A WARM WEEK.

The Mercury Dancing Around Ninety.

Since last Friday the heat has been unusually great for Goderich. On Saturday the stores did not do their usual amount of business, as many ladies felt unable to do their customary shopping. The evening congregations were smaller than usual in the churches on Sunday, and preacher and people suffered from the sultry atmosphere. At the Park the heat appeared to be as intense as it was up town. The very waters of the lake seemed to be too lazy to form a wave. It was very warm.

On Monday the heat was unabated. On Tuesday the thermometer ran over ninety, and the people asked "How long is this going to last?"

Wednesday was as hot as any pre-vious day. The sun glared fiercely down from a cloudless sky, and at noon witted manand beast, and the early vegetables in the grocery windows.

The afternoon was the most remark-

The sun grew as red as blood; the sky changed to a murky yellow, then to a dingy pea green, and finally turned to a bluish, leaden-grey tint.

At three o'clock a photograph could not be taken. A gentleman sat in vain for a picture, and so strange was the color of the sun-light that no shadow could be secured. The spotless white shirt front, when viewed through the instrument, looked yellow-a color over which photography has no power:

On Thursday a sprinkling of rain came, but although there was less sunshine, the atmosphere was close and stifling all day. The air is filled with smoke from surrounding bush fires, and citizens report cinders of a light fleecy nature falling at times in town. The wells are going dry all about own. In fact it is said that certain poor skinflints are selling water. A fire at present would likely make a great sweep. The scarcity of water would almost lay the town at the mercy of the flames.

But Madgie was not lonely. She loved Woodlands, loved to wander all day through the gardens, with a volume of poetry or an old romance in her hand, loved the dreamy solitude, which she peopled with heroes and heroines of her wholly impracticable individuals.

But with all her sentiment, Madgie was very charming, and it was not surprising that Dr. Bentinck, despite his being her guardian, and a poor, struggling doctor into the bargain, should fall in love with her. It was what every one expected, and Madgie herself was the only one astonished or unprepared when one day, in a plain, honest fashion, he told her of his love, and asked her to be his wife. It was as if Madgie had been awakened from a very pleasant dream by a rough shake. During the two years she had been at Woodlands she had become accustomed to the doctor. He had always been at hand to consult, to confide in, and take all responsibility off her shoulders. FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1881.

THE HURON SIGNAL. With this issue THE SIGNAL enters of its second year under our management. On the 1st of September, 1880, the present proprietors assumed control of the journal, and a complete change was the result. The typographical "make-up," as well as the general style and tone of the paper, was at once changed, and resulted in the production of a muchimproved sheet, viewed from a literary as well as a mechanical standpoint. Immediately after the publication of the first issue under our control, we received a congratulatory letter from the then Mayor, B. L. Doyle, Esq., testifying to the great improvements made by us in THE SIGNAL, mechanically and otherwise: and time and again have similar expressions of appreciation been received by us from other sources. From the pay indirectly. very outset the subscription list increased, and the alvertising custom grew larger, until to-day we occupy a position second to few Provincial journals.

Our object has been to provide a wideawake, newsy journal for this section of the country, and we take pride in knowing that our efforts have not been in vain, if the increased business which has been our portion can be looked upon as a fair criterion.

With confidence we now enter the coming year, in the firm belief that, as in the past our conduct of THE HURON SIGNAL has merited the approval of the reading public in this section, so will onr efforts to produce a well-printed newsy, cleanly-written family journal be appreciated as fully in the time to

IS IT DISLOYALTY?

SIR Hector Langevin, at the dinner given in his honor by the Town Council of Goderich on Thursday of last week, endeavored to prove that the abolition of the Senate would knock the principal pillar from under the structure raised at Confederation. The Speaker gave a history of the consummation of Confederation, and gave reasons why the Senate was formed, but omitted to mention a single instance wherein the Upper Chamber had showed that it was of any service whatever. We have always contended, and will continue so to do, (notwithstanding the special pleading of the Hon. Minister of Public Works in its behalf) that the Senate is of no practical use in the government of the country, and were every member in it to be called hence in a day, no clog would result to the wheels of Government. Possibly it was right that soft seats should be inade for a number of worn-out political hacks at the time of Confederation, but the necessity for perpetuating the nuisance has long ago ceased to exist. Our Tory friends, in Ontario, who despair of ever holding power in this intelligent Prowince, are eternally bewailing the fact that we are too much governed, and are anxious to abolish the Provincial Legislature-perhaps the most useful House of all, so far as we are concerned. Surely they must be aware that our Legislatures were given us under the self same Act as the Senate, and that if the advocacy of the abolition of the Senate is disloyal, murmuring against the Legislature is equally disloyal. For our own part, we believe that advocating any constitutional change is not a disloval act, and we are willing to see any House abolished as soon as "its usein the Government of Canada.

As an evidence of the kindly feeling entertained by the people of Canada toward their cousins on the other side of United States," was proposed at the recent banquet in Goderich to the Minister of Public Works; a sympathetic exhibition was observable throughout the the tender tribute paid to the wounded President by Hon. A Stratford Citizen in Goderich.

Our citizen spent last Sabbath in Go erich and was favorably impress with the locality. Tourists, picnickers and persons in quest of pure air and dis tance from the gabbling crowd, he thinks would do well to visit Goderich. Hewas delighted with the lake, and spent several hours on its shores meditating on the mutability of all mundane things. was charmed with the stillness of the place, and invigorated by the delicious the lake as they gently swept over its surface. He wonders why the good folks of the "lake city" should shut out from the view of the visitors, by high close board fences, their trim well kept lower gardens. Do they grudge the traveller a peep at the flo concealed by these unsig these unsightly fences Wandering around the city and its suburbs he came upon many a nook and quiet little landscape which quite enchanted him and made wish tage with woodbine twined on the banks now 10 feet of water and where vessels have loaded nearly 200 cords of tanbark. But barring this little draw-back, he found them a kind, hospitable people. He was sorry, however, to find that the grave yard of the English church was allowed to fall into a state of dila-pidation and ruin. He thinks the people might take little trouble to garnish and keep in repair the sepulchres of their fathers. Altogether he was delighted with his visit and recommends everybody in quest of health, good scenery, good hotel accommodation, and plenty of sea room, to vlsit Goderich.—[Advertiser.

"Asleep in Jesus," as I gazed
Upon her peaceful smiling face,
I felt' twas sinful thus toweep,
Since she had found a resting piace,

When wildly tossing with her pain.

Her fevered longings were for rest,
We sought to sooth her, all a vain;
She sleeps at last, on Jesus ast.

Her childhood's home she wandered through Her childhood songs the changes rang, Telling how sweet the daisies grew, How sweet the merry bird had sang

Oh may, thy gentle spirit lure
To brighter realms thy treasures here,
And in that world where love is pure,
May all at last in joy appear.

WM. DURNIN, WEST WAWANDSH, AGED YEARS, 1 MONTH, 8 DAYS.

Death is working all around us, He is working at our door, He has taken off our brother, To that other happy shore.

He was lately bright and happy, Gliding down the stream of life; Now he lies a withered flower, Faded by a blast of death.

Yes, our comrade's taken early, Coming into prime of life, All reminding those around him, That their time is very brief.

We had met an i we had parted, Just one week before his death Little did we dream we parted For the last time on this earth.

Yes, we're very early parted, By the great God in his loves, But we hope to be united, In the heavenly home above.

"I don't want that paper, it has too many advertisements; I want general reading; I don't care for advertisements. Such are the remarks one sometimes hear, about newspapers. Do the good people who speak in this way ever reflect on the fact that without advertisements no newspaper could exist for any length of time? The amount obtained from the patrons of a paper as mere subscriptions, would not buy the paper on which it is printed and oil the machinery which prints it. By adver-tisements and advertisements mainly a newspaper is maintained, and without such patronage the most enterprising and judiciously managed journal would speedily languish and die—unless its publisher happened to be blessed with abundant private capital. Hence the absurdity of condemning a newspaper because its columns are well supplied with advertisements. Considering the important service rendered to the community in general by well-conducted newspapers, business and professional men patronize them far too little. A liberal advertising patronage is the best possible thing for the reader as well as for the publisher, as it enables the latter to keep the other departments of his newspaper whose advertising columns are sparsely filled conveys an impression the reverse of favorable of the community in which it is published.

But after all, are advertisements of no special interests to the general reader? It is present to the general reader? It is published.

special interest to the general reader? It action is necessary in order to retain and is far otherwise. A commercial or pro-fessional man who does not carefully scan the advertising columns of his local paper does not know his business.

About the first thing a keen, shrewd, live man of business does when he lifts a newspaper is to peruse the new adverements, whether they relate to the line in which he is engaged or not. There is no better index of the business prosperity of a town or city than the advertising columns of a local newspaper. If these are pretty full of stirring an-nouncements it may be inferred that things are pretty lively. If there is no life or animation in that department of the paper, no matter how full and sparkling the editorial columns or how pi quant may be the home and news items, the reader may conclude that there is not much prosperity in that community. We can form a pretty accurate idea of the state of trade in any town in Ontario any week in the year, by glancing at the advertising columns of our exchanges.
