it may be with other countries as well; that was clearly a dispute likely to lead to a rupture. It was submitted to the Council of the League by one of its members expressly asking them to act under Article 15, and, as anyone who will read that article will agree, there was no option or discretion in the matter; the Council were bound to act, and they did act. The line which I took on behalf of the British Government was very warmly supported by the Swedish representative, M. Branting, and there was no question on the part of any member of the Council as to what the duty of the Council was, apart from the Italian representative. However, we adjourned till the 4th in order to allow the Italian representative to receive his instructions, merely passing a resolution to the effect that we hoped nothing would be done on either side to aggravate the situation.

Feeling in Assembly.

The Assembly met on the 3rd, and it had become quite evident that there was a very strong and a unanimous feeling in the Assembly on the point. It is perhaps worth while to remind the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62688

Conference of the position of the Assembly, I mean of the delegates. The larger Powers are usually represented by persons of more or less importance, commonly ex-Ministers or persons of note of that kind; the smaller Powers are not infrequently—I think I might say almost usually—represented by their Foreign Minister or somebody of equal authority in their country: Dr. Benes on behalf of Czechoslovakia, M. Nincic on behalf of Serbia, M. Kalfoff on behalf of Bulgaria and Dr. Nansen on behalf of Norway, and so on; consequently a very large proportion of them speak directly for their Governments, and those who are not actually Ministers are usually people of such importance that anything they say carries the opinions of their countries with them. It was, therefore, of great importance that there was a really strong vehement feeling that the League must act and must do its duty, and a strong feeling also, of course, that the occupation and bombardment of Corfu was, in the circumstances, not a defensible proceeding.

Further Proceedings of Council.

There had been delivered on the 2nd, and this is an important fact in the situation, the reply of the Greeks to the note from the Ambassadors' Conference and in that reply they expressed their willingness to accept whatever the Ambassadors put upon them. On the same day I received, and was intensely grateful to the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary for them, the instructions from the British Government authorising me to take whatever action I thought right to support the Covenant. The next day the Greek Note to the Ambassadors was received of course, and we received—I need not go into the detail of it—we received information of the rather vehement and formal rejection of all competence of the League on behalf of the Italian Government. That was the 2nd September. When we met on the 4th September, in the first public meeting of the Council, the Italian instructions had not arrived. They had sent somebody, one of their members, to Rome to get personal instructions and all that we did on that occasion was to hear a further proposal from the Greek Government offering the deposit of 50 million lire in a Swiss bank to await whatever damages might be awarded against them. Then came the meeting of the 5th September and then we had a communication for the first time from the Ambassadors' Conference telling us what was going on in Paris. We had a speech from the Italian representative denying the competence of the League in a very much more moderate form, it must be said, than the language which had been used outside the Council of the League, and it was on that occasion that we had read to us the relevant articles of the Covenant in French and English pointing out what the duties of the Council were and that we could not infringe those duties without breaking the Covenant and incidentally breaking the Treaties of Peace of which the Covenant was part. It became clear at this stage, both from what Signor Salandra said to us in the Council and from information conveyed to us from outside, that the Italians were now prepared—they had not said so up till then—to accept the Conference of Ambassadors, not only as the proper authority for dealing with the offence to the Ambassadors, but as determining what ought to be done between Greece and Italy, and therefore on that date we were for the first time in the presence of an agreement by the two parties of the dispute to accept the decision of a Tribunal, of a body, outside the League. We had a meeting, a certain number of members of the Council met and considered what reply we ought to send to the Ambassadors and we felt that our business under the Covenant was to do everything we could to promote a settlement, and since the two parties had agreed to accept the decision of the Conference of Ambassadors our object henceforward was to do everything we could to facilitate the task of the Ambassadors, and to make their decision as nearly in accordance with public opinion of the world as expressed at Geneva as we could. We therefore drew up the proposed terms of settlement apart from the question of the evacuation of Corfu, and these were proposed by the Spanish member of the Council at the meeting of the Council on the 6th. As Lord Curzon has explained to you, owing to the opposition of the Italian representative which perhaps might have been got over, but also owing to the reluctance of the French representative to agree to these proposals until he had received instructions from Paris, we were unable to send those proposals as agreed recommendations to the Council of Ambassadors, and it was in order to get over that difficulty that at my suggestion we decided to send the whole of the minutes of our proceedings to the Ambassadors who, as we knew, were going to meet the next day to deal with the matter, and the minutes included not only the actual proposals which were, in fact, the proposals as Lord Curzon has said, which were afterwards adopted practically without alteration or very small alterations by the Conference of Ambassadors, but also included certain very important declarations by other members besides the British member of the Council as to the competence of the League. The Belgian member, for instance, M. Hymans, made a very strong declaration as to the clear competence of the League. That was assented to by the Swedish member and by the Uruguayan member, and also by the Spanish representative. It was, of course, quite well known that that represented the strong feeling, as I have already said, of all these nations there assembled at Geneva, and I happen to know, as a matter of fact, that that feeling was conveyed by a great number of different nations both at Paris and at Rome to the Governments of France and Italy. I have not myself the least doubt that that strong feeling had a considerable effect upon the readiness with which the Conference of Ambassadors on the 7th September adopted the suggestions which the Council of the League had put forward as to the settlement of the question apart from the evacuation of Corfu. The Conference of Ambassadors did adopt them. They were accepted by Greece and Italy and then took place, as Lord Curzon has said, a rather awkward pause. We were informed that the Conference of Ambassadors were going to deal with the question of Corfu also. As I have said only too often, the business of the League was to promote an agreement and a settlement, and as long as there was any prospect of a settlement being reached it was not the right, it was not the duty, it was not within the power of the Council of the League to intervene. They therefore held their hand altogether during the next few days waiting the decision of the Conference of Ambassadors as to what was going to happen in Corfu. They, of course, reserved to themselves the right to take the matter up again if no settlement was reached or if a settlement was reached so plainly in defiance of all public law that they could not allow it to pass. As a matter of fact on the 13th the settlement was reached, and the note which was sent by the Conference of Ambassadors to Greece was not unsatisfactory. It said, as Lord Curzon has reminded you—it said that it adhered to the terms, of course, of the 7th September, the first note, and that having received from the Italian Ambassador a statement that Italy would in any case evacuate Corfu on the 27th September, which, I may parenthetically observe, was two days before the end of the Assembly, having received that assurance it went on to say that, if the Ambassadors were satisfied that Greece had not carried out with due care its obligations to search for and punish the criminals, then they reserved to themselves the right to impose further penalties on Greece including the payment of the whole 50 million lire without any reference to the International Court. That was the note of the 13th September. Lord Curzon has told you there was, in addition to that, a declaration, made by the Italian Ambassador before the note was agreed to, which was held to modify the note to the extent of saying that it was for Greece to prove that she had done everything she could, not for the Conference of Ambassadors to decide that she had not done everything she could. On that we were not called upon to make any observations, because both Greece and the Italians accepted the note and so far as the League was concerned the matter was at an end.

C 62689

Part played by League in Settlement.

A settlement had been effected; we had done the best we could to effect that settlement and I am convinced that the concentration of public opinion at Geneva was one of the great factors in promoting what was, after all, a very rapid pacific solution of an exceedingly difficult question. On the 17th September there was a meeting of the Council at which we took note of this settlement and I took the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62690

opportunity of explaining very much what I have explained to the Conference here, what seemed to us the duty of the League in cases of this kind. On the 18th the Italian representative made a further statement as to his objection to the competence of the League. It was, I think one may say without impertinence, more moderate than the previous declarations had been and thereupon it was agreed that we should take means to clear up definitely and for ever, as far as one could, all these legal questions that had been raised, the question of competence and the question of the right to seize territory in order to enforce demands—I will deal with that in a moment—and also the question to which Lord Curzon has alluded, the responsibility for political crimes committed on the territory of a State. I need not trouble the Conference with the details of the negotiations that then took place. They are rather tedious. A number of meetings of the Council took place and we called in our legal advisers. They drew up five questions which raised these matters and they were accepted, together with a declaration to which I shall refer in a moment, by the Italian Government.

Discussion in Assembly.

On the 28th, and this is the last date I shall have to trouble the Conference with, there was a meeting of the whole Assembly when, for the first time, the Assembly thought it was right for them to discuss and express an opinion upon these events. It was begun by the President of the Council, Viscount Ishii, reading the resolutions to which the Council had come. He was followed by M. Branting, who expressed certain criticisms, particularly that the matter had not been referred directly to the International Court of Justice. I made some observations.

Then occurred a really rather remarkable demonstration. Eight or ten representatives from all parts of the world, from all four quarters of the globe, one after the other, expressed in the strongest way their conviction that the League was competent to deal with the matter and their regret at some of the incidents that had occurred.

Summary of Position.

May I just try and summarise what seems to me to have been the result? Greece submitted the questions under Articles 12 and 15, and, as I have explained, the Council was bound to entertain them and did entertain them. There was no resort to war and hence, as the Greeks very truly said, Article 16 did not apply. On the other hand a very serious question was raised as to the action of the Italian Government in occupying territory in order to enforce a demand, which they believed they had, and, indeed, which they undoubtedly had to some extent justly, against Greece.

Precedents for Italian Action.

That is not as clear a matter as perhaps some of us would wish. Undoubtedly before the Covenant it had been quite common for countries of all kinds to exercise coercion of that kind. Sir Frederick Pollock called attention to the proceedings in Crete, but there are stronger cases still. There is a case in the early sixties where the British Government did almost exactly the same as the Italian Government. A British subject was murdered in Japan by one of the feudal clans. This was before the marvellous changes in Japan. The British Government demanded £25,000 as compensation to the relatives of the murdered man and £100,000 as compensation to the British Government and apologies and the arrest of the criminals. When the criminals were not arrested as quickly as they thought they ought to be arrested the British Fleet bombarded a place called Kagoshima and burned it to the ground. I mention this because it is right that we should realise that, apart from the Covenant, there was nothing unusual, whatever we may think of it as a proper international proceeding, there was nothing unusual in what the Italians did at Corfu. On the other hand it has raised the question of whether that Covenant permits any such action to be taken by one member of the League against another without at any rate resorting to every means of discussion and debate in order to settle the dispute before such measures are taken.

C 62691

Defence of Council's Action.

Shortly, I venture to say that the Council did exactly what it ought to have done under the Covenant. Its business was to promote a settlement. If that settlement could not be promoted by diplomacy or by arbitration, which are mentioned under Article 13, its business was to hear and report upon the dispute itself. It carried out that duty of promoting a settlement absolutely, and its suggestions, as I venture to think, for the settlement were of great value and were in themselves quite sound. But once the parties had agreed on settling it in another way than by the report of the Council, it was not only the right, but it was the duty of the Council to do everything they could to facilitate the settlement by those means.

Appointment of Commission of Jurists.

There remain then these two questions which I have referred to, the question of the legality of the occupation of Corfu, which I have already dealt with, and the question of the competence of the League. They have been dealt with in this way. We, most of us, or I and several of the other members of the Council, desired that they should be referred to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion. The Italians were vehemently opposed to that, in the case of one of the questions. They proposed that they should be referred to a Commission of Jurists. Ultimately we agreed to the Commission of Jurists and they agreed to a very strong declaration: That any dispute between members of the League likely to lead to a rupture is within the sphere of action of the League and that, if the dispute cannot be settled by diplomacy, arbitration or judicial settlement, it is the duty of the Council to deal with it under Article 15 of the Covenant. In view of that very strong declaration which seemed to me to go far to dispose of the question of competence, I did not myself think it was necessary to fight any longer for the immediate reference to the International Court of Justice. The matter will go to this Committee of Jurists and they will report to the next meeting of the Council on the 10th December. If the Council still feel that the matter is in any doubt they will be able to put any further questions they like to the International Court. It seems to me, therefore, that, as far as the formal position of the League is concerned, it is unhurt. An attack was made on its competence that has been either actually withdrawn or will be dealt with finally in the near future. The question of the occupation of Corfu is also to be submitted to legal determination, and so is the question of the responsibility for a political crime committed on the territory of a State. I confess I think those provisions for dealing with these questions which have been raised in this dispute in a strictly legal way form a very valuable precedent. I do not recall any instance of an international dispute of this nature raising very difficult questions which has been followed by an attempt to settle those questions by strictly legal and constitutional means, and if that precedent is established and is followed it really will lay the foundation, as it seems to me, for a gradual elaboration of international law which may be of enormous value for the future peace of the world. Therefore formally the League is unhurt.

Effect of Italian Action on Position of League.

Substantially, however, I do not think one can go as far as that. There has been the challenge by a great Power of the competence of the League. It is quite true that that has been met immediately by a very remarkable rally of all the smaller Powers to the support of the League. It showed a very strong, vigorous, vital feeling on the part of all those Powers not only in Europe, but all over the world that the League must be supported, that it was the only guarantee of justice between the States and that the small States particularly were vitally interested in the maintenance of the authority of the League. I think that was a very valuable counterweight to the repudiation—I think we must admit it was repudiation—by a great Power of the competence of the League, at any rate for a time. I do not think that repudiation has done the League's authority as much harm as some people believe.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62692

Fiume Dispute.

Certainly one incident seemed to show it had not done it much harm. Lord Curzon has referred to the dispute over Fiume. That is a dispute that brought in question the construction of the Treaty of Rapallo, I think it is the Treaty of Rapallo.

Lord Curzon: Yes.

Lord Robert Cecil: The Treaty of Rapallo had never been registered with the League, and by the provisions of the Covenant it could not therefore be relied on in any proceedings before the League because it was not registered. Immediately after this dispute had taken place, I think about the 10th or 12th September, some date of that kind, the Serbian Government decided that it would be desirable to register this Treaty, and, though it was thought not to be particularly approved of by Italy, it was, in fact, registered, indicating thereby that the Serbian Government thought the proceedings before the League were of such importance that it was as well to get their tackle clear in case they had to make such an appeal.

Attitude of France.

There is a matter which, whatever else of what I have said is reported, ought not to be reported, namely, as to the attitude of France. There is no doubt that the attitude of France was ambiguous. The French press, the first French reaction as they say on the other side of the Atlantic, was vehemently against the bombardment of Corfu, but there is no doubt that the official communications by the French Government to the Italian Government were of a far less unfavourable character. There is no doubt that the Italian Government had some reason to think that the French Government would support them in their resistance to the competence of the League. That was the attitude of the French Government at first, but when they found, as they did find, that all the countries of Europe, even the countries which were most in the habit of working closely with them, Poland, for instance, Roumania, for instance, Belgium, for instance, were all unanimous against this view and in favour of the League, the French attitude modified very considerably, and the Italian Government were given to understand that if it came to a straight fight over the competence of the League the French Government would be unable to support the Italian Government. Now that, of course, cannot be said outside this room, but it is very valuable evidence of the great help and strength that public opinion of the League really is in matters of this kind.

General Attitude towards Council of Governments represented on it.

Apart from the actual repudiation by a great Power, the other unfavourable symptom that struck me at Geneva was a certain want of confidence in the Council of the League by the members of the Council. They did not feel as sure of themselves as I could have wished. They did not quite know what it would be safe for them to do. That is perhaps not a matter of surprise considering the short time which the League has been in existence, but I do think, if I may say so, that it points to the necessity for those countries that believe in the League, as I hope we do, giving to the League on all possible occasions every support that they can and making it a most essential part of our foreign policy.

Comparison of Machinery of League with that of Ambassadors' Conference.

On the other hand, I think we may say, those of us who believe in the League, that there were very many encouraging things about this crisis, not only the matters to which I have already alluded. I think we may say with great truth that the machinery of the League worked well, that it all worked as we used to be told, according to plan, that the dispute when it was presented came naturally to the Council, the Council naturally considered it, there was no hitch or difficulty. I myself believe that the publicity in which the later stages of the controversy took place was all to the good. I believe it enabled public opinion to support the League, to support what I think was justice. I think that the effect of public opinion was exactly what we who believed in it thought it would be; it was overwhelming, that no country, not even in the state of vehement and nationalistic excitement that undoubtedly Italy was in, could stand against it, and that, when it became clear that the public opinion of the world was on one side, that country had to modify its policy in accordance with the opinion expressed. I perhaps may be permitted to say without importunity that I think the machinery of the League and its method of working compare favourably with that of the Ambassadors' Conference. I am not making any attack on the individual Ambassadors, for whom I have a high respect, but the actual machinery, the actual method of working have been unfortunate. When we considered this question, Greece came as a matter of course and as a matter of right to the Conference table. She had just as great a right to be there as her opponent. She was not heard, of course, at the Conference of Ambassadors. That was not the conception on which they worked when they came to the decision which Lord Curzon has said was not one which he could himself approve. They did not even publish the report from the Commission on the spot on which they affected to act. The result was that nobody to this day, outside official circles, knows exactly what happened. I venture to say that the actual decision imposing the penalty on Greece which may possibly be defended on political grounds would have been simply impossible at Geneva. It could not have been done. It could not have been proposed, and if it had been proposed it would never have been adopted. I must say I think that as a matter of procedure there are great advantages which the League is shown to possess, and I venture to add a very few words of a general kind. It is not a mere accident that the Ambassadors and the Council of the League adopt different methods. It is an essential difference between two conceptions of foreign policy. The Conference of Ambassadors rests on the theory—it is a product of the war, of course—it rests on the theory that three or four great Powers who are by far the most powerful Powers in the world shall meet together and shall decide what ought to be done in Europe and rely for the acceptance of their decisions on their overwhelmingly military and naval strength. The conception of the League is different. There is no idea of enforcing their decisions. The object is to bring the countries together; to produce agreement and to utilise public opinion, that is, what Austin used to call positive morality, the general sense of right of the world, in order to induce that agreement. I cannot help thinking that the League conception is the sounder and more likely to produce results. If I may venture to illustrate my meaning, I would take this very question of reparations about which you have been debating. Germany was not consulted as to the terms to be imposed upon her; she was not allowed in effect to take any part in the determination that was come to at Paris. The Allies met together; they decided what ought to be done, and they tried, and continued to try, to enforce their decision upon Germany by their great preponderance of strength. The result has been—and this is a fact which you will hear as often stated in France as anywhere else—that you have no will to pay on the part of the Germans; they have never had a wish to pay; they think it is no use their paying because the more they pay the more they will have to pay; but you have not attempted to produce a will to pay; you have tried to force them to pay without persuading them. I believe that will fail; I believe it has failed; I believe it always will fail, and until that conception of foreign policy is abandoned I do not think you will get any permanent peace in Europe.

C 62693

Support of British Empire for League.

After all, what I am advocating at this moment is no new thing. Somebody said to me the other day that the British Empire never had any foreign policy except to keep the peace. I believe that is roughly true; at any rate, true for very many decades, if not centuries, past. We have tried to keep the peace; that has been the great object of British foreign policy, working not by force, not by power, but by trying to promote friendliness amongst the nations. That has been, I believe, the broad object, sometimes

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62694

more and sometimes less successfully pursued by successive British Ministries. I believe it is still the essential thing we should aim at. We now have in our hands an instrument for that purpose in the League of Nations, incomparably more effective than anything we have had before. We ought to do our utmost to strengthen the League and make it more and more the corner stone of our policy, for unless we can get rid of the war machinery, the idea of force and compulsion, I do not myself think there is any hope that we shall see, at any rate in the near future, a pacified and restored Europe.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

Appreciation of Previous Statements.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I do not know that I have much to add by way of comment to what has been said by the Foreign Secretary and Lord Robert Cecil, except to express appreciation for the information we have received, particularly in relation to the Italian-Greek crisis, and the fact that Lord Robert Cecil went so carefully and fully into the different aspects of the work of the League in which we are all so interested.

Effect of Italian Action on Public Opinion in Canada.

In speaking of the Italian-Greek crisis and the relations of the League thereto, we cannot from a distance but feel that the extent to which public opinion was focussed on the dispute was increased a thousandfold by virtue of the fact that the League's authority to a certain extent had apparently been ignored. It gave to every country, certainly to Canada in her interest in the dispute, a feeling of immediate concern, which I think she otherwise would never have had. I believe that much the same feeling was aroused in America, though she is not a member of the League. I think there was a feeling that, after all, nations had endeavoured to set up some machinery to take the place of force, which machinery should be respected, and Italy had to a certain extent, in attempting to ignore it, defied the whole world. I believe that the fact that the League was meeting at the time certainly went far in arousing world opinion and would have led to a much more vigorous action from the outside world if necessity had occasioned it. Certainly nothing could better express the views that were held in Canada generally with reference to the support which should be given to the League than the concluding remarks of Lord Robert Cecil. In every particular they would be endorsed with enthusiasm from one end of our country to the other.

Good Effects of Lord Robert Cecil's Visit to Canada and the United States.

May I take advantage of this occasion to express the pride and pleasure which we all felt in the visit of Lord Robert Cecil to America and the addresses given there. I believe they were distinctly helpful in interpreting the work of the League in a sympathetic manner to the people of the North American continent. I believe the speeches did much good. I cannot say that of some other speeches that have been made; but I do think that Lord Robert Cecil's visit was in every particular helpful to the League and to the British Empire.

I should like to mention that my colleague, Sir Lomer Gouin, was one of our representatives at the League and possibly the Conference would like him to say a word or two if he so desires.

STATEMENT BY SIR LOMER GOUIN.

Sir Lomer Gouin: I was at Geneva representing my country at the last meeting of the League of Nations. I followed the deliberations of the Assembly and the deliberations of the Council. I must say that I felt proud of the rôle played by Lord Robert Cecil both before the Assembly and before the Council.

Canadian Amendment to Article 10 of the Covenant.

I must take this opportunity to thank Lord Robert Cecil for the great help he gave Canada in connection with the proposition that we laid before the Assembly with regard to Article 10 of the Covenant.

C 62695

As you remember, in 1919, at the time that the Peace Conference was preparing the Covenant, the representative of Canada, my predecessor, the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty, opposed Article 10, and, after the Covenant was signed and brought to our Canadian Parliament for ratification, he maintained his opposition to that Article. But, believing in the Covenant and wishing to be a party to the League of Nations, he asked our Parliament to ratify the Covenant, which was done. In 1920, at the very first meeting of the Assembly of the League, he came before the delegates and asked for the repeal of Article 10. This was referred to a Commission appointed by the Council, and the report of that Commission was to the effect that, instead of repealing Article 10, an interpretative clause should be adopted by the Assembly. That report was discussed at two Assemblies, and in 1922 our representative, the Hon. Mr. Lapointe, finding that he could not obtain the repeal of Article 10, brought up another amendment in advance of the proposition of the interpretative clause. This year I brought up the same amendment and, with the help of Lord Robert Cecil and the representatives of the other Great Powers, we succeeded in having the Commission, which had been entrusted with the examination of our proposal, submit an interpretative declaration to the Assembly, which voted for it by a large majority, one State only voting against it. It is true that the Clause was not adopted, as unanimity was necessary under the rules, but . . . .

Lord Robert Cecil: It was only Persia who was against it.

Sir Lomer Gouin: Yes, and that is why I say that in effect we have obtained the interpretative declaration which we were seeking. And for this I wish to renew my thanks to Lord Robert Cecil for the assistance that he has given us. That is all I have to say

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Interest of Australia in League.

Mr. Bruce: Prime Minister, on behalf of the people of Australia, I feel I must say something in regard to this question, because I do not think there is anything at this time they are more interested in than the League of Nations. The idea of the aims and objects of the League is gradually percolating through Australia, and there is a very strong feeling growing up there that the League of Nations has at least got the germ of a hope to maintain peace in the world. I am confident that Australia would take any action it could to promote the authority of the League of Nations, and to give it every opportunity to go forward and grow in strength and become the great instrument that those who brought it into being had in mind. I think that Australia's demand for some voice in the foreign policy of the Empire is, to a very great extent, directly traceable to the League of Nations and Australia's interest in its objects.

Australia stands for Peace and Support of League.

It has been very well put by Lord Robert Cecil, to whom we are very grateful for the information he has given, that Britain's foreign policy is Peace. Australia's foreign policy would certainly be Peace; and, quite apart from any apprehensions, which I may have appeared to suggest that we had, of being involved in war without our consent, we also feel that, after the late tragic war, we have a responsibility to try to do our share in promoting peace in the world, and Australia believes that the foundation of Britain's foreign policy should certainly be to support the League of Nations and make its authority as great as is possible in the world. In the debate which took place in Australia with regard to these Conferences, the view was expressed that one of the greatest tasks that lay to our hand was to see whether this Conference, representative of the whole Empire, could not really do something towards ensuring the peace of the world and solving some of the very serious problems we are faced with to-day. The people of Australia take a very strong view of this matter; and I am sure they would say, almost with a united voice, that they do believe in the League of Nations, and that all our actions ought to be directed

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62696

towards trying to promote its power, its force and its authority in the world.

Italian-Greek Crisis.

With regard to the recent happenings, of course, they are disastrous. I do not want to go over them. It was a most unfortunate episode, and it was especially unfortunate that one great nation, a member of the League, should have taken the attitude of denying the competence of the Council of the League to deal with the matter which had arisen.

Instructions sent to Australian Representative at Assembly.

Our view in Australia was perfectly clear that the League had competence; and as the head of the Government I cabled to our representative at Geneva to make that perfectly clear. The League has, however, got through a very critical time, and, while I recognise that all its opponents will say that its prestige has been irretrievably damaged, I do not think that that is the position at all. I think that it will survive this shock, and that no irreparable harm has been done.

Comments on Action of Council and Position of League.

With regard to the action of the Council I agree that it has taken the proper attitude under very difficult circumstances. The desire of the League is to try to promote peace, and bring about peace, and it is certainly no part of the duties of the Council, as I interpret them, to insist that it is their function to perform this feat, if they can see some other way by which the purpose for which they were brought into being can be achieved. As to the last episode I personally am very hopeful that it has not done any lasting damage, and it is now our task to try to restore the League to the position it was in before this happened. There are a number of questions with regard to the League that I should like to deal with, but I do not wish to delay the Conference.

Need for Discretion.

There are one or two things, however, that I think I ought to say. We are enthusiastically in favour of the League, but we think that the League ought to show great discretion, and very great discretion, in the next few years, certainly in the period of its infancy. If the League tries to go too far and too fast and to achieve all the objects it has in view in too short a time, I think it will defeat its own ends.

Treaty of Mutual Assistance.

I say that because I have read the proposed Treaty of Mutual Assistance; and, though that is not being discussed at this moment, I say at this stage, without hesitation, that Australia would be very much afraid of it. It seems to me to be trying to do too much too quickly, and to be based too much upon the idea of armed intervention by the League of Nations. If the League of Nations is not going to be able to maintain the peace of the world except by armed intervention, then we had better make up our minds that it is never going to achieve any of the things for the solution of which it was established. The force of the League to a great extent has got to be moral, and that moral force will come about by creating as time goes on the spirit to achieve the things that it stands for.

Progress already made and Prospects for the Future.

Personally I think very great progress, considering the time the League has been in existence, has already been made, and I am quite certain that that progress will be accelerated and that we may be a little surprised at what the League can accomplish. I recognise, of course, that the League of Nations is never going to do what we hope while there are great nations outside it; but there is no reason because certain nations to-day do not see that they can join the League why we should think that the League should not go on and that the position is hopeless. The position will probably improve in the future, and the one thing we have got to bear in mind is to keep the League in existence, keep it functioning; and whether it is this League, or a greater League that will spring up in a few years, we have to keep its idea alive. We saw very clearly that it was imperative when the tragic sufferings of the war were very close to us, which many of us rather seem to have forgotten. The League should be kept alive because, if this League goes, we have no hope of establishing anything of the sort until we have been through another world tragedy of the same character as that which our generation has seen. The next world tragedy of that character is going to be a tragedy one-hundredfold worse than the one we have experienced. So that, although Australia is enthusiastically behind the idea of the League of Nations, it does not think that the League at this stage, in its infancy, can ensure the peace of the world, but it believes that, if the League is given opportunity to grow, there is the germ here of the one thing that may ensure the great object we all have, to maintain the peace of the world.

C 62697

Feeling in Australia against War.

Might I also say one other thing which, as Lord Robert put it, whatever else may be published, should certainly not be published. There is a question which I think has got to be considered very much from the point of view of the British Empire, and more particularly from the point of view of our future position. We have been dealing with the League of Nations upon rather high ground. I now want to deal with the League of Nations upon the very lowest ground from our own point of view. In Australia we are advancing very fast. I think most people will admit that with regard to industrial legislation we are considerably ahead of the rest of the world. Our people think a very great deal. They are imbibing doctrines which are certainly not going to encourage them to take part enthusiastically in wars in the future. The doctrines I am referring to now are not doctrines of Bolshevism, the doctrine of paralysing Socialism or anything of that sort. I mean doctrines that nobody can really complain about. They are sincere. They are perfectly honest and possibly they may be right; they are doctrines that many people hold to-day, that wars are wrong and that the masses of the people have the right not to be thrust into war. Those doctrines are growing increasingly strong in Australia and, I suppose, in other parts of the Empire; and from what I know I should imagine they are growing very strongly here. We are told very often by people who say they know human nature that nations will ever fight and that you will never eliminate that natural instinct. I quite agree that you never will, out of the individual, but to get the whole of the masses of individuals to exercise this instinct of human nature when it is going to be rather unpleasant to do it, and they have no very direct connection with the struggle, is a very different question, at least as far as Australia is concerned.

Coming Development of this Feeling.

I am prepared to say that if a war takes place in ten years' time there will have been such a progression of these ideas amongst the people that, while we shall be just as loyal a people, while we shall be just as strongly a part of the Empire, for perfectly honest reasons in many cases, men are going to refuse to go and fight in these wars. I do not believe that we could get anything like the response in Australia, after another ten or twenty years of education has passed by, that we got in the late war. I think it is necessary to put this point forward because I believe in all British countries we are advancing rather faster down these lines than other countries, and we might find ourselves in another ten years with a great country like France, that was able to whip the whole of her people into line, in a struggle that might arise, while we in the British Empire might find ourselves completely paralysed by a handicap of that character. I admit that that is a very low ground for trying to ensure that there shall be some instrument to promote the peace of the world in the future, but I think we should really find ourselves in a very much more comfortable position if in another ten or fifteen years' time some great agency like the League had grown up, so that when we were involved in a serious dispute, that possibly did concern our national honour, we should be able to take up the attitude that this was a matter for the League to deal with and handle and not one upon which we had to go to war. I apologise for putting that side of the question, which I readily admit is not quite a proper one to

57 58 59 60 61 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62698

stress, but which is a very serious one from the point of view of all our interests.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Appreciation of Statements of Lord Curzon and Lord Robert Cecil.

Mr. Massey: I would just like to say by way of introduction, Prime Minister, how much I appreciate the very plain and straightforward statements that we have had this morning from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Lord Robert Cecil. I think if even part of Lord Robert Cecil's statement is published it will go a long way to clear the atmosphere which has undoubtedly been created by recent events. I wish also to say, in case I forget it later on, how much I sympathise with Lord Robert Cecil in what has recently taken place.

For years past he has given practically the whole of his efforts, and the whole of his energy, and the whole of his ability, to the business of the League of Nations, from the commencement right up to now. I know that he must have been disappointed with some of the criticisms, at which I am surprised myself, and with some of the misrepresentations—which are worse than criticisms—that have been given utterance to by men who ought to have known better.

Personal Opinion of Value of League.

In saying that, I am bound to admit that I have never been quite an enthusiastic supporter of the League, and I will say why presently. But, with regard to what has taken place, my own opinion is that too much was expected from the League, and I think that some of the more ardent supporters of the League are themselves to blame for the feeling that has been created. The idea that was created was this, that the operations of the League would prevent war. I never thought so. I do not think for a moment that the prevention of war by the League was possible. The League was initiated to promote peace—peace by arbitration, peace by conciliation, or peace by bringing to bear public opinion. I say now that I believe a very great deal of good has been done by the League and it ought to get credit therefor.

Italian-Greek Crisis.

Just coming to recent events which have brought the League into prominence, in a way I think very undesirable, I refer to the very serious trouble that has arisen, and which I hope is settled or in a fair way of being settled, between Italy and Greece. I have no hesitation in saying that I think the action of Italy with regard to Corfu particularly was very high-minded, and, while I do not pretend to be an authority on international law, I am strongly of opinion that it was not justified, and I believe it has been condemned by right-thinking people all over the world. The worst thing about it is this, according to my mind, that Greece apparently has been punished for an action of which she was not proved to be guilty. Surely the first thing in international law is to prove the guilt of the nation which is being charged with an offence. I cannot think that it is right to punish any nation in the way that Greece has been punished in regard to the recent trouble. Referring to the appeal to the League of Nations, I think that Greece was quite justified in appealing under Articles 12 and 15. I think it was the right thing to do. If the League of Nations is going to do any good, surely it should have a right to express an opinion upon a matter such as that, or have it referred to an International Court of Justice. Something of the sort is right and justified, and I think we cannot find fault with Greece for going as far as that.

Article 16 of Covenant.

Article 16 of the Covenant of the League of Nations is quite a different matter. I happen to know personally the representative of Greece—we had a good deal in common during the Peace Conference and we happened to be engaged on the same Commission for a number of weeks. I can quite understand M. Politis making the statement on behalf of his country that he had no intention of taking advantage of Article 16. Article 16 is a dangerous Article, and I think it ought to be safeguarded. It may at any time, out of a very small matter, be the cause of a serious war, and this is exactly what we are anxious to avoid. I do not know what can be done in the circumstances. I know it must be very difficult to attempt anything in the way of amending the Covenant of the League of Nations, because we have got to get unanimity on the part of the Council of the League. I do not think that is so in the case of the Assembly, if my memory is right, but certainly in the case of the Council it is so, and I can just imagine how difficult it is to obtain it.

C 62699

Position of British Empire in relation to League.

Italy repudiated the League—I think very improperly—but I cannot agree with those people who say that Britain has been humiliated by what has taken place, and especially by the action of Italy. I do not think so for one moment. Personally, my opinion is this, that the British Empire, or the British Government, in whose hands the matter is for the time being, has received sufficient provocation during the last three or four years to cause half a dozen wars. They have been avoided, and we are glad to know it. Sometimes I think that these things are being done for political reasons, but I cannot imagine for one moment that any humiliation has come to Britain in connection with the recent troubles. I have quoted from memory what Lord Robert Cecil has said with regard to the intentions with which the League was formed. Unfortunately, I did not take it down at the moment, but I think I did quote it sufficiently accurately for my purpose. Here is the danger that I foresee in connection with the League, and I want to be perfectly candid about it. I have always been afraid that the existence of the League, or rather the want of discretion on the part of some of its best friends, would lead some day or other to a false sense of security and tend to leave the Empire undefended, or not sufficiently defended. That is what I have been afraid of. There is no reason at all why the League should not proceed with the good work which it has been doing. I think that every organisation formed with the object of promoting and maintaining the peace of the world should receive all the support that the countries of the Empire and the civilised nations of the world are able to give. There is no reason at all why the League should not go on with its good work, but, on the other hand, there is a very great responsibility on the shoulders of those who are entrusted with the management of the public affairs of the Empire to see that it will not be altogether undefended some day when trouble may come along suddenly. I do not mean to say that there is at present any trouble in sight; at the moment, I am bound to say I do not. I am afraid, however, that it may come in the future.

Washington Conference.

Many people expected a great deal from the Washington Conference. I did for one, and I would not like to say I am disappointed, because good work has been done and work with which I thoroughly agree. The competition in capital ships has been stopped. But we know perfectly well that the results of the Washington Conference would not prevent war. We have only got to look around and see what has taken place on the part of some of the countries who have assented to the Treaty, I am speaking of the most important of the Treaties that were agreed to at the Washington Conference. We can see what has taken place on the part of some of those nations. One of them is engaged in building a number of powerful cruisers of 10,000 tons with 8-inch guns. Well, they are not being built without an object. Another country has been building a very large number of submarines; I think the work is still going on. We hear of yet another nation, which is not connected with any of the Treaties and which took no part in the Washington Conference, which is engaged in building aeroplanes and experimenting in poison gases. These are all indications of the troubles that may be in store for us, though we can only hope that they will not be allowed to interfere with the peace of the world. While those things are going on I believe it to be our duty to provide a certain amount of defence. That is what I was thinking of when the Prime Minister of Australia was speaking. We have got to defend the Empire of which we are citizens. I do not want to go to extremes at all, and I am not suggesting that we want a great

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62700

standing army, but we are going to have another very important subject before the Conference comes to an end; that subject is the subject of naval defence, and there I think we ought to express our opinions as to what should be done. The desire for peace on the part of the whole British Empire has been proved by what took place after the Washington Conference. Britain agreed to scrap a very large number of useful ships. Not a single objection was taken to that course by any British citizen, so far as I know—certainly there was no objection on the part of any British nation, no nation within the boundaries of the Empire—and the ships have been scrapped. But I do think that we should take precious good care to be able to maintain communications between the different nations of the Empire, and that is my point—to maintain the communications between the different nations of the Empire in case of trouble coming upon us suddenly.

Feeling in New Zealand against War.

The Prime Minister of Australia referred to the feeling that is growing up—and, unfortunately, I am prepared to agree with him to a certain extent—that in the event of our being compelled to go to war we should not find the masses of the people as ready to enlist as they were on the occasion of the Great War. I think there is something in the statement—I have noticed it in my own country—and I have heard people who ought to know better and who are amongst those I referred to as ardent supporters of the League say openly on the public platform that young men of the Empire would not be justified in offering to fight for the Empire in case of another war. That I do not agree with at all, because the alternative is the breaking up of the Empire. There is no way of stopping it, unfortunately, and I do not suggest that there should be any legislation to prevent it, because I think the citizens of the Empire should have the opportunity of expressing their opinions freely and candidly so long as they do not break the law by giving expression to seditious utterances. That is another story altogether. Prior to the last war, we heard a lot to the effect that none of the nations of the Empire would take part, that Britain would be left to defend herself and her allies, but the people of the Empire, both men and women, young men and old men, rose to the occasion, and, while there may not be quite the same feeling on another occasion, I think they would be ready to do the duty which is required of citizens on such occasions. When people realise they have got either to defend the Empire or let it become disintegrated, personally I do not think that there would be any doubt as to the result.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. Baldwin: General Smuts, I do not know whether we can finish this morning, or whether it would be to the convenience of the Conference and desirable to resume this afternoon.

General Smuts: I do not think we can finish this morning. It is a very important subject.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, it is a very important subject.

General Smuts: Perhaps we might meet again at 2·30?

Mr. Baldwin: My only difficulty is that I have to see the King, but you could start without me, and as soon as I got away from the Palace I would come straight here. If I should be detained that would be my loss and I would read the notes. It is rather important that we should not scamp the subject, and should if possible get it finished this week. As this is a subject in which you are particularly interested, it might be well to take the adjournment now and meet again at 2·30 and try to finish this afternoon.

(The proceedings were accordingly adjourned until 2·30 P.M. on the same day.)

2, Whitehall Gardens,
October 11, 1923.

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

C 62701

SECRET.

45

E. 7th Meeting (1923).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE SEVENTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1923, AT 2·30 P.M.

Present:

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Right Hon. LORD ROBERT CECIL, K.C., M.P., Lord Privy Seal.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Professor JOHN MACNEILL, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Mr. R. G. VANSITTART, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.

Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B., (Secretary.)

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.

Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.

Mr. P. McGILLIGAN.

India.

Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62702

CONTINUATION OF DISCUSSION ON LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER OF THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Appreciation of Lord Robert Cecil's Work for League.

General Smuts: Foreign Secretary, I wish to join those of my colleagues who have already spoken in expressing very strong appreciation of the work that Lord Robert Cecil has done at Geneva. As the Representative of one of the Dominions for a number of years, and now the Representative of the British Government, I think he has rendered invaluable service, not only to the world at large, but also to the British Empire, in the stand he has made for League principles and for the position of the League. I nominated him as the South African Representative, not because he was necessary from the South African point of view or to defend South African interests, but in order to give him, as the great protagonist in this country for the League, a platform from which he might continue effectively to support that movement. He has done so in a way which I think is above praise. The moral stock of the British Empire, so far as I am informed, is very high in Geneva. I was very much struck by what one of the South African representatives told me on his return from Geneva the other day. He said the most remarkable thing at Geneva is the confidence, the faith, the reliance, which all the small peoples of the world represented there have in the British Empire and in the stand that we are making for justice, fair play, and international honesty. That is a matter of very great importance to us and I think it is very largely due to the ethical tone which Lord Robert Cecil has been able to give to the discussions there, and to the message of goodwill that he has been able to bring from this country and from the other young nations of the British Empire to the nations of the world.

Restoration of Austria.

Lord Robert has told us this morning in his very full statement what the League has done and the successes the League has achieved, and he has in particular referred to the successful restoration of Austria. The success of the Austrian experiment is valuable and significant not only in itself, but because it points a way to a similar treatment to any other country that may require our help in the future. I was discussing with some financial men in the City what might be done in case Germany were to break down completely financially, and there was a consensus of opinion that the Austrian experiment had been so successful and formed so good a precedent that, if we had to take action, our treatment of Austria might serve as a very valuable precedent. And let me say this; that in the case of Austria also South Africa has been able to be helpful. We happen to have as one of our South African representatives a gentleman of Austrian origin, Sir Henry Strakosch, a man of very great financial ability who has been able, not only for personal and patriotic reasons, but by his financial stability, to make a very notable, if not the main, contribution towards the rehabilitation of Austria.

Saar Administration.

Lord Robert has referred to some other successes that I am more doubtful about. I remember, at the last discussion two years ago, the Saar administration was referred to as one of the outstanding successes of the League. I remember that Lord Balfour was more eloquent on that point than on any other in the statement he made to us on the League. To my great surprise I saw a whole storm burst quite recently over this question of the Saar administration. I saw that the Canadian representative had gone out and that public attacks were made on the Saar administration which reflected very gravely on the administration of the League itself, and, in fact, Lord Robert had to take a very prominent stand on behalf of better administration. I hope things have improved very much as a result of what has been done, but I am very much afraid that in some of these cases the League is compromising itself, and runs the risk of being looked upon as an instrument of French policy; and nothing would be more disastrous from the point of view of the League than that impression that the League, through its administrations, these parts that are committed to its agency, is serving the ends of any particular Power. The more impartial and dispassionate the spirit the better.

C 62703

Danzig.

As to Danzig, I do not know what has happened. Lord Robert has mentioned that as a success, but I do not know what has happened. I always feared Danzig would become a running sore. It is a German town, it is the port of Poland, and intrinsically it is in a very difficult position. We are very much put on our mettle there. I believe we have a High Commissioner there, and we are very much put on our mettle in regard to Danzig. I hope Danzig will not develop into another Saar scandal.

Italian-Greek Crisis.

Now let me say a few words about this Italian business. I look upon it as very bad indeed. The only good I see in this Italian business is this, that it has mobilised public opinion, and the opinion in the League, in a way which must have surprised some of the great Powers. There is no doubt that to that extent the Italian crisis and the Italian defiance of the League has done good. It appears, both from the statement made by Lord Curzon and from that made by Lord Robert, that at any rate one of the great Powers was very much surprised by the strong feelings aroused among the smaller Powers, and the more that happens the more I think the public, and also the great Powers, will understand that the League really counts, and that if they defy the League they do so at the risk of mobilising the public opinion of the world and the opposition of the small States against them. That is about the only good thing that I see as a result of what has happened. I think in other respects, although I would not say the damage is irretrievable, grave damage has been done to the position of the League. Quite apart from all technicalities, let us look at the main facts which appeal to the public. We see a case where one of the great Powers, in defiance of League principles, was making an attack on one of the smaller Powers, and we find that the great Power, in spite of everything, has been able to enforce its will, to enforce its standpoint, and that the appeal by Greece to the League of Nations has been in vain. Greece has been condemned to pay the sum of 50 million lire without the intervention of any tribunal and without any judicial condemnation. The impression made on all the smaller countries must inevitably be that the League is no support to them in a contest with a great Power. They joined the League because they thought it would be a guarantee of peace and a real protection to them against violence. Confidence in the League among all these small Powers must have been profoundly shaken by the ultimate result of this affair—the condemnation of Greece practically unheard, and the triumph of Italy in her attitude of violence.

Position of Ambassadors' Conference.

There is no doubt that the chief blame rests on the Ambassadors' Conference. There, too, the only bright spot is the statement that Lord Robert has made, that such a thing would have been impossible at Geneva. The Ambassadors' Conference has let the League down very badly. I understand the position to be this: that the Conference laid down a certain formula under which Greece had to pay such damages as might be laid down by the International Tribunal. Greece accepted that as the ruling of the Ambassadors' Conference. The Council of the League accepted it too. Subsequently by one manœuvre or another the Ambassadors' Conference departed from that position and laid down that Greece was to pay a sum of money without the case being heard by the International Tribunal at all.

Lord Curzon: They gave themselves away by a formula they accepted on the 13th September. On the 7th September they took a strong and intelligible line; on the 13th September they gave way altogether and accepted a very evasive formula which was rendered still more dangerous by a declaration that the Italian Ambassador

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62704

was allowed to make, and from that time power went out of their hands.

General Smuts: It was owing to the manœuvring of Italy, both in the Ambassadors' Conference and on the enquiry which was being held in Albania, that was brought about. I am talking of the broad effect on the public mind. People do not understand the intricacies of the matter; they do not know the facts that we have learnt here. They simply see the result that has been brought about. It puts the League in a very invidious position, there is no doubt about that. We can only throw the real blame on to the Ambassadors' Conference. I think they really behaved shockingly in a matter which involved very important interests. That is really the only defence one can put up. It was the Ambassadors' Conference which is one of the rival agencies we supported. We had the Supreme Council, that has gone; now we have the Ambassadors' Conference, and they have made themselves so ridiculous before Europe that I hope we shall not hear too much of the Ambassadors' Conference in the future.

Support of British Empire needed for League.

The matter seems for the time to be ended, but I am not so sure of it. I think we shall have to be very careful in the future. I noticed a statement made by Signor Mussolini a few days ago in an interview, in which he said that it was impossible for Italy, as a great Power, to subject herself to the criticism of these smaller Powers. He spoke of a hierarchy of nations, and the whole spirit of his speech was a denial of the primary principles on which the League rests, and I am very much afraid that, although we may be at an end, and a very bad end, of this Greek business, with this spirit of brigandage abroad in Europe, we never know when there may not be another outburst in the future, and I would press very strongly that the British Empire, the British Government and the Governments represented here at this Conference, should use all their power in order to keep their hands clean and support the League and support the smaller Powers where their interests clash against the larger Powers. I agree thoroughly with Lord Robert when he said that the position of the League is not one of force; it does not rest on the sanction of force, but on public opinion, the moral enlightened opinion of mankind. The more we can marshal that opinion, and we can play a large part in doing so, the more we can marshal the support of public opinion and the feeling of the world on the side of the League, the better for the future of the League. The League is inevitable. The League ideal seems to be the only hope of the world, and, if in practice the League has not realised the great anticipations of those who originally supported it, it is because of its youth and inexperience, and because of the difficulties of the time through which we are passing, times of reaction, times of disillusion, times when it is almost impossible to keep any good cause afloat. We recognise that we are passing through an era of grave difficulty; all we can do is to keep the flag of the League flying, and not to put burdens on it which it cannot carry. In the end it must triumph; that is inevitable. There is nothing else if there is to be a reign of law and justice in this world. In the meantime, we can do our best to marshal public opinion behind it and to see that it stands for the high principles for which it was originally founded. I was very glad, Foreign Secretary, to hear the speech of Mr. Bruce, the Prime Minister of Australia. It shows how all the young countries of the British Empire are now falling into line in real wholehearted support of the League. To my mind there is no doubt that the League is not only a great world interest; it is a British interest too. I thoroughly endorse what Mr. Bruce has said. The more we can make the League a real living force, the less armaments we as an Empire shall require. We cannot rest merely on a military or a naval basis. Something far greater than armaments will be wanted in an Empire as great as ours, and the League seems to me to be a real, substantial, moral reinforcement of our whole position. The more we can strengthen it, the more we can make it a reality, the more secure our position will be, which is not one of military or naval ambitions, but one of peace and social progress in the world. I therefore hope that whatever we can do to strengthen the position of the League we shall do.

C 62705

General Attitude towards Council of Governments represented on it.

I was very much struck by those remarks of Lord Robert in which he said that there was an uncertainty about the action of the Council in those difficult days through which they have just passed. The members of the Council did not seem to be certain of themselves. Evidently they reflected the uncertainty in the minds of their Governments and they did not know whether they had the support of their Governments behind them.

Value of League to Empire.

Let the world know that behind the League and behind the action it has occasion to take is the whole force and weight of the British Empire. I am sure the League is adding a new bond of cohesion to the Empire. I am sure that the time is coming when the young nations of the British Empire will be prepared to support any particular line of action, not merely to support Great Britain, but because the League is being flouted, because the League is being attacked, and they stand by the League. These young nations will have an added motive and an added reason for coming forward and supporting the international action of Great Britain. I hope this will be borne in mind and that we shall more actively than ever before come forward to support the League and make it a reality.

Need for Discretion.

I have sometimes the feeling that we may easily overburden the League and put a burden on that young body too heavy to bear. It is the first time now that one of the great Powers has attacked the League and has questioned its competence and tried to oust its jurisdiction. A thing like that has not occurred before. We have come with a certain amount of discredit out of it, but I think it is entirely due to the Ambassadors' Conference, not because of the Council of the League or the body at Geneva. We can just save our faces, but I am sure this is not the last occasion on which the League will be attacked by great Powers. We have heard threats that this will happen or that will happen if the British Empire takes a certain line, and I think we must be prepared to look forward to a time when other attacks will be made upon the position and jurisdiction of the League by other great Powers. I hope that we shall continue to take so strong a line and be able to marshal all the smaller countries to such an extent on our side and on the side of the League that, when a renewed attack is made to withstand the jurisdiction of the League or to flout the League, it will be possible—we have not scored a victory now by any means—but I hope it will be possible to score a victory then. It will be in these tussles which are taking place and which will take place in the future even more than in the past that the League will be able to develop real power and take real root.

World's Need for League.

But it is to our interest, not only from the point of view of the British Empire, but far more still from a broad human point of view, to support the League as strongly as we can. What do we see to-day? We see a whole world lapsing into decay. Europe has been so smashed by the war that nothing seems possible to make her rally again. The break-up which began at the end of the war is continuing. We do not know what Europe will be like in ten or twenty years' time. We only see that forces are at work, far deeper and of a more fundamental character than we ever thought possible. We thought it would be possible to stabilise the position at the peace and to have a settlement of Europe which might be abiding. We have seen now that hope has been in vain. Nothing now is abiding. The unsettlement of Europe continues, the break-up continues. And in those circumstances, if there is any practical force that will work in keeping the nations together in peace and protect us against an era of complete reaction and brigandage such 57 58 59 60 61 62 8 91 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62706

as seems now to be setting in, if there is any such practical institution, let us exploit it to the full. We are no doubt in for a very bad time. I think this present generation will probably see human institutions put to as severe a test as they have ever been. And when we have an institution like this which, whatever the attitude of the great Powers, is undoubtedly appealing strongly to the smaller Powers, practically to all of them, I think we should marshal our forces behind it, knowing that this will be a stabilising agency and that it will help to keep us together and keep humanity afloat through the dark seas through which we are voyaging now. Perhaps I speak too strongly, but that is my feeling. So far from the League being a sort of revolutionary agency as many have thought, something that will destroy the British Empire, something that will work unknown mischiefs in the world, I look on it as a great conservative stabilising force working on the side of the British Empire and the ideals for which we stand. Not only from the large human motives which have impelled us, but also from the point of view of the British Empire, we have every reason to support this movement to the fullest of our power and ability, and I hope we shall continue to do that, and I trust that the next crisis, which may not be far off, will see the League emerge with greater credit and more strongly than it has come out of this last crisis.

STATEMENT BY PROFESSOR MacNEILL.

General Concurrence in Views expressed by other Speakers.

Professor John MacNeill: I can, I think, echo the greatest part of the criticisms and hopes which have been expressed by General Smuts, and the sundry expressions which have been heard in the statements made by the representatives of other nations. It is known that the Italo-Greek crisis was already in full operation at the time of our admission into the League of Nations. From our experience there, so far as we can form an estimate, I should like to correct a word that has been used, that there was a loss of confidence on behalf of the majority of the nations, and especially the smaller nations, who were represented at the League. It was not so much a loss of confidence to my mind as a far more healthy feeling, a feeling of deep dissatisfaction. I trust, I am sure we all trust, that that dissatisfaction will lead to positive results in the future. The facts of the crisis are, I presume, known to most of the participants in the Assembly of the League of Nations. I trust that the knowledge of those facts will have borne fruit, and perhaps very valuable fruit, before the next Assembly of the League of Nations.

Acceptance by Irish Free State of Principles of League.

At this point I may say that the Irish Free State has arrived at nothing nearer to a definition of foreign policy than is expressed in its adhesion to the League of Nations, and I was very much gratified to hear on all sides to-day, from Lord Robert Cecil and from the representatives of other States who have spoken, the view expressed that the foreign policy in which we, as a group of nations, ought to be interested—I shall not say to which we ought to be committed, but in which we ought to be interested—should be in harmony with the principles underlying the League of Nations. I sincerely trust that will always be so. If it is so there will never be any difficulty in our following a common course together and following it effectively. Speaking as the junior among you and representing a junior State among you, I have no hesitation in saying that, if a test of those principles arose and if the League of Nations through its properly accredited organs required a certain duty to be done, a certain amount of pressure, in whatever form desired, to be applied, I am perfectly certain that the nation for which I sit here would not be behindhand in doing that duty. I should like to emphaise the point of view that I have expressed, because, as an observer in Geneva, I did my best to estimate the feeling that was abroad, especially among the smaller nations, and I should say undoubtedly it was a feeling of dissatisfaction rather than a feeling of want of confidence, a feeling of desire that the objects of the League should be made effective, which is I think the next thing to the operative will that they should be made effective. On this question in general I did my best to express the view of the Irish Delegation in a statement that I made at the meeting of the Assembly on the 28th September and I shall not take up the time of this Conference in repeating that view now.

c 62707

Appreciation of Lord Robert Cecil's Work for League.

I should like to join with those who have spoken already in offering a testimony, a stronger testimony than my own personal testimony, when I say that, so far as I know, and I have heard of nothing to the contrary, it was the unanimous feeling of the representatives of the nations at Geneva that Lord Robert Cecil had done as much as could be done to maintain the prestige and the effectiveness of the League of Nations.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Appreciation of League.

Mr. Warren: My Lord, I will not trespass upon the Conference except to express what I feel as a result of this discussion. Youth as a rule does not command respect and is sometimes subjected to correction, either moral or physical, which, as I know from personal experience, is sometimes quite unjustifiable. The League is a young one and I think it has borne the strain very successfully. The fact that it has borne that strain shows that although it is young still it is a hardy and strong growth, and I feel confident that when it goes forward and becomes the power, which undoubtedly it will become, it will not be subjected to such strains as have been put on it recently. By that I mean that the nations will see what the League can really do and will rather apply to it for aid than attempt to thwart it.

Newfoundland's Confidence in Lord Robert Cecil.

So far as Newfoundland is concerned we are not represented in the League of Nations, but we leave our interests, with perfect confidence, in the hands of Lord Robert Cecil.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Support of League.

Lord Peel: Lord Curzon, I desire to associate myself generally, on behalf of India, with the views that have been expressed here by the representatives of the Dominions in support of the League of Nations.

Opium Question.

Lord Robert Cecil in his most interesting statement explained to us that the Council of the League had invited the Government of the United States to send a delegation to Geneva, chiefly I think in connection with the opium question. We were very much interested in that point, because hitherto we had not quite understood how it was that the United States, which is not a member of the League, had been able to take so close an interest in the opium question and consequently, to the same extent, in the affairs of India, and had taken, I understand, some part in the discussions on that subject on the Committees. Some resolutions were passed with reference to the traffic in opium and we have been criticised, I understand, in certain quarters because our representatives could not fully accept those resolutions and were compelled to make a reservation on behalf of India. The reservation that was made on behalf of India was to the following effect: "That the use of raw opium according to the established practice in India and its production for such use are not illegitimate under the Convention." Those who are familiar with Indian habits and customs will realise how essential it was that the representatives of India should support such a reservation.

57 58 59 60 61 62 8 91 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62708

India's Position as regards Opium Traffic.

As there has been some criticism of Indian action on this point I should like to say, and I will say it very briefly, how very strong the position of India is upon this subject. First of all, let me remind the Conference that the Indian Government have made very great sacrifices in the cause of the restriction of this opium traffic. They have sacrificed no less than four million sterling per year by their restriction of this traffic, a very great sacrifice indeed in the case of a country with such a large poor population and such comparatively limited resources as India possesses, but not only that, they have most loyally and faithfully and fully carried out—I was going to say to the letter—all the provisions of the Hague Conventions in connection with the subject of opium. I do not want to criticise other countries, but I could not say the same thing of many of those countries adjoining India who have a financial interest in the opium traffic. And not only that, but the Indian Government have been very careful to restrict all their exports of opium to the amount actually approved of by the Governments of the countries to whom their opium was exported. They have, in fact, only exported on indents, as you might call them, from those particular countries and I would like to add this point, that, as regards the consumption of opium, during the last three years this has become a subject which is domestic to the provinces rather than an all-India subject, because this question of the consumption of opium is now under the control of Ministers, Indian Ministers in the provinces; in fact, it is altogether under the control of Indian Ministers except in one particular province, and that is Assam. Those Indian Ministers are responsible to Councils and those Councils consist of a substantial majority of popularly elected persons; therefore we may assume that those Ministers responsible to those Councils are fully cognisant of the interests of their own people and are fully competent, if they wish, in the interests of those people to restrict the consumption of opium. I point this out because the situation, of course, has very largely changed in this respect during the last three years and I am not sure whether the American delegation, or even some of the other representatives at the League of Nations, were fully cognisant of the change that had thus taken place.

Lord Curzon: Does any other member of the Conference wish to address us? If not, I will ask Lord Robert Cecil if he has anything he would like to say in reply.

REPLY BY LORD ROBERT CECIL.

Lord Robert Cecil: I have very little to say, except to thank the Conference very warmly for their kindness to me personally and for the very strong support which the League of Nations as a policy has received from every member of the Conference, I think, who has spoken: Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Ireland and Newfoundland are all united on that point.

Treaty of Mutual Assistance.

Perhaps I might be allowed to say just one word in reply to what fell from the Prime Minister of Australia about the Treaty of Guarantee. I carefully did not deal with that on this occasion; I do not know whether the Conference will have time to deal with it at all; but, if so, I should hope to be allowed to say what I have to say about that. I want, however, just to say this. It is not proposed that the Treaty of Guarantee should be a League Treaty; it is merely a Treaty into which members of the League, and, indeed, any other countries besides members of the League, may or may not enter, as they like. Undoubtedly it is to be worked by the League, but it is not, strictly speaking, a League duty or a League function.

Saar.

With regard to what General Smuts said about the Saar and Danzig, there was no doubt a very serious mistake committed in the Saar by the governing commission, to which he has referred, and, as he knows, there was an enquiry into it at Geneva at which we had the opportunity of examining the President of the governing commission at some length. I think on the whole, from the undertaking he gave and from the assurances we had from him the resolutions of the Council were satisfactory; at any rate, a representative of the Saar population who has acted unofficially as a representative of Saar interests came to me the next morning and volunteered the statement that he was more than satisfied with what had occurred. I enquired this time also and was told that things were going much more satisfactorily and that they did regard the League as quite separate from the governing members of the League and had great faith in the wisdom and justice of the League.

C 62709

Danzig.

As to Danzig, the reason why I referred to it as satisfactory is that its recent developments have been extraordinarily satisfactory. They came to the previous meeting of the Council with twenty or thirty different compromises between the Danzig Corporation and the Poles. They were heard by the Council and made speeches of a very violent kind. We asked them one or two questions and listened to them. They went away and the influence at Geneva was such that they settled every one of their thirty questions without coming to us for a decision at all, so that we were not troubled.

General Smuts: And the Poles?

Lord Robert Cecil: Yes, I had some conversation with the Polish representative and there is no doubt that they are anxious if they can to change their policy and work as far as they can with the League. They were candidates for membership of the League which, perhaps fortunately, they did not succeed in getting.

General Effect of Italian-Greek Crisis on Position of League.

One of the encouraging symptoms is that the smaller nations are growing in confidence in the League, and may I just say also with reference to what fell from General Smuts that it is quite true that we received a considerable shock, but it is striking that, in spite of that, the confidence of the smaller nations was not shaken. I agree that there was an element of dissatisfaction. I quite agree with what Professor MacNeill said. I asked Dr. Benes, the Foreign Minister of Czecho-Slovakia, what he thought was the result, and he said "Well, I think we have gained a victory—a small victory—but with very heavy losses." I thought that that was not a bad summary of what was the result. There is no doubt that the Foreign Minister of the Serbians, M. Nincic, told me the reason they had registered their Treaty and prepared to appeal to the League was that they did recognise that there was a considerable desire in the Council to protect the smaller nations; and they were not prepared merely to say ditto to anything that a big Nation said; they thought we had more courage than they suspected. So that, on the whole, I do not think the result was bad. Of course the difficulty no doubt was—and I do not disagree with what General Smuts said—that Greece had formally said that whatever the Conference of Ambassadors put upon them they would take, before they knew what they were going to say. No doubt they did make it impossible for Greece to object, and Greece, in fact, accepted everything and paid up like men the next day or two days afterwards.

General Smuts: It was not Greece that suffered; it was the Ambassadors' Conference that suffered.

Lord Robert Cecil: That made it impossible for the League to do anything, because it was outside their jurisdiction altogether.

United States Attitude to Opium Question.

May I say that I hope Lord Peel understands that the American representative was there in a purely advisory capacity; he did not vote.

Lord Peel: I said he did not vote, but my representative tells me that he took a considerable part in a discussion at a Committee to which he did not belong.

Lord Robert Cecil: Yes, he was there. It was evidently a very desirable thing to get a representative of the United States to come

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62710

officially to a Committee of the League of Nations and take part in its deliberations.

Lord Peel: Excellent, provided that it is not at the expense of India.

Lord Robert Cecil: I do not think India suffered. I am led to believe that the decision was arrived at unanimously ultimately and with the full approval of the representative of India.

Lord Peel: With the reservation, of course.

Lord Robert Cecil: Yes, with the reservation; but the reservation was not attacked at all as far as I understand. May I add that I think everybody recognised the complete loyalty with which India has carried out her obligations, as she did, indeed, in connection with industrial matters in a very striking way and set a very good example to some other countries.

REPLY BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Lord Curzon: There are only three observations I should like to make before we close the discussion on the main subject before us to-day.

Position of Ambassadors' Conference in connexion with Italian-Greek Crisis.

The first is this. It is quite true that the Ambassadors' Conference came to what we regard as a wrong decision, and that by so doing it stamped its own impotence; but, of course, the real difficulty, which we cannot state in public, but which we know at this table, is that the result would have been different had the French and ourselves been in agreement. Had these two great Powers taken the same view, they would have gone to the Conference and would have obtained a decision which would have been in accord with justice and right; but it was the fact that France was nervously anxious to compose the situation and that she swung over completely to the side of Italy in the final stages, which incapacitated our Ambassador from carrying the weight which he otherwise would have done and securing the issue which we all desired.

Welcome to Irish Free State as Member of League.

The second remark, if I may be allowed to make it, is this. Only a day or two ago the Irish representatives appeared at this table for the first time as members of the Imperial Conference. To-day we have had Professor MacNeill here, who represented the Irish Free State at Geneva. May we not take this opportunity of expressing our satisfaction, not merely that Ireland has entered the narrower Conference of the British Empire, but by her appearance at Geneva has for the first time signalised her appearance at a world board? I remember reading in the papers of the demonstration that took place when President Cosgrave appeared in the Hall of the Assembly. It was a welcome recognition accorded to the Irish Free State of this notable appearance on her part, and I am sure there is no one at this table who does not rejoice, not only at the steps she took, but at the acclaim with which they were received.

Support of British Government for League.

My third observation will be this. We have heard to-day not merely an absolute consensus of approval of the principles and actions of the League, but a warm appeal from the representatives of every part of the Empire to the British Government to accord to the League on all possible occasions a full measure of support. Speaking for the present Government and the Foreign Office, I have no hesitation in saying that that support will be given; and, indeed, I think that Lord Robert Cecil will acknowledge that it was the receipt of the telegram of authority and instructions, to which I referred earlier in the morning, that placed him in the position of advantage which he occupied at Geneva and which he utilised to such good effect. Nobody is more conscious than myself, as representing the Foreign Office, both of the work that the League has done, some illustrations of which Lord Robert Cecil mentioned this morning, and also of the larger work it is capable of doing, and whether the work that lies before it covers the narrower ground upon which, to some extent, it has hitherto moved, or whether it embraces those larger problems which General Smuts seems to think it may very likely be confronted with—and, indeed, it is more than likely—I think he and our colleagues may rest assured of this, that the strong, consistent and loyal support of the British Government will be behind it and that we shall do everything in our power to strengthen its hands and to increase its utility. I am sure if the Prime Minister were here he would have spoken to the same effect, but perhaps as representing the Foreign Office you will allow me to make those remarks on his behalf.

C 62711

There now remain one or two business matters which perhaps we may deal with before we separate.

General Smuts: Are you going to leave that point now?

Lord Curzon: Yes.

Need for Formal Expression of Support of British Empire for League.

General Smuts: I should like to say something further with regard to that point before we leave it, and it is this. There is no doubt that the League of Nations is suffering a severe check, and if at this stage the British Empire formally places itself behind the League, so to speak, it will have a very great moral effect. It will strengthen public opinion in this country and throughout the world, and I was wondering whether we could not pass a fairly strongly worded resolution from this Conference to support the League and to back it up. We have had this discussion here in secret, and it has no effect on public opinion really. If we could declare some strong policy in support just at this juncture when the League needs it most, I think it might serve a very good purpose.

Lord Curzon: I had had that in mind. I think it is very desirable that we should do it. The question is whether we should do it to-day at this moment or as part of the larger discussion on foreign affairs and the resolutions which I hope we shall come to later.

General Smuts: I agree with that. I simply wanted it to be a part of to-day's meeting that a resolution should be drafted and passed later on.

Lord Curzon: I will tell you what I had had in mind about these Foreign Office discussions. The other day we had a number of very valuable suggestions and speeches containing a number of concrete proposals. Some of these require very minute and careful examination, and they have to be correlated with the other matters we have been dealing with so far. My desire was to ask the Conference, after we have had full time to examine them in the Foreign Office, to resume the discussion on foreign affairs within a week or ten days from now, or whenever a suitable opportunity occurs, and then I shall have something to say in reply to the various suggestions that have been made. I am rather hopeful myself, if the Premiers take the same view, that the discussion should not terminate, so to speak, in the void, but that we should find it in our power to pass a number of resolutions, embodying what I hope may be the unanimous views of the Conference upon certain broad aspects of foreign affairs; and I have had in my mind that one of the first, if not the first, of those resolutions should be one stating our emphatic support of the principles of the League and our intention to stand by it to the end. It occurs to me that perhaps on the whole it would be better not to detach it from the corpus of all our resolutions, because it would occupy a very fine place in the forefront, and, with this assurance that the matter will come up again, perhaps you will allow me to defer passing this particular resolution until we are able to consider the other ones that should accompany it.

General Smuts: I quite agree.

Publication of Proceedings.

Lord Curzon: As regards the publicity to be given to what we have said to-day, we shall publish as much as we can; but certain

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62712

of the things that are said round this table it is dangerous to publish Some of us have suffered too much from it already. It has occurred to me that perhaps the best way to treat the matter would be that I should this evening very carefully go through the report of what has been said to-day in regard to Foreign Office matters, with a view to releasing to the press to-morrow, for publication on Saturday, so much of it as it is really desirable to publish. As far as the speeches of the Dominion Prime Ministers are concerned, of course, I could not assume the responsibility of deciding myself how much or how little it would be desirable to publish. The proposal I should like to make would be this, that through Sir Maurice Hankey's Secretariat I should communicate to the Dominion Prime Ministers in the course of to-morrow, when I have gone carefully through the text of their speeches, so much of it as seems from the Foreign Office point of view to be desirable to publish. Then it would be for them to curtail that as they desire or to make such other suggestions as they think fit.

Mr. Massey: In the meantime, there would be no publication?

Lord Curzon: Yes; we are clearly not in a position to do so; we have to think over it very carefully and see how it will look in print.

General Smuts: I have said a number of things that I should not like to see published.

Lord Curzon: If any speaker desires that nothing should be published, he should be entirely at liberty to control us in that respect.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Perhaps I might draw attention to this circumstance. I have received a wire from a Toronto paper mentioning that the "New York Times" correspondent had made a reference to some remark I made at this table, referring more particularly to what Mr. Secretary Hughes had said on the Joint International Waterways Commission, as to the desirability of extending the powers of the Commission. I have enquired from the correspondents in this country of Canadian papers and they say that they have no knowledge or information as to what I have said. The members of my staff have no knowledge, but apparently the "New York Times" correspondent, whoever he is, is getting some information somewhere. I think I should mention this in case there may be something else more serious later. The fact that I received a cable from Toronto about it would indicate that there is a leak somewhere.

Lord Curzon: I am sorry, Mr. Mackenzie King, that you have been the victim.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I do not mind so far as I am concerned, but I thought it well to bring the matter up, because it might be possible to trace the leak. There is evidently a leak somewhere. It is a curious thing that that particular item referring to the United States should have found its way across the Ocean.

Lord Curzon: The practice as I understand is, that only one copy of what we say here is sent to each Delegation. The number is limited, and the indiscretion could only have occurred by somebody who had seen or read a copy of the report, or somebody in this room. I am afraid we never find out the guilty parties in these cases. All we can do is to renew a pious expression of our appeal to observe the secrecy that is incumbent upon everyone of us.

FUTURE BUSINESS.

Lord Curzon: Then as to future business; to-morrow morning is a dies non, I understand.

Sir Maurice Hankey: I think the Nationality Committee has been asked to meet at 10·30 to-morrow morning.

Lord Curzon: In the afternoon again there is a meeting of Committees; on Saturday there is no meeting, and on Monday morning there is no meeting as we have a meeting of our Cabinet that day. In the afternoon at 3 P.M. we begin the discussion on Imperial Defence, which will be opened by Lord Salisbury, the Lord President of the Council. The Economic Conference meets on Tuesday morning and afternoon. On Wednesday the subject of Naval Defence comes before the Imperial Conference. In the afternoon the Imperial Economic Conference will meet. On Thursday, the Imperial Economic Conference and Committees meet. On Friday, the subject is not yet fixed, but the Imperial Conference or Committees will meet.

C 62713

Sir Maurice Hankey: It will probably be Naval Defence again, which is likely to take the rest of the week.

General Smuts: Are we making an effort to bring our meetings to an end by the end of the month? I do not know whether the business is being arranged on that basis, but we ought to work to some date. I must go back by the 9th November.

Sir Maurice Hankey: Of course, it is much more difficult to wind up the Economic Conference than this Conference; that is why we are giving such a lot of time to the Economic Conference.

Mr. Massey: There is a great deal of work to be done on the Economic side yet, and though I may be wrong I believe it is quite impossible to finish satisfactorily by the 9th November, or even a week later than that.

General Smuts: It would be difficult for us to continue this Conference if Parliament is sitting at the same time.

Lord Curzon: We have your date in view, General Smuts, and we will try and get through by then.

Mr. Massey: I was going to ask whether the meeting that was intended to be held on Monday afternoon—it is not mentioned in this paper—will include a discussion on Naval Defence.

Lord Curzon: Naval Defence is on another day.

Lord Salisbury: If I may say so, the general subject of Defence will have to be dealt with—I should try to be as short as I could; to cover the whole ground would mean touching upon the Navy, but it would not go into Naval detail, which will be left to the First Lord of the Admiralty. That is the conception.

Sir Maurice Hankey: That is down for Wednesday, although it might be a bit earlier or later.

Mr. Bruce: Then the meeting on Monday afternoon is a general discussion on the whole question of Defence.

Lord Salisbury: If you please.

Lord Curzon: That finishes our present sitting.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 11, 1923.

o

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

62714
45

SECRET

E. 8th Meeting (1923).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE EIGHTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1923, AT 3 P.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. the EARL OF DERBY, K.G., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for War.

The Right Hon. Sir SAMUEL HOARE, Bart., C.M.G., M.P., Secretary of State for Air.

The Right Hon. L. S. AMERY, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Admiral of the Fleet EARL BEATTY, G.C.B., O.M., G.C.V.O., D.S.O., First Sea Lord and Chief of Naval Staff, Admiralty.

General the EARL OF CAVAN, K.P., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., K.C.B., Chief of the Imperial General Staff, War Office.

Air Chief Marshal Sir HUGH M. TRENCHARD, Bart., K.C.B., D.S.O., Chief of the Air Staff, Air Ministry.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Lieutenant-Colonel C. W. G. WALKER, D.S.O., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.

Major-General J. H. MACBRIEN, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Chief of General Staff, Canada.

Commodore WALTER HOSE, C.B.E., R.C.N., Director of Naval Service, Canada.

Vice-Admiral Sir ALLAN F. EVERETT, K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., C.B., First Naval Member of the Royal Australian Naval Board.

Brigadier-General T. A. BLANEY, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Australian Representative on the Imperial General Staff at War Office.

Commodore A. G. HOTHAM, C.M.G., R.N., Naval Adviser to the New Zealand Delegation.

Lieutenant-General Sir ALEXANDER COBBE, V.C., K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Secretary, Military Department, India Office.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62715

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B. (Secretary).
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. Thomson, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.
Mr. P. McGilligan.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. Skelton.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

India.
Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

STATEMENT ON DEFENCE BY THE LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

Mr. Baldwin: I will ask Lord Salisbury to make his statement.

Origin of the Committee of Imperial Defence.

Lord Salisbury: I appear before the Conference this afternoon in conformity with the precedent set by a most distinguished predecessor of mine, Lord Balfour. He, on the last occasion, addressed the then Conference as Chairman of the Committee of Imperial Defence. I ought perhaps to say that he was largely responsible, as the members of the Conference may know, for the institution of the Committee of Imperial Defence in its present form. The Committee originally arose out of the Defence Committee of the Cabinet, which was started in the third Administration of my father; it was developed, and finally reached practically its present form, with certain exceptions and developments introduced recently, in 1904, when it had its permanent Secretariat.

Acting for the Prime Minister as Chairman of the Committee of Imperial Defence under him, I am directed to give a general survey of Imperial Defence, not dealing of course with the details of the fighting services, for those are in the hands of my colleagues, the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Secretary of State for War and the Secretary of State for Air, but with its general aspect.

Committee of Imperial Defence is an Organisation for Defence.

The first thing I should like to say is that it is emphatically an organisation for defence, because you have already heard from colleagues of mine, the Foreign Secretary and the Lord Privy Seal, who addressed you on the last occasion, that the policy of this country is peace. Therefore, the organisation in whose name I speak is an organisation for defence. We have to speak of armaments and preparations of all sorts, but the settled policy of this country is to further the cause of limitation of armaments, not their increase; and if I have occasionally to refer to foreign countries and conceivable possibilities of difficulties leading up to hostilities, it must not be supposed that I think it is probable, but that, in the interests of defence, all these things have to be contemplated. I repeat, however, that the reduction of armaments is the primary policy of this country. I do not mean to say that we can reduce our Army or Navy any further than we have done, but, as the Prime Minister has already told you, if we could come to some agreement in respect of Air we should be prepared to allow that to modify our policy very directly. But we cannot ignore possibilities, and the responsibilities of this country are so extended and so multifarious—no one who listened to Lord Curzon's speech the other day will doubt it—that we must be prepared. It is defence, not defiance—to use an old phrase of a great leader of mine in the past, that is the policy of this country. And it is a policy of insurance, just as a man, when he insures his house, does not expect it will be burnt to the ground, yet thinks it necessary to make preparations in case of fire. That is vitally important if a catastrophe should take place. And this policy of insurance is certainly vitally important if a catastrophe should take place. I think I may say that it is also of vital importance in this respect, that nobody in the position of Lord Curzon, carrying on the foreign affairs of this country, can carry them on effectively unless he does it from the standpoint of a sufficiently armed and defended Empire. It is not that what he says would lead to war, but he is deprived of very much of his authority in negotiation unless there is a background of power behind him. That is the every-day experience, with which I am sure he would agree, of the Foreign Office.

C 62716

Now, it therefore being a policy of insurance against these risks, the direction of policy may be divided into two parts. We may say, in the first instance, that the most peaceful thing we can do is to limit the forces against which we might possibly have to contend; and, in the second place, we may, within that limit of risk, make our defensive preparations as perfect as they can be.

Reduction of Armaments.

Taking those two heads one after the other, the policy of reduction of armaments, of which I have spoken, belongs to the first head. In so far as we can induce other countries to reduce their armaments we limit the forces that we have to contend with; and, of course, the great policy which was carried out at Washington is a typical example of that method of reducing forces with which we have to contend. The Washington Conference, with its limitation of naval armaments and its Pacific agreement, its provisions against the unlimited use of submarines, the prohibition of poison gas—all these things are not only directly in the direction of Peace, but they are in the highest sense of the word defensive. They have not all, of course, been ratified. The limitation of armaments has been ratified, and the Pacific agreement; but the provisions against poison gas and the unlimited use of submarines. I think, still await the ratification of France, but have been ratified by the other Powers. Upon the other side, the second head, the perfecting of our defensive system, that is connected with the protection of our communications, our fuel stations, and our repairing bases.

Effect of Washington Agreements.

Let me say, if the Conference will allow me, a word or two upon the Washington Agreement. I shall attempt not to traverse in any shape the ground which has already been covered by my colleagues, who had the honour of addressing you. Take the Treaty for the Limitation of Naval Armaments. What is its strategic importance? Now, as the Conference knows, defensive preparations within certain geographical limits are stereotyped; they cannot be increased any further. The effect of that is that Hong Kong is stereotyped. Nothing more can be done on our side to increase the power of Hong Kong or its defences. It may be kept up, of course, to its present standard, but that standard cannot be increased. On the other side, the United States can do nothing practically West of Hawaii. The effect, therefore, is that, so far as the Western Pacific is concerned, the British Empire is left face to face with Japan; no one else, practically, will be there to intervene. Now, I hope the Conference will be good enough to remember the words with which I ventured to open what I had to say to-day. The fact that I mention Japan does not mean any note of hostility to Japan; on the contrary, there is not a cloud, so far as I know, between us and Japan, not a cloud in sight. But if you are going to pursue a policy of insurance such as I have spoken of, you must not leave anything to chance; you must take care that you are fully protected, and that in the interests, not only of these Islands, but in the interests of the great Dominions, whose representatives I see before me now. These agreements are interesting in a degree to Canada, as a great maritime territory and as a nation on the Pacific; they are also, and much more directly, of importance to the Dominions of Australia and New Zealand. Those Dominions have a great trade, they have vulnerable shores, and we should have been singularly lacking in our duty, as the primary guardian of the Empire's interests and of those of our friends in the Dominions, if we had neglected to protect their trade and their shores in any international instrument to which we had set our signature. Consequently, when our representatives were sent to Washington to negotiate these Treaties, they were expressly instructed on these heads, so that nothing should be forgotten. Our principal represen-

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 94 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62717

tative at Washington was the distinguished statesman to whom I have already referred—Lord Balfour. With him the situation of Singapore was an old friend; he had often considered it and dealt with it before in his capacity as Chairman of the Committee of Imperial Defence, and at the very last Conference, the one at which many of my audience were present, he used these words: "One of the most pressing needs of Imperial defence is that Singapore should be made into a place where the British Fleet can concentrate for the defence of the Empire." So that it was well known what the policy of the British Government was, as announced at the Conference two years ago; the context and the circumstances show that that statement was made independently of the fate of what was called the Japanese Alliance. It was already being contemplated that that Japanese Alliance might be superseded by something other and better, and the statement made by Lord Balfour was made quite independently of any question of the Japanese Alliance.

Development of Singapore not contrary to spirit of Washington Treaty.

I dwell upon this point because, as the Conference knows, our conduct in respect of Singapore has been challenged, and notably challenged in Parliament in this country. A very great English statesman, speaking, I am quite certain, without really full information, criticised the action of the Government and described it as being too clever, meaning thereby that we had taken advantage of the letter of the Treaty, in order to avoid its spirit. I need not say that no such policy would be tolerated and never would have been contemplated by the Government. As I have said, Lord Balfour was definitely instructed when he went to Washington that no Agreement with the Conference should be made which would interfere with the development of Singapore; and, consequently, when they came to draw the actual details they fixed the 110th degree of longitude as the limit beyond which we should be free to fortify and develop, and that was done expressly in order to protect Singapore. No secret was made about it at the Conference at Washington; it was quite understood; and, in order to confirm this, I venture to quote a confidential telegram, which, of course, has never been published, but which I may state in this room was sent by Lord Balfour on the 24th January of last year: "I introduced certain amendments to place beyond doubt the exclusion of Singapore (in which Baron Kato (that was the Japanese Delegate) acquiesced) as well as territories of Australia according to a formula designed by Senator Pearce (that was the Australian delegate), also to limit the status quo in fortifications and defences. I have since discussed the draft with Mr. Hughes, who tells me that American Delegation has accepted all my amendments. During this conversation, Mr. Hughes volunteered the observation that, of course, Singapore was excluded as it was neither an island nor in the Pacific." I believe it is an island as a matter of fact, but it is not an island within the meaning of the Treaty. So that I think I have established the point which I am very anxious to do because I cannot bear, speaking for the Government here, to have it said that we were too cunning and took advantage of a technicality in order to do what we had no right to do, under the spirit of the Treaty. It was quite understood by the Japanese Plenipotentiaries, and it was quite understood by the Plenipotentiaries of the United States, that we agreed to draw this line, the 110° longitude, for the express purpose of preserving our liberty of action in respect of Singapore; and I think, if I may say so in their presence, our Australian and New Zealand Representatives would never have forgiven us if we had not saved the Port of Singapore. That was the principle upon which we acted; that is to say, the principle of the defence of the Empire, more particularly in the interests of the great Dominions of Australia and New Zealand.

Length of Time needed for Development of Singapore.

As to the application of that principle—I mean how quickly we should push on with the works for the defence of Singapore—that is a matter of detail. It is clearly evident that that could be done rather more quickly or rather less quickly, and upon that I believe

C 62718

I speak for my colleagues when I say that we shall be very glad to hear anything which the Dominions most principally concerned have to say about it. As I have said, there is not a cloud in the sky as far as our relations with Japan are concerned; and I believe it to be absolutely true, as Lord Curzon said the other day, that Japan has no adventurous policy in front of her, and, indeed, if she had one, the earthquake would act as a very distinct deterrent from any such forward policy, but sooner or later, but in good time—please understand that that is what I mean—that Singapore should be made into a fully-equipped base I do not doubt. Without it the British Fleet would be powerless in Far Eastern waters. What is the good of a Fleet if you cannot use it? Why have a Fleet if you cannot use it where it is required? It is upon that principle we have acted.

Need for Fuelling Bases on Lines of Communication.

Now I began naturally with the Pacific and the Washington Agreement, and, if I may venture to carry the Conference with me, I would like to trace backwards as it were the path between Great Britain and this far-flung outskirt of our responsibility, the line of communication between Great Britain and the Far East. Coming backwards we may note that it is not sufficient to have a great base at Singapore. You must indeed have a repairing base there; you must have a great fuelling depot there. I need not repeat to the Conference what has already been said, that we have to think in terms of oil now, not in terms of coal, and you must have such preparations made. It is not sufficient to have one at Singapore; you must have Stations from place to place at proper intervals so that your Fleet may be properly nourished with fuel as it goes, and these Stations we have in mind to establish. There is no immense hurry to develop Trincomali, which is probably the base we shall take in Ceylon, but that has got to be done some day, and then as we go nearer there is Aden; Aden is the next place; and that also will have to be properly provided with oil provision. Then we come to the most critical place, the narrow neck which joins the Mediterranean to the Red Sea—the Suez Canal—through which all our communications to the Far East must pass. That is for the protection of India and the Great Dominions and the Far East; all must pass through that narrow neck, because round the other way, round the Cape, the time lost is so great as would amount to a most formidable handicap. I shall have a word to say about that in a moment. I do not mean to say it must be neglected, but it is certainly a very poor substitute for the communication through the Canal.

Suez Canal.

And so that brings us to the defence of the Suez Canal. Now recently, as the Conference knows, independence was restored or granted to Egypt, but in the very instrument in which this country accepted or proclaimed the independence of Egypt it was laid down that one of the conditions of that independence was that security of the communications with the British Empire should be preserved in Egypt, and therefore we have an absolute right to protect our communications, and that right I can assure this Conference we are very alive to the importance of, and have been deeply considering the necessary steps to be taken, though I do not propose to go into all the details which affect that subject. We have to protect the Canal itself; that is the main, principal thing, involving a force of some kind to protect it—for it is very vulnerable, I hope the Conference will realise—and that force requires all the proper equipment—it need not be a large force; I hope it will not be a large force—but it requires a large equipment of many things—food and fresh water and so on. All that has to be seen to, and, besides that main thing, there is a wireless system in Egypt belonging to the Imperial Government, and there are two important Air Establishments, one not very far from Cairo, and one not very far from Alexandria. These must be protected. A large sum of British money has been invested in them, and provision for whatever may be necessary will be carried out. I will not go into the details, partly because it would be superfluous and partly because they are not fixed yet, and therefore they may be left out; but the broad fact

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 94 10 11 12 13 14 15 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

remains that it is an essential element in the defence of Imperial communication that we should have military control of the Suez Canal.

Palestine.

Well, then, going a little further, I have just a word to say about Palestine, not of a very definite kind, but merely that it has a certain strategic bearing, apart from the political side of it, which we discussed the other day. I do not mean to say that the strategic considerations are by themselves conclusive, they are not, but they are just worth bearing in mind as an element, because Palestine might easily be made, if in hostile hands, a base from which the Suez Canal could be threatened, an air and a naval base. Anybody will realise that it is very well placed for a hostile purpose of that kind, and therefore it is to be regarded from that point of view, and also we shall use it, as I believe and hope, as one of the air stations in the great developments we are looking to of the Air Communications of the Empire. One station happens to provide a locality which is exceedingly well fitted for that. I do not mean to say that it would not be possible perhaps to find another, but as matters stand that is a consideration.

Mediterranean and Straits of Gibraltar.

Well then, there comes the Mediterranean itself that requires unceasing vigilance on our part, but I need not dwell upon it. And then we come back to the Straits of Gibraltar. There again there is another narrow neck through which the communications of the British Empire have to pass to the Far East. I need not say that these all require to be most carefully safeguarded. Here again I must mention a foreign Power, but with the same sort of preface, which I need not repeat, as I did on the last occasion. The French are very powerful in the neighbourhood of the Straits of Gibraltar. They have already got 180 aeroplanes in stations within very easy reach of Gibraltar and, as Lord Curzon told you, there is a question pending as to the future control of Tangier. Tangier has great strategic importance. There was a Departmental Committee of the British Government which sat in 1920—of course all that I am telling the Conference is intensely confidential—and that Committee found, among other things, that French authority in Tangier would constitute a very serious menace to the British position in the Mediterranean, assuming that Power is hostile—an assumption which we have no reason to think at all, but that is an assumption upon which that statement was made. It provides a very possible submarine base, and also a very useful air base for an enemy, and therefore I am sure the Conference will feel glad that under Lord Curzon's diplomacy we have every hope that Tangier will not be allowed to come under the control of any foreign Power; and so we shall be protected. And if anything were to happen to Morocco, as suggested—I need not go into that any more—but still it further strengthens the position of a possible enemy. All these are matters which require the unceasing vigilance of the Foreign Office and the unceasing representations of the Committee of Imperial Defence.

Route round the Cape.

I said just now that I might say one word about the possibility of the alternative route round the Cape. I think we must not ignore that, because, notwithstanding all our precautions, if the worst happened, we might have some difficulty in maintaining our communications through the Mediterranean. I think it would be a most tremendous blow to our strategic position if it happened, but it is right that we should know that we have an alternative route round the Cape; and may I take this opportunity of expressing to General Smuts our grateful thanks for all he has done for promoting an oil station under his jurisdiction. That is a very important matter, and it shows what strength it does give us, a united Empire working on a common plan.

Food Supply of Great Britain.

I venture to bring the Conference back along the lines of communications. I have now arrived home at Great Britain herself, and I might perhaps just be allowed to say one word upon the question of supplies of food in times of war to this country. I mention it specially because there was an important debate—or at least a debate of some importance—in Parliament last session, in which the Government were urged, and promised, to have this matter considered by the Committee of Imperial Defence, and we were also urged to bring it before the Imperial Conference, and I do so now. I ought to say that I have no proposal to make to the representatives of the Dominions in reference to it. Generally speaking, we approach this subject from a better standpoint than we did during the late war, because we have all the experiences behind us. We know exactly what to expect, what the methods are of attack, and what methods we must provide to counter the attack, and I am not, from a Naval point of view, at all inclined to adopt a pessimistic attitude. It is quite true the submarine menace, as it was developed by Germany, was exceedingly formidable, but we have learnt a great deal since, and I see no reason for pessimism. But when I say that, I hope the Conference will not think that any of us—my Right Honourable Friend here will know a great deal more about it than I do—but none of us despise the submarine menace—it is not that; but we are not prepared to take anything like a pessimistic attitude in reference to it. Still, everything depends upon whether the stock of food in this country affords us sufficient margin upon which to work. As everybody knows—it is public property—the stock of food in this country is not enough to feed the population, and at certain times of the year, owing to the dates of the harvest, it is very small comparatively; and, looking at it, as one must do, as a matter of business, from that point of view and taking the worst and calculating what that leads us to, the question is whether, taking the stock of food at the worst, we have sufficient margin upon which to work during the time when the Navy is doing its work,—of course, when the Navy has done its work, the menace no longer is formidable,—but during that period whether we have sufficient I will not go into details, but I will say this, that the margin is very barely sufficient and—here perhaps speaking more for myself only than I have done hitherto—I should be happier if the margin were larger, if the stock of food were a little larger, during the minimum period. Upon that matter nothing has been settled at the Committee of Imperial Defence; we are still discussing it. But this conclusion we have arrived at, that we do not see any proposal that we can make to the Dominions directly to help us in the matter. We know we have their goodwill; we know that they would do everything they could to help to feed these Islands if the occasion arose, but large stocks in the Dominions are not the vital thing; the vital thing is large stocks in this country—for this purpose, I mean—and it is on this side of the water that it is important, and the best assistance the Dominions can give us in that matter is to render our Fleet more effective by relieving us of a certain strain in their own parts. That may help us to concentrate a little more force—not to leave them in the lurch, but to give us a little more force in this country and so to protect our food supply. That is the direct way of helping. If we do see an opportunity of asking their assistance, we shall not, of course, be the least shy in putting it forward, but at present nothing more can be said.

Defence of Great Britain.

Well then, I come to the question of the national defence in its narrower aspect, that is to say, the defence of these islands themselves; and the present Government, while Mr. Bonar Law was Prime Minister, were so deeply impressed with the necessity of taking stock again of our situation that he appointed a special Committee to go into it, a Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence, but specially fortified for the occasion by additional members, amongst whom I would merely mention Lord Balfour, who had made the subject his own, and Lord Weir, who is a great authority on Air and departmental difficulties, and this Committee sat for a large part of this summer. It had to consider the questions which depended upon the advent of the Air Force as an integral element in armaments, and they had to deal with the question of whether the several arms of the service were—to use

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 9a 94 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62721

a horrible word which I alway try to avoid if I can—sufficiently co-ordinated to meet present needs. Those were the two main heads under which their discussion took place, and the report is in draft, but it has not yet been finally agreed upon, although its main outlines are already agreed upon, and, indeed, a good deal of it has already been published, in chapters as it were, in interim reports which have been laid before Parliament.

Report of National and Imperial Defence Committee. Strength of Air Force.

That Report deals with the relation of the Air Service to the other arms, to the Navy and to the Army, and with the strength of the Air Force which is now required; and I am not going to say anything about those details, which belong to my noble friend, Lord Derby, and my Right Honourable friends, but merely to say in general terms that we are under the deplorable necessity of largely increasing our Air Force, indeed, recreating it, because it had been allowed almost to disappear, and in order to equalise it with the strongest Air Force within striking distance of this country. There again it is impossible to disguise which Power it is, because that is notorious. The French have got a fleet in being of 1,200 first-grade aeroplanes, and if their programme is carried out they will have more than 2,000, and we have a ridiculously small number up to now. Therefore, even without the least kind of element of hostility to France, it was absolutely necessary that we should have an Air Force in some way comparable to the Air Force of a foreign country within 20 miles of our shores, and that had to be done.

Co-ordination of Defence Ministries.

That was one of the main elements of the enquiry, viz., the relation of the Air Force to the other arms, and its own strength, and the other was the question of co-ordination. It had been moved very often in this country by various persons of distinction that there ought to be a definite and separate Minister of Defence, and I believe that that is a plan which has been adopted in some of the Dominions—I believe in Canada you have that, but with us it was more difficult because of the very large extent of the forces and their distribution which we have to deal with. This matter was very carefully considered. Our Committee came to the definite conclusion that a Ministry of Defence would be quite unwieldy in this country and unworkable, and we resolved against it, and the old departments are maintained.

Development of Committee of Imperial Defence.

The only thing that was done, and that was of some importance, was that we recommended to the Cabinet, and that has been accepted, that the position and circumstances of the Committee of Imperial Defence itself should be developed. That Committee, as the Conference probably knows, consists of the Prime Minister himself and such other persons as he may summon to assist him. As a matter of actual practice he summons the Secretaries of State of the Fighting Services, and he summons the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and I ought to say he also summons myself to act for him as Chairman; and then in addition to these Parliamentary Ministers he summons the professional technical heads of the Great Services, the Chief of the Imperial General Staff, the First Sea Lord, the Chief of the Air Staff—all are integral members in practice of the Committee of Imperial Defence; and he also summons anybody else whom he thinks would help.

Dominion Representatives invited to attend Meetings.

He has always extended a most cordial invitation to those Dominion representatives who are available. That is only carrying out a long succession of precedents which have been set. Whenever we have an opportunity of asking representatives of the Dominions who are authorised and qualified to come, they are abundantly welcome to help us in our deliberations. Then, besides that, there are the reports circulated to the Dominions, which I know the gentlemen here have received.

C 62722

Range of Work of the Committee of Imperial Defence.

I have said how the work of this Committee is a very widely extended work dealing with an enormous variety of subjects; to give you some example of the topics that have been discussed in the last two or three years, there are the value of capital ships, Imperial Naval Policy, Limitation of Armaments, the stragetic situation in the Far East, Singapore, Reserves of Oil Fuel, the Persian Oilfields, Washington, Laws of War, Airships, the Defence of Ports, the Defence of Railways, the Defence of Wireless—all those subjects and a host more, and they are only a few of the kind of topics that we deal with every week. But I may say, if the Conference expressed the least desire for it, it would be very easy to circulate a paper describing in detail the work of the Committee of Imperial Defence, and its history, and if it was asked for I should be only too delighted to put the necessary machinery into action, and it would be very little trouble because most of the material is in existence if it is desired. All this work I hope the Conference will not think is over-elaborate, it is essential if you are to have a really first-rate machine, a machinery for defence, not for aggression of any kind or sort, but for defence.

Compilation of War Books.

In many respects it has been necessary for us—this was begun long before my time and is being carried on—to put together in a tabulated form all the experiences of the late war, so that we may know exactly what to do if it ever should happen that another war should take place. They are contained in books, which we call the War Books; each Department concerned has contributed its own experiences, and it is all put down in tabulated form. I do not mean to say that we should be absolutely wise if a catastrophe came, but all the experience we have got would be instantly available in a single instant if a war broke out, everything that we have done. We also hope that could be done in the Dominions, if they would be good enough to consider the very respectful suggestion, that each should have in a tabulated form their experiences. I think they have done a good deal in that direction, but we hope that could be carried out, if we may make the suggestion.

Censorship.

There is work to be done in the direction of censorship, which should be brought to their notice. There must be an elaborate system of censorship the moment war breaks out, and we are anxious that they should collaborate with us in bringing it to full form. We have been in communication with them upon it, and we are anxious that it should be carried out to its proper fulfilment. Those are the respectful suggestions which I wish to make to them.

I have now reached the end of my address. I hope I have said enough to make the Conference feel that we are doing everything we can to make preparation. May it never be required, but we are bound to do our duty. Anyone who has passed through the great war and the awful exigencies which it exhibited cannot bear the responsibility of not being ready in case there were another, and we hope in the organisation we have established—it is a living organisation, full of work, full of vigour and full of knowledge—we can ask for your co-operation and assistance in defence of the British Empire.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. Massey: Would not it be convenient to hear the First Sea Lord?

Mr. Baldwin: I think there is going to be a definite discussion on the Sea on Wednesday.

Mr. Amery: We are going to have a general Naval discussion on Wednesday, and, if it meets with the approval of the Conference, a general discussion at the Admiralty, when Lord Beatty could answer questions and lay the things before you in their details as may be desirable from your point of view.

Mr. Baldwin: It is very general to-day.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 94 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62723

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

Co-operation in Defence desired by Canada.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Prime Minister, I have not anything to say at the moment beyond mentioning that the suggestions just made by Lord Salisbury will be fully met by Canada. They have already, I understand, been met in large measure. So far as Canada is concerned, her attitude will continue to be in the future what it has been in the past, one, namely, of hearty co-operation in matters of defence, having regard always to the fact that actual participation in war, the extent of participation and such like, must necessarily be matters which will have to be carefully considered and be decided by Parliament itself. I think that is understood.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Mr. Bruce: Prime Minister, I am not very clear what we have to discuss at this stage. I think it would be a good thing to have a general discussion on defence, but we do not at the moment quite appear to be shaping in that direction. As I understand it, we are subsequently going to deal with the question of Naval Defence and with the action the Dominions are going to take with regard to it; but there seems to me to be a broader aspect, covering Empire defence generally. We have to consider the Imperial Council of Defence, and to come to a conclusion whether we think it wise to continue this central authority which is charged with laying down the whole of the plans for united action by the Empire in a period of national danger. I suppose that that is quite generally accepted, but assuming that we are all agreed that there is to be this Council, and that this Council is going to deal generally with the question of Empire Defence as a whole, we immediately come to the other side of the position—how far the Dominions are to co-operate in that defence by means of the efforts they are prepared to make in their own respective spheres. I am not at all clear whether this is the time to discuss that, or at what stage we are going to discuss it, but it appears to me to be quite the most important subject we have before us.

Imperial Defence is a matter for the Whole of the Empire.

From Australia's point of view we are rather in this position. We see clearly that our future lies inside the Empire, and that our defence must be a part of the general defence of the whole Empire, and we are prepared as far as we can to bear our share of it. I think it is generally recognised that in the past the Dominions have not quite done all that is possible to help. They have rather left their defence in the hands of Great Britain. Australia's attitude is that we are ready and willing to consider whether there is anything more that we should do, but it would make a tremendous help to us in determining how much we can do if we could get general recognition of the principle that the question of Empire Defence, irrespective of which part of the Empire is concerned, is a question for the whole of the Empire, and not only a question for Great Britain and the Dominion that is primarily concerned in any particular problem.

Of course we take the view that the Empire's defence is a matter for the whole of the Empire. We believe that if a disaster occurred to Great Britain, a tremendous reverse which to a great extent destroyed her prestige and position in the world, and we had not a naval force sufficient to secure Great Britain's supplies—we believe in Australia that that would be almost a greater disaster to Australia than it would be to Britain. Therefore we take the view that this question of Empire Defence is a matter in which the whole of the Empire is concerned, and in regard to which every part of the Empire ought to be prepared to bear its fair proportion. I am only saying those few words now because at this stage I do not quite see what questions we ought to discuss. I wanted to talk about Singapore and to ask for a great deal of information. There are a number of points that I wish to raise. But as this was a general discussion, I first wanted to clear my mind as to what we are discussing, and whether we are dealing with the general question of the broad co-operation by the whole Empire in Empire Defence.

C 62724

Mr. Amery: Personally, I should like it if Mr. Bruce raised any general points that he has to raise in connection with Singapore to-day, because I could answer them straight away.

Mr. Bruce: I think it would be helpful if I did, and I will indicate the type of information which we want. Before doing that, I would like to finish the point I have raised, as I want to make Australia's position perfectly clear. We take the view that the Empire is one and indivisible, and that every part of the Empire ought to be prepared to bear its share of responsibility for Empire Defence; and that view is founded on the reasons I have given, and also on the fact that the great basis of the Empire is the Empire's trade. We are all equally concerned and interested in the protection of the trade routes of the world, and we think that question ought to be fully discussed. I do not think I shall be misunderstood if I say that Australia has looked at the position very carefully. We recognise that Great Britain herself has borne a greater burden of the Empire's defence than any of the Dominions, on a per capita basis or any basis that you choose to take, but we venture to suggest that that is quite right and proper, apart from the position of the Dominions, their small population and their present limited financial resources. The Empire is primarily the responsibility of Britain; and, while each of the Dominions is very concerned about its own particular safety, the major responsibility for the Empire is Britain's, and naturally at the present time—at some date in the future we may be able to do more—it is proper that Britain bears a greater share. We emphatically think that Australia, in the past, has borne rather more than her share in comparison with the other Dominions. I am sure that the Dominion representatives will understand why I have to raise this point here, because it is a matter which has been raised in Australia in the past and will be raised in the future; and if there is a great difference between the effort that we are making in comparison with the other Dominions, it may lead to a political situation which will very seriously hamper what we are able to do. I am afraid there is no way of avoiding the consideration of that question, and seeing if we cannot lay down some principle. The principle that Australia stands for is that the whole Empire is vitally interested in the Empire's safety, and we should all bear as great a proportion of the burden as we can according to our present circumstances and situation, but I do not want to labour that point at this moment. On the general question of Empire defence one has, of course, to consider it particularly from the point of view of one's own Dominion.

Provision for Land Defences of Australia.

As far as Australia is concerned, we appreciate that the land defences of Australia are entirely a matter for Australia, and we are endeavouring to bring about a position where, if it should unfortunately happen that a hostile force were able to land on our shores, we could deal with it under our own organisation. I do not propose to delay the Conference by explaining exactly what we have done; but the underlying principles of the scheme we have now established are that the first necessity in any war is to have a staff capable of handling the forces we put into the field, and the second is to have the necessary munitions of war. The soldier himself can be recruited if you have a strong and virile population, and you can meet your difficulty in regard to man-power when the crisis arises; but you can never meet your difficulties in regard to a staff or in regard to munitions, and the first object we have in view is to create that staff. We train a sufficient number of men at present to give the staff the necessary opportunity of carrying out their side of the task and training themselves. At the moment we are, to some extent, relying upon the fact that we have a great body of returned soldiers in Australia. I think we are relying perhaps a little too much upon that, because the number will be reduced as time goes on; but as it becomes necessary we shall of course have to train a greater number of our manhood. We have, in our home defence in Australia, the provision for universal training. In regard to munitions, at the moment, we can produce all our requirements in regard to small arms and small-arms ammunition, but there are many other things we have not got;

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62725

and the basis we are working on at the present moment is, to try to establish factories in Australia which will only be on a nucleus basis, to provide all the things we require in regard to munitions which are not manufactured commercially in the country. Everything we require, if it is manufactured commercially, we have, since the war, handed back to private enterprise, and we rely upon our powers to take action and acquire these factories when trouble arises. But to put through the present scheme, the establishment of nucleus factories for the other things we require, will probably take something like six years. We have also got a present trouble. Apart from anything we can manufacture in the future, we have to try to safeguard our position at the present moment; and in order to make a start towards the necessary provision, we have this year taken an additional sum of £250,000. That is supplementary, of course, to the ordinary expenditure in regard to munitions, which is continuing at about £500,000; and during the next few years we hope to place ourselves in the position of having the necessary supplies of munitions in the country, and of having laid down the basis for all these factories, so that we may produce the necessary munitions in Australia. I am saying this to indicate that we do appreciate the responsibility which rests on us for our land forces, and, as far as we are able, we are trying to take the necessary steps to carry out the task which we realise lies on our shoulders.

Need for Sea Defence.

The actual task, however, of protecting a great country like Australia against any first-class Power is quite an impossible one. With a population of five and a half millions, and a 12,000-mile coast line, we cannot deceive ourselves for a moment that we can do it. There is only one way in which we can protect ourselves, and that is on the sea. We say quite frankly that, with our population, and at our present stage of development, we certainly could not create the big fleet which would be necessary to protect ourselves from aggression by a great Naval Power, but there we have enjoyed protection in the past from the British fleet. To some extent, in later years, the protection has been one of co-operation between the Australian units of the Navy and the British Navy, and in the future that is, of course, the thing we have to look to. Naval defence is going to be discussed later, and, as the First Lord has suggested, I think it would be helpful if I indicated some of the things which are in our minds in regard to it. In Australia we are perfectly clear that, if battleships are essential for modern naval defence, then there has got to be a base of some sort in the Pacific, and I do not think I need delay the Conference very long to put the points on which we want a little enlightenment.

Development of Base at Singapore not a Breach of Washington Treaty.

Before doing so I may say, as far as Australia is concerned, that, if there is any suggestion that a base at Singapore is in any sense a breach of the Washington Treaty or that it amounts to sharp practice, we repudiate that immediately; because Senator Pearce was Australia's representative there, and Australia never would have given her free and willing consent to the action taken at Washington if there had been the slightest doubt but that Singapore could be proceeded with if necessary, and I think I should make that very clear indeed.

Strategic Position of Singapore.

Now in regard to Singapore, the first thing that I should like to have put, and put as fully as possible by, I presume, the First Sea Lord, is whether Singapore is the right place. I have seen many arguments and I have read a good deal of literature, but it never has been clearly and convincingly put. We have in Australia a Council of Defence consisting of three Ministers, the Naval, Military and Air Advisers, and before I left Australia I put the point to them and asked them to demonstrate to me the effect of Singapore, and what the exact position would be in the case of, say, trouble with Japan—of course, I do not anticipate anything of the sort—and how that base on the flank would render an attack on Australia, if not absolutely impossible, at least a naval venture that nobody would be very likely to take on. I had many arguments and explanations given to me; but—it may be my own stupidity—I have not yet got clearly into my mind, from the strategical point of view, the effect of having a base at Singapore in relation to the defence of the Pacific generally.

C 62726

Value of Capital Ships.

The other thing that I think would be very helpful to the Conference is information in regard to this question of battleships being necessary to-day. It would be useful to have the opinion of the First Lord or other expert opinion that would help to show us that battleships to-day are absolutely essential, because, of course, if battleships are not essential, if there is anything in the theory of those who say "No, the day of the battleship is past," then, of course, Singapore is a matter of comparative indifference, because it is the battleship, and the battleship primarily, that Singapore is designed for.

Prospects of Developing Singapore without Interruption.

Another question which I think is of very great interest—not so much for the Navy as for the British Government—is this: Is there any guarantee, beyond the prospect of peace in the Pacific consequent on the Washington Treaty, that we are going to be able to build Singapore? What I have in mind is, was there any arrangement or any discussion at all in regard to this at the Washington Conference? I gather there was not.

Lord Salisbury: I read out that telegram from Lord Balfour to the Home Government explaining how he was negotiating in regard to it.

Mr. Bruce: I was on another point altogether. Possibly it is a point that need not be pursued, because I do not think any such thing took place. What I had in mind was that possibly, when this Treaty was entered into, there might have been some understanding that this base was to be proceeded with.

Lord Salisbury: It was understood between the British Plenipotentiary and the Dominion representatives.

Mr. Bruce: Certainly, but was there an understanding with America, which safeguarded its being built without interruption?

Lord Salisbury: There was nothing official, but I think it was quite well understood. It was general talk at Washington, and it was mentioned in the press, and it was well known, as far as the British Empire was concerned, because it was discussed at the Conference in 1921.

Mr. Bruce: That really is no additional safeguard to us that there will be no interference in building.

Lord Salisbury: The Japanese Government publicly announced the other day that they acquitted us of any kind of sharp practice in regard to it; it was practically understood.

Mr. Massey: It was practically approved.

Mr. Bruce: That is not quite the point I am on; I will put it more clearly. What I should really like to hear, and I think the Conference would like to hear, is this: Was there any understanding with America that, while this base was being built, it should be safeguarded by joint action, at the stage that it had reached, and defended, in case of anything untoward happening prior to its completion? And what possibility there would be of action being taken against it in the event of hostilities breaking out during the period it was under construction?

Garrisoning of Singapore.

The other point which is of very great interest to Australia is, assuming Singapore is the place and Singapore is built: What are the proposals in regard to the garrisoning of Singapore? Exactly how is it proposed to garrison it during the period of complete peace? How is it proposed to reinforce it during the period of tension, and how will it be garrisoned during a period of actual hostilities? I am

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 94 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62727

particularly stressing that point, because Australia, if one excludes India, is the nearest British country to Singapore, and there may be some idea that Australia could find the men to garrison it in a period of tension or during hostilities. In Australia we have no permanent force that we could use for that purpose, and, as we can only send men overseas if they volunteer, it would probably be extraordinarily difficult for Australia to do anything at all to help in regard to the garrisoning of Singapore until hostilities had proceeded for some period.

Money Contribution by Australia.

Lord Salisbury: You can help, of course, with money very well.

Mr. Bruce: You mean at this stage?

Lord Salisbury: Yes.

Mr. Bruce: I shall be prepared to discuss the question of contribution when the question of the base itself is taken up. I was trying to raise a few points which might be helpful to the First Lord in putting the matter of the Singapore base to us when we come to discuss it.

Mr. Amery: That will be a Committee stage between us later.

Mr. Bruce: I am trying to indicate the things which will be helpful when Singapore is under discussion.

Possibility of avoiding Development at Singapore.

There is also another point on behalf of Australia I must bring out in regard to Singapore. This point really has two aspects; on the one side it concerns foreign affairs, and on the other it concerns the Admiralty. It is the question whether there is any possibility of avoiding building Singapore altogether. The point that concerns the Admiralty is this. Suppose—in this world it is certainly difficult to come to arrangements—but suppose you could come to an arrangement with the Powers that are concerned. The only class of arrangement, as I understand it, that would be satisfactory from a naval point of view would be one which would actually involve the doing away with battleships altogether. As long as battleships are in the programme of the Navies of the world, we want a base in the Pacific so that we can take a battleship into the Pacific, so that the only possible arrangement would be that battleships shall disappear altogether. I should like to be quite sure whether there is any idea of so drastic an action as that, and I certainly should like some assurance—and possibly the representatives of the different countries will see why I want it—as to the possibility of a Conference which might follow the Washington Conference and even go a step further. It is a question that Australia is very interested in. We have, as I indicated the other day, very strong views with regard to the question of armaments and the peace of the world generally, and I felt that I had to raise that point so that we could at least consider it. With regard to Singapore, provided that at this time there is no possibility of arriving at arrangements with the other Pacific nations which would completely ensure the safety of the Pacific—and it would have to be the safety of the Pacific indefinitely, not for a period of years—and provided that it can be demonstrated that Singapore is the right base, Australia is very anxious to see this work proceeded with, because we are convinced that if battleships form the programme of the Navy it is imperative that there should be some base in the Pacific.

Need for Pacific Base Imperative.

The other point—and this, of course, is very confidential indeed—the other point that Australia feels very strongly is this. I have suggested the possibility of some arrangement in the Pacific which might do away with the necessity for building Singapore, but if no arrangement can be made we consider it is imperative that Britain should get a base of some sort in the Pacific. The Washington Conference was made possible by the fact that there were three Powers who were all in such a strong position that it was really useless to go on with the competition; and the Washington

C 62728

Treaty certainly did one very good thing; it got rid of the competition which was just starting between Great Britain and America, a competition which probably would have had the most serious results in both countries, certainly from the financial point of view. On the other hand the Washington Treaty has to a great extent left Japan in a very much better position in the Pacific than she was before; and, in Australia, those who have thought this question out feel very strongly that after the period of the Washington Treaty has run out, if Japan has proceeded through all this time to build up to her 10,000-ton cruisers with 8-in. guns, and is very strong as a Navy, and Britain has no base in the Pacific upon which modern battleships could be based, it would certainly be much more difficult to come to a further arrangement at the expiration of this Washington Treaty period than if Britain had a base, America was still strong, and Japan was strong. The three would then be in a position where nobody could think it a simple task to become the mistress of the China Seas. Broadly speaking, subject to various points that I raised, Australia is certainly very much in favour of a base in the Pacific, and is prepared to consider whether there is anything that we can do to help in the establishing of it.

Mr. Baldwin: Are there any other points you would like to raise before you discuss them at a more technical meeting?

Mr. Bruce: I do not think so. Of course, at that meeting there will be prepared programmes and you will indicate what you suggest we should do, but I think that will be much more a Committee question that we shall have to thrash out. I do not think we can do anything in the full Conference.

Mr. Amery: In addition to what I call a second reading of the Naval discussion there will still be technical points to be illustrated, probably on maps, which might more conveniently be done at the Admiralty some afternoon.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Mr. Massey: Like the other overseas Ministers I have listened with an intense amount of interest to the statement made by Lord Salisbury. Prior to the statement being made I was rather afraid that the subject of defence was, to a certain extent, being neglected and that we were beginning already to forget the lessons of the war and the experience that we gained during those awful years. I am glad to acknowledge that I was wrong and that defence is not being neglected. Lord Salisbury reminded us that there were no war clouds on the horizon at the present time. I am glad to be able to agree with him. There are no clouds on the horizon to-night, but there may be plenty here to-morrow morning. I was very glad to have an expression of opinion from Lord Salisbury that what was contemplated—and we have only got to that stage—was for the purposes of defence and certainly not for purposes of offence, and what was in his mind and also that of the Imperial Government—and I think in the minds of all those who have made this subject a study—was that we were only preparing for possibilities, that what was intended was in the way of insurance. That is quite right, but a prudent man insures his house against fire and does not wait for the fire to break out. I know the financial difficulties in every country of the Empire. I think I can appreciate the financial difficulties of the heart of the Empire itself, but the subject of being prepared for any possibility is so serious that I do not think that we should wait too long. Now that brings me up to the other question, what are the overseas countries of the Empire going to do in the way of contributing their share for defensive purposes, and I am thinking now more of Naval defence. That is one of the difficulties of the moment. I do not want to say very much about Naval defence, but I think all those who have looked into the subject will agree that Naval defence is at present at all events far more important than military defence. The war taught us that it is possible not only to get together an army, but to train them within a comparatively few months. I know of men who went from the different overseas countries and in less than six months training they were in the fighting line and gave a very good account of themselves; and I am sure the same may be said of the 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 94 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62729

soldiers who went from the United Kingdom. But you cannot do that with Naval defence. It takes much more than six months to build a capital ship or even a light cruiser.

Progress with New Capital Ships.

I should be glad to learn, when the proper time comes, whether anything is being done with regard to those two capital ships for which tenders I think were accepted quite a number of months ago, and which were intended to be proceeded with, and which, by the way, were agreed to at the Washington Conference. It was understood then that Britain was entitled to build two of the most powerful ships in existence for the purpose of defence.

Mr. Amery: Perhaps I may interrupt at once. They have been under construction since the end of last year, though they have been somewhat delayed by boilermakers' strikes and other troubles. They are well under way.

Mr. Massey: A few months is not serious so long as the ships are being gone on with, and that brings me back to this.

Dominions have not hitherto taken their full share in Naval Defence.

I am strongly of opinion—I am going to quote a word that I have heard very often used in this connection; to my mind it may be an objectionable word, I do not like it, but it has been used already and I am going to use it because it expresses what I intend to say—that we in the overseas countries of the Empire have been "sponging" upon Britain for Naval defence. There is no question about it, but the time has come when we should face our responsibilities, as far as it is possible for us to do so. If certain countries are suffering from financial depression it may not be possible, but even in those cases an advance may be made. I do not want to refer to what my own country is doing, but I would like to say this. I asked Parliament last Session, speaking as Finance Minister, for a Vote of £500,000 for Naval defence and there was no objection raised; a few words of criticism, but nothing serious, and, as a matter of fact, it was agreed to unanimously. Well, I suppose the other countries of the Empire are prepared to do the same thing, perhaps proportionate to their population. I have no doubt that they are. Every country must speak for itself. Certainly I am not going to interfere with the citizens of any other country, but I cannot help thinking that every country of the Empire has an almost equal interest in the subject of Naval defence.

Need for Light Cruisers.

Speaking of the lessons of the last war, and again I come back to my own point of view, I saw it in one of the English papers that during the war New Zealand had lost two big ships loaded to the hatches with food supplies for Britain. Two—we lost twenty-one. They were not all loaded with food supplies and raw materials and that sort of thing. All those which were going to Britain were loaded in this way, but some of these vessels were coming the other way, and, of course, were not carrying food supplies. In case I may be misunderstood I want the Conference to understand that those ships were not all owned in New Zealand. Most of the ships of the New Zealand Shipping Company and of the Union Shipping Company are owned in New Zealand, but there were other Lines whose ships were sunk, but which were not New Zealand owned ships, though they were carrying New Zealand produce. Very well, it seemed to me that what we wanted during the last war in this respect was light cruisers that would keep the trade routes open, and while I am very glad to hear about big capital ships—we have something more to say about them later on, though not this afternoon—I should be glad to know whether anything is being done to provide a sufficient number of light cruisers. When I say light cruisers I am not thinking of good-sized cruisers, I am thinking of the cruiser that will carry 6-in. guns and be able to steam up to 25 knots if required. That is about the type that appeared to me to be wanted during the last war and of which we had not a sufficient number.

If we had had a sufficient number of those I do not think the different countries of the Empire would have suffered to the extent they undoubtedly did, and we should not have had that narrow escape which we had of having our connections cut, because undoubtedly there was a very narrow escape at the time. I do not pretend to speak as an expert, far from it, but if the enemy had been able to cut the connections I do not think we could have held out for very long, as the centres of population, such as this and other countries, were running short of supplies of foodstuffs and raw materials. In making preparations we have got to think of these things, and I have no doubt that they are being thought of not only by Members of Parliament and Ministers of the Crown, but by those whose special business it is to think of such things. I do not want to make myself misunderstood here. I think it was extraordinarily fortunate that the British Navy was able to keep the sea during the last war. It was ready for war and I hope that if ever war comes again we shall be at least as well prepared as we were on the last occasion.

C 62730

Value of Capital Ships.

Just a word with regard to the controversy that has been going on with regard to Battleships. Again, we have got to look back to experience. I am trenching on a subject which the First Lord of the Admiralty will have to talk about; perhaps I am dealing with some material which he may be able to make use of. I have read of what took place in the British Parliament on the question of naval defence; I read what the newspapers had to say so far as it was possible for me to do so; I have read the reviews on the subject, and I have had the opinion of men who do know, men who have had experience, men who took part in the last war. Notwithstanding different debates which I have heard and the different opinions that have been published, I have never seen—nor is it the opinion of one who took a prominent part in the last war and who was able to say—that capital ships would be of no use in the future. On that point, I have been able to form an opinion, but whether it is worth anything remains to be seen. But I cannot help recalling, and I watched it with great interest at the time, that the Navy never lost a capital ship—I am speaking of modern ships—through being torpedoed. We lost the "Audacious," which was mined off the northern coast of Ireland, but that was the only one that I can think of. I am one of those old-fashioned enough to think that we ought to take care of the bridge that carried us over. It was certainly the capital ships—whether battleships or battle-cruisers—that was the class of ship that saw us through the last war. I have read of experiments with old battleships, say, of 20 years of age or more, which have been towed out to sea, and where aeroplanes have tried to sink them and have had great difficulty in doing so. I do not think that is much of an experiment. I want to say that so far as New Zealand is concerned, and so far as I am concerned, I do not think that we should neglect anything in the way of proper precaution. I will leave it at that.

Singapore.

As regards Singapore, I may say the same as I have said with regard to capital ships, it is impossible for a man who is a layman to make up his mind and express an opinion that is of any value unless he has had an opportunity of consulting men who knew the position very much better than he does himself. That was exactly my position. I have come across men who knew Singapore quite well, actually before the war broke out. I heard a great authority express the opinion then that the British countries in the Pacific would never be safe until either Singapore or Hong Kong were properly fortified. I believe I mentioned on a previous occasion that I had had an opportunity of looking at the fortifications of Pearl Harbour which belongs to America. America is within her rights in fortifying Pearl Harbour. The American authorities gave me an invitation to look over it, and the people with me expressed the opinion that Pearl Harbour was positively impregnable. I think it is. I am not thinking of the possibility of going to war with America. I know everything is possible, but this is one of the most improbable things that could happen. That is no reason at all why we should not go on with the fortification of Singapore, and I believe, from expressions of opinion to me, that the American authorities—

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 94 10 11 12 13 14 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62731

not the American people, because I do not think many of them know what is taking place in the Pacific or the position in the Pacific—but the American authorities would, I believe, be pleased rather than otherwise if Britain were to say that she is to go on with the proper fortification of Singapore.

That, of course, will come up again. I do not know that I need follow this further. As I have said, I take a great deal more interest in naval defence at present than military defence, and I think naturally.

Provision for Land Defences of New Zealand.

As for military defence, New Zealand is like Australia. We have a very large number of trained men who, if occasion required, would undoubtedly volunteer for active service. I was surprised on the occasion when there was trouble with Turkey. When our soldiers came back they talked to me and said to me repeatedly: "No more war. If ever you allow the country to be involved in war again, you can go and do the fighting yourself." I do not mean to say those were the exact words used, but that was their meaning. When that trouble came along with Turkey, there was, of course, the sentimental question with regard to Gallipoli, which will never be forgotten either in Australia or New Zealand. When that trouble came, the Government never asked for a volunteer; we had not got to that stage, and we kept it back to the last possible moment. That moment never arrived, and I hope it never will, but in three days 14,000 men, speaking approximately, and 300 or 400 nurses volunteered to give their services if required. They were nearly all men who had seen service, and many of them, I noticed, were among those who had positively said over and over again that they had done with fighting, no more war for them; they were the most anxious of the population to get away when the moment came. I think that in the event of any trouble we need not be afraid of the men of the Empire not doing their duty, and I, myself, am not a bit afraid. The men brought up under the Southern Cross, whether Australia or New Zealand or Fiji or any of the islands, will, I believe, do exactly what they did before. All the same, I do not want to see it. I will leave the rest of what I have to say until the next opportunity, when we shall be able to go more fully into the question of naval defence.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

General Smuts: I should like to ask a few questions. I will not detain you.

Value of Work of Committee of Imperial Defence.

Lord Salisbury referred to the work of the Committee of Imperial Defence and the impracticability, at this stage, of instituting a joint Ministry of Defence such as we have in several of the Dominions. That I quite understand; I also understand the great importance of the work which is being done by the Committee of Imperial Defence, work of the most important kind possible.

Standing Committee of Chiefs of Staff.

In days gone by, when I made a closer study of this question than now, what seemed to me to be very badly wanted was an additional standing Committee of the three heads of the great defence services.

Lord Salisbury: The professional heads?

General Smuts: Yes—the Chief of the General Staff, the Chief of the Naval Staff, the First Sea Lord, and the Air. It seemed to me that it was quite necessary in peace time to get these heads of the three great defence services to work in a standing Committee, so that they learned in peace time the sort of joint work which becomes essential as soon as war occurs.

Lord Salisbury: It is so. I do not want to overburden what I wanted to say, but I had intended to mention that. We have got exactly the arrangement which General Smuts indicates. Very likely it is the opinion which he expressed on a previous occasion which suggested it. At any rate, so it is, and there is a Committee consisting of the three great professional heads of the three fighting services to act as a sort of joint General Staff in commission, and who advise the Committee of Imperial Defence upon all technical questions.

C 62732

Singapore.

General Smuts: A question about Singapore. I raised the question of Singapore in correspondence with the Imperial Government under a misapprehension. When we discussed this question two years ago I was not under the impression, from our discussions, that the point had already been decided by the British Government, and that the information given here was merely for purposes of informing us; I was under the impression that it was an open question.

Therefore some months ago, before the controversy had been raised here politically, I asked that this question of Singapore, the final decision about Singapore, should stand over until we had discussed it here. It appears now that Singapore is an old decision of the British Government taken previous to our last Conference; it is stated in the paper that has been circulated that Singapore had been decided as a question of high policy previous to the last Conference, and that our Delegation that went to Washington went with definite instruction upon this point; and therefore I was belated in raising this question and asking for the decision to be postponed. I understand that, and I am not going to raise that question now. I assume that Singapore, from the naval point of view, is the proper thing; that from the point of the Navy in any future contingency Singapore is necessary and Singapore is the best place as a great Naval Base; and I also assume that Singapore does not involve any question of good faith on our part as regards our old Allies, Japan.

Implications of Construction of Singapore Base.

What troubles me is this. What more is involved in the Singapore matter? The building of a base merely at Singapore is no protection really to Australia and New Zealand and the other parts of the British Empire there. The mere establishment of a base in itself is no protection at all, and we should not by any such step lull them into a false sense of security. They must not think that, once Singapore has been built, on a proper occasion the British Navy can move there and defend them. I am just afraid that Singapore involves much more than that, if it is to be a real insurance to those distant parts of the Empire. Take the case of Port Arthur. Port Arthur was a great naval base which Russia started in the Far East, but it was no protection. Port Arthur was taken by the Japanese, and the efforts which the Russians made afterwards to relieve it simply led to their undoing. The point which troubles me in regard to Singapore is this. Supposing we carry out this idea of creating a great naval base there; what more have we to do in the meantime before a great incident in the future arises and it is going to be used? What more is going to be done in the meantime to protect it? You cannot simply build a base for an enemy to capture. It is close to Japan; it is a few days' steaming from Japan. Therefore, if you build a great base there, supposing trouble were to arise between us and Japan in future, this base may be captured long before the British Navy can move to it and keep it as a base. So that the question which arises is, what more would be required really to defend it, not merely from the land point of view but from the navy point of view? It may even do great harm by lulling Australia and those parts into a false sense of security; and when the danger really comes the first thing that would happen would be the capture of Singapore by a potential enemy which is close by, a few days off.

Is Base Defensible against Japan.

That raises the question: Is the idea we contemplate feasible? Can you have a British Navy in these waters on the Washington basis and move it in time of danger to a base in the Pacific? The 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 94 10 11 12 13 14 15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62733

Washington basis is 5, 5 and 3, 1·7 and 1·7. Compared with Japan our Navy is as 5 to 3, and it is almost inconceivable to me that when the danger ultimately arises in the East, in the Pacific, there will not be danger here too. It is almost inconceivable that Japan or China or any such potential enemy—let us mention Japan confidentially here—it seems to me almost inconceivable that Japan would be raising trouble when she has no European support. If there is the least danger in Europe, is it a feasible proposition to divide our 5 between East and West and to send part of the Navy over to Singapore and keep part here? That is the point that troubles me. If we can build a Navy of the decided superiority which we had formerly, there is no doubt that we could divide it and could send it against both. We could keep sufficient here in the Mediterranean and the Atlantic to serve our purpose here, and the balance we could send to the Pacific; but, having limited ourselves as regards capital ships to those proportions, I am very doubtful whether Australia and New Zealand could safely rely on a division of the Fleet in a future contingency for their protection by a movement of that Fleet from here to those waters. I feel very doubtful about the whole thing.

Lord Salisbury: I do not propose to answer the General now. The First Lord of the Admiralty will answer your points. I may tell you at once that we are quite conscious of all these points.

General Smuts: Yes. I think it is very necessary that in the statement the First Lord is going to make these points should be elucidated, because I do not think it would be fair to Australia and New Zealand to make them think that Singapore is going to make them really safe in future. It may be just the opposite. My own feeling is this: That it will be a very long time before any danger arises in that quarter—a very long time.

Effect of Quadruple Pacific Pact.

The Quadruple Pact for the Pacific will probably be the beginning of a number of similar arrangements, and I do not anticipate that for a long time there will be any danger, and it was from that point of view that I tried in vain at a previous conference to cry a halt to the carrying out of the scheme. It seems to me that the danger just now is so very slight, and so distant in the future, that it would be far better to concentrate our energies in other quarters where the danger, to my mind, is much nearer. I am very sorry that a political controversy has arisen in this country over the matter and that so much attention has been given to the Singapore question, because it must reflect somewhat on our relations with Japan which have been for a long number of years so happy. I am afraid that unfortunately the discussions which have taken place upon the Singapore question itself will not help to improve those relations.

Lord Salisbury: I hope it will not make any difference.

General Smuts: I hope it will not.

Lord Curzon: I ought to say that I had a few words with the Japanese Ambassador, and he altogether ridiculed the idea that the statements which have appeared in the press about Japanese suspicions or Japanese hostility were shared by the Japanese Government. He told me he understood quite well, and that his Government understood, that the matter was well within our rights, and was in accordance with previous decisions and discussions which have taken place, and that he, for his part, did not in the least share the views which had been expressed in the public press.

General Smuts: No. It is a question of public opinion. There is no doubt that this seems as if it is directed against Japan. We cannot cover the impression that in a couple of years, or a year, after we had ceased to be Allies we were building armaments against Japan. It is unfortunate. I do not think there is any serious danger, and therefore I am sorry that we should be reduced to the necessity of weakening or strengthening that impression. To my mind the danger is much greater in other quarters, and I would turn my attention much more in other directions. If one looks at the condition of the World to-day, can you make up your mind we are moving into an era of peace? It may be that we are probably moving into an era of disturbance and unsettlement in the World, and we have to be prepared in a certain sense from a naval, military and air point of view.

c 62734

Dangers nearer Great Britain.

I should not dream of any danger in those distant waters, but much nearer home. The question that arises and has not been discussed, and which it is very difficult to discuss in a full meeting like this, is: What is the position much nearer home? Are we in the position, in case things were to develop in a bad direction very suddenly here, of having undisputed mastery in the Atlantic and in the Mediterranean, and is the impression of our strength at present so convincing that other people would hesitate before they challenged us?

That is a point that has not been raised here at all. Lord Salisbury has discussed Egypt, and he has mentioned the Mediterranean, he has mentioned the Spanish Zone, Tangier, and it is all very vague as to what would happen supposing that there is a breakdown in Spain and that part which wholly upset us, would not that completely destroy the position in the Mediterranean, and interfere with our communications? Then in regard to the Air Service, which I understand is now improving again in this country, what we have to concentrate our attention on is to see that in the Air, on the Sea and on Land, and so on, we are so strong that there is no doubt whatever about what may happen if we were challenged. I think we have devoted so much attention to a question which is quite a minor question; it is only important so far as policy is concerned; but the other question is a very important one, and it has been so for a number of years. I hope the First Lord will be able to give us some reassuring statement on the position of this country from a defensive and offensive point of view in Europe. If any great catastrophe were to take place, we only know the balance of power in Europe has been upset. The German menace has completely disappeared, but we do not know what other menace may be appearing on the scene. We only know that one Power adopted a tone towards us which has not been done for many years, and it is a question whether people are thinking in a more sinister sense than that at which we are taking them, and whether they would take more risks than we expect them to take. All this we might be enlightened upon. These matters are very important, and they may become of very urgent importance in the near future.

Co-operation in Defence.

The Prime Minister of Australia has raised the question of contributions for the defence of the Empire. We agree that that is for the Empire. It is one of the outstanding features, that in case of attack the part attacked may look for assistance from the others. That is a much more powerful thing than the Covenant of the League of Nations; this is the real thing. It is the very nature of the Empire. But, of course, it is difficult for us to say what is going to happen. We can only work out peace schemes, and we have such schemes before us. The Admiralty has been careful to work out what the contribution should be from each Dominion. We can only do our little bit in accordance with the scheme for war time.

Mr. Amery: You say, work out what it should be. We have done what, from our point of view, would be a convenient help. It is a matter for your own decision what it should be.

General Smuts: Yes. We cannot do better now on an occasion like this than follow the suggestions which the Admiralty has placed before us, but it is very difficult for us to go further. It must depend very much upon the spirit which exists in the Empire—a spirit of mutual help and assistance in case real danger were to arise. I have no further observations to make, Prime Minister; it is only some of these fundamental questions which trouble me, and I hope we shall turn our attention to them before we part with this question of defence.

57
58
59
60
61
62
63
94
10
11
12
13
14
15

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62735

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. Warren: I would just say this, that, from the speech of the Marquess of Salisbury, Canada, as regards the East Coast, and Newfoundland are more or less reassured. I say this because his cruise took us into the Mediterranean and the Pacific and not the North Atlantic—I therefore reserve anything I have to say until we go into details later on.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

India's Responsibility for Internal Defence.

Lord Peel: I have only one word to say on this subject as it affects India. The Government of India, as is fairly well known, is responsible for its internal defence, but as regards external defence—that is to say, war with foreign Powers, such as Afghanistan—India relies on reinforcements from this country. Hence, India is of course interested in the question of movements in the Red Sea, Aden and Singapore, but I have to guard myself by saying that internal defence does not imply contributions towards these communications. In the present year India's estimate for its military budget, including the Air, is no less than 40 million pounds sterling, its total budget being, less the Commercial Services, 61 Crore—nearly half its whole budget. These payments, of course, cover the Indian Army proper, and the British Army in India, and the Air Force. The Air Force now is six squadrons, and India would like to increase it to eight squadrons if it had the money. As regards the Royal Indian Marine, that is a subject which will be discussed on Wednesday, I understand. I have some observations to make about that, and I should like to reserve those for that discussion.

FUTURE ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. Baldwin: That, I think, will bring to an end the preliminary discussion which was inaugurated by Lord Salisbury, and we resume on Wednesday morning, when the First Lord of the Admiralty will make his statement and we will get to closer grips with the whole subject. If there is time on Wednesday morning we will take the War Minister's observations, but without any desire to curtail what the members of the Conference may desire to say in reply to the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Mr. Massey: Supposing we do not finish on Wednesday morning.

Mr. Baldwin: At the moment we have Wednesday afternoon for the Economic Conference, but the discussion as at present arranged will be continued on Friday. That is settled anyway. As to whether it will be morning or afternoon, it is rather early yet to say.

Mr. Amery: Could we perhaps fix a date on which we could go to the more detailed discussion of Naval matters, so that the members of the Conference could take them up with Lord Beatty and the Staff, while the general discussion is fairly fresh in their minds?

Mr. Baldwin: You had better apply to Sir Maurice Hankey about that, because he has all the Meetings of the Committees in his head.

Sir Maurice Hankey: Thursday afternoon might be possible.

Mr. Baldwin: I agree it would be convenient to have it as soon after the general discussion as possible.

Sir Maurice Hankey: Could you fix Thursday afternoon provisionally?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

(Adjourned.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 15, 1923.

C 62736

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

SECRET.

E. 9th Meeting.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE NINTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1923, AT 11 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.
The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.
The Right Hon. the EARL OF DERBY, K.G., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for War.
The Right Hon. Sir SAMUEL HOARE, Bart., C.M.G., M.P., Secretary of State for Air.
The Right Hon. L. S. AMERY, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty.
The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.
The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.
The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.
The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.
The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.
General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.
The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.
The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.
General R. MULCAHY, Minister of Defence, Irish Free State.
The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.
The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.
Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.
Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.
Admiral of the Fleet Earl BEATTY, G.C.B., O.M., G.C.V.O., D.S.O., First Sea Lord and Chief of Naval Staff, Admiralty.
General the EARL OF CAVAN, K.P., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., K.C.B., Chief of the Imperial General Staff, War Office.
Air Chief-Marshal Sir HUGH M. TRENCHARD, Bart., K.C.B., D.S.O., Chief of the Air Staff, Air Ministry.
Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.
Commander H. R. MOORE, D.S.O., R.N., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.
Major-General J. H. MACBRIEN, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Chief of General Staff, Canada.
Commodore WALTER HOSE, C.B.E., R.C.N., Director of Naval Service, Canada.
Vice-Admiral Sir ALLAN F. EVERETT, K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., C.B., First Naval Member of the Royal Australian Naval Board.
Brigadier-General T. A. BLANEY, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Australian Representative on the Imperial General Staff at War Office.
Commodore A. G. HOTHAM, C.M.G., R.N., Naval Adviser to the New Zealand Delegation.
General SEAN MACMAHON, Chief of Staff, Irish Free State.
Major-General J. J. O'CONNELL, Assistant Chief of Staff, Irish Free State.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62737

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B., (Secretary.)
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir Robert R. Garran, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. Skelton.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. Thomson, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.
Mr. P. McGilligan.

India.
Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

FOREIGN POLICY.

Mr. Bruce: Before we start, there is one point I should like to raise on a matter connected with foreign policy. I recognise that at this moment the Conference is not particularly well constituted to take a question of that sort, which is a fairly delicate one. I would like to raise it at the earliest possible moment, and may I suggest that perhaps when we adjourn to-day, when we have dealt with the defence side, I might take up a few minutes.

Mr. Baldwin: Is it connected with the naval side?

Mr. Bruce: No, not at all; but I should like the opportunity of raising it at once.

Lord Curzon: Is it something you would like me to give information about?

Mr. Bruce: I will explain. It is something which really deals with the Conference and the actions of the Conference, and which concerns the Dominions as well as Great Britain.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps you will put your point afterwards.

Mr. Bruce: Yes. I thought that would be more suitable.

Mr. Baldwin: I will now call upon the First Lord of the Admiralty.

NAVAL DEFENCE.

STATEMENT BY THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.

Mr. Amery: What I thought would be most useful for me to do would be to give a general conspectus of the naval position, as it has been affected by the Washington Conference, and to initiate a general discussion, which would then be followed to-morrow afternoon by a more detailed and confidential—of course it is all confidential—but a more detailed strategic discussion at the Admiralty, where we could also follow up the more technical points, and members of the Staff could answer questions that any member of the Conference wished to address to them. This morning I thought of stating the naval position generally as I see it, and I only hope that I will not be too long and weary the Conference in doing so.

Superiority at Sea vital to Empire.

If I may go back for a moment to the foundation of things, we have to remember that our Empire is an oceanic commonwealth. "Oceana," as a writer nearly 300 years ago described it, "is a commonwealth for increase, and upon the mightiest foundation that any has been laid from the beginning of the world to this day"—the sea. All the nations and communities here represented live and move and have their being by keeping open the highways of the sea. Our dependence on the sea is not something accidental, but is intimately of the structure of each and every part of the Empire. The economic system, the provision for defence, the external policy of every part of the Empire has grown up right through its history, and is based to-day, on the pre-supposition that the seas are free to us for mutual co-operation in peaceful development and for mutual assistance against external aggression. Any interruption of our sea communications is the severing of the arteries of the life of the Empire, would involve each and all of us in immediate economic disaster and would leave us helpless in the face of attack or invasion.

C 62738

Necessity of keeping Communications open.

Now the object of the naval forces of the Empire is to keep open these vital communications, and their capacity to carry out this duty in the actual event of war enables them to fulfil what is really their primary and their continuous function, viz., to preserve our peace and to secure the safeguarding of our common interests by peaceful diplomacy. There is only one way in which that task can be fulfilled and that is by the capacity of the Navy to destroy or neutralise the naval forces of any Power that attempts to disturb our peace. Wherever that task can be most effectively fulfilled, there and there alone can the Empire as a whole and each part of it, however remote from the actual centre of operations, be effectively defended.

Task of the Navy.

If we have a Fleet strong enough to do this, the whole Empire is safe; if not, then the whole Empire is doomed. There can be no more deadly error than to imagine that any part of the Empire can rely upon a purely local defence. Except for purely subsidiary purposes sea warfare cannot be sub-divided or localised. The main reliance of each and all of us must be a Fleet capable of offensive action at any point where danger threatens. I feel bound to lay stress upon this because the opposite doctrine is so often openly or tacitly asserted, and not least of all here in the United Kingdom, where the abnormal concentration of our Fleet in home waters for something like eighteen years has created the wholly false impression that the navy exists in order to secure the local defence of these islands. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Fleet was concentrated in the narrow seas not in order to be near England, but in order to be near the German Fleet. It was by holding that Fleet that we were enabled, when the war came, to clear all the outer seas of the world within a few weeks. That left the whole Empire secure to concentrate all its resources free from anxiety of defence—its resources, material and human—upon the common task of the war. That grip upon the whole of the seas was also the cutting of the arteries of Germany's economic existence and was the beginning of Germany's defeat.

Now, that this was done in the North Sea and near these islands was a mere incident. It may very well be that in the future, as again and again in our past history, our destiny will depend entirely upon what happens in some distant sea. When I say "our destiny" I mean the destiny of any and each of us; and by "distant sea," distant from any one of us. That depends entirely upon the strategical circumstances of the time, and what is essential is that the Navy should be free to move anywhere to deal with those circumstances.

Air Defence cannot displace Naval Defence.

Now that misconception as to the true function of the Navy is also responsible for the notion, somewhat prevalent to-day, that naval defence can be replaced by air defence. There is no doubt that the development of aviation has created a new menace to the security of these islands and has consequently added a new responsibility and a new burden which the people of these islands have got to bear. But neither that danger, nor the measures we have to take in order to meet it, affect in the least the fact that our existence depends upon keeping open our sea communications, and that only a sufficient Navy can keep those communications open. The importance of the air is bound to grow, and, in its growth, to affect not only the problem of our defence across the narrow seas, but the whole structure and organisation of our armies and our fleets. But it cannot alter certain elementary physical and mechanical facts, and one of these is that the surface between air and water is the plane upon which the greatest weight—whether for offensive or for

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62739

defensive purposes, and in the last resort all fighting power reduces itself to the transportation of weight—can be propelled to the greatest distance with the greatest economy of effort. The sea will always remain the chief base of world-wide mobile power. The air will no doubt supplement it, but it will no more displace it for war than it will displace it for the ordinary purposes of peaceful commerce. The main defence, just as the main trade, of the Empire will continue to be carried on on the surface of the sea.

Importance of Capital Ships.

It is, again, the ignoring of these fundamental underlying mechanical considerations which is responsible for the belief that the capital ship, at any rate, is doomed by the development of submarines and aeroplanes and other lighter forms of craft. On the contrary, I would wish to impress upon you that, within the limits of the progress of construction at any time and of harbour and docking facilities that are available, the larger the ship the greater the fighting efficiency, just as the larger the ship so, on the whole, the greater the commercial efficiency. Every ship of a given tonnage must, by the nature of things, be a compromise between speed, offensive armament and defensive armament. Any increase in any one of these factors, either to secure new offensive power or to meet some new menace, whether it comes from below the surface of the water or above it, cannot be secured without loss in some other direction, except by increase in size. It is that which has led steadily, with the development of naval warfare, to the growth in the dimensions of the capital fighting ship. The experience of the war confirmed the practice and the development of the preceding years as regards the conflict between surface ships. There never was any doubt from beginning to end of the war that the smaller, lighter-armed or slower ship was no possible match for the more powerful, more heavily-armed and faster ship. There is a very striking passage in the first volume of Mr. Churchill's book, in which he describes how, when Admiral von Spee arrived at Port Stanley in the Falklands with the idea of raiding that British port, and saw over a low-lying neck of land the tripod masts of two capital ships, two battle-cruisers, he knew he was doomed. If he had seen them, they had seen him; there was no possible chance for him and his squadron to escape. He met the same fate that he, a few weeks earlier, had inflicted upon Admiral Craddock's gallant squadron, which consisted of smaller, more lightly-armed ships than his. There has been no experience that goes against that mastering and fundamental fact, and the same applies, as far as the experience of the war goes, with regard to the power of the capital ship to hold its own against the submarine or the aeroplane. Undoubtedly the development of each of these means counter-measures in destroyers, in aeroplanes, with the Fleet, and so on; but the fact remains that the capital ship, strengthened by what is known as the "bulge," has so far proved completely the master of the torpedo.

No capital ship of ours was sunk by torpedo from a submarine. Submarines played no decisive part in any of the naval encounters which took place in the late war. In the same way, all our tests and experience indicate that the bulged ship, with its armoured deck and anti-aircraft provision, is effective against bombs dropped from the air either close to its side or on its deck. I am not for a moment depreciating the new factors that arise in war, but they will be complementary to and ancillary to what is still going to remain the main pivot and kernel of the naval battle.

Limitations of Submarines.

The submarine is a very formidable instrument of war, but it is slow, it is weak, it is blind. The only weapon in its power is concealment, and the developments which took place in submarine detection at the end of the war, and which have continued since, have to a large extent robbed it of this, its only weapon. At the end of the war, I have been told by those who operated with the coastal motor-boats hunting submarines, that from the detection by sound of a submarine, by two or three coastal motor-boats working together, it was often a matter of not more than three minutes before that submarine was destroyed. But I should like to bring out this fact, that the power to destroy the submarine by these light surface craft depended entirely on the fact that the surface of the sea was kept open for those light craft by the capital ships behind. The power of the submarine may be a very formidable thing in the hands of a fleet that holds the surface of the sea by its own capital ships; its power is very limited against a fleet that holds the sea. What is, of course, true is that all these new elements have acquired an added importance; you can no longer measure fleets by so many ships of the line, as you did in the old days.

C 62740

Post-War Enquiries into Value of Capital Ships.

The fleet is a great complex of weapons of every kind, but the centre of power in that complex still remains the capital ship. That conclusion was the one to which we came after the most prolonged and careful investigations. The Admiralty initiated a special enquiry into this matter immediately after the war. It continued that enquiry through its staff from that time onwards. The matter was reinvestigated by a special Cabinet committee, under the presidency of Mr. Bonar Law, early in 1921, and practically all the senior officers of the Navy, who had held high command during the war, concurred in the opinion of the naval staff in this matter. Of course, the opinions of those who differed were naturally heard, and they received every weight. I may say that the most vocal and most slapdash critic of the capital ship, Sir Percy Scott, who, I believe, is daily lecturing or writing on the subject, though invited to attend that committee declined to come. The conclusion to which the Cabinet, acting on the advice of the Admiralty, came in this country is precisely the same conclusion to which the naval and constructional staffs of all the other great naval Powers have come, and the whole of the proceedings at Washington were based upon that conclusion; they were based on the realisation of the formidableness of the capital ship, and the whole effort was to limit the numbers and the growing size of those ships as the real and only effective way of limiting the growth of those naval armaments which could be used for offensive purposes. Now, I have dealt with that because Mr. Bruce was specially anxious—and I think others—that this question of the capital ship should be clearly disposed of at the outset, because it does underlie the whole basis of our strategy.

Pre-War Standard of Naval Defence necessary for Empire.

Well, given these general considerations, the next question is, of course, what should be the standard of our naval power? Now, for us, with our absolute dependence for our very existence upon the continuous maintenance of the freedom of the sea, it is essential that as against any Power or combination of Powers, whose armaments or policy constituted a real and definite menace to our security, we should maintain a substantial margin of superiority. That was the policy which we followed in the long years when it looked as if the Franco-Russian alliance was aimed—in part at any rate—against ourselves. That, again, was the policy which we pursued against the still more obvious and definite menace of Germany's naval armaments. Though we knew that we should have allies, both in Europe and in the Far East, we felt bound to maintain against Germany a superiority in capital ships of 60 per cent., and a considerably greater superiority in other vessels; and we certainly did not find in the late war that that was an over-insurance.

Post-War Standard.

Now, the war removed all direct menace to this country; we are no longer confronted with any Power whose policy—at this moment, at any rate—can be regarded as in any way aimed against ourselves. That, naturally, did justify a reconsideration of our policy, and, further, I think it justified not merely the most cautious reconsideration, but a liberal reconsideration which, after the terrible struggle of the war, should give an example and an encouragement to other nations not to renew the competition of armaments, which, though it was not responsible for the late war—the conflict of policy and ambitions was the real cause—was yet not without its influence upon the events which precipitated that war. We felt that we could make a substantial reduction of naval power provided two things at least were assured—one, that we 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 10 11 12 13 14

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62741

maintained a navy large enough to secure the training, the research and the organisation, which you cannot expand again in a moment, for you cannot improvise a navy—that was rightly said here on Monday—in a few months; it takes many years to build ships; it takes far more years to train the senior officers of the staff who know how to handle those ships, not as mere units, but as part of a fleet in action. Therefore we could not afford to go below that point. Again, in view of all our immense responsibilities, we could never afford to go below the standard of at least equality with any other nation. We cannot afford to be clearly and obviously at the mercy of any other Power, however friendly. Mr. Massey was referring on Monday to the fact that, weary as the gallant men of New Zealand were after the war, within four years they were willing enough to come forward the moment an interest which seemed dear to them appeared to be menaced. I am afraid that what is true of our own people is no less true of others. We have seen enough, even in the last few months, to realise that the temptation to use force is one which nations are easily liable to fall into. That certainly was the view that we held, but, subject to that, we made it clear—as clear, I think, as it could possibly be made—to the whole world that we wished to discourage any competition in naval armaments. We stopped the building of every ship that was on the stocks at the Armistice. We—until only a few months ago—had not laid down a single capital ship since 1916. We scrapped in all something like 2½ million tons of fighting ships. And yet the lead which we were giving to the world of a Naval Holiday did not appear—for a considerable time, at any rate—to have any influence upon other nations. In the United States and in Japan, on the contrary, great fleets of new ships, embodying all the lessons of the naval actions of the war—lessons which profoundly revolutionised naval construction, and created a wide gulf in the fighting efficiency between pre-Jutland and post-Jutland ships—these great fleets of post-Jutland ships were being hurried forward feverishly on the stocks of those two Great Powers.

Position at 1921 Conference.

That was the position when the last Conference met in 1921. That Conference met on the eve of the Washington Conference, at which it was hoped that some pause would be set to that competition. While taking the view that definite recommendations as to co-operation between the different parts of the Empire should not be made, or laid before the respective Parliaments of the Empire for their final determination, until that Conference had come to its conclusions, the Imperial Conference of 1921 yet held that equality with the naval strength of any other Power was the minimum standard for our security.

Washington Conference.

It was with that resolution of the Imperial Conference before us, and with the co-operation of the Dominion representatives, that we entered upon the Conference at Washington. We went to that Conference with a firm resolve to endeavour to make it a success. I think we succeeded beyond the best hopes of anyone who entered it. I need not refer to the great part that Lord Balfour and all the British representatives played at that Conference, but I should like to say a word about the important part that we, as a Government, played in making the results of that Conference sure after the agreement itself was concluded.

Action taken by Great Britain in carrying out Washington Agreement.

I believe that the act of faith by which we followed up that Treaty, by at once reducing our forces, though it exposed us to grave risks, was an essential step in bringing about that confirmation and ratification of the Washington Agreement, which has taken place finally in the last few months. Without waiting, we at once began to scrap, and relegated for scrapping twenty capital ships. We reduced our Navy by 20,000 officers and men, a thing not necessarily included in the provisions of the Treaty at all, but a further earnest of our resolve to act in the spirit of the Treaty, a thing very difficult, very painful, for us to have to carry out. We brought down our Navy estimates from a gross sum of 92½ millions in the year 1921–22 to under 61½ millions, that is to say, a reduction of 33⅓ per cent, in the estimates of the current year. These were undoubtedly immense gains to the taxpayers of this country, but they were also, I think, an immense gain to the taxpayers of the world, and a great contribution to the recovery of the world from the effect of the war. Certainly we have shown that we were in every way willing to bring about peace and to encourage peace.

C 62742

Circumstances favourable for Washington Agreement.

Now that, I think, was a great achievement and one of hopeful augury. But I do think it is essential to realise that it was only possible in very peculiar circumstances, that all the circumstances were peculiarly favourable to achieving the result that was achieved there. You had three Powers at vast distances from each other which were not engaged in any real direct conflict of interest. There was no such conflict of ambition or interest or racial feeling as divides the nations of Europe to-day. None of those Powers could get at each other except by sea, and therefore the problem of the limitation of naval armaments was not complicated by the further problem of considering how land and sea armaments were affected, both as between the three Powers and as against other Powers outside. You were able to take the naval problem in isolation again, we all had something to bargain with. The other great Powers had battle fleets which they had begun and upon which they had spent a good deal of money. But they were committed to a great deal more. We, on the other hand, had just begun laying down squadrons of new ships of a design far more effective, more formidable, than any that had preceded them. I have no doubt whatever that the fact that we had laid down four ships, the knowledge that those four ships were superior to any other ships that would be afloat when they were launched, mitigated the objections which the technical staffs of the other great Powers would undoubtedly have pressed with the utmost insistence against the proposals for scrapping ships upon which so much work had already been done. I entirely agree with what Mr. Bruce suggested the other day, that, when the period of this Treaty comes to an end, it will be of the greatest moment in securing its renewal, possibly on even more far reaching terms, if at the end of that period we are not in a position of complete strategical helplessness in the Pacific. Even so, agreement was only reached by the wisdom of those who were concerned, who concentrated on the one definite and simple test, the fighting strength of battle fleets, namely, on the number and size of the capital ships, and those vessels like aircraft carriers which are essential parts of the fighting fleet, and upon such limitations as prevented new capital ships being created under other names. I think that if the Conference had once attempted to get off that standard of comparison which deals with actual fighting strength and which can be measured relatively, and had embarked upon the question of cruisers and lighter craft whose provision depends not merely upon the size of other fleets but upon the duties which they have to fulfil, infinitely greater and more complex in the case of our Empire than any other Power in the world, it would have been quite impossible to arrive at any agreement. After all, any figure that would meet our greater duties and responsibilities would necessarily have to prescribe a far greater cruiser strength for ourselves than for the United States, and any one who knows anything of public opinion in the United States would realise that they would never agree openly and avowedly to an arrangement by which they would condemn themselves to a very marked inferiority in cruiser strength. In fact, take even the case of capital ships; France and Italy only subscribed because as a matter of fact the standard which was set up was entirely beyond any standard which under any circumstances either of them would contemplate working up to during the duration of the Treaty.

Position resulting from Agreement. Comparison of British with United States Navy.

The result of the Treaty undoubtedly is that we have substituted what the Conference of 1921 had laid down as the minimum standard of our Naval security—we have made it, as far as capital ships are concerned, the maximum. We have gone in every way further than

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62743

the actual letter of the Treaty obliged us. We have brought down our manning strength to under 100,000, as compared with 116,000 of the United States. We now have 22 capital ships, of which 4 are to be reduced when the 2 now laid down come into commission. The United States are also laying down 2 new ships which will bring their standard to 20; but to arrive at the true comparison we must remember what I said just now, the importance of the difference between the fighting value of ships before the battle of Jutland and those which embody the lessons of that great action. Until our 2 new 35,000-ton built ships are completed, we shall only have 1 partially post-Jutland ship—the "Hood"— as against 3 on the part of the United States and 2 on the part of Japan; while of ships over 30,000 tons, we shall only have 1, as compared with 10 in the case of the United States, and 6 on the part of Japan. Of cruisers and light cruisers we have 50 completed (if we include the Dominion Navies) as against 20 on the part of the United States. That corresponds to our wide-spread necessities of commerce protection. But take destroyers or flotilla leaders; we have 201, including the Dominions, built, and 5 building, as compared with 316 on the part of the United States. Of submarines, we have 57 built, or 65 including the Dominions, and 4 building, as compared with 99 built and 29 building on the part of the United States. We only maintain 15 capital ships in commission as against 18; 37 cruisers as against 10; 65 destroyers and flotilla leaders as against 109, and 39 submarines as against 73. Our manning strength is under 100,000 as I said just now, compared with 116,000. Our expenditure, taking corresponding items of effective expenditure, is about 50½ millions as against 68½ millions. I give these figures simply to show that we have carried out the resolve entered on by the Nations at Washington, not merely in the letter but in the very fullest sense in the spirit, and that we are interpreting the one-power standard in the very widest sense, not in order to maintain in every point and everywhere at least equality with another Power, but, broadly speaking, keeping ourselves in that position which is the very indispensable insurance of our existence as an Empire.

Distribution of British Navy. Mobility essential.

The question then comes with this reduced force, how are we to make the fullest and most efficient use of it? Of course one essential is that our force, limited in quantity, should be supremely efficient in quality. We have, ever since the war, concentrated on bringing education, the training and the research work of the Navy up to the highest possible standard. But it also depends upon the right distribution of the Navy. If we can only keep one main fleet, which is all we can do, under post-Washington conditions, it is essential that that fleet should be mobile. It is no use having a one-power standard unless it can be applied where the need arises. A one-power standard in the neighbourhood of these Islands is of no value for Imperial Defence. That brings me to the consideration of the area over which it is essential to secure our mobility, and the main routes along which we must take the necessary steps to make it possible.

Now let me take the case of the United States. They are able to operate equally in the Atlantic and the Pacific. They have got a sea route by the Panama Canal which goes round, in a wide curve, their great territory. Our main sea route does not go round the British Empire. It lies within our territories. It lies across the Atlantic, through the Mediterranean, across the Indian Ocean to the Pacific—from Halifax to Fremantle—through the Straits of Gibraltar, the Suez Canal, the Straits at Singapore (the Malacca Straits) which are the three keys of that great route which, as a geographer has recently described it, constitutes the main highway of the Empire, and its main axis of symmetry. It is essential that we should be able to move our fleets along that route, but our main fleet naturally tends to be centred at about the middle of that great Empire high-road. That centre is the Mediterranean; for us the middle sea in every sense of the word. General Smuts suggested yesterday that our main and most pressing problems and dangers were more likely to arise in Europe than in the Far East. We fully recognise that, and our main pivot of naval strength will naturally be centred in those European waters, the Mediterranean. But if we are to be able to defend the Empire, we must be free to move east and west for its defence. We are not free to do so to-day, and we shall not be free to do so for many years to come. The reason for that is that during the years that we concentrated everything upon the problem of the North Sea certain changes have come about in the organisation and dimensions of battle fleets which have entirely superseded our former provision for mobility. The fleets of the future are going to be entirely oil-burning, and, as oil is not available with the same freedom that coal was in pre-war days, we can only move if we have our chain of oil reserves along the whole of our Empire routes. Lord Salisbury dealt very fully with that question the other day, but that is a cardinal need of our naval security. The other factor is that the growth of the capital ship and more particularly the necessity of increasing its beam by the anti-submarine bulge has made all the old naval dockyards and most of the commercial dockyards outside home waters and the Mediterranean useless for naval purposes. If a fleet is to operate, if it is to retain its mobility, which requires docking and refitting, if its ships are not to sink after a naval action for want of a repair base to go back to, you must have bases in any of the main areas in which you operate; and it was the necessity for having such a base on the Empire high-road which decided us to develop and to extend the previously existing naval station at Singapore.

C 62744

Singapore.

There is nothing absolutely new about Singapore; it has been a naval station and a defended port ever since 1882. Its importance as a strategical centre of the whole Pacific was fully recognised in the discussions at the Conferences of 1909 and 1911, and it was to be the centre of the Pacific Fleet which it was then contemplated should be composed of the fleet units of the different Dominions, and regular Conferences were held at Singapore or at Penang between the authorities of the different Dominions and the British Naval Commanders-in-Chief to discuss the general Naval policy in the Pacific.

This question was taken up immediately after the war by the Naval Staff, and, as Lord Salisbury mentioned on Monday, its urgency from our point of view and its importance was fully brought out in all the discussions in 1921. I have been refreshing my memory by reading the details of those discussions, and I think we made it clear that we regarded that as the most important work that lay before us for securing our naval position, and as the most urgent. The Washington Conference only affected that position in the sense of strengthening our conviction of its necessity, because in the first place that Conference precluded us from doing anything further to develop or strengthen Hong Kong, and secondly that Conference by the creation of the great zone of self-denial makes it impossible for the United States Naval Force to operate in the Western Pacific at all. The distance from Pearl Harbour to the Philippine Isles is so great that no American battle fleet could cross it. The only way the United States navy could reach the Western Pacific, either to co-operate with us or to defend their own territories single-handed against Japanese attack, would be by the Atlantic and Indian Oceans, and then only if it had a base at Singapore for its use.

Objects of Proposed Base.

Now let me make it clear at once what it is that we propose to do at Singapore. The important base at Singapore will have to serve two purposes. The first is to maintain in Eastern Waters a somewhat larger fleet than we have maintained in the past; that is, larger than we have maintained in the last few years—a fleet with a light cruiser squadron and two, possibly three, capital ships, probably battle cruisers. That is simply going back to what was the normal distribution right up to 1912. I might remind the Conference that the whole plan upon which we were all agreed in 1909 and 1911, at a time when the German menace was already very powerful, at a time when we were actually allied with Japan and practically allied with Russia, was that we still contemplated a force in the Pacific including three capital ships, and part of a unit

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62745

also including three cruisers, gathered from four separate contributing partners—quite an appreciable naval force. The other object of Singapore is to make it at any rate possible for the main fleet to reach Eastern Waters in a great emergency and provide, if not adequate, yet at any rate some docking and repairing facilities there. It is from that point of view that Singapore is being developed. It will have one graving dock for capital ships, there will be a floating dock that may be taken out there for the same purpose or for containing light cruisers; it will have the ordinary sheds for stores and it will have repairing and engineering establishments which go with an important base; though, let me make it quite clear, not a base of the character of Portsmouth or Malta, not one of the biggest main bases of the Empire.

Development of Singapore not contrary to spirit of Washington Agreement.

Now Lord Salisbury dealt on Monday with the suggestion that we were in some way, if not in the letter, in the spirit, acting contrarily to the Washington Agreement. I think it has also been suggested that though no such charge could be brought against us, yet we ought in discussion with the other Powers to have given them a certain amount of detailed information about what we were doing. My own belief is that, if the Powers at Washington had embarked on those sorts of discussions and not confined themselves to the strictly practical proposition on which they were engaged, they would not have contributed to the success of that Conference. As a matter of fact we did not discuss them in detail any more than the Japanese or Americans discussed in detail the arrangements they were making in their bases outside the zone of the self-denying ordinance. As a matter of fact those Powers have gone ahead on a far larger scale with their bases on the other edges of that zone of disarmament than we have, and we certainly realise fully, as I believe they realise about us, that their action, as ours, is purely defensive and constitutes no step towards an aggressive policy.

After all, if any aggression had been in our minds, why should we have abandoned so splendid a position as Hong Kong? Of course, there is a more general charge that it is a provocative act to have a base or any navy whatever in Far Eastern waters. I think the natural answer to that charge is to ask those who make it to look at the large scale map. One talks about Singapore and Japan being in the Far East, and as if they were close together. Singapore is as far from Japan as Gibraltar is from Boston. It can no more be suggested as a menace to the Japanese than Gibraltar is a menace to the United States, or Key West is a menace to the United Kindom.

Lord Curzon: How many days steaming is it from Singapore to the nearest port of Japan?

Lord Beatty: About fifteen days for transports.

Mr. Amery: I come back also again to the fact that our old friend and ally, Japan, could not possibly regard it as an unfriendly action on our part to maintain in the Pacific the kind of fleet that we maintained through many years of the Japanese Alliance, and which, but for the urgent circumstances which immediately preceded the war, we would have maintained actually up to the war. Indeed, I think it is only right to say that the not carrying out of the programme, upon which we agreed with the Dominions in 1909 and 1911, was probably a mistake on our part. I think the event showed that we were too anxious to bring back those two battle cruisers, the "New Zealand" and the "Indomitable," to the North Sea; that, if we had maintained the original programme and kept these battle cruisers in China waters, von Spee's squadron would never have crossed the Pacific, we should have avoided the disaster of Coronel, and should never have been compelled to weaken the fleet in the North Sea at a critical moment in order to send the capital ships which achieved the victory in the Falkland Islands. I think our conscience is absolutely clear against the charge of any provocation or any violation in any way of the spirit of the Washington Treaty. The whole position is a purely defensive one, and one which aims at giving us reasonable mobility, not to-day or to-morrow, but a good many years hence. For many years to come—certainly until after 1931—we have no mobility, no power to do anything to protect the Dominions that lie in the Pacific, if a sudden gust of insensate ambition should come upon any other nation.

C 62746

Strategical Value of Singapore.

Now, Mr. Bruce raised the question whether, given the necessity for a base and a fuelling station in the Far East, Singapore is the best position. I hope Lord Beatty will go into that question more fully to-morrow in all its strategical and other aspects. I will only say this now, that I would like to quote what Sir Bamford Raffles said: "You may take my word for it, this is by far the most important Station in the East, and, as far as naval support and commercial interests are concerned, is of much higher value than whole continents of territory." It is actually the gateway to the Pacific in the same sense as the Panama Canal is to the Atlantic on the other side. Any other route is far longer and far more difficult. It has this further advantage in position. It covers, in the first place, if we hold it, the whole trade of the Indian Ocean, through which the main commerce of New Zealand and Australia passes, as well as of the territories which lie around it. On the other hand, towards the Pacific it lies directly on the flank of any possible aggression against New Zealand and Australia from Japan. But taking the alternative, if we did not hold Singapore, not only would both the Indian Ocean and the Pacific be open to attack from Japan, but there would be no possible means of our reinforcing the outlying Dominions. I see it has been frequently suggested that Sydney would make a better base, or some other port in Australia. If the whole fleet of the Empire were concentrated there at the start, such a base would possibly cover Australia, but not the Indian Ocean, but there is no way of getting the relief and support of Australia except viâ Singapore, and, once that were in the hands of an enemy, the prospects of relieving the outlying Dominions by naval force would be very remote, certainly very difficult.

Not impossible to Defend Singapore till arrival of Main Fleet.

There is a more difficult and more searching question with regard to Singapore put by Mr. Bruce and by General Smuts. It is this, that, given all the importance that we assign to it, can we, short of sinking an enormous cost and an enormous force in its defence, be sure of holding it until the main fleet arrives out to its support?

Well, General Smuts quoted the parallel of Port Arthur, but again I would suggest the importance of looking at the map. Port Arthur is quite close to Japan, a few hours steaming. Singapore is 3,000 miles away, and in between you have Hong Kong, a subsidiary naval base which would have to be reduced before any attack could be made on Singapore. More than that, whatever fleet there is in Pacific waters, although it might not be capable of standing up in naval battle to the Japanese Navy, would have to be done away with and disposed of before it would be possible to send a large expeditionary force over 3,000 miles of sea. We should never have dreamed of sending Canadian or Australian forces across the sea—and they were relatively small in the early days of the war—if a considerable German fleet in being had been cruising up and down the Atlantic or up and down the Pacific. No doubt if there were no navy in those waters, and no navy which could reach it for many months, you could only hold Singapore by an overwhelming land force. Conversely, if you had an overwhelming naval force you would clearly want smaller land defences. But given the great distance of Singapore from Japan, given the existence of Hong Kong and its power to hold out—at any rate for some time—given the presence of a swift if not very powerful squadron in Pacific waters, aided by long-range submarines, given the fact that the main fleet can go out normally in from four to six weeks, there is no reason to fear that Singapore could not hold its own against a powerful naval raid, or the raid of a navy with a small landing force such as is likely to be directed against it. It will want some increase undoubtedly of the present fortifications, which were planned before the war; it will want a certain number of 15-in. guns as against the 9·2-in. guns which were agreed upon

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62747

before the War, and it may want some increase in the present land garrison, and certainly some increase in the air force arrangements; but, after all, they will be on a scale dependent on the fact of its distance, on the intervening distance to Hong Kong, and upon the existence of a fleet in the Pacific. Of course it is perfectly conceivable, as General Smuts said, that, if there were a European combination against us at the same moment as war was declared against us by Japan, we should be in a position of extraordinary difficulty; but, even so, I should think against such a combination we might find allies, and the fact that Singapore could hold out for a good many weeks, possibly for a good many months, might be a very strong inducement to a Power like the United States to come in quickly and to go and help before the situation in the Far East had been entirely and irretrievably altered.

Well, I am afraid I have been very long, but I have attempted to state the strategical position of the Empire as we see it. It is a defensive policy, reduced to the lowest limits possible, even in a reasonably peaceful world, for our security. It is a policy based, not on the conception of the local defence of these Islands, but on our responsibility for the security of the whole Empire with which our own security is bound up.

Co-operation best secured through separate Dominion Navies.

The question that we now have to raise before the Conference is how can we best co-operate in the carrying out of that policy. Now on that issue there has in the past been a certain standing division of opinion between the Dominions and the Admiralty. In past years the Admiralty has tended to the assertion of the view that a unitary navy, under direct Admiralty control, and a contribution either of men or money or ships from the Dominions, would give the greatest efficiency, and, though more than fourteen years ago—in 1909—it accepted the Dominions' point of view, it still recurred to the expression of its own contention that the other system was the best. Well, we have clearly come to the point of view now that, not merely as a matter of political expediency but from the point of view of the efficiency and strength of the future, the naval security of a world-wide Empire must be based on naval strength at home in each part of the Empire; that what we must aim at is the building up in each part of the Empire of a naval spirit, a naval tradition, a navy—small it may be, but rooted in the life of each of the great Nations of the Empire, and what applies to the navy itself applies to all that is auxiliary to it—the equipment of munitions, to everything that makes naval strength a matter not merely centred in these Islands but rooted and having its natural and permanent home in each part of the Empire. In the long run, and looking to the future, you cannot defend a world-wide Empire against contingencies, which may be equally world-wide, from one small island in the North Sea, and therefore our whole view to-day is that we not merely accept but we welcome whole-heartedly the conception of Dominion Navies. We have issued a general paper to the Conference on this point, and in view of the fact, which we have been well aware of, that the conception of Dominion Navies is often criticised in the Dominions themselves by those who think that they are speaking on behalf of the Admiralty or speaking what the Admiralty would wish said, we want to make this abundantly clear.

Possibility of Publication of Admiralty Memorandum on the Subject.

It occurred to us that it might be desirable from that point of view that the Admiralty's view on this matter should be clearly known throughout the Empire, and for that purpose we suggested this particular document might, if the Conference so wished, be published, and of course what has often created difficulties in the past, when things have been published here and only abbreviated telegraphic reports have been sent to the Dominions, that it should be available for publication in the Dominions at the same time as here. I say this because I notice in something that Mr. Mackenzie King said in the earlier discussions of the Conference that he deprecated any idea of memoranda being issued by any Government Department, so to speak, to the public of any other part of the Empire except with the consent and approval of the Governments concerned. Naturally there was no thought in our minds of trying to advocate an Admiralty policy in the Dominions except such policy as each Dominion itself favoured. All that had occurred to us was that now we were accepting whole-heartedly the Dominion point of view in this matter it might be considered desirable from the point of view of each Dominion that this should be as widely known as it could be. What we feel is that it is essential that the Dominion Navies as they grow should be national Navies, national in spirit, national in their organisation, but not local. No Navy can attain real efficiency that is simply tied down to local waters; they must be sea-going Navies. And we also feel that the more complete the administrative and political independence of those Navies, the more essential it is—believing as we all do that in the hour of danger they will have to work together as one—that in their organisation, in their training, in their types of design, they should endeavour so to work by a progressive policy that in the hour of danger they can play the most effective part in a common operation. That was the conception which underlay the arrangements for a Pacific Fleet in 1909 and 1911, and it is upon those lines—co-operation in constituting a common fleet for action in emergency and for building up Navies which although fully national in their character should yet be able to co-operate in the utmost intimacy—that we wish to attack the more intimate and more detailed discussions we shall have with each Government as to what they feel their Parliaments will be willing to do.

C 62748

Interchange of Personnel and Ships.

Now, as I said just now, the more complete our independence of action and administration, the more complete the absolute control of each Parliament, the more desirable that we should understand the Dominions' point of view, that the Dominions should understand our point of view, and also that the various Navies should be kept in touch and in constant interchange. We hope to discuss with you at the Admiralty the question of how the interchange which already exists can be made, as regards officers and men, more effective, and how we can effect the interchange of ships.

Proposed Empire Cruise of "Hood" and "Repulse" and Light Cruisers.

Meanwhile, it seemed to me in this period during which we were contemplating a general redistribution of our Fleet, and before the new developments in the Dominions can even begin to take effect, that it might be very desirable, for closer appreciation among each other of all that Imperial Naval Defence may mean, to do what we have not done for a great many years past, and that is to send a detached squadron—some of our best ships—on tour round the Empire. I hope that that suggestion will meet with the approval of the members of the Conference. The plan which we were proposing to carry out, if it met with general concurrence, was to send the two capital ships—the "Hood" and "Repulse," which made such a splendid impression in Brazil last year—together with a small squadron of modern light cruisers, as soon as we can this autumn, taking advantage of the different seasons so far as to keep as far as possible in the best season all round the tour; to go by way of South Africa arriving there shortly before Christmas and staying for about a fortnight or so. Then up the East Coast of Africa reaching Singapore in February; reaching Australia towards the end of February and staying until towards the end of April, taking opportunities for combined exercises with the units of the Australian Navy. Then to New Zealand for the earlier part of the month of May; then to visit British Columbia; then for part of the fleet, the battle cruisers which Canada has not seen, to go through the Panama Canal and visit the ports of Eastern Canada, but also to take the opportunity of having our fleet on that western coast of America to do what we have also not done for many years, to show the fleet in South American waters and let the light cruisers continue down the west coast of South America and go round home by Cape Horn and Buenos Aires. That cruise, the first I think since the memorable one in 1880 when Lord Clanwilliam went round the Empire with a squadron which included the "Bacchante," on which His Majesty the King was then serving as a junior officer, will, I believe, not only give valuable experience to the Navy of long-distance cruising, which it

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

062749

has not had for many years, but bring home to every part of the outlying Empire the importance of the Navy, and bring home to the people of this country the realisation that the naval defence of the Empire is not a local matter for the home waters of the United Kingdom, but a matter of the wider seas.

Extent of Dominion Co-operation.

Well, there is just one further thing that I should like to say. We have indicated in our staff papers the nature of the co-operation that would be—though it must be for you to give the final judgment—the nature of the co-operation that would be most efficient. The question still remains what will be the extent of your co-operation. That is naturally a matter for the decision of each Government and of each Parliament. I do not think that it will serve any good purpose either to attempt to bargain round this table or to attempt to lay down a rigid standard of equality of contribution. All I think it is fair and reasonable to say is that the burden which is imposed upon this country is an enormous one. Even the maintenance of the reduced one-Power standard does involve us in estimates of something like £60 millions a year, amounting to not far off 25*s*. per head of the population of this country. That burden is over and above the additional burden now imposed by the necessity for our air defence. It is over and above the tremendous burden of our debt. It is over and above the terrible burden of social responsibilities which the accumulation of population in these islands and the disorganisation of the world's markets has laid upon us.

Relative Cost of Naval Defence in Great Britain and the Dominions.

The figures of the contributions of the various Dominions are, of course, widely different. I believe, as compared with our 25*s*., Australia and New Zealand—I am taking New Zealand's new figure—contribute something over 8*s*. a head. The contribution of Canada and South Africa is more in the nature of 1*s*. per head. I give the figures very approximately. I could give corresponding figures as to the ratio of the burden sustained for naval defence as compared with the volume of overseas trade which, after all, is equally vital to each Dominion concerned and to the Mother Country. But I would prefer not to lay stress upon those comparisons, but to urge the importance, broadly speaking, of bringing about a state of things in which the burden should be a little more fairly divided than it is at present. The circumstances of each of us are different, and I do not think we can press for any logical or arithmetical principle in these matters. Mr. Bruce said the other day, and I think very truly, that if he went back to press his Dominion and his Parliament for a substantial advance in Australia's part of the Empire defence, and others did nothing or went back, it would be very difficult for him to do anything. That is very true, of course. It is also true that if we indefinitely sustain a wholly disproportionate burden the time may come when the Parliament of this country, under different auspices maybe, will say that it can no longer take the Imperial view of our naval obligations, that it will succumb to those facile but very dangerous theories which suggest that it is enough if we can maintain our naval position in what are called home waters, though, of course, all the waters of the world are home waters to the British Empire. I would rather not look at it from that point of view.

Need for Progressive and Thought-out Policy.

All I would say is, the time has surely come when every part of the Empire, in accordance with its particular circumstances, should make a definite advance, and that advance must be along the lines, as I think Mr. Mackenzie King said last year in his Parliament, of a progressive thought-out policy. It must cover a period of years. You cannot expect a sudden alteration. Parliaments don't work like that, and no doubt it would be difficult in some of the Parliaments of the Empire to bring about an immediate change of any great magnitude, but what I would press for is that on the kind of lines that we have suggested, the development of successive stages or phases from the purely local to an effective sea-going squadron and from that to sea-going squadrons of which one should always be working not merely locally, but with the main fleets of the Empire, that is a conception towards which each part of the Empire can now begin to make a more substantial advance than it has done. It is not a matter which can be considered really apart from all the other matters which we have been discussing. It is part of the whole policy of mutual support upon which we are engaged. We have been discussing at this Conference the whole question of foreign policy, the object of that policy being, as we are all agreed, to keep down the occasions of war, to reduce the temptations to armaments; in other words, to bring about a condition of things which will enable the common burden of our common defence to be borne with the least effort by each part, to enable each of us to devote our resources and our energies not to purposes of war, but to the purposes of peace. And in the same way we are met together at this Conference to consider how we can help the growth of each other's communities by trade, by markets, by advances of capital. I fully realise that there is the real foundation of the naval defence of the future. It is only as the great Dominions fill out and grow in strength and surplus wealth that they can bear a share in the common defence which is really proportionate to the share this old country has borne for so long. I fully realise that every element in a common Imperial policy has to come together and that what we are trying to do at the Economic Conference may, from the point of view of the defence of the future, be more important than anything else we can do. But I do feel that on all these lines we ought to register some advance. I hope that the discussions we may have among ourselves, the further information we may be able to give you at the more technical discussion at the Admiralty to-morrow, will make it possible for this Conference to mark in the sphere of naval co-operation, as well as in the sphere of general Empire policy, and, above all, of economic co-operation, a real and substantial advance. As was said by Chatham long ago: "Our business largely is the making and ordaining laws for the regulation of navigation and trade throughout the complicated system of British commerce, the deep policy of such prudent acts upholding the guardian Navy of the whole British Empire."

062750

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Mackenzie King, would you like to make some general observations?

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

Appreciation of Mr. Amery's Statement.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I should like to say a word of appreciation of the exceedingly able speech to which we have just listened by the First Lord of the Admiralty. I am sure the spirit of it will appeal very strongly to all of us, and I congratulate Mr. Amery on the manner in which he has presented these problems, which are perhaps the most important of all the problems we have to consider. I will not take up the time of this Conference by referring to the Conference at Washington or to Singapore and the other matters which the First Lord has touched upon, but I think perhaps it would be advisable, seeing this meeting is for the purposes of general discussion, to take advantage of the opportunity to say a word or two about considerations which we feel are all-important in the discussion.

Welcomes Change in Admiralty Standpoint.

First, let me say how gratifying it was to hear what the First Lord of the Admiralty said in regard to the point of view of the Admiralty, the change in the point of view of the Admiralty in respect of the Dominion Navies. I think that changed point of view indicates perhaps better than anything else what we in the Dominions have most in mind in seeking co-operation rather than centralisation in these matters of defence. The original point of view of the Admiralty was that, the more centralised in every particular matters of defence could be, the more effective and better the outcome. I think we might admit at once that, from the point of view of strategy, efficiency and economy, the Admiralty were perhaps right, speaking of the defence of the Empire as a whole. On the other hand, there is always the difference between the political point of view and the technical point of view, and the political point of view, inasmuch as it lies at the basis of all the rest, cannot receive too full consideration. I do not think it would be

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 105 11 12 07 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62751

possible for the Dominions, whether in relation to Naval, Military, or Air forces, to concur in any policy in the nature of a highly centralised policy. The question in the end comes back to one of taxation. All these matters in the last analysis are questions of taxation, and those of us who are really interested in the defence of the Empire have to ask ourselves, above every other question: How can the taxes be raised for the purposes for which we require them? I was a member of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government at the time the naval policy was introduced, and I know that the reason we held so strongly to the view of Dominion naval services was that we felt that, if anything in the nature of contributions were requested. if anything in the nature of centralisation of organisation was expected, we could never expect the Dominion to respond, as we felt sure it would were the people to feel that the naval service of the Dominion was the natural outgrowth of their national standing and national status. If that is understood and appreciated, I think it should give the key to the whole situation as to what may be possible in the future and the lines on which we should proceed. I like the expression used by the King in his speech to the school children on the 24th May, which was distributed by means of gramophone records throughout the Empire, that the British Empire is a community of free nations. In that thought one has possibly the key to the situation. The British Empire is a community, a great community. It has community interests; it has community obligations; it has community responsibilities, and we in the Dominion of Canada, as well as all the other Dominions, recognise that.

In matters which affect the honour and integrity and the common interests of the community of nations, Canada, I know, is ready to do her share and to do it well, but while the British Empire is a community of nations, a sort of League of Nations, a League within the world League, it is a community of "nations" and, as such, the national interest cannot be stressed too strongly in our Parliaments when dealing with the questions which come before us. The more we are in a position to lay emphasis on the national status which has been attained, the more easily will we be able to accomplish the aims we have in view.

Position of Canada as regards Defence.

I should like to take occasion, at this moment, to refer to an expression which Mr. Massey used at our last meeting, and which I do not think should be permitted to pass. Mr. Massey said that he thought the Dominions had been sponging too much on the mother country in the past. I do not know how that may present itself to the minds of some, but I desire to take strong exception to it, so far as Canada is concerned. I do not think Canada in any particular has been sponging. The history of the relationship of Canada with the mother country will show that, far from sponging, Canada has been more than ready to assume obligations, and has assumed obligations, in a chivalrous and large way. If one takes the history of the Dominion from the time that Canada was acquired by the British after the period of the Seven Years War, it will be recalled that the first difficulty that arose on the North American Continent was the revolt of the English Colonies. Had Canada at that time taken the same attitude as the other English Colonies there would have been no Canada as part of the British Empire to-day. I think we ought to remember that sometimes when we talk about the loyalty of the French Canadians. As a matter of fact, on different occasions Canada has been saved to the British Empire through the position which the French Canadians have taken. Coming to the next period, the war of 1812–14, Canada was in large part the battleground of that conflict and there again it was the stand taken by the Canadians which saved Canada as a part of the British Empire. Up to the days of Federation, this country, controlling the commercial policy and controlling largely the entire political situation, thought it advisable to keep stationed British garrisons of Regulars in different parts of the Dominion. When the Federation was effected and Canada was given larger freedom in the matter of self-government and the management of her own affairs and the shaping of her own policies, she undertook to establish a department of National Defence and sought to have the British troops withdrawn and to relieve Great Britain of any responsibility in that direction. Steadily from that moment British soldiers and officers were gradually withdrawn from the Dominion, and Canada has assumed full responsibility in the immediate control of her defences. The obligation with respect to naval defence was recognised a little later, in a small way at the beginning, but nevertheless recognised as an obligation on Canada's part. There were naval stations at Esquimault and Halifax which were imperial stations at which the British Navy had its own officers and men. We took over those naval stations, and we also undertook the establishment of a Canadian Naval Service. At the time of the Sudan War, some men were recruited, a few, from Canada; but, from the Canadian point of view, we were in no way responsible for the war in the Sudan; it was no action on the part of Canada which occasioned it. When it came to the South African War we supplied contingents; though we were in no way responsible for that conflict, we were not taking an attitude of sponging on the mother country at that time. In the last Great War, I think it will be admitted that all the Dominions recognised to the full the community of interests which they had as parts of the British Empire and responded in every way to the utmost of their ability. In a word, I am unable to see in Canadian history a point where Canada, since she has attained her status as a country, has occasioned the slightest concern to the mother country from the point of view of what was essential in the way of defence; I can think of no action or incident, in consequence of the Dominion's position or the attitude we have taken, that has involved the mother country to the slightest degree in the possibility of war. On the other hand, where in other parts of the Empire situations have arisen which have been critical for the Empire as a whole, and more particularly to the mother country, Canada has recognised her obligations to the full. I think it well to say this, because I do not believe it is helpful to any of us that there should be comment of the kind to which I am referring. It certainly does not call forth the spirit of national pride or pride in our British connexion which we are all seeking to further, and which lies perhaps deepest of anything in our natures. I have mentioned these happenings. They indicate a trend, and that trend is one which I feel, with confidence, will develop as the need continues.

C 62752

Policy partly dependent on Geographical Position.

It is well perhaps, in considering defence, that we should all recognise that each country has its own peculiar problems to contend with arising in considerable part out of its geographical position. I can see quite clearly that, were I a citizen of the British Isles or of an Island Continent like Australia or an Island Continent like New Zealand, I would have an intense interest in the naval situation, an interest which I cannot conceive the Canadian people, who are inhabiting half a large continent not so immediately associated in all particulars with the sea, are likely to have; that factor, I think, has to be taken into account in considering questions of naval policy. I can see, for example, where it might be possible to interest Canada in air development, where it might not be possible to interest some other part of the Empire in the same way. I believe that the spirit of this Conference is that we should try to discover wherein each of us, having regard to our particular situations, can work out most effectively the co-operation and aid which we would like to be able mutually to give.

Status of Conference.

There is one other point that I think at this moment I ought to make quite clear here. It goes back to what I said on the first day, and in the remarks of the First Lord of the Admiralty it seems to me that he has kept it in mind throughout, that is, that we at this table cannot be too careful not to assume powers which we have not got. We have no right, as I see it, to regard ourselves as a Cabinet shaping policy for the British Empire. We are here as the representatives of Governments, deriving what power we have from that circumstance and that fact alone. It is easy to use words and phrases, but there is grave danger of very critical situations arising out of them when it comes to satisfying the expectations that are raised thereby. The word Oceanic Common-

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 10 5 11 12 07 13 38 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62751

possible for the Dominions, whether in relation to Naval, Military, or Air forces, to concur in any policy in the nature of a highly centralised policy. The question in the end comes back to one of taxation. All these matters in the last analysis are questions of taxation, and those of us who are really interested in the defence of the Empire have to ask ourselves, above every other question: How can the taxes be raised for the purposes for which we require them? I was a member of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government at the time the naval policy was introduced, and I know that the reason we held so strongly to the view of Dominion naval services was that we felt that, if anything in the nature of contributions were requested, if anything in the nature of centralisation of organisation was expected, we could never expect the Dominion to respond, as we felt sure it would were the people to feel that the naval service of the Dominion was the natural outgrowth of their national standing and national status. If that is understood and appreciated, I think it should give the key to the whole situation as to what may be possible in the future and the lines on which we should proceed. I like the expression used by the King in his speech to the school children on the 24th May, which was distributed by means of gramophone records throughout the Empire, that the British Empire is a community of free nations. In that thought one has possibly the key to the situation. The British Empire is a community, a great community. It has community interests; it has community obligations; it has community responsibilities, and we in the Dominion of Canada, as well as all the other Dominions, recognise that.

In matters which affect the honour and integrity and the common interests of the community of nations, Canada, I know, is ready to do her share and to do it well, but while the British Empire is a community of nations, a sort of League of Nations, a League within the world League, it is a community of "nations" and, as such, the national interest cannot be stressed too strongly in our Parliaments when dealing with the questions which come before us. The more we are in a position to lay emphasis on the national status which has been attained, the more easily will we be able to accomplish the aims we have in view.

Position of Canada as regards Defence.

I should like to take occasion, at this moment, to refer to an expression which Mr. Massey used at our last meeting, and which I do not think should be permitted to pass. Mr. Massey said that he thought the Dominions had been sponging too much on the mother country in the past. I do not know how that may present itself to the minds of some, but I desire to take strong exception to it, so far as Canada is concerned. I do not think Canada in any particular has been sponging. The history of the relationship of Canada with the mother country will show that, far from sponging, Canada has been more than ready to assume obligations, and has assumed obligations, in a chivalrous and large way. If one takes the history of the Dominion from the time that Canada was acquired by the British after the period of the Seven Years War, it will be recalled that the first difficulty that arose on the North American Continent was the revolt of the English Colonies. Had Canada at that time taken the same attitude as the other English Colonies there would have been no Canada as part of the British Empire to-day. I think we ought to remember that sometimes when we talk about the loyalty of the French Canadians. As a matter of fact, on different occasions Canada has been saved to the British Empire through the position which the French Canadians have taken. Coming to the next period, the war of 1812–14, Canada was in large part the battleground of that conflict and there again it was the stand taken by the Canadians which saved Canada as a part of the British Empire. Up to the days of Federation, this country, controlling the commercial policy and controlling largely the entire political situation, thought it advisable to keep stationed British garrisons of Regulars in different parts of the Dominion. When the Federation was effected and Canada was given larger freedom in the matter of self-government and the management of her own affairs and the shaping of her own policies, she undertook to establish a department of National Defence and sought to have the British troops withdrawn and to relieve Great Britain of any responsibility in that direction. Steadily from that moment British soldiers and officers were gradually withdrawn from the Dominion, and Canada has assumed full responsibility in the immediate control of her defences. The obligation with respect to naval defence was recognised a little later, in a small way at the beginning, but nevertheless recognised as an obligation on Canada's part. There were naval stations at Esquimault and Halifax which were imperial stations at which the British Navy had its own officers and men. We took over those naval stations, and we also undertook the establishment of a Canadian Naval Service. At the time of the Sudan War, some men were recruited, a few, from Canada; but, from the Canadian point of view, we were in no way responsible for the war in the Sudan; it was no action on the part of Canada which occasioned it. When it came to the South African War we supplied contingents; though we were in no way responsible for that conflict, we were not taking an attitude of sponging on the mother country at that time. In the last Great War, I think it will be admitted that all the Dominions recognised to the full the community of interests which they had as parts of the British Empire and responded in every way to the utmost of their ability. In a word, I am unable to see in Canadian history a point where Canada, since she has attained her status as a country, has occasioned the slightest concern to the mother country from the point of view of what was essential in the way of defence; I can think of no action or incident, in consequence of the Dominion's position or the attitude we have taken, that has involved the mother country to the slightest degree in the possibility of war. On the other hand, where in other parts of the Empire situations have arisen which have been critical for the Empire as a whole, and more particularly to the mother country, Canada has recognised her obligations to the full. I think it well to say this, because I do not believe it is helpful to any of us that there should be comment of the kind to which I am referring. It certainly does not call forth the spirit of national pride or pride in our British connexion which we are all seeking to further, and which lies perhaps deepest of anything in our natures. I have mentioned these happenings. They indicate a trend, and that trend is one which I feel, with confidence, will develop as the need continues.

C 62752

Policy partly dependent on Geographical Position.

It is well perhaps, in considering defence, that we should all recognise that each country has its own peculiar problems to contend with arising in considerable part out of its geographical position. I can see quite clearly that, were I a citizen of the British Isles or of an Island Continent like Australia or an Island Continent like New Zealand, I would have an intense interest in the naval situation, an interest which I cannot conceive the Canadian people, who are inhabiting half a large continent not so immediately associated in all particulars with the sea, are likely to have; that factor, I think, has to be taken into account in considering questions of naval policy. I can see, for example, where it might be possible to interest Canada in air development, where it might not be possible to interest some other part of the Empire in the same way. I believe that the spirit of this Conference is that we should try to discover wherein each of us, having regard to our particular situations, can work out most effectively the co-operation and aid which we would like to be able mutually to give.

Status of Conference.

There is one other point that I think at this moment I ought to make quite clear here. It goes back to what I said on the first day, and in the remarks of the First Lord of the Admiralty it seems to me that he has kept it in mind throughout, that is, that we at this table cannot be too careful not to assume powers which we have not got. We have no right, as I see it, to regard ourselves as a Cabinet shaping policy for the British Empire. We are here as the representatives of Governments, deriving what power we have from that circumstance and that fact alone. It is easy to use words and phrases, but there is grave danger of very critical situations arising out of them when it comes to satisfying the expectations that are raised thereby. The word Oceanic Common-

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 105 11 12 07 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62753

wealth is, for example, a fine word; it is a splendid word, but if the effect of its use is to convey to the minds of all who are present here that we sitting at this table are shaping the policy of that Oceanic Commonwealth, as a single Cabinet entrusted with any such powers, I am sure, when we get back to our Dominions, we will find that a different conception of our functions and duties has been entertained by those we represent. Certainly when I get back to Canada I would find that the people there would say very quickly: "Well, Mr. King, we are glad you enjoyed your stay in London, but evidently you got carried away with it; you have forgotten entirely our conception of your duty at that Conference, which was to represent Canada, present her point of view, receiving at the same time the points of view of the other Governments as far as you were able, not questioning the community of interests or our desire to further it."

Ultimate Control lies with Parliament.

The people of the Dominion have never given to me or to my colleagues any authority to say how far Canada is to be committed by what happens somewhere else, say in Egypt or in Africa. If they thought that, by using the words, "one defence of the Empire," we were committing Canada to responsibility as respects international complications and international difficulties that may arise in other quarters of the British Empire, there would be a feeling of alarm and concern that it would be almost impossible to describe. The man whom I think it is well to be on the look-out for, the real enemy, is the one who is watching for weapons with which he can defeat us, and I for my part do not wish to put into the hands of any person, if there are any such in the Dominion, who wishes to criticise British connection and our position within the British Empire, a weapon that may be used effectively against me in my desire to see the Empire maintained and developed. I should feel that the most serious impression that could be conveyed to Canada at the present time—I am not speaking of the other Dominions—but the most serious impression that could be conveyed to Canada certainly would be that the aim and object of this Conference was in some way to commit the Dominions to responsibilities as respects matters over which their Parliaments have no control. It would be making for disunion, not for union.

Relations of Canada with United States.

Let me bring out this further point which, I think, having regard to Canada's position, should be brought out, and which involves considerations we do well always to remember. We are right alongside a vast continent with which we have to compete in every particular. Geographically we are handicapped in that competition all along the way. Our winters make it more difficult for our railways to operate, our seasons are not as long or as varied as the seasons of the country to the south of us, and we have the handicap of a smaller population. The American people say a great deal about their security lying in the circumstance that they are a great continent by themselves and are not involved in situations across the Atlantic and across the Pacific. I do not say that they are right in some of the implications drawn from that point of view. I think that we are all members of a great family, all of us are members of a world community and we have world obligations, but it is important, I think, from the point of view of the British Empire, that when we are trying to people our country, particularly our Canadian West, with numbers of new immigrants, to build up a strong population there, we should not do anything which will create in their minds the idea that because they are settling in the part of North America which is British they are running risks and incurring obligations with respect to situations arising in parts remote from America, which they would not have if they were south of the line. I put that forward, recalling Lord Curzon's words at our opening meeting here that, after all, the truth is the one thing that we ought to speak at this table, and speak it fearlessly.

Dangers of Phraseology.

What I have said about one foreign policy, and am saying about a single policy of defence, relates to the care with which we use particular terms and phrases, to be sure that when an expression is used we all mean by it the same sort of thing. For example, I may use Mr. Bruce's expression of the other day, that the British Empire is one and indivisible. I can use that expression, but I have to be very careful to make clear just what I mean by it, just what the impression is that I am seeking to convey. We believe that the Empire is one and indivisible, it may be said also of the Godhead that it is one and indivisible; so much depends upon what it is that it is meant to emphasise. There are aspects of imperial relationships of which account must be taken as respects the separate character of its parts. It is not true that in all particulars the Empire is indivisible; it is divisible, and very distinctly divisible. It is divisible geographically, racially, politically, and in a thousand ways, and we have to take account of all these divisions.

C 62754

Object of Conference. Mutual Help dependent on Mutual Knowledge.

When I say that we feel that in the matter of defence we must be careful to assert the national note rather than the imperial note, I am saying what, as a friend of the Empire, I believe will free us from dangerous criticism; I believe in stressing the point that is going to make for the permanence of the Empire. I come back to the change of view of the Admiralty as illustrative of what I mean. The man who emphasised the importance of the national position with regard to the Canadian Naval Service was set down at the outset, by so-called imperialists, as a separatist. He was denounced as an enemy of the Empire. To-day, after a period of a very few years, we hear, from the lips of the First Lord of the Admiralty himself, of the wisdom of the position taken at that time from the point of view of what will make for the permanency of the Empire. It is that point of view that I am anxious we should all clearly comprehend, so that when we go back to our respective countries we may say with truth and with due appreciation of what this Conference has stood for, that, while we come back with a knowledge of the difficulties with which Britain is contending, and with which other parts of the Empire are contending, we also come back with ampler knowledge as to how we can be more and more mutually helpful. We shall then be in a position to shape our policies in accordance with what is going to make most effectively for the mutual interest.

Undesirable to publish Admiralty Memorandum in Dominions.

In conclusion, as the First Lord has made mention of it, may I say I do take strong exception to the publication in any of the Dominions of any memorandum prepared by the Admiralty, or by any other Department of the British Government, without the full sanction and authority, in the first instance, of the Governments of those Dominions. I do that for this reason. It is a fundamental political principle in any theory of self-government. If the people of Canada—I do not care for how trivial a reason—were to get the impression that in some way or other the British Admiralty or any other Department of the British Government were trying to appeal over the heads of the Canadian Government to the electorate, there would be produced a political situation which it would be very difficult to cope with, and I do not know of anything that would bring about such a situation more quickly than the publication of an Admiralty memorandum. One has simply to suggest carrying the procedure to other Departments to see what it really signifies. If an Admiralty memorandum, on a matter of defence, why not also a memorandum from the War Office on the militia? Why not a memorandum from the Treasury as to finance? I am quite prepared to agree that we cannot get too much in the way of information. We cannot be too appreciative of what the Admiralty can give us in the way of information and help; we welcome it, and we want all we can get of it.

Only Dominion Cabinets can settle what should be Published.

But we want it given to the Minister who is responsible, and we want our Cabinet to have the right to consider its significance. Then we will decide whether, in the interest of Canada, or in the interest of the British Empire, it is wise to give any particular

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 105 11 12 07 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62755

memorandum publicity. I believe we shall be on safe lines so long as we remember that it is Governments that are conferring here; in whatever we do, whether it relates to foreign policy, defence, or anything else, it is all-important that Governments should speak to Governments, not that the individuals here should try to work out a single defence policy for the Empire, but that we should make it possible for our own Cabinets to give full consideration to whatever in the way of statement is to be given to Parliament and to the people. Perhaps it is a little difficult to appreciate here just how jealous, in a very proper way, all members of a Cabinet are as to having the right to have their voices heard when a policy of large import is being considered. They have their problems. Our Ministers from the prairies and our Ministers from the manufacturing districts are as much concerned in having a say in the shaping of naval policy as are the Ministers who come from the provinces of British Columbia and Nova Scotia, which border on the sea; and I should hesitate in their absence in any way to try and commit any of my colleagues without their having an opportunity of having their voices heard.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Appreciation of Mr. Amery's Statement.

Mr. Bruce: I said a few words in regard to this question the other day, but there are one or two things I should like to add now, after the general statement that has been made by the First Lord of the Admiralty. I think we all very much appreciate the manner in which he dealt with the question, and we appreciate above everything the tone which he took, and the extraordinary tact he displayed in presenting the position to us, particularly in dealing with the position of the Dominions towards the whole broad question of defence.

Position of Australia as regards Defence.

With regard to the broad principle that Mr. Mackenzie King has raised, I, of course, am in the same position as he in some respects, but apparently I am in a different position in other respects. Nothing that I can do here will bind Australia in any way. That is a matter for Australia's Parliament, and there is no Dominion that is more jealous of the rights of Parliament or is more determined that the authority placed in their hands shall not be exercised by any other body. But apart from the matters which would have to be determined by Parliament, there are broad principles involved which Parliament has already been consulted upon. I put the Agenda of each of these two Conferences upon the table of the Houses of Parliament, and I indicated in broad general outline what views I proposed to put forward on behalf of the people of Australia. The questions were very fully debated, and at the end of the debate a direct vote was taken which, as nobody in Australia has a shadow of doubt, was taken upon the general principles that had been enunciated. It is certain that at a later stage we shall have to consider the broad aspects of the position of the Dominions which the Prime Minister of Canada has raised, particularly in connection with foreign policy, but I do not think that I need delay this particular meeting to deal with it.

Willingness to participate in Naval Defence.

With regard to the question of naval defence, in broad principle Australia's position is perfectly clear, and there seem to be very few issues upon which our mind has to be made up. Australia certainly agrees with every word spoken by the First Lord of the Admiralty at the beginning of his speech, with regard to the vital necessity, from Australia's standpoint, and from the standpoint of the Empire as a whole, of maintaining our sea power and being in a position to protect the whole of the trade routes of the world. On that point Australia is perfectly clear. There is an overwhelming opinion that that is vital to our individual interests in Australia, and vital to the interests of the whole Empire. Taking that view, Australia believes that the Empire must have a navy which is adequate for the purpose which we regard as so vital. Having got that far in general principle, we then come to the question of whether Australia is prepared to play any part. On that question Australia takes the general view that she certainly must play her part, and that she must do something to help in the provision of that naval strength which we say is so vital. That principle has been affirmed by Parliament as recently as when I left Australia, and has been affirmed over a very long period now by the action that we have taken with regard to the maintaining of our naval unit. So that, on the broad general principle, there is no question what the view of the Australian people is, and no necessity to go and consult them again. But in saying that I am not committing them to anything, I am merely saying here what Australia has told me to say. When we come to the question of what particular contribution Australia will make, that, of course, is a matter for the Parliament of Australia to determine, and the decision of Parliament is free and uncontrolled. But I think we shall not get very far unless we are prepared to discuss with the Admiralty any proposals the Admiralty puts forward; and the feeling in Australia, prior to my leaving for the Conference, certainly was that we are quite prepared to discuss the proposals which have been put forward to indicate how far we believe Australia can go, the kind of assistance that Australia would be most prepared to give, and generally whether any scheme can be mapped out which can be taken back and submitted to the Parliament in Australia. For my own part, I am perfectly prepared to go that far, and there is no question but that the people of Australia understood that that was the action I would take; but they also recognised that I was committing them to nothing until I had returned to Australia and had submitted to them, for their consideration and decision, any proposals that had been considered here.

C 62756

With regard to particular points that have been raised, I do not think that at this stage it is very necessary to deal with them. We shall have the opportunity to-morrow to go into the questions which are in some respects technical. I am very much obliged to the First Lord for the information he gave to me to-day in regard to some of the questions I raised, and also for his assurance that it will be possible to get any further information we desire.

Welcome Change in Admiralty Standpoint.

But I must again emphasise this point, which was dealt with by the Prime Minister of Canada, that any assistance Australia may give must be along the lines which we have established for ourselves over the last fourteen or fifteen years. We have maintained from the beginning that our contribution should be by means of the maintenance of a unit; an autonomous unit, however small, over which we should have complete control at all times; but that in a period of national danger or in a period of war the Australian unit should be merged into the whole Empire navy and should be available for the purposes of the navy generally. A particular point I should like to stress is, how very heartily we welcome the recognition of the principle of Dominion Navies to which the First Lord has referred, and I entirely agree with the Prime Minister of Canada that that very free and full recognition will do a great deal of good in all the Dominions—certainly it will in Australia, where there has been a feeling that we have been fighting against very hostile influences to get this principle established, that our own autonomous unit is a right that we have as a Dominion of the Empire. The free recognition of this will, I am sure, do a great deal to help and assist our whole position with regard to naval co-operation in Australia.

Defence an Empire Question.

The other point that I must raise again is that this whole question of Empire co-operation in defence, as in everything else, is an Empire question, and certainly we must press that the question should be considered from that point of view. I do not for one second suggest that we are limited to any particular type of assistance. That can be a matter for the circumstances of any particular Dominion, but I do feel, without going any further into the matter, that I must utter a word of warning that the future will be very difficult indeed unless we can get this principle recognised—in some measure, at all events—that Empire defence is a matter for the Empire as a whole, and that, while we can discuss, if that is 57

58
59
60
61
62
63
64
105
11
12
07
13
08
14
15
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62755

memorandum publicity. I believe we shall be on safe lines so long as we remember that it is Governments that are conferring here; in whatever we do, whether it relates to foreign policy, defence, or anything else, it is all-important that Governments should speak to Governments, not that the individuals here should try to work out a single defence policy for the Empire, but that we should make it possible for our own Cabinets to give full consideration to whatever in the way of statement is to be given to Parliament and to the people. Perhaps it is a little difficult to appreciate here just how jealous, in a very proper way, all members of a Cabinet are as to having the right to have their voices heard when a policy of large import is being considered. They have their problems. Our Ministers from the prairies and our Ministers from the manufacturing districts are as much concerned in having a say in the shaping of naval policy as are the Ministers who come from the provinces of British Columbia and Nova Scotia, which border on the sea; and I should hesitate in their absence in any way to try and commit any of my colleagues without their having an opportunity of having their voices heard.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Appreciation of Mr. Amery's Statement.

Mr. Bruce: I said a few words in regard to this question the other day, but there are one or two things I should like to add now, after the general statement that has been made by the First Lord of the Admiralty. I think we all very much appreciate the manner in which he dealt with the question, and we appreciate above everything the tone which he took, and the extraordinary tact he displayed in presenting the position to us, particularly in dealing with the position of the Dominions towards the whole broad question of defence.

Position of Australia as regards Defence.

With regard to the broad principle that Mr. Mackenzie King has raised, I, of course, am in the same position as he in some respects, but apparently I am in a different position in other respects. Nothing that I can do here will bind Australia in any way. That is a matter for Australia's Parliament, and there is no Dominion that is more jealous of the rights of Parliament or is more determined that the authority placed in their hands shall not be exercised by any other body. But apart from the matters which would have to be determined by Parliament, there are broad principles involved which Parliament has already been consulted upon. I put the Agenda of each of these two Conferences upon the table of the Houses of Parliament, and I indicated in broad general outline what views I proposed to put forward on behalf of the people of Australia. The questions were very fully debated, and at the end of the debate a direct vote was taken which, as nobody in Australia has a shadow of doubt, was taken upon the general principles that had been enunciated. It is certain that at a later stage we shall have to consider the broad aspects of the position of the Dominions which the Prime Minister of Canada has raised, particularly in connection with foreign policy, but I do not think that I need delay this particular meeting to deal with it.

Willingness to participate in Naval Defence.

With regard to the question of naval defence, in broad principle Australia's position is perfectly clear, and there seem to be very few issues upon which our mind has to be made up. Australia certainly agrees with every word spoken by the First Lord of the Admiralty at the beginning of his speech, with regard to the vital necessity, from Australia's standpoint, and from the standpoint of the Empire as a whole, of maintaining our sea power and being in a position to protect the whole of the trade routes of the world. On that point Australia is perfectly clear. There is an overwhelming opinion that that is vital to our individual interests in Australia, and vital to the interests of the whole Empire. Taking that view, Australia believes that the Empire must have a navy which is adequate for the purpose which we regard as so vital. Having got that far in general principle, we then come to the question of whether Australia is prepared to play any part. On that question Australia takes the general view that she certainly must play her part, and that she must do something to help in the provision of that naval strength which we say is so vital. That principle has been affirmed by Parliament as recently as when I left Australia, and has been affirmed over a very long period now by the action that we have taken with regard to the maintaining of our naval unit. So that, on the broad general principle, there is no question what the view of the Australian people is, and no necessity to go and consult them again. But in saying that I am not committing them to anything, I am merely saying here what Australia has told me to say. When we come to the question of what particular contribution Australia will make, that, of course, is a matter for the Parliament of Australia to determine, and the decision of Parliament is free and uncontrolled. But I think we shall not get very far unless we are prepared to discuss with the Admiralty any proposals the Admiralty puts forward; and the feeling in Australia, prior to my leaving for the Conference, certainly was that we are quite prepared to discuss the proposals which have been put forward to indicate how far we believe Australia can go, the kind of assistance that Australia would be most prepared to give, and generally whether any scheme can be mapped out which can be taken back and submitted to the Parliament in Australia. For my own part, I am perfectly prepared to go that far, and there is no question but that the people of Australia understood that that was the action I would take; but they also recognised that I was committing them to nothing until I had returned to Australia and had submitted to them, for their consideration and decision, any proposals that had been considered here.

C 62756

With regard to particular points that have been raised, I do not think that at this stage it is very necessary to deal with them. We shall have the opportunity to-morrow to go into the questions which are in some respects technical. I am very much obliged to the First Lord for the information he gave to me to-day in regard to some of the questions I raised, and also for his assurance that it will be possible to get any further information we desire.

Welcome Change in Admiralty Standpoint.

But I must again emphasise this point, which was dealt with by the Prime Minister of Canada, that any assistance Australia may give must be along the lines which we have established for ourselves over the last fourteen or fifteen years. We have maintained from the beginning that our contribution should be by means of the maintenance of a unit; an autonomous unit, however small, over which we should have complete control at all times; but that in a period of national danger or in a period of war the Australian unit should be merged into the whole Empire navy and should be available for the purposes of the navy generally. A particular point I should like to stress is, how very heartily we welcome the recognition of the principle of Dominion Navies to which the First Lord has referred, and I entirely agree with the Prime Minister of Canada that that very free and full recognition will do a great deal of good in all the Dominions—certainly it will in Australia, where there has been a feeling that we have been fighting against very hostile influences to get this principle established, that our own autonomous unit is a right that we have as a Dominion of the Empire. The free recognition of this will, I am sure, do a great deal to help and assist our whole position with regard to naval co-operation in Australia.

Defence an Empire Question.

The other point that I must raise again is that this whole question of Empire co-operation in defence, as in everything else, is an Empire question, and certainly we must press that the question should be considered from that point of view. I do not for one second suggest that we are limited to any particular type of assistance. That can be a matter for the circumstances of any particular Dominion, but I do feel, without going any further into the matter, that I must utter a word of warning that the future will be very difficult indeed unless we can get this principle recognised—in some measure, at all events—that Empire defence is a matter for the Empire as a whole, and that, while we can discuss, if that is 57

58
59
60
61
62
63
64
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62757

necessary, the measure of assistance to be given by each part of the Empire, the principle must be recognised, or the task of carrying out our co-operation will be increasingly difficult as the years go by. One particular phase of it that Australia certainly recognises is that, unless we can establish this principle during the next few years, and begin to carry it out, the Dominions may find themselves in very serious trouble. Then it may be, instead of its being one of the Dominions that has some hesitancy in recognising the principle, we may find that a Government in power in Great Britain may repudiate any suggestion that the defence of the Empire as a whole is a matter for Empire co-operation, and may even go so far as to say that, as far as Britain is concerned, she does not propose to co-operate with the rest of the Empire in protecting all their vital interests. The sooner, therefore, we can get the principle established in all the Dominions beyond any question of doubt, the better it will be for all of us in the years which are to come.

Appreciation of Proposed Empire Cruise.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Mr. Bruce, as well as myself, failed to make reference to the suggestion of the First Lord as to a visit to the Dominions of a cruiser squadron. I should like to say that we would give a hearty reception to any squadron that the Admiralty might wish sent to Canada in the course of an Empire tour.

Mr. Bruce: I entirely agree in that. I have already had an opportunity of expressing my views with regard to that.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Mr. Massey: With regard to the last point that has been mentioned, I welcome the statement made by the First Lord with regard to the visit of a cruiser or battleship squadron, whatever it may be, to the different countries of the Empire. As a matter of fact, I have felt, for a very long time past, that nothing would do more good in consolidating the Empire, after what has taken place during the war, than a visit of such a squadron, and I took the opportunity, some little time ago—it was in the mind of the First Lord at that time—of suggesting that should be done; and I am very glad that arrangements are being made accordingly.

Conclusions of Dominions' Royal Commission. Importance of Sea Communications.

Now, I do not wish to occupy a great deal of time, but I will commence what I have to say by a quotation. Some years ago, probably a year or two before the outbreak of war, a Royal Commission called the Dominions' Royal Commission was set up, which was representative of the different countries of the Empire and its order of reference included many matters of importance, such as defence, trade, inter-Empire communications, &c. They went into the matters referred to them very exhaustively, and in due course they presented a very valuable report. The report was, I believe, furnished after the war, or at all events when the war was coming to an end, and I make the following quotation from it (Cd. 8462):—

> 524. "The war has abundantly demonstrated that the life of the Empire depends upon its sea communications. Whatever the existing magnitude of the ocean-borne commerce between the United Kingdom and the Dominions, and whatever the prospects of its development in the future, producer, manufacturer, and merchant alike are concerned, and vitally concerned, with securing cheap, regular and efficient transport for their goods, and, consequently, with the progressive improvement of the Empire's shipping facilities."

Now, the two points particularly mentioned there are, first, that the life of the Empire depends on its sea communications, and, next, implied rather than otherwise, that the prosperity of the Empire and the prosperity of the different countries depends upon its mercantile marine.

I just wanted to establish that point, and express my agreement with it before I go on. I noticed the other day that it was said that you cannot have a first-class Empire with a second-class Navy. Now we are building up a first-class Empire. We know to-day that the world has never seen an Empire such as the British Empire is. How it is going to be maintained intact and kept together, depends upon its citizens, and that I take it is one of the most important matters which we have to discuss and consider before this Conference comes to an end.

C 62758

No Prospect of Interference with Autonomy of Dominions.

Just one other point has occurred to me. It has been suggested, and I have seen this referred to, that attempts have been made to interfere with the autonomous government of the different Dominions. I have been here for quite a number of years as the Representative of New Zealand, and I do not need to say that I took an interest in the affairs of Empire for many years prior to my first official visit to London, and I have never seen and have never known the slightest attempt on the part of British statesmen to interfere in any way with the autonomous government of any one of the Dominions. It is only right that should be said. We pride ourselves as nations of the Empire upon managing our own affairs; we make our own laws; we levy our own taxation; if assistance is required during a period of stress such as that which we have passed through, we give according to our own ideas; we assist the Empire in the way we think proper. I am quite certain that as in the past so in the future there will never be any attempt to interfere with the self-governing powers of any one of the Overseas Dominions. The Colonies are in a different position, but I have no doubt that they will be able in the course of time to do just as we are doing.

Value of Capital Ships.

I agree with the opinion of the First Lord when he said that no part of the Empire should depend upon local defence. He was dealing with naval defence at the time, and I agree with him. I believe it is quite impossible for any Dominion of the Empire to maintain a navy of sufficient strength so as to be quite certain it will not be interfered with in the future by some greater Power than itself. Referring to the controversy that is going on with regard to what is the best form of defence, whether it should be naval defence by way of capital ships and light cruisers and all the rest of them, or whether we should depend to a very much greater extent than ever before upon airships, I know perfectly well that in any war in the future air vessels of some sort, aeroplanes probably, will play a very prominent part, but I cannot help thinking that it would be a tremendous mistake for us to give up the idea of not keeping what are called capital ships to depend on in the main rather than to depend altogether upon an air force.

I heard what the First Lord said about their being practically immune from torpedoes and the attacks by submarines. We did not lose—I am only endorsing what the First Lord said—a single capital ship by submarine action; we did lose some in other directions, but not in that way; while, on the other hand, what happened to the submarine? I think I am right in saying that the official figures, which I am merely quoting from memory, show that during the war the enemy lost 203 submarines. I think the submarine was almost wiped out when the war came to an end. As for comparing a light cruiser with a submarine, I have not seen them in action, but I have seen a destroyer hunting for submarines and it reminded me of nothing so much as of a terrier hunting a rat, and I think the submarine would have just about as much chance of coping with a destroyer as the rat would have under the circumstances that I have mentioned.

Vital Importance of Naval Defence.

Just one doubt was raised in my mind—I do not think it is very serious at the present time—as to whether, in compliance with the Treaties of Washington, and especially the first Treaty, the Treaty for the Limitation of Naval Armament, whether a sufficient margin was left to Britain in connection with the ships that were intended to be scrapped. At all events for the first period of the Treaty—there is no question about it—I think that the United States of America have a larger number of heavier-class ships than Britain has. Probably that will be rectified as time goes on. Probably the building of these two new ships which are in

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62759

course of construction will go a long way to restore the balance; but it all comes back to this: We cannot play with naval defence. I cannot imagine anyone considering this matter lightly. Without naval defence, and sufficient naval defence, the Empire cannot last. It may last so long as we are not interfered with, but then the Empire would only be lasting on sufferance until a stronger Power came along and attacked us, and we cannot place ourselves in that position. Directly the lines of communication are cut, good-bye to the British Empire. That is where our responsibility comes in, a responsibility as representing our Governments and responsibility as members of the Parliaments to which we belong. I do not want any misunderstanding or misapprehension with regard to the Treaty of Washington, because I believe it was a very fine thing to do and arrangements were made which placed matters on a very satisfactory footing, and personally I hope they will be carried out. With regard to the strength of the navy, we are acting on what is called the one-Power standard and probably that is sufficient for the present, but the time may come when we shall find—or those who are here at that time—two Powers united against us, and I think that aspect of the question should not be lost sight of. We shall probably have an opportunity of discussing that point with the First Sea Lord to-morrow, because I should like to get the opinion of those who possess more technical knowledge than I do or any other layman does.

Singapore.

With regard to Singapore, I said the other day that I agreed thoroughly with what is proposed in connection with Singapore. A suggestion has been put forward to-day that we might agree round this table to proposals which our Parliaments would not ratify. Then they are of no value. I moved a resolution in the Parliament of New Zealand that any decisions or any agreement made at these Conferences should not come into effect until ratified by the Parliament concerned, and, as far as I am concerned, I am going to stand by that. But it is the business of the leader of the Parliament, it is the business of the Prime Minister for the time being, to know the mind of his Parliament as nearly as possible, and I am quite certain that anything I propose will be ratified by the Parliament to which I belong. Only this morning I received some papers from New Zealand, and among them I noticed, not altogether without surprise, that there had been a division at the last sitting of Parliament, at which I was not present, on the question of Singapore. The objection was raised that it was unnecessary, and quotations were made by certain members from speeches delivered in the British House of Commons, and all that sort of thing; quotations were made from remarks of certain Admirals who are very prominent in their opposition to Singapore; but the House did just as I thought it would; all the votes that were obtained against Singapore were the votes of about a dozen Labour Socialists, and every other Member of Parliament agreed to the wisdom of fortifying Singapore for the purpose of the better protection of Australia and New Zealand and other smaller communities in the South Pacific.

I understand that the work has been commenced, and it was discussed the last time this Conference met, and I do not think there was any objection raised to it at that time, but the fact remains that all the naval authorities of any value agree with the fortifications of Singapore being proceeded with; and of course it must be remembered that it was only since the Washington Conference that it was made impossible to do anything in the way of fortification of Hong Kong.

Interest of New Zealand in Naval Defence.

I feel more strongly about naval defence than most people because I come from a country which is cut off from all the other countries of the Empire by long stretches of ocean; the nearest neighbour on the one side is a thousand miles away, and that nearest neighbour is Fiji. On the other side is the Australian coast, 1,200 miles away, so it is not to be wondered at if the people of New Zealand are particularly anxious to see that the naval defence of the Pacific is sufficient for the purpose for which it is intended.

C 62760

I shall never forget the time we had during the Great War, especially during the early months of the war, when Germany was possessed of two very powerful cruisers, and we had very little in the Pacific to stand up against them at that time. I know that there was the battle-cruiser "Australia," but we could not expect Australia to hand that battle-cruiser over to us absolutely; it was intended for the purpose of protecting Australia. The people of New Zealand provided the money for a battle-cruiser, but very properly when the Admiralty wanted our gift cruiser in another part of the world there was not a single objection raised in Parliament or amongst Ministers to handing it over. I was not a Minister at the time, but that does not matter; we were all agreed on that, but for some time we were in a very serious position in the Pacific, because there was nothing to stand up against those two German cruisers. And then came along the disaster of Coronel. I am not going to find fault with anything or anybody, but there was a serious blunder over that disaster. Three ships were sent from England to attack the enemy ships or to hunt them out of the Pacific. One ship, for some reason or other, was left far behind. The other two ships were not to be compared with the two German ships, and the result was that the British ships were sunk with all hands. These are the things that should not be forgotten in a case of war, and my advice is probably a little more valuable than that of the ordinary citizen, because, as head of the Government at the time, I had a very serious responsibility. I cannot help thinking of the time when our ships were running backwards and forwards, perhaps to Australia, or perhaps coasters; no lights showing anywhere; we did not know when our coastal towns would be bombarded by a powerful enemy. For a long time we did not know where to find the "Emden"; there was nothing to show where she was, but we knew she was another difficult and powerful enemy, and one which did great damage to some of the countries of the Empire.

However, that is past. I am only suggesting that we should remember these mistakes in the future, and we should leave things to the next generation in a very much better position than they have been for a number of years past. But one cannot help saying that the British Navy when the war broke out was in a forward state of preparation, and, if that had not been the case, I do not think we could have got through. I think it was the First Lord who spoke of the naval spirit and traditions, and that is exactly what obtains so far as my country is concerned. We cannot help appreciating, with the Pacific all round, the advantages we are receiving; in New Zealand I must say that we have the naval spirit and traditions, and, as far as I am concerned, I am very proud of it.

Action Taken and in Prospect.

I do not say that what we have done is better than the other Dominions—I doubt if it is—but I think we are on the right lines. First of all, the New Zealand Government decided to find the cost of a battle-cruiser. That was done, and the cruiser handed over to the Admiralty. What we are doing now is this. We have a 5,000-ton cruiser in New Zealand and a training ship operating along with the cruiser. The cruiser will be exchanged presently for an oil-fuelling cruiser; she is a comparatively new ship and thoroughly up to date. We are acting upon the principle set forth in the Admiralty Memorandum, and, when the time comes—and I hope that finances will allow—in the not far distant future, we propose to add another cruiser. We found money for the ships we have at present, and that is the principle upon which we propose to go. I might quote a paragraph from the last report of the Commodore Commanding the New Zealand Station. We consider it the nucleus of a sea-going squadron, and the paragraph is as follows: "A slight expansion in personnel only is proposed, the recruiting policy being based on the substitution of the 'Chatham' by an oil-burning light cruiser next year. These ships carry far fewer stokers but rather more seamen than cruisers of the 'Chatham' class. During the past two and a half years the foundations have been laid with a view, as the financial position of the Dominion improves, to the gradual expansion of the sea-going squadron to the quota of three light cruisers, with attendant oil-tanker and a unit of ocean-going submarines." These ships are under a Commodore appointed by the Imperial

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 10 35 11 6 12 07 13 88 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Government, and they are used not exactly for the defence of the coast, because there is nothing to do in that way at present, but for the policing of the whole of the Pacific; and they do valuable work in that connection. It will not do to leave the islands without a warship; a warship has a good moral effect, and it is not forgotten for a long time. We find all the expenditure in connection with that; and, in addition to that, £100,000 have been set aside for the purposes of Singapore. If the £100,000 are not wanted for that purpose, there is an understanding that it shall be spent on some purpose connected with naval defence. We do not claim that these ships are ours. The New Zealand Naval Defence Act was passed some years ago, and there is a provision in that Act to the effect that in case of war, although ships may be owned by New Zealand, they immediately pass under the control of the Admiralty. They are not by any means a local navy, and they are not intended to be a local navy. The New Zealand ships are a division of the Imperial Navy, and that is thoroughly understood in the Dominion. I think that is the proper line to take.

Defence an Empire Matter.

A very important point was raised by the Prime Minister of Australia, and it was in regard to the possibilities of the future of this country. It is quite on the cards there may be a Government in this country some day, though I hope not, which will refuse to find Naval Defence for the Overseas Dominions, and what is going to happen then? I mentioned just now the case of the connections being cut. That means the Empire is coming to an end; if anything of that sort took place the Empire is gone; it cannot be kept together. We, as a community of free nations—this is an expression which has come into common use,—have to do our duty in this connection. The Prime Minister of Canada took objection to a term I used the other day, but he did not quote me accurately, and I take this opportunity of correcting him. When I used the word "sponging" I used it as a quotation in the plural, and I did not apply it to any Nation of the Empire any more than to New Zealand; in fact, the term was used in regard to New Zealand by a writer who is better known in the Southern than in the Northern Hemisphere, and it was used to me; that is exactly what has happened. A very able writer took up this question of the naval defence of the Empire, and he wrote a very able article, and then he said, "What is New Zealand doing? What is Mr. Massey doing? Mr. Massey is sponging on the British Empire for his protection, and New Zealand is sponging on the British Empire for its naval protection," and he was right. That is what I had in my mind. I had no thought of Canada, and I hope the Prime Minister of Canada will understand.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Certainly.

Mr. Massey: Because I feel certain of this, that when the time comes Canada will do in connection with naval defence what it has done already in connection with military defence. Now I can only say this: I do not think things should be allowed to drift. We all have our financial difficulties. I have financial difficulties as well as other Prime Ministers or business people; I am Finance Minister in New Zealand, and I have had at times very great difficulty in making both ends meet. But for the time being things are going well; I saw my way to ask in Parliament for a Vote of £500,000 for Naval Defence last Session, and Parliament agreed. It was practically passed unanimously, with the exception of the point that I have made, that objection was taken to Singapore, and a number of quotations were used from authorities in Britain. Now I do not know that I have anything more to say. I have one or two points in my mind, but they are technicalities, and would be better discussed and brought out at the Meeting which is to be held to-morrow, with the First Sea Lord and some of the other naval experts. The Prime Minister of Australia and I—I know it pretty well although we have not discussed this—are agreed upon it. We feel our responsibilities. I should like to make this known, that I do hope that whatever is done in the way of naval defence, or any other form of defence for that matter—I especially mention naval defence—I hope and believe that New Zealand and Australia will work together for the defence of our respective countries, and in working together for the defence of our respective countries, and each of us contributing what we think is our fair share in the circumstances, we shall be working for the defence of the Empire.

Question of Adjournment.

Mr. Baldwin: I think we had better adjourn now, because the Economic Conference meets at 3 o'clock. It would be rather desirable to finish this general discussion.

General Smuts: Is it necessary to adjourn? The subject is one of very great importance. I should like to join in the discussion when we have heard the other statements.

Mr. Baldwin: Certainly, to-morrow.

General Smuts: Yes. I think it is much easier if we have the whole of the question before us.

Mr. Baldwin: If we could finish in about 10 minutes I quite agree with you, but I do not wish to curtail what anyone may desire to say. and I suggest, if we are likely to take longer than that, we should meet at 3, as I understand that you do not go to the Economic Conference this afternoon—I do not know if I am correctly informed.

General Smuts: No, but we have many other things to do.

Mr. Baldwin: We could go on at 3, and then any member who is also on the Economic Conference might go on to the Economic Conference when this is finished. I would much rather finish it now if it were possible.

Lord Derby: I understand that General Smuts wants the Military and the Air statement before the discussion.

Mr. Baldwin: That would be to-morrow.

General Smuts' Appreciation of Mr. Amery's Statement.

General Smuts: I should like to join in this general Defence discussion, which I think is of the very greatest importance, but I should like to hear the Military and the Air statements, and therefore I have nothing to say, except to congratulate the First Lord on his most admirable and lucid statement made before us here this morning. .

Mr. Baldwin: Would you like to make any observations at this stage, General Mulcahy?

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTER OF DEFENCE, IRISH FREE STATE.

Position of Irish Free State as regards Naval Defence.

General Mulcahy: I have listened with very great interest to the statement made by the First Lord, and to the discussion that has taken place here. As far as my Government is concerned, the matter with regard to Naval Defence is still in the undeveloped Treaty position, as are the financial aspects which, as Mr. Mackenzie King rather suggested, are closely mixed up with Naval Defence matters. We are practically only on the threshhold of getting that particular type of acquaintance with you, which, in spite of outward appearances, for a very long time we have been very anxious to have. We are very deeply interested in all your problems, especially the problem that appears to relate to national as distinct from local defence. We are very deeply interested in the general problems. We realise ours is a world-wide community with world-wide obligations, and we are perfectly ready to shoulder whatever obligations come to us as a community. The Treaty will, in due course, settle what are to be our Naval obligations.

Hopes for future Co-operation of Irish Free State with other parts of the Empire.

This is the first occasion on which I have met any of you in Conference here, and I would like to express my opinion, which is the opinion of those associated with me, that, notwithstanding the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62763

situation under which the Treaty arose, it gives us an atmosphere in which we can become acquainted with you, and take part in the general development of our peoples together as world-wide communities. It is in the spirit of a people in that position that we come here to take part in your discussions, and to see what obligations, outside our own national obligations, are likely to come our way in our development as a nation associated with you.

In the actual details of discussion that are going on now we are differently placed in the matter of naval defence from some of the other Dominions, and the particular problem we are now discussing is a problem which in its details at any rate is rather theirs than ours. There is nothing particular I wish to say.

Question of Adjournment.

Lord Peel: Prime Minister, I did want to make a statement, but I can make that statement quite well when the Secretary of State for War and the Secretary of State for Air have spoken, and I think I had better reserve what I was going to say.

Mr. Baldwin: What was proposed was that the technical discussion on the naval side should take place to-morrow, and on Friday morning there would be a discussion on the military side and on the air side. Would it be convenient for you to speak on that occasion?

Lord Peel: Yes, any time. I do not like making a statement at this time. India, unfortunately, comes at the end, and I do not want to keep anybody at the present moment. Otherwise one has to curtail one's statement.

Publicity of Proceedings.

Mr. Amery: May I ask one thing about publicity of to-day's proceedings? There is, of course, a good deal of what I have said not at all suitable for publication. There is a great deal which is perfectly harmless and could be published if the Conference wish it, but it is just as the Conference feels about it. The alternative would be a sentence or two to say we have been discussing naval affairs, and mention the Empire cruise. As far as I am concerned I could go through my speech and cut out anything secret or too personal.

General Smuts: Best to publish nothing. The cruise might be published.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we separate the Foreign Secretary wishes to tell you what has been arranged in regard to the keeping of Armistice Day on the 11th November, a date by which I hope all our colleagues will not have left England.

FURTHER SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION.

Lord Peel: There is one thing I want to mention. There is a point I want to bring up at some time. I am afraid no one else will bring it up and that is the question of the share of India's contribution towards the expenses of the League of Nations. Our point is we contribute too much, and as the effect of our paying less may mean a suggestion that others should pay more I am afraid I am the only person who is likely to raise the question.

Mr. Baldwin: I am afraid you must consult Sir Maurice Hankey about that. I do not know how the matters down for discussion stand.

Lord Peel: I think, perhaps, it is a matter for Committee

Mr. Massey: Just one word. I think I ought to indicate that before the Conference comes to an end, and I hope it is not coming to an end until we have done some good work, I want to bring up the question of Spahlinger treatment for Tuberculosis. I have been asked to do so by a number of medical men.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps you will be good enough to speak to Sir Maurice Hankey about that also.

PROPOSED ARRANGEMENTS FOR ARMISTICE DAY.

Lord Curzon: It only falls to me to make this intimation to the Conference because I happen during the last three or four years to have been on each occasion the Chairman of a Committee that is responsible for the arrangements for the celebration of Armistice Day. A new situation has arisen this year because the date, the 11th November, falls for the first time since the war upon a Sunday. Therefore we have to consider how far we ought to make any alteration in the observance that has hitherto taken place, and whether it is desirable in view of the fact that the 11th November falls on Sunday to repeat the proceedings that have taken place in previous years. We have placed ourselves in communication with His Majesty to take his views, and with the Ecclesiastical Authorities of the various churches and denominations in this country, and the conclusions at which we have arrived, and which are about to be published in the papers, are these. We think it very undesirable indeed to alter either the day of celebration or the particular hour at which the two minutes' silence is observed. You will recollect that in our country, and I think elsewhere, as the clock strikes eleven there have been two minutes of absolute silence which have hitherto been observed not only at the Cenotaph in Whitehall, but in all parts of the country, in towns and in the country side, in business places and elsewhere, and that proceeding has acquired, by virtue of its continuance for two or three years, a sanctity which nobody would like to disturb. We felt, therefore, that as the anniversary falls on Sunday the occasion would acquire an additional significance, because it will occur during the time in which church services are ordinarily being held. We have asked the Archbishop of Canterbury, and through him the heads of all the various religious denominations, to allow their services, instead of being held as is ordinarily done, at 11 o'clock, to open at a quarter to eleven or at whatever earlier hour they prefer, and then at 11 o'clock everywhere the two minutes' silence will take place. The King is very anxious and willing to attend a ceremony in Westminster Abbey on that day. The service there will be held, as it will everywhere else, at a quarter to eleven, and the King has expressed (and the Government concur) a strong hope that he may be attended at that service in Westminster Abbey, not only by his Prime Minister and members of his Government and Cabinet here, but by such Dominion representatives as are still in this country. I hope, therefore, they will be able to come. Due provision will be made for their accommodation in the Choir. Then the idea is that in the latter part of the service the King, attended by his Ministers and by the Dominion representatives, will move down from the Choir to the Nave where the concluding stages of the service—one or two prayers and, perhaps, a hymn—will be conducted by the Dean of Westminster, at the conclusion of which the King, on his own behalf and on behalf of the Empire as a whole, will deposit a single wreath on the Unknown Warrior's Grave. That is the ceremony which will be enacted in the Abbey, and in which we hope you will all be willing to assist. As regards the ceremony that has hitherto taken place at the Cenotaph outside in Whitehall no observance will take place there on this occasion, although, of course, the practice will be resumed in subsequent years; but everybody will be at liberty, under due police arrangements for the regularisation of traffic, to lay their wreaths upon the Cenotaph, as they have hitherto done from morning to night on that day, a stream of people going by and depositing their wreaths. So everybody in the country, whether in church or outside the church, will be able to commemorate the occasion in the way they think best. The day and the hour will be observed, and next year we shall resume the ceremony at the Cenotaph in the old way.

C 62764

(The proceedings then terminated.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 17, 1923.

57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
10 35
11
12 67
13 68
14
15
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

SECRET.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

C 62765

E. 10th Me

44

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE TENTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1923, AT 11 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. the EARL OF DERBY, K.G., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for War.

The Right Hon. Sir SAMUEL HOARE, Bart., C.M.G., M.P., Secretary of State for Air.

The Right Hon. L. S. AMERY, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

General R. MULCAHY, Minister of Defence, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. Viscount PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Admiral of the Fleet Earl BEATTY, G.C.B., O.M., G.C.V.O., D.S.O., First Sea Lord and Chief of Naval Staff, Admiralty.

General the EARL OF CAVAN, K.P., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., K.C.B., Chief of the Imperial General Staff, War Office.

Air Chief-Marshal Sir HUGH M. TRENCHARD, Bart., K.C.B., D.S.O., Chief of the Air Staff, Air Ministry.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Major-General J. H. MACBRIEN, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Chief of General Staff, Canada.

Commodore WALTER HOSE, C.B.E., R.C.N., Director of Naval Service, Canada.

Vice-Admiral Sir ALLAN F. EVERETT, K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., C.B., First Naval Member of the Royal Australian Naval Board.

Brigadier-General T. A. BLANEY, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Australian Representative on the Imperial General Staff at War Office.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62766

The following were also present—(continued):

Major L. A. CLEMENS, O.B.E., M.C., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.

Commodore A. G. HOTHAM, C.M.G., R.N., Naval Adviser to the New Zealand Delegation.

General SEAN MACMAHON, Chief of Staff, Irish Free State.

Major-General J. J. O'CONNELL, Assistant Chief of Staff, Irish Free State.

Lieut.-General Sir ALEXANDER COBBE, V.C., K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Secretary, Military Department, India Office.

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.

Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B. (Secretary.)

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.

Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

Canada.

Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

Irish Free State.

Mr. P. MCGILLIGAN.

India.

Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we commence the business of to-day, the Foreign Secretary has a brief statement to make.

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Lord Curzon: It has been suggested to me that it might be well that I should say a word or two to the Conference about the position of foreign affairs and about our own proceedings in regard thereto. The Conference will remember that we had a discussion which I opened with a statement, ten days or more ago, and which was followed by a discussion in which the Dominion representatives took part, and that then the discussion was adjourned in order to enable the Foreign Office to consider very carefully the suggestions and views which had been placed before us, and if possible to come up at a later date with certain draft resolutions.

Developments on Reparations Question.

Just after that happened, a new situation occurred. It arose out of the report in the newspapers of the speech of President Coolidge in America, in which he had rather gone out of his way to reiterate America's willingness to help in our economic troubles in Europe, and had taken his stand again upon the declaration first made by the Secretary of State in December last. I gathered from the attitude of the Conference here upon the matter that there was nothing they would welcome more warmly than American co-operation, and that an opportunity of this sort—evidently started with some object by President Coolidge—ought not to be missed.

Communications with Washington.

Accordingly, I drew up a telegram to Washington,* which I think has been circulated to you, in the endeavour to find out exactly what President Coolidge meant and how far he was disposed to go. The suggestion had been made that we might, so to speak, publicly seize the opportunity and cordially embrace President Coolidge's initiative. But we considered, I think rightly, that would be unwise because so sensitive are the Americans about any outside intervention that had we made in public a declaration of that sort it was quite conceivable that President Coolidge might not only withdraw from the position he had taken up, but might even have lost his election,

* The telegrams exchanged with Washington are reproduced as Appendix I.

C 62767

because it would have been said at once: "Here is England interfering again and not allowing things to develop in their own way." Anyhow, we sent the telegram, and, in consultation with the Prime Minister, we fortified the telegram by putting in the sentence, which I think was justified in the circumstances, that I was speaking in this situation not merely for His Majesty's Government, but for the much larger and more important body assembled round this table. Then we got a reply from Washington, from Mr. Chilton, our Chargé d'Affaires, in three parts, and you will gather from that quite clearly that the American Government are prepared to participate, and that their participation may even take more than one form. In my telegram I asked them these questions. What exactly do you mean? Does your statement mean that America is willing to join in a general Conference to discuss the question of reparations in Europe, or does it mean that you will be willing to send somebody to take part in a conference of experts under the auspices of the Reparations Commission; and does it mean that you will only participate in the event of all the Allies asking you; or, should the request not be unanimous, are you still disposed to give us your invaluable help? To that, as you will recollect, the reply was that they were prepared to take part in a general economic conference if invited to do so. To the second question, the reply was that they had in view that a competent American citizen would be prepared to take part in an enquiry instituted under the auspices of the Reparations Commission; to the third question, namely, whether they demanded unanimity as a condition of taking part, their reply was that they would answer that question when the situation arose.

Communications sent to European Allies.

In these circumstances, it appeared to me that our duty was to move at once; that we should acknowledge with thanks the encouraging attitude of America, which I did in a telegram last night, and that we should acquaint our Allies with what had passed, and invite them to join us in proceeding. There were two alternatives that might have been adopted; we might have merely invited our Allies to take part in the Conference suggested by Mr. Hughes in December last, the offer having been repeated now, and have told them confidentially that America was prepared to join, or we might put the whole of our cards on the table, be perfectly frank as to what we had done, because after all it was right and justified, and explain to them that, having seen what President Coolidge had said, we thought we ought to ask exactly what was in his mind, and, having ascertained it, frankly to put the case before our Allies. The Prime Minister and I decided in favour of the latter course. It was perfectly certain, and you will see from the American reply that they contemplate it, that publicity would be given to their reply at a later date. What I had more particularly in view was the fear that if we merely made the suggestion to our Allies in Europe that this idea of a Conference had once again been taken up, treating the idea of American co-operation as confidential, M. Poincaré would at once refuse. He would say, "This is the old plan which I regarded with disfavour six months ago; you are merely coming up with a stale proposal now," and he would seize the opportunity to refuse, knowing that the question of American participation had been treated as confidential. I thought there was a very great danger in that attitude, and that our one object now was not to put anybody in a hole the least bit in the world, but by common goodwill to get a move forward in which all, if possible, would participate; or, in the event of France or any other Power declining to participate, that that Power should find itself put in the wrong before the public opinion of the world. Accordingly, I sent last night, after consultation with the Prime Minister, this telegram, which I will take the liberty to read. It is a telegram addressed to the French, Italian and Belgian Governments:—

> "French (Italian) (Belgian) Government will be aware from reports published in press that the question of reparations, in which the Dominions are equally interested with His Majesty's Government, has been under the close examination of the Imperial Conference now sitting in London. The members of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62768

that Conference have been as much concerned as His Majesty's Government at the apparent deadlock which has been reached, all the more so that they had hoped that the abandonment of passive resistance would remove the hitherto unsurmounted obstacles to common action, and would be the signal for a fresh and united effort to solve a problem that cannot any longer be shelved except at a cost which will weigh with almost equal severity upon all. While the Conference were considering this aspect of the case, there appeared the declaration of the President of the United States that the American Government rested upon their proposal of December last.

"It will be recollected that this proposal was not at the time pursued, because Conferences were taking place between the principal Allied Powers, each of which propounded a scheme of its own for dealing with the problem as it then existed. None of these schemes has been fortunate enough to meet with universal acceptance; and in the interval divergent policies have been pursued, with the result that the common action by which alone a settlement can be reached has again and again receded into the distance.

"It did not appear to His Majesty's Government or to the Imperial Conference to be either wise or courteous to ignore this renewed indication of goodwill and of a desire to assist on the part of the American Government. Indeed, any such attitude might have exposed His Majesty's Government to justifiable reproach.

"On the other hand, they recognised the extreme undesirability of assuming on the part of the United States Government any intention in excess of what the President's words appeared to imply; and they felt that the first step was to enquire at Washington to what extent His Majesty's Government might, if they approached their Allies in the matter, regard themselves as sustained by the hopes of American co-operation.

"Accordingly, they addressed an enquiry to the American State Secretary, and were gratified to learn in reply that his Government continued to feel a deep interest in the economic situation of Europe and were ready to aid in any practical way in promoting recuperation and re-establishing economic stability. With this object in view the United States Government, while emphatically repudiating any desire to see Germany relieved of her responsibility for the war or of her just obligations, were entirely willing to take part in an Economic Conference in which all the European Allies chiefly concerned in reparations should participate, for the purpose of considering questions of Germany's capacity to make reparations and of drawing up an appropriate financial plan for securing payment. Such a conference, if convened, should, in the American view, be advisory in character, and should have for its object the making of appropriate recommendations by a thoroughly informed and impartial body, intent upon solving the difficult problems submitted to it on their merits." Those, you will observe, are direct quotations from the American reply, so that their case is stated to the Allies in their own words. "Alternatively the American Government informed us that, if after further consideration it were thought preferable that the suggested enquiry should be conducted by an advisory body appointed by the Reparations Commission to make recommendations, they would be willing that a competent American citizen should participate. When this reply was received it did not seem possible to His Majesty's Government either to ignore an offer so generous and so helpful in its character, or to refrain from at once communicating it to their allies. They do so in the earnest hope that the Allied Governments will consider with the utmost care the advantages to be derived from American co-operation at this critical juncture, and they entertain the sanguine belief that the French (Italian) (Belgian) Government will be willing to join them in inviting the United States Government without delay to take part in one or other of the forms of enquiry indicated by them.

"The direct participation of the American Government appears to His Majesty's Government to be an object so desirable in itself and so likely to be fruitful of result, that they cannot conceal the hope that the first alternative may be the one preferred.

c 62769

"In submitting this proposal to the Government to which you are accredited, you should represent the supreme importance, in the view of His Majesty's Government, of not letting slip this opportunity of resuming those common and friendly discussions in which all parties have so frequently testified their belief."

Now the Conference may ask what I expect will come of this.

General Smuts: That telegram has gone?

Lord Curzon: Yes. It went last night; it was necessary to act at once.

Probable Attitude of France and other Allies.

The Conference may ask what I think will come of this. I think it is extremely difficult for France or any other Power in these circumstances to decline. Belgium, we know, is anxious for this enquiry. Italy has always been well disposed towards it. The obstacle, so far, has been France. M. Poincaré may take one of three attitudes. He may say, "No, I will not have anything to do with this. I am dealing with Germany; I am not satisfied with her attitude until I am convinced that she has loyally and thoroughly accepted the situation. The question of reparations can stand over." He may say that, but if he says that I think he will be alone. Or he may say, "After all, this suggestion of a conference in which America takes part, although it has been suggested by the President, is an old suggestion made as far back as September last, rejected by me then, and merely revived now with the object of putting me in a difficult position. I decline to look at it." Or he may say—and I think this is the most probable reply that he will make, and if he makes it it is all to the good—"I have said all the way through that this is a matter for the Reparations Commission, the body appointed under the Treaty to deal with the question of reparations. No one else is really entitled to touch it, and if America is disposed to send a competent business man to join in an enquiry, conducted under the Reparations Commission, to assist the Reparations Commission in determining the present position, the present capacity of Germany to pay, so much the better." I think he may say, and I think he will say, that. If he does say that, I submit to the Conference that it is a tremendous move forward, because we then get the enquiry for which we have all along been working; and be it remembered that if we get an enquiry in that form it is precisely the proposal which we made in August last and which, at that moment, was turned down by the French without consideration, although rather favourably regarded by the Belgians. Therefore, it seems to me that the situation is on the whole likely to be productive, and that it has the further merit, if I may say so, of placing at this stage the initiative in our hands.

Press Criticism of British Government.

The Government here has been very much attacked—not, I think, fairly—for having said, in our note of the 11th August, that if none of our proposals were considered the alternative of separate action might have to be considered. The Press has been disposed to say, "What did this mean? Was it a mere abortive menace? What does the separate action mean that you had in view?" Well, the reason why we did not take any separate action when we received such an unfavourable reply from the French to those overtures was this. It was threefold. In the first place, we knew that this Conference was going to meet at the end of September or the beginning of October, and we felt our position would be greatly strengthened if, in any attitude we took up, we had the support of the Empire behind us. In the second place, it was clear at that time that passive resistance was shortly going to be abandoned; and it was quite obvious that the moment passive resistance was abandoned a new situation would arise and that any proposals for action, separate or otherwise, made before might be stultified the moment passive resistance had been dropped. In these circumstances, and also because we were animated by the familiar desire

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 11 12 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62770

not to have a final break with France, we refrained from making any separate proposals at the time. But now, America has given us the opportunity and we are enabled to say, not merely for debating purposes, but, I think, with truth, that the suggestion having been made we at once took it up. With courtesy we asked the Americans what they meant and how far they would go. With frankness we then approached the whole of our allies, we put all our cards on the table, and invited them to participate.

Advantages of Further Enquiry.

As regards the merits of the suggestion, that, being a financial issue, is one I will not confidently pronounce upon, but our Treasury here hold the view that, although the situation has been very much altered, the desirability of an enquiry of this nature is undeniable and great, and that it would be of serious profit if, in response to this invitation, such an enquiry were now held.

Future Resumption of Discussions on Foreign Affairs.

The explanation I have asked permission to make to the Conference has not merely been given in order to acquaint you with what is going on—which you are entitled to know—but also to explain why it is that the discussion on foreign affairs has not been resumed. It will be quite clear, I think, to all my colleagues that while this move is going on, and until we get a reply from our allies, it would be useless for us to sit here and frame resolutions or lay down rules. It is in the hope that the situation I have explained may develop during the course of the next few days that I make this statement, and have in my mind the idea of resuming the discussion on foreign affairs towards the end of next week when the situation has been rather further advanced.

General Smuts: May I make a remark on that, Prime Minister?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, certainly.

Lord Curzon: Would you like to read the document?

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

General Smuts: I have quite followed what you are saying.

Conference of Allied Governments preferable.

I feel a great difficulty about the position which is going to arise now. I agree with you that M. Poincaré is going to accept the second alternative, that is an enquiry by the Reparation Commission, or under the ægis of the Reparation Commission. What you have in mind, and what they have made the first alternative, was a Conference of Allied Governments, which would have been something really first-class and valuable. The second alternative, which the Americans have made, seems to me really fairly futile—for this reason; they say they are really going to take part in the enquiry under the ægis of the Reparation Commission. You will see from their telegram that they say that competent American citizens can be found who will do this. They dissociate themselves fairly strongly from the Reparation Commission. They are not going to take part, but, as they said last December, competent American citizens can be found who would take part in this enquiry. It seems to me you are not really pulling America in at all. We do not want an enquiry in which some American takes part, but an enquiry in which the American Government takes part; and the first alternative would rope in the American Government. You follow my point?

Lord Curzon: Perfectly.

General Smuts: The second gives the American Government the chance of escape, because they are not really responsible; they are not really roped in. Some American citizen will be found, and M. Poincaré, on the other hand, would be very glad too. He could say: "It has been my decision all along to let the Reparation Commission enquire into this matter." The result will be that some enquiry will start now into German capacity; what it will lead to, I do not know. It will be a long time, and the position is most urgent and dangerous; the developments in the Ruhr are of a most dangerous character, and we may soon be faced with an appalling situation while this enquiry under the ægis of the Reparation Commission would be going on. I would press much more strongly for the first alternative. I am afraid of the use which M. Poincaré is going to make of the American reply. I think you are right that the second alternative is going to be accepted, but the first would have been the real thing, that is a conference of the Allied Governments where America is represented as such, where she herself appears on the scene, and where she does not merely send some unofficial independent financial person to join in the conference. It looks to me as if the whole thing is going to prove abortive.

C 62771

I do not blame you at all, but I am afraid that what is now happening means that both America and France are going to escape and that what we are really after will not be done, that is, to get a Conference where we can get at grips with the situation.

Lord Curzon: The situation, of course, is not yet determined. General Smuts is proceeding on the assumption that my conjecture of M. Poincaré's attitude turns out to be the true one. It may be so; but, on the other hand, supposing that Italy and Belgium are prepared for the first alternative rather than the second, we may still be able to apply pressure.

Need for pressure on United States Government.

General Smuts: I hope we shall use whatever pressure we can. We want America in. America does not really come in under the second alternative. That is the weakness I saw in the suggestion made last December when I read it in the papers. It seemed to me just "eye-wash," to use a vulgar expression. America did not say she was prepared to take part in such an enquiry, she merely said there would be a competent American who could take part in this.

Lord Curzon: I think it is really rather more than that. I believe that what the Americans would do would be to invite Mr. Pierpont Morgan, or someone of that description, to join in. It is quite conceivable that if they joined in the first enquiry they might be similarly represented, but, as regards the Reparation Commission, you will have noticed from their reply that they cannot appoint formally a member without the consent of Congress, which is not now in session. That is the reason they suggest their representative might be some competent American citizen. I think the Treasury here would say that if the enquiry takes place the main thing is to get it started. It would be quite as good, from our point of view, to see Mr. Pierpont Morgan sitting in a quasi or semi-official capacity on the Committee as it would be to get any direct American representative sitting at the Conference. I admit the desirability, from the point of view of prestige, of getting the American Government in, and of course we will do our best to secure that end, but we must not assume that the game is up before we have had the reply of our Allies.

General Smuts: I wanted to impress upon you what I feel strongly, that we want to exercise pressure on the American Government, and we must try and do so, we must try and get the American Government in directly rather than some financial expert whose opinion will not weigh.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Mr. Massey: I would just like to say that I do not look at the position from the same point of view as General Smuts.

Conference of Allied Governments preferable.

First of all, let me say, I hope—and I think every one round the table hopes—that the suggested Conference will be arranged. With regard to the point emphasised by General Smuts, that any competent American citizen—to use the expression which has been already used—would not be representative—and I am not quite sure that I am correct in this—of the American Government and the American people, I take it that any competent American citizen requested to act, and therefore appointed by the American Government, would undoubtedly be representative of the American

57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
11 6
12 67
13 68
14
15
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62772

Government, even more than in a semi-official capacity. I agree it is not quite so good as having a direct representative of the American Government, one of themselves; but take this instance, which is a case, I think, fairly parallel. It was found, when the Washington Conference was being arranged, that no member of the New Zealand Government could go and represent that country. It was quite impossible. Under the circumstances we appointed a judge of the Supreme Court, who acted for us as our representative, and who was accepted at the Washington Conference as the direct representative of New Zealand. I say the cases may not be quite parallel, but they are not very far away from each other, and no objection was raised to what was done in that case.

I hope, as I have said, that the Conference will be arranged, and that M. Poincaré will agree, and that is the point about which I am in doubt. If he approves, then there is a strong probability of some agreement being arrived at, that is what we are all waiting for, and I hope such will be the case; but the Foreign Secretary raised a point which I think is very important and should not be lost sight of, and it is this.

Danger of Premature Publicity.

Great care should be taken, if it is possible to do it, to make it impossible for Party Politicians in America to discredit the American President in connection with the proposal. We all know the feeling of Party Politicians in America and even in our own countries, and we know that no opportunity is ever lost; we know too that, though there may not be a majority of opponents of the British Empire in America, even so there is a very strong party in America who are undoubtedly opposed to Britain. The feeling is friendly on the part of the people who take the lead in politics and public affairs as far as the American Government is concerned. What is in my mind is this—and I formed it after a talk with the new President—I think that he should be consulted before his name is used publicly, so that if necessary he might give advice with regard to what should be done. Otherwise, so far as I am concerned, I do hope the Conference will be arranged because there is a possibility of settlement and that possibility should be followed up.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Conference of Allied Governments Preferable.

Mr. Bruce: Prime Minister, the position being as it is and the cables having been exchanged, the most desirable thing is to press very hard to get the Governments concerned to arrange a Conference; but it certainly strikes me that we may get into a very difficult position.

Difficulties likely to arise.

There is a danger that this action may put us in a more embarrassing position than we are in at the present moment, because the cable which was sent, after the President had made his statement, really refers to the original proposal. That proposal was to conduct an enquiry into Germany's capacity to pay. The whole trouble with France during the last month has been that France objects to the present moment being taken as the time for determining Germany's capacity to pay, and if France says, as the Foreign Secretary suggested she might—"This is an old proposal, this is a stale proposal, we have heard it before"—the minute there is the slightest difference of opinion between the Allies and Europe, America will immediately draw into her shell and we shall not advance one inch.

Use of Name of Conference in First Telegram to Washington.

The only point I want to press is this, that in the cablegram sent to America the name of this Conference was used. I agree that the name of the Conference should have been used, but I think, in view of what had been said here, the Conference ought to have been consulted first. One has got to remember that when this question was discussed here, both General Smuts and myself suggested that there was a difficulty in view of France's attitude (an attitude with which I admit I have some sympathy) in saying they are not prepared to accept an enquiry at this moment into Germany's capacity to pay when Germany herself has deliberately depreciated her capacity. Hence a cable in the name of the whole Conference, taking up the original suggestion of an enquiry into the capacity of Germany to pay, seems to me to be not quite in accordance with the views expressed in the Conference up to that time. The Conference had actually come to no definite view as to what action should be taken. It could not have come to a definite view without a further discussion on the whole question. The danger I now feel about the whole position is that possibly we shall find that France refuses this, and I am inclined to think that, although France might thereby incur a little odium in the world for a few days, it would not be much more than she has incurred already. There will be no pressure upon her to come in because America will immediately withdraw. On the other hand, if we had come to a conclusion as to determining an arbitrary amount that Germany should pay, and if we could have got agreement upon that between the Allies, we should still have America in reserve, and she might have been brought in and might have been of very great value in getting agreement as to that figure, and also as to how the arbitrary amount agreed upon should be paid. Having said that, I recognise that the position now is that certain action has been taken, with which I agree, and I hope we shall get out of it as well as the Foreign Secretary hopes, and that some advantageous results may follow.

C 62773

Lord Curzon: I will only utter one word in reply to one observation of Mr. Bruce's. I think he is a little exaggerating what we did in the telegram to Washington, in which the sentiments of the Conference were expressed. After all, it was merely a telegram on our part to express our warm approval of the position that the American Government is once again disposed to maintain in our troubles, and which will help us. That is really not committing this Conference to anything very serious.

Mr. Bruce. The telegram quite definitely says at the end: that this Conference and the whole of the British Empire representatives at the Imperial Conference desire to associate themselves with the proposals; but, if we read the earlier part of the cable, it is made perfectly clear that the President's suggestion is really the late President's suggestion again, and there is no getting away from the fact that the late President's suggestion was that there should be an enquiry held into the capacity to pay. That is the point I was making.

Mr. Baldwin: I will now call upon Lord Derby to make his statement.

MILITARY DEFENCE.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR.

Lord Derby: Prime Minister, I desire to make a brief statement as to the military position at the present moment. I quite agree that it must be very subservient to the Naval policy of the Empire, still, at the same time, I think the members of the Conference would like to know exactly what our position is at the present moment; but, as there was a Prime Ministers' Conference in 1921, there is no need to repeat details of the military position as it was prior to that date. Comparisons between our military forces and those of foreign Powers are misleading, but it must not be forgotten that, though Germany has been destroyed in a military sense, Europe is still an armed camp, for there are 1,300,000 more men actually under arms to-day than there were in January, 1914. In spite of this, we have reduced our army, and as the full reductions in the army have now been made, and the Government has stated through me that no further reductions are contemplated, it may be of advantage briefly to restate our own position and compare it with what it was in 1914.

Comparison with 1914. Present Size of Continental Armies.

The stage is set to-day very differently from what it was in 1914. Then Europe was composed for the most part of strong and

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 11 6 12 07 13 08 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62774

solvent nations, of which Germany was the most ambitious and powerful, while Berlin was the centre of militarism and of the greatest military machine the world has ever seen. The other nations were either grouped against Germany for their protection or leagued with Germany for their advancement, or sitting impotently and anxiously on the fence.

Now Germany is down and out, and her naval power which directly threatened our own is broken, and France has become the paramount military Power. France, to-day, has an army of 568,000 men under arms, apart from 216,000 coloured troops also under arms.

Mr. Burton: Are the coloured troops all in Europe?

Lord Derby: No, they are not all in Europe. That is her total strength.

Italy has an army of 320,000.

Russia is still an unknown quantity, though we know that she has some 735,000 men under arms, while the Balkan States have also an aggregate of 750,000 men under arms.

Poland 250,000 men.

It is clear by the figures which I have quoted that the size of our own army has no relation whatever to the size of European armies; but even in pre-war days the size of our army was never so governed. It is important to realise the functions which now, as in 1914, regulate the size of the British Army. These functions are three—

(a.) Provision and maintenance of the essential Imperial Garrisons.

(b.) Provision of a small Central Reserve to act in co-operation with the Navy as Imperial interests may require.

(c.) Provision against civil riots at home.

Present Strength of British Army.

In 1914 we mobilised 17 regiments of Cavalry and 6 Divisions at once, and a 7th Division within a few weeks; a total force of 182,000 men. We have now lost 2 Divisions all but 2 battalions, that is to say, 22 Line battalions, and 9 regiments of Cavalry. Now that the situation in the Near East permits, the force we could put in the field amounts to a Cavalry division (9 regiments) and 3 divisions; say, 98,000 men. The Cavalry division, by reason of the reduced peace establishment of horses, would be incapable of action until additional horses had been hardened and trained. Mobilisation of the 4th and 5th divisions would depend upon recruiting of technical personnel and would in any event take some months.

The chief reasons why, for the present, we cannot mobilise the 4th and 5th divisions on the outbreak of war are the exhaustion of the Army Reserve (now 76,000, to be brought up this year by special recruiting to 84,000, against 146,000 in 1914), the abolition of Special Reserve Battalions, the reduction of the number of field batteries below that required for 5 divisions, so that we should have to form fresh cadres not only of Signals, Transport, &c., but even of Field Artillery, and the fact that the tradesmen necessary to complete the increasingly large technical parts of a modern army do not exist either in the ranks, in the regular reserve, or in the shape of Militia.

We are proceeding with a school for training boys as tradesmen for the Army, and are prepared to organise a technical Militia, and the mobilisation position will be gradually improved; but in any event it will take years of steady progress at our present Establishment before we can bring five divisions to the same pitch of readiness for war as the seven of 1914.

Even then, on mobilisation a battalion will be only 888 strong as against 1,000 in 1914, and a battery will consist of 4 guns instead of 6; and, for expansion to full war strength in a great war, we have only the Territorial Army to build on. The strength of the latter to-day is 140,000 out of an establishment of 180,000, as compared with 1914, when there was a strength of 265,000 out of an establishment of 312,000. I am glad to say that after rather a lapse at the end of the war of the interest in the Territorial Force it is gradually reviving, and I see no difficulty in bringing this

C 62775

Territorial Force up to the full establishment, which of course is considerably below what it was in 1914. But still I think that that will perhaps be even better done than it was before that date. Moreover, as we cannot find money for the Infantry and Field Artillery (Special Reserve), we have no provision for making good the casualties which will occur in the regular Expeditionary Force while the national army is being got ready. It may be true that owing to improved weapons the fighting power of each unit would be as great as in 1914 or greater, but the same increase of power may be found in any of our possible adversaries. We are doing everything that we can to advance what I would call the mechanical side of the Army, and I believe myself that we are not only keeping abreast of foreign nations, but we are going ahead of them. It is obvious, therefore, that no charge may be made against us of keeping a large Army with militarist designs. On the contrary we have barely sufficient for what we will call the policing of our Empire, because, not only is our Army less, but our commitments are greater. I should like to review our Overseas Stations where our Forces were in 1914.

Overseas Stations: India.

In India in 1914 we had 75,000 troops, we have now 62,000; that is to say, six Infantry Battalions and one Cavalry Regiment less than in 1914, but a further reduction is being made there still to meet the great strain of the fiscal position there. Two further Cavalry Units are leaving there to come on the Home strength; Artillery Units are being withdrawn and even the numbers in each battalion have been reduced. I should like to emphasise here the fact that we do not look upon, and never have looked upon, India as being the base of an Expeditionary Force, and the Force that we maintain there has been for the purpose of defending India against external attack and of providing internal security, and really comes under the third of the headings which I have enumerated.

Egypt.

In Egypt in 1914 we had 6,400 troops, to-day we have 12,600. We are obliged to keep a larger Force in Egypt, and, though this may be eventually somewhat reduced, still the fact is that with the granting of Independence to Egypt the control of the Egyptian Army may pass out of our hands, and it is essential that we should keep such a Force as in the opinion of the Imperial General Staff is necessary for the defence of the Suez Canal. I need not go into the importance of the maintenance of the Suez Canal in our hands, Lord Salisbury dealt with it the other day, but it is the key to our military position in the interests of all the other Dominions, and it seems to me that we should not relax or allow to be relaxed such a hold on the Canal which our Military Authorities think is essential.

Iraq and Palestine.

In addition we have Iraq and Palestine, and, although in both those places there may gradually be a reduction as affairs, as we hope they will do, get more settled, still if we take all the troops away it would only mean the addition to our Expeditionary Force of two battalions.

Gibraltar, Malta, Hong Kong, &c.

There are besides, Gibraltar, Malta, and Hong Kong, and other similar stations to which are allotted 14,000 men as against the 33,800 before the war.

The Rhine.

Now with regard to our new commitments. In time to come troops will be withdrawn from the Rhine, but I would like to point out that even at this moment those troops are counted as being on the Home Establishment and are included in the figures for the small Expeditionary Force which I have already given to you; and I must say that there have been great duties laid upon the Military Forces of the Crown in endeavouring in Silesia and other places to carry out the provisions of the Treaty of Versailles. All the

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 11 12 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62776

Dominions were signatories to the Treaty, but it has been left to the mother country's Imperial Forces alone to provide all the troops that were necessary to carry out the military conditions of that Treaty. I only mention that as a fact just to show that some of the duties have thrown a great strain on our Home Force. I have no complaint to make of this—I only state what is a fact as regards what has taken place since the date of the Armistice.

Constantinople.

I am glad to say that that commitment has now been liquidated. Sir Charles Harington has brought troops back to England where they will take their allotted places in the Expeditionary Force that is being built up, and I must say that the utmost credit attaches to Sir Charles Harington for the marvellous way in which he has been able to bring away this large Force from what was a hostile country without a single disquieting and disagreeable incident, and not only so, but with expressions of friendship from the Turks and others which may be of some value—a fact which shows that he had a great effect on the population of Constantinople.

Iraq and Palestine.

These two areas which are entirely new commitments have now been handed over by us to the Air Ministry, and the military responsibility for the safety of their frontiers devolves upon the Secretary of State for Air. In Iraq we have only two British Battalions; in Palestine we have no British Battalions.

Singapore.

A question was asked I think about Singapore by Mr. Bruce the other day. The position is this, that before the war we had one English battalion there, and we had a battalion which was found locally by the Malay Peninsula. That battalion has disappeared and has been replaced by a battalion from India, for which the Malay Peninsula pays. There are also a certain number of other troops there. The position of Singapore is held by my military advisers to be one which it is very difficult to attack, even if there is no British Fleet whatever in being, and is the only place where such a harbour could be made. They believe it to be almost invulnerable. They are perfectly content during the building of the works there to leave the defence as it is at the present moment. Eventually, of course, it will be necessary to make further provision for the manning of the guns, but there probably will not be a very large number of men required. With regard to the Infantry, a scheme is being drawn up, and not definitely settled yet, in case of any appearance of trouble, for immediately reinforcing the troops there with three battalions of Infantry; and my military advisers authorise me to say that they are content, from the point of view of safety, with Singapore, with the arrangements now in being or in progress of being developed.

Quota would be allowable under International Agreement greater than present size of Army.

With these enormous mandated territories, apart from our definite Imperial liabilities, I expect no one can accuse us of keeping up a large Army for militaristic purposes. I am perfectly certain that, if, on the lines of the Washington Conference, an agreement was come to for a general reduction by the Great Powers of their armies, we should find that there would be no reduction necessary in the Imperial Army, that the quota that would be allowed to us would be greater than the Force that we have in existence.

Principles governing present Strength.

Our Army is organised on the principle laid down by the late Government. First, that there would be no great war for ten years—three years of that have already gone by—and, secondly, possible small expeditions, and, believing as we do that, in the case of another great war when popular opinion was behind the Government, there would be the same influx of recruits that we had during the Great War, we are endeavouring to organise our small Army to expand and to have ready at hand the equipment necessary for immediate expansion.

C 62777

Co-operation with Dominions.

Now, if I may, I will turn to the relationship between the Home Army and the Military Forces of the Dominions. In practice, as apart from theory, it is impossible to draw a hard and fast line between local and Imperial requirements. The local security of any portion of the Empire depends, to a considerable extent, on the aggregate of its disposable military strength, and inversely the safety of the Empire as a whole is dependent on the strength of its component parts. This applies with particular force to the present moment when the centre and all outlying portions of the Empire are reduced, militarily speaking, to the lowest limit. We can no more confine the calculation of our strategical requirements in various parts of the Empire to watertight compartments than we can definitely circumscribe the measure of potential enemy action to which any one part may be exposed. Just as, in the Big War, the Dominions came overseas to the fullest extent of their capabilities to fight for the Empire, so, if any of our Dominions were attacked, would the whole Empire send every available man and devote all its resources to the help of such Dominion; but that, if I may say so, emphasises the fact that, just as we in Great Britain held the fort till Greater Britain could come to its aid, so each Dominion should be in a position to stand the brunt of the first attack until all the other Dominions could bring our men into the fight.

I should like to tell you a little personal matter that happened to myself. What I want to say is that each Dominion should be in a position, if attacked, to draw a line round the part attacked and hold the enemy until troops can come from other parts to help you to drive them out. In the worst time in 1914, after the retreat from Mons, I went to see Lord Kitchener, who was a great personal friend of mine—I was not in office then—it was a time when it looked as if we were going to be separated from the French and gradually to be driven into the sea, and I asked Lord Kitchener what he was going to do. He had a big map in front of him, and he simply took his thumb nail and drew a line across the Isthmus that goes out, and he said, "I am going to do what Wellington did, I am going to make my line as he did at Torres Vedras, and hold on until the Nation is ready to push the Germans back." That is an idea of what one has in one's mind as to the position each Dominion should occupy.

If I may say so, Mr. Bruce exactly hit the nail upon the head. The meeting of the first attack on any Dominion, and to resist it, is the duty of that Dominion itself. It is not so much the question of man power; important as that is there is no doubt, as I have said, that, in a war endorsed by the whole Empire, men would flock to the Colours as they did in the Great War. At the present moment many of those would be old soldiers, and with very little training would be able to take the field.

Need for Preparation.

Of course, that is an advantage that will gradually die out, but we hope each Dominion will see its way in the rising generation to prepare a certain proportion of their younger men to undertake the defence of their country; but what is important is, first of all, that there should be complete agreement in the military mind not only of this country, but of the great Dominions, as to what steps should be taken in the event of an attack on any one part of the British Empire; secondly, that we should know approximately, each of us, what assistance would be forthcoming at all events at the immediate outbreak of the war; but even more important than that is the necessity that each Dominion should possess the requisite amount of ammunition and equipment necessary fully to equip the force which it has. It is no use having men unless they have equipment, guns and ammunition.

Need for Common Training and Equipment.

Lastly, it is very necessary that our training and organisation should be one within the Empire; that we should have the same training for the whole of the troops of our Empire. I do not for one moment pretend that, because we put forward our organisation and our equipment and our training as a model, it is by any means

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 11 12 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62778

perfect; it may be that after consultation we shall find that for this particular task of defending the Empire modifications are necessary here just as much as anywhere else, and I should not hesitate to propose them if any such agreement were come to. What I would urge, and I feel I can hope to carry the representatives of the great Dominions here with me, is that there should be the closest touch, by correspondence if necessary, by personal meetings wherever possible, between the military heads of this country and the great Dominions. The Defence problem is like a great puzzle composed of many different pieces, of which the Mother Country and the Dominions each hold some pieces. We want to piece these together so as to make it a complete picture. I believe it can be done, and I venture to hope that in this task the Government and the Military Authorities at Home will have the cordial assistance of the Governments and the Military Authorities of each of the great Dominions.

AIR DEFENCE.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR AIR.

Sir Samuel Hoare: Prime Minister, the Committee of Imperial Defence have already circulated an Air Staff paper to the Imperial Conference, and I have in addition circulated to the Economic Conference a paper on Air Communications. I hope to deal in a general way this morning with several of the questions raised in the Air Staff paper, and I intend this afternoon at the Economic Conference to develop certain of the points raised in my paper on Air Communications. In particular I shall be dealing at the Economic Conference with the question of airships which, although it will eventually raise questions of military and strategic importance, is in its initial stages principally a commercial and economic problem. I do not, therefore, propose to deal with the question of airships this morning unless the Prime Ministers desire it. I will only say that the Committee of Imperial Defence attaches definite military importance to their development from the point of view of long distance naval reconnaissance, troop carrying, particularly in small wars, and in the future as aeroplane carriers, and it is on this account that the Government proposes to resume their development by means of subsidies to a commercial company which has undertaken to start a commercial line first to Egypt and subsequently to India.

Air Defence.

This morning I propose to restrict my observations to the only air weapon of which we are actually making use, namely, the aeroplane. Moreover, I desire to concentrate the attention of the Prime Ministers upon what appear to me to be the central questions of air defence, and I leave aside a group of questions that have occupied more attention than is perhaps due to them in the past connected with the internal organisation of the Air Force and its relations to sea and land power. I will only venture to remind you that, after a very full and careful enquiry, the Government has decided to confirm the decision of its predecessors, and to maintain the British Air Force as a single self-contained organisation. I would rather omit this morning a description of these former controversies and attempt to give a broad picture, first, of our actual Air strength, secondly, of the responsibilities that have been placed on the Air Force owing to the strategical changes that the advent of the air arm has introduced, thirdly, of the steps which we propose to take to remedy an inadequacy in air power, which I think you will all admit, and, lastly, to make some tentative suggestion as to Dominion co-operation.

Strength of British Air Force.

I begin, then, with the state of the strength of the Air Force as it is to-day, and I will first compare it with the strength of the Air Force as it was at the end of the war. The strength of the Air Force in November 1918 was as follows: 30,000 officers, 260,000 airmen and 3,300 first-line machines. In March of this year, at the beginning of this financial year, when I had to propose my estimates to the House of Commons, it was 3,000 officers, 27,000 airmen and 371 first-line aeroplanes. That is, you will see, a reduction of about eight-ninths from the strength as it was at the end of the war.

C62779

Strength of French Air Force.

The French figures tell a very different story. The French strength in November 1918 was 3,600 first-line machines; in March 1923 it was 1,260. Our force then is about one-ninth of the force that we had at the end of the war, whereas the French force, judged in terms of first-line machines, is over a third of what it was at the end of the war. That is the first point that I would venture to impress upon the Conference.

Duties of Royal Air Force.

Next, what are the duties that the Royal Air Force is expected to perform at the present moment? There are, as I see them, three: in the first place, co-operation with the Navy and the Army; secondly, the work of the Independent Air Commands, as in Iraq; and, thirdly, home defence against air attack. Let me say a word about each of these three responsibilities, and I will begin with the co-operation work with the Navy and the Army.

Co-operation with Navy and Army.

Since the war we have given priority to supplying the necessary minimum of Air Units for co-operation with the Navy and the Army and for the requirements of the British garrisons overseas. Six squadrons are provided for India, three in Egypt, and Palestine, [redacted] Trans-Jordania and Aden between them have roughly the equivalent of two squadrons. The necessary number of squadrons to keep the art of naval aviation alive in all its forms have also been provided for the Fleet and arrangements made to supply the number of aircraft required for filling all the aircraft-carriers included in the Admiralty programme. By the end of the present financial year this will involve roughly the equivalent of eight squadrons for the Navy. A small number of squadrons has also been provided for co-operation with the Army at home. These at present number two: we propose to increase them to about four squadrons in the coming year, but even then the number will fall much below what the Army would require for co-operation if an Expeditionary Force were sent abroad and the minimum for that purpose as formulated by the General Staff is eight squadrons. So much for the co-operation work with the Navy and Army.

Independent Air Command in Iraq.

I come next to the Air Force that is required for the Independent Air Command in Iraq. This command has constituted a considerable part of the Air Ministry's responsibilities since the 1st October, 1922, when the primary responsibility for the garrisoning of Iraq was transferred from the Army to the Royal Air Force. In the last two years, the number of Air squadrons has been increased concurrently with a large reduction in the number of ground troops. In August 1921, for example, there were twenty battalions in the country, whereas there are now six, which number will soon be reduced to four or five. In the same period the number of Air squadrons has been raised from five to eight. The present scheme of control was principally due to a proposal made by Mr. Churchill, when the late Government found the military occupation of Iraq was costing more in money and men than they could afford and it was necessary to find some cheaper form of control until the Iraq Government had been more firmly established. From the point of view of the Air Ministry, the experiment of Air control in Iraq afforded the first example, on any considerable scale, of Air Forces being used not merely to secure predominance in the air over other Air Forces, but for the partial substitution of operations by the Air Force for operations carried out by military units on land. The Air Ministry can, I think, claim that this experiment has fully justified the expectation that was placed upon it. I could give the Conference a number of testimonies and opinions of impartial observers, such as the High Commissioner for Iraq, bearing out the fact that the experiment has been successful. I will content myself with only one, made by Sir Percy Cox, before he relinquished the post of High Commissioner. "It is not an exaggeration," said Sir Percy Cox in a despatch, "to say that Air action among the Euphrates tribes has saved far more human lives than it has destroyed, by restoring order and preventing tribal fighting." In most cases, the fear of Air action has been sufficient to preserve peace.

57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
11
12
13
14
15
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62780

Home Defence against Air Attack.

I come next to what is much the most important of these three responsibilities, the question of home defence against air attack. Well, it may surprise the Conference to be told this, but it appears to be the fact, that until two years ago, no responsibility for home defence against air attack was placed upon the Air Force, and until eighteen months ago no provision of any kind was made for home defence. When the Navy and Army requirements were met and the squadrons provided for the Air Command in Iraq, and provision made for training in Great Britain, the machines left for home defence in Great Britain were altogether insignificant. I may give as an instance of this insignificance the fact that a few months ago at the height of the Turkish crisis, when we had sent two Royal Air Force squadrons to Constantinople, we were left with only twenty-four first-line machines actually available for home defence against air attack.

Comparison between British and French Air Strength.

This state of affairs was sufficiently serious in itself, but it was made more serious by the air policy of our neighbours, the French. In France, instead of reducing their Air Force by eight-ninths, as we did at the end of the war, they reduced it by less than two-thirds, and since then very large sums of money have been spent upon the development of aviation in all its branches, and great efforts made to increase not only the efficiency of the existing force, but actually to increase it in quantity. For the purposes of comparison I give the figures in machines, owing to the difference between the constitution of British and French squadrons, but by a machine I mean a first-line machine, with all that goes behind it in the matter of personnel, reserves and administration. Taking that basis of comparison, the number of first-line machines available in France to-day, excluding naval machines, is 956, of which 360 are army co-operation machines, that is, machines attached definitely to various military formations, and 596 machines in the Division aérienne, that is to say, in what has come to be known as the French Independent Striking Air Force—596 machines in the French Independent Striking Air Force. In addition, there are 70 machines in different parts of the world with the French Navy, and 180 machines in North Africa, to say nothing of machines in Syria, Indo-China, and elsewhere. These machines in North Africa could, in the view of the Air Staff, be self-supporting for at least three months, and could drop from 10 to 15 tons of bombs daily upon Gibraltar, but I will not elaborate the Mediterranean side of the defence problem as I am dealing for the moment with the home defence of Great Britain. Moreover, a programme has been introduced in the Chamber and received with approval by the French public for nearly doubling the French military air force, for recreating the French Naval Air Service and for increasing the Colonial Air Services. The programme of expanding the French Army Service has passed the Military Committee of the Chamber, but has not yet gone through the succeeding stages of legislation. If and when it is put into operation, the French military service will be doubled and will reach a strength of over 2,000 first-line machines. As to the French Naval Air Service, a Bill has been introduced, but has not yet been passed by the Naval Committee of the Chamber, for the purpose of creating a Naval Air Service of over 500 first-line machines. Supposing this expansion is carried out, the French Air Service as a whole would reach a strength of about 2,600 machines, of which some 1,800 would be military machines actually in France, and over 500 would be machines attached to the French Navy. It is uncertain as to when and as to how this full programme of expansion will be carried out. The disparity, however, between the French and British forces is overwhelming even at the lowest estimate that can be given and even with the actual figures as they are.

French Machines available for Attack on England.

I assume only the actual strengths as they are without any French expansion at all. There are to-day 866 machines in France that, in the view of the Air Staff, are available for attack upon these shores, as against 80 machines, and I am making a very liberal estimate in that connection, as against 80 machines in England actually formed, actually organised, which could be used for home defence, even including the units attached to the army for army co-operation. Assuming that three-fourths of the French army co-operation squadrons were not engaged elsewhere and were therefore available for attack upon England, no less than 168 tons of bombs could be dropped over London during the first twenty-four hours of their attack and 84 tons a day continuously after the first day. Suppose, however, that the General Staff is correct in considering that the army co-operation squadrons would be otherwise engaged, and only the French Independent Striking Force of 596 machines could take part in an attack upon London, even so, 105 tons of bombs could be dropped during the first twenty-four hours of attack, and 50 tons a day after the first twenty-four hours for an indefinite time. Now it will be remembered that the heaviest weight of bombs dropped in England during the late war in one month was 12 tons; that is to say, 1,500 tons of bombs could, at the lowest estimate, be dropped in the course of a month, whereas, 12 tons was the greatest amount that was dropped during the late war, that is to say, more than 100 times the amount. A dispassionate observer, Lord Balfour, expressed the opinion in a Committee of Imperial Defence paper that, "In these circumstances London would be uninhabitable, probably in fact—certainly in the opinion of those who now dwell there." I cannot help remembering in this connection the remarks that were made by Mr. Bruce, two days ago, with reference to the effect of the rupture of our communications for the purposes of supplying these islands with food, and applying them to the not-dissimilar situation created by this air menace, "We certainly think if a disaster occurred in Great Britain"—I venture to quote Mr. Bruce's words—"We people in Australia think that would be really a greater disaster to Australia almost than to Great Britain."

C 62781

British Means of Defence.

Against this overwhelming air force we have only, even now, some 80 machines which could be made available, that is to say, a disparity of 1 to 10, if three-fourths of the French army co-operation squadrons are included, and 1 to 8 if they are excluded. Moreover, our evidence goes to show that whilst we are still more efficient than the French, taking man for man and machine for machine, the French have made great improvement from the point of view of efficiency since the war, and, in any case, I venture to suggest that a disparity of this kind is overwhelming. It should also be remembered that, in all the ancillary sections of aviation, France is greatly superior in quantity to ourselves. For instance, in the matter of civil machines, whatever may be their military value, and setting aside for a moment the debatable question as to how far they can be used in military action or how far they cannot, at the beginning of the present year France had some 660 civil machines against our 167. To take another basis of comparison, the capacity of the two countries to produce aircraft—France last year produced 3,300 new machines, military and civil, whereas we only produced 200. In the French industry again at the end of last year there were about 9,000 men employed, whereas in our small industry in the United Kingdom at this date there were only 2,500.

Recent Measures to strengthen Home Air Defences.

Well, I think I have said enough, in view of these figures, to show that our Air Force has up to the present been altogether inadequate in point of quantity to carry out its main responsibility of home defence against air attack. Accordingly, about twelve months ago, I obtained approval from Mr. Bonar Law's Government to proceed with a proposal that had already been sanctioned, in principle, by Mr. Lloyd George's Government, for an increase of fifteen squadrons, making eighteen with the three already formed. Even so, it seemed to me that the disparity was overwhelming. Mr. Bonar Law took the same view, and shortly afterwards appointed a sub-committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence to investigate the whole question, and, as a result of the deliberations of that Committee, the Cabinet agreed to a further

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 11 12 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62782

development to the extent of 34 more squadrons, that is to say, our programme of expansion is 52 squadrons, 34 plus 18, for home defence. Putting it in terms of machines, that will give us a force of about 600 machines as against the 600 machines of the French Independent Striking Force. It leaves out of account the machines that might be diverted from the army co-operation squadrons in France for an air attack, and it sets up a force of approximately numerical equality with the French Independent Striking Force of 600 machines, but there are certain points in connection with this expansion to which I should like to make some allusion. It is intended that our home defence units should not be all regular units, but should be recruited, as far as possible, from non-regular sources with a large amount of the non-technical duties carried out by civilians. I can give the Conference further details as to that expansion if they so desire it, but the point I wish to impress upon the Conference is that, with the comparison of 600 British machines against the 600 French Independent Striking Force machines, we are comparing a substantial number of machines that will be manned with non-regular personnel against a force that is exclusively regular.

Standard to be Equality with nearest Striking Force.

The Government, however, admitted that we must definitely take as our standard equality with the nearest striking force. Let me quote the salient sentence from the Prime Minister's announcement in the House of Commons last July. "British air power must include a Home Defence Force of sufficient strength adequately to protect us against air attack from the nearest Force within striking distance of this country." The implication of this statement, although naturally the Government did not wish to over-emphasise it in their statement in the House of Commons, is that we must expand further if we find that these 600 machines are not sufficient and that accordingly the expansion must be so arranged as to make further expansion possible and easy. The first stage therefore in remedying our disparity is this creation of a Home Defence Force of 600 machines. Even so, we should only have a two-thirds ratio to the French Air Force in France, if the French Army Co-operation Squadrons are included, and further, whilst all their squadrons will be regular, a substantial number of ours will be cadre and auxiliary.

Time needed to attain Standard.

This expansion must take a considerable time, and during the period of expansion we shall remain in a comparatively weak position with all its military and diplomatic implications. I would desire to draw the attention of the Prime Ministers particularly to this fact. If we proceed normally we shall take a minimum, so far as the Air Staff can at present see, of five years to carry it out. I may say in that connection that the actual point has not yet been considered either by the Committee of Imperial Defence or by the Cabinet, but the Air Staff have worked out the framework of the programme, and, try as they will, it seems almost impossible to carry out the programme more quickly, if normal peace time methods are to be adopted. After all, it is a very big and difficult problem that we are trying to solve. We are virtually doubling the Air Force and unfortunately we have to make this expansion upon a very narrow base. The demobilisation of the Air Force was so complete at the end of the war, and the proposals that were adopted for creating a peace time Force were of such a narrow kind, that the base that has been left to us for expansion is a very small one, and it therefore makes particularly difficult the expedition of this extensive programme.

Difficulties over Expedition.

The principal difficulty is the difficulty of personnel, for unfortunately we are finding that in peace-time it is practically impossible to attract to the Air Force the highly skilled technical labour that is required for it. That means that we have to train our highly skilled technicians from boyhood. We have to take them as boys when they leave the secondary schools and give them a three years' training. That is one of the examples that I venture to give you to show the kind of difficulty against which we find ourselves in the matter of producing the skilled personnel quickly. There is another difficulty, there is the great difficulty in peace time—it may sound not a very great one, but none the less it is a very real one—of providing aerodromes and the ground organisation. Unfortunately when the Air Force was demobilised the greater part of the aerodromes were given up, and there are all sorts of difficulties in peace time, that you were not up against in war time, in either resuming possession of those not inconsiderable tracts of land or of obtaining new aerodromes. I quote those two instances not to suggest that they raise difficulties that are necessarily insuperable, but to show you the kind of practical difficulty that we are up against as soon as we embark upon big expansion. There is the further difficulty, and this is the last one that I should like to mention, you might say: "Well, why not increase your pay and attract into the Force your highly skilled technicians by offering them a very high wage?" Well, as soon as you do that your action immediately reacts upon the whole of the personnel already in the Air Force, and it would also inevitably react upon the personnel in the two bigger Forces, the Army and the Navy. I have mentioned to you these difficulties, for at first sight you may be surprised and possibly disappointed when I tell you that it will take so long, so far as the Air Staff can now see, to double the Force and to build up these fifty-two Home Defence Squadrons.

C 62783

Restatement of Main Features of Position.

I would then venture to ask the Prime Ministers to give their attention to these two points that I have been trying to emphasise. First of all, our great inferiority in the air in the face of France. I think that must be admitted from the figures that I have given you. Secondly, the considerable period of time during which, so far as we can see, this inequality with all its implications, military and diplomatic, is likely to continue.

Possibility of Reduction of Air Armaments.

In view of this serious state of affairs and of the sombre prospect that it holds out before us, you may ask, as I have very often asked myself: Is it possible to reduce air armaments by international agreement on the analogy of the Washington Conference in the case of battleships? Well, I say quite frankly that I am most anxious that a reduction of that kind should be made, if possible, but I think the Conference should not be blind to the very great practical difficulties, particularly at the present moment, that there are in the way of carrying through an international agreement of that kind. I will not elaborate them, though of course I can do so if the Prime Ministers desire to press me. I will only mention one or two of them in passing. There is the great difficulty, a difficulty that did not exist in the case of an easily definable unit like the battleship—there is the great difficulty in the case of Air of distinguishing between military and civil machines. Again, there is the difficulty of defining what proportion of Air a particular country should be allowed in view of its imperial and international responsibilities, as compared with what amount of Navy or Army it should be allowed. Further, and perhaps at this moment this is the greatest difficulty of all, there is the fact that at the moment, unlike the case of Washington, where we had a programme of four battleships, we have got nothing to bargain with. We should go into the Conference at this moment with an Air Force so insignificant behind us that we should have nothing in our hands at all, and it would appear palpable to the other parties of the Conference that our chief reason for entering it was to avoid the necessity of expanding our very inadequate Air Force. However, speaking generally, the Government are most anxious to see an agreement for a reduction of air armaments, but at the present moment they see little likelihood of successfully carrying it into effect. There then is the air situation, and I should be extremely grateful to hear the views of the Dominion Prime Ministers and to receive any help and suggestions that they may offer.

Co-operation with Dominions.

In the Air Staff paper I venture to make a number of specific suggestions as to the training of Dominion officers in the Royal Air Force organisation. May I make myself quite clear upon that point? I have not the least desire to attempt to press a policy of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62784

centralisation upon the Dominions. All that has been in my mind in making those suggestions is that the Prime Ministers may find that with their comparatively small Air Forces, as in the nature of things they will probably be, the overhead expenses for training and for technical and expert development may be so great as to make the cost almost prohibitive, and it occurred to me that with our training facilities here, both elementary, higher and Staff, we might, by means of an agreed system of co-operation, be able to help you in avoiding anyhow some of those heavy overhead charges. From our own point of view it would be extremely valuable to maintain the continuity of air training and air strategy by having a number of Dominion pilots working, being trained and doing perhaps higher courses in connection with the Royal Air Force here. I have, however, elaborated these suggestions at greater length in the Air Staff paper, and I should be extremely grateful if the Prime Ministers would see their way to taking them up with me, either individually or collectively, according as they may desire.

Speaking generally, I can say that the greater the development of the Dominion Air Forces the better it will be for us and the easier it will be to solve our problems. In the event of a European war whilst, quite obviously, the first brunt of the Air attack would fall upon these shores, subsequent reinforcements of the British Air forces by Dominion pilots would come in a most invaluable form and at a most critical moment. It is for the Dominions, of course, to decide how best to develop their own air forces.

Value of Development in Civil Aviation.

But may I say, in passing, I have been very much struck by the success of the development in certain Dominions of the air forces for civil purposes. There are several instances of that. The instance that I have particularly in mind is the forestry and survey work that I understand has been done in Canada. No doubt there are other instances of the same kind in other Dominions; and it seems to me that, whilst in this country, where the attack will be sudden and overwhelming and where also, for civil purposes, distances are very short, our air force has to be mainly trained upon definitely military lines, in the Dominions, where the distances are great, and where it would appear that there is little likelihood of a sudden overwhelming air attack, it may well be found that, both on the grounds of economy and general efficiency, you may desire to develop, at any rate, some part of your air force in peace time upon such lines as would make it possible to use it for, say, survey or the carrying of mails. But there, again, I would suggest that, if the Prime Ministers desired it, we might take up questions of that sort in greater detail possibly in individual conferences. In any case, from what I have said, it will be seen that the Air Force is the only arm that can be used productively in peace time. But, as I say, I am only too anxious to take up that side of the question with the Delegations in greater detail.

Conclusion.

Well, I have tried to give the Conference, in as short a time as I could, a description of the present Air situation as it presents itself to me. The figures that I have given speak for themselves. I do not wish to exaggerate the magnitude of the air menace; neither, however, can I honourably or safely underrate it. It is a serious menace. For the first time in many centuries the Capital of the Empire is not invulnerable, and it must take some time to make it invulnerable. It is a very serious state of affairs. But, just as the sea arteries of the Empire must be kept safe and free, so must the heart of the Empire be kept intact and secure from sudden attack.

"One of the great factors of the next war," and here I am quoting the words of Marshal Foch, "will obviously be aircraft. The potentialities of aircraft on a large scale are almost incalculable. It is clear that such an attack, owing to its crushing moral effect upon a nation, may impress public opinion to the point of disarming the Government and thus become decisive."

Mr. Baldwin: General Smuts, I think it would be very appropriate if you began the discussion, as you were the Chairman of the Committee of the War Cabinet which investigated the question of an Air Ministry and was responsible for setting it up.

C 62785

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

General Smuts: I wish to confine myself to some practical observations. We have listened now to four most informative statements in this Conference about the defence position generally in this country. I am very sorry that I did not have the privilege of hearing Lord Beatty's address yesterday afternoon, but I am told by those who attended at the Admiralty that it was a most impressive and informative statement.

Defence Position in South Africa.

I shall not refer to the South African position. We generally comply with the test which Lord Derby has laid down, that, in the first instance, we can look after ourselves, and generally we are protected also by our geographical position; so that we need not deflect too much of our financial energy into mere military questions. That is the happiness of our position.

Unity of Air Force commended.

I was very glad to hear that the unity of the Air Force as a single self-contained organisation had been decided upon, or had been once more reaffirmed by the British Cabinet. I think, if I may say so, that that is as wise a step as they could have taken. I remember during the years of the war, when we had separate Air Forces, they were competing with each other and were unable as separate forces to obtain proper efficiency. I was asked by the Government at the time to undertake this work, and after a great deal of trouble and a great deal of negotiation we succeeded in establishing the single Air Force. I always look upon that with pride, as one of the best services that I rendered to this country during the time that I had the honour to be associated with it. The result of that single organisation was that before the end of the war this country was as far ahead of any other country in the air as she was on the sea, and I am sure that, if we were to destroy the singleness of the Air Force, we would in time of difficulty be faced with exactly the same situation; we should have to scrap our peace service and we would have to go back upon the single Air Force once more. It has proved itself in war, and I hope it will maintain itself in peace.

Danger of Present Position as regards Armaments.

The state of affairs which has been disclosed by the various statements made to us here in this Conference forms a curious, and, I may say, a terrible commentary upon the peace. We made a peace which was intended to lead to disarmament; we had special disarmament clauses put into the Covenant, and we have learned during the last few days the state the world is actually in. We see, instead of disarmament, that the armaments of the world are actually on the increase. I may say this, that this country, at any rate, has acted in good faith; it may have gone too far; it may have taken too grave risks in disarming and in carrying out the policy which was laid down at the Washington Conference; but no one will ever be able to say that, whatever happens as the result of what has been done, this country has not acted in good faith.

Our allies, our associates, have not done the same. They evidently have had a different conception of loyalty to the Peace Treaty from what we have had, and the result is what we have heard to-day as to the state of armaments in the world.

No immediate Naval or Military Menace to Empire.

I am not going to go into general questions. I want to confine myself to a few practical points. After all, much of this continental armament does not concern us very directly and need not cause us any particular alarm. The question that I ask myself is, where is the menace to us in all this? That is the practical direct question which we, as an Empire, have to answer. In all this armament around us, what is the menace to us, and where does it come in? I take it that there is no direct military menace in the first instance. The French armies, gigantic and bloated as they are, the armies that we see arising all over the continent, are not in the first instance a direct menace to us. Nor do I see that we are menaced on the sea.

57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
11 66
12 67
13 68
14
159
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62786

The British Navy is still our first line of defence. It is still the most incomparable instrument of war in the world. It probably has a greater relative superiority to-day than it has ever had in the whole history of this Empire. Now that the German navy has gone to the bottom of the sea, I am sure that the superiority of the British navy is greater than it has ever been in its whole history. So that there is no direct military menace to us, there is no direct naval menace to us. We may have, of course, to take special precautions as we are doing in Singapore. I do not look upon the situation in the Far East as any menace to us at all. It may be that in the cause of ordinary prudence, and acting on far-sighted considerations, we have to go in for an expenditure like Singapore. There is no menace there. It may be something in the far-distant future that may occur.

Air Menace from France.

Where is the menace to us? I must say, Prime Minister, that I have listened to-day to the air statement made by the Secretary for Air with very grave concern. I think that that statement is as grave a statement as could possibly be made about the defensive position of this country. It is really an appalling state of affairs to think that if anything were to go wrong—and anything may go wrong, we know the state the world is in to-day, statesmen are not really sane, they behave in a way which seems an outrage to ordinary commonsense and you do not know what in a precipitate moment they may not do. What is the state of affairs? In this country we have now, I understand, eighteen machines to defend ourselves against an organised independent air force of 600 a short distance away.

Sir Samuel Hoare: Eighty machines.

General Smuts: Three squadrons?

Sir Samuel Hoare: Putting in squadrons working with the army, we think we might scrape together eighty machines.

General Smuts: Take it at that—80 to 600; eighty machines scraped together from all the oddments that you can collect in this country, and match them against an organised independent air force, organised for attack abroad, of 600 machines. I think that that is as appalling a state of affairs as I have ever listened to. I do not think this country has ever been exposed to greater peril than it is now.

Need for Balanced Defence.

The First Lord spoke the other day of a balanced defence. That is what I agree with. In this country we should not run away with any particular line of defence, neither in the air nor on the sea nor on land. Where is the balance? Here we are, absolutely exposed. If anything were to go wrong, attack would be launched against London and the other important centres in the south, such as those the Air Secretary has described. I do not think that is a position which ought to be tolerated much longer. It is not only the great numerical superiority which has been achieved by France, but it is the way she can keep it up. At the end of the war this country was the undisputed master in the air, and it was my idea at the time that whatever happened we would maintain that, that we would look upon the air service with the same pride as we look upon the navy. It is the proud boast of this country that its navy is the first in the world and will remain the first in the world. Though we may have adopted the one-power standard, it is our wish and idea and pride that it shall remain the first navy, not only in numbers but in efficiency. We were in exactly the same favourable position in the air, but where are we to-day? We have listened to this tale of woe and we see how our friends speak to us. Our friends know this, they know that they can strike a deadly blow before we could ever dream of organising a defence. They know it; and these people take advantage of every favour that is on their side. The result is that our diplomacy becomes ineffective, we are exposing the country to an enormous risk, we are absolutely exposing ourselves. Where is the balance? We may have the most powerful navy, but it will not help us a bit. This country here may be submerged from the air before the navy could be of any use at all. I speak strongly because I am sure that I am right. I am sure of it from what I have seen in the last war and what I have seen here in London, when not 600 or 100 machines but two machines came over, and half the population was driven to panic.

C 62787

Immediate Action against Air Menace urgent.

I know what will happen in this place if 100 machines effect an entrance into this area and start dropping bombs on the scale the Air Secretary has described. Anything might happen then. If we have pride in this Empire and if we look upon it as the greatest in the world, as something which is really for the good not only of our own people but of the world at large, I think we ought not to tolerate a state of affairs like this. It should never have been brought about, but there it is and we must do the best under the circumstances. I would not submit to this menace. That is the menace, and I would not submit to it any longer than is necessary. The Air Secretary has not told us anything about air defences, that may have been worked out, but I think we ought to do so. I do not say go in for vast expenditure, but do so. We had a very efficient scheme for London, and if that scheme were kept alive——

Lord Salisbury: It has been worked out.

General Smuts: Not only for London?

Lord Derby: It is on a very small scale.

General Smuts: We cannot submit to this menace. At the end of five years, even, we shall not be equal to France. We would then be within two-thirds of her present position. After five years of desperate effort we shall be within two-thirds of the present strength of France. We are told that France has authorised a further expansion which will double her air force.

Sir Samuel Hoare: If I may correct, it is not quite as much as that. The proposals have gone through certain stages.

General Smuts: Yes. They are not through, but they are there. These things are contemplated, and if there is to be a race in the air we have lost so much way. The position of danger to us will be such a prolonged one, for five years at least, that I think we are running the gravest risk, and we must remove the menace.

Suggestions for Action.

We cannot remove it now by an accelerated air policy, the Secretary for Air has explained to us the very grave difficulties in the way of acceleration, but I think we can do a great deal to work out schemes of anti-aircraft defence, not only for London but for other vital centres in the south of this country, which may, in an emergency, prevent the direst calamity. I hope that that will be done. That, at any rate, does not require five years, but can be done in a short time, skeleton defences, properly worked out by the staff, which can be brought into operation within a week or two weeks. That is the first thing that I would do. The second is that I would accelerate the programme, authorised twelve months ago, of an additional fifteen squadrons. I can imagine that the balance of thirty-five squadrons which has now been authorised may take a long time to complete, but the fifteen squadrons authorised some time back by the late Government ought, I think, to be pushed on with as hard as possible. Do not let us look upon the programme as a whole and delay the one part in order to execute the whole, let us hurry on the earlier part of the programme as fast as possible in order that there may be something.

Of course it is our policy to work in favour of disarmament, and we must do it. But I agree with the Air Secretary that, while we are in this exposed position and our possible opponents have acquired that immense and undisputed superiority, they would not listen to us with very much seriousness, they know where they are, and they know they will have us, and I do not think it will be much use speaking to them, in case we have to talk to them.

Present Risks too great.

All I want to say is this, that we are running a risk that this country cannot afford, either from the peace point of view or from

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 11 12 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62788

the war point of view. After all, defence is not a war weapon, it is a peace weapon. Properly arranged, defence is the most powerful weapon that your diplomacy can have. Our friends over the Channel know perfectly well that we are superior on the seas, and they know that their armies are no menace to us any more than the German armies or the armies of Napoleon were a menace to us. But they know we can be caught napping at a vital point, and it may happen in a fortnight. It may take a long time to defeat a country on land or to chase her navy into defeat, but this is a different thing. This disaster could be brought about in a week or a fortnight. You may destroy the morale of this people and other great centres to such an extent that after a fortnight the thing is over. We dare not run this risk. It is a very good thing that public opinion does not know this. People sleep in peace here at night. But the most urgent precautions should be taken, arranged in skeleton, for all the vital points in the Southern part of this Kingdom, and that should be done without delay. We should be able to say to ourselves, honestly and sincerely: Now there is something in the background.

Lord Derby: Are you speaking of anti-aircraft as opposed to air machines?

General Smuts: Yes; I am speaking of the anti-aircraft gunnery arrangements here in London, which practically kept the German force out of it; the Germans could only enter by two or three at a time. I have spoken strongly, Prime Minister, but I am sure that my experience and instinct perfectly justify the strong remarks I have made.

Question of Adjournment.

Mr. Massey: May I suggest that the discussion be now adjourned? It is very unfortunate, but there are three Ministers sitting here who have agreed to go to a function to-day. As a matter of fact we are a quarter of an hour overdue now.

Mr. Baldwin: We will do that, Mr. Massey.

Mr. Massey: I am very sorry to have to suggest it, but I see no way out of it.

Mr. Baldwin: I quite see the point.

FUTURE BUSINESS.

There is the question of the attitude of the United States towards the "C" Mandates, and it is suggested that that should be referred to a Committee, consisting of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and representatives of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, and the time of the meeting will be communicated by the Secretary.

It has been suggested also that the question of the United States Liquor Traffic should be referred to Lord Curzon's Committee which is now sitting and dealing with the question of treaties and territorial waters. The two matters seem to be akin. Then there is the question of the Indian contribution to the League of Nations, which might be referred to a Committee consisting of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Lord Privy Seal, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs or representative, and representatives of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, The Irish Free State and India.

I think the Maharajah wishes to say a word to-day before the Conference adjourns.

ADDRESS BY THE MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR IN HONOUR OF THE DUSSEHRA FESTIVAL.

The Maharajah of Alwar: Prime Minister and Friends, it is a curious coincidence, I hope a happy coincidence, that to-day in this room we should be discussing questions relating to Military, Naval and Air matters, all connected with the defence of the Empire, on the exact day when in India is being celebrated our greatest festival of the year.

It is a festival to commemorate the march of Shri Ram, one of our greatest incarnations, to Ceylon where he achieved victory. The anniversary is celebrated nowadays in India in inspecting our Military troops and Units, in other words examining the means of war, or, more correctly speaking, the means of peace.

C 62789

We may thus in a sense be celebrating the Dussehra festival to-day by examining the means of Defence of our Empire.

Friends, I wish you all in the name of my country as an Indian, in the name of the Princes as one of their Order, our cordial and sincere Dussehra greetings to each and all of you.

Let us hope that this quiet, almost unostentatious, work that we are doing, or trying to do, will lead to co-ordination and co-operation of all the forces of the Empire to secure real peace, not only within, but also without.

Mr. Baldwin: I am quite sure the Conference are very grateful for those words.

The Conference then adjourned to Monday afternoon.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 19, 1923.

APPENDIX I.

(i.)

The Marquess Curzon of Kedleston to Mr. Chilton (Washington).

(No. 299.) Foreign Office, October 12, 1923, 2·30 P.M.

(Part 1.)

THE information which reaches America will have acquainted the American Government with the extremely critical economic position that has arisen in Europe, owing to the failure to find any solution for the reparations problem, which daily becomes more acute as the financial and political condition of Germany grows worse. There does not appear to be among the European Powers that unity of thought which either renders common action feasible or will be successful in finding an early solution. His Majesty's Government have during the past nine months made a series of proposals to their allies for meeting these difficulties, none of which has been so fortunate as to meet with a measure of acceptance sufficient to bring about common action. And yet, without such action, not merely Germany, but Europe, appears to be drifting into economic disaster. In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government have for long entertained the belief that the co-operation of the United States Government is an essential condition of any real advance towards settlement. America, by reason of her position and history, is more disinterested than any of the European Powers. At the same time, she is directly and vitally concerned with the solution of the European problem, if for no other reason because in it is involved the question of the inter-Allied debt.

(Part 2.)

When Mr. Hughes made his declaration in December last, both Great Britain and Germany made it clear that they would warmly welcome the proffered assistance; and whenever the suggestion has been revived, it has met with the hearty approval of His Majesty's Government; the French Government have hitherto taken a different view. This lack of unanimity is, so far as His Majesty's Government are aware, the sole reason why the proposal has not been proceeded with.

His Majesty's Government were already engaged in formulating an enquiry to the United States Government as to the manner in which, in the opinion of the latter, the united action which is the common desideratum could best be brought about, when they read in the press yesterday morning a declaration, reported to have been made by President Coolidge, that the American Government rest on their proposal of December last. His Majesty's Government warmly welcome this declaration, and hope that they are justified in deducing from it that, if the European Powers will join in such an enquiry, America will render the promised co-operation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62790

(Part 3.)

If His Majesty's Government have rightly interpreted the statement of the President, and if they may count upon an encouraging reception being given to such a proceeding, they will not hesitate to invite the immediate co-operation of their allies in Europe in an invitation to the United States Government to assist in the proposed enquiry, by deputing a delegate, whether official or unofficial, to take part in it. If, on the other hand, it were proposed to hold such an enquiry, although complete unanimity had not been forthcoming at this end, might His Majesty's Government and the majority of the Allies still hope for American co-operation? Alternatively, if it were proposed that such an enquiry should be entrusted to the Reparation Commission or to a body appointed by it, would America still be willing to participate?

It is in the firm belief that the American Government have it in their power to render a great service to the security and peace of the world that His Majesty's Government, speaking in the name of the whole British Empire, as represented in the Imperial Conference now assembled in London, desire to associate themselves with the renewed proposal of the President, and they will be glad to receive from the American Government any suggestion that the latter may be disposed to offer in reply to the questions which I have ventured to put.

You should see the Secretary of State, and enforce this argument with all the power at your disposal.

(ii.)

Mr. Chilton to the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston.—(Received October 13, 9 P.M.)

(No. 403.) Urgent. Washington, October 13, 1923.

I COMMUNICATED verbally to Secretary of State this morning contents of your telegram No. 299. He received communication in a most friendly manner, and said that, although he could not, of course, give me any definite reply before consulting the President and Cabinet, he could assure me that communication would receive most careful and sympathetic consideration by United States Government, and added that, speaking personally, he hoped something would come of it. Mr. Hughes said: "You know what my own views are on the subject."

He further said that he had warned French Ambassador some time ago that France should renounce her obstinate attitude and come into line with the other Powers.

Secretary of State said he would, of course, treat my communication as entirely confidential, and he hoped no inkling of it would be allowed to reach the press in England, as he did not wish for any publicity, at least until the United States Government had had time to consider and reply to your Lordship's proposals.

He asked me for an aide-mémoire recording what I had communicated to him, which I am sending him to-day.

I had reported President's statement, as given in the press of the 10th October, by despatch No. 1230, now on its way to your Lordship.

(iii.)

Mr. Chilton to the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston.—(Received October 17, 8·30 A.M.)

(No. 406.) Washington, October 16, 1923.

My telegram No. 403.

Secretary of State has handed me a memorandum in reply to my communication of 13th October. Text follows in my immediately following telegram.

He said that, while he would of course treat the matter as confidential, he wished to reserve the right to publish his reply in case the suggestion of His Majesty's Government and his answer should become public or should be made known to other Powers, and it should be important that the attitude of the United States Government should be made clear.

C 62791

He laid great stress upon the manner in which France should be approached in this matter, but he felt sure it would be done with tact and delicacy. France should not be allowed to think that there was any sort of understanding between Great Britain and the United States.

(iv.)

Mr. Chilton to the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston.—(Received October 16, 9 A.M.)

(No. 407.) Washington, October 16, 1923.

FOLLOWING is text referred to in my immediately preceding telegram:—

(Part 1.)

Aide-mémoire.

In reply to communication from His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires of 13th October, Secretary of State desires again to express deep interest of the United States in economic situation of Europe, and its readiness to aid in any practical way to promote recuperation and re-establishment of economic stability. Government of United States has viewed with deep concern the lack, as His Majesty's Government expresses it, of that unity of thought on the part of [? European Powers] essential to [? common] action. Views of Government of United States as to importance of agreement amongst Allies and relations of Government of United States to questions involved were set forth in statement of Secretary of State, to which His Majesty's Government refers, and these views are still held. It is observed that [? His Majesty's Government] states that [? Great Britain] and Germany made it clear that proffered assistance would be warmly welcomed by them, and that His Majesty's Government has always heartily approved suggestion then made by Secretary of State, whenever it has been revived, and that His Majesty's Government is aware that sole reason why proposal has not been proceeded with has been lack of unanimity among interested Powers.

It is believed that present conditions make it imperative that a suitable financial plan should be evolved to prevent economic disaster in Europe, consequences of which would be world-wide. It is to be hoped that existing circumstances are propitious for consideration of such a plan, inasmuch as abandonment of resistance on the part of German Government will present [? a] freer opportunity and an immediate necessity for establishment of an economic programme. Government of United States is, therefore, entirely willing to take part in an economic conference in which all European Allies chiefly concerned in German reparations participate, for the purpose of considering questions of capacity of Germany to make reparations, and an appropriate financial plan for securing such payments. It is deemed advisable, however, to emphasise the following points:—

1. Confirming what was said by Secretary of State in his statement last December, to which you refer, Government of United States has no desire to see Germany relieved of her responsibility for war or of her just obligations. There should be no grounds for impression that London Conference, if called, should have any such aim or that resistance to fulfilment of Germany's obligations has any support. It should be evident that in effort to obtain ends in view regard must be had to capacity of Germany to pay, and to fundamental condition of Germany's rehabilitation, without which reparation payment will be impossible.

2. Such a conference should be advisory; not for purpose of binding Governments, who would naturally be unwilling to pledge their acceptance in advance, but to assure appropriate recommendations by a thoroughly informed and impartial body intent upon solving difficult pending problems upon their merits.

3. Secretary of State notes observation in communication of His Majesty's Government that European problem is of direct and

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62792

vital interest to United States, "if for no other reason because question of inter-Allied debt is involved therein." Government of United States has consistently maintained essential difference between question of Germany's capacity to pay, and of practicability of methods to secure reparation payments from Germany, and payment by Allies of their debts to United States, which constitute distinct obligations. In statement of Secretary of State, to which His Majesty's Government refers, it was said:—

"The matter is plain enough from our standpoint. The capacity of Germany to pay is not at all affected by any indebtedness of any of the Allies to us. That indebtedness does not diminish Germany's capacity, and its removal would not increase her capacity. For example, if France had been able to finance her part in the war without borrowing at all from us, that is, by taxation and internal loans, the problem of what Germany could pay would be exactly the same. Moreover, so far as the debtors to the United States are concerned, they have unsettled credit balances, and their condition and capacity to pay cannot be properly determined until the amount that can be realised on these credits for reparations has been determined.

"The Administration must also consider the difficulty arising from the fact that the question of these obligations which we hold, and what shall be done with them, is not a question within the province of the executive. Not only may Congress deal with public property of this sort, but it has dealt with it. It has created a commission, and instead of giving that commission broad powers such as the Administration proposed, which quite apart from cancellation might permit a sound discretion to be exercised in accordance with the facts elicited, Congress has placed definite restrictions upon the power of the commission in providing for the refunding of these debts."

(Part 2 follows.)

(v.)

Mr. Chilton to the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston.—(Received October 17, 9 A.M.)

(No. 407.) Washington, October 16, 1923.

(Part 2.)

It is hardly necessary to add, as it has frequently been stated by United States Government, that, while American people do not favour cancellation of debts of Allies to the United States or transfer to people of the United States of burden of Germany's obligations directly or indirectly, United States Government has no desire to be oppressive or to refuse to make reasonable settlements as to time and terms of payment in full consideration of circumstances of Allied debts, and Under-Secretary of State added that establishment of sound economic conditions in Europe, serious reduction of military outlays and demonstration of a disposition of European peoples to work together to achieve aims of peace and justice will not fail to have their proper influence upon American thought and purpose in connection with such adjustment.

In further reply to communication of His Majesty's Government, it may be said that United States Government is not in a position to appoint a member of Reparation Commission, inasmuch as such an appointment cannot be made without consent of Congress. The Secretary of State has no doubt, however, that competent American citizens would be willing to participate in an economic enquiry for the purposes stated, through an advisory body appointed by Reparation Commission to make recommendations, in case that course, after further consideration, should be deemed preferable.

As to further question whether American co-operation in an enquiry for the purposes described in communication of His Majesty's Government could be hoped for in case unanimity of European Powers could not be had, United States Government must again express view that question involved cannot be finally settled without concurrence of European Governments directly concerned. Other Governments cannot consent for them, and it would manifestly be extremely difficult to formulate financial plans of such importance and complexity without participation of those whose assent is necessary for their fulfilment. In view of existing exigencies, it is hoped that project of such an enquiry as is contemplated of an advisory nature might commend itself to all these Powers, and that question suggested will not arise. But if it should arise from lack of unanimity on the part of European Powers, United States Government must reserve decision as to its course of action in order that development in such a contingency may be fully considered, and that course taken which will give best promise of ultimate success in securing desired end of re-establishment of essential conditions of European peace and economic restoration. To attainment of that end it may be repeated that United States Government desires to lend its assistance in any manner that may be found feasible.

C 62793

---

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 11 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

TO BE KEPT UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

It is requested that special care may be taken to ensure the secrecy of these proceedings.

C 62794

SECRET.

E. 11th Meeting (1923).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE ELEVENTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1923, AT 3 P.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Right Hon. NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. the EARL OF DERBY, K.G., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for War.

The Right Hon. Sir SAMUEL HOARE, Bart., C.M.G., M.P., Secretary of State for Air.

The Right Hon. L. S. AMERY, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

General the EARL OF CAVAN, K.P., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., K.C.B., Chief of the Imperial General Staff, War Office.

Air Chief-Marshal Sir HUGH M. TRENCHARD, Bart., K.C.B., D.S.O., Chief of the Air Staff, Air Ministry.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Major L. A. CLEMENS, O.B.E., M.C., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.

Major-General J. H. MACBRIEN, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Chief of General Staff, Canada.

Commodore WALTER HOSE, C.B.E., R.C.N., Director of Naval Service, Canada.

Vice-Admiral Sir ALLAN F. EVERETT, K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., C.B., First Naval Member of the Royal Australian Naval Board.

Rear-Admiral P. H. HALL-THOMPSON, C.M.G., First Naval Member Designate of the Royal Australian Naval Board.

Brigadier-General T. A. BLANEY, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Australian Representative on the Imperial General Staff at War Office.

Commodore A. G. HOTHAM, C.M.G., R.N., Naval Adviser to the New Zealand Delegation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62795

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B. (Secretary).
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir Robert R. Garran, K.C.M.G.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. Skelton.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

India.
Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

DEFENCE.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Mackenzie King, may I ask you to begin the discussion?

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

Appreciation of Statements of British Defence Ministers.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Prime Minister, I would like to express appreciation of the manner in which this whole subject-matter of defence has been presented to us, not only by the First Lord of the Admiralty, but by the Secretary of State for War and the Secretary of State for Air. The whole discussion, up to the present, has been most informing in every particular, and I think we have all benefited by having had the position presented to us in the manner in which it has been.

Desirability of Uniformity in Training, &c.

Broadly speaking, as far as Canada is concerned, we entirely agree with the point of view, suggested by the Minister for War, that there should be similarity in the method of training, and common standards, so that in the event of the forces of the Empire co-operating at any time they would be able to do so with the greatest possible despatch and efficiency. We would feel it an advantage for our officers to have the opportunity of conferring with the officers of the different branches here. I might say that, if any of the Ministries here should like to make suggestions as to lines of training or procedure which it would be advisable for us to consider, we would welcome suggestions. How far it would be possible to act upon any suggestions would, of course, lie of necessity with the Ministers in the Dominion of the Departments concerned, and after conference on their part with their colleagues in the Cabinet. With this understood I think it would be entirely to the advantage of us all that we should have at any and all times opportunities of conference and consultation, and also that we would welcome any suggestions that may be put forward.

Interest of Canada in Air Defence.

As regards the three branches, I do not know that I can say very much as to which in our Dominion would be likely to receive more attention than the other. I do feel that, in considering Defence, having regard to the necessity of going to Parliament to ask for appropriations, it may be possible for us to do more at one particular time with one branch than with another. Just at the present time the matter of Air Defence is one to which we have been giving a good deal of attention, and we expect to give it a great deal more.

Extent of Canadian Participation in War must be decided by Canadian Parliament.

There is one point, I think, I ought perhaps to speak of with care. Lord Derby mentioned that one thing the Government here would like to be sure of was the number of men, or rather the extent of the forces, that could be counted upon. If that has reference to what at any time the personnel may be, what the equipment and general organisation may be, of course that is always available; but if it has reference to what the numbers of men or extent of forces may be available at any given moment for participation in war, I think I ought to make it clear that as to what extent Canada would participate in a war at any time must be considered a matter which her own Parliament will wish to decide. I do not mean by that that the Government of the day would not recognise its responsibilities in advising as to whether or not Canada should participate in a particular war or refrain from participating; the Government would have, of course, to take its responsibilities and meet Parliament in that regard; but I know that in case of a proposed participation the country would wish to have the situation considered on its merits, with reference to the circumstances which had occasioned it, and the directness of interest involved. In saying that, I wish it to be understood that I feel that, in any crises affecting the honour and integrity or the common interest of the Empire, Canada may be expected to do in the future as she has in the past, and be ready to play her part. It would be wrong, however, to have it assumed that any Department of Government here could feel that it had—if I might use the expression—a blank cheque from the Dominion to be filled in at a moment's notice with reference to any particular situation that might arise. I am quite sure our people and Parliament would not wish that impression to be left, nor do I expect that the authorities here would assume it should be. I think that is all I have to say.

C 62796

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you very much. Mr. Bruce?

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Desirability of Uniformity in Training, &c.

Mr. Bruce: Prime Minister, in any general discussion upon the question of the Army, Navy, and Air Force of the Empire, the question arises of the necessity for co-operation. In regard to that, I do not think I need delay the Conference at all. Australia takes exactly the same view as Canada does. We believe it is most desirable that we should try and work as closely as possible in co-operation with Great Britain in regard to the training, equipment, plans, and every question involved in the general defence of the Empire.

Position of Dominions as regards Assistance in Emergency.

On the other question discussed by the Prime Minister of Canada, as to what the Dominions can be looked to to do in case of emergency, of course, nothing can be said before the emergency arises, but I think everybody is so familiar with that position that there is not the slightest necessity to stress it. One anticipates—and I think can anticipate confidently—that the Dominions will play the same part in any crisis that may arise in the future as they have in the past.

Appreciation of Statements of British Defence Ministers.

I come now to the statements that have been made, first the statement by Lord Salisbury on the general situation, and then the particular statements made by the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Secretary of State for War, and the Secretary for Air. They were of the most informative character, and I am sure we are all very grateful for the great amount of information given to us and for the admirable survey we have had of the whole position. There is very little that one wants to say on the general question, but I do think we have to consider exactly what is to come out of the whole of this discussion, and whether there is anything that we should do with regard to the position. It is very interesting to hear exactly where we stand, but at a Conference of this character I think we have got to do a little more than that.

Defence of Suez Canal.

With regard to the general situation as outlined by Lord Salisbury, there is only one point I want to deal with as the representative of Australia, and that point is the question of the defence of the Suez Canal. In that, above everything, we are vitally interested; and I need not point out how vitally, because

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62797

everybody here understands exactly the position. The Suez Canal is the one artery of communication on which we are dependent for our safety in any time of crisis. The value of the Suez Canal is even greater to-day than it has ever been before, because, in the past—except, certainly, during the period when the concentration took place in the North Sea, because of a particular danger—there has always been some substantial naval force in the Pacific. But under the new basis upon which we have to operate, with Singapore established and with the advance guard that it is proposed to put there, the whole value of Singapore depends on the certainty with which the Suez Canal can be relied upon for the Grand Fleet, or part of it, to come through. As far as Australia is concerned in the general situation as outlined by Lord Salisbury—and one has perhaps to look on these questions a little selfishly—we are most interested in the question of the Suez Canal and its safety. All I wish to say with regard to it is that in the present position, with the powers of self-government which are being given to Egypt now, Australia certainly urges that her vital interests are concerned in arrangements being made for a British garrison to stay in Egypt. That is one of the four points that have been left for further consideration and further discussion, but I wish at this Conference to urge that the view that Australia takes is that under any arrangements that may be made, whatever further concessions may be made to the Egyptians, that one point should be safeguarded; and that under no circumstances should the Empire agree to the withdrawal of the British garrison from Egypt. I do not think I need labour that question further. I only wish to indicate clearly how Australia views that particular question.

Military Defence of Australia.

With regard to the individual arms, in speaking before I roughly outlined where Australia is in regard to her military defence, and there is no need for me to repeat it now; but, broadly, we are taking such action as will ensure that we will have forces in Australia capable of coping with any situation that is likely to arise on land. In addition to the troops which we believe would be necessary for that, we are taking steps which we believe, in the course of the next few years, will enable us to produce all the munitions that we shall require, and also to produce munitions for general naval purposes in the Pacific if that is desired.

Air Defence of Australia.

As regards the air, there is very little that I want to say on behalf of Australia from an Empire point of view. As far as Australia and the air is concerned, we believe that we can do a great deal to cover our own safety by air defences, and we are taking steps to place ourselves in as good a position as our finances will allow.

Air Defence of Great Britain.

The air position in Britain generally, which was explained so clearly the other day by the Secretary of State for Air, must create a very real feeling of apprehension in all parts of the Empire, quite apart from Britain herself; but I do not think there is anything that the Dominions can do to help to alleviate that situation, except, perhaps, to recognise that it is imperative that Britain should place her air defences in such a position that the heart of the Empire need not fear any real menace in the future, and then, seeing the task that lies to Britain's hand, we might realise, to an even greater extent than we do, the necessity of relieving Britain of some of the obligation of general naval protection for the whole of the Empire.

Naval Defence of Australia.

It is mainly with regard to the Navy that Australia is concerned, and I endeavoured the other day to make our attitude clear. I think I could best define it by saying that I endorse the whole of the first part of the statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty, where he deals with the question of the Empire's position generally and the necessity for absolute security on the sea, for the whole of our possessions, and the whole of our trade routes. But Australia is the furthest away of the possessions, and she is already peculiarly dependent upon protection from the sea, because, while we are prepared to provide for our own land defence, any land defence that we have in contemplation is only of a character to meet any crisis which might arise, always assuming that, even if, for the moment, the Empire had not complete command of the Pacific, it would be only a matter of a reasonable period before that command was re-established. It is, of course, to the Navy and to our defence on the sea that we have to look for our safety. Australia has, in the past, done a great deal, considering her limited financial means, in the way of contribution towards the naval defence of the Empire.

C 62798

We are prepared to go on in the future in the same way as we have done in the past, and possibly, when we come to discuss the actual details, we may find that we are able to do something more. We hope to be able to continue to contribute towards the Navy, and even to increase our contribution.

Need for Maintenance of One-Power Standard.

But any such action has to be based upon one generally accepted Empire principle, and that is the principle that we must have an Empire Navy as strong as that of any other Power in the world—the one-power standard, as it was laid down by the 1921 Conference. Taking that view, I think that at a general discussion this Conference should reaffirm that, as the Representatives of the whole of the Empire, we believe that a one-power standard is essential for our safety, and that, according to the particular circumstances of our own Dominions, we are prepared to do what we can to assist in maintaining that standard. With your permission, Prime Minister, I think it might not be out of place if, during this discussion, I were to move some Resolution on the general lines I have indicated on that particular point.

Need for Naval Base in Pacific.

The other naval question in which Australia is vitally interested is the question of a Base in the Pacific. When we discussed this matter before, I raised a number of difficulties, but I must admit that most of them were raised for the purpose of clearing my own mind, and to confirm information which I had already obtained on the general question. For instance, I raised the question of the possibility of entering into some further arrangement, in extension of the Washington Agreement, which might remove the necessity for the establishment of a Base in the Pacific, and I indicated that that appeared to be dependent upon the elimination of the Battleship entirely from the Naval Forces of all the countries of the world. That view has been confirmed by the information I have obtained here, and I recognise that it is not at present possible to arrive at an arrangement of quite such a drastic character; and, that being so, one has to accept the necessity of a Base being created in the Pacific.

Value of Capital Ship.

I also raised the question of the value of the Battleship or Capital Ship to-day in modern warfare. I think my mind has been reasonably satisfied on that subject too; so that, the abolition of Battleships altogether not being practical, and Battleships apparently being still of major importance in Naval Warfare, we get to the point that a Base in the Pacific is clearly necessary if our trade routes and trade interests in the East are to be protected and the Great Dominions which lie in those seas are to have their safety assured. From the Australian point of view, we are prepared to subscribe to the necessity of a Base in the Pacific.

Strategical Value of Singapore.

Another point I raised was whether Singapore was the proper strategical spot for that base. On that point we now agree that Singapore is the place, and accept it as the spot where the Base should be created. There are a number of other points with regard to Singapore which I raised as to its garrisoning and other matters. While I am not quite as clear as I should like to be as to how exactly the protection of Singapore is to be assured, I am clear on this point, that apparently it can be done; and, having cleared

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62799

away any misunderstanding there might have been that Australia would be in a position to reinforce any garrison there rapidly, I am sufficiently satisfied on that part of the question not to raise any further points about it. Broadly speaking, on behalf of Australia, I am prepared to say that we believe that the establishment of a Base at Singapore is absolutely vital to our interests and to the interests of the Empire as a whole; and, taking that view, we are prepared to support the proposals of the British Government that a Base should be established there. As to any question of contribution towards the Base, that appears to me to fall into the general question of any contribution we may at this time be in a position to make to the Naval strength of the Empire generally, and Singapore does not stand as a separate subject about which we have to declare any particular policy as to contribution or non-contribution. It is more a matter for us to discuss generally with the Admiralty when we are discussing what Australia can or cannot do by way of a general contribution towards the Naval strength of the Empire. But with regard to Singapore also, I think it would be a good thing if we passed some general Resolution at this Conference, as representing the whole Empire, approving the establishment of the Base.

Arguments for Base in Pacific.

There are many other things that I should like to say with regard to Singapore, but I do not think it is necessary to do so. I indicated previously certain points that I feel very strongly about in connection with it; but I would again particularly stress the fact that unless we do get a base in the Pacific, then the 5, 5, 3, 1·75. 1·75 basis agreed to at Washington is not really being given effect to; because, while we might have that number of capital ships, we have rendered them absolutely impossible of operation in certain great areas of the world. The other point to which I attach tremendous importance is the fact that unless we have got this base in the Pacific, when the time comes to reconsider the question of an arrangement on the lines of the Washington Treaty, we shall be placed in a position where we have no real strength in those seas, and consequently nothing to bargain with, just as it is suggested at this moment we have nothing to bargain with in connection with the Air Forces of the Empire as compared with other countries. Those two points, I think, have got to be very carefully borne in mind.

Proposed Resolutions.

With regard to any other questions, I do not think there is anything that I need say at this moment, but I should certainly like to have an opportunity, before the general discussion is finished, to move a resolution dealing with both the necessity of maintaining a one-power standard and the necessity of the establishment of a base at Singapore.

With regard to the Suez Canal, I do not know that I was proposing to move a resolution about that, although I should very much like to do so. I have raised that point, but I do not know that I have a resolution in my mind. I think, however, it is so vital, both from our point of view and from that of New Zealand, and I believe also from the whole Empire point of view, that a general expression of opinion by this Conference would be an admirable thing.

Mr. Amery: It is just possible that the resolution might not be desirable from the point of view of its effect upon Egypt.

Mr. Bruce: Certainly it would have to be a very private resolution.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Comments on Military Position.

Mr. Massey: I do not know that I have a great deal to say upon this subject. I would, however, like to say this, that the two statements, the one made by the Secretary of State for War and the other made by the Secretary of State for Air, taken together, make the most serious—and I will go further than that and say the most startling statement that has been made to this Conference or to any Imperial Conference since the end of the war. I think, with regard to the military forces of France, we had all got the impression that France had again become a very strong military Power, but I had no idea that her military forces were so strong as the statement made by the Secretary of State for War represented them to be. Of course I accept his statement unreservedly.

C 62800

Comments on Air Position. Serious Situation and need for Action.

Then with regard to the Air Force. I do not want to refer to what has taken place in the past because I might be doing an injustice, but I would like to say that I hope the present state of things, as far as the Air Force is concerned, will not be allowed to continue. Let me safeguard myself by saying this, that I think it is 1,000 or 10,000 to 1 that France contemplates, or is likely to make, war upon Britain. I do not think there is any idea of that sort at present, but there is always the one chance, and we never know what may happen in the future. As I understand the statement made with regard to the Air Force, it is something like this: that, leaving out the second-class aeroplanes and those that have become obsolete, the position at the worst from our point of view is that France has 600 aeroplanes of, what I think the Secretary of State called, "the line."

Sir Samuel Hoare: Of the independent striking force, that is, unattached to any military formation.

Mr. Massey: Yes, but fit to make an attack upon any country which it was thought desirable to attack?

Sir Samuel Hoare: Yes.

Mr. Massey: Perhaps a great many more than that. Britain has only eighty.

Sir Samuel Hoare: Roughly speaking, that is correct.

Mr. Massey: To my mind that is a very serious position. Six hundred aeroplanes in the possession of a Power which may—though it is only a mere chance—become an enemy Power, as against eighty which we possess at the present time. I happened to read this morning in the "Daily Mail" a very startling account of what took place upon one occasion when the enemy's Zeppelins visited London for the purpose of bombing it. A good many people were killed—I think there were fifty—but the damage done when it was over was very slight compared with what was intended. Perhaps other members may have read it also, but London appeared to have been saved by the fact that no lights were shown, no guns were fired, and the enemy was in doubt all the time as to whether he was over London or not. I do not know whether anything of that sort could happen again, but 500 or 600 aeroplanes belonging to an enemy Power (again I am very sorry to have to suggest France, because I do not like it: we have been Allies and comrades in arms so long that I hope nothing of the sort is possible in the future, and I cannot imagine it happening, but, at least, there is the possibility) coming along and attacking London as they might, with only a force of one-tenth their number against them, there might be serious consequences, not only for London, but very serious consequences for the whole of the Empire. Supposing one morning the people of Britain woke up and found that London had been bombed and many thousands of people had been killed, what would be the effect of it? I am afraid we should have what people are in the habit of calling revolution. I say again that in my opinion, for what it is worth, the present state of things should not be allowed to continue, and should be remedied at any cost; it does not matter what the cost may be. We cannot take risks like this.

Naval Defence.

I feel as strongly on naval defence as any man in the Empire, because, like the Prime Minister of Australia, we know that our security and our safety in the Pacific depend upon naval defence. In a case of war we could not exist without Naval Defence, but the other instance to my mind is a more serious danger. I come back

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62801

to the Naval Defence; the mere fact of the possibility of what may take place in the case of an attack on London appears to my mind to show the necessity of having a strong naval force in case it may be required. It is actually another argument in favour of strengthening Naval Defence. I may say at once that I am not quite satisfied with the one-power standard. I do not think it is quite enough. If a naval engagement were to take place and we lose the balance of power, we do not know where we are going to be. I think the safety of the Empire is far too serious to be treated lightly. I do not say it is being treated lightly, I take my responsibility with the other citizens of the Empire just as readily as any one else, and I think this matter ought to be treated more seriously than it is being treated at present.

Need for High Standard in British Aeroplanes.

Again, coming back to these aeroplanes which France is building now, she has many thousands of mechanics at work—and as far as our aeroplanes are concerned I hope when we proceed to strengthen this branch of our defence care will be taken to see that the British aeroplanes will be—as they were when the war was going on—the very best that can be produced. I think we are justified in claiming that the British aeroplanes were a long way the best, and British airmen could not be beaten. I often marvelled at the way the men from Overseas took to aviation—they did it well. One man from my country—in the case, I think it was, of the second Zeppelin that came to London—managed to get over it and to drop a bomb; and there was an end of the airship. I think when one looks back at what took place during the war and remembers that British citizens from all over the Empire assisted in saving the position, I think we ought to be certain that nothing of the sort is allowed to occur again, but that the Empire will be properly protected as far as it is possible for us to do it.

Singapore.

Just a word about Singapore. I have already expressed my opinion with regard to Singapore. I took the opportunity of reading almost everything that was said about the proposed naval base, and most of my fellow-citizens in New Zealand are in agreement; Parliament has already agreed to a preliminary vote—it can be multiplied several times over as the work goes on—but they have already agreed to a vote of £100,000 towards the cost of the naval base of Singapore. That is the position to-day.

Suez Canal.

As to the Suez Canal, I realise the importance of the Suez Canal; it is not nearly so important to us as it is to Australia, but that makes no difference; it is exceedingly important to the Empire. I remember reading the opinion of a German authority when the war was going on. It was a very important opinion, coming from an enemy, and what he said, as far as I can remember, was like this: "The Suez Canal was the jugular vein of the Empire, and that, if we could cut the Suez Canal, the British Empire would bleed to death." That is the way he expressed it. I thought then that he was absolutely right, and I think so now, but, whatever happens, the Suez Canal has got to be defended at any cost.

Readiness of New Zealand to contribute to Empire Defence.

I feel that we shall have to do a great deal more in the way of defence, and it is difficult to apportion the different shares, because in some places it may be more important to an Overseas Dominion to provide a military force or an air force than to provide for Naval Defence, and some very elastic arrangements will have to be made in that direction. So far as we are concerned, I always realise that the population of my country is small as compared with some of the other Dominions, but it is growing, and in another fifty years or so it will be a very important part of the Empire; all I can say at present—and my people will stand to this—is that we are quite prepared to pay our fair share for anything in the way of Naval Defence, Air Defence and Military Defence after that. I put Military Defence last because the men of the Empire will rise to the occasion when necessity requires.

C 62802

I do not know that I have anything more to say, Prime Minister, but I was very glad to see that this matter is being taken quite seriously, and I hope that the importance of it will be realised, and some good results will accrue from the discussions that have taken place.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Appreciation of previous Statements.

Mr. Warren: After the exhaustive and illuminating statements made by Mr. Amery, Lord Derby and Sir Samuel Hoare, we ought all to know pretty well where we stand as far as the question of our defence is concerned. The statements must have been particularly illuminating with regard to their bearing upon our diplomatic relations with other countries.

Admiralty Memoranda.

As a matter of fact, circulars have been issued to all the Prime Ministers from Overseas containing more or less concrete proposals as regards naval defence, and I am somewhat disappointed at the result from the various speeches which have been made. Whether that result can be altered or extended to better advantage by Committee meetings or private interviews, I do not know, but, as far as I am concerned, I feel somewhat like Mr. Massey.

Need for contributions from Dominions towards Defence.

I do not want to use the word "sponging," but it is quite evident that Great Britain is really doing more than her share in regard to our defence, and I quite realise that with the high rate of taxation here, and the many calls upon her resources, Great Britain rightly expects the Dominions Overseas to take their share in defence as far as they can. I was much struck by Lord Beatty dropping a hint in his speech that some parts of the world might go unprotected if Great Britain came to the conclusion that she was unable to cope with the situation, or to provide the necessary defence.

Development of Royal Naval Reserve in Newfoundland.

Now, as far as Newfoundland is concerned, you all know we are not a wealthy community, but we have good men there. We cannot provide battleships or cruisers, but we can provide the men. We are very proud of the fact that Newfoundland, during the late war, lost at sea more men than all the other Overseas Dominions put together. We are quite prepared to do our share again at any time when we may be called upon for assistance. Until two years ago, in co-operation with the British Government, we had an establishment of the Royal Naval Reserve, and I do not think that the money spent on it was by any means wasted. Indeed, it was well spent, and Newfoundland during the war fully justified the expense of her Naval Reserve. Owing to the fact that the British Government withdrew this contribution, the Naval Reserve has not been continued, but I intend upon my return to take up the question of the Naval Reserve again, and I am quite sure that in a short space of time we shall go on providing and training the men to man the ships which Great Britain places at our disposal.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Lord Peel: First of all, Prime Minister, I want to make one observation with reference to the statement made by Lord Derby two or three days ago. He was discussing the reductions made in the Army, and the reductions made also in the Indian Army. He was, of course, referring solely to the British Army in India.

Lord Derby: Yes.

Recent reductions in Indian Army.

Lord Peel: And I should like to state, in order to avoid any misconception, that reductions in establishments have also been made in the units of the Indian Army as well. The reductions are not merely confined to the British Army in India.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 38 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62803

Royal Indian Marine.

Then I want to say a word about the composition and prospects of what is now known as the Royal Indian Marine, in connection with the possibilities of Indian co-operation with the Royal Navy. May I say at the outset that there used to be an old Indian Navy, because in the time of Charles II and James II the East Indian Company was permitted to establish a small Navy, for the purpose of policing the seas and protecting their trade from pirates, and duties of that kind. That came to an end in 1863 from motives of economy, and then the duties of that Force—the Lighthouse and Survey Services and various civil duties of that sort, which are combined now, adding up to about twenty-two different heads of activity—were handed over to what is known as the Royal Indian Marine. It was built up into the Royal Indian Marine. That is the Force we have now in being. Its present approximate composition is 182 Officers, 63 Warrant Officers, and 1,248 other Ranks (excluding domestics). Its sole duty in case of War is to hand over to the Royal Navy such ships and such men as may be required.

It did a very great deal of service in the late war. It has a fleet now of about fourteen vessels, including three big troopships, two of the troopships being over 6,000 tons and one over 8,000 tons. Some of these vessels were used as auxiliary cruisers by the Royal Navy. They were captained by officers of the Royal Navy, but the other officers and ratings were supplied by the Royal Indian Marine. They also did a very great deal of transport work, and further provided and manned naval craft for Mesopotamia, and also did a certain amount of transport work in East Africa.

Lord Jellicoe's Proposals for Reorganisation.

Well then, of course, all these experiences of the war raised the question as to what further organisation or better organisation could be made for the Royal Indian Marine, and how it could co-operate better with the Imperial Naval Forces. As a result of that, Lord Jellicoe was asked to report, and he made a very careful report, in which he advises the creation of a Royal Indian Navy. He advises also the improvement of military defences in the great ports in India, and the provision of a first-class dockyard in Bombay. That was considered at that time to be rather ambitious by the Government of India, and, moreover, it fell on financial grounds, because it would have cost about $2\frac{1}{2}$ millions sterling a year, which was quite impracticable under existing circumstances. Moreover, they thought they ought to proceed more slowly for testing the suitability of Indian ratings for Naval service.

Later Proposals.

In 1921 they had a great deal of advice from many quarters. For instance, the Admiralty suggested a scheme for naval control of mercantile trade in future wars which did not require any special establishment in the time of peace, but in time of war required that fifty-two ranks and 662 ratings should be provided for manning defensively-equipped merchant vessels. Then in that year there was the report of the Esher Committee, which suggested that the head officer of the Royal Indian Marine—the Director—should, in future, be a Rear-Admiral on the active list of the Royal Navy with the improved status of a Secretary to the Government of India, and that the policing of the Persian Gulf should be handed over from the Royal Navy to the Royal Indian Marine. There had been a development by that time in Indian opinion itself, and a resolution was put down in the Assembly, to the effect that a Committee should prepare a scheme for the organisation of an Indian Naval Fleet, manned and officered by Indians, and they also suggested that a Royal Naval College should be established. This resolution was never reached owing to time, but I understand it commanded a great deal of support in the Indian Assembly. As a result of these suggestions, a Conference was convened in Bombay by the Government of India, the members of which included the Commander-in-Chief of the East Indies Naval Station and the Director of the Royal Indian Marine. The outcome was an elaborate scheme under seven heads, but under the seventh head the Government of India felt themselves unable, at present, to accept their recommendation, and that was, that they should accept the suggestion, which I had already referred to, made by the Admiralty, of providing so many ranks and ratings towards manning defensively-equipped merchant vessels in time of war. They thought this question ought to be postponed until the Royal Indian Marine had had more training, and until materials had been provided for a Naval Volunteer Reserve Force, but, with that exception, the scheme was generally accepted by the Government of India, and was sent over here, and it is now under consideration.

C 62804

Scheme now under Consideration.

I will summarise it very shortly indeed. It suggests, first of all, that the civil duties which I have generally enumerated should be retained by the Royal Indian Marine, but a suggestion is made that it should no longer undertake transport duties and should get rid of these three transport vessels which I have spoken of. It has to be very carefully considered, whether, in the present circumstances of shipping in India, it is wise to rely for the transport of troops on vessels taken up on contract from private firms. Subject to that exception, the proposal is that Indian seamen should be trained in gunnery, minesweeping, minelaying, control and examination services, and generally the duties in connection with the defence of Indian ports. As regards the policing of the Persian Gulf, it is not felt that it could be easily undertaken just at present by the Royal Indian Marine. The scheme aims at performing, at about the same cost as at present, useful and necessary defensive duties. It is hoped that young Indians, who have some predilection for the sea, would be able to join this Marine and become capable officers. Of course, the personnel of the lower ratings has been already obtained from Indians, so nothing more would be required than perhaps a little more training. Lastly, the object of the scheme is to interest Indians generally, in the Assembly and the Council of State and so forth, in Naval defence, and, possibly, in the future, in laying the foundations of an Indian Navy.

STATEMENT BY THE MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR.

Number of Capital Ships available for British Empire as result of Washington Conference.

The Maharajah of Alwar: Prime Minister, I only want to ask a question of the First Lord of the Admiralty. On what basis the proportion of capital ships was fixed at the Washington Conference? Because, from the figures quoted, I understand that the United States and the British Empire are supposed to maintain the same number of ships, in numbers.

Mr. Amery: Capital ships?

The Maharajah of Alwar: Capital ships I mean. The British Empire consists not only of the British Isles and of countries near to it, but of vast continents which lie over the two hemispheres, and I am afraid I have failed to understand how it has been placed on the same level, say—I am not making any invidious comparisons—as the United States, who certainly do not possess such vast areas and dominions outlying on the seas so far away from the hub of the Empire. If you could kindly answer me that question, I will just make one or two more remarks.

Mr. Amery: I think the practical answer is really this, that the sea being for strategic purposes in effect one providing reasonable mobility, that if you are secure yourself against the strongest single Power, assuming that you are not going to be faced with a combination of great Naval Powers, as far as the main battle fleet is concerned, the extent of your trade and territorial schemes does not affect the decision of the battle, if you are sure that your main Naval battle can be won against any possible opponent, and, as I said the other day, if it had been any other competitor than the United States, or if we thought that that was a probable opponent and not a dimly possible opponent, we should have had to fix the standard much higher than the one-Power standard. But as I also pointed out, the moment you come to the question of cruisers which affect the protection of your territories and trade routes against raids of all sorts, then it was at once quite impossible that we could come to any standard, even remotely resembling equality with the United States.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62805

The very conditions that the Maharajah mentioned make it quite impossible for us to consider equality or anything remotely approaching it with the United States, and, as I suggested, that really makes the fixing of cruisers directly impossible, because any figure which we could accept would show so large a disproportion that I am sure American public opinion would never accept it. When you come to the capital fleet, the actual fighting strength of the main battle, if you can overcome the next strongest enemy, then your cruisers can seize the rest of the seas.

The Maharajah of Alwar: Our past experience has shown us that wars, whether on sea or on land, do not generally take place with individual nations, they do form combinations, and what they may be or how they may form is a thing of the future which perhaps nobody can say, but, nevertheless, the British Empire I always understood maintained in past periods a naval strength of two to one—that it has two as against one of any other nationality.

Mr. Amery: No. Might I explain that it was a standard of equality with a margin as against the next two Powers, when those next two Powers were in actual alliance, and were in very keen, and, at times, very anxious competition with us? When we had to deal with one Power, namely, Germany, we fixed the strength as against that Power at a margin of 60 per cent. superiority in capital ships.

The Maharajah of Alwar: Well, I will now conclude my statement with just two remarks. One is, supposing we take one of the Dominions—I am sure my colleagues will not misunderstand me if I give a mere suppositious statement—supposing one of the Dominions—I will take the onus on myself of mentioning India, but India does not have a single capital ship or cruiser—that any one of the Dominions, God forbid, fell out of the British Empire, would not it be then entitled to have its own capital ships as one of the independent States? Well, under those circumstances, why should it not be entitled to have a capital ship when it is within the British Empire?

Mr. Amery: Any Dominion can have a capital ship or as many as it likes within the British Empire as long as the total number of the capital ships of the British Empire does not exceed twenty.

The Maharajah of Alwar: That is my point. Supposing you have your twenty. That Dominion would be entitled to have its own capital ships, one or two or three—several.

Need for strengthening Air Forces of Empire.

However, realising that point of view and appreciating that the British Empire has reduced its naval strength from two to one, it does make it the more important in my estimation and how necessary it is to strengthen the air forces of the British Empire so that it can, at any rate, look after the home lands and keep them free from any danger that might come from any quarter, and, therefore, I lay great stress on what General Smuts mentioned the other day that the situation that was laid out before us was certainly not a very satisfying one from the point of view that our force as compared with our neighbours—for instance, France—was very small, and, while there have been no Washington Conferences regarding air, I hope that our Empire will take the opportunity, if I may say so without presumption, and if it is possible financially—and I hope it will be made possible—to strengthen the air forces as much as it possibly can and to encourage the Dominions to follow suit.

REPLY BY THE LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

Thanks to Representatives of Dominions and India.

Lord Salisbury: I think we are very grateful indeed to the representatives of the Dominions for the cordiality with which they have received the statements about Imperial defence, and we are very grateful to the Maharajah just now for his support for increasing the air forces, and very grateful to Mr. Warren for assuring us that he would cordially co-operate for increasing our naval strength. That is for my Right Honourable Friend, the First Lord of the Admiralty, to deal with. Mr. Massey was good enough, in his kind way, to take a certain amount of blame to himself and to others for not having realised, up to now, the great weight of the burden which rests upon the Imperial Forces.

C 62806

I do not know how he could have done otherwise, because we cannot publish these things to the world, and it is only in these very confidential discussions that we can go into these details, but it is quite true that the burden is very, very heavy indeed. I am grateful personally to General Smuts for having dwelt upon it and having pointed out, as perhaps we cannot point out, how heavy the burden is upon us.

Mitigating Circumstances in connection with Air Situation.

But there are some mitigating circumstances during the years which immediately succeed the great war. There are still in being a great number of trained pilots who have gone back into civil life and who may be available in respect of the Air Service, if there were, what there is no expectation of, a great war immediately, and in the same way there are no doubt a number of outclassed, old-fashioned machines which might be of some use, which are at present in existence. I do not say that goes for very much, but those are mitigating circumstances. We recognise, I may tell the Conference, even more acutely than they do the risks we run until we have an adequate Air Force, and we shall certainly lay to heart all that has been said by our kindly critics from across the seas and especially in the matter of acceleration. General Smuts dwelt upon that. I do think it is possible by a little pressure that we might accelerate a little beyond the figures given by my Right Honourable Friend. No doubt that kind of acceleration, as General Smuts knows better than I do from his experience in the war, is rather expensive, but something must be done and we have got to spend money on unemployment, and the matter is under the careful consideration of the whole of His Majesty's Government at the present moment.

Suez Canal.

I was very glad to find how fully what I ventured to say about the Suez Canal was re-echoed by several speakers, especially by Mr. Bruce. I quite agree with what he said as to the vital character of the Suez Canal and I can assure him that I was speaking well within the mark in what I said to the Conference at the time I spoke before.

Question of Resolutions.

Mr. Bruce said in his very interesting speech that he thought that we must go a little further than a mere discussion. He was speaking not merely in reference to the Air Service and the Suez Canal, but as regards the other big naval points that have been dealt with, and he indicated that he himself was prepared to move resolutions. That is a most important matter of which we take full note and I may respectfully say that I entirely agree with him; it is well worthy of consideration, the question as to whether there should not be resolutions, but the matter must be approached with a great deal of care. These resolutions, especially if they are going to be published, will require the most careful drafting.

Suggested utilization of Committee of Imperial Defence.

I noticed that Mr. Mackenzie King was good enough to say he for his part was anxious that in all these matters of Imperial defence at all times there should be the closest co-operation and consideration as between the representatives of the Dominions and of the Imperial Government and, of course, I need not tell him I most cordially agree with him. We for our part are prepared to put every facility in the way of such co-operation. I was wondering whether perhaps in respect of these resolutions or of any resolutions that may be drawn we might not avail ourselves of that suggestion. As Mr. Mackenzie King knows, by the constitution of the Committee of Imperial Defence, as I ventured to describe it a few days ago, the representatives of the Dominions are cordially welcomed to join in our discussions upon all matters that concern the Empire as a whole and, if it was thought well, it would be quite easy to arrange a meeting of the Committee of Imperial Defence which the Dominions would attend by whatever representative they thought fit, and we would then go carefully through the points of the resolutions. If it was only a question of

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62807

naval defence it could be done at the Admiralty; if it was only a question of the air it could be done at the Air Ministry, but if it is to deal with both services and general questions like the Suez Canal, which covers all the three services, then I think the Committee of Imperial Defence would appear to be the proper arena in which the thing could be discussed and any further technical points which Mr. Bruce or any other Dominion representative desired to put about the Suez Canal or about Singapore—Mr. Bruce spoke of other technical points in regard to Singapore which he had in his mind—those can all be put on that occasion and could be answered. All the necessary technical representation is present at the Committee of Imperial Defence, so the answers given are of the most authoritative kind. I throw that out as a suggestion, and, if thought fit, perhaps Mr. Bruce would not move his resolutions until they had first been considered by the Committee of Imperial Defence.

Draft Resolution in favour of One-Power Standard.

Mr. Bruce: The point that it appears to me we have to keep in view more than anything else is that any resolutions that we could possibly pass with the general consent of every representative of the Dominions would have to be quite general in character. If we passed a resolution in favour of a one-power standard, which indicated in any way what part any Dominion was to take in maintaining that standard, personally I could not think of endorsing it. It is a matter for my Parliament, not for me at all; but I have here a resolution of the type I had in mind. I am not moving it now, but I will read it to give an idea of what I had in view. The resolution is as follows:—

> "This Conference is of opinion that equality of naval strength to any one Foreign Power is the minimum standard of security for the Empire, and it is for the Governments and Parliaments of the Empire according to their several capacities and circumstances to co-operate in the maintenance of that standard."

That is a general resolution, drafted with a view to not embarrassing any representative or committing his Parliament to anything at all. It merely says that each part of the Empire according to their several capacities and circumstances will co-operate in the maintenance of that standard. I am afraid we can do no more here than pass very general resolutions of that character, because I do not think we have the authority from our Parliaments to do anything more. In regard to technical resolutions, I do not quite see how any could be evolved, but if there were anything which could be done in that direction—

Further Discussion on General Question of Resolutions.

Lord Salisbury: I had strongly in my mind that Mr. Bruce and the other Prime Ministers would not wish to tie their Parliaments for a moment. That is a point which would always have to be put into any draft. I think Mr. Bruce's draft covers it. I do not know if any of the other Dominion Prime Ministers would like to pass his resolution now. We have nothing to say against it at all. If there is any difficulty about drafting it could be considered before it was passed. There are resolutions which do not commit Parliaments to any expenditure, which is out of the question according to our democratic ideas, such as the importance of the Suez Canal, the necessity of having a base in the Far East; if you like, that the base should be Singapore. All those are the sort of things which would strengthen the hands of the Imperial Government if passed, but they would all require very careful drafting. Long experience has shown me that a hastily drafted resolution is a dangerous thing.

Mr. Bruce: I entirely agree. My suggestion was only as to the best way of getting the resolution drafted. Whether, for instance, it is a matter for the Committee of Imperial Defence.

General Smuts: I think we should be very careful about resolutions. Merely passing academic resolutions I think is no good. It serves no purpose. It simply makes people suspicious not only here but in the distant parts of the Dominions. They do not know what these general formulas are. It is no use passing a resolution about the Suez Canal; it is like passing a resolution about the alphabet. Of course we agree upon that; it is the vital point in the Empire. Now take the form of resolution which Mr. Bruce read here. I will point out the difficulties we are landed in. It is practically the resolution we passed two years ago—a one-power standard and the contributions to it to be settled by the different Dominion Parliaments.

C 62808

Position now and in 1921.

See in what circumstances the resolution was passed two years ago. We were discussing an entirely different proposition. We were discussing one great fighting Navy to which the different Dominions should contribute. We had actually a scheme before us how the different parts of the Empire should contribute to the maintenance of one independent fighting force, and in the circumstances we then passed that resolution which stated that we should have the one-power standard, but the mode and degree of assistance from the various Dominions was to be settled by the Parliaments. That is what we had in view. This time we have before us an entirely different situation. The Admiralty has come forward with a different scheme, and the Admiralty has told us instead of this contributory scheme, this maintenance by all parts of the Empire of one unitary force, each part will now be responsible for its own naval units. Quite a different thing. The old formula will not apply any more.

Mr. Bruce: With respect, that was not the view that Australia took in the Conference of 1921. We would never have been any party to one unified navy.

General Smuts: If you were to go through the records of the 1921 Conference that is what you would find. I am not saying what attitude Australia ultimately would have taken up, but that was actually the point we were discussing, and Mr. Hughes was prepared to consult his friends about it and see what could be done. We passed this general formula in view of an entirely different situation from that which we are facing here to-day.

Mr. Amery: I must rather disagree with that, General Smuts. What was produced by the Naval Staff at the beginning of the 1921 Conference was a scheme which was then turned down, according to which, just as now, the different navies of the Empire were to be administratively separate, but it contemplated a common General Staff and a common strategic direction, even in peace, which it called a single navy. That was definitely turned down. It was generally agreed it was not a feasible scheme and we then went back to what was the position then and is the position now, navies autonomous not only in administration, but also entirely autonomous from the point of view of their staff and direction, and I think it was in view of that second position and after the first thing was turned down that the resolution of 1921 was passed. It was passed in quite general terms as General Smuts said, passed practically identically with Mr. Bruce's resolution, except that, as Washington had come on to the horizon, it was worded in the form which postponed things until after Washington:—

> "That, while recognising the necessity of co-operation among the various portions of the Empire to provide such naval defence as may prove to be essential for security,"

There is co-operation, no suggestion of unification or single navy.

> "And, while holding that equality with the naval strength of any other Power is a minimum standard for that purpose, this Conference is of opinion that the method and expense of such co-operation are matters for the final determination of the several Parliaments concerned, and that any recommendations thereon should be deferred until after the coming Conference on Disarmament."

I do venture to suggest that the only difference between the position in 1921 and the position now is that Washington has intervened, and, while I quite agree with General Smuts as to mere academic resolutions not being of value, I would not go so far as to say that a resolution reaffirming the one-Power Standard since Washington was in any sense academic.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 69 16 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62809

Value of Resolution.

It is certainly for me in the House of Commons of value to have a general reaffirmation of that by the Empire. Just in the same way, taking the position of Singapore, that is very largely criticised here by those who are taking a point of view which is purely local and which might lead to Imperial Defence generally being neglected. It makes a great deal of difference in my standing up for the Imperial point of view as against the purely local, the home waters and cross-Channel point of view, if I can point to a resolution saying that after careful consideration the Prime Ministers of the Empire at the Conference agreed that this was really the soundest thing put forward. I do not know whether this is the moment to go beyond tabling a resolution for subsequent discussion, but I should like to say that, from my point of view in the House of Commons, I do not regard resolutions of that sort as being without value. They certainly strengthen my case in asking the House of Commons to support that standard and I hope equally, though it will leave everybody free to do what they wish, if anybody does want to help in this matter, it also strengthens their hands. I certainly would say that as to the passing of a resolution, as we have done regularly at all Conferences before on subjects of this order, and they do strengthen the hands of the Governments concerned.

Position now and in 1921 (continued).

Mr. Massey: My recollection, Prime Minister, of what took place at the last meeting in 1921 was something like this, that after considerable discussion on one occasion we agreed to a certain resolution. We came along the next day and went back upon that for good and sufficient reasons which I will not go into now. There was an understanding that nothing more should be done until after the Washington Conference. There was also this circumstance at the time; we felt, or at all events we believed, that we were going to receive a certain amount of Reparation from Germany and it was suggested that the amount of money, or at all events a proportion of the Reparation received from Germany, should be used for purposes of naval defence. I do not think there was any objection to that. It is a very doubtful thing whether we are going to receive anything from Germany and we have got to fall back upon our own resources. That is my recollection of what took place. The position has changed absolutely since 1921. All the same I do not go back from what I said. So far as I am concerned, I am quite prepared on behalf of New Zealand to stand by any resolution which will strengthen the defences of the Empire, particularly in the way of naval defence and next so far as aviation is concerned.

Draft Resolutions to be circulated.

Mr. Baldwin: If the members of the Conference agree, I think it would be convenient and also save time, and I think it would probably be the most practical thing, for any proposed resolutions to be circulated, say, by Lord Salisbury after consultation, that members should have the resolutions and consider them quietly, and then probably we should be able to make up our minds, after a very short discussion, either to adopt or discard them. I am afraid this afternoon, if we went on with an indefinite discussion, we might be led away and take a very long time talking of resolutions and we might not get any farther this afternoon.

General Smuts: I quite agree, Prime Minister. I raised the debate not to take time ——

Mr. Baldwin: It might go on and we should perhaps find ourselves, after a time, wasting time. I think that had better be done. Mr. Amery, do you wish to make some observations on the general discussion? Then I will ask the Secretary of State for War to say a word.

REPLY BY THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.

Command of Sea vital.

Mr. Amery: I think there is one thing emerges very clearly, that we are all agreed that in order to co-operate effectively when war comes in respect of war services, in so far as each of our Parliaments decides to do something, it is desirable to do it in such a fashion that we can co-operate, if we want to, when the time comes. The only observation I should like to make on that is that the possibility of co-operation with regard to either the Army or the Air Force depends entirely upon the retention of the command of the sea. The splendid armies that Canada and Australia and every other Dominion sent to the Front in the late War could not possibly have been sent unless we had the assured command of the sea. That command is, therefore, a precedent condition of any other co-operation. As long as we do maintain it, co-operation is possible; the moment we cease to be in a position to maintain it, co-operation becomes impossible and each part of the Empire is forced to rely absolutely on its own resources.

C 62810

Need for Wide Outlook.

Even with that co-operation there is no doubt that local circumstances affect different parts of the Empire differently. India, for instance, has a very obvious heavy military burden imposed upon her land defence and consequently she cannot take as large a part in naval defence as her population and her position in the Empire might otherwise warrant. Now the same applies where a very heavy air burden comes into consideration. Take the position of our Air Defence, which imposes a very heavy burden upon us in this country. Air fighting arises so rapidly and may be so rapidly settled that, although I know Sir Samuel Hoare is only too anxious for every form of co-operation in the Empire, the whole fight in this country, unless we were on our own capable of holding our position, might be settled long before any reinforcements came. Now, that is going to create a very serious difficulty about the maintenance of what is the foundation of it all, the naval position; as far as Empire Defence is concerned, you will have in ever-increasing degree people in this country, large newspaper proprietors, who have never looked at things from the Imperial point of view, all sorts of people, taking the view that the air defence of this country is not only essential in itself, but has got to take the place of the Naval Defence of the Empire as a whole, and you will find even as responsible people as Sir Robert Horne suggesting that the air defence of this country is an alternative, or should be done instead of proceeding with securing the naval position at Singapore. I mention that so that you will all realise that, unless we do treat maintenance of the common foundation of defence, our security at sea, as a co-operative matter, as a matter in which according to our several capacities and circumstances—a phrase Mr. Bruce used—we are really doing something, there may be a danger that the one thing upon which we all depend may be prejudiced by the local outlook, the shortsighted outlook predominating in this country. Hitherto the question that has been mainly to the front at this Conference has been whether the local or the broader outlook would prevail in the Dominions. The big danger to us all is the danger of the local outlook as against the broader common outlook prevailing in this country. All the future prospects of the Dominions, their whole fabric of life, the whole conception of the great continents that they propose to develop, all these things are dependent on the assumption that the command of the sea is secured for us all. It is by far the cheapest and most economical form of common defence, but there it is; we are all dependent on it. I want to lay stress upon the danger to the Dominions of this country getting into a frame of mind in which it thinks that the burden imposed upon it is too great, that it will look after its immediate local interests rather than what is the foundation of our common defence. I do not want to say more than that, but I think it is a factor that ought to be taken into account in considering how much each Government, or each Parliament, is prepared to do in the way of some more effective co-operation in maintaining our security at sea.

REPLY BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR.

Thanks to Dominion Prime Ministers.

Lord Derby: I would like to thank the Prime Ministers for their statements with regard to the Army. I would like to point out that, although the Navy and the Air Force may come in first, it will always be left to the Army in the end to get the results.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 38 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62807

naval defence it could be done at the Admiralty; if it was only a question of the air it could be done at the Air Ministry, but if it is to deal with both services and general questions like the Suez Canal, which covers all the three services, then I think the Committee of Imperial Defence would appear to be the proper arena in which the thing could be discussed and any further technical points which Mr. Bruce or any other Dominion representative desired to put about the Suez Canal or about Singapore—Mr. Bruce spoke of other technical points in regard to Singapore which he had in his mind—those can all be put on that occasion and could be answered. All the necessary technical representation is present at the Committee of Imperial Defence, so the answers given are of the most authoritative kind. I throw that out as a suggestion, and, if thought fit, perhaps Mr. Bruce would not move his resolutions until they had first been considered by the Committee of Imperial Defence.

Draft Resolution in favour of One-Power Standard.

Mr. Bruce: The point that it appears to me we have to keep in view more than anything else is that any resolutions that we could possibly pass with the general consent of every representative of the Dominions would have to be quite general in character. If we passed a resolution in favour of a one-power standard, which indicated in any way what part any Dominion was to take in maintaining that standard, personally I could not think of endorsing it. It is a matter for my Parliament, not for me at all; but I have here a resolution of the type I had in mind. I am not moving it now, but I will read it to give an idea of what I had in view. The resolution is as follows:—

> "This Conference is of opinion that equality of naval strength to any one Foreign Power is the minimum standard of security for the Empire, and it is for the Governments and Parliaments of the Empire according to their several capacities and circumstances to co-operate in the maintenance of that standard."

That is a general resolution, drafted with a view to not embarrassing any representative or committing his Parliament to anything at all. It merely says that each part of the Empire according to their several capacities and circumstances will co-operate in the maintenance of that standard. I am afraid we can do no more here than pass very general resolutions of that character, because I do not think we have the authority from our Parliaments to do anything more. In regard to technical resolutions, I do not quite see how any could be evolved, but if there were anything which could be done in that direction—

Further Discussion on General Question of Resolutions.

Lord Salisbury: I had strongly in my mind that Mr. Bruce and the other Prime Ministers would not wish to tie their Parliaments for a moment. That is a point which would always have to be put into any draft. I think Mr. Bruce's draft covers it. I do not know if any of the other Dominion Prime Ministers would like to pass his resolution now. We have nothing to say against it at all. If there is any difficulty about drafting it could be considered before it was passed. There are resolutions which do not commit Parliaments to any expenditure, which is out of the question according to our democratic ideas, such as the importance of the Suez Canal, the necessity of having a base in the Far East; if you like, that the base should be Singapore. All those are the sort of things which would strengthen the hands of the Imperial Government if passed, but they would all require very careful drafting. Long experience has shown me that a hastily drafted resolution is a dangerous thing.

Mr. Bruce: I entirely agree. My suggestion was only as to the best way of getting the resolution drafted. Whether, for instance, it is a matter for the Committee of Imperial Defence.

General Smuts: I think we should be very careful about resolutions. Merely passing academic resolutions I think is no good. It serves no purpose. It simply makes people suspicious not only here but in the distant parts of the Dominions. They do not know what these general formulas are. It is no use passing a resolution about the Suez Canal; it is like passing a resolution about the alphabet. Of course we agree upon that; it is the vital point in the Empire. Now take the form of resolution which Mr. Bruce read here. I will point out the difficulties we are landed in. It is practically the resolution we passed two years ago—a one-power standard and the contributions to it to be settled by the different Dominion Parliaments.

C 62808

Position now and in 1921.

See in what circumstances the resolution was passed two years ago. We were discussing an entirely different proposition. We were discussing one great fighting Navy to which the different Dominions should contribute. We had actually a scheme before us how the different parts of the Empire should contribute to the maintenance of one independent fighting force, and in the circumstances we then passed that resolution which stated that we should have the one-power standard, but the mode and degree of assistance from the various Dominions was to be settled by the Parliaments. That is what we had in view. This time we have before us an entirely different situation. The Admiralty has come forward with a different scheme, and the Admiralty has told us instead of this contributory scheme, this maintenance by all parts of the Empire of one unitary force, each part will now be responsible for its own naval units. Quite a different thing. The old formula will not apply any more.

Mr. Bruce: With respect, that was not the view that Australia took in the Conference of 1921. We would never have been any party to one unified navy.

General Smuts: If you were to go through the records of the 1921 Conference that is what you would find. I am not saying what attitude Australia ultimately would have taken up, but that was actually the point we were discussing, and Mr. Hughes was prepared to consult his friends about it and see what could be done. We passed this general formula in view of an entirely different situation from that which we are facing here to-day.

Mr. Amery: I must rather disagree with that, General Smuts. What was produced by the Naval Staff at the beginning of the 1921 Conference was a scheme which was then turned down, according to which, just as now, the different navies of the Empire were to be administratively separate, but it contemplated a common General Staff and a common strategic direction, even in peace, which it called a single navy. That was definitely turned down. It was generally agreed it was not a feasible scheme and we then went back to what was the position then and is the position now, navies autonomous not only in administration, but also entirely autonomous from the point of view of their staff and direction, and I think it was in view of that second position and after the first thing was turned down that the resolution of 1921 was passed. It was passed in quite general terms as General Smuts said, passed practically identically with Mr. Bruce's resolution, except that, as Washington had come on to the horizon, it was worded in the form which postponed things until after Washington:—

> "That, while recognising the necessity of co-operation among the various portions of the Empire to provide such naval defence as may prove to be essential for security,"

There is co-operation, no suggestion of unification or single navy.

> "And, while holding that equality with the naval strength of any other Power is a minimum standard for that purpose, this Conference is of opinion that the method and expense of such co-operation are matters for the final determination of the several Parliaments concerned, and that any recommendations thereon should be deferred until after the coming Conference on Disarmament."

I do venture to suggest that the only difference between the position in 1921 and the position now is that Washington has intervened, and, while I quite agree with General Smuts as to mere academic resolutions not being of value, I would not go so far as to say that a resolution reaffirming the one-Power Standard since Washington was in any sense academic.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62809

Value of Resolution.

It is certainly for me in the House of Commons of value to have a general reaffirmation of that by the Empire. Just in the same way, taking the position of Singapore, that is very largely criticised here by those who are taking a point of view which is purely local and which might lead to Imperial Defence generally being neglected. It makes a great deal of difference in my standing up for the Imperial point of view as against the purely local, the home waters and cross-Channel point of view, if I can point to a resolution saying that after careful consideration the Prime Ministers of the Empire at the Conference agreed that this was really the soundest thing put forward. I do not know whether this is the moment to go beyond tabling a resolution for subsequent discussion, but I should like to say that, from my point of view in the House of Commons, I do not regard resolutions of that sort as being without value. They certainly strengthen my case in asking the House of Commons to support that standard and I hope equally, though it will leave everybody free to do what they wish, if anybody does want to help in this matter, it also strengthens their hands. I certainly would say that as to the passing of a resolution, as we have done regularly at all Conferences before on subjects of this order, and they do strengthen the hands of the Governments concerned.

Position now and in 1921 (continued).

Mr. Massey: My recollection, Prime Minister, of what took place at the last meeting in 1921 was something like this, that after considerable discussion on one occasion we agreed to a certain resolution. We came along the next day and went back upon that for good and sufficient reasons which I will not go into now. There was an understanding that nothing more should be done until after the Washington Conference. There was also this circumstance at the time; we felt, or at all events we believed, that we were going to receive a certain amount of Reparation from Germany and it was suggested that the amount of money, or at all events a proportion of the Reparation received from Germany, should be used for purposes of naval defence. I do not think there was any objection to that. It is a very doubtful thing whether we are going to receive anything from Germany and we have got to fall back upon our own resources. That is my recollection of what took place. The position has changed absolutely since 1921. All the same I do not go back from what I said. So far as I am concerned, I am quite prepared on behalf of New Zealand to stand by any resolution which will strengthen the defences of the Empire, particularly in the way of naval defence and next so far as aviation is concerned.

Draft Resolutions to be circulated.

Mr. Baldwin: If the members of the Conference agree, I think it would be convenient and also save time, and I think it would probably be the most practical thing, for any proposed resolutions to be circulated, say, by Lord Salisbury after consultation, that members should have the resolutions and consider them quietly, and then probably we should be able to make up our minds, after a very short discussion, either to adopt or discard them. I am afraid this afternoon, if we went on with an indefinite discussion, we might be led away and take a very long time talking of resolutions and we might not get any farther this afternoon.

General Smuts: I quite agree, Prime Minister. I raised the debate not to take time ——

Mr. Baldwin: It might go on and we should perhaps find ourselves, after a time, wasting time. I think that had better be done. Mr. Amery, do you wish to make some observations on the general discussion? Then I will ask the Secretary of State for War to say a word.

REPLY BY THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.

Command of Sea vital.

Mr. Amery: I think there is one thing emerges very clearly, that we are all agreed that in order to co-operate effectively when war comes in respect of war services, in so far as each of our Parliaments decides to do something, it is desirable to do it in such a fashion that we can co-operate, if we want to, when the time comes. The only observation I should like to make on that is that the possibility of co-operation with regard to either the Army or the Air Force depends entirely upon the retention of the command of the sea. The splendid armies that Canada and Australia and every other Dominion sent to the Front in the late War could not possibly have been sent unless we had the assured command of the sea. That command is, therefore, a precedent condition of any other co-operation. As long as we do maintain it, co-operation is possible; the moment we cease to be in a position to maintain it, co-operation becomes impossible and each part of the Empire is forced to rely absolutely on its own resources.

C 62810

Need for Wide Outlook.

Even with that co-operation there is no doubt that local circumstances affect different parts of the Empire differently. India, for instance, has a very obvious heavy military burden imposed upon her land defence and consequently she cannot take as large a part in naval defence as her population and her position in the Empire might otherwise warrant. Now the same applies where a very heavy air burden comes into consideration. Take the position of our Air Defence, which imposes a very heavy burden upon us in this country. Air fighting arises so rapidly and may be so rapidly settled that, although I know Sir Samuel Hoare is only too anxious for every form of co-operation in the Empire, the whole fight in this country, unless we were on our own capable of holding our position, might be settled long before any reinforcements came. Now, that is going to create a very serious difficulty about the maintenance of what is the foundation of it all, the naval position; as far as Empire Defence is concerned, you will have in ever-increasing degree people in this country, large newspaper proprietors, who have never looked at things from the Imperial point of view, all sorts of people, taking the view that the air defence of this country is not only essential in itself, but has got to take the place of the Naval Defence of the Empire as a whole, and you will find even as responsible people as Sir Robert Horne suggesting that the air defence of this country is an alternative, or should be done instead of proceeding with securing the naval position at Singapore. I mention that so that you will all realise that, unless we do treat maintenance of the common foundation of defence, our security at sea, as a co-operative matter, as a matter in which according to our several capacities and circumstances—a phrase Mr. Bruce used—we are really doing something, there may be a danger that the one thing upon which we all depend may be prejudiced by the local outlook, the shortsighted outlook predominating in this country. Hitherto the question that has been mainly to the front at this Conference has been whether the local or the broader outlook would prevail in the Dominions. The big danger to us all is the danger of the local outlook as against the broader common outlook prevailing in this country. All the future prospects of the Dominions, their whole fabric of life, the whole conception of the great continents that they propose to develop, all these things are dependent on the assumption that the command of the sea is secured for us all. It is by far the cheapest and most economical form of common defence, but there it is; we are all dependent on it. I want to lay stress upon the danger to the Dominions of this country getting into a frame of mind in which it thinks that the burden imposed upon it is too great, that it will look after its immediate local interests rather than what is the foundation of our common defence. I do not want to say more than that, but I think it is a factor that ought to be taken into account in considering how much each Government, or each Parliament, is prepared to do in the way of some more effective co-operation in maintaining our security at sea.

REPLY BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR.

Thanks to Dominion Prime Ministers.

Lord Derby: I would like to thank the Prime Ministers for their statements with regard to the Army. I would like to point out that, although the Navy and the Air Force may come in first, it will always be left to the Army in the end to get the results.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 38 14 15 16

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62811

Mr. Mackenzie King said in his remarks that we must not assume that there will be any specific contribution to any war that the Empire might be engaged in. I never for one moment made that assumption.

Two Main Assumptions.

I made two assumptions and I appeal on two assumptions which I hope are not ill-founded. First of all, that, if any part of the Empire, wherever it is, is attacked, the whole Empire will rally to the support of the part so attacked. Secondly, that it will rally to the fullest extent of its powers. My wish is to put forward schemes which will admit of the minimum amount of peace expenditure, with the maximum amount of expansion in time of war.

Meaning of Phrase "If Empire Attacked."

Mr. Mackenzie King: Might I interrupt just to make quite clear what is in my mind, because I think there should not be any false security at any point. We should know exactly what we mean. So much depends on what is meant by saying that—if the Empire is attacked at any particular part. My mind goes back to the situation as it was a year ago at the time when there was a certain difficulty with the Turks. If that had resulted in actual hostilities, I cannot say at the moment what the Canadian Parliament would or would not have ultimately done; but I would say this, I think there is very grave doubt whether the Parliament of Canada would at that particular time, with the information it had on that question, have undertaken to supply troops, at any rate at the beginning of the War. It is quite conceivable that trouble beginning with Turkey might have come in course of time to assume proportions where Christendom itself was in danger—a Moslem-Christian conflict; in that event there is scarcely doubt that Canada would have felt a certain responsibility to the Empire as a whole. I cite this because I think similar cases may arise, and I think it would only convey a sense of false security if one were to assume that in any situation which came about the merits of the emergency would not be looked into and examined from the point of view of the direct interest and responsibility of the Dominion, and the extent of its participation, if any, determined thereby.

Lord Derby: May I put it in this way? If the actual invasion of any portion of the British Empire was threatened by a foreign nation, all parts of the Empire would wish to come to the rescue and to the help of such part of the Empire as was threatened with invasion.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Unwarranted invasion certainly, but having regard to the existing circumstances.

Lord Derby: That is what I mean, unwarranted invasion.

Mr. Massey: Can invasion be anything else than unwarranted?

Lord Derby: I think we will leave that for the moment.

Plans for Military Co-operation if desired by Canada and other Dominions.

Mr. Mackenzie King has been good enough to say that he wishes to co-operate. May I make this suggestion to him? That we should prepare some scheme which should be submitted to him, a scheme for assistance by the Canadian Forces; that we should enter into direct discussion from the War Office with his Military Advisers of that scheme, thrashing it out in detail before it is submitted to him for his approval, if approval it be.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I am entirely satisfied to have the officers of your department of war confer with the officers of ours and submit any scheme for consideration.

Mr. Bruce: I understand that the suggestion is that a scheme should be prepared in case of necessity, so that, if any part of the Empire is invaded or attacked and Australia desires to co-operate, her troops may be moved overseas. It is merely laying the plans for voluntary action at some future time by our citizens who are inspired to offer their services overseas, so that we may have the plans ready for their action to be effective. We accept that most certainly and are only too anxious to co-operate with you.

C 62812

Mr. Massey: As far as plans are concerned, I say yes. If the Empire goes to war New Zealand is at war—that is where we are.

REPLY BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR AIR.

Sir Samuel Hoare: Could I just say two sentences?

Mr. Baldwin: Please do.

Agreement that present Air Defence of Great Britain unsatisfactory.

Sir Samuel Hoare: Prime Minister, I do not want to be drawn into any kind of competition with my colleagues on Dominion co-operation, nor do I want to be drawn into any discussion as to what is the principal menace at the present time. That is a question we must all decide for ourselves. But I understand—and I hope the Prime Ministers will correct me if I am wrong—that the general impression at which they have arrived is that the present state of our Air Defence is, judged by the figures I gave them the other day, unsatisfactory, and that the sooner that state of affairs can be remedied the better. That, in itself, will strengthen my own hands and the hands of the Government in putting right, as quickly as we can, this unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Suggested Technical Discussions at Air Ministry.

Apart from that, there are only two suggestions that I wanted to make. The first is that I should very much like to know the view of the Prime Ministers, either now or at some time convenient to themselves, as to whether they would like a meeting at the Air Ministry to go in greater detail into the technical side of the Air position.

Inclusion in any General Resolution of Reference to Air Position.

Secondly, may I make the suggestion that if, in due course, they think fit to pass resolutions upon the subject of national defence they should not isolate one or two questions, as I think that, if the resolutions were published, isolated resolutions might do more harm than good, but that they keep in mind the whole of the defence problem, as it has been put to them during the last two days, and, assuming that they take the view that I do about the urgency of the air menace, they might see their way to include in those resolutions a resolution of that kind. I venture to throw out those two suggestions to you.

Mr. Mackenzie King: May I ask, in relation to the suggestion the Minister for Air has just kindly made, what his own wish would be in the matter?

Sir Samuel Hoare: Supposing the Prime Ministers had the time, I should very much welcome that they should come to the Air Ministry, and we could have gone into some greater detail with regard to the more technical side of it.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I should be very glad.

Sir Samuel Hoare: Perhaps I might put myself into communication with the Secretariat, and see if a convenient day could be arranged. The beginning of next week would suit me best, but that is a matter for the Prime Ministers to settle.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. Baldwin: The next meeting of the Conference will be on Wednesday at 11 A.M. to consider the position of Indians in the British Empire. To-morrow, in the afternoon, there are two committees sitting, the Committee on the "C" Mandates at the Colonial Office at 4 o'clock, and the Committee on the Signature of Treaties at the Foreign Office at 5·30.

(The Proceedings were then adjourned until 11 A.M. on Wednesday, the 24th October, 1923.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 22, 1923.

0

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62813

SECRET.

E. 12th Meeting (1923).

54

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE TWELFTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1923, AT 11 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Right Hon. W. C. BRIDGEMAN, M.P., Secretary of State for Home Affairs.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, K.C., C.H., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

The Hon. H. BURTON, K.C., Minister of Finance, Union of South Africa.

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Professor JOHN MACNEILL, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Lieut.-Colonel C. W. G. WALKER, D.S.O., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir WOLSELEY HAIG, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., C.M.G., C.B.E., Political Secretary to His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 12 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62814

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B., (Secretary.)
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir Robert R. Garran, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

Newfoundland.
Mr. W. J. Carew.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. Skelton.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. Thomson, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.
Mr. O. Esmonde.

India.
Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

POSITION OF INDIANS IN OTHER PARTS OF THE EMPIRE.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Lord Peel: Prime Minister, I should like to thank you and to thank the Conference also for giving the members of the Indian Delegation the opportunity of bringing this question of the position and status of Indians in the Dominions before you. I think you will all recognise that this subject is one of very high Imperial importance, and I know that in approaching the subject I speak in a general atmosphere of goodwill.

Importance of Problem.

Now, at the outset of the observations let me say that I wish to deal with the broad outlines of the subject, because my colleague, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, has some definite suggestions to make when he follows me. I propose to deal with this subject not so much as it affects any Dominion or any Colony, but in the most general way. I want to show that if the unity and the strength of the Empire are to be maintained and preserved it is really essential and imperative that we should find a solution of this problem of the position of Indians in the Dominions overseas. There have been, as the Conference knows, very great constitutional changes quite recently in the position of the Government of India, and these changes have brought into prominence what was possibly latent before, but is now clear, the existence of various parties with various opinions and policies. But, however much these parties may be divided in their points of view on general political subjects, on this one point there is complete unity of feeling. For instance, there is no difference as regards the strength of this feeling between the party which has been giving general support to the Government in the Assembly, and the various sections of what I may call the non-co-operative parties. When I speak of Indian opinion, I am not referring, as is often suggested, to what is described as the opinion of the intelligentsia only, of a definite intellectual class, but I am also stating the views of a great many who are not really necessarily concerned with politics at all. Let me pass from them for a moment. You have the opinions, we will say, of the Indian Princes, whose views will be given expression to to-day by His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar. You have other men like my other colleague, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, who, as we all know, was a member of the Viceroy's Executive Council, and who holds a very high place in Indian public affairs. Therefore, you have this singular picture, that politicians, differing widely on all other subjects, and men of differing shades of thought, are generally united on this particular subject. You have staunch supporters of our rule in India combining on this subject with the extreme types of politicians. You have business men and landowners combining with men of a very different class and point of view.

C 62815

Feeling in India.

I certainly do not exaggerate when I say that this subject more than any other, I think, is constantly impressed upon me both officially and personally by the Government of India and by Lord Reading, the Viceroy. The Viceroy, in his private letters, is constantly explaining and pressing upon me how strongly the feeling of soreness and bitterness is growing on this subject, and how, in many ways, the task of wisely governing India is made more difficult by this divergence of feeling. Therefore, I want to place this first point before the Conference—the remarkable unanimity of feeling on the position of Indians in the Dominions; but I do not think when you come to ask the cause that it is very far to seek.

The reason why there is such unity among our fellow subjects in India is this, that they regard the disability under which their countrymen labour in other parts of the world as a brand of social inferiority. That is what cuts so deep into the consciousness of the Indian. I am not necessarily, of course, associating myself entirely with that view, because I know quite well that there are other causes contributing, that there are questions of economic difficulty, political questions with which this question must necessarily be linked. But I have no doubt whatever, that, in what I am saying now, I do voice the general opinion of Indians.

This question of social status is a contributory cause in the history of many social and political movements disguised under more resounding names.

India's Services to the Empire.

Well, let me say a word about this great country, feeling so strongly and unitedly on the subject. First of all, look at its contribution to the Great War. No less than 1,400,000 men from India took their part in the service of the Great War. Their contribution in money was well over £200,000,000. We all remember the general enthusiasm from all parts of India, and how Princes and others less distinguished all alike took part in the struggle of the Great War.

Her New Status.

And here, if I may say so, there are installed at this very table representatives of the Indian Delegation, showing that India is sitting here on equal terms with the other Dominions in the great council chamber of the Empire. And, again, at the League of Nations the representatives of India take their place with the other States represented there and are able to contribute their voice and their influence just as much as others to the deliberations of that Assembly.

Her Industrial Position.

Moreover, and I do not think this is always recognised, India, though it has been for centuries, for thousands of years a great agricultural State, is now ambitious to become an industrial State; it has gone far along the road, because it has been accepted by the League of Nations as one of the eight greatest industrial States of the world.

India's New Constitution.

Now India, as the Conference knows, has recently received a new political constitution, and that constitution, while giving the Indians far more power than they had before in the administration of India, has also given them a great outlet for the utterance of their national sentiments. Now what is the position in India itself? In India itself there is a policy of co-operation. Britons and Indians co-operate together in the Government of India; Britons and Indians sit together on juries; they meet together in business; they are fellow-directors in the great companies; they serve together on the Viceroy's Council; many of them, of course, are Ministers in the great provinces, and those Ministers command the assistance of members of the all-India Services whether British or Indian. Now, what must be the contrast in the minds of these men when they look abroad and see what their standard or status is in the States of the Empire. The members of this Conference,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62816

with their great experience of the cumulative effect of these institutions and the position which India now occupies here and in the League of Nations, will realise how much all these changes have contributed towards the growing self-consciousness and sense of dignity of India.

India's Feeling for the Empire.

Now I want to say this, and in the most plain way that I can; if I thought, and if my colleagues thought, that this desire for equality of treatment was inspired in any sense by a desire not to be part of, or to take part in, this great Empire, neither I nor my colleagues would be pleading the cause at this table. It is, indeed, the desire and it is the ambition of Indians—I will exclude the negligible class of extremists, who can be found I suppose in any country—it is their intent and ambition to share in the splendours, the glories, and the traditions of the British Empire.

They believe, moreover, that they can bring their own contribution, of thought, culture and loyalty, to this great combine. There are those who suggest that these disabilities under which Indians labour in some parts of the Empire are of little importance, that they do not interfere with their liberty, and that the denial of the vote does not very much matter one way or the other. Now, these views are, as one knows, the common form of objections put forward, either here or in any country, to franchise extensions and franchise grants. But, though the question has importance from the purely material point of view, I should be very ill discharging my duty to this Conference if I were to represent this matter as one to be regarded merely from the practical point of view. It is very largely with the Indians a matter of national sentiment and feeling, and it is with this feeling that we have to reckon.

Importance of India to the Empire.

Now, in all situations of Imperial activity, in matters of Imperial defence, matters of Imperial trade, Imperial communications or the development of Imperial resources, in all these India plays a most prominent part, and, as we have granted to India a large measure of representative institutions, it is quite clear that in dealing with these large matters we cannot disregard the opinions of the representative bodies which we have set up. And, supposing they were disregarded, how, after all, are you going to expect India to co-operate wholeheartedly in the great work of consolidating the Empire, and how, without this co-operation, can the Empire attain its full measure of strength? We know, too, that economic policy is very often influenced by political considerations; and I feel that both on the political and the economic side the task of governing India may be greatly increased, and that there will be, unless we settle this question, no real unity in the Empire, not merely on the material side—on which I am not laying so much stress to-day—but on what is so vastly more important, the moral side.

Scope of Problem.

Moreover, the scope of this problem as regards many of the Dominions is not really very great. For the moment I am excluding from that general proposition South Africa, where I know a great many currents and cross-currents of opinion complicate the issue; but as regards Australia, and as regards New Zealand, where much has been done, and as regards Canada, the numbers that we have to deal with are very small—about 2,000 in Australia, in all that vast country, about 600 in New Zealand, and about 1,200 in Canada, of whom, I think, rather more than 1,100 are in the Province of British Columbia.

Resolution of 1921 Conference.

I want to reaffirm what was stated at the Conference in 1921 as to the complete acceptance by the Government of India and Indian opinion of the right of the great Dominions to determine the composition of their own community. May I read the words of that resolution? They are as follows:—

> "The Conference, while reaffirming the resolution of the Imperial War Conference of 1918 that each community of the British Commonwealth should enjoy complete control of the composition of its own population by means of restriction on > immigration from any of the other communities, recognises that there is an incongruity between the position of India as an equal member of the British Empire and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in some other parts of the Empire."

C 62817

Therefore, that principle is laid down quite clearly, and consequently there need be no anxiety on the part of any of the Dominions that there is any desire on the part of Indian feeling to go back on that decision. Thus, in pressing this matter upon the generous consideration of the Dominions, I feel that, vast as are the implications of the problem, the solution of the practical question is perhaps not so difficult as it appears. Well, justice and expediency are often divided. Sometimes they approach each other, and when, as I think in this case, they combine and are merged in one another, the appeal is surely irresistible, and I am going to ask this Conference if the time has not come when these disabilities should not be specifically removed.

Indian Government's Duty of safeguarding Indian Nationals overseas.

I want to add this point, about the interest—possibly some may think the unnecessary interest—which the Government and the Indian people take in the position of Indians in the great Dominions. Now, so long as to any extent Indians in the Dominions may be regarded as a foreign body in the great body politic of those Dominions, so long is the Government of India bound to take an interest in their fate and to assure themselves as to the manner in which they are treated. But once they are absorbed they cease to be a foreign body; once they are absorbed into the great corporation, as it were, of the Dominions, then the interest of the Indian Government, of course, will cease; and there is nothing that the Indian Government, and there is nothing that anybody connected with it, there is nothing the Secretary of State for India dislikes more than interfering or appearing to interfere with the domestic affairs of the great Dominions. Now, I am not insensible, of course, of the grave difficulties which stand in the way. I know how very difficult it is to bring home always to local opinion that local views and opinions are not necessarily coincident with the wider interests of the Empire, and I know quite well that those who are listening to me as representative of the Dominions—whatever they may or may not have done—desire that a solution of this question should be found, and I do most earnestly plead that, when later in this Conference they take into consideration the practical measures which they may adopt for the solution of this question, they will bear in mind the intense feeling that has been aroused on this subject in India, and will bring home to their own people that in the highest interest of the Empire the aspirations of India should be respected.

Difficulties of Problem.

I know that there are great difficulties. The Prime Minister, in his opening address, spoke of the contacts of civilisation. There are contacts, of course, here of more than one civilisation, and you have peoples differing in tradition and social habits, fashioned in the course of centuries—thousands of years, I may say—fashioned by differences of national surroundings, by differences of secular and religious thought. We have to deal—and we should never forget when dealing with India that we have to deal—with ancient races full of the pride of race; we have to deal with ancient religions full of the pride of religion. That is, of course, one of the great differences we have to remember in dealing with the position of India as compared with countries further west. There are, for instance, 70 millions of Moslems in India—70 millions in India; but in communion with them through religious ties and rites there is a vastly greater body—hundreds of millions of Moslems—stretching in a great belt from the Gulf of Malaya right across to West Africa—hundreds of millions of Moslems, who, in their hour of worship, all turn their faces to Mecca.

Indian Culture and Traditions.

We have the pride of the Hindoos in their own history, in their recollections of the past; they look back to, shall we say, the 57

58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
66
67
13
38
14
15
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62818

Mauryan Empire, the memories of Chandra Gupta and of his famous grandson King Asoka. Their memories stretch to an even earlier time when, scarcely noticed by history, their Aryan ancestors were moving down from the North-West Frontier, the traditional path for the invasion of India, along the plains of the Five Rivers now called the Punjab; they look back to dim far off times, to a date long before the Jutes and Angles and Saxons and Norsemen, the original elements of which our race is composed, landed on these shores; when Rome itself was a mere village, before the Roman legions garrisoned the Great Wall which used to run from sea to sea in the North of Britain; a period even before the Druids reared the gigantic monoliths of Stonehenge.

I press this subject on the Conference, and I hope, with the consent of the Prime Minister, that they will listen to Sir Tej while he deals with the subject in more detail.

STATEMENT BY SIR TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Prime Minister, let me at once say how deeply grateful I feel to you and to His Majesty's Government, and may I thank you and His Majesty's Government and the various Prime Ministers for giving me this opportunity of a free and full discussion of the question in which India is to-day so vitally interested. I fear I may take some time, but I shall crave your indulgence for more reasons than one; the most important of those reasons is the importance of the subject. I am glad that His Majesty's Government have decided to set apart a special day for this subject. That being so, am I not entitled to draw from it the inference that His Majesty's Government do really recognise the importance of this question? When it is known in my country that His Majesty's Government recognise the importance of this subject, and that that recognition is shared by the various Dominion Prime Ministers, that fact alone will inspire them with some hope.

Before I proceed further, may I also express my deep gratitude to Lord Peel for the assistance he has given me in helping to bring this subject up before the Conference, and for the speech which he has delivered to-day, which has filled me with gratification, and which I have no doubt, when it comes to be known to my countrymen, will fill them also with gratification. He has identified himself to-day completely and unreservedly with every sentiment of our national honour. That is what I appreciate more than the moving eloquence with which he delivered his great speech this morning.

I may well produce in some quarters the impression of being a fighter. I do not object to criticism of that kind. Really and truly, I am fighting the cause of my country, and the Premiers of the various Dominions, who have in their day fought the cause of their country, will not object if I fight the cause of mine. But I do fight, let me tell you frankly, as a subject of King George, and I fight for a place in his household and I will not be content with a place in his stables.

Unanimity of Indian Feeling on Question.

Prime Minister, let me tell you that the problem of Indians overseas is of vital importance not only to India, but to the whole of the Empire. Whatever may be our position in regard to self-government, howsoever distant we may be from that cherished dream of ours, let me tell you that, so far as this question of Indians overseas is concerned, we stand solid and united. We have our own domestic quarrels; we have moderates and extremists; we have non-co-operators; and we have Hindus and Mahomedans. But so far as this question is concerned, let me tell you with all the sincerity that I am capable of that we stand absolutely united. Do not be misguided by what appears in certain papers here which attempt to show that there is no feeling on this question. We attach far more importance to the honour of our nationals in other parts of the Empire than probably you realise.

Question of "Izzat."

We express that feeling in the vernacular of our own country by a comprehensive and delicate phrase, which I have no doubt will readily be understood by Lord Curzon and His Highness the

C 62819

Maharajah—that phrase is "Izzat." There is not a man either among the Princes or among the humblest subjects of His Majesty who does not attach great importance to that question of "Izzat." When "Izzat" (which means honour) is at stake, we prefer death to anything else. That is our sentiment, and it is in that light that I present my case to you.

India's Position in the Empire.

Do not forget that my country, India, is the one country which makes the British Empire truly Imperial. I take pride in that. I do not indulge in the slightest degree in reflection upon the dignity or honour or position of any one of the Dominions, but I do claim that it is my country which makes the British Empire truly Imperial. One-fifth of the human race, with a far more ancient civilisation than your own, to which eloquent reference has been made by Lord Peel, joins with you in acknowledging the suzerainty of our common Throne. That allegiance with us is a real living thing. Shake that allegiance, and you shake the foundations of the entire fabric, with consequences which it is difficult to overestimate.

Function of the Conference.

Might I explain to you here the considerations which will guide me in presenting my case to you? In my humble judgment, the one function of this Conference—the highest advisory body of the Empire—is to bring about a good understanding between the various units that constitute the British Commonwealth, to strengthen the ties which unite, or ought to unite, the different units of the Empire with their different outlook and their different religions. If this Conference fails to achieve that end, then let me say it fails to justify its existence in the eyes of the Empire. But to achieve that end, it seems to me that it is absolutely necessary that we should open out our minds to each other with entire frankness. Any mental reservation on an occasion like this, and round this table, would, in my humble judgment, amount to nothing short of treason against the King and treason against the Empire. It is in that spirit of frankness, in that spirit of candour, that I will venture to present to you my case, and, even though I may use now and again expressions to indicate the strength of my feeling and the feeling of my countrymen, I beg of the Dominion Prime Ministers not to misunderstand my spirit.

Indian Sentiment on Problem not confined to Intellectuals.

Let me tell you at once that the feeling on this question in India is deep-seated and widespread. Let me also remove a very wrong impression, and I am glad that Lord Peel has referred to this question for I desire to reinforce his arguments as an Indian. Twenty-seven years I have been in public life; thirteen years I have been connected with the legislative Councils, and I have sat in the Viceroy's Cabinet. I have never witnessed before what is happening in India to-day. Five years ago it may have been possible for you to say that a wide gulf divided the masses from the classes. Let me now give you this warning. The classes lead the masses as never before. India has rapidly changed, and that is the outstanding feature of the situation there. The intellectuals, or, if you like to call them, agitators, have gained ascendancy over the masses. What the intellectuals think to-day the masses will think to-morrow. This question now before us, let me tell you, affects directly the masses, for it is from the masses mainly that most of our population has gone to the Dominions. I belong to a province which has supplied a considerable number of men to the various Dominions, and I know their feelings. You may condemn the agitators, you may condemn the intellectual classes; I will not quarrel with that, but remember they have got power now with the masses.

Influence of Vernacular Press.

Do not forget the growing and increasing influence of the vernacular press. I do not justify or vindicate its attitude in every respect. I will, however, state the facts. It now penetrates into the innermost recesses of our villages, and every village has got a reader who reads for the illiterate people the vernacular newspapers. I have been

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 38 14 15 16
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes
PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62820

reading extracts from the vernacular press of my own country, and, while I do deprecate the wild language in which it has indulged, let me tell you frankly that it is seething with indignation over this question, and that is affecting the whole outlook of my countrymen in the villages.

Seriousness of Situation.

Any inequality of Indian nationals enters like iron into our souls. For Heaven's sake, whether you find a solution or whether you do not find a solution, do not dismiss this statement of mine as mere sentimental nonsense. It is an absolute fact, and I am here to interpret to you the present position of my countrymen in regard to this question; it cuts to the quick our national pride and our new consciousness. It permeates and sours our whole outlook in regard to Imperial relationship. It derives impetus from the natural inclination to take pride in being a member of the biggest Commonwealth that the world knows to-day. It makes the task of the Government of India, of which I had the honour of being a member until a few months ago, infinitely more difficult in dealing with their domestic problems than you realise. Here I must reinforce the arguments of Lord Peel. This feeling runs right through our national life.

Feeling over Kenya Question.

Let me at once tell you that I am not willing to enter at length into the merits of the Kenya decision, but my countrymen expect me, and my Government expects me, and I am bound by all considerations of honour and duty, to put you in full possession of the sentiments of my countrymen and of my Government in regard to your decision. They have received that decision with the utmost possible dismay. I know the official view is that in certain respects our position in Kenya has been improved. That is not a view we share. We judge you by a standard which is admittedly very high. We were not fighting for little things; we were fighting for a big principle. I know and I feel, and my countrymen feel, and my Government feels, that a serious blunder has been made. I know also that British statesmanship is wise, and whenever a thing goes wrong it begins to think, and I honestly believe that it will soon recognise the mistake which it has made. Let me tell you, on behalf of my countrymen, that neither my country nor the Government which I have the honour to represent will accept this decision as final. Indeed, there is nothing final in politics, and I want His Majesty's Government to recognise that position and to indicate, if possible, that they do look upon that question in the light in which I have just presented it. May I conclude this portion of my speech by assuring the Conference that while on domestic questions of Indian politics we, like most of you, have our differences of parties, groups and interests, yet, upon this question which concerns the honour of our nationals in Kenya, and the honour of our nationals overseas, there is no difference between us, from the Viceroy downwards?

Views of the Government of India.

May I remind you of what the distinguished and eminent statesman, with whom I had the privilege of working in close co-operation for two years, and to whom I hope my countrymen and his countrymen will do justice some day, said on a critical occasion to the legislative Assembly when the announcement of the Kenya decision was published in India? I will quote from his speech.

"The news of the decision regarding Kenya," said Lord Reading, "came to me and my Government no less than to you as a great and severe disappointment; for India had made the cause of Indians in Kenya her own. As His Majesty's Government has stated, this decision conflicts on material points with the strongly expressed views of my Government as laid before the Cabinet by the Secretary of State for India. They have announced their decision, and the Government of India must consider it and arrive at its conclusions. If submission must be made, then with all due respect to His Majesty's Government it can only be under protest." That is the opinion of the Viceroy.

C 62821

Illustrations of Non-Official Feeling.

May I crave your indulgence just for two minutes to read out to you a few typical telegrams which I have received during the last few days, some of them from absolutely unexpected quarters. They have come to me from representative bodies of all shades of opinion. Mr. Sastri, who has been so frequently, during the last few years, connected with this matter, sends me a telegram supporting the proposals, not without misgivings, which I am going to put before you at present. Now, the Swaraj Party, to which I do not belong, and which does not see eye to eye with me, and from which I should never have expected to receive support, sends this telegram from Poona, through its Secretary and leader, Mr. Kilkar: "Maharashtra Swarajya Party offers you full support any strong action you take to get redress Kenya wrong." Let me tell you again that most of the telegrams come from unexpected quarters.

Unexpected Testimony.

Well, here is a most remarkable telegram from a gentleman with whom I worked in full co-operation until five years ago, but from whom I separated when differences arose. Pandit Madan Mohon Malaviya now belongs to the non-co-operation Party, and three days ago, if you would have asked me, I should never have said that I would receive a telegram like this from that gentleman. It is from a man with forty years solid work behind him, and this is his telegram. It is sent to me from Simla.

"Indians all shades public opinion at one with you in demanding equality status with fellow subjects throughout British Empire. If representatives other parts not prepared give practical support this elementary right Indians as citizens Empire, participation Indians Imperial Conference becomes mockery, deep national humiliation, and trust both you and Maharajah of Alwar will withdraw."

I have received two telegrams from Mrs. Besant, giving support to me on her own behalf and on behalf of her entire Party. Let me tell you that while I am her friend I do not belong to her Party.

Viceroy's Telegram.

Lastly, may I give to you the telegram which was handed over to me the day before yesterday, which has come to me from the Government of India. It says: "We understand from Reuters that Conference will discuss overseas questions probably on 24th. The resolution passed recently by a majority of the Bombay Corporation to boycott Empire goods, where possible, as a protest against the Kenya decision, and a resolution on the same lines of the Poona public meeting, further indicate the importance attached to equality of status overseas, and we sincerely hope that the proceedings of the Conference will restore confidence and good feeling. As regards 'C' Mandates, we trust that the atmosphere will permit you to secure a favourable solution, otherwise India's right to revision of the policy must be reserved. Sapru's proposal in letter to Sir Narasimha Sarma to reserve the right to challenge policy when India's interests are affected, though substantially the same as ours, is less elastic. We earnestly hope that you have secured Smuts' agreement to abandon or modify the segregation policy as suggested in our despatch. We attach very great importance to it. We hope also that the Dominions and the Colonial Office will consent to the appointment of Agents to assist them and us in this difficult question as suggested in our memorandum. Please send copy of the telegram to Sapru."

I will not take up your time further. I have tried only to reinforce the argument which Lord Peel put forward by showing how the different classes of our people are agreed on this question.

Present Position of Indians overseas.

Having explained the depth and implication of Indian feeling, I will now proceed to explain the circumstances in various parts of the world by which this feeling is at present aggravated. I have been studying such official papers as are available to me, and, for the sake of convenience and to save your time, I propose to read

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62822

out to you a very brief summary of the position. There are about 1½ million Indians now settled in other parts of the Empire, and in many parts they are subjected, as Indians, and quite irrespective of how well they shape up to local franchise standards, to grave political and even economic disabilities.

New Zealand.

Let me start my brief survey of these grievances by paying a tribute to the Government of New Zealand, which is represented by my distinguished friend over there. That Government, in its own territory at least, treats Indians on a footing of equality with all other inhabitants of the country. And my countrymen can live there among the New Zealanders as fellow-citizens in honour.

Australia.

In Australia also the disabilities which Indians suffer are comparatively small. We hope that before long legislation will be passed to enable them to exercise the Dominion franchise, and to remove the disqualification they at present suffer in regard to invalid and old-age pensions. In certain provinces also there are minor disabilities which I hope it will not be hard to remove. In Queensland they have no State franchise; and they have to undergo a dictation test for employment in the sugar and dairy industries, which is apt to operate prejudicially. In Western Australia also they have no State franchise; while in Southern Australia they are disqualified for leases under the Irrigation Act. Let me tell you plainly that, if I have failed in this statement to convince Mr. Bruce, I hope he will at least extend to me the hand of fellowship on this question; I am willing to co-operate with him to devise methods for a solution of these difficulties.

Canada.

In Canada, of which Mr. Mackenzie King is the distinguished Prime Minister, there is a small population—I hope he will correct me if I am wrong—of not more than 6,000.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Over 1,200.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Thank you very much. In British Columbia there is no Dominion, Provincial or Municipal franchise.

South Africa.

Now I come to the most difficult part of my task. I come to South Africa. In South Africa the problem is most serious. Here there are 161,000 Indians, of which all but a few thousands, mainly resident in Cape Colony, have no political franchise. In Natal, besides this, they fear to lose the municipal franchise. In the Transvaal there is no franchise of any kind. Nor is it only of political subjection that my countrymen complain. They also suffer under severe economic handicaps. In Natal they are restrained from acquiring town lands in townships. In the Transvaal they are prohibited, either as individuals or as companies, from acquiring land; and in the Gold Area they may not occupy land. To make their lot more miserable, the laws governing the grant and regulation of traders' licences are administered in a manner which strikes directly at their own interests. Moreover, the Union Government, of which my friend, General Smuts, is the head, is even now contemplating legislation which will provide for the compulsory segregation of Indians in urban areas by restrictions on the ownership and occupation of land.

References to previous Statements by General Smuts and Mr. Burton.

May I be permitted, at this stage, to invite the attention of the Conference to a curious discrepancy between this very serious state of affairs and the sentiments enunciated in 1917. I believe in this very hall? General Smuts then said, and I quote his very words:—

> "Once the white community in South Africa were rid of the fear that they were going to be flooded by unlimited immigration from India" (a fear removed once and for all by India's acceptance of the Reciprocity Resolution of 1917) "all other questions would be considered subsidiary and would become easily and perfectly soluble."

C 62823

May I also remind you of what Mr. Burton said on a former occasion at the Imperial Conference, and I attach considerable importance to the testimony he has given as to the character of my countrymen in South Africa? Mr. Burton said: "As far as we are concerned, it is only fair to say, and it is the truth, that we have found that the Indians in our midst in South Africa, who form in some parts a very substantial portion of the population, are good, law-abiding, quiet citizens, and it is our duty to see," as he expressed it, "that they are treated as human beings, with feelings like our own and in a proper manner."

Colonies. British Guiana.

From the self-governing Dominions I shall pass on to the Colonies and very briefly allude to our position there. In British Guiana I gladly acknowledge that our Indian population can live on terms of honour and equality of treatment. Their grievances are comparatively very much fewer.

Fiji.

In Fiji my countrymen demand more adequate representation, based on a satisfactory franchise, in the legislative bodies; they also ask for the settlement of a minimum wage based on the cost of living; they ask for the removal of the poll tax, which presses very hardly upon them. They ask further that land should be given to them for settlement. They ask, and I have received a cable from an important quarter, that if these grievances are not removed they should be repatriated.

Kenya.

In Kenya the Indians desire a common roll instead of communal franchise. They protest against the administrative veto, which prevents them acquiring land from willing European sellers in the highlands; and they fear that the immigration restrictions may be employed in such a way as to prejudice the development of the colony by Indians.

Uganda and Tanganyika.

In Uganda the Indians are pressing for representation by two nominated members of the Legislative Council; and in Tanganyika, which my countrymen helped to win for the Empire, they have certain grievances which, I understand, are at present under the consideration of the Colonial Office, such as Profits Tax, peddlers' licences and trade licences, and may I express a fervent hope that the Colonial Office will give most sympathetic consideration to those grievances before they arrive at any decision?

Thus, wherever we may turn, we see circumstances in the local status of Indians which are not to be reconciled with India's national aspirations or with the position which she will obtain as the result of the declared policy of His Majesty's Government—a position which I hope to achieve much sooner than some people realise.

"C" Mandates.

At this stage I will slightly digress from my argument and refer to the "C" Mandates in a very few words. In regard to the administration of what I will call the "C" Mandated Territories which have been committed to the charge of certain Dominions, I desire to say that my countrymen cannot acquiesce in any position which does or may in the future make their status inferior to what it was when those territories were administered by Germany. I have already read to you the views of the Government of India in the telegram. The matter is at present not of very great practical importance as the number of my countrymen is very small; but I must in fairness enter a caveat against any action which may in future turn to our disadvantage. May I also in this connection remind you of the provisions of Article 22 of the League of Nations? I will only quote the material portions. After referring to Central African and other peoples, it lays down that the Mandatory Power, besides certain other duties, shall "secure equal opportunities for the trade and commerce of other Members of the League." I take my stand on that.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 38 14 15 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62824

Resolution of 1921 Conference.

Having thus reviewed the position in the self-governing Dominions and the Colonies according to the information available to me—and I shall not object to any Member of this Conference correcting me if I am wrong in any detail—let me tell you what the position was that was taken by this Conference in 1921. Lord Peel read out to us a portion of that Resolution, but I propose to read out to you the whole of that Resolution; that Resolution runs as follows:—

> "The Imperial Conference, while reaffirming the Resolution of the Imperial War Conference of 1918 that each community of the British Commonwealth should enjoy complete control of the composition of its own population by means of restriction on immigration from any of the other communities, recognises that there is an incongruity between the position of India as an equal member of the British Empire and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in some other parts of the Empire. The Conference accordingly is of the opinion that in the interests of the solidarity of the British Commonwealth it is desirable that the rights of such Indians to citizenship should be recognised.
>
> "The representatives of South Africa regret their inability to accept this Resolution in view of the exceptional circumstances of the greater part of the Union.
>
> "The representatives of India, while expressing their appreciation of the acceptance of the Resolution recorded above, feel bound to place on record their profound concern at the position of Indians in South Africa, and their hope that by negotiation between the Governments of India and South Africa some way can be found, as soon as may be, to reach a more satisfactory position."

Immigration Question does not arise.

You will thus see that the resolution divides itself clearly into three parts. I will take up the first part which deals with the question of immigration. It gives each Dominion the fullest and the freest right to regulate the character and the composition of its own population. I am bound by that. You are bound by it, but just as I am bound by it you are also bound in honour by the second part of the resolution, which really is the most vital part with which I have got to deal, except, of course, that portion which relates to South Africa. But before I proceed further let me make one point clear. Let there be no misgiving about the question of immigration. There is a growing sentiment in my country that we should not send our nationals outside anywhere, and I may perhaps make a confession, with the permission of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State, regarding my attitude when I was a member of the Government of India. I helped to draft the Immigration Act, and I was the President of the Committee which sat to consider it. I was probably the strongest exponent of the view that there should be no immigration from India outside on any conditions whatsoever. We do not want our nation outside India to appear as a nation of coolies. We have had enough of that. There is plenty of scope for the conservation of the energy of my countrymen in my own country. We want them to rise to the full height of their stature in our own country. The Dominions therefore need have no fear on that account.

Necessity of implementing Resolution.

I have just said that, as I felt bound in honour by the first part of the resolution, I consider, and I hope that I am not demanding anything extravagant from you, that you are also in honour bound by the second part of the resolution. I will be absolutely frank. I will exclude South Africa, because South Africa stood out. I make no appeal to South Africa on the basis of the second part of the resolution, but I will ask the other Dominion Prime Ministers what my countrymen, and what my Government, are asking in India, namely, what steps have been taken, or are proposed to be taken, to honour this three-year old agreement? While every reasonable man must make allowances for practical difficulties in the implementing of that resolution, while I recognise the difficulties arising from local circumstances and prejudices, from the slow changes of public opinion, and from the exigencies of party politics, yet, I must tell you, the question, to us, is one of vital importance, and in fairness to my country I must say that she finds herself absolutely unable to acquiesce in the present position. I have, therefore, come to you in the name of my Government, and in the name of the many millions of my countrymen, to make an earnest appeal, a sincere appeal, to join hands with me in devising some methods such as your statesmanship will enable you to do, methods intended to give effect to the principle of equality embodied in that resolution, the resolution of 1921. Do not for a moment think that I fail to recognise your difficulties. I have held office, and I know the difficult position of responsible Ministers. I am not blind to those difficulties, but pray let me ask you also to realise our national difficulties and my difficulties.

C 62825

Problem must be faced in a spirit of Co-operation.

I invite you to face with me in the broadest spirit of statesmanship this vital problem that Lord Peel and I have had the honour of placing before you this morning, and I claim your co-operation in devising methods of solving this problem. After a long and careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that I must place certain definite constructive suggestions for your consideration. If you, on your side, can make any better suggestions to me, if you can offer any better alternatives to me, take it from me that you will not find anyone more ready than myself to accept them. I earnestly suggest that what the occasion demands is a united effort if we are to find a solution of this difficult problem, a problem which threatens at no distant date to acquire almost the character of a problem of foreign policy. I appeal to the Dominion Governments and to His Majesty's Government to take a united course.

A Constructive Proposal.

I will now tell you what my resolution or proposal is. I have reduced it to writing, and with your permission I will read it. My resolution is: Let the Dominion Governments, who have an Indian population, let His Majesty's Government in areas under their direct control, such as Kenya, Uganda, Fiji, and other places where there are Indians resident, appoint committees to confer with a committee, which the Government of India will send from India, in exploring the avenues how best and how soonest the principle of equality implicit in the 1921 resolution may be implemented. And, lest the course of the enquiry be prejudiced, I will couple with my proposal the request that any anti-Indian legislation which may be pending should be stayed until the report of these joint committees is available. That is my resolution. At once I propose to remove any misapprehension which may be lurking in the minds of anyone who has listened to me. I do not want a Central Committee. Let me tell you, I want a Committee appointed by each Dominion within its own borders, and I want the Committee appointed by each Dominion to confer with the Committee which will be appointed by the Government of India, and which will go to each Dominion. That is my appeal to the Dominions, except, of course, to South Africa, under the resolution of 1921. I make the same earnest appeal to His Majesty's Government, and especially to His Grace the Duke of Devonshire and the Colonial Office, in so far as the resolution relates to the Colonies.

Its Advantages.

I will, in a few words, tell you what, in my humble judgment, are the advantages to be gained from my resolution. In the first place, you gain time, and that will enable us to calm the angry passions that have arisen in India on this question. In the second place, India will be undoubtedly in a more hopeful frame of mind, and we all of us can bring all the more forces available to us to bear upon the solution of this problem. In the third place, my resolution absolutely safeguards your independence, I mean the independence of the Dominions. It places the initiative in your hands, and let me tell you, it is not merely because I am anxious that the Dominions should have that independence that I have 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 68 14 15 16

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62826

provided that safeguard, but also because of a lurking feeling of self-interest in my mind. You have received a rich inheritance of independence, freedom and self-government in your territories. I am still aspiring to it. I hope my aspirations will be realised very soon, and then, like you, I shall be jealous of any outside authority imposing its will upon me in my affairs. It is for that reason that I am anxious that the Dominions themselves should take the initiative in regard to this Committee which I have suggested and to the Committee which we propose to send out from India to confer with you in your countries. I think, and I honestly believe, if the problem is explored on those lines it will be found that it does not in the end prove to be insoluble.

South Africa. Address to General Smuts.

I now turn perhaps to the most difficult part of my work, and that is my address to General Smuts. I frankly recognise that I cannot address him on the basis of the resolution of 1921. He was no party to it. But I address him on three specific grounds: first of all, as a humanitarian; secondly, as an Imperial statesman; thirdly, as the Prime Minister of South Africa.

As a Humanitarian.

As a humanitarian I say he cannot absolve himself of the moral duty which rests on his shoulders of elevating the status of my countrymen within his Dominion. Let it be granted that their standard is low; it makes his task all the more imperative and urgent that he should help them in raising that standard. My countrymen, and I wish to say it emphatically, are as much strangers in South Africa as Englishmen or as General Smuts. The assistance of my countrymen, like the assistance of General Smuts and others, has helped in building up the prosperity of South Africa; and let him not forget my countrymen now when it lies in his power to raise their standard. He cannot permanently relegate them to a position of inferiority; for therein lies a menace not to his country or to mine, but to the Empire.

As an Imperial Statesman.

I appeal to him next as an Imperial statesman. Ever since the days of the Armistice, what is it that General Smuts has stood up for? He has stood up for peace, peace to all the world; and he has stood as the protector of minorities. He has acquired a unique position as an Imperial statesman. It has given him world-wide fame. What is it that we have observed during the last three weeks of the sitting of this Conference? General Smuts has been trying to devise means to bring peace to a distracted world. Is he going to exclude from that happy mission of his his country and mine? For let me tell you that there shall be no peace unless he includes his country and my country within the ambit of his big proposals. I do not address him on the basis of the resolution of 1921; I do not wish to interfere with his very natural desire to be consistent. I appeal to him independently of that resolution, and I say to him: "Will you not join hands with me, as I have appealed to the other Dominion Prime Ministers, in devising methods for the solution of this problem now and for all time?" I do not indulge in any threat; that is not in my line; and I hope General Smuts will not misunderstand me. However powerful he may be in South Africa, and however weak we may be in India, you cannot relegate my countrymen for all time in King George's Empire to a position of inferiority.

As Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

I will now address General Smuts as the Prime Minister of South Africa. Does he fully realise the implication of his present policy? I doubt whether he does. Will he not be aggravating the trouble not merely in South Africa, but throughout the world, by putting the white people on one side and the coloured races on the other side? I tell him frankly that if the Indian problem in South Africa is allowed to fester much longer it will pass, as I said just now, beyond the bounds of a domestic issue and will become a question of foreign policy of such gravity that upon it the unity of the Empire may founder irretrievably. I therefore earnestly trust that he will not refuse to co-operate with me in attempting to discover a solution, and I also hope that, in view of the present seriousness of a situation to which my Government and my people have referred more often than I can repeat here, he will agree to the appointment of a Diplomatic Agent to be sent by the Government of India to South Africa, who will protect our nationals there, who will act as an intermediary between them and the South African Government and who will put our Government in full possession of the facts relating to our nationals.

C 62827

Proposals contained in General Smuts' Memorandum.*

I will very briefly make a reference to the proposals which General Smuts has been good enough to circulate in a memorandum among the members of this Conference. I have read them with very great care and with all the attention and weight to which a memorandum of General Smuts is entitled. Let me tell him, and let me tell you all, that it is a document of remarkable subtlety, such subtlety as I have always been accustomed to associate with the name of General Smuts. In the first place, General Smuts takes exception to what Mr. Sastri has been saying or doing. I do not hold a brief for Mr. Sastri. He has been an intimate friend of mine and a fellow-worker in public life during the last twenty years. If the only objection General Smuts has got to find with him, and if the only crime to be attributed to him, is that he has in the Dominions frankly and freely pleaded for the equality of his countrymen, then let me tell General Smuts that he is indicting not merely Mr. Sastri, but 320 million of my countrymen. We all plead guilty to that charge.

Implications of Memorandum.

I will refer no more to that personal issue, but I will ask you first of all to consider the implications of that important memorandum. General Smuts compares the British Commonwealth to the League of Nations, but I say metaphorically that analogy may hold good up to a certain point, but after that breaks down. The League of Nations has no common Sovereign. The British Commonwealth has a common Sovereign, and we are united to him by our allegiance to him. But if the British Commonwealth is to be compared with the League of Nations, you cannot stop short of the full extent to which that analogy must be applied. What is it that the League of Nations has been created for? It has been created, as I understand it, to settle disputes between the various Governments by conference, by consultation, and will do so unless they refuse to come to that conference and that consultation. But it is just this consultation and conference which General Smuts, as I understand, is refusing. What is it that a resolution like his comes to? It asks the Dominion Prime Ministers, who took part in the Conference of 1921 and agreed to that Resolution, now to treat it as a "scrap of paper" and to join him in passing an absolutely new Resolution which, on the face of it, has for its object the reservation of the fullest freedom of each Dominion to pass its own laws regarding Franchise.

Practical Limits to Constitutional Rights of Dominions.

Nobody has doubted that Constitutional right, but there are limits to that Constitutional right, limits which are prescribed by prudence. Let me illustrate that. The British Parliament here is a Sovereign Parliament, and the Free State Parliament in Ireland is also an independent Parliament. Suppose the Irish Free State Parliament passed, or intended to pass, legislation to the effect that it would not recognise the right of any Protestant or Englishman to the Franchise in Ireland, and suppose, on the other hand, the British Parliament intended to pass legislation to disenfranchise all Irishmen settled in Scotland; well, if you looked at it strictly from the legal point of view you might say that these Parliaments would be within their right, but prudence would at once prescribe limits to the exercise of that power, that constitutional right. The first impulse of the two Parliaments would be to confer, to devise methods of avoiding a conflict. Will they not do it? Yes. I recognise the constitutional liberty and the constitutional rights of the

* See E. 80, also published in Appendix V in Cmd. 1988.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62828

Dominion Governments, but let me tell you this, that constitutional rights can only be exercised with prudence and discretion up to a certain point, and beyond that point you have to allow those constitutional rights to be subordinated to statesmanship, to prudence and to discretion. Well, I do not wish to raise a legal argument. I hope no legal argument will be raised, because this is not a legal body. There is only one thing I will say. General Smuts has said that the one binding tie between the Dominions and other parts of the Empire and India is our common allegiance to the common Sovereign, but he has coupled that statement with a further proposition, viz., that from that allegiance political rights do not flow.

Constitutional Issue not to be raised here.

Well, I will not have a duel with General Smuts on a point of constitutional law, but I will venture to tell him one thing. Allegiance to the sovereign is a very living thing. It is not a mere figure of speech, and, whenever you pass any law which affects the allegiance of the subject to the sovereign and the corresponding duty of protection of the sovereign to the subject, you tread on very dangerous ground. If a constitutional position like that is to be argued, let it be argued before a legal body, and, speaking for myself, with all humility, I have no fear of facing that constitutional issue on legal grounds, but I do not wish to raise that legal argument at this Conference.

Appeal to the Conference. India's Position in Empire.

I have practically reviewed the whole position and I will now make an appeal to the Conference itself. I will appeal to the Conference to realise to the full the implications of the Indian problem. I have placed before my colleagues from the Dominions and His Majesty's Government here certain specific proposals. I believe, and honestly believe, that the British Empire stands for justice and equality in the eyes of the world. Will you make a place within it for India? Think for a moment of the present position. Ancient and modern history provides no parallel to it. Three hundred and twenty million of my countrymen, whose religion is different from yours, whose colour is different from yours, whose race is different from yours, whose history is different from yours, are united by the common tie of allegiance to the common sovereign. They are members of a commonwealth the like of which has never existed before and let me tell you, that, while I do not wish to interfere with your absolute independence inside your own borders, I am one of those men who say that the British Empire can never be described as an exclusively white Empire. Within its borders it comprises a large number of populations of coloured races. Now, how are you going to keep Indians, or for that matter, all the other coloured races, within that Empire? By force? Never, because apart from the obvious limitations of force you cannot be untrue to your own traditions of liberty, justice and equality; you cannot afford to ignore and neglect the world opinion on this question. By preserving and safeguarding our sentiments? Certainly. That will be the strongest tie you can have and it remains for you to make use of it. Fulfil our aspirations within our own country for self-government, fulfil our aspirations for a position of equality inside the Dominions and inside the Colonies, and India will stand shoulder to shoulder with you through thick and thin. It is by preserving that sentiment that you can keep India and I pray, with all the sincerity I am capable of, that this Conference may come to some decisions which may strengthen the bonds between the Empire and India, for I do believe in that connection. Make no mistake, it is by sentiment and by the preservation of that sentiment that you will retain us and enable us to achieve self-government and to satisfy our other national ambitions outside our own country.

What India means.

Think for a moment what India means to you? More than three hundred million men are closely allied to other Asiatics, constituting almost the entire half of humanity. They are placed within the ambit of the British Empire. If we are incorporated within the commonwealth, think what we shall mean to the peace of the world, with our ideals of self-government, bridging as we do the East and the West, shouldering burdens which are yours as well as ours for the service of humanity.

C 62829

Common Loyalty to Crown.

Think again of the ties which bind us together, if you will allow them to do so. King George is your King, but our Sovereign. The devotion to his person and to his throne is a very real thing notwithstanding what some wild and extravagant men may say in my country. I claim, and let me be very plain, not as a matter of grace, but as a matter of right, as the King's subject, to have an honourable place in his household, a position of equality and honour within the Empire, wherever it may be; for to us our position in his household overseas is of far greater importance than any other questions which are agitating our minds at the present moment. I am fighting in this spirit, fighting as a firm believer in the connection of India with England, fighting as a loyal and devoted subject of the King, as one who has had the honour of serving him in his Government in India, and I am fighting for the honour of my country before you all; my plea—indeed the plea of all my countrymen, is for equality within the great King's Empire, including his Dominions. On that there can be no faltering or weakening on my part. I invite you to devise means with me to give effect to this cherished ambition of my countrymen.

Appeal to Mr. Baldwin.

May I now make an appeal to the Prime Minister? Sir, you are the head of His Majesty's Government. Let me tell you that every single word that falls from you on this occasion will be read and re-read and analysed in my country from one end to the other. On a similar occasion, when we were faced with difficulty, a great and distinguished predecessor of yours, Mr. Lloyd George, expressed himself to the Conference in moving language and I propose to adopt that portion of his speech as my appeal to you, Sir, and to His Majesty's Government. I will not read the whole of it, but only a small portion.

Speech of Mr. Lloyd George in 1921.

This is what Mr. Lloyd George said, I think it was in 1921 :—

"The situation is a very serious one. We may be confronted at any moment with the old alternative, in cases of this kind, of surrender or force. That is a terrible alternative with which to confront an Empire like ours, which is a purely democratic one. If we were built entirely on force, or if, having been built on force, our face was still towards force, well then we would face it calmly; but we are trying to get away from force. We have been built on force—it is no use pretending that we have not—but we are trying to get away from it in Ireland; we are trying to do our best to get away from it in India; we have got away from it in Canada, where we had our troubles a long time ago. We had our lesson in America and we are trying to build up a democratic Empire on the basis of the consent of all the races that are inside it: in fact, we are trying such an experiment as has never been seen in the world before. If it is a success it really transfigures, I think, the human story. That is my view. The British Empire will be a Mount of Transfiguration if it succeeds. If it fails, poor old humanity will fall back again as it has done after many ideals which it has sought to put up; after all its Calvaries, it goes back and it says: 'We can get no better,' and it throws up its arms in despair, and a people who despair lose every power and every hope.

"Well now, here is a great effort we are making. It is right that we should not make it too boldly; that we should not take strides which are beyond the span of human effort; but, at any rate, to use Victor Hugo's phrase: 'We are marching with our faces towards the light.' Here we start and we begin to say: 'No, we are going to turn our backs upon it.'

"Well now, do not let Mr. Sastri go back to the scores and the Maharao to the hundreds of millions of Indians and say:

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62830

'The British Empire have refused us justice.' It will be an appalling thing to say to the people who sent a million and a quarter volunteers to aid us in a quarrel they had not the slightest concern with; and decline even a kind sympathetic word and say: 'We will not do our best.' Why should we deny it? Not because we do not believe in it.

* * * * * *

"It is not so much as the Maharao has been putting his case forward for, nor the Secretary of State for India, but it is something that will enable them to go back and say:—

"'The British Empire has got ears for your wrongs; when we go there and tell the story of any injustice of those who live under the Emperor's flag they listen'; not to go back and say: 'There is no justice to be had in the British Empire.' They may still be under the British Empire, but they will be unwilling subjects and that is not the sort of Empire we want."

I will not read the rest of it. I now want to make an appeal to the Prime Minister and to his colleagues. Do not send His Highness the Maharajah, do not send me, back to India to say that I have attempted to seek justice at this greatest advisory council of the Empire and that I have failed. I speak with all earnestness. One single gesture from His Majesty's Government, one single expression of sympathy put into practice, one honest attempt made to try to find a solution, will allay the situation in India in a manner which you do not realise. I am afraid that I have trespassed too much on your time and I beg your pardon. I also thank you for the patient and courteous manner in which you have listened to me; but the cause of my country demanded that I should put my whole case before you frankly and to the best of my ability.

Mr. Baldwin: I was thinking, perhaps, that it might be convenient to adjourn after the Maharajah of Alwar speaks; because it seems to me that this is one of the most important matters we have to deal with, and it will be quite impossible to finish it this morning. Perhaps it might be convenient to resume the discussion on Monday, either in the morning or afternoon.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: That would suit us very well.

Mr. Baldwin: I will refer to that again at the end of this meeting and we will settle whether it shall be on Monday morning or Monday afternoon.

Publication of Speeches.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Might I also make another request before we proceed further? India will very anxiously await Lord Peel's speech, His Highness' speech and my speech. With your permission I would like to send a summary if you will authorise me to do so. I attach the greatest importance to that.

Mr. Baldwin: I think a summary would have to be very carefully prepared, because it is difficult to say at the present stage of our proceedings how much it might be desirable to publish of the further discussion and the replies that might be given from the other side. I agree entirely in principle, and perhaps you would consult Lord Peel, and then Lord Peel will consult me about it. I think that some summary would be desirable.

Lord Peel: I certainly will consult you upon any suggestion about it. I was wondering whether there would be any difficulty because of the later speeches to be made. I think that what Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru has said is true, that it would be valuable so far as India is concerned if the speeches could be sent out and if we had liberty to publish them. I think it would be a very great advantage if you would give us liberty to publish our statements.

General Smuts: I think a very useful purpose could be served by the publication of the general parts of the two speeches. We have not yet heard the Maharajah. I think it might probably allay a good deal of feeling in India to find that the case has been put here with all its strength by the representatives of India.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: That is what I am anxious about.

C 62831

General Smuts: If anything is published at this stage I think we should eliminate the particular references to the Dominions, if possible.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: May I suggest this: A statement was made by so and so on the position of British Indians in the Dominions. That is all.

General Smuts: Yes. Then publish the general presentation with which you started, without the appeals to Prime Ministers and the particular references to the Dominions.

Lord Peel: So far as I am concerned I think you will have observed that my statement was quite general. I do not think there could be any objection, so far as I can see, to anything that I have said.

General Smuts: I say this because, if the particular references by Sir Tej Sapru to the Dominions were published, then our speeches ultimately ought to be published too, and it may not be good policy to do so.

Mr. Baldwin: That is exactly what is passing through my mind.

Mr. Massey: Speaking as a friend of the sentiments expressed by both the gentlemen who have spoken on behalf of India, is there not a possibility of stirring up strong expressions of opinion which may be cabled from India to London with the object of influencing any decision that may be arrived at by the Conference? That is the only doubt in my mind. I think it is worthy of consideration. Of course, that could be got over by a very careful revision of the speeches before they are sent out.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: The speeches as sent by the reporters I will revise very carefully.

The Duke of Devonshire: You would not make any specific reference to the Colonies and Protectorates? Your summary will be quite general?

Lord Curzon: May I say a word, with some knowledge of India and also with a considerable amount of sympathy with the Indian case? I can quite understand the desire of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and the Maharajah to get their statements appearing in print, because they want to show that they have done full justice . . . .

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I am also anxious about the Secretary of State's speech.

Lord Curzon: . . . . that they have done full justice to the case. If I may say so, in passing, we have, indeed, had a very remarkable presentation of the case by the last speaker. But is it not a little difficult to do what you propose? You are going to publish half the case several days—as I understand, four or five days—before the other half, before the answers are given. Will not the result of the elimination of the references to the various Dominions, and I should have thought also to the Colonies, very much take away from the completeness of the case from the Indian point of view? Further, I would ask our Indian colleagues here to consider this. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru ended up with certain definite proposals. He proposed the constitution of certain committees. Well, I do not know what the view of the Secretary of State for India is about that, but do you not think the case will be a little prejudiced if this proposal of his is broadcasted throughout the 320,000,000 of the Indian Empire? And supposing, when we resume the discussion next week, it is found impossible to agree to that proposal, or supposing it is severely criticised here, or supposing it is only found possible to agree to it in a modified form, will not great expectations have been aroused in India and great disappointment be caused? Personally, I do not think that anything ought to go to India at this moment except a statement that a full presentation of the case was made by the Secretary of State for India, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, and the Maharajah of Alwar, and that the discussion had been adjourned until next week, and that, when that discussion has taken place, a summary of what occurred will be issued to the Press. That is what I should personally prefer, and

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62832

I would, therefore, limit my statement to-day to this proposition, that the Secretary of State for India should summarise in a few sentences what he said, that the Maharajah should do the same, and let Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru say that he spoke for an hour, or whatever the period was, that he made a full presentation of the case from every point of view, and that the discussion was then adjourned. I am nervous about these half and half publications and pronouncements. After all, India knows its interests are safe in the hands of its representatives.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I may tell you, frankly, that the constructive proposals that I have made here to-day are known in India, and I have received telegrams in support of them.

Lord Curzon: That may be so, but, of course, if they go out of here with the authority of the Conference they acquire a much greater sanctity than from the mere fact that it is known you are going to put them forward.

Mr. Mackenzie King: One point occurs to me. If the resolution which has just been proposed—and which, may I say immediately, I am largely in sympathy with, although I have to reserve my right of interpretation of certain phrases later on—if that resolution were to go out to-day to Canada, I am a little afraid that between now and Monday I might receive communications from British Columbia of a character that might embarrass me when I come to speak.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I quite understand that, and I thank you for the suggestion.

The Maharajah of Alwar: Could the discussion be postponed until the end of what I have go to say?

Mr. Baldwin: I think, Maharajah, that just the few words that have been said show the danger at this moment of going beyond a brief statement of fact.

The Maharajah of Alwar: May I make my statement first, and let this discussion take place afterwards?

Mr. Baldwin: I hoped this sentence of mine would finish the discussion. I was merely saying that, in view of the few words that have been said, I think it would be much wiser at this stage to have merely a statement that certain speeches were made, reserving a summary until the conclusion of the whole discussion. I do feel, for the very grave reasons that have been pointed out, that our work here might be prejudiced.

The Maharajah of Alwar: Except a general statement?

Mr. Baldwin: On Monday.

Lord Peel: I, of course, feel Mr. Mackenzie King's point of view strongly, and I think that does require some caution. Of course, one would have liked the speeches generally, with such excision as were necessary, to have gone out to India at once, and I should be sorry if only short summaries, or less than short summaries, a few sentences, were sent. I am inclined to think that it would be better if we confined ourselves at this stage. I dare say full publication may afterwards be given, but I think probably it would be better rather to restrict ourselves at the present time.

Mr. Baldwin: If anyone wishes to refer to the point before we part, he can.

Mr. Massey: I, unfortunately, have an appointment which I must keep. If I happen to leave in a quarter of an hour the Maharajah will understand, I hope, that I have got to go, as otherwise I should be only too pleased to remian.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: So have I, also.

STATEMENT BY THE MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR.

The Maharajah of Alwar: Prime Minister and Friends, I join in the echo of thanks to the Prime Minister for having set aside a day specially for discussing the problem of Indians overseas, a question which, I believe, will be tackled with all the goodwill that I see around me, and will help, when it reaches its final stages, to allay the great amount of feeling that is at present rather prominent in the minds of my countrymen. To-day is India's day, and, as these words come before my vision, thoughts and ideas of all kinds surge through my mind, some of emotion, some of patriotism, others of unity of the Empire; but coloured as they are by comparatively narrow ideas of nationalism, citizenship, political rights and freedom, they pale into almost insignificance before the dominating sunlight of the feelings, not ideas, of common brotherhood. But I have to speak to-day of mundane affairs, the sordid affairs of the political arena, and about the very life and existence in this material world of some unprotected communities. I must perforce descend from the high and exhilarating heights and leave my pedestal, which is yours also, by birthright, as of every individual either inside this room or outside it—nay, of all fellow-beings within the four corners of the Empire. I do so, Sir, I hope, only temporarily, to try and find my level again in the life of love where we were all intended to live, and sometimes try to get to.

C 62833

India divided into British India and the Indian States.

Now, before going further, I will briefly halt to touch, in passing, on a subject that is known to many of you already, but which, I know, is not known to some. You know that India is divided into two parts, or rather, more correctly speaking, I should say into two administrative spheres. Two thirds of that country is called British India, and is under the direct sovereignty of His Majesty the Emperor and his Government, will all its machinery of Parliament, Cabinets, Government of India, and so forth. There is the other one-third, which is governed by the Indian Princes and Chiefs, whose subjects are the subjects of their own rulers, and who have, not from to-day, but from six to eight generations, been in alliance by means of treaties, Senads, engagements, &c., originally formed with the British East India Company, but the responsibilities of which were taken over by the Crown in 1858. These systems are not the growth of yesterday, but the survival of a régime of hundreds of centuries, yet able to imbibe and assimilate such progress as is compatible with our traditions, religions, ideas and environments. I have trespassed on your time with regard to these matters, as they will bear an important part on what I have to say later. I intend to speak to-day, not merely as a representative of the Princes, but also, and even more so, as an Indian, than whom I believe no one regards his motherland more sacred, and who wishes nothing more than that she shall receive justice from the British Government, in whose hands her destiny is placed, and co-operation from her sister States who form the comity of nations in our Empire. Let me say at the outset that I have no vain threats to place before you—for the simple reason that they go against the very principle of "Co-operation" which I placed before myself on entering the precincts of this room the first day of our Conference. I will say, furthermore, that while, on the one hand, I have nothing to beg, and I will not beg, I also make no demands, as I have no demands to make. But the motherland, whose salt I eat, the land whose soil has given me birth, tells me that it is my duty to place in plain, untarnished, but candid form in words before you all the facts of our case, such as I know them.

And now, Prime Ministers, I have one request to make, and that is that every word I utter or have uttered to-day in my statement may be cabled in full to my countrymen and in no hashed or pruned form. I do not desire this because I seek cheap notoriety by making Gallery Shots, but because my countrymen have the right to know every word I say in their name. They may have some things to criticise and others which they may not entirely like. It is in justice to them, speaking, not as their representative, but as one of them, that I therefore do not wish to say anything behind their backs, 7,000 miles away, which I will not gladly say to their face.

British Empire stands for Justice and Freedom.

I will now proceed. We believe that the greatest assets to the British Empire lie in its championing the cause of freedom and

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62834

justice. It is because I feel, my country feels—rightly or wrongly—that freedom and justice are at stake as exercised, or perhaps as understood, that I want to speak these words. I hope they will be in the interests of the Empire, and it will be something done—if nothing more—if misunderstandings and misapprehensions that do exist are somehow removed. It will be all the greater glory to you all—and I speak of no tinsel glory, but the glory of the heart—if the British Government and the great Dominions will show by words, and prove by action, that they mean to assist one of their sisters who is old in age, but also at present the weakest member on the chess-board of the political game.

Despondency in India.

I hear wails from India itself—and now I speak principally of that two-thirds—conveying the feelings of despondency. The words of my fellow brethren, of my country, seem to ring in my ears: Are we going to progress steadily, progressively, yet not too slowly towards our goal, which the other sister nations have been more fortunate in already achieving—the goal of having the power to govern our own country as a loyal and integral part of the Empire? Are we going to be helped affectionately and with kindly feeling to the goal which has been pronounced publicly by the British Government, and more than which we do not aspire to, of being a loyal self-governing Dominion within the Empire? Is everything going to be done to accelerate our progress, or is our progress under various pretexts to be retarded and delayed? Have we a long number of years before us of a great furnace to pass through, from which Ireland has only just emerged?

Sometimes I am afraid this despondency has been seen to give rise to despair, which has resulted in giving exhibitions in many places of those hideous atrocities at which the British Government, as the Custodians of our country, do not feel happy, and of which we, as its sons, are certainly not proud. If India had some more definite proposition before it than having to wait every ten years for its destiny to be enhanced, if it had reasonable assurance of rapid but progressive advancement, I believe that self-government, which is the goal of us all, for two-thirds India could be achieved, early and smoothly. I add this despite anything that may be said to the contrary, that the achievement is possible within a very much shorter period than some people would like to have us believe. I know, and I do not need to be told, that it depends to a great extent on India's capacity herself. I agree, but surely you do not desire to throw India entirely on her own resources? Does she not look to Britain to give her periodical and sustained assistance, so that my country may be, as it has been in the past, really and genuinely a grateful and loyal partner of your wonderful heritage?

Solution of Constitutional Problem in India.

I am speaking of self-government for two-thirds India, and, in dealing with this subject, I hope I may seek your indulgence for another few moments. The solution, I firmly believe, will not lie in grafting Western principles of political government on to the East with a stroke of the pen. Already many old bottles have cracked into which this new wine has been poured. I would much rather you get India round a table in confidence, and work out, with her sons, plans and methods that would be best suited to her environment, by which she can obtain her goal in the most rapid, but, at the same time, most peaceful and loyal manner. I say it is possible, and probable of early success, and you will be doing something for 300 millions of human beings that will cement them to you with gratitude and brotherly feelings.

The world was not built for academic or pious assurances spread over a number of years, the fulfilment of which may well pass over a lifetime. But what seems to me is this—and that is why I have mentioned this subject and in connection therewith I will say no more—that the whole problem, if viewed with breadth of vision and imagination, is really, Oh! so simple. It is not such a hedgehog as may be conceived by those who do not come in close contact with it; and it is really still capable of a solution which will leave a stronger England and a loving India.

C 62835

In the end, in this connection, I will only say this much. Many unpleasant incidents have taken place in India of late years. I have no desire to lift before you the veil to disclose tales of woe or wails of lamentation.

Many mistakes have undoubtedly been made on both sides. So far as India's side of the picture is concerned, it will be a regrettable spot on India's fair name, and I say this in all solemnity, that any grievances which India may have had, and did have, were allowed to be involved in interfering with the welcome given to the Royal Heir to the British throne, namely, the Prince of Wales, when he was touring in British India.

Will the British Royalty, you British Statesmen and people, not overlook this blunder and let it be past history? Can we now bury what has happened and rise in mutual goodwill and understanding for the future? Let not then the hand of the clock be held back. Advance in full confidence that what you do for India will be repaid to you a thousandfold from the people who know how to respond to generous sentiments.

Position of Indians overseas.

And now I start on a voyage outside my country under the ægis of the British Flag. Under the protection it gave to its loyal citizens, Indians in search of wealth, adventurous people in search of enterprise, left their homes and their shores to find refuge in parts where freedom, justice and peace were symbolised in the trident of the Red, White and Blue.

Indians found their way to South Africa, to Canada, to New Zealand, Australia, and, I am not personally aware, but perhaps some of them to Newfoundland. They went as citizens under the Union Jack, established their homes, invested their money, and settled down as peaceful citizens of the Empire. I have been told, and perhaps rightly so, by General Smuts, that the idea of British citizenship has changed from what it was a few years ago. I have forthwith applied myself to the facts, and asked the question, What does that mean? Surely the answer cannot be the treating of any particular race as outcasts. I am well aware of the fact that several of the questions with regard to Indians Overseas lie almost outside the direct concern of the Imperial Government. They are really within the purview of the self-governing Dominions, who are connected with the main centre by silken ties, and I will leave it at that. I want to address a few remarks directly to my Dominion colleagues.

And I will say this: One of your links in the chain is weak. If one link in it is weak and further weakened, perhaps you can do without it. That is your business. We, on our part, do not wish it. We want to have you with us. Let your inclinations decide. I know, my friends, how difficult it is for you to make any personal promises—for your positions depend, your authority depends on people to whom you are answerable. I assure you I appreciate the difficulty of your position. I, an Indian, have only tried to hold out my hand. I do not know if you and your people have the power and the desire to grasp it. Nothing hurts in the world more than the loss of "Izzat," humiliation. It is that one word which is the keynote of half the troubles of this world. It is certainly the keynote of the troubles of my country. Whether it is imaginary or real, Providence will judge, at least with open hearts shall we be able to approach Him, our Lord, on the Day of Judgment, and say, We are your children. It was all a game, it was all the chequer board of nights and days; we played our part, if it were ours, for sacrifice, then we sacrificed that others might live.

Friends, I want to tell you that I have received messages from my country asking me that I should not work on the Conference, encouraging me to resign because India suffered humiliation—in Natal and Kenya. But I paid no attention to these counsels of despair. It may perhaps be thought that I sought honour and glory, and could not forego such a lure as the Imperial Conference, but the reason that kept me here, rightly or wrongly, was because I felt that nothing in this world was achieved by ill-feeling, that a great deal if gained by toleration and goodwill. Come what may, I am determined to exercise them to the last in this assemblage.

57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
66
67
13
38
14
15
16
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62836

I have received wails from the Fiji Islands, saying that the poll-tax was causing Indians grave injustice, and that they desired to be repatriated if no other gratification could be given to them. I have received tales of woe from Natal complaining that a law was going to be introduced segregating them as outcasts. Similar stories come from Basutoland and other places which I need not go on reciting. How all this sounds to your ears I do not know. How it sounds to mine is it necessary to speak? How it is going to affect India if these questions are not solved, is a prophecy that I shudder to make.

And, remember, my friends, that this question does not affect British India only, but our Indian States' subjects also are involved in this overseas problem. It is not alone a question that agitates the mind of British India, but it is one that is viewed with equal humiliation in the Indian States. Why! I was surprised myself to receive letters from my own subjects, one or two sentences of which I will read out to you. I hope you will not mind the portions in which, out of affection and loyalty, personal references are made to me. This is certainly not the reason why I quote these sentences: "The Imperial Conference is drawing near. Your Highness is a member of that important assembly. India, bereft of all sympathy with the outside world, has been passing her transitional days in trying circumstances, aggravated recently to a great extent by the Kenya decision."

Again: "Whether the movement means for India a political set-back or a real awakening and a sure progressing State, towards building up a great national edifice, remains to be seen, but at present she looks to Your Highness with wistful eyes."

Kenya Settlement.

I say no more, and I regret having mentioned this portion of the letter. I have read the main portion of it to illustrate that the question is viewed with no less concern in one-third India than it is in two-thirds. I can give you innumerable instances, but I will not waste your time. The question of Indians in the Dominions is one that concerns the Dominion Premiers and their Parliaments primarily; but the question of Kenya as a Colony stands on an entirely different footing. I believe I am right when I say that many Indian settlers went to Kenya long before it was discovered as a suitable place for colonisation by the white people. They took lands, invested money, and to a great extent helped in developing the prospects of that country economically. So long as the colony was administered by the Imperial Government, difficulties, I understand, did not arise until the question of franchise to the residents came under consideration. It has now been decreed in the last decision that the recent white settlers, who are in a minority, are to be given the majority of votes in relation to an Indian population, which is in majority—thus leaving the latter at the mercy of the former, to be gradually ousted, if necessary, and as seems possible, by means of legislation.

I do not mean to enter into the pros and cons of this case—what Lord Elgin said or Lord Milner recommended are side issues—because, from my own twenty years' experience of administration, I know how easy it is to produce arguments with all the power in one's hands and records and papers at one's disposal in favour of one case against another. Arguments would be an unwise course for me to adopt, for understandings are not always reached by arguments. I know that there are some noblemen and gentlemen of influence from this country who desire to settle there, if they have not already done so. But the principal argument that has been advanced is that the Colonial Office holds Kenya in trust on behalf of the African races, who are the original inhabitants of that country.

Now, if I may say so, it strikes me as being peculiarly grotesque that a country, held in trust on behalf of a people who are backward and have yet to grow under the ægis of the British flag, should actually have a franchise given to anyone else to develop the country during the interregnum. Does this mean that, when the original tribes and people awaken from their slumber, they will be given primary consideration in relation to those who have invested money for several years past, and who govern the country, not under trust, but under a Franchise? I do not wish to enter into any further arguments. The whole question of Indians overseas seems to be one which does not mean the flooding of the different portions of the Empire with Indian immigrants claiming rights and privileges merely by their number in order to oust others who may have the rightful heritage. Mr. Mackenzie King, in one of his utterances in this Conference, said, with regard to Canada, that it was possible to restrict immigration from Japan by mutual agreement, not necessitating the introduction of law. That was mutual right understanding which did not cause any humiliation on either side, and allowed the Dominions to grow in accordance with their own environments, yet at the same time made no strictures or asked no strictures to be passed on peoples who had settled there as peaceful citizens. I believe that the Indian Government—and I am open to correction if I am wrong—would be equally prepared to enter into mutual understanding with the various Dominions and Colonies to prevent immigrants from flooding these countries. Under such circumstances is it not possible to modify the laws and to enforce them in a manner that they do not pointedly chafe against any particular community, thus causing them humiliation? What I want to know is whether my countrymen, as citizens of the British Empire, have any rights to settle in these countries, not for exploitation, not by way of peaceful penetration, but as peaceful traders, to live their unobtrusive existence.

C 62837

Tribute to General Smuts.

General Smuts, in talking about the questions of Indians who come to his country, suggested, I think, in a casual way that they might be sent for settlement to British Guiana. I believe the British flag has been planted at the North Pole, so I wonder if that would not be a more suitable solution of the problem if it was desired to exterminate them. But I really came to know General Smuts after my brief knowledge of him, that, although he has been called—I am sorry to say—the arch-enemy of India, yet we have in him, if I may be permitted to say so to his face, a sagacious statesman who sees far ahead of ordinary mortals what is in the interests of our greater Empire. From my personal conversations with him I would really reverse the epithet, and say that I regard him since I have come here—and I speak in no platitudes—in his heart of hearts, personally a staunch friend and supporter of India.

I may assure you, friends, that I quite appreciate the difficulties that exist in the solution of this great problem. I realise that, though individually most of you may be prepared to look at the matter from a broad Imperial view, you have to return to your Parliaments which may hold different opinions. All I have to say, therefore, is that, while we are conferring in this Imperial assemblage, can we not put our heads together to solve the difficulty which surely human beings were meant to solve, not for the sake of individuals, but for the sake of the Empire. I have said this much, because I feel that the problem is much greater than what appears on the surface relating merely to Indians overseas. If you can enable India to feel that her humiliation is removed, that she can take pride in the Empire to which she has the privilege to belong, you will have achieved something which will be of lasting credit to yourselves and of benefit to the chain of which we all form a loyal link. Particularly since I have come here have I realised how whole-heartedly and with a single purpose Lord Reading and his Government have given their utmost help to our cause. Things do not always appear in public or in the Press which enable India to see what part the Government of India is playing in our cause. All glory, however, is due to them for their assistance. We shall not easily forget it, and hope that some day we may repay them for their effort and goodwill. Regarding Lord Peel, it is more difficult to give him thanks since he sits beside me. I thank him, however, in the name of India—if I may do so—and thank him with a grateful heart for his powerful championship of our cause he has indulged in to-day. My heart has been softened by the words he has spoken of our nationality and our religion. I hope every word of this statement will go to India, so that my country may not despair that it has no

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 68 14 15 69 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62838

one to support it. When the discussions take place, similarly, I hope the Prime Ministers of the Dominions will allow their goodwill and proposals to go to my country, for that I am sure will have a very happy result. I have very little more to say.

Message from Princes of India.

Now, Prime Minister and Friends, it is now my pleasurable task to read out a message that I received from my Order in India. His Highness the Chancellor of our Chamber, the Maharajah of Bikaner, has conveyed it to me by means of a cablegram. This is the message :—

> "Had the Chamber been sitting at this time, Indian Princes would have desired to send a message to this Conference in view of the important question of Indians overseas, including Indian States' subjects who are affected specially in Kenya. But as the Chamber is not sitting the Princes of India by cablegram convey a cordial message of friendship and goodwill to His Majesty's Government, the British Nation, to the Dominions and Colonies and their distinguished representatives at the Imperial Conference, with whom the Princes are united by common ties of loyalty to His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor."

The cable continues as follows :—

> "We give expression of our hope that the united efforts of all concerned at the Conference will yield some satisfactory result, drawing closely together into bonds of good fellowship the great comity of nations forming the British Empire to which the Princes and States are firmly attached, and securing the Indians, including the subjects of Indian States, an honoured position in all parts of the Empire in keeping with India's rightful place in the British Commonwealth and in conformity with the assiduous and constant efforts of His Excellency the Viceroy and the Government of India."

Friends, I convey this message to you coupled with my own hope that its aims and objects may be finally achieved before we leave England at the termination of the Imperial Conference.

The subject is undoubtedly large and certainly complicated, but surely with goodwill we will overcome difficulties, and, if, as we believe, we are firmly determined to see that every portion of the British Empire is strengthened, then I by no means despair; but on the other hand hope for possibilities of arriving at a settlement which will make you all the more respected and loved in the eyes of those you help and will leave those grateful to you to whom you extend your hand of assistance. I hope that it will be possible for you to consider also whether it would not be advisable hereafter to allow India to be called a Dominion, not a self-governing Dominion until she becomes so, but a Dominion, specially when making reference to her in relation to her sister Dominions.

Gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wished to on the subject of my countrymen overseas on India's day. It has been a great pleasure to me to meet round this table great Statesmen who are my colleagues from the Dominions and to have the pleasure of making their personal acquaintance. May I thank them for their kindness and courtesy to myself which I take as a token of their goodwill for my country? If, at any time, any of my colleagues think of visiting India, I hope they will give us an opportunity of showing and proving that we do not always speak words but act on them, and that we can give you as cordial a welcome to our country as it is possible to do within our capacities.

General Smuts welcomed to India.

I said one day to my friend, General Smuts—and I speak sincerely and in no conventional language because he who was our enemy a few years ago is to-day one of our best friends and a great statesman of to-day—I said to him I hoped he would come some day to India and he replied that he would be viewed with suspicion. I hope India, with all her political quarrels and difficulties, has not lost her human touch and response to appreciate great statesmen and to prove to them that beyond our domestic disputes, beyond our domestic quarrels, lie the sentiments of humanity.

C 62839

I believe, and I will with this conclude, that India came into the comity of nations within the British Empire with a definite purpose. It is a link that was soldered by the hand of Divine Destiny. It was a means of enabling the West to understand the East and vice-versa, but it also came in in order that the two civilisations with their spiritualities, with their material advancement and progress, might by their association together evolve a civilisation, a great humanity of God's children playing their individual parts in the cause of God. When that day comes before us and, figuratively speaking, we stand before the Judgment Seat of Him who has sent us here, we shall each have our accounts to render. India may differ from you in race; she differs in religion and in creed, but she does not differ in point of humanity. Personally I say this: If you give us your assistance in time of need—for a friend in need is the friend in deed—we shall give you not only our gratitude but our cordiality and practical assistance. But if it is destined to be otherwise, then I say this, that we shall be in a still higher position, for India will be able to say that she sacrificed herself in order that others might live; she prided herself in her political weakness in order that others may be strong; we gave our little best for the Higher purpose, for the Divine purpose which is our common goal—our common brotherhood and the salvation of humanity.

Mr. Baldwin read the communiqué it was proposed to issue to the press and the proceedings then terminated.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 24, 1923.

o

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 13 68 14 15 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62840

SECRET.

E. 13th Meeting (1923).

54

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE THIRTEENTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1923, AT 11 A.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Right Hon. NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Professor John MACNEILL, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The Right Hon. Sir JOHN ANDERSON, G.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Home Office.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. T. JONES, Cabinet Office.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir WOLSELEY HAIG, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., C.M.G., C.B.E., Political Secretary to His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

Mr. R. G. VANSITTART, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Lieut.-Colonel C. W. G. WALKER, D.S.O., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62841

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B., (Secretary.)
Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir ROBERT R. GARRAN, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.
Mr. P. MCGILLIGAN.

India.
Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we proceed to the continuation of the business which was adjourned on Thursday last, I think it is of the utmost importance that the Foreign Secretary should tell the whole of the Conference exactly what the situation is to-day in regard to the French reply, and submit it for the consideration of the Conference.

Correspondence with United States and Allied Governments on Reparations Question.

Lord Curzon: The situation, Prime Minister, is one of great complexity and of no little anxiety. The Conference will remember that after President Coolidge's intervention we addressed a telegram to the United States of America welcoming their co-operation and enquiring from them as to what form they would be willing that it should take. We then got their reply, in which they indicated their willingness to join in one or more alternatives. We then communicated this reply to the Allied Governments, indicating a strong preference for what I will call Alternative No. 1, namely, the meeting of an international conference to examine into the question of German payments. The replies of the different Governments have come in since, and I think they have all been circulated. The Belgian reply, which I think was the first to arrive, was an acceptance of the second alternative, that is to say, an enquiry under the auspices of and in connection with the Reparation Commission, coupled with a suggestion—I can hardly call it a condition, because it was absurd—that this enquiry, if started, should address itself to the consideration of the Belgian scheme of dealing with money payments by Germany, which is now before the Reparation Commission. Of course, they will take that into consideration in common with any other schemes which may be put before them. The Belgians also took special credit to themselves for having declared at Paris that they would favour this solution whatever the French Government did; indeed, the Ambassador, as you have seen from the report of an interview, told me that M. Poincaré would have refused to come in at all if it had not been for the Belgian willingness to act independently. Whether that is the case or not, of course, I cannot say. However, the Belgians definitely accept Alternative No. 2. The Italians first replied that, while agreeing entirely in principle with our proposals, they preferred Alternative No. 1, but they were doubtful about the French acceptance. They then got into touch with the French, and finally came down yesterday or the day before in favour of the second alternative, to which they prefixed the rather wise preamble that it is desirable that the Allies should be in agreement before they enter any Conference at all. So much for Belgium and Italy.

French Reply.

France has given a great number of replies. First there was the reply which, I think, has been circulated to everyone here; it is in print. It came, of course, in typewritten form, but it was subsequently put into print. Secondly, there is, as you may have seen in all the papers this morning, a rather long memorandum defining at greater length France's attitude and expanding what they say in the reply which you have seen. Thirdly, there is the speech, lasting, I believe, for two hours, which M. Poincaré delivered yesterday in Paris, a summary of which is contained in the papers this morning. It is a little difficult to extract from the whole of these presentations of the case every facet of the French position, but it comes to this: M. Poincaré accepts, with evident reluctance, and, as he explains in his speech, rather as a gesture of goodwill towards the Prime Minister with whom he re-established friendly relations at Paris, Alternative No. 2, but he hedges it around with all sorts of apparent reservations, each of which is fitted, with some skill, into the framework of the Treaty; that is to say, he says: "If you want an enquiry by experts, that is already provided for; you have merely to look at the Treaty and you will see that the Reparation Commission is empowered thereby to employ the services of whomever they like to assist them in their labours; and if they now desire to convene an assembly of international financial experts and to include among them an American, so much the better; there is no harm; but it must be understood that the initiative and the responsibility is that of the Reparation Commission." Now I ask the Conference to bear in mind this insistence by M. Poincaré on the initiative and responsibility of the Reparation Commission, because a great deal will hang thereon. In the course of one of these pronouncements—I forget whether it is the memorandum published in the papers this morning or in the speech, possibly in both—he goes out of his way (in my view quite unnecessarily) once again to insist that the figures determined by the Reparation Commission as to the sum total of the claims upon Germany in the Spring of 1921, of £6,600,000,000 as the total reparation debt of Germany shall not be touched; and once again he calls attention to the fact that under the terms of the Treaty it can only be touched by the unanimous consent of the Allies. I submit that that has nothing whatever to do with the present case. The Committee to be set up is to determine the capacity of Germany to pay. If in the course of their investigations they come to the conclusion, as every sensible man has done long ago, that the total fixed in May 1921 is altogether impossible, nothing in the world can prevent them from saying it. I hope they will say it, and when they say it it will be for the Powers to consider what line they adopt upon that point. Therefore, I should be disinclined to be deviated in the course of conduct we ought to pursue by any allusion or investigation of that particular problem. M. Poincaré also, I think, rather goes out of his way to bring in again the question of the cessation of passive resistance, in which it is quite clear that he does not believe, and the question of the continued occupation of the Ruhr, which apparently he desires to make, if not permanent, at any rate of long duration; he also adds passages about the security of France, which we have always been entirely willing to consider. Therefore his reply, although it is an acceptance, is a grudging acceptance, and is fenced round by all sorts of reservations and conditions which may be a source of trouble as time goes on.

C 62842

What is next step.

The question then arises, What are we to do? Now, it would be possible, I suppose, to say that alternative No. 2, accepted in the conditions I have described, does not hold out great hopes of satisfactory results, and that we adhere to our preference for alternative No. 1. It might be possible on those grounds to make an effort again to secure No. 1. In my view, though that is possible, it is not practicable, and for the reason that it would be attended with certain failure. In the first place, it is clear from the American reply that they would not be prepared to insist on alternative No. 1 if they realised, as they must already, that the Allies are not united upon that point. Secondly, it is clear that in no circumstances whatever will France in the present stage of the proceedings agree to No. 1, and, therefore, if we revive the suggestion—still more if we insist upon it—it will mean a definite abandonment of all chance of co-operation between the Allies and ourselves at this moment. Thirdly, if we revive or insist upon it, it is pretty clear to my mind

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62843

that Belgium and Italy will both back out, and therefore we should have initiated these discussions only to break them down by an act of our own in the preliminary stage. There is another reason which I think incapacitates us from taking that line. The suggestion for this expert enquiry in connection with and under the Reparation Commission is one that we made months ago; we made it, I think, in June last, and it was turned down at the time. Therefore, there would be considerable inconsistency in our throwing over our own suggestion. Lastly, the Conference will remember that in putting the case last week to the Powers, we, following the line taken by America herself, did give them the choice of alternatives. Therefore, if they have accepted alternative No. 2, and if we now say: "No, that is not what we want," they will be entitled to say: "This is an act of mala fides on your part; you gave us the choice, we choose the alternative you do not like, and then you disagree with us and throw over the whole thing." I do not think myself it is possible to take that line.

Position of Reparation Commission.

Now, in this rather difficult situation, where lies the prospect of doing something definite and helpful, because, of course, that is what we are all for? I think it lies in this. M. Poincaré himself, with his eye on the Treaty, with the Treaty, so to speak, in his clutch, has gone out of his way to emphasise what I described just now as the "initiative and authority of the Reparation Commission." Almost in the same breath he has done what I think he had no right to do—practically dictated to the Commission the way in which he thinks they ought to proceed. I would take him at his word upon the first point, and I think that the future lies in the action of the Reparation Commission itself. The body which is to enquire is to be a body appointed by it. Very well, let it then nominate the members. If this body is to act under its authors, let it draw up the terms of reference. That places great initiative in its hands.

Terms of Reference to proposed Expert Committee.

Now, let me deal with both points. I think I could easily give you the kind of terms of reference to the committee which the Reparation Commission might draw up, but I need not trouble you with it now because I have no idea how they will act. But our representative on the Reparation Commission, Sir John Bradbury, who is a very able and independent man, will no doubt take steps to ensure, so far as is possible, that the reference is a prudent and a wide one.

Composition of Committee.

Secondly, as regards the composition of this enquiry, one of the points which in one of these pronouncements M. Poincaré endeavours to lay down is that no German and no neutral is to be admitted to this expert body. Now, there it seems to me that M. Poincaré has gone outside the line of his previous argument, because, if it is for the Commission to set up this body, they are at liberty to put upon it whom they please. It is nothing whatever to do with us or with him, and if they choose to addresss an invitation to a German to join this body of experts, or to a neutral to join them, they are perfectly at liberty to do so. No one can interfere with their initiative. But, of course, it may be that the French representatives would utilise the majority that they have hitherto enjoyed, that they now enjoy, on the Reparation Commission, to defeat any such thing.

General Smuts: They still enjoy it.

Lord Curzon: They still enjoy it. Both France and Belgium will vote together. On the other side, there is Italy and England, and a Frenchman in the chair who has a casting vote, because the American, who is referred to more than once in these transactions, has no vote at all; he is merely an observer; he does not count. Of course, if that artificial majority enjoyed by the French is utilised for this purpose, it would raise separate and serious considerations, but I do not think it would prevent our man, Sir John Bradbury, from putting forward, as he is disposed to do, the proposal that the expert enquiry should include a neutral and a German. Supposing he is defeated over that, even so—and this is admitted by M. Poincaré himself—there is nothing to prevent—indeed there is everything to necessitate—the Germans being sent for in order to explain the situation. You cannot arrive at the solution of this question without taking into consideration the German point of view, and, therefore, though I think our man ought to press urgently for the admission of these two independent representatives, yet the matter can come up again when the point is reached. I do not think myself that it is absolutely vital, whereas, if we were defeated over that point by this artificial majority, it really would, I think, open the eyes of the world.

C 62844

Next as to the position of the expert body point by point. The Conference will perhaps remember that last year there was an international body of experts, bankers, that enquired into the financial position and paying capacity of Germany, and they issued a very valuable report, which was swept out of sight, as most good reports are. But still, that body was very useful, and its members were very important persons. The British representative was Sir Robert Kindersley, a great authority in the financial world of London; the American representative was Mr. Pierpont Morgan, by far the most competent man in the whole of the United States for this purpose. I need not give you the names of the other representatives. Well now, it seems to me that the right way to proceed is not for the Governments to interfere, because this is to be an enquiry by the Reparation Commission, but, in the same way as these gentlemen to whom I have referred were appointed last year by the various international delegates on the Reparation Commission, to ask the latter once again to function; that is to say, the French representative, M. Barthou, would be asked—of course, he would consult the French Government—to nominate a Frenchman—I believe it is pretty certain whom they would nominate—ditto the Belgian representative, ditto the Italian. Well then, our representative would in all probability nominate Sir Robert Kindersley, who served before, and I do not think there is any doubt whatever that the American representative, although he is not an actual member of the Reparation Commission but only a sort of associated member, would nominate Mr. Pierpont Morgan. Of course, there is an alternative. That alternative is that we should telegraph to the American Government and say: "These are the lines on which we propose to proceed." We should send them a general summary of the replies and invite their co-operation, and we might—indeed, I have drawn up a telegram in this sense—ask them to nominate their expert themselves; but, inasmuch as they would certainly nominate Mr. Pierpont Morgan, and inasmuch as he will be nominated by the other method that I have suggested—and that, the latter, is the method favoured by M. Poincaré—it does not seem to me necessary to draw a fresh herring across the trail or to introduce further delays by suggesting that the Government should intervene, because M. Poincaré will say at once: "America is going to appoint their man, you are going to appoint yours; that is contrary to the Treaty."

Another point. Supposing these representatives are all appointed; whether they do or do not include a German and a neutral, I think the American ought to be in the chair. The American is the only man of them all who is absolutely independent; all the rest of us are affected by considerations of European politics, and I think it would add greatly to the authority and impartiality of the body if the American were invited to take the chair.

Possible outcome of suggested Enquiry.

You may say: "Supposing you get this body—we ought to get them pretty quickly—what will happen?" That question it is very hard to answer, because I cannot forecast what these gentlemen will say or do. But, assuming their individual experience and authority, I have not a doubt whatever that, with the eyes of Europe upon them, we shall get pretty well what we want. They are not the kind of men who will allow this matter to go by default, or who will desist from covering any part of the field which they are called upon to traverse. You may say: "Granted; but will they agree?" I think

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 INDEX 14 15 16

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62845

probably not; but does that matter? Let us suppose that the result is that the French and the Belgians continue, as in all probability they will, to act together as they have done all along. Let us suppose, therefore, that we have a Franco-Belgian report which may differ from the report of the other experts. Assuming that our case is as strong as I believe it to be, I do not think it ought to be difficult to get an Anglo-American report with very likely the Italians joining in, leaving aside for the moment the German and the Belgian. Supposing you get a Franco-Belgian report, and that you get an Anglo-Italo-American report, and they were published side by side; assuming that our report contained sound and valuable conditions, it would make a resounding impression throughout the world.

Views of British Representative on Reparation Commission.

Therefore, although a good deal of what I have said is speculative and rests upon conditions which I cannot predicate, conditions about which I can only conjecture, I think the situation is more hopeful than might appear upon the surface. I asked Sir John Bradbury, who knows more about it than anybody else, what he thought; and although, of course, he would like number one better than number two—as we all should—he says: "Go ahead with number two and you will get more out of it than you think"; and he summed up his reply to me in these words:—

> "As regards my 'expectation' as to the outcome of the proceedings of such a body, we should almost certainly get a figure or a series of figures of the burden, either expressed as a capital sum, present value, or in terms of annuity, which it is practicable to impose on Germany. We ought to be pretty sure of getting an almost immediate recommendation for a temporary moratorium pending further report, and at any rate a majority recommendation in favour of substituting something more practicable for the 'gages productifs.' We might also hope to get useful constructive criticism of the Belgian suggestions, and possibly, though not so certainly, suggestions of real value on the knotty question of the supervision of German finance.
>
> "The Committee will, of course, be advisory only; the ultimate decisions will rest theoretically, first, with the Reparation Commission, and, secondly, (as regards any question of reducing the total liabilities under the Peace Treaty), with the Allied Governments.
>
> "The main danger of the procedure is the opportunity which it gives of wasting time to any party desiring to be obstructive. From this point of view, it seems to me most important, as indicated above, to give the Committee sufficient authority to make it difficult for the Reparation Commission to do anything with its reports except refer them to the Governments."

That opinion, I think, ought to carry great weight with us.

Proposed joint Allied Communication to United States Government.

In conclusion, the action which I would suggest—the only action which I think it is possible to take to-day—is the suggested telegram which we, who have taken the initiative in the matter, ought to propose to send to the American Government in the name of the Allies. I have written this telegram to our representatives at Paris, Rome and Brussels:—

> "The French, Italian and Belgian Governments having formally intimated their assent to the setting up by the Reparation Commission of an advisory committee on which America will be represented, His Majesty's Government propose that this decision be now officially notified to the United States Government by a joint communication to be made to the State Department by the representatives of the four Allied Powers at Washington.
>
> "I request your Excellency accordingly to submit for the approval of the Government to which you are accredited the following draft telegram which His Majesty's Government suggest should be addressed mutatis mutandis to the four Allied representatives at Washington by their respective Governments.

C 62846

"Please concert with your French (Italian) (Belgian) colleague to make a joint communication to the United States Government in the following terms:—

> "'The Allied Governments of France, Great Britain, Italy and Belgium have noted with the utmost satisfaction that the United States Government are favourable to the principle of American participation in an economic enquiry through an advisory body to be appointed by the Reparation Commission for the purpose of considering Germany's capacity to pay, and of making recommendations as to an appropriate financial plan for securing such payment.
>
> "'The four Allied Governments are unanimous in thinking that such an economic enquiry is most desirable and that its value would be greatly increased by the participation of an American expert whose co-operation would be most highly appreciated. They accordingly propose to invite the Reparation Commission forthwith to set up an advisory committee under the powers conferred upon the commission by clause 7 of Annex II to Part VIII of the Treaty of Versailles, and they will be grateful if the United States Government will authorise the unofficial American delegate to the Reparation Commission to designate the proposed American member of the committee.'"

This is on the lines of my suggestion that the members of the new Committee had better be appointed by the Reparation Commission and nominated by the various delegates on that Commission.

That, I think, is all, if the Conference approve the general lines of what I have stated, that we need do, or that we can do, to-day.

Mr. Mackenzie King: The thought which comes to my mind is, what alternative is there to the course Lord Curzon has suggested?

Mr. Bruce: I think it very regrettable that the choice was given between a general meeting of all the nations concerned in the Versailles Treaty, to consider the whole position, review the whole circumstances, and see whether it is possible to carry out that Treaty, and alternative 2; but, the alternative having been given, I entirely agree with the Foreign Secretary that we should find ourselves in a very difficult situation if we tried to back out now. There appears to be no other course to take, except the communication which has been suggested.

Mr. Massey: I agree with what has been said by the other speakers, and I think that what has been suggested by Lord Curzon is the only course to adopt. As I understand it, the position is exceedingly difficult, but not altogether without hope. It appears to me that we have got to be exceedingly careful not to impose any condition, or attempt to impose any condition, which might to a certain extent nullify the proceedings by giving M. Poincaré—an extraordinary difficult man—any excuse for disagreeing with the proposals which are being made. I hope the Conference will be agreed to; it looks as if there is a chance, and it seems to me to be the only hope of a settlement.

As far as the American chairman is concerned, if that could be arranged I think it would be a very fine thing to do, because we have more hope of impartiality from an American chairman than from any chairman appointed by any of the European nations, even including Britain. I know, of course, that you could get an impartial chairman from Britain, but he would never be accepted as such; if anything went wrong, they would say "perfidious Albion" again, and that sort of thing. I trust the proposals will be proceeded with. It is the only glimmer of hope, and I think we should exhaust it before we go any further.

Importance of United States Participation in Enquiry.

General Smuts: I would do anything to get America in. It seems to me that that is our principal point—to get America in.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The enquiry will not lead to much, but if we could get America on the scene again, that would be a great point gained.

Necessity of settling in advance Terms of Reference to proposed Committee.

In the light of what M. Poincaré has said, I am troubled over the letter that we have received from France. The French Government have not accepted any of the proposals made; they have not accepted the big Conference, nor have they really accepted the other proposal. What they say is this: "It is therefore within the powers of the Reparation Commission to designate experts whose assistance may appear necessary in order to obtain the information and particulars which it may require."

All they say is that the Reparation Commission can of course appoint any experts it wants in order to supply it with the information and particulars which it requires. It is a question to which we are directing our attention—Germany's capacity to pay. It is quite clear that they want the Reparation Commission to have the initiative and responsibility; but we know perfectly well that M. Barthou is going to carry out the spirit of what M. Poincaré has said. I am afraid therefore that we may yet be sold over this thing, and that when this expert commission is appointed the Reparation Commission will give them an instruction, a reference, in the sense in which M. Poincaré has spoken; that is, they will tell them: "Within that sum which has been fixed by the Reparation Commission of £6,600,000,000, you advise us as to terms of payment and instalments, amounts of instalments and so on, but that you must not touch." That is what M. Poincaré has said, and that is what I am afraid is going to be the instruction of the Reparation Commission to this expert body. If that happens, I think we are sold. We could not ask America to take part in that, and I do not see how we can take part in it. Therefore, I come to this conclusion, that, unless we know what is going to be the reference to this body, it is useless going on. It is much better honestly to face the issue at the start, than to have our men appointed to go to the Reparation Commission and the Reparation Commission by M. Barthou's casting vote telling them: "Look here, you must not go into the question of amount. You can go into the question of instalments, moratorium and so on, but the amount is not to be touched." Then I think we shall be sold. Therefore I would accept this second alternative of America, because I think that, if that is the only way to get agreement, let us get agreement on that basis, and let us enter into this agreement; but I do not want it to be abortive, as I am afraid it is going to be. Unless the reference is settled in advance, I am very much afraid that in a couple of days we shall be faced with this dilemma: That we have appointed a Commission, and America will have appointed a Commission, to go into an enquiry which will be absolutely abortive; and M. Poincaré will turn round and say: "Did you not read my speech? I told you so. I wrote you a letter in which I said the Reparation Commission could get any information they wanted, and I told you that this point was not to be touched," and there it is. That is my first trouble. Unless you want to get landed in this matter, we should have the reference made clear in advance, so that we know that at any rate there is going to be an enquiry by these people and that a report is going to be made on the issue which we want to be enquired into.

Time Limit for Enquiry.

The second trouble I have is this. In this matter time is the essence of the whole business. The fight is over time, not over a Commission. What M. Poincaré wants is time. The question is whether there should not be some time limit to this enquiry. Could we afford a Commission which is going to hang up matters for the next month or two? I can quite well see that this Commission may give that opening. It will continue, with all of the obstruction that may be raised, to enquire for the next couple of months, and we may have the deluge upon us before this Commission has ceased its enquiry. That is the second point. I want to see whether we cannot get a settlement on that too—on the reference and on a time limit.

Importance of defining British Policy towards Separatist Movement in Rhineland.

The third point, which is somewhat outside what you are raising here, troubles me just as much, and that is that I cannot see that we have defined our position really with regard to this matter that is taking place now, namely, the Rhineland business. Evidently some very great transformation is taking place there. Poincaré says it is not his doing, he is leaving the people to do what they like there. Our official information, and our unofficial information through the press, is just the opposite; that a separate republic is being started there through an organisation evidently created by the French military authorities there; and the question to my mind is: If we want to prevent another quarrel with the French a little later, should we not make our position perfectly plain at this stage? What is to be our attitude towards this separate republic there? To my mind, the strength of the French has been this, that at all stages they have made their position clear. Apart from any arrière-pensée, we know what the French position is; it has been stated to us every Sunday for six months. But the trouble is that I am in doubt as to what our position is.

I want our position to be defined with absolute clearness, and I want the French and the Belgians to know that what the Prime Minister said at Plymouth is the policy of this Government; that we are not going to countenance a separate State like this, which is going to be another breach of the Peace Treaty. I raise the point, because I find that even of our man in Brussels the question is being asked: What is the policy? He says what he hears from the Belgians, what our policy is; the Belgian Minister has told him this, that and the other. I foresee a very great struggle at a very early date over this Rhineland Republic, and I think the sooner we can define our position the better. We must be open and honest with our Allies and tell them what our attitude is, so that we do not spring a surprise upon them later. Those are really my points. The reference is the thing that troubles me most. I think we are going to be sold in a week, and this Government will appear to have committed a foolish thing.

Reply to Points raised by General Smuts.

Lord Curzon: I agree with General Smuts in attaching first-rate importance to the question of reference. He thinks we are going to be sold within a week.

General Smuts: The Reparation Commission will have to give an instruction to this body. What is it going to be? Is it going to be M. Poincaré's speech?

Suggested Terms of Reference to Committee.

Lord Curzon: Our representative on the Commission is Sir John Bradbury, and Sir John Bradbury would move in the Reparation Commission something like the following, which we have drawn up. He would insist upon comprehensive terms of reference, including:

(a.) What liability in respect of Peace Treaty charges upon Germany is consistent with the restoration of German public finances, currency and credit;

(b.) What are the best means of securing payment by Germany of her obligations under the Peace Treaty; and

(c.) What measure of control over German assets and German financial administration is necessary and desirable in the interests of her Peace Treaty creditors, and how the machinery of such control may be best organised.

Now supposing we say, as theoretically it would be desirable to do: Let us draw up the terms of reference for the Reparation Commission in advance; M. Poincaré would say at once: "That is no part of your business." It is not for us, over their heads, to draw up terms of reference, and, as for the proceedings ending in a deadlock in a week, they would end in a deadlock in two hours. I should probably have a telegram this afternoon. Therefore, let us try this other alternative. General Smuts says we must fail; we have got this artificial majority, with M. Barthou in the Chair, against us. Our man deliberately proposes these terms of reference;

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

there is a long debate upon the matter; and let us suppose he is overruled by the majority, by the casting vote of the French President. Look at what happens at once: America declines to send her man; we decline to send our man. The advantage swings over to our side; the thing has proved abortive, but it has proved abortive in a manner that entirely frees our hands. It is always rather dangerous to forecast the future, but, in my view, we should then have no alternative but to fall back upon Alternative No. 1. If at the opening stage M. Poincaré mobilises against us an artificial majority, you may be perfectly certain that America will never send Mr. Pierpont Morgan to be put in this position.

Proposed Time Limit.

Then as regards point number two, the time limit, I think we may be certain—I forget now the exact time that was spent upon the labours of this Committee of Bankers last year—it was short—but you may be quite sure that Mr. Pierpont Morgan is not going to devote several months of his time to looking into the European situation for nothing, and I think we may take it for granted that a time limit will be imposed by the people themselves.

British Attitude towards Separatist Movement.

Then as regards our attitude towards the Separatist movement, I do not know if General Smuts has seen it—what he says is quite true—but there is a very significant telegram this morning to the effect that, although the French are nominally adopting a neutral or independent attitude, they are behind the whole movement; they are organising every one of these attempts, whether on a large scale or on a small scale, and, indeed, this telegram came this morning from Lord D'Abernon:—

"Following received from Mr. Thurstan telegram No. 27 of 26th October"—Mr. Thurstan is on the Rhine:—

"'Evidence is accumulating that Separatist risings are result of preconceived plan on the part of French, and would long ago have been suppressed by local police and inhabitants had it not been for direct French and Belgian support. In these circumstances French will probably succeed in establishing a so-called Separatist administration in all principal Rhineland towns against will of practically entire population. The analogous case of Upper Silesia is obvious. French official policy [? group undecypherable] is recognition of responsibility of Separatists for maintaining law and order in towns where latter have established themselves, but it will doubtless be developed according to circumstances. As a result, feelings of population are being aroused to fever heat and rendering still worse an already almost intolerable situation.

"'Conditions in Ruhr have never been so bad. Supply of money was yesterday entirely insufficient for pay-rolls, and serious rioting is now proceeding at Essen; it is impossible to foretell what will happen next week, when hundreds of thousands of miners will presumably be on the streets.'"

Of course, we are locally only concerned in so far as that portion of the Rhineland which is in the occupation of our troops is involved; and there we are holding the fort, as we have often done before; but we have laid it down definitely, as the Prime Minister stated in his speech at Plymouth on Thursday, that we are dead against any Separatist movement that involves the disruption of the German State or Empire, or whatever you like to call it. You must remember that there are two kinds of Separatists: first of all there are those little splashes or splutters which are made in the neighbourhood of the Rhineland, and which would peter out at once if it were not for French and Belgian support. I think they will peter out eventually. But they are appeals partly for autonomy outside the German Reich and partly inside it. Now as regards the former, we hold very strong views. But we cannot dictate to the latter, to States, for instance, as Saxony or Bavaria or the Palatinate. If any of those areas says: "We choose to set ourselves up as an independent State inside the German Reich," we cannot stop them, because the Germans are encouraging them to do it themselves. Of course, they see in their own interests that they may thus escape the burden of reparations, because it is clear that when these little separate States are set up the difficulty of getting reparations will be immeasurably increased. Therefore, our attitude can only be the attitude of saying that anything done to disrupt the German Reich or the German State meets with our emphatic disapproval. But let me ask the Conference to go one step further. I mean that this policy on the part of France of encouraging independence is a suicidal policy. What will happen? The first thing that these States, supposing that they constitute themselves into independent bodies, will do will be to say to France: "We are independent; we have set ourselves up with a good deal of sympathy from you; it is therefore inconsistent that you should remain in occupation of our territory"; and, secondly, they will say: "Hitherto you have been demanding these enormous sums from the German State. Well, we have broken off from the German State; we are impoverished; we have no money; and, of course, your first step will be to release us from our share of the burden." Obviously they will say that, and that is what I mean by saying that France's policy is suicidal, because the States will say that she has made her occupation in a form uncomfortable to them, and that she has done away with all possibility of getting reparations. You will never get reparations unless you have one solid German State. To my mind the centripetal forces of the German State are so overpowering that whatever happens, even if you have a little spot here and a little spot there where independent States are set up, everything will ultimately go back, just as everything is tending to go back in Russia, where the Ukraine and Georgia and Armenia are being drawn back into the circle, and where, as I have said, the Baltic States will one day go back too. The same thing will happen in Germany. It is her only chance for the future; she is out for revenge and to rebuild herself; therefore I am not very much disturbed about these efforts at independence.

General Smuts: Our position should be clear; that is the only thing I am anxious about.

Lord Curzon: Yes, I have made it clear and if it is necessary to make it clearer I can do it, General Smuts.

Mr. Neville Chamberlain: You mean by public statement?

General Smuts: Yes, and by an official notification to the two Governments. The Belgian Minister at Brussels tells our man this, that and the other. He is clearly under a wrong impression as to what our policy is. I do not want them to say afterwards that we did not tell them what our policy was when there has been some deviation from it; this is the telegram I am referring to; this is from our man at Brussels: "Minister for Foreign Affairs tells me this morning that in accordance with the British custom of not expressing views of hypotheses you have been unwilling"—that is our Foreign Secretary—"to formulate policy of British Government towards this Rhineland movement," so apparently the Belgians think what is not quite accurate.

Lord Curzon: You have had my account of that interview, that is an interview with the Belgian Ambassador here. I circulated an account of it. All these accounts that I write are repeated to Brussels and to all the capitals, and Baron Moncheur must have misinterpreted what I said.

General Smuts: Do you not think, now that things are coming to a head in the Rhineland—this Separatist movement—we should, in a formal communication to both those Governments, make plain what our position is, that we would not object to a movement that separates the Rhineland, but that anything that disrupts Germany and runs counter to the Peace Treaty we should certainly not agree to—that they may know it in advance?

Lord Curzon: I do not think so. I think they know perfectly well; Crowe stated it with absolute clearness; I stated it with absolute clearness also to the Belgian Ambassador more than once; we have stated it to the Authorities on the spot, and it is known

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62851

in Berlin. If I may say so, the Belgians' action has been based upon a misinterpretation of what I said, by Baron Moncheur, but, if it is necessary to make it clearer, we can do so. Are you satisfied with the answer I gave to you on the other point?

General Smuts: I think so. If that is the plan, I quite agree to it.

Discussion on French Attitude.

Mr. Neville Chamberlain: I had very much the same point in my own mind as that raised by General Smuts, because it appeared to me that M. Poincaré, in his speeches, while affecting to accept the second alternative, was really going against the interpretation which is placed upon it by us. He interpreted it that the instructions to the Reparation Committee were to enquire not what Germany's capacity to pay was, but what her capacity to pay now was, and that they were to be prevented from touching at all on the ultimate liability. In the telegram which Lord Curzon has read to us that he proposes to send to Washington, he says what the object of the enquiry is, and asks the Ambassadors to concert together and make a joint representation. If M. Poincaré holds to the sense of his speeches, he will at once take exception to that, and he will say that this is, in effect, laying down the terms of reference.

General Smuts: In your telegram to Washington you say "consult with your colleagues in order to get this enquiry now into Germany's capacity to pay." If there should be an enquiry into Germany's capacity to pay, trouble is going to be raised at Washington almost immediately. I am getting very suspicious; perhaps I am too suspicious.

Lord Curzon: If he raises an objection to that, we shall know where we are; it does not preclude us from trying it.

Mr. Fitzgerald: When Lord Curzon read out that telegram, I did not even see that he did define that it was to decide Germany's capacity to pay.

Mr. Warren: We have gained two valuable points already—the consent of America to come in, and, secondly, the consent of M. Poincaré to join in a Conference; and, having gained those two points, it would be a mistake not to go on because we are afraid that the enquiry might prove abortive. What M. Poincaré says on Sunday afternoons to French audiences and what he is prepared to say to Belgian, Italian, British, and American Delegates sitting round a Conference table may be two different things, and I do not think we ought to object to going on with this Conference. Our surmise may be quite incorrect.

Lord Peel: I feel the force of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's point. It seemed to me that what M. Poincaré did say in his speech was really a refusal, but as a matter of fact, when that is read carefully, it appears to be a matter of tactics only.

POSITION OF INDIANS IN OTHER PARTS OF EMPIRE. CONTINUATION OF DISCUSSION.

Mr. Baldwin: Now, I think, we are in a position to proceed with the business. I will ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies to resume the debate.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES.

Tribute to Presentation of Case for India.

The Duke of Devonshire: At the outset of the few remarks I have to offer, I cannot refrain from saying that India has been exceedingly fortunate in the spokesmen selected to represent her case in this Conference.

That case, eloquently stated by Lord Peel and by His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar, was developed by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru in a speech the closely reasoned argument of which was greatly reinforced by its studied moderation.

C 62852

What India asks.

I particularly noticed that the proposal which he submitted was outlined rather than reduced to the specific terms of a resolution. In this, if I may say so, I think he was very wise, because, while he made the general purport of his proposal perfectly clear, he left the precise form to be moulded in the subsequent discussion. Let me state as shortly as I can the gist of that proposal as I understood it. Two years ago this Conference, with the exception of the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, agreed that the rights of Indians domiciled in parts of the Empire other than India should be recognised. Sir Tej now proposes that the question how and when effect can be given to this agreement should be made the subject of enquiry and discussion between committees representing the several Governments concerned and a committee representing the Government of India.

Limitation of Indian Request.

That is what Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru asks. But before I proceed I must also invite you to note that there are various matters already settled which he is not attempting to reopen. He does not question the right of each community in the British Commonwealth to control the composition of its own population. He is not, in a word, asking the self-governing Dominions to reopen the question of Indian immigration. He frankly recognises the autonomy of the Dominion Governments within their respective territories. What he asks is that the Governments concerned will agree to discuss with the Government of India the steps necessary to give effect to the resolution passed by the Conference in 1921. It is, of course, in the last instance for each Government to decide for itself, but, because in certain matters such decisions are not limited in their effects to the countries by which they are taken, the issues to which they relate may be brought for mutual discussion here.

British Government accepts Principle of Request.

In so far as the British Government is responsible for the Colonies and Protectorates, I can only say on behalf of the British Government that we certainly accept the principle of the request put forward by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru.

Maintenance of Kenya Settlement.

In saying this you will not understand me to mean that we are prepared to reopen matters which have been made the subject of recent and most carefully considered decision. I refer more especially to the Kenya settlement, the terms of which were placed before and accepted by the British Parliament in July. While I would not propose that the area of discussion between the contemplated Committee and the Secretary of State for the Colonies should be limited, I should only be misleading India if I were to say anything to suggest that the Government could consent to reconsider the decisions embodied in the settlement of July last. To use the words of the White Paper, the constant endeavour of the British Government throughout their deliberations was to relate the principles which must govern the administration of a British Colony in Tropical Africa to the wider considerations of general Imperial Policy as enunciated in the Resolution of the Imperial Conference of 1921.

Responsibilities of British Government.

I have also to remind the representatives of India that, so far as the British Colonies and Protectorates are concerned, the ultimate responsibility rests with the British Government, and it is with the British Government, and more particularly with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, that any questions affecting British Indians domiciled in these Colonies and Protectorates should be discussed in the first instance by such a Committee as Sir Tej has suggested. It will then be for the Colonial Office to consult, as may be necessary, any Colonial Government concerned with these discussions before any decisions are taken by the British Government.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62853

Political Status of Indians in Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories.

I am hopeful that the area to be covered by these discussions will not in fact prove wide. I recently circulated to members of the Conference, in response to their general wish, a memorandum* upon the political status of British Indians in the Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories. I studiously confined my memorandum to facts, and perhaps I may be permitted to summarise quite briefly what that memorandum contains.

It shows that, in the West Indian Colonies, British Indians are under no political or legal disability of any kind. They have the same franchise and the same opportunities of becoming members of elective bodies as any other British subjects. The West Indian Colonies in which there is a considerable British-Indian population are British Guiana, Trinidad and Jamaica. In British Guiana and Jamaica the elective system already exists, and it will be introduced in Trinidad at an early date.

When you turn to the Eastern Colonies the memorandum shows that in Ceylon, under a revised Constitution about to be issued, qualified British Indians will be eligible for the franchise and for election to the Legislative Council in the same manner as all other British subjects. Again, in Mauritius there is no distinction between British Indians and other British subjects as regards eligibility for the franchise.

In East Africa you will find from the memorandum that in Uganda the Legislative Council is not elective, but that there is no restriction on the number or race of the unofficial members who may be nominated to the Council, while in Tanganyika Territory there is no Legislative or Executive Council.

Subject to a clear understanding on these points, my colleagues and I cordially welcome on behalf of the British Government the proposal of the representatives of India so far as the Colonies and Protectorates are concerned.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA.

Canada's Attitude of Goodwill.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I would like to say that I think Canada fully appreciates the magnitude and seriousness of the problem with which the Government of India and the Government of Britain are confronted in dealing with any question affecting the status of Indians, and that our attitude from the beginning has been, and at present is, one of being exceedingly anxious to be helpful in the solution of any problem that may arise. His Highness the Maharajah, in speaking last week, referred to the manner in which we had recently taken up by conference some questions respecting Immigration with Japan, and he said that, in his opinion, any of these questions of status and political rights respecting resident Indians could be best settled by adopting a similar method. He referred particularly to an attitude of goodwill being more important than anything else in the solution of these difficult questions. I think the Maharajah is entirely right. Attitude in these matters is all-important; so far as the Canadian attitude is concerned, it gives me pleasure to say that we are most anxious to deal with this whole question in a spirit of mutual understanding and goodwill.

Recent History of Indian Immigration Question.

I have in my hand a report that I made to the Government of Canada in 1908. It relates to Immigration to Canada from the Orient, and Immigration from India in particular. It was the result of a visit which, at the instance of the Government of the day in Canada, I paid to England to confer with the Secretary of State for India in regard to the question of Immigration from India to Canada. If I may be permitted, I would like to read the concluding paragraph of this Report, because it sets out the attitude at that time—fifteen years ago—which we took towards questions affecting our fellow British citizens from India:—

> "Nothing could be more unfortunate or misleading than that the impression should go forth that Canada, in seeking to regulate a matter of domestic concern, is not deeply sensible of the obligations which citizenship within the Empire entails. It is a recognition of this obligation which has caused her to adopt a course which, by removing the possibilities of injustice and friction, is best calculated to strengthen the bonds of association with the several parts, and to promote the greater harmony of the whole. In this, as was to be expected, Canada has had not only the sympathy and understanding, but the hearty co-operation of the authorities in Great Britain and India as well."

* See E. 77, also published in Appendix V in Cmd. 1988.

C 62854

I should say, perhaps, that, after conferring with the Secretary of State for India in London at that time in regard to this question, I subsequently, at the instance of the Canadian Government, went to India to take up with the authorities there the question of the migration of Indians to Canada with a view of seeing whether we could not work out a solution which would avoid anything in the nature of legislation which might be misunderstood or regarded as invidious in India, and I am happy to say that we were able, as a result of conferences, to come to an understanding between the two Governments which was as satisfactory to the Government of India as it was to the Government of Canada. If it was possible to do that in regard to the difficult question of Immigration, I think it ought to be possible for us similarly to effect a satisfactory solution with respect to any of these other questions that may arise, and it is from that point of view that I hope my colleagues from India will feel that the Canadian Government is approaching this particular subject.

Position of Indians domiciled in Canada.

Lord Peel in his remarks said, I think, very rightly, that what the Indian felt more than anything else was that the disabilities under which their countrymen live appear as a brand of social inferiority. The extent to which that is true depends very largely upon the nature of the disabilities and the circumstances which account for any that may exist.

No Disabilities in eight Provinces. Some Political Disability in one.

May I say at once in regard to Canada, that, in eight of the Provinces out of nine which comprise the Dominion, I am not aware of any legal or political disability under which any Indian resident in Canada suffers, and, with respect to the ninth Province, I am not aware of any legal disability of any kind; I am only aware of a political disability in the matter of the exercise of the franchise in that one Province, and that not as regards all Indians, because, as respects all Provinces, including British Columbia, the one exception I have mentioned, the Federal Law relating to the franchise sets it down that any Indian who served with His Majesty's Forces—Military, Naval or Air—is entitled to the franchise. I mention this as evidence of the fact that our citizens appreciate the services that India has rendered the Empire and desire to acknowledge them wherever possible.

History of Canadian Franchise.

May I say a word as to the way our franchise has been developed? The Dominion is the result of the bringing together of a number of Provinces, and the Party to which I belong—the Liberal Party in Canada—has taken a position that, wherever it was possible to recognise the wishes of a Province in matters pertaining to the franchise, regard to such should be had. For that reason our Federal Franchise Act for many years recognised for Federal purposes only the franchise prevailing in the Province. We had not a separate franchise for the Dominion. We took, for the Dominion, the provincial franchise as it existed, with the result that in some Provinces some classes had the right to vote who had not the right to vote in others, not on account of race, but owing solely to the fact that for their own reasons certain of the Provinces had thought it well to limit the franchise in certain particulars. The late Government, which represented an opposite view in some particulars, changed somewhat the Franchise Law a few years ago, and endeavoured to enact a Federal Franchise which would be applicable generally throughout the Dominion. They provided that women,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62855

for example, should have the right to vote in Federal matters. Those of us who had held to a recognition of provincial enactments opposed that attitude. We said it should still be left to the Provinces to determine as respects the franchise to be given women, as in all else, what they thought best. However, the Government at that time did carry a provision which made the law in this matter of the exercise of the franchise by women generally applicable. Notwithstanding, that very Government, having regard for the conditions in the Province of British Columbia, in order to avoid a serious situation arising there which might have been misunderstood in other parts of the Empire, found it necessary as regards certain of the provisions affecting the Federal Franchise in the case of British Columbia to make an exception to this general application. I mention this because it discloses how in one Province a particular question may become a burning political issue. For the Federal Government to try and deal with it in a manner which would be regarded as coercing any Province would give rise to an entirely new question. For example, if the Federal Government had tried in respect of all persons resident there to impose on the Province of British Columbia certain obligations, such, for example, as the right to vote under the Federal franchise, the issue would not in public discussion have been a question of the franchise at all; it would have been a question of coercion by the Federal Government of a Provincial Government, and you would have had a political battle fought on the basis of what we speak of as "provincial rights." I am sure all at this table will appreciate that that kind of political conflict is one of the most dangerous a country can be faced with. It is as though Britain were to try and impose certain obligations on Canada or some other part of the Empire. In dealing with the Provinces we of the Federal Government seek, as far as we can, to prevent anything in the way of coercion. I think it is as well to mention this because it helps to explain why in one Province it has not been possible, up to the present, to concede the franchise to the Indians who are there.

Question best dealt with on Reciprocal Lines.

As to how Canada's action may be viewed in India seems to me to be very much a matter of interpretation, and the spirit of interpretation. I could go to India and say with truth, that every citizen coming from the State, over which His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar rules, has rights of citizenship in my Province which I have not in his. That is a point which cannot be brought out too clearly. In eight Provinces out of nine in Canada every Indian resident there has the same right as other Canadian citizens, but that is not equally true of Canadians resident in India. If this aspect is put before the people of India they will see that the reciprocal method of dealing with this question, as pointed out by General Smuts, is one which perhaps presents the line along which we can proceed most satisfactorily. So far as Canada is concerned, we would not ask for our citizens resident in India any right which we are not prepared equally to concede to Indians resident in Canada. I think you may take that as the fundamental basis on which we would be prepared to deal with this question; we hold to this reciprocal point of view because in all things we have found it to be one of the most satisfactory methods of dealing with questions of this kind.

Problem in British Columbia an Economic one.

So far as British Columbia is concerned the problem is not a racial one; it is purely an economic problem. The Labour forces in British Columbia are very strong. That Province has had industrial problems of a character which no other Province in the Dominion has had and what the Labour people are aiming at is, I think, to maintain certain industrial standards which they had sacrified much to acquire. As respects some of those who have come from other countries they are rather fearful, until at least they have resided for some time in Canada and have acquired our method of living, our customs, habits, and so forth, that to give them the rights of franchise in full may mean that the standard already maintained may be undermined. I would like to make this clear.

C 62856

Possible Political Consequences of giving Franchise to Indians in British Columbia.

It may seem I am straining a little in emphasising the possible political consequence of giving the franchise to resident Indians in British Columbia.

But take the actual situation as it is in Parliament to-day. When we came into office, I had a majority of one behind me in the House of Commons. I think we have a majority of three at the present time. Many of the constituencies were very close. It is conceivable that in British Columbia the difference in the result might be material by increasing a certain vote in some of the constituencies. In other words, were the subject to become one of political discussion, I think it would be possible for a political orator to make it quite apparent to the people of British Columbia that the fate of the Federal Government might depend upon the vote cast by the Indians resident in that Province. It would not be an exaggeration, it would not be a figure of speech; it is a literal and absolute truth. It is conceivable that the complexion of Parliament as it is to-day might be entirely changed. The consequence might be that one Government rather than another would be in office by the vote of those who, neither in their own country nor in Canada, have ever exercised the franchise. That is the situation which exists at the moment. I do not expect it will exist very long, but it all helps to show the difficulty which we are confronted with when we contemplate, in any immediate way, results which we all hope will be effected in the course of time. It is for that, among other reasons, that I appreciate the method of approach which Sir Tej has adopted in bringing his suggestion before this Conference. He has appreciated, I think, our difficulties as well as his own, and, in suggesting there could be a Conference between representatives of India and representatives of Canada, I think he has had in mind enabling the citizens of India to appreciate just the kind of circumstances which have governed our actions quite as much as having our citizens appreciate his difficulties. That is the sort of approach and attitude which permits us to get together and I should be surprised if, dealing with this question in that spirit, we could not work out a thoroughly satisfactory solution.

Interpretation of 1921 Resolution.

There is one point I ought to make quite clear and that is the extent to which my hands are tied in dealing with this question. The resolution which was passed at this Conference two years ago in the minds of some present committed the Dominions to giving the franchise to the Indians. It was, they allege, in the nature of a general commitment. It is all important that we should know whether that was the intention of the resolution or not. I think in the first place we should be very careful of resolutions that are introduced or passed, and I think, when once they are passed, we should do our utmost to see that any hopes to which they may give rise are not destroyed. In the House of Commons I asked my predecessor, Mr. Meighen, what his interpretation was of the resolution of 1921. I have before me the "Hansard" of the 29th June of this year, which contains the record, and with the permission of the Conference I shall read from it:—

> "Mr. Mackenzie King: May I ask my honourable friend one question? The resolution of the Conference, or at least one clause, is as follows:—
>
> "The Conference accordingly is of the opinion that in the interests of the solidarity of the British Commonwealth it is desirable that the rights of such Indians to citizenship should be recognised."
>
> "The Honourable Member for George Etienne Cartier, Mr. Jacobs, has said that those words imply an undertaking on the part of this Parliament, or rather on the part of Canada, to see that the federal franchise is granted to the Indians in British Columbia. Is that correct or not?
>
> "Mr. Meighen: The words are English and the words are simple. I understand them fully and if the Prime Minister does not I must leave him just where he is.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62857

"Mr. Mackenzie King: I think the House is entitled to an answer from my right honourable friend. He represented this country at the Imperial Conference. He knows better than anyone else what interpretation he placed on these words. I ask him, seeing that he represented Canada at the Imperial Conference when the resolution was passed, whether Canada was giving an undertaking to the Indians in British Columbia to the effect that they should be entitled to the franchise.

"Mr. Meighen: No human being understood anything of the sort. The words are very plain and there is no misunderstanding them."

I should be taken very seriously to task if, when I returned to Canada, it could be said that I had placed an interpretation on that resolution which the Prime Minister of Canada who was present at the time it was passed was unwilling to have placed upon it. I think Mr. Meighen has taken his attitude from the words: "It is desirable that the rights of such Indians to citizenship should be recognised." If that means we would all like to see it done, that we hope it may be done, I think I can agree with him in this expression of such a wish. On the other hand, as to its constituting an actual pledge, I am bound to take the interpretation which Mr. Meighen himself gives and places upon it. I should, perhaps, say that I presented that point of view to Mr. Sastri when he was in Canada and my recollection is that Mr. Sastri did not maintain that the resolution constituted a pledge which obliged the Federal Government to give the franchise to resident Indians but rather that it expressed what the Conference hoped would be done by the different Dominions as opportunity offered.

Mr. Sastri's Visit.

May I say just a word in regard to Mr. Sastri's visit? We were pleased to welcome Mr. Sastri to Canada and we sought to give him the fullest opportunity to speak publicly wherever he wished to do so in the Dominion, to confer with any persons whom he might wish to meet, and we were glad to have him in conference with us in the Cabinet so that we could explain very fully all the considerations of which we had to take account. I think Mr. Sastri appreciated our situation the better in view of having seen conditions for himself and having talked with many persons in different parts of the Dominion.

Matter will be considered when Franchise Law revised.

I cannot do better in setting forth our Government's attitude than to read to the Conference and place on record the letter I wrote to Mr. Sastri just as he was leaving our Dominion. It is dated Ottawa, the 5th September, 1922, and is as follows:—

"The Right Hon. V. Srinivasa Sastri,
"Château Laurier, Ottawa.

"Dear Mr. Sastri,

"In reply to the representations made by you at the interview with my colleagues and myself on Friday of last week, and which were the subject of further conference between us yesterday, I desire to assure you that, at the earliest favourable moment, the Government will be pleased to invite the consideration of Parliament to your request that natives of India resident in Canada be granted a Dominion parliamentary franchise on terms and conditions identical with those which govern the exercise of that right by Canadian citizens generally.

"The subject is necessarily one which Parliament alone can determine. It will be submitted to Parliament for consideration when the franchise law is under revision.

"In conveying to the Government of India an expression of the attitude of the Government of Canada in this matter, we hope that you will not fail to make it clear that at the present time, in eight of the nine provinces of which our Dominion is composed, the federal franchise is granted to natives of India resident in Canada, on terms which are identical with those applicable generally to Canadian citizens.

"Yours sincerely,
"(Signed) W. L. Mackenzie King."

C 62858

You will observe that we have promised Mr. Sastri that when our Federal Franchise Law comes up for revision we will take care to see that Parliament is fully informed of his representations and wishes, and we will seek to have those representations and wishes given every consideration. It is probable that the Dominion Franchise Act will come up for revision at the approaching Session of Parliament. I told Mr. Sastri it was hardly probable it would come up last Session, but that I thought it would come up next Session. If the course we anticipate is followed, the Franchise Act will be referred to a Committee of the House, and that Committee will be in a position to hear any representations that may be made to it.

If Committee from India sent to Canada, it will be given every opportunity to discuss Question.

My friends from India will have to decide for themselves what is likely to be most in their own interests in the matter of having a Committee visit Canada and take up this matter anew. I say that for the reason that I am not so sure that Mr. Sastri's visit has made it easier for us to deal with this problem. I would put it in this way. Mr. Sastri's visit helped to direct the attention of the country to something which I imagine the greater part of the country did not know anything about. I doubt if the majority of the people in Canada were aware that in the Province of British Columbia, for example, the Indians did not have the franchise. They may have known in the other Provinces that they had the franchise, but the question of the few in British Columbia not having the franchise would hardly be known to any extent outside that Province. Once, however, Mr. Sastri began delivering his speeches the Labour Councils from one end of the country to the other began to receive communications from Labour Organisations in British Columbia asking them to take care to see that such standards as labour had won in British Columbia were maintained. The forces that were opposed to granting the franchise to Indians became organised in a way they had not been before. Whether that same result might follow the visit of a deputation from India I cannot say. It might or it might not, but, should our friends from India think it would help them to have a delegation come to Canada to confer on the subject, we shall be most happy to appoint a corresponding group to meet and confer with them. If it were their desire to have their delegation given an opportunity of meeting the Parliamentary Committee to which the matter will be referred for consideration, I should be glad to see, if the time of their visit so permitted, that they were given a chance to meet the members of that Committee and to confer with them at Ottawa. In other words, we would be only too happy to give to any group which may come from India, any person she may send, the amplest opportunities to discuss with our public men all aspects of this particular question. I say this having regard to the method of approach Sir Tej has presented to us here. He has made it clear that the Committee would come for the purpose of exploring avenues and ways and means to reach an ultimate result. He should recognise that we may have to take time in this matter, but I would like him to believe that we are sincere in hoping that we will be able to meet his wishes. In seeking so to do, we may have to proceed step by step, but the Canadian people as a whole are, I am sure, really desirous of meeting our fellow British citizens from India in every reasonable particular. I have not the slightest doubt about that.

Progress of India towards Self-government.

Perhaps I may be permitted to say just one word in conclusion. Sir Tej spoke very feelingly the other day about political freedom and the desires of India in the matter of self-government. When I was in India I heard a good deal of the discussion that was going on. Let me say that I have a natural sympathy with the desires of a people to have the right to manage their own affairs. Were I a citizen of India, and this is what I felt most at that time, I should feel above everything else that in India being a part of the British Empire there lay the surest guarantee that this desire for self-government will be realised in the course of time in the manner which to India herself will be most effective and helpful. It is

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 14 38 15 39 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62859

inconceivable that the opinions represented at this table, the views of the different Dominions represented here, should not accord with aspirations of self-government. There is this, however, which I think we have to remember and which those of us in the Dominions have had occasion to realise, that our Dominions have been peopled largely by citizens who have come out from the British Isles, and that those who have been most active in effecting reforms have themselves come with ideals which it had taken their ancestors many, many years to work out in this old land. Our struggle for responsible government in the Dominions was largely a continuation of the long struggle of several centuries which had taken place in the British Isles, and I think the evolution of self-government in the Dominions has become what it is largely because of the long process of political training through which in previous years the peoples of the British Isles had passed. For that reason I hope that our friends in India will appreciate that here again time may be a helpful factor in the working out of what, in the long run, in the interests of India herself will be the surest and the best guide to complete self-government.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Tribute to presentation of case for India.

Mr. Bruce: Prime Minister, I would like to preface the few remarks I wish to make by congratulating the representatives of India on the very eloquent and temperate manner in which they stated the case which they have to present.

Attitude of Australia to Resolutions of previous Conferences.

This question is not one which vitally affects Australia as it does South Africa. I desire, however, to refer to the Resolution on the position of Indians in the Empire which was adopted by the Conference of 1921. The resolution commenced by reaffirming the previous Resolution of 1918, that the government of each community of the British Commonwealth should enjoy complete control of the composition of its own population by means of restriction on immigration from any of the other communities. It then went on to recognise that there is an incongruity between India's position as an equal member of the British Empire and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in some other parts of the Empire. The resolution recorded the opinion that, in the interests of the solidarity of the British Empire, it is desirable to recognise the rights of such lawfully domiciled Indians to citizenship in their countries of domicile. This resolution was concurred in by the representatives of Australia.

Sympathy with Indians domiciled in Australia.

The object of the representatives of India at this Conference in bringing forward the question of the status of Indians is, as I understand, to further the investigation of the question of the means of giving practical effect to that part of the resolution which refers to the recognition of rights of citizenship of Indians lawfully domiciled in other parts of the Empire. As far as Australia is concerned, this question has been the subject of considerable public discussion, and the representatives of every shade of political thought have shown sympathy with the claim that lawfully domiciled Indians should enjoy full citizen rights. As the question did not figure in the preliminary agenda of the Conference, I have not had the opportunity of consulting my colleagues or my Parliament upon it. I believe, however, that Australian public opinion is ready to welcome, so far as the position of Indians domiciled in Australia is concerned, any measure which is conceived in the interests of the Empire as a whole. The number of Indians in Australia is small—there are only 2,000 of them—so that from the purely Australian point of view the problem is a small one, but it is recognised that this is part of a larger Imperial problem.

No change in Commonwealth Immigration Policy.

It is not a question of admitting fresh Indians within our territory. That would be contrary to the fundamental principles which animate the people of Australia and must govern the policy of any Australian Government; nor, as I fully understand, is there the slightest shadow of a suggestion that the immigration of Indians into Australia is desired by the Government or by the people of India. It is simply a question of satisfying the legitimate aspirations of the few Indians who are already lawfully domiciled in our midst, and contributing by this action to the solution of an Imperial problem, by the removal of anomalies which, as I understand, are felt very keenly in India in view of her new status as an integral part of the Imperial Commonwealth.

C 62860

Tribute to India's place in Empire, and to her Civilisation.

India is no longer a mere Dependency, but one of the component members of the British Commonwealth of Nations. We have the greatest admiration of the efforts put forth by India in the late war, by which she won her new status. I need only refer to her contributions in men, money and material, her recruitment on a voluntary basis of something like 1½ million men, the services which her army rendered by sending more than a million Indian troops overseas to all the theatres of war, and her free gift to the Imperial Exchequer, which added, as I am told, over 30 per cent. to her national debt at that time. Apart from these material aids, the moral value of the part played by India in the War cannot be over-estimated. The vast masses of the Indian people have always been conspicuous for their loyalty to the British Throne, but their wholehearted and voluntary participation in the world conflict undoubtedly afforded striking proof of this to both foes and friends alike. Even apart from that welcome evidence that in its hour of need the Empire may rely on India as a strength and support, instead of a source of weakness as our late enemies dared to hope, I wish to emphasise that the people of Australia have always had the greatest respect for India's traditions and culture, her literature and her arts, her attainments in the world of thought and her achievements in action—in a word, for her civilisation, which, while reposing on such ancient foundations, has, at the same time, shown itself capable of progress and adaptation to the needs of the modern world. That civilisation is not identical with ours; it is older, and it is the civilisation of the East rather than of the West; capable, however, as India has already shown, of absorbing what is valuable in Western civilisation, just as the West, in its turn, has lessons to learn from the civilisation that is characteristic of India.

Indian Problem results from conflict of Economic Standards.

Nor is the established policy of maintaining the European character of our population and not permitting the immigration of Asiatic settlers in conflict with such an appreciation. It is not a policy founded on feelings of race or colour, but it is motived by economic considerations which appear to us to be clear and cogent. I have said that the civilisation of the East, though older and possibly in some respects superior, is different from that of the West, and among other things this implies a well-marked difference of economic standards. Asiatic immigrants would be able to work and support life with what, to them, would represent a high degree of comfort, under conditions and for wages which would make it impossible for workers of European descent, accustomed to European standards, to compete with them. If, therefore, Asiatic immigrants were admitted, it would be impossible to provide employment for Europeans. They would inevitably be ousted from the labour market, and our population, and with it our institutions and our civilisation, would gradually lose their original European character which we are naturally determined to do all in our power to preserve. It is for this reason that the Commonwealth Parliament has passed enactments which effectively prohibit the immigration of Indian or other Asiatic settlers or labourers, and it is for this reason that we welcomed the Resolution of 1918, reaffirmed in 1921, by which the Imperial Conference has recognised the right of each Government to control the composition of the population of its country by means of restriction on immigration from the other communities of the Empire.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 38 14 15 69 16 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62861

Attitude of Australia is sympathetic, but no need for Committee.

That Resolution was accepted by India, and the Government of India have never swerved in their loyal acquiescence and co-operation with us in our policy. But, viewing the relations of India with the other parts of the Empire as an Imperial problem, we appreciate that the maintenance of the immigration policy is only one side of the question. On the other side we have the desire of India to see the grant of political and other rights of citizenship accorded to her sons who have already, and in some cases for many years past, been legitimately domiciled within Australia. This desire is largely satisfied in the principle of the Resolution of 1921. That Resolution, together with the Resolution of 1918, must be regarded as interdependent parts of a single endeavour to promote harmonious relations between the Dominions and India by securing the immigration policy of the former on the one hand and by removing the cause of any ill-feeling in India on the other. The object of both Resolutions, as I regard them, is to foster the cohesion of the Empire as a single unit, comprehending within itself not only certain communities of European race all inspired by Western ideals of civilisation, but also uniting in one system the different ideals, elements of strength and potentialities of progress towards the common good which the Empire is happily able to draw from Eastern as well as from Western sources.

In view of the position which exists in Australia and the consideration which has been given to the question, there is no necessity for a Committee further to discuss the matter such as has been suggested by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. While I appreciate the spirit in which it is put forward, I do not think, in the special circumstances of Australia, there is any necessity for such action. On my return to Australia I will consult with my colleagues as to what action can be taken.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND.

Tribute to presentation of case for India.

Mr. Massey: I will only detain the Conference a very few minutes. I should like—and I have no doubt the other members of the Conference feel as I do—I should like to express my appreciation of the eloquent speeches delivered by the representatives of India. I am especially impressed by the fact, which was very evident, that, while they were insistent in looking after the interests of India, they spoke as patriotic British citizens. I do not think there will be very much difficulty in the plan—I am thinking now of the proposal that Committees representing the Dominions should meet a Committee representing India. I am speaking more particularly for my own country.

Position of Indians in New Zealand.

I would like to endorse that, so far as New Zealand is concerned. We are practically giving the natives of India resident in New Zealand the same privileges which are enjoyed by people of the Anglo-Saxon race who are settled there. There is practically no difference between them. If there is or ever has been at any time any objection to natives of India coming to New Zealand, those objections have been raised for economic reasons such as have been referred to by the Prime Minister of Australia. The workers in New Zealand are naturally anxious to maintain the present standard of living, and if there happened to be a large influx of natives of India at any time they have an idea that such standard might become lowered. They are naturally anxious—and I am bound to say the New Zealand Parliament is also anxious—to prevent anything of the sort happening. There is no such thing as race-prejudice or anything of that sort. So far as the aboriginal natives of New Zealand are concerned they are in exactly the same position as the European residents in New Zealand; they have the same privileges in regard to Parliament and in connection with local affairs.

Status of India at Imperial Conference.

I have heard it stated as a matter of fact that there is an impression in India that the representatives of the Indian Empire at the Imperial Conference do not occupy the same position as the representatives of the Dominions or other parts of the Empire. Now I think that ought to be contradicted emphatically. We who represent the Dominions—and I know I can speak for those who represent the United Kingdom and the Colonies as well—are anxious that the representatives of India sitting round this historic table should enjoy all the privileges that we enjoy and should have exactly the same position. I think that ought to be made perfectly clear in India.

C 62862

Methods of Agitation in India.

I know this, that India has become during recent years a fruitful hunting ground for agitators; I am not thinking of Indian agitators when I say that, because I know—and it is nothing to be proud of—that some of the people of our own race have taken a prominent part in fomenting trouble in India, and not only in India, but in those British countries where a number of natives of India have become located. There are not many opportunities in my country, but I have known people of our own race to be doing their level best to stir up trouble with the natives of India. Fiji is our neighbour and there is a large number of Indians there. I am not speaking for Fiji, but I would only say this, that I have the best of reasons for knowing—I know it officially—that Europeans frequently have been doing their level best to foment disturbances in Fiji. I am simply speaking of labour troubles and difficulties of that sort. Once troubles are started and when strikes take place we, who have had experience of these industrial troubles, never know where they are going to end; and they sometimes stir up trouble which is not forgotten for a very long time afterwards.

Tribute to India's place in Empire, and to her Civilisation.

My opinion—I speak as a British citizen and not only as the representative of New Zealand—is that we should do everything that is possible to make the natives of India feel, whether here or in India itself, that we want to treat them with justice, and that we want to do everything that is fair and right and proper as far as they are concerned. I know perfectly well that when we think of government by Indians we have to remember—and I think it was the Maharajah who expressed this opinion—that if development is to take place it will not be quite by what is called Western methods. We can understand that. When one remembers the huge population of India, the number of races which are there, the number of languages that are spoken, and the different religions, I have often thought that it might be desirable, when the time comes, as I believe it will come, to let India be divided into a number of Dominions rather than to remain one State or Empire as it is at present. I have not been to India, and I only look at it from the outside. The European residents in India, and the representatives of India themselves, know very much better than I do what will be necessary in time to come to enable Indians to attain the position they desire to occupy. I was very much struck with the concluding remarks of Lord Peel, and I have not forgotten that when the destinies of the British Empire were trembling in the balance there was no hesitation on the part of India to do her duty; I will not say "to come to its assistance," because when they were fighting for the Empire they were fighting for themselves as citizens of the Empire. They undoubtedly did their duty in a way which was admired in every part of the Empire and by every one of its races. The Prime Minister of Australia has mentioned the number of men who were sent and the amount of money contributed by the Indian Empire itself, and on that account I am quite sure the representatives and the patriotic British citizens, to whichever part of the Empire they belong, will always be desirous of upholding the wishes of the people of India and of assisting in the development which they so ardently desire. I do not know whether it can be done for some time or not; probably hurrying up matters might do more harm than good.

New Zealand stands by previous Resolutions.

So far as the Committees are concerned, when Mr. Sastri was in New Zealand he had an opportunity of meeting both branches

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 14 38 15 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62863

of the Legislature and an opportunity of saying everything he chose to say to them. He said that, so far as New Zealand was concerned, he then had practically no fault to find. I hope later on that the same thing may be said of the residents in other parts of the Empire. I was present, of course, when the original arrangement was made in 1918; I was present when it was reaffirmed in 1921; and by that we desire to stand. If any improvements can be suggested with regard to what is in operation at present, I have not the slightest doubt but that the representatives of the Dominions and the other representatives of the British Empire here will consider them. I do not know whether anything of the sort is intended at present, but I want to assure the representatives of India that so far as they are concerned there is no desire to keep them in the background, but to give them all the privileges that British citizens in other parts of the Empire enjoy. I should like to say that I do not intend to interfere in the matter of Kenya. The position in South Africa stands by itself and I am not able to judge of it. I only say that I should like to do anything I possibly can to bring about a better understanding between the two races in South Africa, those representative of the European race and those representative of the Indians. If we can do anything at all we shall be only too glad to do it.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Tribute to presentation of case for India.

General Smuts: I desire to pay my tribute also to the earnestness, the eloquence, and the ability of the speeches that have been made here by the representatives of India. The proposal which has been made by Sir Tej Sapru does not concern South Africa, and therefore I do not think it is necessary for me to detain the Conference at any length. As, however, the subject is a very difficult one I may perhaps be allowed to say a few words in reference to the general situation.

Mr. Sastri's Mission has made Solution of Problem more difficult.

The Maharajah has said, very rightly, that what this question requires is understanding—understanding not only of the difficulties and the special position of India, but also of the difficulties and the special position of other British communities; and I think a few words of mine might not be out of place here. So far as I can judge, the atmosphere has really become worse in the last two years for a solution of this question. In South Africa, undoubtedly, it has become worse. That is due partly to the visit of Mr. Sastri and his speeches in various parts of the Empire, to which I do not wish to refer with any particularity. The Prime Minister of Canada has said what the effect of the visit has been in Canada, and in South Africa it has undoubtedly emphasised the difficulties that existed before. That was one of the reasons why I thought it might not be wise for Mr. Sastri to come to South Africa. Our difficulties are great enough as they are.

South African Attitude to Indian Problem in Kenya.

There was another circumstance which has affected the attitude and the atmosphere in South Africa very considerably, and that is the Kenya question. There is no doubt that in South Africa a profound sympathy was stirred up for Kenya. Here you have a very small British community, a handful of settlers, who find themselves pitted against the mighty Empire of India, who find themselves against overwhelming forces, and who, although they are the most loyal community in the British Empire, consisting mostly of ex-Army men, had in the end to go to the length of almost threatening force in order to maintain their position. The sympathy that was aroused and stirred for Kenya in South Africa has had a very serious repercussion there on the Indian question as a whole. I have no fault whatever to find with the attitude of either the Colonial Office or the India Office here. I have nothing but praise for the way they handled this very difficult situation, and the settlement that was come to was, I think, a wise compromise, and so far as my influence went I used it with the people of Kenya to get them to accept the settlement, as they have accepted it. But I must say, quite frankly, that I have been very much perturbed over the attitude adopted by the Indian Government in this matter. They pressed the case against Kenya in a way which seemed to me to exceed the limits of prudence and wisdom, and when the settlement was ultimately made language was used in regard to it which I think would certainly not help the case of loyalty either in India or anywhere else in the Empire. The whole incident, as I say, has had a very bad effect in South Africa.

C 62864

Position in South Africa itself.

The difficulties from the African point of view are very great. Sir Tej has said—and quite rightly—that the majority of the population of the British Empire are coloured. That is so. But let me make this remark: all through the very able and moderate argument of Sir Tej he referred to this colour question and the indignity which was either openly or by inference inflicted on those British subjects who have colour. Well, I wish to say that, so far as we in South Africa are concerned, it is not a question of colour, it is a different principle that is involved.

Question not one of Colour but of Economic Competition.

I think that every thinking man in South Africa takes the attitude, not that the Indian is inferior to us because of his colour or on any other ground—he may be our superior; it is the case of a small civilisation, a small community, finding itself in danger of being overwhelmed by a much older and more powerful civilisation; and it is the economic competition from people who have entirely different standards and viewpoints from ourselves. From the African point of view, what is the real difficulty? You have a continent inhabited by a 100 million blacks, where a few small white communities have settled down as the pioneers of European civilisation. You cannot blame these pioneers, these very small communities, in South Africa and in Central Africa if they put up every possible fight for the civilisation which they started, their own European civilisation. They are not there to foster Indian civilisation, they are there to foster Western civilisation, and they regard as a very serious matter anything that menaces their position, which is already endangered by the many difficulties which surround them in Africa. In South Africa, our position in a nutshell is as follows: In the Union, we have a native population of over 6 million; we have a white population of over 1½ million; we have an Indian population of something like 160,000, mostly confined to one Province, to the most British Province in the Union, the Province of Natal.

Particularly in Natal.

Mr. Sastri, in one of his somewhat outrageous statements, referred to this as a Boer Empire, an empire which is swamped by Boer ideals. Well, the fact is that the Indian difficulties have mostly arisen, and continue to grow, in a part of South Africa where there are almost no Boers at all, in an almost purely British community; but you have in this Province of Natal a majority of Indians and a minority of British settlers, and, whatever the mistakes of the past may have been, the grandchildren of to-day do not plead guilty to the errors of their ancestors and they want to right the situation and safeguard the future for themselves and their children.

Suffrage Qualifications in South African Provinces.

What is the position? In the Cape of Good Hope and the Cape Province we have a franchise, a property and income and literary franchise, and in that Province the Indians are on exactly the same footing and have the same franchise as the whites; no difference is made. But in the other three Provinces of the Union we have a manhood suffrage. In the two Provinces of the interior, the Transvaal and the Free State, that franchise was laid down by the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62865

British Government, and not by ourselves. When we received a Constitution after the Boer War, many years ago, this Constitution contained manhood suffrage, and that has remained the state of affairs up to to-day, and will probably remain the state of affairs for a long time. The tendencies in South Africa, just as elsewhere, are all democratic. You cannot go back on that manhood suffrage. Once it has come, you will probably pass on from manhood suffrage to universal suffrage. That was the act of the British Government, and not of the people of South Africa.

Extension of Franchise to Indians is impossible.

How are you going to work that in with an Indian franchise? If an Indian franchise were given, it has to be identical; no differentiation would be allowed by Indian public opinion—and quite rightly. Well, the result would be that in Natal, certainly, you would at once have an Indian majority among the voters. But our difficulty is still greater. You have a majority of blacks in the Union, and, if there is to be an equal manhood suffrage over the Union, the whites would be swamped by the blacks; you cannot make a distinction between Indians and Africans; you would be impelled by the inevitable force of logic to go the whole hog, and the result would be that not only would the whites be swamped in Natal by the Indians, but the whites would be swamped all over South Africa by the blacks, and the whole position for which we have striven for 200 years or more now would be given up. So far as South Africa is concerned, therefore, it is a question of impossibility. Sir Tej and his colleagues say, quite rightly, that for India it is a question of dignity. For South Africa, for white South Africa, it is not a question of dignity, but a question of existence, and no Government could for a moment either tamper with this position or do anything to meet the Indian point of view.

1921 Resolution a mistake.

That is why I think the resolution passed in 1921 was a mistake. I thought it then, I still think it, a great mistake. We got on the wrong road there. For the first time we passed a resolution through this Conference by a majority. It has never been done before and I do hope it will never occur again. Our procedure in this Conference has been by way of unanimity. If we cannot convince each other we agree to differ and to let the matter stand over. But, for once, we departed from that most salutary principle, which I consider fundamental to the whole Empire, and we passed that resolution by a majority. I had to stand out. But that has made things worse in South Africa. South Africa now certainly sees that she has to stand to her guns much more resolutely than she would have done otherwise. I think we made a mistake in 1921, and that is why I suggested the other alternative consideration of this subject.

Possession of British Citizenship does not imply right to Franchise.

Sir Tej said that I was subtle, that my memorandum* was a subtle one. I am not subtle, and my memorandum, I thought, was a truism. All that I said was this. There is one British citizenship over the whole Empire, and there should be; that is something solid and enduring; but we must not place a wrong interpretation upon that: we must not derive from the one British citizenship rights of Franchise, because that would be a profound mistake. The attitude has been that Franchise does not depend upon British citizenship. It is only in India that this position is not understood. Indians go the length of deriving from their British citizenship the further notion of equal Franchise rights too, and they claim that they may go from India to any other part and enjoy the same Franchise rights as the other portions of the Empire. I think that is a wrong conception. It is wrong not only as regards India, but as regards every part of the Empire. I do not think that an Australian, for instance, should come to South Africa and claim the Franchise there as a matter of course. He is a British subject, and on that footing we are equal in the eye of the law, but, when it comes to the exercise of political Franchise rights, I think that there is a great difference and distinction, and we should recognise that; and where

* See E. 80, also published in Appendix V in Cmd. 1988.

C 62866

a distinction is carried into actual practice, as it is in South Africa, it should not be looked upon as an indignity, as a reflection on the citizens of any Dominion, including India, who come to us and who do not get these rights. That is really all I wish to say about this matter.

India cannot make Question one of Foreign Policy.

I noticed in Sir Tej's statement a remark which almost looked like a threat: that, if India fails in forcing on us the view which she holds so strongly, then she may be compelled to make of it a question of foreign policy. Well, I would say this, you cannot have it both ways. As long as it is a matter of what are the rights of a British subject, it is not a matter of foreign policy; it is a matter entirely domestic to the British Empire. If it becomes a question of foreign policy, then Indians cannot claim on the ground of their British citizenship any more the recognition of any particular rights. Once they appeal to a tribunal, whether it be the League of Nations or whatever it be, outside the British Empire, they can no longer use as an argument the common British citizenship. I want to keep it there. I want it to be recognised that you must not drive it too far, and you must not derive from that citizenship claims which you cannot uphold.

Comment on Speech of Maharajah of Alwar.

Let me just say this in regard to what fell from the Maharajah. He said that, if we do not invite him, that he will invite himself.

The Maharajah of Alwar: I did not quite say that.

General Smuts: Let me say this, Maharajah. Nobody would be more welcome in South Africa than you would be, and I would welcome nothing more than that you should come as a great representative of India to look into conditions in South Africa yourself, convince yourself of the situation there, and convince yourself also that, apart from the far-reaching political difficulties we have, our fundamental attitude towards our Indian fellow-citizens is one of justice and fair play. I do not think that our Indian fellow-subjects in South Africa can complain of injustice. It is just the opposite. They have prospered exceedingly in South Africa. People who have come there as coolies, people who have come there as members of the depressed classes in India, have prospered. Their children have been to school; they have been educated, and their children and grandchildren to-day are many of them men of great wealth.

I noticed the other day that the Reverend Mr. Andrews, who is a great friend of the Indian cause in South Africa, publicly advised Indians in South Africa not to go back to India. The Government of South Africa actually pay for their tickets, give them pocket money and other inducements in order voluntarily to return to India, and thousands avail themselves of that policy and return to India. That gentleman, who is a great protagonist of the Indian cause, has publicly advised Indians not to fall in with that policy. He says: "You will be worse off in India." I quote this to show that there is no unfairness, no injustice to our fellow-citizens in India; but, when they come forward and make claims which politically, we cannot possibly recognise, our attitude of friendliness will worsen and the position as regards them will become very difficult and complicated.

The Maharajah of Alwar: I should just like to get my mind a little more clear on one point, and that is with regard to settlers in Natal who have built their houses, invested their money and spent their money there. What would you propose about them?

General Smuts: They have all the rights, barring the rights of voting for Parliament and Provincial Councils, that any white citizens in South Africa have. Our law draws no distinction whatever. It is only political rights that are in question. There, as I have explained to you, we are up against a stone wall and we cannot get over it.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 14 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62867

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTER OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, IRISH FREE STATE.

Sympathy of Irish Free State with Indian Claims.

Mr. Fitzgerald: Prime Minister, in our country I do not need to say we have no racial distinctions at all. Indians in Ireland have the same position as Englishmen or South Africans. It seems to me that this matter falls more or less into two classes. There are the Indians in the Dominions and the Indians in the Colonies and mandated territories, &c. Now we recognise the Dominions as independent Sovereign countries, having a perfect right to look after their own affairs, and we really have no right to interfere there, and in the mandated territories and Protectorates they are controlled by the British Government and we have no responsibility. So all that I can do really is to give an opinion. We have no responsibility in the matter; but, if we had responsibility, we should have to protest very strongly against any racial distinctions being made. We who are not Anglo-Saxons have suffered a good deal in the past from being treated as an inferior race. Putting myself in the position of an Indian, I do not think that the Indian representatives here are of an equality with us, because they are not really here in a representative capacity; they are not really sent by an independent Indian Government, and they cannot really be regarded as equal with the rest of us. If I were an Indian, putting myself in their position, I would recognise that this hypersensitiveness that they have about their treatment outside of India arises really from the fact that they have not, so far, reached the degree of self-government that the rest of us have reached. With regard to Indians in the Protectorates and so on, the Government which is primarily responsible for those places being the Government which is also responsible for India, it seems to us unjust that there should be any distinction drawn between Indians and other British subjects in those places.

Progress towards Self-Government only Solution.

At the same time it seems to me that the only solution of this trouble, which comes from racial sensitiveness, is for Indians to be in a position to make real reciprocal arrangements and to make bargain for bargain. The only way that this Indian trouble is really going to be solved is for that progress towards self-government —whatever form of self-government they consider suitable for themselves—for that progress to be hastened with all speed so as to avoid what Sir Tej and the Maharajah indicated—revolutionary methods taking the place of evolutionary methods. We in our country must necessarily sympathise whole-heartedly with the Indians both in their protests against their inferior race treatment and in their feelings as to the freedom of their country. We also recognise quite plainly here that we have no right to dictate to the other Dominions as to what they do in their own areas. That is all I have to say, Prime Minister.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Tribute to presentation of case for India.

Mr. Warren: I must add my congratulations to the Indian Delegation upon the eloquence and force of the speeches they have made.

No Disabilities in Newfoundland.

As far as Newfoundland is concerned, we have no distinction whatever. As long as an Indian is a British subject he can vote in Newfoundland in the same way as an Australian, Canadian, or New Zealander, or anybody else. We have no restriction on immigration and I may say that, if an Indian is not a British subject, the mere fact that he is an Indian is no bar to his becoming naturalised and obtaining the vote in that way in Newfoundland. I do not want to express any opinion upon the internal affairs of any other sister Dominion.

C 62868

STATEMENT BY SIR TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Prime Minister, I do not know whether what I have to say will take too long at this stage, but I can say all I have to say as briefly as possible.

Mr. Baldwin: Can we finish in a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes?

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I hope I shall finish in twenty minutes' time.

Lord Peel: Would it be possible to meet for an hour this afternoon?

Mr. Baldwin: Not this afternoon—there is a Cabinet.

Lord Peel: I want also to raise the question of publication.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I would rather it was not postponed if that is possible.

The Maharajah of Alwar: I could not compress into a quarter of an hour what I have to say after all that has been already said.

Mr. Massey: I think perhaps we could finish by 2 o'clock.

Mr. Baldwin: It will be quite impossible for the Maharajah to speak too, and also Lord Peel.

Lord Peel: I want to speak for only four minutes.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I will compress my remarks as far as possible; I will not go into details.

Mr. Baldwin: Then will you say what you have to say, and then I am afraid we must adjourn.

Appreciation of Reception of Proposals.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Prime Minister, I must tell you, and through you your colleagues in His Majesty's Government, and the Dominion Prime Ministers that I could not have hoped to have had a better hearing here. Therefore my thanks are due to one and all of you, even though it may not be that I see eye to eye with you in some of your remarks.

Comments on Statement of Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I will first of all refer to the speech delivered this morning by His Grace the Duke of Devonshire. I listened with deep interest to his speech, and let me express to him my thanks for the manner in which he has expressed sympathy with our general aspirations in this matter. His Grace was good enough to say that he did not want to mislead India in regard to Kenya, and, therefore, he spoke frankly. I hope His Grace will pardon me if I also desire to be equally frank in giving expression to our position. I did not expect at any moment during the last few days that I have been working over this question that I would go back with the Kenya decision reversed. That was not what I was aiming at; but I want to make it abundantly plain that I do not wish the substance of my proposition to be affected. The language of the resolution is a matter for settlement; but it is of the very essence of that resolution that Kenya must come in. Secondly, I want to explain that, while His Grace has said that His Majesty's Government are not prepared to accept the resolution in regard to Kenya, my country will refuse to accept that decision as final. Thirdly, I will make it plain that the Committee I have proposed should, in conferring with the Colonial Office, have the widest scope—that is to say, it must discuss not only questions affecting other Colonies, but also those relating to Kenya: otherwise I do not see that you can possibly satisfy my countrymen.

That is all I wanted to say with regard to the Committee and its dealings with the Colonial Office here. Well, I will now pass on from the Duke of Devonshire and the Colonial Office to the Dominion Ministers.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 14 15 16 70
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes
PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62869

Comments on Statement of Prime Minister of Canada.

I have listened with very great interest to the speech of Mr. Mackenzie King, and must thank him heartily for supporting me and accepting the substance of my proposal.

Interpretation of Resolution of 1921 Conference.

There are just one or two words with regard to his speech that I would like to say. He referred to his view, or rather the construction put in his Parliament, on the Resolution of 1921, and he read out a passage from Mr. Meighen's speech. Now let me tell him that we are here sitting, not as lawyers, nor are we sitting in a Court of Law; our functions are quite different. I suppose that we would claim that the functions of a statesman are very much higher than those of a lawyer, although I myself happen to be associated with that noble profession. Now that Resolution of 1921 I believe was not drafted by a conveyancing lawyer, it was probably drafted by someone of the statesmen around this table or by someone similar to a statesman, and I would like you and your Parliament to approach it from the point of view of the statesman. I know that as a Prime Minister and as a party politician it may be safe to rely on certain phrases, but let me tell him that it would be a great mistake to dispose of those words "it is desirable" as not morally binding upon him—I do not care whether they are legally binding upon him or not.

Hopes for Good Result from appointment of Committee.

I am inspired by the hope, and particularly by the manner in which Mr. King has spoken, that the result of the Conference of the Committee which we propose to send to Canada with the Committee going to be appointed there to consider the questions of franchise cannot but lead to satisfactory results. I will not anticipate the verdict of the Conference of the two Committees, which Mr. King has to a certain extent attempted to do. I will leave it entirely to the hands of the Committee to come to their own conclusions, and then will be the time for us to discuss how far we are in agreement or how far we are separated. But I recognise his spirit of support and of sympathy with me, and I appreciate that. I do thank you, Mr. Mackenzie King, for the spirit in which you have spoken this morning.

Comments on Speech of Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

From Mr. Mackenzie King I shall pass on to Mr. Bruce, and let me express my unreserved admiration for the manner in which he has spoken this morning, and the tribute he has paid to my countrymen and our civilisation. I note that he considers it unnecessary for my Government to send any Committee to his country because he thinks the problem is such that it may be settled without any discussion. Well, that is encouraging to me, but I do venture to express a hope that, if we do decide to send a Committee just to place our case before him and his Government, he will not refuse to accept that Committee. We do not want to send a Committee to create any agitation in his country—or for the matter of that any agitation in any country—and I can absolutely feel sure that that is not what is at the back of my mind; but, if it is necessary for us to explain our position to you and to help you in the problem, for Heaven's sake do not refuse to accept a Committee like that. We want simply to help you, and, if without receiving a Committee for my Government and my country you can solve the problem, so much the better for you, so much the better for us, and so much the more creditable to you and to your Government.

Comments on Statement of Prime Minister of New Zealand.

Well, my thanks are also due to Mr. Massey. I hope Mr. Massey will recognise that in my speech of Wednesday I thanked him. I very much appreciate his reference to the services of India during the war, and I do sincerely hope that such grievances as there may be in his country will receive sympathetic treatment at his hands. I do hope that he will accept the substance of my

C 62870

Resolution. We wish to help him in every possible way; we do not want to harass him in his own country or in his Government.

Comments on Speech of Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Now from Mr. Massey I propose to pass to General Smuts. I am sorry to miss him here, but I will say he has never replied to the points I raised. He referred to my description of him as subtle: well, if he objects to that I will withdraw it, but I will say that his present speech is remarkably illusory and evasive.

I raised questions with regard to specific grievances, relating to residence, acquisition of land, and trading licences in his country, and I find no expression of opinion upon those questions. He then said my Resolution had nothing to do with him.

It has primarily to do with him. I made it abundantly plain in the course of my speech that I did not make an appeal to him on the basis of the resolution of 1921, but that my appeal was made to him independently of that resolution and that I wanted him to join hands with me in investigating the facts and in trying to devise some methods of solving this problem, which he probably thinks is insoluble, but which does not appear to me to be insoluble. Again, he referred to Mr. Sastri, and to the prejudice he has caused. I have already said what I felt about Mr. Sastri, and I do not want to say more. If Mr. Sastri's fault was that he pleaded for his countrymen in the Dominions, then that is a fault which can reasonably be found with the 320 millions of his countrymen.

Meaning of British Citizenship.

Now I will come to one particular portion of the speech which struck me, based on an entire misconception, legal and constitutional. That is the question of citizenship. He said that India was the only country which probably claimed all political rights merely from the fact that Indians were British citizens. Let me warn him that India is not the only country which holds that view. There are other countries which hold those views. Well, he absolutely confuses the territorial law with personal law; in other words, his position really is this, that, if in my own country I did not enjoy full rights of citizenship, when I go to his country I must be under a disability. I will put to General Smuts, what would have happened if an Irishman, before the new constitution came into force, had gone from Ireland and had settled down in Natal or any other part there and was told: "Because you are not a free nation within your own borders, you dare not claim those rights, although you are qualified according to our Franchise Law to claim them"? There is an essential confusion in the position which General Smuts takes. Really the fact of the matter is this, that you cannot, according to modern law of citizenship and according to the latest development of thought on this subject, have two kinds of citizenship in the same Empire, a higher and a lower.

When I go to your country, and I do satisfy the requirements of the law of franchise, you have no right to tell me that because I am an Indian subject of His Majesty I shall not be entitled to exercise my Parliamentary rights. Therein lies the whole position General Smuts has taken, and, with regard to the disability of Indians in the purchase of townlands and in respect of trade licences and other things, General Smuts, as I have said before, had not a word to say in his speech this morning.

Deprecates rescinding of 1921 Resolution.

Therefore, the position remains this, that while I receive support, substantial and general, from His Majesty's Government and from all the Dominion Prime Ministers, I have received no support from General Smuts.

On the contrary, he has expressed a desire that the resolution of 1921 should be repealed. I hope for the reputation of this Conference, for the great reputation of the Dominion Prime Ministers and for the reputation of His Majesty's Government, that nothing of the kind will be done, and, though you may tell my countrymen that the problem is undoubtedly a difficult one, I request you also to say that you are trying to discover means of solving it. If you will do that you will change our attitude in regard to great Imperial questions.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69
14 15
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62871

Position of Indians already in South Africa.

There is only one more remark I will make in regard to General Smuts' speech. He referred to the desire for repatriation and to the advice of Mr. Andrews. Let me tell you that, if anyone understands Mr. Andrews or knows him intimately, I do. There are hundreds and thousands of my countrymen in South Africa who cannot even speak their mother tongue. They have settled there, their fathers have settled there, and it is very easy to understand how difficult they will find it to leave a land in which they and their fathers and grandfathers have lived. It is for those reasons that Mr. Andrews advised, and it is for those reasons that I should advise them, not to leave that country, but to fight their battles until their position is recognised some day or other as that of equal citizens.

Meaning of allusion to "Foreign Policy."

General Smuts said that as a British subject I could not claim that this problem would pass from the stage of a domestic problem to that of a foreign problem. He misunderstood me. It is not difficult to foresee a stage being reached when even the Government of India, whom he has attacked over its attitude in regard to Kenya, but which I must admire for the very same attitude which it did take, may find it necessary to appeal to His Majesty's Government, and to say, that one part of the Empire is standing against the other, and it is for you, His Majesty's Government, now to treat this problem inside your own Commonwealth as you would deal with a problem of foreign policy. That is what I meant, and I do anticipate a stage like that being reached at no distant date in so far as the relation of India with South Africa is concerned.

Comment on Statements of Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald and of Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

Lastly, I will pass on to what my friend, Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald, said. No one could be more happy or contented than myself if he could help me to get self-government for India to-day, but that is a matter between us and His Majesty's Government. I see no reason, however, why until we get complete self-government in India we should be treated on a lower footing in King George's Empire outside India. We have a strong sentiment on that point, and there can be no weakening in that sentiment so far as I am concerned and so far as my fellow-countrymen are concerned. There is no one who believes more strongly than I do, or is working harder than I am, to win self-government for India, and, God willing, I do hope to win it notwithstanding any doubts that may be entertained by members of His Majesty's Government. But I will not allow those considerations to affect my position in regard to the status of Indians overseas. Suppose we get Dominion self-government to-morrow in India, the problem will still have to be faced. Therefore let us not mix up the two. I should be very glad indeed if the Conference would endorse a resolution in favour of self-government, but I want them to endorse a resolution also in regard to Indians and their position overseas. I must also thank Mr. Warren for the support he has given me.

Wishes to press Proposal for Resolution.

There is only one word that remains for me to say. When I moved that resolution I perhaps did not make it quite clear that I was moving it. I merely said: "My resolution is as follows." I wish the Conference to understand that I definitely moved that resolution. I have already said I am open to argument in regard to the phraseology of it so long as the substance remains and so long as Kenya finds a place in it. That is a matter which is between me and the Colonial Office and could be sent up to you later on, but I do wish to move that resolution, and I beg your support; at any rate I am entitled to ask for the support of the general idea embodied in that resolution. I do wish it to be understood that, so far as I am concerned, I stand by the resolution of 1921 and by the principle of equality. I do not wish to put any larger interpretation on the resolution than is justified or is just, but do not let me give you the impression that there is any weakening on my part so far as the resolution of 1921 is concerned or so far as the supplementary resolution which I had the honour to put before you on Wednesday last is concerned. I thank you, Prime Minister, and all the other Prime Ministers.

C 62872

Question of Publication.

Lord Peel: Prime Minister, may I just raise a question of publication again because we have adjourned the discussion. Is there any objection, do the Dominions see any objection, to the speeches of the Indian delegates and their own being published anyhow in India? There is a good deal of impatience on the subject, and, after the very sympathetic speeches they have made, I myself do not see what objection there would be.

Mr. Baldwin: I was wondering if it would be a good thing to refer the whole thing to a Committee to decide in regard to publication. That could be done without interfering with what we are doing here and will prevent a good deal of discussion here; refer it to the Secretary of State for the Colonies and yourself and representatives from the other Dominions here.

Lord Peel: Would it be possible to meet to-morrow?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, that shall be seen to.

Sir Maurice Hankey: Three o'clock to-morrow afternoon is clear.

Mr. Baldwin: We resume this discussion at 3·30 on Wednesday afternoon.

(The proceedings then terminated.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 29, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62873

SECRET.

E. 14th Meeting (1923).

E 38

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE FOURTEENTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 31, 1923, AT 3·30 P.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Senator the Hon. R. V. WILSON, Honorary Minister in charge of Departments of Health and Migration, Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Professor JOHN MACNEILL, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The Right Hon. Sir JOHN ANDERSON, G.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Home Office.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Lieutenant-Colonel C. W. G. WALKER D.S.O., Assistant Secretary, Committee of Imperial Defence.

Lieutenant-Colonel Sir WOLSELEY HAIG, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., C.M.G., C.B.E., Political Secretary to His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62874

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B., (Secretary.)
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir Robert R. Garran, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. Skelton.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. Thomson, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.
Mr. P. McGilligan.

India.
Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

DEATH OF Mr. BONAR LAW.

Mr. Baldwin: I think as Mr. Bonar Law summoned this Conference it would be most seemly if we passed a Resolution, which I will ask Sir Maurice Hankey to draw up later, of profound regret and of sympathy with his family, which we can send to Lady Sykes. I am sure that will be the universal wish.*

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Separatist Movement in Rhineland.

Lord Curzon: It has been suggested to me that I should read to the Conference the telegram which I have sent, with the approval of the Government, on the issue that was raised the other day by General Smuts, who asked what line we were taking about the Separatist Movement in Germany. I said that, in so far as the Separatist Movement involved separation from the German State and the German Reich, we were dead against it, and that we had said so to Lord Kilmarnock. The suggestion was made that we might say it with even greater emphasis to our Allies. I think that was a very sound suggestion, and, acting upon it, we have sent the following telegram:—

"In view of the situation created by the Separatist movement in the Rhineland and other parts of Germany, His Majesty's Government feel it incumbent upon them, as signatories of the Treaty of Versailles, to call the serious attention of their Allies to the grave consequences which would follow from the setting up of independent sovereign States carved out of territories within the existing frontiers of Germany.

"Such a disruption of the Reich would materially affect the status of Germany as a contracting party to the treaty, so much so that in certain important respects the latter would automatically cease to operate, and would require complete revision.

"It would, therefore, in the absence of any fresh agreement, be both inconsistent with the treaty obligations, and contrary to the interests, of the Allied signatories of the Treaty of Versailles to recognise any such independent sovereign States, and the attempt to constitute them should receive no countenance.

"His Majesty's Government trust that the Government to which you are accredited will find itself in agreement with them on this point.

"I request Your Excellency (you) to make a verbal communication, in the above sense, to the Minister for Foreign Affairs."

That telegram was sent to Paris, Brussels and Rome, and was repeated for information to Washington and Berlin.

* For resolution, as adopted, see Section V of the published Report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987).

C 62875

POSITION OF INDIANS IN OTHER PARTS OF THE EMPIRE. CONTINUATION OF DISCUSSION.

Mr. Baldwin: I will now ask Lord Peel to resume the discussion on the position of Indians in the Empire.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Thanks for Reception of Proposal of Indian Delegation.

Lord Peel: I desire to thank most sincerely the Members of the Conference for the very cordial and sympathetic way in which they have received our proposals about the position of Indians in the Empire. I thank them also for the high place that they have assigned to this question among Empire problems. I thank them for the complete grasp that they have displayed of this difficult business, not as an isolated or local or Indian question, but in its Imperial aspect. I am grateful to them for the complete frankness and fulness with which they have explained the views of those they represent.

Summary of Results of Discussion.

In opening this discussion, I explained that the intensity of the feeling aroused in India was due to the opinion widely held there, that the disabilities of Indians were based on distinction of colour, and were badges of racial inferiority. I did not associate myself with that view. I believed it to be mistaken. The course of this discussion has shown that I was amply justified. Any impartial person reviewing the statements made will find it impossible to prove that any general ban is maintained against Indians in the Empire or that throughout the Empire they are placed in an inferior status; or again, that such disabilities as they may suffer from are based on colour or racial grounds.

The Duke of Devonshire has shown that in the West Indian Colonies—British Guiana, Jamaica, Trinidad—Indians enjoy the same rights as other British subjects. The same, I believe, is true in Ceylon and Mauritius.

Mr. Mackenzie King has told us that in eight out of nine provinces in Canada Indians enjoy full rights of citizenship. If in one province there are exceptions to the general rule, these exceptions are based, not on the colour distinction, but on rather complicated social and political considerations.

Mr. Bruce has told us that representatives of every shade of political thought in Australia have shown sympathy with the claim that lawfully domiciled Indians should enjoy full citizen rights. He believes that Australian public opinion is ready to welcome, as far as the position of domiciled Indians is concerned, any measure which is conceived in the interests of the Empire as a whole.

General Smuts said, "It is not a question of colour; it is a different principle. . . . . It is the case of a small civilisation, a small community, finding itself in danger of being overwhelmed by a much older and more powerful civilisation; it is the economic competition from people who have entirely different standards and viewpoints from ourselves."

The same sentiments have been expressed by the representatives of the other Dominions, and notably by Mr. Massey. These opinions, so remarkably similar in tone, of this great body of Empire statesmen, must surely bring conviction and comfort to any Indian whose feelings may have been injured or whose sense of dignity may have been impaired by a contrary view. Let their suspicions and their doubts be allayed by these declarations of the Empire leaders, sent out to the world from this Conference.

Not desirable to press Resolution.

Let me now consider whether any action should be taken on the definite proposals placed before the Conference by my colleague, Sir Tej Sapru. He was not concerned, nor was the Delegation concerned, so much with his concrete proposals as with the attitude that would be taken up by the Prime Ministers in their different Dominions on this subject. I consider that the position of the Indians within the Empire has been most notably advanced in this

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 15 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62876

Conference. Mr. Bruce has stated that he thinks that further enquiry is unnecessary, but that, on his return to Australia, he will consult with his colleagues and see what action can be taken. Mr. Mackenzie King has reaffirmed his statement about the revision of the Federal Law, and he is quite willing, if it is thought desirable to send a Delegation to Canada, to appoint a group to meet and confer with such Delegation. I rather gather, however, that the passing of this particular resolution might not necessarily assist in obtaining the result which we desire. General Smuts, I am afraid, will not be able to support the resolution. General Smuts, it is true, did not support the resolution of 1921. I should like to say that I do not rest my case entirely on the resolution. If there had been no resolution of 1921, this problem would still be urgent and pressing. The resolution of 1921 stands, but I rest my case not merely upon a formula but upon the broad equities of the case and an appeal for justice and Imperial unity. I am quite aware of the difficulties of South Africa, but I hope General Smuts, when he returns, while alive to his own difficulties, will retain a vivid consciousness of our own.

It has been said that the Empire Conference should be unanimous in its resolutions. I think that, if this resolution is pressed, some members might be disposed not to vote for it; not because they do not sympathise with the end to be attained, but because they think this particular means is either unnecessary or perhaps not desirable. Such a vote, therefore, might create a totally false impression in India of the real situation. I ask my friend, Sir Tej Sapru, whether he might not consider it advisable not to press his resolution. But I am very anxious that it should be made quite plain in India what are the results that have been attained. I think it would be most valuable if a short note could be added to the Report of the Conference showing clearly what are the practical results of this discussion and what India has gained.

STATEMENT BY THE MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR.

The Maharajah of Alwar: In this world of ours a great deal, if not everything, depends on how far, and how, we are able to control our human nature and in what channels we can guide it in order to achieve successful results. It is easy enough to see the dark patches, to brood over difficulties, to exaggerate and enlarge upon them, and finally to be overcome with remorse, repentance or despair.

But history teaches us the great lesson that the world advances and does not recede, when, without deluding ourselves, we are able to buckle our determination and throw our vision beyond the clouds on to the silver lining. Humanity, after all, behind which shines the radiance of the Godhead, is not so black as our imaginations and our unfulfilled desires and hopes are likely sometimes to paint it. Stone upon stone can steadily be built into an edifice with a single-hearted purpose, with the help of cement of our goodwill and toleration.

Objects of Conference.

I conceive that our Conference of the members of the British Empire has assembled in order to shed light over the dark patches, to exercise our determination in subscribing our quota to solve difficult problems, and, instead of hypnotising ourselves with pessimism, to enable us to look ahead to the dawn which must invariably follow the night.

Acknowledgments.

India did not figure in the Agenda of our Conference when we assembled around this table, but, as an Indian, I thank the Prime Minister and the British Government for having agreed to our suggestion to set aside a day for the discussion of the important problem of Indians overseas. We owe acknowledgments for letting the discussion extend to a much longer time than originally conceived, in order to give everyone an opportunity to unburden their mind and to put forward their points of view.

C 62877

Summary of Previous Discussion, and thanks to Prime Ministers and other Speakers.

In my own personal capacity I said at the commencement of the Conference that rightly or wrongly—and I believe rightly—I came with the determination of giving co-operation and goodwill, and I am happy to be able to acknowledge to-day that during our discussions we have found the full measure of it.

I thank the Prime Minister of Canada for having given a very welcome lead, in viewing our problem, relating to his Dominion, from a broad point of view.

On behalf of my Order I thank Mr. Bruce for his sympathy, and the Prime Ministers of New Zealand and of Newfoundland for the very warm and cordial support of India as related to their Dominions.

From Ireland came a very warm-hearted response towards their fellow-citizens of the Empire in my country.

I hope I may even thank General Smuts for such kind references as he has made for my countrymen, and I thank him for extending to me personally an invitation to come to South Africa to see for myself the problems and difficulties that exist. I sincerely hope that I may be able to accept his very kind invitation and I almost wish I was going back with him to his country. But at the present moment this is not feasible; but that invitation will certainly not pass into oblivion, but will remain in a tender corner of my heart, and I hope for the sake of my country I may be able to respond to it at no great distant date. I make it clear, however, that I should like to come in my personal capacity and not as a representative of my country or of my Order, for that would be the best way to enhance my own personal knowledge of the difficulties that exist and to understand the problems that exist in that country which are, perhaps, the main sources of the whole question having come up so prominently.

General Smuts will appreciate, however, that, although I may deprive myself of coming as a representative, I shall still come as an Indian and as one in whose heart these questions undoubtedly rankle, but who, for his personal satisfaction—and if he can be of any use and is desired to be of any use to his country—will be able to do so, while at the same time keeping in mind the broader view of trying fully to appreciate the difficulties that exist on the different sides.

Position of Indians in Canada.

Now what is the position of Indians overseas as we see it to-day on the bright side, if you look? Mr. Mackenzie King has told us that in Canada there are eight provinces in which no legal disability exists as regards Indians, and where, I understand, they have equal rights of franchise.

Mr. Mackenzie King: There are nine provinces. They have no legal disabilities; there is a political disability in one; that is all.

In Australia.

The Maharajah of Alwar: In Australia, although the domiciled Indians amount only to about 2,000, we have the promise of the Australian Premier that they will be treated sympathetically and that this question has been the subject of considerable public discussion and the representatives of every shade of political thought have shown sympathy with the claim that lawfully domiciled Indians should enjoy full citizen rights and finally that, so far as the position of Indians domiciled in Australia is concerned, any measure which is conceived in the interests of the Empire as a whole would be welcomed.

In New Zealand.

In New Zealand the number of Indians is small, but the spirit which recognises no difference of race, colour or creed is indeed one that should inspire not only our admiration, but also our gratitude, and the Prime Minister of New Zealand has told us that they give the Indian residents in New Zealand practically the

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 38 15 39 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62878

same privileges which are enjoyed by people of the Anglo-Saxon race, and that there is practically no difference between them.

It is even a happy augury to hear words come out of the mouth of this responsible Statesman that the Aboriginal Tribes in New Zealand are in exactly the same position as the European residents, and that they have the same privileges in parliamentary and local affairs.

In Newfoundland.

In Newfoundland the numbers of Indians are smaller still, but we are glad to see the same spirit prevailing there as in New Zealand.

In Irish Free State.

In Ireland the problem does not arise, but we nevertheless appreciate and welcome the sentiments on behalf of its Representatives.

In South Africa.

In South Africa, General Smuts has told us that, in the Cape of Good Hope and the Cape Province, Indians are on exactly the same footing as the Whites and have a franchise. General Smuts has hinted to us that in the Transvaal and the Free State the franchise was not laid down by South Africa, but by the British Government.

In Colonies, Protectorates, &c.

And now after the Dominions I come to the Colonies. His Grace the Colonial Secretary has told us that, so far as British Colonies and Protectorates are concerned, in the West Indian Colonies British Indians are under no political or legal disability. This includes British Guiana, Trinidad and Jamaica where there is a considerable Indian population. In Ceylon, qualified British Indians will be eligible for the franchise in the same way as other British subjects. In Mauritius there is no distinction between Indian and other British subjects as regards eligibility for the franchise.

In East Africa there is no restriction on the number or race of the unofficial members who may be nominated on the Councils.

Existing Difficulties.

Now, Gentlemen, I have to say this, that I know some people who read what I have said so far may consider that I have spoken in empty platitudes; and that in doing so I am seeking favours or honour. How far that vision is from my mind it is not necessary to state, but, if looking on the bright side of things is wrong in appreciating the facts that are already before us, then I gladly stand open to the charge and have no bones of contention to pick, but the primary reason why I have taken your time in emphasising these facts is in order to condense what I have already seen, that the whole of the British Empire is not such a dark patch for our countrymen as some would like to believe, and that there is much ground to improve the situation by showing our goodwill and co-operation. This does not mean that I do not appreciate the difficulties where they lie—and they do lie. It is not difficult for human nature to bite or to sting, but those are qualities which do not appeal to me in such an atmosphere as this.

The difficulties that exist with regard to Indians overseas exist I know—and all know—in British Columbia in Canada, in Natal in South Africa, and have reached their climax in Kenya. In British Columbia, Mr. Mackenzie King has told us, very frankly and candidly, that it is a question of Provincial franchise where the Federal Franchise Act supports it which places Indians in a position of disability. Mr. Mackenzie King has said that his action when viewed in India would be very much a matter of the spirit of interpretation—where he is entirely right—for it is the spirit in which we take such things that the problems come before us.

In British Columbia we are told that the problem is not a racial one, but an economic one, and that Mr. Mackenzie King welcomes the proposition made by Sir Tej for a Committee to go to Canada to discuss this question with his Government.

C 62879

The responsible statesmen of Canada have been good enough to say that they welcomed Mr. Sastri and gave him full opportunity to speak and confer with any persons he might wish to do so in order to meet the difficulty, and finally that, when the Federal Law comes up for revision, Canada will take care that Parliament is informed of India's wishes. We sincerely hope that they will pay every favourable consideration to this important point regarding our people.

In Natal, General Smuts has equally candidly explained that if he gave Indians the right to franchise on an equality it could not then be withheld from the native population of South Africa, and would, under the circumstances, flood this portion of the country and demolish the work of the White settlers of 200 years, and this is, indeed, a potent argument and I appreciate the difficulties, but the question as regards Natal, as also of other places where such disabilities exist, does not hinge on the future migrations flooding this country, for, with right understanding, I believe the Government of India's co-operation can be achieved to solve this difficulty, but the question is with regard to Indian settlers who have lived in Natal and who have invested their property and have settled there for several generations. Is it likely that, without the franchise, laws will be passed by those who possess the franchise to oust the Indians from their rightful heritage, since they went to that country under the British flag as peaceful settlers? General Smuts gave the assurance in answer to my question that Indians would have the full rights of citizenship, and the only question concerned with the difficulty was with regard to franchise. I hope that the Prime Minister of South Africa will give this question favourable consideration, not from a local, but from an Imperial point of view, in order to see that no disabilities exist which would hamper the peaceful existence of my countrymen there. It would, indeed, be a useful advance in conciliatory methods if General Smuts could see his way to asking his Parliament to welcome our Committee to go there from India in order to discuss frankly, candidly and, if necessary, quietly, the whole problem as it affects India.

Kenya.

And now I come to Kenya. I believe, from what I am informed and from what I have seen myself, that no question of Indians overseas agitates their minds and gives them more feeling of racial discrimination and loss of self-respect than Indians in Kenya. This I believe to be mainly due to the fact that, while it has been asserted by previous Imperial Conferences that the Dominions have a right to settle their own populations, Kenya is not a self-governing Dominion, but is a Colony administered by the British Government. It is to the British Government, therefore, that Indians look to see that their position, which has already become very awkward in Kenya by the minority of white settlers being given a majority in votes, is not further jeopardised and that they are not placed under disabilities by laws being passed by the majority segregating them or eventually ousting them from positions in which they have invested money in the country which, I understand, they have helped to improve for many years back.

I understand—and if I am wrong in my assumption I hope I will be corrected—that His Grace, holding the charge of the Colonial Office at present, has been good enough to agree that the Committee of India would be welcomed to discuss with him the whole problem, and that the entire question will be fully and sympathetically considered by the Imperial Government from the points of view put forward by the Indian Committee. May I thank His Grace and, through him, the British Government, for this assurance, and earnestly hope that the final results will be an advance on the present situation and give cause for my countrymen to be grateful for assistance?

Personal Position.

On this important problem of Indians overseas I have little more to say, but I wish to add this, that my position as a Delegate

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

c 62880

from India is likely to be misunderstood in some quarters and even in India, and therefore I would like to make it clear.

I have not come here as an elected or selected representative of British India. I have not even been elected or selected by my Brother Princes, or have their mandate.

I think you know that I am not an employee of the British Government, but in accordance with past precedent I have come here as the nominated representative of the Indian Princes and have been invited to work here by the Government of India and the Secretary of State. But, although I carry no mandate for what I say for my Order, I nevertheless happen to be one of them. I am an Indian and I belong to a family who have been loyal and faithful allies of the Crown and its Government. I have, therefore, primarily expressed my own views, but I hope also what I feel to be the views of my Order and my countrymen, or at least some of them.

I have much appreciated the compliment of having been asked to work on this Conference, but, for the sake of my country, I hope that my successor at the next one will be even more fortunate in being elected by my Order to come to this distinguished gathering in consultation, with the approval of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State.

I should welcome indeed if our member for two-thirds of India should be privileged to enjoy the same position, but on this topic I will not attempt to speak as it is outside my purview and because I would be charged with treading on ground on which angels fear to go.

Conclusion.

And now, in conclusion, I will say this. The whole question of Indians overseas is, we are told in many places, an economic problem; that it is not a racial one, to impress upon anyone the inferiority of any particular race. I, at any rate, welcome that sentiment and I feel, now that this goodwill and co-operation is prevailing on all sides, that the whole of this difficult problem will be set at rest—and the earlier the better—within the domains of possibilities, so that India can turn her mind towards her own domestic problems and work out her salvation to be a loyal and integral part of the British Empire.

In conclusion, may I thank the Dominion Prime Ministers for the words that have fallen from their lips, where one said that he certainly desired to see India go ahead; and that the 1921 Resolution passed by the previous Conference is regarded as a pledge which all concerned seem anxious to fulfil and to uphold?

Prime Minister and Gentlemen, I thank you one and all for having created in this room that favourable atmosphere towards my country, which I hope will soon bear practical and tangible results, not only for the sake of the British Empire, but for the sake of one-fifth of the human race.

Mr. Harvey, in giving his views recently, when Lord Curzon presided, said: "We have preferred settlement to argument." That exactly sums up my conclusion, and I hope that I may be permitted to express my final sentiments. Although it is in poetry, I think the words exactly express my views:—

"What then shall be the guerdon
(A great and priceless burden)
Of taut'ning up our Grand Old Empire's Chain?
It shall be for us the Glory
To prove in full the story
Our Brotherhood does not exist in vain.

Don't criticise and grumble;
Don't sneer at every stumble;
Let each one try and see the other's aim:
And if at first we fail
To hear the friendly hail
Let us bear in mind the birthright of our slain.

Like them we'll pull together—
Rose and Wattle, Maple, Heather—
Our own bright Star is rising with the morn;
Aye, let's sail the ship together
Thro' storm and stress of weather,
Onward, ever onward, to the Dawn!"

c 62881

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES, ON BEHALF OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS.

The Duke of Devonshire: I regret to say the Home Secretary is unable to be here this afternoon, but, as a statement* has been circulated to the whole of the Conference which will eventually be published, I would like to make the following observations on his behalf:—

Meaning of Imperial Nationality.

This interesting and frank discussion has brought out in high relief a distinctive characteristic of the British Empire or Commonwealth—an essential unity attaining realisation in varying and independent methods and practices under a great variety of conditions.

At the core lies the vital principle of common British nationality on which the representatives of India have justly and eloquently laid great stress, and which finds expression in General Smuts' words: "The common Kingship is the binding link between the parts of the Empire."

It is not inconsistent with this principle to recognise, as it always has been recognised, that every part of the Empire is free to settle its own domestic concerns, including questions as to the rights to be enjoyed by any person or classes of persons within its territory. In considering problems arising out of this right or freedom it is important not to confuse the issue by any ambiguous use of such words as "citizen" or "citizenship." If those words are used, as they rightly may be, as having a local significance and connoting a status or right which it is within the power of any self-governing Dominion to confer on persons within its territory, they should not at the same time be used as though they were almost synonymous with the Imperial conception of nationality.

Imperial nationality is one and indivisible; local citizenship and the rights and privileges attached thereto may be diverse. If we keep these two conceptions clearly in our minds it ought to be possible, notwithstanding difficulties of detail and practice, to maintain a principle of action consistent alike with Imperial unity and local autonomy.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. Baldwin: After what has been said on behalf of the Dominions and by the Duke of Devonshire on behalf of the British Government, I have little to add.

Result of Indian Proposal as regards Colonies and Protectorates.

I should like first of all to read to the Conference a statement which has been drawn up, as the result of informal discussions, since our last meeting. It sets out, for inclusion in the records of the Conference, the result of Sir Tej Sapru's proposal, so far as it relates to the Colonies and Protectorates. The statement is as follows:—

"The Secretary of State for the Colonies, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, cordially accepted the proposal of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru that there should be full consultation and discussion between the Secretary of State for the Colonies and a Committee appointed by the Government of India upon all questions affecting British Indians domiciled in British Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories. At the same time the Duke was careful to explain that, before decisions were taken as a result of discussion with the Committee, consultations with the local Colonial Governments concerned, and in some cases local enquiry, would be necessary.

"Further, while welcoming the proposal, the Duke of Devonshire reminded the Conference that His Majesty's Government had recently come to certain decisions as to Kenya, which represented in their considered view the very best that could be done in all the circumstances. While he saw no prospect of these decisions being modified he would give careful attention

* See E. 80, also published in Appendix V in Cmd. 1988.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 38 15 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62882

to such representations as the Committee appointed by the Government of India might desire to make to him.

"Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, while taking note of the above statement of the Duke, desired to make plain that the recent Kenya decisions could not be accepted as final by the people of India."

Publication of Speeches.

I am glad to think that, on this occasion, we have been able to arrange for the speeches made at this Table to be published. This constitutes a departure from the procedure at the 1921 Conference, when only the resolution which has been quoted here more than once was made public. We shall, of course, include a brief summary of the proceedings when a report on the work of the Conference comes to be prepared.

Helpful Nature of Discussion.

I hope that the Indian delegation will feel, as I feel, that the discussions we have had on this subject have been most helpful and encouraging. There has not merely been goodwill and an earnest attempt to meet India's wishes so far as varying political and economic circumstances in different parts of the Empire permit, but we can record quite definite results. These are due to the growing sense of partnership among all the many peoples and races who owe common allegiance to the Crown. It is this sense of Partnership which I should like to stress. India's value to the Empire and the Empire's value to India are becoming every day more clearly seen. The British Commonwealth of Nations rests upon no narrow basis. It is the greatest association known to the world of many races bound together ever more intimately by common interests and by mutual desire to help each other. Here at these Conferences we can with full freedom learn each other's problems and each other's point of view, and India can, I am sure, feel that the magnitude of her share in our common partnership, and of her contribution to the common weal, is being realised in increasing measure. I am confident that the members of the Conference who have spoken for India will feel, both from the manner in which their representations have been received and from the actual results achieved, that mutual goodwill can and does help each and all of us to solve our common problems. I think the Conference as a whole can congratulate itself on what has been effected.

STATEMENT BY SIR TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Before the Conference leaves this very important subject, I desire to take up just two minutes of your time in making my own position quite clear.

Effect of Discussion on Indian Opinion.

I am completely satisfied with the kindness of my colleagues from the Dominions, and I am sure that Indians throughout the Empire will derive new hope and encouragement from their attitude. This, of course, does not apply to South Africa, regarding which country I had my say on Monday last. As regards the Colonial Office, I am very glad to notice that the Committee to be appointed as I suggested is not to be restricted in its scope to certain specified Colonies. To me, as an Indian, it is, of course, disappointing that the Duke, speaking last Monday, saw no prospect of modifying the Kenya decisions, which, as I have already made clear, can never be accepted in India. But his agreement with the principle of my scheme, and his consent to give careful attention to such representations as the Committee may lay before him, inspires me with the hope that the door is not barred, and that the Colonial Office may be shown the way to an acceptable solution. I shall recommend those with whom I have any influence, both in India and elsewhere, to work through this Committee to obtain an amelioration of such conditions as they and every Indian regard as incompatible with our national dignity and with our position as equal subjects in the Empire of our common Sovereign.

C 62883

No need to Move Formal Resolution.

May I here just also refer to the expression of opinion made by Lord Peel to-day with regard to the Resolution that I intended to move on the last occasion? I thoroughly appreciate the advice that has been given to me to-day by Lord Peel. I have noted with great pleasure the spirit of cordiality shown by my colleagues from all over the Empire, except General Smuts. I take their speeches as very encouraging, and I note that what I wanted really has been achieved, namely, that they recognise the character of the Resolution of 1921, and that they have given me a hope that they would do something material to achieve the end which we have in view, namely, the accomplishment of the principle of equality. Most of them have accepted my suggestions about Committees; Mr. Bruce thinks that he can do without a Committee. As I said on a former occasion, so much the more honourable and creditable to him and to his country. It is because I have this support from all the Dominion Prime Ministers excepting one, that it is unnecessary for me to move my Resolution formally.

Thanks to Lord Peel.

Lastly, will you allow me to say one word about Lord Peel? Throughout the anxious days I have had to spend upon this question within the last two weeks I have received nothing but unreserved support and encouragement from him, and I am sure that, when my countrymen come to know how strongly he has stood by me, they will realise that not only the Government of India and the great Statesman who presides over that country have identified themselves with our national sentiment with regard to this matter, but that the Secretary of State has also done the same. May I thank you, Sir, on behalf of myself and on behalf of those whom I represent? That is all, Sir.

NATIONALITY AND NATURALISATION.

Mr. Baldwin: The next business on the Agenda is to confirm the Reports of certain Committees. The first one is the Committee of the Home Secretary on Nationality questions.* Sir John Anderson is here representing the Home Secretary, and if anyone wants to ask him any questions I think they had better do so; otherwise, I suggest the Conference adopt the Report of the Committee which has been circulated. Has anyone anything to say? General Smuts, have you anything to say?

General Smuts: No, I fully agree, Prime Minister.

Mr. Massey: I do not quite understand the position, Prime Minister. I take it the question has been put to a Committee and the Committee has agreed.

General Smuts: That is so: these Resolutions were agreed upon by a Sub-Committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I think we may take it as agreed.

(Agreed.)

CONDOMINIUM IN THE NEW HEBRIDES.

The second one is that of the Committee on the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides.†

Lord Curzon: The Foreign Office was represented at this Committee, but I was unable to attend myself. The Conference will note the central part of the first Resolution.

It says: "These negotiations should in the first instance take the form of a proposal that the British and French Governments should jointly approach the League of Nations with a view to a partition of the Islands between the British Empire and France under two separate Mandates." Suppose the French do not agree to that, and I do not suppose they will agree for a moment——

Mr. Massey: Not for a moment.

* See Appendix I.

† See Appendix II.

[10879]

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Lord Curzon: What are you going to do? That means a blind lane. We have got no further. I do not know what arguments were employed at the Committee, but I should think that the Committee would probably have considered whether, in those circumstances, supposing this attempt fails, it would be desirable to suggest that France, under the League of Nations, should acquire a Mandate for the whole of the Islands. I do not know whether that has been considered.

Mr. Bruce: That was raised and considered. So far as Australia is concerned, I took the view that we should probably be prepared to accept that as a possible way of getting some definite settlement instead of the very unsatisfactory position we have at the moment. but I think Mr. Massey takes an entirely different view of the situation.

Lord Curzon: Does Mr. Massey contemplate that if this arrangement breaks down we remain where we are now?

Mr. Massey: I see no other course to adopt, Foreign Secretary. I know perfectly well that the people I represent would not think for one moment of handing the whole of the Islands over to France. Bad as the present arrangement is, the other would be very much worse.

Mr. Bruce: Under a Mandate?

Mr. Massey: I do not take any notice of Mandates.

Lord Curzon: Is the cause for which you are speaking that of the Missionaries?

Mr. Massey: Yes, and the Missionaries have a very strong following behind them.

Lord Curzon: Were it not for the Missionaries and the very strong support behind them, you would not pay very much attention to the matter?

Mr. Massey: The Presbyterian Church in New Zealand is absolutely solid about it, and I know they are backed up by the other Churches. I do not think France will move.

Duke of Devonshire: There were three alternatives; for us to have them, to which France would not agree; or to give them up to France; or to get a partition.

Mr. Bruce: Or a mandate without a partition. That is a fourth alternative.

Lord Salisbury: It is partition we are talking about.

Mr. Massey: I think we could accept a partition.

Lord Curzon: My suggestion would have been a fifth one, and I understand Mr. Bruce is rather favourably inclined to it.

General Smuts: Is there not a sixth solution—let well alone.

Lord Curzon: Unfortunately, it is not well, it is very bad.

Mr. Bruce: I assume that we cannot take the alternative, that France should be given a Mandate over the Islands—which I do not like very much, though I think it is better than leaving things as they are. If we suggested the first course, of a Mandate for both countries, and that were not accepted, I suppose we should only be thrown back where we are at present, and we could try partition: I am not very hopeful that the French would agree to it, but the situation in Australia, quite apart from the situation in these Islands, is of such a character that something must be done. It is undoubtedly very bad. The question is becoming one of: "What is Great Britain's attitude towards this question?" The matter is approaching a very serious scandal—in fact, it is a scandal—and I have had, in my short tenure, two deputations representative of the whole of the Scotch Church and supported by the Anglican Church. These deputations have been taking place for quite a number of years past; there have been Press Campaigns about it, and there is an unfortunate feeling growing up with regard to the whole of Britain's policy in this matter. Something definite should be done, and, even if nothing came of it,

I am perfectly certain it would do a great deal to allay that feeling, if we even put forward a proposal that there should be a Mandate by the League of Nations to both Britain and France. That is the reason why I am prepared to support almost anything being done, so long as some action is taken.

Lord Curzon: I agree with all that. Of course, I look at it from the Foreign Office view alone, and my desire is to remove any obstacles in the way of happy and friendly relations with France. I should like us to proceed with the further suggestion I have intimated, although the Conference is not likely to agree to it. I put it to Mr. Massey and to Mr. Bruce. The second part of the Resolution contemplates the cession of a harbour in some part of the Eastern Pacific, but they are not likely to give you anything in return for the proposal you make in the first part of the Resolution. We are ceding nothing to them at all for which we could exact a return, but if, on the other hand, the proposal in the first part breaks down, and we then make a suggestion that a Mandate might be taken by France for the Islands as a whole, surely you would have a much stronger case for asking for something in return and your chance of getting your harbour in the Eastern Pacific would be increased. Would not that affect your point of view, Mr. Massey?

Mr. Massey: No.

Mr. Bruce: I think there is some misunderstanding; it may be a misunderstanding on my part. I imagine the second proposal, amounting to an exchange of our interest in the New Hebrides for some other port in the Pacific, would certainly involve handing over these Islands to France.

Duke of Devonshire: Much the most important part would be handed over to France.

Lord Curzon: In the partition.

Mr. Bruce: Yes.

Sir James Masterton Smith: I think it was contemplated that if there was such a thing as a partition under a Mandate the French share might be considerably greater than the British share, and something should be given in the Pacific to make good the balance.

Lord Curzon: I see.

Mr. Massey: I have had so many negotiations with the French in the Pacific in matters connected with French interests there that I am hopeless of doing anything with regard to the New Hebrides. I know the feeling on the part of the people. I have had many deputations, deputations from the Churches and from others interested, over and over again, but the great trouble is this, that France is not successful as a coloniser. Take any of the islands under France in the Pacific—and there are many of them; I am glad to say we are quite friendly with France, we do not fall out with them—within a comparatively short time, say, half a century, there will not be a native left in the Hebrides, and in the meantime France is absorbing lands which really belong to the natives and which they should be cultivating on their own account. I suggest that we should go on with what is a good object, that we ask the French Government whether they are prepared to accept that, and, if they are not prepared to accept that, whether they have any counter-proposal to make. If they have a counter-proposal to make, let us consider it; something may come out of it. Personally, I do not believe they will do anything. I have tried to suggest an exchange for a small island in the direct line between New Zealand and the Panama Canal, which is absolutely useless, on which there are no residents, but where there is a harbour which could be improved, but we could not get them to move. They made no suggestion; they simply say they are going to stick to the island, and the same in other directions; I believe it is quite hopeless. All the same, I believe in letting the proposal go forward and getting a reply from the French Government.

Mr. Baldwin: I think the Conference decides to adopt the report.

Lord Curzon: But not to publish the resolutions.

(Agreed.)

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 38 15 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62886

TERRITORIAL WATERS.

Mr. Baldwin: The next item is Territorial Waters.*

Lord Curzon: We had a meeting and came to a conclusion which is reported in the paper. We had a Committee over which I had the honour of presiding, which was attended by some of the Prime Ministers and representatives of the others, and, after a fairly full discussion, we arrived at an absolute agreement on the resolutions which are recorded in this paper.

(Agreed.)

NEGOTIATION, SIGNATURE AND RATIFICATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. Baldwin: The fourth and last of these reports is that concerning the Negotiation, Signature and Ratification of Treaties.†

Lord Curzon: This was a second Committee over which I had the honour of presiding, and when we examined with great care this very important and delicate question, namely, the signature and ratification of treaties, I think the Prime Ministers were all present at the meeting. If not, they were all represented, but I think they were all present. There again, I am glad to say, we arrived at unanimous conclusions, which are expressed in the various clauses of this paper. We dealt successively with negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties, and we laid down the procedure which will be adopted in future in regard to all those three points.

Procedure at Washington.

Mr. Massey: The Foreign Secretary will recollect we had some little discussion in regard to the proposals which are now before the Conference, and I think to a certain extent we were at cross purposes. I made a statement with regard to the procedure at the Washington Conference, and I noticed that my statement was received with a certain amount of doubt; that is to say, I think certain members of the Conference thought it was not quite correct. Since then I have taken the opportunity of looking up the report furnished by the New Zealand representative, Sir John Salmond, to me as Prime Minister. Sir John Salmond is a man with an Empire reputation, which is well known in almost every centre of the Empire; and I can say this, that he is admitted to be one of the ablest jurists within the Empire. Now this is what Sir John Salmond says about the proceedings at Washington. It is very short. I am not going to delay the Conference any longer than I can help. This is what he says:—

> "The procedure of the Washington Conference was in itself a clear indication that the Dominions were there not in their own right as quasi-independent States, but merely as constituent portions of an undivided Empire. When any question came to be voted upon for the purpose of ascertaining whether there existed that unanimous consent which was necessary for a treaty, the question was put to the British Delegation as a whole, and was answered 'Yes' or 'No' by Mr. Balfour as the head and spokesman of that Delegation, and on behalf of the British Empire as a whole. Although in the process of discussion and negotiation the representatives of the Dominions had and exercised the same right of audience as any other delegates, they never voted separately on behalf of their own Dominion on any question. The final decision in every case was that of the British Empire as an indivisible unity."

Well, that is so plain that it is not necessary for me to call attention to any particular point in it, but it simply meant this, that the representatives of the Empire went to Washington as a delegation; they arrived at a conclusion on every question that came before the Conference and Mr. Balfour, acting for the Empire and on behalf of the Empire, voted accordingly "Yes" or "No." I do not mean to suggest that the signatures of the plenipotentiaries were not attached to the Treaty; I know they were as a matter of fact, and that is the only explanation I think it is necessary to make.

* See Appendix III.

† See Appendix IV.

C 62887

Difference between Agreements and Treaties.

Now there was another point that cropped up. I think the misapprehension that was apparently visible at the Committee meeting the other day was owing to the fact that we do not sufficiently discriminate between agreements and treaties. Now, I take it, a treaty is necessary where the interests of the Crown are concerned, but where the interests of the Crown are not concerned, such as very often happens between two countries of the Empire, then a treaty is not necessary, and what is necessary is an agreement between the two countries which may require to be ratified or may not require to be ratified, but in most cases does require to be ratified by the particular Parliaments concerned. Now I quote Professor Keith, because I want to put on record what he says. He says, speaking of treaties, not agreements:—

> "The Imperial Crown has an absolute power of concluding treaties, and in so doing it is advised by the Imperial Ministry. There is no case yet known in which any treaty proper has been made without the consent of the Imperial Government, and the normal mode of making treaties is to conclude them through plenipotentiaries granted Full Powers by the Crown."

Some of us had to do these things. It will be remembered, at the Peace Conference at Paris, each and every representative of the Dominions was given the Full Powers spoken of here.

> "The term treaty which has been applied, for example, to the Customs Agreement between the South African Customs Union and the Dominion of New Zealand is merely a terminological inexactitude."

Not the first time we have heard that phrase used. That is to say, it is not a treaty but an agreement which has been referred to as a treaty.

> "In a few cases Governors have been empowered to conclude agreements in the nature of treaties. For example, in 1901 an agreement was made between Lord Milner on behalf of the Transvaal and the Governor-General of Mozambique with regard to the recruitment of native labour for service in the Transvaal mines and railway rates, and this agreement was superseded by another agreement concluded by Lord Selbourne as Governor of the Transvaal with the ex-Governor-General of Mozambique on the 1st April, 1909."

The point I am trying to bring out in this is that, in every case where the interests of the Crown are concerned, the consent of the Crown must be forthcoming and expressed by what has become known to us as "Full Powers." Leonard Courtney says in his book, "The Working Constitution of the United Kingdom":—

> "Treaties were made under the advice of responsible Ministers by the Royal Prerogative."

I believe that to be absolutely correct, and, personally, I do not think there is much difference of opinion as between the parties to the discussion the other day, but I am sorry that at this Conference there is no prospect, and I think we know it perfectly well, of dealing with constitutional matters, though such matters do require to be dealt with.

Status of Imperial Conferences.

So far as these Imperial Conferences are concerned, we ought to arrive at a decision as to where we stand in connection with this question, because the plain fact is this, that the members of this Conference have no status; as a matter of fact we have lost ground. I am not finding fault with anybody on that account, because the British Government has on every occasion been perfectly willing to accede to any request that has been made by the representatives of the Dominions and the overseas countries of the Empire. But what I am thinking of is this. We had a status for some years when attending the War Cabinets and Conferences. We had a definite status as members of the Imperial War Cabinet. We sat round this table along with British Ministers; we joined in their recommendations to the Sovereign, and in every way the status of

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 15 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62888

the representatives of the oversea Dominions was equal to the status of members of the British Government. That has gone. The war came to an end, and the Imperial War Cabinet came to an end with it. So far as the war is concerned there was no difference of opinion, but I thought at the time it would be a good thing if the War Cabinet, without the name, could have been continued in a modified form. It all comes back to this, and I take the opportunity of referring to it now, it all comes back to the difficulty of communication, the difficulty on the part of certain members of this Conference, the Prime Minister of Australia and myself particularly, in getting here. If we could get here in a week or two, and that may come when aviation is more advanced than it is at present, if we could get here within a week or two of leaving our own countries, it would be possible for this Conference to meet regularly, and meet as we did when the Imperial War Cabinet was in operation, as equals in every sense of the word, and particularly in the sense of being able to join in the recommendations to the Sovereign, because it is the Sovereign who sets the machinery of Empire in motion. We can go through the form of approaching the Sovereign if you like, but, if we do, then any recommendations that we make go back to the British Government. There is no other way at present. They go back to the British Government and the British Government advises the Sovereign. We do not advise. We make our request and our requests are considered. I have no doubt these difficulties will be got over in time. I think they will, and I think they should be got over, but there is no opportunity yet. At present it is no use forcing the question; I am not going to attempt it, but I should like to remind the Conference of this. We speak, and very properly, of the Sovereign as the strongest link in the Constitution, which keeps the different countries of the Empire together. If the Sovereign is to remain the strongest link in the Constitution, then we have got to do everything we possibly can to protect his prerogative. If we allow his prerogative to be interfered with, the Sovereign will cease to occupy the position he occupies at present. None of us want that. I am quite sure the people behind us do not want it. I have been thinking this over, and I take the opportunity, before the Conference comes to an end, of presenting my views now on what I think to be an important question.

Status of Dominion Ministers at Imperial War Cabinets.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I would like to ask Mr. Massey a question. You spoke about a certain status that Dominion Ministers had at the time of the War Cabinet. From what authority was that status derived?

Mr. Massey: From the Sovereign through his Ministers. I do not think I need explain to Mr. Mackenzie King that the Cabinet consists of those men who are, in the first place, members of the Privy Council, and who are convened for the purpose of forming a Cabinet by the Prime Minister for the time being. That is what took place.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I had assumed that every Cabinet Minister derived his authority from his position in Parliament or in relation thereto, and by virtue of the people by whom he is elected to serve.

Mr. Massey: There is the indirect method which I have mentioned. A man can become a Cabinet Minister without being elected as a representative of the people; he may be a member of the Second Chamber. That happens over and over again in this country. A Cabinet Minister, and I think I am right in this according to constitutional authorities, is invited to attend Cabinet meetings by the gentleman who is the Prime Minister for the time being, and custom has provided that the man who is invited to attend Cabinet meetings, with the other qualifications, becomes, as a matter of fact, a member of the British Cabinet.

General Smuts: Are these views going to be recorded, Prime Minister? Of course, we are up against America, and in a very dangerous position. If those are simply the personal views of Mr. Massey expressed here I have no fault to find with them.

C 62889

Mr. Massey: I accept the responsibility. I do not want them to be taken as anything else than my personal views.

General Smuts: I do not agree with the constitutional position as set out by Sir John Salmond or any other authority quoted by Mr. Massey. If his views are to be placed on record as an exposition of the constitutional position of the British Empire—

Mr. Baldwin: I do not think that was his intention.

Mr. Massey: I am expressing my own personal views. I want the members of the Conference to consider them, and then perhaps at the next meeting we shall be able to discuss them.

Publication of Resolutions.

Mr. Bruce: I have only one question. Are these resolutions, for example, with regard to negotiation and signature of Treaties to be published?

Lord Curzon: I think not.

Mr. Bruce: I wanted to be quite clear on that.

Lord Curzon: They are for the guidance of all of us.

General Smuts: Should they not be published? These questions are continually raised in our country. I see no harm in publishing them.

Mr. Bruce: This is what was in my mind. These resolutions deal with questions of Treaty making, and at the Conference with Lord Curzon the other day we did, briefly perhaps, indicate what our views are in regard to our Treaty-making powers and position. If these resolutions go out unsupported by any sort of statement as to what views we hold as to the Treaty-making powers of Dominions and their relation to the Empire as a whole, it rather leaves the position in the air. If the resolutions are published, it ought to be made perfectly clear that there has been a Committee, and the subject has been fully discussed in Committee; and then we could be left to explain our views later.

Mr. Baldwin: I think that question of publication might stand over. The Foreign Secretary would like just to consider it. I rather assumed it would be published.

General Smuts: This is where we are agreed. If we were to go into explanations you and Mr. Massey would not be in agreement, but this is where we do agree. Where we do agree let us publish that agreement for the information of our peoples. It is one point gained.

Mr. Massey: I would like to express this opinion. If we are going to publish the opinions that were expressed the other day, particularly with regard to the prerogative of the Crown, we may create a storm such as we have not yet experienced.

Lord Curzon: It is not a question of publishing opinions, only resolutions. I should like to ask the Foreign Office. It may be quite possible to publish them, but I had not considered it from that point of view myself.

General Smuts: If you have no objection from the Foreign Office point of view I think it would be very serviceable to publish them.

(The Report of the Committee was then approved, and it was subsequently decided to publish the Resolution.*)

PUBLICATION OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Mackenzie King, you are taking the next item. Perhaps you would say what you have to say on that.

Mr. Mackenzie King: That is the matter of publication of correspondence, is it not?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, and the next item I think is yours as well.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I may say a word or two perhaps. If I present to the Conference the circumstances which have occasioned me to bring this matter up, that will enable the members

* See Appendix IV, Annexe (A).

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 15 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62890

better than any words of mine to see what is involved in the suggestions I have to make. At Ottawa there is a difference of view between the Governor-General's Office and the Department of External Affairs as to rights of publicity in the matter of correspondence between the Government here and the Government of Canada. It is, I think, important that there should be only one view, and it ought to be clearly set forth. I have, for example, a memorandum given me by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is perhaps the senior official in the Dominion Service, in which he states :—

> "The understanding of the Colonial Office heretofore has been that code telegrams, unless specially marked 'Secret' or 'Confidential,' may be given to Parliament as a matter of course without permission being asked and in view of this understanding the telegram of a certain date, the 27th October, might be brought down.
>
> "On principle I do not think it would be necessary to ask permission to bring down telegrams from the Canadian Government, but in practice consent becomes necessary if such telegrams are part of a continued secret correspondence and make reference to secret communications from the Imperial Government."

That point of view I had assumed was correct, but the Governor-General's Office apparently takes a different view, which is set forth in the following memorandum from the Governor-General's Secretary :—

> "Correspondence between the Government of Canada and His Majesty's Government is carried on, not by the Prime Minister or the Cabinet, but by the Governor-General who is the Chief Executive and Head of the Government. He transmits, as such, his Ministers' opinions and follows their advice, but the responsibility is his and the custody of the correspondence is his duty.
>
> "When Sir Joseph Pope says that 'the understanding with the Colonial Office heretofore has been that code telegrams, unless specifically marked "Secret" or "Confidential," may be given to Parliament as a matter of course without permission being asked,' he is in one sense correct. Such telegrams or despatches may indeed be made public, but, in theory at least, only by permission of the Governor-General, who has discretion in the matter and does not need to ask permission from the Secretary of State for the Colonies. It is needless to say that the Governor-General always meets the wishes of his Prime Minister in such cases. It is true that, in the case of numbered despatches, publication when required is made in the 'Canada Gazette' without express permission being asked, but such despatches are generally concerned with regulations, e.g., regulations affecting the transfer of registry of vessels, and are of such a nature that their very transmission implies publication—permission, therefore, being tacitly given by His Excellency.
>
> "There is, however, no record, so far as I am aware, of any papers being laid before Parliament without the permission of the Governor-General. Indeed, at one time, when Ministers desired to bring down despatches, the documents in question were prepared by the Office of the Governor-General's Secretary.
>
> "With regard to Confidential despatches, the case is different, and the regulations given for the instruction of the Governor-General lay down that 'no confidential despatch, either to or from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, may be made public without his permission.'
>
> "Despatches handed in to the Governor-General's office in draft form are actually only written records of the advice of his Ministers to the Governor-General, on which it is true that he acts, but the correspondence based on that advice is the act of the Governor-General himself and the correspondence is his and remains in his custody. The fact that a telegram may be sent in the exact words suggested by the Prime Minister, who, in drafting such telegram, is fulfilling one of his proper functions as principal adviser to the Governor-General, does not make that telegram his. So far as the substance of the despatch or the policy involved is concerned, Ministers naturally can at any time make this public in their speeches in the House of Commons or elsewhere, but this does not affect the sanctity of official correspondence."

I think that is a curious reversion to an old Colonial status, if such is the correct view. The Under-Secretary of State, Sir Joseph Pope, after he saw this particular memorandum sent me another in which he takes quite an opposite view. He says :—

> "Whatever practical advantages may attach to the practice of entrusting to the Governor-General's office the preparation of returns for Parliament of official correspondence with outside Governments, I venture to think that there is serious objection from a constitutional point of view to a reversion to that old time practice which obtained before the establishment of this Department. Such a course appears to imply the retention by the Crown of a control over matters which, for many years, have been committed to a responsible Minister, such as is not consistent with sound constitutional theory, and such as is not exercised, I think, in any other Department of Canadian affairs. It involves the position that the discretion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as to the action to be taken in respect of communications made to the Canadian Government is to be regarded as a provisional one, fettered by the necessity of submitting such action in certain particulars for the special approval of the Crown, whereas the position hitherto taken in such matters is that the discretion to be exercised in the selection of papers to lay before Parliament is vested in the responsible Minister. It might be pointed out that publication in the 'Canada Gazette' of despatches coming to the Government through the Governor-General, where such action seems necessary or expedient, is made as a matter of ordinary practice under the Minister's authority, without any special reference to His Excellency, and why a different practice should prevail in respect of communication to Parliament is not apparent. Of course, in any case publication is subject to the usual rules governing international practice in this matter."

It seems to me that this statement of the matter is the only one that should hold at the present time. In other words, the Canadian Ministry, in the matter of its correspondence, should be in precisely the same position as the Ministry here with reference to its correspondence. If responsibility rests with a Minister of the British Cabinet as to what papers should be placed on the table of Parliament, he exercises that responsibility without getting the consent of His Majesty the King in the first instance. He is assumed, I presume, to be advising His Majesty to give permission. Similarly I feel that the Prime Minister of the Dominion, or whichever Minister may have to do with external affairs, should have the same responsibility and the same rights in the matter of deciding what correspondence should go before Parliament. He should not have to ask the permission of the Governor-General to bring it down; he should be responsible for what is brought down. It is a large question and I have thought, therefore, it was best to present it in this general way; it can, if desired, be looked into by special officers before a final decision is given.

Mr. Baldwin: Would you like, Mr. King, to circulate the extracts you have read and have this matter go to a Committee?

Mr. Mackenzie King: I think that would be the best way. Let me mention this as well. Every time it becomes necessary in our Parliament in answer to a request for papers to be presented to Parliament for the Prime Minister to state that he must ask permission in the first instance for the papers to be brought down, it creates an unnecessary embarrassment, and it would be well if we could in some general terms have an understanding which all Ministers could follow with respect to correspondence, which would permit correspondence, of a character that could be brought down, to be

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62891

brought down at once without going through any formality of asking permission. One would understand that, where there is confidential correspondence, anything of the kind would not be contemplated. I am not now thinking of the numerous communications relating to Defence and Foreign Policy and matters of that kind, but take a question such, for example, as that of the cattle embargo which has been a subject of consideration between Canada and the Colonial Office. If the Leader of the Opposition asks me for the correspondence between Canada and Britain on that subject I am obliged, as matters now stand, to say I shall be pleased to bring down the papers in a few days, but I must get the permission of the British Government to do so in the first instance. That creates embarrassment immediately. The Opposition invariably takes the position: "We have gone back to secret correspondence. Why is the Prime Minister writing letters he cannot bring down at once?" I find that some of my colleagues here think such is already their right. I am glad they take this position, but I have before me these memoranda ——

Mr. Baldwin: I think that would be a very proper subject for a Committee. I suggest the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, or a representative, all the Prime Ministers or representatives, as a proper and comprehensive Committee.

STATUS OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. Mackenzie King: On the other subject, Prime Minister, the status of the High Commissioner, what I would like to say is this. We refer to the British Empire to-day as a community of free nations and, as nations, we are represented in London, some of us, I think all of us, by High Commissioners, so termed. The question of the particular name that should be given to the chief representative of the Dominion is a matter, I think, that should be left to the Dominions themselves to settle or to agree upon in Conference; but whoever is the representative of a self-governing Dominion in London should, I think, have at least the same standing and rights and privileges as the representatives of countries that are entitled to have Ministers here. I think it prejudices our status in London and in the eyes of the countries represented here that our chief representative is not given such recognition and I think it, to some extent, prejudices the position of the Empire as a whole in the minds of the representatives of those other countries that are here and have privileges which our representatives do not enjoy. We agree that before any privileges are granted regard should be had to all necessary safeguards.

Lord Salisbury: What sort of privileges are you thinking of?

Mr. Mackenzie King: Take the matter of recognition in a diplomatic way; the right to approach the Ministers of the Government, to speak for his Government.

Mr. Massey: You have that privilege now, have you not?

Mr. Mackenzie King: I do not think so—not the privilege that an Ambassador has.

General Smuts: I thought our High Commissioner had complete freedom in approaching not only Ministers, but the Prime Minister.

The Duke of Devonshire: I think they have perfect freedom to come to us. They do come with the greatest freedom to my office, and certainly to the President of the Board of Trade on all questions of trade. There is no question of status there.

Lord Curzon: I thought the points you were concerned with were points relating to Income Tax exemption and the like.

Mr. Mackenzie King: That is one point.

Lord Curzon: I have here a table of privileges to Ambassadors and of the corresponding privileges that are granted at the present moment to High Commissioners. All I can say is that I should like to be a High Commissioner. When I contrast his position financially as regards these privileges with that of a wretched Cabinet Minister, I confess I should like to exchange positions. However, I will look into that matter.

C62892

Mr. Mackenzie King: Has the High Commissioner any diplomatic standing at all?

Lord Curzon: When you use the word "diplomatic," I should say no, but he has a status of his own.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I think we ought to have in London someone with a recognised diplomatic standing.

Lord Salisbury: We should have said that he had a far superior standing; but, if you went into details before a Committee, I am sure that could be put absolutely right.

Mr. Baldwin: I think it should be brought up before the same Committee.

Sir Tej Sapru: We also have a High Commissioner here; and, if the question is to be examined, I should like the position of the Indian High Commissioner also to be put on the same footing.

Mr. Massey: I have got the impression, from one or two little conversations I have had, that there is some dissatisfaction with regard to precedence.

General Smuts: The point is that we in the Dominions are divided in our own minds over this question. Some of the Dominions want to restrict their High Commissioners to a more commercial position; others want to give them a higher status; and we might discuss that point at a Committee such as is proposed.

Mr. Massey: It depends so much upon the man. If you have a man who can be trusted, I should like to see him given every privilege that is possible; but I can see the position coming when there may be a man there who might not be trusted.

Mr. Mackenzie King: There is one subject I would like the Committee to consider, namely, the question of precedence as part of this matter.

Mr. Baldwin: The Committee will consider every point connected with the status of High Commissioners.

SPAHLINGER TREATMENT OF TUBERCULOSIS.

The next item is the Spahlinger treatment of Tuberculosis.

Mr. Massey: Prime Minister, what I am asking for in this connection is simply a Committee. It is an exceedingly important matter—far more important than I ever dreamt of when I was first approached. At the present time I am informed that in the United Kingdom there are 1,000 people per week dying of Tuberculosis, and the number of people who are suffering from Tuberculosis is counted by hundreds of thousands. I have been approached by an eminent medical man and asked to bring this matter forward. Perhaps I had better read this letter, one of several I have received:—

> "I have had a further conversation with Dr. Collins" (that is the gentleman I was thinking of) "this morning with regard to Spahlinger, and we are both of the opinion that the treatment is so promising that we think you ought to bring the matter before the other Prime Ministers, in the hope that the Empire may lift Spahlinger out of his financial difficulties and put him in a position to manufacture, as rapidly as possible, his serum and his vaccine.
>
> "Recently a Committee here in London has provided him with £15,000 to prevent the Bank from selling him up, and he is now in a position to go on till the end of the year. From enquiries that have been made it appears that, to set him free of his financial responsibilities and to put him in a position to have the equipment necessary to produce his serum and vaccine, it would require about £104,000." (He has spent that amount.)
>
> "Collins thinks, and I agree with him, that in addition to this

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 15 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62893

it would be necessary to provide him with a certain amount per annum to enable him to live and carry on for three years, which is the maximum time for the production of the serum. Assuming that he were granted another £11,000 to see him through, this would make £115,000. Of this £15,000 has been subscribed already, and £100,000 ought to be sufficient to enable him to carry on for three years and produce, in quantity, both serum and vaccine."

I do not think that I need read the remainder of the correspondence; but these are men whom I can trust, and they urge the importance of this with all the force at their command and with all the experience behind them which they undoubtedly possess. I think it would be a splendid thing, not only for this country by itself, but for the Empire as a whole, to undertake the consideration of this treatment, and I would suggest that a Committee be set up and that some of these men should be examined by the Committee and let the Committee draw its own conclusions.

Mr. Baldwin: The Committee to consist of the Minister of Health, in the Chair; the Secretary of State for the Colonies, or representative; the Secretary of State for India, or representative; the Prime Ministers of the Dominions, or representatives.

Mr. Massey: Yes.

The Duke of Devonshire: I do not know whether it will be going outside the terms of reference. I am no longer connected with the Red Cross Society here, but they have taken a great deal of interest in this question. I suggest to the Committee that if they would like to have a member of the Red Cross Society they should have him, simply as a witness to examine.

Mr. Massey: It would be a very good thing.

(Mr. Baldwin then read the press communiqué, which was approved.)

UNITED STATES AND "C" MANDATES.

The Duke of Devonshire: With regard to the question of "C" Mandates, that was dealt with in a Committee which I was not able to attend; but, since that Committee has presented its report, I understand that there is a Note from the United States (which I have not yet seen) which is rather an important one. Would it be possible to refer that Note to the same Committee, and to discuss the matter in the light of that?

Mr. Massey: I should think so.

The Duke of Devonshire: We will circulate the Note and arrange for a new meeting of the Committee.*

Mr. Massey: I am afraid we have undertaken a very big question now that we have decided to deal with this question of the "C" Mandates in relation to the United States.

DEATH OF Mr. BONAR LAW.

(The resolution of condolence with the late Mr. Bonar Law's relatives was read, and approved by the Conference.)†

(The Meeting then terminated.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1.
October 31, 1923.

---

* Secretariat Note.—It was not found possible to fix a further meeting of the committee before the proceedings of the conference terminated, but arrangements were made for the United States note, and a draft reply, to be circulated to the members concerned.

† For resolution, as adopted, see Section V of the published Report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987.)

C 62894

APPENDIX I.

Nationality Committee.

CONCLUSIONS OF A MEETING OF THE ABOVE COMMITTEE, HELD IN CONFERENCE ROOM "A," 2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, S.W., ON THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1923, AT 4·30 P.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. W. C. BRIDGEMAN, M.P., Secretary of State for Home Affairs (in the Chair).

The Right Hon. Sir DOUGLAS HOGG, K.C., M.P., Attorney-General.

Mr. S. P. VIVIAN, Registrar-General.

Sir JOHN S. RISLEY, K.C.M.G., C.B., K.C. (representing the Secretary of State for the Colonies).

Mr. G. MOUNSEY, O.B.E. (representing the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs).

Mr. MILLAR CRAIG (representing the Secretary for Scotland).

The Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada.

Sir ROBERT GARRAN, K.C.M.G., Solicitor-General and Parliamentary Draftsman, Commonwealth of Australia (representing the Hon. R. V. Wilson).

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The following were also present:

Sir JOHN PEDDER, K.B.E., C.B., Home Office.

Mr. O. F. DOWSON, O.B.E., Home Office.

Mr. W. R. BRISCOE, Treasury Solicitor's Department.

Mr. R. B. HOWORTH, Cabinet Office.

Mr. E. W. E. HOLDERNESS, Home Office.

Canada.

Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

Mr. J. E. TREMBLAY.

Union of South Africa.

Mr. J. COLLIE.

Irish Free State.

Mr. ESMONDE.

Mr. P. McGILLIGAN.

Mr. R. L. BICKNELL, Home Office, Joint Secretary to the Committee.

CONCLUSIONS.

1. The Grant of Naturalisation to Persons Resident in Mandated Territories.

The Committee recommend that the power of granting Certificates of Imperial Naturalisation be extended so as to cover persons resident in "B" and "C" Mandated Territories and in Protectorates, in accordance with the suggestions set forth in paragraph 7 of the joint memorandum by the Home Office and the Colonial Office. (See Appendix VI, Parts 1 and 2, in Cmd. 1988.)

2. The Appointment of Committees of Enquiry in connection with the Revocation of Certificates.

Having heard the reasons* for which the Commonwealth Government is disposed to provide that the presidency over such Committees of Enquiry may, where convenient, be taken by persons holding judicial office of lower standing than that prescribed at present by the Commonwealth Statute, the Committee see no objection to a question of machinery of this nature being settled according to local circumstances and needs, if, after examination

* See Appendix VI, Part 1, in Cmd. 1988.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 64 65 66 67 38 15 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62895

of the experience of the Committee of Enquiry, and of the practice which has grown up in the United Kingdom, the Commonwealth Government desires to make an alteration.

3. The Re-Admission to British Nationality of British-born Women Married to Aliens. (See Appendix VI, Parts 1 and 3, in Cmd. 1988.)

The Committee are of opinion that the principle of the existing law that the nationality of a married woman depends on that of her husband should be maintained. They, nevertheless, recommend that power should be taken to readmit a woman to British nationality in cases where the married state, though subsisting in law, has, to all practical purposes, come to an end.

4. Marriages with Foreigners.

Having examined the Report (contained in the despatch of the 6th April, 1923, from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor-General of the Commonwealth of Australia*) on the action which is being taken by the Foreign Office and the Home Office to carry into effect the Marriage with Foreigners Act, 1906, the Committee find that they have no recommendation to make.

---

*For the correspondence, see Appendix VI, Part 4, in Cmd. 1988.

C 62896

APPENDIX II.

Committee on the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides.

(A.)

MINUTES OF THE MEETING OF THE ABOVE COMMITTEE, HELD IN THE ROOM OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES, COLONIAL OFFICE, S.W., ON WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1923, AT 5 P.M.

Present:

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair).

The Right Hon. L. S. AMERY, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty.

The Right Hon. STANLEY M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

The following were also present:

Sir ROBERT GARRAN, K.C.M.G., Solicitor-General, Commonwealth of Australia.

Sir J. MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. R. A. C. SPERLING, C.M.G., Foreign Office.

Mr. J. F. N. GREEN, Colonial Office.

Mr. N. E. ARCHER
Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G. } Joint Secretaries.

The Duke of Devonshire, in opening the discussion, said that the position of affairs in the New Hebrides was set out in the despatch to the Governor-General of the Commonwealth of the 25th June, 1923, a printed copy of which had been circulated to members of the Committee. Since that date, though the new Protocol had been proclaimed on the 1st July, the position in the group had not improved. The President of the Joint Court had not yet left Spain, and, although the Public Prosecutor had reopened the Court on the 26th June, the resignation in September of the Registrar, who was acting as Public Prosecutor, had left the Court unable to function, owing to the lack of either a Public Prosecutor or a Native Advocate.

The preponderance of French recruitment continued, whilst British trade was handicapped by the lack of sufficiently frequent means of communication under the British flag.

The fall in the franc had made the position of British officers paid from Condominium funds extremely difficult, and the question of some assistance to them, at the expense of Imperial funds, was receiving consideration. In short, the position of the Condominium was very unsatisfactory. He enquired whether any other recent information had been received in the Foreign Office.

Mr. Sperling stated that he had no new facts of importance to communicate, but that the Committee might be interested to know that a reply had just been received from the French Government to our proposals regarding the appointment of a new Native Advocate, which were put forward just over three months ago. This reply opposed our suggestion for a certain extension of the Native Advocate's functions, but agreed to a joint approach to the Belgian Government with a view to a new appointment.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62897

Mr. Bruce said that it seemed that the situation in the New Hebrides was getting worse every day, and that a continuation of this state of affairs was most undesirable. It appeared to him that something definite must be done. In regard to the proposals made in the Secretary of State's despatch, he wished to know whether His Majesty's Government had any particular island in the Eastern Pacific in view as part of an exchange.

Mr. Massey stated that the Presbyterian Church of New Zealand would oppose any exchange on these lines.

Mr. Bruce agreed as to the certainty of opposition by both the Presbyterian and the Anglican Churches to anything of this nature, but he felt that the British Government's reputation would be even more adversely affected in these influential circles if nothing were done. As it was obvious that France would not agree to ceding the group, he considered that it was necessary to fall back on partition or on some other alternative. He was afraid that there would be difficulties in bringing about a satisfactory partition. He thought that on the whole it might be best to adopt a course not mentioned in the Secretary of State's despatch; that was, to invoke the mandatory principle, and for the League of Nations to give a Mandate for the islands to France. He was of the opinion that the Churches could hardly object if the group were put under the League of Nations, as opposed to its being merely handed over to France. The islands were of no value; they only entailed responsibility and expense, and he would be disposed to agree to any arrangement to which the religious bodies would not object too strongly.

Mr. Massey said that he would be prepared to accept partition as the lesser of two evils. He had been repeatedly urged by the Presbyterian Church authorities and others to endeavour to get some improvement brought about at the Imperial Conferences.

The Duke of Devonshire pointed out that a recent deputation of missionaries, introduced to him by the Bishop of Melanesia, had not seemed to be altogether opposed to partition in some form.

Mr. Amery said that the Admiralty had in view as part of an exchange some island or islands in the Marquesas or Society Groups, such as Manga Reva or Bora-Bora. The groups were of no use to the French, and their financial position was increasingly precarious. He thought, therefore, that there might be a possibility of cession of some of these by France as part of an exchange in connection with the New Hebrides. The Admiralty, however, did not wish to lay stress on the necessity for obtaining any of these islands, since, in the event of war, one or more of them would certainly be used by the Navy, irrespective of an exchange. As to the partition of the New Hebrides, the Admiralty would favour the inclusion of Santo in our share, on account of its good harbour.

He thought that the best solution of the problem would be by means of an extension of Mr. Bruce's proposal, to comprise partition as well as the mandatory principle: that was to say, that there should be partition under two mandates. If necessary, pressure should be brought to bear on France to induce her to consent to some such arrangement.

Sir J. Masterton Smith pointed out that the mandatory principle might possibly entail trouble with Japan.

Mr. Sperling was of the opinion that there might be technical difficulties in the issue of a mandate, and that, if the French Government were to invoke these objections, the League of Nations would be unable to proceed in the matter. The question in this respect was affected by the fact that no sovereignty existed in the Group, which belonged neither to France nor to Great Britain. He thought that the French Government would only agree to the mandatory principle if the mandate were given to them for the whole Group, since they seemed to be quite satisfied with the present position.

Mr. Green pointed out that the natives were under the joint protection of the two Powers, which exercised full jurisdiction, so that clearly their combined rights were complete, and that these should be sufficient to satisfy the League if a joint request were made for the issue of a mandate or mandates.

C 62898

It was finally agreed that endeavour should be made to terminate the Condominium, and that, as a first step, it should be proposed to the French Government that a joint approach should be made to the League of Nations with a view to partition under two mandates, and that, in any subsequent negotiations, His Majesty's Government should bear in mind the possibility of securing the cession of a harbour in the Eastern Pacific as part of the exchange.

The Duke of Devonshire stated that he would have a resolution drafted on these lines and would circulate it to members of the Committee for their concurrence.

Colonial Office, October 20, 1923.

(B.)

RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY THE COMMITTEE FOR THE APPROVAL OF THE CONFERENCE.

THAT it is desirable, in order to put an end to the increasing difficulties due to the New Hebrides Condominium, that as soon as opportunity offers fresh negotiations should be opened with the French Government. These negotiations should in the first instance take the form of a proposal that the British and French Governments should jointly approach the League of Nations with a view to a partition of the islands between the British Empire and France under two separate mandates.

During the negotiations with the French Government the possibility of securing the cession of a harbour in the Eastern Pacific as part of a settlement should not be overlooked.

Colonial Office, October 20, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62899

APPENDIX III.

Committee on the Position of the Dominions and India in relation to the Signature of Treaties and the Question of Territorial Waters.

CONCLUSIONS OF A MEETING OF THE ABOVE COMMITTEE, HELD IN THE ROOM OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, FOREIGN OFFICE, S.W., ON TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1923, AT 5 P.M.

Present:

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (in the Chair).

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

VISCOUNT WOLMER, M.P., Parliamentary Secretary, Board of Trade.

Vice-Admiral Sir ROGER J. B. KEYES, Bart., K.C.B., K.C.V.O., C.M.G., D.S.O., Deputy Chief of the Naval Staff, Admiralty.

Rear-Admiral F. C. LEARMONTH, C.B., Hydrographer to the Navy, Admiralty.

Sir JOHN S. RISLEY, K.C.M.G., C.B., K.C., Legal Adviser, Colonial Office.

Mr. H. G. MAURICE, C.B., Fisheries Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries.

Mr. P. J. ROSE, Assistant Under-Secretary, Scottish Office.

Mr. M. SHEARMAN, O.B.E., Assistant Legal Adviser, Foreign Office.

Mr. G. E. BAKER, Assistant Secretary, Mercantile Marine Department, Board of Trade.

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G., Deputy-Secretary of the Imperial Conference.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

Commodore WALTER HOSE, C.B.E., R.C.N., Director of Naval Service, Canada.

Sir ROBERT R. GARRAN, K.C.M.G., Solicitor-General and Parliamentary Draftsman, Commonwealth of Australia (also representing New Zealand).

The Hon. N. J. DE WET, K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa.

Mr. O. ESMONDE, Irish Free State.

Mr. P. MCGILLIGAN, Irish Free State.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Mr. C. W. DIXON
Mr. F. E. F. ADAM
Dr. O. D. SKELTON
} Joint Secretaries.

CONCLUSIONS.

THE Committee endorsed the following Resolutions of the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Limits of Territorial Waters, as interpreted in the Report and Memorandum of that Committee (E/64 Revised), and recommends them for acceptance by the Governments of the British Empire so that in negotiations with foreign Governments or at any International Conference where the question of territorial waters is discussed they may be put forward as embodying the policy of the Empire:—

"Resolution 1.

"It is essential that the general limit of territorial waters should be fixed at a distance of 3 miles from low-water mark.

C 62900

"Resolution 2.

"The limit of territorial waters should be the same for the purposes of belligerency, neutrality, customs, fisheries, control of vessels, and all other purposes.

"Resolution 3.

"The limit of territorial waters should, in the case of bays, whose width at the entrance does not exceed 6 miles, be 3 miles to seaward of a straight line drawn across the entrance.

"Similar territorial rights may, in addition, be admitted in respect of a certain number of larger bays or inlets, to be known as territorial inlets, which should be specifically enumerated and geographically defined.

"Resolution 4.

"The coast-line from the low-water mark of which the 3-miles limit of territorial waters should be measured is that of the mainland and also that of all islands. The word "island" covers all portions of territory permanently above high water in normal circumstances and capable of use or habitation."

It was understood that the application of Resolution 3 would be subject to the provisions of any existing International Agreements and to the considerations in regard to fisheries set out in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the Inter-Departmental Committee's Memorandum.

It was further understood that the Governments represented at the Conference would be asked to draw up schedules of territorial inlets referred to in paragraph 17 of the Inter-Departmental Committee's Memorandum; these could be considered at the next Imperial Conference, or, in the event of an International Conference on Territorial Waters being held before the next Imperial Conference meets, by the representatives of the various parts of the Empire at that Conference.

Colonial Office, October 23, 1923.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62901

APPENDIX IV.

Committee on the Position of the Dominions and India in relation to the Signature of Treaties and the Question of Territorial Waters.

CONCLUSIONS OF A MEETING OF THE ABOVE COMMITTEE HELD IN THE ROOM OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, FOREIGN OFFICE, S.W., ON THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1923, AT 11·15 A.M.

Present:

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (in the Chair).

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Sir J. E. MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

VISCOUNT WOLMER, M.P., Parliamentary Secretary, Board of Trade.

Sir C. J. B. HURST, K.C.B., K.C., Legal Adviser, Foreign Office.

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G., Deputy-Secretary of the Imperial Conference.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

Commodore WALTER HOSE, C.B.E., R.C.N., Director of Naval Service, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Sir ROBERT R. GARRAN, K.C.M.G., Solicitor-General and Parliamentary Draftsman, Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G., Secretary, New Zealand Delegation.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

Mr. O. ESMONDE, Irish Free State.

Mr. P. MCGILLIGAN, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

Sir A. HIRTZEL, K.C.B., Deputy Under-Secretary of State, India Office (representing the Secretary of State for India).

The following were also present during the discussion of Conclusion 2:—

The Right Hon. Sir P. LLOYD-GREAME, K.B.E., M.C., M.P., President of the Board of Trade.

Lieutenant-Colonel the Right Hon. Sir R. A. SANDERS, Bart., M.P., Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries.

Mr. H. G. MAURICE, C.B., Fisheries Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries.

Vice-Admiral Sir ROGER J. B. KEYES, Bart., K.C.B., K.C.V.O., C.M.G., D.S.O., Deputy Chief of the Naval Staff, Admiralty.

Vice-Admiral F. C. LEARMONTH, C.B., Hydrographer to the Navy, Admiralty.

Sir G. E. A. GRINDLE, K.C.M.G., C.B., Assistant Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. P. J. ROSE, Assistant Under-Secretary, Scottish Office (representing the Secretary for Scotland).

Mr. C. W. DIXON
Mr. F. E. F. ADAM
Dr. O. D. SKELTON } Joint Secretaries.

C 62902

POSITION OF THE DOMINIONS AND INDIA IN RELATION TO THE SIGNATURE OF TREATIES.

THE Committee decided to recommend for adoption by the Imperial Conference the Draft Resolution relative to the Negotiation, Signature and Ratification of International Agreements, subject to the amendment of the last sentence of Part I 1 (c) to read as follows:—

"In the case of treaties negotiated at International Conferences, where there is a British Empire Delegation, on which, in accordance with the now established practice, the Dominions and India are separately represented, such representation should also be utilised to attain this object."

The complete Resolution in its amended form appears in Annexe (A) attached.*

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs undertook to circulate to the Committee a short historical memorandum on the position of the Dominions in relation to the signature of treaties (see Annexe B) attached).

PROHIBITION AND LIQUOR SMUGGLING IN THE UNITED STATES.

2. The Committee recognised the importance of no action being taken which might tend to impair the principle that the 3-mile limit should be the general limit of territorial jurisdiction. At the same time the sense of the Committee was that it was desirable, first on moral grounds, secondly with a view to maintaining good relations with the United States of America, and, thirdly, in the interests of British commerce, that action should be taken, if practicable, to assist the United States Government in suppressing the smuggling of liquor by British vessels.

It was noted that the Inter-Departmental Committee, which had examined the question in Great Britain, had been unable to recommend any satisfactory method of assistance apart from an agreement with the United States Government on the general lines of Mr. Hughes' proposal. It was felt, however, that the form of Treaty suggested by Mr. Hughes was not wholly suitable, and that it would be better to frame a counter-proposal on similar lines designed to obtain from the United States Government a formal affirmation of the general principle of the 3-mile limit and to ensure their support of that principle at any International Conference on Territorial Waters.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs accordingly proposed that the British Government should take the initiative in suggesting to the United States Government an exchange of notes by which the principle of the 3-mile limit of territorial waters would be affirmed on both sides; at the same time it would be arranged on the one hand that no objection would be raised, as a special concession for a limited period, to the search of British vessels engaged in liquor smuggling outside the territorial waters of the United States, and on the other hand that British vessels should be permitted to carry liquor under seal in the territorial waters of the United States.

It was agreed that a draft note to the United States Government should be prepared on these lines and circulated to the members of the Committee for consideration.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
October 27, 1923.

* Also reproduced in Section IX of the published Report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987.)

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 38 15 16 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62903

ANNEXE (A).

Draft Resolution Relative to the Negotiation, Signature and Ratification of International Agreements.

THE Conference recommends for the acceptance of the Governments of the Empire represented that the following procedure should be observed in the negotiation, signature and ratification of international agreements.

The word "treaty" is used in the sense of an agreement which, in accordance with the normal practice of diplomacy, would take the form of a treaty between Heads of States, signed by plenipotentiaries provided with Full Powers issued by the Heads of the States, and authorising the holders to conclude a treaty.

I.

1. Negotiation.

(a.) It is desirable that no treaty should be negotiated by any of the Governments of the Empire without due consideration of its possible effect on other parts of the Empire, or, if circumstances so demand, on the Empire as a whole.

(b.) Before negotiations are opened with the intention of concluding a treaty, steps should be taken to ensure that any of the other Governments of the Empire likely to be interested are informed, so that, if any such Government considers that its interests would be affected, it may have an opportunity of expressing its views, or, when its interests are intimately involved, of participating in the negotiations.

(c.) In all cases where more than one of the Governments of the Empire participates in the negotiations, there should be the fullest possible exchange of views between those Governments before and during the negotiations. In the case of treaties negotiated at International Conferences, where there is a British Empire Delegation, on which, in accordance with the now established practice, the Dominions and India are separately represented, such representation should also be utilised to attain this object.

(d.) Steps should be taken to ensure that those Governments of the Empire, whose representatives are not participating in the negotiations, should, during their progress, be kept informed in regard to any points arising in which they may be interested.

2. Signature.

(a.) Bilateral treaties imposing obligations on one part of the Empire only should be signed by a representative of the Government of that part. The Full Power issued to such representative should indicate the part of the Empire in respect of which the obligations are to be undertaken, and the preamble and text of the treaty should be so worded as to make its scope clear.

(b.) Where a bilateral treaty imposes obligations on more than one part of the Empire, the treaty should be signed by one or more plenipotentiaries on behalf of all the Governments concerned.

(c.) As regards treaties negotiated at International Conferences, the existing practice of signature by plenipotentiaries on behalf of all the Governments of the Empire represented at the Conference should be continued, and the Full Powers should be in the form employed at Paris and Washington.

3. Ratification.

The existing practice in connection with the ratification of treaties should be maintained.

II.

Apart from treaties made between Heads of States, it is not unusual for agreements to be made between Governments. Such agreements, which are usually of a technical or administrative character, are made in the names of the signatory Governments, and signed by representatives of those Governments, who do not act under Full Powers issued by the Heads of the States; they are not ratified by the Heads of the States, though in some cases some form of acceptance or confirmation by the Governments concerned is employed. As regards agreements of this nature the existing practice should be continued, but before entering on negotiations the Governments of the Empire should consider whether the interests of any other part of the Empire may be affected, and, if so, steps should be taken to ensure that the Government of such part is informed of the proposed negotiations, in order that it may have an opportunity of expressing its views.

C 62904

ANNEXE (B).

Historical Memorandum on the Position of the Dominions in relation to the Signature of Treaties.

I.

THE history of the association of the Dominions with the negotiation of commercial and other arrangements affecting their interests goes back for several decades.

The earliest phase is found in the desire of the British Government to have the assistance of Dominion Ministers familiar with the matters dealt with.

Reference may be made to the negotiation of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 with the United States in the interests of Canada, in which the Canadian Government were consulted in the fullest manner possible.

In 1865 the British Government expressed their readiness to accept Canadian assistance in negotiating a Treaty of Reciprocity with the United States.

In 1871 Sir John Macdonald was one of the plenipotentiaries engaged in the negotiations for the Treaty of Washington, while Sir Alexander Galt and Sir Charles Tupper on several occasions conducted negotiations on behalf of Canada for commercial treaties with Spain and France.

It was at first proposed in such cases that the Canadian representative should be treated as being engaged in informal negotiations, and that he should not actually sign the convention when concluded; but this principle was abandoned almost immediately, and as early as 1884 it was contemplated that, had the negotiations with Spain, then on foot, resulted in an agreement, Sir Charles Tupper, High Commissioner for Canada, should have signed the agreement together with His Majesty's Representative at Madrid.

In 1888 Sir Charles Tupper actually signed the Treaty of Washington, which was, however, not approved by the United States Senate, and therefore was never ratified.

In 1892 Canadian Ministers, with Sir J. Pauncefote, then Ambassador at Washington, conducted negotiations with the United States Secretary of State, but no settlement resulted.

In 1893 Sir Charles Tupper negotiated a Treaty with France, which was finally accepted by both the French and British Governments. Sir Charles signed the treaty along with His Majesty's Representative at Paris.

In 1890 and 1902 Sir Robert Bond negotiated, on behalf of Newfoundland, through the Ambassador at Washington, with the United States Secretary of State. The former negotiation resulted in a convention, which was not proceeded with owing to the opposition of the Canadian Government on the ground that it was hostile to the interests of Canada, but the negotiation of 1902 terminated in the signature of a convention which, however, never came into operation owing to the objections of the United States Government.

In 1898 and 1899 a joint commission was appointed to deal with certain questions at issue with the United States of America, and elaborate negotiations took place on the subject of trade reciprocity between Canada and Newfoundland and the United States, among other matters, the negotiators being, with one exception, representatives of Canada and Newfoundland.

In 1907 Mr. Fielding and Mr. Brodeur, on behalf of the Canadian Government, negotiated a separate treaty with France, which received the approval of the British Government, and which,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62905

as supplemented by a convention of 1909, was ratified on behalf of both Governments.

Canada also concluded arrangements with Germany and with Italy regarding commercial matters. These arrangements were negotiated in Canada with the German consul-general at Montreal and with the Royal Consul of Italy. In both cases the negotiations resulted not in a formal treaty, but merely in a provisional agreement, made in consideration of the intention to conclude a formal treaty through the ordinary channel. The Canadian Government received the approval of the British Government for the conclusion of these conventions, and the Canadian Government recognised that if any more formal arrangements were desired they should take the form of a treaty, and be negotiated by plenipotentiaries duly appointed.

In the case of the United States, in order to secure the grant of the minimum Payne tariff, the Canadian Government carried on in 1910, with the knowledge and approval of the British Government, negotiations with the United States Government. No treaty resulted from these negotiations, but the United States Government accorded the minimum tariff on the understanding that Canada would give concessions on certain articles, and the Canadian Government gave the concessions, not by special grant to the United States, but by lowering, by Act of Parliament, the tariff for the whole world.

In May, 1910, the Government of the United States of America expressed to Mr. Bryce, then Ambassador at Washington, their desire to carry on tariff negotiations with Canada, and asked through what channel they should do this. It was not convenient to Canadian Ministers to negotiate at the moment, but in January, 1911, two of them came to Washington and were presented by Mr. Bryce to the President. Conferences were then held between the two Ministers and the United States officials, Mr. Bryce remaining in general touch with the Canadian Ministers, and reminding them, in the course of the negotiations, "of the regard which it was right and fitting they should have to Imperial interests." The resulting agreement was not embodied in any formal treaty, the intention being that it should come into force by concurrent legislation in Canada and the United States.

In 1909, Lord Selborne, as Governor of the Transvaal, with the approval of the British Government, made an arrangement with the Governor-General of Mozambique with regard to the recruiting of labour for the Transvaal mines, railway rates, &c.

In 1921 Sir George Foster negotiated a commercial agreement with France, which was signed by His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris in conjunction with Sir G. Foster. In 1922 Canadian Ministers (Mr. Fielding and Mr. Lapointe) conducted negotiations on the subject of commercial relations with France, Italy and Spain. In the case of France, the negotiations were conducted in Paris direct with representatives of the French Government, but the British Ambassador was informed of the progress of the negotiations, and signed the treaty in conjunction with the Canadian Ministers. In the case of Italy, negotiations were carried on direct with Italian representatives in London, but the treaty was submitted in draft to the British Government (who suggested certain modifications in its form), and was finally signed by Lord Curzon in conjunction with the Canadian Ministers. In the case of Spain, Mr. Fielding conducted negotiations with the Spanish Ambassador in London, but there was no definite outcome.

As regards matters other than commercial relations, the question has so far arisen chiefly in connection with matters affecting Canada and the United States of America. The special relations between Canada and the United States of America are best illustrated by the procedure adopted for dealing with questions affecting boundary waters. By Article 7 of the Treaty of the 11th January, 1909 (Treaty Series, 1910, No. 23), the High Contracting Parties agreed to establish and maintain an International Joint Commission of the United States and Canada, composed of six commissioners, three on the part of the United States, appointed by the President, and three on the part of the United Kingdom, appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the Governor in Council of the Dominion of Canada. This commission was to have jurisdiction over all cases involving the use or obstruction or diversion of boundary waters (Article 8), and it was further agreed that any other questions or matters of difference involving the rights, obligations or interests of either party in relation to the other or the inhabitants of the other, along the frontier, should be referred from time to time to the commission for examination and report at the request of either the United States Government or the Canadian Government (Article 9), and that any questions or matters of difference might be referred for decision to the commission by the consent of the two parties (Article 10).

C 62906

The method of dealing with fishery questions affecting Canada and the United States of America has followed the same principle. In 1918, a Fisheries Conference, composed of commissioners representing the Canadian and United States Governments respectively, was appointed for the purpose of considering the outstanding questions involving the fisheries of the United States and Canada and of reaching a basis for the settlement of these questions if possible. The recommendations of the Conference led to the opening of formal negotiations in 1919, for which a Full Power was issued to Sir D. Hazen, who had acted as chief Canadian representative at the Conference. These negotiations led to the drafting of two treaties, one relating to the Sockeye salmon fisheries and the other to fisheries generally (including the halibut fishery). The former was signed by His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington in conjunction with Sir D. Hazen, but the United States Government were unable to sign the second. There was, however, no difference of opinion as to the provisions of the second treaty dealing with the halibut fishery, and as a result renewed negotiations were conducted through the Ambassador at Washington, which led to the signature early in 1923 of the treaty dealing specifically with this fishery.

In accordance with the request of the Canadian Government, a Full Power was issued to the Canadian Minister of Marine to sign the treaty on behalf of His Majesty, and the Canadian Government urged that, as this was a treaty of concern solely for Canada and the United States and did not affect in any particular any Imperial interests, it should be signed by the Canadian plenipotentiary only. Action was taken accordingly. Subsequently, difficulty arose in connection with the Halibut Treaty owing to the action of the United States Senate in making its approval of the treaty conditional on the understanding that "none of the nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats of any other part of Great Britain" (subsequently interpreted by the United States Secretary of State as meaning the British Empire) "shall engage in halibut fishing, contrary to its provisions." The Canadian Government urged the withdrawal of this reservation on the ground that the legislation to be enacted, both in Canada and in the United States, would prohibit the citizens of every country from operation from a Canadian or United States port, and that the halibut fishery can only be carried on from the ports of one or other of these countries. Negotiations are proceeding and it is understood that the United States Government is likely to take steps to meet the Canadian point of view.

It may also be mentioned that last year the Canadian Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence visited Washington and discussed with the President of the United States and the United States Secretary of State the question of the maintenance of armed vessels on the great lakes. As a result a treaty was drafted to replace the Rush-Bagot Agreement of 1817, and submitted by the Canadian Government to the British Government for their comments and suggestions. The British Government offered certain comments on the terms of the draft treaty, which was modified in accordance with their suggestions and submitted to the United States Government as modified. The negotiations with the United States Government have not yet reached a definite conclusion.

There have in the past been certain cases in which Dominion Governments have made arrangements with foreign Governments not embodied in formal treaties. Thus in 1907 Mr. Lemieux, the Canadian Minister of Labour, negotiated with the Japanese Government an arrangement on the subject of the restriction of Japanese immigration into Canada, which was embodied in an exchange of letters between Mr. Lemieux and the Japanese Minister for Foreign

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62907

Affairs (the negotiations were carried on with the assistance of His Majesty's Ambassador at Tokio). Another instance is the Reciprocity Agreement between Canada and the United States of 1911, referred to above.

II.

Multilateral Conventions affecting all the Dominions are, as a rule, the result of international conferences or congresses, and the main question arising is that of separate representation of the Dominions at such conferences. It will be convenient to treat separately (a) conventions of a technical character and (b) conventions of a political character :—

(a.) The status of the Dominions as separate countries entitled to send their own representatives to international congresses has long been recognised in the case of the Universal Postal Union. The representatives of the Dominions who attend the periodical congresses of the Union receive their powers from their own Governments, and ratification of conventions concluded by such congresses is effected by formal documents issued by the various Governments represented at the congress and not by means of a ratification by His Majesty.

In connection with the Radiotelegraph Conference of 1912, the question was raised whether, in view of the fact that under the Convention of 1906 this was to be a conference of "plenipotentiaries," the Dominion representatives should not receive Full Powers from His Majesty, and such Full Powers were issued authorising the Dominion representatives to sign for their respective Dominions. A similar procedure was followed in the case of the Conference on Safety of Life at Sea in 1914.

(b.) The first important political conference at which there was a British Empire delegation on which the Dominions were separately represented was the Peace Conference of 1919. The regulations governing the work of this conference provided for separate representation of the British Dominions and India, and the Treaty of Versailles, under which Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and India became (in addition to the British Empire) original members of the League of Nations, was signed not only by representatives of the British Government, but also for these four Dominions and India by plenipotentiaries representing them. A similar procedure was followed in connection with the other Treaties of Peace negotiated in 1919 and 1920 and a number of other treaties forming part of the peace settlement, even though no representatives of the Dominions and India had taken any part in their preparation.

The Dominion members of the League of Nations have since sent their delegates to the Assembly of the League, and representatives of those Dominions have signed certain international engagements negotiated under the auspices of the League (e.g., the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children and the protocols embodying amendments to the Covenant). The Dominions were also represented at the Washington Disarmament Conference of 1921–22 (with the exception of the Union of South Africa), and at the Conference at Genoa in 1922.

It is thus the usual practice, in cases where there is a British Empire delegation at International Conferences on which the Dominions are now separately represented, for any treaties negotiated at the conferences to be signed separately by the Dominion representatives. Cases may, however, arise in which—

1. Some of the Dominions are represented, but others are not; or
2. The Dominions are not represented at all.

As indicated above, the first situation arose in connection with the Washington Disarmament Conference of 1921–22, where the Union of South Africa was not represented. As a result of telegraphic correspondence between Mr. Lloyd George and General Smuts, Lord Balfour signed the various treaties as a plenipotentiary for the Union.

The most recent instance in which the second situation arose was in connection with the Lausanne Conference. In this case it was arranged that the British Empire should be represented at the Conference by two plenipotentiaries only—Lord Curzon and Sir H Rumbold, and the treaties negotiated there were signed, on the British side, only by Sir H. Rumbold, who had been the sole representative of His Majesty's Government in the later stages of the negotiations.

C 62908

III.

In the case of certain treaties, no question of signature on behalf of the Dominions arises, as it is the practice to insert in the treaty a provision by which its stipulations will not apply to any of the Dominions, unless notice of accession is given. Such are extradition treaties, general commercial treaties negotiated by His Majesty's Government, and international conventions of a technical character negotiated otherwise than at international conferences.

Extradition treaties are now drawn in a form which safeguards the position of the Dominion Governments. As regards commercial treaties, these are based upon a model draft which has been communicated to the Dominion Governments. It is also the practice of the British Government in all important cases to inform the Dominion Governments of the negotiations with the foreign country concerned, and to ascertain whether there are any Dominion interests which it is desirable to keep in view in the negotiations.

There are also certain classes of international engagements, e.g., arbitration agreements, which apply to the whole of the Empire, but are not signed separately on behalf of the Dominions, though it is the practice to consult the Dominion Governments as to their inclusion within the scope of the arrangements. In some cases, e.g., agreements relating to the tonnage measurement of merchant-ships, such instruments provide for separate termination in respect of the Dominions.

Foreign Office, October 25, 1923.

0

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62809

SECRET.

E. 15th Meeting (1923).

54

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE FIFTEENTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1923, AT 5 P.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. L. S. AMERY, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Senator the Hon. R. V. WILSON, Honorary Minister in charge of Departments of Health and Migration, Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Professor JOHN MACNEILL, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Colonel His Highness the MAHARAJAH OF ALWAR, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

General the EARL OF CAVAN, K.P., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., K.C.B., Chief of the Imperial General Staff, War Office.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Major-General Sir FABIAN WARE, K.C.V.O., K.B.E., C.B., C.M.G., Vice-Chairman of the Imperial War Graves Commission. (For Item 4.)

Major C. K. PHILLIPS, O.B.E., Land and Legal Adviser, Imperial War Graves Commission. (For Item 4.)

Vice-Admiral Sir ALLAN F. EVERETT, K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., C.B., First Naval Member of the Royal Australian Naval Board.

Commodore A. G. HOTHAM, C.M.G., R.N., Naval Adviser to the New Zealand Delegation. (For Item 1.)

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 15 16 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62910

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.
Sir M. P. A. Hankey, G.C.B. (Secretary).
Mr. E. J. Harding, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir Robert R. Garran, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.
Captain E. F. C. Lane, C.M.G.

Canada.
Dr. O. D. Skelton.

New Zealand.
Mr. F. D. Thomson, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.
Mr. P. McGilligan.

India.
Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, C.B.E.

IMPERIAL DEFENCE RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Baldwin: Do you wish to say anything about the Resolutions on Imperial Defence, Lord Salisbury?* You were responsible for initiating them.

Lord Salisbury: I have nothing to say to the Conference about the Resolutions, except that they have been the subject of a good deal of very careful thought and conversation amongst several of us. The Prime Ministers with whom I have had the pleasure of dealing in this matter have treated me with the greatest consideration, and there has been a general desire to come to an arrangement. Mr. Bruce has had a good deal to do with the actual draft, although it has been modified to suit various ideas. I hope it will be accepted. I think it is moderate. But I ought to say that, in respect of one paragraph which was agreed to rather late, namely, paragraph (e), Mr. Mackenzie King would like the words rather differently drafted, and I have had the new draft that he proposes hastily typed, and it is now being circulated round the table.† I cannot pretend that I like it quite so well as the other draft, but, so far as I am concerned, as representing the British Government, I am quite prepared to accept it, although, as Mr. Mackenzie King knows, there are one or two words which I should much prefer to be differently expressed. But with that exception I do not think I have anything to say about these Resolutions, unless anybody wishes to ask me a question about them.

Mr. Amery: I should like to ask one question. I do not know whether it is accidental, but the reference to the interchange of personnel, which is a thing we have encouraged, both in Military and Naval matters, has been left out; I do not know whether it has slipped out in the redrafting.

Mr. Mackenzie King: That was one of the phrases which I thought it would be better to take out. Our Government would, I think, be perfectly willing to arrange for an interchange of personnel, but I am inclined to think that the words might be misunderstood or misinterpreted if they were inserted in the Resolution, and might convey a wrong impression. That was my idea. I want to avoid anything going into the Resolution which might be misunderstood. That is all.

Mr. Massey: Do I understand you to say, Mr. Mackenzie King, that there is no objection to the interchange of personnel?

Mr. Mackenzie King: It is being done at the present time.

Mr. Massey: Yes, but you do not like it being circulated in a Resolution?

Mr. Graham: We have been doing it through our Department.

* For the Resolutions as circulated, see Appendix I.
† See Appendix II.

C 62911

Lord Salisbury: I think it would have been better to have it in.

General Smuts: That is what they call doing good by stealth!

Mr. Baldwin: Then I take it that the Resolutions are approved.

(Agreed.*)

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

As to the second item, it is proposed to postpone consideration of the draft paragraphs of the Report†; there are one or two points which have to be examined and may have to be altered. It would be better perhaps if that matter were examined to-morrow or Thursday.

UNITED STATES AND LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The next item on the Agenda is "The United States and Liquor Traffic." Lord Curzon has a statement to make on that.

Lord Curzon: The question of Liquor Traffic and the United States was, as the Conference will remember, referred to a Committee over which I had the honour to preside.‡ We went carefully into the considerations affecting the case and we came unanimously to the conclusion that it was desirable, on grounds both of equity and of expediency, to go as far as we could in meeting the American case. The spectacle of this "rum-running," as it is called, in which British ships are largely engaged and in which great profits are being made by British firms, is one that is far from pleasant to contemplate, and there arise—and perhaps not unnaturally arise—very different feelings in the United States. The United States Government have committed themselves (whether wisely or unwisely it is not for us to say) to a policy of prohibition. All our information is that that is a policy to which they propose to adhere; it represents the settled convictions of large masses of people, and, whether it be or be not carried out in a fair way, at any rate it is a matter of domestic policy of a great foreign State with which we have neither the right nor the power to interfere. On the other hand, the spectacle which I have described can without difficulty be presented as an attempt on the part of the shipping of another State to run counter to their settled legislation and practice. If the present position continues without any relief I cannot but think that a very delicate and disagreeable situation will be produced. Fortunately, the American Government have throughout adopted a line, apart from their actual conduct in searching ships, of conciliation and of desire to settle the matter on friendly terms with ourselves. We share that desire, and accordingly we considered at the Committee what we could do to carry it into effect.

Importance of Maintenance of Principle of Three-Mile Limit.

The principle to which we all attach supreme importance, whether we look at it from the point of view of the Admiralty or the Foreign Office, or any other Department of State, is the preservation of the 3-mile limit as the basic principle of British policy in all parts of the world, a principle which we are not only loth to compromise, but are absolutely resolved not to abandon. In these circumstances we had to consider how far we could reconcile the maintenance of that principle with some concession to the American Government in respect of search. Mr. Hughes had suggested a Treaty to us which would give the American Government the right of search up to a distance of 12 miles from the coast, and he indicated at the same time that in return for any such concession the American Government not only did not regard the concession which we might make as an exception to the principle, but were prepared themselves to reaffirm the principle.

* For the Resolutions, as adopted, see Section XII of the published Report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987).
† For the paragraphs as circulated, see Appendix III.
‡ For the proceedings at the Committee dealing with this question, see Appendix IV to the Minutes of the Fourteenth Meeting.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 INDEX
16
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes
PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62912

Question of Reciprocal Concessions as regards Liquor Trade.

That being so, two points remained: firstly, to consider whether the actual proposal of the American Government that the right of search should be exercised up to a limit of 12 miles could safely be conceded; secondly, we should be quite sure that we got our return, the return being, of course, the right to carry liquor under seal in our ships in territorial waters. The late American Ambassador, Mr. Harvey, in his conversations with me, assured me that there would be no difficulty upon the latter point, and that a Treaty to that effect not only could be but would be passed and ratified by the Senate in America.

Necessity for Treaty.

At the meetings of our Committee, as the Premiers will remember, we had contemplated proceeding not by treaty, because we thought there would be undue formality in that process, but by an exchange of notes. To that process I would personally have preferred to adhere. But then it transpired that an exchange of notes would be quite ineffective in procuring us the counter-concession to which I have referred; that that could only be given by Treaty; that a Treaty need not go to the House of Representatives; that if, on the other hand, our policy were embodied in the form, whether of exchange of notes or otherwise, that would have to go to Congress, to the House of Representatives, there might be great difficulty and we should not secure what we desired. Accordingly it seemed better, on the whole, to proceed by Treaty, there being this further advantage that, whereas when a Treaty was first contemplated the idea was to put into the preamble a reaffirmation of the principle of the 3-mile limit, the American Ambassador told me that his Government would be quite prepared to put it into the body of the Treaty and not only to accept it on our behalf, but to affirm it on their own. There seemed to be some positive advantage in getting that affirmation expressed in that emphatic way in Treaty form. Accordingly, we, in the Foreign Office, drew up a Treaty, of merely a few clauses, affirming the principle, giving the concession and demanding the return.

Limit of Exercise of Right of Search.

There was another small point to which I alluded just now, and that was the question of determining the actual limit within which this right of search should be exercised. Upon that, as my colleagues will remember, we thought that on the whole it would be better to substitute for the suggested geographical limit of 12 miles—a distance from the coast which it is quite impossible to determine, at any rate from a flat shore, and which might give rise to controversy and friction in the future—some other formula which would suggest that the distance from the coast should be measured not by geographical miles but by time; that is to say, the time which it would take a ship to steam from the coast, the steaming capacity of a ship, say, one hour's distance from the shore. That is a matter, of course, which we should have to discuss with the American Government.

Progress of Negotiations.

While all this was in train, we heard from the American Government that while the President took one view—and that was the view stated by his representative here, that this concession could be and would be given by Treaty, and that it would be passed without difficulty by the Senate—there were some in the United States who took the opposite view, and said that it was conceivable that the Supreme Court might regard this as an attempt to override their jurisdiction and therefore as contrary to the Constitution of the United States. Since then a telegram has come, which has been circulated to you, from the American Government reiterating the position taken up by the President and confident as to the issue; but we cannot afford to make our concession without being certain that we shall get our return. It would be most futile and foolish to make this concession and suddenly to find out that a decision of the Supreme Court in the United States rendered the counter-concession invalid; we should have given away everything for nothing. Accordingly, what we are doing is to send a despatch to the United States Government, which will go immediately, saying that we hear that these doubts have been raised—it is not for us to solve them; it is a matter for the United States Government—and stating quite plainly that, anxious as we are to settle on the lines that I have laid down, we cannot do so until we are absolutely assured that we shall be safe. That is the present position. It will involve a little delay; but I hope it will not lead to any breakdown of the negotiations. The suggestion made, obviously to the interest of both parties, reveals, I think, such a conciliatory mood upon our part that I cannot conceive that any party in America would voluntarily do anything to jeopardise the agreement being arrived at.

C 62913

That is the position, and I am afraid the Conference will have separated before the solution is reached; but I have already the approval of the Prime Ministers given at the Committee to this plan, and the only reason for bringing it here to-day is that the report of the Committee ought to receive, as I hope it will receive, the general approval of the Conference.

Mr. Baldwin: Does anyone wish to say anything on that?

(Agreed.)

EXTENSION OF CHARTER OF IMPERIAL WAR GRAVES COMMISSION.

The next item relates to the Imperial War Graves Commission. Members of the Conference will recollect that I circulated a paper for their consideration, which, I believe, has met with approval, to the effect that powers should be taken to enable the War Graves Commission to take under their care graveyards in which lie British soldiers and sailors who have fallen in wars other than the Great War. I do not know whether anyone desires to say anything about that?

Mr. Massey: I do not think that there could be any possible objection to that.

Sir Maurice Hankey: There is just a verbal alteration which is a Drafting Committee point. In the second paragraph on the first page the draft says: "This proposal was submitted to the Representatives of the Dominions and India and the Colonies and Protectorates." It would be better to say: "the Governments concerned," because the appropriate Departments of the British Government were also consulted and have all indicated their acceptance. I should prefer, instead of "all of whom have indicated their acceptance of the proposal as outlined in the following memorandum:—" the following wording: "all of whom have indicated their acceptance of the proposal of an amendment of the Charter by the addition of a Clause to the following effect:—" A further alteration would also be required on the second page. Instead of reading as drafted, the concluding paragraph would read: "Accordingly the necessary steps will be taken forthwith to incorporate a Clause on the above lines in a further Supplementary Charter for submission to His Majesty the King." That, again, is a purely technical point.

Mr. Massey: This brings in the soldiers who fell in the Crimean War?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, the Crimea graves come in. I take this as approved.*

PUBLICATION OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS.

STATUS OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS.

The next two items, Status of High Commissioners and Publication of Correspondence, are merely to report what has been done at the meetings of the Committee appointed to consider the two matters

* For the paper referred to by Mr. Baldwin, as amended in accordance with the above discussion, see Section XVIII of the published Report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987).

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62914

in question.* Would you like to say anything, Mr. Mackenzie King? I believe those are subjects which you brought up.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I have nothing to add on these subjects.

Mr. Baldwin: I have read them and I think that is purely formal at this stage.

(Agreed.)

CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The same is true of Item 6, India's Contribution to the League of Nations. That, again, was referred to a Committee, and the Conference will take note of what was done at that Committee.† The matter was raised again at Geneva, I understand.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: No. We were not allowed to move it at Geneva. The whole substance of the matter is that I am not agreed, and I reserved that the Government of India would raise this question at the next meeting of the League of Nations.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what I understood, that they would raise it at the League.

Duke of Devonshire: The Committee were sorry to be unable to meet Sir Tej's views, but that was the only result we were able to arrive at.

Lord Peel: I ought to explain that it was rather suggested to us that we should raise the question at this Conference, because India did not wish to take up an attitude different from that of the other Members of the League on it; but India is so severely, and I think unfairly, hit, so heavily weighted, by the particular system according to which the population is counted as a factor, that I am afraid we have no other course than to raise it at Geneva.

ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Mr. Baldwin: Item 7—Draft Address to His Majesty the King. It is usual to present an Address to the King at the conclusion of the work of the Conference. A Draft Address is submitted to-day for approval, and the formal resolution will be taken at the last meeting. We have to appoint a Drafting Committee for the Report, and I do not think it would be a bad thing for the Drafting Committee to look through the Draft Address before Thursday.

(This was agreed to.‡)

DRAFTING COMMITTEE FOR REPORT.

We might now proceed to appoint the Drafting Committee for the Report—Item 8. The names suggested are the following:—

Duke of Devonshire.
The Defence Ministers, if they desire.
Prime Ministers of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Newfoundland, or their representatives.
Representative of the Irish Free State.
Secretary of State for India.

Sir Maurice Hankey: Would 4·30 P.M. to-morrow be a suitable time for a meeting of the Drafting Committee? That is the earliest time to-morrow that we can arrange, and we could circulate a Draft before that hour. I think we could get a Draft as a basis of discussion, and if there is time it could be examined in the Delegations beforehand.

Mr. Baldwin: That would be a very good thing if we could manage it.

(It was agreed that a Drafting Committee, composed as proposed by the Prime Minister, should be appointed and should meet at 4·30 P.M. on the following day.)

(The proceedings then terminated.)

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
November 6, 1923.

* For the Report of the Committee, see Appendix IV. (N.B.—This Report also contains a summary of a discussion on the ratification of the Treaty of Lausanne.)

† For the Minutes and Report of the Committee, see Appendix V.

‡ For the Address as completed, see Section XIX of the published Report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987).

C 62915

APPENDIX I.

Imperial Defence.

Draft Resolutions as Circulated.

1. The Conference affirms that it is necessary to provide for the adequate defence of the territories and trade of the several countries comprising the British Empire.

2. In this connexion the Conference expressly recognises that it is for the Parliaments of the several parts of the Empire, upon the recommendations of their respective Governments, to decide the nature and extent of any action which should be taken by them.

3. Subject to this provision, the Conference suggests the following as guiding principles:—

(a.) The primary responsibility of each portion of the Empire represented at the Conference for its own local defence.

(b.) Adequate provision for safeguarding the maritime communications of the several parts of the Empire and the routes and waterways along and through which their armed forces and trade pass.

(c.) The provision of Naval bases and facilities for repair and fuel so as to ensure the mobility of the fleets.

(d.) The desirability of the maintenance of a minimum standard of Naval strength, namely, equality with the Naval strength of any foreign Power in accordance with the provisions of the Washington Treaty on Limitation of Armament as approved by Great Britain, all the self-governing Dominions and India.

(e.) The desirability of the development of the Air Forces of the Empire upon such lines as will make it possible, by means of the regular interchange of personnel, the adoption of a common system of organisation, administration and training, and the use of uniform manuals, patterns of arms, equipment and stores, for each part of the Empire to take such share as it desires in Imperial defence with the least possible delay and the greatest efficiency.

4. In the application of these principles to the several parts of the Empire concerned the Conference takes note of:—

(a.) The deep interest of the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, and India, in the provision of a Naval Base at Singapore, as essential for ensuring the mobility necessary to provide for the security of the territories and trade of the Empire in Eastern Waters.

(b.) The necessity for the maintenance of safe passage along the great route to the East through the Mediterranean and the Red Sea.

(c.) The necessity for the maintenance by Great Britain of a Home Defence Air Force of sufficient strength to give adequate protection against air attack by the strongest air force within striking distance of her shores.

5. The Conference, while deeply concerned for the paramount importance of providing for the safety and integrity of all parts of the Empire, earnestly desires, so far as is consistent with this consideration, the further limitation of armaments, and trusts that no opportunity may be lost to promote this object.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62916

APPENDIX II.

Imperial Defence.

Redraft of Resolution 3 (e), as proposed by Prime Minister of Canada.

(e.) The desirability of the development of the Air Forces in the several countries of the Empire upon such lines as will make it possible, by means of the adoption, as far as practicable, of a common system of organisation and training and the use of uniform manuals, patterns of arms, equipment, and stores (with the exception of the type of aircraft), for each part of the Empire as it may determine to co-operate with other parts with the least possible delay and the greatest efficiency.

APPENDIX III.

Foreign Relations.

Draft Paragraphs for Report as Circulated.

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced on the 5th October by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who gave to the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and, secondly, of those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that extracts from those parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, viz., the situation in connection with the Reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State and the three members of the Indian delegation took part.

Frequent and detailed examination took place not only of the main features of the international situation, but of the different aspects of that situation as they developed from day to day. Nor did the Imperial Conference terminate its sittings until each subject had been carefully explored and a common understanding reached upon the main heads of foreign policy.

It was while the Conference was sitting that the President of the United States renewed the offer of the United States Government to take part in an international Conference or enquiry to investigate the European Reparation problem, and to report upon the capacity of Germany to make the payments to which she is pledged. The Conference cordially welcomed, and decided to take immediate advantage of, this overture; and communications were at once entered into with the Allied Powers to obtain their co-operation.

The Conference, after careful consideration of the policy which has been pursued, was of the opinion that the European situation could only be lifted on to the plane of a possible settlement by the co-operation of the United States of America, and that, if the scheme of common enquiry to be followed by common action were to break down, the results would be inimical both to the peace and to the economic recovery of the world.

It felt that in such an event it would be desirable for the British Government to consider very carefully the alternative of summoning a Conference itself in order to examine the financial and the economic problem in its widest aspect.

C 62917

The Conference regarded the policy, if persevered in, of breaking up the unity of the German State as inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers, and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. It agreed that the strongest representations on this subject should be made to the Allied Governments, and these were accordingly made.

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension, of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe; and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

It remained to pursue a policy that would stimulate the peaceful development of the Middle East and encourage the Turkish State in the policy of reconstruction upon which it has embarked.

The Conference, so much of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference, which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations which have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

It recognised the loyalty with which Japan had carried out her obligations under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem. It noted with approval the agreement that was arrived at in February, 1922, and the reservations by which it was accompanied. And it held that, when the four reserved subjects, which were safeguarded by that agreement, come up for examination and settlement, the utmost importance should be attached to the freedom of the passage through, and the security of, the Suez Canal, which constitutes the central and vital link in the chain of Imperial communications, and that adequate guarantees must be taken to secure and safeguard these objects.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts, and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public opinion or of official action was seriously debated. The Conference arrived at the conclusion that, while affirming and safeguarding, as a cardinal feature of British policy, the principle of the three-mile limit, it was yet both desirable and practicable to meet the American request for an extension of the right of search beyond this limit for the above purpose, and negotiations were at once opened with the United States Government for the conclusion of an experimental agreement with this object in view.

Finally, the Conference, after listening to a detailed exposition of the work of the League of Nations during the past two years, and more particularly of the recent sitting of the Council and the Assembly at Geneva, placed on record its emphatic approval of the action that had been taken by, and the support that had been given to, the representatives of the British Empire on the latter occasion. There was full accord that the League should be given the unabated support of all the British members of the League as a valuable instrument of International peace, and as the sole available organ for the harmonious regulation of many International affairs.

November 5, 1923.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62918

APPENDIX IV.

Committee on Publication of Correspondence and Status of High Commissioners.

CONCLUSIONS OF MEETINGS OF THE ABOVE COMMITTEE, HELD IN THE ROOM OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, COLONIAL OFFICE, S.W., ON FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1923, AT 12·15 P.M. AND 4·30 P.M.

Present:

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Sir EYRE CROWE, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Foreign Office.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G., Deputy Secretary, Imperial Conference.

Mr. R. G. VANSITTART, C.M.G., M.V.O., Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G., Secretary, New Zealand Delegation.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G., Secretary, South African Delegation.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

Mr. P. MCGILLIGAN, Secretary, Irish Free State Delegation.

Mr. G. R. HAMILTON, Board of Inland Revenue, was also present during the discussion of Conclusion 2.

Mr. C. W. DIXON, M.B.E.
Dr. O. D. SKELTON } Joint Secretaries to the Committee.

Publication of Official Correspondence.

1. The Committee considered the draft of a statement as to the publication of official communications between the various Governments of the Empire, which had been prepared as a basis for discussion and with a view to inclusion, if thought desirable, in the published Report of the Conference.

The Committee did not think it necessary that a full statement on the lines suggested should be included in the published Report, but agreed that it would be well that there should be included among the unpublished papers of the Conference some record of the position which could be communicated to the Dominion Governments, and might be of assistance to any of the Prime Ministers who desired to make a public announcement on the subject.

For this purpose the Committee approved the statement included in Annexe (A).

Status of High Commissioners.

2. The Prime Minister of Canada raised the questions:—

(1.) Whether arrangements could be made whereby the official representatives of the Dominions in Great Britain would be granted certain privileges additional to those already given as regards exemption from taxation and similar matters.

(2.) Whether it would be possible for some courtesy precedence to be granted to the official representatives of the Dominions in Great Britain.

As regards the first point, the Secretary of State for the Colonies promised to circulate a statement showing the privileges at present granted to High Commissioners and to the representatives of foreign countries, and to consider with his colleagues the possibility of extending the present concessions to High Commissioners. (For the statement as circulated, see Annexe (B).)

As regards the second point, the Secretary of State for the Colonies undertook to confer with his colleagues with a view to a submission being made to His Majesty in the matter.

C 62919

Ratification of Treaty of Lausanne.

3. The Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa drew attention to the position of the Union in relation to the ratification of the Treaties signed at Lausanne. He observed that the British Government had pointed out the desirability of early ratification, but that, if it were necessary to submit the Treaty to the Union Parliament, the Union Government would not be in a position to express concurrence in ratification before February next at the earliest. He would not wish that the Treaty should be ratified in respect of the Union without the concurrence of the Union Government being first expressed, and, if an expression of concurrence were made without Parliamentary approval being first obtained, questions might be raised as to the propriety of such action. On the other hand, a difficulty would be created if the Union were to be excluded from His Majesty's ratification, in view of the nature of the Treaties.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs stated that it was hoped to secure the passing of the legislation required in Great Britain within a fortnight of Parliament meeting, but that the coming into force of the Treaty might be delayed in any case by the inability of foreign Powers, e.g., France, to ratify immediately. He suggested that the best course would be that, when the necessary Bill had passed through all its stages and the Treaty was ready for ratification here, the British Government should communicate with the Dominion Governments, acquaint them with the urgency of the case, and invite their concurrence. It would then be for the Dominion Governments to say, if their Parliaments were not in Session, whether they would be content that His Majesty should ratify forthwith.

It was understood that this course would be agreeable to the Dominion Prime Ministers. The Prime Minister of Canada intimated, however, that it might not be possible for the Canadian Government to express formal concurrence in ratification.

Colonial Office,
November 5, 1923.

ANNEXE (A).

THE Conference gave its attention to the desire of the Parliaments of the various parts of the Empire to be afforded the fullest information possible on all matters on which negotiations were going on, or discussions taking place, between two or more of the Governments.

The Conference recognised that, if consultation, to which it attached great importance, was to be carried out effectively, this must involve a frank and confidential interchange of views in written or telegraphic communications, and that many of the communications exchanged between the Governments, particularly in connection with foreign policy and defence, could not be made public. At the same time the feeling of the Conference was that as many communications as possible ought to be made available for the use of the Parliaments, and it was thought desirable to discuss the circumstances in which official communications between the Governments could and could not be made public.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It was generally agreed that any official communication not marked "confidential" or "secret" or not clearly intended to be treated as such might be regarded as available for publication without reference to any other Government.

It was understood that, so far as each Government was concerned and subject to the need for mutual consent in certain cases, the responsibility as to publication of correspondence with other Governments rested with the Ministers of the Crown in the Dominions as in Great Britain.

It was, of course, realised that it would be necessary to observe the general rules regarding diplomatic correspondence and that in particular the consent of foreign Governments must be obtained before publication of communications to or from those Governments.

The Conference thought that, should the eventual, but not immediate, publication of certain communications be contemplated, it would be well for some indication of this to be given at the time when those communications were sent. This arrangement would facilitate subsequent publication, if decided upon. It was, however, agreed that the consent of all the Governments interested must be obtained before any papers or communications were made public which were marked at the time of despatch to be of a confidential or secret nature, or were transmitted in confidential or secret despatches.

Annexe (B).

Statement as to Privileges at present granted to—

(A.) Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers;
and

(B.) Dominion High Commissioners;
in the matter of British Taxation.

I.—Income Tax.

1. The privileges in regard to Income Tax enjoyed by an Ambassador or Minister of a foreign State are secured to him by International Law, and depend on the fact that he represents a foreign State. Thus a foreign Government, and equally the permanent individual Head of a foreign State, are regarded as wholly exempt from British Income Tax.

The representative character of an Ambassador or Minister entitles him, not indeed to complete exemption from Income Tax, but to very wide immunities. These immunities are only one aspect—and an inseparable aspect—of the general diplomatic status accorded to him under International Law; another aspect is his immunity from legal proceedings.

2. In the case of High Commissioners for the self-governing Dominions prior to 1916–17 no special relief was granted. From that year onwards relief from Income Tax on official emoluments has been given and this relief has now been made statutory by Section 19 of the Finance Act, 1923. The concession made in 1916–17 was analogous to that made to the Consular and certain other representatives of foreign States. (From 1922–23 onwards Consular representatives are the only class of foreign non-diplomatic representatives to enjoy such relief.)

3. The comparative position may be tabulated as follows :—

Nature of Income.	Ambassadors and Ministers.	High Commissioners.
(a.) Income from earnings	Diplomatic emoluments exempt.	Official emoluments exempt.
(b.) Income from investments, &c.	Remittances from abroad exempt. Income from investments in the United Kingdom (except from British Government securities) liable.	Remittances from abroad liable. Income from investments in the United Kingdom liable.
(c.) Income from house or land property in United Kingdom.	Exempt, if occupied for diplomatic purposes. Liable, if either— (1.) Occupied for purely private purposes; or (2.) Let to a tenant. (Similar reliefs apply in the relatively trifling matters of Inhabited House Duty and Land Tax.)	Liable (but property relieved from tax, if owned by the Dominion Government, and occupied for Governmental purposes).

II.—Customs and Excise Duties.

4. As a matter of international practice foreign Ambassadors or Ministers are granted exemption from customs duties in respect of articles required for their personal use.

The main articles now coming under the exemptions are motor-cars, tobacco, spirits and wine.

5. Dominion High Commissioners are accorded relaxation in the examination of their baggage, and are also exempted from payment of all Customs Duties on first arrival.

No further exemption from Customs Duties is granted, except as regards motor cars for official use.

6. Remission of Excise Duties has never been granted, either to foreign or Dominion representatives.

In the case of foreign representatives, however, there is an old standing exemption in respect of the relatively small matter of Establishment Excise Licence Duties, e.g., the gun licence and the licence to employ a male servant.

III.—Rates and Motor Car Licence Duty.

(Charges Assessed and Levied by the Local Authorities.)

7. Under reciprocal agreement with nearly all foreign countries foreign Ambassadors or Ministers are relieved of the part of the Rates referable to services not of direct benefit to them (poor relief, police rate, &c.).

8. There is no corresponding relief applicable to Dominion representatives.

(No exemption is given in respect of property owned by the Crown: the Crown in this country voluntarily foregoes any claim, in order to avoid adversely affecting other ratepayers in the neighbourhood.)

9. Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers are exempted from Motor Car Licence Duty whether their cars are owned by themselves or by their Governments.

Dominion High Commissioners are exempted from Motor Car Licence Duty in respect of Government-owned cars used by them for official purposes.

10. It may be added that no privileges at all are given in regard to Stamp Duties or in regard to Death Duties except that any movable property which may be actually situate in an Embassy or Legation is exempt from Death Duties.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.,
November, 1923.

---

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62922

APPENDIX V.

Committee on India's Contribution to the League of Nations.

(A.)

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF A MEETING OF THE ABOVE COMMITTEE, HELD IN THE ROOM OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, COLONIAL OFFICE, S.W., ON THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1923, AT 5·30 P.M.

Present:

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies (in the Chair).

The Right Hon. Sir RENNELL RODD, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O.

Mr. F. PHILLIPS, Assistant Secretary, Treasury.

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G., Deputy Secretary, Imperial Conference.

Dr. O. D. SKELTON, Secretary, Canadian Delegation.

Sir ROBERT GARRAN, K.C.M.G., Solicitor-General, Commonwealth of Australia.

Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G., Secretary, South African Delegation.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

Mr. E. ROWE-DUTTON
Professor RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E. } Joint Secretaries.

The Chairman: The question which the Committee has to discuss is how the contributions to the expenses of the League of Nations which have to be made by the various members of the League represented at the Imperial Conference should be divided.

I understand that the present allocation is the result of the work of a Committee which has endeavoured to take all the relevant factors into consideration; that allocation is at present by units; and that the units payable for 1924, according to the proposals of the League, are as follows:—

British Empire	88
(For 1923 British Empire 95. No Irish Free State contribution.)
Canada	35
Australia	26
New Zealand	10
Union of South Africa	15
Irish Free State	10
India	65

I gather that the matter was discussed at various meetings of the British Empire Delegation at the Assembly of the League in 1922 and 1923. In 1922 Lord Balfour stated publicly at a meeting of the Assembly that the various parts of the Empire would settle among themselves the exact amount which each would find. This year Lord Robert Cecil informed the Indian Delegation (which thought the incidence for 1923 and 1924 somewhat unfair as regards India) that the distribution of the totals for those years among the various Governments of the Empire could, so far as the British Government was concerned, be discussed as an entirely open one. I will therefore ask the representative of India to explain what India's position is.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: If we go to the various units constituting the British Empire, what is it that we find? I think to a certain extent His Grace has anticipated me, but still I will remind you what is the position. Australia pays 26 units; Great Britain pays 88; Canada 35; India 65; Irish Free State 10; New Zealand 10; South Africa 15. So that it is quite clear that with the exception of Great Britain no other part of the British Commonwealth pays nearly as much as we do. At the same time I will beg to bear in mind that the distance at which India is situated from the League of Nations makes it impossible for her to derive as much benefit as some of the other Powers do from their association with the League of Nations. We also cannot forget the fact that while we have been constantly fighting for the proper representation of India on the secretariat of the League of Nations we have only one minor official to represent us there. There has been considerable feeling over this question in India, and I can say from personal knowledge that objection has been taken repeatedly to this heavy imposition on India in the Legislative Assembly. Now last year the Indian Delegation to the Assembly withdrew their opposition to the scale on the understanding given by Lord Balfour that the distribution of the total British Empire contribution for 1923 would be settled between the six Empire Governments. The same position, so far as I can gather from the papers supplied to me, appears to have arisen at the last meeting of the League, and I believe it was mainly at the instance of Lord Robert Cecil that the Indian Delegation did not formally enter their protest before the open house in the hope that the question would be taken up by the Imperial Conference and some satisfactory decision arrived at which may secure to India a comparative freedom from this heavy burden which has been cast on her. It is true that India is one of the original parties to the League of Nations; at the same time there is no reason why India should bear such a large burden, except, of course, Great Britain, when the other constituents of the Empire are so lightly taxed. So far as the League of Nations itself is concerned, it treats the British Commonwealth as one single whole—that is what I gather—for the purpose of contribution, and I understand that the decision taken last year was that it was a matter between the constituent units of the British Commonwealth to decide, but, so far as the general figure is concerned, there is one common liability. Now, if it is maintained that our liability is quite apart from that of the other constituent units of the British Empire which are represented in the League of Nations, I think it must be distinctly borne in mind that but for the promises of Lord Balfour and Lord Robert Cecil we should have put forward open opposition before the whole League. There is considerable feeling on this point in India. We do not derive the same advantages as other countries derive and the League has not admitted our men to the extent I submit it should have done on the secretariat. I do not see why India, which is the poorest of all the constituent units of the British Commonwealth and whose finances are at the present moment in a deplorable condition, should be called upon to make such a heavy contribution. It is a matter for settlement between the various elements of the British Commonwealth. I do not wish to go into minor details of the question or into the figures, but these are to my mind the outstanding features of the whole problem. It appears that under the existing scale India pays 65 out of a total of 937 units. Now I do not wish to discuss the origin of this scale or the history of the question, as it is well known and, I presume, it can be very easily ascertained, but it seems to me that on the broadest grounds of justice and fairness to India there is no reason why some relief should not be given to India in this matter. That is all I have to say for the time being.

C 62923

Sir Rennell Rodd: I should like to say, having been twice in charge of this matter at Geneva, not last year, but the year before last and this year, I naturally have a good deal of information on the subject, which perhaps it might be useful to the Committee to hear. I think I might take the thing a little further back than the memorandum which was read to us, to the year before last, 1921, when it became urgent to get rid of the scale of the International Postal Union, which was very unjust to nearly everybody, and something had to be done. A Committee had worked on this question having regard to a basis of population and revenue, not necessarily adhering rigidly to that, but population and revenue were the original basis, and when it came up to be considered by the Committee and elsewhere we all came to the conclusion that the proposed scale was premature; there had not been time to go

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62924

into this question thoroughly. We had a great deal of discussion with the Dominions on the subject, and we all agreed that it was better not to accept the basis proposed but to adopt a provisional basis for one, two or three years until there was time to work out a better one. That was done. We accepted the provisional basis in 1921, and I am bound to say Sir William Meyer, on behalf of India, protested against the figure assigned to India; at the same time he did not vote against it; he only abstained from voting. Last year the work of the Allocation Committee again had not proceeded far enough to enable a definite basis to be submitted, and it was suggested that the provisional basis should once more be adopted and put before the Assembly. There would have been opposition from India, but, as has been explained, Lord Balfour rather suggested that the British Empire contribution should be considered as a whole, and the total reassessed among the several contributors. This year we had the same question once more, and in a sub-Committee, in which I also took part, as well as in the Financial Committee, we heard the representatives of India as we also heard the representatives of Roumania, Hungary and Greece. Those were the four countries which had entered a protest. Well, after going, I think, very fully into these matters and considering them very carefully we came to the conclusion that, if we were to disturb the provisional allocation at all, not only those four countries but a large number of the other countries would also raise a protest, and the only way to secure unanimity was to carry on with the provisional allocation for one year more. That was the basis on which we acted. One or two little retouches were possible. What was called the British Empire—it is better to call it Great Britain, as is done in this list—had been assessed at ninety-five units. The question of a reduction in view of the Irish Free State contribution was considered, and it was decided and accepted by the Irish Free State that they would undertake ten units. Seven units were taken from Great Britain. The other three were not taken off because it was recognised that the entry of a new member entailed additional work, so Great Britain was reduced by seven, which brings her figure down to eighty-eight. I should like to say that the fact that Italy and Japan are put down at sixty-one and sixty-three is only due to exceptional circumstances. In consequence of the earthquake in Japan this year it was considered by a unanimous vote of all the nations present that the position should be made a little easier for Japan, and so many units were subtracted, I think twelve is the number, to relieve Japan, for one year only. The position in regard to Italy was the same as that in regard to France and other countries which, during the war, had had their territories invaded and devastated. We did not agree that that was a legitimate plea for reduction of units, but we were probably almost alone in that opinion, and we could not raise our voice alone against it; therefore, a temporary reduction was made in the provisional allocation in both the French and the Italian units, otherwise, of course, they would exceed those of India very largely. Therefore, I do not think the argument that those countries are put in a lower scale than India can be adduced, except as a very provisional and temporary one. I should also like to say that the British Dominions are not treated as a whole with a common liability. Each unity is separately assessed, and I may add that we had great difficulty in 1921 to get a common agreement among them to accept these assessments, but it was done. The assessment of the Dominions was not regarded as a whole or as a common liability. I venture to say it would be very undesirable that they should be treated as a whole. There is already a considerable feeling among the nations represented on the League that the British vote, including now seven unities, is apt to preponderate, and that our voting power is greater than that of the nations with one vote each. We maintain that each unity votes as it pleases, and I am bound to say that the Dominions do sometimes vote against Great Britain in divisions. Though there is not any real ground for the charge of collective action, if we were to appear as a single entity for contributory purposes before the League of Nations I am sure it would prejudice our position there; therefore, I think it would be very undesirable that we should be treated as a whole. We never have been, and I do not think we should. What was put forward by the Indian Delegation on the sub-Committee, I felt, deserved a great deal of consideration, but, as I have said, we had decided we must maintain the provisional allocation, otherwise we should have opened the door to protests from perhaps more than half the nations that were assessed. The few units that were available, that is to say, the three that were over from the Irish Free State, and two more coming in from Abyssinia entering the League, making five more units than we had anticipated, were to be divided among the States who it was thought had suffered most severely by the present provisional allocation. The case of India was considered among the others, but it was generally felt at the present moment that Greece, in view of having a million and a quarter refugees suddenly thrust upon her, was really perhaps more deserving of consideration than any other, and the case of Roumania was also a very strong one. The case of Hungary was less strong, because a Loan is about to be negotiated by the League and we thought Hungary could maintain her present contribution. The case of India we also felt to be hard, but we did not see our way to reduce these units. There were only five units available, and we thought on the whole that the cases of Roumanian and Greece were more urgent. With regard to the undertaking of Lord Balfour, I was not there last year and therefore I have only learned it by reports, but in my own private opinion it involves a pledge which requires very careful consideration, and I think we shall have to come to some decision on it.

C 62925

Mr. Phillips: I just wish to point out that this scale to which the Indian representative has referred is a scale drawn up by the League of Nations on the basis of the revenue of the different States in 1913. It is drawn up quite impartially, and the reason why India has sixty-five units is because her 1913 revenue justified that figure by comparison with other countries. It is agreed by everyone that 1913 revenue is not an ideal basis to take, but the position is, it is the only one for which figures are available. There is a Committee of the League now sitting which is endeavouring to draw up a fresh scale prepared on later statistics, and which it is hoped will produce a Report in time for its adoption next year by the Assembly. At the moment it is the only scale which really can be adopted. It is based on all the statistics we have got, and it is very difficult to see on what ground it could be modified in respect of a particular country if the League did not agree. The substance of the Indian proposal, as we see it, comes to this. India claims that her contribution is too high. If that is so, we think her contribution should be reduced and the loss of revenue so caused should be spread among the different members of the League. But what India says is something different. She says her contribution should be reduced and the burden spread among only those members of the League which belong to the British Empire, a proposition for which we see no justification at all.

Dr. Skelton: I think the case has been very fully put. We all sympathise with the difficulties in which India finds herself, but it is not merely a question of money, but a question of principle and a question of getting a basis upon which all nations can work. My understanding of the basis of the allocation to each of the countries that make up the British Empire is that they are distinct units in the League, and the allocation is determined by the League Authorities for each member in accordance with a certain understanding. It would hardly seem possible in that case to rearrange here the division that has been made at Geneva. Certainly one might desire that in the League Committee some arrangement should be come to. I can see the basis of allocation is a very difficult question, and there must be a certain amount of give and take.

The standard of the division must be more or less arbitrary or, at least, more or less general. I quite agree with the views expressed by the two gentlemen who have addressed us.

The Chairman: Have you anything to say, Sir Robert?

Sir Robert Garran: I also agree with the views that have been put forward. It seems to me the contributions of each individual member of the League have been fixed on a definite basis and standard, and to lighten one at the expense of the others means to

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

62926
C

throw that standard out of adjustment and to impose what would be an unfair burden upon other members. If the standard is to be modified it appears to me that it is a matter for the League to readjust, so that a reassessment could be made on all the members of the League according to some other standard; but, while I fully sympathise with the position in which India finds herself, I am not authorised, on behalf of Australia, to agree to a departure by way of exception from the standard that has been laid down. I understand from what has been put forward by the Treasury that, as a matter of fact, newer figures are being prepared for a new assessment next year, and if that is so, and if the revenue figures upon which these contributions are based are altered so that India's proportion is less, then India will get the benefit of that new assessment.

Captain Lane: I agree with what Sir Robert says. This is the point General Smuts wishes to put. He does not think that we are authorised here to make any alteration in the allocation which has been made by a Provisional Committee of the League.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I should first of all like to point out what the Government of India's view in regard to this matter is. In a despatch which was sent on the 27th July, 1922, to which I myself was a party, the Government of India stated their objections. They pointed out that it greatly increases the contribution which India would have to pay on the Postal Union scale (from 4·9 to 6·6 per cent. of the total expenditure of the League), that the population criterion adopted by the Reveillaud Committee is not fair to comparatively poor countries such as India, and that the combination of the population factor with the net revenue factor is tantamount to taking population into account twice over, because "the revenue of a State is the aggregate of the paying capacity of its population and represents the average paying capacity of its individuals multiplied by their total number, and it is consequently unreasonable to weight the calculations (from net revenue) by any further allowance for the population figures." In the Government of India's opinion the best basis of calculation is that of net revenue by itself. These are the views of the Government of India. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot say that India must be treated as a single unit by itself and, that so far as the British Commonwealth is concerned, there is no common liability. I am quite willing to accept that position that India has a responsibility quite apart from the responsibility of the other parts of the Commonwealth, but why prevent India from raising this question before the Assembly? We have been twice prevented from doing so, and I give you fair warning that, when the League meets next year, India will be compelled by her financial position to raise this question on the opening of the Assembly. This year I gathered from the papers which have been supplied to me that the question was practically postponed for a settlement among the various members of the British Commonwealth who are contributories to the League of Nations. Now, when we meet here, we are told that our responsibility or liability is single and quite separate from that of the other Dominions. If so, I must, on behalf of my Government and on behalf of my country, say distinctly that we shall have to raise this question before the Assembly and take its answer. Well, we have been twice put off, on the understanding that the question will be settled by mutual agreement among the members of the British Commonwealth. I find, however, that there is no possibility of a settlement, and, so far as my country and my Government is concerned, I would beg most respectfully to say that I reserve to the Government of India and to my country the right of raising this question in open House, upon the ground that the position taken is that each one is responsible for the share that has been assigned to his country, and, therefore, as we cannot come to a settlement among ourselves, we make an appeal to the larger House, to the fuller House. I wish to avoid a stage like that being reached, because the obvious answer will be that, so far as the British Commonwealth is concerned, we are a divided house on this matter. Well, I do not mind facing that position at all, and I can quite understand the special circumstances in which relief has been given to Japan this year, but I do not wish members of this Committee, or, for the matter of that, the League of Nations, to overlook the fact that we are a very poor country and that our Budget is practically in a hopeless condition at the present moment, and we do not find the same advantages. There is only one word more I would like to say, and that is this: That at the last meeting of the League I understand the Indian members, according to the information available to me, desired to raise this question in the open House, and they were told that this was a question which should be settled amicably among the members of the British Commonwealth. I find that there is no possibility of that settlement now; therefore, the position is that I cannot agree to the present arrangement on behalf of India, and it must be distinctly understood that I reserve to my country the right of raising this question in open Conference and taking our chances, such as they may be, in regard to the revision, because we consider, I am bound to say, that the present arrangement is wholly unjust to India. That is all I wish to say.

C 62927

The Chairman: Of course, the report of this Committee will come up before the Conference, and you think you have an absolutely full right to raise it in the Conference?

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Yes, in the Conference itself. I think it leads to a position like this. At the League we are told "Go back and settle between yourselves." Here we are told that our responsibility is quite separate from that of the others and each one must take his own liability. Well, you cannot have it both ways. Therefore, I want it to be distinctly understood that if there is no possibility of settlement between the different constituents of the Empire, then we must be given an absolutely free hand next year when our representatives go there of raising this question and putting such arguments and such figures as we can before the Assembly to persuade them to give us relief, the consequence of which might be, if we succeeded, that probably a burden would be shifted to other shoulders, but we cannot refrain from pressing our claim which we have twice been persuaded to postpone, and I must say very frankly that I do not look forward to our being persuaded so easily a third time.

The Chairman: Well, I think Sir Tej, you have heard all the views that have been expressed by all the other Dominions, and I think it would be rather difficult for us to arrive at any decision.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I think a common decision is impossible, and I am only anxious that it should be understood that I do not acquiesce in the present position.

The Chairman: Quite. Of course you make that clear.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: That is all I have to say.

The Chairman: Well, if the Committee would agree we would have some resolution to this effect:—

Resolved—

"That, after hearing the case put forward by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru in regard to the contribution made by India to the League and the explanation of Sir Rennell Rodd, the Committee recommends the provisional allocation made by the League be adhered to pending any readjustment during 1924, it being understood that India would reserve the right to raise the matter at the 1924 Assembly."

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: No: That resolution binds me. I wish to say distinctly that I dissent from this, because I cannot agree to this recommendation of the Committee to the Conference. If the Conference itself is going to take up this question, I will put up my case before the Conference, but I want it to be understood that I am not a party to this resolution. I want to reserve my right.

The Chairman: I think we shall be able to issue a report to the Conference.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I do not care about language so long as you make it clear that I do not acquiesce in the terms of this resolution. I do not want it to be understood by my Government

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62928

or by my countrymen that I agree to the present position being continued.

Mr. Harding: Would it not be well to say "the Members of the Committee representing Great Britain and the Dominions present think it would be best to adhere to the provisional allocation, the representative of India reserving the right to raise the question in the 1924 Assembly."

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: Well, the representative of India does not agree with that view. I want it to be quite plain, because I have to answer my own countrymen, who would ask, "Why did you agree to this view, even this year?" You can devise a formula just to show that I did not accept that view, otherwise it might be brought up against me next year. I do not want to be bound by that.

The Chairman: We will make that quite clear.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I will leave it to Mr. Harding. He is a better draftsman than I and he can make it quite plain that I was not a party to this resolution and that I reserve the right of raising the question in open House in the League of Nations next year.

The Chairman: The point shall come before the full Conference and it will be explained what happened here. You have had these very clear expressions of opinion all round.

Sir Rennell Rodd: Might I supplement one word? The Allocation Committee which is now sitting is considering this whole question on a somewhat new basis because they consider that revenue by itself is not a proper criterion. They are only taking certain items of revenue.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: I know that.

Sir Rennell Rodd: Moreover, after the war you have to consider items of post-war expenditure that will not come in, but there are others that are more or less permanent. One criterion is that of defence. Of course the defence of Great Britain is not only on her own behalf, but to a large extent is an expenditure on behalf of the Dominions, and I think it would be rather unfair if our expenditure on defence, comparing it with that of other Nations, should be taken without due allowance, as it would put our contribution unduly high, because our defence expenditure happens to be very high. I put that point as one of a number of factors to be considered and to show how difficult it is. Nevertheless, I think the new contribution of India will be sensibly reduced, but of course it is impossible to say beforehand how far. In the meantime, it should be thoroughly understood that there is great possibility, almost probability, of the Allocation Committee not being able to prepare a new scheme before the next Assembly, so that we shall be up against provisional allocation very possibly in 1924. I think it would not be fair that I should not mention that.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru: There is only one word I would like to say. I was really here fighting for a principle, and when I found that there was no disposition to come to a discussion of the method of settlement I thought it entirely necessary to go into these factors. If there is any disposition to go into the question of settlement among ourselves, well, of course, these factors have to be taken into account, but, if the position taken is that each one must fight their own case with the Assembly, then it is not for this Committee to go into those factors, but it is for the League of Nations to go into those questions, and to weigh them properly, and we will put up our case with regard to our revenue, our defence and our expenditure before the Assembly. I should have been quite prepared to have put them up here if there was a disposition to come to an amicable settlement, but there is no agreement, and therefore it would be a waste of time to go into these details.

C 62929

(B.)

REPORT.

A meeting was held on Thursday, the 1st November, at 5·30 P.M. in the Secretary of State's room, Colonial Office. There were present:—

[See Heading of (A).]

The Secretary of State for the Colonies explained briefly the system of allocation of the expenses of the League of Nations, by which a certain number of units is allocated to each Member State. As a result of certain arrangements made in 1922 and 1923 by the British Empire Delegation at the Assembly of the League, the various parts of the Empire were to agree among themselves the exact amount each would find. He asked the representative of India to explain India's position in the matter.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru explained the position of India. She is assessed far higher than any part of the Empire, except Great Britain, but India is physically so far distant from the League that she gets little benefit from it, and she complains that she is almost unrepresented on the Secretariat. There is much objection in the Legislative Assembly. In 1922, the Indian Delegation would have objected to the allocation in the Assembly had it not been for Lord Balfour's declaration that the matter would be settled between the six Empire Governments. The same position arose in 1923. India now seeks that settlement. The League looks on the British Empire as a whole. There is no reason for India to be so highly taxed compared with the other British nations, especially at a time when her finances are in a deplorable condition. Apart from minor details or questions about figures, it seemed to him that on the broadest grounds of justice and fairness to India some relief should be given.

Sir Rennell Rodd, speaking as having had to handle this matter at Geneva, explained what had been done in making the allocations. In 1921, it became obvious that it was desirable to revise the original Universal Postal Union Scale, which was admittedly unsatisfactory. A beginning was made on a basis of population and revenue, but a provisional basis was necessary pending the production of a scientific scale. This was not finished by 1922, and the provisional scale was again used. The Empire as a whole agreed. The same course of events happened in 1923, as a result of the Balfour declaration. It was of obvious importance not to disturb the principle of the provisional allocation, or claims for revision would have been innumerable. Minor adjustments only were made (e.g., Great Britain reduced to eighty-eight units by the admission of the Irish Free State).

He explained the reduction of the French and Italian allocations by reference to the material devastations factor—a temporary feature, which he hoped would disappear with the provisional scale.

He emphasised that the various parts of the Empire were not treated as a single whole by the League. The Balfour proposal was for a private arrangement. But it was not desirable for the Empire to form a bloc in the face of the League.

Mr. Phillips pointed out that the provisional scale was computed quite impartially by the League of Nations on the basis almost exclusively of 1913 revenue. The appropriate Committee of the League has in hand the preparation of a new scale, based on later statistics, but the technical difficulties are very great, and for the moment the provisional scale is the only one available.

India's claim is that her contribution is excessive, and that it should be reduced at the expense of the Empire as a whole. He could see no ground whatever for throwing the burden, which was proper to the League as a whole, on to those members of the League only who belong to the Empire.

Dr. Skelton concurred in this view. In principle, each Empire nation was distinct within the League, and, while sympathising with India, he thought this principle must be maintained.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62930

Sir Robert Garran was against throwing the burden of the adjustment on the Empire. The standard laid down by the League should be maintained until reversed by the League.

Captain Lane concurred in this view. It was not for them to reverse the verdict of the League.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru dissented strongly from this view, and reserved the right of his Government to raise the whole matter at the next Assembly of the League.

He could not agree to any resolution by the Committee in a sense unfavourable to India, and pointed out that the position taken up at the Assembly of the League was to refer India to the other members of the Empire, who subsequently found no settlement among themselves to be possible, and referred India back to the League.

Conclusion.

After further discussion the majority of the Committee came to the conclusion that, having heard the views expressed, they could not recommend action to vary the allocations made by the League to the several units of the British Empire. The representative of India dissented, reserving the rights of his Government to raise the question before the Assembly of the League.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W. 1,
November 5, 1923.

C 62931

54

SECRET.

E. 16th Meeting (1923).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF THE SIXTEENTH MEETING, HELD AT 10, DOWNING STREET, S.W., ON THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1923, AT 4·30 P.M.

Present:

The Right Hon. STANLEY BALDWIN, M.P., Prime Minister (in the Chair).

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council.

The Right Hon. NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Most Hon. the MARQUESS CURZON OF KEDLESTON, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Grace the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada.

The Right Hon. S. M. BRUCE, M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Right Hon. W. F. MASSEY, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

General the Right Hon. J. C. SMUTS, C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Professor JOHN MACNEILL, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State.

Mr. DESMOND FITZGERALD, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State.

The Hon. W. R. WARREN, K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland.

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT PEEL, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India.

Sir TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, K.C.S.I.

The following were also present:

Mr. J. C. C. DAVIDSON, C.H., C.B., M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir JAMES MASTERTON SMITH, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Lieutenant-Colonel Sir WOLSELEY HAIG, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., C.M.G., C.B.E., Political Secretary to His Highness the Maharajah of Alwar.

Secretariat:

United Kingdom.

Sir M. P. A. HANKEY, G.C.B., (Secretary).

Mr. E. J. HARDING, C.M.G.

Commonwealth of Australia.

Sir ROBERT R. GARRAN, K.C.M.G.

Union of South Africa.

Captain E. F. C. LANE, C.M.G.

Canada.

Dr. O. D. SKELTON.

New Zealand.

Mr. F. D. THOMSON, C.M.G.

Irish Free State.

Mr. P. MCGILLIGAN.

India.

Professor L. F. RUSHBROOK WILLIAMS, C.B.E.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 16 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62932

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. Baldwin: The first item on the Agenda is the revised statement on foreign relations, which I believe has been very thoroughly examined now. There is one verbal alteration which the Foreign Secretary has proposed, and if that is agreed to I hope the statement will be passed in that form.*

Lord Curzon: The alteration is perhaps a little more than verbal. On the last page but one there is a paragraph which begins with the words: "It (that is the Conference) recognises the loyalty with which Japan had carried out her obligations under the Washington Treaties." When we came to consider that passage the other day someone said, and said with great point, that this sentence might be looked upon as somewhat patronising. We were just considering the question of a change when the conversation went off on to some other topic. When I read through the revised draft last night it seemed to me that the criticism that was made the other day was sound and that we ought to meet it. Therefore I would suggest these words: "It recognised with satisfaction the progressive fulfilment of the obligations assumed under the Washington Treaties." That would apply not to Japan alone but to everybody, and cannot be held to contain any element of patronage.

Mr. Massey: It brings them all in.

Lord Curzon: Yes. Then the statement goes on: "It registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will not be less sincere"; the rest is unaltered.

General Smuts: You say that the first part of the sentence is general; is it not a great jump from "Japan" to "all nations"?

Lord Curzon: We do not say "all the nations." Of course, here we are really referring to Japan, but we are putting the thing in a form which I think is not open to criticism, because it is general. We have to be rather cautious about the other nations, because some of them, particularly France, are nations whose "progressive fulfilment" is very slow.

Mr. Baldwin: The paragraph before that deals with the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, so that it follows on quite naturally. May I take it that that is now agreed to?

(Agreed.†)

PALESTINE.

Palestine is the next item, and I think the Secretary of State for the Colonies wishes to make a statement.

The Duke of Devonshire: You will remember that when the Conference met on the 3rd October I made a very full statement on the subject of British policy in Palestine. I have a few words to add to that statement this afternoon. On that occasion I told the Conference in confidence that a proposal had been adopted by the Cabinet with the object of modifying certain features of the present system which might be regarded as unduly favouring the Jews as compared with the rest of the population of Palestine. As Lord Curzon told the Conference, our plan was to promote the establishment of an Arab Agency in order that the Arab community might enjoy precisely the same advantages as those accorded to the Jewish Agency under the terms of the Mandate. Sir Herbert Samuel was instructed to invite the Arab leaders to accept a settlement on those lines, and you may have seen in the Press that the Arabs rejected our offer. In the circumstances it is proposed to inform the High Commissioner that the offer will not be renewed and to authorise him to continue to carry on the administration on existing lines. There is no alternative to our suggestion, I think. We have to discharge our obligations under the Mandate, and we intend to do so.

* For the paragraphs as circulated, see Appendix.
† For the paragraphs as completed, see Section VIII of the published report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987).

C 62933

If the Arabs will not co-operate with us, we must, however reluctantly, go on without them. The correspondence on the subject is about to be laid before Parliament. That completes the story following upon what I said to the Conference the other day.

Mr. Baldwin: Does anyone wish to ask any question upon that statement?

(No member of the Conference wishing to ask any question, Mr. Baldwin proceeded)

ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

The Drafting Committee have returned to the Conference the Address to the King, the wording of which was referred to them. Sir Maurice Hankey tells me that there is yet another small alteration that must be made.

Sir Maurice Hankey: The last sentence in the third paragraph from the end runs as follows: "We shall count ourselves fortunate if we have been able to contribute towards their solution, even to a small degree." If you read the previous sentence, "their solution" would apply to "the sister nations and the peoples of the British Commonwealth." It is meant to apply to the "problems." If you put in the words "contribute towards the solution of these problems" it would be better, instead of "their solution."

Professor MacNeill: The title which appeared on the original draft of the Address has been expanded into a very long one, and I do not think the expansion is an improvement. I suggest that we go back to what was suggested yesterday evening: "His Most Gracious Majesty the King and Emperor of India." This longer form is, I believe, the strictly legal formula, but I do not think it is usual in Addresses of this kind. We had a discussion about it, and finally it was suggested that someone should look up what the legal title of the King was. I suppose this is the legal form, but I do not think it is customary to have all those particulars. I do not want to raise any discussion at all; I want rather to avoid discussion.

Mr. Baldwin: I should think, "To His Majesty the King." Have you any particular views on that, Lord Peel? What would you say to adopting the formula used at the last Imperial Conference?

Lord Peel: I should very much hope that the words "Emperor of India" would come in—very much.

Mr. Massey: I hope they will.

Mr. Baldwin: I move that "To His Majesty the King and Emperor of India" be substituted.

Mr. Fitzgerald: I would suggest a comma after the word "King"—"To His Majesty the King, Emperor of India."

Mr. Massey: What was the alteration proposed to be made from the form used last time?

Mr. Warren: That was threshed out at the Committee meeting.

Lord Peel: We discussed that in Committee, and that was agreed to.

Mr. Baldwin: I think that is the best form—to substitute "To His Majesty the King, Emperor of India" for "To His Most Gracious Majesty George the Fifth, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India."

(Agreed.*)

DRAFT REPORT OF CONFERENCE.

Then comes the Draft Report. I do not know if the Duke of Devonshire, as Chairman of the Drafting Committee, has any observations to make?

* For the address as completed, see Section XIX of the published report of the Conference (Cmd. 1987).

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62934

The Duke of Devonshire: I suggest that the Report of the proceedings of the Conference be adopted.

Mr. Massey: Is that the full Report?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, the full Report.

Mr. Massey: Is not there something about the Suez Canal?

Sir Maurice Hankey: It is in Section 8 of the Report.

(The Report of the proceedings of the Imperial Conference was adopted.)*

PUBLICATION.

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to ask whether the members of the Conference see any objection to my using any of the material in the Report, which I may think suitable, in the course of the speech which I have to deliver at the Guildhall to-morrow night. At the Guildhall one is always supposed to have something to tell the people, and, if there is anything that I think it would be of interest to the people to know, it appears in the public press on the following day. I should be most grateful to be able to draw upon the Report.

Sir Maurice Hankey: The idea was to publish the Report in the newspapers on Saturday morning if the Conference approved of this course.

General Smuts: I think it would be most suitable for the Prime Minister to be able to refer to this. He will be expected to do so.

(The Conference agreed to the Prime Minister's suggestion.)

Sir Maurice Hankey: Can we publish the Report in Saturday morning's newspapers? A Blue Book will presumably be published as in previous years. In past years the Blue Book has contained all the published report and all the published speeches and published papers. We propose to add one or two papers about nationality, &c., after communication with the different Dominion Delegations before they leave. We have the list nearly ready, and we would propose to submit it to the delegates and secure their approval to what should be published in the Blue Book, and then the Colonial Office will arrange in the ordinary course as to the dates of publication, &c.

(This was agreed to.)

CONCLUDING RESOLUTION. APPRECIATION OF WORK OF SECRETARIAT.

Mr. Baldwin: It is five weeks ago since we started our labours, but before we part I should like to express to you the pleasure it has been to me personally and to His Majesty's Government to welcome you here. I should like to tell you how grateful we feel to every member of the Conference who has come to help in these deliberations, and particularly to those who have come from such great distances at what must be great personal inconvenience, which could only be justified by the nature of the work to which we have been summoned. I want to thank you all most warmly for the help you have given to make this Conference a success. I believe that we have done some very good work, and I think it will bear good fruit in the future. I thank you very much for your help, and I hope that you will be able to secure a little well-earned rest before you resume your labours at home.

Mr. Mackenzie King: May I say that we on this side of the table feel what a great privilege it has been to have the opportunity of meeting and conversing at this table with the Prime Minister and other Members of His Majesty's Government. We all realise that we have had but the one aim and object of finding common ground on all matters of mutual concern and of seeking to reconcile points of difficulty and difference. I cannot but feel that we have been wholly successful in this and that the outcome of the Conference is that we shall return to our respective countries with the feeling that what has been reached here by way of

* Published as Cmd. 1987.

Secretariat Note.—The Committee on the Spahlinger Treatment of Tuberculosis (see page 21 of the Minutes of the Fourteenth Meeting) met and drew up a Report (E. 89). It was decided by the Drafting Committee not to include a reference to this Report in the published proceedings of the Conference.

C 62935

agreement represents a unanimous voice, and will commend itself not only to our Governments but through the Governments to our Parliaments and through the Parliaments to the people of the different Dominions from which we come. I am sure that the spirit of goodwill and unity that we feel so strongly at this moment will be emphasised in all parts of the Empire as the result of this Conference.

Mr. Bruce: I should like to associate myself with everything that Mr. Mackenzie King has said, and especially to express my appreciation of the spirit in which all the British Ministers with whom we have come into contact have met us, and of the helpfulness which they have shown upon every question that has come under consideration. We have been able to arrive at unanimity on all questions which we have discussed, and I am quite certain that good results will flow from our deliberations. I also think that we all owe a very great debt of gratitude to the Secretariat for the admirably efficient way in which they have done their work and the great help which they have given to us on every occasion. Particularly in the case of one, like myself, who came late—for which I again apologise at the conclusion of the Conference—it is very difficult to pick up the information required for the purpose of our discussions; and for my own part I do want to thank Sir Maurice Hankey and Mr. Harding very much for all they have done; and the whole of the Secretariat for the very great help which they have given to us since we have been here.

Mr. Baldwin: I agree upon that.

Mr. Massey: Prime Minister, as the senior member of the Conference, I want to express my appreciation of the uniform courtesy and consideration which have been extended to us, not only by yourself but by each and every one of the British Ministers. I would also like to endorse what the Prime Minister of Australia has said with regard to the Secretariat. There is no question about it that they have been of immense assistance, especially to members from overseas, and the assistance which they have rendered, and the knowledge which they possessed, have conduced very greatly to the success of the Conference. I do not think there is any doubt that the Conference has been a success. Some of us have come a long way in order to be present, but I believe the work done was well worth coming to do, and I think that as time goes on that will be quite evident.

General Smuts: I associate myself most fully and cordially with what has fallen from my colleagues.

Mr. Warren: I need hardly paraphrase what has already been said. I want to say that, coming from a small community, I desire to express my gratification for the way in which Newfoundland has been treated—exactly as if we were the Dominion of Canada.

Professor MacNeill: We can, I think, adopt everything that has been said by the representatives of the Dominions who have already spoken, both with regard to the courtesy and friendship shown to us by His Majesty's Ministers, and with regard to the great assistance given to us in every possible way by the Secretariat. Moreover, we have been especially pleased with the course of the Conference.

Lord Peel: As leader of the Indian Delegation, I should like to thank the Conference for the very keen appreciation they have shown of our very difficult Indian problems and for the courtesy and patience with which they have listened to us.

Mr. Baldwin: Gentlemen, I think that concludes the business of the Conference. I should only like to say that I re-echo everything that was said about the Secretary and his staff and about the work, too, which has been much less seen and known in London, the work of the Dominion and Indian staffs. I think it has been a great thing to bring these staffs together and let them work together, and I am sure that all sides have learned a great deal from it. The help that they have been to me has enabled me to attempt a task which was novel, and with regard to which I was comparatively unexperienced.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62936

Sir Maurice Hankey: Would you like to put these three short paragraphs in the Report à propos of what has been said? It has been done in former years.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes. There are three formal paragraphs saying that I have expressed pleasure on behalf of the British Government and that you have kindly responded. It has been done on previous occasions. The first is :—

> "Before the meetings of the Imperial Conference terminate, the Prime Minister of Great Britain and his colleagues desire to express their great pleasure at having been able to welcome in London the Prime Ministers of the Dominions and the other representatives from overseas, and their appreciation of the readiness of other members of the Conference to travel so far in order to take part in its sittings."

I am sure we should like that to be put on record. I think it may be your pleasure that I may add to it this second one :—

> "On their part the Prime Ministers and representatives of the Dominions and India wish to place on record their thanks, first to the Prime Minister of Great Britain for his conduct of the business of the Conference, and, secondly, both to him and to the other members of the British Government for their constant attention to its work, in spite of the pressure of other duties."

Some similar note has been put at the end of every report; and to sum it up the third one is this :—

> "The members of the Conference are unanimous that the hours spent in consultation have been of the greatest value and will do much to facilitate the work of achieving unity of thought and action on matters of common concern to all parts of the Empire."

I think those words sum up the spirit in which we have worked.

(The paragraphs were agreed to.)

I thank you, gentlemen.

DATE OF NEXT CONFERENCE.

At the conclusion of the proceedings, the Prime Minister of Great Britain briefly referred to the date of the next Session of the Conference, and it was generally agreed that it was premature to make any definite arrangement.

2, *Whitehall Gardens, S.W.*1,
November 8, 1923.

APPENDIX.

Foreign Relations.

Revised paragraphs for Report, as circulated.

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced on the 5th October by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs who gave to the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and, secondly, of those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that extracts from those parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, viz., the situation in connection with the Reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.

C 62937

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State and the three members of the Indian delegation took part.

Frequent and detailed examination was given not only to the main features of the international situation, but to the different aspects of that situation as they developed from day to day. Nor did the Imperial Conference terminate its sittings until each subject had been carefully explored and a common understanding reached upon the main heads of foreign policy.

It was while the Conference was sitting that the President of the United States renewed the offer of the United States Government to take part in an international Conference or enquiry to investigate the European Reparation problem, and to report upon the capacity of Germany to make the payments to which she is pledged. The Conference cordially welcomed, and decided to take immediate advantage of, this overture; and communications were at once entered into with the Allied Powers to obtain their co-operation.

The Conference, after careful consideration of the policy which has been pursued, was of the opinion that the European situation could only be lifted on to the plane of a possible settlement by the co-operation of the United States of America, and that, if the scheme of common enquiry to be followed by common action were to break down, the results would be inimical both to the peace and to the economic recovery of the world.

It felt that in such an event it would be desirable for the British Government to consider very carefully the alternative of summoning a Conference itself in order to examine the financial and the economic problem in its widest aspect.

The Conference regarded any policy, which would result in breaking up the unity of the German State, as inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers, and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. The strongest representations on this subject were accordingly made to the Allied Governments.

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension, of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe; and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem, which will safeguard important communications between several parts of the Empire.

The Conference, so much of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference, which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations which have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

It recognised the loyalty with which Japan had carried out her obligations under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62936

Sir Maurice Hankey: Would you like to put these three short paragraphs in the Report à propos of what has been said? It has been done in former years.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes. There are three formal paragraphs saying that I have expressed pleasure on behalf of the British Government and that you have kindly responded. It has been done on previous occasions. The first is:—

> "Before the meetings of the Imperial Conference terminate, the Prime Minister of Great Britain and his colleagues desire to express their great pleasure at having been able to welcome in London the Prime Ministers of the Dominions and the other representatives from overseas, and their appreciation of the readiness of other members of the Conference to travel so far in order to take part in its sittings."

I am sure we should like that to be put on record. I think it may be your pleasure that I may add to it this second one:—

> "On their part the Prime Ministers and representatives of the Dominions and India wish to place on record their thanks, first to the Prime Minister of Great Britain for his conduct of the business of the Conference, and, secondly, both to him and to the other members of the British Government for their constant attention to its work, in spite of the pressure of other duties."

Some similar note has been put at the end of every report; and to sum it up the third one is this:—

> "The members of the Conference are unanimous that the hours spent in consultation have been of the greatest value and will do much to facilitate the work of achieving unity of thought and action on matters of common concern to all parts of the Empire."

I think those words sum up the spirit in which we have worked.

(The paragraphs were agreed to.)

I thank you, gentlemen.

DATE OF NEXT CONFERENCE.

At the conclusion of the proceedings, the Prime Minister of Great Britain briefly referred to the date of the next Session of the Conference, and it was generally agreed that it was premature to make any definite arrangement.

2, *Whitehall Gardens, S.W.*1,
November 8, 1923.

APPENDIX.

Foreign Relations.

Revised paragraphs for Report, as circulated.

The discussions on foreign relations were commenced on the 5th October by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs who gave to the Conference a review of the general situation in every part of the world, and the most frank exposition, first, of the main problems which have confronted the Empire during the last two years, and, secondly, of those which seem most likely to arise in the near future.

The greater part of what Lord Curzon said was necessarily of a confidential character, since it was his object to supplement the written and telegraphic communications of the past two years by giving orally to the representatives of the Dominions and India the inner history of the period, but it was thought advisable that extracts from those parts of his speech which related to subjects of immediate interest and importance, viz., the situation in connection with the Reparations problem and the Turkish Treaty, should be published forthwith.

C 62937

This was a departure from the practice at previous Imperial Conferences, when statements made by the Foreign Secretary have been regarded as confidential throughout.

Lord Curzon's review was followed by a general discussion on foreign relations, in which Lord Robert Cecil as British representative on the Council of the League of Nations, all the Dominion Prime Ministers present, the Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State and the three members of the Indian delegation took part.

Frequent and detailed examination was given not only to the main features of the international situation, but to the different aspects of that situation as they developed from day to day. Nor did the Imperial Conference terminate its sittings until each subject had been carefully explored and a common understanding reached upon the main heads of foreign policy.

It was while the Conference was sitting that the President of the United States renewed the offer of the United States Government to take part in an international Conference or enquiry to investigate the European Reparation problem, and to report upon the capacity of Germany to make the payments to which she is pledged. The Conference cordially welcomed, and decided to take immediate advantage of, this overture; and communications were at once entered into with the Allied Powers to obtain their co-operation.

The Conference, after careful consideration of the policy which has been pursued, was of the opinion that the European situation could only be lifted on to the plane of a possible settlement by the co-operation of the United States of America, and that, if the scheme of common enquiry to be followed by common action were to break down, the results would be inimical both to the peace and to the economic recovery of the world.

It felt that in such an event it would be desirable for the British Government to consider very carefully the alternative of summoning a Conference itself in order to examine the financial and the economic problem in its widest aspect.

The Conference regarded any policy, which would result in breaking up the unity of the German State, as inconsistent with the Treaty obligations entered into both by Germany and the Powers, and as incompatible with the future discharge by Germany of her necessary obligations. The strongest representations on this subject were accordingly made to the Allied Governments.

The Conference considered the situation in the Near and Middle East and recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of peace between the Allies and Turkey. An end had thus been brought to a period of acute political tension, of military anxiety and financial strain in the eastern parts of Europe; and more particularly had great relief been given to the sentiments of the Moslem subjects of the British throne in all parts of the world.

Another of the subjects that engaged the attention of the Conference was that of Egypt. The Conference was glad to recognise the great advance that has been made during the last two years towards a pacific settlement of this complex problem, which will safeguard important communications between several parts of the Empire.

The Conference, so much of whose time had been occupied two years ago with the question of the renewal or termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and with the future regulation of the Pacific, noted with satisfaction the results of the Washington Conference, which had added immensely to the security of the world without disturbing the intimate relations which have for so long existed between the Empire and its former Ally.

It recognised the loyalty with which Japan had carried out her obligations under the Washington Treaties; it registered the confident belief that the future relations between the Governments and peoples of the British Empire and Japan will be not less sincere and cordial than when the British and Japanese Governments were bound by written conventions; and it recorded its profound sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in the terrible catastrophe which has recently befallen them.

During the session of the Conference, the question of the regulation of the liquor traffic off the American coasts and of the measures to be taken to avoid a serious conflict either of public

57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
66
67
68
69
70
INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62938

opinion or of official action was seriously debated. The Conference arrived at the conclusion that, while affirming and safeguarding as a cardinal feature of British policy the principle of the three-mile limit, it was yet both desirable and practicable to meet the American request for an extension of the right of search beyond this limit for the above purpose, and negotiations were at once opened with the United States Government for the conclusion of an experimental agreement with this object in view.

Finally the Conference after listening to a detailed exposition of the work of the League of Nations during the past two years, and more particularly of the recent sitting of the Council and the Assembly at Geneva, placed on record its emphatic approval of the action that had been taken by, and the support that had been given to, the representatives of the British Empire on the latter occasion. There was full accord that the League should be given the unabated support of all the British members of the League as a valuable instrument of International peace and as the sole available organ for the harmonious regulation of many International affairs.

This Conference is a conference of representatives of the several Governments of the Empire; its views and conclusions on Foreign Policy as recorded above are necessarily subject to the action of the Governments and Parliaments of the various portions of the Empire, and it trusts that the results of its deliberations will meet with their approval.

November 7, 1923.

C 62939

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

STENOGRAPHIC NOTES OF MEETINGS.

E. (1923) Series.

INDEX.

(Figures in brackets refer to number of Meeting.)

A.

Abdullah, Emir, administration of Transjordania by, Devonshire (2) 10.

Abyssinia, contribution to League of Nations, Rodd (15) 17.

Aden:
- Fuelling base to be established, Salisbury (8) 5.
- Royal Air Force in, Hoare (10) 15.

Adly Pasha, negotiations with, Curzon (3) 11.

Ægean, Bulgarian outlet to, Curzon (3) 19.

Afghanistan:
- Bolshevik propaganda and menace in, Massey (4) 28; Peel (5) 16–17.
- British Treaty with, 1921, Curzon (3) 8; Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 21.
- Diplomatic relations with Britain, France, Germany and Italy, Curzon (3) 8.
- Imports through India, Curzon (3) 8.
- Newfoundland's interest in, Warren (5) 16.
- Russian relations with, Curzon (3) 8.
- Stable and careful policy in regard to, need for, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 21.
- Tribes on Indian frontier, trouble with, Curzon (3) 8.
- Trouble in, possibility of, Massey (4) 28.
- War with, 1919, Curzon (3) 8; Peel (5) 17.

Africa:
- See also British East Africa, South Africa and British West Africa.
- Communication between North and South, all-British route, Smuts (2) 13, 14; Ormsby-Gore (2) 13.
- Field for British development in, Smuts (2) 12.

Air Defence, see under Defence.

Akalis, Sect, trouble caused by, in the Punjab, Peel (5) 17.

Albania, International Boundary Commission, murder of Italian section, see Janina murders.

Alexandria, Air establishment near, protection necessary, Salisbury (8) 5.

Allenby, Lord, deportations from Egypt by, Curzon (3) 11–12.

Alwar, Colonel His Highness the Maharajah of, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.:
- Address in honour of Dussehra festival, (10) 24–5.
- Air forces of the Empire, need for strengthening, (11) 12.
- British Empire, (1) 14, (12) 21–2.
- Capital ships, number available for British Empire as result of Washington Conference, (11) 11–12.

Alwar, Colonel His Highness the Maharajah of, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.—(continued).
- Lord Curzon's speech, appreciation of, (5) 18.
- Foreign policy, (5) 18–9.
- Germany, difficulties caused by delay in imposing terms on, (5) 18.
- Imperial Conference, objects of, (1) 14, (14) 4.
- India:
  - Constitutional problem, solution suggested (12) 22–3.
  - Division into British India and Native States, (12) 21.
  - Princes of, message from, (12) 26.
  - Prince of Wales's visit, (12) 23.
- Indians, position of, in the Empire, (2) 17, (12) 20–7, (13) 27, (14) 4–8.
- Kenya, (12) 24–5, (14) 7.
- Opening speech, (1) 13–14.
- Personal position, (14) 7–8.
- Ruhr occupation (5) 18.
- General Smuts, tribute to, and welcome to India, (12) 25, 26.
- Welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2.
- Welcome to South Africa, Smuts (13) 27; thanks for, (14) 5.

Ambassadors' Conference:
- Machinery of the League of Nations compared with that of, Cecil (6) 16–17.
- Position of, in connection with Italian-Greek crisis, Curzon (6) 3, 4–7; (7) 3–4, 10; Cecil (6) 10, 12–13, (7) 9; Smuts (7) 3, 4, 5.

Amery, Right Hon. L. S., M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty:
- Defence resolutions, (11) 15–16; (15) 2.
- proposed Empire cruise of "Hood" and "Repulse" and light cruisers (9) 13–14.

Naval Defence:
- British Empire policy, (9) 12.
- Bulged ships, (9) 4.
- Capital ships, (9) 4–5, (11) 11–12.
- Concentration of British fleet in home waters, (9) 3.
- Discussion at Admiralty, suggestion, (8) 9, 15.
- not Displaced by air defence, (9) 3–4.
- Distribution of British Navy and importance of mobility, (9) 8–9.
- Dominion co-operation, (8) 21, (9) 12–13, 14–15, (11) 16–17.
- Local defence only, not sufficient, (9) 3.
- Maintenance of communications, importan of, (9) 2–3.
- Position of question in 1921 and at preser (11) 15.
- Post and post-war standards, (9) 5–6.

57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 69 70 INDEX

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Amery, Right Hon. L. S., M.P.—(continued).
Naval Defence—(continued).
Relative cost of, in Great Britain and the Dominions, (9) 14.
Statement and reply to discussion, (9) 2–15, (11) 16–17; appreciations of statement, King (9) 15, (11) 2; Bruce (9) 20, (11) 3; Smuts (9) 27; Warren (11) 9.
Submarines, (9) 4, 4–5.
Task of the Navy, (9) 3.
Mediterranean, protection of, (9) 8–9.
New Hebrides, (14) 26.
Publication of proceedings of Conference, (9) 28.
Singapore naval base, (9) 9–12.
Washington Conference and Agreement, (9) 6, 6–8.

Andrews, Rev. Mr., advice to Indians in South Africa, Smuts (13) 27; Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 32.

Angora:
Italian special envoy, Curzon (3) 18.
Secret treaty between French and Turks at, Curzon (3) 4, 22.

Arabs, see under Palestine.

Armistice Day, arrangements, Curzon (9) 28–9.

Asia Minor:
Greek refugees from, problem of, Curzon (3) 20; Cecil (6) 9.
Surrender by Greece under Lausanne Treaty, Curzon (3) 20.
War in, between Greece and Turkey, see under Greece.

Australia:
Air defence, Bruce (11) 4.
and Committees of Enquiry in connection with revocation of naturalisation certificates, (14) 23.
Contribution to League of Nations, (15) 14.
Feeling in, against war, and coming development of, Bruce (6) 21–2.
Immigration policy, Bruce (13) 20–1, 21.
Imperial defence, attitude regarding, Bruce (8) 10, 11.
Importance to, of defence of Suez Canal and retention of British garrison in Egypt, Bruce (11) 3–4, 6.
Indians in, position of, Peel (12) 4, (14) 3–4, 4; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 10, (13) 30; Bruce (13) 20–2; Alwar (14) 5.
Interest in foreign policy, Bruce (4) 19–21.
Interest in the League of Nations, Bruce (6) 19–20.
and Italian-Greek crisis, Bruce (6) 20, 21.
Market for sugar and fruit, loss of, by Fiji, Devonshire (2) 6.
Military defence, Bruce (8) 11–12, (11) 4.
Naval defence: Amery (9) 14; Bruce (11) 4–5.
Co-operation with New Zealand hoped for, Massey (9) 26–7.
Position as regards, and willingness to co-operate, Bruce (8) 12, (9) 20–1, 22.
and New Hebrides, Bruce (14) 12–13.
and Pacific base, Bruce (8) 14–15, (11) 5.
and Singapore naval base, Bruce (8) 14, (11) 6; Salisbury (8) 14; Smuts (8) 19–20.
War debt, Smuts (5) 6.

Austria:
Attempt to establish Italian predominance in, Curzon (3) 18.
Restoration of, Baldwin (1) 7; Curzon (3) 21; Massey (4) 30; Cecil (6) 8–9; Smuts (7) 2.

Avezzana, Baron, Italian Ambassador in Paris, and occupation of Corfu, Curzon (6) 4–5.

Aviation, commercial, importance of development, Hoare (10) 14, 20.

B.

"B" Mandated Territories, grant of naturalisation to persons in, resolution, (14) 23; agreed to (14) 11.

Baldwin, the Right Hon. Stanley, M.P., Prime Minister: (Chairman).
Air defence, (1) 5.
Appeal to, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 17–18.
Appointment of Committees, (2) 25, 26, (10) 24.
British Empire, (1) 7–8.
Concluding speeches and resolution, (16) 4, 5, 6.
Corfu, Italian occupation, (1) 4.
Defence: (1) 5.
Draft resolutions to be circulated, (11) 16.
Drafting Committee for Report of Proceedings, (15) 6.
Entente, (1) 3.
European position, (1) 7.
Foreign relations:
Non-publication of speeches, (5) 2, 3.
Paragraphs for Report, (16) 2.
George V, His Majesty:
Address to, (15) 6, (16) 3.
Message to, from Imperial Conference, (1) 14–5; reply to (3) 2.
German reparations, (1) 2–3.
High Commissioners, status of, (14) 21, (15) 5–6.
Imperial Conference:
Future arrangements, (1) 15, (2) 24, 25, 30, (5) 21, (9) 28, (11) 19.
Joint Secretariat, (2) 26, 27.
Reference to, in Guildhall speech, (16) 4.
Imperial War Graves Commission, extension of charter, (15) 5.
India: (1) 6–7.
Contribution to the League of Nations, (15) 6.
Indians, position of, in the Empire, (2) 16, 17, 23, (14) 9–10.
Inter-Imperial trade, (1) 6.
Janina murders, (1) 4.
Japan, message to, (1) 15; reply read, (6) 2.
Japanese earthquake, (1) 5.
Lausanne, Treaty of, (1) 4.
Law, Right Hon. Bonar, death of, (14) 2.
League of Nations, (1) 4, 7.
Mission to America and funding of debt, Curzon (3) 10.
Nationality Committee's report, (14) 11.
New Hebrides, (14) 13.
Official correspondence between Governments, publication question, (14) 20, (15) 5–6.
Opening speech, (1) 2–8.
Palestine, (2) 19.
Publicity:
Appointment of Minister in charge of, (2) 19, 20, 23, 24.
Arrangements and press communiqués, (1) 2, 15, (2) 21, 27, 28, (3) 31, (5) 2, 3, 22, (12) 18, 19, 20, (13) 33.
Ruhr occupation, (1) 3.
Spahlinger treatment for tuberculosis, appointment of committee, (14) 22.
Treaties, question of publication of resolution, (14) 17.
Unemployment, (1) 6.
United States of America, debt to, (1) 4–5.
Washington Conference, (1) 5.
Welcome to oversea representatives, (1) 2, (3) 2, (4) 2, (6) 2.

Balfour, Lord:
on Air attack on London, Hoare (10) 17.
on Contributions to the League of Nations, Devonshire (15) 14; Tej Bahadur Sapru (15) 15, 21; Rodd (15) 16.

Balfour, Lord—(continued).
at Washington Conference, Curzon (3) 10; Salisbury (8) 3–4, 4, 13; Amery (9) 6.
Zionist Declaration, November 1917, Devonshire (2) 9; Curzon (2) 17, (3) 9.

Balkan States, Army, Derby (10) 10.

Barbados, scheme for all-British cable from Turk's Island, Devonshire (2) 3–4.

Barrère, M., departure from Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 4.

Basutoland, position of Indians in, Alwar (12) 24.

Beira, railway connection with Lake Nyasa, Devonshire (2) 4.

Belgium:
British Government's telegram to, regarding Rhineland Separatist movement, Curzon (14) 2.
Further portion of Ruanda made over to, Smuts (2) 13, 14; Ormsby-Gore (2) 13. and German reparations: Bruce (4) 23; Smuts (5) 7.
British communication to, respecting American participation in question, Curzon (10) 3–5, and probable attitude in reply, Curzon (10) 8–9; reply, Curzon (13) 2.
Priority, Smuts (5) 6.
and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 15, 16.
Position of, Curzon (3) 26.
Ruhr occupation, see that title.
Uncertainty in, as to British policy respecting Rhineland Separatist movement, Smuts (12) 9, 12, reply to, Curzon (12) 11–12.
War debt to Allies, cancellation, Smuts (5) 6.

Benes, Dr., Foreign Minister of Czecho-Slovakia, (3) 21, (6) 12, (7) 9.

Bradbury, Sir John: (13) 4, 9.
Views as to outcome of proposed Expert Committee on German Reparations, Curzon (13) 6.

Branting, M., Swedish representative on the League of Nations, Cecil (6) 11, 14.

British Columbia:
Indians in, number and position, Peel (12) 4; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 10; King (13) 15, 16, 17; Alwar (14) 6–7.
Japanese and Chinese in, King (4) 10.
Visit of Mr. Harding to, King (4) 4–5.

British East Africa:
Communications, Devonshire (2) 4.
Indians in, position of, Alwar (14) 6.
Natives, policy for advancement of, Devonshire (2) 4.

British Empire:
Maharajah of Alwar on, (1) 14, (12) 21–2.
Mr. Baldwin on, (1) 7–8.
Consultation methods, need for improvement, Bruce (4) 24; Massey (4) 34.
Freedom of action of Dominions, Massey (4) 32–3; King (4) 32.
Mr. King on, (1) 9, (9) 18–19.
National status of Dominions, King (9) 16, 19.
Policy and position of, Curzon (3) 3–4.
Power of, Smuts (1) 11.
Prestige of, need for maintaining, Smuts (5) 5–6, 6–7 no Prospect of interference with autonomy of Dominions, Massey (9) 23.
Right of each part to control own affairs, King (4) 9, 14–15, 18, (9) 18.
Statements from British Government or Departments must be issued through Dominion Governments only, King (4) 17.

British Empire Exhibition, Devonshire (2) 2; Massey (2) 11.

British Guiana:
Immigration:
of Indians, question of, Smuts (2) 14.
Need for, Devonshire (2) 4.
Indians in, position of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 11; Devonshire (13) 14; Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 6.
Visit of Mr. Edward Wood and Mr. Ormsby-Gore, 1922, Devonshire (2) 3.

British South Africa Company, Devonshire (2) 5.

British West Africa:
Communications, Devonshire (2) 4.
forthcoming Visit of Mr. Ormsby-Gore, Devonshire (2) 3.

Bruce, the Right Hon. S. M., M.C., Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia:
Mr. Amery's statement, appreciation of, (9) 20.
Australia:
Air defence, (11) 4.
Feeling in, against war and coming development of, (6) 21–2.
Immigration policy, (13) 20–1, 21.
Indians, position of, (13) 20–22, comments on statement, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 30; Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 5.
Interest in foreign policy (4) 19–21.
Military defence, (8) 11–12, (11) 4.
Naval defence, (8) 12, (11) 4–5.
Position as regards defence, (9) 20.
British Navy, proposed Empire cruise, (9) 22.
Concluding speech, (16) 5.
Lord Curzon's speech, comments on, (4) 24.
Defence:
an Empire question, (8) 10, 11, (9) 21–2.
Position of Dominions as regards assistance in emergency, (11) 3.
Uniformity in training, &c., (11) 3.
Egypt, British garrison, (11) 4.
European affairs, Dominion opposition to constant British intervention, (4) 23–4.
Foreign policy:
Broad principles, need for enunciation of, (4) 24–5.
Common Empire policy, need for, and suggested basis of, (4) 20–2.
Non-publication of speeches agreed with, (5) 3.
German reparations:
American participation, (10) 8–9.
Arbitrary figure, suggested agreement on, (4) 22–3.
proposed Expert Committee, (13) 7.
Great Britain, air defence, (11) 4.
Imperial Council of Defence, (8) 10.
India, place in the Empire and civilisation, (13) 21.
Italian-Greek crisis, (6) 20.
Japan, (8) 15.
League of Nations, (6) 19–20, 21.
Military defence, Dominion co-operation, (11) 18.
Naval Defence:
Australian position respecting, and willingness to co-operate, (9) 20–1, 22.
Capital ships, (8) 13, (11) 5.
separate Dominion navies, (9) 21.
One-Power standard, (11) 5, 6, 14.
Pacific base, need for, (8) 14–15, (11) 5, 6.
New Hebrides, (14) 12, 13, 26.
Ruhr occupation, (4) 22, 23.
Singapore naval base, (8) 12–14, (11) 5–6.
Suez Canal, defence of, (11) 3–4, 6.
Treaties, question of publication of resolution, (14) 17.
Welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2, (4) 2, reply to (4) 19.

Bukoba district, retention by Britain, Ormsby-Gore (2) 13.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Bulgaria:
Evasions of treaty obligations, Curzon (3) 19.
Foreign policy of M. Stambolisky, Curzon (3) 19.
Government of M. Tsankoff, Curzon (3) 19.
Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 22–25.
Outlet to the Ægean, Curzon (3) 19.
Revolution, Curzon (3) 18.
pro-Serbian policy of M. Stambolisky, Curzon (3) 19.

Burton, the Hon. H., K.C., quoted respecting Indians in South Africa, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 11.

C.

"C" Mandated Territories:
Grant of naturalisation to persons resident in, resolution, (14) 23; agreed, (14) 11.
Indians in, position of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 9, 11.
United States and, (14) 22, proposed reference to Committee, Baldwin (10) 24.

Cables, see Telegraphic Communication.

Cairo, air establishment near, protection necessary, Salisbury (8) 5.

Canada:
Air defence, interest in, King (11) 2.
Amendment to article 10 of the League of Nations Covenant, Gouin (6) 18–19.
Attitude respecting European situation, King (4) 18.
Lord Robert Cecil's visit, good effects, King (6) 18.
Civil aviation, Hoare (10) 20.
Coal imports from Great Britain and the U.S.A., King (4) 8.
Commercial treaties with France and Italy, King (4) 11.
Conception of Imperial relations, King (4) 18–19.
Contribution to the League of Nations, Devonshire (15) 14.
Co-operation in defence desired by, King (8) 10.
Effect of Italian action on public opinion in, King (6) 18.
External affairs, review of, King (4) 2–11.
Fishery questions:
Conference with the U.S.A., 1918, (14) 35.
Halibut Treaty with the U.S.A., King (4) 6–7; (14) 35.
Salmon fisheries of Pacific coast, negotiations respecting closer regulation, King (4) 6.
Franchise, history of, King (13) 15–16.
and French policy, King (4) 18.
and German reparations, King (4) 18.
Government correspondence with His Majesty's Government, divergent views respecting publication, King (14) 18–19.
Immigration:
Chinese, King (4) 10–11.
Indian, recent history of question, King (13) 14–15.
Japanese, King (4) 10–11; (14) 35–6.
Indians in:
Committee from India would be given every opportunity to discuss question, King (13) 19.
Matter to be considered when Franchise Law revised, King (13) 18–19.
Number and position, King (4) 11, (12) 10, (13) 15–16, (14) 5; Peel (12) 4, (14) 3, 4; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 10; Alwar (14) 5, 6–7.
Reciprocal method of dealing with question suggested, King (13) 16.
International Joint Commission with U.S.A.: King (4) 3–4, (14) 34–5.
Leakage of information respecting Conference discussion, King (7) 12.

Canada—(continued).
Liquor smuggling into U.S.A., King (4) 9.
Naval defence, cost of, Amery (9) 14.
and Near Eastern crisis, September 1922, King (4) 16–17, (11) 18.
Participation in war, extent must be decided by Canadian Parliament, King (11) 2–3.
Position of, respecting foreign policy, King (4) 9.
Position of, in relation to treaties, historical memorandum, (14) 33–5.
Position as regards defence, King (9) 16–7.
Postal convention with U.S.A., revision, King (4) 5.
Prairie provinces, King (4) 9.
Pulpwood export to U.S.A., embargo question, King (4) 8, 8–9.
and Ratification of Treaty of Lausanne, King (15) 11.
Relations with Far East, policy respecting, King (4) 10.
Relations with Great Britain, King (9) 16–7.
Relations with U.S.A., King (4) 2–10, 12–13, (9) 18, (14) 34–5.
Representation at Washington, position respecting, King (4) 5–6.
Rush–Bagot Agreement, 1917, proposed revision, King (4) 7–8.
and St. Lawrence Waterway improvement scheme, King (4) 5.
Mr. Sastri's mission to, King (4) 11, (13) 18, 19; Alwar (14) 7.
Trade, effect of U.S. tariff on, King (4) 8.
Trade and shipping communications with Fiji, expectation of important new developments, Devonshire (2) 16.
Wireless and cable communications with West Indies, proposed management of, by Pacific Cable Board, Devonshire (2) 3–4, approved, King (2) 10.

Cannes Conference, 1922, Curzon (3) 27.

Cape of Good Hope:
Oil station, Salisbury (8) 6.
Route to the East round, Salisbury (8) 5, 6.

Cape of Good Hope province, position of Indians in, Smuts (13) 25; Alwar (14) 6.

Cape Province, position of Indians in, Smuts (13) 25; Alwar (14) 6.

Capital ships, see under Naval under Defence.

Cecil, the Right Hon. Lord Robert, K.C., M.P.:
Danzig administration, (7) 9.
German reparations, (6) 17.
Italian-Greek disputes, (6) 10–16, (7) 9.
League of Nations:
Aims and position of, (6) 7–8.
British Empire support, (6) 17–18.
Confidence of smaller nations in, growing, (7) 9.
Council, attitude towards, of Governments represented on, (6) 16.
Machinery of, and comparison with that of Ambassadors' Conference, (6) 16–17. and Opium question, (6) 9, (7) 9–10.
Promotion of international co-operation, results already achieved, (6) 8–9.
Rapallo Treaty registration with, (6) 16.
Statement regarding, (6) 7–18; appreciation of, King (6) 18; Massey (6) 22; reply to discussion (7) 8–10.
Status of, in international disputes, (6) 9–10.
Treaty of Guarantee, (7) 8.
Value, (6) 9.
Newfoundland confidence in, Warren (7) 7.
Saar administration, (7) 7–8.

Cecil, the Right Hon. Lord Robert, K.C., M.P. —(continued).
Thanks to, for assistance in connection with Canadian amendment to article 10 of League of Nations Covenant, Gouin (6) 18–19.
Visit to Canada and U.S.A., good effects, King (6) 18.
Work for the League of Nations, appreciation of, Smuts (7) 2; McNeill (7) 7.

Ceylon, position of Indians in, Devonshire (13) 14; Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 6.

Chamberlain, the Right Hon. Neville, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer, proposed Expert Committee on German reparations, (13) 12.

Chicago, canal from Lake Michigan and to Gulf of Mexico, scheme, King (4) 3–4.

China:
Boxer indemnity, British share, desire to devote, to purposes mutually beneficial to Chinese and British interests, Curzon (3) 6.
Brigandage in, Curzon (3) 8.
British interference in affairs of, would be deprecated, Massey (4) 27–8.
Conditions in, Massey (4) 27–8, effect on Hong Kong, Devonshire (2) 6.
Contribution to League of Nations, arrears, Curzon (3) 7.
Customs tariff, Nine-Power Treaty regarding, Baldwin (1) 5.
Financial position, Curzon (3) 7.
Foreign postal agencies withdrawn, Curzon (3) 7.
Government, note to, by Treaty Powers, August 1923, and reply, Curzon (3) 7.
Immigration into Canada from, King (4) 11.
Internal chaos and seriousness of position, Curzon (3) 7–8; Massey (4) 26.
Japanese relations with, Curzon (3) 5.
Kiaochau returned to, by Japan, Curzon (3) 5, 7.
Nine-Power Treaties regarding, Baldwin (1) 5.
Political position, Curzon (3) 7.
Taxation, Curzon (3) 7.
Washington Treaties respecting: Baldwin (1) 5.
British Empire willing to ratify, Curzon (3) 6.
non-Ratification owing to French delay, Curzon (3) 6.

Civil Aviation, importance of development, Hoare (10) 14, 20.

Colonial Sugar Company, contract with New Zealand, Massey (2) 11.

Colonies and Protectorates, finance and trade, position, Devonshire (2) 2.

Committee of Imperial Defence:
Development of, Salisbury (8) 8.
Members and co-operation of Dominion representatives welcomed, Salisbury (8) 8; (11) 13.
an Organisation for defence, Salisbury (8) 2–3.
Origin of, Salisbury (8) 2.
Range of work, Salisbury (8) 9.
Standing Committee of Chiefs of Staff, Smuts (8) 18; Salisbury (8) 18–19.
War Books, compilation of, Salisbury (8) 9.
Work of, Smuts (8) 18.

Congo Agreement, Smuts (2) 14; Devonshire (2) 14; Lloyd-Greame (2) 14.

Constantine, King, abdication, Curzon (3) 20, 22.

Constantinople, British evacuation, Curzon (3) 23; Derby (10) 12.

Cook Islands:
Copra, no market for, in British Empire, and exports sent to U.S.A., Massey (2) 11.
Wireless communication, Massey (2) 11.

Coolidge, President:
Mr. Massey on, (4) 29.
Negotiations with, respecting participation in German reparations question, see under German Reparations.
Policy respecting European affairs, Curzon (3) 11.

Corfu, Italian bombardment and occupation of, Baldwin, (1) 4; Smuts (1) 11; Curzon (3) 18, (6) 3, 4, 5; Cecil (6) 10, 12, 13, 14, 15.

Coronel, battle off, Amery (9) 4, 10; Massey (9) 25.

Correspondence between Governments, see Official Correspondence.

Cosgrave, W. T., T.D., President of the Executive Council, Irish Free State:
Acknowledgment of welcome to Irish Free State representatives, (1) 12–13.
Irish Free State, position of, (1) 13.
Opening speech, (1) 12–13.
Welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2; Smuts (1) 10.

Cox, Sir Percy, High Commissioner, Iraq:
on Air control in Iraq, Hoare (10) 15.
Referendum taken by, Devonshire (2) 7.
Tribunte to, Devonshire (2) 8.

Craddock, Admiral, battle off Coronel, Amery (9) 4, 10; Massey (9) 25.

Crewe, Lord, and Italian-Greek crisis, Curzon (6) 5.

Cuno, Dr., Curzon (3) 27, 29, 30.

Currie, General Sir Arthur, would be unable to accept post of Canadian Minister at Washington, King (4) 5–6.

Curzon of Kedleston, the Most Hon. the Marquess of, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs:
Afghanistan, (3) 8.
Anglo-Japanese Alliance, termination, (3) 3, 5.
Angora, Franco-Turkish Treaty, (3) 4, 22.
Armistice Day arrangements, (9) 28–9.
Austria, improvement of conditions in, (3) 21.
Belgium, position of, (3) 26.
Benes, Dr., (3) 21.
British Empire, (3) 3–4.
British military weakness, (3) 4.
Bulgaria, position and policy, (3) 18–9.
China, position in, and relations with, (3) 6–8.
Constantinople, British evacuation, (3) 23.
Corfu, Italian bombardment of, (6) 3.
Dardanelles, freedom of, (3) 24.
Egypt, position in, and British policy regarding, (3) 3, 11–13.
Esthonia, (3) 17.
Entente, desirability of maintaining, (3) 5.
European situation:
Difficulties of, (3) 4.
General observations on, (3) 2, 3, 26–7.
Foreign relations:
Non-publication of speeches, (5) 2, 3.
Statements on: (3) 2–30, (5) 21, (10) 2–6.
Appreciation of, King (3) 31, (4) 2, (6) 18; Massey (3) 31, (4) 25, (6) 22; Warren (5) 15; Alwar (5) 18; Tej Bahadur Supru (5) 19.
Comments on, Bruce (4) 24; Massey (4) 26; Smuts (5) 4.
Paragraphs for report (15) 2, 8, (16) 2, 6–7.
Publication of certain parts of:
Proposed, (2) 28–9.
Result, (5) 2.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62944

Curzon of Kedleston, the Most Hon. the Marquess of, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E.—(continued).
France:
Difficulties with, (3) 4–5.
Position of, (3) 26.
Franklin-Bouillon Agreement, (3) 4, 22.
Gallipoli Peninsula, British cemeteries, (3) 24.
Germany:
British attitude towards, (3) 26–7.
Internal disruption, (3) 30.
Position of, (3) 26–7.
Reparations:
American participation, position respecting, and negotiations, (10) 2–6, 7–9, (13) 2–3.
proposed Expert Committee, (13) 3–7, 9–10.
Payments, history of, and of negotiations, (3) 27–30.
Great Britain, position in, (3) 27
Greece:
Position in, and attitude towards Great Britain, (3) 20, 22.
War with Turkey, (3) 4, 19, 20, 22.
High Commissioners, status of, (14) 20, 21.
Horthy, Admiral, Regent of Hungary, (3) 21.
Hungary, financial problem and proposed loan, (3) 21.
Hussein, King of the Hejaz, difficulties with, (3) 9.
Imperial Conference:
Appointment of Committees, (2) 25, 26.
Leakage of information, (7) 12.
Status of, (2) 20, 22.
Indians, position of, in the Empire, question of publication of speeches, (12) 19–20.
Italian-Greek crisis, 1923, (6) 2–7, (7) 3, 10.
Italy, position in, (3) 17–18.
Janina murders, (6) 2–3.
Japan, position in, and British relations with, (3) 5–6.
Karl, ex-Emperor, (3) 21.
Kwangchouwan, (3) 7.
Latvia, (3) 17.
Lausanne Conference, (3) 4, 22–5.
Lausanne Treaty, (3) 22–5, ratification, (15) 11.
League of Nations, (3) 3, (7) 10–12.
Lithuania, (3) 17.
Little Entente, (3) 3, 21–2.
Masaryk, Professor, (3) 21.
Mexico, (3) 11.
Morocco:
Extension of French power in, danger of, (3) 13–14.
Spanish zone, conditions in, (3) 13–14.
Mosul Vilayet, (3) 25.
Mussolini, M., policy of, (3) 18.
Near Eastern crisis, September 1922, manifesto to Dominions, (4) 17.
New Hebrides, Anglo-French Condominium, (14) 11, 12, 13.
Palestine, Zionist policy in, (2) 17–19.
Persia, position in, (3) 9.
Poland, (3) 3, 16–17.
Portugal, (3) 14–15.
Publicity questions: (2) 20, 24, (7) 11–12.
Need for secrecy as regards discussion on foreign relations, (2) 20–1, (3) 2.
Rhineland, Separatist movement, (13) 10–12, (14) 2.
Ruhr occupation, (3) 4, 28–30.
Russia, position in, and British relations with, (3) 3, 15–16.
Singapore naval base, (8) 20.
Spain, position in, and British relations with, (3) 14.
Stambolisky, M., (3) 18–19.
Tangier, negotiations respecting international administration of, (3) 13, 14.
Curzon of Kedleston, the Most Hon. the Marquess of, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E.—(continued).
Territorial waters, (14) 14.
Thanks due to, with regard to Turkey, Massey (4) 30.
Treaties, negotiation, signature and ratification of: (14) 14.
Question of publication of resolution, (14) 17.
Turkey:
enhanced British prestige, (3) 25.
Future of, (3) 25.
War with Greece, (3) 4, 19, 20, 22.
U.S.A.:
Attitude towards European problem, (3) 10–11.
British relations with, (3) 9–10.
and Liquor traffic, (15) 3–5.
State-owned shipping, difficulties owing to, (3) 10.
Veniselos, M., (3) 20.
Wei-hai Wei, (3) 6–7.
Zaghlul Pasha, (3) 11–12, 12.
Czecho-Slovakia, position in, Curzon (3) 3, 21–2.

D.

D'Abernon, Lord, telegram respecting Separatist movement in the Rhineland, Curzon (13) 10.
Danzig, administration, Cecil (6) 9, (7) 9; Smuts (7) 3.
Dardanelles:
Forts, reinstatement not desirable, Massey (4) 31.
Freedom of:
Importance of maintaining, Massey (4) 31.
Provisions of Treaty of Lausanne, Curzon (3) 24.
Davidson, J. C. C., C.H., C.B., M.P., appointment as Minister in charge of Publicity, (2) 19–24, 27.
Dedeagatch, railway from Bulgaria, Curzon (3) 19.
De Wet, the Hon. N. J., K.C., Minister of Justice, Union of South Africa, welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2.
Defence:
Air:
Airships, British Government's policy, Hoare (10) 14.
Canadian interest in, King (11) 2.
Civil aviation, value of development, Hoare (10) 20.
Co-operation with Dominions, Hoare (10) 19, 20.
Empire forces, need for strengthening, Alwar (11) 12.
Great Britain, see that title.
Sir Samuel Hoare's statement, (10) 14–20.
Limitation of armaments:
British Government's desire for, Baldwin (1) 5; Salisbury (8) 2; Hoare (10) 19.
Difficulties in connection with, Hoare (10) 19; Smuts (10) 23.
Sea defence not displaced by, Amery (9) 3–4.
Resolutions: (15) 7, 8.
Agreed to, (15) 3.
Question of, Hoare (11) 19.
Armaments:
See also Air above, and Naval below.
Danger of present position, Smuts (10) 21.
Limitation:
British policy, Salisbury (8) 2.
Resolution, (15) 7, agreed (15) 3.
Australia's attitude, Bruce (8) 10, 11.
Mr. Baldwin on, (1) 5.

C 62945

Defence—(continued).
Canada's position as regards, King (9) 16–17.
Censorship in event of war, collaboration of Dominions desired, Salisbury (8) 9.
Dangers nearer Great Britain, Smuts (8) 21.
Discussions on, need for secrecy, Salisbury (2) 21.
Dominion contributions, Smuts (8) 21; Warren (11) 9; Massey (11) 8.
Dominion co-operation: King (8) 10; Smuts (8) 21; Salisbury (11) 13; Amery (11) 16–17; Derby (11) 18.
Interchange of personnel, King (14) 2.
Uniformity in training, &c., desirability, Derby (10) 13–14; King (11) 2; Bruce (11) 3.
Dussehra festival, Alwar (10) 24–5.
an Empire question, Bruce (8) 10–11, (9) 21–2; Massey (9) 26–7.
India's position, Peel (8) 22.
Military:
British Army, see under Great Britain.
Canadian participation in war, extent must be decided by Canadian Parliament, King (11) 2–3.
Continental armies, Derby (10) 10.
Lord Derby's statement, (10) 9–14.
Dominion co-operation: Derby (10) 13–14.
Common training and equipment, need for, Derby (10) 13–14; King (11) 2.
Preparation, need for, Derby (10) 13.
Preparation of scheme, Derby (11) 18; King (11) 18; Bruce (11) 18; Massey (11) 19.
no Immediate menace to the Empire, Smuts (10) 21.
Empire's military weakness, Curzon (3) 4.
Position in Europe and comparison with 1914, Derby (10) 9–10.
Resolution, (15) 7, agreed to, (15) 3.
Thanks to Dominion Prime Ministers, Derby (11) 18.
Naval:
Mr. Amery's statement, (9) 2–15.
Armaments, limitation of:
British attitude respecting, Amery (9) 6.
Washington Treaty for: Baldwin (1) 5; Curzon (3) 5–6.
British action in carrying out, Amery (9) 6–7.
Effect of, Salisbury (8) 3; Massey (9) 23, 24.
Australia's position and willingness to co-operate, Bruce (9) 20–1, 22.
Bases:
See also Pacific and Singapore.
Importance of, Amery (9) 9; Salisbury (8) 5.
British action after Washington Agreement, Amery (9) 6.
British Navy, see under Great Britain.
Bulged ships, Amery (9) 4.
Capital ships:
Information as to value of, desired, Bruce (8) 13.
Number available for British Empire as result of Washington Conference, Alwar, Amery (11) 11–12.
Post-war enquiries into value of, Amery (9) 5.
Progress, Amery (8) 16, question respecting, Massey (8) 16.
Value of, Massey (8) 17, (9) 23; Amery (9) 4; Bruce (11) 5.
Concentration of British Fleet in home waters, Amery (9) 3.
Co-operation between New Zealand and Australia hoped for, Massey (9) 26–7.
Defence—(continued).
Naval—(continued).
not Displaced by air defence, Amery (9) 3–4.
Distribution of British Navy and importance of mobility, Amery (9) 8–9.
Dominion co-operation:
Admiralty memoranda, Warren (11) 9.
Extent, Amery (9) 14.
Interchange of personnel and ships, Amery (9) 13.
Progressive thought-out policy, need for, Amery (9) 14–15.
Separate Dominion navies:
Admiralty memorandum, publication question, Amery (9) 12–13; King (9) 19;
the Best system, Amery (9) 12–13.
Change in Admiralty standpoint welcomed, King (9) 15–16, 19; Bruce (9) 21.
Wide outlook, need for, Amery (11) 17.
Dominions must take full share in, Massey (8) 15, 16.
Fuelling bases, importance of, Amery (9) 9.
no Immediate menace to the Empire, Smuts (10) 22.
Importance of, Massey (8) 15–16, (9) 23–24, (11) 7–8.
Irish Free State position regarding, Mulcahy, (9) 27–8.
Light cruisers, need for, for defence of trade routes, Massey (8) 16–17.
Local defence only, not sufficient, Amery (9) 3; Massey (9) 23.
Maintenance of communications, importance of, Massey (6) 23–4, (9) 22, 24; Amery (9) 2–3; Bruce (9) 20.
New Zealand action taken and in prospect, Massey (8) 16, (9) 25–6.
New Zealand's interest in, Massey (9) 24–5.
One-Power standard:
Draft resolution in favour of: Bruce (11) 14.
Comments, Smuts (11) 15; Amery (11) 15.
Need for maintaining, Bruce (11) 5, 6.
not Sufficient, Massey (11) 8.
Policy of British Empire, Amery (9) 12.
Position of question in 1921 and at present, Smuts (11) 15; Amery (11) 15; Massey (11) 16.
Position resulting from the Washington Agreement, Amery (9) 7–8.
Post-war standard, Amery (9) 5–6.
Pre-war standard, Amery (9) 5.
Relative cost of, in Great Britain and the Dominions, Amery (9) 14.
Resolutions, (15) 7, agreed to, (15) 3.
Retention of command of the sea, importance of, Amery (11) 17.
Singapore naval base, see that title.
Submarines, limitations of, Amery (9) 4–5; Massey (9) 23.
Task of the Navy, Amery (9) 3.
Policy, connection with geographical position, King (9) 17.
Resolutions: (15) 7–8.
Agreed to, (15) 3.
Discussion on, (15) 2–3.
Draft to be circulated, Baldwin (11) 16.
Question of, Salisbury (11) 13–14, 14; Bruce (11) 14; Smuts (11) 14–15; Amery (11) 15–16; Massey (11) 16; Hoare (11) 19.
Lord Salisbury's statement, (8) 2–9.
Speeches, non-publication, (9) 28.
Thanks to Dominion and Indian representatives, Salisbury (11) 12–13.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62946

Derby, the Right Hon. the Earl of, K.G., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for War:
- British Army:
  - Functions, (10) 10.
  - Strength (10) 10–12.
  - Overseas stations, strength in 1914 and at present, (10) 11–12.
- Military Defence:
  - Continental armies, (10) 10.
  - Dominion co-operation, (10)13–14, (11) 18.
  - Position in Europe and comparison with 1914, (10) 9–10.
  - Statement, (10) 9–14, appreciation of, King (11) 2; Bruce (11) 3; Warren (11) 9, reply to discussion, (11) 17–18.
  - Thanks to Dominion Prime Ministers, (11) 18.
- Singapore naval base, (10) 12.

Devonshire, His Grace the Duke of, K.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., Secretary of State for the Colonies:
- British East Africa, (2) 4.
- British Empire Exhibition, (2) 2.
- British Guiana, (2) 3, 4.
- British West Africa, communications, (2) 4.
- "C" Mandates, U.S.A. and, (14) 22.
- Ceylon, (2) 5.
- Colonies and Protectorates, finance and trade, (2) 2.
- Congo Agreement, (2) 14.
- Cox, Sir Percy, tribute to, (2) 8.
- Falkland Islands, whaling industry, (2) 6–7.
- Fiji, (2) 6.
- High Commissioners, status of, (14) 20, (15) 11.
- Hong Kong, (2) 6.
- Imperial nationality, meaning of, (14) 9.
- India's contribution to the League of Nations, (15) 6, 19, 20, 21.
- Indians, position of, in other parts of the Empire: (2) 16, 17; (13) 12–14.
  - Comments on statement, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 29.
  - Publication of speeches question, (12) 19.
- Iraq, (2) 7–8.
- Kenya question, (2) 4, (13) 13.
- League of Nations, contributions to, (15) 14.
- Malaya, (2) 6.
- Middle East, (2) 7–12.
- Mosul Vilayet, future of, (2) 8.
- New Hebrides, (14) 12, 13, 25, 26, 27.
- Palestine, (2) 9–10, (16) 2–3.
- Publicity, appointment of Minister in charge of, (2) 19.
- Report of Proceedings of Conference, adoption moved, (16) 4.
- Rhodesia, (2) 5.
- Spahlinger treatment of tuberculosis, (14) 22.
- Statement as to Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories, (2) 2–13.
- Tanganyika territory, (2) 4–5, 13.
- Transjordania, (2) 10.
- West Indies:
  - Agricultural College, (2) 4.
  - Telegraphic communications, (2) 3–4.

"Discovery," purchase by Government of Falkland Islands for whaling research, Devonshire (2) 6–7; Warren (2) 16.

Dobbs, Sir Henry, High Commissioner for Iraq, Devonshire (2) 8.

Dodecanese:
- Agreement, Italian breach of, Curzon (3) 18.
- Desire of M. Mussolini to annex, Curzon (3) 18.

Dominica, constitutional reforms, Devonshire (2) 3.

Dominions Royal Commission, extract from Report, Massey (9) 22.

Duisburg, illegal seizure of, by France, Smuts (5) 12.

Düsseldorf, illegal seizure of, by France, Smuts (5) 12.

E.

East Africa, see British East Africa.

Eastern Thrace, surrender by Greece by Lausanne Treaty, Curzon (3) 20.

Egypt:
- Agitators, deportation to the Seychelles, Curzon (3) 11–12.
- British force in, 1914 and at present, Derby (10) 11.
- British garrison, retention, importance of, to Australia, Bruce (11) 4.
- British policy as regards, Curzon (3) 13.
- British Protectorate, termination, Curzon (3) 12.
- Democratic Constitution drawn up, Curzon (3) 12.
- Draft paragraphs for Report, (15) 9, (16) 7.
- Future outlook, in, Curzon (3) 13.
- Imperial Government wireless system, protection necessary, Salisbury (8) 5.
- Indemnity Act, Curzon (3) 12.
- Independence:
  - Declaration of, 1922, Curzon (3) 12–13.
  - Preservation of security of communications with British Empire and condition of, Salisbury (8) 5.
- Mr. Massey on, (4) 29.
- Lord Milner's mission, Curzon (3) 11.
- Monarchy, proclamation of, Curzon (3) 12.
- Negotiations with, and breakdown of, Curzon (3) 11.
- Royal Air Force in, Hoare (10) 15.
- Situation in, Curzon (3) 3; Smuts (2) 15.
- Zaghlul Pasha's return to, Curzon (3) 12.

Empire Cotton Growing Corporation, Devonshire (2) 5.

Empire Development, need for, Massey (4) 26–7.

Erzberger, assassination referred to, Curzon (3) 27.

Esthonia, Curzon (3) 17.

European Affairs:
- less British interference desired, Massey (4) 26–7.
- constant British intervention, Dominion opposition to, Bruce (4) 23–4.
- British policy of isolation, impossible, Smuts (5) 5.
- Canadian attitude, King (4) 18.
- Concern of Dominions in, King (4) 17–18.
- Dominions' right to part in settlement of, Smuts (5) 6.
- Effect on British prestige in India, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 19, 20.
- General observations, Curzon (3) 2, 3, 26–7.
- Indian's interest in, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 19–20.
- Need for peace, Smuts (1) 12.
- Peace must be based on law and justice, Smuts (5) 13.
- Prestige of British Empire, need for maintaining, Smuts (5) 5–6, 6–7.
- Re-establishment of trade, need for, Smuts (1) 12.
- Situation, Baldwin (1) 7; Smuts (1) 10, 12; Curzon (3) 2, 3.
- Withdrawal from, question of, Smuts (5) 4–5.

C 62947

F.

Falkland Islands:
- Defeat of Admiral von Spee off, Amery (9) 4, 10.
- Whaling industry of, and dependencies, purchase of the "Discovery" for whaling research, Devonshire (2) 6–7; Massey (2) 16.

Federated Malay States, loan, Devonshire (2) 6.

Feisal, Emir:
- Recognition as King of Iraq, Devonshire (2) 7.
- Testimony to, Massey (2) 12.
- Treaty of Alliance with, October 1922, and protocol, April 1923, Devonshire (2) 7, 8.

Fiji Islands:
- Agitators in, Massey (13) 23.
- Effect on, of New Zealand preference to fruit imports from certain Pacific Islands, Massey (2) 10.
- Indians in, position of, Tej Behadur Sapru (12) 11; Alwar (12) 24.
- Labour shortage, Devonshire (2) 6.
- Sugar industry, field for extension of, Massey (2) 11–12.
- Trade of, Devonshire (2) 6.

Fijians, Massey (2) 15.

Fitzgerald, Desmond, T.D., Minister of External Affairs, Irish Free State:
- Address to H.M. the King (16) 3.
- Indians, position of, in the Empire (13) 28, comments on statement, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 32.

Fiume dispute, Curzon (6) 5; Cecil (6) 16.

"Foreign Policy of the British Empire," implications of phrase, King (4) 12–4.

Foreign Policy and Relations:
- Australia's interest in, Bruce (4) 19–21.
- Broad principles of, need for enunciation of, Bruce (4) 24–5.
- Common Empire policy, need for, and suggested basis, Bruce (4) 20–2, opinion respecting, Warren (5) 15–16.
- Concern of Parliaments and peoples in, King (4) 15–16.
- Definite policy, need for Dominions and India to know, Alwar (5) 18–9.
- Discussions on:
  - Need for secrecy, Curzon (2) 20–1, (3) 2.
  - Non-publication of speeches, (5) 2–3.
- General observations, Smuts (5) 4.
- Irish Free State position as regards, O'Higgins (5) 13–4.
- certain Local questions affecting individual Dominions only, Smuts (5) 3.
- Need for consultations on fundamental issues, King (4) 15, 18.
- Paragraphs for Report, (15) 8–9, (16) 6–8.
- Promotion of friendliness amongst the nations the object of Empire's policy, Cecil (6) 17; Bruce (6) 18.
- Relations of various parts of the Empire in, King (4) 11–16; Bruce (4) 19–20; Smuts (5) 3–4; Warren (5) 15–6.

France:
- Agreement with Germany, possibility of, Smuts (5) 7, 8, 10.
- Air Force and comparison with Great Britain, Salisbury (8) 8; Hoare (10) 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 22; Smuts (10) 23; Alwar (11) 12; seriousness of position and menace to Great Britain, Hoare (10) 16–17; Smuts (10) 22–4; Massey (11) 7.
- Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides, Committee on:
  - Appointment, (2) 26, 30.

France—(continued).
- Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides—(continued).
  - Report: (14) 25–7.
    - Adopted, (14) 13.
    - Discussion on, (14) 11–13.
  - Resolution, (14) 27.
- Army, strength of, and comparison with that of Great Britain, Curzon (3) 4, 26; Derby (10) 10; Massey (11) 6–7.
- British policy towards, criticism of, Smuts (5) 6–7.
- Commercial Treaty with Canada, King (4) 11.
- Contribution to the League of Nations, Rodd (15) 16.
- Delay in ratification of Washington treaties concerning China, Curzon (3) 6.
- Difficulties with, Curzon (3) 4.
- Diplomatic relations with Afghanistan, Curzon (3) 8.
- Entente:
  - British policy, Baldwin (1) 3.
  - Desirability of maintaining, Curzon (3) 5; Massey (4) 26.
- German reparations, see that title.
- Hostile to proposed loan to Hungary, Curzon (3) 21.
- Italian attitude towards, Curzon (3) 18.
- and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 13, 16; Curzon (6) 3, (7) 10.
- Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 4, 22–5.
- Little Entente encouraged by, Curzon (3) 21–2.
- Mandate for Syria referred to, Curzon (2) 18.
- Minister and military mission in Greece, attitude with regard to revolution, Curzon (3) 20.
- Negotiations with, respecting Tangier, Curzon (3) 13.
- in Morocco, danger of extension of power, Curzon (3) 13, 14; Salisbury (8) 6.
- Non-surrender of Kwangchouwan to China, Curzon (3) 7.
- Policy of:
  - Canadian opinion on, King (4) 18.
  - Criticism, Curzon (3) 5; Smuts (5) 9.
  - Indian opinion on, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 19–20.
- Position of, Curzon (3) 26.
- Rivalry between Great Britain and, Smuts (5) 8.
- Secret treaty with Turks at Angora, Curzon (3) 4, 22.
- Security for, necessity, Smuts (5) 12.
- Ruhr occupation, see that title.
- Seizure of Frankfort, &c., Curzon (3) 4; Smuts (5) 12.
- and Separatist movement in Rhineland: Smuts (13) 9; Curzon (13) 10–11.
  - British Government's telegram to, respecting, (14) 2.
- Sykes-Picot Agreement with, Curzon (3) 9.
- Sympathy with, Massey (4) 32.
- proposed Tripartite Agreement with Great Britain and Germany, Smuts (5) 10.
- Turks supported by, against Greece, Curzon (3) 4, 20.
- War debt to Great Britain, cancellation offer by Mr. Bonar Law, Curzon (3) 28.
- Withdrawal of troops from Asia Minor, Curzon (3) 22.

Frankfort, seizure of, by France, Smuts (5) 12; Curzon (3) 4.

Franklin-Bouillon Agreement, Curzon (3) 4, 22.

Free State:
- Indians in, position of, Smuts (13) 25–6; Alwar (14) 6.
- Suffrage qualifications, Smuts (13) 25–6.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62948

Fuad, Sultan, assumption of title of King of Egypt, Curzon (3) 12.

G.

Gallipoli Peninsula, British cemeteries, provisions of Treaty of Lausanne, Curzon (3) 24.
Garran, Sir Robert, India's contribution to the League of Nations, (15) 17–18, 22.
Genoa, International Conference, Hankey (2) 20; Curzon (3) 15; King (4) 16.
George V, His Majesty:
  Address to, (15) 6, (16) 3.
  Message to, (1) 14–15, reply (3) 2.
  Messages of loyalty and affection sent to:
    from Raratonga, Massey (2) 11.
    from Samoa, Massey (2) 15.
  Visit to Rome, Curzon (3) 18.
George, Right Hon. David Lloyd-:
  on Position of the Dominions in reference to foreign affairs, King (4) 11–12.
  on Position of Indians in the Dominions, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 17–18.
  Speech encouraging the Greeks, effect of, Curzon (3) 20.
Germany:
  American Army of Occupation, Curzon (3) 11.
  Break-up of, possible results and importance of preventing, Smuts (5) 8–9; Alwar (5) 18; Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 20.
  British attitude towards, Curzon (3) 26–7.
  Delay in imposing terms on, difficulties caused by, Alwar (5) 18.
  Diplomatic relations with Afghanistan, Curzon (3) 8.
  Financial position and comparison with that of Great Britain, Smuts (5) 9.
  Financial restoration, Austrian case should be followed, Smuts (7) 2.
  Position of, Curzon (3) 26–7, 30; Smuts (5) 8.
  Reparations:
    American participation in question of:
      Discussion respecting form of, Smuts (10) 6–7 7; Curzon (10) 7; Massey (10) 7–8; Bruce (10) 8.
      Expert Committee, see that title below.
      Negotiations with America and Allies, Curzon (10) 2–6, (13) 2, 3, 8; (10) 25–9.
      Negotiations, difficulties likely to arise, Bruce (10) 8–9.
      Paragraphs for report, (15) 8, (16) 7.
      Premature publicity respecting, danger of, Massey (10) 8.
      Telegram to America, use of name of Imperial Conference in, Curzon (10) 3, 9; Bruce (10) 8–9, 9.
    Arbitrary figure, suggested agreement on, Bruce (4) 22–3.
    British attitude:
      Criticism, Smuts (5) 7.
      Press criticism and reply to, Curzon (10) 5–6.
    Canada prepared to agree to proportionate scaling down of share, King (4) 18.
    Commission:
      American member withdrawn, Curzon (3) 10.
      Position of, Curzon (13) 3, 4.
    Criticism of policy respecting, Cecil (6) 17; Bruce (4) 23.
    Excessive amount fixed, Massey (4) 31–2.
    Expert Committee:
      proposed joint Allied communication to U.S. Government, Curzon (13) 6–7. proposed American chairman, Curzon (13) 5; Massey (13) 7.
Germany—(continued).
  Reparations—(continued).
    Expert Committee—(continued).
      American participation, importance of, Smuts (13) 7–8.
      Mr. Bruce on, (13) 7.
      Composition, Curzon (13) 4–5.
      French attitude, discussion on, (13) 12.
      Mr. Massey on, (13) 7.
      Possible outcome of, Curzon (13) 5–6.
      Previous proposals, Curzon (3) 10–11, (13) 3–4.
      Terms of reference: Curzon (13) 4, 9–10; Smuts (13) 12.
        Necessity of settling, in advance, Smuts (13) 8, 9.
      proposed Time limit, opinion, Curzon (13) 10.
      Time limit for enquiry, suggestion, Smuts (13) 8.
    History of payments and of negotiations, Curzon (3) 27–30.
    Peace must be based on law and justice, Smuts (5) 13.
    Problem, Baldwin (1) 2–3.
    suggested Solution, Smuts (5) 11–12.
  Re-establishment of currency and credit, proposed Allied and American support, Smuts (5) 11.
  Separate agreement with, should be last resort only, Smuts (5) 10.
  Settlement with France, possibility of, Smuts (5) 7–8, 10.
  Solid German State, importance of, Curzon (13) 11.
  proposed Tripartite agreement with Great Britain and France, Smuts (5) 10.
  Western, suggested neutralisation of part of, Smuts (5) 12.
Gibraltar, Straits of, safeguarding of, importance of, Salisbury (8) 6.
Gold Coast, railway construction, Devonshire (2) 4.
Gouin, the Hon. Sir Lomer, K.C.M.G., Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, Canada:
  League of Nations Covenant, article 10, (6) 18–19.
  Welcome to, Baldwin (4) 2.
Gounaris, M., murder of, Curzon (3) 20.
Graham, the Hon. G. P., Minister of Railways and Canals, Canada, welcome to, Baldwin (3) 2.
Graham Land, whaling industry, Devonshire (2) 6.
Great Britain:
  Aeroplanes, need for high standard in, Massey (11) 8.
  Air attack:
    French menace and seriousness of position, Hoare (10) 16–17, (11) 19; Smuts (10) 22–4; Bruce (11) 4.
    Home defence against, Hoare (10) 16, 17–18.
    Immediate action against, urgency of, and suggestions, Smuts (10) 23–4.
    Mitigating circumstances in connection with position, Salisbury (11) 13.
  Air Force:
    Co-operation with Army and Navy, Hoare (10) 15.
    Duties, Hoare (10) 15–16.
    Home Defence Force:
      Creation, Hoare (10) 18.
      Resolution, (15) 7, agreed to (15) 3.
    Increase, Baldwin (1) 5; Salisbury (8) 8; Hoare (10) 17–8, time needed to attain standard, Hoare (10) 18–9.

62949

Great Britain—(continued).
  Air Force—(continued).
    Inquiry into, by Committee of Imperial Defence Committee, Salisbury (8) 8.
    Maintenance as single self-contained organisation, Hoare (10) 14, approval, Smuts (10) 21.
    Personnel, difficulty, Hoare (10) 18–19.
    Strength and comparison with France, Salisbury (8) 8; Hoare (10) 14–5, 16, 17, 18, 19, 22; Smuts (10) 23; Alwar (11) 12.
  Air position, technical discussions at Air Ministry suggested, Hoare (11) 19.
  Army:
    Comparison with France, seriousness of position, Curzon (3) 4, 26; Derby (10) 10; Massey (11) 6–7.
    Functions, Derby (10) 10.
    Overseas stations, strength in 1914 and at present, Derby (10) 11–12.
    Reduction, Derby (10) 9.
    Strength of, 1914, and at present, Derby (10) 10–12.
    Strength, principles governing, Derby (10) 12.
  Defence of, enquiry into, by Committee of Imperial Defence Committee, Salisbury (8) 7–8.
  Financial position and comparison with that of Germany, Smuts (5) 9.
  Food supplies:
    Loss of ships with, from New Zealand during war, Massey (8) 16.
    in Times of war, Smuts (8) 6–7.
  French and Italian war debts to, cancellation offer by Mr. Bonar Law, Curzon (3) 28.
  Italian attitude towards, Curzon (3) 18.
  Marriages with Foreigners Act, 1906, (14) 24.
  Naval defence, cost of, Amery (9) 14.
  Navy:
    Comparison with American, Amery (9) 7–8.
    Concentration in home waters, Amery (9) 3.
    Distribution and importance of mobility, Amery (9) 8–9.
    proposed Empire cruise, Amery (9) 13–14, appreciation of, King (9) 22; Bruce (9) 22; Massey (9) 22.
    Reduction, Amery (9) 6.
    General Smuts on, (10) 22.
  Neutrality in Greek war with Turkey, Curzon (3) 20.
  Position in, Curzon (3) 4, 27.
  Responsibilities and liabilities, Massey (4) 30.
  proposed Tripartite agreement with France and Germany, Smuts (5) 10.
  Unemployment, Baldwin (1) 6.
  War with foreign Power or Powers, position of Dominions, Bruce (4) 21, (11) 3; Massey (4) 32, 33–4; King (4) 32, (8) 10.
Great Lakes:
  American scheme in connection with, King (4) 4.
  Rush–Bagot Agreement, 1817, to restrict naval armament on, proposed revision, King (4) 7–8; (14) 35.
  Shipbuilding on, King (4) 7, 8.
Greece:
  Attitude towards Great Britain, Curzon (3) 20.
  British Minister, recall, Curzon (3) 20.
  Contribution to League of Nations, Rodd (15) 16, 17.
  French Minister and military mission, attitude regarding revolution, Curzon (3) 20.
  Government, action after Janina murders, Curzon (6) 3; Cecil (6) 10.
  Lausanne Conference and Treaty, Curzon (3) 20, 22–5.
  Refugees from Asia Minor, problem of, Curzon (3) 20; Cecil (6) 9.
Greece—(continued).
  Revolution, Curzon (3) 20, 22.
  M. Venizelos's appointment as representative in Europe, Curzon (3) 20.
  War with Turkey, Curzon (3) 4, 22, 19–20.
Greek-Italian Crisis, see Italian-Greek Crisis.
Green, J. F. N., New Hebrides, (14) 26.
Grenada, constitutional reforms, Devonshire (2) 3.

H.

Hague International Conference, Hankey (2) 20; Curzon (3) 15; King (4) 16.
Hankey, Sir M. P. A., G.C.B.:
  Drafting Committee for Report, (15) 6.
  George V, His Majesty, address to, (16) 3.
  Imperial Conference, Joint Secretariat, (2) 26–7.
  Imperial War Graves Commission, extension of charter, (15) 5.
  Publication of Report, (16) 4.
  Publicity, (2) 20, 24.
  Thanks to, (16) 5.
Hankow, Japanese garrison withdrawn, Curzon (3) 5.
Harbin, Japanese garrison withdrawn, Curzon (3) 5.
Harding, President:
  Mr. Massey on, (4) 29.
  and Rush–Bagot Agreement, revision, King (4) 7.
  Visit to British Columbia, King (4) 4–5.
Harding, E. J.:
  India's contribution to the League of Nations, (15) 20.
  Thanks to, (16) 5.
Harington, Sir Charles:
  Evacuation of Constantinople, Curzon (3) 23.
  Tributes to, Massey (4) 31; Derby (10) 12.
Hejaz, King Hussein, difficulties with, Curzon (3) 9.
High Commissioners, Status of:
  Discussion respecting, and committee to consider, (14) 20–1.
  Privileges granted to, in matter of taxation and comparison with those granted to foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, (15) 12–13.
  Report of Committee on, (15) 10–11, 12–13, agreed to, (15) 5–6.
Hoare, the Right Hon. Sir Samuel, Bart., C.M.G., M.P., Secretary of State for Air:
  Air armaments, reduction question, (10) 19.
  Air Defence:
    Co-operation with the Dominions, (10) 19–20.
    Statement, (10) 14–20, appreciation of, King (11) 2; Bruce (11) 3; Warren (11) 9, reply to discussion, (11) 19.
  Airships, (10) 14.
  Civil aviation, value of development, (10) 20.
  Defence, question of resolution, (11) 19.
  Great Britain:
    Air attack, French machines available for, (10) 16–7.
    Air defence, (11) 16, 17, 19.
    Air Force:
      Co-operation with Army and Navy, (10) 15.
      Duties, (10) 15–6.
      Expansion, (10) 17–18, time needed to attain standard, (10) 18–19.
      Maintenance as single self contained organisation, (10) 14.
      Strength and comparison with France, (10) 14–5, 16, 17, 18, 19.
    Air position, technical discussion at Air Ministry suggested, (11) 19.
  Iraq, Independent Air Command, (10) 15.

57 4 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62950

Hong Kong:
Chinese labourers, strike, Devonshire (2) 6.
Effect of Washington Agreement, Salisbury (8) 3; Amery (9) 9; Massey (9) 24.
Reclamation scheme, Devonshire (2) 6.
Trade conditions, Devonshire (2) 6.

"Hood," H.M.S., proposed Empire cruise, Amery (9) 13–14.

Horthy, Admiral, Regent of Hungary, Curzon (3) 21.

Hughes, Mr., American Secretary of State: (4) 6, 8, (7) 12.
Approval of enlargement of scope of International Joint Commission, King (4) 4.
Proposal by, of Committee of Experts for enquiry into financial position in Germany, Curzon (3) 10–1. and Revision of Rush–Bagot Agreement, King (4) 7.

Hungary:
Attempts by ex-Emperor Karl to recover throne, Curzon (3) 21.
Conditions in, Curzon (3) 21.
Contribution to League of Nations, Rodd (15) 16, 17.
Financial problem and proposed loan, Curzon (3) 21; Cecil (6) 9.
Regency of Admiral Horthy, Curzon (3) 21.

Hussein, King of the Hejaz, difficulties with, Curzon (3) 9.

Hymans, M., Belgian representative, League of Nations, and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 13.

I.

Imperial Conferences, 1918, 1921, resolution respecting position of Indians in the Empire, see under Indians.

Imperial Conference, 1923:
Committees, appointment of, (2) 29–30, (10) 24.
Concluding resolution, (16) 6.
Decisions and agreements, ratification of Parliaments concerned, necessary, Massey (9) 24.
Functions and objects of, Alwar (1) 14, (14) 4: King (9) 19; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 7.
Joint Secretariat, (2) 26–7.
Programme of arrangements, (2) 24, 25, 29, 30; (7) 12–13; (8) 22.
Report of Proceedings:
Adopted, (16) 3–4.
Drafting Committee appointed, (15) 6.
Publication question, (16) 4.
Secretariat, appreciation of work of, (16) 5.
Status of, Curzon (2) 20, 22; King (2) 22, (9) 17–18.
Status of India at, Massey (13) 22-3, Fitzgerald (13) 28.
Use of name of, in telegram to America, Curzon (10) 3, 9; Bruce (10) 8, 9.

Imperial Conferences, status, Massey (14) 15–16.

Imperial Council of Defence, Bruce (8) 10.

Imperial Defence Committee, see Committee of Imperial Defence.

Imperial Economic Conference, programme (2) 24–25, 29, 30.

Imperial Nationality, meaning of, and distinction from local citizenship, Devonshire (14) 9.

Imperial War Cabinets, status of Dominion Ministers at, Massey (14) 16–17.

Imperial War Graves Commission, extension of charter, (15) 5.

India:
Afghan frontier, trouble with tribes on, Curzon (3) 8.
Mr. Baldwin on, (1) 6–7.
Bolshevism:
no Chance of success, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 20.
Need for propaganda and publicity to prevent spread of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 20.
Propaganda and menace, Curzon (3) 15; Peel (5) 17.
British force in, 1914 and at present, Derby (10) 11.
new Constitution, Peel (12) 3–4.
Constitutional problem, solution suggested, Alwar (12) 22–3.
Contribution towards League of Nations: Peel (9) 28; Devonshire (15) 14.
Committee on, notes of meeting and Report, (15) 14–21, proposed, Baldwin (10) 24.
Question to be raised at Geneva, Tej Bahadur Sapru (15) 6, 19, 22; Peel (15) 6.
Culture and tradition, Peel (12) 5–6.
Defence, position respecting, Peel (8) 22.
Division into British India and Indian States, Alwar (12) 21.
Dussehra festival, address in honour of, Alwar (10) 24–5.
Feeling for Empire, Peel (12) 4.
Good effects in, of Turkish Treaty, Peel (5) 17.
Immigration from:
into Canada, recent history of question, King (13) 14–5.
proposed Mutual agreement respecting, Alwar (12) 25.
Prevention, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 12.
Indian Army, reductions, Peel (11) 9.
Industrial position, Peel (12) 3.
Interest in, concerning European and Imperial affairs, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 19, 20.
Methods of agitation in, Massey (13) 23.
Military budget, Peel (8) 22.
Military defences in ports, recommendation of Lord Jellicoe, Peel (11) 10.
Opinion on Ruhr occupation and French policy, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 19–20. and Opium traffic, Peel (7) 7, 8, 10; Cecil (7) 10.
Political unrest and political agitation, distinction from Bolshevism, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 20.
Position of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 19.
Position of, in the Empire, Peel (12) 4; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 7, 16–17; Alwar (12) 27.
Position in Imperial Conference, Massey (13) 22–3; Fitzgerald (13) 28.
Princes of, message from, Alwar (12) 26.
Progress of, towards self-government, King (13) 19–20; Fitzgerald (13) 28; Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 32.
Royal Air Force squadrons in, Hoare (10) 15.
Royal Indian Marine. Peel (11) 10–11.
Support of League of Nations, Peel (7) 7.
Trade into Afghanistan through, Curzon (3) 8.
Tributes to place of, in the Empire and to her civilisation, Peel (12) 3; Bruce (13) 21; Massey (13) 33.
Vernacular press, influence of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 7–8.
Prince of Wales's visit, Alwar (12) 23.
Indians, position of, in other parts of the Empire:
Maharajah of Alwar on, (12) 20–7, (14) 4–8.
Appeal to Mr. Baldwin and His Majesty's Government, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 17–8.
Appeal to the Conference, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 16–7; Alwar (12) 23–4.
Claims, arguments in favour of, Peel (12) 2–6.

C 62951

Indians—(continued).
Committees in each Colony, Dominion, &c., to confer with Committees from India:
Approval, King (13) 17.
Hopes for good results from, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 30.
Principle of request accepted by British Government, Devonshire (13) 13, 14.
Resolution, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 32.
no Desire to press, Peel (14) 3–4.
Formal resolution not necessary, Tej Bahadur Sapru (14) 11.
Result as regards Colonies and Protectorates, Baldwin (14) 9–10, appreciation of, with exception of statement as regards Kenya, Tej Bahadur Sapru (14) 20.
Suggestion, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 13–4.
Thanks for reception of proposal, Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 4.
existing Difficulties, Alwar (14) 6–7.
Discussion on:
Effect of, on Indian opinion, Tej Bahadur Sapru (14) 10.
Helpful nature of, Baldwin (14) 10.
Publication of speeches, Baldwin (11) 10; (12) 18–20, 21, (13) 33.
Question of, (2) 23.
Summary of, and results, Peel (14) 3–4; Alwar (14) 5.
Distinction from other British subjects unjust, Fitzgerald (13) 28.
Feeling in India with regard to, and unanimity of Peel (12) 2, 3; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 6–7, 7–8, 9.
as question of Foreign policy, possibility of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 14, (13) 32, reply to, Smuts (13) 27.
Franchise, right to, not implied by possession of British citizenship, Smuts (13) 26–7, reply to, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 31.
Indian Government's duty of safeguarding Indian nationals overseas, Peel (12) 5.
Message from the Princes of India with regard to, Alwar (12) 26.
Viscount Peel on, (12) 2–6, (14) 3–4.
Present position in various Colonies and Dominions, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 9–11; Alwar (12) 23–5, (14) 5–7; Devonshire (13) 14.
Problem:
Difficulties of, Peel (11) 5.
Facing of, in spirit of co-operation urged, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 13.
Importance of, Peel (12) 2–3; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 6, 8.
Scope of, Peel (12) 4.
Resolutions of previous Imperial Conferences:
1918:
Australian attitude to, Bruce (13) 20, 21, 22.
New Zealand to stand by, Massey (13) 24.
1921:
Peel (12) 4–5; Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 12.
Australian attitude to, Bruce (13) 20, 21, 22.
Interpretation, King (13) 17–8; Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 30, 32.
Necessity of implementing, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 12–13.
New Zealand to stand by, Massey (13) 24.
Rescinding:
Deprecated, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 31.
Proposed, Smuts (13) 26.
Responsibilities of British Government, Devonshire (13) 13.
in South Africa, see under South Africa.
Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru on, (12) 6–18.
Thanks to Prime Ministers, Alwar (14) 5, 8.
Tributes to presentation of case by Indian representatives, Devonshire (13) 12; Bruce (13) 20; Massey (13) 22; Smuts (13) 24; Warren (13) 28.

Inter-Allied debts, moratorium, suggestion, Smuts (5) 11.

Inter-Imperial trade, Baldwin (1) 6; Smuts (1) 12; Devonshire (2) 2.

International Conferences, status of Dominions, (14) 36.

Iraq:
independent Air Command, Derby (10) 12; Hoare (10) 15.
Arab Government, British relations with, Devonshire (2) 7, 8.
British troops in, Derby (10) 11, 12.
Constituent Assembly, elections, Devonshire (2) 7–8.
Inclusion of Mosul, question of, Devonshire (2) (8); Curzon (3) 25.
King of, recognition of the Emir Feisal, Devonshire (2) 7.
Mr. Massey on, (2) 12.
Treaty of alliance between British Government and King Feisal, October 1922, and protocol, April 1923, Devonshire (2) 7, 8.

Irish Free State:
Adhesion to League of Nations and contribution, MacNeill; Devonshire (15) 14; Rodd (15) 16.
Constitution, effect on anti-British agitation in America, Curzon (3) 10; O'Higgins (5) 14.
Indians, position of, Fitzgerald (13) 28; Alwar (14) 5, 6.
Position of, in Imperial Conference, Cosgrave (1) 13.
Position as regards foreign policy, O'Higgins (5) 13–14.
Position as regards naval defence, Mulcahy (9) 27–8.
Preoccupation with domestic problems, O'Higgins (5) 14.
Relations with Great Britain, O'Higgins (5) 14–5.
Representatives, welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2; King (1) 8; Smuts (1) 10; Warren (1) 13, acknowledgment, Cosgrave (1) 12–3.
Welcome to, as member of League of Nations, Curzon (7) 10.

Italian-Greek Crisis:
Australian attitude, Bruce (6) 20, 21.
British Government's attitude, Curzon (6) 3, 5–6.
British public opinion, Curzon (6) 3–4, 6.
Canadian public opinion, King (6) 18.
Lord Curzon's statement, (6) 2–7.
Effect on position of the League of Nations, Cecil (7) 9.
French attitude, Cecil (6) 16.
French public opinion, Curzon (6) 3–4.
Greek appeal to the League of Nations, Curzon (6) 3; Cecil (6) 10, 10–11, 14, approved, Massey (6) 22.
Italian defiance of the League of Nations, Curzon (6) 3; Smuts (7) 3; MacNeill (7) 6.
Mr. Massey on, (6) 22.
League of Nations and, Baldwin (1) 4; Cecil (6) 10–16; Smuts (1) 11.
Position of Ambassadors' Conference, Smuts (7) 3, 4, 5; Curzon (7) 3–4, 10; Cecil (7) 9.

Italy:
Agreement with Jugoslavia, Curzon (3) 18.
Army, Derby (10) 10.
Attitude towards Britain and France, Curzon (3) 18.
British communication to, respecting American participation in German reparations question and probable attitude in reply, Curzon (10) 3–5, reply, Curzon (13) 2.

57 4 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Italy—(continued).
British telegram to, respecting Rhineland Separatist movement, (14) 2.
anti-British intrigues of M. Schanzer, Curzon (3) 18.
Commercial treaty with Canada, King (4) 11.
Contribution to the League of Nations, Rodd (15) 16.
Corfu bombardment and occupation, Baldwin (1) 4; Smuts (1) 11; Curzon (3) 18, (6) 3, 4, 5; Cecil (6) 10, 12, 13, 14, 15.
Diplomatic relations with Afghanistan, Curzon (3) 8.
Electoral Reform Bill, Curzon (3) 18.
Fascista revolution, Curzon (3) 17.
and German reparations, Bruce (4) 23, see also Reparations under Germany.
Government:
Action after Janina murders, Curzon (6) 3; Cecil (6) 10.
should be Invited to join in proposed Tripartite Agreement between Great Britain, France and Germany, Smuts (5) 10.
Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 22–5.
M. Mussolini's Government, Curzon (3) 17–8.
National militia, Curzon (3) 17.
and Ruhr occupation, Baldwin (1) 3; Curzon (3) 18, 28.
Turkey supported by, against Greece, Curzon (3) 20.
Visit of King George and Queen Mary to Rome, Curzon (3) 18.
War debt to Great Britain, cancellation offer by Mr. Bonar Law, Curzon (3) 28.

J.

Jamaica:
Constitutional reforms, Devonshire (2) 3.
Indians in, position of, Devonshire (13) 14; Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 6.
Janina murders:
see also Italian-Greek Crisis.
Baldwin (1) 4; Curzon (6) 2–3, 6.
Action of Greek and Italian Governments, Curzon (6) 3; Cecil (6) 10.
Japan:
Agrarian and labour troubles, Curzon (3) 6.
and Ambassadors' Conference respecting Italian-Greek crisis, Curzon (6) 6.
Anglo-Japanese alliance, termination, Baldwin (17) 5; Curzon (3) 3, 5.
Army, Curzon (3) 6.
Attitude of, as regards foreign countries, Curzon (3) 6.
British relations with, Curzon (3) 6; Salisbury (8) 3–5, paragraphs for report (15) 9, (16) 2.
Conferences with Soviet Government, Curzon (3) 6.
Contribution to League of Nations, Rodd (15) 16; Tej Bahadur Sapru (15) 18.
Earthquake, Baldwin (1) 5; Curzon (3) 6, (16) 7, message of sympathy, (1) 15, reply (6) 2.
Effect of Washington Treaty on position of, Bruce (8) 15.
Foreign relations and policy, Curzon (3) 5–6.
Immigration into Canada from, King (4) 10–11, (14) 25–6.
Kagoshima, British bombardment referred to, Cecil (6) 14.
Kiaochau returned to, by Japan, Curzon (3) 5, 7.
Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 22–5.
Navy, Amery (9) 6, 8.
Relations with America, Curzon (3) 6.
Relations with China, Curzon (3) 5.
Relations with New Zealand, Massey (4) 27.
Japan—(continued).
and Singapore naval base, Curzon (3) 6, (8) 20; Salisbury (8) 4, 5, 13; Smuts (8) 19–20, 20; Amery (9) 10.
Strategic position, strength of, Curzon (3) 5–6.
Working agreement with Russia:
Desired by Japanese, Curzon (3) 6.
would be Serious matter and might lead to difficulties, Massey (4) 27.
Japanese, massacre of, at Nikolaevsk, Curzon (3) 6.
Java, sugar imports into New Zealand from, Massey (2) 10–11.
Jellalabad, British consul at, Curzon (3) 8.
Jellicoe, Lord, report on R.I.M., Peel (11) 10.
Jewish influence, importance of, Smuts (2) 15, reply to, Curzon (2) 17.
Jews, and Palestine, see Zionist Policy under Palestine.
Jugoslavia:
and League of Nations, Cecil (7) 9.
Italian agreement with, Curzon (3) 18.
Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 22–5.
Position in, Curzon (3) 3, 21–2.
Registration of Rapallo Treaty with the League of Nations, Cecil (6) 16.
pro-Serbian policy in Bulgaria, Curzon (3) 19.

K.

Kabul:
British representative at, Curzon (3) 8.
Soviet mission in, Curzon (3) 8.
Kandahar, British consul at, Curzon (3) 8.
Karl, ex-Emperor of Hungary, second attempt to recover throne, Curzon (3) 21.
Keith, Professor, quoted on treaties, Massey (14) 15.
Kenya:
Administration, British policy, Devonshire (2) 4.
Indian problem: Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 8–9, 11, (14) 10; Alwar (12) 24–25, (14) 7. proposed Committee should apply to, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 29, 32.
Maintenance of settlement by British Government, Devonshire (13) 13; Baldwin (14) 9–10.
South African attitude, Smuts (13) 24–5.
Natives, policy of advancement of, Devonshire (2) 4.
Railway construction, Devonshire (2) 4.
Timber resources, Smuts (2) 14.
Trade agreement with South Africa, desire for, and question of Congo Agreement in connection with, Smuts (2) 14.
Kiaochau, return to China by Japan, Curzon (3) 5, 7.
Kilindini, harbour works, Devonshire (2) 4.
King, the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie, C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada:
Mr. Amery's statement, appreciation of, (9) 15.
Mr. Baldwin's speech, (1) 8.
British Empire, (1) 9, (9) 18.
National status of Dominions, (9) 16, 19.
Right of each part to control own affairs, (4) 9, 14–15, 18.
British navy, proposed Empire cruise, (9) 22.
Canada:
Attitude respecting European situation, (4) 18.
Chinese immigration, (4) 11.
Coal imports, (4) 8.
Commercial treaty with France and Italy, (4) 11.

King, the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie, C.M.G. —(continued).
Canada—(continued).
Conception of Imperial relations, (4) 18–9.
External affairs, review of, (4) 2–11.
Franchise, (13) 15–6.
Halibut treaty with U.S.A., (4) 6–7.
Indian immigration, (13) 14–5.
Indians, status of, (4) 11, (12) 20, (13) 14–20, (14) 5, comments on statement, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 30; Peel (14) 3.
Japanese immigration, (4) 10–11.
Liquor smuggling into U.S.A., (4) 9.
Participation in war, extent must be decided by Canadian Parliament, (11) 2–3.
Position of, (4) 9.
Postal Convention with U.S.A., revision, (4) 5.
Pulpwood export to U.S.A., (4) 8–9.
Relations with Far East, policy, (4) 10.
Relations with Great Britain, (9) 16–7.
Relations with U.S.A., (4) 2–10, (9) 18.
Representation at Washington, (4) 5–6.
Salmon fisheries on Pacific Coast, (4) 6.
Trade, effect of U.S. tariff, (4) 8.
Cecil, Lord Robert, visit to U.S.A. and Canada, (6) 18.
Concluding speech, (16) 4–5.
Lord Curzons's statement, appreciation of, (3) 31, (4) 2.
Defence:
Air:
Interest of Canada in, (11) 2.
Resolution, (15) 8.
Canadian position, (8) 10, (9) 16–7.
Dominion co-operation, (9) 15–6, 19, (11) 2, 18, (15) 2.
Policy, connection with geographical position, (9) 17.
Resolutions, (14) 2.
Dominions, issuing of statement to, from British Government of Government Departments, (4) 17.
European situation, concern of Dominions in, (4) 17–8.
Foreign policy and relations:
Concern of Parliaments and peoples in, (4) 15–6.
Need for consultation on fundamental issues, (4) 15, 18.
Relations of various parts of the Empire in, (4) 11–6, 32.
Speeches, non-publication desired, (5) 3.
French policy, Canadian opinion on, (4) 18.
"Foreign policy of the British Empire," implication of phrase, (4) 12-14.
German reparations, (4) 18.
Harding, Mr., visit to British Columbia, (4) 4–5.
High Commissioners, status of, (14) 20, 21, (15) 10, 11.
Imperial Conference:
Appointment of committees, (2) 25, 26.
Objects of, (9) 19.
Status of, (2) 22, (9) 17–8.
Value of, (1) 8–9.
India, progress towards self-government, (13) 19–20.
Internatianal Conferences, (4) 16.
Irish Free State representatives, welcome to, (1) 8.
Italian action, effect on Canadian public opinion, (6) 18.
Joint International Waterways Commission, (4) 3–4, (7) 12.
Lausanne Treaty, ratification, (15) 11
Message to Their Majesties, (1) 14–15.
Near East crisis, September 1922, (4) 16–17, 17, (11) 18.
King, the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie, C.M.G. —(continued).
Official correspondence between Governments, publication procedure, (14) 18–20.
Opening speech, (1) 8–9.
Publicity, (1) 9, (2) 20, 21–3, 24, (9) 20.
Rush–Bagot Agreement, 1817, (4) 7–8.
St. Lawrence waterway improvement scheme, (4) 5.
Welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2.
Wireless communication with West Indies, (2) 10.
Kwangchouwan, no inclination or desire by France to surrender, to China, Curzon (3) 7.
Kwangtung Peninsula, Devonshire (2) 6; Curzon (3) 7.

L.

Labrador frontier question, Warren (5) 15.
Lane, Captain E. F. C., C.M.G., India's contribution to League of Nations, (15) 18, 22.
Latvia, Curzon (3) 17.
Lausanne Conference: King (4) 16.
American representative at, Curzon (3) 10.
Bulgarian attitude at, Curzon (3) 19.
Despatches and telegrams to Dominions respecting, King (4) 17.
French attitude at, Curzon (3) 4.
Negotiations, account of, Curzon (3) 4, 22–5.
Representation of British Empire at, (14) 36–7.
M. Venizelos at, Curzon (3) 20.
Lausanne, Treaty of: Baldwin (1) 4; Curzon (3) 22–5.
Article respecting Mosul, Devonshire (2) 8.
Good effect in India, Peel (5) 17.
Paragraphs for report, (15) 9, (16) 7.
Ratification, arrangements with Dominions, (15) 11.
Law, Right Hon. Bonar, M.P.: on Break-up of Germany, Smuts (5) 8.
and German reparations, Curzon (3) 28
Resolution of condolence with relatives on death of, (14) 2, 22.
and Ruhr occupation, Curzon (3) 28.
Lawrence, Colonel:
Negotiations with King Hussein, Curzon (3) 9.
Value of work done by, Massey (2) 12.
League of Nations:
Aims and position, Cecil (6) 7–8.
American hostility, Curzon (3) 10.
Application to, with view to partition of New Hebrides, report of Committee, (14) 25–7, discussion on, and adoption of, (14) 11–3.
Appreciation of, Warren (7) 7.
Assembly, and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 11–12, 14.
Australian interest in, Bruce (6) 19–20.
Austrian restoration, Baldwin (1) 7; Curzon (3) 21; Massey (4) 30; Cecil (6) 8–9; Smuts (7) 2
Mr. Baldwin on, (1) 7.
British Empire support:
Importance of, Cecil (6) 17–8; Smuts (7) 4–5.
Need for formal expression of, Smuts (7) 11.
British Government support for, Curzon (7) 10–11.
Lord Robert Cecil's visit to U.S.A. and Canada, good effects, King (6) 18.
Lord Robert Cecil's work for, appreciation of, Smuts (7) 2; MacNeill (7) 7.
Commission of Jurists, appointment of, Cecil (6) 15.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62954

League of Nations—(continued).
Confidence of small nations in:
Feeling of dissatisfaction rather than loss of, MacNeill (7) 6, 6–7.
Growing, Cecil (7) 9.
Shaken by result of Italian-Greek crisis, Smuts (7) 3.
Confidence of small nations in the British Empire, Smuts (7) 2.
Contributions to:
Allocation, Devonshire (15) 11; Rodd (15) 15–7.
Chinese, arrears, Curzon (3) 7.
India's: Peel (9) 28.
Notes of meeting of Committee on, and report, (15) 14–22.
Question to be raised at Geneva, Tej Bahadur Sapru, (15) 6, 19, 22; Peel (15) 6.
proposed Reference to Committee, Baldwin (10) 24.
Council, attitude towards, of Governments represented on, Cecil (6) 16; Smuts (7) 5.
Covenant:
Article 10, Canadian amendment, Gouin (6) 18–9.
Article 16, Massey (6) 22–3.
Article 22, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 11.
Danger of false sense of security, Massey (6) 23.
Danzig administration, Cecil (6) 9, (7) 9; Smuts (7) 3.
Discretion, need for, Bruce (6) 20; Smuts (7) 5.
Discussions respecting, question of publication, (7) 11–12.
Effect of Italian-Greek crisis on, Curzon (6) 6, (7) 9; Cecil (6) 15; Bruce (6) 20.
Greek appeal to, Curzon (6) 3; Cecil (6) 10, 10–11, 14, approval of, Massey (6) 22.
Greek refugee loan scheme, Curzon (3) 20.
Indian support, Peel (7) 7.
and Iraq, Devonshire (2) 7, 8.
Irish Free State adhesion to, MacNeill (7) 6.
Italian defiance of: Curzon (6) 3; Cecil (6) 10, 12, 14; Massey (6) 23; Smuts (7) 3; MacNeill (7) 6.
Effect on public opinion in Canada, King (6) 18.
Precedents for Italian action, Cecil (6) 14–5.
and Italian-Greek crisis: Baldwin (1) 4; Curzon (6) 4; Cecil (6) 10.
British Government policy, Curzon (6) 4, 6; Cecil (6) 12.
Loan to Hungary under auspices of, proposed, Curzon (3) 21.
Machinery of, compared with that of Ambassadors' Conference, Cecil (6) 16–7.
Mandate for Palestine, Curzon (2) 18.
Mosul Vilayet question to be submitted to, if agreement not reached, Curzon (3) 25.
Signor Mussolini's attitude, Smuts (7) 4.
Opium question, Cecil (6) 9, (7) 9–10; Peel (7) 7–8, 9, 10.
Paragraphs for Report, (15) 9, (16) 8.
Position of the British Empire in relation to, Massey (6) 23.
Progress made and prospects for the future, Bruce (6) 20–1.
Promotion of international co-operation, results already achieved, Cecil (6) 8–9.
Rapallo Treaty registered with, Cecil (6) 16.
Saar administration, Cecil (6) 9, (7) 7, 8; Smuts (7) 2–3.
Silesia, decision, Curzon (3) 16.
General Smuts on, (1) 10.
Statement by Lord Robert Cecil (6) 7–18.
Secretariat, Indian representation inadequate, Tej Bahadur Sapru (15) 15.
League of Nations—(continued).
Status of Dominions, (14) 36.
Status of in International disputes, Cecil (6) 9–10.
Treaty of Mutual Assistance, Bruce (6) 20; Cecil (7) 8.
Turkey and, Curzon (3) 25.
Value of: Curzon (3) 3; Cecil (6) 9; Smuts (7) 5, 6.
Personal opinion of, Massey (6) 22.
Welcome to Irish Free State as member, Curzon (7) 10.
World's need for, Smuts (7) 5–6.
Lithuania:
Position, Curzon (3) 17.
War with Poland prevented by League of Nations, Cecil (6) 10.
Little Entente, Curzon (3) 3, 21–2.
Lloyd-Greame, the Right Hon. Sir Philip, K.B.E., M.C., M.P., President of the Board of Trade:
Congo Agreement, (2) 14.
Programme of arrangements, (2) 24, 25.
Publicity, (2) 20, 24.
London:
Afghan Minister in, Curzon (3) 8.
Conferences, Curzon (3) 27, 28.
Loraine, Sir Percy, British Minister in Persia, Curzon (3) 9.
Lorenzo Marques, negotiations between General Smuts and Portugal respecting, Curzon (3) 14–5.

M.

MacNeill, Professor John, T.D., Minister of Education, Irish Free State:
Concluding speech, (16) 5.
George V, His Majesty, address to, (16) 3.
Italian-Greek crisis, (7) 6, 6–7.
League of Nations, (7) 6–7.
Welcome to, Baldwin (6) 2.
Malaya:
Economic conditions improving, Devonshire (2) 6.
Loan, Devonshire (2) 6.
Mary, Her Majesty Queen:
Message to, (1) 14–15, reply (3) 2.
Visit to Rome, Curzon (3) 18.
Masaryk, Professor, President of Czecho-Slovakia, Curzon (3) 21.
Massey, the Right Hon. W. F., Prime Minister of New Zealand:
Afghanistan, possibility of trouble in, (4) 28.
Air defence of Great Britain, (11) 7, 8.
Appreciation of statements of Lord Curzon and Lord Robert Cecil, (6) 22.
Austria, (4) 30.
British Empire, need for improved methods of consultation, (4) 34.
British Empire Exhibition, (2) 11.
British Navy, proposed Empire cruise, (9) 22.
"C" Mandates and U.S.A., (14) 22.
China, (4) 27–8.
Concluding speech, (16) 5.
Cook Islands, (2) 11.
Coolidge, President, (4) 29.
Lord Curzon's speech, appreciation of, and comments on, (3) 31, (4) 25, 26.
Dardanelles forts, reinstatement not desirable, (4) 31.
Defence: (8) 15.
Dominion co-operation, (8) 15, 16, (11) 19.
an Empire matter, (9) 26–7.
Military position, seriousness of, (11) 6–7.

C 62955

Massey, the Right Hon. W. F.—(continued).
Defence—(continued).
Naval: (11) 7–8.
Capital ships, (8) 16, 17, (9) 23.
Importance of, (8) 15–16, (9) 23–4.
Light cruisers for defence of trade routes, (8) 16–7.
Local, not sufficient, (9) 23.
Maintenance of communications, importance of, (6) 23–4, (9) 23.
New Zealand, action taken and in prospect, (9) 25–6.
New Zealand's interest in, (9) 24–5.
Position of question in 1921 and at present, (11) 16.
Submarines, (9) 23.
Readiness of New Zealand to contribute, (11) 8.
Resolutions, (15) 2.
Dominions, position of, in event of Great Britain being involved in war, (4) 32, 33–4.
Dominions Royal Commission, (9) 22.
Egypt, (4) 29.
Empire development and less interference in European affairs, need for, (4) 26–7.
Entente, need for maintaining, (4) 26.
Falkland Islands whaling industry, (2) 16.
Fiji Islands, (2) 11–12, 15.
Foreign relations, non-publication of speeches desired, (5) 2–3.
Freedom of the Straits, (4) 31.
French, sympathy with, (4) 32.
George V, His Majesty:
Address to, (16) 3.
Message to, resolution seconded, (1) 15.
German reparations, (4) 31–2, (10) 7–8.
Harding, President, (4) 29.
Harington, General, appreciation of services, (4) 3.
High Commissioners, status of, (14) 15–6, 20, 21.
Imperial Conference: (9) 24.
Appointment of Committees, (2) 25, 26.
Joint Secretariat, (2) 27.
Status of India at, (13) 22–3.
Imperial Conferences, status of, (14) 15–6.
Imperial War Cabinets, (14) 16–7.
Imperial War Graves Commission, (15) 5.
Iraq, (2) 12.
Italian-Greek crisis, (6) 22–3.
Japan, (4) 27.
Lawrence, Colonel, (2) 12.
League of Nations, (6) 22–3.
Near Eastern Crisis, September 1922, (4) 30–1, (8) 18.
New Hebrides, (14) 11, 12, 13, 26.
New Zealand:
Feeling in, against war, (6) 24.
Indians, position of, (12) 19, (13) 22–4, comments on statement, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 30–1; Peel (14) 3.
Land defences, (8) 18.
Loss of ships during war, (8) 16.
Native races, enthusiasm on outbreak of Great War, (4) 33.
Volunteers during Near Eastern crisis, (8) 18.
Vote for naval defence, (8) 16.
Opening speech, (1) 9–10.
Pacific Islands, (2) 10–1.
Palestine, (2) 12, 16.
Personal position, (4) 25–6.
Poland, (4) 30.
Publicity, (2) 20, 21, 23, 28, (12) 19.
Raratonga, (2) 10, 11.
Ross Sea Territory, (2) 12.
Ruhr occupation, (4) 31–2.
Russia, (4) 28, 30.
Massey, the Right Hon. W. F.—(continued).
Lord Salisbury's statement, appreciation of, (8) 15.
Samoa, (2) 15.
Singapore naval base, (4) 27, (8) 13, 17–8, (9) 24, 26, (11) 8.
Spahlinger treatment for tuberculosis, (9) 28, (14) 21–2.
Soudan, (4) 29.
Suez Canal, (4) 29, (11) 8.
Treaties and agreements, difference between, (14) 15.
United States of America:
Friendly feeling in, towards Britain, (4) 28–9.
Friendly relations with, importance of, (4) 34.
Tariff, (4) 29.
Washington Conference, (4) 28–9, (6) 23–4, (14) 14.
Washington Treaty, (9) 23, 24.
Welcome to, Smuts (1) 10.
Mauritius, position of Indians in, Devonshire (13) 14; Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 6.
Mediterranean, protection of: Salisbury (8) 6; Smuts (8) 21; Amery (9) 8–9.
Resolution, (15) 7, agreed to, (15) 3.
Meighan, Mr., quoted respecting 1921 Resolution on position of Indians, King (13) 17–8.
Mexico:
American diplomatic relations resumed, Curzon (3) 11.
British refusal to recognise Government of General Obregon, Curzon (3) 11.
Michigan, Lake, American scheme for Canal from, to Gulf of Mexico, King (4) 3–4.
Middle East, estimated expenditure, 1923–24, compared with 1921–22, Devonshire (2) 7, 9.
Military Defence, see under Defence.
Millspaugh, Dr., American Financial Adviser in Persia, Curzon (3) 9.
Milner, Lord, mission to Egypt, Curzon (3) 11.
Morocco:
Danger of extension of French power in, Curzon (3) 13, 14; Salisbury (8) 6.
French Protectorate, condition of British recognition, Curzon (3) 13.
Spanish zone, conditions in, Curzon (3) 13–4.
Mosul Vilayet, future of, Devonshire (2) 8; Curzon (3) 25.
Mozambique, agreement respecting recruiting labour for the Transvaal, 1909, referred to, (14) 34.
Mudania Armistice, October 1922, Curzon (3) 22.
Mulcahy, General R., Minister of Defence, Irish Free State:
Position of Irish Free State as regards naval defence, (9) 27–8.
Mussolini, Signor:
Agreement with Jugoslavia, Curzon (3) 18.
Attitude towards League of Nations, Smuts (7) 4.
Electoral Reform Bill, Curzon (3) 18.
Government of, Curzon (3) 17–8.
Ignorance of Covenant of the League of Nations, Curzon (3) 18.
and Italian-Greek crisis, Curzon (6) 3, 4–5, 5.
Policy of, Curzon (3) 18.
Mustapha Kemal, French support of, Curzon (3) 4.

57 4 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 9 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

N.

Natal, position of Indians in, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 10; Alwar (12) 24, (14) 7; Smuts (13) 25, 26, 27.

Nationality, re-admission to British nationality of British-born women married to aliens, Committee on:
Appointment, (2) 25, 29–30.
Report and resolution, (14) 23–24, adopted and agreed to, (14) 11.

Naturalisation:
Committee of Enquiry in connection with revocation of certificates:
Appointment of Committee on, (2) 25, 29.
Resolution, (14) 23, agreed to, (14) 11.
Grant of, to persons resident in Mandated Territories:
Appointment of Committee on, (2) 25, 29.
Resolution, (14) 23, agreed to, (14) 11.

Naval Defence, see under Defence.

Near East:
Crisis, September 1922:
Canadian attitude, King (11) 18.
Manifesto to Dominions, King (4) 16–17, 17; Curzon (4) 17; Massey (4) 31.
New Zealand volunteers, Massey (8) 18.
Soviet anti-British propaganda, Curzon (3) 15.

Neuilly, Treaty of, Curzon (3) 19.

New Hebrides:
Anglo-French Condominium, Committee on:
Appointment, (2) 26, 30.
Report: (14) 25–7.
Adopted, (14) 13.
Discussion on, (14) 11–3.
Resolution, (14) 27.
Handing of, over to France, New Zealand would not agree, Massey (14) 11, 12, 13, 26.
Position in, (14) 23–6.

"New York Times," publication of information respecting discussion at Imperial Conference, King (7) 12.

New Zealand:
Administration of Samoa, Massey (2) 15–6.
Bolshevist propaganda in, Massey (4) 30.
Contribution to League of Nations, Devonshire (15) 14.
Contribution towards Singapore naval base, Massey (9) 26, (11) 8.
Control of Ross Sea Territory, Massey (2) 12.
Feeling in, against war, Massey (6) 24.
Fruit imports from certain Pacific Islands, preference to, Massey (2) 10.
Indians in, number and position, Peel (12) 4; Tej Bahadur Sapru, (12) 10, (13) 30–1, Massey (13) 22, 24; Alwar (14) 5–6.
Land defences, provision for, Massey (8) 18.
Native races, enthusiasm on outbreak of Great War, Massey (4) 33.
Naval defence:
Action taken and in prospect, Massey (9) 25–6.
Co-operation with Australia hoped for, Massey (9) 26–7.
Cost, Amery (9) 14.
Interest in, Massey (9) 24–5.
Vote, Massey (9) 26, (8) 16.
and New Hebrides, Massey (14) 11, 12, 13, 26.
Readiness to contribute to Empire Defence, Massey (11) 8.
Relations with Japan, Massey (4) 27.
Mr. Sastri's visit, Massey (13) 23–4. and Singapore naval base, Massey (9) 24; Smuts (8) 19, 20.
Ships, loss of, during war, Massey (8) 16.
New Zealand—(continued).
Sugar imports, Devonshire (2) 6; Massey (2) 10–11.
Volunteers during Near Eastern crisis, 1922, Massey (8) 18.
Willingness to send contingent during Near Eastern crisis, 1922, Massey (4) 31.

Newfoundland:
Indians in, position of, Warren (13) 28; Alwar (14) 6, 6.
Interests in League of Nations in hands of Lord Robert Cecil, Warren (7) 7.
Iron ore export to the Ruhr, Warren (5) 15.
Position of, Warren (1) 13, (5) 15.
Position of, in relation to treaties, historical memorandum, (14) 33.
Royal Naval Reserve, Warren (11) 9.

Newcastle, American vice-consul, withdrawal of exequatur, Curzon (3) 10.

Nigeria, railway construction, Devonshire (2) 4.

Nikolaevsk, massacre of Japanese at, Curzon (3) 6.

Nincic, M., Foreign Minister of the Serbians, (7) 9.

Nish, agreement between Bulgaria and Serbia, Curzon (3) 19.

North Africa, French Air Force in, Hoare (10) 16.

Northern Rhodesia, administration by British Government from the 1st April, 1924, Devonshire (2) 5.

Northern Saghalien, status question, Curzon (3) 6.

Nyasa, Lake, railway connection with Beira, Devonshire (2) 4.

O.

Obregon, General, British refusal to recognise Government of, Curzon (3) 11.

Official correspondence between Governments, publication of:
Committee on:
Appointment of, (14) 20.
Report of, (15) 10, 11–12, agreed to, (15) 5–6.
Position respecting, and divergent views, King (14) 18–20.

O'Higgins, Kevin, T.D., Vice-President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State:
Irish Free State:
Position, (5) 13–4.
Preoccupation with domestic problems, (5) 14.
Relations with Great Britain, (5) 14–5.
U.S.A., anti-British feeling in, (5) 14–5.
Welcome to, Baldwin (3) 2.

Opium Traffic:
League of Nations and, Cecil (6) 9, (7) 9–10; Peel (7) 7–8, 9,10.
Position of India as regards, Peel (7) 7, 8, 10; Cecil (7) 10.

Ormsby-Gore, the Hon. W. G., M.P., Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office:
Forthcoming visit to British West African Colonies, Devonshire (2) 3.
Ruanda, further portion made over to Belgium, (2) 13.
Visit to West Indies and British Guiana, 1922, Devonshire (2) 3.

P.

Pacific:
Base in:
Imperative if battleships continued in programme of Navy, Bruce (8) 19.
Need for, Bruce (8) 12, 14–5, (11) 5, 6.

Pacific—(continued).
Naval defence, importance of, Massey (9) 24–5.
better Protection in, needed, Massey (4) 27.
Quadruple Treaty, Baldwin (1) 5; Curzon (3) 5; Bruce (8) 14–5; Smuts (8) 20.

Pacific Cable Board, proposed management by, of wireless and cable communication between Canada and West Indies, Devonshire (3) 3–4; King (2) 10.

Pacific Islands under control of New Zealand:
Conditions in, Massey (2) 10.
Fruit, preference to imports into New Zealand, Massey (2) 10.

Palestine:
Administration by Sir Herbert Samuel, Devonshire (2) 9.
Air station proposed in, Salisbury (8) 6.
Arab Council:
Proposal, Devonshire (2) 9–10; Curzon (2) 19.
Reception of offer by Arabs, Devonshire (16) 2–3.
Arabs in:
Administration by, impossible, Curzon (2) 18.
British policy towards, Curzon (2) 19.
Care should be taken not to do injustice to, Massey (2) 12, 16.
Difficulties with, Smuts (2) 15.
British troops in, Derby (10) 11, 12
Cabinet Committee enquiry into question and new proposals to be submitted, Devonshire (2) 9–10.
Charge to British Exchequer, 1922–23, and estimates 1923–24 and 1924–25, Devonshire (2) 9.
Garrison, reduction, Devonshire (2) 9.
Legislative Council, suspension of establishment of, Devonshire (2) 9.
Mr. Massey on, (2) 12.
Policy respecting, approved, Smuts (2) 19.
Political situation, Devonshire (2) 9, (16) 2–3.
Royal Air Force in, Derby (10) 12; Hoare (10) 15.
Strategic considerations, Salisbury (8) 6.
Sykes–Picot Agreement, Curzon (3) 9.
Zionist (National Home) Policy:
Abandonment of, not advocated, Massey (2) 16.
should be Adhered to, Curzon (2) 17 8; Smuts (2) 15, 19; Baldwin (2) 19.
Arab opposition to, and delegation to London, Devonshire (2) 9.
Balfour Declaration, Devonshire (2) 9; Curzon (3) 9, 17.

Peace Conference, status of Dominions, (14) 36.

Peel, the Right Hon. Viscount, G.B.E., Secretary of State for India:
Address to His Majesty the King, (16) 3.
Bolshevist menace in India and Afghanistan, (5) 16–7.
Concluding speech, (16) 5.
German reparations, Expert Committee, (13) 12.
India:
Army reductions, (11) 9.
new Constitution, (12) 3–4.
Culture and tradition, (12) 5–6.
Defence, position, (8) 22.
Feeling for Empire, (12) 4.
Importance of, to the Empire, (12) 4.
Industrial position, (12) 3.
New status, (12) 3.
Services to the Empire, (12) 3.
Indians, position of, in the Dominions, (2) 16, (12) 2–6, (14) 3–4, appreciation of speech, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 6.
League of Nations, (7) 7, (9) 28, (15) 6.
Peel, the Right Hon. Viscount, G.B.E.—(continued).
Opium question, (7) 7–8.
Persian Gulf, policing of, (11) 10, 11.
Publicity, (2) 21, (12) 18, 19, 20, (13) 33.
Royal Indian Marine, (11) 10–11.
Thanks to, Alwar (12) 25; Tej Bahadur Sapru (14) 11.
Turkish Treaty, good effects in India, (5) 17.

Persia:
Bolshevist propaganda in, Curzon (3) 9; Massey (4) 28.
Opposed to amendment of article 10 of League of Nations Covenant, Cecil (6) 19.
Situation in, Curzon (3) 9.

Persian Gulf, policing of, Peel (11) 10–11.

Philippine Islands, Japan and, Curzon (3) 6.

Phillips, F., India's contribution to League of Nations, (15) 17, 21.

Poincaré, M., attitude of, see France.

Poland:
Army, Derby (10) 10.
Conditions in, Curzon (3) 3, 16–17.
and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 16.
Seizure and retention of Vilna, Curzon (3) 16.
Mr. Massey on, (4) 30.
War with Lithuania prevented by League of Nations, Cecil (6) 10.

Politis, M., Greek representative on League of Nations, Cecil (6) 11, 22.

Pollock, Sir Frederick, (6) 11, 14.

Pope, Sir Joseph, on publication of correspondence between His Majesty's and Canadian Governments, King (14) 18, 19.

Porter, Stephen, on value of the League of Nations, Cecil (6) 9.

Portugal:
British relations with, Curzon (3) 14.
Negotiations respecting Lorenzo Marques, Curzon (3) 14–15.

Protectorates, grant of naturalisation to persons in, resolution, (14) 23, agreed, (14) 11.

Publicity:
Lord Curzon's statement, proposed publication of certain parts of, (2) 28–9, result, (5) 2.
Defence discussions, need for secrecy as regards, (2) 21.
Dominion Cabinets must decide on what should be published, King (9) 19–20.
Foreign relations speeches:
Need for secrecy, Curzon (2) 20–1, (3) 2.
Non-publication, (5) 2–3.
Indians, position of, in the Empire, question of publication of speeches, (12) 18–20, 21, (13) 33; Baldwin (14) 10.
Leakage of information, Massey (2) 23.
Minister in Charge, appointment, (2) 19–24, 27.
League of Nations discussions, question of, (7) 11–12.
Naval defence discussions, question of, (9) 28.
Press communiqués, (1) 15, (2) 27–8, (3) 22, 31, (4) 34, (5) 22.
Reporting of proceedings, question of, Baldwin (1) 2.
Secrecy essential to frank discussion, King (2) 21–2.
Value of, King (1) 9, (2) 22–3.

Punjab, unrest in, Peel (5) 17.

R.

Raffles, Sir Bamford, quoted respecting Singapore naval base, Amery (9) 11.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Rapallo, Treaty of:
Agreement signed between M. Mussolini and Jugoslavia for amplification of, but not carried out, Curzon (3) 18.
Registration with League of Nations by Serbian Government, Cecil (6) 16.

Raratonga:
Conditions in, Massey (2) 10, 11.
Message of loyalty and affection sent to King George, Massey (2) 11.

Rathenau, assassination referred to, Curzon (3) 27.

Reading, Lord, and position of Indians in the Empire, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 8, 9, Alwar (12) 25.

Red Sea, maintenance of safe passage through, resolution, (15) 7, agreed to (15) 3.

"Repulse," H.M.S., proposed Empire cruise, Amery (9) 13–4.

the Rhine, British troops on, Derby (10) 11–12.

Rhineland, Separatist Movement:
British attitude towards, Curzon (13) 10–12.
British Government's telegram to the Allies, Curzon, (14) 2.
Importance of defining British policy towards, Smuts (13) 9, 11.
Paragraphs for Report respecting, (15) 9, (16) 7.

Richardson, General, Administrator at Samoa, Massey (2) 16.

Robertson, Sir Benjamin, and immigration of Indians to British Guiana, Smuts (2) 14.

Rodd, Sir Rennell, contributions to League of Nations, allocation (15) 15–17, 20, 21.

Ross Sea Territory:
Control by New Zealand on behalf of Imperial Government, Massey (2) 12.
Oil:
Control of industry necessary, Massey (2) 12.
Export during war to Norway and Germany, Massey (2) 12.
Seal fishing industry, Massey (2) 12.
Whale fishing industry, conservation necessary, Massey (2) 12.

Roumania:
Contribution to League of Nations, Rodd (15) 16, 17.
and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 16.
Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 22–5.
Position in, Curzon (3) 3, 21–2.

Ruanda, further portion made over to Belgium, Smuts (2) 13, 14; Ormsby-Gore (2) 13.

Ruhr:
probable Future conditions in, Smuts (5) 10.
Newfoundland trade with, and effect of occupation, Warren (5) 15.
Occupation:
British attitude, Baldwin (1) 3; Curzon (3) 28–9, criticism, Smuts (5) 7.
British non-participation, continuance urged, Smuts (5) 9–10.
British participation, probable downfall of Germany might have been prevented, Alwar (5) 18.
Mr. Bruce on, (4) 22, 23.
Canadian opinion regarding, King (4) 18.
History, Curzon (3) 4, 28–30.
Indian opinion regarding, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 19–20.
Italian attitude, Curzon (3) 18.
Mr. Massey on, (4) 31–2.
Passive resistance of Germany, Baldwin (1) 3; Curzon (3) 28, 29, collapse, Baldwin (1) 3; Curzon (3) 30.

Ruhr—(continued).
Occupation—(continued).
Peace must be based on law and justice, Smuts (5) 13.
Termination essential for European settlement, Smuts (5) 12.
Ruhrort, illegal seizure of, by France, Smuts (5) 12.

Rumbold, Sir Horace, at Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 23.

Rush–Bagot Agreement, 1817, proposed revision, King (4) 7–8.

Russia:
Army, Derby (10) 10.
British subjects imprisoned in, proceedings respecting, Curzon (3) 15.
Communism, Curzon (3) 16.
Future outlook, Curzon (3) 16.
Indebtedness to Britain, Curzon (3) 16; Massey (4) 30.
Internal conditions and trade, Curzon (3) 16.
Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 23–4.
Menace of in Eastern Europe, Smuts (5) 8.
Position in, Curzon (3) 3; Massey (4) 30.
Relations with, Smuts (5) 10.
Soviet Government:
anti-British propaganda and obtaining of pledge against, Curzon (3) 15.
British ultimatum to, Curzon (3) 15.
Conferences with, failure of, Curzon (3) 15.
Illegal proceedings against British fishing vessels, Curzon (3) 15.
Japanese Conferences with, Curzon (3) 6.
Mission in Kabul, Curzon (3) 8.
Recognition of, British attitude, Curzon (3) 16.
Trade Agreement with, Curzon (3) 15.
Soviet intrigue and propaganda:
Afghanistan, Massey (4) 28; Peel (5) 16–7.
India: Peel (5) 17.
no Chance of success, Tej Bahadur Sapru (5) 20.
Mr. Massey on, (4) 30.
New Zealand, Massey (4) 30.
Persia, Curzon (3) 9; Massey (4) 28.
careful Watching of position in, need for, Massey (4) 30.
Working agreement with, desired by Japanese, Curzon (3) 6.
Working agreement with Japan would be serious matter and might lead to difficulties, Massey (4) 27.

S.

Saar administration, Cecil (6) 9, (7) 7–8; Smuts (7) 2–3.

St. Lawrence Waterway:
Improvement scheme, King (4) 5
Policing question, King (4) 8.

St. Lucia, constitutional reforms, Devonshire (2) 3.

St. Vincent, constitutional reforms, Devonshire (2) 3.

Salandra, Signor, Italian representative on the League of Nations, Cecil (6) 11, 12, 14.

Salisbury, the Most Hon. the Marquess of, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B., Lord President of the Council:
Air situation, mitigating circumstances in connection with, (11) 13.
Armaments, reduction of, British policy, (8) 2.
Cape, route to the East round, (8) 5, 6.
Censorship, (8) 9.

Salisbury, the Most Hon. the Marquess of, K.G., G.C.V.O., C.B.—(continued).
Committee of Imperial Defence, (8) 2–3, 8, 9, 18–19.
Defence:
Co-operation with the Dominions, (11) 13.
Resolution, (11) 13–14, 14, (5) 2, 3.
Secrecy as regards discussions, need for, (2) 21.
Statement, (8) 2–9, appreciation of, Massey (8) 15; Bruce (11) 3, reply to discussion (11) 12–4.
Thanks to representatives of Dominions and India, (11) 12–13.
Egypt, preservation of communications with British Empire, (8) 5–6.
France, air force, (8) 8.
Fuelling bases on lines of communication, (8) 5.
Gibraltar, Straits of, (8) 6.
Great Britain:
Air Force, (8) 8.
Defence of, enquiry by Committee of Imperial Defence, (8) 7–8.
Food supplies in times of war, (8) 6–7.
High Commissioners, status, (14) 20, 21.
Japan, (8) 3, 5.
Mediterranean, (8) 6.
Palestine, strategic considerations, (8) 6.
Singapore naval base, (8) 4–5, 13, 14.
Suez Canal, (8) 5–6, (11) 13.
Tangier, strategic importance of, (8) 6.
War Books, compilation, (8) 9.
Washington Agreements, (8) 3–4.

Salmond, Sir John, quoted on procedure at Washington Conference, (14) 14.

Samoa:
Administration of, Massey (2) 15–16.
Message of loyalty and affection sent to H.M. the King, Massey (2) 15.

Samuel, Sir Herbert, Administration in Palestine, Devonshire (2) 9, 10.

Sastri, Right Hon. V. Srinivasa: (12) 9, 15, 17, (13) 25, 31.
Mission of:
to Canada, King (4) 11, (13) 18, 19; Alwar (14) 7.
Effect of, Smuts (13) 24.
to New Zealand, Massey (13) 23–4.

Schanzer, M., Italian Foreign Minister, intrigues of, Curzon (3) 18.

Serbia:
See Jugoslavia.

Sèvres, Treaty of, Curzon (3) 23, 23–4.

Seychelles:
Deportation of agitators to, from Egypt, Curzon (3) 11–12.
Return of Zaghlul Pasha from, Curzon (3) 12.

Shantung Railway, return to China by Japan, Curzon (3) 5.

Siberia, Japanese Expeditionary Force withdrawn, Curzon (3) 5.

Sifton, Sir Clifford, on position of the Dominions in reference to foreign affairs, King (4) 12.

Silesia, League of Nations decision, Curzon (3) 16.

Singapore Naval Base:
Approval of proposal, Massey (4) 27.
British policy, Salisbury (8) 4.
not Contrary to spirit of Washington Treaty, Salisbury (8) 4; Bruce (8) 12; Amery (9) 10–11.
Defence of, till arrival of main fleet, Amery (9) 11–12.

Singapore Naval Base—(continued).
Development of, without interruption, question whether any understanding respecting, at Washington Conference, Bruce (8) 13.
Doubts in connection with, Smuts (8) 19–20.
Garrisons, fortifications, &c., Bruce (8) 13–14; Amery (9) 11–12; Derby (10) 12.
Implications of construction, Smuts (8) 19.
Information required in connection with, Bruce (8) 12–13.
Invulnerability of, Derby (10) 12.
Japanese attitude, Curzon (3) 6, (8) 20; Salisbury (8) 13.
Length of time needed for development, Salisbury (8) 5.
Mr. Massey on, (8) 17–8.
Money contribution by Australia, question of, Salisbury (8) 14; Bruce (8) 14.
Need for, Salisbury (8) 4, 5.
New Zealand approval and contribution, Massey (9) 24, 26, (11) 8.
Objects of, Amery (9) 9–10.
Possibility of avoiding development, Bruce (8) 14.
Resolution, (11) 16, (15) 7, agreed to, (15) 3.
General Smuts on, (8) 19, (10) 22.
Strategical importance of, Amery (9) 9, 11; Bruce (11) 5–6.
Strategic position, question respecting, Bruce (8) 12–13.

Skelton, Dr. O. D., India's contribution to the League of Nations, (15) 17, 21.

Smith, Sir James Masterton, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office, New Hebrides, (14) 13, 26.

Smuts, General the Right Hon. J. C., C.H., K.C., Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa:
Address to, respecting position of Indians in South Africa, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 14–16.
Africa:
Communication between North and South, (2) 13, 14.
Field for British development, (2) 12.
Mr. Amery's statement, appreciation of, (9) 27.
Appeal to, Alwar (14) 7.
Attitude towards Indians, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 10.
Austria, restoration of, (7) 2.
British Empire:
Need for maintaining prestige of, (5) 5–6, 6–7.
Power of, (1) 11.
British Guiana, emigration to, (2) 14.
Committee of Imperial Defence, (8) 18.
Concluding speech, (16) 5.
Lord Curzon's speech, comments on, (5) 4.
Danzig administration, (7) 3.
Defence:
Armaments, danger of present position, (10) 21.
Contributions from Dominions, (8) 21.
Dangers nearer Great Britain, (8) 21.
Imperial co-operation, (8) 21.
Naval:
One-Power standard, comments on draf resolution, (11) 15.
Position of question in 1921 and at present. (11) 15.
no immediate naval or military menace to the Empire, (10) 21–2.
Resolutions, question of, (11) 14–15.
European affairs:
British policy of isolation impossible, (5) 5.
Dominions' right to part in settlement of, (5) 6.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62960

Smuts, General the Right Hon. J. C., C.H., K.C.—(continued).
European affairs—(continued).
Withdrawal from, question of, (5) 4–5.
Europe, situation in, and need for peace, (1) 10, 12.
Financial position of Great Britain and Germany, (5) 9.
Foreign policy:
General observations, (5) 4.
Relations of various parts of the Empire in, (5) 3–4.
France:
British policy towards, criticism, (5) 6–7.
Policy of, criticism, (5) 9.
Rivalry between Great Britain and, (5) 8.
Germany:
Break-up of, possible results and importance of preventing, (5) 8–9.
British attitude, criticism, (5) 7.
Reparations:
Conference of Allied Governments, (10) 6–7.
Expert Committee, (13) 7–8, 9, 12.
suggested Solution, (5) 11–12.
Restoration of currency and credit, proposal, (5) 11.
Settlement with France, possibility of, (5) 8.
Western, suggested neutralisation of part of, (5) 12.
Great Britain:
Air Force, single, approval, (10) 21.
Air menace from France, (10) 22–4.
High Commissioners, status of, (14) 16, 17, 20, 21.
Imperial Conference:
Appointment of Committees, (2) 25, 26.
Joint Secretariat, (2) 27.
Indians, position of, (13) 24–7, comments on, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 15–16, (13) 31–2; Peel (14) 3.
Inter-Allied debts, suggested moratorium, (5) 11.
Inter-Imperial trade, (1) 12.
Irish Free State representatives, welcome to, (1) 10.
Italian-Greek crisis, (7) 3, 4, 5.
Janina murders and occupation of Corfu (1) 12.
Jewish influence, (2) 15.
Kenya:
Indians in, (13) 24–5.
Trade agreement with, (2) 14.
Lausanne Treaty, ratification, (15) 11.
League of Nations, (1) 11, (7) 2, 4–6, 11.
New Hebrides, (14) 12.
Opening speech, (1) 10–12.
Pacific Quadruple Pact, (8) 20.
Palestine, position in, (2) 15, 19.
Portugal, negotiations with, respecting Lorenzo Marques, Curzon (3) 14–15.
Programme of arrangements, (2) 24, 25.
Publicity, (2) 28–9, (9) 28, (12) 18–19.
Rhineland, Separatist movement in, (13) 9, 11.
Ruanda boundary, (2) 13–14.
Ruhr occupation, (5) 7, 9–10, 12.
Russia, (5) 10.
Saar administration, (7) 2–3, 5.
Singapore naval base, (8) 19–20.
South Africa, defence position, (10) 21.
Tanganyika, white settlement, (2) 13.
Thanks to, for invitation, Alwar (14) 5.
Tribute to, Alwar (12) 25.
proposed Tripartite Agreement between Great Britain, France and Germany, (5) 10.
United States of America:
Debt to, (1) 12.
Support of, in European settlement, need for, (5) 10.
Smuts, General the Right Hon. J. C., C.H., K.C.—(continued).
Thanks to, for invitation, Alwar (14) 5.
Versailles Treaty, (5) 12.
Washington Conference, (1) 10–11.
Welcomed to India, Alwar (12) 26.
South Africa:
Attitude to Indian problem in Kenya, Smuts (13) 24–5.
Contribution to League of Nations, Devonshire (15) 14.
Defence position, Smuts (10) 21.
Indians in:
Emigration to British Guiana, question of, Smuts (2) 14.
Position of: Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 10–11, 12, (13) 32; Smuts (13) 25–6, 27; Peel (14) 4; Alwar (14) 5, 6.
Address to General Smuts, Tej Bahadur Sapru, (12) 14–16.
General Smuts' memorandum, comments on, Tej Bahadur Sapru, (12) 15–6.
Naval defence, cost, Amery (9) 14.
and Ratification of Treaty of Lausanne, Smuts (15) 11.
Suffrage qualifications, Smuts (13) 25–6.
Trade agreement with Kenya, desire for, and question of Congo Agreement in connection with, Smuts (2) 14.
South Georgia, whaling industry, Devonshire (2) 6.
South Orkneys, whaling industry, Devonshire (2) 6.
South Sandwich Islands, whaling industry, Devonshire (2) 6.
South Shetlands, whaling industry, Devonshire (2) 6.
Southern Rhodesia, constitution of responsible Government, Devonshire (2) 5.
Spahlinger treatment for tuberculosis, Massey (9) 28; (14) 21–2; (16) 4, note.
Spain:
British relations with, Curzon (3) 14.
and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 13.
Military revolt, Curzon (3) 14.
Negotiations with, respecting Tangier, Curzon (3) 13.
Republican movement, Curzon (3) 14.
von Spee, Admiral, Falkland Islands battle, Amery (9) 4, 10; Massey (9) 25.
Sperling, R.A.C., C.M.G., New Hebrides, (14) 25, 26.
Stambolisky, M., policy of, &c., Curzon (3) 18–19.
Strakosch, Sir Henry, South African representative on League of Nations, Smuts (7) 2.
Stresemann, Herr, Curzon (3) 30.
Soudan, Mr. Massey on, (4) 29.
Suez Canal:
Defence of, importance of, Salisbury (8) 5, 6, (11) 13; Derby (10) 11; Bruce (11) 3–4, 6; Massey (11) 8.
Leasehold tenure of, Massey (4) 29.
Paragraphs for report, (15) 9.
Sweden, and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 13.
Sykes–Picot Agreement, Curzon (3) 9.
Syria, French mandate for, Curzon (2) 18.

T.

Takoradi, Gold Coast, harbour works, Devonshire (2) 4.

c 62961

Tanganyika Territory:
Administration, Devonshire (2) 5.
Agriculture, Devonshire (2) 5.
Boundary, Ormsby-Gore (2) 13.
"Compulsory servitude," abolition, Devonshire (2) 5.
General conditions, Devonshire (2) 4–5.
Indians in, position of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 11; Devonshire (13) 14.
Land Law, Devonshire (2) 5.
Military garrison, reduced, Devonshire (2) 5.
Native education, Devonshire (2) 5.
Timber resources, Smuts (2) 14.
White settlement, question of, Devonshire (2) 5; Smuts (2) 13.
Tangier:
International administration, negotiations respecting, Curzon (3) 13, 14; Salisbury (8) 6.
Strategic importance of, Curzon (3) 13; Salisbury (8) 6.
Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sir, K.C.S.I.:
Afghanistan, need for stable and careful policy in regard to, (5) 21.
Appreciation of Lord Curzon's speech, (5) 19.
"C" Mandated Territories, (12) 11.
European settlement, India's interest in, (5) 19–20.
High Commissioners, status, (14) 21.
Imperial Conference, functions of, (12) 7.
India:
Bolshevism in, (5) 20.
Contribution to League of Nations, (15) 6, 14–15, 18, 19, 19–20, 21, 22.
Immigration from, (12) 12.
Opinion on Ruhr occupation and French policy, (5) 19–20.
Position of, (5) 19.
Position of, in the Empire, (12) 7, 16–17.
Indians position of, in the Empire: (2) 16–17, 23, (12) 6–18.
Appeal to Mr. Baldwin and His Majesty's Government, (12) 17–8.
Appeal to the Conference, (12) 16–17.
Appreciation of reception of proposals, (13) 29.
Comments on statements, (13) 29–32.
Committees in each Colony and Dominion, &c., to confer with Committees from India, suggestion, (12) 13–14.
Effect of discussion on Indian opinion, (14) 10.
Resolution of 1921 Conference, (12) 12–13, (13) 30.
formal Resolution not necessary, (14) 11.
Kenya question, (12) 8–9, 11, (13) 29.
Welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2.
Thanks to, Peel (14) 11.
Telegraphic Communication:
Turks Islands to Barbadoes, scheme for all-British cable, Devonshire, (2) 3–4.
West Indies, Devonshire, (2) 3–4; King (2) 10.
Tellini, General, murder, see Janina murders.
Territorial Waters:
Committee on:
Appointment of, (2) 25, 30.
Report and resolutions, (14) 28–9, agreed to, (14) 14.
Three-Mile Limit:
Extension to twelve, proposal an Empire matter, King (4) 9.
Importance of maintenance of principle, Curzon (15) 3.
Transjordania:
Administration by Emir Abdullah, assisted by British adviser, Devonshire (2) 10.
Royal Air Force in, Hoare (10) 15.
Transvaal:
Indians in, position of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 10; Alwar (14) 6.
Recruitment of labour from Mozambique, 1909 agreement, (14) 34.
Suffrage qualifications and position of Indians, Smuts, (13) 25–6.
Treaties:
Difference between agreements and, Massey (14) 15.
Position of Dominions and India in relation to signature, &c., of:
Committee on:
Appointment, (2) 25, 30.
Report and resolution, (14) 14, 31, 32–3, approved, (14) 17.
Historical memorandum on, (14) 33–7.
Resolution, publication question, (14) 17.
Trincomali, future fuelling base, Salisbury (8) 5.
Trinidad:
Constitutional reforms, Devonshire (2) 3.
Indians in, position of, Devonshire (13) 14; Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 6.
Oil industry, Devonshire (2) 3.
Tsankoff, M., Bulgaria, Government of, Curzon (3) 19.
Turkey:
enhanced British prestige, Curzon (3) 25.
Claim to Mosul, Devonshire (2) 8; Curzon (3) 25.
Conclusion of peace with, Curzon (3) 3, see also Lausanne, Treaty of.
Foreigners residing and trading in, provisions of Treaty of Lausanne, Curzon (3) 25.
Future of, Curzon (3) 25.
Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 22–5.
and League of Nations, Curzon (3) 25.
Sultan, deposition, Curzon (3) 22.
Treaty of Lausanne, see Lausanne, Treaty of.
War with Greece: Curzon (3) 19–20, 22.
French support of Mustapha Kemal, Curzon (3) 4.
Turks of Angora, French agreement with, Curzon (3) 4, 22.
Turks Islands, scheme for all-British cable to Barbadoes, Devonshire (2) 3–4.

U.

Uganda:
Boundary, Ormsby-Gore (2) 13.
Indians in, position of, Tej Bahadur Sapru (12) 11; Devonshire (13) 14.
Railway administration, training of natives, Devonshire (2) 4.
United States of America:
Appeal should be made to, to join proposed International Allied Reparations Conference, Smuts (5) 11.
Army of occupation on the Rhine, Curzon (3) 11.
Attitude respecting European situation, King (4) 18.
Attitude towards "C" Mandates, (14) 22, proposed reference to committee, Baldwin (10) 24.
British debt to, Baldwin (1) 4–5; Smuts (1) 12, (5) 9; Curzon (3) 10, 30.
anti-British agitation in, Curzon (3) 10.
British relations with, Curzon (3) 9–19.
Canadian relations with, King (4) 2–10, 12–13, (9) 18, (14) 34–5.
Lord Robert Cecil's visit, good effects, King (6) 18.
Coal imports into Canada, King (4) 8.
Copra imports from Cook Islands, Massey (2) 11.

57 74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

United States of America—(continued).
Delegation to League of Nations in connection with opium question, Cecil (6) 9, (7) 9–10; Peel (7) 7, 8, 9.
Diplomatic relations resumed with Mexico, Curzon (3) 11.
Fisheries Conference with Canada, 1918, (14) 35.
Friendly feeling in, towards Britain, Massey (4) 28–9.
Friendly relations with, importance of, Massey (4) 34.
Goodwill between Canada and, King (4) 5.
Halibut Treaty with Canada, King (4) 6–7, (14) 35.
Hostility to League of Nations, Curzon (3) 10 and Inter-Allied debts, Smuts (5) 11.
International Joint Commission: King (4) 3–4, (14) 34–5.
Leakage of information respecting Conference discussion, King (7) 12.
Japanese relations with, Curzon (3) 6.
and Lausanne Conference, Curzon (3) 22–3.
Liquor smuggling from Canada, King (4) 9.
Liquor traffic:
Committee:
proposed Reference of question to, Baldwin (10) 24.
Report, (14) 31.
Negotiations respecting, history of, Curzon (15) 3–5.
Paragraphs for Report, (15) 9, (16) 7–8.
Member on Reparations Commission withdrawn, Curzon (3) 10.
Navy, and comparison with British, Amery (9) 6, 7–8.
Opinion in the centre and in the west, importance of, Curzon (3) 10.
Participation in German reparations question, see under Reparations under Germany.
Postal convention with Canada, revision, King (4) 5.
Pulpwood export to, from Canada, embargo question, King (4) 8–9.
Representation at Lausanne, Curzon (3) 10.
Rush–Bagot Agreement, 1817, proposed revision, King (4) 7–8.
and St. Lawrence waterway improvement scheme, King (4) 5.
Ship Subsidy Bill, Curzon (3) 10.
and Singapore naval base, Massey (8) 17–8.
State-owned shipping, difficulties owing to, Curzon (3) 10.
Support of, in European settlement, need for, Smuts (5) 10.
Tariff, Curzon (3) 11; King (4) 8; Massey (4) 29.
Treaties and negotiations with, position of Canada, historical memorandum, (14) 33–5.
Vice-consul at Newcastle, withdrawal of exequatur, Curzon (3) 10.
War debt policy, Curzon (3) 10, 11.
Washington, see that title.
Western States, feeling in, Massey (4) 29.
Universal Postal Union, status of Dominions, (14) 36.
Uruguay, and Italian-Greek crisis, Cecil (6) 13.

V.

Venizelos, M., Curzon (3) 19, 20.
Versailles Conference, ex-President Wilson and, King (4) 16.
Versailles Treaty:
Breach of, by France, Smuts (5) 7, 10.
Occupation clauses, objection to, and proposed substitution for, Smuts (5) 12.
Versailles Treaty—(continued).
Provision of troops for carrying out military conditions, left to Great Britain, Derby (10) 11–12.
Vilna, seizure and retention by Poland, Curzon (3) 16.

W.

War Books, compilation:
by Committee of Imperial Defence, Salisbury (8) 9.
by Dominions, suggestion, Salisbury (8) 9.
Warren, the Hon. W. R., K.C., Prime Minister of Newfoundland:
Appreciation of Lord Curzon's speech, (5) 15.
Concluding speech, (16) 5.
Defence: (8) 22.
Admiralty memoranda, (11) 9.
Dominion contributions, (11) 9.
Foreign policy, relations of various parts of the Empire, (5) 15–16.
German reparations, Expert Committee, (13) 12.
Indians, position of, (13) 28, comments on statement, Tej Bahadur Sapru (13) 32; Peel (14) 3.
Irish Free State representatives, welcome to, (1) 13.
Labrador frontier question, (5) 15.
League of Nations, (7) 7.
Newfoundland:
Position of, (1) 13, (5) 15.
Royal Naval Reserve, (11) 9.
Opening speech, (1) 13.
Ruhr occupation, (5) 15.
United States of America, (5) 15.
Welcome to, Baldwin (1) 2.
Washington:
Canadian representation at, position respecting, King (4) 5–6.
Conference: Baldwin (1) 5, (8) 3; King (4) 16.
Good results of, Massey (4) 28–9.
Mr. Massey on, (6) 23.
New Zealand representation, Massey (10) 8.
Position prior to, Amery (9) 6.
Publicity arrangements, Hankey (2) 20.
General Smuts on, (1) 10–11.
Status of Dominions, Massey (14) 14, (14) 36.
Understanding at, in connection with Singapore naval base, question of, Bruce (8) 13.
Treaties: Baldwin (1) 5.
Balance of power under, Massey (9) 23, 24.
British action in carrying out, Amery (9) 6–7; Smuts (10) 21.
Circumstances favourable for, Amery (9) 7.
Effect of, Salisbury (8) 3–4.
Paragraphs for Report, (15) 9, (16) 7.
Position resulting from, Amery (9) 7–8.
Singapore development not a breach of, Salisbury (8) 4; Bruce (9) 12; Amery (9) 10–11.
Wei-hai Wei, position respecting restoration to China, Curzon (3) 6–7.
West Indies:
Agricultural College, change into Imperial College of Tropical Agriculture, Devonshire (2) 4.
Constitutional reforms, Devonshire (2) 3.
Economic position, Devonshire (2) 3.
Indians in, position, Devonshire (13) 4; Peel (14) 3; Alwar (14) 6.
Telegraphic communications, Devonshire (2) 3–4.
Visit of Mr. Edward Wood and Mr. Ormsby-Gore, 1922, Devonshire (2) 3.

West Indies—(continued).
Wireless and cable communication with Canada, proposed management of, by Pacific Cable Board approved, King (2) 10.
Whaling industry in South Atlantic.
Wilson, ex-President, and Versailles Conference, King (4) 16.
Wilson, Senator the Hon. R. V., Honorary Minister in charge of Departments of Health and Migration, Australia, welcome to, Baldwin (4) 2.
Wireless Communications: between Canada and West Indies, proposed management of, by Pacific Cable Board, Devonshire (2) 3–4, approved, King (2) 10.
Cook Islands, Massey (2) 11.
Wirth, Dr., and reparation payments, Curzon (3) 27.
Wood, Right Hon. Edward, visit to West Indies and British Guiana, 1922, Devonshire (2) 3.

Y.

Yehia Pasha Ibrahim, Egyptian Prime Minister, Curzon (3) 12.

Z.

Zaghlul Pasha: (3) 13.
Deportation from Egypt to the Seychelles, Curzon (3) 11–12.
King Fuad's relations with, Curzon (3) 12.
Return to Egypt and conduct of electoral campaign, Curzon (3) 12.
Zionist Policy, see under Palestine.

57 74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62964

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

Memoranda and Papers: "E" Series.

LIST OF CONTENTS.

Paper No.	Subject.	Date.
E. 57 (Revise)	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation. Memorandum by the Admiralty	11.6.23
E. 58	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation (Australia)	11.6.23
E. 59	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation (New Zealand)	11.6.23
E. 60	Establishment of Naval Base at Singapore and its Effect upon the Foreign and Naval Policy of the Empire	30.6.23
E. 61	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation (Canada)	18.7.23
E. 62	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation (South Africa)	18.7.23
E. 63	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation (Newfoundland)	21.7.23
E. 64 (Revise)	Report of Inter-Departmental Committee on the Limits of Territorial Waters	—.6.23
E. 65	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation (India)	18.7.23
E. 66	Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation (Irish Free State)	21.7.23
E. 67	Grant of Naturalisation to Persons Resident in Mandated Territories. Joint Memorandum prepared in Home Office and Colonial Office ... (Also printed as Appendix VI, Part II, in Command 1988)	10.9.23
E. 68	Imperial Airship Scheme. Statement made in the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for Air on July 26, 1923	20.9.23
E. 69	Recommendations of the National and Imperial Defence Committee as approved by His Majesty's Government upon— 1. The Relations of the Navy and the Air Force. 2. The Co-ordination of the Defence Forces	21.7.23
E. 70	The Development of Dominion Air Forces. Note by the Secretary of State for ... Memorandum by the Air Staff	4.10.23
E. 71	Nationality Committee. Composition and Terms of Reference ... (Not printed. See Appendix I to Minutes of 14th Meeting)	9.10.23
E. 72	Committee on the Position of the Dominions and India in Relation to the Signature of Treaties and the Question of Territorial Waters. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See Appendices III and IV to Minutes of 14th Meeting)	9.10.23
E. 73	Committee on the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See Appendix II to Minutes of 14th Meeting)	9.10.23
E. 74	Prohibition and Liquor Smuggling in the United States. Memorandum prepared in the Foreign Office	1.10.23
E. 75	Draft Message to His Majesty the King moved at the Opening Meeting of the Imperial Conference ... ... (Not printed here. See Section III of Command Paper 1987)	1.10.23
E. 76	The Position of the United States in Relation to "C" Mandates. Note prepared in the Colonial Office	1.10.23

57 74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

G 62965

Paper No.	Subject.	Date.
E. 77	Political Status of British Indians in the Colonies. Protectorates and Mandated Territories. Memorandum prepared in the Colonial Office (Also printed in Appendix V, p. 136, in Command 1988)	—.10.23
E. 78	Publicity Arrangements. Memorandum as a Basis for Discussion ...	1.10.23
E. 79	Committee on the Position of the United States of America in Relation to "C" Mandates. Composition and Terms of Reference... ... (Not printed. See E. 79 (a))	19.10.23
E. 79 (a)	Conclusions of Meeting of above Committee	23.10.23
E. 80	The Position of Indians in the British Empire. Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa ... ... (Also printed in Appendix V, p. 138, in Command 1988)	18.10.23
E. 81	Committee on India's Contribution to the League of Nations. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See Appendix V to Minutes of 15th Meeting)	25.10.23
E. 82	Committee on the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides. Resolution submitted by the Committee for the approval of the Conference ... ... (Not printed here. See Appendix II (b) to Minutes of 14th Meeting)	20.10.23
E. 83	Proposed Extension of the Powers of the Imperial War Graves Commission. Note by the Secretary covering suggested Draft Paragraphs for Report ... . (Not printed here. See Section XVIII of Command Paper 1987)	2.11.23
E. 84	Committee on the Spahlinger Treatment of Tuberculosis. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See E. 89)	31.10.23
E. 85	Committee on Publication of Correspondence and the Status of High Commissioners. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See Appendix IV to Minutes of 15th Meeting)	31.10.23
E. 86	Draft Paragraphs on Foreign Relations for the Report of the Imperial Conference ... ... (Not printed here. See Appendix III to Minutes of 15th Meeting, Appendix to Minutes of 16th Meeting, and Section VIII of Command 1987)	7.11.23
E. 87	Note by the Secretary covering Draft Resolutions on Imperial Defence (Not printed here. See Appendices I and II to Minutes of 15th Meeting and Section XII of Command Paper 1987)	5.11.23
E. 88 (Final Version)	Summary of Proceedings	8.11.23
E. 89	Committee on the Spahlinger Treatment of Tuberculosis. Report ...	6.11.23
E. 90	Note by the Secretary covering Memorandum received from the Irish Free State Delegation re Resolutions and Conclusions of the Imperial Conference and the Imperial Economic Conference	8.11.23
E. 91	Status of Indians in the British Empire. Note by the Secretary covering a Telegram from the Viceroy of India to the Secretary of State for India	16.11.23
E. 92	Reply from His Majesty the King to the Address from the Conference (Also printed as Appendix VIII in Command Paper 1988)	19.11.23
E. 93	Committee on Imperial Naval Defence. Minutes of a Meeting held at the Admiralty on October 18, 1923	18.10 23
E. 94	Committee on Imperial Air Defence. Minutes of a Meeting held at the Air Ministry on October 26, 1923	27.10.23

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the Committee of Imperial Defence. November 1923.

57
74
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
6
67
68
69
0

SECRET.

G 62966

E. 57. (Revise.)

179

(Also C.I.D. Paper No. 194–C.)

This Memorandum was approved by the Standing Defence Sub-Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence at their 33rd Meeting, held on June 19, 1923. [See C.I.D. 172nd Minutes (1).]

COMMITTEE OF IMPERIAL DEFENCE.

EMPIRE NAVAL POLICY AND CO-OPERATION, 1923.

MEMORANDUM BY THE ADMIRALTY.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

G 62965

Paper No.	Subject.	Date.
E. 77	Political Status of British Indians in the Colonies. Protectorates and Mandated Territories. Memorandum prepared in the Colonial Office (Also printed in Appendix V, p. 136, in Command 1988)	—.10.23
E. 78	Publicity Arrangements. Memorandum as a Basis for Discussion ...	1.10.23
E. 79	Committee on the Position of the United States of America in Relation to "C" Mandates. Composition and Terms of Reference... ... (Not printed. See E. 79 (a))	19.10.23
E. 79 (a)	Conclusions of Meeting of above Committee	23.10.23
E. 80	The Position of Indians in the British Empire. Memorandum by the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa ... ... (Also printed in Appendix V, p. 138, in Command 1988)	18.10.23
E. 81	Committee on India's Contribution to the League of Nations. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See Appendix V to Minutes of 15th Meeting)	25.10.23
E. 82	Committee on the Anglo-French Condominium in the New Hebrides. Resolution submitted by the Committee for the approval of the Conference ... ... (Not printed here. See Appendix II (b) to Minutes of 14th Meeting)	20.10.23
E. 83	Proposed Extension of the Powers of the Imperial War Graves Commission. Note by the Secretary covering suggested Draft Paragraphs for Report ... . (Not printed here. See Section XVIII of Command Paper 1987)	2.11.23
E. 84	Committee on the Spahlinger Treatment of Tuberculosis. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See E. 89)	31.10.23
E. 85	Committee on Publication of Correspondence and the Status of High Commissioners. Composition and Terms of Reference ... ... (Not printed. See Appendix IV to Minutes of 15th Meeting)	31.10.23
E. 86	Draft Paragraphs on Foreign Relations for the Report of the Imperial Conference ... ... (Not printed here. See Appendix III to Minutes of 15th Meeting, Appendix to Minutes of 16th Meeting, and Section VIII of Command 1987)	7.11.23
E. 87	Note by the Secretary covering Draft Resolutions on Imperial Defence (Not printed here. See Appendices I and II to Minutes of 15th Meeting and Section XII of Command Paper 1987)	5.11.23
E. 88 (Final Version)	Summary of Proceedings	8.11.23
E. 89	Committee on the Spahlinger Treatment of Tuberculosis. Report ...	6.11.23
E. 90	Note by the Secretary covering Memorandum received from the Irish Free State Delegation re Resolutions and Conclusions of the Imperial Conference and the Imperial Economic Conference	8.11.23
E. 91	Status of Indians in the British Empire. Note by the Secretary covering a Telegram from the Viceroy of India to the Secretary of State for India	16.11.23
E. 92	Reply from His Majesty the King to the Address from the Conference (Also printed as Appendix VIII in Command Paper 1988)	19.11.23
E. 93	Committee on Imperial Naval Defence. Minutes of a Meeting held at the Admiralty on October 18, 1923	18.10 23
E. 94	Committee on Imperial Air Defence. Minutes of a Meeting held at the Air Ministry on October 26, 1923	27.10.23

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the Committee of Imperial Defence. November 1923.

57

SECRET.

G 62966

E. 57. (Revise.)

179

(Also C.I.D. Paper No. 194–C.)

This Memorandum was approved by the Standing Defence Sub-Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence at their 33rd Meeting, held on June 19, 1923. [See C.I.D. 172nd Minutes (1).]

COMMITTEE OF IMPERIAL DEFENCE.

EMPIRE NAVAL POLICY AND CO-OPERATION, 1923.

MEMORANDUM BY THE ADMIRALTY.

74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the Committee of Imperial Defence. November 1923.

C 62967

SECRET.

E. 57. (Revise.)

(Also C.I.D. Paper No. 194–C.)

This Memorandum was approved by the Standing Defence Sub-Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence at their 33rd Meeting, held on June 19, 1923. [See C.I.D. 172nd Minutes (1).]

COMMITTEE OF IMPERIAL DEFENCE.

EMPIRE NAVAL POLICY AND CO-OPERATION, 1923.

CONTENTS.

	Page
The Task of the Empire's Naval Forces	1
The Influence of Air Power on the Naval Problem	2
The Standard of Naval Strength	2
The Problem before the Imperial Conference	2
Peace Organisation: The Principle of Dominion Navies	2
Organisation in War	2
Progressive Development of Dominion Navies	3

1. Empire Naval Policy and Co-operation, 1923.

THE British Empire is an Oceanic Commonwealth. The economic and defensive organisation of each nation and community of that Commonwealth has grown up and is based to-day on the presupposition that the use of the sea routes is free to us for mutual co-operation in peaceful development and for mutual assistance against external aggression. The control by a hostile Power of the sea routes which are the arteries of the Empire would involve all of us in economic disaster, and leave us individually isolated in the face of attack or invasion by superior forces.

2. The Task of the Empire's Naval Forces.

The task of the Naval Forces of the Empire is to destroy or neutralise Enemy Naval Forces and thereby to keep open the Sea Communications of the Empire.

In doing so they can secure:—

1. The protection of our sea-borne trade.*
2. The destruction of the enemy's sea-borne trade.
3. The free movement by sea of our own Military and Air Forces.
4. The prevention of the despatch overseas of enemy Military or Air Forces.

Wherever this task can be most effectively fulfilled, there, and there alone, the Empire as a whole, and each part of it, however remote from the actual scene of operations, will be effectively defended.

The capacity of the Naval Forces of the Empire to carry out their duties in the actual event of war will enable them to fulfil their primary and continuous function, which is to preserve peace and to enable British interests to be safeguarded by peaceful diplomacy.

* The vital importance of oversea trade is shown in the Appendices.

[10155 c] [10356] [10306—9] [10842]

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62968

3. The Influence of Air Power on the Naval Problem.

The development of aviation, while destined to have a great influence on the tactical organisation of our Naval Forces, will not, outside narrow waters such as the English Channel or the Mediterranean, materially affect the problem of the control of the ocean routes, which, in the main, will continue to depend upon surface craft. Airships, if developed and found reliable, may, however, play a considerable part, in co-operation with surface vessels, in carrying out the reconnaissance of the sea routes and the keeping open of sea communication.

4. The Standard of Naval Strength.

The definite standard of Naval strength necessary for the peace and security of the Empire must naturally vary with the general political situation, always allowing for the fact that Naval strength and efficiency cannot be improvised, and that it takes several years to build a capital ship and a generation to train a really efficient body of senior officers.

The Imperial Conference of 1921 defined the One-Power Standard of Naval strength as the basis of Imperial defence. This standard was contemplated by the Conference as a minimum. It was subsequently, as far as the main units of the Battle Fleet are concerned, fixed as the maximum by the Washington Agreement. This limitation was accepted by the representatives of the Empire at Washington and by the Admiralty, in the general interest of world peace. But in view of the fact that we depend for our very existence upon the freedom of the seas, it is essential that the Naval Forces of the Empire should, within that limitation, attain the highest point of individual and combined efficiency, and the greatest possible degree of mobility.

5. The Problem before the Imperial Conference.

At the forthcoming Imperial Conference the Admiralty will present for discussion with the Dominions the building programmes with which the Empire is faced for the next few years in order to maintain the One-Power Standard, and invite them to consider how they can best co-operate in a task which, even with the substantial relief afforded by the Washington Agreement, involves an unduly heavy burden for Great Britain to bear alone. It is obvious that, in order to secure the necessary minimum of security with the equally necessary minimum of cost, there must not only be the most complete and whole-hearted mutual co-operation between the Governments and Services concerned in peace and war, but that the peace organisation must be such as to fit in with the most effective organisation for war.

6. Peace Organisation: The Principle of Dominion Navies.

The maintenance of the Naval Forces of the Empire in peace must depend lutimately on the sustained will of the peoples of the Empire as expressed by their Parliaments and through their responsible Governments. It is not merely approval, but the active and determined support of public opinion in every part of the Empire that is required if the Naval effort is to be adequate to our needs. With the growth of the Dominions in national status and sentiment, the only system of Naval co-operation which can command sufficient permanent good-will and support is one under which each Dominion possesses and controls its own Naval Forces. The Admiralty whole-heartedly endorses this principle, not only on political and constitutional grounds, but also because it will develop new centres of Naval strength, and new bases for the Navy of the Empire which are essential to the strategy of the future.

7. Organisation in War.

In war the Naval Forces of the Empire must be considered as a single collective Empire Fleet. From the strategical point of view, that Fleet may conveniently be regarded as falling into three categories. These three categories are closely interdependent, but they stand in a very definite order of relative importance.

First and foremost comes the Main Fleet. This must be capable of performing its function of destroying or containing the Main Fleet of the enemy. On it rests the fate of the whole Empire.

Secondly, there are the Detached Forces which, backed by the power of the Main Fleet, exercise control of the sea communications in areas distant from the main theatre of operations.

C 62969

Thirdly, there are the Local Defence Forces which are necessary in order to free the Main Fleet and the Detached Forces for their proper work on the High Seas. The effort expended upon these Local Defence Forces should only be the minimum necessary to resist such pressure as the enemy may reasonably be expected to exercise in any particular area in view of the general position on the High Seas. It should never be allowed to limit or starve the preparations for the Sea-going Fleet.

8. Progressive Development of Dominion Navies.

The Naval Forces of the Dominions can, as they develop, take their part progressively in each of these categories. In the course of their development they will naturally pass through certain distinct but successive phases.

Phase 1.—In the First Phase provision should be made and responsibility assumed for Local Defence Services. At the same time preparations should be made for the next phase by beginning the training of personnel for a sea-going force. Canada and South Africa are in the First Phase.

Phase 2.—In the Second Phase the first definite steps are taken in the creation of a force for work on the High Seas, as opposed to a local defence force. This phase involves the obtaining of one or more seagoing ships, and in the first instance it may be necessary, for financial and other reasons, to obtain both the ships themselves and a portion, at any rate, of the personnel from the Royal Navy. Throughout this phase the necessary training, repair and fuelling facilities should gradually be built up in preparation for the next phase. This Second Phase has been reached by New Zealand.

Phase 3.—The Third Phase is reached when a Dominion is in a position to provide and man a seagoing squadron of its own, and to take over the full control in peace of the station in which its shores are included. That station will be the normal home station of its Squadron, but interchange and co-operation with British Units on other stations should be arranged. Australia is the only Dominion which is now in the Third Phase.

Phase 4.—In the Fourth and final Phase the Dominions should be capable, in addition to the Squadrons for service on their own home stations, to provide, whether in the shape of additional cruiser squadrons or of capital ship units, a substantial part of the general scheme of naval defence and, more particularly, of the Main Fleet.

Throughout the process of development certain general considerations should be kept in view. The fostering of a Mercantile Marine, and with it of a seafaring population and of a national sea sentiment, constitutes an essential foundation for the building up of a Dominion Navy. A small local Navy, with no scope for ambition and no variety of scene, cannot, in the long run, secure the right type of officers or men, or maintain a high standard of efficiency. A good deal can be done to surmount these difficulties during the Second and Third Phases by a free interchange, both of individuals and of ships, with the Royal Navy. But the real solution lies, for the Dominions which can afford it, in reaching the Fourth Phase as soon as possible and being able to provide in their own ships a regular rotation of home and foreign service, as well as regular opportunities for taking part in the Fleet Exercises of the Royal Navy, and a more extended and varied responsibility for their own senior officers. In any case, whatever the stage of development to which the Government of each Dominion considers its naval efforts can attain in the near future, it will be the endeavour of the Admiralty, by whole-hearted co-operation and assistance, to contribute to the success of those efforts.

Admiralty, S.W. 1, June 11, 1923.

---

74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62970

APPENDIX I.

AUSTRALIA.

Chart showing Values and Tonnage of Principal Commodities exchanged between Australia and other Countries.

THE accompanying chart* has been prepared in order to show the importance of Oversea communications, their protection and maintenance to Australia.

Australia, while dependent upon certain commodities which are produced abroad, is in her turn under the necessity of exporting the commodities which she produces to pay for her imports.

This chart shows in graphic form by black lines for receipts and green lines for exports, the various countries which send goods to and receive goods from Australia. The small circles enclose units of value. The rectangles at the end of the lines show the various commodities in units of weight. The year taken is that ending the 30th June, 1921.

It is realised that in selecting the statistics for any one year certain abnormalities are bound to occur in these figures, but the general trend of foreign trade will be sufficiently indicated.

The accompanying table from which the chart was prepared shows a more detailed list of exports and imports by weight than could be conveniently included in the chart. It will be seen that in the case of certain manufactures, e.g., textiles, machinery, &c., it has been found impracticable to show a unit of weight as no such figures are published in the trade returns. Timber has also presented the same difficulty. In these cases the commodity has been shown without any unit, as value would not form a true standard of comparison.

In some cases the total value of the trade with a country may be considerable while there are no particular items which justify inclusion. In these cases the value of the total trade only has been shown as mention of the items would not afford a true perspective.

---

* NOTE.—In some instances the figures shown on the chart require correction, and in any case they should not be used without being checked by the figures given in the tables.

C 62971

AUSTRALIA: IMPORTS. YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1921.

Commodity.	Country whence Imported.	Tons Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Bananas	Fiji	4,000
Maize	South Africa	1,000
Molasses	Fiji	9,000
Oats	Argentine	1,000
	Brazil	1,000
Rice	India	8,000
	Hong Kong	5,000
Sugar	Dutch East Indies	79,000
	Cuba	26,000
	Peru	6,000
	Fiji	5,000
Tea	Ceylon	6,000
	India	3,000
	Dutch East Indies	5,000
Raw materials—
Coal	United Kingdom	9,000
	New Zealand	6,000
Copra	New Guinea	21,000
	Solomon Islands	8,000
	Papua	7,000
Flax and hemp	New Zealand	6,000
	Philippines	2,000
Guano	Pacific Islands	56,000
Gums and resins	United States of America	4,000
Linseed	India	12,000
Manganese	New Caledonia	2,000
Nitrate of soda	Chile	3,000
	Japan	2,000
Oakum	New Zealand	2,000
Petroleum	United States of America	125,000
	Dutch East Indies	85,000
	Straits Settlements	33,000
Phosphates	Pacific Islands	237,000
Salt	United Kingdom	3,000
Soda, carbonate and bi-carbonate	United Kingdom	33,000
Sulphur	United States of America	70,000
Timber	Canada	..
	United States of America	..
	Norway	..
	Sweden	..
	New Zealand	..
Manufactured articles—
Cement	Japan	9,000
	United Kingdom	6,000
	Denmark	4,000
	Sweden	4,000
Iron and steel	United Kingdom	172,000*
	United States of America	87,000*
	Belgium	12,000*
Jute bags	India	..
Metal manufactures	United Kingdom	..
	United States of America	..
Paper, printing and wrapping	Canada	33,000
	Sweden	26,000
	Norway	16,000
	United States of America	6,000
	United Kingdom	15,000
Textiles, hardware, leather goods	United Kingdom	..

* These figures represent all iron and steel and manufactures thereof as enumerated by weight in the Australian returns. In addition, there are items shown by value only which would probably increase the tonnage figures by 25 per cent. Tinned plates are included with the iron and steel figure.

74
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
66
67
68
69

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62972

AUSTRALIA: EXPORTS. YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1921.

Commodity.	Country to which Exported.	Tons Weight.
Barley	United Kingdom	40,000
	Belgium	18,000
	France	7,000
Butter	United Kingdom	38,000
	Dutch East Indies	1,000
Cheese	United Kingdom	4,000
Flour	United Kingdom	73,000
	Egypt	55,000
	South Africa	37,000
	Dutch East Indies	14,000
	Straits Settlements	7,000
	Mauritius	3,000
Fruits	United Kingdom	25,000
Oats	United Kingdom	8,000
	Dutch East Indies	3,000
Meat, preserved and refrigerated	United Kingdom	97,000
	Egypt	5,000
Preserved milk	Belgium	4,000
Wheat	United Kingdom	1,037,000
	Egypt	281,000
	France	239,000
	Belgium	154,000
	Germany	67,000
	Italy	59,000
	Holland	59,000
	South Africa	31,000
	New Zealand	16,000
Bark	New Zealand	3,000
Coal and coke	New Zealand	740,000
	Dutch East Indies	412,000
	Chile	191,000
	Straits Settlements	173,000
	Philippines	110,000
	Egypt	104,000
	New Caledonia	72,000
	India	71,000
	Sweden	94,000
	Hawaiian Islands	42,000
	Fiji	41,000
	United States of America	30,000
	Norway	27,000
	Ceylon	21,000
	Peru	16,000
	Hong Kong	12,000
	China	11,000
Copper	United Kingdom	19,000
Copra (not Australian)	Denmark	7,000
	United Kingdom	5,000
	United States of America	10,000
	Holland	6,000
Fertilisers	New Zealand	37,000
	Dutch East Indies	3,000
Iron, pig	New Zealand	8,000
Lead, pig	United Kingdom	17,000
Oil-cake	United Kingdom	5,000
Salt	New Zealand	11,000
Sandal wood	Hong Kong	7,000
Tallow	United Kingdom	13,000
	Japan	7,000
Wool	United Kingdom	145,000
	France	15,000
	Belgium	16,000
	Italy	7,000
	Japan	6,000
	Germany	4,000
	United States of America	18,000
Zinc concentrates	Belgium	27,000
	United Kingdom	15,000

C 62973

APPENDIX II.

NEW ZEALAND.

Chart showing Values and Tonnage of Principal Commodities exchanged between New Zealand and other Countries.

THE accompanying chart* has been prepared in order to show the importance of Oversea communications, their protection and maintenance to New Zealand.

New Zealand, while dependent upon certain commodities which are produced abroad, is in her turn under the necessity of exporting the commodities which she produces to pay for her imports.

This chart shows in graphic form, by black lines for receipts and green lines for exports, the various countries which send goods to and receive goods from New Zealand. The small circles enclose units of value. The rectangles at the end of the lines show the various commodities in units of weight. The year taken is that ending the 31st December, 1921.

It is realised that in selecting the statistics for any one year certain abnormalities are bound to occur in these figures, but the general trend of foreign trade will be sufficiently indicated.

The accompanying table, from which the chart was prepared, shows a more detailed list of exports and imports by weight than could be conveniently included in the chart. It will be seen that in the case of certain manufactures, e.g., textiles, machinery, &c., it has been found impracticable to show a unit of weight, as no such figures are published in the trade returns. Timber has also presented the same difficulty. In these cases the commodity has been shown without any unit, as value would not form a true standard of comparison.

In some cases the total value of the trade with a country may be considerable while there are no particular items which justify inclusion. In these cases the value of the total trade only has been shown, as mention of the items would not afford a true perspective.

* NOTE.—In some instances the figures shown on the chart require correction, and in any case they should not be used without being checked by the figures given in the tables.

NEW ZEALAND: IMPORTS, YEAR 1921.

Commodity.	Country whence imported.	Tons Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Maize	Australia	2,000
Oats	Australia	1,000
Onions	Australia	3,000
Rice	Australia	1,000
	China	1,000
Sugar	Fiji	56,000
	Australia	3,000
	Java	4,000
Tea	Ceylon	2,000
Wheat	Australia	8,000
Raw materials—
Coal and coke	Australia	630,000
	United States of America	65,000
	Canada	3,000
	United Kingdom	84,000
	Japan	43,000
Fertilisers	United States of America	2,000
	Australia	11,000
	Belgium	11,000
	India	2,000
	Pacific Islands	49,000
	Japan	3,000

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62974

Commodity.	Country whence Imported.	Tons Weight.
Raw materials (continued)—
Linseed oil	United Kingdom	1,000
Mineral oil	United States of America	79,000
	Sumatra	6,000
	Australia	1,000
Paraffin wax	Burma	1,000
Salt	United Kingdom	12,000
	Australia	6,000
Sulphur	United States of America	4,000
Tanning materials (bark)	Australia	2,000
Timber	Australia	..
Manufactures—
Iron and steel	United Kingdom	50,000*
	United States of America	15,000
Machinery	United Kingdom	..
	United States of America	..
Printing paper	Canada	11,000
Textiles	United Kingdom	..

* These figures represent all iron and steel and manufactures thereof as enumerated by weight in the New Zealand returns. In addition there are items shown by value only which would probably increase the tonnage figures by 5 per cent.

NEW ZEALAND EXPORTS. YEAR 1921.

Commodity.	Country to which Exported.	Tons Weight.
Butter	United Kingdom	44,000
Cheese	United Kingdom	68,000
Frozen meat	United Kingdom	211,000
Dried milk	United Kingdom	7,000
Oats	United Kingdom	7,000
Peas	United Kingdom	4,000
Potatoes	Fiji	1,000
Coal	United Kingdom	29.000
	Australia	17,000
	Fiji	3,000
Phormium, tenax and tow	Australia	7.000
	United Kingdom	3,000
Sheep and rabbit	United Kingdom	5,000
	United States of America	6,000
Linseed	Australia	3,000
Timber	Australia	..
Wool	United Kingdom	64.000
	United States of America	3,000

C 62975

APPENDIX III.

CANADA.

CHART SHOWING VALUES AND TONNAGE OF PRINCIPAL COMMODITIES EXCHANGED BETWEEN CANADA AND OTHER COUNTRIES.

THE accompanying Chart* has been prepared in order to show the importance of Oversea communications, their protection and maintenance, to Canada.

Canada, while dependent upon certain commodities which are produced abroad, is in her turn under the necessity of exporting the commodities which she produces to pay for her imports.

This chart shows in graphic form, by black lines for receipts and green lines for exports, the various countries which send goods to, and receive goods from, Canada. The small circles enclose units of value. The rectangles at the end of the lines show the various commodities in units of weight. The year taken is that ending the 31st March, 1921.

It is realised that in selecting the statistics for any one year certain abnormalities are bound to occur in these figures, but the general trend of Foreign trade will be sufficiently indicated.

The accompanying table from which the chart was prepared shows a more detailed list of exports and imports by weight than could be conveniently included in the chart. It will be seen that in the case of certain manufactures, e.g., textiles, machinery, &c., it has been found impracticable to show a unit of weight as no such figures are published in the Trade returns. Timber has also presented the same difficulty. In these cases the commodity has been shown without any unit, as value would not form a true standard of comparison.

In some cases, the total value of the trade with a country may be considerable, while there are no particular items which justify inclusion. In these cases, the value of the total trade only has been shown as mention of the items would not afford a true perspective.

CANADA: IMPORTS (YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1921.)

Commodity.	Country whence Imported.	Tons of 2,000 lb. Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Butter	United States of America	1,000
Coffee	Brazil	4,000
Corn (Indian)	United States of America	276,000
Fish, excluding canned	Alaska	1,000
	United States of America	2,000
	Newfoundland	9,000
Lard	United States of America	6,000
Mutton	New Zealand	2,000
	United States of America	1,000
Pork	" " "	10,000 / 9,000
Potatoes	" " "	28,000
Rice	British Guiana	4,000
	Hong Kong	10,000
	United States of America	9,000
Sugar	Cuba	156,000
	United States of America	84,000
	British Guiana	32,000
	San Domingo	32,000
	Jamaica	13,000
	Barbadoes	10,000
	Peru	11,000

* NOTE.—In some instances the figures shown on the chart require correction, and in any case they should not be used without being checked by the figures given in the tables.

74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62976

Commodity.	Country whence Imported.	Tons of 2,000 lb. Weight.
Foodstuffs—(continued).
Tea	United Kingdom	6,000
	India	4,000
Tobacco	United States of America	10,000
Raw Materials—
Alumina	United States of America	59,000
Animal fat	„ „ „	11,000
Asphalt	„ „ „	30,000
Bones and bone dust	„ „ „	4,000
Chloride of lime	„ „ „	19,000
Coal	„ „ „	20,245,000
Coke	„ „ „	549,000
Copper	„ „ „	22,000
Cotton	„ „ „	49,000
Fibre (manila)	„ „ „	4,000
„ (sisal)	„ „ „	17,000
Fire clay	„ „ „	49,000
Gravel and sand	„ „ „	210,000
Resin	„ „ „	13,000
Hides and skins	New Zealand	2,000
	Argentine	2,000
	United States of America	6,000
	Uruguay	1,000
Iron ore	Newfoundland	622,000
	Norway	11,000
	Sweden	11,000
	United States of America	1,305,000
Iron, scrap	„ „ „	139,000
Iron, pig	„ „ „	56,000
Lead, pig and bars	United Kingdom	8,000
	United States of America	1,000
Nitrate of Soda	„ „ „	25,000
	Chile	1,500
Oilcake	United States of America	9,000
Petrol and products	Peru	128,000*
	United States of America	1,753,000*
Phosphate rock	„ „ „	11,000
Potash	Germany	5,000
Rags	United Kingdom	6,000
	United States of America	8,000
Rubber	United Kingdom	2,000
	Straits Settlements	5,000
	United States of America	4,000
Salt	United Kingdom	23,000 / 12,000
	British West Indies	22,000
	Spain	9,000
	United States of America	15,000 / 51,000
Sand (silica)	„ „ „	102,000
Soda (excluding Nitrate of Soda)	„ „ „	64,000
Stone (refuse)	„ „ „	445,000
	Newfoundland	32,000
Sulphur	United States of America	119,000
Vegetable oils	„ „ „	14,000
Waste paper	„ „ „	36,000
Wood pulp	„ „ „	25,000
Wool	United Kingdom	1,000
	United States of America	3,000

* These figures represent tonnage of iron and steel and manufactures thereof enumerated by weight in the Canadian returns. The estimated tonnage of items shown by value only would probably add 30 per cent. to the above figures.

C 62977

Commodity.	Country whence Imported.	Tons of 2,000 lb. Weight.
Manufactured Articles—
Iron and steel	United States of America	850,000*
	United Kingdom	25,000*
Luxury imports, e.g., wines, silks, &c.	France.
Textiles	United States of America.
	United Kingdom.

CANADA: EXPORTS (YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1921).

Commodity.	Country to which Exported.	Tons of 2,000 lb. Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Bacon	United Kingdom	49,000
Barley	„ „	198,000
Cheese	„ „	61,000
Condensed milk	„ „	11,000
	United States of America	6,000
Fruit—apples	United Kingdom	102,000
Meat—beef and mutton	United States of America	20,000
Oatmeal	United Kingdom	18,000
Oats	„ „	120,000
Potatoes	United States of America	126,000
	Cuba	17,000
Rye	United Kingdom	29,000
	Norway	14,000
	United States of America	19,000
Sugar	„ „ „	25,000
Wheat	United Kingdom	879,000
	Belgium	422,000
	France	152,000
	Germany	55,000
	Greece	140,000
	Italy	631,000
	Netherlands	209,000
	Spain	44,000
	United States of America	1,270,000
Wheat Flour	United Kingdom	270,000
	United States of America	116,000
Raw Materials—
Aluminium	United Kingdom	2,000
	United States of America	5,000
Asbestos	United Kingdom	12,000
	Belgium	10,000
	United States of America	114,000
	Germany	5,000
Calcium carbide	United States of America	46,000
Coal	United Kingdom	81,000
	South Africa	23,000
	British Guiana	19,000
	Gibraltar	26,000
	Newfoundland	387,000
	Australia	23,000
	New Zealand	20,000
	Argentine	13,000
	China	20,000
	France	168,000
	French Africa	32,000
	Japan	14,000

* These figures represent tonnage of iron and steel and manufactures thereof enumerated by weight in the Canadian returns. The estimated tonnage of items shown by value only would probably add 30 per cent. to the above figures.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62978

Commodity.	Country to which Exported.	Tons of 2,000 lb. Weight.
Raw materials—(continued).
Coal—(continued)	Netherlands	227,000
	Norway....	36,000
	Sweden....	15,000
	United States of America....	1,031,000
	Alaska	37,000
Coke	United States of America....	37,000
Copper	United Kingdom....	4,000
	United States of America....	14,000 } 17,000 }
Cyanide	,, ,, ,, ...	44,000
Feldspar	,, ,, ,, ...	41,000
Hay....	,, ,, ,, ...	162,000
Hides and skins	,, ,, ,, ...	13,000
Iron ore	,, ,, ,, ...	17,000
Iron, pig	,, ,, ,, ...	51,000
Lime	,, ,, ,, ...	24,000
Timber	United Kingdom....	—
	United States of America....	—
Sand, gravel	,, ,, ,, ...	1,503,000
Sulphur	,, ,, ,, ...	119,000
Wood pulp	,, ,, ,, ...	535,000
	United Kingdom....	113,000
	France	34,000
	Japan	18,000
Wool....	United States of America....	3,000
Manufactured Articles—
Abrasives (carborundum, &c.)	United States of America....	27,000
Cement	,, ,, ,, ...	93,000
Iron and steel bars and rods	United Kingdom....	39,000
Iron and steel rails	United States of America....	40,000
Newspaper	Australia	37,000
	United States of America....	668,000

C 62979

APPENDIX IV.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

CHART SHOWING VALUES AND TONNAGE OF PRINCIPAL COMMODITIES EXCHANGED BETWEEN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA AND OTHER COUNTRIES.

THE accompanying Chart* has been prepared in order to show the importance of Oversea communications, their protection and maintenance, to the Union of South Africa.

The Union of South Africa, while dependent upon certain commodities which are produced abroad, is in her turn under the necessity of exporting the commodities which she produces to pay for her imports.

This chart shows in graphic form, by black lines for receipts and green lines for exports, the various countries which send goods to, and receive goods from, the Union of South Africa. The small circles enclose units of value. The rectangles at the end of the lines show the various commodities in units of weight. The year taken is that ending the 31st December, 1921.

It is realised that in selecting the statistics for any one year certain abnormalities are bound to occur in these figures, but the general trend of Foreign trade will be sufficiently indicated.

The accompanying table from which the chart was prepared shows a more detailed list of exports and imports by weight than could be conveniently included in the chart. It will be seen that in the case of certain manufactures, e.g., textiles, machinery, &c., it has been found impracticable to show a unit of weight as no such figures are published in the Trade returns. Timber has also presented the same difficulty. In these cases the commodity has been shown without any unit, as value would not form a true standard of comparison.

In some cases, the total value of the trade with a country may be considerable, while there are no particular items which justify inclusion. In these cases, the value of the total trade only has been shown as mention of the items would not afford a true perspective.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA: IMPORTS ON PRIVATE ACCOUNT (YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1921).

Commodity.	Country of Origin.	Tons Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Coffee	Brazil	12,000
Flour	Australia	19,000
Rice....	China	14,000
	India	8,000
	Cochin China	5,000
Sugar	Portuguese East Africa	11,000
Wheat	Australia	19,000
Raw Materials—
Nitrate of Soda	Chile	21,000
Petroleum	United States of America....	69,000
	Dutch East Indies	26,000
	Persia	5,000
Phosphates	Egypt	6,000
	South Sea Islands	5,000
Sulphur	United States of America....	8,000
Superphosphates	Holland....	8,000
Timber	Sweden	—
	Finland....	—

* NOTE.—In some instances the figures shown on the chart require correction, and in any case they should not be used without being checked by the figures given in the tables.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62980

Commodity.	Country of Origin.	Tons Weight.
Manufactured Articles—
Cement	Demark	6,000
	Germany	6,000
Cotton Goods	United Kingdom	—
Iron and Steel*	,, ,,	47,000
	United States of America	10,000
Leather manufactures	United Kingdom	—
Machinery	,, ,,	—

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA: EXPORTS (YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1921).

Commodity.	Country of Destination.	Tons Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Maize meal	United Kingdom	92,000
Maize	,, ,,	235,000
	Germany	53,000
	Holland	17,000
	Belgium	15,000
	Portuguese East Africa	4,000
Sugar	United Kingdom	56,000
	India	2,000
Raw Materials—
Asbestos	United Kingdom	2,000
	Australia	1,000
Coal, cargo	India	759,000
	Ceylon	238,000
	Aden	134,000
	Mauritius	40,000
	Egypt	205,000
	Portuguese East Africa	36,000
	Straits Settlements	17,000
	Madagascar	19,000
	Portuguese India	29,000
	Argentine	16,000
	Turkey	8,000
Diamonds	United Kingdom
Feathers	,, ,,
Gold	,, ,,
Hair, Angora	,, ,,	7,000
Hides and skins	,, ,,	11,000
	Germany	2,000
	France	5,000
	United States of America	2,000
Bark (extract)	United Kingdom	3,000
Bark (wattle)	,, ,,	13,000
	Germany	34,000
	Japan	9,000
	United States of America	6,000
Wool	United Kingdom	45,000
	Germany	22,000
	Belgium	12,000
	France	9,000
	United States of America	7,000
	Japan	3,000

* These figures represent all iron and steel and manufactures thereof as enumerated by weight in the South African returns. In addition, there are items shown by value only which would probably increase the tonnage figures by 60 per cent.

C 62981

APPENDIX V.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

TABLES SHOWING VALUES AND TONNAGE OF PRINCIPAL ARTICLES OF EXPORT AND IMPORT BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND OTHER COUNTRIES.

THE accompanying tables have been prepared in order to show the importance of Oversea communications, their protection and maintenance, to Newfoundland.

Newfoundland, while dependent upon certain commodities which are produced abroad, is, in her turn, under the necessity of exporting the commodities which she produces to pay for her imports.

Table I shows the imports and exports by countries in values for the year ending the 30th June, 1921.

Table II shows the more bulky and valuable imports and exports by weight (where this is known) for the same year. In the case of textiles, timber and wheat, the total weights could not be ascertained, as they are not published in the trade returns.

TABLE I.—VALUES OF IMPORTS AND EXPORTS BY COUNTRIES INTO AND FROM NEWFOUNDLAND FOR THE YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1921.

	Imports (1,000 Dollars).	Exports (1,000 Dollars).
Canada	14,841	1,976
United States	9,556	1,854
United Kingdom	3,230	6,275
West Indies	794	1,131
Ceylon	149	—
Portugal	105	3,781
Spain	77	2,956
Brazil	2	2,263
Greece	22	814
Italy	3	1,047

TABLE II.—NEWFOUNDLAND: IMPORTS, 1920–21.

Commodity.	Country whence imported.	Tons weight.
Coal	Canada	297,000
	United States of America	18,000
	United Kingdom	8,000
Cotton Textiles	United States of America	—
	United Kingdom	—
Flour	Canada	26,000
Hay	,,	10,000
Meat	,,	Not known
Oats	,,	17,000
Oilcake	Canada	2,000
Petroleum	,,	4,000
	United States of America	3,000
Potatoes	Canada	3,000
Salt	Portugal	15,000
	Spain	13,000
	West Indies	3,000
	Germany	2,000
	United Kingdom	2,000
Sugar	Canada	1,000
Sulphur	United States of America	3,000
Timber	Canada	—
	United States of America	—

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62982

NEWFOUNDLAND: EXPORTS, 1920–21.

Commodity.	Country to which Exported.	Tons weight.
Codfish	Portugal	18,000
	Spain	14,000
	Brazil	9,000
	West Indies	5,000
	Italy	5,000
	Greece	4,000
	United Kingdom	3,000
	Canada	3,000
	United States of America	2,000
	French Indies	1,000
Cod oil	United States of America	2,000
Iron ore	Canada	460,000
	United Kingdom	27,000
	Holland	26,000
Limestone	Canada	93,000
Paper	United Kingdom	61,000
Pulp	" "	24,000
	United States of America	2,000
Timber	United Kingdom	—
	United States of America	—

C 62983

APPENDIX VI.

INDIA.

CHART SHOWING VALUES AND TONNAGE OF PRINCIPAL COMMODITIES EXCHANGED BETWEEN INDIA AND OTHER COUNTRIES.

THE accompanying Chart* has been prepared in order to show the importance of Oversea communications, their protection and maintenance, to India.

India, while dependent upon certain commodities which are produced abroad, is in her turn under the necessity of exporting the commodities which she produces to pay for her imports.

This chart shows in graphic form, by black lines for receipts and green lines for exports, the various countries which send goods to, and receive goods from, India. The small circles enclose units of value. The rectangles at the end of the lines show the various commodities in units of weight. The year taken is that ending the 31st March, 1921.

It is realised that in selecting the statistics for any one year certain abnormalities are bound to occur in these figures, but the general trend of Foreign trade will be sufficiently indicated.

The accompanying table from which the chart was prepared shows a more detailed list of exports and imports by weight than could be conveniently included in the chart. It will be seen that in the case of certain manufactures, e.g., textiles, machinery, &c., it has been found impracticable to show a unit of weight as no such figures are published in the Trade returns. Timber has also presented the same difficulty. In these cases the commodity has been shown without any unit, as value would not form a true standard of comparison.

In some cases, the total value of the trade with a country may be considerable, while there are no particular items which justify inclusion. In these cases, the value of the total trade only has been shown as mention of the items would not afford a true perspective.

INDIA: IMPORTS ON PRIVATE ACCOUNT (YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1921).

Commodity.	Country whence Consigned.	Tons Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Fruit and vegetables (excluding fresh)	Persian Gulf	31,000
	Muscat	12,000
	Persia	7,000
Sugar and molasses	Mauritius	11,000
	Java	306,000
	Straits Settlements	9,000
	Hong Kong	6,000
	Egypt	4,000
Raw Materials—
Aluminium	United Kingdom	2,000
	" "	4,000
Asphalt	Straits Settlements	40,000
Betel nuts	Ceylon	6,000
	United Kingdom	22,000
China clay	Australia	33,000
Coal and coke	United Kingdom	10,000
	Natal	7,000
	Straits Settlements	3,000
	Japan	10,000
	Portuguese East Africa	18,000

* NOTE.—In some instances the figures shown on the chart require correction, and in any case they should not be used without being checked by the figures given in the tables.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62984

Commodity.	Country whence Consigned.	Tons Weight.
Raw materials—(continued).
Copper	United Kingdom	7,000
	United States of America	6,000
Copra	Ceylon	7,000
Cotton	United Kingdom	5,000
	Kenya	3,000
Lead	United Kingdom	3,000
Oil, mineral	Straits Settlements	40,000
	United Kingdom	7,000
	Borneo (British)	4,000
	Persia	112,000
	Borneo (Dutch)	125,000
	United States of America	186,000
Pitch and tar	United Kingdom	7,000
Salt	,, ,,	93,000
	Aden, &c.	183,000
	Egypt	117,000
	Germany	101,000
	Spain	68,000
	Italian East Africa	54,000
Soda	United Kingdom	42,000
	Kenya	2,000
Sulphur	Japan	4,000
	Italy	3,000
	United States of America	1,000
	United Kingdom	1,000
Timber	Siam	—
	Straits Settlements	—
	United States of America	—
Tin	Straits Settlements	2,000
Woodpulp	Norway	3,000
	Sweden	2,000
Zinc	United Kingdom	3,000
Manufactured Articles—
Brass, bronze and manufactures	United Kingdom	23,000
	Japan	2,000
Cement	United Kingdom	123,000
Iron and steel	,, ,,	574,000
	United States of America	113,000
	Belgium	69,000
	Germany	15,000
Machinery	United Kingdom	—
	United States of America	—
Paint	United Kingdom	15,000
Soap	,, ,,	15,000
Textiles	,, ,,	—
	Japan	—

INDIA: EXPORTS ON PRIVATE ACCOUNT (YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1921).

Commodity.	Country of Final Destination.	Tons Weight.
Foodstuffs—
Barley	Red Sea	4,000
Beans, pulse, &c.	United Kingdom	7,000
	Germany	9,000
	Belgium	9,000
	Japan	3,000
	Ceylon	9,000
	Straits Settlements	8,000
Coffee	United Kingdom	5,000
	France	2,000

C 62985

Commodity.	Country of Final Destination.	Tons Weight.
Foodstuffs—(continued).
Fish	Ceylon	10,000
Rice	United Kingdom	170,000
	Straits Settlements	183,000
	Ceylon	276,000
	Bahrein	29,000
	Federal Malay States	42,000
	Hong Kong	24,000
	Egypt	16,000
	Mauritius	36,000
	Australia	18,000
	Germany	51,000
	Red Sea	22,000
	Java	27,000
	Japan	12,000
	Arabia	36,000
	Belgium	11,000
	Cape Colony	7,000
Rice meal	United Kingdom	6,000
Sugar	,, ,,	12,000
	Ceylon	6,000
	United States of America	2,000
Tea	United Kingdom	111,000
	Canada	3,000
	Australia	3,000
Vegetables and fruit	Ceylon	16,000
	Straits Settlements	13,000
Wheat and wheatflour	United Kingdom	95,000
	Egypt	36,000
	Germany	27,000
	Belgium	22,000
	France	20,000
	Holland	15,000
	Italy	13,000
	Ceylon	15,000
	Aden	6,000
	Straits Settlements	6,000
	Mauritius	6,000
	Red Sea	8,000
	Persian Gulf	7,000
Raw material—
Bran	Straits Settlements	101,000
	United Kingdom	59,000
	Hong Kong	7,000
Chrome iron ore	United Kingdom	20,000
	Belgium	7,000
	United States of America	5,000
Coal	Ceylon	674,000
	Straits Settlements	194,000
	Aden	76,000
	Egypt	74,000
	Sumatra	53,000
	Java	15,000
	Philippines	14,000
	Algeria	16,000
	Persian Gulf	11,000
	France	6,000
Cotton	United Kingdom	17,000
	Germany	36,000
	Belgium	43,000
	Italy	38,000
	Spain	14,000

74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62986

Commodity.	Country of Final Destination.	Tons Weight.
Raw material—(continued).
Cotton—(continued)	Japan	168,000
	China	32,000
Iron, pig	Japan	47,000
Fertilisers	Ceylon	21,000
	United Kingdom....	16,000
	Japan	12,000
	United States of America....	14,000
	Belgium	28,000
	France	8,000
Hemp	United Kingdom....	10,000
	Belgium	6,000
Hides and skins	United Kingdom....	6,000
	United States of America....	10,000
	Italy	3,000
Jute....	United Kingdom....	136,000
	Germany	72,000
	France	50,000
	United States of America....	110,000
	Belgium	26,000
	Spain	24,000
	Italy	23,000
	Brazil	9,000
	Holland....	8,000
	Japan	7,000
Lac	United Kingdom....	3,000
	United States of America....	11,000
Lead*	United Kingdom....	8,000
	Ceylon	5,000
	Hong Kong	3,000
	Japan	6,000
Manganese ore	United Kingdom....	331,000
	Belgium	170,000
	France	81,000
	United States of America....	170,000
	Italy	14,000
	Holland....	8,000
Oil-cake	United Kingdom....	50,000
	Ceylon	28,000
	Japan	12,000
Oil-seeds	United Kingdom....	286,000
	Australia	14,000
	Belgium	163,000
	Germany	27,000
	France	71,000
	Italy	32,000
Paraffin wax	United Kingdom....	5,000
	Italy	5,000
	Japan	5,000
Petroleum	United Kingdom....	15,000
	France	50,000
Rubber	United Kingdom....	5,000
Saltpetre	„ „	5,000
	Mauritius	5,000
	United States of America....	3,000
Tanning and dyeing materials	United Kingdom....	19,000
	United States of America....	15,000
Teak	United Kingdom....	—
Vegetable oils	„ „	3,000
	Mauritius	1,000
	Belgium	1,000
Wolfram ore	United Kingdom....	2,000
Wool	„ „	10,000
Zinc....	Belgium	60,000

C 62987

Commodity.	Country of Final Destination.	Tons Weight.
Manufactured Articles—
Coir	United Kingdom....	12,000
	United States of America....	4,000
	Holland....	4,000
	Belgium	3,000
Jute manufactures	United Kingdom....	—
	United States of America....	—
	France	—
	Australia	—
	Egypt	—
	Java	—
	Argentine	—
	Chile	—
	Cuba	—

74 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C62988

THE WORLD

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS 1920-21.

REFERENCE.

IMPORTS are shown in black.
EXPORTS " " " green

The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.

(84) Imports } Values in Millions of
(67) Exports } Pounds Sterling.

(–) (–) } Where values fall below £100,000

No units are shown for Machinery, Metal manufacturers, Timber, Leather goods and Textiles, weights are not published, and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

H.M.S.O. Press, Crickhowell

C62988

THE WORLD

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS 1920-21.

REFERENCE.

IMPORTS are shown in black.
EXPORTS " " " green

The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.

(84) Imports } Values in Millions of
(67) Exports } Pounds Sterling.

(–) } Where values fall below £100,000
(–) }

No units are shown for Machinery, Metal manufacturers, Timber, Leather goods and Textiles, weights are not published, and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

H.M.S.O. Press, Cricklewood

THE WORLD

G 62989

MEAT 211
WOOL 64
CHEESE 60
BUTTER 44

387 GREAT BRITAIN

— BELGIUM

4 21·4

27

4

— JAPAN

1 PACIFIC ISLANDS 2

— INDIA

6

TIMBER 2 AUSTRALIA 6·5

COAL 43 SUGAR 56 FERTILISERS 49

FERTILISERS 11
CORN 24 JUTE 12
COAL 630 IRON 20 FERTILISERS 11 WHEAT
COAL 84 IRON 45 SALT 11 TEXTILES MACHINERY

CANADA 1·7 NEWSPRINT 12

U.S.A. 7·7 PETROLEUM 79 COAL 65 MACHINERY

NEW ZEALAND

REFERENCE

IMPORTS are shown in black
EXPORTS „ „ „ green
The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.
(1·7) Imports } = Values in Millions of
(2) Exports } Pounds Sterling.
— } Where values fall below £100,000.
— }

No units are shown for Machinery, Timber & Textiles, weights are not published and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS 1921.

180° 170° West Longitude 160° 150° 140° 130° 120° 110° 100° 90° 80° 70° 60° 50° 40° 30° 20° West Longitude 10° Meridian of Greenwich 10° East Longitude 20° 30° 40° 50° 60° 70° 80° 90° 100° 110° 120° 130° 140° 150° 160° East Longitude 170° 180°

H.M.S.O. Photo. Oxd. Reprod.

CANADA

THE WORLD

G 62989

MEAT 211
WOOL 64
CHEESE 66
BUTTER 46

387 GREAT BRITAIN

— BELGIUM

4 21·4

4 27

— JAPAN

— INDIA

6 PACIFIC ISLANDS 2

6 SUGAR 56 FERTILISER 49

COAL 42

FERTILISERS 11

6 AUSTRALIA 6·5

TIMBER 2

CORN 24 JUTE 12

COAL 84 IRON 45 SALT 11 TEXTILES MACHINERY

COAL 630 IRON 20 FERTILISERS 11 TIMBER 84

CANADA 1·7 NEWSPRINT 12

U.S.A. 7·1 PETROLEUM 79 COAL 65 MACHINERY

NEW ZEALAND

REFERENCE

IMPORTS are shown in black
EXPORTS " " " green
The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.
(1·7) Imports } = Values in Millions of
(2) Exports } Pounds Sterling.
— } Where values fall below £100,000.
—

No units are shown for Machinery, Timber & Textiles, weights are not published and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS 1921.

CANADA

THE WORLD

62990

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS 1920-21.

CANADA

NORWAY 11
GERMANY 8
HOLLAND 20
GREAT BRITAIN 314
BELGIUM 40
FRANCE 27
SPAIN 5
ITALY 57
GREECE 20
GIBRALTAR —

U.S.A. 560

U.S.A. 856

NEWFOUNDLAND 3

W. INDIES 31

CUBA 15

PERU 4

BRITISH GUIANA 9

SOUTH AFRICA —

AUSTRALIA 18

NEW ZEALAND 4

CHINA 5

ALASKA —

REFERENCE

IMPORTS are shown in black.
EXPORTS " " " green.
The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.
(19) Imports } Values in Millions of Dollars.
(27) Exports }
(—) } Where values fall below 500,000 Dollars.
(—) }
No units are shown for Machinary, Timber & Textiles, weights are not published, and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

H.M.S.O. Press Co.

[10185] [10353] [10431]

ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

THE WORLD

c 62991

U.S.A. 22 / 86

CHILE (—) / 3

ARGENTINE (—) / (—)

COAL 16

NITRATES 21

GREAT BRITAIN 51 / (—)

BELGIUM 1 / 36

HOLLAND ·3 / (—)

GERMANY 24 / 6 / 13

IRON 26
TEXTILES
MACHINERY
LEATHER GOODS

PETROLEUM ·69
SULPHUR 8

WOOL 12
MAIZE 15

MAIZE 77

WOOL 22
MAIZE 53
BARK ·34

EGYPT ·3 / 4

SUGAR 11

COAL 205

COAL 36

PORTUGUESE E. AFRICA ·8 / (—)

ADEN (—) / (—)

COAL 134

COAL 40

COAL 34

MAURITIUS ·3 / (—)

MADAGASCAR (—) / (—)

PORTUGUESE INDIA (—) / (—)

INDIA 2 / (—)

CEYLON (—) / ·3

STRAIT SETTLEMENTS ·3 / ·8

CHINA (—) / (—)

DUTCH E. INDIES ·8 / (—)

AUSTRALIA 2 / (—)

RICE 8

RICE 32

PETROLEUM 26

WHEAT & FLOUR 38

COAL 28

COAL 759

COAL 1

COAL 238

COAL 17

SOUTH AFRICA

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS FOR 1921.

CANADA

REFERENCE

IMPORTS are shown in black.
EXPORTS " " " green.
The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.
(36) Imports } Values in Millions of
(·3) Exports } Pounds Sterling.
(—) } Where values fall below £500,000.
(—) }
No units are shown for Machinery, Textiles, Leather goods, Gold, and Diamonds, weights and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

180° 170° 160° 150° 140° 130° 120° 110° 100° 90° 80° 70° 60° 50° 40° 30° 20° West Longitude 10° Meridian of Greenwich 10° East Longitude 20° 30° 40° 50° 60° 70° 80° 90° 100° 110° 120° 130° 140° 150° 160° 170° 180°

80° 70° 60° 50° 40° 30° 20° 10° 0° 10° 20° 30° 40° 50° 60° 70° 80°

H.M.S.O. Press, Co.

54] [10185] [10353]

THE WORLD

c 62991

GREAT BRITAIN (51) (1.) BELGIUM (·3) HOLLAND (24) GERMANY

U.S.A. (22) (86)

WOOL 7

CHILE (—) (3)

ARGENTINE (—) (—)

COAL 16

NITRATES 21

PETROLEUM 69
SULPHUR 8

IRON 26
TEXTILES
MACHINERY
LEATHER GOODS

(36) (—) (6) (13)

EGYPT (1) (·3)

SUGAR 11

PORTUGUESE E. AFRICA (4) (8)

ADEN (—)

COAL 36

COAL 134

COAL 40

MAURITIUS (3)

MADAGASCAR (—)

COAL 34

RICE 8

RICE 32

PETROLEUM 26

WHEAT & FLOUR 38

PORTUGUESE INDIA (—)

INDIA (—) (2)

CEYLON (—)

STRAIT SETTLEMENTS (—) (·3)

CHINA (—)

DUTCH E. INDIES (·8)

AUSTRALIA (2) (—)

COAL 759

COAL 23

COAL 238

COAL 17

SOUTH AFRICA

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS FOR 1921.

REFERENCE

IMPORTS are shown in black.
EXPORTS " " " green.

The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.

(36) Imports } Values in Millions of Pounds Sterling.
(·3) Exports }

(—) } Where values fall below £500,000.
(—) }

No units are shown for Machinery, Textiles, Leather goods, Gold and Diamonds, weights and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

CANADA

54] [10185] [10355]

H.M.S.O. Press Co.

THE WORLD

c 62992

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS FOR 1920-21.

GREAT BRITAIN — 53 / 204
GERMANY — 8 / 5
BELGIUM — 13 / 5
FRANCE — 9 / 4
ITALY — 4 / 4
SPAIN — 3 / 3
U.S.A. — 35 / 35
PERSIA — 2 / 1
EGYPT — 3 / 1
INDIA
ARABIA — (–) / (–)
ADEN — 2 / (–)
ITALIAN E.AFRICA — (–) / (–)
PORTUGUESE E.AFRICA — 1 / (–)
SOUTH AFRICA — 1 / (–)
MAURITIUS — (–) / (–)
CEYLON — 1 / 11
CHINA — 3 / 8
JAPAN — 24 / 26
HONG KONG — 7 / (–)
SIAM — (–) / (–)
DUTCH E.INDIES — 5 / 17
PHILIPPINE IS. — 1 / 1
AUSTRALIA — 3 / 2
AUSTRALIA — 6 / (–)

CANADA

REFERENCE.

IMPORTS are shown in black
EXPORTS " " " green
The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.
(204) Imports } Values in Crores of Rupees.
(53) Exports }
(–) } Where values fall below 1,00,00,000 Rupees
(–) }
No units are shown for Machinery, Timber, Textiles, Railway materials & Jute bags, weights are not published, and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

H.M.S.O. Press Ca

any future building [illegible]

[9734] [10185] [10353] [10431]

THE WORLD

c 62992

GREAT BRITAIN
GERMANY
BELGIUM
FRANCE
ITALY
SPAIN
U.S.A.
EGYPT
PERSIA
INDIA ARABIA
ADEN
ITALIAN E.AFRICA
PORTUGUESE E.AFRICA
SOUTH AFRICA
MAURITIUS
CEYLON
CHINA
JAPAN
HONG KONG
SIAM
DUTCH EAST INDIES
AUSTRALIA
CANADA

PRINCIPAL EXPORTS & IMPORTS FOR 1920-21.

REFERENCE.

IMPORTS are shown in black
EXPORTS " " " green
The figures opposite commodities are 1000 Tons weight.
(204) Imports } Values in Crores of Rupees.
(53) Exports }
(–) } Where values fall below 100,00,000 Rupees
(–) }
No units are shown for Machinery, Timber, Textiles, Railway materials & Jute bags, weights are not published, and values afford no satisfactory means of comparison.

H.M.S.O. Press Ca.

[10134] [10185] [10353] [10431]

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

C 62993

Printed for the Committee of Imperial Defence. August 1923.

SECRET. Nº 74

E. 58.

(Also C.I.D. Paper No. 195–C.)

This Memorandum was approved by the Standing Defence Sub-Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence at their 33rd Meeting, held on June 19, 1923. [S.S./33rd Minutes (1).]

NOT FOR PUBLICATION.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

EMPIRE NAVAL POLICY AND CO-OPERATION.

AUSTRALIA.

1. Object.

TO summarise the Naval Situation (1923) and to give in outline Admiralty recommendations to Australia in pursuance of C.I.D. Paper No. 194–C.

2. The Naval Situation.

As a result of the Washington Conference and the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, the strategic situation has changed.

Except for a base in Hawaii, America does not possess, and by the terms of the Status Quo Agreement, cannot construct Naval Bases in the Pacific which would enable the American Fleet to be moved across that ocean.

America is therefore precluded from taking effective action in the Western Pacific.

Consequently the British Empire is left as the sole Power, apart from Japan, capable of operating in these waters. The Four-Power Pact between the United States of America, France, the British Empire and Japan cannot eliminate all possibility of war in that area.

The capital ship superiority of the British over the Japanese Fleet (Ratio 5 to 3) is off-set to a considerable extent by the great distance at which the fleet would have to operate from its main bases of supply and repair.

The Main Fleet, therefore, cannot be divided into detachments, but must be ready to move as a whole to any threatened area.

The need for mobility makes it necessary to press on with the preparations for a rapid concentration of our Main Fleet in the Far East, and the keystone of these preparations is the development of Singapore as a fuelling and repair base.

Even after the completion of the Singapore Fleet Base and the intermediate fuelling bases, and assuming the Suez Canal Route is available, the Main Fleet will take from one month to six weeks to reach the Far East.

The enemy's obvious and most natural objective during the interval would be Singapore, the seizure of which would deny to our Fleet the control of the Western Pacific and secure the enemy's lines of communication in the direction of Australia and New Zealand.

The main task of the Naval Forces of the Empire in the Western Pacific, operating in the face of superior enemy forces, would consequently be to delay and harass the despatch of an expedition against Singapore, or any operation, such as an attack upon Hong Kong, intended to lead up to such an expedition.

For this purpose two classes of vessel are suitable:—

(a.) Fast light cruisers of great endurance.
(b.) Large overseas submarines.

It is, therefore, recommended that Australia should include both these classes of vessel in any future building programme.

74 58 597 608 61 620 633 643 650 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62994

3. Composition of Sea-going Dominion Navies (in Peace).

Light Cruisers are the smallest sea-going ships which can play a part in protecting our ocean trade routes in war or threatening the enemy's sea communications, and which can provide the necessary sea-going training in peace. To obtain and maintain full efficiency a light cruiser squadron should consist of not less than four ships in full commission.

Submarines are particularly suitable for offensive action or scouting in the face of superior enemy forces, and for this reason would be invaluable before the arrival of the Main Fleet.

The true rôle of a submarine is not coast defence. Stationed for the defence of a port, it is unlikely that one or two could prevent a transitory raid or bombardment. If of the right type, however, they would be effective against any prolonged operation.

To obtain and maintain full efficiency a flotilla of submarines should consist of not less than six boats.

Destroyers are essentially a fleet weapon and are uneconomical for local defence or escort duties.

Those which Australia now possesses might well be retained temporarily, used for the peace training of officers and men, and for local defence, but it is not recommended that any more be acquired.

4. Air-Power.

The control in war of sea communications can only be maintained by Naval forces. Close investigation has shown that though aeroplanes and seaplanes based on the shore will have to be taken into account in narrow waters, such as the Channel and Mediterranean, the time is not yet in sight when they can take part in the control of ocean communications. Naval forces can, however, make good use of seaborne aircraft as one of their arms.

Airships, if developed and found reliable, can, if used for reconnaissance purposes, and worked in co-operation with surface vessels, assist in keeping open our sea communications.

5. Scale of Naval Forces Recommended.

The outline recommendations which follow are based on the Naval Defence requirements of Australia, as far as can be foreseen for the next few years.

In framing these recommendations, the expected completion of the Japanese Light Cruisers' Building Programme in 1928 as well as the financial and economic position of Australia have been borne in mind.

Nevertheless, each Dominion cannot be considered without reference to the Empire as a whole. The Naval situation of one Dominion is profoundly affected by the Naval effort made by other Dominions and by the Mother Country.

It follows that continuity of Naval Policy is vital if the Empire is to remain secure. An unforeseen reduction of its Naval forces by one part of the Empire cannot be counterbalanced at short notice by a corresponding increase elsewhere, even if finance and popular opinion permit.

6. Naval Co-operation.

Continuity of Naval Policy can only be obtained if the various Governments concerned are kept at all times fully advised as to the Naval needs of the Empire. The question of whether the present arrangements are adequate for ensuring this will be raised at the Imperial Conference.

C 62995

AUSTRALIA: OUTLINE RECOMMENDATIONS.

	Page
I.—War plans	3
II.—Ships	3
III.—Repair ports and fuelling ports...	5
IV.—Trade	6
V.—Personnel	6
VI.—Communications	7
VII.—Stores	7
VIII.—Local defence	8
IX.—Air co-operation	8

I.—War Plans.

Adequacy of existing R.A.N. War Plans.

The existing arrangements for the disposition of the R.A.N. Light Cruisers, in the event of the squadron being placed at Admiralty disposal in war, are very satisfactory and cannot well be improved upon.

II.—Ships.

(1.) Existing R.A.N. Squadron and their life.
(2.) Types of Ships recommended for R.A.N.
(3.) Suggested Building Programme.

(1.) Existing R.A.N. Ships and their Life.

Battle Cruiser "Australia."

By the provisions of the Washington Agreement this vessel must be rendered incapable of further warlike service within six months of the ratification of the Treaty.

So far as can be foreseen the ratification will be completed at an early date; it is recommended that the Australian Government take steps for the disposal of this ship without waiting for the final ratification, in order to allow as much time as possible for her economical disposal. Although the inclusion of this Dominion unit among the ships to be retained was not practicable, and her normal life was thereby somewhat curtailed, it is considered that the vital need for vessels of this type during the war fully repaid the Commonwealth for the outlay incurred on this unit, and that the money could not have been better expended.

Light Cruisers.

Post-war Light Cruisers are assessed to last fifteen years, and those which took part in the war are assessed to last twelve years, but owing to the financial stringency it is considered this must be increased to the normal of fifteen years.

Applying these rules to Australian Light Cruisers they are considered to reach the replacement age as shown hereunder:—

Ship.	Date of Completion.	Estimated Life.	Year due for replacement.
Melbourne	1913	15 years	1928
Sydney	1913	15 „	1928
Brisbane	1916	15 „	1931
Adelaide	1922	15 „	1937

Destroyers.

The useful life of Destroyers is estimated at eight and twelve years, according to whether they took part in the war or not.

As in the case of Light Cruisers it is considered that for financial reasons a life of not less than fifteen years must be accepted for all.

This life may even have to be extended in the case of Destroyers retained for local defence purposes.

74 76 597 608 61 620 633 64 650 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62996

Applying the above to Australian Destroyers :—

T.B.D's.	Date of Completion.	Estimated Life.	*Year due for replacement by Auxiliary Patrol Vessels (vide paragraph 3 below).
Yarra	1911	15 years	1926
Parramatta	1911	15 „	1926
Warrego	1912	15 „	1927
Huon	1915	15 „	1930
Swan	1915	15 „	1930
Torrens	1915	15 „	1930
Anzac	1918/1919	15 „	1933/1934
Stalwart
Tasmania
Swordsman
Success
Tattoo

(2.) Types of Ships recommended for the R.A.N.

Light Cruisers.

Displacement ... Limited by the Washington Agreement to 10,000 tons.
Speed ... ... Sufficiently high to avoid action with enemy Battle Cruisers and not less that 33 knots.
Endurance ... 6,500 miles if possible.
Fuel ... ... Oil burning.
Armament ... 7·5-inch or preferably 8-inch, which is the maximum permissible by the Washington Agreement.
Anti-Aircraft Guns.
Torpedo Tubes if obtainable without a reduction in speed or endurance.
Armour ... Protected Deck.
Cost ... ... Approximately £2,000,000.

The above are the sketch outlines for the design of Foreign Service Light Cruisers now being got out in the Admiralty.

Submarines.

The type of Submarine best suited for the Australian Navy is the Overseas Patrol type, of which the following are the main particulars :—

Endurance ... ... 10,000 miles.
Armament ... ... 21-inch torpedoes.
Fitted with a powerful W/T set, and suitable for work in the tropics.
Cost ... ... About £300,000.

The first Submarine of this type for the Royal Navy will be completed in 1925.

Auxiliary Patrol Craft, Minesweepers and Anti-S/M Craft.

The question of a design of vessel or vessels most suitable for the above purpose is under consideration.

(3.) Suggested Building Programme for the R.A.N.

Light Cruisers.

It is recommended that Light Cruisers be laid down so as to replace the existing ships in the years in which they are considered due for replacement, or as near those dates as may be practicable.

Submarines.

It is recommended that the Commonwealth Government obtain six Submarines of the overseas patrol type. H.M.A.S. " Platypus " would be a suitable depot ship.
A shore base would be required for the flotilla.

C 62997

A.P. Craft.

It is recommended that the R.A.N. Destroyers be retained until a satisfactory design of special craft has been evolved.

Summary of Cost of Proposed Building Programme.

—	Approximate Year laid down.	Approximate Cost.
		£
1 Light Cruiser replace " Melbourne " ...	1924	2,000,000
1 Light Cruiser replace " Sydney "	1924	2,000,000
1 Light Cruiser replace " Brisbane " ...	1927	2,000,000
1 Light Cruiser replace " Adelaide " ...	1933	2,000,000
2 S/M's	1924	600,000
1 S/M	1926	300,000
3 S/M's	1928	900,000
Auxiliary Patrol Vessels	...	200,000
		10,000,000

The above programme, if spread over approximately thirteen to fourteen years, making an average cost of, say, £750,000 a year.

The proposed dates for laying down Submarines are based upon the following considerations :—

The building of a Submarine presents many difficulties not experienced with other classes of ship, notably the fitting in of the various components, which calls for considerable experience and very careful overseeing. If the Commonwealth Government decided to build Submarines, the best procedure might be that adopted in the case of the Australian Torpedo Boat Destroyers, the first two of which were completed in England, the third was sent out in sections for erection in Australia, and the remaining three built in Australia.

III.—Repair Ports and Fuelling Ports.

(1.) Outside Australia.
(2.) In Australia.

(1.) Outside Australia.

The necessity for a base at Singapore to enable the Main Fleet to operate in the Pacific has been explained above. The completion of this base is considered to be an urgent requirement for the defence of Australia, and it is upon this assumption that the Commonwealth Government is invited to take part in the construction of the Dockyard.

The Commonwealth share may be assessed by estimating the cost of a graving dock suitable for Light Cruisers, together with the necessary workshops and facilities, and this is estimated to be £1,600,000, to be spread over eight years.

This sum could conveniently be employed in the supply of raw and manufactured material from Australia.

(2.) In Australia.

(a.) Repair Ports.

In view of the changed situation that will be brought about by the creation of a large Naval Dockyard at Singapore, the Admiralty recommend that all idea of developing repair ports at Port Stephens and Cockburn Sound should be definitely abandoned.

As regards Sydney, it is recommended that the existing Dockyard should be kept up to date so as to be able to cope with the refits and docking of modern Light Cruisers and Submarines, but that no money should be spent on establishing, either at Sydney or elsewhere in Australia, docking and repair facilities for Capital Ships.

The Naval and Commercial repair facilities in Australia should keep pace with the growth of a Dominion Navy.

The construction of Singapore will remove any necessity for providing a repair port in Australia for the Capital Ships of the Main Fleet, though if large commercial docks are contemplated, it is desirable that they should be capable of taking the largest Man-of-War.

74
76
597
608
61
620
633
64
650
66
67
68
69

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 62998

(b.) Fuelling Ports.

In addition to the Singapore Base, a fuelling port will be required in Australia for the use of forces operating in the Southern exits to the Java, Flores and Banda Seas and in the waters between Timor and Australia. These straits possess great strategical importance, and the denial of their passage to enemy surface raiders will go far to ensure the safety of communications in the Indian Ocean and Australian waters. All available information points to Bynoe Harbour as the most suitable site for such a fuelling port.

If oil tanks are located at Bynoe, the provision of mobile defences would be necessary until such time as it may be practicable to provide the port with fixed defences.

The alternative to a fuelling port in Northern Australia is to maintain the oil reserves at a southern port and to accept the resultant larger carry and increased number of oilers.

It must be realised, however, that the alternative is not of equivalent value to reserves strategically situated in Northern Australia, owing to the inadequacy of the world's tankage tonnage, quite apart from any question of vulnerability and wastage by consumption on passage.

IV.—Trade.

1. The Trade arrangements have already been communicated to the Commonwealth Government under the headings :—

Naval Control Service	... ...	Protection.
Naval Control Service	... ...	Contraband Control.

2. It is recommended that the importance of Albany as a Convoy assembly port be borne in mind in connection with the commercial development of the port.

V.—Personnel.

(1.) Officers.
(2.) Submarine Personnel.
(3.) Interchange of Personnel.
(4.) Personnel for Naval Control Service.

(1.) Officers.

The system whereby Officers for the R.A.N. are trained in Australia appears to be entirely sound.

The reports which have been received on Officers who have been trained at the R.A.N. College, whilst serving in ships of the Royal Navy, show that these Officers are of at least as high a standard as those trained in similar Colleges in this country.

It is considered that the expense of maintaining a Naval College for small numbers of Officers, although relatively high, is fully justified by the effect of building up the naval spirit of the country, and the retention of the R.A.N. College is most strongly recommended.

(2.) S/M Personnel.

It is recommended that Officers and ratings who have already specialised in S/M's should be sent to the United Kingdom for employment in the S/M Service until required for Australian S/M's. It is recommended that additional personnel be sent to the United Kingdom for S/M training as required, for manning Australian Submarines should it be decided to build this class of vessel.

(3.) Interchange of Personnel.

It is recommended that officers and men of the R.A.N. be regarded as interchangeable in all respects with those of the R.N. One of the main drawbacks of a small Navy is that the personnel become stale through long service on one station and in a limited number of ships.

The absence of foreign service must necessarily militate against recruiting.

The antidote is a regular system of exchange, whereby the ships and the personnel of the R.A.N. spend a proportion of their time on other stations.

C 62999

(4.) Personnel for Naval Control Service.

It is recommended that the provision of the Naval crews for Armed Escort Vessels and Defensively equipped Merchant Vessels, together with the personnel and craft for Routeing and Convoy and for Contraband Control, be regarded as an urgent requirement.

VI.—Communications.

(1.) The establishment of a High Power W/T Station in Australia for communication direct or otherwise with Great Britain and other Dominions will not fulfil Naval requirements, because—

(a.) The High Power Station could not be constantly available for Naval purposes.

(b.) The W/T range of a man-of-war is necessarily limited, and coastal stations are therefore necessary for the transmission of orders and the reception of reports.

(c.) It is an accepted principle that it is uneconomical and technically unsound to employ High Power Stations for short and medium range working.

(2.) An examination of the power and position of the existing Australian W/T Stations has shown that Naval requirements in the probable theatre of operations in the event of a war in the Far East would be met by the following :—

(a.) The existing coastal stations at Perth, Sydney, Townsville and Rabaul to be modernised with valve apparatus.

(b.) A medium Power Station to be established at Port Darwin, with a range of 1,500 miles. This station would form a necessary link in the area :—

thus facilitating the operations of Naval Forces in the vicinity of this area in war.

This station would be unremunerative in peace time and need not be manned until war is imminent.

The cost of a medium High Power Station is estimated at £50,000.

(3.) Wireless communications are vital in war, and must therefore be exercised in peace, or they will fail when most required. It is recommended that an agreement be reached whereby all commercial W/T Stations in Australia which may be required for Naval purposes be placed under Naval Discipline in war. This might well be effected by arranging that the existing personnel of these stations be enrolled in Naval ranks and ratings on the outbreak of war. In peace, as many as possible should be encouraged to join the R.A.N.V.R., and peace exercises are recommended, especially between the stations mentioned in paragraph 2.

(4.) In the matter of Wireless organisation, it is recommended that the Royal Australian Navy maintain a close liaison with the Naval Staff at Singapore.

(5.) It is very necessary that the High Power Station should be able to broadcast to ships on waves not more than 20,000 metres.

VII.—Stores.

(1.) Fuel.
(2.) Armament Supplies.
(3.) Naval and Victualling Stores.

(1.) Fuel.

(a.) War Reserve.

It is recommended that 200,000 tons of Oil Fuel be maintained in Australia as a War Reserve. This quantity is approximate and has been arrived at as follows :—

	Tons of Oil Fuel.
4 oil-burning Light Cruisers : one year's war consumption	96,000
12 T.B.D's. used as Local Defence Craft : one year's war consumption (equivalent to half ordinary war consumption because of employment)	72,000
6 Submarines (one year's war consumption)	7,200
Armed Escort Vessels, oil tankers, &c.	24,800
say,	200,000

74 76 597 608 61 620 633 643 650 66 672 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 63000

It is recommended that this oil and the necessary storage be provided during the next eight years at a total cost of approximately £1,000,000, or an annual cost of £125,000.

(b.) Position of Oil Fuel Reserves.

Assuming that Bynoe or other Northern Port is decided upon as a fuelling port it is recommended that three-quarters of the Light Cruisers' oil reserve be stored there, and that one-quarter be stored at Southern Ports.

As regards oil for Submarines it is suggested that one-half of the oil reserve for Submarines be located at a suitable port in Australia and the remaining half at Singapore, in order that they may be able, in war, to operate from the latter place as soon as the situation permits.

(c.) Peace Requirements.

It is recommended that the allowance of fuel for vessels in commission should be calculated on a similar basis to that adopted in the Royal Navy.

For example, the provision for the China Squadron for 1923–24 is based on 50 days' steaming. To this is added the estimated consumption for the year for auxiliary purposes, and the necessary provision to permit of the authorised trials at special speeds.

(2.) Armament Supplies.

The decision to establish a Naval Base at Singapore places Australia in an ideal position to become the source of Armament supplies for the Main Fleet in War.

The manner in which this can be carried out is well expressed in the report laid before the Commonwealth Government by the Admiralty representative (Commander J. G. McHardy, R.N.) who visited Australia for the purpose in 1921.

It is desirable to lay stress on those portions of the report dealing with independent Naval inspection during manufacture, which is regarded as an indispensable condition.

(3.) Naval and Victualling Stores.

In view of the great difficulty in arranging supplies from the United Kingdom for a large Fleet operating abroad in time of war, it is strongly recommended that the general lines of development should be such that Australia should ultimately be able, not only to supply the needs of her own forces, but also to assist in meeting those of a large Fleet.

VIII.—Local Defence.

The question has arisen whether the Dominions wish the Sub-Committee of the Joint Defence Committee, which is now considering the scales of Defence of British Ports oversea, to examine at the same time the scales of Defence of Dominion Ports.

Scales of Defence, when complete, will include recommendations for Local Naval and Air Defence and for defences on land.

IX.—Air Co-operation.

(1.) It is recommended that future Australian Light Cruisers be built to carry one or more amphibians.

(2.) In the meantime, in order to enable the R.A.N. to co-operate in peace time with the Australian Air Force, it is recommended that one existing Light Cruiser be fitted to carry a small seaplane, or alternatively, that the squadron oiler or collier be so fitted.

(3.) It is recommended that plans be prepared with a view to taking up and fitting out a merchant ship as a seaplane carrier in Australia on the outbreak of war.

Admiralty, June 11, 1923.
P.D.01805.

o

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

C 63001

Printed for the Committee of Imperial Defence. August 1923.

SECRET. Nº 74

E. 59.

(Also C.I.D. Paper No. 196–C.)

This Memorandum was approved by the Standing Defence Sub-Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence at their 33rd Meeting, held on June 19, 1923. [S.S./33rd Minutes (1).]

NOT FOR PUBLICATION.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, 1923.

EMPIRE NAVAL POLICY AND CO-OPERATION.

NEW ZEALAND.

1. Object.

TO summarise the naval situation (1923) and to give in outline Admiralty recommendations to New Zealand in pursuance of C.I.D. Paper No. 194–C.

2. The Naval Situation.

As a result of the Washington Conference and the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance the strategic situation has changed.

Except for a base in Hawaii, America does not possess and, by the terms of the Status Quo Agreement, cannot construct, Naval Bases in the Pacific which would enable the American Fleet to be moved across that ocean.

America is therefore precluded from taking effective action in the Western Pacific.

Consequently the British Empire is left as the sole Power, apart from Japan, capable of operating in these waters. The Four-Power Pact between the United States of America, France, the British Empire and Japan cannot eliminate all possibility of war in that area.

The capital ship superiority of the British over the Japanese Fleet (ratio 5 to 3) is offset to a considerable extent by the great distance at which the Fleet would have to operate from its main bases of supply and repair.

The Main Fleet, therefore, cannot be divided into detachments, but must be ready to move as a whole to any threatened area.

The need for mobility makes it necessary to press on with preparations to enable a rapid concentration of our Main Fleet in the Far East, and the keystone of these preparations is the development of Singapore as a fuelling and repair base.

Even after the completion of the Singapore Fleet base and the intermediate fuelling bases, and assuming the Suez Canal route is available, the Main Fleet will take from one month to six weeks to reach the Far East.

The enemy's obvious and most natural objective during the interval would be Singapore, the seizure of which would deny to our Fleet the control of the Western Pacific and secure the enemy's lines of communication in the direction of Australia and New Zealand.

The main task of the Naval Forces of the Empire in the Western Pacific, operating in the face of superior enemy forces, would consequently be to delay and harass the despatch of an expedition against Singapore, or any operation, such as an attack upon Hong Kong, intended to lead up to such an expedition.

For this purpose two classes of vessel are suitable :—

(a.) Fast Light Cruisers of great endurance.
(b.) Large Overseas Submarines.

Light Cruisers are the smallest seagoing ships which can play a part in protecting the ocean trade routes in war, or threatening an enemy's sea communications, and which can provide the necessary sea-going training in peace.

[10153] [10184] [10353A] [10432]

74 76 597 608 61 620 633 64 650 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 63002

Submarines are particularly suitable for offensive action or scouting, and for this reason would be invaluable both before and after the arrival of the Main Fleet in the East.

3. Composition of the New Zealand Division.

As it appears, however, that New Zealand would not be able for some time to come to maintain both light cruisers and submarines in sufficient numbers to ensure efficiency, it is recommended that she should concentrate on light cruisers.

4. Air Power.

The control in war of the sea communications of the Empire can only be maintained by Naval forces. Close investigation has shown that, though aeroplanes and seaplanes based on the shore will have to be taken into account in narrow waters such as the Channel and Mediterranean, the time is not yet in sight when they can take part in the control of ocean communications. Naval forces can, however, make good use of seaborne aircraft as one of their arms.

Airships, if developed and found reliable, can, if used for reconnaissance purposes, and worked in co-operation with surface vessels, assist in keeping open our sea communications.

5. Scale of Naval Forces Recommended.

In framing these recommendations, the expected completion of the Japanese light cruiser building programme in 1928, as well as the financial and economic position of New Zealand, have been borne in mind.

Nevertheless, each Dominion cannot be considered without reference to the Empire as a whole. The Naval situation of one Dominion is profoundly affected by the Naval effort made by other Dominions and by the Mother Country.

It follows that continuity of Naval Policy is vital if the Empire is to remain secure. An unforeseen reduction of its Naval Forces by one part of the Empire cannot be counter-balanced at short notice by a corresponding increase elsewhere, even if finance and popular opinion permit.

6. Naval Co-operation.

Continuity of Naval Policy can only be obtained if the various Governments concerned are kept at all times fully advised as to the Naval needs of the Empire.

The question of whether the present arrangements are adequate for ensuring this will be raised at the Imperial Conference.

NEW ZEALAND: OUTLINE RECOMMENDATIONS.

I.—Ships.
II.—Local Defence.
III —Trade.
IV.—Personnel.
V.—Oil Fuel.
VI.—Repair Ports.
VII.—Communications.

I.—Ships.

During the difficult times through which New Zealand has been passing she has successfully maintained the nucleus of a naval force. It is recommended that this should now be expanded and that she should aim at maintaining a cruiser squadron of three ships, manned by New Zealand personnel. This can be built up gradually, and it is suggested that "Chatham" should be relieved by two D class light cruisers in 1924 and that a third ship should be added as soon as the Dominion is able to bear this additional burden.

Provision of Ships.

2. The arrangement whereby ships are loaned by Great Britain enables New Zealand to maintain a larger effective force than would otherwise be possible, and it is therefore recommended that it should be continued for the present.

C 63003

It is recognised, however, that a division composed of ships on loan may not fulfil New Zealand's aspirations in the future, and it is therefore suggested that she should take steps to obtain a ship of her own to replace one of those lent as soon as her finances admit. It is considered, however, that the maintenance of three ships should take precedence over any building policy until such time as both are possible.

II.—Local Defence.

3. The question has arisen whether the Dominions wish the Defence Sub-Committee of the Joint Defence Committee, which is now considering the Scales of Defence of British Ports Oversea, to examine at the same time the Scales of Defence of Dominion Ports.

Scales of Defence, when complete, will include recommendations for local Naval and Air Defence and for defences on land.

III.—Trade.

4. The trade arrangements recommended have already been communicated to the Dominion Government under the headings "Naval Control Service—Protection," "Naval Control Service—Contraband Control."

IV.—Personnel.

5. The increase in active service personnel rendered necessary by a squadron of three ships can only be made gradually, and until sufficient New Zealand personnel is available British personnel will be loaned when desired to supply the deficiency.

It is recommended that the final total aimed at should allow for a proportion of men undergoing training ashore.

Training.

6. Schools for the higher specialist training of ratings on the small scale necessary for the New Zealand Division would be very costly in proportion to the numbers trained, and the alternative, that men should be sent to the schools in England, is recommended for the present.

Interchange.

7. Continuous service in the same squadron on the same station tends to damp enthusiasm, and is not an incentive to recruiting; it is considered that interchange of New Zealand ships and personnel with the British Navy will benefit everybody and will do much to ensure efficient co-operation in war. It is suggested, therefore, that ships of the New Zealand Division should periodically join up with other squadrons and vice versâ, which, in the first case, would provide an opportunity for some of the higher ratings to go through the schools in England.

Reserves.

8. To provide the personnel necessary for the Naval Control Service and Local Defence measures it is recommended that the reserves should be increased and a force raised similar to the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve.

V.—Oil Fuel.

9. The Admiralty note with satisfaction the decision of New Zealand to establish an oil fuel reserve at Auckland. This is an important step towards rectifying the present unsatisfactory fuelling position in the Pacific.

A war reserve of 10,000 tons is considered necessary in addition to any storage necessitated by the normal requirements of the station in peace.

VI.—Naval Repair Ports.

10. The present arrangements whereby the commercial facilities at Auckland are used for refitting ships of the New Zealand Division have proved so satisfactory and economical in practice that there does not appear to be any necessity to establish a Government Dockyard in the near future.

74
76
77
608
61
620
638
643
650
66
67
68
69
70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 63004

Singapore, however, is of vital importance to the scheme of Empire Defence in the Pacific, and therefore to New Zealand in particular. Any assistance, either financial or in material, that she may find herself able to offer towards its development would be welcomed.

VII.—Communications.

11. In order to complete the network of W/T stations necessary to adequately cover the area of the Pacific Islands, the stations at Awanui and Apia should be modernised and made capable of maintaining communication with Sydney.

It is also important that the personnel of these stations should be under Naval discipline in war time, and it is suggested that they should be enrolled in the Volunteer Reserve proposed in paragraph 8.

Admiralty, June 11, 1923.
P.D. 01806.

o

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]
C 63005

Printed for the Committee of Imperial Defence. June 1923.

SECRET.

E-60.

(Also C.I.D. No. 197–C.)

76

COMMITTEE OF IMPERIAL DEFENCE.

ESTABLISHMENT OF NAVAL BASE AT SINGAPORE AND ITS EFFECT UPON THE FOREIGN AND NAVAL POLICY OF THE EMPIRE.

(Approved by the Standing Defence Sub-Committee on June 19, 1923, S.S. 33rd Minutes.)

WITH reference to the Minute of the 18th May, 1923, signed on behalf of the South African Government by General Smuts and forwarded by the Governor-General (Appendix), protesting against the announcement of the decision in regard to Singapore pending the discussion of the whole subject by the Imperial Conference, the history of this question, including the facts as to what happened at the Imperial Conference in 1921 and at the Washington Conference, 1921–22, is as follows :—

2. Until the British Fleet was centralised in Home waters in consequence of the development of the German menace, a British Battle Fleet was maintained in the Pacific as well as in the Mediterranean, and the base at Hong Kong was maintained on the scale necessary for a first-class Naval base under the conditions prevailing in those days. During the ten years preceding the war all modern battleships were withdrawn from the China Station in accord with the policy of concentration in Home waters which was forced upon the Admiralty by the development of the German menace. During the nineteen years which have elapsed since this withdrawal began, the increase in the size of battleships, the developments of ordnance and the introduction of oil fuel have rendered Hong Kong in its present state useless as a base for a modern Battle Fleet. The Navy was therefore in the position that, if political circumstances should ever render it desirable again to maintain a Battle Fleet in the Pacific, they would be unable to do so owing to the lack of any Naval base.

3. In the Memorandum on Naval Policy (E. 4 of February 1921), which was prepared by the Admiralty for the Imperial Conference, 1921, reasons were put down why it would be preferable to develop a new Naval base at Singapore rather than to bring the base at Hong Kong up to date.

4. The original decision to create a naval base at Singapore was taken by the late Cabinet on the 16th June, 1921.

5. The reasons for this decision were communicated to the Imperial Conference, in the first instance, by Mr. Balfour on the 28th June, 1921 (E.–8th Meeting). It is interesting to note that the occasion chosen by Mr. Balfour to make this statement was during the discussion on the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, and that he gave as one of the principal reasons in support of renewing the Anglo-Japanese Alliance the necessity of gaining the considerable time required for the creation of a base at Singapore :—

> " In these circumstances, we have come to the conclusion that one of the most pressing needs for Imperial Defence is that Singapore should be made into a place where the British Fleet can concentrate for the defence of the Empire, of our interests in the East, our interests in India, our interests in Australia, our interests in New Zealand, our interests in the smaller Possessions there, and that for that purpose it is absolutely necessary to undertake works at Singapore. Those works cannot be finished in a day. They cannot be finished in a year. They must take some time to complete.

74 76 77 60'8 61 620 638 643 650 66 672 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"Mr. Massey: They are going on.

"Mr. Balfour: Not yet. This question has only been taken in hand quite recently. Therefore, until Singapore is rendered the place which we think it ought to be made—a place of concentration, a place of refitting and refuelling—until this is done, we are at a relative disadvantage undoubtedly in the Pacific, and that is a very strong strategical reason, putting all wider considerations apart, why we should remain on the most friendly terms with Japan, and why we should continue a policy we have hitherto pursued with such success, that is, of joint action with Japan in the Far East."

6. It should be noted that Mr. Balfour did not suggest that a renewal of the Alliance with Japan would render it unnecessary to proceed with the base at Singapore, although, in an earlier passage, he had recalled that in the past "the fact of the Japanese Alliance was held to relieve the Admiralty of the day of any serious responsibility in regard to the Pacific." On the contrary, he pointed out to the Conference that the substitution of oil for coal for fuel for battleships had rendered it absolutely necessary to create a base at Singapore as an indispensable condition of action by the Fleet in the Far East.

7. The question of Singapore was discussed in greater detail at the Imperial Conference at the meetings devoted to Naval Defence, the record of which, owing to its secrecy, was limited by the Conference itself to a single copy. In those discussions Lord Lee said (E–14th Meeting):—

"The Home Government have therefore come to the decision that Singapore must be developed as the main base for the British Fleet in the Pacific."

Later on, in the same statement, Lord Lee made it quite clear that the proposals of the Admiralty were unaffected by the question of the renewal or otherwise of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, except that if the Alliance were dropped and Japan became hostile, "then undoubtedly there would be increased urgency for the development and "establishment of our bases in the Pacific and our oil reserves."

8. After the preliminary discussion, further conversations took place at the Admiralty with the representatives of the Dominions, and the Admiralty, on the 11th July, circulated a summary of their recommendations (E–32). This included the following:—

"In the Admiralty opinion, Australia, New Zealand and India should be asked to contribute a considerable portion of the expenditure necessary to develop Singapore as a Fleet base, since they are intimately concerned therein."

9. On the 11th July the British Government accepted the invitation to the Washington Conference. It was already clear that a Pacific agreement would be one of our objects at the Conference, for a statement to this effect was included in the announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Lloyd George) in the House of Commons on the 11th July as representing the opinion of all the members of the Conference on the question of the Pacific and also on the question of disarmament.

10. The subject of Naval Defence was again taken up by the full Conference on the 19th July (E–26th Meeting), when Lord Lee again emphasised the importance of Singapore. This statement, it should be noted, was made a week after the announcement referred to above that a Pacific agreement was part of our policy for the Washington Conference. The records of this meeting of the Conference contain no suggestion that the development of Singapore as a naval base should be postponed if a Pacific agreement was achieved.

11. It is quite true, as mentioned in General Smuts' Minute, that the following resolution was passed by the Conference in regard to the naval defence of the Empire:—

"That, while recognising the necessity of co-operation among the various portions of the Empire to provide such naval defence as may prove to be essential for security, and while holding that equality with the naval strength of any other Power is a minimum standard for that purpose, this Conference is of opinion that the method and expense of such co-operation are matters for the full determination of the several Parliaments concerned, and that any recommendations thereon should be deferred until after the coming Conference on Disarmament."

12. The policy set forth in this resolution is that equality with the naval strength of any Power is a minimum standard for the British Empire. It was not the policy, but the method and expense of co-operation among the various portions of the Empire which, by this resolution, was deferred until after the Washington Conference. So long as the British Fleet is entirely unable to operate in the Pacific, it cannot be considered that a one-Power standard is being maintained. In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government felt that the development of the Naval base at Singapore was a matter which should not be further delayed, and they had no reason to believe that any Dominion held a contrary view.

13. The instructions of the British Government to Mr. Balfour and his colleagues for the Washington Conference are contained in a Memorandum drawn up as the result of an enquiry by the Standing Defence Sub-Committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Balfour. These instructions, which were fully discussed and approved by the Cabinet include the following in the summary of Conclusions:—

"Singapore.

"That no agreement should be reached at the Conference which will in any way interfere with the development of Singapore as a British Naval Base, since such development is purely defensive in character and is already overdue."

14. At the outset of the Conference, Mr. Balfour at an informal meeting gave the British Empire Delegation full particulars as to his instructions and the lines on which he proposed to proceed. It is practically certain that he must have mentioned the decision in regard to Singapore, though no record was kept of what he said. In any event, there is no possible room for doubt that all members of the British Empire Delegation knew what was our policy in regard to Singapore. For example, at a meeting of the British Empire Delegation on the 2nd December, 1921, when the proposal for a limitation in regard to fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific was under discussion, Senator Pearce, the Australian Representative, pointed out the desirability of Singapore being left out of any restricted arrangement as to the construction of fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific, and Mr. Balfour remarked that in none of the conversations he had so far had was the question of Singapore raised, and he preferred to leave it alone.

Again, the question of Singapore was constantly referred to in the telegrams which passed between Mr. Balfour and the Home Government, copies of all of which were circulated to all members of the British Empire Delegation. Thus, a telegram dated the 18th December, from Lord Curzon, included the following:—

"With regard to fortifications in the Pacific, you say Singapore is not mentioned. We presume by this that we are free to develop Singapore as a first-class naval base if we think it necessary to do so. This we regard as indispensable, and we hope you will make sure there is no misunderstanding with the Americans aud still more the Japanese on this point. As you are aware from discussions over which you have presided in the Committee of Imperial Defence, the defence of Australia and New Zealand might in certain circumstances depend entirely on Singapore."

On the 13th January, Mr. Churchill, who was acting as Chairman of the Standing Defence Sub-Committee in Mr. Balfour's absence, sent the following telegram:—

"With reference to your telegram No. 166 of the 15th December and the provision in the 3-Power Agreement on the Naval Ratio that the status quo shall be maintained with respect to fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific region, including Hong Kong, it is presumed that our freedom of action in regard to Singapore has been preserved."

15. So far as can be traced, Singapore was only once alluded to in the course of the conversations at Washington. A telegram, dated the 24th January, from Mr. Balfour, includes the following:—

"I introduced certain amendments to place beyond doubt the exclusion of Singapore (in which Baron Kato acquiesced) as well as territories of Australia, according to a formula designed by Senator Pearce; also to limit the status quo in fortifications and coast defences. I have since discussed draft with Mr. Hughes, who tells me that American Delegation have accepted all my amendments. During this conversation, Mr. Hughes volunteered the observation that of course Singapore was excluded as it was neither island nor in Pacific."

74 76 77 78 61 620 638 64 650 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

16. In the result it was definitely settled at the Washington Conference that no development should be made east of the meridian of 110° east longitude. That decision barred the further development of Hong Kong, but permitted Great Britain to develop Singapore. As shown above, it was not by an oversight that the line was so drawn. The territory specified in Article 19 was a matter of prolonged consideration at Washington, and the other parties to the Treaty fully appreciated that Article 19 as finally drafted left Great Britain to develop Singapore as a Naval base.

17. South Africa did not send a representative to Washington, and the Treaty was signed on behalf of that Dominion by Mr. Balfour, so that these facts are possibly not familiar to General Smuts and the South African Government.

18. Finally, it should be mentioned that, in consequence of the agreements arrived at between the United States, Japan and this country at Washington, the naval situation resulting from the agreements was examined afresh by the Admiralty, and they produced a Memorandum (C.I.D. No. 176–C) showing how the naval policy of the British Empire had been affected by these treaties. In this Memorandum special consideration was given to the question of the development of Singapore, in view of the facts that any further development of Hong Kong would not be in accord with the terms of the Washington Treaty: that no British port in the Western Pacific is capable of serving as a base for a modern fleet, and that the United States are debarred from developing any naval base in the Western Pacific. The Admiralty therefore concluded that "for rapid concentration of the Fleet in the East it is essential that a secure base at Singapore can be counted on. The development of Singapore must take many years, even if substantial assistance is provided by the Dominions. The matter is therefore one of great urgency."

This Memorandum was considered and approved by His Majesty's Government, and copies were forwarded to the Dominions with a request for their remarks on the questions raised. The date of the despatch was the 23rd December.

19. The fifth paragraph of the Union Ministers' Minute contains the statement that "no expenditure on this project is provided during the year 1923/24 and only a very moderate expenditure thereafter during 1924/25." The despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies addressed to the Dominions on the 27th March, 1923, however, stated that, "no considerable expenditure will be incurred during the financial year 1923/24 and only a moderate expenditure during 1924/25." The despatch then went on to say that, "the provision made in the estimates for the financial year 1923/24 is 160,000*l*." To have held the question over for the formal approval of the Imperial Conference would have entailed the omission of this item from the Naval Estimates, and the postponement for a year of the commencement of a work which, as long ago as June 1921 had been described by Mr. Balfour as "one of the most pressing needs for Imperial defence" (paragraph 5 above), and which, as stated in paragraph 33 of C.I.D. Paper No. 176–C is regarded by the Naval Staff as "of great urgency."

20. From the above it is clear that the British Government, at any rate, never conceived it to be the intention of the Imperial Conference, and the Governments represented there, either before, during or after the Washington Conference, that their policy of creating a naval base at Singapore was in any way affected by any of the acts of that Conference. On the contrary, they made it clear at the Imperial Conference that even if the Anglo-Japanese Alliance continued, it would be necessary to carry out their naval programme, which included a base at Singapore; that they instructed their Delegates to the Washington Conference not to agree to anything which would interfere with the development of Singapore as a British naval base, and several times during the Conference reiterated this instruction; that their Delegates faithfully followed these instructions; that this attitude was communicated to and received the full support of the British Empire Delegation, on which all the Dominions except South Africa, as well as India, were represented by specially appointed Delegates.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W 1,
June 30, 1923.

APPENDIX.

Copy of Despatch from His Royal Highness the Governor-General of the Union of South Africa to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

My Lord Duke, Governor-General's Office, Cape Town, May 18, 1923.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Grace herewith, with reference to your despatch Dominions No. 119, Secret, of the 27th March, 1923, the document mentioned below (enclosure), on the subject of the establishment of a naval base at Singapore.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ARTHUR FREDERICK,
Governor-General.

Minute, dated May 18, 1923, signed on behalf of the South African Government by General Smuts.

Minute No. 360. Prime Minister's Office, May 18, 1923.

MINISTERS have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of His Royal Highness the Governor-General's Minute No. 2/1894 of the 20th April, transmitting a copy of the Secretary of State's despatch No. 119* of the 27th March, on the subject of the expenditure of £11,000,000 upon the establishment of a Naval base at Singapore, such expenditure to be extended over a period of years and without prejudice to any decisions of the forthcoming Imperial Conference.

Ministers desire to take this opportunity of putting on record their views in this matter, and to request that their views may be communicated to the other Dominions for their information.

One of the most beneficent results of the Washington Conference was the signature of the Quadruple Pacific Treaty which replaced the Anglo-Japanese Alliance without disturbing the friendly relations between Great Britain and Japan. The result of the agreement was to minimise for the duration of the pact any danger of war in the Pacific Ocean, and the fact that America joined in this pact at once altered the conditions under which a base at Singapore was considered at the Prime Ministers' Conference in 1921. A reconsideration of the whole Naval policy of the British Empire is therefore rendered necessary.

Attention is drawn to the resolution† adopted in respect of this matter under the heading Imperial Defence (Naval) at the Conference held in London in 1921, when it was resolved that any definite decision in regard to Naval Defence or the manner of co-operation should be deferred until after the Conference at Washington.

Ministers regret that any statements should have been made on the subject of Singapore, in view of the imminence of the Prime Ministers' Conference, especially having in mind the fact that no expenditure on this project is provided during the year 1923/24, and only a very moderate expenditure thereafter during 1924/25.

A great fortified base at Singapore may, in its effect on Japanese opinion, produce far-reaching reactions for the foreign policy, as well as for the Naval policy, of the Empire; and the whole subject, in all its possible bearings, should have received the careful attention of the Imperial Conference before a decision on any detail was announced.

The last review of the Naval position is contained in the Memorandum‡ of the Committee of Imperial Defence, dated the 28th July, 1922, and, if there has been any further development in the views of the Admiralty, Ministers trust that His Majesty's Government will prepare and issue for their consideration a fresh appreciation of the world Naval position, so that, in coming to the Conference in October, they may be advised in advance of the views that the Admiralty may submit.

(Signed) J. C. SMUTS.

* C.I.D. No. 189–C. † Paper No. E–55. ‡ C.I.D. No. 176–C.

o

74 76 77 78 61 620 638 64 650 66 67 68 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

C 63008

16. In the result it was definitely settled at the Washington Conference that no development should be made east of the meridian of 110° east longitude. That decision barred the further development of Hong Kong, but permitted Great Britain to develop Singapore. As shown above, it was not by an oversight that the line was so drawn. The territory specified in Article 19 was a matter of prolonged consideration at Washington, and the other parties to the Treaty fully appreciated that Article 19 as finally drafted left Great Britain to develop Singapore as a Naval base.

17. South Africa did not send a representative to Washington, and the Treaty was signed on behalf of that Dominion by Mr. Balfour, so that these facts are possibly not familiar to General Smuts and the South African Government.

18. Finally, it should be mentioned that, in consequence of the agreements arrived at between the United States, Japan and this country at Washington, the naval situation resulting from the agreements was examined afresh by the Admiralty, and they produced a Memorandum (C.I.D. No. 176–C) showing how the naval policy of the British Empire had been affected by these treaties. In this Memorandum special consideration was given to the question of the development of Singapore, in view of the facts that any further development of Hong Kong would not be in accord with the terms of the Washington Treaty: that no British port in the Western Pacific is capable of serving as a base for a modern fleet, and that the United States are debarred from developing any naval base in the Western Pacific. The Admiralty therefore concluded that "for rapid concentration of the Fleet in the East it is essential that a secure base at Singapore can be counted on. The development of Singapore must take many years, even if substantial assistance is provided by the Dominions. The matter is therefore one of great urgency."

This Memorandum was considered and approved by His Majesty's Government, and copies were forwarded to the Dominions with a request for their remarks on the questions raised. The date of the despatch was the 23rd December.

19. The fifth paragraph of the Union Ministers' Minute contains the statement that "no expenditure on this project is provided during the year 1923/24 and only a very moderate expenditure thereafter during 1924/25." The despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies addressed to the Dominions on the 27th March, 1923, however, stated that, "no considerable expenditure will be incurred during the financial year 1923/24 and only a moderate expenditure during 1924/25." The despatch then went on to say that, "the provision made in the estimates for the financial year 1923/24 is 160,000*l*." To have held the question over for the formal approval of the Imperial Conference would have entailed the omission of this item from the Naval Estimates, and the postponement for a year of the commencement of a work which, as long ago as June 1921 had been described by Mr. Balfour as "one of the most pressing needs for Imperial defence" (paragraph 5 above), and which, as stated in paragraph 33 of C.I.D. Paper No. 176–C is regarded by the Naval Staff as "of great urgency."

20. From the above it is clear that the British Government, at any rate, never conceived it to be the intention of the Imperial Conference, and the Governments represented there, either before, during or after the Washington Conference, that their policy of creating a naval base at Singapore was in any way affected by any of the acts of that Conference. On the contrary, they made it clear at the Imperial Conference that even if the Anglo-Japanese Alliance continued, it would be necessary to carry out their naval programme, which included a base at Singapore; that they instructed their Delegates to the Washington Conference not to agree to anything which would interfere with the development of Singapore as a British naval base, and several times during the Conference reiterated this instruction; that their Delegates faithfully followed these instructions; that this attitude was communicated to and received the full support of the British Empire Delegation, on which all the Dominions except South Africa, as well as India, were represented by specially appointed Delegates.

2, Whitehall Gardens, S.W 1,
June 30, 1923.

63009

APPENDIX.

Copy of Despatch from His Royal Highness the Governor-General of the Union of South Africa to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

My Lord Duke, Governor-General's Office, Cape Town, May 18, 1923.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Grace herewith, with reference to your despatch Dominions No. 119, Secret, of the 27th March, 1923, the document mentioned below (enclosure), on the subject of the establishment of a naval base at Singapore.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ARTHUR FREDERICK,
Governor-General.

Minute, dated May 18, 1923, signed on behalf of the South African Government by General Smuts.

Minute No. 360. Prime Minister's Office, May 18, 1923.

MINISTERS have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of His Royal Highness the Governor-General's Minute No. 2/1894 of the 20th April, transmitting a copy of the Secretary of State's despatch No. 119* of the 27th March, on the subject of the expenditure of £11,000,000 upon the establishment of a Naval base at Singapore, such expenditure to be extended over a period of years and without prejudice to any decisions of the forthcoming Imperial Conference.

Ministers desire to take this opportunity of putting on record their views in this matter, and to request that their views may be communicated to the other Dominions for their information.

One of the most beneficent results of the Washington Conference was the signature of the Quadruple Pacific Treaty which replaced the Anglo-Japanese Alliance without disturbing the friendly relations between Great Britain and Japan. The result of the agreement was to minimise for the duration of the pact any danger of war in the Pacific Ocean, and the fact that America joined in this pact at once altered the conditions under which a base at Singapore was considered at the Prime Ministers' Conference in 1921. A reconsideration of the whole Naval policy of the British Empire is therefore rendered necessary.

Attention is drawn to the resolution† adopted in respect of this matter under the heading Imperial Defence (Naval) at the Conference held in London in 1921, when it was resolved that any definite decision in regard to Naval Defence or the manner of co-operation should be deferred until after the Conference at Washington.

Ministers regret that any statements should have been made on the subject of Singapore, in view of the imminence of the Prime Ministers' Conference, especially having in mind the fact that no expenditure on this project is provided during the year 1923/24, and only a very moderate expenditure thereafter during 1924/25.

A great fortified base at Singapore may, in its effect on Japanese opinion, produce far-reaching reactions for the foreign policy, as well as for the Naval policy, of the Empire; and the whole subject, in all its possible bearings, should have received the careful attention of the Imperial Conference before a decision on any detail was announced.

The last review of the Naval position is contained in the Memorandum‡ of the Committee of Imperial Defence, dated the 28th July, 1922, and, if there has been any further development in the views of the Admiralty, Ministers trust that His Majesty's Government will prepare and issue for their consideration a fresh appreciation of the world Naval position, so that, in coming to the Conference in October, they may be advised in advance of the views that the Admiralty may submit.

(Signed) J. C. SMUTS.

* C.I.D. No. 189–C. † Paper No. E–55. ‡ C.I.D. No. 176–C.

---

o

74 76 77 78 61 620 633 64 650 66 67 68 69 70

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

END OF REEL

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Memoranda & Notes

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA