GRAY CANNOT DENY IT

Mr. William Gray, the Conservative candidate, is the man who went to St. Thomas at the time of the last street railway strike in this city, and told the people of St. Thomas to assist the strike-breakers by riding the cars to Springbank. He called the delegate of the London unions a curse to the community. Mr. Gray at that time was a self-constituted strike-breaker. By word and deed he did his best to knife the union men of London. He has been challenged repeatedly to deny the charge, but he dare not. If he had the temerity to deny the part he played against the union men in 1899, he would be immediately confronted by the affidavits of those whom he fought at the time of the strike.

Mr. Gray's organ in London squirms under the charge, but, like Mr. Gray it dare not deny it.

Do the people of London desire that the portfolio of public works the highest position in the gift of the Premier, shall be in the hands of a London boy? Mr. Hyman has earned his honors; he has been called the hardest-working member of the House of Commons. His fellow-citizens have now the opportunity to crown his career.

DISHONEST JOURNALISM

A misleading dispatch, sent from Ottawa the other day, conveyed the impression that the Seventh Battalion among others, would be reduced in strength by a new order of the militia council. The dispatch was published by The Advertiser, the Free Press, and nearly every daily paper in the country. When the full text of the militia council's order was received, it was found that the Seventh Battalion would not be affected. The Advertiser published this information, and the Free Press, although requested to do so by officers of the regiment, REFUSES TO CORRECT THE MISLEADING DISPATCH.

"Where," it asks, "was Mr. Hyman with all the influence of a cabinet minister, when he permitted London's crack corps to be subjected to this reduction?"

London crack corps is to be subjected to no reduction, and the Free Press knows it. No language is too strong to characterize such conduct, but it is a sample of our contemporary's ethics in this campaign, and of the methods employed against Mr. Hyman in the canvass.

Billy Gray and King Edward

By the mercy of Providence, there is always a laugh in the bitterness of politics, and the Free Press has found it. Our veracious contemporary's statement that a vote for Billy Gray is a vote for King Edward adds to the humor of Mr. Gray's candidature.

This is not to say, mind you, that the Free Press looks on Mr. Gray as a joke. On the whole it takes him seriously-for the next week or so at any rate-and if King Edward's name has any influence in these parts, it will just have to get out and hustle for the man the Free Press is obliged to honor.

Mr. Gray is going to need some help, but nobody ever expected that King Edward would be pressed in as a party worker. It certainly was a stroke of enterprise on the part of the Free Press to enlist King Edward's sympathies in the election by hinting that the seat would be turned over to him if Billy Gray won it. Billy is the straw man, it seems. If King Edward gets the votes, he should get the seat.

It is a promise. But what a fierce light it throws on the professions of the Conservative press, which, while it lectures London people for the sinful pride of wanting a cabinet minister to represent them at Ottawa, as much as declares that it will swap Billy Gray for a king, if he can be coaxed to come over and attend to the job! When King Edward heard first that Billy Gray was running for him in London Over Seas, he was as much surprised as he was pleased. It seems that Billy had not written to him for some time -men are so careless about mere friendly correspondence-and King Edward had almost made up his mind that Billy had forgotten him. He wondered at it, too, because postage stamps are only two cents now, and it don't cost any more to send a letter to Buckingham Palace than it does to Springbank. Then he reflected that Billy had been busy with politics ever since last November, and probably hadn't time to write, and so he forgave him,

All the same the good news came with dreadful suddenness, and it took all the monarch's courage to bear up under the shock. The item in the Free Press was the first intimation King Edward had that his old college-chum, Billy Gray, had entered him for the contest. It was also the last, for up to the present, Billy hasn't sent any word directly. However, King Edward expects a telegram any minute, and his secretary has orders to bring it right up to his room as soon as it comes. King Edward realized, of course, that his candidature in London, Ontario, was a matter of the first importance, Constitutional principles were at stake. Could a limited monarch seek the suffrages of the people in this way? Could an hereditary sovereign accept votes? Could the divine right afford to toy with elections? Wouldn't the mere fact of Great Britain's King, standing for election in a colonial constituency, alter the relations of the colonies to the mother country? Wasn't it carrying democracy a little too far when a crowned head went to the polls? Many questions arose, and King Edward worried a great deal. He would like to do all he could for Billy Gray, but Billy should have consulted him first. He felt just a little sore at Billy for having done this thing off his own bat and getting him into a hole.

Under the circumstances, the only thing he could do was to consult his cabinet ministers. Premier Balfour listened with a bored air. To save himself the trouble of thinking, he told King Edward that the Magna Charta and the Petition of Rights and the Habeas Corpus Act and a whole lot of other charters of freedom allowed Billy Gray to do what he darn pleased, and that if he had put King Edward's name up all King Edward had to do was to go through with it and look pleasant. Mr. Balfour was somewhat nettled at what he called Billy Gray's cheek in detaining him half an hour from his game of golf, and when he went out to the links he lost six balls and his

Mr. Lyttelton, the Secretary for the Colonies, gave it as his opinion that this was Billy Gray's way of getting something in return for Canada's preferential treatment of British goods. He thought it was thoroughly in line with the Conservative policy of mutual benefits to use King Edward in an election campaign.

When the case was referred to Mr. Chamberlain, he said he rather favored Billy's plan of "forcing the King," because it tended to draw the colonies closer to the mother country.

The question having been looked at from every point of view, King Edward decided that if he didn't like it he would have to lump it. And so it happens, that lacking instructions to the contrary, King Edward's name will be allowed to stand, and will go before the nomination meeting next Tuesday. Whether it will go on the ballot or not in another story. Grave questions of precedence crop up. Whose name would come first, Billy Gray's or King Edwards's, or since a vote for King Edward is a vote for Billy Gray, would it appear this way, "William Gray (alias King Edward)." It is a very nice and difficult point.

European diplomacy, we are bound to say, was somewhat startied at the news that King Edward had taken his coat off and was running for Billy Gray over in Canada. The ruler of the mightiest empire in the world taking part in a popular election! It struck them as something tremendous and mysterious. It was significant, but what did it mean? They haven't been able to find out. All they know is that King Edward is working for Billy Gray and the fact fills the minds of ambassadors and plenipotentiaries and chancellors with vague unrest. The incident portends something. What? King Edward doesn't butt in in this way for nothing. What's up?

Russia inquires anxiously if Billy Gray's alliance with King Edward bears any menace toward the situation in the far east. France wants to know if it will disburb her entente cordiale with England. Turkey is uneasy lest Billy Gray's two hundred and twenty-five pounds of weight should jar that delicate thing, the balance of power. The Balkans demand whether it is going to affect their war cloud. Bloody little Servia, tired of King Peter, casts its eye on Billy Gray, the side partner and running mate of the Emperor of India, and wonders if Billy would care for a throne in case he can't get a seat in London. In short, there isn't a Diet, or Reichstag or Parliament of any kind in Europe where this Billy Gray-King Edward incident hasn't come up.

Governments have been interpellated. Who is Billy Gray? What does he look like? Is there anything in him? What does he know? If not, why not? The order paper is littered with questions about Billy Gray. Cabinet ministers are obliged to rise and explain that they can't say anything about him, that he never had a past, that he never did anything that they can remember, but they admit that his associate, King Edward, is comparatively well known. President Roosevelt, who is closer to the scene of action, knows Billy Gray. He is glad to meet any friend of King Edward's. The President says that King Edward can run in London for all he cares. The Monroe Doctrine

Nobody with blood in his veins should envy Billy Gray his good luck. Any person of experience will tell you how handy it is to draw a king when you need one. Many a man has waited weeks and weeks and has sat up nights looking for the king that never came. Billy gets the card he wants on the first deal. He is going to hold it out for the rest of the game. He will keep the king up his sleeve. A royal flush of pride overspreads his countenance when he thinks of his familiar footing with the king. The only thing that is better than a king is

Some time ago Billy Gray was posing as the friend of labor, now he is the friend of King Edward. Labor has soured, to some extent, on Billy, and the aristocratic tendencies of the strike-breaker are asserting themselves. When Billy Gray links arms with King

Edward he is in the company he likes best. It is a long step from workingman's friend to chum of royalty. but Billy Gray is the man that can do it. His is the faith which does not need to remove mountains, because it doesn't see mountains to remove. Offering only a passive resistance to ideas, Billy Gray can believe anything that will suit his purpose, a happy faculty, which saves him a great deal of thinking on political and other

A vote for Billy Gray is a vote for King Edward. This proposition. though simple, is likely to get mixed up. Let's get it straight-a vote for King Billy is a vote for Edward Gray! Pshaw! That isn't it! You can see how puzzling it is when you come to figure it out. As Sir Toby says, a plague o' these pickled herrings.

To avoid confusion, why not put the case this way-a vote for Hyman is a vote for Hyman, good government, British fair play, and

Mr. Scott and Northwest Opinion.

Mr. Scott had an opportunity to was the rightful successor to the Hon. Clifford Sifton as Minister of the cabinet. Why, then, did he not succeed to the position? Why did the Government refuse the portfolio to could not have been elected?"

The above is from an article in the Free Press attacking Mr. Scott's desatisfied with the educational clause in entry into Parliament five years ago he has made a remarkably good showing, and has many friends, not only in the Northwest, but in other provinces, who would be glad to see him in the cabinet. When, however, the Free Press states that Sir Wilfrid Laurier pursued an unnatural course in selecting Mr. Oliver, of Edmonton, instead of Mr. Scott, to succeed Mr. Sifton, it is making a statement which will not bear analysis. Borden Only Nominal Leader.

The Conservative party of a few years ago, continued Mr. McPherson, is not in existence today. The Conservative party of today is appealing to the people of London on unfair issues, and are attempting to cloud the real issue. They come to the people without a peofley, without an issue, and if the truth were known, without a leader.

Mr. Borden is merely the nominal leader of the party. It is well known that he has not the power to lead, else why was it that in the House during the present session, various members of the Conservative party told the House that they were not following their of the autonomy are the conservative party told the House that they were not following their of the autonomy as some of the same importance now as some of the same importance now as some of the people of the same importance now as some of the people of the same importance now as some of the people of the party. New York, June 3. who had business to do on the market, the attendance was not nearly as large as the two previous Saturdays. The principal feature of the market was the large display of green stuff and flowers, the latter making the finest showing probably ever seen on the market. Sales in all lines could be considered brisk, as there was very little produce unsold at 11:30 o'clock. Prices were higher for some classes of farm products, while for other lines there was a slight decline.

Fortune Harbor, Nfld., June 2. Scores of people in this neighborhood are living proofs that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure all Kidney ailments from Backache to Bright's Disease. Among the most remarkable cures is that of Mr. Richard Quirk, and he gives the story of it to the public as follows:
"I suffered for over 20 years from Lumbago and Kidney Disease, and at intervals was totally unable to work. After ten or twelve years' of doctors treatment, I had made up my mind that my complaint was incurable. Reading of cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills tempted me to try them. I did so with little faith, but to my great surprise I had not taken more than half a box before I felt relief, and after the use of seven or eight boxes, evening at Jones' auction rooms at 8 o'clock sharp. Recent Order Better Approved Of As It Becomes Fully Understood.

The late militia order issued by the The late militia order issued by the Government has been causing a great deal of comment all over the country. But the better the order is becoming understood the more it is aproved by the critics. As explained in a recent issue of The Advertiser, the order has little practical effect upon the Seventh Regiment. Regiments which were recruited and officered by the Dundonaid standard, such as the Ottawa corps, will certainly and officered by the Dundonaid standard, such as the Ottawa corps, will certainly be affected appreciably. But it must be remembered that it is necessary to prevent the military expenditure from assuming dimensions which would impose a serious burden upon the people. The whole of the military expenditure for the year has not yet been submitted to Parliament, but when the suplementary estimates are brought down by the Minisnament, but when the suplementary estimates are brought down by the Minister of Militia it will probably be found that the total military expenditure will not be less than $5,000,000. The military expenditure is therefore in the aggregate very far in excess of any previous year, probably nearly double, and it represents a tax of $1 a head upon every man, woman and child in the country—that is to say, several dollars upon each adult taxsay, several dollars upon each adult tax payer.

A very large part of this year's additional expenditure is the result of taking over the obligations hitherto assumed by the imperial authorities in regard to the military establishments at Halifax and Esquimalt. The expenditure on this account alone will be from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. The Northwest Territories, whose defense in the past has largely been left to the Northwest Police, must now be provided for on a scale commensurate with the new provincial status, and this will include military organization on something like the same plan as Manitoba.

The Northwest Mounted Police are not

The Northwest Mounted Police are not sufficient. There must be a properly constructed defense force with the necessary establishments in the chief centers of oppulation.
Following is the establishment authorized by the Dundonald scheme for a eight-company regiment:

Staff-sergeants and sergeants.....

The peculiarity about this establishment was that it provided for double the numer of officers and sergeants needed. This was done with the object of training the extra officers and non-coms. in time of peace, so that they might stay at the base and recruit a local defense corps should the active regiment be ordered out on service. The establishment was made in view of the fact that it is much made in view of the fact that it is much more difficult and takes much more ime to train officers than to train men. Consequently pay was allowed for the regimental strength and the base officers and non-coms, as well. The new establishment cuts off these base officers and -coms. It should be noted that there be but little reduction in the strength companies, as the reduction is made entirely by cutting off the officers and bergeants, as already stated. Under the old establishment there were 240 privates; the number now is just the same.

Under the new establishment the figures for the different ranks are as folprivates and 24 corporals. It will be seen, then, that the reduction amounts to 418 minus 337, or 81 all told. As these are pay, it will readily be seen that the new order will cause a loss to the funds of the city corps that are up to strength, and which put their pay into the reginental account.

The Seventh Regiment, however, has not been recruited beyond what the new establishment authorizes, and has not more than 337 men in all ranks. It will, thereore, lose nothing.

Special attention paid to spring wedling orders. Hueston's livery.

recently opened a branch in this city, on Richmond street, opposite the city year's business to April 29, 1905. Local shareholders will be pleased at the substantial increase in every department. Every appointment necessary stitution has been placed in the branch of the bank in London, and under th able management of Mr. Frank I Karn, the bank is sure to receive i share of city and country business.

F. E. KARN, LOCAL MANAGER.

In the statement mentioned above the deposits show a total of $8,316,000 an increase over last year of $2,600,000 $11,669,000. Profits were satisfactory amounting to $134,000, or more than amount required to pay dividends. The quarterly dividends were paid, amounting to $65,000, and $50,000 transferred to reserve fund which has now reached $400,000. The sum of $10,000 was written off bank premises account, and $5,000 applied to rebate of discount on bills not yet due leaving $10,088 carried forward to credit of profit and loss account. The bank's note circulation shows an increase of about $100,000 over last year. The general manager says that the limit was frequently approached during the year. This fact caused the directors issue additional capital to the extent of $325,000, bringing the total capital up to $1,625,000, a proportion of one share of new stock to every four of the old. The issue is made at $125 per share. The premium of 25 per cent will be added to reserve fund. The

"I'm awfully sorry, but there is a little matter that I am compelled to wire to the city about. I'll join you later, You'll forgive me?" Dr. Kent addressed his apology to Mabel, but turned anxious eyes on Bertina.

"Don't be longer than you can help?"
Mabel smiled graciously. "A little healthy exercise will be a welcome novelty after the hospital routine."

But he alterrupted her. And after while she earlier. And after while she asked:

"You truly love me—not because of golf—or tennis—or polo—skating—or anything—but just because it's I—" came an accident. Bertina's skate struck against a rough plece of ice and threw her. When the others rushed to her assistance it was to find she had turned her ankle, the pain of which rendered it impossible for her to continue. Tom helped her to the bank, a passing wagon was pressed into service and in a short time Bertina found herself ensconced luxuriously on a lounge before the library fire. She refused to allow Mabel to remain, insisting that she was going to sleep: sisting that she was going to sleep; and her hostess returned to her other guests. Bertina, the pain not troubling her unless she tried to stand, decide that this was not an unmixed evil. It was growing dusk when a man entered, one she would have recognized had the room been pitch dark, she told herself; even as it was she was une to distinguish his features. The sofa was drawn to one side of the fire, in the deep shadow just outside the radius of light, and the doctor, believing he was alone, took possession of an armchair and fell to gazing into the red coals. Bertina wondered what he pictured there. And when he turned suddenly she realized a sigh had escaped her. She let her lids drop and played at sleep, watching him from beneath her lashes.

"Just because it's you, sweetheart," whisnered the doctor.

He came noiselessly toward her, and

After satisfying himself she slept, dropped to his knees and kissed softly her slender fingers. Bertina opened her eyes, and Dr. Kent pleaded boldly.

Wants Hair a Shade Darker i hope you will have time to read and auswer my letter. My hair is so very light. Would like to know of something that will make it a shade or two darker. I see you recommend the Physician's Remedy a good deal. Will you kindly let me know where to get it and how to use it, and if it will make the hair very dark? If so, should not care to use it. Inquiry About Formula

Reading the paper recently, I found a cure for undeveloped busts, in which you recommend Dr. Vaucaire's remedy. I am greatly in need of something of the kind, and intend to have the formula filled out. But I wanted to ask you if it would hurt to take it in connection with any other medicine. And also wanted to know whether it was to be taken internally or to be applied. Is this the correct recipe: Liquid extract of galega (goatsrue), 10 grains; lacto phosphate of lime, 10 grains; tincture of fennel, 10 grains; simple syrup, 400 grains. of fennel, 10 grains; simple syrup, 400 grains.

Do you think anything applied will do any harm? I am always afraid of cancers or tumors. There are lumps in my breasts. Can you give me any information as to what will remove them? I thought that if I applied some cream of some sort and gently kneaded them they would soften up. My busts are not developed much; I wish they were. I wish you to, of course, answer this by letter, as I do not wish it to appear in the paper.

Mrs. J. R. the paper. Mrs. J. R.

It will do no harm to take the Vaucaire remedy while taking other medicine. Gentle massage with a good skin food will also aid greatly in developing the bust. If the lumps in your breast that you describe do not soon disappear, I advise you to consult a reliable physician on the subject. The formula you have is correct.

Dislikes Gray Hair

Have just had the prescription for Dr. Vaucaire's remedy for the bust filled, and will you please tell me whether it is permanent? I have used oxyn balm, which guardantees to produce a pretty bust in a short time. So it does; but you have to keep on with it all the time, or it soon goes back to its old condition. Do you mean for us to have the prescription refilled, or is once sufficient? Will you please publish prescription for "fliy white" for face, or any other remedy that is not injurious and that will bleach the skin? Also, physician's remedy for hair? How to Use Henna Stain Will you please publish in the paper the henna stain recipe and how to use it? My hair is auburn, and each side of my head my hair is getting gray. From what I have seen in your column the henna stain would suit the color of my hair, don't you think so? I read your part of the paper every week with pleasure, but have never asked any questions before. Mrs. J. T. M. She is a most beautiful child; has big black eyes; but I would like you to give me a recipe to make her hair an auburn red. I do not want to bleach or dye her hair. I am a constant reader of your beauty talks, and it occurred to me to-day to ask your help in a skin trouble I have. My skin is very oily naturally, and, though I am past 40, I have no wrinkles and always have a good, bright color, and enjoy good health. My trouble is small white spots that come on and at the sides of my nose, under the skin. If I press the spots, a thick white substance comes out, leaving a little inflamed spot, which will stay for several hours. Sometimes these little spots fill and remain several days, and make the skin look very unpleasant. Then, too, the pores on my nose are enlarged. At times, when the weather is warm, as it has been the last week, these tiny red spots show on my cheek, the eft one more than the right. Can you tell me what to do to overcome the difficulty? I shall be so grateful if I can cure myself with your help.

The empty sac of the gland should then be bathed with a little toilet vinegar and water, or with a very weak solution of carbolic acid and water. Sterilize the needle before using it by dipping it into boiling water.

To Improve Wrists and Hands I am going to write to you, and hope you can help me, and answer soon. Will exercise with dumbbells help to develop and make the wrists and arms plump? My hands and wrists are all skin and bones. There is not a bit of flesh on my hands. They are always dry and full of lines and little wrinkles. The hands look very bad, and the knuckles and joints just stick out. They never looked this way before. They were a nice shape before. I have rubbed a lot of olive oil in them every night, but it doesn't do any good. I would also like to have my wrists plump. I hope you can help me and give me good advice, which I know you will. My hands and wrists look awfully bad: I am ashamed to show them. I am 20 years of age.

Formula for a Friend A friend wrote me from Indiana for your advice on obstinate freckles, and, looking through my clippings, I find it has been lost. Dextrine is the only ingredient that I remember. Will you kindly oblige a faraway reader by publishing it again in the beauty column? I repeat the formula with pleasure.

Falling Hair

I am a young man, about 20 years old, and I have been troubled with falling hair for over a year and a half. Happening to look at your column, I saw your formula for falling hair, composed of nux vomica, spirits of rosemary and alcohol, and obtained it from a druggist. I wish to ask your advice in regard to using it. My hair is dry, and I have now bare spots above the temple. I have tried several tonics and haive tried dry massage, with no result, and my hair comes out in great quantities when shampooed.

Do you think above formula, with constant massage, would do good, or would you suggest some other formula? I am in good health.

THE CARE OF HAIR BRUSHES

T IS a matter of wonder to women that they can't get a good brush, particularly a hair brush. It may be that a good price is paid for the article and it possesses a beautiful silver mounting, but the bristles come out, and even if they stay in they are so soft as to be absolutely useless. The reasons of the frailties of the average brush on the market are curious and interesting. As a matter of fact, a good brush costs money nowadays.

A man who deals in hair brushes recently told some interesting facts relative to their quality and manufacture. How to know a good brush is, he avers, as difficult for the average customer as as difficult for the average customer as to tell of the habits and customs of the North Sea Islanders.

"In selecting a brush, buy nothing but the real Russian bristles or those coming from the north of Germany," says he, "for the finest quality of bristles come from the wild boar which is found in these localities. Any one that knows anything about the trade is keenly aware of the rise in price. It has increased from 10 to 20 per cent., and the reason for this is that as the country becomes more thickly settied the boar is reason for this is that as the country becomes more thickly settied the boar is driven further and further away, and also is being quickly decimated.

"The bristles of the domestic boar can and are being used, but they lack the quality and stiffness of the wild variety.

In the latter case nature has provided a hard coating. One might well wonder how these bristles are secured. The peasants pick them up strand by strand and store them away. It is an interesting custom in Russia for the parents to keep the bristles as a dowry for their eldest daughter upon her marriage. They gather them in small bundles and tie them. To buy the bristles costs a penny each. Of course, they are much longer than one sees them in the brushes.
"French manufacturers use only the finest bristles in their brushes, a fact which some persons object to. The best brushes are made in England. Ameri-cans have not yet begun to compete with the English in this industry.

BEST BRISTLES SCARCE

"To show you the scarcity of the real Russian bristles, an agent of one of the largest English brush manufacturers recently told me that their entire stock of bristles amounted to not more than $100,000. And it was all they could get at the time for love or money. "A good deal depends upon what material is used as a backing to brushes. Nothing equals in durability a seasoned hardwood. Neither moisture, heat nor cold affects it; and, owing to the nature of the material, the bristles can be more securely fastened in. Turtle-back ebony is perhaps the best of all. It comes from South America, and from Madagascar also; is more expensive than or-dinary ebony, although the cost of transportation is the same. A big tree, perhaps, will yield only a small quan-tity, because of the fact that the heart of the wood is very apt to be decayed. Turtle-back ebony shows a faint grain, while the other is dead black. while the other is dead black,

"This brush," holding up a rather unusual-shaped hair brush, "was made for exhibition at the time of the Indian Durbar. The backing, which is mottled satinwood, was ten years being seasoned. The brush will last a lifetime. Any one similarly made should do the same. "Very few persons know how to wash a brush properly. It isn't at all necessary to immerse the whole brush. Pour tepid water into a shallow basin and wet the bristles only. Do not use soda, ammonia or borax. Instead, add a little brush powder to the water and rub the hand across the surface of the bristles while in the water. Rinse and dry with the bristles down."

Have seen Dr. Vaucaire's bust developer. Do you think it will help me to use it? Have had very flabby breasts for six years since my baby was weaned. I also saw something in the paper about malt and hot milk at night. Will you answer this in next Sunday's Beauty Column, and give full particulars about Vaucaire's developer? Why don't some of the ladies that have used it let us hear from them? I am also very flatchested.

I told her frankly that I wished to see who it was who played such absurd tricks upon us. She answered that it was some senseless practical joke, and that I should not take any notice of it.

"'If it really annoys you, Hilton, might go and travel, you and I, and so avoid this nuisance.' "'What, be driven out of our own house by a practical joker?' says I. 'Why, we should have the whole county laughing at us.'

"'Well, come to bed,' said she, 'and we can discuss it in the morning." "Suddenly, as she spoke, I saw her moonlight, and her hand tightened upon my shoulder. But there was a delay in that answering telegram, and two days of impatience followed, during which Holmes pricked up his ears at every ring of the bell. On the evening of the second there came a letter from Hilton Cubitt. All was quiet with him save that a long inscription had apful-in fact almost criminal when peared that morning upon the pedestal of the sun-dial. Here is a copy of it, which is here reproduced:

"Was it she who gave the alarm?"
"She and Mrs. King, the cook." "Where are they now "In the kitchen, I believe."

"Then I think we had better hear their story at once,' The old hall, oak-paneled and highwindowed, had been turned into a court of investigation. Holmes sat in a great, old-fashioned chair, his inexorable eyes gleaming out of his haggard face. I could read in them a set purpose to devote his life to this quest until the client whom he had failed to save should at last be avenged. The rim Inspector Martin, the old, grayheaded country doctor, myself, and a stolid village policeman made up the rest of that strange company. The two women told the their story clearly enough. They had been arous ed from their sleep by the sound of an explosion, which had been followed minute later by a second one. They slept in adjoining rooms, and Mrs King had rushed into Saunders'. gether they had descended the stairs. The door of the study was open, and candle was burning upon the table. Their master lay upon his face in the

take the very first in the morning," said Holmes. "Our presence is most urgently needed. Ah, here is our expected cablegram. One moment, Mrs. Hudson, there may be an answer. No. that is quite as I expected. This message makes it even more essential that we should not lose an hour in letting Hilton Cubitt know how matters stand, for it is a singular and dangerous web in which our simple Norfolk squire is entangled."

So, indeed, it proved, and as I come to the dark conclusion of a story which had seemed to me to be only childish and bizarre, I experience once again the dismay and horror with which I was filled. Would that I had some brighter ending to communicate to my readers, but these are the chronicles of fact, and I must follow to their dark crisis the strange chain of, events which for some days made Riding Thorpe Manor a household through the length and breadth of England.

"It's terrible business," said the stationmaster. "They are shot, both Mr. Hilton Cubitt and his wife. She shot him and then herself—so the servants say. He's dead and her life is despaired of. Dear, dear, one of the oldest families in the County of Norfolk, and one of the most honored."

Without a word Holmes hurried to a carriage, and during the long seven miles' drive he never opened his

Allow me to congratulate you upon the New Scale Williams Piane Allow me to congratulate you upon the New Scale Williams Piano; I can honestly say that the instrument is one of the best upright pianos that I have ever tried. The bass is exceptionally tich and full, while the treble possesses a bright and liquid character, at the same time the tone is well and evenly graded throughout, bespeaking workmanship of the highest class. As soon as the sterling qualities of the instrument become generally known, I feel sure that it will meet with instant success. Believe me, yours very truly,

"It suggested that at the time of the firing, the window, as well as the door of the room had been thrown open. Otherwise the fumes of powder could not have been blown so rapidly through the house. A draft in the room was necessary for that. Both door and window were only open for a very short time, however."

"How do you prove that?"

"Because the candle was not guttered."

A flower-bed extended up to the study window and we all broke into an exclamation as we approached it. The flowers were trampled down, and the soft soil was imprinted all over with footmarks. Large, masculine feet they were. With peculiarly long, sharp toes. Holmes hunted about among the grass and leaves like a retriever after a wounded bird. Then, with a cry of satisfaction, he bent forward and picked to his patients, and only the inspector and myself remained.

"I think that I can belp you to pass an hour in an interesting and profit-able manner," said Holmes, drawing his chair up to the table, and spreading out in front of him the various papers upon which were recorded the antics of the dancing men. The lady's allusions to ser past, and her refusal to take her husband into her confidence, both pointed in that direction. I therefore cabled to my friend, Wilson Hargreave, of the New York Police Bureau, who has more than once made use of my knowledge of London crime. I asked him whether the name of Abe Slaney was known to him. Here is his reply: "The most dangerous crook in Chicago." On the very evening upon which I had his answer, Hilton Cubitt sent me the last message from Slaney. Working with known letters, it took this form:

"It is a privilege to be associated with you in the handling of a case," said the inspector, warmly. "You will excuse me, however, if I speak frankly to you. You are only answerable to yourself, but I have to answer to my superiors. If this Abe Slaney, living at Elrige's, is indeed the murderer, and if he has made his escape while I am seated here, I should certainly get into serious trouble."

"I think I have known how to frame the letter," said Sherlock Holmes. "In fact, if I am not very much mistaken, here is the gentleman himself coming un the drive.".

A man was striding up the path which led to the door. He was a tall, handsome, swarthy fellow, clad in a suit of gray flannel, with a Panama hat, a bristling black beard, and a great, aggressive, hooked nose, and flourishing a cane as he walked. He swaggered up the path as if the place belonged to him, and we heard his oud, confident peal at the bell. "I think, gentlemen," said Holmes, quietly, "that we had best take up our position behind the door. Every pre-caution is necessary when dealing with such a fellow. You will need your handcuffs, Inspector. You can leave the talking to me."

We waited in silence for a minuteone of those minutes which one can never forget. Then the door opened, and the man stepped in. "But now, came the real difficulty of the inquiry. The order of the English letters after E is by no means well marked and any preponderance which may be shown in an average of a printed sheet may be reversed in a single short sentence. Speaking roughly, T, A, O, I, N, S, H, R, D, and L are the numerical order in which the letters occur; but T, A, O and I are very nearly abreast of each other, and it would be an endless task to try each combination until a meaning was arrived at. bent place in it, M. This axle can be made of a strong wire hairpin. Another hairpin will provide you with the cable to connect the blocks P. Pl with the axle.

A diagonal cut in the upright beam D will give you a place for putting the axle in place.

Now, slip a strong, flat rubber band over the two axle wheels, and tack an overhead piece on the beams D and Dl, so as to strengthen the framework.

Then tack the sand-box to the beam C. (One side has been left out in the picture so as to show you the interior of it.) Cut a hole in the bottom of it and fit into it a small funnel made of pasteboard.

Fill with sand, and the next thing you know your motor car will be working at a lively rate, and your block P will pound block Pl with merry regularity.

AROUND THE WORLD GAME

THIS is such a jolly good game that it is worth your making special preparations fer. preparations fer.

Suppose you hang on the walls a profuse number of railway maps, tourists guides, etc., which can easily be got from railway and tourist offices.

You know what a parlor car looks like. Well, suppose you arrange the chairs in the room to look as much like those in a parlor car as possible.

The hostess should dress like an official guide or gatekeeper with cap and brass buttons. As each guest appears she should give him a ticket with this inscription printed or written on it, or better yet, painted prettily, so that it will do for a souvenir:

From Jollyville to Most Any Place. Good for Continuous Trip Only. (Write the date of your party.)

At the next door should stand an official to punch the tickets and hand each guest a travelers: guide. You should have made these guides yourself previous to the party. Use several sheets of white paper, each provided with numbered lines, bound with pretty water-color paper on which you paste or paint a picture of a tourist (easily found in any magazine advertising page) and the title, "Travelers' Guide."

For instance, sometimes his mistress will say at breakfast time, "Does Charlie want his dinner?" and he answers, "Charlie wants his breakfast," or, perhaps, at supper time, she asks him, "Does Charlie want his breakfast?" and he replies, "Charlie wants his supper."

When visitors call he always greets them with "How-dy-do?" and when they leave says "Good-bye"—but when his mistress leaves, it is "Good-bye, dear."

mistress leaves, it is "Good-bye, dear."

His fond mistress has been in the habit of letting him out of his cage every day for a change, and very oftengoes all over the house with him perched on her shoulder. At such times he frequently says to her, "Come, kiss me; don't you want to?" or will vary it by saying, "Don't you want to kiss me, dear?" and then, if she turns her head, he will put his bill to her lips.

This is a mark of affection never bestowed upon any one else. In fact, some stowed upon any one else. In fact, some members of the family he dislikes very much, and when they come near his cage and tease him—as they semetimes do—he screams and ruffles up his feathmanner.

Charlie is a very vain bird, but a very charlie is a very vain bird, but a very clean one, and enjoys his bath nearly every morning, after which he spends much time preening his feathers, and when he is dry and every feather in place, he will say in the most complacent tone. "Charlie's a pretty boy; pretty, pretty, Charlie, mama's pretty child."

ers and jumps around in the most angry

Once when his mistress was moving his cage was put in a dark room, from which everything had been removed. Charlie evidently did not appreciate this kind of treatment, for when in the evening she came in to see how he was getting along, he said in the most disgusted manner, "What's the matter?"

When the stork brought a little baby girl to the home of his mistress, not long ago, Charlis at once became very jealous. Whenever he catches a glimpse of this wee baby or hears her crying he ruffles up his feathers and gives vent to the most angry and disagreeable shrieks.

But one day he further showed his But one day he further showed his jealousy by doing something he had never done before, and which sealed his doom, for then his mistress decided to part with him. When she was carrying him around the house as usual on her shoulder the baby happened to cry, and it enraged him so much that he walked down her arm and deliberately took a nip out of the back of her hand. The pain was so great that in throwing out her arm with great force she caused Charlie to land under a bed, where for some time he remained sulking and saying, "Poor Charlie, poor boy."

After this display of bad temper he was put back in his cage, and there Charlie will likely be kept until his mistress decides upon a new home for him. This will probably be in a country house where there are no babies or other pets to excite his jealousy.

them tells what Phyllis learned about minnows.

Phyllis and her mother were left alone at their summer cottage one day. Her father and brother Jack took the boat in length, and more often they are only a few inches.

"The hornyhead is a sort of minnow which is common in almost all of our smail streams. Every boy or girl who goes 'a-fishing' knows this fish; although he may not know its name. It is very active, and is most easily caught with a hook baited with an angleworm.

When except it makes a great fight for at sunrise and went across to the other end of the lake to fish.

As they expected to sit out in the boat all day, mamma thought Phyllis would do better to stay with her.

Phyllis was quite disappointed at first; for with her father and Jack as teachers, she was becoming quite a little fisherwoman. She had learned to bait her hooks and take the fishes off as well as Jack

So mamma sat down on the rock beside Phyllis, and all was quiet for a while. Then the float began to bob up and down quite alarmingly.
"Sh-h!" said Phyllis: "you must keep!

lis; "you must keep still or you'll scare them away!"

Another bobbing of the float, and Phyllis gave a jerk which threw the fish straight against mamma's face.
"Oh. I beg your pardon, mamma," cried Phyllis. "Is it a whale?" mamma asked, as she wiped the water away.
"Well, really—" began Phyllis, and then she began to laugh, for the fish she had

When caught it makes a great fight for so small a creature. It is probably a hornyhead which you caught."
"The minnows have beautiful colors," said Phyllis. "I caught one a few days ago, and its back was bluish green and its sides a bright green, with glints of gold where the light struck it. Underneath it was pale, but not exactly silvery. Its fins were a pale red yellow."

"That was a hornyhead," said mamma. "In the spring the males have great of crimson on each side of their a spot of crimson on each side of their heads and a rosy tinge on the under a spot of crimson on each side of their heads and a rosy tinge on the under part of the body."
"Well," said Phyllis, as she cast in her hook for another bite, "I think more of minnows than I did."

United States Consul Atwell writes from

ment: "Justin Muller read a paper recently before the Industrial Society of Muihouse on certain printed goods, the warp of which is composed of cotton, and the woof of a thread made from wood pulp. These goods were introduced almost four years ago. At the outset sheets of wood pulp paper were cut into finest shreds and twisted into thread by machines made for the purpose. Lately the paper process has been abandoned, and the wood pulp is passed directly over grooved metal sheets, forming very thin ribbons, which pass in turn over a machine that twists them

"Dishcloths are made of this thread in connection with homp and the mixture is washed, dyed and printed. While wet the wood pulp softens; but recovers its resistance in drying. There are already manufactories for the production of wood fibre thread in Germany, Spain and Netherlands, and France will shortly have a factory. It is thought that this thread may be used advantageously in the manufacture of passementerie, and that it may replace jute and cotton in the composition of many articles."

Here is a jolly cut-out stunt. When you have learned to do it quickly and well, i will be a nice kind of surprise for you to spring on your friends. It is all in the folding. Follow the pictures and you can do it.

The dynamometric resistance of this thread in a dry state, taking 100 as the resistance of jute threads, is equal to about 55; that of cotton thread in a dry state is 135. The difference is widely in favor of jute and cotton; but it is thought that improvements may increase the resistance of the wood pulp thread. As it is to be used only in mixed goods great resistance is not of essential importance.

WILLIE WESTINGHOUSE'S AUTO LIFE-SAVING DEVICE

Dear Tommy—This is a diagram of an automobile safety bag which I designed.

I attached it to our auto on the quiet and made a dash for one of the twins.

It picked him up without a jar, but nearly scared Papa and Jim into fits.

When Papa saw how it worked he coaxed Jim into being saved.

But it wasn't strong enough, and Jim went right through it, head first.

He landed on Papa, but neither was hurt—they were only scared.
