In the room just hex baby Each day when the twilight comes And I know there's a world of ble ing and love In the "baby bye" she hums.

I hear her rocking the baby -

I can see the restless fingers
Playing with "Mannia's rings,"
The sweet, little, smiling, pontis
mouth
That to her's in kissing clings,
As she rocks and sings to the baby,
And dreams as she rocks and sings

Rocking the Baby

Her room is next to mine— And I fancy I feel the dimpled arms

That around her neck entwine,
As she rocks and rocks the baby
In the room just next to mine.

I hear her rocking the baby—
Slower and slower now—
And I hear her leaving her good nigh On its eyes and cheeks and brow.

From her rocking, constant rocking, I wonder would she start Could she know through the wall be tween us, She is rocking on a heart?

While my empty arms are aching
For a form they may not press
And my empty heart is breaking
In its desolate loneliness.

I list to the ceaseless rocking
In the room just next to mine,
And breath a prayer in silence
At a mother's broken shrine,
For the woman who rocks the baby
In the room just next to mine.

James Quinn, 90 Middle st., Hartford, Conn., testifies: "I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."

Lucius Alexander, of Marblehead, Mass., was long a severe sufferer from Dyspepsia, complicated with enlargement of the Liver, most of the time being unable to retain any food in his stomach. Three boxes of Ayer's Pills cured him.

rederic C. Greener, of East Dedham, Mass., for several months troubled with Indigestion, was cured before he used half a box of these Pills.

Your proxy, with a number of others took dinner at the Dufferin House and afterward repaired to the Masonic Hall where a procession was formed and marched through the principal streets of the town, to the music of the cornet and drum, to the grounds of what was to be St Bees' church. Entering through a gateway upon these grounds we were marched to what was called the North-East corner and there halted, and the imposing ceremony of laying a corner was performed according to the new ceremony recently submitted to G. L.

The laying of the corner stone being completed, the Masonic body was marched back, through the same orthograph these deach, through the same processor than the same orthograph the same processor than the same processor than a week he was a well man. "I have been suffering from Pulmonary Diseases for the last five years... About two years ago, during an acute period of my illness, I was advised by my physician to try Putner's Emulsion. I did so with the most gratifying results. My sufferings were speedily aleviated, my cough diminished, my appetite improved, I added several pounds to my weight in a short time and began to recover strength. This process continued until life, which had been a misery to me, became once more a pleasure. Since then Putner's Emulsion has been my only medicine. As one who has fully tested its worth I heartily recommend it to all who are suffering from affections of the Lungs and Throat and I am certain that for any form of wasting diseases nothing superior can be obtained."

When meeting with our long-lost dead, To find their love unchanged, We gather up its hidden thread, No faithful heart estranged.

Nor need we fear they will outgrow Us, in their service sweet; To us 'tis given to serve below With swift and willing feet,

While they, in ministries of love, May oft to us be sent; And gently draw ng us above, Their work with ours is blent.

Our vision dim may see them not;
No voice our ears may hear.

NEARLY A TRAGEDY.

Suffering from the Misdeeds of a Twin Brother.

'Just one more errand, and then home!

knew well that this one last errand

She knew well that this one last errand was the only aim and object of that drive, though they had visited many stores and purchased quantities of goods.

She hoped Grace would ask her where they were going, help her to draw down a blow upon her cousin's heart, that she must give, and which she would yet have given beer own life almost to avert. But Grace was day-dreaming apparently, looking out upon the village streets, as the carriage drove toward the suburbs. So Sophie tried again.

"I do not know. His brother is dying "I do not know. His brother is dying, Who can tell how soon or how late he may come. Father heard in the city that Mf. Gerard Copeland is very rich. Perhaps Ernest may have business to arrange for him. For," with a shy, pretty blush, "you know Mr. Ernest Copeland is not very

"What can happen! It is August now."
I then the carriage stopped.
"In a moment, John," Miss Sophie said, and John stood aside. But Sophie, laying one little glowed hand upon Grace's, said,

'Grace, you know that I love you, don't "Yes, I know it. Why, Hophie, what ails

I believe you would: What is it!"
She was trembling then, and all the pret pink flush faded from her lovely face.
Fighnie's eyes were misty, her lips quiv

oh, darling, forgive me that I must show you?"

She sprang out of the carringe, and Grace followed her. Two pretty madeens they were, the daughter and the niece of the great mill owner, Joseph Wiltbank, Grace was his only child, Sophie, the orphaned, penniless child of his for sher.

Grace's lover lived in the greatesty, where he cousins often spent some of the winter menths with their sunt, in a fashionable carding house, In one of the informal social staterings, to which they were invited, Grace had not Ernest.

And Sophie, heart-whold, loving Grace as yet show any one close on earth, thought of it all as sho led the way across a ting garden to a mean little cottage, where a woman stood in the doorway, holding some swing stood in the doorway, holding some swing non to a mean little cottage, where are man-teded in the decreway, biolding somes wing u her hand. Two boys, of three and five, were playing in the garden.

bergelf as she besyd the name. "Is the sewing done".
"Well, no, miss, not all of it. I have two skirts done."
"I promised to bring my cousin to see if she had any work you could do."
"Walk my, Mrs. Copeland said.
And Grace, following Bophie, entered the little parior. A cry rose to her lips, but she said, hastily:
"I sprained my foot," and sat down, just as Bophie prepared to catch her if she fall. Blue could still seepwart he mantel place a crayon head of Graces. Copeland!
Ble saud this Rophie meant to draw the woman's attention from herself.
"I think you told me you were not a widow," Bophe said.
"No, miss. My husband deserted me. I was a poor girl, without education, and he I was a poor girl, without education, and he I was a poor girl, without education, and he

"No, miss. My husband descried me. I was a poor girl, without education, and he was a gentleman. But I believed in his love and we were very happy till last winter. Then he changed, and one day he gave me some money to keep for him, quite a sum, and went away. He never came back, but he wrote to me never to expect to see him again. The money lasted till now, but it is gone. I hoped I could get work at the mill, and It's cheaper-living in the country; so I came here. But I'm not strong enough for the mill work, and it does not bring enough to pay for some one to watch the children's o I put out that sign," pointing to a neathpart on which was painted the legend:

MRS. COPBLAND, Plain Sewing.

Miss. Coperant, Plain Meeing.

"Yes. It was the sign that brought me here. We will come in again when you finish the work I have left. Is this your husband?" looking at the crayon head.

"Yes, ma'am. It is a good likeness."

"Is th!" said Hophie. "Come, Gracie. Poor child, how pale you are! I am afraid your foot pains you very much."

The cousins gently declined any assistance, and went back to the carriage.

"Drive home quickly, John," Miss Bophie said, and John obeyed.

No word of complaint passed Grace's white lips, but she cling to her cousin, at ways the stronger nature of the two, till she reached her own room, them whispering: "I want to be alone a little while," kissed Bophie, and went into her own room.

There was a family council down stairs.

ft was over at last, the funeral, the care of the dead man's personal property, and then with an undefined fear of evil Ernest Copeland went to Ferndale.

"Gone! Gone to Europe, you say!"

He repeated this after the servant, in a daze of bewildered pain, holding unopened the letters given with the message. Not for some minutes could he collect his senses sufficiently to understand he held perhaps the clew to the mystery in his hand.

But he opened it at last. Grace had had to plead hard for permission to write those lines, harder still to keep back a furious epistle from her father. But only her well-known writing greeted her lover's eyes as he opened the letter:

"Your wite and children," he read, "are in the little cottage opposite the church. May God torgive your cruelty to them."

There was no address or signature. Only one low moan broke from Ernest's white lips as he folded the note again and turned from the house. White as death, shivering in the soft summer air, he went down the road to the cottage. There was an ecstatic scream of "Papal Papa!" as four clinging arms encircled his legs, and Mrs. Copeland stood trembling and crying in the doorway. He gently lifted the youngest child, and, followed by the other, went into the cottage. Mrs. Copeland, crying still, sobbed:

"So you have come back!" Gravely, but not tenderly, Ernest answered!

"Your husband will never come back."

Gravely, but not tenderly, Ernest answered!

"Your husband will never come back.
You know bost by what want of wifely love you drove him to drinking, to despair, finally to deserting you. He was not guilt-less; but ask yourself if you are."

"Who are you!" she gasped.
"I am Gerard's twin brother."
"I have heard of you. Whore is he!"
"In his grave!"
She dropped at his feet as if he had shot her. She had been a slovenly housekeeper, a shrewish wife, grating every hour upon Gerard's sensitive, fastidious tastes, but, in her way, she had loved him, searcely realizing how she drove him desperate.
It consoled her presently to know that half of her husband's wealth would be hers and her children's, and Ernest made no explanation of the reasons why the search

And Sophic flow out again.

"Here! Ernest here!"
And Bophie flew out again. She sent him in aione, for she said:
"I must walch, or uncle will moreler you before you have a chance to explain."
Ernest entered the room, overs a pate shadow of his bright Grace room received by him, to fall into his arms weaping more as in all her despair she had not wept. But there were no more tears, Grace's resea came back in their happiness, and there was a wedding in Paris, where Bophie was bridesmaid, and hosts of American friends offered congratuations.

But as Bophie sagely observed, shaking her pretty head:

NUTMEG CULTURE.

NUTMEG GULTURE.

NUTMEG CULTURE.

How the Nuts Are Grown and Treatest to New Guines.

Paddling into a little cove, says Captain John Birahan in the Giasgow Mail, on the south side of the bay, we have debade a clear, rippling stream, and, having ordered the whole of the men to neare in Indian Bir in front, we started by a thirt rugged path into the mountains, with m, interpreter immediately bothed me, and the Rajah just in front. Every foot of the journey, which was laborious in the extreme, disclosed fresh scenes of verdure and tropical splendor, winding along the sides of deep ravines, sometimes dragging ourselves up the creepers and undergrowth, we ultimately attained an attitude of about one thousand feet above the sea, and those mittered the nutmeg country. Here we haited and rested. The Hajah pulled some of the nutmegs, and explained how far they were from being ripe.

Having rested sufficiently, we again started forward, and after scrambing along for about an hour, we gained a fine piece of table-land, over which we travelied for about another half an hour, when we reached three houses erected in the very heart of the forest. These were used by the natives for drying the nutmers. The country was everywhere magnificent, and the aroms of the spice laden air delicious. Nutmeg and other equally valuable trees were everywhere growing in great profusion. The fruit of the nutmeg in appearance resembles a pear, and when ripe opens and displays the nut covered with a boantially roasted over a slow fire unit all the great profused from the trees, put into baskets and taken to the houses, where they are the partially roasted over a slow fire unit all the great growing in great profused from the trees, put into baskets and and placed on another. Valuable Testimonials.

The following testimonials will be valuable service to all intending using dyes and want to be sure of getting good reliable dyes:—

We the undersigned have used and sold all kinds of dyes, but have found none near so good as the "Excelsior" dyes; for which we can truly say that the "Excelsior" dyes are the best dyes that can be used. They are vold by all first-class grocers and druggists at only 8 cents per package, which is cheaper than other dyes, and they will also dye more goods than any dyes we ever used; and a trial of a package or two will soon convince all that are interested in dyeing. They will not fade like other dyes and besides give a most beautiful color, and they are so simple to use that any child can use them; and are economical, brilliant and durable colors.
