House of Commons Debates

FOURTH SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 1, 1904

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

NAPOLEON BRIDGE OVER LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. RIVET asked :

1. Has the government given instructions to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals to inquire into the causes of delay in the construction of the Napoleon bridge over the Lachine canal ?
2. If so, has the deputy minister made a report on the subject ?
3. If so, what is the nature of that report ?
4. Is the government preparing to take the necessary steps to bring about the immediate execution of those works ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I understand that the Railway Department is attending to this matter, but I cannot give the precise information that my hon. friend asks for to-day.

SITE FOR DRILL HALL AT ST. JOHN.

Mr. DANIEL—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Did the Minister of Militia, or any other member of the government, authorize any officer of the militia, or other person in St. John, N.B., to obtain an option on the Chipman or other site in that city at any time ; the object in view being the location for a new drill hall ?
2. If so, was such option obtained, and what was the price named ?
3. Was an engineer officer sent to St. John, N.B., at any time within the last four years to report on the above-named Chipman site and other sites ?
4. If so, what was his report ?
5. Is it the intention of the government to erect a new drill hall in St. John, N.B. ?
6. If so, when will such construction be commenced, and on what location ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. No, so far as the Minister of Militia is concerned.
2. (a) An option was reported as having been obtained ; (b) The price asked for the whole property is not known to the department, but the sum of $3,250 was asked for the small lot on which the house stands.
3. Yes.
4. The chief engineer of the department proceeded to St. John to report on several proposed sites not owned by the government. Of such proposed sites he recommended the Chipman property. He did not report as to whether this site was to be preferred to the present drill shed site.
5. Yes.
6. Matter is under consideration.

MONUMENTS ON PARLIAMENT HILL.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

In view of his important services to the country, in the making of the Dominion, of his great talent and eloquence, and especially of his sterling patriotism, is it the intention of the government to honour the memory of the late Hon. Thomas D'Arcy McGee, and through him people of Irish birth and descent in this Dominion, by the erection of a suitable statue to him on Parliament Hill, as has been done in the cases of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Etienne Carter and the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It is the intention of the government to erect on Parliament Hill monuments to the great characters in the history of the Dominion, and, of course, Mr. McGee would be included amongst them.

YUKON—EDMONTON ROUTE.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. In connection with the rush to the Yukon gold fields in 1897, were any communications received by the government, or any member thereof, in the year named or the following year, advocating the Edmonton route as a means of reaching the Yukon ?
2. If so, from whom were these communications received ?
3. What is the nature of these communications ?
4. What action was taken upon them ?
5. Did the government cause to be published a pamphlet descriptive of the Edmonton route to the Yukon ?
6. Did the government cause a notice to be issued warning people of the dangers of the route in question to inexperienced persons ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Yes.
2. From the boards of trade of Edmonton, Winnipeg and London ; the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories ; the town councils of Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg; and the municipality of Springfield, Manitoba.

3. They recommend the Edmonton route on account of the advantages which would accrue to Canada by its adoption.

4. A small body of Northwest Mounted Police, in command of Inspector J. D. Moodie, was detailed to test the route in the year 1897. His report is contained in the annual report of the Northwest Mounted Police for 1898. A grant of $15,000 was voted by parliament during the session of 1898 toward the construction of a trail from Edmonton towards the Yukon Territory, which was expended by the government of the Northwest Territories.

5. No pamphlet was issued especially dealing with the Edmonton route. A pamphlet entitled 'The Klondike Official Guide' was prepared by Wm. Ogilvie, D.L.S., and published in 1898 by authority of the Department of the Interior. It contains a description of the various routes to the Yukon, and, among others, gives some description of the Edmonton route.

6. The government neither advised nor discouraged travel by the Edmonton route. The information at the disposal of the government was placed before the public, so that travellers might judge for themselves.

MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN CAPES TRAVERSE AND TORMENTINE.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Hackett—asked:

1. How many men were employed in carrying the mails by the iceboats between Capes Traverse and Tormentine during the winter of 1904?

2. What are the names and respective post office addresses of the men so employed?

3. What was the amount of wages paid to each, and were they paid by the day or by the trip?

4. Who had the contract for carrying the mails between the shore and the iceboats at Cape Traverse during the winter of 1904; also between the iceboats and the shore?

5. How was said contractor employed, by so much per diem or by the round trip?

6. If by the day, how much was paid? If by the trip, the cost of same?

7. What was the total amount paid to the contractor for said services?

8. When did this service commence, and on what date did it cease; and on how many days were the mails carried by the capes?

9. On how many days did the steamships 'Stanley' and 'Minto' fail in crossing between Georgetown and Pictou during the winter of 1904, and what were the dates of same?

10. While mails were carried by the capes, on how many days did the boats fail in crossing?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). If the hon. gentleman will move for a return, the papers will be laid on the table of the House in a very short time. The information is very voluminous.

Mr. CLARKE.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the government whether or not any counsel are being employed on the investigation which is now proceeding before Judge Winchester? I have only a knowledge of the character of the proceedings by what I see in the daily press, and I would gather from this that while the people are not represented by counsel the corporation particularly interested is represented by counsel in some of the proceedings at least. I would not think that an investigation of that kind would probably be very effective or that we would get at the bottom of the facts which we desire to be made public unless counsel are employed to assist the judge. A man in the judicial position of Judge Winchester, because he is assuming a judicial position in this investigation, could not very well be expected to properly cross-examine the witnesses called before him. I do not know what the character of the examination is except from what I observe in the daily press, but if the examination of these witnesses is of the character reported, then I would venture to say that the investigation will not amount to very much, and the facts will not be elicited. It is absolutely impossible for the government to establish the facts as they should be established if they simply have important witnesses summoned before Judge Winchester and have that judge administer to these witnesses interrogatories of the somewhat mild and not very far-reaching character which are reported in the press. It may be that the press is not doing him justice, but the investigation is hardly worthy of the name if it is going on as reported in the press. If the investigation is designed to be thorough, I would suppose that the facts would be put into possession of counsel, and that these witnesses would be subject to cross-examination, so that we may have a report in which parliament might afterwards place some confidence as having been thorough and exhaustive. It may be that counsel are employed, but the report in the press does not indicate that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can give no information to my hon. friend upon this subject. I will have to confer with the Minister of Labour, and probably to-morrow, I will let my hon. friend know.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. While Judge Winchester is running around the country on a fool's errand, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that if he goes to work and gets Mr. Hays and the auditor of the Grand Trunk to have a statement prepared by one of their clerks, of the names of all the employees on this engineering staff, then in five minutes the House and the country will know who these gentlemen are and where they come from. That will not cost five cents, whereas this commission of Judge Winchester, judging from other commissions, will cost the country probably several thousands of dollars, and will be a whitewashing, delaying institution when it is through.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend object to this commission ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I certainly do object to any such person being sent around this country, and I am satisfied that the taxpayers of this country will object to it. We don't want these judges taken from their jobs. We want them to attend to the business we pay them for doing, and it would suit the country better if they did that.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. WILLIAM ROCHE.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I rise for the purpose of making a personal explanation. Yesterday, in the course of the debate, I stated that the hon. member for Lennox had controverted some remarks which I had made. He said that he could'nt have done so, because he had spoken before me. I then said that that gentleman like some others in the House, after he had made his main speech, added a number of little speeches or speechlets. I afterwards said that I was merely speaking from memory, and if my statement was not correct, I would make any explanation necessary to the hon. gentleman. I was not certain at the time, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) was followed by my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), who made the following remarks :—

I would remind the junior member for Halifax (Mr. William Roche) that he is mistaken when he thinks that the hon. member for Lennox followed him last year with his speech or even with a speechlet. There is no record of either such speech or speechlet. But I can tell him that the hon. gentleman who did follow him and who criticised his language very severely was the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

That was a direct contradiction of what I had said, and I take the liberty now of referring the hon. gentleman to page 610 of the Debates on which he will see that the hon. member for Lennox made three little speechlets in the course of the debate, and that on page 615 he made five additional little speechlets. Now, my reputation being assailed and I have been directly contradicted without warrant, an explanation is due from the hon. member (Mr. Ingram), and if that is the method in which he pursues investigation, then if he contradicts me on some future occasion, he had better have his facts more under control of his volition.

Mr. INGRAM. I still adhere to the statement I made yesterday, and the record will prove my statement to be correct. The hon. gentleman from Lennox was afterwards speaking on an item in the estimates, and which affected the question of immigration.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. It was the same debate on his motion, and he afterwards reaffirmed his previous statement.

Mr. INGRAM. The record will prove that the statement I made yesterday was correct, and if the record does not prove that I am willing to apologize. I defy the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Roche) to read from the record exactly the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Lennox.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. My hon. friend said that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) made neither speech nor speechlet, but the record shows that he made eight speechlets.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. I have not the book here ; the gentlemen on the other side of the House have it.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST—TOWN OF WESTMOUNT.

Mr. L. A. A. RIVET (Hochelaga) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of Finance and the town of Westmount, concerning the purchase of debentures of the Montreal Turnpike Trust.

He said in making this motion, I want to draw the attention of the government to the position which the town of Westmount occupies with regard to the Montreal Turnpike Trust. Some time ago the question of the Montreal Turnpike Trust was raised in this House by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I do not intend to reopen that question; I want simply to state the fact that a few years ago the town of Westmount made a commutation with the Montreal Turnpike Trust, whereby the tolls which existed in that municipality were commuted in an annual sum that was calculated according to the amount of interest on the capital of the debentures covering the portion of the road situated within the limits of the municipality of Westmount. The capital of such debentures was about $6,800 on which the interest at six per cent was $408 per year, which sum has since been annually paid by Westmount to the Montreal Turnpike Trust, under that commutation, &c., &c. Under that commutation the town of Westmount secured the control, to a certain extent of that portion of the road within its limits, and the toll-gates were removed. By that commutation the town of Westmount undoubtedly bettered its position, because the toll-gates were an encumbrance, not only to the citizens of Westmount, but to the public at large. It is admitted on all sides that in the neighbourhood of Montreal and on the island of Montreal generally, the toll-gate system is antiquated, and the public at large are looking for its removal.

However, I do not say that this system could be got rid of unless we are satisfied that the roads which are under the control of the Montreal Turnpike Trust would be kept in as good order as they are at the present time. I am not prepared to say that the Montreal Turnpike Trust has not kept these roads in good order. Far from that, it is a well known fact that the system of toll-gates of the Montreal Turnpike Trust has done a good deal in the way of improving the roads on the island of Montreal, and that fact has had much to do with the prosperity of the farmers around Montreal. I am not going to enter into that question. I wish simply to say that the town of Westmount wants to secure the full control of its roads, and in order to obtain that end, it asks to purchase a certain amount of the debentures held by the government. The object of such a purchase is to enable the town to set up in compensation a claim which would be equal to the trust's claim resulting from the above commutation. The town of Westmount has asked the trust to pay to it the capital of the commutation. The trust has refused to accept that offer, alleging want of authority to alienate the whole or part of the roads under its control. A statute was passed by the legislature of Quebec authorizing the town of Westmount to pay the capital to the trust. In spite of that statute, the Turnpike Trust refuses still to accept the capital of the commutation. The town of Westmount now desires to buy an amount of the debentures equal to the amount of the commutation which has been made with the Turnpike Trust. Some correspondence has been exchanged between the town of Westmount and the Finance Minister, I understand, and I ask that a copy of that correspondence be laid on the table of the House. I think the town of Westmount is fairly entitled to better its situation, and to have a chance of securing control of the road that belongs to the Turnpike Trust.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Of course, there can be no objection to the motion of my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet). The correspondence will be brought down. My recollection is that the town of Westmount asked us to fix a price on a portion of the securities of the Montreal Turnpike Trust. In our judgment, it was not good policy to fix a price for a portion of the securities; but we were quite open to receive any proposal for dealing with the whole question from the provincial authorities, the municipalities, or any one else concerned in the administration of the roads. Therefore it was not deemed expedient to name a price to this municipality for a portion of the debentures. However, the correspondence will be brought down promptly.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). This motion affords another instance of the necessity of the government interfering with regard to the road system on the island of Montreal. The situation of Westmount is a very peculiar one. It has commuted a considerable portion of what was formerly a road and is now an important street in that municipality for a certain sum paid to the Montreal Turnpike trustees. It pays every year a certain sum which is supposed to represent a proportion of the amount of the bonds which are now in the hands of the Dominion government. That is supposed to be the interest due every year to the Dominion government as the proprietor of those bonds. That interest, however, is not paid over to the Dominion government. It is kept and used for the administration of the road actually controlled by the trustees of the Montreal Turnpike Trust. The town is obliged, moreover, under its legal agreement to keep that piece of road in perfect order under the direction of the trustees, and it has no absolute control over it. It has to execute works upon that street —lay water pipes, gas pipes, sidewalks and pavements; and it can do nothing at all because the street is not its property, not having been transferred to it under a title which would admit of its dealing with it as it deals with other streets in the municipality. As I have stated again and again in this House, these debentures or bonds are worth absolutely nothing, because they cannot be realized upon. The only recourse the holder of them, the Dominion government, would have, would be to take possession of the road and have a receiver appointed to collect the tolls. These tolls might pay a portion of the interest, but, on the other hand, the road would be absolutely neglected, and that state of affairs would not continue for more than a month or two. So that on the market these bonds are worth practically nothing. The town of Westmount has asked the Minister of Finance to fix a value upon the portion of bonds upon the piece of road which it holds under a commutation deed from the trustees, and it is ready to pay the amount of that valuation in order to obtain possession of the road at once, and deal with it as it does with the rest of the streets of the town. The Minister of Finance has refused to accede to that request. At first the Minister of Finance asked the town of Westmount to place a value on the bonds. The town did so, and since then, so far as I am aware, nothing has been done. The town offered more than the actual value of the bonds, but the offer has been refused by the department. I do not think that is fair. I think that the offer of the town to pay the market value of the bonds is a fair offer, and should be accepted by the department. I would like to add that the situation of the town of Westmount is very much the same as that of several other municipalities. There is a similar arrangement with the town of Verdun in my constituency. In fact, in every suburb of Montreal, in order to get rid of the intolerable nuisance of toll-gates in a very much frequented locality, an arrangement of a similar kind has been made; and I think it would be the duty of the government, by an audit of the accounts of the trustees or by the appointment of a commissioner or in some other way to get at an absolute knowledge of the real value of these bonds, and accede to the request of these different municipalities.

I repeat, what I have frequently said on other occasions, that I think the Dominion government, which controls entirely the corporation of the trustees—because, although the corporation is incorporated by provincial authority, the government appoints the majority of the trustees—should inquire into the administration of the road system and use the power it possesses by the fact that it is the holder of all the bonds and thus controls the operation of the board, to have legislation adopted by the provincial parliament which would abolish once and for all the system of toll-gates, and give us the same system on the Island of Montreal as has been established around every important city of the continent of America.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). Some time ago I put a question on the paper asking how much the government received annually from the Quebec Central Railway Company for the passage of its trains over the Intercolonial from Harlaka to Lévis and any other services. I was asked to move for a return and therefore I beg to move for—

A copy of all statements, documents and papers showing how much the government has received annually from the Quebec Central Railway Company from 1896 to 31st December, 1903: (a) for the passage of its trains over the Intercolonial from Harlaka to Lévis; (b) for the storage of its freight; (c) for water supplies; (d) for any other services.

Motion agreed to.

RESIGNATION OF HENRY GOODRICK.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for:

Copy of all correspondence between the post office authorities and Henry Goodrick, of Mount Royal Vale, in reference to his resignation as a post office employee?

He said: This is a motion for papers in connection with the resignation of a postal employee in the city of Montreal, who seems to have been compelled to tender his resignation under circumstances of very great hardship. The correspondence seems to cover only four or five pages and can be very easily brought down. I would like it to be brought down as soon as possible so that when the estimates of the Post Office Department are taken up, I will be in a position to expose the grievance in this matter.

Motion agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—PAPERS RE CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton) moved for:

Copies of all papers and documents in the possession of the government, not already brought down, and of whatever character or description, relating to the proposed National Transcontinental Railway; to any proposals to construct the whole or any part of such railway; to any application for aid in the construction of all or any part and parts of such railway to the submission of any such proposals to parliament; and all correspondence relating to the matters aforesaid.

He said: This motion is almost identical with others made on previous occasions by members of this House, but I have inserted a few words in it, which are not to be found in the others. I have inserted them for a special purpose, and I desire to draw attention to them and also explain why I have thought it necessary to insert them. I ask for all the papers and documents in the possession of the government, not already brought down, relating to the Transcontinental Railway, 'of whatever character or description.' Those words were not in the previous motion, and as perhaps there may be documents and papers in the possession of the government which have not been brought down, because of the absence of these words, I make the present motion.

An excuse was given for the non-production of a certain document to which I shall presently refer, but in the meantime I wish to point out that I insert these words so that in the event of this motion being carried and the order made as asked for, there shall be no doubt whatever that the House will be entitled to every paper relating to this matter, of whatever character or description it may be. I think it must have been a matter of extreme surprise to members of both sides, after the answers we have had from time to time by the right hon. the First Minister to questions put him in this House and after the statement made by him regarding the production of papers—the very emphatic and most unusual statement made by him in that regard—that the Finance Minister a few days ago should have brought to this House a most important document which had been in the possession of the government some eighteen months, which came expressly within the terms of the order of the House, but which had been held back and concealed from the House. I do not think, having regard to the statement made, that I am going too far when I say that the existence of this document was concealed from the House. The right hon. gentleman, in answer to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) said, after repeated questions, that every document had been brought down. He went on to say, 'without any equivocation at all,' that every paper had been produced, and he said that knowing at the time that the government was in possession of and keeping back a document of the utmost importance to the public interest in relation to the matter we were then discussing. That document was an application on behalf of the Grand Trunk Pacific, setting forth proposals for the construction of a large portion of the Transcontinental Railway, stating the terms and conditions on which it would build the proposed railway, stating them with almost as much exactness and particularity as you would find in an Act of parliament, and going on then to ask for aid from the government in the construction of the work.

One has only to read the terms of the proposition to see how exceedingly important the production of that paper was, how wrong it was to keep it back, and what bearing it would have had upon the discussion that went on for weeks last year and again for weeks during the present session. The document was dated as far back as November, 1902. The other day it was referred to almost as if it was a private letter addressed by two or three gentlemen to the right hon. Prime Minister personally. I propose to read two or three clauses to show how far such a description was from the fact. It begins :

Your petitioners desire to memorialize your government in regard to the construction of a first-class line of railway from the northern terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway, at, or near, North Bay, Ont., through to the Pacific coast.

That is the opening clause. It goes on :

It is considered very desirable in the public interest—

There are emphatic words showing the public nature of the document.

—that there should be, without any unnecessary delay, a second transcontinental railway reaching from the Atlantic ocean to the Pacific ocean, in order that additional facilities may be provided for the large growing business of the Northwest—

And here are some very significant words, having regard to the discussion of last year and this year :

—which might otherwise find its outlet through American channels.

Why, Sir, that was the subject that was discussed and debated on both sides of this House for weeks, the question whether traffic might be diverted from Canadian to American channels ; and that, Sir, these petitioners, pointed out as a danger that they proposed to guard this country against.

Mr. BARKER.

And yet we were discussing this matter time and time again, week after week, without having the benefit of putting this testimony, from the very mouths of these gentlemen, before the House. Then, it goes on :

2nd. That your petitioners propose, as soon as authorized by your government, to undertake the construction of such a line from North Bay, Ont. (or some other point north thereof, to be defined), to the Pacific coast, the terminus to be at or near Port Simpson, with all necessary branches along the route, to be designated.

Then comes clause 3, another significant one :

3rd. That your petitioners, therefore, ask that their application for authority to construct such a line of railway, to be called the 'Grand Trunk Pacific Railway' shall be granted.

This in a 'private,' 'confidential,' 'personal' document. Did not these gentlemen who signed this petition, Mr. Hays, railway manager, Mr. Cox, president, I think, of several railway companies in his time, and Mr. Wainwright, an officer of a railway company who, for a quarter of a century, has been doing business before this House in relation to charters, know to whom they were really applying for authority to construct a line of railway. Did these gentlemen imagine, in their innocence, that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) could authorize the construction of the railway ? Did these gentlemen suppose that the government, with all the power they assume to themselves, could authorize the construction of a railway ? No, Sir ; the only body that could authorize the construction of the railway was this parliament. And, with that clause in their petition, they intended that petition to be not merely for the government but for parliament, the only body that could grant their prayer. I will read a couple of other clauses that would have been of vast importance to gentlemen on this side of the House in their discussions and also, I think, to the people. One of them is as follows :—

8th. That in order to provide for connection with the Atlantic sea-board all the year round and through an all-British territory route, your petitioners will be prepared to enter into an arrangement with the government for an interchange of traffic, or other satisfactory agreement, with the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, or to consider such other proposal as the government may submit.

Let me read with that an even more significant clause. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this application is on behalf of the Grand Trunk Pacific and not in behalf of the Grand Trunk :

9th. That your petitioners would have the advantage of all the eastern connections, in Ontario and Quebec, of the Grand Trunk Railway, and by this means on the completion of the transcontinental line there would be established and opened up a complete system from ocean to ocean.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what does that mean ? Here we have the Grand Trunk Pacific proposing to build a line from Port Simpson to North Bay. They point out to the government that they would have the advantage, as they call it—and it certainly would be an enormous advantage—of the connections through Ontario and Quebec of the existing Grand Trunk Railway, whereby, of course, they would reach Montreal. And, under clause 8 they tell the government that they were ready to make such arrangements that their traffic arriving at Montreal would there be turned over to the Intercolonial. Why, Sir, to say that that is not an important matter for this House to consider when discussing this transcontinental railway is merely trifling with words. There could be nothing more important, I venture to say, in the whole of the discussion we had last year, than the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific were prepared to build to North Bay or to a point north of North Bay, and that, as to such traffic as should come through Ontario and arrive at Montreal, instead of its being left open to the great risk—the more than risk, the absolute certainty—of most of it going to Portland, they would enter into an arrangement with the government whereby it should go over the Intercolonial to Canadian seaports. Why, Sir, that was the very thing we were spending weeks in contending for, and if that document had been produced, we should have been able to show that the government had had submitted to them. Yet, we are told that nothing in this document affected the question. What did the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) say ?

> I want to know was there anything in that correspondence—

That is what he calls this petition.

> —which, if it had been brought down would have been of any service to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House ?

Why, what could have been of more service than the production of these two clauses to show that it was within the power of the government to arrange that every pound of traffic that should go over the Grand Trunk Pacific to Montreal would be secured for Canadian ports ? He says :

> Is there anything in it which would have helped them in the discussion?

Well, I think if we had had an opportunity of using it the hon. gentleman would have heard the proposal discussed pretty fully.

This document proposed arrangements for the construction of a railway from the Pacific to North Bay, subsidized by the country, and it proposed the use of the Grand Trunk thence to Montreal, with arrangements to deliver the traffic to the Intercolonial Railway for carriage from Montreal to the Atlantic ports through Canadian territory—and all this he thinks did not concern us. Is there anything in it, he says, which could have helped them in the discussion ?

The right hon. gentleman adds :

> This confidential letter was in my own possession. This is the explanation which I have to give to my hon. friends.

And that is the only explanation we get for the non-production of a document of such vast importance.

The hon. the Finance Minister, shortly after reading the document in full to this House, said :

> We have not been dealing with any scheme touched by that document whatever.

He seems to have given so little heed to the discussion with regard to the danger of the diversion of the traffic from Canadian to American ports, that he could not see that these clauses, 8 and 9, had any bearing upon the subject. Well, I must say that when ministers pass over matters of that kind so lightly, I am not surprised that we have found so many ' blunders ' in this agreement from beginning to end. The hon. gentleman says his reason for not producing it was that it was a confidential document. Well, it is true that at the head of the copy of this document which has been read to the House there certainly is the word ' confidential,' but in such a matter as this, had the government any right to accept from any body of people a document containing such a proposition, to entertain that proposition, and to conceal it from parliament ? What right has a government to deal in such a way with public matters ? If the right hon. gentleman did not feel at liberty to treat that proposition as a business proposal should be treated by the government, why did he not return it to them and say : I cannot entertain it ? He could have done that, and then he could have said to parliament : I did receive a proposition, but it was marked ' confidential ;' and knowing my duty to parliament and to the country I refused to entertain it, and I returned it. There could be no objection to that. But the hon. gentleman, although he says he did not entertain it, told us in answer to the question I put the other day, that it was entertained, that is to say, that it was submitted to the cabinet. We have not yet seen the answer sent by the government to these gentlemen. I presume when the government receives a written application of that kind they do not give a verbal answer. I presume there was an answer to that application. How is it that that answer has not been brought down ? The hon. gentleman read the document to the House after obtaining Mr. Hays's permission, and yet he does not read the answer. Surely we ought to have everything. And what more, I ask, is there behind all this ? Must we drag every paper out of the hon. gentleman ? Are we to cross-examine him ? Surely that is not treating the House properly. Surely we have a right to complain, and I do complain, and I think my complaint is justified after what has passed.

When the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) asked for these papers—specified with the utmost particularity—how is it that on that occasion the right hon. gentleman knowing that this document was in existence, having in his mind—as he must have had in his mind at that moment—this very paper, knowing it was one of the documents that this side of the House wanted to see. Why was it that he did not then ask Mr. Hays's permission to produce it to the House ? All he had to do, even according to his own view of it, was to send a telegram to Mr. Hays, saying: I am asked to produce all the papers relating to this transcontinental railway. Have you any objection to my producing your confidential letter ?—and the permission would have been granted. But it did not suit hon. gentlemen opposite to produce it. It would have furnished an argument to this side of the House, it would have furnished information to the public of the utmost importance, somewhat adverse to the government scheme, but still of great value to this House, which desired to arrive at an intelligent judgment upon this matter. The hon. gentleman did not choose to ask permission to produce that document. It was only when it suited the Finance Minister to use it, when he thought it would give him some little advantage, that it was produced. The moment the Finance Minister wanted to use it, the right hon. gentleman stirred himself up and got permission. He could have got that permission just as readily before, and could have complied with the order of the House to produce every document and, as he himself said, without any equivocation. I point that out to the right hon. gentleman, and I think it requires some explanation from him. I say again, if he could get that consent so readily, when he wanted to use the paper, why did he not get that consent when he knew this House wanted the paper? The House had ordered him to produce the paper, and yet he would not ask permission of the only man apparently, whose consent was required.

Then knowing that the House wanted such a paper as that, knowing that it was an important document and that it was in his possession, why did the hon. gentleman go out of his way to use such particularly emphatic language as to say to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) : I tell you without any equivocation at all that you have all the papers ? A most extraordinary statement, surely. I have known hon. ministers to refuse to bring down papers in this House on the ground that the public interest required that they should not be produced ; but I never yet heard a minister deny the possession of papers, and then use the fact that the public interest was against their production as a reason for denying their existence.

The right hon. gentleman, in as plain terms as if he had said there was no such paper in existence, conveyed that to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. He was free to say that which he did not say : We have produced everything but confidential papers that we are not at liberty to produce. He did not choose to do that. He said, we have produced everything. Did any one ever hear of a minister of the Crown saying that he had produced every paper relating to a particular subject and when afterwards he was found in possession of a particular document saying : Oh, I did not produce that because it was against the public interest ? Did the hon. gentleman qualify his language at the time by saying that he produced only the papers that the public were entitled to ? The right hon. gentleman did not pursue that course. He had no trouble at all about plainly saying that he had produced everything. He put himself in the very awkward position that he practically denied having possession of any other documents than those which he produced. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) does not seem to have much trouble on that score. He says if you have a confidential document you are not only justified in not producing it but when you are asked a question about it you can ignore it. I think treating the matter in that way would put the hon. gentleman in a very equivocal position. I think it would be a great deal more straightforward on all such occasions for the hon. gentleman to say : I have a document of a confidential character which I am not at liberty to produce. If that had been done we would have known there were documents behind and we would have inquired as to the propriety of the non-production of them on that ground. But we were misled. We were led to suppose that there were no such documents. The hon. Minister of Finance gets over it by saying : You are entitled to ignore it ; in effect you are entitled to say you have no such document because it is one that you ought not to produce. I do not think I am over-stating his language. I will give it exactly as he uttered it. He says at page 3837 of the unrevised 'Hansard' :

> —and I dispute the contention of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), that in bringing down a return or in answering a question in this House a minister is bound to take notice of any documents that are confidential. Such documents must be ignored.

That is the way that the hon. Minister of Finance puts it. In other words we can make you our answer as if no such document ever existed. Surely I need not argue that point. It is not arguable that such a thing can be proper. You may refuse to produce a document for special reasons, but to contend that you may ignore its existence when you are questioned as to it is anything but creditable to the hon. gentleman who makes that proposition. Hon. gentlemen opposite refused to produce this particular document apparently on the ground that they did not grant the request, that they did not act upon the application. Well that is an extraordinary position for a responsible ministry to take before parliament under our constitution. It is that ministers can receive documents as ministers, consider them and refuse an application in which the country is vitally interested, and that is to be the end of the question. We need not discuss whether the particular terms of this application were favourable or unfavourable. The ministers simply decide for themselves that they are unsatisfactory and refuse it. How do hon. gentlemen opposite know but that parliament would take a different view of it? Are we to be shut off on such a question as this by the opinion of the ministers? Is this a star chamber government? Are they to settle questions of such vital moment to the country as this, and are we to have no opportunity of considering the proposition? This might be a proposition that the government, fairly and honestly considering it, may have thought unwise to accept, but parliament in its wisdom might have thought that ministers were wrong. Surely this parliament had the right to know what that proposition was. Though it might have been the worst possible proposition, we were just as much entitled to know its terms as entitled to see what that proposition was as if it were the very best. If this thing can be done the right hon. gentleman and his ministers can decide the whole affairs of this country and only let parliament know what it suits them to let it know. I repeat, Sir, that under no circumstances whatever can the withholding of that paper be justified. It is obvious to every person that the right hon. gentleman was ready to use that paper when it suited the party purposes of the government and that he was ready to conceal it so long as it suited the purposes of the government to have it concealed. Hon. gentlemen on his side of the House could know what were the terms of the proposition that we were debarred from knowing. Does the right hon. gentleman think that is consistent conduct? Surely, if the paper were confidential, it was confidential for all purposes. How could any person with propriety be allowed to know anything of the contents of a confidential paper concealed from this House? We first of all were entitled to a knowledge of it. Will the right hon. gentleman say that nobody knew of it? He says that he submitted it to his cabinet? Was it not communicated to anybody else? Did anybody else know of it? Does the right hon. gentleman mean to say that he took none of his supporters into his confidence, none of the gentlemen from the Northwest Territoiries or any other gentleman, that this was an absolute secret to everybody until he got Mr. Hays's permission to read it to this House? I doubt that the right hon. gentleman will say so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is that?

Mr. BARKER. I doubt very much that the right hon. gentleman will say that no person on his side of the House, other than his colleagues, was aware of the contents of that paper until it was read in this House? Now, that is all I have to say. I move this resolution with the distinct intimation to hon. gentlemen opposite that it includes every document of every character whatever which relates to this subject matter.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have no objection whatever to the passage of the resolution, nor would I have objection to make to the speech which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) delivered, were it not for certain expressions, which if they are to be taken seriously, were meant to be offensive. I do not think that I should go that far with the hon. gentleman, for perhaps he did not measure as he might have done, the language made use of by him. Parliament is entitled to all the information in the possession of the government with respect to public matters, but my hon. friend who is a business man will I think agree, that there is a way and a way of doing business. Not only with regard to public business, but even in private intercourse between man and man, it is the privilege of one man to approach another confidentially, to put his proposition either verbally or in writing, and if in writing it is his privilege to ask that it be treated as confidential. I do not think that proposition will be gainsaid by anybody. If it be a part of the amenities of civilized life; in fact, if it be a condition without which civilized intercourse cannot exist, that there should be respect for the confidence of another, then the hon. gentleman will have to revise somewhat the language which he used. The hon. gentleman, in speaking of the document as he called it can, as I am prepared to call it, which was marked 'confidential' by the persons who sent it to me as head of the government, said: Had the government the right to receive such a document, to entertain it, and to keep it for themselves? I say no. If the government had received, and if they had entertained such a paper, even though it be marked confidential, they could not have kept it for themselves. I assert that most distinctly. But, when that government receives a paper which is marked 'confidential,' and when they do not entertain the proposition therein contained, then I think the government would be quite justified in doing even what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) suggested, that is, to return the document to those from whom it came. I might have returned the document and perhaps I should have returned it, but that idea did not occur to my mind. At any rate if we had returned the document to its authors, then, according to the hon. gentleman, we would not only have been within our rights but within our duty. However, not having entertained the prayer of that document, and not having returned it to the parties who sent it to me, I believe I was quite justified in not filing it upon record in the department. The prayer of the petition was ignored and there was nothing of interest to the public in it after that. At all events I so treated it. Let me ask now : what rule shall be laid down by parliament in a matter of this kind ? Shall the rule be that when a motion is passed by parliament for papers, then, every paper and every letter which may have been sent to a minister, though marked 'confidential' shall be given to the public ? Does the hon. gentleman pretend that parliament is entitled to every letter which a minister may receive, whether it is marked 'confidential' or not ? I do not think the hon. gentleman will go that far. I think he will acknowledge that there must be a certain limit. I repeat that in my judgment, if a paper is marked confidential, and if the prayer of that document is ignored, then under such circumstances it remains a purely private matter, although of course if the proposition in the document be accepted and its prayer granted, then even though marked 'confidential' it becomes a public document. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) made an insinuation which I want to meet here and now. He said that he doubted if this paper had not been submitted to certain supporters of the government. Well, I do not know what he means by that, although I would think the remark rather offensive, but I have to say to the hon. gentleman as I said the other day : that this document has not been shown by me to anybody outside the cabinet ; that document never went out of my hands and never was shown to anybody outside the members of the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Nor its contents disclosed to anybody outside the government ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Its contents—I am not aware that I ever disclosed them. I will not say that the proposition for the extension of a railway across the continent may not have been discussed by me with some parties, but so far as my recollection goes at this moment, I do not think that I ever spoke to any person in the world, outside of my colleagues in the government, of the proposition which had been made and which was sent to me in the month of November in the year 1902. I may say, though it is of no consequence to the House, that being in poor health at that time I left for the south in the month of November and did not come back until the middle of January, when the negotiations were—I will not say renewed because there had not been any negotiations—but when the new communication was made by the Grand Trunk Pacific, of which the House is aware.

Now, Sir, am I to understand that my hon. friend and his colleagues on the other side, are prepared to contend that when a proposition of any kind is made confidentially to the government, and is not entertained by the government, it is, under such circumstances, a communication which must be made public ? If that be the contention of the hon. gentlemen opposite, I must say that I do not agree with it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) must not expect that the government could do, must do, or would do what he himself would not do in his own private business. If the hon. gentleman is approached by a party who makes a confidential proposition to him and ask him to treat it as confidential, I have too much respect for his honour to believe that he would divulge that communication and betray that confidence, I am rather inclined to believe that the hon. gentleman would treat it as a sacred secret belonging to the party who approached him. Is it to be expected, in the multitude of business which must engage the attention of the government ; in the multitude of applications which must come daily before the government, there are none which may be asked to be treated confidentially by the party who makes them, but that they must all go into the archives of the government ? Is it to be expected that none of these communications are to be included in the private correspondence of a minister ? I treated this communication as confidential. I did not think that it was a public document ; I believe that it was not a public document when its prayer was not acceded to by the government. But, when hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House stated in the course of this debate, that the Grand Trunk Company first approached the government and offered to build a railway from North Bay to the Pacific ocean for the ordinary subsidy, and when these gentlemen repeated it again, and again, and again, apparently convincing themselves that it was a fact, then, Sir, I thought it was time to ask the parties who made the proposition if they would agree to have the seal of secrecy removed so that the truth as to their proposition might be laid before the House.

Mr. CLARKE. If that document was not produced in deference to the order of the House because it was considered confidential, why was it not considered confidential until the end of the debate ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was considered a confidential document all through; but before making use of it I asked Mr. Hays if he would remove the seal of secrecy and give me permission to use it.

Mr. CLARKE. Why was that not asked before ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Because it was not the proposition before the House, but when my hon. friend and other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House stated that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company were prepared to build a line from North Bay to the Pacific ocean for the ordinary subsidies, a statement which was absolutely contrary to the facts, then we asked that the facts should be known and laid before the public. We think the House is entitled to all information which is in the hands of the government. I have no objection to this motion passing, and I shall take good care to have all the corners swept and all the files searched, and to have the clerks use all the brooms they can use to sweep up all the information we can obtain for the hon. gentleman. But does he mean to say that this should include all the private correspondence that may be sent to me or to my colleagues ? Is the proposition to be laid down that private letters, even documents which are marked private, and before the seal of secrecy is removed from them, are to form part of the information to which the House is entitled ? I am not prepared to say so. The hon. gentlemen made use of an expression to which I think I have a right to take exception. He said that I had concealed from the House information to which the House was entitled. I do not agree with him, and I think I have a right to take exception to that expression. I may have been right or I may have been wrong in my judgment. Not only in this instance, but in all instances since I have been at the head of the government, I have regarded it as my duty, whenever a confidential document has been placed in my hands, to keep it confidential until such time as the seal of secrecy has been removed from it. That is the position I take to-day. On this point, let me quote from Todd's Parliamentary Government, as follows :

Considerations of public policy, and a due regard to the interests of the state, occasionally demand, however, that information sought for by members of the legislature should be withheld, at the discretion and upon the general responsibility of ministers. This principle is systematically recognized in all parliamentary transactions; were it otherwise, it would be impossible to carry on the government with safety and honour. Whenever it is declared, by the responsible servants of the Crown, that any information sought for in parliament could not be supplied without inconvenience to the public service, or for other sufficient reasons, the House refrains from insisting upon its production.

This authority, in my opinion, applies to the present case. Ministers receive letters every day which are confidential, though on public matters ; others are private ; others are public without any qualification. They all go on record. Confidential communications, though relating to the public service, do not go on record at once, though they may later on. There may be circumstances in which ministers of the Crown must take the responsibility of saying whether or not documents which are of a public character should or should not be brought down to the House. They have a discretion in that respect ; but I did not claim any such discretion in this case. The hon. gentleman commented, I will not say offensively, but in a manner to suggest something wrong, when he stated that I had not given a candid answer to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) when last year I told him without any equivocation that all the information had been brought down. I repeat now what I said then. Everything that was on the public files had been brought down ; nothing had been reserved at all. But the hon. gentleman insinuated that I had been equivocating because at that time I had in my possession a confidential document. There was no equivocation on my part at all, because I take the ground that all documents which are confidential, which are not on the files and archives of the government, are in the sole custody of the minister who has received them, and cannot be brought down. Then, Todd goes on to say :

In 1869, ministers agreed to an order for certain papers concerning Fenianism, but finding on close inspection that 'their publication could be attended with no public advantage,' and that 'they contained matter which it is contrary to our public duty as ministers to be parties to laying before the House,' they determined to ask the House to rescind the order, which was done on a division.

On that occasion papers had been ordered, but the ministers found that it would not be to the public advantage to bring down all the papers which were on file, and they asked the House to rescind the order. Todd goes on further to say :

And if the government object to produce any documents, on the ground that they are of a private and confidential description, it is not usual to insist upon their being furnished, except under peculiar and imperative circumstances.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the right hon. gentleman if it is not the custom, when parliament is pressing for papers which are supposed to be in the possession of the government, and which have not been presented to parliament, for the government to answer that all documents have been brought down except such as are of a confidential nature. That is the usual answer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—that is not the usual answer. I do not believe that confidential papers are ever intended to be brought down to parliament until they cease to have a confidential character, and become public.

For instance, if we had entertained this very proposition from Messrs. Cox, Hays and Wainwright, that moment it would have been placed among the archives of the government, and might be brought down. But as it was not entertained, it was of a private character.

Mr. CLARKE. On what date did this document lose its confidential character ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It never lost it until Mr. Hays gave permission to publish it. Therefore, I have this to say to my hon. friend, that in this matter I think I have acted not only in perfect good faith but according to parliamentary rules and practices. I have only to say in conclusion, that I do not object to the motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman has given us some rather singular and novel ideas regarding the circumstances under which documents may be withheld by the government. In the first place, before dealing with the main question, let me point out that the Minister of Finance introduced this document on the 26th of May in answer to some observations made by my hon. friend from Lanark on the 6th of April. In other words, a period of more than seven weeks elapsed during which he allowed the debate to go on without producing this document, and it was only within three for four hours of the division, and when consequently that document could not be effectively commented on or used in the debate, that the Minister of Finance, with the kind permission of Mr. Hays, decided to bring it down. And my right hon. friend considers that a fair and decent treatment of parliament. I do not think that it requires anything more than a single statement of the facts to give the most absolute and utter condemnation of any such proceeding.

My right hon. friend declares that it is the privilege of any person in this country to approach the government in confidence and that that confidence ought to be respected. That is subject, it seems to me, to some qualifications. I have never heard that it was the privilege of any corporation or any group of promoters to approach the government in confidence for the purpose of tapping the treasury and to have that confidence respected. My right hon. friend's conclusion, if carried to its legitimate result, would lead to some singular consequences. Suppose a bank president was informed by a burglar in confidence that he proposed to break into the bank that evening, according to my right hon. friend's reasoning, the bank president would be bound to respect the confidence of the burglar. Suppose a railway company were to make a confidential communication to the Board of Railway Commissioners in which it pointed out that its rates exceeded those authorized by the commission, but submitted that as the communication was made in confidence, the Board of Railway Commissioners should take no action ; in such a case, according to my right hon. friend, the Railway Commissioners would have their hands tied until the information was disclosed to them in some other way. And suppose the Grand Trunk Railway should make a confidential communication to this government, pointing out that inasmuch as they are not bound by the terms of the contract, they propose to use all their efforts to gather up traffic in the Northwest, bring it by the Grand Trunk Pacific to Quebec, and thence carry it to Portland in the winter months, my right hon. friend would consider himself warranted in treating that as a confidential communication and in not informing the House or the country. I submit that when a proposal is made by a company to build a great public undertaking, when public aid is asked in a very generous measure, and when that proposal is carried out in part, as this was, the government are not in a position to treat it as confidential. I do not think that they would be in a position to treat it as confidential under any circumstances. I think that they were bound to adopt one of two courses. They should either have returned that document to Mr. Hays and said to him: This is a document asking public aid for a public undertaking and the government will not receive confidential communications on a subject of that kind. Or they should have informed Mr. Hays that his proposal would not be considered for one moment until he withdrew the term confidential and left the government at perfect liberty to submit it to parliament.

Mr. McCARTHY. Suppose the document had been returned by the First Minister to Mr. Hays, and suppose that afterwards the First Minister should have said to Mr. Hays: You made a communication to me in confidence which I returned to you, but I would like you to let me use it in order to refute certain allegations which have been made against the government, would not the right hon. gentleman have been warranted in then obtaining the document again and making it public ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has evidently not thought much on the subject or he would not make this interruption.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is not an answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will give my hon. friend an answer. If that document had been returned to the Grand Trunk Railway and the negotiations were off, that would then be an end of the matter. But if the negotiations were resumed, they would be resumed on certain documents presented and these documents ought to be submitted to parliament when the measure is discussed. My hon. friend smiles, but there is not an hon. member other than himself who does not understand and appreciate the point. My right hon. friend says further that this document was properly withheld from parliament because the proposal was not entertained. Well, let us see whether or not the proposal was entertained in whole or in part, and I shall not offer any apology for reading at this stage the whole of this interesting document in order that we may see what the proposal was and whether or not it did form the basis of that measure which has so recently been discussed in this House :

Confidential.

Montreal, Que., Nov. 3rd, 1902.

To the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.M.G., P.C., Premier of the Dominion of Can., Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—Your petitioners desire to memorialize your government in regard to the construction of a first-class line of railway from the northern terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway, at, or near, North Bay, Ont., through to the Pacific coast, for the reasons and upon the conditions herein set forth.

Let me point out to the right hon. gentleman who says that this proposal has not been entertained, that this is part of the very railway project which we have been discussing during the past two sessions, and that the gentlemen who signed this communication are the promoters of the very company, the charter for which has been passed through this House. Therefore, let me say that this proposal, far from not being entertained, has been entertained to that extent, although something else has been added to it. Then the claimants proceed.

1st. That it is considered very desirable and in the public interests that there should be, without any unnecessary delay, a second transcontinental railway reaching from the Atlantic ocean to the Pacific ocean, in order that additional facilities may be provided for the large growing business in the North-west, which might otherwise find its outlet through American channels.

The same idea and almost the very words in which the right hon. gentleman last year introduced the very measure which we have been discussing in parliament during the past and present sessions. Yet the right hon. gentleman says that no portion of this proposal has been at any time entertained. There is the very proposal he has been putting through parliament and there is the very reason offered in support of it which he has urged upon the House. Yet he says this document was justly withheld from parliament for a year and a half because it was not entertained in any sense or in any part. The document proceeds as follows :

2nd. That your petitioners propose, as soon as authorized by your government, to undertake the construction of such a line from North Bay, Ontario, or some other point north thereof, to be defined, to the Pacific coast, the terminus to be at or near Port Simpson, with all necessary branches along the route, to be designated.

So far as the western division is concerned, with the exception of the line from North Bay to Winnipeg, this is exactly the proposition, with the same terminus, which was brought down by the government and discussed in parliament during last session and this. Yet the right hon. gentleman ventures to say, in the face of that, though the document has been in possession of the government during all this time, that this proposal did not relate in any way to the project we have been considering in parliament for so long a period. The document proceeds :

That your petitioners, therefore, ask that their application for authority to construct such line of railway to be called 'Grand Trunk Pacific Railway' shall be granted.

Well, now, my right hon. friend is in rather a curious position as to that. He says this is a confidential document. Then, what warrant had he to disclose it to his colleagues ? If he had warrant to disclose it to his colleagues, he certainly had warrant under paragraph 3 to disclose it to parliament, for the simple and sufficient reason that parliament was the only body that could give the power asked for in this paragraph :

4th. That your petitioners will be prepared, immediately an agreement is entered into by the government, and the concessions hereinafter mentioned are sanctioned by an Order in Council, to place a corps of engineers in the field, both at the eastern and western ends and at other points on the projected line.

I would like to know, if it was not under the proposal contained in that fourth paragraph, then, how was it, that engineers were put upon certain portions of that proposed line before the Bill of last session became law on the 24th of October ? We find the very scheme carried out that is set forth in that fourth paragraph ? They did not wait for the passing of the Bill to place the surveyors and engineers on the proposed line. They did as they had proposed to the government. The document proceeds :

5th. That the routes to be selected shall be submitted to and approved by the government, after proper surveys have been made.

Again we have the very scheme that has been discussed and considered in parliament during these last two sessions :

6th. That as soon as the plans and routes are approved, work shall be commenced and the road shall be completed and in operation within a period of five years from the time the Act is in force.

The very terms of the contract which was brought down by the government last year. And when my right hon. friend tells us that this document would have been of no assistance to parliament in considering this measure, ask him whether or not the voluntary proposal of these very gentlemen themselves would have been of assistance to parliament when we were considering, during this very session, the time which should be allowed to this company for building the line in the west ? Five years was their own offer. And it was the term fixed by the original contract as brought down by the government. Yet, in considering the extension to eight years agreed to by the government, after the contract as originally made had been ratified by parliament, my right hon. friend thinks we would not have been assisted in the discussion in parliament by knowing that five years was the very term proposed by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company itself. The document proceeds :

7th. That all the work shall be subject to the inspection and approval of the chief engineer of the government.

Again we have exactly the terms of this contract as brought down by the government last year. And, in the face of this paragraph my right hon. friend says that this proposal has no relation to the contract brought down by the government. The next paragraph is as follows :

8th. That in order to provide for connection with the Atlantic sea-board all the year round and through an all-British territory route, your petitioners will be prepared to enter into an arrangement with the government for an interchange of traffic, or other satisfactory agreement, with the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, or to consider such other proposal as the government may submit.

It was in respect of that eighth paragraph that the government made the principal change in the proposal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. Instead of doing what is here proposed the government build, and lease to the Grand Trunk Pacific, the line from North Bay to Quebec. But, would it not have been well that parliament, when discussing the advisability of building that line, should have had before it, as it was entitled to have, this proposition of the Grand Trunk Pacific ? Surely my right hon. friend will see that that eighth paragraph is itself an alternative proposition which ought, in all fairness—and in all honour, I will say—to have been submitted to parliament before this went through. The document proceeds :

9th. That your petitioners would have the advantage of all the eastern connections, in Ontario and Quebec, of the Grand Trunk Railway, and by this means on the completion of the transcontinental line there would be established and opened up a complete system from ocean to ocean.

That is not a proposal, but only an argument. It is, however, an argument which the right hon. gentleman and members of his government and speakers on that side made the most of in forcing this measure through. The petition then proceeds :

10th. That the conditions referred to in clause 4, upon which your petitioners would undertake the carrying out of the proposed work, may be set forth as follows :—

(a.) That the Dominion government will grant a cash subsidy to your petitioners of $6,400 per mile of railway, and in addition 5,000 acres of land per mile.

(b.) That the payment for the carriage of the mails shall be calculated on the same basis as provided for under the contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

(c.) That rails and materials of every kind used in the construction of the railway—if dutiable—shall be admitted free, if such material cannot be obtained in Canada upon equally favourable terms.

(d.) That the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and all stations and station grounds, work shops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion or by any province hereafter to be established or by any municipal corporation therein ; and the lands of the company in the Northwest Territories (until they are either sold or occupied) shall also be free from such taxation, for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

Your petitioners ask that your government will give the prayer of this petition their early and most earnest consideration.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

On behalf of the petitioners,

GEO. A. COX,
CHAS. M. HAYS,
WM. WAINWRIGHT.

Now, my right hon. friend says that the return ordered by this motion of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) will include everything in possession of the government. I believe it should include proposals, if there are any such proposals, from any other promoters, or any other body of men desirous of undertaking the contract for the building of this railroad. I do not know whether there were any such proposals ; I have no information whether any such proposals have been made ; but I think that if there are any, whether marked confidential or not, the government ought to bring them down and place them before parliament. But perhaps I should qualify that by saying, in the first place, that the government should not receive such proposals as confidential. If they have received any in that way they should ask the consent of the persons who made the proposals to bring them down. And, if these persons do not consent to the bringing down of these documents, I have only to recite the authority of my right hon. friend himself as to the course which should be followed. He told us last year in speaking on the Alaskan Boundary question, that he would ask the authority of the British government to bring down a series of confidential communications, but, if the consent of the imperial government was not obtained, that he would bring them down without such consent. And, I suppose that in a matter involving the public funds of this country, a matter which the government should not have allowed to be made confidential in the first instance, my right hon. friend might very fairly follow the precedent established by himself and take the course which he said he would take in bringing down such documents whether their consent was obtained or not.

My right hon. friend referred to the familiar doctrine in Todd's Parliamentary Practice—that there are certain confidential communications as to which parliament is not entitled, at the moment at least, and may never be entitled, to have information. For example, negotiations with a foreign government; matters affecting the defence of the country; information afforded to officers of the government of breach of the Customs Law;—matters of that kind are kept from parliament in the public interest for the reason that, if parliament could claim at any moment to be seized of any information of that kind it would be impossible to carry on the government of the country.

But such considerations do not apply to the application of a body of promoters to the government of this country for public aid to a public undertaking. They have no relevancy to such a subject. A demand for assistance from the treasury of this country cannot be confidential. If this application was made to the government to assist the Grand Trunk Pacific out of the private moneys of the members of the government that is one thing; but that is not the application as I understand it. The application is made for assistance to this undertaking out of the public moneys of the people of this country and the people of this country are entitled to know all applications of that kind and the government should not receive such communications as confidential.

Now my right hon. friend ought to be reminded of another circumstance in connection with this matter, and it is this: We did not understand some of the allusions which were made to this document last year. We have had the repeated declarations of this government—which I will not review again as I have already reviewed them—we have had the repeated declarations of this government during the past session and during the present session, that everything relating to this question was before the House. We made these demands upon the government in consequence of certain utterances of two ministers of the Crown last year. One of those utterances was made by Mr. Blair, not at that time a minister of the Crown, because before making this speech in parliament he had resigned his position as Minister of Railways and Canals. But in the 'Hansard' of 1903, at page 8416, Mr. Blair felt himself at liberty to make the statement which I will now read to the House from his speech:

> The thing was never mooted before, and the government took no action, until the Grand Trunk Railway Company conceived that it would be in their own interest to have the railway project liberally aided by the parliament of Canada, which they desired to promote. That is the secret of the whole business, that is where it originated.

I call my right hon. friend's attention to the statement of his ex-Minister of Railways and Canals that a proposal to the government was the origin of the project which the government brought down; and when he says that this document was not germane to the discussion which we have had, he is in direct conflict with that statement of his ex-minister, who says: That proposal is the secret of the whole business; that is where it originated. There cannot be any doubt of the correctness of Mr. Blair's statement, because I have pointed out the striking similarity between the project for the construction of the western division and the proposal made by the Grand Trunk Pacific to the government. The two things speak for themselves. I need not emphasize the fact, I need not elaborate it. The line from North Bay to Moncton was an addition made by the government and except for that addition the original proposal remained and was carried out by the government almost exactly as it was proposed to the government by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, with the exception of course of the aid to the railway which was given in another form and was of a modified character. But Mr. Blair proceeds as follows in the quotation that I am reading:

> All the other considerations fell upon unheeding ears. All these dangers never struck our minds, never seemed to have entered into our calculations; it never occurred to us that we were under such imminent peril; it never was suggested by any one that the great future of Canada, the very life of Canada, was at stake, until the Grand Trunk Railway Company made a call and laid their proposition before my hon. friends and colleagues of the government.

That is Mr. Blair's statement of the position. But we have another statement from a gentleman who is still a member of the government, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) who, in the 'Hansard' of 1903, page 8664, is reported as follows:

> We had in the beginning one proposition, and to that proposition there was an alternative. The suggestion was made that we should assist the construction of a line from the end of the North Bay branch of the Grand Trunk Railway northward and around to the city of Winnipeg, and further westward to Fort William.

What was the Minister of the Interior speaking of, if not this proposal which was read to the House on the 26th of May, and what is the alternative proposal which is referred to by the Minister of the Interior in that quotation? He speaks not only of this proposition, but of some alternative proposition that has not yet been laid before the House. Will the right hon. gentleman bring down that alternative proposition, or does he venture to say that no such alternative proposal was ever made? Why is it, when a minister of the Crown has made this reference to a public document, that that document was withheld—I was going to use the word concealed—from this parliament? My right hon. friend has referred to auhorities. Let me refer him to the authority of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, edited by the learend Clerk of this House, at page 366, where this principle is laid down—and let me say that this principle relates even to documents which are truly confidential. The principle is this:

If a minister cites any such document in the House, it becomes a public paper and should be produced.

Well, did not my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior in effect cite that document when he referred to that proposal, and did not the ex-minister of the Crown cite that document and refer to it still more distinctly? Let me point out further, on an authority which I think will be regarded by every hon. gentleman in this House, the practice of the English parliament, under which such a reference, made even by an ex-minister of the Crown, renders it necessary, as I understand the practice, that the document should be laid before the House. In the case of the Cagliari, which is referred to in volume 149 of the English 'Hansard,' at pages 177 and 178, a certain matter had been under consideration of a previous government, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in dealing with the question, pointed out that the government of which he was a member had taken it for granted that their predecessors had arrived at a certain conclusion which rendered action on the part of the incoming government absolutely unnecessary. Then speaking further on the question he said this:

But when the discussion took place on Friday night, the noble Lord, the member for Tiverton (Viscount Palmerston) rose and stated, in a manner most unexpected by us, that the late government were considering again the case of the Cagliari previous to their retirement from office.

Then he goes on to say that an examination of the documents does not seem to him to justify that. But he continues as follows:

We shall act without fear or favour, whether we may deem it our duty to recognize the jurisdiction of a sovereign, or to vindicate the rights of our fellow subjects. We have given directions that all the papers connected with the management of the Cagliari case by our predecessors should be prepared and laid with all reasonable despatch before parliament. They are more voluminous than the House perhaps imagines; but no unnecessary delay will take place in their production.

I may say that is one of the authorities Sir John Bourinot cited by for the principle that when a document is cited in this House by a minister of the Crown it becomes at once a public paper and should be produced. As I have already said, he is dealing there, not with documents of this character, which cannot be really confidential, but he is dealing with documents which are truly and in the accepted sense confidential documents, and which otherwise ought not to be produced to parliament.

But, let me refer my right hon. friend to another aspect of this question upon which I certainly think that some explanation is needed. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) on the 30th of May, put this question to the government:

Mr. BARKER asked:

To what persons, on what dates, and under what circumstances, was the application of George A. Cox, Charles M. Hayes, and William Wainwright, read to the House by the Honourable the Finance Minister, on the morning of the 27th May, 1904, communicated wholly or in part previous to the same being so read to the House?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The application of Messrs. Cox, Hays and Wainwright, which was read on May 27, by the Minister of Finance, was communicated to the cabinet and to nobody else. As to the date, it is impossible to say at what date, but it was shortly after it had been received.

Now, some rather striking utterances were made by a certain very prominent gentleman on the other side of the House during the last session, which I think call for some explanation in connection with that statement of the right hon. gentleman. I refer to the utterances, among others, of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), whose absence we all regret from the House during the present session. That hon. gentleman took a very important part in the debate. He was put up by the government to reply to the Hon. Mr. Blair, ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, on the occasion when that gentleman made a most noteworthy speech in this House, in which he condemned unsparingly the policy of his colleagues in committing themselves and the country to this project. Therefore, the words of the hon. member for North Norfolk bore a certain semi-official import. He was referred to by the right hon. gentleman in terms of the highest commendation as the greatest authority on transportation in Canada, or in language to that effect. This hon. gentleman, speaking for the government in that regard, used this language, which is to be found at page 8493 of 'Hansard) of 1903:

The government proceeded to consider several propositions. They considered a proposition of building a government road, considered it carefully, as I am well aware, and rejected that proposition.

They considered several propositions ! We know what the proposition to build a government road means, and we know the proposition which the government eventually brought down to this House. But what are the other propositions, one of which has been referred to, not only by the hon. member for North Norfolk, but by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) himself ? But the hon. member for North Norfolk made a further reference to this matter, which is to be found in 'Hansard' of 1903, page 8495 :

We were at the parting of the ways. We had, on the one hand, the policy recommended of building a government road. On the other hand, we had the policy recommended of assisting the construction of a road in the old fashioned way of granting subsidies.

Now, what was that 'policy recommended of building a government road?' Was that the policy propounded by Mr. Blair in the memorandum, about the publication of which so much has been said in this House ? Can it mean anything else ? Does it mean anything else ? Is it possible that the proposition of Mr. Blair, said to have been kept secret, was disclosed to Mr. Charlton last year ? Can there be any denial of that ? Will my right hon. friend deny it now ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, most decidedly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I would like to ask my right hon. friend how the hon. member for North Norfolk became aware of the policy of building a government road, to which he refers in making these remarks?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have only to say that I cannot answer for what my hon friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said, but when the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) asks me if my hon. friend from North Norfolk had any communication of the memorandum of Mr. Blair, I submit most emphatically that he never had.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I accept without hesitation the word of my right hon. friend. I accept it in the usual sense, not in the parliamentary sense, but I still think that my right hon. friend will not deny that I am entitled to entertain a strong opinion as to that most extraordinary statement made by the hon. member for North Norfolk. If no member of the cabinet disclosed that proposed policy to him, how could it possibly happen that he became so well aware of the policy which had been before the government ? How was it possible for him to be aware of what the government was considering ? Let me read his language again :

The government proceeded to consider several propositions.

How does he know that the government proceeded to consider several propositions ? Was he a member of the Privy Council ? I am not aware that the hon. gentleman has been ever elevated to that rank, or that he has participated in the deliberations of the government. He says :

They considered a proposition of building a government road, considered it carefully, as I am well aware, and rejected that proposition.

How did the hon. member for North Norfolk become well aware of what the government had considered carefully ? The government would not consider anything carefully unless they considered it in Council, I suppose. That hon. gentleman, I am bound to assume from the statement of my right hon. friend, had no information as to what was going on at the Privy Council. Are we to assume that he was listening at the door ? What are we to assume as to the source of his information ? My right hon. friend sat in the House and listened to that statement and made no comment upon it. Did he regard it as singular that the hon. member for North Norfolk should have made that statement as to the private and secret deliberations of the government in Council ? Did he go to him afterwards and ask the source of his information ? Was there any indignation on that occasion exhibited by my right hon. friend or the members of his government ? I do not recollect that there was any scene in the House when the hon. gentleman did make that statement.

We had, on the one hand, the policy recommended of building a government road.

The policy recommended ! Recommended by whom ? Could it be possible that that hon. gentleman was talking of the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, which was submitted to Council ? One would most certainly interpret his language in that way, if we had not the assurance of my right hon. friend that no such communication was made to the hon. member for North Norfolk.

But a still more startling statement is made in regard to this matter by the same hon. gentleman, and I would like my right hon. friend to take clause 10 of the proposals of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and read it while I am reading what the hon. member for North Norfolk said in regard to the proposals which had been submitted to the government. In order to relieve my right hon. friend from the necessity of doing that, perhaps I had better read clause 10 again, Clause 10 of the proposal is as follows :

10th. That the conditions referred to in clause 4, upon which your petitioners would undertake the carrying out of the proposed work, may be set forth as follows:

(a.) That the Dominion government will grant a cash subsidy to your petitioners of $6,400 per mile of railway, and in addition 5,000 acres of land per mile.

That is the proposal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, the proposal of that company made on the 3rd of November, 1902, and here is the language of the hon. member for North Norfolk as reported in 'Hansard' of the past session at page 8493 :

The government proceeded next to consider a proposition for the construction of the road in the old fashioned way, that of granting subsidies. There was a proposition to build a road from North Bay to the west, which involved a land grant of 5,000 acres per mile and a money grant of $6,400 per mile.

Of course I am bound to assume that this is absolutely a coincidence, but is it not a most startling coincidence ? I cannot quite understand it. The hon. member (Mr. Charlton) proceeded as follows :—

Well, the government have never adopted the system of making land grants to railways, and wisely concluded that this was not a good time to begin it, so that proposition was dropped. Then a compromise proposition was accepted, viz., the construction of a road over which the government should have supervision.

This seems to me hardly to need comment. I must confess that when the member for North Norfolk arose in this House and stated the exact terms of a confidential communication to the government, I would have expected that my right hon. friend would have exhibited some of the indignation we have witnessed on other occasions, and that he would have demanded from the member for North Norfolk how it was, that he became possessed of this confidential document. But on the contrary, the Prime Minister rose in his place and spoke in the most flattering terms of the hon. member (Mr. Charlton), describing him as the greatest authority on transportation in Canada. I do not know whether or not he is the greatest authority on transportation in Canada, but he certainly is entitled to credit for his extraordinary ability in correctly stating the contents of this confidential document which had never been communicated to him. We know that that document was never shown to him ; we know that its terms were never communicated to him by any member of the government, because we have the word of the Prime Minister that it never was communicated to the member for North Norfolk or to anybody else ; yet the extraordinary spectacle is afforded to parliament of the hon. member (Mr. Charlton), repeating word for word and line for line with literal and exact accuracy, the exact proposal made for aid by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to this government. It would appear that we should have some further explanation from the government on this subject.

But that is not all; there is more to come. By the lamented death of Mr. McCreary, we are deprived of certain information which might have thrown light upon this subject. The late Mr. McCreary also seemed to have had a very shrewd and accurate idea on this subject, because speaking in this House on the 29th of April, 1904, he said :

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) is quite mistaken in some of his premises, and I think in future discussions he should correct them. He has no license to say that the Grand Trunk has not demanded as much for the construction of the line from North Bay to Winnipeg as they are now demanding for the construction of the line through the mountains. Had the government acceded to the wishes of the Grand Trunk Railway we would have had a very much worse bargain than we have, the present arrangement secures a shorter railway, better built, and with better gradients.

Mr. CLARKE. The position of the hon. gentleman now seems to be simply that he is trying to excuse the government and to apologize for the enormous subsidies they are giving the Grand Trunk, by making the assertion, without any justification whatever, that the Grand Trunk would not have proceeded to carry out their original intention unless this government built the road from North Bay to Winnipeg and guaranteed three-quarters of the sum required to build the prairie section and the mountain section. What justification has the hon. gentleman for saying this ?

Mr. McCREARY. I have the justification that they asked that very assistance.

Mr. CLARKE. From whom ? Unfortunately the facts are against the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McCREARY. Not at all.

We therefore see that Mr. McCreary had a very good idea of the contents of this document which has been at last submitted to this House. Further than that, if we can judge from his remarks, he seems to have had an inkling that some member of the government would during the closing hours of the debate, when it was impossible to discuss it, spring this document upon the House. It seems to me that some further light is required as to the extraordinary amount of information possessed by Mr. Charlton and by the late Mr. McCreary as to the contents of this confidential document. By what means did these hon. gentlemen obtain that information; they were private members of the House, and were entitled to no more information on this subject than any other hon. gentleman ; by what means were these hon. gentlemen able to use in debate information which never was laid before this House until it was read recently by the Minister of Finance.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have only one word to say. I have no time to read the extracts which the hon. gentleman has just given to the House, but I may say that there are more ways than one of getting information. I say to the hon. gentleman again, that the document which was placed in my hands by Mr. Hays, in November, 1902, never was shown to anybody outside of the cabinet. If anybody got knowledge of it, the means by which he got knowledge of it, is one of those secrets as to which I have no information to give; but we know from past experience that such a thing sometimes happens.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The usual course is that when a motion is made by parliament for papers, the minister states that such papers will be brought down as is not confidential. When that statement is made by a minister of the Crown, parliament usually accepts it as sufficient and refrains from prosecuting the inquiry further. That was not done in the present instance by the government. If I understood the Prime Minister correctly, he contends that when a minister of the Crown states that he brought down all information, the statement only implies such information as is not confidential. I do not think that parliament should be asked to assume any such thing. Todd's parliamentary government says:

It is imperative that parliament shall be duly informed of everything that may be necessary to explain the policy and proceedings of government in any part of the empire, and the fullest information is communicated by government to both Houses from time to time, upon matters of public concern.

This certainly was a matter of public concern, for it is in parliament that authoritative statements are made. Then he goes on to say:

Whenever it is declared by the responsible servants of the Crown that any information sought for in parliament could not be supplied without inconvenience to the public service, or for other sufficient reasons, the House refrains from insisting upon its production.

But if such documents are in existence, and the government do not desire to bring them down, it is as I understand their duty to say to parliament: We have brought down all documents pretaining to this subject unless those of a confidential character; and when that statement is made, nothing more is said. Todd goes on to say:

And if the government object to produce any documents, on the ground that they are of a private and confidential description, it is not usual to insist upon their being furnished.

That is where I think the right hon. the premier failed in doing his duty, in not mentioning that there were other documents, but that owing to their being of a confidential character, he did not regard it in the public interest to bring them down. Todd goes on further to say:

It must always be remembered that all public transactions of state are necessarily official——

This being a transaction of state, the document must necessarily be official, and ought to be communicated to parliament.

—and that no public officer would be justified in withholding from official record and access, any document, emanating from himself.

Now, there must have been an answer to that document—from whom? From the premier. On what? On a question which has engaged the attention of this House during two sessions. According to Todd's interpretation of parliamentary government, that was an official answer, and therefore ought to have been given to parliament. We have no information in regard to that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend at once that there never was any written answer, either confidential or official, to that document.

Mr. SPROULE. Of course, that is a sufficient answer. I want to refer to another statement made by the premier which I think deserves some passing attention. In answer to the question why this document was read at all, he replied that it was read because of the repeated contention that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company would have built their line from North Bay to the Pacific ocean without asking for any aid, had they been allowed to do it under the charter which they desired to get from parliament. Why, that contention was put forward time after time in the last session of parliament as well as in this session, and why was the document not then given to parliament as an answer? Why was it delayed to the last moment, until the debate was practically closed? It certainly could not have been because of its confidential character. If the government were compelled to give it in order to defend themselves and to refute that argument, they would have given it at the commencement of this debate rather than at the end.

Motion agreed to.

PROHIBITION OF CIGARETTES.

The following resolution, moved by Mr. Wm. S. Maclaren (Huntingdon) and adopted in Committee of the Whole, was read the second time, and agreed to, on division:

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

COMPANIES' ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 75) to amend the Companies Act, 1902, (Mr. Cowan) read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. Section 5 of the Companies Act, 1902, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:—

'3. Nothing in this section, or in any charter or letters patent heretofore or hereafter issued, shall be deemed to prevent any company to which this Act applies from acting as a contractor in railway, telegraph or telephone construction.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain the reason for this legislation. Is it based on any similar legislation in Great Britain? Does it follow any precedent? If not, what is the exact reason for it? How would it operate with reference to existing companies? I suppose it is not intended to be retroactive. Is it intended to enlarge the powers of existing companies? I have not considered the question at all, but I would like to have the hon. gentleman's views.

Mr. COWAN. I do not think it would. Section 5 of the Companies Act is peculiarly worded, and it is very doubtful whether or not under that section a company could act as a contractor in railway, telegraph or telephone construction. It was never intended that they should not, and it was only for the purpose of clearing up an ambiguity in the Act that this section is proposed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the hon. gentleman the section it is proposed to amend?

Mr. COWAN. I have sent for the statutes. I did not expect this Bill to be reached.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This clause is only intended to remove doubts which have arisen because of the construction which might be put on section 5 of the Companies Act. That section provides for the incorporation by letters patent of companies for any purposes or objects to which the legislative authority of parliament extends except—and these are the important words—'except the construction and working of railways or of telephones or telegraph lines or the business of banking.' It is possible that this exception might be so construed so as to make it applicable to companies incorporated for the purpose of constructing railways, and it is to eliminate that doubt that my hon. friend has introduced this amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has my hon. friend's attention been directed to the somewhat peculiar wording of this amendment:

Nothing in this section, or in any charter or letters patent heretofore or hereafter issued, can be deemed to prevent any company to which this Act applies, from acting as a contractor in railway, telegraph or telephone construction.

There might be a construction of this section which we do not contemplate at this moment. It is possible that it might give a company, incorporated for an entirely different purpose, the power to contract for the construction of railways.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not quite sure that the phraseology of this section is quite happy, and perhaps it might be improved. At the same time, I do not think that the possible construction which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition put upon it necessarily follows. We might let it stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 2,

2. Section 40 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:—

'2. Whenever the par value of existing shares is less than one hundred dollars each the directors may, at any time, make a by-law consolidating them into shares of a larger amount; provided, however, that no such consolidated share shall exceed the par value of one hundred dollars.

Mr. COWAN. Under the Act you can by by-law reduce shares of $100 down to $25, but there is no provision for grouping together shares of a lesser amount than $100 so as to bring them up to the par value of $100. There are some companies, whose shares are $25 each, which find it more convenient to group four together into one share at $100, and this Bill proposes to give such companies the right to do that by by-law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand the hon. gentleman, if you have a thousand shares of $50 each, you may consolidate them into 500 shares of $100 each.

Mr. COWAN. Under the present law, you can reduce from $100 to $25, but you cannot raise from $25 to $100.

Progress reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 86) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, respecting the punishment of fraudulent debtors.—(Mr. Bickerdike)—was read the second time and House went into Committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. Section 368 of The Criminal Code, 1892, is amended by adding the following after paragraph (b) thereof:—

'(c) who, being a trader and indebted to an amount exceeding one thousand dollars, is unable to pay his creditors in full, and has not, for five years next before such inability, kept such books of account as, according to the usual course of any trade or business in which he may have been engaged, are necessary to exhibit or explain his transactions, unless he be able to account for his losses to the satisfaction of the court or judge and to show that the absence of such books was not intended to defraud his creditors.'

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). It seems to me the promoter of this Bill should explain the object he has in view.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The object is simply to provide that the man in business who becomes insolvent must be able to show, by books kept previous to his insolvency, that the money has been lost. A law similar to this is in force in many countries and has been found to work very well, more especially, perhaps, in Scotland and France. All the chambers of commerce and boards of trade in Canada have passed resolutions asking the House to give effect to this Bill. We do not wish to tell a man how he shall carry on his business or what books he shall keep ; but when he fails, if he does fail, he must be able to show where the money has gone.

Mr. LANCASTER. To begin with, I am afraid there is an objection at the very outset to the form in which this Bill is drawn. It is not clear to whom it applies. For instance, I, for my part do not know what a 'trader' is as designated by the Bill. I do not know what interpretation the courts of the different provinces would put upon the word. In the province of Ontario in different statutes dealing more or less with the question of insolvency the word 'trader' is differently interpreted. Under some statutes a farmer might be a trader, while under others he would not be. I am satisfied that the same construction would not be given to this word in the Northwest Territories or in Quebec as would be given to it in Ontario and by juries of indifferent counties. My first suggestion to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) therefore, would be that he should define this term. Otherwise, the interpretation of the statute will cause a great deal of trouble in the courts. Secondly, even assuming that the principle is quite fair, I do not see why there should be this limitation of five years. The object, I suppose is to prevent a man from hiding his assets—failing with a full pocket ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. If that is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) contemplates, it seems to me the principle should apply without this limitation of five years. I do not see why, merely because a man keeps books for five years before his failure, and has really defrauded his creditors before that but has succeeded in postponing his actual insolvency, he should be better treated than the man who had not kept books. I do not see why, because he has kept books for five years, the judge is to be denied jurisdiction to ascertain whether his business was conducted with the intent of defrauding his creditors. I do not know that I should say more at this time. But I would like to have a statement from the hon. gentleman of what is meant in the Bill by the word 'trader.'

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I understand by the term 'trader' just what the Bill says, a man indebted to an amount exceeding $1,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will that apply to a lawyer, a doctor or a farmer ? I would like to know whom the hon. gentleman thinks this applies to. Does he think that under that term 'trader,' if a lawyer, or a doctor, or a farmer were indebted to an amount exceeding $1,000 this Act would apply to them?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I should think so, although I am not very well posted in these matters. But I think that any one who is buying goods from another person and owes him $1,000 would come under the provisions of this Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. In my opinion, the hon. gentleman will get no judge in Ontario to decide that a man is a trader in law merely because he sells somebody else $1,000 worth of property. If he wants to reach such a man, he had better amend his Bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Can the hon. gentleman tell me where, in the statutes of Ontario, outside the Abandonment of Property Act, a trader is defined ? I only know of one definition.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, there is an Act respecting absconding debtors, and there is a special provision in regard to the Ontario Judicature Act which brings in all these terms. If I had half an hour in the library I could produce a good many Ontario statutes to that effect.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 86) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, respecting the punishment of fraudulent debtors.—Mr. Bickerdike.

On section 1,

Mr. LANCASTER. I want a better understanding of this Bill. At six o'clock I was saying that I could find in it no definition of the word 'trader.' If the provisions of this Bill are wise, it should apply to every person who might be included in the idea or term of 'trader,' which, as I said, might differ in different provinces. We have not had much time to consider the Bill, and I would suggest that the committee should rise, so that we may have an opportunity to get the Bill into such shape as that perhaps further discussion may be unnecessary. Since six o'clock I have looked into it, but I am not yet prepared to draft a clause which would meet the case. If we are dealing with the subject we should make it applicable, not only to traders, but to any other one who is guilty of the fraud. There is no definition of 'trader' in the Criminal Code.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Nor anywhere else.

Mr. LANCASTER. In administering the Criminal Code everything must be held to be in favour of the accused, and a much stricter construction might possibly be put on the word 'trader' in a criminal case than in a civil case. If we mean that everybody dealing with another person who becomes a debtor should be subject to this clause we ought to say so, and not limit it to a 'trader.' I do not entirely disagree with the principle of the measure, but I want to help to make it sensible. The word 'trader' will not include every fraudulent debtor. The professional man is not a 'trader'; the courts of Ontario have held that a farmer is not a trader unless he is indicated in a special statute as such. Why should the professional classes be allowed to go scot-free, if they perpetuate fraud, and why should a special class of the community be punished? We have no criminal definition of the word 'trader.'

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Nor civil either.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is the criminal aspect that we are dealing with here. Suppose you prove that a man has done acts in contravention of this section, you would have to prove that he is a trader before punishing him, and there might be some difficulty in that, the jury would take its own view.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not in any way responsible for the drafting of this Bill, but I cannot understand the nature of my hon. friend's trouble about the word 'trader.' It is not an unusual word; it is used in the Insolvency Act and in the Abandonment of Property Act, Ontario, and no one has ever attempted to define it. It is a term which has received judicial construction; it was construed as far back as 1832 in the Meiklejohn case, and I do not know that the difficulty which my hon. friend has suggested has ever occurred to any one before. The Insolvency Act of 1864 says that the Act shall apply to traders only, and the same words are in the Abandonment of Property Act, Ontario.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought it was defined in the English Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know, but I have our own legislation here, and it is not defined.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was it not defined in the old Insolvency Act?

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr FITZPATRICK No.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was only a student when that Act went out of operation, but I remember we used to have a lot of discussion as to what was a trader, and I think it was defined.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My experience is that it is rather a doubtful expedient to define words unnecessarily in legislation.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is criminal legislation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In criminal legislation or any other. I have practised for twenty odd years as Crown prosecutor and defender of criminals, and it has not been my experience that the code defines very particularly the class of offences to which it applies. My experience is that it is better to allow elastic terms to be used, and have the courts construe them.

Mr. LANCASTER. As this clause stands we would exclude from its operation many a man who would perpetrate just as great a fraud as the trader who would be punished.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would be adopting imprisonment for debt which has disappeared from our land and which I do not wish to see revived. This legislation is intended to be applied to a special class known as traders, and there are reasons why it should be applied to that class. It is part of their calling to get credit; credit is the essence of their business. They carry on their business largely because of the credit they are able to obtain. The object of this legislation as promoted by the boards of trade, in our province at all events, is to provide that those who are obliged to trade with the men who trade upon credit, or do trade with them should be in a position to ascertain whether they deal honestly with that which they get upon their credit. That is the object and it seems to me it is a most desirable object.

Mr. LANCASTER. I quite concur that we should hesitate before we pass any legislation which creates imprisonment for debt, but that is what is here being done with certain people of the country but not with all people. The hon. gentleman says they obtain credit by making representations. Every man whether a trader or not, obtains credit before he becomes in debt and does so more or less by his standing in the community, and by the representations he made before getting into debt on his credit. The objection I have to the Bill is that it seeks to impose imprisonment for debt on certain classes of the community without defining those classes with a certain definition of traders, and at the same time to allow other people equally guilty to go scot-free. The effect of the Bill is to provide imprisonment for debt and nothing else for the men whom we are trying to reach by the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was not right as to the exact provisions of the Insolvency Act of 1875. My recollection was directly the opposite of his. On looking at the statute I find that he is not accurate. It is defined there and defined very elaborately :

> This Act shall apply to traders. The following persons and partnerships or companies exercising like trades, callings or employments——

And then it goes on with an enumeration of about thirty different trades or occupations and provides that the persons exercising the same shall be held to be traders within the meaning of the Act. The same is true of the English Bankruptcy Act and there is a large number of statutes in Great Britain as my hon. friend will see by reference to the text books in which the word 'trader' is defined by statute. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice says he understands what the meaning of the word 'trader' is. I do not for one moment deny that. He is speaking more particularly of his own province, I suppose. For my own part and speaking for the province of Nova Scotia, I may say that there might be a great deal of doubt as to the meaning of this word in a statute of this kind. It was found necessary in previous legislation to define the word.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not in the Act of 1864. I think my hon. friend, if he looks at that will see that it is not illuminative but enumerative.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether it is illuminative or enumerative, but at all events it does this : It says the Act shall apply to traders and then gives a long list of persons who shall come within that definition. If there is any distinction between a definition of that kind and an enumeration, then it would be very useful to provide some similar enumeration in this statute because I do not know exactly what is meant by the term. For example ; Would the Minister of Justice say that a farmer is included in the word 'trader ?' He would say he is not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It has been so decided time and again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose you have a farmer who does not confine himself to selling his own produce but who goes to market after buying produce from his neighbour. Would my hon. friend say that he would be a trader ? Perhaps there might be no difference of opinion in the province of Quebec but these are laws that will apply to all provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. These points come up every day and they have been decided time and again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Justice will show us that this has all been decided there is no need of further discussion. It has not been decided in my own province and this Act applies to the whole Dominion. My hon. friend from Lincoln says it would be desirable, for the purpose of removing doubt, to define exactly what the word 'trader' means. I think it would be desirable to define it for very obvious reasons, for the same reasons which have induced the legislature of Great Britain to define it. For example, in the English Statutes of 1869, I find there is a definition also. I have not the statute under my hand but in the English Bankruptcy Act of 1869, the word 'trader' was defined as well as in our statutes of 1875. The word 'trader' may have been given a more extended meaning by these definitions than it otherwise would bear under a definition of the courts. It is, however, equally important here to have the meaning of the word made certain, and I do not know exactly what my hon. friend the member who introduced the Bill (Mr. Bickerdike) intends by the word 'trader.' I think it desirable to include in this Act a definition just as in the Insolvency Act of 1875, it was found necessary to give a definition of the word which went further than any decided case, up to that time. It is only for the purpose of making the statute clear that my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) has made that suggestion and it is for the same reason that I am supporting him. But apart from this the principle of the Bill is somewhat important. I do not know that the Minister of Justice has come to any conclusion as to that. If we once arrive at the conclusion that the principle of the Bill is right and should be extended to some class or classes of persons in the community I do not think you will have very much difficulty in deciding whether or not we should have a definition of the word 'trader.' That is a very minor difficulty as compared with the more important question of whether or not the Act in its present form should apply to any class of the community whatever.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In regard to the Insolvency Act I find my memory was entirely at fault. The statute of 1864 applied in Lower Canada to traders only and in Upper Canada to all persons, whether traders or not traders. I have looked through the Act and I do not find any definition beyond that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am speaking of the Act of 1875.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have that also and I find :

The following persons and partnerships or companies exercising like trades or callings or employments shall be held to be traders.

That is very general ; I should not like to think that enumeration would limit the general terms of the section. I should not like to give that as a considered opinion of law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand my hon. friend.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I should not like to say in law that the following enumeration limited the general terms I have just described. I do not think the enumeration limits that at all.

The following persons and partnerships or companies exercising like trades, callings or employments shall be held to be traders.

Then we have the enumeration, not the definition, but the enumeration which my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) pointed out. Now that is only an enumeration it is not a definition. That is my opinion. If my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) would think we ought to define the word 'trader' I would be quite willing to have the Bill considered further for the purpose of considering any definition he would suggest. I must confess notwithstanding what has occurred that I know of no definition in law in any statute in this country of the word 'trader.' I know of no definition, absolutely none. We have a judicial construction of the term in our province. We have it in Ontario and we have it in the Privy Council, but we have no statutory definition that I know of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have no statutory definition which is applicable to all cases, but notwithstanding the opinion of the Minister of Justice, I would call this a practical definition.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would my hon. friend drop the word 'practical' and say 'definition' ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will tell my hon. friend what there is here. There is an enumeration of about thirty trades which are included, and about six which are not included. I would call that a practical definition, and I would be content to take the same kind of definition in this statute.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This matter was discussed last year in the Senate, and I have looked at the debate. With such legislation as we have already in existence. I think it is most desirable that traders should be made to understand that they cannot take advantage of the credit they enjoy for the purpose of defrauding their creditors, and if my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) can get us a definition of trader that will meet the case, I would be inclined to go with him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. L. A. RIVET. I have been approached by the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal with the request to support this Bill, and I desire to say a few words upon it. This Bill has been instigated by almost all the boards of trade throughout the Dominion, because they feel that some legislation of this kind is badly needed at the present time, in the absence of an Insolvency Act, to protect not only the public at large against fraudulent debtors, but also the traders themselves against themselves. The legislation that was presented to the Senate last year went through without any amendment from its original form. It was presented by the Hon. Senator Beique. Although some senators took exception to the Bill, they did not offer any amendment to it. They all agreed that legislation of this kind was needed. I do not myself really see the force of the objection of the hon. leader of the opposition in regard to the definition of the word 'trader.' I agree with the hon. Minister of Justice that that word is perfectly understood particularly in the province of Quebec. A trader is a man who is habitually engaged in commerce.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it include a commission merchant?

Mr. RIVET. Of course. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition understands very well that it could not apply to a professional man, such as a lawyer or a doctor. Of course, if a lawyer or a doctor chose to engage in trade, such as selling wood or timber, through that side line of business he would become subject to the application of the present Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it include a wharfinger or warehouseman ?

Mr. RIVET. Yes, an agent—any man who engages in trade and commerce.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it include a farmer?

Mr. RIVET. Not a farmer who sells the products of his farm ; but if a farmer chose to deal in hay, for instance, or to engage in any other trade, I have no hesitation in saying that he would become subject to the application of this Bill. It seems to me perfectly simple. The line of demarkation could be easily drawn between people engaged in professions and people engaged in trades. I think there is no difficulty whatever in the definition of the word 'trader.' Now I come to the application of the Bill. I have said that it is badly needed ; and this is shown by the resolutions which have been passed by almost every board of trade throughout the Dominion. If I am allowed, I shall submit to this committee a report which has been made by a committee appointed by the Chambre de Commerce of Montreal, and adopted by that body. This report was afterwards sent to every board of trade in the Dominion, and approved of by them. It was embodied in a resolution which was passed by the Chambre de Commerce afterwards, and which reads as follows :

Whereas, the failure to keep regular books of account is adverse to the interests of those who invest their capital in commercial, industrial and financial enterprises by exposing them to endless losses, and is likewise the cause of a great many business failures ;

Whereas, the absence of books is also the cause of embezzlements, of all manner of breaches of confidence, of dishonest manipulations of funds, of obtaining moneys under false pretenses, and, finally, of fraudulent failures ;

Whereas, the enactment of a law, obliging persons or corporate bodies, doing business, to keep books of account, would have the salutary effect of checking these dishonest and illegal practices ;

Whereas, the making of accountancy obligatory for establishments or enterprises of a certain magnitude, would safeguard the general credit and would aid in the advancement and development of trade and of industries throughout the whole of Canada :

Resolved, that this 'Chambre de Commerce' reiterates its representations to the federal government, praying the introduction, at the next session, of a Bill obliging all persons, or bodies corporate, doing business, or who obtain credit, to the extent of one thousand dollars and upwards, to keep books sufficient, in case of failure, to render an account of their operations, and that such persons or bodies corporate, be held criminally responsible unless they show that the absence of regular books of account was not for the purpose of defrauding their creditors.

The fact that all the boards of trade throughout the Dominion approved of this resolution and passed similar resolutions, shows that there is a general feeling amongst commercial people in favour of legislation on this subject ; and their views thus formally expressed, should be taken into consideration by this parliament. The promoter of the Bill in the Senate last year, Senator Beique, stated that similar legislation exists in several countries, among others, France.

But such legislation is far more stringent than what we are proposing, because in France the laws which regulate commerce are more extensive and complete than those which prevail here and in England. It seems to me that in France, public opinion is more disposed to favour the stringent legislation than it is in any other country. As hon. members know, there are in France two kinds of bankruptcy—the ordinary bankruptcy and the fraudulent, and there the laws go very far in the way of regulating trade and commerce. The legislation in that country was found too stringent, and the promoters of this Bill found it expedient to adopt rather the legislation which exists in Scotland, and which has been in existence there for many years and has given every satisfaction. Of course we do not want to go too far, but this legislation is only a step in advance, and later on, if no general insolvency law be adopted, a step further ought to be made.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION ACT.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that the Bill is not printed in French.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I cannot understand why it is not, because it has been on the order paper over three weeks. I am inclined to think that it is, and that the order paper is mistaken. I would ask my hon. friend if possible not to press his objection, because this probably will be the last day on which I can bring the matter before the House. It is really a very important Bill. Its object is to introduce into the Northwest Territories Representation Act the provisions of the general election laws regarding the agents of candidates.

Mr. SIFTON. Where does the demand for the legislation come from ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. From the Northwest Territories. I do not undertake to say that I represent the Territories at all, but influential gentlemen from that part of the country have asked me to introduce this legislation. I do not think however that I need any special mandate. If I find in such an important statute as the election law of the Northwest Territories a section which evidently requires amendment, I do not think I require any distinct mandate from the Territories to propose an amendment. I am sure that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior will concur in that view. I am sure he will agree that we have a general mandate here to represent the people and not only those parts of the country from which we come. If my hon. friend the Solicitor General will withdraw his objection, I think he will be convinced that he has done well. My own opinion is that the Bill is printed in French and that the error is in the order paper.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was read the first time on the 19th of May.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes. Under the 48th section of the Northwest Territories Representation Act, the enumerator can issue as many certificates as he pleases, while under the general election law he can only issue a certain number. The general trend of legislation on this subject has been to limit, as much as possible, the number of certified agents, so that no personation, as far as possible, may take place. It is well understood that if a number of agents get these certificates, they can go into outlying districts where they are not known, and the danger of personation then becomes greater than if only a distinct number, fixed by the statute, were appointed by the proper officer. If hon. gentlemen will refer to section 61 of the Dominion Elections Act they will find that :

The returning officer, on the request of any elector entitled to vote at one of the polling stations, who is appointed deputy returning officer or poll clerk, or who is named the agent of any of the candidates for a polling station other than the one where he is entitled to vote, shall give to such elector a certificate that such deputy returning officer, poll clerk or agent is entitled to vote at such election at the polling station where such elector is stationed during the polling day.

Then it goes on to say :

2. The returning officer shall not grant such certificate for more than two agents for each candidate at or for each polling station.

3. Every person so appointed deputy returning officer, poll clerk or agent, and claiming to vote by virtue of such certificate, shall, if required, before voting, take the oath in the form R.

4. Such oath, with the corresponding certificate of the returning officer, shall be filed with the deputy returning officer at the polling station where the person taking it has voted.

The object of this Bill is simply to amend the 48th section of the Northwest Territories Act so, as to make it as nearly as possible similar to the section in the general Act. The Bill says :

Every enumerator shall attach to each of the two copies of the voters' list which are by section 30 of this Act required to be posted up by him within each polling division, a written notice which shall be signed by him and shall designate a place and time where and when electors may conveniently find him during at least two consecutive hours on every day, except Sunday, of the eight days next before the polling day, for the purpose of applying to him for such certificates.

I am told on very good authority that this has happened in several instances, and I am not imputing any motives to anybody. The enumerator, after giving certificates to a certain number of gentlemen to represent a certain candidate, then disappeared, so that the agents or representatives of the other candidates could get no certificate at all.

So there are two dangers in the law as it stands to-day—the danger that a great many certificates may be given, thereby increasing the opportunity for personation ; and the unfairness resulting from the law, inasmuch as the enumerator, by thus disappearing, can prevent the other candidate from getting certificates and being represented at the poll. Now, if that is so, it appeals to the fairness of hon. gentlemen opposite whether it would not be better, under the circumstances, to assimilate the law that is in force in the Northwest Territories to the General Elections Act, and make it incumbent upon the enumerator who gives these certificates to be at a stated place during stated hours for the eight days which precede the polling, so that he may give certificates to the agents of both candidates. That is the first provision of the Bill.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has the statute before him. Will he say who are entitled to receive certificates ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. The deputy returning officer, the poll clerk and any agent. That is where the difficulty comes in. I understand there is no difficulty about the deputy returning officer or the poll clerk, but there is difficulty about the agent. All we ask is that the enumerator be put in such a position that he will be obliged to give certificates to those on either side who ask for them ; and, secondly, that he will give only three certificates. The General Election law says two certificates, but this provides for three. I remember that in the provincial legislature of Quebec, when this question came up, it was agreed on both sides that is was a wise provision to limit, as much as possible, the number of certificates that might be given. And in the election law that was passed by that House when I had the honour of sitting there and of proposing the measure, two certificates were allowed to be given by the deputy returning officer to the representatives of the candidates. Here, owing to the different circumstances in the Northwest Territories, the Bill allows three.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And they to be given by the enumerator.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes. That is another circumstance made necessary by the condition of affairs in the Northwest Territories. The Bill goes on to say :

(c) the certificates issued by each enumerator shall be numbered consecutively in the order of issue ;

(d) the certificates shall not be issued in blank.

This is to do away with another source of fraud. Certificates in many instances, before the General Election Act was passed, were issued in blank, so that anybody could get them. In fact, the agent of the candidate or, sometimes, the candidate himself, went about with blank certificates giving them to anybody, thereby again increasing the danger of impersonation.

(e) the certificate shall contain in writing the name of the person to whom it is issued, and shall state that he is a qualified elector, the polling division in which he is entitled to vote, and, if he is a deputy returning officer, agent or poll clerk, the polling station for which he is appointed.

Section 2 of the Act provides that this certificate shall be filed with the returning officer, and that an entry shall be made in the poll-book opposite the voter's name if the deputy returning officer or poll clerk or agent has voted. There is no political controversy about this matter. The House, having, in 1900, adopted the system set forth in the present Bill, has absolutely no reason for rejecting this measure. It places both parties on the same footing; and I should be very loath to believe for an instant that hon. gentlemen opposite would wish to take advantage of the unsatisfactory condition of the law to-day. All we ask is that the law which applies to other parts of the Dominion should apply to the Northwest Territories.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). I had no intention, in addressing the question I did to my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) as to the source of complaint in regard to the present law, to suggest that any member of the House had not a perfect right to introduce a Bill to amend any public statute. I was asking for information, to ascertain whether or not, as a matter of fact, complaints had been made as to the operation of the present law, and, if so, from what source those complaints had come. I asked that question, because, so far as I am concerned, my attention had not been drawn to any complaints made as to the operation of the present law. The representation law for the Northwest Territories, as the House is aware, is not the same as the law which governs the rest of the Dominion. Parliament has thought well that a different law should be in force there, because of the fact that, owing to the sparseness of population and the extent of the districts, the ordinary law as respects the compilation of voters' lists could not be conveniently applied. There have been some modifications of the election law made since 1896 in the direction of protecting the opposition, or the party not in control of the official machinery, and considerable improvement has been made in that respect. I do not think that any objection could be taken to an amendment which has for its purpose to limit or prevent the possibility of fraud. But, for myself, not being aware that my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) intended to move his Bill this evening, I have not had the opportunity to give the matter the consideration, in consultation with the members of the Northwest Territories, that I would like to have given, in order to ascertain how the law has worked. I would not like to express a positive opinion against the proposal of my hon. friend, nor would I, without looking into the matter, express an opinion in favour of it. I move the adjournment of the debate, so that the matter can be considered at a future time.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would have no objection to the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton), and I understand that the reasons he has given for the adjournment of the debate are quite plausible. But I am under the impression that this is the last day when public Bills can be brought up by private members, unless they can be brought up on Monday.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They can be brought up on Monday.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Under these circumstances, I have no objection to the motion.

Motion (Mr. Sifton) agreed to, and debate adjourned.

YUKON TERRITORY REPRESENTATION ACT, 1902, AMENDMENT.

On the order :

Second reading of Bill (No. 118) to amend the Yukon Territory Representation Act, 1902.—Mr. Casgrain.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) before proceeding with this motion that it is the intention of the government to introduce a Bill for the purpose of amending the election law in connection with the Yukon Territory, and, possibly, the amendment which my hon. friend desires to suggest can be more conveniently discussed then. We will give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to bring forward his amendment when our Bill is before the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If I had not been told, in answer to a question which I put at the beginning of the session, that it was the intention of the government to amend the Yukon Representation Act——

Mr. SIFTON. I think the hon. gentleman was told exactly the opposite.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No—unless I completely misunderstood the answer. Had I not understood that the government did not intend to amend the Act, I would not have introduced the Bill. There are some parts of the present law so glaringly inconsistent with some other parts that it is necessary that the government should amend it. I would draw my hon. friend's (Mr. Sifton's) attention, for instance, to the oath. He will see at once that the oath described in the schedule of the Act is not at all in accordance with the provisions of the Act itself.

Mr. SIFTON. If the hon. gentleman will move the second reading and make the explanations he intended to make, we will then have the benefit of his remarks so that we can consider them in connection with the Bill we intend to introduce.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I move that Bill (No. 118) to amend the Yukon Territory Representation Act, 1902, be read the second time. Now, here is the oath :

You do swear that you are of the male sex and a British subject, that you are not an Indian, that you are of the full age of twenty-one years, and that you have resided in the Northwest Territories for at least twelve months and in this electoral district for at least three months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election.

Now, the Act itself does not say anything about three months; the only provision in the statute requires a residence of twelve months. I believe this oath was taken from the old Northwest Territories Representation Act and put into this Act without any consideration of the text of the statute itself. Then there is another grievance to be found in the Act. The enumerators prepare the list under section 29, which reads as follows:

Each such enumerator, upon his appointment and having first taken the oath of office, shall immediately thereafter compile a list of the persons qualified as electors to vote at the election then pending, for the polling division or each of the polling divisions for which he has been appointed; and he shall make three plainly written copies thereof, with the names of the voters alphabetically arranged, giving the occupation and residence of each voter, in the form K in the schedule to this Act.

2. In the compilation of such list the enumerator may only enter thereon the names of such person or persons as are, by statutory declaration filed with him, declared, by such person or some agent having a personal knowledge of the facts declared to, to possess the qualifications necessary to entitle to vote under the provisions of this Act.

Then section 30 says the lists must be posted up. Now as to the correction of the voters' list section 31 reads:

If any enumerator, at any time after posting up any voters' list and seven days before the polling day, is fully satisfied, from representations made to him by any credible person, that the name of any qualified voter has been omitted from the voters' list of the polling division to which such voter belong, he shall add such name to the copy of the list in his possession below his own signature, and shall attest such addition by his initials; if the enumerator, in like manner, is fully satisfied that there is on the list the name of any person who is not qualified as a voter in such polling division, he may draw erasing lines through such name, and write his own initials opposite thereto in the column for remarks.

Hon. gentlemen will notice that in the compilation of the list the enumerator can only put upon the list those persons whom he is satisfied are qualified to be electors by the statutory declaration filed with him, while in the correction of the list, which is just as important an operation as the compilation of the list, he will take the statement only or the representation made by any credible person. So that whilst the law requires for the compilation of the list a statutory declaration as to the qualification of those persons who are to be electors according to the list, in the correction of the list the enumerator shall take only the unsworn representation of a credible person, either to put a new name upon the list or to erase from the list the names of those persons who have been put upon it. It seems to me that this is an anomaly, and that the same precaution should be taken for the correction of the list as for its compilation. If the law is that a sworn declaration shall be made to the enumerator to permit him to put a man's name upon the list the same sworn declaration should be made for the correction, and the Bill which I propose in the House is to that effect, that in order to put another name upon the list which is not already upon it, or in order to take a man's name off the list, a sworn declaration should be filed with the enumerator. Now, section 32 says:

Every enumerator, having revised and corrected such retained copy of each voters' list compiled by him, if he deem such correction necessary, as provided in the next preceding section, shall write at the foot of such copy and close to the last name thereon, two days before the polling day, a certificate in the form of the second certificate contained in form K in the schedule to this Act.

The enumerator shall deliver the voters' list so certified forthwith, or before 8 o'clock in the morning of the polling day to the deputy returning officer for the polling division to which it relates; and such list, as received by such deputy returning officer, shall be the voters' list for such polling division, subject to be further corrected on the polling day as hereinafter provided.

The poll clerk shall make such additions, alterations, and erasures in the voters' list, and such entries in the poll book as the deputy returning officer directs him to make, as is required by any provision of this Act.

So there seems to be no finality. What happens is this: That that list is not really final before a man actually comes up to vote; at all events, the enumerator is only required to give the list which he has compiled to the deputy returning officer before 8 o'clock on the polling day.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is two days before polling day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It should be, but it is not. I have just read to the contrary from the Act itself. There is no finality, because the deputy returning officer or the poll clerk shall, under section 46, make such additions, alterations or erasures in the voters' list as the deputy returning officer directs him to make as is required by any provision of this Act. Now I am told—I do not know whether it is true or not—that on the very day of the last election a great many people were brought to the polling booths and their names were put upon the list while the voting was going on. It seems to me that for the protection of all parties, some finality should be given to this list a certain number of days before the polling takes place.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend's information is that names are put on the lists without any evidence of qualification ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes. That is my information, and I have got it from very respectable people whose word I cannot doubt, that men were brought up on election day while the voting was going on, and without any evidence whatever as to their qualification, they were admitted as voters and they cast their vote—admitted by the poll clerk under the direction of the deputy returning officer.

Mr. SIFTON. Without a declaration ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, without a declaration. I may tell my hon. friend that the statute does not require it. The enumerator is not there at the polling booth, and under section 46, it is open to anybody who wants to stretch the wording of the law to do exactly what it is alleged has been done during the election, because it says that the poll clerk shall make such additions, alterations and erasures in the voters' list and such entries in the poll book as the deputy returning officer directs him to make. The hon. gentleman will see that this law opens the door wide to fraud. Now, what I propose to do by the Bill before the House is simply to say that a certain number of days before polling day the lists shall be finally compiled—say two or three days, it doesn't matter very much except for distance.

I am not sufficiently familiar with the country to say what number of days would be sufficient, but it seems to me that each party should be on an equal footing and this list so prepared, should be open to the inspection of everybody so that any person complaining that his name is not on the list or that the list contains the name of any man who has not a right to vote, should be able to go to the enumerator and have the list corrected. But this should be done a certain number of days before polling day, so that no one should be surprised and that on polling day especially, no new names should be added to the list. These are the principal provisions of the Bill submitted to the House. There are other sections also which are not quite so important, for instance I am of the opinion that the discretion vested in the Governor in Council as to the fixing of the date for the election in the Yukon Territory should be abridged, and that a certain limit should be fixed to the time within which the election may be brought on.

Mr. SIFTON. The attention of the government has been drawn to the fact that the Act respecting representation in the Northwest Territories, which was largely modelled upon the old Northwest Territories Representation Act, is in some respects not adapted to the requirements of the country and is unnecessarily cumbersome and expensive in its operation, and it is the intention of the government to introduce a Bill during this session for the purpose of modifying the provisions of the Bill in some respects. Our attention has not been drawn to the fact that any allegation has been made of such an abuse as that of which my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) complains, but there could be no possible objection to considering carefully what he has said in reference to it and the amendment which he has proposed. Then if it seems desirable to incorporate these amendments in the government Bill, we could do so when the Bill comes up, and if we should differ from my hon. friend, he would then have an opportunity of moving his amendments. I would therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) to tell me whether he has considered the question as to whether the attestation of the list has to be made forty-eight hours before polling, because really, I must confess to my hon. friend I am entirely at sea.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes. There is one provision of the Act which says it should be, but there is another which says the list can be altered on polling day.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Which is the last ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. They are in the same statute, but the one I have mentioned last is the last.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was under the impression that the list has to be closed forty-eight hours before polling.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty is that there are two inconsistent provisions in the statute, the provision to which the hon. the Minister of Justice refers and another which is inconsistent with it and upon which action was taken in the recent election. I may say, not only with regard to this, but with regard to the Bill we were discussing a moment ago, that similar representations to those which my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) says have come to him, have been made to me in very emphatic terms, not only about the possibility, but the performance at elections in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon.

Motion (Mr. Sifton) agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. B. B. LAW (Yarmouth) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 119) to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would ask my hon. friend to allow this matter to stand. I have not had an opportunity of looking into this Bill. It was only printed and distributed yesterday by mistake, and I have had no chance of considering its terms.

Order allowed to stand.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 37) to amend the Exchequer Court Act. He said: This is the Act which extends the right of appeal so far as the government is concerned to enable us to take an appeal in any case whatever the amount involved may be.

Mr. McCARTHY. Has the subject the same right?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why not?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) why the Crown should have the right of appeal while the subject has not that right? It seems to me a rather unusual practice. Of course the prerogative of the Crown extends so as to give the Crown a great many privileges to which the subject is not entitled, but the trend of modern legislation has been to place the Crown and the subject altogether on an equality in regard to matters of this kind. For example, the Crown could at one time exact costs while the subject was not entitled to exact costs, but I think the trend of the decisions in modern times is that where the Crown is entitled to receive costs, it shall pay costs, and where it is not entitled to receive costs it shall not have to pay costs. If the Crown is to have a right to appeal why should not the subject have the right to appeal in cases in the Exchequer court or anywhere else?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is, of course, aware that the right of the subject to sue is only by exception. The subject now has practically the right to bring the Crown before the courts. We have a practice in Ottawa that does not, I think, exist elsewhere; a fiat is granted to any person, and any person who has a claim against the Crown has a right to exercise it. The result is that we are very frequently compelled to defend ourselves in suits in which the subject has a very doubtful claim indeed, and the amount of costs thus incurred is sometimes very large. The point now is that so far as concerns the Exchequer Court which is of somewhat recent creation, the practice is not very well settled, and it frequently happens that points come up in a comparatively trivial suit which ought to be decided in a definite manner by the Supreme Court, so that we may know the practice and be in a position to decide whether or not it is proper to introduce legislation. I must confess that I can see no great hardship in the present proposal. My experience in practice at Ottawa has been that in cases before the Exchequer Court, the Crown more frequently receives the short end and does not very often receive much sympathy from the courts. It is desirable that we should have an opportunity of having questions of principle settled by resort to a final court. I do not think there is much hardship in this matter, because in all cases where more than $500 is involved there is an appeal on both sides. But there may be large principles involved in cases over very small amounts, perhaps not exceeding $100 or $200. The principle involved in such a case may apply to a dozen cases. I have one case in my mind now where there are fifty-two cases depending on a judgment in a matter in which the amount involved does not exceed $500, and I think it is desirable in the interest of the Crown, in the interest of the government, that we should have an opportunity of having these things settled finally by judgment of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that all these questions of prerogative have been vastly changed in the last few years, by reason of the change in the relations of the Crown to the subject. When these prerogatives were established, the Crown had not gone into the business of running railways and of doing a great many other things which are done now, and it seems to me that instead of increasing the prerogatives of the Crown and the privileges which the Crown possesses before all the courts in this country and in England, the tendency should be to limit them as much as possible. I really do not see now why a man who is injured on a railway or on some public work carried on by the Crown, should be obliged to go to the Governor in Council and ask for permission to sue the Crown.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Why?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Because if the Crown goes into the business of running the railways and owning steamships, it becomes more like a common subject and in its relations to the common subject, should have no greater privilege extended to it than the privileges which are extended to the subject. I am aware of many instances in which the fiat has been withheld without any justification whatever, but I do not say that such has been done by this government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Probably, but I am not personally aware of it. It seems to me that it is placing the subject in a disadvantageous position, when you give the crown the right to appeal, and deprive him of that right, so that the Crown can carry on litigation at the expense of the subject. The Crown should not be permitted to appeal simply for the purpose of getting questions of principle decided by the highest court, unless indeed, it is provided that there shall be no costs against the subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The judges of the Supreme Court will take care of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some of the reasons suggested by the Minister of Justice as to the Crown getting scant justice, are rather a reflection on the court than argument for legislation of this kind. Why should the Crown be entitled to an appeal at the expense of the subject? If a test case is selected on which many other cases depend, why should the unfortunate suppliant have to bear the general costs in the event of the Crown succeeding? Where the subject has not the right to appeal, it should be provided that the Crown, if successful, cannot recover costs against the subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That does not seem unreasonable; it is the practice any way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The courts vary more or less.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not the Supreme Court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I were a litigant, I would feel more comfortable if protected by statute.

At present the Crown has discretion to allow, or to refuse, a fiat on a petition of right. I remember on one occasion, the Postmaster General refused a fiat in some thirty or forty cases, and he refused simply because in his pure unadulterated wisdom, he decided that they had not what he called any moral claim against the Crown. Well, that ought to be decided by the courts and not by a minister. I do not believe that practice is conducive to good government. I agree with the Minister of Justice that where persons are likely to run up a large amount of costs, it would be proper for the Crown to insist that before a petition of right is granted there should be security for costs. I would protect the Crown, but I would not allow the Crown to deprive a subject of the right to enforce what he thinks a good claim against the Crown. Some years ago when I discussed this matter, the Minister of Justice seemed to share my views. I would ask him now to take this matter into consideration, and to determine whether some amendment to the law in this respect should not be made. My recollection is that in England petitions of right are allowed with much greater freedom than they are here.

Mr. CASGRAIN. They are hardly ever refused in England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would suggest that this Bill should be amended so that in cases where the subject has not the right of appeal, if the Crown succeeds on appeal, the subject should not be liable for costs.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My opinion has never varied with respect to the granting of fiats in petitions of right. Except in extreme cases, I have always been under the impression that the proper course is to give the suppliant an opportunity to litigate his claim before the courts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The courts are established to decide controversies between subjects, and when the Crown, as is the practice nowadays, extends its operations beyond the original limits assigned to it, we ought deal generously with those who make applications for petitions of right. That has been our practice recently at all events. I have not consulted the other members of the government, but is is my personal intention to introduce legislation this session for the purpose of adapting our practice with respect to petitions of right, to the practice in the province of Quebec which provides that security for costs ought to be given in all cases. I would not leave it discretionary with the Crown, because if the Crown wished to favour a suppliant it might be possible to say that he should not give security. It would be better to have a statutory enactment requiring security for costs in proportion to the amount in controversy between the Crown and the suppliant. Perhaps the debate on this Bill had better be adjourned for the purpose, of enabling me to consider how far I may incorporate in the Bill these other matters which I have in mind now. It is a very fair proposition, that when the Crown appeals for the purpose of having a question of principle settled, the costs should not be granted against the subject in the event of the Crown succeeding. That is the practice in the courts now; and we might make it statutory.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would go a step further. If the subject recovers in the court of first instance on a small claim; and if the Crown appeals for the purpose of establishing a principle on which many thousands of dollars might depend, it is not fair that the subject should be dragged through the courts on account of his small claim, and made to pay even his own costs on the appeal. The Privy Council in England frequently, when a rich corporation asks for leave to appeal, says, you may appeal if you wish, but you have to bear the costs of both sides in any event. This is a case in which I think the Crown should bear not only its own costs, but the suppliant's costs as well.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I want to add that since I have been Solicitor General I have had occasion to examine the records of the department with regard to several cases in which petitions of right have been granted by the Crown, and I may say to my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) that to my personal knowledge, generally speaking, the Crown has been very liberal in granting such petitions of right. I can assure him that in many cases the Crown has, for instance, renounced its right to invoke prescription. The suppliants are well protected, and there has been no case of hardship, at least during the few months that I have been in the office.

Motion (Mr. Fitzpatrick) agreed to, and debate adjourned.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 39) to amend the Yukon Territory Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As this Bill was discussed in committee before, I do not know that it is necessary for me to add anything to what I said then, except perhaps for the benefit of those who were not present then, to say that the intention is merely to give effect to ordinances passed by the Yukon Council. By subsection 3 of section 5 of the Yukon Territory Act, it is provided that natural-born and naturalized male British subjects in the territory, who have attained the full age of twenty-one years and have continuously resided there for a period of not less than twelve months, shall elect five representatives to the territorial council, each voter to vote for five representatives. The Yukon Council, acting upon what they conceived to be the law, decided to divide the Yukon Territory into five electoral districts and give to each elector a vote for the representative of his particular district. That was not the original intention, but perhaps, on the whole, there is nothing to complain of in that regard, and under the circumstances the object of this legislation is to give effect to that ordinance sub-dividing the territory into five districts, and giving a right to vote to each elector who has resided in the Yukon Territory during twelve months and in the district during three months.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many elected members and how many appointed members are there in the council ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Five elected, five nominated and the commissioner.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the scheme ? Is it to produce a sort of balance of power between the appointed and the elected members ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I could not say what the scheme was, as I was not here when it was adopted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has there not been some question in reference to the elected and the appointed members, and did not the Minister of Justice give some opinion as to what would be the proper course to pursue under such circumstances ?

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have no recollection of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was not some question submitted as to whether or not a certain resolution proposed in the council would be a proper one, having regard to the powers of the Yukon Council and its relation to the administration of the government here at Ottawa ? My attention has been directed to something of that kind, but I have not the details here at this moment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend has any object, I shall be glad to inquire into that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should be glad to have the hon. Minister of Justice look it up, and if he would be good enough, after doing so, to bring it down if doing so is not against the public interest, I would esteem it a favour. As this Bill has been discussed already in committee, I would not ask him to postpone it further, but perhaps he will let the third reading stand until we get the information referred to ?

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—PROTECTION FOR FARM AND GARDEN PRODUCTS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the government to the question of better protection to the farm and market-garden products. I beg to move the following amendment :

That a large and increasing quantity of farm and market garden products is being imported into Canada.

That our own country is fully capable of furnishing an ample supply of such products for our own market.

That under an adequately protective tariff such sufficient supply would always be produced and marketed in Canada.

And that such readjustment should include as far as practicable the imposition of specific instead of ad valorem duties.

That in the opinion of this House the duties upon the said products should be so readjusted during the present session as to secure the Canadian market to the Canadian producer.

Among the requests that the farmers and gardeners make to the government are the following : That duties be imposed as follows :

	Cents.
Asparagus.. .. ..per pound	3
Cabbages.. .. ..each	3
Cauliflowers.. .. ..each	3
Celery.. .. ..per doz.	25
Beans.. .. ..bush.	45
Green cucumbers.. .. ..per doz.	20
Onions.. ....bush. of 56 lbs.	40
Tomatoes.. .. ..per pound	5
Watermelons.. .. ..each	5
Muskmelons cantaloup.... .. ..each	3
Spinach.. .. ..per bush.	25

I wish to direct the attention of the government to this very important question. In the session of 1901 a deputation waited upon the hon. the Minister of Customs and drew his attention to the fact that very uneven tariff conditions existed between Canada and the United States, in so far as farm and market-garden products were concerned, and the hon. the leader of the opposition moved a resolution during that session which reads as follows :

This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory, is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians.

And that the financial policy of the government should include a measure for the thorough and judicious readjustment of the tariff at the present session.

It was thought that the government would do something for the farmers and market-gardeners in the session of 1901. I do not think that any government ever had a better opportunity to do something for so important a class, because the resolution I have just read declared the opinion of the hon. leader of the opposition and his followers upon that question. With this expression of policy on the part of the leader of the opposition and his supporters, the government could have had a resolution adopted unanimously giving to the farmers and market-gardeners the protection they are entitled to. However, in the session of 1901 that resolution was voted down. The hon. leader of the opposition and his supporters recorded their votes in favour of better protection to the farmers and market-gardeners and the right hon. gentleman and his supporters voted down that resolution, so that a distinct issue between the two parties was created on that subject. The Liberal-Conservative party voted in favour of protection and the right hon. gentleman and his supporters opposed better protection to the farmers and market-gardeners. Nothing was done in the session of 1901, and in the session of 1902 another deputation waited on the hon. the Minister of Finance. A very large and influential deputation was received from the province of Ontario and Quebec and submitted resolutions for consideration by that hon. minister and his colleagues—resolutions which had been passed by the Farmers and Market-Gardeners Association of Quebec and Ontario. This large and influential deputation pointed out to the minister that something should be done for the farmers and market-gardeners if they were to retain the Canadian market. During that session the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Leonard) moved this resolution :

That it is greatly in the interests of the market-gardeners and the farmers that the duties on our Canadian garden products be raised so as to give an effective protection against foreign competition.

That resolution expressed the policy of the opposition in this House, but when it was submitted to a vote, the right hon. the leader of the government and his followers voted it down. In the session of 1903, the hon. member for Laval again introduced the same resolution, and important speeches were made pressing some very important facts on the attention of the government, showing that a large quantity of market and farm products was being imported into this country, coming directly into competition with the products of our farms and gardens. It was pointed out also that the present tariff does not give any special advantage because under the ad valorem system of duties, very large quantities of goods were brought in under value, so that there was practically no protection whatever to the interests of the farmers and market-gardeners. This, Sir, is an important question, and I wish to place upon record the one-sided tariff that exists between Canada and the United States. The United States tariff is 45 cents per bushel on beans. Canadian tariff is 15 cents, the United States tariff is 25 cents per bushel on potatoes ; the Canadian is 15 cents. On apples the American tariff is 75 cents per barrel and the Canadian 40 cents. On onions the American tariff is 40 cents per bushel, and the Canadian 25 per cent ad valorem. Cabbages, under the American tariff, are charged 3 cents per head, and under the Canadian 25 per cent ad valorem.

You will see, Sir, by this short list that the duties are entirely in favour of the United States farmer as against the Canadian, and what our resolution asks is that the Canadian tariff shall be made equal to the American. Would you allow me to give an example of how this one-sided tariff works out ? Last year we imported for home consumption from the United States $228,640 of potatoes and we exported but $56,969 worth.

Mr. HEYD. What kind of potatoes did we import ?

Mr. BLAIN. The ordinary field potato, not the sweet potato. Of apples we imported from the United States last year $81,266 worth, while we exported to the United States $11,508 worth ; or a difference in favour of the United States on apples alone of $69,758. So, on these two items that I have mentioned—potatoes and apples—the balance of trade was $241,429 in favour of the United States farmer.

I wish now to give a list—not a complete list by any means but only a short one—of other imports into this country under this one-sided tariff, for the last year for which we have the returns :

Imported for home consumption for the year ending 30th June, 1903 :

Potatoes	$228,640
Fresh tomatoes	69,014
Tomatoes and other vegetables, including corn and beans in cans	115,905
Strawberries, blackberries, gooseberries and raspberries	89,413
Beans	25,590
Cherries	14,754
Grapes	36,970
Apples, green or ripe	79,497
Drier apples	7,634
Melons	16,318
Peaches	70,903

That is the amount we have imported from the United States of these articles, coming in direct competition with similar products of the Canadian farmer. There was a time when it was said that we in Canada could not produce all these articles. Indeed, in the discussion of last session and the session before, some hon. gentlemen on the other side ventured to say that we could not produce many of these articles that we were importing into Canada, or that we could not produce them early enough in the season, when there was a certain demand among the richer classes in Canada for them. But the conditions are constantly changing. There was a time in the history of this country—and not so many years ago—when it was thought that we could not produce roses, when it was thought that, if we required cut flowers in our larger cities, we had to import them from the United States. But things are entirely changed owing to the thrift of the Canadian people ; and, in the town in which I have the honour to live, there is a large rose-growing industry covering thirteen acres with grass ; and last year this company, the Dale Estate, which is so well managed by Mr. Duggan and Mr. Algie, produce more than $100,000 worth of cut flowers and these were sold from one end of Canada to the other while some small proportion, I am glad to say was exported to the United States. During this session a gentleman from Manitoba gave his evidence before the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. I refer to Mr. A. P. Stevenson, a prominent Manitoban. As to fruit-growing in that province, Mr. Stevenson pointed out that, not many years ago it was thought impossible to produce apples in Manitoba ; but the farmers there have faced this fruit problem and now there is some portion of the apples used in Manitoba that are produced in that province. And he ventured to say that, in a very short time, all the apples required for home consumption in Manitoba could be produced by the Manitoba farmers themselves. That should set at rest the question whether Canada can produce the articles which we are now importing from the United States. This is an important consideration and one that, I am sure, will appeal to the intelligence of the government when they are discussing their policy upon this subject.

I wish now to point out the very large quantity of certain fruits that are being imported into Canada under the free list. For instance, I find that in 1893 we imported into Canada 430,240 bunches of bananas, while, last year, 1903, we imported 942,443 bunches, or an increase in ten years in the importation of bananas alone of 512,203 bunches. To show how rapidly the consumption of this fruit is increasing in Canada I may point out that the importation in 1902 was 765,767 bunches. Thus, with an importation of 942,443 bunches last year, we find that in one year there has been an increase in this import of 176,676 bunches. Then I take the item of pineapples. In 1893, we imported 610,031, while in 1903, we imported 1,375,226. In 1902 our importation of pineapples was 1,095,949, so that there was an increase last year of 279,277. I do not wish to be misunderstood on this question. We have no special complaint at this moment with respect to the importation of these articles. These articles, as is well understood, are not grown in Canada.

Mr. COWAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan) says 'hear, hear.' I thought they could grow almost anything in his beautiful country.

Mr. COWAN. Pretty near, but not bananas or pineapples.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not say that the farmers or market-gardeners have any complaint on this question, but I do say that the great free list in our customs law will require cautious consideration at the hands of the government in the near future. These fruits being allowed to come into Canada free are taking the place of fruits which we can produce in Canada and which would be just as suitable for the consumption of the Canadian people. On this question of the free list I wish to give further illustration. We imported into Canada last year $1,376,537 worth of flax seed, and of that large quantity no less than $1,303,758 came from the United States. A fair question to ask would be : What is the duty on Canadian flax seed when it seeks admission to the United States ?

The answer is 23 cents a bushel, but when the American farmer seeks a market in Canada for his flax seed it is allowed in free of duty, because this article is on the free list. I have an extract from the 'Citizen,' dated 1903, which reads as follows :

London, March 19.—Mr. Dickson, a prominent linen manufacturer, Leeds, says, after visiting Edmonton district, that nowhere except in Belgium can there be found conditions of soil more favourable to growing flax. He intends to take out his own machinery and erect a mill there this spring.

That shows you, Mr. Speaker, that there are favourable conditions in the Northwest Territories for the production of flaxseed. That is an article of which we imported last year $1,376,537 worth. I wish to draw the attention of the government to the fact that flaxseed is on the free list and I do not think that it is in the interests of our farmers, when we consider that we have so many million acres of land in Canada that are now unoccupied. When we have conditions favourable for the production of this article, I do not think it is fair-play to the farmers and people of Canada that this article should be on the free list, when we import during the twelve months of last year flaxseed to the value I have named. Now, I wish to point out some other products of the farm that require better protection by this government. The duty on butter going to the United States is 6 cents a pound, the Canadian duty is 4 cents a pound. On cheese the United States duty is 6 cents a pound, and the Canadian duty is 3 cents a pound. On eggs the United States duty is 5 cents per dozen, and the Canadian duty 3 cents per dozen. The question arises: How does that affect the Canadian farmer and producer of these articles? I will give you a few facts, Mr. Speaker. Here is a table of our imports for home consumption from the United States, in the year ending the 30th of June, 1903, of the articles I have named:

Article.	Quantity.	Value.
Butter..	505,113 lbs.	$137,654
Cheese..	179,479 lbs.	30,401
Eggs..	534,485 doz.	121,262

Or a total importation under this one-sided tariff last year of $289,317. Now, how much of these products did we send to the United States? Last year we exported to that country of the produce of Canada:

Article.	Quantity.	Value.
Butter..	50,745 lbs	$10,225
Cheese..	56,676 lbs	7,779
Eggs..	46,773 doz.	6,436

In those three items we exported to the United States $24,440, and we imported from the United States in the same year $289,317, showing a balance in favour of the United States farmer of $264,877, in consequence of that one-sided tariff. I think the right hon. gentleman and his government should do something for the better protection of the farmers who are producing these articles. My hon. friend from the county of Halton (Mr. Henderson), two or three years ago, in the course of his speech in the budget debate, gave a very important illustration of the condition of the pork industry in Canada when we had no tariff and after the tariff was put on by the Liberal-Conservative government. Our tariff on pork coming into Canada is 2 cents per pound, the United States tariff is 5 cents per pound, more than double. I want to show how this tariff works out. We imported for home consumption from the United States in the year endng June 30, 1903, or a total in these two items of $907,479. We exported to the United States, in the same year,

Bacon, ham, shoulders and sides $410,200
Pork barrelled in brine.. 497,279

Bacon, ham, shoulders and sides. $1,223
Pork barrelled in brine.. 8,631

or a total of $9,854. In other words, we imported into Canada of these items last year $907,479 worth and we exported $9,854 worth, or a total in favour of the United States farmer, as against the Canadian farmer, of $897,625 in one year.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Would the hon. gentleman give the figures showing the total exports of Canada into the United States and the total imports?

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to be unkind to my hon. friend, but I want to say that I have been particularly careful that my remarks should be directed exclusively to this one question we have up for consideration. When the budget is brought down next week, he will have an opportunity of listening to still larger figures, and I am quite sure if my hon. friend can be convinced he will be convinced that we are importing altogether too much of every class of goods into this country under this one-sided tariff. Now, I want for a moment to point out how trade is drifting in Canada during the last few years. In 1868 we imported for home consumption from Great Britain, $36,663,695; we imported from the United States that same year, $26,315,052. In other words, we imported from Great Britain $10,348,643 more than we did from the United States. But after seven years of our national life had passed away, in 1876, the tables were turned against Great Britain in favour of the United States. In 1876 we imported from Great Britain $40,734,260, and from the United States $46,070,033, showing a balance in favour of the United States in that year of $5,335,773. Ten years more of our national life go by, and in 1886 we imported from Great Britain $40,601,199 and from the United States $44,858,039, showing a balance in favour of the United States of $4,256,840. In 1896 we imported from Great Britain $32,979,742 and from the United States $58,575,024, showing a balance in favour of the United States for that year of $25,594,282. In 1903, the last year of which we have a complete record, we imported from Great Britain $58,896,901 and from the United States $137,605,195, showing a balance in favour of the United States of $78,708,294.

Increase with United States.. 111,290,143

Thus you will see, Mr. Speaker, that our trade is gradually leaving Great Britain and drifting to the United States, and I wish to point out to the right hon. gentleman and his government the fact that one of the reasons, in my humble opinion, is because of the one-sided tariff, the low tariff we have in this country as against the very high tariff that is imposed on our products going into the United States. Some hon. gentlemen will say that our climate is so much against the products of the farm and orchard that we cannot always supply our Canadian market. In no year do the farm products of this country altogether fail in every part of Canada. If we cannot supply the fruit in Ontario, then it can be supplied by the province of Quebec or the maritime provinces. If we cannot supply it in eastern Canada at all, no doubt the time will come when we can produce a very large quantity of it in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, and I am quite sure a considerable portion can be produced in British Columbia. Indeed it is said a very considerable portion of the smaller fruits can be produced in the Yukon district.

I am not going to discuss that now, further than to say that if there is a failure of, for instance, the apple crop in Ontario and there is a good apple crop in other provinces of the Dominion of Canada, then the people in Ontario are sufficiently loyal to bring in their apples from the other provinces of the Dominion rather than to bring them from the United States. The same thing will apply to every other article of produce, pork and every other thing.

The hon. gentleman who to-night occupies the position of Speaker (Mr. Campbell) made some little complaint last year and I wish to refer to what he then said. He dealt at length with the fact that the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) had waited until the budget was brought down before he moved his resolution. My hon. friend made this statement:

> I am still in hopes that the tariff will be increased on these articles. I am not going to give up yet; I am going to continue, and I warn the Finance Minister now that I shall be after him again and again. But so far as I am concerned I am not going to vote for the hon. gentleman's motion.

The hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) spoke in this way, but I shall not pursue that further as the hon. gentleman is now in the chair. I will say, however, that the government have complained in former years during this parliament that we have waited until the budget was brought down before we introduced resolutions of this kind calling for a revision of the tariff. I may say to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his government that we have brought down the resolution now and that it is a notice not of to-day, but a notice of many years' standing, a notice introduced in this parliament either before or after the budget year after year by the Liberal-Conservative party. That party are prepared to give our hearty support to the right hon. gentleman and his government in order that a better protection shall be given to the farmers and market-gardeners of this country. When the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues are considering this question—and I presume they are considering it because I was present at a deputation which waited on the hon. the Finance Minister and his colleagues three years ago, and the government held out such hopes to the farmers and market-gardeners that they left Ottawa feeling that, possibly before they got home, the tariff would be revised and everything made right. But three years have passed away and now we are in the fourth session of this parliament. This government came into power in 1896 with a very large majority at their back. A very large majority of the electors of this country supported the right hon. gentleman and his party at the polls so that they had a free hand in tariff as well as other matters and they stood in a unique position, a position such as the Conservative party never found themselves in when revising tariff. The right hon. gentleman is assured of the support of the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and his supporters not only in voice, but in votes recorded in this House on resolutions such as I have read to the House this evening. Therefore, I say that no government has had a better opportunity of correcting this great evil than this government. If ever a government has had fair warning, that warning has been given to the right hon. gentleman and his friends. They have been warned on the floor of this House, newspapers have brought the government's attention to this condition of things, resolutions by farmers' and market-gardeners' associations have been presented to them, speeches have been made on the subject in this House, resolutions have been voted for, and every possible notice has been given to this government that they have the support of the Conservative party of this country in attempting to revise the tariff and to make it adequate to meet the wants of the people of Canada, and equal to what is necessary in the interests of the farming community of this country who are great contributors to the taxes and who should have a considerable amount of attention from the right hon. gentleman and his government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The government has certainly no reason to complain of the manner in which my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has introduced this matter to the attention of the House. The subject is not altogether new, and is one on which we have long known the hon. gentleman feels very strongly. If my hon. friend intended simply to give warning to the government, I am sure he has duly done his duty in that regard. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) is aware that on Tuesday next the budget speech will be delivered, and therefore he will not be surprised if I tell him that at this moment the government cannot accept his motion. The subject, as my hon. friend says, is under the consideration of the government. It has been more than once brought to their attention, but the budget speech will be delivered on Tuesday as I have said, and then we will know what the policy of the government is. Therefore, Sir, as I said, the hon. gentleman will not be surprised if the government do not feel justified in accepting the motion he has placed in your hands.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has gone so fully into this matter that I merely wish to add a few words, because the constituency which I have the honour to represent, and several other constituencies lying in the vicinity of Montreal, are interested to a very large degree in the question which has been raised by the hon. member for Peel. I shall not go over the figures which have been so carefully grouped by my hon. friend; they appear in the returns which have been brought down from time to time, but I may say that as he gave them to the House I followed him from these returns, and I found them absolutely correct. The conclusion to which even a superficial examination of these returns inevitably leads is that the importation of garden produce from the United States is increasing gradually from year to year since 1896, having begun shortly before that time. It has increased steadily and it presses greatly upon important centres in Canada, like Toronto and Montreal, particularly from January to July in every year. From the last returns for which I moved at the beginning of this session that clearly appears. The Americans have an absolute advantage in our markets during the months that might be most profitable to our market-gardeners.

In the months of March, April, May and June, the United States market-gardeners have their harvest. They send their goods in here, and when later in the season our market-gardeners have their products ready for sale, they are prohibited by a high duty from sending them to the United States. Carefully prepared statistics show that of garden products and agricultural products generally, we export to the United States to the equivalent of 10 per cent a head of our population, while we import these products from the United States to the extent of $2.90 cents per head of our population. I was somewhat surprised and at the same time amused, to hear the Prime Minister state that he could not adopt this amendment because the budget had not yet been brought down; for I remember that when a similar motion was made by my hon. friend (Mr. Léonard) some years ago after the budget speech had been delivered, the right hon. gentleman's complaint then was that the motion should have been made before the budget speech. I suppose there is no use bothering about the Prime Minister's inconsistency in such a matter. The truth is, that the Prime Minister, his government, and his party have not seriously considered the urgent representations which have been placed before them for the last ten years by the market-gardeners of Canada. The market-gardeners have organized to give their representations strength; they have sent petitions to the government which were not marked confidential, but which were entitled to no less consideration on that account; they came to the government in deputation both from Ontario and Quebec, but no heed has been paid to them by the government. I remember, Mr. Speaker, (Mr. Campbell) when you yourself piloted a large deputation of market-gardeners to interview the ministers, and you seemed to be entirely favourable to the claims that were put forward by the gentlemen you accompanied. I am sure it is only the bitter irony of fate that has placed you in the chair to-night, and prevented you from supporting by your voice, and voting as you no doubt would in favour of this amendment. I respectfully point out to the Prime Minister, that the protection which market-gardeners receive on their industry amounts to two per cent only, whereas other industries are protected to a much greater extent. The market-gardeners pay a duty of from twenty-five to thirty-five per cent on everything they consume, but their own industry receives virtually no protection at all. The industry for which we now plead is not a small industry. We have gone to the trouble of compiling statistics in Jacques Cartier county, and we have found that in that county over a quarter million dollars is invested in the industry, and that there are 2,000 people whose means of livelihood it is. Mr. Legare, leading member of the market-gardeners association, in the province of Quebec, demonstrated to the government when he appeared before it here with a deputation, that if the industry were protected to a reasonable degree it would afford a means of livelihood for not 2,000 but for 6,000 people. On one occasion when a deputation appeared before the government the objection was taken that the consumers should be considered, but it was clearly proved that the consumer does not get these vegetables any cheaper than if he purchased those of native growth. It was shown that on the island of Montreal there could be cultivated at all seasons of the year, tomatoes, beans, celery, lettuce, parsley, onions, cucumbers, cauliflowers, watercress, spinach, green pease, and all those vegetables that come from the United States. It was established that we could not only furnish all the wants of the people of Montreal, but furnish them at a lower price and of better quality. The vegetables sent to us from the United States are what are left over on the markets of Boston and New York, and which are ten or twelve or fifteen days old when they reach here. They are sent in train loads of twelve or thirteen cars at a time. The importation is increasing from year to year, because while previous to 1897 they were only brought by express, they are now brought in refrigerator cars at less cost, and are consequently sold cheaper. They are valued by the customs at comparatively nothing, pay a very low ad valorem duty and are sold at high prices. The consumer gains no advantage in the matter of price, and he gets vegetables of a quality inferior to the native product. Most of these imported vegetables are grown in the southern states where they are cultivated by coloured and Chinese labour.

Under these circumstances, competition by our own market-gardeners is almost impossible. I said a moment ago that as a general rule the duties scarcely amounted to more than 2 per cent. Take as an example celery, which formerly was very much cultivated around Montreal, and was sold at every period of the winter. The cultivation of celery has now very largely been abandoned, because it comes to us in such large quantities from California. It is sold there at from 10 cents to 15 cents a dozen. It pays a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem, or 2 cents or 3 cents a dozen, and it is sold in Montreal at from 75 cents to $1 a dozen. The same thing applies to very large quantities of cucumbers, tomatoes, cabbages, green pease and beans, spinach and lettuce. We are in a position in the county of Jacques Cartier to furnish lettuce for the city of Montreal all the winter, and our competitors are the American exporters, who send up large quantities of an inferior article, and who are in a position to sell it at a considerable price on the market of Montreal; but they flood our market, and are in a position to sacrifice that product, and they do a great deal of injury to our gardeners. Last year, for instance, when the market in Montreal in the early spring was normal, tomatoes were at a reasonable price, and a great many were being brought into the city of Montreal from the county of Jacques Cartier, when one morning over twelve carloads of tomatoes arrived from the United States and were thrown on the market, disturbing the market and ruining the prospect of our market-gardeners for a just and legitimate profit during more than ten days.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what has been asked of the government? The association in the province of Ontario has deliberated; the association in the province of Quebec has held counsel; and, strange to say, before they even conferred together, they came to exactly the same conclusion, and I submit that that conclusion is a reasonable one. They do not ask for a higher tariff than that which the Americans have against us; but they have come to the conclusion that in the interest of their industry it is necessary that they should have against the American market-gardeners the same protection which the United States have against us, and that is what they ask from the government. It seems to me that that demand is reasonable and just; it has been properly urged before the government, and this is the occasion for the government to take up the matter. If it is impossible for the Minister of Agriculture himself to investigate it or for the Minister of Customs to look into it, let the government have recourse to its usual method of naming a commission to investigate the truth of the allegations contained in the petitions which have been so often brought to the notice of the government. These people, after waiting for seven years, and after having, on each occasion that they have come here to make their representations to the government, received the assurance that their just complaints would be looked into and if possible remedied, have not made much progress, and it is the duty of the government without further delay to do justice to their claims. It was suggested on one occasion to the Minister of Finance that we might adopt a sliding scale of duties which would not interfere with the legitimate business of our market-gardeners during the first six months of the year, and that suggestion seemed to be acceptable to a certain extent to the Minister of Finance. If the government is not disposed to treat the American producers as they treat our producers in this particular line of business, it might at least make a trial of that sliding scale, which would protect our market-gardeners during the season of the year when they might possibly expect to derive some profit from a legitimate industry which is deserving of every encouragement from the government.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution had not connected the farmers with it, I would not have risen to make any observations upon it. So far as the products of the market-gardeners are concerned, if the duty were put upon them, there would be one comfort, that it would fall mainly on the rich. But as the hon. gentleman has included the farmers as being petitioners for increased duties, it would be just as well to see what the result would be to the farmers of this country if the desires of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) were carried out. The hon. gentleman stated that we imported more butter from the United States than we export to that country. That is quite immaterial to me. The question is, how much does the importation of butter from the United States injure the farmers of Canada ? When we look at the figures which I have very hurriedly prepared, we find that last year we imported 658,000 pounds of butter, while in 1901 we produced 141,000,000 pounds. Under these circumstances, how much injury the importation of 658,000 pounds of butter, probably into British Columbia or some of the Northwest Territories, far distant from our own great producing centres, would do to the farmers of this country, I cannot really see. When you think of 658,000 pounds imported and 141,000,000 pounds made, each man can figure for himself how much a duty on butter would benefit the farmer. Take cheese : last year our imports of cheese were 269,000 pounds, and our exports to England alone were 229,000,000 pounds. How much good would an increased duty on cheese do the farmers of Canada ? Take eggs : we imported last year 772,000 dozen, but the product of Canada was 84,000,000 dozen. How much harm is being done to the farmers of Canada by the importation of those eggs ? When the hon. gentleman alluded to potatoes, I asked him whether yams were included. He said it was Irish potatoes he alluded to. Well, last year we imported 407,000 bushels of potatoes, while we produced 55,000,000 bushels in Canada.

We imported 407,000 bushels while we produced 55,000,000. How much injury is the farmer suffering from that import ? Take the question of hay, we imported 7,000 tons last year and produced 8,000,000 tons. Of wheat we imported 84,000 bushels while our production amounted to 93,000,000 bushels. Our imports of oats were 100,000 bushels last year and our product 151,000,000 bushels. Of barley we imported none, and grew 34,000,000 bushels. Then in the case of apples, while our imports amounted to but 81,000 bushels, the products of our orchards reached the figures of 48,000,000. How could it possibly conduce to the welfare of the farmers to increase the duties upon these articles, which do not come at all into competition with what they raise ? We export more than we import, and the small quantity we do import does not come into competition with the produce of our own farmers. I would not have alluded to this were it not that my hon. friend included the farmers in his resolution. Of pineapples we purchased $127,000 worth. Of bananas—

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to misinterpret my remarks. I did not say that the resolution asked for a duty on pineapples or bananas, but I distinctly said that these were on the free list but would have to be considered by the government at some future day.

Mr. HEYD. Of course the condition of the artisans of Canada is so prosperous today that they can afford to eat pineapples, bananas, oranges and other luxuries of that kind. They eat pineapples to the extent of $127,000 worth, bananas to the extent of $819,000 worth, and oranges and lemons to the extent of $1,000,000 worth. What the object of the hon. gentleman was in introducing these articles into his speech at all I cannot conceive, unless it were to show that our people are consuming too many luxuries in this period of good times, and that we must by some means put a stop to that consumption and compel them to eat more dried apples. It was said once by some English statesman that the people of England would be more prosperous if they ate less. On the same principle, our friend thinks that our people would be more prosperous if they were prevented from eating pineapples, bananas and oranges. But my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Cowan) says these fruits are not grown up there, and what they cannot grow in Essex you cannot grow anywhere else in Canada. The tax upon oranges, pineapples and bananas, therefore, would be a tax on the consumer and for whose benefit ? It could not be for the benefit of the farmers or market-gardeners, for they do not grow these fruits. I am quite willing to admit that a few men in Canada who engage in the market-gardening business would benefit by having their interests protected to a certain extent, but it is a large question whether the great body of consumers should be subjected to a tax of that kind for the benefit of a few. Personally I have no objection when the tax falls on the rich, but bananas and oranges are sold so low that even the poorest of our people can buy them. The banana is a wholesome food, bought principally by the poorer classes, as I can state from my personal knowledge, being in the business of selling these articles myself. I do not think that my hon. friend has strengthened his case by including these articles in his list or by trying to show that our farmers are injured by an importation of farm products, when the relative quantity of that import, compared with our own production, is represented by one to a thousand. Just imagine the harm that is done our farmers by 531,000 pounds of imported butter coming into competition with 141,000,000 pounds, which they produce, and by the importation of $50,000 worth of cheese. And what kind of cheese ? Stilton, Roquefort, Swiss, and I suppose even Limburger. And these cheeses, which are regarded as luxuries and found upon the tables of the principal hotels and of the rich, are supposed to come into competition with our cheese industry, which exports to Great Britain 229,000,000 pounds, besides giving an abundant supply to 6,000,000 of our own people. The whole thing is absurd, and I trust the House will vote down this resolution.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I was rather surprised, Mr. Speaker, to hear the speech we have just had from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, and who last year wanted more protection on a manufacturing industry situated in the city from which he comes. But while he is quite prepared to stand up for protection for a particular industry in which he is interested, he is quite ready to vote down a motion which asks for protection to the produce of our farms. The argument he has advanced furnishes proof positive that our farmers require protection, because to the extent that farm products are brought in from the United States, to that extent must our farmers seek a far-off market for what stuff they grow.

Mr. HEYD. Tell us how you can protect cheese.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. We can protect it to the extent that cheese comes in from the United States to this country. You may import Limburger cheese or anything else, our Canadian cheese is quite good enough for our Canadian people. The hon. gentleman went on to show how many potatoes were imported and how many we could not use, but just to the amount of foreign potatoes brought into this country must be consumed here, does this foreign product drive our own to a distant foreign market? That operates in the same way as bringing in free corn displaces so much of the coarse grains as would be consumed on our farms. These hon. gentlemen talk about our not producing sufficient market-garden stuff in the Dominion, but they do not give fair play to our market-gardeners to produce anything like what they would if they had sufficient tariff protection. They could produce many months earlier than they do now, because they could afford to build hot houses to a greater extent. At present it is not worth a market-gardener's while to go into a big speculation by building hot houses and glass houses in order to supply this country with early vegetables when the Americans are charged so small a tariff on the products they send in. If the tariff were high enough to shut out the imported stuff, our market-gardeners could grow a great deal more and during many more months. When the sugar beet growers of Ontario waited on this government and asked for a protection or a bounty on the growing of sugar beets they could not get a bounty, but the government proposed instead to give a bounty to the manufacturers of the beet root sugar and let them fix the price to the farmers. I cannot see why the farmers should not be protected as well as the manufacturers. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Heyd) was anxious that the binder twine business should be given a bounty, but I do not think that he would have urged such a policy if there were not a binder twine factory in his town. I am in favour of giving the farmer the same fair-play that you ask for the manufacturers. I remember the late Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) giving a protectionist speech at South Ontario, and I well remember the Reformers clapping their hands when he spoke of protection for the farmers and manufacturers of Oshawa. And he almost goes over the same speech he made in Oshawa, and the very ones who applauded him there hiss him in this House. If it was a good thing to give bounties on steel, on lead, on lumber and other things, why do you refuse to give a bounty on sugar beets, when these are grown by our own farmers? Every hundredweight of vegetables brought into Canada displaces Canadian-grown stuff, and injures the Canadian farmer by compelling him to seek a foreign market and to accept the lower price that is offered when it reaches that market, instead of the price that should be got for the product fresh and perfect for use in the home market. There is no argument in favour of a bounty to a factory in the town of the last speaker (Mr. Heyd) that would not be equally strong in favour of bounties to the farmers, who are the backbone of this country. If we use American farm products, that means that a certain quantity of our own products must be sent to the old country for sale. And in this the American gains the benefit, because our market, in which the American sells his stuff, is comparatively near, while the market in which our people must sell is distant. I hope, not from a party standpoint, that the farmers and market-gardeners of this country will be given as good protection as the manufacturers. But you cannot give protection, even to the manufacturers, without benefiting the farmers, because the farmers will get the benefit from the sale of their goods in the nearer market created by the presence of the workers in the factories.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Solicitor General). This question of protection to the farmers and market-gardeners did not come up from the time when I first had the honour of a seat in this House, in 1896, until the session of 1902. The question was then raised by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Léonard). That hon. gentleman had been elected in 1902, and I must say that this question of higher duties in favour of the farmers was one of the issues in the campaign which was carried on in his county. He brought up the question in this House, and was seconded in his efforts by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who was then leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec. I well remember the speeches of both these gentlemen during the session of 1902. It appears that the hon. member from Jacques Cartier was found deficient in some way by the hon. gentlemen opposite. True, he was the only one who had carried an election, who had gained a victory, in the province of Quebec since the general elections of 1896. But it appears that this year, in the month of March, he was forced out of the leadership by the members of his party, who selected as their leader, the gentleman who is supposed to be the high priest of protection in this country. That gentleman, the hon. member for St. Mary's, (Mr. Tarte), had occasion to speak during the session of 1902, and it will be well, perhaps, to remind the House of the speech he delivered on that occasion. Mark well, Mr. Speaker, he was chosen as the leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec because he was the apostle of high protection in this country. And what did he say on this very question in the session of 1902, answering my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier and my hon. friend from Laval, who had used at that time the same arguments which we have heard in support of the resolution now before the House ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) was then Minister of Public Works. Speaking on April 28th, 1902, he said :

My hon. friend wants us to raise the duties upon lettuce, cucumbers, tomatoes, asparagus, celery, beets, onions, &c. It is well known that in the winter months we do not grow cabbages nor cucumbers. We are also aware that it is extremely difficult to raise tomatoes in the winter season. We had to pay, last winter, 50 cents a pound for tomatoes of Canadian growth, whilst American tomatoes were being sold on the Montreal market at 20 cents a pound.

Remember, this is the apostle of high protection who speaks. Further on he says :

It is idle to appeal to prejudices. There are enough people buying tomatoes and lettuce, for let it be known that I am speaking the plain unvarnished truth. Cauliflowers are not grown in the winter months in Canada. I agree that during a certain season of the year they can be kept, perhaps during two or three months. The cauliflowers we buy in the winter are imported from the United States.

In short I believe that what the hon. gentleman is aiming at is to make political capital with the electors and to catch popular favour rather than appealing to their reason. Let my hon. friend allow me in all due deference, to call his attention to the fact that in the province of Quebec, as elsewhere, farmers have a great deal of common sense. Go through the county of Laval and ask the market-gardeners if they can produce cucumbers, celery, tomatoes and cauliflowers in the winter months, and they will tell you that they cannot do so.

Further on, answering the hon. member for Laval, the Minister of Public Works of that day used the following language :

My hon. friend knows very well that, even if additional duties were imposed on pease, tomatoes, cucumbers and other vegetables, that would neither improve the climate nor enable us to grow those vegetables to advantage during the winter months. The increase in the duties asked for by my hon. friend would only result in forcing the consumer to pay more for those products, without improving the condition of the Canadian producer. To my mind, such a proposition is preposterous.

This is the language of the high priest of protection in this Dominion. I might say that, even after my hon. and distinguished friend from Jacques Cartier had fought the battle in the county of Laval, where this question of high protection for market gardeners had been made a live issue, he was deposed as leader and replaced by the hon. gentleman from St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte). And here we have Mr. Tarte's own words against the very proposition which is now under discussion on the motion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). For my part, I hold that the hon. member for St. Mary's spoke on that occasion, words of wisdom. And I am ready to stand by him during this debate, and to say with him that the farmers and market-gardeners of the Montreal district—and of the Gaspé district, too—have a great deal of common sense, and will not be caught by the silly proposition which has been made this evening.

Mr. J. EMILE LEONARD (Laval). (Translation.) I have listened with pleasure to the views expressed by the hon. Solicitor General concerning the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). Two years ago the ex-minister was opposing the doctrine laid down in the amendment which the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has just presented, but since he has grown older and come to the conclusion, or rather he is convinced, that we should concede the fair demands of the people of Laval and several counties submitted to you through the channel of the member now addressing the House. Every one remembers, Mr. Speaker, that he who is just now addressing you was returned in spite of the combined efforts of both the provincial and Dominion governments, at the request and upon the advice of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). Notwithstanding anything which the hon Solicitor General may have said, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was not deprived of his leadership by the Conservatives in the province of Quebec. If the hon. Solicitor General is not any more familiar with the effect of the present tariff upon market gardening in Canada than he is with the internal administration of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, I am bound to admit that he does not know much about it.

It is useless for my hon. friend, the Solicitor General, to wax eloquent in order to stir up the Conservatives of the province of Quebec who are of one mind in honouring the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. The Conservatives can dispense with the advice of my hon. friend when selecting the chieftain who is to lead them to victory at the next general election. He is strangely mistaken if he imagines that he can stir up in our midst strifes altogether unknown in the Conservative party.

As to these customs duties, I do not intend to answer the so-called arguments which have just now been brought forward, but speaking as a representative from the district of Montreal, I shall avail myself of this opportunity to state openly that my hon. friend, the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was not turned down by the Conservatives of Quebec but that he willingly resigned, actuated by purely personal motives.

My hon. friend the Solicitor General attempted to make merry of the ex-Minister of Public Works because he opposed this amendment in 1902.

I did not rise on my feet to recall what I said two years ago when answering the remarks of the ex-Minister of Public Works. When the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte) rose at that time to oppose the resolution which I had had the honour to introduce in the House, he was not as familiar as he is to-day with the needs of the farmers in the neighbourhood of large cities, and I may say that he has since so stated to me. Having considered the question, he has come to the conclusion propounded by the hon. member for Peel and the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, viz., that the market gardeners need a larger measure of protection.

I see in 'Hansard,' Mr. Speaker, (Mr. Campbell), that even yourself you favoured increasing the customs duties on garden truck brought in from abroad, and I am convinced that, were it not for political considerations, and the fear of offending your leader and master, you would give a free vote in favour of the resolution now under consideration.

It is not my intention to repeat now what I had occasion to say on this question during the sessions of 1902 and 1903. However, as I have seconded the motion of the hon. member for Peel, all I can say is that the same needs exist to-day. We were told during former sessions when we brought up this question that it was too late. This year it was our desire to remove that objection by springing this question in the early days of the session. Yourself, Mr. Speaker (Mr. Campbell), you took part in the discussion in 1902 and 1903. In 1903, you told us that it was too early and, in 1903, that it was too late to introduce that resolution.

This year we put the question before the House previous to the budget being brought down. The right hon. leader of the House told us a while ago that we should have waited until the budget speech had been delivered. I considered the suggestion as another attempt to evade the question without settling it one way or the other. I hope that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) will press this motion to the end, so that if the government should decide to move in the matter, they may rely on the vote that will be given to-night.

Mr. LEONARD.

Without going into details, I may say that what the gardeners are asking for, is a specific duty, because the present tariff with its ad valorem duty opens the door to too many fraudulent devices on the part of the importers of foreign fruits.

I would not feel disposed to make any charges against the custom officers, but it is a well known fact, at least among the buyers in Montreal, that these officers whose duty it is to examine all the vegetables coming from abroad, admit all those from the United States as damaged goods, even if they are in prime condition ; in that way the American exporters can flood the Canadian market to the detriment of the home producers who are not in a position to compete successfully.

Before concluding, I must say that gardeners from the counties around Montreal, as well as those from the counties surrounding our large cities, as Toronto and others, would be satisfied if the government decided to put on all the articles enumerated in this resolution, the same duty as is exacted by our American neighbours on the same articles.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, after the speech of the right hon. first minister, that we will succeed in our exertions to obtain a revision of the tariff to the advantage of the gardeners of this country. I flatter myself that my efforts in that direction have not been in vain, and that my election as a member of this House will not have been without some weight, when the government comes to the decision of increasing the duty on the market garden products.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think the opportunity is well chosen to say a few words on the circumstances which attended the election of the hon. member for Laval. At the time he was a candidate in Laval county, another election was being held in the St. James Division of Montreal, and the Conservative speakers were very careful not to mention that question. Yet, we are told to-night that the election in Laval county was fought on these lines.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) That is the same objection which was raised at the time by the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte).

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) My hon. friend is greatly mistaken if he supposes that he has been elected on that fiscal issue. The tariff does not electrify the masses ; this proposition has been put forward by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, his chief—if he has still a claim to that distinction—in a speech that was reported in 'La Presse' of the 1st March, 1904, in which speech he is credited with these words : 'Can the masses enthuse over the tariff ?'

Several circumstances contributed to the result of that election in Laval county : two Liberal candidates were in the field, and the outcome was a split among our friends, and then there was the natural flow of sympathy for a man of the county as against an outsider.

It seems to me that the hon. gentlemen opposite have failed to make out their case. They have not proved that the American products are slaughtered on our markets; they have not established that the gardening industry is not prosperous in this country. It is my good fortune, Mr. Speaker, to be professionally in touch with the gardeners of the surrounding counties of Montreal and I know personally that there is not a more prosperious class in this country.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I am sure the House is deeply indebted to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) for again introducing a subject which is as much a live question to-day as it was on the former occasion when it was brought to the attention of the House. In my opinion the home market of Canada, to the agriculturist, the market-gardener, the producer of fruits and vegetables, as well as all the other commodities produced on the farm, is the very best asset he has. It is of more value to him than all the other markets of the world, because it consumes from 80 to 90 per cent of the entire products of the farm. I say therefore it is of the utmost importance that the home market should be guarded by every legitimate means this government can employ for preserving to the people of this country such a valuable asset. If a foreign nation were to invade our shores I have no doubt the Minister of Militia and Defence, whom I am glad to see in his place, would at once call upon all the forces at his command to drive back the enemy and to prevent the invasion. Now I believe it is just as legitimate, just as proper that the Finance Minister of this country should use the tariff of which he has the making for the purpose of preventing an invasion of our country by the surplus products of the United States and other countries. I say the one is just as legitimate as the other, and no one for a moment, not even yourself, Mr. Speaker, would object to the Minister of Militia using all the means in his power to prevent a territorial invasion of our country by a foreign enemy. Surely the invasion of our market by the surplus products of foreign countries is just as injurious; and therefore you, Sir, should join us, and I trust you will join us on this occasion, in supporting the resolution moved by my hon. friend from Peel, and give better protection to the home market of Canada for the products of our farms.

For 25 years this policy has been the declared policy of Canada. In 1878 the national policy was brought down, and then it was declared to be the policy of this country to protect the agricultural products of Canada. It is true that a portion of that protection has been removed. I regret very much that in the tariff of 1897 the hon. gentlemen now in power so far forgot their duty to the agriculturists of this country as to reduce the duties on important products of the farm; and I regret as well that coming in under changed conditions, changed circumstances, when larger protection to the agricultural products of the country was necessary, they did not see fit to grant to that class that fair share of national care to which their position, their wealth and their numbers fairly entitle them.

My intention to-night, Mr. Speaker, is to advert more particularly to the growth of small fruits; the matter of vegetables has been referred to by others. Permit me first to make a brief reference to some remarks that fell from the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd). He seemed to try to laugh away the idea of protecting the farmer on his butter, his cheese and his pork, simply because the importations of butter, cheese and pork were comparatively small compared with the entire production of the country. Now, I want for a moment or two to show that hon. gentleman that this is not a matter that can be laughed away. The farmers of this country are deeply interested in this question, and if the importations of pork from the United States are not large compared with the entire products of Canada in that article, it is no argument why protection should be removed or should not be increased. Take the item of barrel pork alone. Last year, I find we imported 5,637,000 pounds of barrel pork, a very considerable item indeed. But what I want to draw attention to is this fact. We are told that the great market for our bacon and ham is in England, we send the greater part of that portion of our pork to the British market, and we are told that it is no difference whether our market is protected or not because we have a market in England for all the bacon and ham we can produce. But, Mr. Speaker, neither the hon. member for Brant, nor any other gentleman in this House, has been able to find a hog that will cut up entirely into bacon and hams. There are portions of the hog, as the hon. gentleman will understand, of which you cannot make bacon and hams, a portion of the hog for which you cannot find a profitable market in Great Britain. While you can export your bacon and hams, all that we can produce for that matter, you cannot export certain other portions of the hog. You cannot, for example, find in England a market for all our lard; our pork packers cannot find a market in England for the shoulders, for the spare ribs and for other portions of the hog, backs and so forth—yes, and the heads and feet. These portions of the hog cannot be profitably exported to Great Britain and must be sold in Canada. Now, Sir, if we allow our market to be invaded by American pork to such an extent that it will prevent our pork packers from finding a market for the unexportable part of the hog, what are our pork packers to do? They have simply to do one of two things. Notwithstanding that they have a market in Britain for all their bacon and ham, if they cannot find a market in Canada for the unexportable part of the hog they simply have to reduce the price of live hogs to the farmer or stop their business. Now in 1902 there were more hogs slaughtered in the province of Ontario than in any previous year. What was the result? There was so much of the unexportable part of the hog thrown upon the market in addition to what came in from the United States, that the home market could not consume them, and we had not a profitable market abroad for such. The result was that the pork packers of this country had to reduce the price to the farmers very materially indeed. That will be the result. We can find a market, as I said before, for our bacon and ham, all we can produce, but we must guard the market of Canada as regards that portion of the animal, which we cannot export to the old country. Therefore, I say that to laugh at the idea of a duty on pork being necessary because only a small amount is being imported, is not treating the question with that sincerity to which it is entitled.

Now, Sir, with reference to the small fruit production I desire to say a few words. I think, Mr. Speaker, (Mr. Campbell) you are authority for the statement made a year ago that some 4,000 people in the neighbourhood of the city of Toronto were employed in the production of garden stuff. We have it stated here to-night by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that some 2,000 people are employed in his own county. Now I would not undertake to say how many people are employed in the county I have the honour to represent, in the production of small fruit, but I know it is a very large number indeed, men, women and children, who are engaged in growing, gathering and marketing small fruit. It is an industry of considerable importance, an industry in which a very considerable amount of capital is invested. The land on which these small fruits are grown is very valuable, is worth hundreds and hundreds of dollars per acre. No land suitable for that purpose can be bought at a cheap price.

As I said before, a very considerable number of people are employed and these people are entitled to consideration at the hands of the government in having a market provided for their product at their door. Small fruits such as raspberries and strawberries cannot be exported to Great Britain; practically they cannot be exported to the United States, because the people of the United States produce the same fruits in large quantities and have a tariff against our fruits which guards their market. I say therefore that we are entitled to the paternal care of the government so that we can retain the market that we have in our own country for these perishable products. I am aware that when I advance an idea of this kind I shall be met with the stock argument—and I think it has been thrown across the floor to-night—that if you put an increased duty on these green fruits you will enhance the price to the consumer. Suppose it does enhance the price to the consumer, who is going to be benefited by it? The farmer, the man we want to help. Is it any harm to help the farmer to make more profits out of his farm so long as you do not hurt any one else? But with a proper readjustment of the tariff there is no reason why the consumer should be hurt because we can protect the consumer at the same time that we protect the producer. We can protect the producer by increasing the duty on small fruits coming into this country and keeping out foreign fruit, so as to give the gardener and the farmer of Canada who produce the small fruits a larger and better market for their products. On the other hand you can, by a readjustment of the tariff, protect the man who consumes fruit in another way. Reference was made to the importation of dried fruits. We import very largely into this country, currants, raisins and prunes. The prunes come chiefly from California, raisins come from Spain as well as from California, and currants largely from Greece. We do not produce any of these articles in this country. We might put a duty of five hundred per cent on these articles, but you could not protect the industry in this country. A duty put on these dried fruits is not for the purpose of protection, but for revenue purposes, and revenue purposes only. Now let us simply readjust the tariff on fruits; let us reduce the duty on the dried fruits and increase it on the green, and what is the result? The result would be that the farmer in Canada who produces the strawberries, raspberries, currants and grapes would get a larger market and a better price for his products and when any family wants to buy groceries, their raisins, currants, prunes, and other dry fruits of which they would buy more pounds per year than of green fruits, they would get them at a much reduced price, because the duty would be lower. Thus there is no reason with the readjustment of the tariff, why any one would be hurt. But there is a strong probability that a very deserving class in this community would be helped. Therefore, I say, if the Minister of Finance wants to help the farmers of this country he has an opportunity of doing so without hurting the consumers or causing any families to pay a larger price for the fruits they consume during the whole year. The answer of the Finance Minister is: Our policy is a policy of tariff for revenue only, we cannot afford to do that. The Finance Minister will tell us that if he reduces the duty on the dried fruits he will lose the revenue from them and that if he increases the duty on the green fruit, fewer of them would come in and he would get less revenue. The Minister of Finance wants revenue; he cares nothing for the interest of the people of this country, he cares not whether the farmers get a proper price for their products or not. No, Sir, that is not the first consideration of the tariff of this government. Their tariff as they have told us is a tariff for revenue only, and it is framed in such a way as will take the greatest amount of taxes out of the people irrespective of what the people's interests are. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) would use the same argument with other articles it would simply show how unfair the argument is. Apply the argument to raw sugar, or to rice or an article like foreign leaf tobacco, as well as the articles I have given, imported raisins and currants and prunes. In every case a tax on these articles goes to enhance the price. If you put an extra duty on raw sugar you certainly enhance the price. A duty is not placed on raw sugar for purposes of protection; we make refined sugar, but do not make raw sugar and the higher you put the duty on raw sugar the higher the price to the consumer becomes. The Minister of Finance says that is all right. Tariff for revenue is his policy; he cares not for the interests of the people of this country, he cares not whether the farmer makes a profit so long as he gets $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 to expend in this country. The same thing applies to rice on which he imposes a duty of about sixty-one per cent. You cannot produce rice in this country and a duty placed on rice is simply a tax on the people, and the same thing applies to the other articles I have mentioned.

Readjusting the tariff on the fruits that I have suggested would be a benefit to the farmer, the gardener, the workman and the business man. A larger market would be secured and there would be more employment for labour and, as I said before, if it does enhance the price of goods, no one is hurt because the tariff can be readjusted, so that by levelling it, in reducing the duty on dried fruit and increasing it on green fruit any family can secure the requisite supply of fruits during the whole year at no greater cost, while the producer of fruits in this country will be largely benefited. I do not desire at this late hour to detain the House, but I would like to refer to the large importation of dried and green fruits into this country. I do not desire to give the matter in detail, but let me say that we imported in 1903 for home consumption in blackberries, raspberries, gooseberries and strawberries alone 1,066,035 pounds, enough to keep a good many gardeners employed.

We imported of cherries, 146,956 pounds. We imported of grapes, 1,151,249, and let me tell you that about one half of these grapes came from the United States.

We imported of canned goods in 1903, 1,608,749 pounds valued at $83,545. Of this amount of canned goods 730,664 pounds came from the United States and under the preferential tariff we received 718,368 pounds. Every pound of these goods could be grown in Canada, and put up in Canadian factories. The United States sent us last year $41,564 worth of canned fruit, and they took from us $13,891 worth, a very unfair exchange indeed, and an exchange which proves that we should have a bigger share of their market if we are going to let them have so large a share of ours. We imported last year 27,372,811 pounds of dried fruits; so that you see that it is quite possible by slightly reducing the duty on the dried fruits to furnish revenue to the government, and to make compensation to the householders of this country for any enhanced cost they may be put to by reason of the increased duty on the green fruit. I am sure that the House will welcome this amendment. It gives us an opportunity of showing to the Finance Minister on the eve of his budget speech, just what the people of this country desire. I know, Mr. Speaker, (Mr. Campbell) your strong opinions on this question. I know you realize just as well as we do that the market-gardeners and producers of small fruits around the city of Toronto and throughout Canada are suffering by reason of the invasion of foreigners on their limited market. We hope that the First Minister will inform the Finance Minister of the views we have expressed, and that when he brings down the budget on Tuesday next there will be an adjustment of the duties on vegetables and small fruits, such as will inure to the best interests of the producers as well as the consumers in this country.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). The Prime Minister devoted less than a minute by the watch, to the discussion of this important question; he waived it aside with indifference, and he told us we would know the mind of the government when we heard the budget speech. Is it not well that the government should know the sense of the House on this question, before that budget speech is delivered? The only other member of the government who spoke was the Solicitor General, and he simply told us what the Hon. Mr. Tarte had said on a former occasion, and then he sat down satisfied. I sympathize with you to-night Mr. Speaker (Mr. Campbell). I know this has been a painful scene to you. You headed a deputation that waited on the Minister of Finance with regard to this important question, and not many months ago you delivered an eloquent and earnest speech that came from your heart and not from your lips, in favour of the principle of the amendment which is now before the House. I sympathize with you that you are compelled to-night to occupy the painful position of listening in silence to the jibes and jeers of the member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) against the market-gardeners and the farmers of this country. His remarks must have pained you. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) would compel the market-gardeners of this country to eat dried apples and Limburger cheese for having the temerity of petitioning this House for redress of their grievances. The hon. member for Brant spoke for the government. He is very prominent in the county of Brant, but let me remind the House that he is a large importer of these very articles from the United States, on which we think a duty should be placed. It is this gentleman that the government gets to speak for them, and it is this gentleman who ridicules the farmers of this country.

Mr. HEYD. I am sure my hon. friend does not want to magnify my importance in the community in which I live. I never imported an ounce of anything in my life from the United States.

Mr. CLANCY. The rules of parliament compel me to take the hon. gentleman's word, but how does it come that a man engaged in business on one of the most important corners in the city of Brantford, never imported a single article in his life from the United States.

Mr. HEYD. Not of the articles you mention.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is qualifying it now, but it makes no difference.

Mr. HEYD. It makes a big difference.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has the ear of the Minister of Customs, and he succeeded in inducing the government by Order in Council of the 13th of February, 1902, to admit free of duty, steel for the manufacture of cutlery, there being a cutlery factory in his own town of Brantford. On the 4th of June, 1902, he succeeded in getting the Minister of Customs to allow in free of duty malleable iron or steel castings in the rough for the manufacture of scissors, so as to help the cutlery factory in his own town.

Mr. HEYD. Allow me again to say that I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is now obliged to deny that he bore any part in procuring a reduction in the cost of the raw material for the cutlery factory in his own town. Why, Sir, it is the most astonishing denial I ever heard. However, I will accept the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. HEYD. The only astonishing thing about it is that what I have said is true, and what you are saying is not true.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say that these reductions were not made ?

Mr. HEYD. I do not say that. I say that I had nothing to do with bringing them about ; that is all.

Mr. CLANCY. Was the hon. gentleman opposed to them ?

Mr. HEYD. Certainly not.

Mr. CLANCY. What an independent position the hon. gentleman takes ; what little responsibility he takes. No charge could be laid at his door. He knows nothing about it ; he is not responsible, and he is scarcely cognizant that it ever took place. What was that done for ? It was done for the purpose of bolstering up and encouraging an industry in the hon. gentleman's own town which was perishing, and the government of the day had not the courage to impose protective duties, but, to compensate, they made a reduction in the duties on the raw material ; and what happened ? Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not know that the doors of that establishment in his own town have been closed for the want of reasonable protection. But the hon. gentleman was not satisfied with that. He supported and voted for the taking of the duty off binder twine ; and what is he doing now? Supporting a government which taxes the farmers and market-gardeners, and makes them pay tribute to the manufacturers of binder twine by way of bounties, because the duties have been taken away. The hon. gentleman is almost every day making the life of the Finance Minister unhappy by going to him and urging him to put a duty of $5 apiece on carriages to assist an industry in his own town. Perhaps he will deny that ?

Mr. HEYD. Yes ; I will deny that, too.

Mr. CLANCY. I have the information that the hon. gentleman carried a pair of scissors in his pocket for two sessions to show what a splendid industry they had in Brantford. Perhaps he will say that is not true ?

Mr. HEYD. No ; that is correct.

Mr. CLANCY. And this is the conduct of the hon. gentleman who gets up to-night to speak for the government. Let me take the case presented by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). Let me suppose that the market-gardeners and farmers in the hon. gentleman's own district had reasonable protection, what would be the result ? They would have the entire home market. Then let me suppose that reasonable protection were given to the binder twine industry. As was the case in 1897, there would be a greater number of workmen in the hon. gentleman's own town to consume the products of the farm. Let me suppose that a duty of $5 each were imposed on carriages, the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that there would be an increased number of men employed in his own town ; and what would be the result of that ? The result would be that both parties would be protected, both would have the home market, and such a condition of affairs would be brought about as would be beneficial to all Canada.

I do not propose, after the able speech of the hon. member for Peel, to argue a question that is not arguable in a sense. What do these men ask who come here ? They ask that the same duties shall be imposed on the products of the soil of a foreign country, produced by foreign labour, as are imposed on our products going into the United States. Is that arguable for a single moment ? It seems to me that it is not, though hon. gentlemen try to waive it aside and ridicule the farmer by saying that they are not easily caught with chaff, that they are sensible men. These men came here asking for a reasonable thing. I am sorry the Minister of Customs is not in the chamber, because I have a letter of his addressed to the farmers of this country, from which I would like to read a few lines. The letter was written on the 1st of March, 1902, and in it this paragraph appears :

> Whether anything will be done or not I cannot say. The subject is one which could not be dealt with by an Act of parliament amending the tariff law.

Is that not a disclosure that is perfectly startling ? These hon. gentlemen come here and ask for a revision of the tariff, stating specifically the increases they require, and the Minister of Customs gravely writes a letter to them—and how he estimates their intelligence we can judge from the paragraph I have just read—telling them that it cannot be done by an Act of parliament amending the tariff. It is the most astounding statement I ever knew to come from a professed business government. It is no answer to say that the tariff question is to be taken up in a few days. Now is the time when the people should make their protest to the members of this House. I hope the discussion will be taken up by hon. gentlemen in all parts of the country. It is an unfair thing to subject the producers of our own country, especially the agriculturists and market-gardeners, to this unfair competition. I have had the honour of representing for many years a border constituency, and I know the difficulties to which the farmers and the market-gardeners have been subjected. Where the transit is short and cheap, the products of American labour are consumed instead of those of Canadian labour. I know of nothing more unreasonable than the conduct of Canadian representatives who will not deal out to the people on the other side of the line the same measures that they deal to us. That is a statement that requires no argument.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). Some of my friends appear to be very much surprised at the way we are treated by the United States, but I, who have lived among them for upwards of thirty-three years, am not surprised at all. Some forty-five, forty-six or forty-eight years ago, I heard these very words that have been pronounced in this House this afternoon uttered by them, and I have in my hand their own tariff, Mr. Speaker, if you want to see it. In 1852 we had a tariff treaty with the United States from which Canada got the advantage. That treaty was to be in force five years, and the Americans declared that the end of the five years they would put in force another tariff and Canada would not then get the advantage. On the 14th of April, 1865, President Lincoln was assassinated and what then did I hear the Americans say. They said it was too bad that Lincoln was assassinated, because if not they would have marched their army through Canada inside of three weeks. Now, however they said, we cannot do that because he have not the man to lead us to Canada. He was the only man who could lead them to victory, and the only resource they had left was to raise the tariff. They said : we will press Canadians to the last with our tariff. Many a time I have argued with them this very question, because I did not let them have their own way all the time. I have heard them say on many occasions : our only salvation is to press Canada, to put on a tariff which they cannot pay, to treat them so that they will not be able to buy from or sell to, then let them come to us with clean hands and we will accept them. I said : what do you mean by clean hands ? Well, they replied, let them pay off their own debts and come in and we will accept them. Here is their own tariff, which I got in the minister's office because I thought it would be useful in the House. I have read this over and over, and I say it is too bad that our good ministers and our good government —for we are promised a good government should allow those Yankees to treat us the way they are doing. Our government yields to every demand they make. Take bread, potatoes, apples, all kinds of meat, lumber and coal, we have got just as good articles as they have, and we can get along without them just as well as they can get along without us. And I say what is the use of our people walking towards them with our hats under our arms like slaves. That was the way the slaves used to walk down south before the rebellion, and that is the way we are walking now. We give them just what they ask, and they are just making fun of us. Last year I spent two months in Pennsylvania and had a great deal of talk with the very same men, and they used the very same words. They expect that we will put our hats under our arms and go to them and say, will you allow us to annex Canada to you ? And yet our government, which undoubtedly knows all these things, lets this go on over and over again. There is no use of my reading this whole tariff, but here is what is provoking. When we have anything to sell to them they charge an exorbitant tariff on it, whereas when they have anything to sell to us, we let it in at a much lower rate. If we send a young cattle to them less than a year old, they will charge a duty of fifty cents, and over a year old they will charge a dollar. On all sides they have the advantage under this government which promised to be a government of reform and example.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). As this is the first time I am free to vote for this resolution, I wish to say a few words. I was unable to vote for it on the two former occasions, except in so far as a pair may be considered a vote, because each time I happened to be paired with a government member. I wish to say that I fully concur in the remarks of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) and of those who support him from this side. I regret that I could not understand the language in which my hon. friend from St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers) spoke, but I venture to guess that probably his constituents will have as difficult a task to understand the arguments he made and the stand he has taken. With respect to the hon. gentleman from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), who quoted the argument made use of by the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte), who was then a cabinet minister, and who argued that the Canadian market-gardeners could not grow market-garden stuff during the winter months and therefore it was not advisable to increase the duty, and I am informed that the market-gardeners waited on the government and asked for an increase in the tariff. When the argument was used that they could not produce vegetables during the winter months, they said they were willing to accept a sliding scale. That is to say that during the winter months, when it was held they could not produce the vegetables they should be charged duty on a sliding scale and that would not prevent the Americans coming in. But in the season when they could produce vegetables they asked that a sliding scale should be so adjusted as to prevent American competition. That is the difference between the argument then and now.

Now, with respect to the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) we all know that it was his constitutional duty to take the position he did at that time. Knowing that a majority of the cabinet were opposed to an increase of duty, what other course had he as a cabinet minister? Could we expect him to rise in his place and condemn the policy that the government themselves had decided upon? Certainly not. But, as soon as he left the cabinet and he left it because the majority of his colleagues were opposed to reasonable protection for the industries of this country—he published an article in the newspaper with which he is connected repudiating the arguments used in support of the position he had taken on the protection of market-gardeners. When he was free to express his opinions the opinions he expressed were the direct opposite from those we have heard from the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux). Some attention has been paid to the remarks of my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd). I was sorry to hear that hon. gentleman speak as he did. He is eager to protect the manufacturers in the city of Brantford because they are his constituents. In a sneering way he alluded to the fact that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) had mentioned farmers, and the hon. member (Mr. Hyed) thought he should have confined himself to the market-gardeners. He mentioned several articles on which the farmers of this county had protection. But he opposed the increase of the duty on butter, cheese and eggs and other articles produced by our farmers. Is it not true that the agriculturists of the United States produce more than the people of the United States consume, and yet they find it necessary to have a duty of six cents a dozen on eggs, double the duty on butter that we have, and double the duty on cheese? The Canadian agriculturists also produce more than we consume. In all fairness we should put the Canadian farmer on at least as good a plane as the Americans. What objections then, can the government have to putting on duty for duty with the United States? My hon. friend (Mr. Heyd) quoted oats. And here is a most remarkable thing that is shown by the tables of imports and exports. No farmer in this country, nobody who knows the facts, will deny that the agriculturists in this country can raise as good oats as those of the United States.

Mr. MORIN. Better.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not a farmer, and so am not in a position to speak of this matter from my own knowledge. But I am glad to be informed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morin) that we can produce better oats than the United States. But I would like to point out that, while the Canadian farmers accepted 30 cents a bushel for their oats sent to the United States, Americans received fifty cents a bushel for oats brought into this country. I find that we exported to the United States 120,702 bushels of oats, for which we received $39,062. We imported into Canada 100,811 bushels of oats, for which the purchasers paid $50,896. That is to say, the Americans received $11,844 more for about 100,000 bushels of oats than we received for about 120,000 bushels. Now, I say that if we had our own markets for the Canadian farmer, instead of being obliged to pay a duty of 15 cents a bushel on oats, going into the American market, while the American farmer can send oats into this country under a duty of 10 cents, which should be 15 cents a bushel, we would have a better market at home. It is celarly the duty of the government to increase our duty to 15 cents a bushel as I said before. Now, in looking over twenty-one different articles of the farmer and market-gardener, I find that the Americans sent into Canada $3,664,261 in excess of what we sent to them. I may say to hon. gentlemen opposite that I do not include the item of 6,033,898 bushels of free corn valued at $3,250,329, nor am I including wheat, the import of which amounted to $556,705. Of course, it may be said that this was not consumed in this country. I am willing to admit that, and so I am not including it in this calculation. I notice hon. gentlemen opposite who represent constituencies in the Northwest smile at all this and treat it as a joke. Yet I find that in 1903 we exported to the United States only 1,907 horses, valued at $340,239, while we imported from the United States 29,598 horses, valued at $790,169. And the government supporters from the Northwest a few years ago were complaining bitterly because the Minister of Finance and this government did not increase the minimum valuation of horses to be imported into this country—in other words did not increase the duty. Then take cattle, another important item with our friends from the Northwest. We exported to the United States 10,432 head, valued at $292,288, while we imported into this country 37,527 head, valued at $472,689. Yet my hon. friend from Brant thinks this is all a joke. He thinks the farmers should not have protection. I am glad that I am to have an opportunity to record my vote in favour of the Canadian farmers and market-gardeners. And, so long as I occupy a seat in this House I shall take the stand that the farmers of this country are entitled to greater protection than they have to-day. And I hope the party I have the pleasure of belonging to and supporting will make the case so plain that, after the next general election the leader who has the judgment to adopt this policy, will be given the opportunity of carrying that policy into effect.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). This discussion is valuable for one thing if for no other. It will show the farmers of this country which party is their friend.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. My hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) says 'hear, hear.' I wish to draw the attention of the Canadian farmer to the fact that this hon. gentleman is a minister of the Crown who rises and opposes this motion. He properly voiced the sentiments of the government, and it must be recognized as the sentiment of the government. And the Canadian farmer wants to know that, and knowing it he will see clearly that he is not likely to receive any protection from this government.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How about the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte) ?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for St. Mary's can speak for himself. He left the government because they would not give adequate protection. He publicly declared that he was in favour of protection, and the government demanded his resignation because he was too outspoken on that question. Who are the gentlemen who have opposed this proposal ? For instance, there is the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. Lemieux). He tells us that he is doing his duty to his constituency. How many market-gardeners has he in the county of Gaspe ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Lots of them.

Mr. SPROULE. If he will come to the province of Ontario he will find that market-gardening is a great industry employing thousands. The market-gardeners in the hon. gentleman's (Mr Lemieux's) constituency produce fish, largely. We are willing to afford them protection in their industry and they should be fair enough to protect other industries in this country. But the hon. member for Gaspé is a member of a government that is opposed to this motion. Another man who takes the same position is the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd). He treated the House to an old argument of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), an argument used by that hon. gentleman nearly a quarter of a century ago, an argument which has been for about that length of time exploded, discredited. He quotes the exportation of various lines of products from this country and says : Can you protect the cheese in this country when we export 229,000,000 pounds and only import a few thousand pounds ? Well, what brought about that condition ?

When American cheese was coming in until that industry was being destroyed in this country, it was the duty that was put on cheese and the restrictions surrounding the imports, that enabled the Canadian farmers to secure their own market and then they went into that line to such an extent that last year they exported 229,000,000 pounds of cheese. Would they have been able to export that quantity but for the protection given in 1878 ? No, because filled cheese was coming across the line into Canada and was being exported and branded as Canadian cheese, and the effect was to destroy the reputation of our cheese in the mother country. Canadians were being handicapped because their cheese was losing its reputation. But when a law was passed to prevent that, then the Canadians got the full advantage of the excellent character of their cheese. When a law was passed that gave protection to the Canadian producer of cheese, he developed his industry to such an extent that to-day Canadian cheese has a reputation inferior to none.

The hon. member spoke about pork, and asked : Can you protect the farmer in pork ? Does the hon. member for Brant remember that in 1890 we were importing into Canada no less than 23,000,000 pounds of pork and fresh meats to feed the Canadian people? Does he remember when the farmers came down here in large deputations and applied to the government to put on a duty? The government did put on a duty, not as high as the Canadian farmer wished, and the result was that in one year we shut out 13,000,000 pounds of that pork. What is pork selling for to-day? Remember that the imports did not include the head and feet, and portions of the hog which were of little value, because it did not pay to import them. 13,000,000 pounds of pork at 10 cents a pound would represent $1,300,000, so much of an additional market for the Canadian farmers. Was that no benefit, no protection to him? It is useless to tell the Canadian farmer that he had no additional market on account of the national policy in 1890, because he will tell you that you do not know what you are talking about. When the farmers began to get a profitable return for their pork after one year of this policy, that industry began to develop until it has reached its present great proportions. That duty did keep out American pork and is keeping it out to-day. It is true it is still coming in to some extent, and some of the duties need to be readjusted because of changed conditions; pork is coming in in larger quantities than it should.

What I have said with regard to pork applies equally to butter, to cheese and to other articles in that line. The hon. member says we cannot protect the Canadian farmers in butter. Does he remember when we passed a law to shut out oleomargarine, butterine and those substitutes for Canadian butter that were injuring the market for our butter? His own friends a few years ago tried to take credit for passing that law, as they endeavoured to take credit for it one or two years ago. And yet the hon. member for Brant asks, can you protect Canadian butter? He need not ask that question of the Canadian farmer. He says, can you protect Canadian oats when we only imported 100,000 bushels last year and raised over 100,000,000 bushels? Why did we import that small quantity? Because we put on a duty that shut out American oats that was coming in by the million bushels, and the Canadian farmer to-day has his own market by virtue of that law. And yet we are told that you cannot protect the Canadian farmer. Sir, it is well that the Canadian farmer should know who are his friends in this House and who are his opponents. I say if this discussion served no other purpose than to show the Canadian farmer which party is opposed to his interest and which party is supporting it, it would still be well worth the time we are giving it. The hon. member voiced the sentiment of his party no doubt, and of his friends on that side of the House. But why should the Canadian farmer expect anything from the present government? Did they not tell the Canadian farmer that they were not in favour of protection, but in favour of a revenue duty only? They have now a duty which gives them ample revenue, more than enough, why should they give the Canadian farmer any more protection? Why give the Canadian manufacturer any more protection? The tariff, they declared, is a better one than the tariff in force when they came into power, and gives them ample revenue, therefore the Canadian farmer need not look for any more protection, either for his garden stuff or for his produce in any other line. The then hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said: We are not supposed to protect the farmers. When they appealed to the government of that day to put on a duty, what was his reply? All he could tell them to do was to work harder and eat less. That is the only consolation he gave the poor farmer who was beat out of the markets of his own country. The sooner the farmers know who are their friends in this House and this country the better for them. 'Ask and ye shall receive,' is an old scriptural saying we often hear quoted. The farmers have been asking, the market-gardeners have been asking, but this government, instead of giving them bread, are giving them a stone.

Mr. HEYD. When did the farmers ask for protection?

Mr. SPROULE. It is only a few years ago since I accompanied a deputation to the government on behalf of the market-gardeners asking that higher duties be put on.

Mr. HEYD. Farmers?

Mr. SPROULE. Farmers and market-gardeners together. Why, the farmers have been asking over and over again, the market-gardeners have been asking over and over again, until they find that asking is of no use because a deaf ear is turned to them every time, they can get no consideration. Now are they not entitled to some consideration? I find that between the farmers and the market-gardeners there are over 412,000 of them in this country. Do their numbers not entitle them to some consideration? We have given protection to the manufacturer, we are paying a bounty to those who are producing iron, we are paying a bounty to those who are manufacturing binder twine, and to several other lines. But the great agricultural class of the country, the mainstay of the country to-day, can knock at the door of parliament in vain, because the gentlemen who control the destiny of this country for the time being are opposed to giving them protection, and are in favour of the principle of free trade. The hon. member for Brant has voiced their sentiments to-night, so has the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux); and the premier himself has devoted but one minute to their interest and that is all. The premier says: We can give you no consolation, because the budget speech is coming down next week,—and he thinks this debate is sprung at an inopportune time. Why, this is the very best time of all others to bring it on. We are bringing this question up in time so as to draw the attention of the government to it, we want to bring before the government the needs of the market-gardeners and the farmers before the Finance Minister makes his pronouncement, then there will be no excuse for the government if they do not give that relief these people require.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Blain).

Amendment (Mr. Blain) negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) and the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) have not voted.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am paired with the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain).

Motion (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Weights, measures, gas and electric light inspection. Salaries of officers, inspectors and assistant inspectors of weights and measures, $62,300.

Mr. J. D. REID. Perhaps the minister will explain?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). This is made up as follows:

Net increase in salairies of inspectors..		$1,250 00

Mr. BRODEUR. There are increases for a number of the inspectors and assistant inspectors, and the net increase in salaries is $1,250.

Mr. CLARKE. What salaries are paid to the inspectors in Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and Quebec ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Toronto $1,300, in Montreal $1,600, in Quebec $1,200 and in Halifax $1,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that include the raise to be given ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, this is the actual salary. Then the $50 increase is added to that.

Mr. CLANCY. How many inspectors are there in the service ?

Mr. BRODEUR. About fifty, of whom eighteen are inspectors and the others are assistant inspectors.

Mr. CLANCY. Are there any to be appointed this year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, on the contrary, I contemplate reducing the staff. I see there is a very large deficit.

Mr. CLANCY. It is impossible to hear what the hon. minister is saying.

Mr. BRODEUR. I see there is a large deficit in that branch of the service and following the practice of my predecessor, I contemplate reducing the staff as much as possible.

Mr. CLANCY. Were there not some appointments made last year?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know as to that, I do not see any mention in my notes.

Mr. CLANCY. There is an increase of $1,250 and does the hon. gentleman contemplate making some reduction in the number ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am providing for increases in salary for those who are meritorious, most of these men are going to receive increases in salary. In the statement which I have just given there is a reduction of one.

Mr. CLANCY. Where is that reduction to take place ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think it will be in Montreal.

Mr. CLANCY. On what plan is this increase being made ?

Mr. BRODEUR. On the reports of the officers ; those who are giving the best service are generally rewarded by a small increase.

Mr. CLANCY. Who makes that report to the minister ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The inspectors of each district.

Mr. CLANCY. I imagine the hon. gentleman has a pretty good staff in the country, most of them trained men. Is it because of the magnitude of the work or the particular merits of the officers to be specially rewarded. On which of these plans are the increases to be made ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Only those who pass the civil service examination are entitled to become assistant inspectors.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it the inspectors or assistant inspectors who get increases ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Most of the increases go to the assistant inspectors.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose the hon. gentleman is rewarding the new appointees.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no discrimination ; every one is increased if his conduct deserves it.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the minister judge by the magnitude of the work or by its quality ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Both.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose that generally the work is well done.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose so.

Mr. CLANCY. If the work is well done on the whole, I do not think there should be any discrimination. Would the minister give us the names of those whose salaries are increased ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not give the names of those who have reached the limit. The following are recommended to be increased : Messrs. Fitzgerald and Laidman, Hamilton; Messrs. Macdonald and Finlay, Ottawa ; Messrs. Kelly and Milligan, Toronto; Mr. Heyward, Windsor; Mr. Bourget, Que.; Mr. Morin, St. Hyacinthe; Mr. Cowan, St. John; Mr. Frame, Halifax; Mr. Davey, Charlottetown; Mr. Finley, Victoria; Mr. Costello, Calgary; and Mr. Fyfe, the inspector at Ottawa.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the total increase?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Are the recommendations for increases in writing ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The reports made by the inspectors are in writing. These officers make reports to the department, and we can judge for ourselves whether these assistant inspectors are discharging their duties properly.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to ask the minister, how is the inspection of gas conducted in the different cities, and what instructions are given to the officers to enable them to ascertain the quality of the gas ? According to the reports of the officers of the department, there is a great difference in the quality of illuminating gas; and the reports depend largely upon the number of inspections made. If the inspections are made daily, and the average is taken in that way, we get a fair idea of the purity or illuminating power of the gas in any one factory or city ; but if the inspection is taken only once a month or now and again, it might happen to be taken in a certain city on a day when the gas was poor, and so a false idea would be given in regard to its quality. Perhaps the hon. minister would give us an idea of how these inspections are made, how frequently, and under what regulations.

Mr. BRODEUR. The regulations were adopted many years ago, and provide that the inspection shall be made as frequently as may be necessary.

Mr. DANIEL. How often would that be ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It depends entirely on the amount of work the officers have to do in the city where it is done. I shall be glad to send a copy of the regulations to my hon. friend.

Mr. DANIEL. I think we should be informed in what way that information is gathered, because I have heard complaints made in gas factories that under the regulations adopted by the department, the public does not get a fair idea of the illuminating power of the gas from the statement issued by the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. Has the complaint ever been made to the department ?

Mr. DANIEL. Not that I know of.

Mr. BRODEUR. I never heard any complaint.

Mr. DANIEL. I might inform the hon. minister that I found that the gas company in the city which I represent was very low in the scale in regard to the quality of their gas as reported by the Minister of Inland Revenue. I asked them why they made such poor gas. They said : The gas is all right, but the report of the Minister of Inland Revenue is all wrong. I should like to know whether the method of doing the work is equitable or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. Perhaps that gas company has made a complaint to the department of the way in which it has been judged by the inspector. The matter has never been brought to my attention, but I will inquire whether any such complaint has been made.

Mr. BIRKETT. What is the salary at present received by the inspector at Ottawa?

Mr. BRODEUR. $1,400 for the chief inspector, Mr. Macdonald.

Mr. BIRKETT. Does that include the $50 increase ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is what he is receiving to-day. He will get the $50 increase.

Mr. BLAIN. I see at page K—19 of the Auditor General's Report this item : 'legal services, A. A. Bruneau, Sorel, Quebec, $105.' What case was that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not able to give an explanation to my hon. friend. I suppose it has reference to a lawsuit, but I have no details. I shall be glad to inquire and find out. It is for something that happened before I came into the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this a legal firm in the province of Quebec ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister bring down the particulars at the next meeting ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Scales are manufactured in the United States without being stamped, while scales manufactured in Canada are stamped before they are permitted to be used. Suppose a merchant in Winnipeg imports 100 of these scales, they are sold in Manitoba and the Northwest. What system of inspection does the hon. gentleman apply to them ?

Mr. BRODEUR. As soon as they are imported we are notified by the Customs Department, and then our officers inspect them where they are to be found.

Mr. BLAIN. I am informed, and am quite sure that my information is correct, that the law is fulfilled when the importer gives notice to the department that he has a certain number of scales. He can then sell them all over the country, and they are sent 50 or 100 or 200 miles away, and are sold and distributed before the inspector arrives. There are a great many scales used constantly in Manitoba and the Northwest that have had no inspection at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think there are many, because we have assistant inspectors everywhere in the country, and when some scales are imported in that way we are notified of it, and then our inspectors go and inspect them. It was suggested that these scales should be inspected at the Customs Department: but that is not very easy in the case of large scales which have to be set up.

Mr. BIRKETT. The importer is not allowed to sell them before they are inspected?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the hon. minister say that if a notice is given the department by the importer of scales, the importer is compelled to hold them until they are inspected?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is my impression. He should notify the department right away.

Mr. BLAIN. Nevertheless that is not done, and there is nothing in the law to allow the minister to take action against the importers. I make the statement without fear of contradiction that there are imported into the Territories and Manitoba at present scales that are not stamped, and when the importer notifies the department that he has imported those scales, he has complied with the law and may sell them before they are inspected.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have had no such case brought to my knowledge. I would be very glad if my hon. friend could give me instances where the law has been violated.

Mr. LENNOX. I think I understood the minister to say that it would be very inconvenient to inspect them at places where they were stored, as they could not be set up in those places. Very often the scales are large and have to be removed to the places where they are going to be established and set up before they can be inspected. That confirms the statement of my hon. friend from Peel, who says that the law is complied with when notice is given the department by the importer, and that the importer is then at liberty to sell. Does the minister not know what the regulations are in the matter?

Mr. BRODEUR. The regulations provide that when a scale is imported we should be notified, and then an officer is sent to inspect it. Perhaps the law is defective. Perhaps the hon. member for Peel is referring to a case brought to my knowledge the other day of somebody in the west who claimed to have notified the department that he had a scale and no inspector went up there for some time.

Mr. LENNOX. If the regulations order the importer to notify the department, then as a matter of course the minister should see that the scales are inspected. But if the regulations do not provide against the selling of the scales before inspection, would it not follow that when the importer had given the notice, he would have done all required and could go on selling at once?

Mr. BLAIN. The point is this: Suppose a merchant in Brandon imports 100 scales from Chicago. When they have passed through the customs house and are in his store, he notifies the department that they are ready for inspection. He has then complied with the law and begins at once to sell them. They will be sold and scattered for hundreds of miles all over the Territories and Manitoba before they are inspected. I say that the minister should change the law by providing that the scales could not be sold until they are inspected.

Mr. BRODEUR. The regulations provide that all manufacturers and importers should notify the district inspector of the shipments and destinations of all weighing machines which cannot be inspected until finally set up.

Mr. BLAIN. That just carries out what I have said. The importer complies with the law when he gives notice that the scales are in his place and then may go on selling them. The law should be altered so that he would not be permitted to sell them until they are inspected.

Mr. BRODEUR. Perhaps the law is not sufficient to cover the case, and I will see that Mr. Pike looks into the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. There is imported into Canada a very large number of these self-registering scales, which are to be found in the butchers' shops and grocers' stores. I am informed on very creditable authority that the United States people advertise that whoever purchases these scales may take 100 lbs. of beef, sell it in small quantities, and make five per cent. That is, they take a piece of beef and drop it on the self-registering scale. It will send the scale down to the lowest point, which is the point that registers what the consumer must pay for his beef, and the statement is made that a merchant can buy that self-registering scale, take 100 lbs. of beef or sugar, weigh it in small quantities, and he will make from three to five per cent. Our law does not permit these scales to be manufactured for the reason I have mentioned; but if we do not permit their manufacture, we should not allow them to be imported, more particularly if they are sold under the advertisement to which I have drawn attention.

Mr. BRODEUR. No doubt we should not permit the importation and use of those scales, and I am sure that my officers absolutely refuse to inspect them. In some cases I think we ordered that they should be re-exported.

Mr. BLAIN. Where were those?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think in the west.

Mr. BIRKETT. No scale can be used unless registered. The scale has to be inspected and stamped before you can use it. Scales coming into Canada, if not stamped, are rejected.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend from Peel says that if inspections are made before the scales are sold by the importer, the customs would have control and the work be done satisfactorily; but in one case 100 scales were purchased, and without having been inspected or adjusted they were sold and are being used. This is a very serious matter, especially if the statement can be made good that an inducement is held out to the dealers by advertising that these scales are so unfair and fraudulent that the consumer is not getting what he pays for. It is a very serious matter, especially in the sparsely settled districts if fraudulent scales are permitted to pass from the importer to the retailer.

Mr. BRODEUR. Perhaps we could inspect these scales at the customs office; but, as I said a minute ago, I suggested this myself and I was told that it could not be very easily done. And I think the only way is that which we have adopted,—to learn where these scales are in use and inspect them there. And if it is found that these scales are not in accordance with our laws the parties receive instructions to re-export them.

Mr. BLAIN. I agree with the minister on that point. But how is the inspector to find out where the scales are, if they are sold to different men using them in distant parts of the country?

Mr. BRODEUR. Our inspectors go everywhere throughout the country and find these scales. And, if the scales are not right they are destroyed or re-exported. I am sure that in one case, at least, that has been done.

Mr. BLAIN. But the hon. gentleman will not say that his inspectors can go to every farm house all over Canada to test the scales. That is not their duty. Or, perhaps I may be wrong in that; but, I understand that they only inspect scales used by merchants.

Mr. BRODEUR. If a man uses scales only for himself we do not care much. The Weights and Measures Act is made specially for the protection of the public. We inspect every two years the scales that are in use by dealers.

Mr. LENNOX. Surely the minister is not serious in saying that if a farmer gets a scale and has it in use on his farm, the department does not care whether it is inspected or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) will understand that it is a much more serious matter where the scale is used by a dealer in his business. We have to protect the public against fraud by the use of unfair scales.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me that the suggestion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) is a good one and would expedite business—that those scales should be inspected before they are distributed.

Mr. BRODEUR. That can be done with small scales, but large scales have to be set up before they are used, and cannot be inspected until they are set up.

Mr. CLARKE. But, in the case of the importation of a quantity of scales, they are not likely to be of that character. They are likely to be small scales that could be inspected before they are distributed. It might be made a regulation that they must be inspected and stamped before they are distributed.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is done now. The importers in Montreal, for instance, notify our inspector of an importation, and the inspectors inspect the scales.

Mr. BLAIN. There is another matter I wished to speak about, and that is as to the inspection of self-registering scales, that are imported, the spring scale. The hon. gentleman will not allow the Canadian manufacturer to manufacture these scales.

Mr. BRODEUR. Are not these special scales re-exported to the United States?

Mr. BLAIN. No, they are in use. I speak of the self-registering scales imported from the United States. Are they stamped by the department before they are allowed to go into use?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, they are inspected before being used.

Mr. BIRKETT. But there is a spring scale made that will not bear stamping. Every time you use it the spring gets weaker. These have been rejected by the department. There is a spring scale made, however, that will bear stamping. The law, to my mind is very clear. All importers are supposed to notify the department as soon as they receive scales, and after the scales are in position they can be inspected. The importer is not allowed to sell them until they are inspected. Whoever sells them notifies the department telling of the party to whom they are sold, and the local inspector looks them up and inspects them.

Mr. BLAIN. This is an important question. Almost every farmer in Ontario has a scale upon his premises. Is it the duty of any inspector whose salary we are voting to visit farm houses, to inspect the scales or find out if they have been inspected ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Everywhere where scales can be used in dealing with the public they are inspected.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to have an explanation from the minister, not necessarily to-night, but before the items for his department are all passed, as to the rule adopted in fixing the salaries of the chief inspectors in Montreal, Toronto, Quebec, Ottawa and Halifax. If I understood the statement of the minister correctly, with the increases that have been given, the salary of the inspector at Montreal will be $1,650, that of the inspector at Toronto $1,350, that of the inspector at Ottawa, $1,450, that of the inspector at Quebec $1,250, and that of the inspector at Halifax $1,050. I presume that these are all efficient officers and that they are fully employed. Upon what scale are these salaries adjusted ?

An hon. MEMBER. Spring scale.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose it is by length of service, because I see that the inspector for Montreal whose salary is $1,650 was appointed in 1881. The inspector for Toronto whose salary is $1,350 was appointed in 1900.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is he ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Kelly.

Mr. CLARKE. When was the inspector for Ottawa appointed ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He receives $1,450. He was appointed in 1886.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are the inspectors entitled to any fee for inspecting scales ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They have to render an account to the department of all the fees they collect. They are simply paid by salary.

Mr. J. D. REID. For instance, those who inspect scales charge fees and travelling expenses.

Mr. BRODEUR. In some cases fees and travelling expenses are charged to those who ask for a special inspection to be made. But they have to return all that money to the department.

Rent, fuel, travelling expenses, postage, stationery, &c., for gas and electric light inspection and the purchase and repairs of instruments, $12,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that this whole item 247 is passed.

Mr. BIRKETT.

Mr. CASGRAIN. With the understanding that the question of the Metric system will be discussed on another item ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What business does the hon. gentleman intend to take up tomorrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are a number of minor Bills which will be taken up, except the Militia Bill. After that, if we have time to go into supply, we will take Inland Revenue, to be followed by Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 2, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PROHIBITION OF CIGARETTES.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN (Huntingdon) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 128) to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. MACLAREN. I do not think much explanation is necessary at this stage of the Bill. When the resolution in reference to the prohibition of cigarettes was debated in this House, out of thirteen who spoke nine hon. gentlemen were in favour of the legislation ; two thought that the cigarettes were an evil, but that the method proposed was not the best remedy ; and one, the youthful member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne), was strongly in favour of cigarettes, and informed us that though he had smoked them from ten years of age he was nothing the worse of it. I thought the junior member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) was going to follow in his footsteps, but he switched off from cigarettes and attacked our farmers' wives for not being good cooks and thus causing indigestion. He told us that he was not a member for a rural constituency, but I fancy every one knew that, because if he were he would have known better. In view of the debate that has taken place, I do not think it is necessary that I should give any further explanation.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I desire to remind the hon. member for Huntingdon that my recollection is that the junior member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) was endorsed by the Prime Minister very largely in what he did say.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, I did not attack the farmers' wives.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

CROOKED LAKE RESERVE, N.W.T.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to open up Crooked Lake reserve, N.W.T., or any part thereof, for settlement ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). Before any portion of the Crooked Lake reserve could be disposed of, it would have to be surrendered by the Indians, which has not yet been done. The question as to obtaining a surrender of a portion of the reserve has received some consideration from the department, but as yet no surrender has been obtained.

DUTIES ON RAW LEAF TOBACCO.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

What amount of customs duties were collected on raw leaf tobacco for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903 ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). The duties on raw-leaf tobacco are collected by the Inland Revenue Department. During the fiscal year referred to the duties so collected amounted to $1,249,569.17. A sum of $96 has been also collected by the Customs Department for duties on samples of foreign raw leaf tobacco.

DOMINION STEEL COMPANY—STRIKE AT SYDNEY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the government whether or not they have taken any steps with regard to the strike inaugurated at the works of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company at Sydney, in my province ? As the government is no doubt aware, the works of this company are of the greatest possible importance to the town of Sydney, which is now a large community of some 12,000 or 14,000 people, although ten or twelve years ago it was a village of only 2,000 or 3,000 population. The interests of the town and of the people who reside there are bound up very largely in the prosperity of this company, and of the Dominion Coal Company. I understand from press reports that about 1,800 men have gone on strike and that the works of the company are closed down, and are likely to be closed down for an indefinite period. This would seem to be a special occasion when the intervention of the government is demanded ; the results of this strike may be that five or six thousand people will leave the province of Nova Scotia and endeavour to find homes in the United States.

It is therefore of the utmost possible importance that everything in the power of the government should be done for the purpose of bringing the strike to an end and of causing the company to resume its operations. I do not know whether the government has taken any steps tending towards intervention, but I have been informed that the Board of Trade of Sydney has sent a communication to the government by telegraph, asking that some such steps be taken. My information did not come from the board of trade itself, but from another quarter, and I thought it a sufficiently important matter to bring to the attention of the government at once. I should be glad if the right hon. gentleman, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, would give the House any information as to what the government has done or what it proposes to do, with respect to a matter of such very great importance, not only to the interests of Sydney, but to the whole province of Nova Scotia, and I may say to the whole Dominion.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, I join with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in recognizing the very great importance of the matter to which he has referred, and I assure the House that if, by the intervention of the Minister of Labour or in any other way, the government, by the exercise of its friendly offices, can bring about a better understanding between the company and the workmen, it will be both our duty and our pleasure to do so. The strike, as the hon. gentleman has intimated, is one of recent hours, and has only now taken definite effect. The communication to which he has referred has been received by the Department of Labour, and the matter is now engaging the minister's attention. It is not possible at the present moment to indicate in what way the Department of Labour or the government may intervene ; but I assure the hon. gentleman that we appreciate the importance of the matter, and we shall be glad to do anything we can, by friendly intervention or in any other way, to bring about a solution of the difficulty.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that on several occasions when I have had questions on the order paper, I have been asked to put them on the motion paper. In several instances I have complied with this request. I had a question on the order paper yesterday, the answer to which involved very little trouble on the part of the minister to whose department it belonged, and I was asked to move for a return. I have had some experience in moving for returns. As I pointed out yesterday, I moved for a return on the 25th of April, and I have not received the information yet. At this stage of the session, when these motions are not likely to be reached, I think it is not fair to ask me to put on the motion paper a question which involves no more trouble than the one I had on the order paper yesterday. I would like to ask the First Minister to have that question replaced on the order paper, and the answer given to it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend says that he moved for some papers on the 25th of April. Does he refer to the papers in connection with the Murray Harbour works ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, the notice of motion was made on the 25th of April, but my hon. friend did not move for the papers until the 31st of May. When my hon. friend called my attention to the matter on that day, I immediately wrote to the Department of Railways, and I was informed as follows :

Upon inquiry I find the only returns in connection with the Murray Harbour works and the Hillsborough bridge were moved for by Mr. Hackett, on the 25th April. One has gone forward to the Secretary of State, and the other is being prepared.

In looking up the Votes and Proceedings, I find an order of the House was passed yesterday for a return asked for by Mr. Lefurgey, and this only reached the department this morning. It will be prepared as quickly as possible as it will be necessary to send to Moncton for the information.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to correct the right hon. the First Minister. I did move for some returns on the 31st of May, but they were not the same as those I moved for on the 25th of April.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I know. Those were moved for by Mr. Hackett.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The first was moved on the 25th of April.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked the government yesterday for some information respecting the employment of counsel in connection with the commission issued to Judge Winchester.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say I cannot give an answer to my hon. friend to-day. I have not been able to see the Postmaster General since yesterday, as he has been out of town.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. May I ask the premier if any steps are being taken to procure a full report of the evidence being taken before His Honour Judge Winchester?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say as to that. I have to give my hon. friend the same answer as I have given to the hon. leader of the opposition : I have not seen the Postmaster General since yesterday.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD.

Bill (No. 127) to amend the Act providing for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada (Sir Richard Cartwright), was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. Section 5 of chapter 31 of the statutes of 1903, intituled : 'An Act to provide for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada,' is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :—

5. Payment of the said bounty may be made on all such lead-bearing ores mined in Canada and delivered at a smelter in Canada on or after the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and three ; and the said bounties shall cease and determine on the thirtieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and eight.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman promised us some information as to the comparative results.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The amount paid appears to have been $51,000, which represents 60 per cent of the claims allowed. Of course, a considerable number of claims are pending, and some will be dealt with under the provisions of this Act when it is passed. I have been endeavouring to ascertain whether I could get full information for the hon. gentleman, but I find that it is scarcely in our power to ascertain what was done during past years. The officer in charge thinks there has been a considerable development, but he is not in a position to obtain full details, as the Act has been in operation only a few months, and he has nothing to guide him as to what was done in former times except his personal knowledge of what was going on.

Mr. WILSON. Can the minister tell us who is appointed to look after this matter ? I understand you have an official in British Columbia at a salary of $2,500 and expenses. Is there just one officer ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is all we have found necessary at present.

Mr. WILSON. Kindly give his name and salary, and the expenses incurred thus far.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. His name is Buchanan. His salary is $2,500 and actual expenses incurred in carrying out the regulations of the Act.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

PILOTAGE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 100) to amend the Pilotage Act.—(Mr. Préfontaine) was read the second time and House went into Committee thereon.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Bill is very short as hon. gentlemen will see. Last year a Bill was introduced placing the pilots between Montreal and Quebec under the authority of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It was done at the request of the pilots, the boards of trade and the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and Québec. In the Bill there was a clause by which the district of Saguenay was put under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as regards pilotage, but the Bill did not go far enough in conferring authority on the Minister of Marine to control entirely the pilotage of the Saguenay river, and when it became necessary to prepare rules for the pilotage of the Saguenay river, we considered that we had not sufficient powers. A commission was appointed in Chicoutimi to supervise the pilotage of the river, but the authority of the pilotage itself does not reside in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and we think it is in the interest of navigation that it should be. Hon. gentlemen will remember that last year a very serious accident occurred on the Saguenay. A boat was wrecked in broad daylight by an incompetent pilot, and as the river is difficult to navigate, it requires special pilots with special knowledge of the locality and these pilots should be examined under the proper authority of the Department of Marine, so as to have men properly qualified to pilot in the Saguenay. It is not the intention to take other pilots but those of the district of Quebec. It is the intention of the department to take power to examine pilots for the district of Quebec and to see that they are qualified.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman when he says the Bill is short, but not when he comes to give us the meaning of the Bill. It is much more comprehensive than would appear from the explanation he has given. The pilotage auauthority in each district is not only the authority which chooses the pilots, but is also the tribunal instituted for trying pilots. Now, this may be a very important tribunal. For instance, in the case the hon. minister has mentioned, the grounding of the steamer, the pilot, who was at fault, was tried and suspended for quite a long time. A pilot can be suspended for his lifetime by the pilotage authority, which can impose a most severe sentence upon a pilot even to the extent of taking away his branch as it is called, or his license, thereby depriving him of his means of livelihood. I am sure it is not the intention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to constitute himself a tribunal to try pilots, for instance in Quebec, but the Bill which is now before the committee gives him that power. If, as he says, this law is only for the district of Saguenay, he should say so, but surely this committee is not going to give my hon. friend the power to constitute himself a tribunal to try these most important cases. The corporation of pilots for and below Quebec is a most important corporation ; they are men who have been obliged to go through a long course of studies to become pilots. The apprenticeship of a pilot is seven years. After he serves seven years he is admitted as a branch pilot, but in case the number of pilots is 125, he may be obliged to remain in apprenticeship for a number of years longer. These men are from their training capable of being pilots and of being pilots only. Such a man cannot do anything else to earn a livelihood in the ordinary course of things, and if an accident occurred for which he is held responsible, he can, according to this Bill, be tried by one man, the Minister of Marine. I think this is putting in the hands of the Minister of Marine, a power which this House would be very loath to confer. The fact of the matter is that the tribunal is just as important a tribunal as any of the superior courts that sit in Quebec. I am sure it is not the intention of my hon. friend, but if it is not, he should amend the Act so that it would preclude his being able to become that pilotage authority in the sense of being able to try offences laid at the door of a pilot. I would ask my hon. friend to make this clear. There are several members of parliament who have pilots among their constituents, and I am sure they will take a lively interest in this Bill, which although it is short, may have the most important possible influence on the pilots, both in the district of Quebec and of Montreal.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Bill puts the pilots under the control of the Department of Marine, when it seems to be in the interest of navigation that this should be done, and I do not see what harm there is in having the proper authorities to investigate accidents that may happen in the St. Lawrence or elsewhere. It is a matter of judgment whether it would be better in the hands of the Department of Marine or in the hands of the Harbour Commission.

In proposing this Bill I am supported by the pilots themselves, for they accept this Bill as being in their interest, in this way, that they think that they will pass better examination and will offer more security for the maritime interest. So I am not afraid at all for the consequences of the Bill. It has a large scope but its powers can only be exercised, as I pointed out and as provided by the Bill, by Order in Council, based on serious reasons for doing so. The Department of Marine and Fisheries is not interested at all in depriving people generally of their rights ; quite the contrary. But the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr Casgrain) knows perfectly well the complaints that have existed against the pilots. We are trying to improve the guarantee the pilots offer to navigation, and it is by taking the necessary precautions and improving the examinations passed by these gentlemen that the corporation of pilots themselves will be more respected and will inspire greater confidence. I repeat there is no objection on the part of the pilots—quite the contrary; and I think it is a measure directed in the interest of the navigation and of the public generally.

Mr. R. L BORDEN (Halifax). What is the idea of making this Bill so comprehensive? I understand from the hon. minister (Mr. Prefontaine) that the special design is to effect some reform in the district which embraces the river Saguenay. But the Bill is so comprehensive that it would enable the hon. gentleman to assume the supervision of pilotage in the port of Halifax if he desired to do so.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is not the intention.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not talking about the intention, but the scope. I want the power given to correspond with the intention. If the intention is to do a certain thing, there is no reason for making the power more comprehensive. If the hon. gentleman is merely trying to carry out the intention he has announced, he has gone very wide of the mark and has included a great deal more than he speaks of. In undertaking to cover one district he has covered the whole Dominion. His aim has not been very good. In any case, I do not see how this Bill would be workable, so far as the port of Halifax is concerned. Suppose you supersede the pilotage authorities of Halifax, St. John or Sydney, how would the department propose to carry on the work? No machinery is provided. It is not worth while to pass Acts that are incomplete or useless. Let us do either one thing or the other—either confine this statute to what the hon. gentleman says is the intention of the government, or, if we go beyond that, make a provision that is workable not only on the river St. Lawrence but in the maritime provinces. I think that on the whole, the pilotage authorities of the maritime provinces have worked with a fair degree of satisfaction and have given efficient service. I would not favour passing a statute in this comprehensive form unless I knew some reason why a statute going so far beyond the declared intention of the government is sought by the minister.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not see the force of the objection. The objection seems to me that according to this Bill there is no machinery provided. But the Bill does not provide the machinery, for that is already provided in the Pilotage Act. We are only amending the way in which the machinery can be applied.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) misunderstands me. That is the minor objection. The chief objection is that this is too comprehensive and goes beyond the intention of the government.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The intention of the government is simply this: Whenever it is in the interest of navigation that the pilotage authority should reside in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, it shall be so provided by Order in Council, and, from that time for the waters referred to in that Order in Council, the pilotage authority shall rest in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. What objection can there be to that? I have not heard any complaints about the pilotage in Halifax or St. John. But suppose that to-morrow—

Mr. CLARKE. Why not leave them alone?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not touch them.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman does by his Bill.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Suppose that to-morrow the Harbour Commissioners of Halifax should decide on some rules that would not be in the interest of navigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Then the department would be obliged to wait for another session in order to bring in a Bill to correct that state of affairs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should have thought that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) knew more about his department than that. If he is at all familiar with the statutes he must know that these regulations have no effect until they are approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. But suppose they do not apply the regulation. Suppose, for instance, the examinations they give the apprentice pilots are practically no examination at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, I would dismiss them.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This year, since we took over the pilotage of Montreal district, we have applied different rules for the examination than formerly existed. The examinations the pilots used to pass were obsolete and did not afford the necessary guarantee for the efficiency of the pilots. We have changed these rules and are trying to give a system of pilotage that will be as efficient as possible. It is only by taking it in hand when the necessity arises that we can hope to make the system work properly and effect due improvements in the pilotage service.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I must say that it seems to me from what my hon. friend (Mr. Prefontaine) says and from reading the Bill, that this Bill is brought before the committee without due consideration having been given to it by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Prefontaine). Either he does not understand the Bill, or he does not know anything about the law he seeks to amend. Now, this is a most important Bill and one which, to a great extent, affects the liberty of the subject. It is more far-reaching than my hon. friend seems to think.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) is showing most glaring ignorance of a most important Bill the carrying out of which is the duty of his department. What is the pilotage authority for instance, for the Quebec district ? The Quebec Harbour Commissioners ? The Pilotage Act, chapter 80, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, section 15, provides :

15. Subject to the provisions of this Act, or of any Act for the time being in force in its pilotage district, every pilotage authority shall have power, from time to time, by by-law confirmed by the Governor in Council, to do all or any of the following things within its district, that is to say :—

To determine the qualifications of pilots ; to make regulations respecting pilot boats ; to aid companies for the support of pilot boats ; to grant licenses and certificates ; to make regulations as to licenses and certificates ; to make regulations for the government of pilots; to make rules for punishing breaches of regulations ; to fix and alter pilotage dues ; compulsory retirement of aged pilots ; and of infirm and intemperate pilots ; decision of disputes about pilotage ; to establish and regulate pilot funds, except in Quebec and Montreal districts.

Now, that is very important, but it is not half so important as the other sections of this Act. When we come to the offices of pilots what do we see ? Section 73 of the Act says :

73. Every licensed pilot who, either within or without the district for which he is licensed,—

(a.) Commits any fraud or offence in respect to the revenues of customs or inland revenue or the laws relating thereto ;

(b.) Is in any way directly or indirectly concerned in any corrupt practices relating to ships, their tackle, cargoes, crews or passengers, or to persons in distress at sea or by shipwreck, or to their moneys, goods or chattels ;

(c.) Lends his license ;

(d.) Acts as pilot whilst suspended ;

(e.) Acts as pilot when in a state of intoxication ;

(f.) Employs or causes to be employed on behalf of any ship of which he has the charge, any steamboat, boat, anchor, cable, or other store, matter or thing, beyond what is necessary for the service of such ship, with the intent to enhance the expenses of pilotage for his own gain, or for the gain of any other person ;

(g.) Refuses or delays, when not prevented by illness or other reasonable cause, to take charge of any ship within the limits of his license, upon the signal for a pilot being made by such ship, or upon being required so to do by the master, owner, agent or consignee thereof, or by any officer of the pilotage authority of the district of which such pilot is licensed or by any principal officer of customs, subject always in the case of a pilot for and below the harbour of Quebec, to the laws relating to the corporation of pilots for and below the harbour of Quebec ;

(h.) Upon being so signaled or required, attempts to make any special bargain for salvage ;

(i.) Unnecessarily cuts or slips, or causes to be cut or slipped, any cable belonging to any ship ;

(j.) Refuses, when requested by the master to conduct the ship on board of which he is into any port or place into which he is licensed to conduct the same, except on reasonable grounds of danger to the ship ; or—

(k.) Quits the ship which he has undertaken to pilot, before the service for which he has hired has been performed, without the consent of the master,—

Shall, for each offence, in addition to any liability for damages, be liable to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars, and suspension or dismissal by the pilotage authority of the district for which he is licensed ; and every person who procures, abets or connives at the commission of such offence shall, for each offence, in addition to any liability or damages, be liable to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars, and if he is a licensed pilot, to suspension or dismissal by the pilotage authority of the district for which he is licensed.

Now my hon. friend would attribute to himself the power of trying these offences. I admit my hon. friend is a lawyer, I admit he is probably as capable of trying these offences as an ordinary police magistrate would be, or probably as competent as would be the pilotage authority, for instance, of the pilotage district of Quebec. But is my hon. friend, in the political position which he occupies now, going to take upon himself to try these offences and to impose a fine of $200 on any pilot who makes himself liable under the law ? I say that the hon. gentleman could not take that position, occupying the political position which he does, unless he is going to become a judge to try these very important cases, and to impose fines upon those who render themselves guilty of the offences in question.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I would remind my hon. friend that at the present time that authority has been conferred upon me by the pilots themselves, by the boards of trade and the shipping interests.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not like to controvert the statement of my hon. friend, but I think it would be most extraordinary if the pilotage authority and the pilots of the district of Montreal had put these enormous powers in the hands of my hon. friend. But even if he has those powers for the pilotage district of Montreal, I say that so far as I am concerned I protest most emphatically against his taking these great powers for the pilotage district of Quebec. But that is not all. Section 98 of the Pilot-age Act provides with regard to investigations :

The pilotage authority for any district shall, in all cases of inquiry or investigation made by them under this Act, or under any other Act or law, have full power to examine any person appearing before them to give evidence in cases on oath ; and such oath may be administered by any member of such pilotage authority present at such inquiry or investigation.

99. Whenever any ship sustains damage through the fault of any branch pilot for and above the harbour of Quebec, the pilotage authority of the pilotage district of Montreal may, in its discretion, and upon such information as it deems expedient, and with or without complaint by any person, investigate the matter and declare the branch of such pilot forfeited.

And this provision exists for the pilotage district of Quebec also. My hon. friend says power has been given to him by parliament in the district of Montreal. It has not been given to him in the district of Quebec. Now what are the penalties ?

100. When any ship meets with any accident by reason of the fault of and while in charge of a pilot for and below the harbour of Quebec, the master, owner or consignee thereof, or other interested person may submit his complaint in respect thereto at any time thereafter, and the pilotage authority——

That would be my hon. friend.

—of the pilotage district of Quebec may, upon such information as it deems expedient, and with or without complaint by any person, investigate the matter and declare the branch of such pilot forfeited :

Thereby taking away from the pilot for all time to come his means of earning a livelihood, this man who has made sacrifices to qualify himself as a pilot, who has served a long apprenticeship for that purpose, and upon judgment rendered against him by my hon. friend he may forfeit his branch or his license and be absolutely debarred from earning his livelihood in the avocation for which he has qualified himself.

Provided, that in the case of inward bound ships, no investigation shall be had after the expiry of thirty days——

And so forth. There are other penalties which are imposed by this Act and which are triable by the pilotage authority. Now I am confining myself more particularly to the pilotage authority of the pilotage district of Quebec. Let us see what safeguards the law has given to the pilots in the district of Quebec. The pilotage authority for the district of Quebec is the harbour commissioners of the harbour of Quebec. But when they sit as a tribunal to try these very serious offences for which these rigorous and severe penalties may be inflicted upon the pilots, it is enacted in the law that the president of the corporation of pilots shall be a member of the board ; so that the corporation of pilots is represented upon that board by a man who is perfectly competent to judge of the case, to investigate the matter, and to decide whether the pilot who is accused has made himself liable to punishment under the law. Now I leave it to my hon. friend himself. When he came before the committee a little while ago with this Bill and explained it to the committee, he confined his remarks almost entirely to the pilotage district of the Saguenay river which was created by the law which he had passed by this House last year. But when you come to examine the law itself it is not at all in keeping with my hon. friend's explanations, and this shows clearly that the department never did intend to make my hon. friend the pooh-bah of the pilotage district anywhere. They did not intend, he himself or his department did not intend, to vest the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with these enormous and exorbitant powers to sit as a court and try these men for offences for which they may be deprived of their branch or license. Now I appeal to my hon. friend's fairness. He may not always be the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Probably some one else will succeed him some day who will not be so competent to try these offences. As I have said, my hon. friend is a distinguished member of the bar, but even then, I do not know that he would be in a position to sit as an investigating magistrate or as a pilotage authority to make this investigation and to pronounce upon the guilt or innocence of the pilot. But supposing a layman were put in his place, supposing a gentleman who has not had the legal training of my hon. friend be appointed Minister of Marine and Fisheries, although he may be perfectly capable in a political sense of occupying the position my hon. friend occupies to-day, will my hon. friend say that such a man should be vested with the enormous powers of sitting as a court or sitting as a tribunal to try these offences, and not only of condemning these pilots to a fine but also to imprisonment, and condemning them to lose their branch or their license for the rest of their days ? Now I have no objection to my hon. friend taking the powers which he himself says it is his intention, or the intention of the department, to take, that is, of doing the things which he has mentioned. But I call the attention of the members of the committee to this fact, that the Bill which my hon. friend has now before the House is far reaching in its effects, it is most important, it is one of the most important Bills probably that will come before this House affecting the interests of a large class of people, people who have just as much right to the protection of this committee and of this House as any other class of men in the country. Would my hon. friend wish to try such offences as these by a tribunal composed of an ordinary justice of the peace, for instance, an ordinary police magistrate, who knows nothing of navigation, who knows nothing about the risks these men run, and noth'ng about the handling of ships ? Will my hon. friend say that is right. If my hon. friend will confine the terms of his measure within the explanations which he gave to this committee, well and good. But if my hon. friend says that he is going to give himself by this law the powers which are to-day vested under the Revised Statutes of Canada in the pilotage authority of the district of Quebec, then I enter my most solemn protest, and I must say that this law will certainly not pass until I have had an opportunity of getting it amended.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I do not quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) who has just taken his seat. In interpreting this Bill he seems to think that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be placed in the position of being the sole judge. The hon. gentleman knows that the pilotage authorities in Montreal and Quebec consult with some of the pilots. They avail themselves of the experience of two or three or more of the pilots. Any pilots who have a knowledge of navigation and who are experienced may be consulted by the pilotage authorities.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion) allow me ? My hon. friend is absolutely astray in so far as the pilotage district of Quebec is concerned. The board is composed by law of the harbour commissioners of Quebec and the president of the pilots is one of the members of the board. The composition of the board is fixed by law and you cannot take in any more pilots.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Very well, but does the hon. gentleman pretend that they have not the right to consult any of the pilots?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Decidedly I do say so.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I have known instances in Montreal and Quebec where they have consulted three or four of the pilots. The pilotage authority is frequently composed of men who have no experience whatever. They are merchants in Quebec and they generally consult with pilots, with men of experience and with lawyers ? I think it is proper that the authority in regard to pilotage should be vested in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If anything important occurs is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries not the proper person to see that a remedy is provided ? In the same way if anything goes wrong in the courts in any province of the Dominion, the Minister of Justice sees that a proper remedy is provided.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The analogy which my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion) suggests works out in this way that if you brought all the courts of the country under the authority of the Minster of Justice he would try everything himself ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. Not at all. I understand that this Bill means that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be the authority to whom we shall apply if any of the boards, at Quebec, Halifax, St. John and Montreal are doing anything wrong.

Mr. HAGGART. He has the right himself to try cases. He supersedes the boards.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Yes, but he has the power to consult with the boards themselves. He has the right to consult the pilots just the same as the boards have. That is the way I understand the Bill. It reads as follows :

> Notwithstanding anything in the Pilotage Act, the Governor in Council may, when it appears to him to be in the interest of navigation, appoint the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to be the pilotage authority for any pilotage district, or for any part thereof ; and the minister shall thereupon supersede the then existing pilotage authority for that district or part of a district.

Does it really mean that the minister shall be himself the pilotage authority sitting as a judicial authority ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He is over every person ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. GEOFFRION. The functions of the pilotage authorities in Quebec and Montreal are divided. In addition to the pilotage authority they have judicial powers. Perhaps I am not interpreting this Bill as it should be interpreted, but I think that the hon. minister by this Bill does not take it upon himself to sit alone as a judicial authority.

Mr. TALBOT. In answer to the objections that my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has raised against the actual proposition of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries I may tell my hon. friend from Montmorency that I am somewhat interested in this Bill from the fact that a great number of the pilots of Quebec live in my county.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How many ?

Mr. TALBOT. The only objection that the pilots of Quebec have to the change of authority is, and I had a conversation with the president yesterday about it—he was in Ottawa—that under the new authority probably the pilots of Quebec will not be treated with so much leniency as they are now. That is their only fear. I do not think my hon. friend can name one member of the harbour commission of Quebec outside of the president of the corporation of pilots, who is an ex-officio member of the board, who knows anything about pilotage or about the river St. Lawrence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know how it is in Quebec, but in the maritime provinces I think the boards are composed partly of merchants and partly of men who have practical experience. I can recall that at the present time at least, two men, perhaps three, on the board of pilot commissioners in Halifax are retired master mariners of great experience. I think this is a practice which prevails in the lower provinces almost universally. But, referring for a moment to the observations of my hon. friend from Chambly and Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion) I wish to say that it does not seem to me that there can be any doubt as to the meaning of this amendment.

The Governor in Council may, when it appears to him to be in the interest of navigation, appoint the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to be the pilotage authority for any pilotage district, or for any part thereof; and the minister shall thereupon supersede the then existing pilotage authority for that district or part of a district.

Can there be any doubt about the meaning of that? The pilotage authority has functions of different characters. It has administrative functions; it has judicial functions. In respect to every function it can exercise under the law it is to be superseded by the minister under the terms of this statute. I do not think my hon. friend will disagree with that proposition. I do not see how he can disagree. Is that a wise provision to make in regard to every pilotage authority throughout Canada? My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has made an argument about one pilotage district—the Saguenay district—about which I profess to know very little, but as to the other pilotage authorities in Canada we have heard no word from the hon. gentleman beyond this that he says he is taking this power as a matter of precaution because these pilotage authorities may make some rules or regulations that are not wise, or that they may refuse to carry out rules and regulations that have been made and approved and that are wise and should be carried out. In the first place, as far as the rules and regulations are concerned, my distinct recollection of the Pilotage Act is that these rules and regulations must be approved by the Governor in Council or by the department—I think by the Governor in Council——

Mr. PREFONTAINE. By the Governor in Council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before they have any force whatever. Therefore, in that respect the public are amply safeguarded by that provision. In so far as the other part of the hon. gentleman's argument is concerned, namely, that the pilotage authorities may not carry out the law, the Governor in Council has ample authority if they do not carry out the law. The Governor in Council can dismiss them and appoint others in their places. He can call upon them, in the first place, to carry out the law and if they refuse he can take either one or other of these remedies. Therefore, there does not seem to me to be any occasion for the enactment of a law of this character and I do not think the hon. minister professes to have given any reason for the enactment of the proposed amendment except in so far as it may have application to the Saguenay district as to which I do not profess to have any information because I do not know what the facts may be.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Bill will only have application where it is necessary to apply it. The board of the port of Montreal last year, with the consent of the business people, the shipping interests, the harbour commissioners and the pilots came here last year and got this Act put through parliament. Chapter 48, 3 Edward VII., vests the pilotage authority of Montreal in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If the business people of Montreal believe that such a law should be passed, surely their opinion must be of some value. The business people of Quebec have insisted that another clause be added to the Bill, so as to take from the pilotage authority of the district of Quebec the supervision of the Saguenay river. The reason they give is, that some of the pilots that have been assigned to the Saguenay were absolutely incompetent. Let me ask: is the country not generally interested in having the law applied in such a way as to offer the necessary guarantees for safe navigation? Why should not authority be given to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to act as a pilotage authority? The great objection raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) is that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will subsitute himself for the pilotage authority, and for the men who formerly held this investigation, but the hon. gentleman loses sight of chapter 64, the Act of 1901, under which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has authority to hold investigations and to delegate his powers.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is nothing about the pilots in that Act.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It makes no difference whether the pilot is tried under the Shipping Casualties Act, or by men chosen by the harbour commissioners of Quebec or St. John or elsewhere.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The difference is that a pilot cannot be tried under the Act to which the minister has referred.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The investigation takes place under that Act, and everything is done to ascertain who is responsible for the accident.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It has nothing at all to do with the pilots.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Surely it is in the interests of the country, that pilots should pass such an examination under proper authority, as will guarantee that they are capable of discharging their duties. I do not see what harm there is in the pilotage authority being put in the hands of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Indeed I believe it will afford better protection to the shipping interests.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has said that one of the reasons why some of the pilots are opposed to this Bill, is that the new pilotage authority would not be so lenient as the existing body. Well, I have had considerable experience in practising before these pilotage courts ; I have been the solicitor for the pilots for the last twenty years, and I know that the complaint is not that the pilotage authority in Quebec is too lenient, but rather quite the reverse. The pilotage authority in the district of Quebec is composed of nominees of the government—and the government should appoint men who know something about the business—and also of a number of gentlemen who are elected by the shipping interests of Quebec. For the most part these gentlemen know a good deal about shipping ; some of them know a good deal about navigation, and they are competent to try such cases as come before them. In addition to that, they have the president of the Corporation of Pilots to throw light upon any question on which they are adjudicating. Let me point out that the Minister of Marine, who is not yet the lord high admiral of the Canadian navy does not know much about navigation, and although he has taken several trips on the 'Eureka' and the 'Frontenac,' he is not by any means a past master in the science of navigation. For my part, I would be loath to go before him with a trial in which a pilot was accused of neglect in navigating his ship. The Minister of Marine is not only not a fresh water sailor even, but he is not a sailor at all, and if the existing pilotage authority in Quebec is not competent to try these cases, surely the Minister of Marine cannot set up a claim to competency. The minister quoted the Shipping Casualties Act of 1901, but it ought be needless to tell him that that Act has nothing to do with pilots at all. The Act is simply for the purpose of instituting inquiries and investigations into shipping casualties, to determine whether the master, or the engineer, or one of the officers of the ship has been guilty of any neglect or error in navigation. The law respecting pilots provides how they shall be tried and their trial is a very serious matter. It is held as in a court; counsel represent the pilots and the government, evidence is taken under oath and the proceedings are just the same as in any court of the land. It is so serious that the law has allowed an appeal to the Superior Court on any decision rendered by the pilotage authority. The offences which a pilot may be guilty of range all the way from being intoxicated while on duty, to stranding a ship, and the penalty is a minimum of $20 fine up to the taking away of the pilot's license during his lifetime.

My hon. friend should limit the Bill to the interpretation which he put upon it when he gave the explanations to the committee. We on this side of the House, I particularly, have no intention of doing anything which would be contrary to the wishes of the business men of Montreal or Quebec ; but it cannot be their wish to vest in my hon. friend, the political head of a department, the powers which the Revised Statutes of Canada give to the pilotage authorities, that is, the trial of offences of which the pilots may be charged. I would, therefore, move :

That the following words be added at the end of section 1 :—

Provided that nothing in this Act shall empower or authorize the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to sit as a tribunal for the trial of offences of which pilots may be accused before the pilotage authorities.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have no objection at all to the amendment, because it has never been my intention to sit as a tribunal in these cases. The minister is incompetent to do so ; besides, in cases involving the cancellation of the certificate, there are always assessors appointed who are more competent to act.

Amendment agreed to, Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 101) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1898 (Mr. Préfontaine), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. Subsection 1 of section 6 of the Steamboat inspection Act, 1898, is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph :—

(g.) for the inspection of the machinery and equipment of steamboats propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, electricity, or any other mechanical or chemical power, and in the case of such vessels for making such changes in forms A and B of the second schedule hereto as he deems advisable.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is the only section in this Bill. Section 6 of the Act enumerates the different things for which the Governor in Council may make rules ; and after the passing of this Bill, the power to make rules for this class of vessels will be included. Heretofore vessels of this description have not been subject to inspection, and we have had numerous demands on the part of people who wanted to run these boats for passenger service to have them inspected and given the proper certificate, so that they could offer the necessary guarantee to the public.

Mr. CLARKE. The inspection will be only made of boats carrying passengers ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, and when required.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no change in the fees ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are no fees.

Mr. HAGGART. There are fees ; and that is just the difference between the American system and ours. In the United States an inspection of the most competent kind is made and a certificate is given without the payment of any fees at all ; but the general complaint here—I do not know whether it is justified or not—is that fees have to be paid. Why not place our inland marine in the same position as the American ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Under the Act the matter is left entirely to the Governor in Council.

Mr. CLANCY. A question came before the hon. gentleman's department only a few months ago with regard to the licensing and inspecting of naphtha launches. The inspectors refused to make an inspection on the ground that they had no authority and there seems to be a grave doubt in the minds of these gentlemen whether naphtha launches should be used at all or not. The attitude assumed by the inspector seems to indicate that they felt they were independent of the law and that is a question which ought to be handled with a firm hand. As it is now, naphtha launches may carry thousands and thousands of passengers without any license from the inspector, but if they do not make any charge they may be death traps without interference simply because there is no charge. The department must be prepared to deal with this firmly, and either absolutely forbid boats of the kind to carry passengers for hire or without hire. I do not pretend to say whether these boats should be permitted to carry passengers or not, but if they are not fit to carry passengers they are not fit to be used for carrying private parties, and to carry a greater number of persons under such conditions than they would if they were carrying them for hire. I do not see any provision made to cover the case I have stated.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If I understand the hon. gentleman he is drawing the attention of the government to the fact that they are not all inspected ?

Mr. CLANCY. None of them are.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Under the law adopted last year, chapter 65, it was provided that certain classes of these boats should be inspected when they were over three tons. Under this amendment it is provided that any class of these boats, whether over or under three tons shall be subject to inspection if they are to be used for passengers. The hon. gentleman thinks we should go further than that. I shall consult with my officials who are more familiar with this question than I am, because the law is applied by a board of examiners and inspectors, and I will see whether it is possible to frame such regulations as would subject all vessels, whether employed for passenger or freight purposes, to inspection.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not urging a general inspection. The inspectors have declared that they did not think such boats should be examined and licensed to carry passengers, because they thought them dangerous. If that be true, why should any class of boats using such power be permitted to carry passengers even without hire if they are so dangerous as to make it inadvisable to license them to carry passengers ? I do not wish to be understood that every naphtha launch should be brought under inspection whether it carries passengers or not, but I want to point out that there are many places in Canada in which a ferry is necessary where a naphtha launch is useful and where a more expensive service cannot be maintained. For instance along the river St. Claire, there are little villages and towns on both sides of the river, one upon the American and the other upon the Canadian shore. Those are international waters so that we have no power under the municipal nor has the province any power to legislate in such a matter and therefore they cannot be brought under the control of the municipalities. If, in such cases you enforce all the conditions of a steam-ferry and require a certificated engineer, &c., the result will be that such a ferry service could not be maintained on account of the expense. A cheap service is essential. There are boats running to-day without inspection. The department has often given permission to these boats to run contrary to the law. I am persuaded myself that the department has a right to inspect and give certificates. These boats are running now without any certificates and I think it is about time that we should put an end to this.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Bill will deal with it.

Mr. CLANCY. No.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It provides that regulations can be made for the inspection of these boats. It has the effect of adding a new clause 'G' to section 6, of the Steamship Inspection Act, 1898. In section 6 the following enumeration is made :

6. The Governor in Council may make rules and regulations for the following purposes, viz.:

(a.) for the testing of boilers and all matters connected with the construction and working thereof ;

(b.) for the inspection of safety valves and boiler cocks and all matters connected with the construction and working thereof ;

(c.) for the inspection of hulls and equipment of steamboats ;

(d.) respecting boats and life-preservers, fire buckets, axes and lanterns and other life-saving appliances to be carried by steamboats or by other vessels mentioned in this Act ;

(e.) respecting the qualifications necessary to entitle a person to an engineer's certificate;

(f.) requiring steamboats to carry chemical or other fire extinguishers, and prescribing the number of such fire extinguishers to be carried by steamboats of different sizes and classes respectively.

Now, we add :

(g.) for the inspection of the machinery and equipment of steamboats propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, electricity, or any other mechanical or chemical power, and in the case of such vessels for making such changes in forms A and B of the second schedule hereto as he deems advisable.

Under this amendment, special regulations will have to be prepared for the inspection of the class of boats which are enumerated here, but are not enumerated in the statute of 1898, or in the amendments which have since been made.

Mr. CLANCY. It is evident I have been unable to make the point clear to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Préfontaine). I am not dealing with the point that a smaller class of boats may come under this new section. The point I am making is that, the authority given last session to inspect a larger class of boats is not acted upon by his inspectors. And, as inspectors will not give these boats the inspection and certificate necessary for the carrying of passengers, they are prevented from engaging in this trade. The hon. gentleman has to deal with the wisdom or the prejudice of his inspectors—I do not attempt to characterize it myself.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will undertake to look into it.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman tell us why his inspectors have refused ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not aware that they have done so.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman might have been aware of it months ago. His deputy certainly was. This is not a new case, but has been standing for many months. I know personally of the cases of naphtha launches which, under the law of last session are entitled to inspection and, if they are found to be safe boats, to certificate. Yet, they are rejected upon the mere ground that they are propelled by naphtha or gasoline. That has gone on for so long that I think we ought to have some explanation why the hon. gentleman has allowed it to stand still in the department.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will make the necessary inquiries.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman make them so that we can have the explanation before this Bill passes ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will make the inquiries. But that need not prevent the Bill from passing, because this does not affect the Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not allow the Bill to stand until the inquiries have been made ?

Mr. CLANCY. I would like the Bill to be allowed to stand until we can get the information.

Mr. TAYLOR. May I ask the hon. minister if he is going to compel the owners of gasolene launches who keep them in boat liveries for hire by the hour or day to have them inspected, why he does not include automobiles also ? Automobiles are propelled by the very same machinery and the very same fluid as these launches are. You can go to a livery stable here and hire an automobile at any time. I do not see why he makes the Bill apply to one and not to the other. If he is going to touch it at all, he should grapple with the whole question. He already has a provision enabling him to deal with three-ton boats. Yet he proposes to deal in this Bill with gasolene launches of smaller size that gentlemen have for their own use or that are kept for hire by those who carry on boat liveries.

Mr. OSLER. The point raised by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) I think, is one quite worthy of consideration —the inspection fees charged Canadian boats. The Americans inspect free as I understand it. They even inspect Canadian boats free. I understand that an American boat inspected in Canada is inspected free. So, the only boats on the lakes on which an inspection fee is charged are Canadian boats inspected by Canadian inspectors. That is a discrimination against Canadian boats, not very serious, it is true, but one that Canadian shipowners have objected to and that they look upon as one of the small handicaps to their business which should not be permitted when their rivals, the American boats, are inspected free.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We will look into the matter and see what can be done.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. CLANCY. No, no. I understand the minister will allow this Bill to remain in committee, because to pass this clause may make a necessary reconstruction impossible. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press the Bill through committee until he has been able to look into the matter to which I have referred because it is a matter of great concern.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not think it will involve anything of the sort, because, the powers sought will cover what the hon. gentleman mentions. The Bill is as general as it is possible to make it. Regulations under it will be prepared. What the hon. gentleman is complaining of is some departmental matter concerning which I will make inquiries, and if there is a remedy to be applied I will satisfy him that it will be applied.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman's own inspectors seem to entertain doubt whether they have authority. If there is any lack of authority he has not supplied it by this Bill.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am perfectly satisfied that there is the necessary authority. If it is necessary to give special and rigid instructions to the inspectors to act according to law, I will do so. If it is necessary to issue an Order in Council, I will do so. But it would not affect this Bill in any way.

Mr. CLANCY. I cannot help thinking the hon. gentleman is showing an undue desire to press the Bill in the face of what seems to be a grave difficulty which is in contrast with the rather tardy manner in which this matter has been dealt with in his own office. The hon. gentleman seems to show more zeal in this than in the administration of the affairs of his department. The hon. gentleman is aware of the difficulty I have stated, or, if not he ought to be.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not aware of anything of the kind. I have never heard of such complaints until now.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, in view of the fact that this is the first time the hon. gentleman has heard the complaints, does it not suggest itself to him that it would be a good thing to delay for a day or two? It is important that we should start right. The law may be defective all the way through. I see no reason we should not allow the Bill to remain in committee. There is a general desire not to annoy the hon. gentleman, but we wish to use this opportunity to make the Bill as perfect as possible.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman insists I will consent, I have no special object to serve by pressing this Bill to-day. We can pass it some other day. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, and in the meantime, I will procure the information.

Progress reported.

NAVIGATION OF CANADIAN WATERS.

Bill (No. 112) to amend the Act respecting the navigation of Canadian waters.—(Mr. Prefontaine) was read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This Bill is a very short one, and its object is to remedy an unsatisfactory state of affairs which exists on the lakes. Some years ago, I think it was in 1890, some international rules were adopted at a meeting that took place in Belgium, at which marine interests all over the world were represented, and by which certain rules were drawn up and adopted as the rules of navigation. However, the Americans navigating on the lakes did not conform to these rules, they have maintained their own rules since then, and in consequence a good deal of misunderstanding has been created amongst navigators on the lakes. The Marine Association has come to the conclusion that it would be better to agree with the Americans and adopt the same rules they have as regards that portion of our inland waters. This Bill is a result of the representations made by the Canadian Marine Association.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think the object of the Bill is very good. But I would ask my hon. friend to point out by whom the regulations mentioned in this subsection which he desires to add to the Act, were passed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. By the Governor in Council under chap. 79 of 49 Vic.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the regulations were passed by the Governor General in Council, why is it necessary to amend the law so as to give power to the Governor General in Council to repeal those regulations? Surely the authority which made the regulations has a right to repeal them. I do not see any use for the Bill.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Well, we consulted the Department of Justice on the question, and the opinion of the department was to the effect that it would be better to have a special law, to get special authorization by statute to amend these regulations. Because by section 14 of chap. 79, 49 Vic., it is provided:

> If Her Majesty, acting on the joint recommendation of the admiralty and the Board of Trade, by Order in Council annuls or modifies any of the regulations for preventing collisions on navigable waters, which, by order of Her Majesty in Council of the fourteenth day of August, 1879, were substituted for those heretofore in force for like purposes in the United Kingdom, or makes new regulations in addition thereto or in substitution therefor, the Governor in Council may, from time to time, make corresponding changes as respects Canadian waters, in the regulations contained in the second section of this Act or any that may be substituted for them,—or may suspend them or any of them, and make others in their stead,—or may revise all or any of the regulations in the Act of the parliament of Canada passed in the thirty-first year of Her Majesty's reign, and intituled 'An Act respecting the Navigation of Canadian Waters,' as he deems best for ensuring the correspondence of the regulations of Her Majesty in Council with those of the Governor in Council.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I may be mistaken, but from hearing what the hon. gentleman has just read, I should think that this Bill was not necessary. I do not know whether we should spend any time here passing useless legislation. But really it seems to me, from the language of this section 14 that the Governor in Council have a right to change any regulations which have been heretofore in existence, to alter, amend or supersede them by other regulations. I may be mistaken, but that seems to me to be the meaning of section 14.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There seems to be a doubt whether we can amend these regulations, unless they are made to correspond with the rules and regulations adopted by the Admiralty and the Imperial Board of Trade. So in order to make the law perfectly clear, we thought it would be better to insert a special clause providing that, even if they do not agree with the regulations made by the admiralty, these rules may be passed. Besides, they are perfectly independent of the others.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

SUPPLY—MR. D. J. O'DONOGHUE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I want to refer to a matter that I referred to on the 25th of May, when we were discussing the Alien Labour law. I made a statement in reference to the Labour Department and I connected with it the name of the fair-wage officer of that department, Mr. D. J. O'Donoghue. I referred to him as having received an amount of money at the expense of the country, stating that he had got $1,500 in salary and $1,200 in travelling expenses. I made this statement in regard to him :

> This gentleman who draws a salary of some $1,500 is employed in making these special trips. He is a special organizer for the grit party; and that is all he is and every man who is named in this Auditor General's Report as participating in this expenditure of $44,000 is simply an organizer for the grit party and not working in the interests of labour at all.

A few days after making that statement the Liberal organ of the city of Kingston, the Kingston 'Whig,' made this statement :

> Mr. Taylor, M.P., sneers at D. J. O'Donoghue and calls him a grit organizer in place of a labour bureau official. Mr. Taylor cannot name a single act which Mr. O'Donoghue has committed and which stamps him as the politician rather than the labour leader ?

The Ottawa 'Citizen' copied this article in its issue of yesterday and made the following remark :

> Well, if Mr. Taylor can't, the Citizen can : Last winter when he was supposed to be out on the Pacific coast on labour business he was making political speeches at meetings in Nanaimo—speeches of the red hot political booster stamp,—and some specimens of his oratory can be had by referring to the Citizen files of that period.

I did not turn up the 'Citizen' files, but I turned up the Nanaimo papers and I find by the Nanaimo 'Daily Herald' of December 27th, that a meeting was held at Nanaimo for the purpose of bringing out a candidate in the person of Mr. Ralph Smith, now a member of this House. It was thought then that we were going to have the elections and the Liberal candidates were being placed in the field. Mr. O'Donoghue was requested to go to the coast and assist at these meetings. The article which I propose to read from now is contained in the government organ of that place—the 'Daily Herald' of December 27th, 1903. It is headed :

> UNANIMOUS IS THE ENDORSATION OF RALPH SMITH BY THE LABOUR-LIBERAL PARTY.
> The Labour-Liberal party.
> D. J. O'DONOGHUE GIVES A MOST ENTERTAINING AND TIMELY ADDRESS.
> It was
> Moved by Mr. F. McB. Young, seconded by Roderick McRae, 'That this meeting of the Liberal-Labour party heartily endorse Mr. Ralph Smith, M.P., as a candidate for the Dominion House in the forthcoming elections.'

Mr. Smith then took the floor and laid down his platform. Mr. Smith said that :

> At that time he was elected as a labour man with strong liberal leanings and to-day he accepted the same position, and if elected would go to the house to give especial attention to labour matters and a general support to the liberal party as long as it continued in the path it was following at present. He had only been in the house a short time but was sure the results had been fully equal to anything accomplished in any equal amount of time before. He asked them to judge him on his record and if they were satisfied with it to vote for him, and if not vote against him, but he was confident a fair representation of the case to the electors would result in again successfully returning him to the House. Mr. Smith's remarks were greeted with loud applause and at their close a committee composed of Messrs. F. McB. Young, Harry Shepherd and Richard Both was appointed to act in conjunction with the officer to call the party together whenever the date of election was announced.
> A motion to forward the preceding resolution to Senator Templeman and Sir Wilfrid Laurier was passed.

Then Mr. O'Donoghue was called upon.

Mr. CLANCY. Who is Mr. O'Donoghue ?

Mr. TAYLOR. He is the fair-wage officer of the Labour Department.

Mr. CLANCY. Drawing a salary ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Drawing a salary of $1,500 a year and $1,200 for travelling expenses.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the end of him.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. O'Donoghue said :

He was not present as a party politician. Of course, he had strong views on politics that he would never swallow for any position any government could ever give him, but at the same time he knew what was due to his position and would refrain from talking as he otherwise might.

'Of course,' went on Mr. O'Donoghue, 'there are some people who are only sorry that they are not in my office who say I am a political heeler. Well now, I want to tell you about those people. What they say I am they would be if they were in my place.' This remark was made very quietly but in a rich brogue that made it very effective and the crowd greeted it with great laughter and applause.

Mr. O'Donoghue said he was glad to be present to-night no matter what the consequences might be to pay a tribute of respect and praise to his friend, Mr. Smith. He had many opportunities to watch his movements in Ottawa and if he had not deserved the compliment he was about to pay, they nor any other men nor the government nor all the money in Canada could prevail on him to open his mouth.

There couldn't be a better gauge of a man's influence in the House than the manner in which he is treated while making a speech. Sometimes a member will be speaking whose speech will occupy column after column in the newspaper, but in the House, out of 200 members, only about six would be listening to him. Of this six three would be asleep and the other three would be talking earnestly to each other. (Great laughter).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, hon. gentlemen can laugh but there is a civil servant drawing $1,500 of the people's money who goes out to British Columbia and tells the people there that when some members are speaking in this House there are only six members present, whereas, the fact is that you, Mr. Speaker, could not occupy the chair if there were only six members present. That man goes out and tells lies about the House of Commons. He says that there are members who make long speeches that fill columns and columns of 'Hansard' when there are only six members present and three of them asleep. He continues :

Such a member, said Mr. O'Donoghue, had no more effect than a dog has when he sits on his hind legs and barks at the moon. But when a member is regarded with respect by his fellow members rises the scene was different. The side door is opened and the members flow in from all quarters of the House to listen to that man. I was in the House of Commons one day and Smith rose to speak. The House was almost empty at the time, but in a few moments every member within the precincts of the House was in his place. The premier and cabinet ministers who were sitting partly with their backs to Mr. Smith turned half around and with all the others were all attention to the words that fell from the lips of your representative and ours. (Applause). He was speaking on the Chinese question. (Applause). And I was in the gallery. Well now, if you want to kick up any racket there you'll get thrown out, but I never had such a time in my life to keep quiet. I grabbed the desk in front of me and held on with both hands to keep them from clapping together. I was so proud and pleased to see the House of Commons and premier and cabinet listening so attentively to the representative of labour. Well, I needn't tell you what the result was. That speech was so effective that a $500 tax was imposed against the Chinese instead of $100. (Applause). Had it not been for Mr. Smith you would have been put off with more promises and nothing else but that speech settled it and the increased tax went on.

He made the people believe that there was a special desk put in the gallery for this official of the Labour Department, and that he had to hold on to both sides of it to prevent him from clapping the member from Nanaimo, who was speaking on the Chinese question.

Here is Mr. O'Donoghue who is paid by the people of Canada $1,500 a year besides travelling expenses : here he is making a special trip to be present at the nomination of this labour Liberal candidate, and having no other business out there only expecting that there would be an election. Here was Mr. O'Donoghue a public official, supporting the member for Nanaimo who had declared his platform to be that if he were returned to parliament he would support the present government. Here was Mr. O'Donoghue, an official of the government who was supposed to take no part in politics, speaking on the hustings in favour of a government supporter. It is on a par with the patron business. We had a specimen here to-day appointed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce at $1,200 a year and $1,200 travelling expenses in the person of Mr. Haycock a leader of the patron movement which was organized by the Postmaster General and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to try to injure the Conservative party: Where are these patron leaders to-day ? Mr. Currie and Mr. Haycock, and two or three others of them are employed at large salaries and large travelling expenses. It is the same way with Mr. O'Donoghue and several other officials of the Labour Department. The Kingston 'Whig' said that no person could prove that Mr. O'Donoghue had ever interfered in politics, and it charged me with unfairly attacking Mr. O'Donoghue when I brought his name before the House. I bring this matter to the attention of the House to-day, so that the people of the country may know how the officials of this government are acting. I bring the matter before the House to prove to the editor of the Kingston 'Whig', who is a member of the local legislature and supporter of Mr. Ross that Mr. O'Donoghue is a political partisan, and that like Mr. Jos. Haycock and others he is drawing money from the public treasury to go around the country taking part in politics just as Mr. Haycock gets his salary, and expenses to go around the country trying to make the farmers believe that he is inspecting binder twine.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver). Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CASGRAIN. I hope O'Donoghue is not in the gallery.

Mr. BENNETT. Send out and tell him Mr. Smith is talking.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The hon. member (Mr. Taylor) has complained that the Kingston 'Whig' said that he could not prove any accusation against Mr. O'Donoghue. I think the House and the country will now be able to endorse just what the Kingston 'Whig' said. If the hon. gentleman had intended to verify the statement of the Kingston 'Whig,' his effort could not have been more successful. I think I can show the House that the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) is absolutely ignorant of the facts of the case. The hon. member says that Mr. O'Donoghue was sent to British Columbia to assist in a political campaign. What authority has he for that statement?

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. O'Donoghue was out in that country.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Was he sent out for that purpose?

Mr. TAYLOR. Every one expected then that the elections were coming on, and Mr. O'Donoghue was there for the express purpose of asking the Liberal labour party to send men here to support the present government. There was no strike on in British Columbia at the time, and he had no other earthly business out there.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The hon. gentleman is very reckless in his statements.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can back them up all the same.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. That is more than you have done up to the present time. I want to state that I had nothing to do with Mr. O'Donoghue being in British Columbia. Mr. O'Donoghue was sent to British Columbia as a fair-wage officer to prepare schedule of fair wages for public works in British Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR. On the 27th of December.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. That is the business of the department; it is not my business; I know nothing about it. I tell the hon. gentleman that so far as I am concerned I knew nothing about Mr. O'Donoghue going there; I did not know that he intended coming there; he had nothing to do in connection with that meeting except that he accidently happened to be there when it was held, and the organization of the meeting for my nomination—I fancy that is what troubles the hon. gentleman—was provided for before any one in British Columbia knew that Mr. O'Donoghue was going to be in that country. I make this statement as a member of this House. The statements in Mr. O'Donoghue's speech prove conclusively that all the connection he had with that meeting was his desire for the personal interests of his friend, myself. He was in town, not as a consequence of the meeting but he was at the meeting as a consequence of being in the town.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Mr. O'Donoghue had prepared his schedule for the public works in the province of British Columbia, before that meeting was held, and he had forwarded the schedule to Ottawa and was taking his holidays which he was entitled to as he had not had any holidays for two years previously.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why didn't he come home then?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. He was taking his holidays in British Columbia. The records of the department will show that the schedules were filled up and forwarded, and that he was an absolutely free man so far as being an officer of this government was concerned. Do hon. gentlemen object to a position of that kind? Why, you might as well say that the officials of the Agriculture Department who are sent to British Columbia to lecture to the farmers, are political agents.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman say that Mr. O'Donoghue was in British Columbia at that time because he was taking his holidays?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. He had done the work of his department and had made arrangements to take three weeks holidays in British Columbia. I do not know that the matter needs any further explanation, because I think that the article which the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) read, perfectly justifies Mr. O'Donoghue and explains the thing as well as it is possible for me to do. I defy the hon. gentleman to show that Mr. O'Donoghue ever made a single reference to either of the two political parties in this parliament. He spoke only because of his personal connection with myself, and he never made a single reference to any politician in this House, nor to the political parties. Mr. O'Donoghue was taking his holidays; his work was completed; he was stopping with me; and he went with me to that meeting, which was organized before he came to that province at all; and as a consequence of being present, a labour man amongst labour men, he was asked to address the meeting. He did address the meeting, and I defy the hon. gentleman to prove that he made a single political reference in the whole of that address.

Mr. CLANCY. We can scarcely let a statement like that pass unchallenged. The hon. gentleman is very innocent of the whole affair. Although Mr. O'Donoghue slept under his roof and accompanied him to the meeting, he is not able to say that Mr. O'Donoghue was at that moment on leave of absence granted by the department. If he was, it made no difference. Mr. O'Donoghue took that occasion to slander every member of this House, because he did not refer to any one in particular. Was his statement false or true ? Does the hon. gentleman know whether Mr. O'Donoghue told the truth or not when in his presence he described the House of Commons as having only six members in it, and three of those asleep ? The hon. gentleman cannot escape the consequences of the statement made here this afternoon. Mr. O'Donoghue said : 'I am not a politician, but I have my politics ;' and what were they ? He described the virtues of the Liberal party—there was no party like that party.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I would ask the hon. gentleman to give us an instance of what he said.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not here to amuse the hon. gentleman. He heard the statement that was read from a paper, I believe entirely friendly to the hon. gentleman himself, reporting Mr. O'Donoghue as having described the House of Commons in terms that no man should be permitted to use, because they are as false as false can be. The hon. gentleman knows that the statement made by Mr. O'Donoghue was false. I challenge him to rise in his place now and say that his description of the House of Commons was borne out.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I ask the hon. gentleman to prove his statement that Mr. O'Donoghue spoke in favour of the Liberal party. Mr. O'Donoghue never said a word in favour of any party. I am entitled to know where the hon. gentleman gets his information for making the statement that he did.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman heard what was read.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I did not hear that read.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. O'Donoghue prefaced his remarks by saying in so many words : 'It will not do for me to talk politics here. I am a politician, but I will be careful and not talk much politics.' But he praised the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs. Is that not talking politics ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. A purely personal reference.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to look wise enough to stand a eulogy of that kind, and at the expense of the whole House of Commons, including the right hon. the First Minister ? He is a pretty constant attendant here. Was he one of those who were asleep, or was he awake ?

Mr. CLANCY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I was asleep, sure.

Mr. CLANCY. No, the right hon. gentleman was not asleep. I ask the right hon. First Minister, if the statement in that paper is true, does he think it a becoming or proper thing that an official, no matter what his position may be, who is paid to discharge the duties of his office free from any colour of serving one party more than the other, should be permitted to go about the country and appear at meetings on one side or the other—at a labour Liberal convention—and make statements of that kind ? This is not a matter which can be laughed out of court. I think the officials of this country should be protected so long as they do not violate the trust placed in their hands. But the hon. gentleman's own friends have on more than one occasion, metaphorically speaking, taken off the heads of officials who had nothing proven against them. I know an instance of a man having been dismissed because he was found driving in a buggy with a man who was putting up some bills. He had never spoken at a political meeting and was not accustomed to discuss political questions. He held a little office worth $400 a year at a customs outport. A conspiracy was hatched against him, and he was dismissed without being told why he was dismissed, without ever being given a hearing or being allowed to say a word in his own defence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who was he ?

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Henry Roebuck, than whom there is not a more respectable man in Canada—a man who was never known to have said an offensive word privately or publicly of any political party. True, he was a Conservative, and is to-day. That man was dismissed ; and yet here is an official, occupying a very important position, allowed to go about the country making statements of the kind quoted here to-day. This kind of thing undermines the very underpinning that can uphold a healthy public service. If public officials are to be permitted to go about the country doing that sort of thing, then we may just as well turn the officials loose. I ask the right hon. the First Minister if he does not think this is a matter which should be investigated—because I am prepared to do any person the justice of saying that a mere newspaper report should not be a sufficient ground for the dismissal of an official ? I ask him if the statements and the action and the appearance of Mr. O'Donoghue at that meeting, even as a friend of the hon. gentleman who sits for the riding, are found to be as represented, whether Mr. O'Donoghue should not be dealt with accordingly ?

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of taking part in this discussion, but for the purpose of straightening out a matter that came up in this House yesterday and the day before yesterday, involving the veracity of three hon. members of this House. Although the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) is not in his place, I may say that I extended to that hon. gentleman to-day a courtesy which he forgot to extend to me yesterday. I wrote to the hon. the junior member for Halifax this morning, this letter :

Ottawa, June 2nd, 1904.

William Roche, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons.

Dear Mr. Roche,—Referring to the incident which occurred yesterday and the day before in the House concerning certain statements which you claim that the member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) had made controverting some remarks of yours, I dsire to say that I am going to bring the matter up in the House this afternoon, and as a matter of courtesy I give you reasonable notice thereof.

Yours very truly,
A. B. INGRAM.

I may say that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) had given me any notice yesterday of his intention to bring before the House certain statements that I had made the day before in connection with remarks that he had made about the hon. member for Lennox, I would not have considered the matter of sufficient importance to bring it before the House to-day. The question of the veracity of the statements made by hon. gentlemen on either side of this House is a very important and serious matter, and I take it that hon. gentlemen on the government side of the House will be as eager as hon. gentlemen on this side to uphold any hon. gentleman in this House who rises in his place and makes a statement of fact or a statement that he believes to be a statement of fact. I am sure that if any hon. gentleman so far forgets himself as to rise in his place simply for the purpose of interrupting an hon. gentleman and thereby gaining some party advantage for the moment by reason of an untruthful statement, such conduct on either side of the House should be condemned. That I take it is the disposition of hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House. The hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) in his effort the day before yesterday to make a point against the leader of the opposition who was then discussing the question of immigration alluded to the fact that the leader of the opposition was using exactly the same language that he himself had used in a debate that occurred one year previous to that. He said that he used the same observations somewhat on the same line as the hon. leader of the opposition and that they were condemned by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson). My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) rose in his place and contradicted that statement, and I desire to give the contradiction, as I shall give the statement made by the junior member for Halifax, because I think this matter is of sufficient importance to be placed on record. The hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) made this statement :

Mr. Speaker, you will remember that about this time last year there was a debate in this House on this very subject. On that occasion I made some observations somewhat in the line of the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition this afternoon. I was taken to task on that occasion by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) who denied to a considerable extent the statements I made.

Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) rose in his place and replied as follows :

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. member allow me to correct him. Instead of my making a speech after him, he spoke after I did and criticised me.

Now I take it that the object of my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) in correcting the hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) was to show that he had not made statements making any allusion to the hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) by which he had controverted statements that that hon. gentleman had made. Now any hon. gentleman in this House after an interruption of that kind would have accepted the statement made by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) as he is bound to do as a member of this House. But what did he do instead. He replied by saying :

I am quite aware that my hon. friend, like a great many others in the House, after he has made the principal speech generally makes a few little speechlets.

What was the object in saying that ? It was that if the leading speech of my hon. friend did not contain these remarks that controverted the statement of the hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) the contradictions could be found in the speechlets. I had the record in my hands then as I have it now. I rose in my place and I did not speak offensively. I used perfect parliamentary language in so far as I am able to express it and I said this :

I would remind the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) that he is mistaken when he thinks that the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) followed him last year with a speech or even with a speechlet.

Meaning by that that neither the speech nor the speechlets contained any remark that in any way controverted anything that had been said by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche), and I continued :

There is no record of either such speech or speechlet, but I can tell him that the hon. gentleman who did follow him and who criticised his language very severely was the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver.)

Then the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) made this statement :

Speaking from memory I think my hon. friend did make the few observations I referred to or else it was the gentleman next him. I am not speaking by the book of course but from memory. The statement I made certainly was attacked afterwards by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

Now Sir, I am in duty bound, Mr. Speaker, having corrected the hon. gentleman to prove by the record that the statement I make in connection with the language used by my hon. friend is correct. We were discussing on July 14, 1903, a motion moved by the Hon. Mr. Sifton, Minister of the Interior :

That the House again go into Committee of Supply.

That is reported on page 6546 of the 'Hansard' of 1903. Mr. Wilson, if I may use his name, occupied the pages of 'Hansard' from 6546 down to 6557 when Mr. Roche, the junior member for Halifax followed him. I see that this speech of Mr. Roche continues to page 6562. Twelve hon. gentlemen in this House spoke on that occasion after the junior member for Halifax and before we find a page with Mr. Wilson's name and previous to his remarks the Hon. Mr. Sifton makes this statement at page 6609 :

The only persons we hear that suggestion from is the hon. member for Lennox and his friend the United States inspector, Mr. Watchorn. If my understanding of the hon. gentleman's argument is correct, it is in effect that we should make such an arrangement as would allow the officers of the United States to decide who should come into Canada.

Mr. WILSON. I made no such statement. What I said was that we ought to enter into an arrangement with them, that we ought to have as much to say about it as the Americans, and that there should be a good understanding between the two governments.

I wish to point out to you that there is not one statement in these words which refers in any way to the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche). Again Mr. Sifton says :

A medical inspector is stationed at each of the ports of landing, a competent medical inspector. They are all presided over by a general inspector of first-class professional attainments ; and we have no reason whatever to believe that it is necessary that their inspection should be revised by officers of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. When was the medical inspector appointed at Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the date.

Mr. WILSON. I may say that his deputy minister was before the committee as late as the 11th of June, and, according to his evidence, no one had been appointed there then.

The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) uttered nothing further up to the time the motion to go into supply was carried. Then the item of immigration, $110,000 was taken up for discussion. The hon. member for Lennox was discussing the item with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). He spoke several times, making what the hon. junior member for Halifax call 'speechlets.' But in none of them is there a reference to the junior member for Halifax or to the arguments which he says the hon. gentleman controverted. The debate on the main motion and on the item of $110,000 was closed at page 6616 :

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. Wednesday.

Now, I wish to say and say it most positively that in the record I have quoted there is no contradiction of the statement made by the junior member for Halifax. I have here the volume of 'Hansard' containing 2429 pages between June 22nd and July 29th, 1903 ; and, Mr. Speaker, I will apologize to this House if the junior member for Halifax can put his finger on a single word or syllable in the debate on this question in which the hon. member for Lennox controverted the statements he made as coming from the junior member for Halifax. What I wish to point out is this—that the junior member for Halifax, after having twenty-four hours to consider what he wished to say, came to this House yesterday and, without extending to me the courtesy that I have extended to him, brought up without a moment's notice, and without even having before him the record to prove his statement, this matter to which he had previously referred. I read from the report :

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. WILLIAM ROCHE.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I rise for the purpose of making a personal explanation. Yesterday, in the course of the debate, I stated that the hon. member for Lennox had controverted some remarks which I had made. He said that he could'nt have done so, because he had spoken before me. I then said that that gentleman like some others in the House, after he had made his main speech, added a number of little speeches or speechlets.

Though the member for Lennox made certain speechlets, three before the motion carried, yet they had no bearing on the statements made by the hon. junior member for Halifax. No hon. gentleman on either side of the House would say that the junior member for Halifax strengthened his case by proving that the member for Lennox spoke when what he said had nothing to do with the matter under discussion. He says, later on :

Now, my reputation being assailed and I have been directly contradicted without warrant, an explanation is due from the hon.

member (Mr. Ingram), and if that is the method in which he pursues investigation, then if he contradicts me on some future occasion, he had better have his facts more under control of his volition.

Mr. INGRAM. I still adhere to the statement I made yesterday, and the record will prove my statement to be correct. The hon. gentleman from Lennox was afterwards speaking on an item in the estimates, which affected the question of immigration.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. It was the same debate on his motion, and he afterwards reaffirmed his previous statement.

Mr. INGRAM. The record will prove that the statement I made yesterday was correct, and if the record does not prove that, I am willing to apologize. I defy the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Roche) to read from the record exactly the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Lennox.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. My hon. friend said that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) made neither speech or speechlet, but the record shows that he made eight speeches.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. I have not the book here ; the gentlemen on the other side of the House have it.

Now, I do not wish to detain the House longer on this question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. Do hon. gentlemen opposite dispute my statements in connection with this matter ? They cheered the junior member for Halifax when he made his statement. And I challenge any member on the other side of the House, the junior member for Halifax included, to say that the record I have quoted is not correct. I have been a member of this House for a number of years, and I challenge any member on either side to put his finger on a single line of the record showing that I have ever interrupted any hon. gentleman for the purpose of making light of him and knowing that what I said was not in accordance with the facts. So, I am only giving to this matter the importance it deserves. I have not been guilty of the conduct in debate that has been suggested, and God forbid that I should ever be guilty of it. But it appears that the hon. junior member for Halifax, unable to gain importance in this House in any other way, resorts to tactics of this kind in order to have a fling at his colleague (Mr. R. L. Borden) who is the honoured leader of the opposition. He must devise some other means, and be better acquainted with his facts when he rises to speak in this House. For my part, I condemn conduct of this kind. Had it not been for the request of my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) who had already spoken and so could not speak again, I do not think I would have paid any attention to the statement of the junior member for Halifax. But, having made my statement I stand by it and I appeal to the records to support me.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). When the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) was speaking on the occasion to which he referred, I interrupted him because I thought he was mistaken, that he had forgotten that I had spoken before him. He wished for some member from the west to corroborate his statement. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) followed him and I do not think he enjoyed very much the support he got from that hon. gentleman. Now I have taken the pains since this came up—though I may say, that had it ended with the first day I would have thought nothing more about it—to look over what the hon. gentleman said, to see if I had interrupted him during the debate. I substantiate everything that the hon. member from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has said. The hon. member (Mr. Roche) will fail to find that I interrupted his speech or made any reference to what he said. I have no fault to find with the hon. gentleman as a good citizen or as a pleasant member of this House ; but he is noted more for being a little windy than for familiarity with subjects that he undertakes to deal with in debate. Now, I have never said so much about any man in this House. I desire to discuss matters on their merits and not to deal in personalities, because I think that is unwise and entirely uncalled for. As to the opinion the hon. gentleman expresses on the question of immigration, one has only to read the papers of to-day to see that we are getting a most undesirable class from abroad, people who are becoming a burden on a number of our cities. I think the time has come for the government to exercise the power it possesses to keep out this class of people. We all are enthusiastic believers in the capabilities of our country, and our population, up to this time, has been equal, I believe, to that of any other country in manliness, honesty, industry and the other great virtues. I hope the government will not allow outsiders to enter and become citizens who will be an undesirable addition to our population. This is all I want, and I think I am speaking the opinion of our friends on this side of the House. We are quite satisfied to get as large a population as possible into this country if it is of a desirable kind. But what we want especially is population of a good quality, we are not so anxious about the quantity as about the quality. I have only further to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think in this matter the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) is entirely mistaken, and if he is not wilfully mistaken, he certainly should not have spoken in the way he did without information.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Adulteration of food and fertilizers, and the administration of the Act respecting fraudulent marking, $30,000.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). I suppose it is not necessary for me to give full information on an item that we discussed the other night. This is a provision for carrying out the Act concerning the Adulteration of Food, to pay food inspectors and analysts. The vote is the same as last year.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there fraudulent marking of food in Canada to any extent last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by my deputy that there has been a decrease.

Mr. BLAIN. In what classes of goods?

Mr. BRODEUR. All sorts of foods, maple syrup, jellies, pepper, distilled liquors, &c. I may say that the beverage which seemed on the whole to be the purest is the product of the distillery.

Mr. WILSON. I would ask the minister if his officers go around to different places, or if samples are sent here to be analysed ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have food inspectors who travel around the country to gather samples, and they are sent to be analysed. The inspectors are obliged to go all through the country and collect samples. They collect samples without acting upon any information given them.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that would be their general duty, but I presume if they had information from any particular locality that adulterated food was being sold he would send his officers.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, if we had information from any locality that impure food was being sold, it would be the duty of the department to send inspectors to collect samples of such food, and that would be done.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was expended last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $19,841.38 were expended last year.

Minor revenues, $1,000; ordnance lands, $1,080.

Mr. BRODEUR. The vote for minor revenues is to pay some expenses in connection with granting licenses to ferries between the provinces and between the United States and Canada on the lakes. The Department of Inland Revenue is charged with that duty, and we have to advertise for this purpose. I may say that the revenue collected from ferries is much larger than the amount we spend.

Mr. WILSON. By what principle do these come under the Inland Revenue Department ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They have always been under the control of the Inland Revenue Department. There are two departments charged with the collection of revenue, the Customs and the Inland Revenue, and as ferries yield a revenue they are given to my department.

Mr. WILSON. How much was collected last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The ferries are not totalled up, but the collections are divided into three parts—bridges, ferries and sundries, and the total sum is $1,239.50.

Mr. WILSON. How much have you to pay out of that in the way of expenses ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The expenditure for the ferries is not totalled up, but an expenditure has been made as follows : American Bank Note Company for printing Yukon stamps, $766, and for printing law stamps, $620.30, and then there were some express charges and some expense in connection with the advertising for tenders, which amount to about $50.

Mr. WILSON. When you gave us the revenue you gave us the bridges as well as the ferries. What is the expense in connection with the bridges ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not see any expense in so far as the bridges are concerned. The expense seems to be entirely in regard to the following ferries between Gower Point and Lapasse, the Quyon ferry, the ferry between Hawkesbuury and Grenville and the ferry between Cross Point and Campbellton. There are no expenses in connection with the bridges. We have simply collected money without having spent anything.

Mr. WILSON. You received some $1,200 and you expended more than you got.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. WILSON. I understand you gave an amount of $1,239 as the revenue ? You have given $766, $620 and $50 as the expenditure which would make over $1,400.

Mr. BRODEUR. This amount of $766 has not been spent on the ferries. It has been spent for Yukon law stamps. It has been charged to this vote, but it has not been spent for advertising in regard to the ferries.

Mr. WILSON. How would an ordinary man looking at the accounts be able to tell what this expenditure is for ? I think the accounts should be kept in such a way that any ordinary man going through the Blue-book would be able to tell what the revenue is taken from, and what it has been spent for.

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend will look at page K—25 of the Auditor General's Report, he will see everything explained there :

Minor revenues—expenditure, $1,507.81.

Out of that the sum $1,394.38 has been spent for law and mining court stamps in the Yukon. We spent about $200 for advertising ferry leases and we have $1,200 of revenue, so that we are on the safe side.

Arts, agriculture and statistics—exhibitions, $200,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the increase of $50,000 for ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This item covers all the work of the department for exhibition purposes. The vote of $150,000 for the current year was devoted to the closing up of some slight accounts left over and to paying up to the 1st of July next of the expenses in connection with the St. Louis exhibition. The item of $200,000 that is asked for the ensuing year, is estimated on the basis of finishing up everything connected with the St. Louis exhibition, which closes on the 1st December next, and then it is expected that there will be about $75,000 left out of this $200,000 to be devoted to future exhibition work. In explanation of that future exhibition work, I may say briefly that the government a little while ago accepted an invitation to take part in a universal exhibition at Liège in Belgium, which commences next spring, and it is also expected that we will take part in one or perhaps two small exhibitions in England for which we have been discussing the means. These exhibitions are of the nature of annual exhibitions, one in London and one in Liverpool. They are special exhibitions devoted to the provision trade. For some time back representations have been made to me that participation in these exhibitions would be of very great advantage to our trade in provisions—butter, cheese, bacon, eggs, flour, wheat and so on. There is to be an exhibition in autumn of this year in London and one in Liverpool, January next. This latter exhibition is rather a new one, but it is one of an important character and one which reaches very largely the trade in that portion of the country which is so densely populated, in South Lancashire. We have decided to take part in a small degree in these exhibitions, and for this reason, I am asking not only the necessary sum to complete the St. Louis exhibition, but also to make provison for our participation in these exhibitions. The two English exhibitions will be commenced and completed within the next fiscal year. The Liège exhibition will continue after the beginning of the following fiscal year, but I think the amount I am asking for will be sufficient to take in that exhibition up to the 1st of July next.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before we open up the question of exhibitions fully, I desire to say that I asked the hon. the Minister of Agriculture the other night a question, and he told me he would make inquires. I pointed out to him that at page D—19 of the Auditor General's Report, there was a record in connection with the Wolverhampton and Cork exhibitions of an expenditure, as follows :—

Walker, Hiram & Sons, 2 cases Canadian whisky, $20.93.

I asked the hon. gentleman whether he purchased this for his own use or for some of his friends, and he told me that he would have to make inquiries and get the information.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that I did not purchase it for my own use; the insinuation is unworthy of an honourable member. I was not in England ; I had no connection with that exhibition beyond the responsibility as head of the department for the expenditure. I have been informed that this expenditure was made by the commissioner in England on an occasion when there was a large gathering of the journalists of the country, who, before the opening visited the exhibition to inspect it. Apparently this purchase was made for the entertainment of these gentlemen.

Mr. CLARKE. Was it one of the exhibits ?

Mr. FISHER. On some occasions we have had to purchase exhibits, but so far as I understand this was not for the purpose of exhibition.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister must recognize that he is responsible for the expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. I said so.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was not aware whether the minister visited this exhibition or not——

Mr. FISHER. No, but the hon. gentleman was perfectly aware that I did not buy whisky for my own personal use.

Mr. TAYLOR. Whether the hon. gentleman bought it or allowed his officers to buy it, it is all the same. The hon. gentleman came into the government as a representative of the temperance people, and if he allows his officers to purchase a case of Walker & Sons whisky for the purpose of treating the press or any other representative men, he sinks very low or ought to, in the estimation of the temperance people of Canada. If his officers purchased it without his authority he ought to charge that whisky up to them. Now, in connection with the Osaka, Japan exhibition, I find in the Auditor General's Report, that there is charged to the Hon. Sydney Fisher : travelling expenses, $1,514.57 ; transport expenses. Canadian Pacific Railway to Japan and return, $475.92, total $1,990.49. Then on page

D—26 : Geo. May and Company were paid $40 for a solid leather trunk for the Hon. Sydney Fisher, and then there is a charge of $5.65 for sundries. I understand that the ministers, the same as the members, get solid leather trunks at the opening of each parliament, and this was in the middle of the parliament. I would like the minister to explain this, as well as the $5.65 for sundries. Was it for tips or for other sundries unmentionable or what ? We ought to have a full explanation. In my opinion the government should shut down on these foreign exhibitions. I find that a great deal of this money voted for exhibition purposes is spent in trips for friends. At page D—22 of the Auditor General's Report, we find the following entries : Wm. Hutchison, salary, travelling expenses, tips, &c., $4,647.72 ; S. Anderson, salary, travelling expenses, tips, &c., $2,057.80 ; W. A. Burns, salary, travelling expenses, tips, &c., $2,932.07 ; T. K. Doherty, $1,340.54 ; Robt. Hamilton, $2,-367.06 ; W. H. Hay, $2,126.20 ; M. Hori, $63 ; W. Jamieson, $2,097.75 ; G. Kamada, $225 ; H. C. Knowlton, $1,-768.97. It amounts to a sum of $22,-320 on that page, and it is continued on the others. This money appears to be gobbled up by a lot of officers and friends of the ministers who are sent out on trips to these exhibitions, and I do not know that the country receives any benefit from it. The same state of affairs is going on in St. Louis to-day. There is a wilful waste of money. The minister asked for $150,000 last year and he asks for $50,000 extra this year, making $200,000 in all, and any person who reads the Auditor General's Report and sees how the money is frittered away, must come to the conclusion that Canada receives no benefit from it. If the minister will explain the trunk and the $5.65, and this $2,000 expenses for himself in connection with the Japan exhibition, the country will be pleased to know how it was spent.

Mr. FISHER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am just informed that this trunk was secured by my secretary for the purpose of carrying papers, documents and literature which was carried over to Japan with me. I have to assume the full responsibility for it, although I may say that this is the first time I knew anything about it. As to the item of $5.65 for sundries, I do not know just now what they are. Apparently the amount was paid to Geo. May & Co., probably for some repairs or something of that kind, or possibly for a despatch box, but I will find out what it was exactly and let the hon. gentleman know. As to the general question of the expenditure for exhibitions, I venture to say that I am well within the judgment of the people of Canada when I state that the expenditure made in this connection has been amply repaid to us in the additional commerce and trade which these exhibitions have brought about, and the credit which has been reflected upon Canada. Many details of this expenditure were entrusted entirely to the officers in charge ; of course as minister I am responsible. I have no hesitation in taking responsibility, because I have chosen men who I believe are competent for this work, and they took charge of it as other officers in my department take charge of the other branches. I do not undertake myself to instruct these experienced officers as to the details of their work ; I choose competent men, I give the work into the hands of these competent men, and I assume the responsibility. I am satisfied that their work shall be judged by the results. As to the Osaka exhibition, I explained on my return what the results were. I have heard compliments over and over again as to the good results of that work. The increase of trade between Canada and Japan and the Orient, as the result of that exhibition, is the best testimony of its success. The total expenditure for the Osaka exhibition was $53,000. I venture to say that the prestige which Canada and her products obtained in the Orient, is ample compensation for that expenditure. In addition to that pecuniary return, we have had opened to us possibilities of future trade which were perhaps unknown before, and which to-day are assured to us if the people of Canada wish to take advantage of them. I cannot at the moment reply any further to the strictures of the hon. gentleman, but I take it for granted that in the course of the discussion other information will be required of me. But I take it for granted that there will be other items on which I will be only too glad to give all the information possible. If I have not now full information, I shall procure it and lay it before the House, because there is nothing in the whole matter which will not redound to the credit of the officers in charge of the exhibitions and of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman says that the expenses in connection with the Osaka, Japan, exhibition amount to $53,000, but according to the Auditor General's Report for 1902-3 there was an expenditure of $59,987.12. Then there is the expenditure for this year, which we have not yet got, because the exhibition is not yet closed. How does he account for the difference ?

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I would ask the hon. minister what increase there has been in the trade between Japan and Canada since his visit to that country, and on what lines ? I would also call his attention to a statement which I understood him to make with regard to these two cases of whisky. I understood him to say that they had been purchased in England for the representatives of the press, but I find that the purchase was made in Canada, and the liquor was taken with him to England.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are you certain it all reached there ?

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. It was bought from Hiram Walker & Sons and brought to England.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If it reached England, it must have paid the duty or been smuggled in. Surely the hon. minister would not have been guilty of smuggling.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. There is another item, namely, 6½ dozen photographs, $30. Are these pictures of the staff given the press ?

Mr. FISHER. This whisky was not bought in Canada but in England. I find that the Walkers have an agency in England, and the whisky was got there. My hon. friend did not quite understand what I said. I told him that we had an entertainment at Wolverhampton before the actual opening of the exhibition, to which the press of Great Britain were invited. I understand that this whisky was bought for that entertainment, and it was bought in England.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. In the Auditor General's Report it is entered as Walker & Sons, 2 cases of club whisky. I would infer that it was bought from that firm, whose distillery is in Ontario. The item for photographs is on page D—23, and it says for newspapers. I would imagine that these were the pictures of the staff.

Mr. POPE. Were they taken before they had this spree or after ?

Mr. BENNETT. What was the nature of these papers which were brought over in this $40 trunk ? Are we to understand that the minister's secretary ordered a $40 trunk in which to place some papers, and that the minister knew nothing about it ?

Mr. FISHER. What I say is that apparently this trunk was ordered by my secretary to take over a large number of papers and documents which I had to take to Japan. As these are heavy articles, he ordered a solid leather trunk at a cost of $40. This is the first time that I have seen the charge, and it seems to me high. I do not think that $40 should be paid for a trunk for any person. The papers consisted of a number of official documents on trade and also literature connected with trade and the country generally.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems to me extraordinary that the minister should have a clerk who has so little idea of business procedure that he pays $40 for a trunk and puts some advertising matter into it. What has become of this precious trunk ?

Mr. FISHER. I really cannot say. I suppose it is in the department.

Mr. BENNETT. It is amusing to look over these estimates. In one of them I find that a departmental clerk purchased for himself a fur overcoat. That, however, is not in the hon. gentleman's department. In another case a member of parliament had a fancy writing desk taken to a hotel here, and the country is paying for writing desks for members of parliament, hawked around to their hotels and no doubt taken home with them. It is high time that this thing should be stopped. It is not the amount, but the depth of meanness to which we object ; but evidently some people will descend to anything in order to make a little graft.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. There is another strange item in connection with the exhibition at Osaka. 24 pairs of rubbers for women, costing $26, were purchased. This will be seen on page D—24, and further down there are 16 pairs of rubbers for men.

Mr. FISHER. Those were all for exhibition purposes. We bought a rubber exhibit and sent it over there. Amongst other articles were men's and women's rubbers.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. What disposition was made of these rubbers ?

Mr. FISHER. They were sold in Japan, and come under the item 'Refund.'

Mr. POPE. Is it customary to buy the exhibits we take to these places ?

Mr. FISHER. We bought all the exhibits that we sent to Osaka.

Mr. WILSON. How much money has been spent on the St. Louis exhibition so far, and what will it cost ?

Mr. FISHER. The total cost up to the 1st of May, 1904, was $107,000.

Mr. WILSON. What do you expect the total cost of the exhibition to be ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that $325,000 is the total sum.

Mr. WILSON. It is not one-half paid yet ?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has not explained how the expenditure has been only $53,000 while the items in the Auditor General's Report total $59,000.

Mr. FISHER. There are items in the Auditor General's Report, which cover the period up to the first of July last year, for nearly $50,000. There is in this years' expenditure a little over $3,000 which makes a total of nearly $63,000. But there is a refund in consequence of the sale of exhibits of nearly $10,000, bringing the net cost down to $53,000 in round figures.

Mr. INGRAM. At these foreign exhibitions does the government buy all the foreign exhibits?

Mr. FISHER. I do not say that because we did that in the Osaka exhibition we shall buy them for all the exhibitions. There were a few exhibits sent as presents from the people. For instance the Christie Biscuit Company in Toronto, supplied an exhibit of their biscuits, but most of the exhibits we bought and sent over there. We found that the manufacturers and people in Canada were not prepared to send forward exhibits. They looked upon it as a risk and did not know whether they would be able to dispose of them. They did not know what the terms were, or what the trade was, but there were certain lines of goods in which from our inquiries we believed we could open a trade. We were justified in sending an exhibit of these goods by the fact that we found a sale for them and that since then there has been a demand for direct sale to Japan.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman's remarks will apply to this item which we are discussing now. There is no intention of supplying exhibits for the St. Louis exhibition is there?

Mr. FISHER. At St. Louis we are first of all making what we may call a government or national exhibit in four chief lines, agricultural products, horticultural products, mining and mineral products, forest products, and we will also have an exhibit of fish and game. These are articles of which private exhibitors could not possibly make exhibits that would be national in their character and creditable to the country. The officers of my exhibition branch have therefore prepared collected and selected articles to make up these four great exhibits. These have been purchased where they could not be obtained otherwise. Then at St. Louis, there are certain private exhibits sent by firms who are anxious to get the eclat of the exhibit for themselves.

Mr. INGRAM. That would apply only to high class exhibits. Are these manufacturing firms?

Mr. FISHER. Most of them are manufacturing firms.

Mr. INGRAM. What class of manufacture ?

Mr. FISHER. There are very few manufacturing exhibits. The Kingston Locomotive Works have sent down a locomotive, the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific have made railway exhibits there. Some agricultural implement manufacturers have sent down agricultural implements and perhaps a few others which I cannot at the moment recall. In these cases the exhibits belong to the exhibitors ; we did not purchase them, but we aided the exhibitors in making arrangements for the exhibits. My commissioner has acted as the intermediary for them in dealing with the authorities at St. Louis, but otherwise they have no responsibility and no expense.

Mr. INGRAM. There is not an exhibit of Canadian cheese sent there ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. INGRAM. For the reason that the duty is too high ?

Mr. FISHER. There are two reasons. I asked the Dairy Association if they wished to exhibit, and at first they thought they would like to but later, on consideration and after consulting with my dairy department, they considered that it was not advisable and would be of no use. An exhibit of cheese from this country to be creditable, would cost about $10,000 for refrigerating &c., and after consultation, it was decided not to undertake such an exhibit.

Mr. INGRAM. Not for the reason that the duty is too high?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. INGRAM. Excuse me. I attended a cheesemen's meeting in Western Ontario. That question was fully discussed there and it was said that the consumption of Canadian cheese in the United States was not sufficient to induce Canadians to exhibit cheese at that fair, but the chief reason was that the very high rate of duty which Americans levy on cheese sent to that country was a very great barrier to the sending of our cheese to that country.

Mr. FISHER. Possibly.

Mr. INGRAM. That is a correct statement.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. We find that they send into this country much more cheese than we send into their country and the high rate of duty they impose on our cheese keeps it out of the United States. Why then, should we not put our duty up as high as theirs and have that a barrier to their cheese coming into this country. Probably if we did that they might reduce the duty on Canadian cheese going into their country and Canadians would have a near market for cheese instead of having to send it the long distance to the British market. I am not finding fault with the government for buying these articles. Possibly that is the best thing to do, but the hon. gentleman has not told us in what way he disposed of the articles. Was it at a profit or at a loss ?

Mr. FISHER. They were disposed of as best the exhibition commissioners could dispose of them in Japan.

Mr. INGRAM. At a loss ?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say whether it was at a loss or not without consulting the books. I am sure that some were sold at a slight loss and some at their full value, plus all the expenses connected with sending them there. I have not the details under my hand showing which of the articles were sold at a loss and on which expenses were fully recovered. As a rule they were not sold at a loss.

Mr. WILSON. How much money has the hon. minister spent in buying exhibits for the St. Louis exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give the amount spent in buying exhibits. We have spent money in collecting the large exhibits to which I have referred, but I cannot tell how much was spent in purchase and how much in expenses of collection.

Mr. WILSON. What is the total amount?

Mr. FISHER. I have a memorandum showing the expenses on the different branches as follows :

Agricultural section..	$16,350
Horticultural section..	7,700
Forestry..	11,900
Mineral..	23,950

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The minister spoke of increased trade between Canada and Japan resulting from this exhibition at which he was personally present. Can he tell us what increase took place in the trade since then ? For my own part I do not believe we get any return for the expenditure incurred through these exhibitions. They appear to me to be carried on very extravagantly, and I regret that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to whom we thought we could look for economical management of his department is as extravagant as any other minister. Would the hon. gentleman tell us in what way, if any, we get a return for these exhibitions through increase of trade.

Mr. FISHER. I will take the most important item first. Until this Japanese exhibition took place Canadian flour was absolutely unknown in the Japanese and Chinese markets. Since that time a very large amount has been sent over. I cannot state the increase from memory but I have under my own observation several orders of car loads each. I know that a prominent Japanese merchant came to Canada soon after the exhibition closed and that he made arrangements with the Ogilvie Company and the Lake of the Woods Company to handle their flour, and that steady shipments have been going on. Take another item. Ever since the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) sent an agent to Japan, my own department on behalf of creameries in the Northwest Territories has been shipping a small quantity of butter to Japan. That trade had not increased during the four years we had been carrying it on. It amounted to about half a ton a month. But since the exhibition we have sent over a ton by every ship that has gone out of Vancouver. In other words, it has increased nearly four times. Again within the last week, I received a request from Shanghai from a gentleman who is the director under Sir Robert Hart, of the Customs of China, saying that he had been at the Osaka exhibition—I met him personally when there, and had a good deal to say to him—that in connection with the office he occupied he used a large amount of paper, including quantities for printing purposes, and having seen the paper and pulp exhibit at Osaka he had directed his officers to communicate with me to see if he could not secure his supply in Canada, instead of in Germany or other places in Europe, for he had seen no better paper than that in our exhibit. Various other inquiries have been received in regard to different kinds of goods especially furniture and school desks and other minor lines.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I have listened with attention to what the Minister has said, but I cannot see that he has made good his case. He tells us of our paper having attracted the attention of some business man in Shanghai. But there is no evidence that he has purchased any in Canada. Then, he told us that Canadian flour did not reach the Japanese market before his own visit to Japan.

Mr. FISHER. I said that Canadian flour was not known in the Japanese market. I believe that some had been sent by Seattle and Tacoma, but it was known as American flour and not as Canadian. A number of years ago one milling company, I think the Ogilvies' sent a small consignment which they said was a financial failure and nothing further was done.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I think it would be a good thing for the minister to have a statement prepared of the trade with Japan the year before his visit and since. Because I am satisfied, and I am sure the people are satisfied, that we get no returns from these exhibitions. If he can show a satisfactory increase of trade as a result of these exhibitions it will be most gratifying ; but, from the remarks of the hon. gentleman himself there is nothing to warrant this large expenditure of money.

Mr. WILSON. I make the total of the figures the minister gave us $55,900. Is that right ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the total of the four sections I gave. There are additional items in the statement I have before me.

Mr. WILSON. What other items are there ?

Mr. FISHER. There is an expenditure of $33,000 for the Canadian pavilion and everything connected with it, and $52,000 for sundry expenditures, management, collection, &c. The total balance is $145,000. That is the estimate of what these exhibits will cost and not merely what has been spent.

Mr. GANONG. According to the minister's statement, money has been spent for the purchase of exhibits for Osaka and other exhibitions. But I understand that the two cases of club whisky which have been referred to were not purchased as exhibits.

Mr. FISHER. I explained that a few minutes ago.

Mr. GANONG. I might justify the minister for purchasing them for exhibition purposes. If they had been furnished for exhibition purposes and not simply purchased in order that the commission might make an exhibition of themselves, that might be justifiable. But I do not believe the people of this country will justify the hon. gentleman in standing up in this House and telling them that he is actually taking their money in order to give some persons a chance to have a drunken spree over on the other side. Does the minister justify that expenditure ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. GANONG. Well, he has confessed one of his many sins to-night. All we ask of him to-day is to state to this House that so far as the future is concerned he will instruct his officers that no such expenditure shall be made. Then we will believe some of the doctrines he has preached in this country in favour of prohibition.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister made a sweeping statement as to the export of flour to Japan. According to the return ending the 30th of June, 1903, we shipped to Japan 611 barrels of flour, valued at $2,167. Does the minister give us that as a result of the exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. What I said a few minutes ago I can only repeat, that since the exhibition closed I am aware that orders have been placed here and the flour has been sent forward, quite a number of carloads. I am not sufficiently familiar with the flour business to know how many barrels are carried in a car.

Mr. POPE. But you made a statement.

Mr. FISHER. I made a statement that so many carloads were orered and went forward, and I repeat that statement.

Mr. BENNETT. The trade and navigation returns show that three or four years ago we were shipping to Japan five times as much flour as we shipped last year. Why, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1901, we shipped 3,000 barrels, as against 600 last year. The minister must think the House and the public are very credulous when he tells us that in consequence of holding this exhibition the sale of flour in Japan has been stimulated. Does not the minister know that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have had some magnificent ships trading to that country for years, and does he imagine that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were carrying these over empty from year to year, and that the enterprising men living in British Columbia were standing idly by and allowing this opportunity to slip of shipping flour to Japan ? It is tommyrot for the hon. gentleman to talk about this exhibition, and tell us that the manufacture of some cheap pies and of pastry over there has stimulated the sale of flour. Everybody remembers the pictures the hon. gentleman had distributed all over the country showing the natives of Japan crowding up to a free lunch counter that the Dominion of Canada was providing at the great Japanese exhibition. The returns show, no doubt for a number of years back, ever since the installation of the line of boats by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that there have been large shipments of flour. I do not know why our trade has lapsed from 3,000 barrels to 600 barrels, but it is plain that before this exhibition was ever heard of, or the minister either, in Japan, we were shipping large quantities of flour to Japan. The minister must give some better proof than he has done of the results of this exhibition.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot explain the statement the hon. gentleman has made. At the same time, what I have stated is absolutely accurate, that Canadian flour was not known in the Japanese market at all, and we could not find anybody there who had ever seen it or known of it ; and immediately after the exhibition a large number of orders were placed here, and the flour has been going forward.

Mr. BENNETT. Would the minister say that Canadian flour was unknown there, in face of the government returns ?

Mr. FISHER. I will inquire into that.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Could the minister tell me what became of the exhibits that were sent to Japan ? I can find the disposition of the exhibits that were taken to Wolverhampton, but I cannot find anything about the disposition of these exhibits that were taken to Japan.

Mr. FISHER. I have just had placed in my hands a list showing that there were $400 worth of goods sold at the exhibition in Japan. I have not got the details.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Where is the item in the Auditor General's Report ?

Mr. FISHER. That will appear in this year's report. The sale was not made until the end of the exhibition.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I would ask the minister if Canada has an exhibition of live stock at St. Louis, and if not, why not ?

Mr. FISHER. In the first place, the exhibition of live stock at St. Louis does not begin until next August. In that connection I may make some explanation. There has been a good deal of discussion amongst the breeders in Canada as to the advisability of exhibiting live stock at St. Louis. A deputation came to me last summer and asked that such an exhibit should be made, and asked me to set aside a very large sum, about $120,000, for the purpose of procuring such an exhibit. I felt full sympathy with the breeders of Canada in this regard, because I knew that while some impediments had lately arisen to the sale of our live stock in the United States, still there had been, and is, a large trade, and probably there will be in the future a large trade in thoroughbred live stock with the United States. I therefore discussed the question how we could best secure a creditable exhibit of live stock at St. Louis. While that question was under discussion, certain negotiations took place between my own department and the management of the live stock exhibition at St. Louis. We asked that certain arrangements be made to facilitate the entry of our live stock at that exhibition, that is to say, as to what registration and pedigree of throughbred animals should be recognized as to the various details and conditions of the exhibition. In the course of these negotiations and discussions there was a great deal of correspondence in the agricultural press on both sides of the line, and a good many of our breeders in Canada thought that they would not care to exhibit at all. Not long after the deputation came to see me in Ottawa, I received a letter from one of the leading men in the live stock business in Canada saying that he doubted very much if the very men who asked me to make that arrangement would care to exhibit at all. This came to me as a surprise, and I then took steps to communicate with a number of the live stock breeders in this country. A little while after that the various breeders' associations of Canada, held their meetings in the course of the autumn and early winter, and I think I am speaking correctly when I say that in every one of those meetings of the breeders' associations, discussions arose and resolutions were passed declaring that the associations considered it inadvisable to exhibit live stock at the St. Louis exhibition.

Mr. GILMOUR. Did they give any reasons ?

Mr. FISHER. Various reasons were given. I do not remember that they were embodied in any of the resolutions sent to me, but I think in some of them they were. The reasons were that they were not satisfied with the conditions which were published, they were not satisfied with regard to the terms upon which Canadian exhibitors could exhibit. I also understood, though I do not know that it was so stated in any of the resolutions, that they were hopeless of a continued market in the United States for their cattle, and especially did they find difficulty in regard to the sale of the animals that were sent to the St. Louis exhibition.

Mr. INGRAM. That was the chief complaint ?

Mr. FISHER. One of the chief complaints was that customs regulations of the United States were such that no Canadian animals sent to the St. Louis exhibition could be sold there and left in the country. The breeders did not want to take their animals to St. Louis and go to the expense and trouble of exhibiting them and having to bring them back. These various resolutions were passed and forwarded to me. I had a great many communications and a great deal of discussion sometimes with individuals and sometimes through my officers who attended these various meetings of breeders' associations and I found the differences of opinion in regard to the advisability of exhibiting at St. Louis were very great, but what I might call the official or formal statement of the chief breeders of this country declared against exhibiting at St. Louis. Then we came to about the middle of winter or early this spring, when I began to receive individual letters from various men saying, that, notwithstanding that the breeders as a body had decided not to show, they individually would like to show and asking what I would do to aid them. I discussed this again with various people with whom I came in contact, and in some letters and I also asked that my live stock commissioner, Mr. Hodgson, should communicate with and meet these people. I have had a very considerable amount of difficulty in determining as to what it was best to do, however, in view of the representations made to me by individuals, I have caused a letter to be prepared to be sent to the different breeders' associations, to individuals who have been communicating with me and to the press, to the effect that while there are differences of opinion and while resolutions have been formally passed by the different breeders' associations it seemed to me to be impossible to secure what I might call a really national, creditable exhibit of live stock at St. Louis ; nevertheless as there seemed to be a considerable number of individuals who wish to exhibit, I would facilitate their exhibition in every way possible, and I would grant to them this pecuniary assistance that I would give to every exhibitor who secures a prize a sum equal to the amount of the prizes that he secures at St. Louis. That is to say that I would double the prizes by granting to every individual securing prizes at St. Louis the full amount of the prize he takes. That would be a very considerable help to those who exhibit their stock because I feel confident that anybody who, on his own responsibility, takes animals to St. Louis would take such good animals and would be so successful that he would get a fair share of the prizes, a larger share of the prizes than would be expected from the number of animals. Therefore, I would supplement the prizes secured by these Canadian exhibitors with an equal amount so as to assist them in paying their expenses. I do not know if the announcement has yet been sent out, but it will be within a day or two if it has not already gone to the press and to the associations.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister has not referred to the persons with whom he corresponded on this question. May I ask if any of the American consuls had any correspondence with him and if the department entered into any discussion with the authorities at Washington in respect to this question of the exhibition of cattle?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember that we corresponded with the people at Washington. I felt that the exhibition authorities at St. Louis, who seemed to be extremely anxious that we should exhibit there would be able to exert a greater influence with the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Customs at Washington than we could. I do not remember that we communicated with Washington at all. I think we negotiated only with the authorities of the St. Louis exhibition, pointing out to them the difficulties that our exhibitors felt and asking them to try and exert their influence with the Washington authorities to remove these difficulties.

Mr. INGRAM. The American consul in my district interested himself very much in trying to remove the friction that existed between the prospective exhibitors of cattle in this country and the St. Louis authorities, and I understand from his correspondence that he had in some way satisfactorily arrange the matter. I do not know what has taken place since, but it does seem to me that the Department of Agriculture should have communicated with the government at Washington and asked them to bring whatever pressure they could to bear upon the proper authorities at Washington, pointing out that this was a very important question and that something ought to be done in regard to it in the interest of live stock exhibitors generally.

Mr. FISHER. My reason for not doing that was that I felt that the St. Louis exhibition authorities who were being endorsed and supported and backed up by the Washington authorities would be more likely to be able to exert an influence upon the Washington departments than we would be. That may have been an error of judgment on my part but that is the view I took, and that is the reason that I left it in their hands. Independently altogether of the St. Louis exhibition I have had communications with Washington as to the difficulties of the customs regulations there, and I regret to say that we have not had any very great consideration shown to our representations. On the contrary, the Washington customs authorities, I think stimulated by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, have been making their customs regulations more and more stringent all the time instead of relaxing them in any way.

Mr. INGRAM. Can the hon. minister give us any idea as to how American exhibitors are treated in Canada, at Toronto, for instance. Last year we held a Dominion exhibition at Toronto and there was a large number of Americans present. Was there any such one-sided arrangement in dealing with the American exhibitors at Toronto as that under which the Canadians are dealt with at St. Louis ?

Mr. FISHER. No, we gave the American exhibitors every facility possible in bringing their animals in here. The Toronto exhibition authorities arranged with the Customs Department to have these animals brought in and to be held in bond. If they were sold here instead of being taken back to the United States every facility was given for such sale. But, our regulations in regard to customs governing the importation of thoroughbred stock and other stock from the United States have never been characterized by the impediments that the regulations of the United States offer to the admission of Canadian stock. I may say in regard to that for the information of the committee, that at a meeting of the live stock breeders of Canada held at the opening of this session, these gentlemen urged very strongly that we should retaliate against the United States, that we should adopt the same regulations in regard to the free entry of thoroughbred animals from the United States that they have adopted towards us. At the present moment my department is busy looking into the question of registration, and the question of what registers and what pedigrees our customs authorities ought to recognize. Heretofore, our customs authorities have been very liberal indeed in recognizing almost any pedigree that was presented to them for an animal claimed to be thoroughbred so as to get free entry under our customs law. We have not put any impediments in the way. I think we have been too easy in that respect and I know as a matter of fact that certain animals have come into the country free of customs duties which were accompanied by pedigrees which were absolutely worthless for breeding purposes in this country, which would not have been recognized by any breeders' association at all and yet the purchasers thought they were getting animals that were thoroughbred and registered in such a way that the progeny would afterwards be admitted to register here when, as a matter of fact, they would not be. This is a condition of affairs that ought to be remedied, and one which to-day my live stock commissioner is engaged in studying so as to find out what pedigrees our customs authorities ought to recognize and what they ought to reject. This is a seriously complicated question, one that presents considerable difficulties, and one which must be handled with the greatest care so as not to injure the interests of those who have been breeding thoroughbred live stock in this country. It is a question which deserves great consideration, and ought to be dealt with as soon as possible.

Mr. INGRAM. Instead of communicating with the authorities of the exhibition, my opinion is that diplomatic courtesy would have required the Minister of Agriculture to communicate in the first place with the authorities in Washington. It would appear to me that in these matters, Canadians offer fair and reasonable terms to the American people ; we were willing to reciprocate and are met with retaliation. The minister would be justified in retaliating against such treatment as that. Let us stand on our own dignity. We are just as good as our friends across the border ; we expect fair treatment in return for fair treatment, but if we do not get fair treatment, let us stand on our rights and give them the same treatment as they give us.

Mr. GILMOUR. This change was made within the past few years?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. GILMOUR. As the United States law now is, an American citizen can come over here and buy thoroughbred stock and take it back free of duty, but a Canadian is not allowed to send thoroughbred stock into the United States free of duty.

Mr. FISHER. That is it.

Mr. GILMOUR. Was any remonstrance made by this government when the change was made ? What was the object of the United States government in making such a law ?

Mr. FISHER. I did not ask the reason why they made the law, I may say frankly that the communications I have had of late with the Department of Agriculture at Washington with regard to this matter, have been so unsatisfactory that I have felt it was hardly consonant with the dignity of Canada to make a protest. They told us practically that they were going to regulate their own affairs to suit themselves and they did not care what we thought about it. Some years ago, Mr. Wilson, the United States Secretary of Agriculture, told me in his own office in Washington in so many words : I believe that we in the United States have come to the point where we do not want to import any animals from anywhere, and I am not going to do anything to facilitate importations from Canada or from Europe. In view of such a statement I felt that it was not in keeping with the dignity of this country to plead for a relaxation of their arrangements. I feel very much as my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has expressed himself. It is evident that of late years animals have been imported free of duty into Canada, which were not pure bred in the proper sense of the word. Our customs authorities have been in the habit of recognizing anything in the shape of a certificate of registration and to my knowledge many of these certificates are certificates of registration in herd books which are not of any value as to the breed. Many animals have been brought in here as thoroughbred, which for all practical purposes were grade animals. Apart from any question of retaliation, it is high time that we should see to the registration which entitles an animal to come in free of duty. When first this matter was discussed with the St. Louis exhibition authorities, they expressed their desire to facilitate our exhibits in every possible way as regards customs arrangements.

Mr. GILMOUR. What was their proposition ?

Mr. FISHER. Their proposition was that the animals should be subject to the ordinary law. My hon. friend (Mr. Gilmour) is right in saying that within a year and a half, these restrictions have been greatly increased in the United States. Before that, pedigree animals were allowed in free of duty, but the customs authorities made a ruling that an animal could only be sent in free of duty when it was going to be used for breeding purposes by the person importing it. A man in British Columbia sent some horses over the frontier for sale, and he was forced to pay the duty. Shortly afterwards, an amendment was made to the United States customs law which said that only American citizens could import animals for breeding purposes or for sale free of duty, and at the present time no Canadian can take an animal into the United States free of duty and dispose of it there.

Mr. GILMOUR. There is the chief reason for the Canadian breeders not exhibiting any kind of stock at St. Louis.

Mr. FISHER. That is one of the chief reasons, but there are a number of others as well. The whole question is pretty complicated, and a great many minor difficulties accumulated to bring them to the conclusion to which they seem to have come.

Mr. GILMOUR. Then there will be no live stock there ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, there will. A good many individual breeders want to take animals there—horsemen, sheepmen, swinemen, but hardly any cattlemen.

Mr. INGRAM. I am surprised to hear the hon. minister say that the Minister of Agriculture at Washington spoke so very discouragingly and did not wish to reciprocate in any favours at all with our department. Surely the United States minister at Washington could not have looked up the trade and navigation returns of Canada. If he had, he would have found us in this unfortunate position, that while we exported to the United States 10,432 cattle valued at $292,288, we imported from the United States 37,527 cattle valued at $472,689. Or there was a balance of trade in favour of the Washington Agricultural Department of $180,401. Instead of this government keeping its duty at 20 per cent and allowing American cattle to come in to the extent of $180,401 in excess of the amount we send to the other side of the line, I would ask the hon. minister to use his influence with his colleague the Minister of Finance and try and induce him to raise our duty to 27½ per cent. We would then have Canadian and American farmers on an equal footing. Then we would be advancing a step in the way of protecting our own interests. I could go through the whole list of agricultural products and make the same kind of argument. They do not show much discretion on the other side when they talk about retaliation and as not being willing to reciprocate favours, and I would implore the hon. gentleman to use his influence with the Minister of Finance in order that the latter may give Canadians a fair chance.

Mr. FISHER. The amount of cattle brought from the United States includes settlers' cattle, of which there is a very large number.

Mr. INGRAM. That makes no difference.

Mr. FISHER. A large number also are brought from the United States by our ranchmen in western Canada for the purpose of fattening and re-exporting.

Mr. CLANCY. To the United States ?

Mr. FISHER. No, to England. Young animals, what are called store cattle, are brought in and fattened or used for breeding purposes and either they or their products are exported to England in fit condition. Some of our ranchmen have gone as far as Mexico and have brought Mexican cattle across through the United States. I have had to put some restrictions on the importation of these for sanitary and quarantine purposes, but have had an earnest protest against any such restriction, as the ranchmen inform me it is absolutely necessary for their business to import these cattle. These cattle are practically the raw material of our ranchmen.

Mr. INGRAM. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is becoming a little bit of a protectionist.

Mr. FISHER. No, I have always been in favour of free raw material.

Mr. INGRAM. The ranchman is a manufacturer of beef the same as any manufacturer is, the manufacturer of agricultural implements.

Mr. FISHER. Quite so.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that these men, who are few in number, are to be encouraged to the detriment of the great class of agriculturists throughout Canada ? Are you going to discourage our cattle raisers by allowing that kind of thing to continue much longer ? If the hon. gentleman will give us the total amount of cattle raised in Canada in 1901, then we will be in a better position to form a conclusion. If the hon. gentleman will raise the duty to 27½ per cent, then let these cattle come in, and we will be able to send cattle into the United States on the same footing.

Mr. GILMOUR. With regard to dealing with the Americans, I would not retaliate for the mere sake of retaliation, but only on business principles ; and on business principles I do not believe in the importation of young cattle from Mexico and the United States. That import is a source of danger because it may bring in disease. The hon. minister has said that these young cattle are our raw material, but we are raising the raw material in this country to a very large extent, and we ought to protect our own herds that are raising the raw material and encourage them to raise more. And the more we encourage the raising of the raw material in this country, the more rapidly will we bring about that condition of things when we will supply the country further south with the young cattle it requires. I do not at all believe in allowing these little cattle to come from away down south bringing with them Texas ticks, or these little horses bringing in what I need not mention, but what the officers of your department report as dangerous. That is my opinion about retaliation. I believe in dealing with our neighbours on business principles, and on business principles I advise you to look after that business which is going on and which has been going on for two or three years. I want the minister to remember that it is only a very few years since the Americans were up in Manitoba paying such prices for young cattle there that the ranchers in the west could not meet them. That state of things will come about again. It is not worth while for a short period to allow these young cattle to come in as they have been coming in for the past two or three years. It only sets back the period at which we would meet the demand ourselves, if you allow that raw material to come in in competition with the raw material which you may produce yourself.

Mr. INGRAM. When our American friends want to meet a case of that kind they lower the duty to suit their own purposes and then when their purposes are served they raise it again to suit themselves. If they find it to their advantage to lower the duty and then to increase it they do so. They have not a stationary tariff as we have and I would treat them exactly as they treat us. I do not consider that retaliation at all. Is it not a fair business proposition that if it is good for them after all the years of experience they have had, to adopt this course a similar course must be good for us under like conditions ? We have not yet had the same experience which they have had with the tariff and I think a leaf out of their book in that respect would be a step in the right direction. It is a business transaction not a party transaction.

Mr. FISHER. I do not want to discuss the tariff to-night. I may however, say that while in no way retaliating or considering what the Americans do, I think we ought to try to regulate our affairs entirely to suit ourselves to protect our interests and to make our people as prosperous as possible. The condition of affairs changes from time to time, as my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) said. A few years ago the Americans were buying cattle in Canada and taking them across the line because at that time we had not as great a demand in Canada for cattle as they had. To-day owing to the enormous influx of people into the west and the general prosperity of the country, there is a demand for cattle which our own people cannot supply. Under these circumstances our people have had to go south in order to get the animals they want.

Mr. INGRAM. What about the 10,000 we sent there ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows that those are sent from one part of the country while the others cross the border in another section. Those 10,000 cattle did not go from the Northwest Territories south. In that region the stream is north. These animals went into the eastern states for different purposes and some of them entered at the extreme west. They went to the States because our breeds have been recognized in the United States as being better and notwithstanding all the obstructions and restrictions which the Americans avowedly wish to place on the importation of Canadian thoroughbred stock into the United States, we still send a very considerable number of these cattle across the line. Despite all their efforts to shut us out our cattle are so good and the demand for our best cattle amongst the breeders of the United States is so great that they still have to come to Canada for their stock.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman approve of a large number of young cattle coming in from the American ranches to be placed on Canadian farms ?

Mr. FOWLER. If our ranchers find they cannot get supplies sufficient for the interest of their business in Canada I am glad to see that they are enterprising, business-like and bright enough to get these supplies wherever they can on a profitable basis. If our people in Canada would never go abroad to get anything we would continue to be a small and poor nation.

Mr. BLAIN. Would my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture regard it as in the interest of Canada that our duty should be placed high enough to cause the ranchers to breed these cattle in the Dominion of Canada and fatten them in this country rather than to import them ? Do I understand him to say that in his opinion it is better as opportunity presents itself to allow the ranchers of western Canada to purchase their lean small cattle in the United States and to finish them in western Canadad.

Mr. COWAN. We ship our small cattle into the United States which are unfit for fattening purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has not a very high opinion of the United States people. United States people have no idea of building up their nation by importing small Canadian cattle into the United States to fatten. That is not the policy of the United States.

Mr. COWAN. They do it ; I do not know their policy but they do it. Cattle unfit for export to England are shipped by hundreds into the United Stats.

Mr. BLAIN. What for.

Mr. COWAN. I do not know what for, all I know is that we get American money for Canadian stockers, cattle that we cannot ship to England.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend think that we cannot keep them here ?

Mr. COWAN. Yearlings and calves and two-year olds have gone in by hundreds ever since the quarantine regulations were removed.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend think it is a good policy for the Canadian farmer to breed small cattle and send them into the United States ?

Mr. COWAN. I do not consider it good policy for a Canadian farmer to sell anything off the farm that cannot walk off, but if he has something which is unfit for him to fatten or to ship to European markets or for which he cannot find a market in Europe, then if he can find a market for it in the United States, I consider it decidedly good policy.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says he does not think it good policy to export anything we can fatten in this country ?

Mr. COWAN. Anything we can fatten with profit to the man who raises it.

Mr. BLAIN. Why does he then support a government which says it is good policy to import these into Canada and fatten them here ?

Mr. COWAN. Because he may import something that it is profitable for him to fatten, and export something that is unprofitable for him to try to fatten.

Mr. INGRAM. This is a very serious matter so far as the county I represent is concerned. For the year 1902, which is the latest year for which I can get statistics—and these I take from the public documents of Ontario—we sold or slaughtered 20,782 head of cattle valued at $727,370, or $35 per head ? Now the location of my county is similar to that of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) we live between Detroit and the Niagara rivers. Trainload after trainload of American cattle pass through his city and mine. That is of rather serious consequence to the farmers of our section.

Mr. COWAN. These are cattle in transit from the western to the eastern states.

Mr. INGRAM. Certainly.

Mr. COWAN. And if they did not pass through the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Ingram's) county and mine they would be switched off at Toledo and go south of Lake Erie to Buffalo, passing entirely through United States territory. The shorter route is through Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. I agree with the hon. gentleman's statement, but I do not quite see the object of his interruption.

Mr. COWAN. I did not mean to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram). I may not have caught exactly what he said. But I understood him to speak of trainloads of cattle passing through my county and his, and I thought the facts that I have mentioned important in that connection.

Mr. INGRAM. I have not arrived at the point where the interruption would come in. But I shall reach that point soon. I was going to point out that the Americans would have an unfair advantage over our cattle growers in connection with this trade, if the duty were one sided, for it would be a simple matter for them to drop off certain of these carloads of cattle to compete in our markets with our cattle.

Mr. COWAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) knows better than that.

Mr. INGRAM. Let us see. Suppose that this government were to reduce duty from twenty per cent to ten per cent while the Americans, instead of leaving their duty at twenty-seven per cent, were to raise it to thirty-five.

Mr. COWAN. Say forty.

Mr. INGRAM. I want to accommodate my hon. friend, so, let it go at forty. Under these circumstances does he not think the Americans would have a great advantage with these trainloads of cattle passing through our country ?

Mr. COWAN. Not a bit.

Mr. INGRAM. Of course, I cannot see it through the same spectacles as my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan). But I know that the people of Elgin regard this as a very serious matter. Let me give the hon. gentleman an instance of what may be seen in the small cities of New York state, and that might reasonably occur in the cities of Ontario. Let my hon. friend, some Saturday, drop down to Ogdensburg and, before entering the city, let him pass through eight or ten miles of country on the American side and talk with the farmers there as he has opportunity and find out how many cattle the farmers in that neighbourhood are raising and compare the number with the number of cattle in the neighbourhood of Windsor where he lives. Then let him go to Ogdensburg and find the condition of the meat trade there. He will find butchers there carrying on business as everywhere else. But he will not find them buying from the farmers in the neighbourhood of Ogdensburg to any great extent. And Why? Because the big meat industries of Chicago send in their frozen meat into Ogdensburg and suppply the butchers directly. The moment a butcher tries to buy stock from the farmers about Ogdensburg he is closed up because he cannot compete with the frozen meat imported from the great operators in Chicago. If hon. gentlemen opposite remove the duty, we shall be reduced to the level of the United States in this respect and the conditions that we find about Ogdensburg will exist about St. Thomas or Windsor. Now, in the matter of corn—

Mr. COWAN. We are talking about meat.

Mr. INGRAM. I know the hon. gentleman does not want to hear about corn.

Mr. COWAN. On the contrary, I am most anxious.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is in favour of a duty on corn.

Mr. COWAN. I am in favour of the policy of the present government.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of the removal of the duty ?

Mr. COWAN. The duty was removed from corn so far as our cattle feeders were concerned, but not so far as the distillers were concerned.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the hon. gentleman approve of the removal of that duty ?

Mr. COWAN. Most decidedly. I voted for it.

Mr. INGRAM. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman state that. He is more outspoken than the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. COWAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong this discussion, but it seems necessary to say a word or two. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) closed on the question of corn. The people of my district,—the people of the counties of Essex and Kent and extending into West Lambton and West Elgin are the largest corn producers in the Dominion of Canada. Under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power, if a man wanted to import corn for the distillers, to be made into Canadian whisky and in that form to be exported, he got it free of duty or, at least he got a rebate of 90 per cent—

Mr. FISHER. Ninety-nine.

Mr. COWAN. I was not exactly sure of the figures, and I wanted to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) the benefit of any doubt. He shook his head at ninety, will he shake his head at ninety-nine ? I want to put this fairly. If a Canadian distiller wanted to import Canadian corn to make Canadian whisky and export to the United States for the Yankee to drink, he got ninety-nine per cent of a rebate on the duty he paid on the corn. But if a Canadian cattle grower, a Canadian farmer, wanted to import American corn to fatten Canadian cattle to ship to the British markets he had to pay the duty and he got no rebate. This government came in and they said : That is unfair to the man who fattens Canadian cattle and at the same time it gives an undue preference to the man who makes Canadian whisky. They say that if a man wants to import American corn to fatten Canadian cattle for the British market he shall stand upon the same basis as the Canadian distiller. And that is why my hon. friend rose in his place to-night as the champion of the Canadian distiller for the purpose of manufacturing whisky for the American drinker instead of supplying the British consumer who wants to eat Canadian beef fattened upon American corn. The hon. gentleman speaks about Ogdensburg and Chicago. Do I understand the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) to say that a farmer who fattens a bullock near Ogdensburg has to kill it or ship it to the city of Chicago to be killed, and then ship it all the way back to Ogdensburg in order to sell it to the consumer in Ogdensburg ?

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman want an answer now ?

Mr. COWAN. Most decidedly, I would like to hear an answer to that.

Mr. INGRAM. I gave the hon. gentleman credit for more sense than to make such a statement. I have always advocated, as a protectionist—and I believe no protectionist does otherwise—that the nearer you get your farmer to the market the better it is for him. I never supposed that a farmer would fatten stock at Ogdensburg and send it to Chicago to be killed and then bring it back again. If that is the hon. gentleman's idea of trade matters, then I should not think he would be very hard to answer. While I am on my feet, as the hon. gentleman is dealing with corn——

Mr. COWAN. No, I am not asking about corn ; I was speaking of bullocks—I stick to that word—and I understood the hon. member for East Elgin to plead that because the farmers near Ogdensburg were overcome by competition with meat from the city of Chicago——

Mr. INGRAM. No.

Mr. COWAN. Every man who heard him understood that was his argument.

Mr. INGRAM. I will speak again for my hon. friend's advantage ; he is not very clear. What I said was that the difference between the neighbourhood of Windsor and the neighbourhood of Ogdensburg must be considered. In the neighbourhood of Ogdensburg the farmers do not raise cattle to the extent they do near the city of Windsor, for the reason that the former do not find a favourable home market at Ogdensburg. Why ? Because the frozen meat brought into Ogdensburg from Chicago by cold storage gives them such an unfair competition that they cannot compete with it.

Mr. COWAN. Now I think I understand the hon. gentleman. He means that the farmers near Ogdensburg do not find as ready a market for their beef as the farmers near the city of Windsor, on account of competition from the city of Chicago, which drives the people of Ogdensburg from the home market What better argument then does my hon. friend want for the farmers of the county of Essex, when he considers that the city of Windsor, or the county of Essex, lies 400 miles nearer to Chicago than the city of Ogdensburg ? Whatever the reason may be, whether it is duty or no duty, granting that it is the duty, then do I find that my hon. friend is complaining against this government for preserving the duty ?

Mr. INGRAM. Not at all ; I am finding fault because they do not increase it.

Mr. COWAN. Why do you want to increase it when there is no complaint from the county of Essex, which lies 400 miles nearer Chicago than Ogdensburg, and when there is a complaint from the state of New York, where the higher duty prevails and not from the county of Essex ? I want to tell my hon. friend that seven years have come and gone since the wiser policy was inaugurated. Let me tell my hon. friend from East Elgin that if he will go into the matter of the shipments of cattle and meats from the United States into Canada, or of farm products from Canada into the United States, he will find by the statistics of the two countries that every farmer in the Dominion of Canada sells $5 worth to the Americans for every $1 that an American sells to Canadians in farm produce.

Mr. BLAIN. What kind of farm produce ?

Mr. COWAN. All kinds. I will tell the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), who is now looking up the statistics, that last night I listened to him, and I listened to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), when they were discussing the question of market-garden produce ; and if he will take farm produce, he will find that every Canadian in the Dominion of Canada sells $5 worth to the Americans for every $1 that an American sells to the Canadians. Now, I do not want to be misunderstood, Mr. Chairman; I do not want to go upon the record as saying that that is a fair comparison.

Mr. BLAIN. Oh, oh.

Mr. COWAN. True ; but I do not want the hon. gentleman to fall into the error that Mr. Watson Griffin fell into in St. John. When you are quoting exact figures and exact percentages, remember that you are dealing with a nation of five and a half millions alongside a nation of eighty millions. When you start out by dealing with the percentage of purchases from the 80,000,000 of the United States instead of with sales from the Canadian people to the 80,000,000, then you fall into the same error in argument that I am to-night apologizing to the committee for advancing. It is an unfair comparison; but if it is fair for you to indulge in percentage of purchases, it is equally fair for me to indulge in percentage of sales. I will go a step further, and I tell the hon. member for Peel that he can place the population of the Dominion of Canada at 6,000,000 and of the United States at 75,000,000, and he will find that every Canadian in the Dominion of Canada sells to the American republic $5 worth of merchandise for every $1 worth of merchandise that every American sells to the Canadian.

Mr. COWAN.

I go one step further, and I tell him that when he comes down to the question of farm produce—yes, Mr. Chairman, and he can include in that bananas—yes, he can include pine-apples, and lastly, he can go to the high ideal of politics of hon. gentlemen opposite, and he can include peanuts —put that in the category also, and I tell him that every Canadian in the Dominion of Canada sells $4 worth of farm produce, even including pine-apples, bananas and peanuts, to the American people for every $1 worth that they sell to Canadians. And the sooner hon. gentlemen opposite get out of their swaddling clothes and realize that one Canadian can get a better meal off sixteen people in the United States than sixteen people can get off one Canadian, the better it will be for the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Chairman, I thought a circus was going on in some other part of the city, but it appears a portion of it is left in the House of Commons for us to deal with.

Mr. COWAN. That is since the hon. gentleman rose to his feet.

Mr. BLAIN. The question of farm products is the question under consideration. My hon. friend has made a very sweeping statement but has given no facts to the committee. May I be permitted to ask the hon. gentleman to name one article of farm products we export to the United States more than we import ? Would the hon. gentleman say one ?

Mr. COWAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman say we export more than we import of farm products?

Mr. COWAN. If the hon. gentleman wants to know what we import I say bananas, peanuts, oranges, pineapples.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman cannot play anything but the clown. We are not responsible for that and I am sure the hon. Minister of Agriculture will not feel grateful to the hon. gentleman for interrupting his estimates in this way. My hon. friend made the statement a few moments ago that we exported more farm products to the United States than we imported.

Mr. COWAN. No, no ; pardon me.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, yes ; none of your nonsense. My hon. friend made that statement.

Mr. COWAN. No. I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman for Peel does not want to be unfair. He may have misunderstood me.

Mr. BLAIN. I could not misunderstand the statement of the hon. gentleman, but I will give him an opportunity to make it again.

Mr. COWAN. The hon. gentleman must see the unfairness and fallacy of comparing two nations, one of seventy-five million or eighty million and the other with less than six million, on the question of percentage of purchases. Percentage of sales would show on the other hand an equally fair statement for the other side. I did not say we export to the United States of any article a greater quantity or value than we import. We may but I am not prepared to say we do.

Mr. BLAIN. You said so here.

Mr. COWAN. No, no. If my hon. friend will listen to me I will explain. If my hon. friend will base his statement on seventy-five millions of Americans and five and a half millions of Canadians he will find that every Canadian sold five dollars worth to an American for every one dollar's worth that an American sold to a Canadian.

Mr. BLAIN. I cannot understand the the hon. gentleman's explanation. It is entirely different from his former statement to the committee.

Mr. COWAN. No.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says 'no.' Surely my hon. friend has not been listening——

Mr. COWAN. Will my hon. friend from Peel pardon me for a moment ? I will give him the exact figures as I have them. We sold to the Americans $50,000,000 worth of merchandise. That is, each Canadian sold $8.25 worth. They sold to us $128,000,000 worth or $1.60 for every American. In other words every Canadian sold to an American $6 worth for every $1 worth that an American sold to a Canadian.

Mr. HACKETT. What sort of an argument is that ?

Mr. COWAN. If my hon. friend from Prince West (Mr. Hackett) will allow me——

An hon. MEMBER. That is rot.

Mr. BLAIN. Just allow the hon. member for Essex to proceed.

Mr. COWAN. Then our sales of farm produce amount to $8,000,000. That is $1.33 per head of the population of Canada.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not bullocks.

Mr. COWAN. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) cannot get the word 'bullock' out of his mind. I am sorry I mentioned it. In fact I am sorry I did not mention cows because that would not have disturbed the hon. member for Montmorency. To go back to farm produce we sold over $8,000,000 worth and on the basis of six millions of a population that is $1.33 per head of the Canadian population. The Americans sold to us of farm produce $17,400,000, or call it seventeen and a half millions worth. That means 21½ cents worth that every Yankee sold to a Canadian as against $1.33 worth that every Canadian sold to an American. Therefore, it justifies my expression that I thought six million Canadians could get a better meal off seventy-five million Yankees than seventy-five million Yankees could get off six million Canadians.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to follow those strange utterances of the hon. gentleman. I may say to hon. gentlemen opposite that I would not wish to make an exhibition of myself like that.

Mr. COWAN. I hope that is not a reflection.

Mr. BLAIN. As soon as my hon. friend gets quieted down we will proceed with the question under discussion. We were discussing the question of farm produce imported into Canada and exported from Canada to the United States. I asked the hon. gentleman a simple question and he has been unable to answer it. He made the sweeping statement that we exported more farm products to the United States than we imported, and when I ask him to give one fact in support of that statement he could not do so.

Mr. COWAN. Me ?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

Mr. COWAN. Not at all. I pulled from my pocket a paper and from that paper I gave the hon. gentleman the figures. I can very readily understand, that, after reading the speech of Watson Griffin, it is very difficult for my hon. friend to understand it. What I said was that we exported eight million dollars worth of farm produce and imported $17,400,000 worth.

Mr. BLAIN. Pardon me.

Mr. COWAN. Will my hon. friend pardon me when I tell him that six million people sold to the United States $8,000,000 worth of farm products and that the United States with a population between seventy-five million and eighty million, fifteen times our population, only sold to us $17,400,000 worth. I hope I will not be misunderstood now when I tell the hon. gentleman that every Canadian sold to an American $1.33 worth of farm produce while each citizen of the United States sold to us 21½ cents worth; in other words that every Canadian in the Dominion sold to the United States $6 worth of farm produce for every $1 worth of farm produce that an American sold to a Canadian.

Mr. BLAIN. Now that my hon. friend has repeated that four or five times I hope he is satisfied.

Mr. COWAN. And I hope you understand it by this time.

Mr. BLAIN. Surely my hon. friend does not want me to understand the figures that were handed to him by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) because he does not understand them himself.

Mr. COWAN. No, these are my own. These others are the figures of my hon. friend from Brant. The figures of my hon. friend from Brant are down here.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps that is a better explanation of why they are not good authority.

Mr. COWAN. I have these in my inside pocket.

Mr. BLAIN. I think my hon. friend must have brought them in his pocket, but leaving that question aside my hon. friend was casting some reflection upon the remarks I addressed to the House last night upon the trade between Canada and the United States in respect to farm products.

Mr. COWAN. No, I supposed you were dealing with purchases instead of sales. No man is fairer than the hon. member for Peel ; I cast no reflection on him ; I did not challenge the figures he quoted. But I did blame him that he was dealing with purchases instead of sales. I dealt with sales. I do not say it is a fair comparison, but I do say that it is as fair an argument as for the hon. gentleman to deal with purchases.

Mr. BLAIN. For the information of my hon. friend, let me point out that last year, 1903, we imported from the United States butter to the value of $137,654 ; cheese to the value of $30,401 ; eggs to the value of $121,262, or $289,317 worth of these three farm products. Now, we exported to the United States last year, butter to the value of $10,225 ; cheese to the value of $7,779 ; eggs to the value of $6,436, or a total of $24,440 that we export to the United States ; as against $289,317 that we imported from the United States, or a balance of $264,877 against us. Does the member for Essex think that is fair to our farmers.

Mr. COWAN. Multiply that by fifteen and see where you land.

Mr. BLAIN. That is simply drawing a red herring across the track. Is it fair that the American farmer can send his pork to Canada paying a duty of two cents per pound, while the Canadian farmer will have to pay a duty of five cents per pound to send his pork to the United States ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it is fair to discuss the tariff in this committee. Perhaps it would be better for us to get back to the item.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not introduce the discussion. I agree with the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not wish to prolong this discussion further, but I have to point out——

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Holmes). I had intended to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have travelled a long way from the original question, and we had better perhaps get back to it.

Mr. GILMOUR. If you had done that a little sooner it would have been better. The first to raise the question was the minister himself, and if you stopped it then you would not have had the scene you had to-night.

Mr. INGRAM. I know that my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) does not want to misrepresent what I have said. He stated that I was in favour of free corn for the distillers——

Mr. COWAN. I made no such statement.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Holmes). I trust the hon. member. (Mr. Cowan) will not press the discussion on this point.

Mr. COWAN. I ask the permission of the hon. member for East Elgin to explain, and if the chair says we are both out of order, I have nothing to say.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Holmes). This question can come up for discussion with greater appropriateness on another occasion. I thought it only fair to allow the member for Peel to answer the statement of the hon. member for Essex. The discussion should end there.

Mr. INGRAM. The member for Essex accused me of supporting a government that was in favour of free corn for the distillers of this country.

Mr. COWAN. I did not.

Mr. INGRAM. Then I am glad you didn't.

Mr. COWAN. I said that the hon. gentleman supported a government which gave the distillers 99 per cent of a rebate on corn that they imported from the United States to make whisky of to export back to the United States, while they did not give that rebate to the farmer who imported American corn to feed his cattle and wanted to export the beef back to the United States.

Mr. INGRAM. The truth half told is worse than a lie.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Holmes). I will have to rule that the discussion must cease at this point.

Mr. INGRAM. I rise to a personal explanation. It was not the policy of the Conservative government——

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Holmes). The hon. gentleman can make a personal explanation so far as the direct charge against him is concerned, but in doing so he cannot enter into a general statement as to policy.

Mr. INGRAM. I am within my rights and I will stand by my rights. I do not nor did I support such a policy as that described by the hon. member (Mr. Cowan) because there was no such policy in existence. The duty on corn was seven and a half cents against the distiller for all whisky sold in Canada. That is the policy I supported and that is the policy to-day. The starch manufacturer had to pay seven and a half cents on American corn, and if he exported the manufactured article he received a rebate of two and a half cents. I supported a duty upon corn, and why did I do so? Look at the figures and you will see the reason. In 1903 there was imported free of duty 6,033,898 bushels of corn, to compete with the farmers in the corn-growing counties of Kent, Essex and Elgin, and I represent the county of Elgin and the farmers of that county. Does the member for Essex favour the removal of duty on corn, when in his own county they produced 3,603,765 bushels of corn, according to the statistics of the Bureau of Industries, for Ontario, for the year 1902, and that amount of corn is valued at $1,463,129.

Mr. COWAN. Corn was 20 cents per bushel higher after the duty was taken off than it was before.

Mr. POPE. I think we were discussing something with reference to exhibitions and have rather wandered from the subject. I have had a great afternoon and this evening is a fitting complement to it. I went to the circus before six o'clock and have been at another circus ever since. I looked over the animals down there this afternoon, and while I found some larger animals there which we have not here, I do not think that the monkeys began to compare with the specimens we have in this House ; but coming back to the item under discussion, I understood from the Minister of Agriculture that one of the results which followed the Japan exhibition was a great increase in the export of butter and flour. I would like to ask him if it is really the case that we have increased our exports of butter to Japan as the result of that exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. I said that we had been exporting butter from the government creamery in Alberta steadily some years back to a small extent, and that since the exhibition that export had increased very materially. I think that we are now exporting about four times as much per month as we did before the exhibition.

Mr. POPE. Then general exports from Canada ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not examined the trade and navigation returns and cannot tell.

Mr. POPE. I cannot believe that the hon. minister would intend to deceive this House by claiming results from exhibitions which have not followed them. The expenditure on these exhibitions has been questioned on the ground that it is very doubtful whether we get a good return for our money. In reply to that criticism, the minister told us that since the exhibition we had introduced Canadian flour into Japan and that Canadian flour was unknown there previously. Well, Sir, what do we find ? I find by the official returns that in the year 1900 we sent to that country 2,379 barrels of flour and that we have sent there as high as 3,035 barrels. But last year, 1903, we only sent 611 barrels. Evidently therefore the minister's statement that the exhibition was the cause of the introduction of Canadian flour into Japan was absolutely wrong. Not only was that statement wrong, but the trade, instead of increasing as a consequence of that exhibition, has decreased. Last year, after the exhibition, we only sent one-fifth the quantity of flour which we had sent three years previous. I do not like to say that the hon. gentleman intended wilfully to deceive this House, but the statistics are there, and he has just as free access to them as anybody else ; and when he stands up here and asks us to vote an increase of $50,000 for exhibition purposes, he owes it to his position as a minister, when he attemps to justify that increase, to justify it on statements which are absolutely correct and not on imaginary facts.

With regard to butter, we have the same condition of things. Five or six years ago, we were shipping more butter to Japan than we did last year. Last year we shipped 8,000 pounds, but we shipped as high as 12,000 pounds three years ago. I am not going to say that these exhibitions do not do good. I hope they do. I think it is well that these exhibitions should be held in countries with which we can encourage trade, but I do not think they are of much use in countries with which we are doing less and less trade every year. It may be good policy to have an exhibit in St. Louis, which will show to intending settlers the resources of this country in the shape of minerals, products of the soil and so forth, but I warn the hon. minister, that if he wishes to have the respect of this House, he will see that what information he gives is based on fact and is not misleading.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is slightly wrong in his dates, and what he has said justifies the claim I made. Our exports to Japan of flour a few years ago were rather large, because certain millers sent a large consignment to that country. They sent that shipment as a result of the visit of an agent sent there by my hon. colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce some four or five years ago. Following his visit, there was a considerable shipment of flour to Japan, but it was not advertised, the markets were not prepared for it, it was not a success, and the result was that in the few years following there was hardly any shipment of flour to that country at all.

Mr. POPE. What few years ?

Mr. FISHER. Ending the 30th of June last. We sent some 3,000 barrels in 1900-1901. In 1902 and 1903 the shipments decreased. The exhibition in Japan opened in March of 1903 and did not close until August, 1903, after the end of the fiscal year 1903, which the hon. gentleman has quoted, and the results of the exhibition in Japan had no effect whatever on the trade of a year which closed before the close of the exhibition. The result of the exhibition on our trade have been in the fiscal year commencing July 1st, 1903. The figures which I quoted and the statement I made, have been absolutely correct within my own knowledge.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What are the figures?

Mr. FISHER. I gave the figures with regard to the shipments of flour.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Can the minister give any figures in relation to the steady increase in the shipments of flour and similar products from the United States to Japan?

Mr. FISHER. No. I have stated what I know to be the absolute result of our flour and bread making exhibit in Japan. I know of orders placed in Canada to the extent of a considerable number of carloads as a direct result of our exhibit. I stated also that as a result of our exhibit the butter export has increased to something like four times as much per month as formerly. I also stated that other people had received special orders. I recall a request which came from the Consul General of Japan to put a certain person in Yokohoma into communication with butter makers and producers in Canada as they wish to open a direct trade and to place orders for such butter.

Mr. BENNETT. Were any of these purchases made by the Japanese government in consequence of the war ?

Mr. FISHER. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the butter produced in Alberta of the best quality we can produce in Canada ? If it is not, should we not send other shipments of the best that we have?

Mr. FISHER. The butter made at the government creameries at Alberta is of very high quality. I shall not say it is of the very best quality in Canada. The butter in Japan was not all from the government creameries. That from the government creameries compared favourably with any other butter on the Japanese market, but there was an exhibition of butter from Ontario which was superior to the butter of the Northwest creameries. There were a number of different exhibits there ; and I may say, generally speaking, that our butter compared favourably with any butter that was sent to the Japanese market from other countries.

Mr. POPE. The hon. minister is changing his position. He told this House that Canadian flour was an unknown quantity.

Mr. FISHER. I said that Canadian flour was unknown on the Japanese market as Canadian flour.

Mr. POPE. But we had previously shipped Canadian flour as Canadian flour. The minister told us just now that the representative of this government went there five years ago and introduced this trial shipment 5 or 6 years ago. Yet the minister stands up and says that this exhibition was the means of the introduction of Canadian flour into this market when he knew it had been introduced 4 or 5 years ago.

Mr. FISHER. The introduction of 4 or 5 years ago was a failure, and as a result of that failure the shipments were not followed up. When the exhibition took place Canadian flour was unknown as Canadian flour in the Japanese market.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister explain what kinds of goods were purchased by his government and exhibited at the Japan exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. The articles sold were, rubber goods, paper and pulp, pulp wood, some products of pulp in the shape of pails and vessels of one kind and another, butter, canned goods, lumber in the shape of shingles, finished lumber and sashes, doors, &c., some glass goods, furniture, a small exhibit of bicycles and bicycle parts, flour for the making of bread, a small exhibit or ropes and cordage, a few hams and bacon, cooking stoves, oil stoves, tinware, a baking machine and oven. There was some honey and a piano. Those were the sales. A large number of goods were of a perishable character, apples and fuits for instance, which we could not sell. By the time they had been exhibited they were no use. We were asked by the different agricultural colleges of the government in Japan for our exhibits of grain, &c. We presented them to these institutions as specimens of Canadian products and charged nothing for them.

Mr. BLAIN. At D—24 of the Auditor General's Report, I see an item—

The Canada Furniture Manufacturers, Toronto, oak bureaus, 5 at $18; maple bureau, $23.

Would the hon. minister say whether these articles were selected as first class products of Canadian makers of furniture, and would he regard this as a proper exhibit of what the Canadian people can do in the way of manufacturing furniture?

Mr. FISHER. No, they were selected as furniture likely to be suitable to the demands of the Japanese market. We could not sell the highest class there at all. We bought such furniture as would be suitable to that purpose. The items my hon. friend mentions came to $103 and as a matter of fact we sold there furniture to the extent of $568.

Mr. BLAIN. Just those items?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say there was nothing else but that was the chief item. It may possibly have included the school desks which were sent over. I do not see any sale of school desks here.

Mr. BLAIN. Would it not be possible when the hon. minister makes an exhibit at a place such as the Japan exhibition to get the Canadian manufacturers themselves to supply these goods, if the government pay the cost of freight, care of the exhibit, &c.

Mr. FISHER. We tried to get the Canadian furniture manufacturers to do that, but failed. At Buffalo, the year before, this very association supplied us with furniture for our Canadian building and took it back after the exhibition, we paying some slight wear and tear. We tried to get them to do the same in the Osaka exhibition, but they said that Japan was so far away and the market so uncertain that they did not care to do it. Except flour, there was no part of our exhibit in Japan in which there was a better opening than in furniture. We had demands for it the moment it was shown, and could have sold it all within a week after the opening of the exhibition. But we kept it there and sold it at the end. The articles were sold to high officials such as the minister of agriculture, the prime minister, one of the prince's and so on. They thought so much of the furniture that they were eager purchasers. They had not seen anything to equal it. I have urged upon the Manufacturers' Association to send an agent to Japan to take advantage of the opportunities opened up by the exhibition, for I felt sure that they could immediately work up a very large trade. But they have not done so simply on the plea that their orders are so great that they cannot fill them and they have no time to attend to this foreign market.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister has been badly informed as to the state of the furniture trade in Canada.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I am glad that Canadian furniture is so favourably regarded in the Japanese market. Judging from the sale of rubber goods from that exhibition there should be a good market for these. I understood him to say that the rubber goods were sold for $400, and according to the Blue-book I find that they only cost the country $220.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, we added the freight charges which would be heavy on such goods.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But they would not be $200.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. What is the hon. minister's explanation of this sale of rubber goods that cost the country $200 for $400.

Mr. FISHER. That is the figure in the statement furnished me by the officers in the department.

Mr. T. I. THOMPSON. And does the hon. minister credit it?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The hon. minister does not believe it is the same as the statement about the flour?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. The statement about the flour was correct.

Mr. WILSON. I am sure the minister is wrong when he says the freight on rubber goods would be high. You could hardly find goods that would pack closer and be less expensive.

Mr. FISHER. The figures I have given from this list should be divided by two. These statements are in yen, the Japanese dollar, and not in the Canadian dollar. I did not notice the mark when I read the figures. The price at which the rubber goods sold would be $200, not $400.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When the hon. gentleman speaks of Japan being a splendid field for our furniture, I suppose he includes chairs. Did he educate the people there to sit on chairs?

Mr. FISHER. I did not need to do so. There are in Japan a large number of people, especially in government and other offices, who use chairs. Desks are also in demand. One of the things that they most required was the roll-top desk. My hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) knows a great deal about Japan, but he may not be aware that in the houses of well-to-do Japanese there are quite commonly one or two rooms furnished in European style, partly for convenience of strangers and partly because there are many Japanese who have lived in Europe or America and who, when they return home prefer to live, to a certain extent at any rate, in European style.

Mr. BLAIN. The explanation the minister gave as to the money would apply in the case of furniture. What, then, was the furniture sold for ?

Mr. FISHER. Half of what I said. Instead of $658, it was 658 yen, or $329.

Mr. BLAIN. So this furniture cost $403.67, and was sold at a loss even without allowing anything for freight rates ? Does he then, regard the market for furniture as so very hopeful ?

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand that this item covers the exhibition at Winnipeg ?

Mr. FISHER. No, that is covered by a special item which we passed some weeks ago.

Mr. POPE. I understood the minister to say that we were not sending any live stock down to St. Louis. I wonder if that accounts for the items I see in connection with the St. Louis exhibition. Here is an item for Shorthorn bull head, $25, and one for a Hereford bull head, $41.88. Are we sending these bulls' heads in order that the visitors to the St. Louis exhibition may know that we do breed cattle in this country ? And, if that is the object why should we have selected the bull's head. Why not take down the whole bull, or the more essential parts of the bull. I think it would have been better to send down the whole bull than the bull's head. This bull, I think, would be pretty dear. I do not know what the price of a bull would be on the basis of $41.88 for the head, and why should we pay more for a Hereford bull's head than for a Shorthorn bull's head ? And what is the prejudice against other breeds ? If we are to have an exhibit of bulls' heads, why not include the Jersey, the Guernsey, the Holstein and other breeds so that there may be no favouritism ? The breeder of Shorthorns in this country may feel pleased to know that the bull's head has gone down. But he would be better satisfied if the whole bull had gone.

I am not up in scientific agriculture as the hon. gentleman is, but there may be some reason why he bought this head and sent it down there. Now, so far as the other breeds are concerned, I think the discrepancy in the price of this Hereford head will cause trouble, because it is not going to be pleasant to the Durham men or the Shorthorn breeders to know that a greater value is placed upon the Hereford than upon other breeds. Then there is the Jersey man with no bull there at all, what is he going to do ? And the Guernsey man, the Galloway man, the Polled-Angus man, the Holstein man—none of these men, with whom these breeds are favourites, will have any bulls representing them, or any bulls' heads representing them at this exhibition. I would call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that his department is liable to become unpopular if he selects out a head here and a head there, and leaves all these other important breeds unrepresented—and deadheads, as an hon. friend near me suggests. I would suggest that the minister take into consideration whether it would not be better to send the whole bull properly equipped down to St. Louis, one that would do full credit to the breed he is supposed to represent. The hon. gentleman might make some arrangement with the government at Washington. If there is any difficulty about getting them into that country, he ought to be able to make some special arrangement—perhaps not for the cows or the heifers, but for bulls, a real genuine, complete bull of each of the several breeds. I would suggest that the minister take this into his careful consideration, because I think it is unfair that he should only send the heads of two bulls down there and leave the other breeds unrepresented.

Mr. FISHER. I would just say to the hon. gentleman that these heads he speaks of were bought for decorative purposes in the agricultural exhibit there.

Mr. POPE. That may be ; but I do not think it would look proper to practical farmers—we should all try to be practical farmers—that the head of the bull is the essential decoration of the bull. I do not think we should look upon it in that light. I think we should send the animal complete in every respect.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. I understood the minister to say that he had received communications from the Breeders' Association of Canada with regard to sending live stock to the St. Louis exhibition, and that he now has the subject under consideration.

Mr. FISHER. I explained that a few minutes ago.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. The Breeders' Association hold the best stock in the Dominion, and unless the United States government will allow them to go in there and make a good show, I am afraid that the reputation of Canadian stock will suffer. I do not think it would be wise for a few individual farmers to send in stock that is not of the highest character, as Canadian stock would be belittled in the eyes of foreigners who go there.

Mr. FISHER. Under the arrangement we propose only first-class animals will be likely to go, as it will be only in case they get good prizes that they will receive assistance.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. I do not think that we can get a good exhibition of our stock there if individuals have to take cattle at their own expense and run all risk. I fear the best cattle of Canada will not be there.

Mr. J. D. REID. Could the minister give the total amount that was paid for goods for the Japan exhibition, and the amount received for the sale of those goods at that exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. I could not give the total amount paid, because it is involved in a lot of small items which I have not added up yet. The total amount received was in the neighbourhood of $10,000, but the total amount paid was a good deal more than that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understood the minister to say that the total amount paid on account of that exhibition was over $60,000, but he has only received $10,000 back. Does the former amount include salaries ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes ; salaries, cost of installation, freight on goods and all preparations for the exhibition. I would point out also that many of these goods were perishable. We had to buy a large amount of fruit, for instance.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would ask the minister again about the question of furniture. No doubt his remarks will be carefully read by the manufacturers of furniture in this country. Now, the minister said that there was a good market in Japan for furniture. I would like to know how he thinks he would be encouraging furniture manufacturers to ship goods to Japan in face of the fact stated by him that he paid $400 for furniture and paid freight on it, and only received about $300 for it after he was through with it. In other words, are we to understand that the commissioners were not able to dispose of these goods at their actual cost ? No doubt he got them at a very low price.

Mr. FISHER. The regular market price.

Mr. J. D. REID. Together with freight added. The commissioner was not able to get more than about 50 per cent on the dollar, because $400 worth of goods, together with the freight, would probably be $600, and the minister says he only got something like about $300. The hon. minister stated that they got a sum of about $300. I suppose the hon. minister feels that the commissioner did his duty while there, and got the actual market value for these goods. If so, he must admit that the amount received was only about 50 cents on the dollar, so that the manufacturers of furniture would not receive more than 50 cents on the dollar upon the amount they charged the government. How does the hon minster make out that that was encouraging the manufacturers to ship goods to that country ?

Mr. FISHER. I may say that I based my statements in regard to the market that we have there for furniture on the actual prices that are charged there for European and American furniture. Individuals in Japan came and asked what this furniture could be laid down there for and they said that they had paid larger prices for inferior goods. We had to sell the goods that had been there on exhibition during the whole summer and I daresay that my commissioners were not able to get the first hand price for any of them. I know as a matter of fact that some of these goods were sold very low to people of importance in whose hands we wanted to place them for advertising purposes, and I am not quite certain but that some of it was even given away for that purpose. The total of this amount was the actual cash received but I would not for a moment allow it to be held that these prices were the total value of these goods had they been placed first hand on the market or had they been offered in the ordinary market.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have had a little experience myself in regard to goods at exhibitions and I have always found that goods that have been made specially for an exhibition are a little better that the ordinary goods.

Mr. FISHER. These goods were not; they were just ordinary trade goods.

Mr. J. D. REID. We generally get a little higher price. The government had that exhibition in Japan for the purpose of encouraging trade and the hon. minister says now that he has found out from the manufacturers of furniture that there is a good market in Japan. He has worked it up for them, and he has said to them : If you will send your goods there you will get a good market at paying prices. Will the hon. minister assume the responsibility of allowing any manufacturing industry to send a consignment of goods to Japan and guarantee that they will bring the actual cost of production in this country ?

Mr. FISHER. No, that would not be the government's work. The government would not undertake to do that. The country would not ask the government to do that and the House would not support the government in doing that. The point is that by the exhibition of Canadian goods we showed to the people of Japan the character and quality of the goods that can be produced in this country. We must then trust to the ordinary channels of trade to follow that up, and it is only if the ordinary channels of trade will follow it up that the trade can be established.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have there been any shipments made since that exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. The furniture association have not taken the steps we asked them to take: When Mr. Hutchison, the commissioner, and Mr. Burns, the secretary of our exhibition there talked matters over with them they said that they were so busy with their work here that they did not care to undertake shipments to Japan at the present time.

Mr. BLAIN. If I understood the hon. minister correctly at the outset he made a statement to the committee in regard to four or five exhibitions. Would the hon. gentleman say how much he expects the total cost of the St. Louis exhibition to be and how much the probable cost of the other exhibitions that he mentioned will be ?

Mr. FISHER. This is an item of $200,000 which I am asking now for next year. I am expecting to apply about $125,000 of this to closing up the accounts in connection with the St. Louis exhibition. That will leave about $75,000. When I asked for that item I was discussing the question of an exhibition in South Africa. Since then I have received information of the organization which has led me to believe that it is not of a character that we ought officially to take part in. But, I have also officially on behalf of the government, accepted an invitation to take part in the universal exhibition at Liège which is to open on the 1st of May next year.

Mr. BLAIN. About how much do you expect to expend there ?

Mr. FISHER. About $50,000, somewhere in the neighbourhood of the amount we expended at Osaka,—possibly not so much as Liège is a little more accessible than Osaka.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost of the St. Louis exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. About $325,000.

Mr. BLAIN. And those others ?

Mr. FISHER. I want to have about $25,000 available so as to be in a position to take part in these other exhibitions which I have mentioned.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the hon. Minister of Agriculture ever looked at the question in this way ? There is an expenditure of $325,000 on the St. Louis exhibition. I had the honour of being the only member of the House of Commons who voted against the payment of a large sum towards the expense of making an exhibition at the World's Fair. Would it not be better to take that sum of money and spend it on immigration ? If the hon. minister would take that $325,000 and apply it to immigration it would bring out to Canada several thousand immigrants. I should imagine that it would bring out about 10,000 people. Does not the hon. minister think that that sum of money expended in bringing 10,000 selected immigrants to the shores of Canada would be infinitely better employed than if it were spent in this flimflamming around St. Louis and other places ? I think the money should be voted to the Department of the Interior. My own personal opinion is that these exhibitions do not do the country one particle of good.

Mr. FISHER. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And I am of opinion that if the money were expended in the other way which I have suggested, better results would be achieved.

Mr. FISHER. I am very glad that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has brought that question up because it is one which has influenced my colleagues and myself in regard to these exhibtions at St. Louis and Liège. We are getting a very considerable number of Americans from the western part of the Union.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Through the energy of the Interior Department ?

Mr. FISHER. Through the energy of the Interior Department. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) quite coincided with me as to the advisability for immigration purposes of having a representative exhibit in agriculture, forestry and mineral resources at St. Louis. Mr. Hutcheson was at St. Louis three or four weeks before the exhibition opened and during that time he was besieged with inquiries as to the opportunities of the Northwest for immigration purposes. In our building at St. Louis my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has a staff of immigration agents who are distributing literature and imparting information in regard to the Northwest. I had quoted to me tonight by a gentleman who was at St. Louis a little while ago with the press party there an incident which illustrates the effect that our exhibit at St. Louis is having. He said : I was talking with a gentleman, an editor, from Kansas and he said to me that he had never been able to understand how it was that their best citizens were leaving the United States and going to Canada but since he had seen the Canadian exhibit at St. Louis he did not wonder at it because we showed up there magnificently in comparison with their own western states. I have seen already, and I dare say hon. gentlemen opposite have seen, references made to the Canadian exhibition at St. Louis, and it is declared that the exhibition is not only creditable to Canada but that it is an eye-opener and surprise to the people of the western states and I venture to think it will be one of the strongest inducements for immigration into the Northwest and I am glad to get this endorsement from my hon. friend of this expenditure.

Tracadie lazaretto, $5,500.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are the lepers increasing or decreasing ?

Mr. FISHER. There are always in the neighbourhood of twenty or twenty-five.

Public Works Health Act, $3,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the cause of the decrease ?

Mr. FISHER. Last year I asked for $4,000, and we did not spend $3,000 ; but I warn my hon. friends that when I made the decrease I had not realized the necessity of the construction of the new transcontinental railway, and in my suppplementary estimates, I am afraid I will not only have to restore the decrease, but to ask for a couple of thousand more. I think it very necessary that on the construction of the new transcontinental railway, we should take special precautions to avoid such difficulties as arose on the Crows' Nest Pass.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the minister expect that the Transcontinental Railway Bill would be defeated in the House ?

Mr. FISHER. No. But to tell the truth I didn't think of it when I made up this item. Notwithstanding that we have not passed a great many items, I feel that consideration is due to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I shall move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What business to-morrow ?

Mr. FISHER. I think we will proceed with the quarantine estimates and perhaps the estimates of the Minister of Marine. We will proceed with some Bills first.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will you go on with the Militia Bill ?

Mr. FISHER. No, and as the Minister of Justice is not here we will not proceed with his Bills.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 3, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 129) respecting certain patents of Edwin R. Cahoone.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 130) respecting the Huron and Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Wm. Ross (Ontario).

Bill (No. 131) to incorporate the Farmers' Bank of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

PRINTING OF VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to a statement which he made in the House that he would bring down a statement as to why certain voters' lists had not been printed. I have before me the voters' list for Sunbury and Queen's for 1904, and I have not yet had any voters' list for my constituency for 1903. I think this is unfair treatment. I understand that this means that two voters' lists have been got out for New Brunswick since I have had any.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would ask my hon. friend to renew his question on Monday, as I have a letter on the subject which I cannot lay my hands on.

Mr. WILSON. I may not be here in time on Monday, and I would ask the right hon. gentleman to kindly put it on 'Hansard.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The next time my hon. friend is here.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to refer to an apparent discourtesy on my part to the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram). Yesterday afternoon by a previous arrangement, I paid a visit to a very interesting object lesson in connection with the agricultural estimates in the shape of live stock and other attractions. While there I witnessed exhibitions of high tumbling, but had no idea that we were going to have any exhibition of low tumbling in this House. In the evening at seven fifty, I came into the House to get my letters. I did not open them all at the moment, but went to an interesting social function and it was only after eleven o'clock that I found among them a courteous invitation from my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), inviting me to be present in the afternoon as he proposed to revive the discussion of the matter in controversy between us. Had I known this earlier, I would have been present yesterday afternoon, and have put aside the arrangement I had made. I am not aware however that he lost much by my absence, because in any event I would not have replied to the observations which the hon. gentleman made. I wish to avoid as far as possible any personal controversy with anybody. I do not challenge or attack anybody, and on several occasions have avoided encounters, though perhaps it was my duty to have met them. The reason why I did not wish to have any controversy with my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), is because I am afraid of him, for I think that to some slight extent he was in the right. But I had other reasons for not wishing to meet my hon. friend from East Elgin. I am afraid of my hon. friend physically, intellectually and morally. And further, I am afraid of myself; and do not wish to make in this House any exhibiton of temper whatever. When I do, I am sorry afterwards, because I prefer not to say or do anything which will leave an unpleasant feeling. So far as the observations of my hon. friend from Lennox are concerned, I merely spoke from memory, and I am quite willing to offer any reparation, if unintentionally I have done him any injury. I hope to continue to enjoy the friendship of my hon. friend. We occasionally exchange some words of banter, but are usually on the best of relations, which I trust will continue. But with regard to the observations of my hon. friend from East Elgin, I cannot make the same free admission. I did not refer to him either directly or by imputation, yet he volunteered a personal attack upon myself. He attempted to convict me of an untruth and of having had my views coloured by the fact that I am an agent of the Hamburg-American Line. On the latter point, let me say that whenever I have spoken, I have taken pains to openly state that it was in consequence of my connection with that line that I was in a position to obtain information and consequently could speak from personal knowledge. The hon. gentleman, however, was very anxious to accuse me of having stated what was an untruth, and as there were a number of people in the House and the galleries at the time, he made his charge as conspicuously as possible. 'Hansard' in hand he made this statement without any reservation or qualification.

I would remind the junior member for Halifax (Mr. William Roche) that he is mistaken when he thinks that the hon. member for Lennox followed him last year with his speech or even with a speechlet. There is no record of either such speech or speechlet. But I can tell him that the hon. gentleman who did follow him and who criticised his language very severely was the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. INGRAM. Hear, hear.

Mr. Wm. ROCHE. I shall now quote from page 6610 of last year's 'Hansard' to show what did take place and what is recorded. The Minister of the Interior said:

The only persons we hear that suggestion from is the hon. member for Lennox and his friend the United States inspector, Mr. Watchorn. If my understanding of the hon. gentleman's argument is correct, it is in effect that we should make such an arrangement as would allow the officers of the United States to decide who should come into Canada.

Mr. WILSON. I made no such statement. What I said was that we ought to enter into an arrangement with them, that we ought to have as much to say about it as the Americans, and that there should be a good understanding between the two governments.

That brought up the whole question as to the strictness of the inspection by our Canadian officers. The Minister of the Interior went on to say:

They are all presided over by a general inspector of first-class professional attainments; and we have no reason whatever to believe that it is necessary that their inspection should be revised by officers of the United States.

That was in the same debate and in pursuance of the same controversy. The hon. member for Lennox then said:

Mr. WILSON. When was the medical inspector appointed at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the date.

Mr. WILSON. I may say that his deputy minister was before the committee as late as the 11th of June, and, according to his evidence, no one had been appointed there then.

There are three instances of the hon. gentleman from Lennox making short speeches and yet the hon. member for East Elgin says there is no record of his having made any speeches or speechlets after mine.

Mr. INGRAM. They had no reference to you at all.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. Without any reservation, equivocation or limitation he wanted to make a direct attack, and he made a positive statement there were none and he shall not wriggle out of it. Now, on the same evening there was another debate on the question of salaries and appropriations on the same subject, and during the course of that my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) made five short speeches. That is sufficient. I was only speaking from memory and only reciting what was my impression at the time, for I had no opportunity of consulting the record or refreshing my memory. Now I want to say that I do not appear in this House as a gladiator by any means; I do not want to enter the lists in competition with my hon. friend. Now and hereafter he may say what he likes and do what he likes with reference to myself; I shall not reply to any personal observations. But if at any time anything is said affecting the interests of my constituents that seems to me to call for a word from me, I shall take the opportunity of replying.

On this question that what really troubles my hon. friend is the truth; and on this subject his conscience smites him, for once at any rate. In this case he was clearly in the wrong. He spoke without full investigation of the subject and made a flamboyant speech hoping that I would not take notice of it and that it would pass as a refutation of what I had said. If he thinks he is equipped and qualified to enter into competition with those who engage in personalities, who are apt to fling back recrimination for recrimination, and to bandy comparisons perhaps as expressive as his own or indulge in any scurrility, he may find that there are people of that kind who will meet him and transfix him, when he will be dead as a smelt.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I have only a word or two to say in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche). If a man is to be attacked, at least he can prepare for the attack if he has reasonable notice. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) in this matter, has not done me the courtesy of giving me fair warning. When I intended to speak of him yesterday I gave him due notice. He read my letter and though he replied also by letter which was sent to me last night at eleven o'clock, he did not have the courtesy to say in that letter that he was going to make another attack on me to-day. This is the hon. gentleman's letter to me :

11 p.m.

Andrew B. Ingram, Esq.,
House ofCommons.

Sir,—I have just opened your letter. Had I received it in time, I might have put aside a previous engagement, but, was out of town this afternon.

I am, dear sir,
Your most obedient servant,
WILLIAM ROCHE.

It would not have hurt my hon. friend to add a postscript that he intended to bring up this matter this afternoon. The hon. gentleman must be afaid, however, as he admits, or his conscience must have troubled him—something must have been the matter when he was not willing to give me the British fair play that I offered him yesterday ? I do not think there is anything to reply to in what the hon. gentleman has said. The statement I made is unanswerable. I am willing to let the record stand. If anything can be established which shows that my statement was in any way wrong, I am willing to apologize. But I am quite satisfied that I shall never be called upon to apologize because my statements are absolutely correct. As to entering into personalities, I can tell the hon. gentleman that there is not in my statement a single word of a personal character—not one.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Had the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) dropped this subject the first day, he would never have heard of it from me, because so far as I know, he and I have been upon the best terms in this House.

Mr. CLARKE. But you will never speak as you pass by, after this.

Mr. WILSON. Oh, yes. If the hon. gentleman holds the feeling that he expresses, we shall be good friends yet. I wish to say that there was not a single interruption of any kind when the hon. gentleman was speaking on this subject a year ago, nor did I say anything with reference to what he had stated. My interruptions were entirely in the speech of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). Several members had spoken between my speech and that of the junior member for Halifax. When the Minister of the Interior spoke, he seemed to me to put words into my mouth that I had not uttered, and I told him. So far as I am concerned I want no personalities. I have no feeling in the matter, and the only thing that surprised me was that the junior member for Halifax should bring the question up a second time. He has now brought it up a third time. So far as I am concerned, let it drop where it is.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—BRITISH SUBJECTS AS DIRECTORS.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called I desire to ask a question. When we were discussing the Transcontinental Bill, I moved an amendment to the effect that a majority of the board should be British subjects. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) said that a Bill was to be introduced to amend the General Railway Act in that direction. I would ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if that Bill is being prepared and when it will be submited to the House. We are getting near to—well, we are getting nearer to prorogation than we were, and if we wish to pass this Bill, it ought to be brought down now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In order to anticipate the nearness of prorogation the Bill has been prepared; it is ready.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—ALIENS EMPLOYED ON SURVEYS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some answer should be given to-day to the interrogatory which I addressed to the government on Wednesday in regard to the constitution of the committee for inquiry into the question of Alien Labour.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say I must again tell my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that I cannot answer his question. The Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) is away. I expected him this morning, but he has not yet returned. When he returns I shall be able to answer.

CANADIAN—MEXICAN STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. THOMAS EARLE (Victoria, B.C.). Before the Orders of the Day are called I desire to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) for information with regard to tenders for the steamship service between British Columbia and Mexico. 'The Daily Times' of Victoria, an organ of the government, a few days ago, published the following :

In the preliminary agreement made between Canada and Mexico in connection with the steamship service for which tenders are being called, it is provided that Victoria or any other port where business offers will be a port of call for the vessels of the line. This provision of the agreement will also be inserted in the contract with the steamship company.

Now, I understand that in the call for tenders no provision is made for these steamers calling at the city of Victoria, and I would like to ask the minister if it is intended that that shall be inserted ?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). Generally speaking, in these contracts we have a clause allowing the minister to direct the calls to be made. In any case it is intended to have a clause inserted by which the steamships shall call at Victoria.

Mr. EARLE. On their inward and outward voyages?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Both.

Mr. JOHN W. DANIEL. I would like to make a brief reference to the same subject, on the Atlantic and not on the Pacific side. I notice that in the tenders which are called for the steamship service between Canada and Mexico on the Atlantic side, the port of St. John in entirely omitted. There is no mention made that St. John shall be a port of call for the service. I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether St. John is to be entirely excluded from this service or not. I have no doubt in the world that, if St. John were made a port of call there would be a very considerable trade between that port and Mexico to which this steamship service will go. I would like to hear from the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to that matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For these matters the amount of money at our disposal is not very large, and I am not quite in a position to say whether we will be able to deal with both services. But I think I will be able to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLARKE. Are any negotiations going on now respecting the establishment of a fast Atlantic line, and if so, what stage have they reached ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No negotiations other than the additional contract that was laid on the table with the Allan's, and which the hon. gentleman has seen. It was laid on the table some time ago.

Mr. CLARKE. Then the whole thing is over ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not say that, but no negotiations are going on at the present moment.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister any data as to the business to be carried on by these steamers between Canada and Mexico ? I presume some reports have been made as to the nature of the trade that can be worked up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for January supplies the information he requires.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are these steamers going to call at any other port ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We will see what we can do. The money at our disposal is not very large. I do not know yet what arrangements we will be able to make.

THE CANADIAN ARTILLERY ASSOCIATION.

Bill (No. 103) to incorporate the Canadian Artillery Association (Sir Frederick Borden) was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). On introducing this Bill on the 10th of May last, I explained to the House that I introduced it at the request of the Canadian Artillery Association, and that it was similar to a Bill introduced by me and carried through this House in the session of 1900, chapter 99, 63 and 64 Victoria, by which the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association was incorporated. The object was to enable the association to hold property and transact other business. I may add to what I said then that this Bill is precisely similar, almost word for word, to the Bill incorporating the Dominion Rifle Association, and I hope this Bill will be passed without alteration.

On section 9,

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may say in connection with these clauses that this association has already done a great deal of good, and I am satisfied that the skill which has been displayed by the artillery of Canada and by the gunners whenever they have been called upon to give active service, is largely due to the efficient training and instruction of this association. The objects laid down in this section are very worthy.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Quarantine—salaries and contingencies of organized districts and public health in other districts, $150,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Explain.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The committee will notice that there is a very considerable decrease in the amount asked for. I am glad to say that this is due to the fact that the necessary precautions against the introduction of small-pox from the United States seem to be at an end ; in fact, the danger is at an end although there is here and there some expenditure on that account. Last year I was obliged to ask for a considerable sum of money to deal with the frontier, and also to deal with some outbreaks of small-pox in our own Northwest. These outbreaks have practically disappeared and I trust that the cycle of years during which this danger from small-pox has been imminent has passed away and that for several years we will not be obliged to spend as large a sum of money on this account as formerly. The expenditure in connection with quarantine is the same as it has been for several years past.

Mr. BLAIN. How much money was expended last year on some of the different items ?

Mr. FISHER. Last year we spent on public health generally, which covers the head office and some salaries, $9,000 odd. Along the American frontier we spent $28,644. And the Northwest Territorial accounts amounted to $22,000 odd, making a total of $60,000 odd. I am speaking in round numbers. At the Halifax quarantine we spent $9,000, at Sydney nearly $4,000, at Pictou, $300, at Grosse Isle, Quebec, nearly $40,000, at St. John,N.B. $11,500, at Chatham, N.B., $730, at Charlottetown, P.E.I., $1,564, at Vancouver, $800, and at Victoria, N.B., $17,900, making a total of $145,000 odd.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice in the Auditor General's Report, page D—53, in connection with the quarantine service at St. John, an amount of $200 for horse-hire. It is impossible for the quarantine officer at St. John to require a horse for his use unless such horse is like the ancient Pegasus, and is provided with wings because he could only get down to Partridge Island by water. Therefore, it puzzles me very much indeed to know what this amount of $200 for horse-hire means. I also noticed in connection with the public accounts committee that the department had purchased a wagon and harness which were receipted for by the same officer and which are stated to be necessary for the proper carrying out of the service. The quarantine officer there has an allowance, I understand, for boat-hire, so that he may be taken to and fro in the discharge of his duty, but what use he has for a horse I cannot conceive at all unless it is to go fishing or something of that kind. Certainly I think that item should be fully explained. If it is the intention of the department to raise the salary of that officer by that amount of $200 I have nothing to say against it whatever, but I do think that an item of this kind should be fully explained. I cannot conceive what it is for.

Mr. FISHER. The explanation is a very simple one. The wharf is a distance from the hospital and the detention building and sick people who are landed and have to be kept in quarantine have to be taken from the wharf with their luggage and effects to the hospital. There is a horse there for that purpose and a wagon and harness are also provided. There is no possibility of the doctor in charge using his horse for pleasure purposes because the island has only an area of a few acres on which no driving could be done. The horse is never taken away from the island.

Mr. DANIEL. The horse is kept on the island ?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. At what time is the horse taken to the island ?

Mr. FISHER. I think the horse has been there for several years ; or at all events a horse has been there for several years. I do not know whether that particular horse has or not.

Mr. VROOMAN. I notice a large amount of expenditure in the Northwest Territories and I would like an explanation from the hon. minister in reference to some of this expenditure. He will find the accounts at page D—63 of the Auditor General's Report. The first item is that of Dr. James Patterson, of Winnipeg, who has charged for 250 days at $20 a day with travelling and living expenses amounting to $1,196.77. This seems to me a very large amount of money to pay to this gentleman living in Winnipeg for overseeing the quarantine stations in the Northwest Territories. The travelling expenses must have been increased to this amount because of the fact that the gentleman lived in Winnipeg and not up in the Territories themselves. I have looked at the report of this gentleman and of all the items which I see included in the report of the department, his is the most meagre and contains the least information. But the point to which I wish to draw the attention of the minister is the question of the necessity in this part of the service which belongs more especially to the interior of the country of an officer of this kind. I can understand that the service up there needs a head of some kind, but if you look over the report of the Auditor General for the Northwest Territories you find that at points where small-pox existed, some forty doctors were employed, looking after the patients and all of these were paid out of that $24,028. About $15,000 was paid to the medical staff for these cases. On page D—67 there is an item.

Rush, W. T. M.D., attendance, vaccinating, quarantining, &c., July 31st to October 1, 1902, $301.95.

That applies to all the duties connected with these people, and if you go over the report you will find that the same thing occurred in many places. Go to Whitewood, and you will see that Dr. James Budd is credited with establishing quarantine sixty miles, $65. Then go to Oxbow, and there is an item :

Trip J. H., M.D.: medical services, 37 days' attendance at quarantine station at $10 ; 5 visits to country at $12.50 ; team, 5 days at $5 ; telegrams, $2.35 ; medicine, $5—$464.

Thus I cannot possibly see where the services of Dr. Patterson, of Winnipeg, came in, although he was paid in all about $6,000 for these 250 days' service.

I do not wish to say anything in criticism of the charges, but there seems to be no system at all, because, if we take the case of Dr. Smith, at Medicine Hat, we find that he vaccinated twenty-nine people at $1 for each person, and Dr. Calder, at the same place, vaccinated 230 people at 25 cents each. Of course, Dr. Calder is very moderate ; I am not objecting to the charges at all, but it seems strange that in one case you pay 25 cents and in another you pay $1. At Duck Lake we find Dr. Stewart vaccinating 250 half-breeds at 50 cents each. That is a wholesale contract, I suppose. Dr. Smyth then vaccinated twenty-nine patients at $1 each, and Dr. Calder vaccinated 230 at 25 cents each. Dr. Calder was very moderate in all his charges. He travelled 56 miles at 50 cents a mile. He apparently had not then understood that he was in the employ of the government.

The point to which I want to draw attention is that all this work was done at the expense of this country. When these people were unfortunate enough to contract small-pox a medical man was sent to them at once, and all the expenses were paid by the country. In the report of the Minister of the Interior you will see that if immigrants coming into this country are unfortunate enough to be quarantined for any cause whatever, they have to pay their own expenses or be deported with their families back to the country from which they came. I cannot see the justice of making that distinction between two classes of people. It may be that some agent has persuaded an emigrant to come to this country. He may be a poor man with a family of four or five, who comes here with very little money, and may contract some contagious disease upon the boat, perhaps from some one on board or from rats on the ship. Such a man lands here and has no money to pay expenses and he is sent to his home. But up in the Northwest Territories, men who have lived there for years, and who may be in very easy and comfortable circumstances, are unfortunate enough to contract small-pox, the people of this country have to pay the expenses all the way through. I would like the minister to give an explanation of that.

Mr. FISHER. I am very glad to give my hon. friend the information, and I am sure that he is not making these remarks in any spirit of captious criticism, but is simply seeking for information. I shall take up these questions in reverse order. My hon. friend spoke of the expenditure in this department being different from what it is in the Department of the Interior, and also referred to the fact that we make such expenditures in the Northwest Territories. In the Northwest Territories the Dominion has practically to pay the expenses which, in the organized provinces, are borne by the provincial treasury. It is a question, of course, in some cases whether that expenditure should be by a direct vote of this parliament or whether it should be taken out of the lump sum which this parliament votes to the territorial administration for its general administration. The principle has been that what has been that what is an annual charge there year after year should be provided for in a general way by a lump sum which this parliament would vote to the territorial administration for what I might call their territorial disbursements. In the case, however, of public health, and especially in the case of a small-pox epidemic, we have an unusually heavy expenditure, one which has happened to be large in the last year or two, but which I trust may not be at all large this year and may entirely disappear. In these circumstances, it is felt that the government, through the department of quarantine and public health, must pay charges in the Territories just as a provincial government, through its boards of health and public health department, would pay the charges in a province.

The expenditure which my hon. friend is discussing is just such as a provincial government would make. The people who have been helped in these small-pox outbreaks are not well-to-do people. If expenses have been incurred for them, it is because they have been in indigent circumstances, and this being a contagious disease, it is necessary in the interests of the community that it should be dealt with by proper officials, and not by private practitioners. For this reason we have been doing there just such work as the provincial health authorities would do in a province. In the province of Ontario the provincial board of health has done a very large amount of work in connection with outbreaks of smallpox during the last two or three years. My hon. friend has spoken of Dr. Patterson. I may say that Dr. Patterson was chosen as being a most competent man to have general charge of all this work. My hon. friend can easily understand that in such a sparsely settled country as the Northwest Territories, it would not do to trust the work entirely to local men. Very frequently there would be no local man within many miles of the actual case. Then, we might have reports from local men indicating an alarming state of affairs, which on investigation might prove to be not so alarming. All through our quarantine work it has been proven necessary to have some independent oversight over the local men. It is quite impossible for the director general of public health at Ottawa to take this oversight, and for that reason Dr. Patterson was chosen. It might have been possible to get a man at Regina or some other central point in the Territories; but Dr Patterson was considered to possess in an eminent degree the necessary capacity and prestige for the work. The only difference is the slight difference of railway fare when Dr. Patterson is obliged to go to the Territories, though in many instances the journey from Winnipeg would be easier than the journey from Regina or Medicine Hat. The mode of procedure is this. When an outbreak is reported, it is Dr. Patterson's duty either to go himself and investigate it, or to appoint some local man in whom he has confidence and on whose judgment he can rely, to investigate it and report. In many instances Dr. Patterson has had to go and make the investigation. He has found perhaps only one case. He has taken steps to isolate that, and has appointed a physician within convenient reach to look after it and see that the disease does not spread. In other cases, in which a number of people would be affected, a regular quarantine may have to be etablished for the community or for a number of houses. Dr. Patterson's travelling has been for the purpose of holding these investigations. His work has been paid for by the day, because it was work of a temporary character. I did not wish to appoint Dr. Patterson or anybody else as a permanent officer in the Territories at a fixed salary. It happens that the payment last year reached a very considerable sum. I am told that there are very few cases in the Territories at present, that the outbreak is practically over, and therefore I trust that the expenditure this year will be very slight indeed, and next year there may be no expenditure of this character at all. But Dr. Patterson's work has been most efficient and acceptable to the people; he has avoided any friction among the people, and has been able to prevent any serious spread of the disease. My hon. friend has spoken of the different charges for vaccination, in some cases twenty-five cents in others fifty cents and in others a dollar a case. The difference depends entirely upon the nature of the conditions. If a man has a couple of hundred people to vaccinate in a particular locality, he will naturally charge only twenty-five cents. If he has to go fifty miles to vaccinate a few people, he may have to charge more.

Mr. VROOMAN. A larger mileage.

Mr. FISHER. We would have to charge mileage for his travelling expenses, but at the same time he would have to spend considerable time in order to vaccinate a few people. I am informed and have noted in my departmental work that Dr. Patterson's accounts have been very carefully prepared. They have been sent here only after he has carefully examined and initialled them; and I am told by the accountant of the department that these accounts are among the best and most carefully prepared accounts that we have in the department. I understand that Dr. Patterson has a reputation from which we might expect that, and I am glad to know that that is the opinion of the chief accountant and the director general of public health in the department. I think my hon. friend will understand from this explanation that this work is being done in as practical and businesslike a way as possible, under the circumstances, the outbreaks having been very scattered, the distances great and the population sparse.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the minister where the vaccine which is used in these cases is obtained, whether in Canada or in the United States? I believe there are places in Canada where vaccine is manufactured; and that being so, if it is as good a quality as can be obtained anywhere else, it should certainly have the preference.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that Dr. Patterson gets his vaccine at Regina from a firm known as the Canada Drug Company. I do not know where they get it.

Mr. VROOMAN. I would like to ask the minister whether his department or the government have considered the propriety of establishing a department of public health for the Dominion? I see by the report of the director general of public health that there is a resolution from the Canada Medical Association recommending that. I would like to know how the government looks upon it.

Mr. FISHER. No decision has been reached. There are certain constitutional difficulties that might arise if the government should take action. Some people consider that it comes within the jurisdiction of the provinces. The matter is one well worthy of consideration, which I have brought to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is a question in connection with the quarantine, with regard to Manitoba, which I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. minister. I have had a couple of communications from the secretary of the Provincial Board of Health in that province complaining of the manner in which the quarantine regulations are enforced. Knowing nothing personally about the matter, I shall simply read the correspondence :

Winnipeg, May 11th, 1904.

Dear Sir,—For some time past the Dominion government have made the pretense of appointing quarantine officers at certain points in southern Manitoba for the purpose of preventing small-pox from coming into the province. Two of these officials are Dr. Sharpe, of Morden, and Dr. Riddell, of Crystal City, and, I believe, there are others. These officials have regularly drawn their salaries for the past two or three years from the Dominion government, and there is scant evidence as to any value having been received for the expenditure. You can readily understand how inadequate and unproductive such an expenditure would be, by the medical men referred to being located at points far removed from the boundary line.

Some time ago I was advised, after making due inquiries, by the secretary of the State Board of Health of North Dakota, as to the prevalence to a very large extent of small-pox in the vicinity of St. John and Rolla, N.D.; in fact, the disease has been evident in this locality for the past year or two, and whether it is owing to inadequate quarantine provisions by the state authorities of North Dakota, the fact remains that the disease does not appear to be under control or on the wane.

At the present time there are upwards of 70 cases of small-pox in quarantine at St. Johns. This condition of affairs was brought by me to the attention of Dr. Montizambert, director general of public health, Ottawa, some few weeks ago, with the request that proper steps be taken by the appointment of persons along the boundary line to prevent persons from the infected district coming into Manitoba, to which a reply was received that Dr. Riddell, of Crystal City, had been requested to visit St. Johns and report. This report was received by Dr. Montizambert, who communicated the same to me, and was to the effect that about 68 cases of small-pox were in quarantine at St. Johns, but I have not been informed up to the present time, as to what, if any, action has been taken to prevent infected persons coming into the province, although I have requested Dr. Montizambert to so advise me on two or three occasions.

The most grevious complaint which the board has to make is that during the past month not a few cases have been allowed to come into the province from the infected district. The disease first made its appearance at a place named Lundar, in the municipality of Posen, east of Lake Manitoba, of which you doubtless know the residents are principally composed of half-breeds. When informed as to the outbreak I wrote to one of the prominent men at that point asking the source of infection, who replied as follows :—

'I find that a few weeks back a family from the states (Turtle Mountain district, I believe) moved in there, and that the infection came from them.'

Dr. Cleghorn, one of the health officers of the municipality of Argyle, writes of the existence of four cases in the Rock Lake country, in the municipality of Argyle. He says 'the infection was brought in by one John Bell, who had been visiting at St. Johns, N.D. Bell had been in quarantine in the St. Johns district, which district was then, and is now, I believe, infected with small-pox.'

Dr. Morrison, of Belmont, the other health officer for the municipality of Argyle, states that 'four cases have made their appearance in the district south of Belmont. The first case came from North Dakota. The cases are amongst the half-breeds.'

Dr. Parr, health officer for the village of Morden, reports the existence of a case at Morden, having come from township 1 in range 7, being in the municipality of Pembina, and that the infection came into this section from across the line, and that persons have been, and are being permitted to cross the line with perfect impunity.

Another ground of complaint that the board has reason to make is that about a month ago certain Scotch emigrants were brought into the province by the Dominion government, and small-pox having made its appearance among one of their number, all were quarantined near the Louise bridge in St. Boniface. It appears that at Sudbury a number of Ontario settlers were put into this car along with the Scotch emigrants, and were quarantined along with them at St. Boniface, having been exposed to the infection. These Scotch emigrants were kept in quarantine the proper regulation period, but the Ontario settlers were allowed their liberty, after being detained four or five days, and the result of this stupidity, on the part of the Dominion medical officer and immigration commissioner here, was, that these people were allowed to depart to all portions of the province. The first evidence of this most reprehensible proceeding on the part of the Dominion authorities was that one of the passengers, Emory Valley, by name, went to Lauder and infected a whole family, which is now under quarantine at that point, and which will probably cost that municipality of Cameron several hundreds of dollars. This man Valley, after leaving the small-pox impression at Lauder, went to Brandon and wandered about the streets for several days, and then vanished, notwithstanding that the police and health officials of Brandon made all due endeavours to locate him. You will see therefore that the province has just grounds of complaint as to the action of the Dominion authorities in matters involving the administration of public health and the suppression of disease in this province.

You are aware, I have no doubt, that the province has no control or jurisdiction at the boundary line, and that it is necessary that any action taken at that point must be done by the Dominion authorities. What the province is entitled to expect, and should receive, is adequate protection in the premises, and I bring the foregoing facts to your attention for the purpose of giving publicity to the same in the House as a representative from this province, with the object, if possible, that some live steps will be taken to protect the people of this province from the infection from outside points.

I regret to have to trouble you at such great length, but my justification is that the subject fully warrants the same. I will be pleased to hear from you at your earliest convenience.

Yours truly,

E. M. WOOD,
Secretary.

Following that I received another letter, in which Mr. Wood complains very much of the scant courtesy paid these communications. He writes on May 13th :

Dear Sir,—Adverting to the quarantine by the Dominion government along the southern boundary, I beg to say that on Saturday I received a telegram from Dr. Montizambert stating that medical frontier officers have been appointed and guards placed at points in the vicinity of Killarney, Deloraine, Morden and Crystal City. I am nevertheless of the opinion that it would do no harm if the matter was brought by you to the attention of the House.

I think you might also inquire as to the duties of the health officials who have been appointed as quarantine officers and guards at the points referred ; what they have been instructed to do, and how often it is intended that reports shall be received. The province is in great danger, if the order of things which has prevailed for some time past continues with having several epidemics of small-pox at points in the province.

Yours truly,

E. M. WOOD,
Secretary.

The complaint made by the secretary of the Provincial Board of Health is that in the first place the officials who were selected live at inland points, far removed from the boundary and consequently are not in a position to guard the boundary against the importation of disease. I understand that they draw $100 a month in addition to their regular practice, and the complaint is that they render no service for the money. He complains of the tardiness of the answer of his communications although admitting that, on the 18th of May, when he writes, he had, at last received word that at several of these points officials had been placed. But he desires to know, and asks me to inquire on behalf of the province, what the duties of these officers are, also as to their reports, whether there is any stipulated time for these to be made, and generally, what duties are expected of these officers. The minister will recognize how important this matter is, especially now that the stream of immigration into that country is so great. It becomes now a most serious problem not only from a provincial standpoint because it will impose financial burdens upon the province, but because of the dangers to the people through the spread of these infectious diseases, and also because municipalities are likely to be put to large expense in taking charge of these patients.

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) has confused two wholly different questions. One is that of guarding our frontier on the States, and the other is as to danger of importation of disease by immigrants who reach the west by train from eastern sea-board. I will refer to the latter first because it is the most easily disposed of. When immigrants come to the ports on the Atlantic sea-board they must pass through the hands of our quarantine officers at Grosse Isle, St. John or Halifax. If these officials find no disease upon them, they allow them to enter the country. Our quarantine is a quarantine on the boundary or on the sea-board. After the immigrants pass that quarantine, my department has no more control over them and no responsibility for them. They are then in the hands of the Immigration Department and are dealt with by that department. Of course this inspection cannot be absolutely perfect. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) as a medical man, knows that it is impossible to provide a system of inspection which will enable us to detect infallibly the man who will afterwards develop a case of small-pox. As to the cases which are said to have come across the frontier from the United States, it is true that, in St. Johns, North Dakota there was an outbreak of small-pox. We were notified of that and took immediate steps to protect the frontier. Dr. Sharp was appointed at Morden, Dr. Riddell at Crystal City and Dr. Thornton at Deloraine, and Dr. White at Killarney. Dr. Sharp and Dr. Riddell were appointed a considerable time before Mr. Wood wrote to Dr. Montizambert and immediately on our discovery of the outbreak in St. Johns. It is true that Dr. Sharp and Dr. Riddell live at some distance from the boundary but they have a guard under them whose duty it is to watch the trail and every place of passage across the boundary. Of course, these guards are not medical men. It is impossible to get enough medical men to station one at every place where there is a trail across the frontier. You could not find the men, and, if you could find them you could not pay them to stay and carry on this duty of watching, except at salaries which would be quite prohibitive. All we can do is to have the medical officer as near the frontier as possible and where he will be within reach when he is notified of any difficulty or danger. That has been the practice all through the country and it is the only course for us to follow. In a country like Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, where population is sparse and distances are considerable and where the frontier is an imaginary line with trails crossing it at many places, it is physically impossible to station a doctor at every point along the line or to have everybody who seeks to cross medically examined by a doctor. The plan we follow is to have a doctor as near as possible to the principle points, and, if necessary, allow him to employ guards to watch the trail along the means of communication as closely as possible. Then, where there is a case which arouses suspicion the doctor can be called in and make an examination. As a matter of fact this method has been generally successful. My hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) is aware that, even with every care, contagion may pass the boundary. I think my hon. friend spoke of a case of a man who came from St. Johns, North Dakota, where he had been exposed to small-pox. There was nothing to indicate that the man had small-pox or that he would be affected by the disease, yet it is quite true that he might have carried the contagion in his clothes. But no inspection that can be devised by human ingenuity will enable the officers in every case to detect the person who is carrying the small-pox contagion. The hon. gentleman knows that the period of incubation of the disease is considerable and that even a person who does not develop it may carry the contagion in his clothes and luggage. I appreciate our responsibility as to shutting out disease. We are doing our best in that direction and adopting every means possible. In connection with what the hon. member for Marquette has said I may say that, in no instance where any of the provincial health authorities had given us information that there was danger, have we refused to act on that information. In every case, we have taken steps as promptly as possible to guard against danger. Nor have we always waited for information from the provincial authorities, because my director general of public health is in the closest touch with the health authorities of the different frontier states as well as with the Washington authorities, and we are consequently in receipt of information as to the health and the sanitary work of the frontier states. Thus we are advised, perhaps as soon as the provincial authorities, where danger threatens. Wherever danger threatens we appoint an officer. Those officers are appointed temporarily because their services may be needed one month and not the next. The hon. gentleman will agree with me that, in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, where professional services are highly paid, $100 a month is not high for a doctor, even when he is allowed to carry on his own practice as well. If we were to debar these officers from practice, we could not engage them at $100 a month, and probably not at $200 a month, to do this work for the government.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are these officers supposed to report regularly, or are their duties confined to the time when some particular case of disease is before them?

Mr. FISHER. They are appointed by the month. When we consider that the danger at the point on the frontier is past, we notify them that their services are no longer required. While they are on the duty they report regularly as to the condition of affairs, what they have done and so on.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The minister says they report regularly. Does he mean that they report regularly on cases as they arise, or do they report as a matter of routine at certain intervals ?

Mr. FISHER. They report once a month regularly and of course they report when anything special occurs.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Of course, I cannot criticise the hon. minister, for he has shifted the responsibility with regard to the main question to the Immigration Department. As the cases which do not relate to the hon. gentleman's department were the most flagrant I shall take another opportunity of offering criticism. Some of the municipalities in Manitoba have been put to danger, inconvenience and expense by these cases.

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt that my colleague the Minister of the Interior when his estimates are under discussion will be able to give full information on the point.

Mr. WILSON. Has the minister got a quarantine officer at Victoria ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to know if the minster's attention has been drawn to an article that appeared in the 'Citizen' this morning concerning fifteen first-class passengers being quarantined at North Bay. They were passengers from the east. One died on board on the 5th of May. They came up from Victoria to Vancouver where another one was taken sick just thirteen days after the death of the first one, and was taken to the hospital, where it turned out to be a case of small-pox. The other passengers were allowed to come east and were on the train for five days. It does seem to me there must have been carelessness on the part of some person. These people should not have been allowed to land after it was discovered that one person had died on board the ship and another was so bad that he had to be taken to the hospital, and died shortly after landing at Vancouver.

Mr. FISHER. This matter has been brought to my attention although not in this particular form. The steamship 'Athenian' came from Japan, and was examined at our quarantine station at Victoria. The vessel first touches at Victoria and then goes on to Vancouver. The quarantine station for these incoming Pacific lines is at Victoria. The vessel became a coastwise vessel at Victoria, no disease having been discovered on board.

Mr. WILSON. That is not what the article says.

Mr. FISHER. Our quarantine officer at Victoria sent a report by letter, and we have had telegraphic communication with him, and he states that he examined the vessel at Victoria on her coming into the quarantine station there and found no disease. He therefore gave her what we call a free pratique, and the vessel then going on to Vancouver became what we call a coastwise vessel, and came under the usual responsibilities of a vessel within the jurisdiction of the province of British Columbia, just as any other vessel going from one port to another port within the province would be. It appears that during that time a case of small-pox developed, and when the vessel arrived in Vancouver she had that case on board. That case was landed in Vancouver and dealt with by the provincial authorities. The passengers on this vessel were allowed to take the train and come east, and it appears that when some of them arrived in the province of Ontario another case was discovered. It was simply a precaution on the part of the provincial authority of Ontario to hold these people up, because in his judgment they had been in contact with a case of small-pox a short time before. These are briefly the whole facts of the case. As I said a little while ago answering the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) the duty of my department is to examine vessels on arrival at our ports. They are examined with the utmost care and precision, and when no disease is found on these vessels the people are left free to enter the country and then come under the laws of the province in which they may happen to be. It is the same on the eastern sea-board. When a vessel arrives from England and touches at Halifax she is examined by the quarantine there, after which she may go on to any other port in Canada. After she has been examined for quarantine she goes forward as a coastwise vessel. When the vessel gets to Quebec she is examined at Grosse Isle at the quarantine station, and goes on to the port of Montreal and is examined again for quarantine purposes. She is then a vessel in the Dominion of Canada, having passed quarantine at the first port touched, after which she is no longer under our quarantine laws, and we have no longer any control over her or over her passengers.

Mr. WILSON. It seems to be another case of divided authority. I presume that after it leaves the first quarantine station it comes under the control of the Interior Department.

Mr. FISHER. Not in the case of the 'Athenian,' because they were not immigrants.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think it makes much difference whether the people are immigrants or not. When they come to this country and have been exposed to contagious disease, they should come under the control of the quarantine officers. It is a very strange thing that the Dominion officers did not pronounce the disease contagious while the local officers said it was. It is another illustration of how carelessly the machinery for the prevention of that kind of thing is managed in this country. We see every day in the newspapers accounts of people that are landing on our shores who are suffering from various diseases, people who are paupers, and who become a burden on the country. It seems to me there ought to be some way of stopping people, even if they are not immigrants, after they have been exposed to contagious diseases.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend must understand that when people come to this country with no appearance of disease about them it would be an unwarrantable interference with liberty to stop them and have them disinfected.

Mr. WILSON. When a man who is so sick that he has to be taken to a hospital, after having been exposed to a contagious disease, is that not a sufficient reason for stopping him ?

Mr. FISHER. So far as the quarantine in concerned we can only deal with contagious diseases. This disease had not developed when the man came to Vancouver and landed there. It was only after he was taken to the hospital in Vancouver that the case was found to be one of small-pox. But when he landed in Victoria he was not recognized as affected with small-pox. It was after that that the case developed into what was called malignant small-pox, and that was after the passengers had landed and were just as free as anybody else to do as they liked. My quarantine officers had absolutely no right in law to detain those passengers. When the vessel passes our quarantine, my officers take no further account of the passengers at all, we let them go, we have no further knowledge of them. No officer of mine knew that this man went to the hospital afterwards.

Mr. EARLE. Has the quarantine officer at Vancouver no authority ?

Mr. FISHER. Not when the vessel has passed the quarantine at Victoria. If a vessel comes to Vancouver without having touched at Victoria my officer at Vancouver deals with her, but if the vessel comes to Victoria and is there given pratique, or clearance, she then becomes a coastwise vessel and my officer at Vancouver deals with her just as a vessel coming to Victoria as if she had not come across the Pacific.

Mr. WILSON. Is it not the duty of the captain of the vessel to report when a man dies of small-pox on board of his ship and when another man is taken ill just thirteen days after with small-pox, so that the patient may be attended to and put in quarantine ? It does seem to me that it was the captain's duty to have reported that case to your officers.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend does not seem to quite grasp the situation.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps not.

Mr. FISHER. The vessel is dealt with for quarantine purposes according to her papers from her last port of call. This vessel had a clean bill of health.

Mr. WILSON. You will not say that without reference to what occurred on the voyage ?

Mr. FISHER. I mean to say that when a vessel from Yokohama comes to Victoria the officers there have no control with anything that may have occurred before she left Yokohama, where the vessel obtained a clean bill of health.

Mr. WILSON. Notwithstanding the fact that a man has died at sea ?

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the disease develops in the meantime ?

Mr. FISHER. Then he deals with it ; but the hon. gentleman is speaking about a case that occurred before the vessel came to Kobe.

Mr. WILSON. That is not a fact.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman may not know about it, but it is a fact. This was a case of disease that occurred between Nagasaki and Kobe. The vessel at Kobe was thoroughly disinfected by the Japanese authorities, and I may say here that their quarantine work is very effective and thorough. The vessel went on from Kobe to Yokohama and at Yokohama she was given a clean bill of health. Then she came to my quarantine station at Victoria, and the officer's only duty there was to examine the bill of health of the last port of call, which was the port of Yokohama.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not his duty to make an examination of her passengers ?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly, and he did examine her passengers ; but he had nothing to do with what occurred before she left Yokohama.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the minister to say that his only duty was to examine the bill of health given at the last port of call.

Mr. FISHER. What I mean is that his duty, as far as her bill of health was concerned, was only to examine the bill of health given at Yokohama, but he had to examine her passengers. He did examine her passengers, and finding no disease he gave her a clean bill of health. After she was given that clean bill of health she entered the waters of the Dominion, and after the passengers had arrived in the Dominion a case of small-pox developed. That was only after they had landed at Vancouver. It was not on board the vessel at all. The patient was then in the province of British Columbia, on shore and in a local hospital at Vancouver, entirely out of the control or beyond the esponsibility of the quarantine officers. Then the case developed, and the local authorities had to deal with it. Apparently the local authorities did not stop the people who had been in contact with that case before it developed. Some of the passengers who had been on the vessel took the train eastward and came through. The health officer of the province of Ontario thought it advisable to stop them and quarantine them at North Bay, and he did so.

Mr. WILSON. Who will have to pay for that ?

Mr. FISHER. The province of Ontario will have to pay the cost of her own action.

Mr. EARLE. Could the hon. minister state the time that elapsed between the death of the passenger previous to the arrival of the vessel at Yokohama and the time at which this case broke out ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that it was over eighteen days. That is from the death of the man on board the vessel until the passengers landed at Vancouver.

Mr. EARLE. Then the vessel was not properly quarantined at Yokohama ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say as to that. The usual time of incubation, I understand, is fourteen days.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the regulations of the department laid down by the hon. Minister of Agriculture are very unfair indeed to the provincial authorities in those cases where the voyage is technically completed on the arrival of the steamer at the first Canadian port, when it is really not completed until arrival at the second port. The same trouble that has arisen on the Pacific coast has more than once arisen on the Atlantic coast, where steamers have come across the Atlantic and put in at Halifax. After being examined there by the quarantine officer the vessel leaves for St. John, and disease breaks out on the vessel after it leaves Halifax and before it reaches St. John. Under the regulations laid down by the hon. Minister of Agriculture the quarantine officer in St. John takes no action in regard to that matter at all, and the consequence is that the whole difficulty, trouble and expense are loaded on the province, necessitating two sets of quarantine officers, one set under the control of the provincial authorities and the other under the control of the Dominion authorities. I do not think it is at all fair to the place where the voyage is really concluded to have a regulation of that kind. A vessel may touch at the first port of call merely to discharge mails or passengers, whereas the main port of call is the second place arrived at. I certainly think that the department over which the hon. minister presides ought to make some change in these regulations, so that the voyage will be technically completed where it is really completed—at the port where the vessel is going to and where it discharges and takes on cargo. I am aware that we have had some correspondence between our city and the Department of Agriculture in regard to this matter. This is a question that has created a great deal of friction in our city, because we certainly do think it unfair to throw upon the city of St. John the expense of keeping a quarantine officer to go on board and examine passengers and ships when, under the British North America Act, quarantine is placed under the control of the Dominion authorities. I think, if these are the regulations of the department, it is time they were changed in simple justice to the city authorities where the voyage is completed.

Mr. KENDALL. I entirely agree with the remarks of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel), because several incidents similar to those which he has referred to have come under my notice. If the Dominion government undertakes quarantine against disease coming from outside it should not take advantage of a technicality when a vessel calls at one port on her way to her destination. I would like to ask my hon. friend if the expenditures that were incurred there were not met by the Department of Marine and Fisheries instead of by the local authorities, as he says ?

Mr. DANIEL. The expense was met by the city of St. John.

Mr. KENDALL. I would like to ask my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) if the communications which he read to the committee to-day were received by him from a medical man ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The communication sent to me was from the secretary of the provincial board of health, Mr. E. M. Wood.

Mr. KENDALL. Is he a medical man ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. No, he is not a medical man.

Mr. KENDALL. My hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) will readily appreciate that statement that he read to the House must convey the impression that the authorities in that locality are very lax. The hon. member for Marquette being a medical man of good standing himself will agree with me when I say that if the territory to the south of Manitoba was largely infected with small-pox, it would take perhaps 50 or 75 or 100 medical men along the boundary to guard that province from the invasion of persons with small-pox then on them. But persons who had contracted small-pox a few days before might come in dozens or hundreds and yet no number of medical men could be held responsible for an invasion of the disease into Manitoba. I think he will admit that.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I may say that the criticism made by this gentleman was not so much directed to the particular case he refers to along the boundary line except in so far as he had great difficulty in getting any information from the Dominion authorities as to what procedure would be followed in preventing an invasion of small-pox from the United States. He referred more particularly to the influx of Scotch and Ontario immigrants. I presume that Mr. E. M. Wood, who is a very intelligent gentleman and who has been secretary of the Provincial Board of Health for many years, voices the sentiments of the Provincial Board of Health, which is composed of medical men and that he is not doing this off his own bat.

Mr. KENDALL. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) will agree that if they had an intelligent board of health there, there is but one intelligent thing they can do, and that is to vaccinate. Quarantine is all very well as far as it goes, but it is only a very partial preventive against small-pox. There is a divided authority to which the hon. member for St. John has just referred. The quarantine department deals with an invasion of any quarantinable disease from outside the Dominion, but if we have quarantinable diseases occurring on the sea-board in connection with the merchant marine, the officers of the Marine Department have to deal with it, and frequently the question of divided authority is important. I would again suggest that it is very nearly time that arrangements were made whereby quarantinable diseases on the sea-board at least would be dealt with by one department instead of by two departments. I do not know whether the Minister of Agriculture is waiting for recommendations from the medical men of the country or not, but if he is, I think the medical men in this House will secure before the next session recommendations from the various medical bodies throughout Canada to that effect.

There is another matter to which I wish to call his attention. I think that the medical men of Canada would endorse action on the part of the Minister of Agriculture along the line of providing for the establishment of a vaccine station at which medical men could obtain vaccine on which they could rely. We now have to take most of our vaccine from concerns south of the boundary and having had pretty large experience myself in the use of vaccine for some 20 years, I feel safe in saying—and I am sure this will be endorsed by every medical man—that we feel on many occasions that the vaccine we get is not fresh. This is a matter of very great importance to any locality on the occurrence of the outbreak of small-pox. I would urge that the medical men throughout Canada would endorse the action of the Minister of Agriculture if he took steps to provide a vaccine farm for the benefit of the people.

Mr. SPROULE. There are already a number of vaccine farms in Canada. There are two in Ontario, one in Alberta and one in Manitoba.

Mr. KENDALL. Are these not all managed by private concerns.

Mr. SPROULE. Oh, no, one in Ontario is assisted by the Board of Health and is under its direction.

Mr. KENDALL. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has brought that to my attention. The providing of good vaccine is so important that we should not leave it in the hands of speculators, for the temptation when a demand is made for large quantities of vaccine is so great that I fear in many cases old and valueless vaccine would be sent where good vaccine is required. For that reason I hold very strongly that a government vaccine farm should be established, because the medical men of the country would then feel safe in receiving vaccine; at least they would feel sure that no pecuniary interest precluded them from getting the best.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have not some requests to that effect already been made to the department ?

Mr. FISHER. The matter has been discussed more or less, but I do not think there has been any request from medical men officially or from any body of men. The question has been up for consideration.

Mr. WILSON. I think it is most unfair to Ontario in these cases which I have brought to the attention of the House that the provincial government should be charged with the quarantining of 15 passengers at North Bay through the carelessness—I do not think that is too strong a word—of the Dominion officials at Vancouver. The regulations may be wrong, but there is one thing certain to my mind, that the officers of either the Department of Agriculture or of the Interior Department, ought to have the power to stop cases of this kind and to prevent people travelling through the country in cars as they please after having been exposed to contagious and dangerous diseases. I consider it is a most unfair thing to the province.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me there must have been something defective in the examination. I understood the minister to say that all the quarantine officer has to do is to examine the passengers on the vessel and look at the clearance at the last place of call. Now, if I understand correctly, he has to go a good deal farther. He has to inquire into any case of sickness that may have taken place on board or any death and to ascertain the nature of the disease. Apparently this was a case of small-pox and the patient had died. Any intelligent quarantine officer knows that the development of small-pox takes so many days after contagion, and that a vessel might pass one or two ports in the meantime without the incubation having advanced to such an extent that it would be apparent that it was small-pox. If it was brought to his attention that a case had occurred on board and that a patient had died so many days before, it would suggest to him that it was his duty to go further than simply examine the passengers, and if they were apparently in good health allow them to go over the country in any direction.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is quite right, but in this case the criticism does not apply at all. My hon. friend knows that the ordinary period of incubation of small-pox is about 13 or 14 days.

Mr. SPROULE. 14 days.

Mr. FISHER. Fourteen days. The case the hon. gentleman refers to had occurred before the vessel reached the port of Kobé, and eighteen days elapsed between the time of her leaving that port and the time of her arrival at William's Head, Victoria: so that my officer had no reason for thinking that there could be a development of small-pox from that case which had occurred more than eighteen days before he had examined the vessel and after she had been thoroughly disinfected. The individual passenger who afterwards developed small-pox in Vancouver was carefully examined because he was ill. He showed no signs of small-pox, but he showed signs of sickness from having taken too much alcohol, having been drunk during most of the time he was on board.

Mr. SPROULE. How long was it between that time and the time the vessel reached Vancouver ?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose it reached Vancouver the next day.

Mr. SPROULE. And a few hours after he reached the hospital the small-pox was out on him ?

Mr. FISHER. He was not taken to the hospital as a small-pox patient. It was after he had got there, I do not know how long after, that the small-pox broke out on him.

Mr. WILSON. Can the minister tell the date of the arrival of the steamship ?

Mr. FISHER. I am not sure of the exact date.

Mr. WILSON. The article in the 'Citizen' says the man died on the 5th of May, and the other man was taken with the disease on the 18th, which is only thirteen days after.

Mr. FISHER. That is not correct.

Mr. EARLE. The inference is that the ship could not have been properly fumigated at Yokohama.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the minister to say that the examination is made at the first Canadian port at which the vessel touches ? Suppose a vessel is destined for the port of St. John, and she first touches at Halifax, where she is examined and is given a clean bill. If disease develops between Halifax and St. John, which is a run of several hours, does the hon. gentleman mean to say that nothing can be done by the quarantine officers at St. John ?

Mr. FISHER. As a matter of fact, when a vessel comes from England to Halifax, the quarantine officer at Halifax examines it chiefly for the convenience of the ship and the people who land at Halifax ; but the vessel undergoes another examination at St. John, which is a quarantine port. If the vessel were not going to another quarantine port in Canada, the examination at Halifax would be more searching, and the vessel would then be free ; but we have given this concession to the shipowners in order to delay the vessel at Halifax as short a time as possible and have her re-examined at St. John. But the rule is that a vessel shall be examined where she first touches, and after that we have no more responsibility for her.

Mr. KENDALL. In case of contagious disease breaking out on a vessel between Halifax and St. John, would the hon. minister's department be liable for the expense ?

Mr. FISHER. It would stop at St. John.

Mr. KENDALL. Would you put the case into your own hospital ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I hope that is so. If it is so, I hope the minister will take a different view from the view which has been entertained in his department on one or two occasions. That vessel would be a coastwise vessel, would she not ?

Mr. FISHER. Except in the sense that the examination at Halifax was not a complete examination.

Mr. KENDALL. If there were a complete examination at Halifax and a case of disease occurred on the way to St. John, would not the authorities of the Marine and Fisheries Department have to look after the case ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the Marine and Fisheries Department would look after the case when the vessel comes from a foreign port, unless she is under Canadian register.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that last year the expenditure in the province of Quebec was $768.74 and the expenditure in the province of Ontario was $6,133.92. I do not understand why the expenditure is so much more in the province of Quebec, when we consider that most of the immigrants necessarily touch at the province of Quebec and do not touch at Ontario.

Mr. FISHER. I think those items are only for the frontier inspection, and have nothing to do with the organized quarantine ports. The expenditure in Quebec ought not to be under that item at all. It ought to have been under the Grosse Isle quarantine station.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not wish to say anything disparaging of the officer in charge of the quarantine station at William's Head, because I think he is eminently qualified to fill the position. The fact is that the 'Athenian' was given a clean Bill of health at the quarantine station; and after she left the quarantine station and proceeded to Victoria and on to Vancouver, one of the passengers developed some serious illness, was taken to the hospital at Vancouver, was found to be suffering from small-pox, from which he died. Although the minister says he died from alcoholic poisoning——

Mr. FISHER. No, I said that he had been suffering during the voyage and during the quarantine from too much alcohol, that when he was examined at Victoria by Dr. Watt, he was examined as a sick man, and was therefore more carefully examined than he would have been under ordinary circumstances ; that he was landed at Vancouver as a sick man and was taken to the hospital; that he was not supposed to be affected with contagious disease ; but that some time after he reached the hospital at Vancouver, he developed small-pox and died.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I beg the honourable gentleman's pardon. I did not quite catch what he said ; but the fact remains that some forty passengers are rounded up in our isolation hospital and have to be kept at the expense of the city of Vancouver. They have to be quarantined in that hospital, as the city cannot afford to have the small-pox spread and be visited again with this terrible scourge which afflicted us ten or twelve years ago. I think that in such a case, when our officers at Williams Head gives a clean bill of health, and a few hours after the disease breaks out and the city is put to considerable expense, the blame should lie at the doors of the quarantine officer, and it is rather unfair that the Dominion government should not recoup the city. I am not saying that our officers are negligent, because I know that Dr.

Watt, who is our quarantine officer at Williams Head, is one of the best men we have. He has done splendid work at that station, and since he has been in charge we have had very little trouble. This is the first instance in which there has been any. It seems to me that the Dominion government should investigate the matter thoroughly and find out if this man had the small-pox when he was examined by the quarantine officer; and if so, refund the city the expense it was put to.

Mr. FISHER. I have no hesitation in saying that in this individual case, as the facts are reported to me, no possible blame can attach to the quarantine officer at Williams Head. It was quite impossible for him to diagnose the case as small-pox. The question of paying the expenses in Vancouver or elsewhere is a matter of general policy which would have to be settled on general lines. There may be instances where the law may be a little hard, and where perhaps the government might assume the responsibility, but there are many others where it would be very hard to decide. Therefore definite clear lines have been laid down of quarantine responsibility; and when once we begin to doubt, we get into the habit of doing many things which this government should not be called on to do. As far as my own administration is concerned, I must adhere to the clear well-defined lines.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think we can heartily agree in the hon. gentleman's conclusions with regard to this case. To begin with, there was a death from small-pox on board the vessel in question. Of that death there was a record, and the quarantine office must have known it. That in itself should have suggested great care. The officer comes in contact with the sick patient and examines him. We are told that the case was supposed to be one of alcoholic poisoning, but there is no resemblance between that and developed small-pox. The fact that a death from small-pox had occurred should have suggested to the medical man the necessity of ascertaining whether the symptoms in the case before him were not those which might be expected in the development of that disease. There was to say the least some carelessness, or otherwise the medical officer would have been sufficiently suspicious to look for symptoms of the same disease. True the vessel might be disinfected and the clothing, but often articles escape disinfection, which afterwards, when brought into contact with the human body, communicate the infection. There was a case of sickness on board which developed a few hours afterwards into small-pox. It was only a short time from the time the vessel left the quarantine station at Williams Head until she landed at Vancouver, and immediately on this patient being taken to the hospital, the small-pox was quite apparent. The pustules had developed, which could not have been the case if there had not been symptoms apparent for some time before. Take the temperature, the temperature of a patient suffering from alcoholic poisoning and that of one suffering from small-pox would be different.

Mr. FISHER. His temperature was normal.

Mr. SPROULE. It might have been, but I am afraid it would be quite difficult to convince medical men of that.

Mr. FISHER. It is so stated by medical men.

Mr. SPROULE. The symptoms must have been apparent when the man was lying ill, and there must have been some carelessness or they would not have escaped notice.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. There is what appears to me a weakness in the quarantine regulations which I pointed out on a former occasion. In the province of Nova Scotia, for instance, when a vessel leaves an American port and calls at a Canadian port, she is examined, but when she leaves the Canadian port and then proceeds to another Canadian port, this disease may develop during the voyage. No notice is taken if the disease breaks out after the ship has left one Canadian port and reaches another, the vessel being considered as a coastwise vessel. The hon. minister should look into that and see if the regulations could not be so amended as to meet cases of this kind which may arise any time.

Mr. MACPHERSON. After this man landed in Vancouver, he was examined and found to be suffering from small-pox. Could not the Dominion officer have sent this boat back to quarantine?

Mr. FISHER. That is not the interpretation put upon the law by the Department of Justice. Once a vessel has got a clear bill of health, we have no authority over it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. After having been examined at Williams Head and after she had reached Victoria, the disease broke out.

Mr. FISHER. The examination takes place between Williams Head and Victoria. It finishes just as she goes to Victoria. The doctor goes on board and frequently goes to Victoria with the ship. And, if he does keep her there, it is only for a couple of hours till she reaches the wharf at Victoria. Williams Head and Victoria are one port.

Mr. MACPHERSON. In the supposititious case, this vessel does not call at Victoria, but will go direct to Vancouver. After having passed Williams Head upon going to Vancouver, she is not a coastwise vessel until she reaches Vancouver. It is a hardship to Vancouver that the regulations should be as they are. As a matter of fact this disease is brought in by a foreign vessel and landed on our shores in Vancouver. In the particular case that has been referred to, I do not think there is any possible chance of the disease spreading. But the fact of these people coming in causes the city of Vancouver to be put to very heavy expense. My impression is that the quarantine regulations should be such that, if any disease develops within fourteen days after the arrival of a vessel at quarantine, the Dominion government should be responsible, because the fact that it develops in that time proves that it was on the vessel.

Mr. WILSON. Is there any person who can tell us how the fifteen passengers got away that were reported to be in quarantine at Vancouver ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would like to set the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) right about that. After the disease had broken out and the patient had died, our authorities in Vancouver rounded up all the passengers who had been on the boat and who were in the city. Of course, they had been going about the streets for three or four days. They have got them isolated now.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I notice that some of the hon. gentleman's officials are paid $100 a month while others are paid $150 a month. In some of the border towns, where apparently, there would be more work to do in connection with quarantine, the pay is only $100 while, for instance, Dr. Tyerman, of Prince Albert, received $150. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) will find it at page D—66 of the Auditor General's Report—salary for June, 1902, $150 and expenses $120.

Mr. FISHER. I can only say that the payments to Dr. Tyerman were made on Dr. Patterson initialling and authorizing the account. I cannot state now the reason why in this case $150 was paid, unless this gentleman had to be in constant attendance on some case at $5 per day for a month. In the cases the hon. gentleman refers to of officers on the frontier, these are appointed at a stated salary. These officers are appointed from here. But in other cases, Dr. Patterson is authorized to make what arrangements he can and he must initial all accounts.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I see that Dr. Hughes has been paid $100 a month for a certain portion, and from 1st April to June 30th, $200 a month. Why was that?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that Dr. Hughes, during part of the time, was absent from home being sent down to the frontier, and he would not go for less than this salary. We could not get any other man, so we sent him. It was a temporary matter.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I do not know whether the minister has explained what seems an excessive charge for Dr. Patterson. I see charges $20 a day. That is as much as a cabinet minister receives.

Mr. FISHER. But my hon. friend (Mr. Rosamond) will see that it is not a yearly salary, but is paid for 250 days. When the arrangement was made it was expected that it would be for a short time.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Dr. Patterson gets not only $20 a day, but living expenses as well. This puts him in a better position than a cabinet minister who receives only $7,000.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, we are not in it with these professional men.

Mr. ROSAMOND. The director general only gets $4,000 a year which is much less in proportion to what this quarantine officer receives. I would like to know why Dr. Patterson is paid what seems to me an excessive salary ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not believe we could get a medical man who would take the responsibility and do the work at less than $20 a day. I confess that it seems to me to be a high rate, but I find that professional men, lawyers and doctors, insist on high salaries when paid by the day.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I venture to say there are hundreds of medical men in the west who would be glad to take the position at a much less rate than that.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not like to unduly criticise the charges of medical men and I realize that, in the west, most of them are deserving of a good fee. But there seems to be no uniformity in the charges that are made for the services rendered to the government. For instance, Dr. Tyerman, whose case I have called to the attention of the minister, charged $150 for his June salary, and I notice he charges 944 miles at $1 per mile for travelling. I am aware that that is the usual charge per mile for a limited number of miles, and I have no doubt that the number of miles is correct. But I see on page D—65, Dr. Calder, of Medicine Hat, whom I know to be a good medical man and a good surgeon, who was resident surgeon for a time of the Medicine Hat hospital, —who has always been reasonable in his charges to the government, charging for instance, 25 cents for vaccinations, while others charged $1—charges for 56 miles at only 50 cents per mile. The minister will see that there is no uniformity in these charges.

Mr. FISHER. I can only say that these accounts are submitted to Dr. Patterson, and are gone over by him and that he audits and initials them. I suppose he knows the circumstances under which the charges are made. I can readily understand that one man might have to drive a long distance and take a pair of horses and a driver and so have to charge more per mile for driving a long distance than another would have to charge for a short distance which could be made with a single buggy and himself as driver. At the same time, I confess that I do not know that in one case there is a charge of fifty cents and in the other a charge of $1.

Mr. SPROULE. Is Dr. Patterson still in the employ of the government ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, when he has any work to do.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say he was a very careful man. How are his accounts paid ?

Mr. FISHER. These people send in their accounts regularly, I suppose about once a month, and they are paid as they are sent in. There might be a few small accounts kept over until they accumulate, but I think they are sent in once a month.

Mr. SPROULE. I find Dr. Patterson's account on page D—63 :

Nov. 16, 1901, to June 30, 1903, 250 days at $20 ; travelling and living expenses, $1,196.77 ; telegrams, $136.81 ; stenography and type-writing, $63.75 ; disinfectants, $7.50 ; total, $6,404.83.

This account extends over three years, and a good share of that ought to have been in last year's report. If Dr. Patterson is such an exact man, it is strange that his account should extend back over three years, and he gets paid for 250 days at $20 a day, besides these extras I have read. That seems to be a made up account, extending over a long time, and does not indicate business habits on the part of Dr. Patterson.

Mr. FISHER. There was one year, I forget which, when we ran out of money for some time, and had to wait until the House had voted it before we could pay the accounts. We had heavy accounts to pay a long time after they were due. What my hon. friend has read corroborates what I am saying. He will see that Dr. Patterson's account extends over a period of a year and eight months, he was paid for 250 days ; so he was not by any means paid for all his time ; it was only occasional days that he was paid for.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not think it is a proper system to allow a man like Dr. Patterson, who is a very active politician in the city of Winnipeg——

Mr. FISHER. Is he ?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend knows well he is, or his salary would not be so high.

Mr. FISHER. No, that makes not a bit of difference. It is the profession, not the politics, that makes the salary high.

Mr. BLAIN. What I say is this : Here is a man located in the city of Winnipeg who has absolute control of that Northwest district. If he employs a man to do some outside service for him, a professional gentleman, the latter sends in his account, and Dr. Patterson has authority to pay the man $100 a month or $200 a month just as he likes.

Mr. FISHER. That is not quite a fair presentation of the case. Dr. Patterson knows the conditions and circumstances, and what arrangements he made, and he initials the account to show that according to those arrangements and under those conditions and circumstances, he thinks it a reasonable account. My hon. friend knows that is the regular custom in all branches of the public service. The official who has charge of that branch sends in the account to the department initialling it and declaring that he believes it to be a proper and just account, and the department takes his initials as a sufficient guarantee.

Mr. BLAIN. It is giving too much power to an official of that kind.

Mr. FISHER. Let me add that if in such account there seems to be anything unusual or improper then the head officer of the department here has the right to criticise it and send it back for readjustment. That is not unfrequently done. As I said a little while ago, in Dr. Patterson's case that did not seem to be necessary because the officers here tell me his accounts have always been in very good shape.

Mr. BLAIN. It is like the case of the minister. Here a minister comes forward with a large expenditure asking for a vote $160,000. The hon. gentleman comes before the committee to explain the vote, and in the accounts that were passed and paid last year we find one man getting $100 a month and another getting $200 a month, all doing work in the same part of the country. The hon. gentleman was asked for an explanation, and he says, this officer of mine has absolute power, and I can give no explanation of this increased expenditure. Dr. Patterson has power to make the mileage $9 per mile or $20 per mile. That is the objection I take to this item. I think the hon. gentleman should prepare a schedule of rates to apply to that section of the country, and Dr. Patterson in the city of Winnipeg should be compelled to live up to those rates. He is an active politician in the city of Winnipeg and he should not have a right to employ doctors all over that country and pay them as he wishes.

Mr. FISHER. Is he an active politician ? I do not know.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend need not ask that, because Dr. Patterson would not be in that position if he was not a good supporter of my hon. friend.

Mr. FISHER. I really do not know.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure this other gentleman, Dr. Shearman, is.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman's neighbour (Mr. Roche) could tell us more about Dr. Patterson than I could.

Mr. BRODEUR. Did not Dr. Patterson oppose the Minister of the Interior ?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend seems to know a good deal about the matter. Perhaps he would be good enough to say whether he did or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that he opposed the Minister of the Interior ?

Mr. BLAIN. I am informed there are many Liberals in that part of the country in the same box.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not think Dr. Patterson would at all deny that he was friendly to the Liberal party. I do not criticise this case, but I can vouch for Dr. Patterson being a good staunch Liberal.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to hear it. I will have greater confidence in him than before.

Mr. BLAIN. As I have already suggested, I think it would be better policy for the minister to lay down a schedule of rates and hand it to Dr. Patterson, and give him absolute instructions in respect to this matter. I think it is putting altogether too much power into the hands of a special officer in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows that that is done with the chief officer in every branch of the service.

Mr. BLAIN. There are no such accounts like this in other branches. But, leaving that, I was going to remark that a great number of immigrants are coming in now from the old countries, some of them of a very desirable character and some which the Canadian people are taking exception to. My hon. friend knows that a considerable amount of disease is brought over by immigrants in these vessels. The discussion that has taken place has disclosed the fact that not a very thorough examination of these immigrants takes place at the quarantine stations because sometimes they pass by and in a day or two disease breaks out.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, that is possible.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not going to discuss that now but what I was going to say was this : Would it not be advisable to put medical officers on board of these vessels on which 300 or 400 immigrants are coming out ?

Mr. FISHER. They all have medical officers.

Mr. BLAIN. Not in the employ of the government.

Mr. FISHER. No, but in the employ of the ships.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the money would be better expended, if, when 200 or 300 immigrants take passage on a vessel, the Dominion government were to have a medical health officer on that vessel to make a thorough and complete examination of the immigrants so that when the vessel arrives at Halifax, or St. John, or Victoria, he will be able to give a clean bill of health, so that we would not have such cases occurring as those which have come up for discussion this afternoon.

Mr. FISHER. It is just that kind of thing that is done by the ship's officers.

Mr. BLAIN. They are not responsible to the government.

Mr. FISHER. No, but they are responsible to the ship-owners and the ship-owners are extremely anxious that no difficulty should arise. The steamship-owners impress upon the medical men employed by them the extreme necessity that there is for careful supervision so that when a ship does arrive at quarantine it shall not be delayed. One of the most serious difficulties that ship-owners have to meet with is delay at quarantine, and they take the most extreme pains on all their vessels so that they may obtain a clean bill of health at once. With that object in view they impress upon their own medical officers the greatest care, and if the medical officer finds any disease upon a ship that is quarantinable the case is immediately segregated and quarantined on board the ship in such a manner as to prevent the disease spreading. We know all about that and I can assure my hon. friend that it is the general practice of the doctors on board ships which carry immigrants. Of course I want to say in regard to quarantine work that there are no human means by which disease can be absolutely and entirely shut out. Our quarantine prevention is only just so much as can be done. Cases of the kind that occurred on the 'Athenian,' may occur at any time. There are phases in the course of disease which are such that no doctor can possibly, entirely and always successfully diagnose. These are rare cases but they sometimes occur. We can only make our rules and our laws such as to meet the ordinary course of disease and deal with it in the ordinary way.

Mr. BLAIN. If a vessel arrives at Halifax with 200 immigrants on board, how long would she stay there to permit of the examination of the passengers?

Mr. FISHER. In the first place the doctor on the ship makes his report. In the second place the whole of the people on board are passed under the eye of the medical officer. Medical officers who are accustomed to this kind of work are generally quick to detect any indications of debility or disease, and after they do so detect them they make a special examination. For one of these documents in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, a mere glance is sufficient to show that a person is not affected by any ordinary disease and that is the way the inspection is made. I am reminded that the evidence of the ship's surgeon is taken under oath. He makes a statutory declaration and that statement is prima facie evidence as to the conditions on board.

Mr. EARLE. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that the ship is detained at the quarantine station while the examination of the passengers is made? After the medical officer has obtained the report from the medical officer of the ship does he not go on board the ship and make the examination on the way ?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter of convenience. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Earle) is referring to the practice at Williams Head. Williams Head is some three or four hours out of Victoria.

Mr. EARLE. It is eight miles from Victoria.

Mr. FISHER. Well then it is only about an hour from Victoria. When Dr. Watt stops the vessels at Williams Head, if everybody appears to be all right and he can get through with the inspection in an hour or two, the vessel stays there and he does not go on to Victoria. Sometimes he does go into Victoria and then returns. In that respect he tries to suit the convenience of the ship as much as possible. If it is a little late and the captain wants to get into Victoria before dark he will go on board and make the examination there. If not, he may keep the vessel at Williams Head while making the examination.

Mr. EARLE. In reference to the case of small-pox that occurred, it strikes me that when a ship comes in and the report of the medical officer shows that a case of small-pox had been on board and that only a short time would elapse before the expiration of the period for incubation, it would be better to detain the ship. In this case such a course would have been effective in preventing an outbreak of the disease.

Mr. FISHER. In this case there was a difference of four days. There were 18 days between the time of the vessel's leaving Kobe where she was disinfected by the Japanese quarantine authorities and her arrival at Williams Head where she was examined by Dr. Watt. That would leave a margin of four days and I may say that most medical men would consider that as a sufficient margin.

Mr. EARLE. I was mistaken in the time. The statement in the press was that only 13 days had elapsed.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. minister keeping up the practice of employing medical men in various towns throughout the country which prevailed before ? I see in the Auditor General's Report the following :

Beaver Hills : McCrimmon, A. A., M.D., salary. July 1 to Sept. 5, 1902, Jan. 2 to June 30, 1903, at $100, $813.43.

Bruce Mines : Parker, F., M.D., salary, July 1 to Sept. 5, 1902, April 1 to 15, 1903, May 1 to June 30, 1903, at $100, $469.99.

Then there is one at Fort William, Dr. Hamilton, and two at Owen Sound.

Owen Sound—

Hershey, J. A., M.D., salary, April 15 to June 30, 1903, at $100, $253.33.

McCullough, J. A., M.D., salary, July 1 to Sept. 5, 1902, at $100, $216.66.

Mr. FISHER. Since the year that the Auditor General's Report covers we have practically done away with this practice because the danger has ceased. At the present time there are two officers in Ontario, one at Sault Ste. Marie as there are still some small-pox cases reported to exist in some of the lumber camps in Minnesota, and one at Rainy River, also due to the existence of some cases in the lumber camps in Minnesota. These are the only two that are in Ontario. We dismiss them as soon as the danger seems to disappear.

Mr. SPROULE. One or two of the members on this side wish to have a little explanation on some of these items and perhaps one might be allowed to stand.

Mr. FISHER. This is only one item.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

OTTAWA ELECTRIC COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 110) respecting the Ottawa Electric Company.—Mr. Champagne.

Mr. BIRKETT. Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that the Bill be not now considered but be referred back to the committee for further consideration. He said : My object in doing that, Mr. Chairman, is that the Bill in its present condition——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If you wish to refer it back to committee again that would be done on the motion for third reading. When the Bill has been considered in committee and reported to the House then on the third reading you could make this motion.

Mr. BIRKETT. My objection to the Bill in its present position is that there seems to be quite a misunderstanding even among those who are anxious to have the Bill passed in its present form. Even some of the shareholders of the company do not seem to quite understand the Bill as it has been reported by the Private Bills Committee. The Bill asks for power to purchase shares in another company. That matter was simply disposed of by the solicitor who had charge of the Bill in the Private Bills Committee saying that the object in asking for the increase of capital from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 was to acquire more power and the reason he gave for that was that a hydraulic engineer is now surveying and taking the soundings of water powers on the upper Chaudière, and that in all probability the raising of the water from its present level would dispose of some of the water privileges that are there now and they want additional capital to purchase these water powers. The object of those who are asking for the passage of this Bill is to acquire sufficient stock to give them a controlling interest in some of the now existing electric companies of the city. The city of Ottawa objects to this on the ground that there are now three electric companies in the city. Two of these are active and the other is not active. One is the Ottawa Electric Company which is the outcome of the old Chaudière Company and the Standard. The Consumers is an active company doing business, and I understand doing a good business. The Metropolitan obtained a franchise from the city I think, in 1898, but they never materialized. They spent a large amount of money but never supplied any electricity. The objection the city takes to the Bill is that there is a condition attached to the franchise given to the Consumers' Company. The object of the city of Ottawa in granting a charter to the Metropolitan Company and to the Consumers' Company was to secure competition in electric light with the Ottawa Electric Company. At the time that the franchises were granted to these two companies, there was only the one company, the Ottawa which had been formed by the amalgamation of the Standard Company and the Chaudière Company, and the consumers of electric light generally were under the impression that they were paying more for electric light than they should. The charter of the Ottawa Electric Company provided that the company could only acquire stock, powers, or securities of other electric companies as consideration for goods, wares or merchandise, supplied to such other companies in the ordinary course of business. It is now sought to have this provision struck out. That is the reason why the city objects to this. They have no objection to the increase of capital. The company use it for any purpose they like other than to acquire a controlling power in either of the existing companies ; if they could acquire such a control it would be greatly to the detriment of the city.

The clause to which we object is paragraph 2 of section 7 :

> Acquires shares in the capital stock, debentures and securities of other electric companies or of companies possessing powers similar to those of the company, as the consideration for goods, wares, or merchandise, sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.

Now they want to amend that by striking out all words after the word 'company" which will permit them to acquire shares of other companies.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. What power would that give them ?

Mr. BIRKETT. That would give them power to control all the electricity we have in the city. If they acquire a controlling power in the other two companies, competition so far as electric light is concerned, is at an end in the city of Ottawa. A great deal has been said about the company not paying any dividends. There are various opinions upon that subject. Personally I am not in a position to express an opinion other than what I have heard. The company to-day stands with a capital of $1,000,000 but it is questionable whether they have received the million dollars or not, whether that million dollars has not been watered to such an extent that the company has received but a very small portion of what it should have received from that amount of capital.

An instance has been brought to my notice to-day ; that is, that when the amalgamation between the Standard and the Ottawa companies took place they paid an annuity, which they have continued to pay, to one gentleman of $15,000 a year. That $15,000 has been paid out of impaired capital, and amounts to one and a half per cent on the gross capital of the company. If the company were deriving any benefit from the paying of that annuity, the shareholders would not be in the position they are in to-day, of receiving no dividends on their stock. What I would like the committee to do is to consider clause 2, and the advantages which the company wish to derive from striking out the latter portion of it to the detriment, not only of the city, but of every citizen of Ottawa. We all know that it is much easier to create a monopoly than to destroy it after it has been created ; and if this company is allowed to have this enactment, we shall have one of the greatest monopolies in the city of Ottawa to be found in the whole Dominion. I may say that at the present time the price we are paying in Ottawa for electric light is not less than the price paid in other cities. I saw a telegram from Hamilton to-day informing me that the price paid there was about the same as ours, although there is no competition in that city. If by the passing of this Bill competition is taken away, instead of the Bill being sent back to the committee to have the matter, if possible, adjusted, the result may be to impose a heavy tax upon the citizens of Ottawa. I would, therefore, ask this committee not to enact this legislation, which would be so detrimental to the citizens. I ask it in the spirit of fair-play, as one of the representatives of the city. I am satisfied that the government do not wish to do less for the city than they would do for a private individual; and no individual would do or assist in doing to another what this company is asking to be done to the city. I trust that this will not be a case of legislating for a few when the many are interested. Let us have legislation for the many where the few are interested. I leave the matter in the hands of the committee, trusting that it will have due consideration. Before sitting down I wish to say that when this matter was before the Private Bills Committee, out of the seventy-nine members of this House of which that committee is composed, there were only thirty-three present, and the Bill was carried by a vote of nineteen in favour of it and fourteen against, a majority of only five. There has been a good deal of comment as to why I, as a member of that committee, was not present on that occasion. I do not suppose that this committee is interested in my private affairs, but I can explain my absence in a very few words. I was not present at the meeting of the committee simply because I was prevented by circumstances over which I had no control. I was not at the House on the evening previous and did not get my mail, hence I did not receive the notice of the meeting, and did not know of it. I was attending to other business when, perhaps, I should have been here. I hope the committee will consider this matter in the light in which I have endeavoured to place it before them.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is there an amendment moved?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We have not yet arrived at a stage when an amendment can be moved.

Mr. PUTTEE. There is an amendment standing in my name to be moved on the third reading of the Bill; but there was an understanding that it would be preferable to have the Bill sent back to the Private Bills Committee without any instructions except for further consideration. If that can be done, that is far the best thing to do.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The committee has no power to refer a Bill back. The House can do that.

Mr. SPROULE. I move that the committee rise and report progress for the purpose of having the Bill referred back to the Private Bills Committee. I do so for what I regard as a very good reason. It is quite clear what the aim of the promoters of the Bill is. I remember very distinctly the fight that took place in this House and in the Private Bills Committee over the new company that was chartered some years ago for the purpose of giving permanent competition in furnishing electric light and power to Ottawa. That was the special plea put forward for the granting of that charter, and the promoters of the Bill were quite content to have the clause put in which we are asked to throw out to-day, that is, that the company should not be allowed to buy the stock of other companies except on special lines, so that amalgamation would be prevented. There was no objection to that on the part of the promoters of the Bill, and the city of Ottawa, through its council, represented that that was its desire as well. All that was wanted was to secure permanent competition. The committee was content with that explanation, and passed the Bill. That competition has gone on for years, and now an effort is made to increase the stock of the company. The promoters of this Bill do not disclose the real object of increasing the stock. They represent that it is for the purpose of increasing the water power of the company, whereas it turns out that the object is to enable the company to get control of other companies in the same line. If the committee had understood this, I do not think it would have granted it, and I am quite sure that if the House understands it, it will not consent to the passage of this Bill for the purpose of forcing what would be a monopoly for all time to come on the city of Ottawa.

Mr. CLARKE. I am not a member of the Private Bills Committee, consequently I was not present at the meeting in question.

Mr. COWAN. The matter was discussed very fully on both sides for about an hour and a quarter, and the attendance was probably the largest that I have seen at the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. LANCASTER. How many were present and voted for it in the committee?

Mr. COWAN. Thirty-three voted—19 for the Bill and 14 against it.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not think this committee should be guided entirely by the fact that there were thirty-three present in the Private Bills Committee when this measure was before it and that nineteen voted one way and fourteen the other. The substantial fact is that the representative of the city of Ottawa and our colleague in the House (Mr. Birkett) enters a protest against the passage of the Bill in its present form for reasons he has given. I am sure that those who are promoting the Bill and those who are opposing it could, if the opportunity were given, come together and arrive at some compromise. I think this measure should be held over, in view of the strong protest made against it, and the parties given an opportunity to come to an understanding.

Mr. LENNOX. I hope that this measure will not be pressed through to-night and that an endeavour will be made to reach a compromise. We are all interested in it to a greater degree than we are in any ordinary Bill. For a large portion of the year, and for an increasing portion every year, we are spending our lives in Ottawa and are doing a good deal to improve the city. I understand that it is the ambition of the right hon. gentleman who leads the House—a very laudable ambition—to make Ottawa the Washington of the north. And I think therefore, we should be very careful not to do anything that will embarrass the citizens in advancing the interests of their city. I do not know anything about what took place in the Private Bills Committee, but the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) has certainly made a very strong plea for reconsideration of the matter, and I think no harm, but good will result by our not adopting the Bill to-day.

Mr. GALLIHER. I was present in the Committee on Private Bills during a considerable portion of the time this Bill was being discussed. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) wants that Bill to go back again in order that some compromise may be arrived at. The difference between the two parties is simply this: The Ottawa Electric Company, in their charter, are restricted from purchasing the stock of other companies except in payment for supplies, and they want to be allowed to purchase the stock without any restriction. On the other hand, the city of Ottawa wants to except from such power the stock in the two other companies, the Consumers and the Metropolitan.

Mr. CLARKE. They are the only other electric light companies in Ottawa.

Mr. GALLIHER. Will the hon. gentleman suggest any possible way by which they could arrive at a compromise ?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, if I am correctly informed, there is a limitation in the charters of the other two companies—the Metropolitan and the Consumers—as to the maximum price they can charge for light, but there is no such limitation in the charter of the Ottawa Electric Company. While I am not authorized to speak on anybody's behalf, it seems to me that a compromise might be reached whereby the maximum price which the Ottawa Company can charge would be limited to the price fixed in the charters of the other two companies.

Mr. LAVELL. The original Bill suggests a method by which a compromise might be reached. Under the original Bill, paragraph 8, provision is made by this parliament whereby the company may purchase the franchises of certain electric light and power companies, but there is a proviso which limits the right of purchase, and when they do acquire the franchises of those other companies named in the original Act, they take them subject to a very important proviso. I gather from what has been said by the hon. member for Ottawa that that is the point which most affects the city. The proviso subject to which the Ottawa Electric Company may take possession of the franchises and rights of the companies named in its charter is this :

> Provided that after any such purchase, lease, or other acquirements, working arrangement or amalgamation as aforesaid, is entered into, the company shall not, without the consent by by-law or otherwise of the municipality of the city of Ottawa, or of the city of Hull, respectively, as the case may be, increase the ordinary prices or rates charged by any of the said other companies for electric light in the city of Ottawa or in the city of Hull, respectively, at the time such lease, purchase or other acquirement, working arrangement or amalgamation is entered into.

That is a very important proviso. In 1894 when this charter was asked for, the Private Bills Committee would not permit the Ottawa Company to acquire the franchises of the companies definitely named without some precaution to protect the two municipalities. I know not what may be in the minds of the city council of Ottawa or the hon. member for Ottawa, with respect to a possible compromise, but in addition to the suggestion thrown out by my hon. friend from West Toronto, there is this suggestion in the original Act itself. I think there is considerable more in this Act than the private interests of either the Ottawa Electric Company or the Ottawa city, because the second clause touches on a principle which will be very far-reaching in its effects, if it is going to be accepted as a precedent by this House. I do not want to go into the merits now, although if the Bill goes so far as the third reading, I shall consider myself bound to do so, but I call attention to this point, that that section of the Bill, if passed in the form in which it is now, practically recognizes the principle that an electric light company can hold the stocks and control the interests of any other similar company. That, if carried out to its full extent, would warrant the most complete merger that can be devised and be of great assistance to the formation of large trusts. Hon. members will remember the late dispute and litigation over the Northern Securities Company, which after all was only what is asked for in this Bill. If parliament is prepared to recognize a principle which leads to the formation of great trusts without the interference of legislative authority, it will be perfectly safe to pass this particular clause, but I draw attention to the point as affecting the general interests of Canada. As to whether some form of compromise may be arrived at between the city and the Ottawa Electric Company, it seems to me that there is a basis for compromise in the charter itself, and that some understanding might be reached which would enable the company to do this business and yet prevent the citizens of Ottawa from feeling that they are in the clutches of a great monopoly. I would call attention to the fact that the Bill itself, in every one of its clauses, very plainly points to the machinery for creating such a monopoly, for not only is the capital to be increased—against which I have not the slightest objection—but clause 3 of the Bill increases its borrowing powers by fifty per cent. That is, the original Act allows them to borrow up to fifty per cent of the paid up stock, while this amending Act makes provision for borrowing up to seventy-five per cent. The first and third clauses, I would be personally willing to support, but, taken in connection with the second clause the whole Bill points in the direction of an attempt to create a huge monopoly.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think that any good purpose can be served by insisting on this legislation being passed through in what, I must say, is, under the circumstances, a very hurried way. The hon. member from Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) has told us in a very few words why he thinks this legislation will injuriously affect the city of Ottawa ; and it seems to me that hon. members of the House might take a hint from that and consider how it will affect the whole Dominion of Canada. In my opinion there is a good deal of private legislation passed without hon. gentlemen, either in the committee or in the House, considering it from the standpoint of its effect upon the Dominion at large, I do not understand that legislation is to be passed simply because those who are interested ask for it and people at the moment do not see reason for objecting to it. I think the onus rests upon every hon. member to look further and consider whether legislation is wise in the interest of Canada as a whole. Unless we have reason to believe that legislation is in the interest of the Dominion, whether public or private, I, for one, until better advised hold that we ought not to pass it. There seems to be a disposition to overlook this point and to pass legislation simply because it is asked for. In passing the Bill in its present form, it seems to me, the committee has run counter to the principle actuating other Select Committees so far as I have knowledge of their proceedings. For instance, in the Railway Committee, when some railway seeks to buy up or amalgamate with other railways that might compete with it, the committee always insists that it shall be upon terms that shall afford due protection to the public interest. Now, in this case we find that the Act of Incorporation of the Ottawa Electric Company, passed in 1894 provides that this company may acquire shares in the capital, stocks, and debentures and securities of other electric companies or companies possessing powers similar to those of the company as the consideration of goods, wares and merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business. It is these final words, 'as the consideration for goods, wares and merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business' that it is proposed to strike out. So, the qualification or limitation, by no means a small one, it is sought deliberately to strike out. And, apparently nobody advocating this Bill pays the House the compliment, or does hon. members the justice, to explain why this limitation is to be removed, and why this Act, passed in 1894, apparently carefully drawn and fully considered and now in force for ten years, is to be thus changed. The principle involved, it seems to me, is a most important one. Under this legislation, passed ten years ago, the city of Ottawa has acted and grown ; under it the people of Ottawa have dealt, apparently supposing that the Dominion parliament would support them in the conclusion, reasonably drawn, that their interest as defined by the Act would not be prejudiced. The people of all Canada, for that matter, have a right to suppose that no legislation will pass this House without due reason given, to change the law in the light of which they have carried on their business and made their arrangements. The city of Ottawa, assists or refuses to assist, deals with or refuses to deal with, certain companies because the legislation of 1894 is on the statute-book. And now, without reason given, it is proposed to strike out these important words that qualify or limit the operation of this company and to allow the company to swallow up unconditionally any other company, in the same business, to which the people might look for competition which would secure for them reasonable prices in such services as this company is authorized to render. The hon. member for North Leeds (Mr. Lavell) very properly, in my opinion, pointed out the provision at the end of section 8 to the effect :

> Provided that after any such purchase, lease or other acquirement, working arrangement or amalgamation as aforesaid is entered into, the company shall not, without the consent by by-law or otherwise of the municipality of the city of Ottawa, or of the city of Hull, respectively, as the case may be, increase the ordinary prices or rates charged by any of the said other companies for electric light in the city of Ottawa or in the city of Hull, respectively at the time such purchase, lease or other acquirement, working arrangement, or amalgamation is entered into.

That provision, he pointed out, had been carefully drawn in regard to this company launched in 1894. Now, what about the other companies that have sprung up since: for instance, the Metropolitan, brought into existence for the purpose of creating competition with this company ? The Metropolitan and those people interested in it would have a right to sell out without that restriction to this company, while these other companies, that are equally entitled to consideration, cannot sell out without these restrictions put upon them, and upon their assignees, if they do sell. The effect would be that the Metropolitan would get a franchise unconditionally and without these restrictions, and other companies are not bound by these restrictions—for the companies that are to be allowed to sell out to this company by the statutes of 1894 are all enumerated, and those only that are enumerated are bound by that provision. It would not only practically nullify one section of the Act by another section, but it does more. The company that has come into existence since this, in 1894, not being mentioned in that section, would have a right to sell out to the Ottawa Electric Company its franchises, make all its arrangements, and do it without the Ottawa Electric Company being bound by the same provisions that it is bound by in buying out these other companies. It seems to me to be making special legislation for the benefit of certain people. I do not know or care who the people are that are interested in any of these companies ; but we must not pass legislation in this hasty way that is going to have the effect of giving some people rights that we take great care to see that other people shall not have without certain conditions. I think it is a very wise suggestion that this committee rise in order that the matter may be further considered, in order that what we have pointed out may be met. I think no harm can be done. There will be plenty of time to pass the Act this session, if it is to become law, with the further advantage that many gentlemen in this House, who may not belong to the select committee which may be appointed to consider it, like myself, for instance, may become better acquainted with it. I have every respect for the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee, but in a question like this, on which there is such a great difference of opinion, I am bound to raise my voice here to-night and to give effect to my objections, because every member of parliament becomes responsible for this legislation after it goes through the House unless he opposes it. Under the circumstances, I think the committee ought to rise, report progress and ask leave to have this matter referred back. I am influenced by the fact that only nineteen members of the Private Bills Committee have thought that this ought to pass, and only fourteen voted against it. So 195 members of this House have not had an opportunity of expressing their opinion upon it, other than the fourteen who voted against it in the committee. Under the circumstances, I hope the premier will consider this as a reasonable request under the circumstances.

Mr. BIRKETT. I would like to ask my hon. colleague, the Speaker of this House, to accept with me the suggestions of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), and ask the committee of the House to refer this Bill back to the Committee on Private Bills for the purpose of hearing the city council. So far the matter has not been discussed by the city council, to my knowledge. This being a matter of such vital importance to the city, it ought not to be too hastily acted upon. I would like to hear from the hon. the Speaker, and have him express his opinion on the matter, as I feel satisfied that if this matter is referred to the committee again that some amicable arrangement will be arrived at between the city council and the company in regard to the regulation of rates for the charges of electric light to the city, something similar to what appears in the Consumers' charter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. The city council were heard before the committee.

Mr. BIRKETT. I am satisfied that what I am asking is only just. The Solicitor General has supported the contention I am making now, also the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. MacKinnon) and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Stewart). I would ask that the members of this committee give serious consideration to this matter. I would like to hear from some member of the government. This is a matter that interests the people of Ottawa more than any other question that has come before the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to read the request made by the city council of Ottawa, because I think it puts the case so plain that the committee can easily understand it. I have a very distinct recollection of the time when the Ottawa Electric Company was first incorporated. The mayor and city solicitor of Ottawa say in their petition :

The Bill provides :

1. That the capital stock of the company be increased from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000.

2. That the company may issue bonds to the amount of $1,125,000 instead of $500,000 as at present.

In both these cases there is a large increase in the bonding power. The reason, I understand, they gave was that they wished to improve their water power.

3. That the company may acquire shares in the capital stock, debentures and securities of other electric companies ; and that the proviso be struck out of the original Act which provides that such stock, debentures or securities shall only be issued 'as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.'

That was all the privilege they were allowed in the use of their stock.

In 1898 the city granted a franchise to the Metropolitan Company of Ottawa, Ltd., authorizing that company to erect poles and wires for the purpose of supplying electric light and power. Maximum rates for electric light and power were fixed in that franchise.

The following clause was inserted in that franchise :—

15. That the said company shall not at any time during the said period amalgamate or combine with any other company or companies now carrying on or which may hereafter at any time during the said period carry on in the said city of Ottawa, the business of supplying electricity for the purpose of power, light or heat, nor shall the said company enter into any contract, agreement or arrangement with any such company for such purpose or that shall have such effect, nor shall the said company enter into any contract, agreement or arrangement with any such company for the purpose, or that may have the effect of creating a monopoly of the business of supplying electricity for the purpose aforesaid in the city of Ottawa, without the permission of the council of the corporation of the city of Ottawa, to be expressed by by-law.

Which they have not done ; they have expressed their opinion straight against it.

It will be seen that the purpose of this provision was to prevent the company obtaining the franchise, from amalgamating or selling out to any other electric light company. The terms of the franchise of the Metropolitan Company was for 21 years from 1898.

The Metropolitan Company not having entered upon the business of supplying electric light, heat and power, the city of Ottawa in 1901, gave a twenty-three year franchise to the Consumer's Electric Company, Ltd. In that franchise the maximum rates for commercial lighting and power were also fixed.

A similar proviso to that in the Metropolitan Company's franchise was inserted in the Consumer's franchise providing that the latter company should not amalgamate or sell out to any other electric light company.

That was to prevent a monopoly.

The object of the city of Ottawa in granting, first, the Metropolitan franchise, and then the Consumer's franchise, was to secure competition in electric lighting with the Ottawa Electric Company.

The city, at the time these franchises were granted, relied on the provision in the Ottawa Electric Company's Act of Incorporation, which provided that that company could only acquire the stock, debentures or securities of other electric companies 'as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.' It is now sought to have this protection to the city struck out.

When the Bill in question was before the Private Bills Committee an amendment was moved, that the power to purchase stock in other companies should not apply to the stock of the Metropolitan or the Consumers' Company.

These are the only two other companies that are doing business in the same manner in Ottawa :

This amendment was lost by 19 to 14——

Showing that there was not a very large attendance at the Private Bills Committee.

The refusal of the Ottawa Electric Company to accept this amendment, indicates clearly that the real purpose of the Bill is to enable the Ottawa Company to buy out the Metropolitan and the Consumers' Company or one of them.

The city of Ottawa submits that parliament should not enact legislation which will have the effect of taking away from the city the guarantee which it now has that there will be competition in the supply of electric light, heat and power ; and also submits that the amendment proposed in the Private Bills Committee should be inserted in the Bill.

The evident intention of the Bill is to enable the Metropolitan and the Consumers' Companies to get rid of the provisions against amalgamating or selling out to any other electric light company, which were inserted in these companies' franchises by the city for the express purpose of securing competition, and consequently low rates for electric lighting.

The only companies at present in existence in Ottawa whose stock can be purchased by the Ottawa Electric Company, in the event of the legislation now asked for by the latter company being granted, are the Metropolitan and the Consumers' Companies. If the Ottawa Electric Company does not want the legislation asked for, for the purpose of purchasing the stock of either or both of these companies, it cannot be prejudiced if the legislation is not granted at present. If it is required for the purpose of acquiring the stock in some company not yet in existence the legislation now asked for can be obtained when that company comes into existence.

Ottawa, 2nd June, 1904.

TAYLOR McVEITY,
City Solicitor, Ottawa.

J. A. Ellis,
Mayor of Ottawa.

This is the requestion from the city of Ottawa which took good care that a clause should be inserted in the original Bill for the purpose of preventing amalgamation, for the purpose of preventing monopoly, and for the purpose of securing the supply of light in perpetuity at a fair figure. Now the promoters of this Bill come to parliament and ask to be relieved from that position while the corporation of the city of Ottawa who are above all others interested in this question ask that a clause shall be inserted in the Bill which will prevent this company from forcing a monopoly upon the people of Ottawa.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) has made a very important request of the committee, a request that the government of the day should listen to. It has been explained that when this question was before the Private Bills Committee 33 members were present and I am informed that the Mayor of Ottawa and an important delegation representing the city were also present opposing this Bill. It is true that they were not successful before the committee, but 14 members of the committee out of 33 voted in favour of the citizens of Ottawa upon this question. The people who are most to be considered in the discussion before the committee are the citizens of Ottawa themselves. I understand that before the committee there were no persons present very strongly in favour of the passage of this legislation except members of the committee. In the committee of the whole House now we find that we have the two hon. members for the city of Ottawa present. One of those hon. members has spoken on behalf of the citizens in opposition to that Bill and the other hon. member has by his silence supported his contention. Therefore, we have a right to assume that the mayor and city council, representing the citizens of Ottawa, together with the two parliamentary representatives on the floor of this House are calling on the government of the day not to pass this Bill. I do not think that the government would attempt to override the opinions of the two members for Ottawa and the mayor and council and say that they understand this question very much better than the representatives of the city of Ottawa. Every man in Ottawa is interested in this Bill. As my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out at this present moment they have competition in lighting in their homes and in the public places of the city. If this Bill passes the lighting service goes into the hands of one huge monopoly. While I have said that the citizens are particularly interested in this Bill every hon. gentleman in this House who comes from a municipality in any part of Canada is also interested in the principle involved in this Bill. I will be very much surprised if the government do not step in, as it is their duty to do, and say to those who are pressing this Bill in this hasty way: Whether the city council and the promoters of this Bill can agree or not, it will be our duty as the government of the day to ask them to come together again and see if they cannot come to some reasonable compromise by which the citizens of Ottawa will not for all time to come be placed in the hands of this monopoly. Whether it will be a monopoly or not it will leave the citizens of Ottawa in the hands of one company and we have instances in Canada to-day of the effect of this kind of legislation. In the great city of Toronto they have corporations which are oppressing the people and I think it is the duty of every hon. member of this House to stand up and say that in so far as parliament is concerned we will not in any wise assist any monopoly to monopolize the lighting in any city. May I be permitted to say further that the hon. the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux), who represented the government before the committee, stated that this was not a proper kind of legislation. We have had one member of the government who has spoken and he has spoken on behalf of the citizens of Ottawa and on behalf of the government too. Therefore we have a right to assume that the government are in favour of allowing these corporations to come together again in order that they may have an opportunity of seeing if they cannot meet each other's wishes and give to the citizens of Ottawa some kind of legislation that will enable them to get cheaper lighting in years to come.

Mr. CLARKE. I think that in the interest of all parties it would be only reasonable that this Bill should be referred back to the Private Bills Committee for further consideration. The hon. gentlemen who are representing the city of Ottawa know very well that it is opposed to public opinion. The corporation of the city of Ottawa is opposed to this legislation. It is not an unreasonable request under these circumstances to defer final action on this Bill until a meeting of the city council is held and some expression of opinion given. There is just one word more that I desire to say. I am advised that there is an express provision in the charter of the Consumers' Electric Light Company limiting the maximum price that they can charge the citizens of Ottawa for electric light. If it is the desire of both of these companies to amalgamate and come together—and I have no personal opinion about that matter as I suppose they know their own business best—it is not unreasonable to suggest that the same limitation as to price shall be enjoined on the consolidated company. That is fair. There is nothing unfair about it, and I appeal to the sense of justice of hon. gentlemen to allow this Bill to go back in order that some reasonable compromise may be reached between the parties that will be fair and just, and under which the citizens of Ottawa will not be mulcted in the future—I do not say they will—if one company gets complete possession of the lighting of this city. I ask the right hon. gentleman to agree, for the sake of harmony, to allow the Bill to go back.

Mr. HENDERSON. If you will call it nine o'clock I shall not continue the discussion, but if the discussion is to continue permit me to say that, in my opinion, no stronger case has ever been made out against a Bill which is calculated to create a monopoly than has been made out to-night against the Bill now under the consideration of the committee. The hon. member for South Simcoe made a very strong appeal to the First Minister to stay any further procedure on this Bill, and gave very cogent reasons for so doing. He stated that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had years ago told us in this House that he proposed to make the city of Ottawa the Washington of the North.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. He stands by that to-day, and I think he cannot say that he has not found the House on both sides in harmony with his desire.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. They did not offer opposition to it. We are spending in this city large sums of money for the purpose of beautifying it, and when it is proposed to place it under a monopoly in regard to its lighting and heating, I think it is time that the right hon. gentleman should call a halt. I do not want him to destroy what he has already accomplished. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) asks me if they have trusts and monopolies of this kind in Washington. If they have I have not heard of them, but I do not for one moment presume that such legislation would be permitted in the city of Washington, and I consider that it would not reflect credit upon this House, upon the government, or upon the country, if the government, which is responsible for every bit of legislation that passes this House, no matter whether it is private legislation or a government Bill, should permit a Bill of the character of that which is now before the committee to pass and become law. I consider that the Bill will cast a very serious reflection on this House, and I may say that it would establish a precedent which the government will long regret having permitted to be established. I do appeal to the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as a member of this House, not as a citizen of Ottawa, not to permit this to pass. I think the citizens of Ottawa are not being fairly treated. We have a statement put into our hands, which has been read by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), signed by the mayor of Ottawa and the city solicitor of Ottawa, setting forth the views of the municipal council of that city. I do not know where we could get a stronger protest against the legislation now proposed. One of the members representing Ottawa in this parliament has entered his very strong protest; the other hon. gentleman, when appealed to, has remained silent; and I am afraid we will have to construe that silence into consent, and to infer that he is not in line with the citizens of this capital city of Ottawa. I do hope that the government will intervene, and that we will not be called upon at any time to look back to this as a precedent for permitting legislation of this character. The fact that the Solicitor General, one of the right hon. gentleman's colleagues, has, as I am informed, spoken against the Bill, I think is a very strong reason why the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should accept the suggestion of his colleague——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for private Bills being exhausted, the House will resume in Committee of Supply.

Mr. HENDERSON.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Quarantine—steamers for service at Grosse Isle, $30,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a new item for a large amount.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). We have one government steamer at Grosse Isle which is used for going out to meet incoming vessels. The service there requires two vessels, one to be used by the officers in meeting vessels for purposes of inspection and another, which is equipped with the disinfecting apparatus, so that at any time when a vessel needs to be disinfected the steamer fitted with the disinfecting apparatus may be laid up against her and perform the disinfection. This vessel also does the work of carrying people to and from quarantine, and also of conveying them from quarantine to Quebec, where we have to deliver them after their release. For some years back we have been chartering vessels for these purposes. It has been almost impossible to get a suitable vessel, and we have felt that it was necessary to procure a vessel of our own instead of being dependent on chartered vessels. This last year I was paying, and the present year I am paying no less than $4,200 for the use of a vessel for the season, and I have to pay the crew and the equipment and expenses as well. I felt that that was a bad paying business for the country. I therefore ask for a vote which will enable me to purchase a vessel and keep her and manage her for this purpose, so as to be relieved in the future of this heavy charge.

Mr. POPE. Has this vessel been ordered?

Mr. FISHER. No steps will be taken in regard to the purchase of the vessel until I am authorized by the House to do so.

Mr. POPE. Has the minister any estimate to show that this amount will be sufficient?

Mr. FISHER. It is based on the supposed value of a vessel of the character we require. I am informed that such a vessel could be built for this price.

Mr. POPE. Is it your intention to get a new boat?

Mr. FISHER. If possible, for this price or anything near this price, I would get a boat built in Canada, or purchase one that would be practically a new boat. I would not buy an old boat.

Mr. POPE. Will you ask for tenders?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, unless possibly it may be built in the government yard at Sorel. I would utilize the officers of the government for this purpose. We have in the Marine Department, experts who have been in the habit of purchasing or securing vessels for the government.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the hon. minister made any estimate of what it would cost to equip the vessel and keep it in operation for twelve months ?

Mr. FISHER. At the present time, when we charter a vessel, we have to furnish a crew, purchase the coal and supplies, and run the vessel. I am paying $4,200 for the season.

Mr. POPE. What system have you adopted—by tender or otherwise ?

Mr. FISHER. I have searched for a suitable vessel, and I have had difficulty in finding one. Two years ago I chartered one, and after an experience of two seasons, she was condemned. A little over a year ago another vessel was chartered, and it was practically the only vessel my officers could find in the St. Lawrence that was at all suitable for this work.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Has the minister any vessel in view at present ?

Mr. FISHER. Not one. I do not know where I could get one.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. It is the minister's intention, then, if he purchases one, to purchase it on the advice of the government officials ?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. All I can say is that if they do not purchase vessels with any greater success than they sell them, I think it would be much better to take the matter out of their hands. Last session I called attention to the sale of a splendid steamer, the Bayfield, which had been engaged in the survey of the Georgian bay, for $3,250. If the policy of the government is to purchase vessels on the same principle on which they sell them, it would be far better to place the business in the hands of anybody but the government officials. In view of our experience of the past, I think it would be well to have full information before we pass this item.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give more information than I have already stated. I must make use of the government officers for such work. I have not in my department any expert upon vessels. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has amongst its officers men whose judgment is used by the government for this purpose. I confess that I am in ignorance of the details of what the hon. gentleman is alluding to, as it is not in my department ; consequently I cannot give any answer in regard to that. But just as in a matter of law I would consult the department of justice, so in a matter of purchasing vessels, I would secure the best information I could from the Department of Marine which is charged with such matters.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The case to which I refer is one in which the government official valued the vessel at $8,000 and the minister sold it for $3,250. So that the advice of the officer was of little avail.

Mr. FISHER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I would try to follow the advice which the expert would give me.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Will the vessel be commanded by the same officer who commands the vessel at present ?

Mr. FISHER. The vessel will be under the command of the officer at Grosse Isle, whoever he is.

Mr. HENDERSON. It occurs to me that possibly the hon. the Minister of Agriculture has not in his department men who may be regarded as experts in marine matters. It seems a strange combination that a farmer should be called upon to purchase a vessel. To my mind, instead of the hon. gentleman undertaking the purchase of a vessel through the officers of his department, it would be better to hand it over to some other department where there are men experienced in marine matters, and let them furnish the vessel for the hon. gentleman. I am aware that the hon. gentleman's deputy is a lawyer, and consequently would not be able to give an opinion on a vessel any more than he would on matters of agriculture. I do not think the hon. minister is going about this matter in the right way.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has not been listening to what I said. I said a few minutes ago that I had not in my department experts on such matters, and that just as I would consult the Department of Justice on a legal question, so I will consult the Department of Marine in regard to the purchase or building a vessel. The vote is in my estimates simply because it is a vote for the administration of my department. I have already got vessels there. When I chartered the vessels which I have at present, I took the opinion of an officer of the Marine Department as to her fitness, her seaworthiness, and her condition. All that my officers were able to say was what they needed, then the expert had to decide whether such and such a vessel was fitted for the work. So it will be in this case.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must apologize to the hon. minister. I confess I did not hear him make the statement, but am glad to know that for once he and I are of the same mind.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the outside charge on the country for performing the service last year was $4,000 ?

Mr. FISHER. I said that $4,200 was the price paid for the charter of the vessel.

Mr. BLAIN. How much for equipping and running it during the twelve months?

Mr. FISHER. There are two boats at Grosse Isle quarantine station—one belonging to the government and this other one which is chartered. We have a crew which is able to run the two boats. Sometimes one boat is lying at the wharf and sometimes they are both out together, and we have sufficient crew to take both out at the same time. The crews work interchangeably just as the exigencies of the work require. There is a captain and a first mate. When both vessels are out, the one takes charge of the one and the other of the other. It would be rather difficult to say actually how much each costs. The difference between the new and the old conditions would be simply the difference between the charter price and the interest on the cost of the new vessel and the wear and tear. We have our own disinfecting apparatus, which we will put on the new vessel when we get it built.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has stated that the cost of the new boat will be approximately $30,000. What the committee is entitled to is a statement as to what it will cost to equip and run a new vessel during twelve months.

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid it would be very difficult to give that. Take for instance, the engineers, there is a staff of engineers at Grosse Isle. They are all marine engineers. That is to say, they can work an engine on a boat. They not only run the engines of these two boats but also the engines on shore, which does the work of the station. There are a chief engineer and three assistants, and a certain number of stokers and deck hands who work all around. I would have to add up the wages of these and establish what amount should be charged to each boat before I could give an answer.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is making a complete change of policy. The policy in the past has been to charter a vessel, but he now asks the committee to vote $30,000 to purchase one. He is unable to give the committee the probable cost of equipping and running the new vessel for twelve months. Is this a step in the direction of economy and to what extent is it such a step?

Mr. FISHER. To this extent. We paid last year $4,200, the same as this year, to charter a vessel. The interest on $30,000 would be probably three per cent. Then there is an allowance for wear and tear which, not being an expert, I cannot estimate.

Mr. EARLE. Ten per cent.

Mr. FISHER. That would be again $3,000, making a total of $3,900 for wear and tear and interest as against $4,200 rent. Otherwise the service is just the same. In addition we will have the advantage of having just such a vessel as we need, always on hand.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. POPE. It is peculiar that not only on this but on other occasions, the hon. minister lays down a proposition and then when we ask for information, we find he has not studied the question sufficiently to give us the information and advice we are entitled to from one who asks for a lot of money. We had that difficulty last night, and I was in hopes we would not have it again. The hon. gentleman says the purchase of this boat is in the direction of economy, but when asked what it will cost for her maintenance from year to year—not to run her or to furnish her with supplies—but her maintenance, he says he does not know. If he does not, he is not justified in saying that this new policy is in the direction of economy. If he were to tell us that the boat was absolutely essential, no matter what it cost, that this government should own another boat, that would be another question, but the only reason he gives is that it is in the interests of economy, and he has taken so little trouble to ascertain the facts that he admits his inability to state what the annual wear and tear would cost. He should have had his statement carefully prepared so that he could have shown us what the figures were, which warrant the purchase of this boat, but the only practical information we got was from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Earle) who said that the wear and tear would cost ten per cent. Take the life of a steamer during ten years and you have a cost at the outset of $30,000 for the purchase of the boat and then $30,000 for wear and tear, amounting to $60,000. This is an important question, and I think hon. members are entitled to information which would enable them to determine whether there was economy in this purchase or not.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Has the minister any idea, what the dimensions of the vessels are that he proposes to acquire for this service ?

Mr. FISHER. The estimate is based on the cost of a vessel the length of which—speaking from memory—would be 110 feet and the width 25 or 26 feet with a depth sufficient for proper stability in a rough sea such as we have at Grosse Isle.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. If a vessel is required, I believe it is better that the government should have one of their own, and a good one at that. But whether that would be in the interest of economy or not, I have no means of judging. I notice, however, that the 'Constance,' which is employed in the fishery service costs for maintenance $23,341. She was built in Canada, at Owen Sound and she is a first-class ship.

Mr. FISHER. What does the hon. gentleman include under 'maintenance ?'

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. That is what it cost for staff and for all that is required for the vessel during the season.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the hon. gentleman could tell us the estimated life of a vessel such as he proposes to acquire.

Mr. FISHER. Speaking in general terms I should expect that if a fair allowance, say ten per cent were made for keeping the vessel in a good state of repair her life would be prolonged ; that at the end of ten or fifteen years, she would be practically as good as when put in commission. If her life were relatively short, it would be because this ten per cent was not expended on her.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The 'Constance,' the 'Curlew,' and the 'Petrel' were all built at Owen Sound thirteen years ago, and they are all as sea-worthy and as fine vessels to-day as they were when they left the dock.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister says the life of the vessel would be ten years——

Mr. FISHER. I made no such statement.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought I was giving what the minister had said.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman had been listening to my explanation, instead of speaking to some one else, he would have understood better, I said that if $3,000 a year or ten per cent of the original cost were allowed for keeping the vessel in repair her life would be extremely prolonged.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister surely would not say that that is a fair explanation. He must admit that my question was a reasonable one. He proposes to spend $30,000 on a vessel and, when asked what her life is expected to be, he says it may be a prolonged life. Does that mean twenty-five years or fifty years ?

Mr. FISHER. The 'Challenger' has been running for seventeen years and she is, apparently as good as she was the day she was launched. She has been kept in repair, the timbers, &c., in her being renewed from time to time as was found necessary. And I think that any vessel kept in that way would be as good at the end of twenty-five years, practically, as she was at the beginning. Of course, if she were allowed to get into bad order, it would be because the ten per cent for repairs had not been spent on her. So, I give what seems a fair charge for the maintenance of the vessel—and, in that, of course, I include nothing for crew or anything of that kind, but simply the maintenance of the capital account of the vessel.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose we must accept that. The hon. minister will not be afraid to meet that statement in days to come, for he can get on any side of it.

Mr. FISHER. If I have to buy another vessel in twenty-five years I shall be open to criticism.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman need not worry about that. We will not leave him the chance.

Mr. FISHER. I do not want it.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it would be in the interest of the country that a new vessel should be purchased rather than an old one. The suggestion of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) in that respect is a good one. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. T. I. Thomson) has told us how the government deal in old vessels, and we are not altogether satisfied with that. Perhaps the hon. minister will give us the assurance that he will purchase a new vessel and that it shall be constructed in Canada.

Mr. FISHER. The vessel will be purchased or constructed in Canada, if the proper vessel can be found in Canada, or if tenders can be got from Canadian builders. I will not go abroad for a vessel unless absolutely forced to do so.

Mr. OSLER. I think it is proper that a vessel should be owned by the government for this service. But I think that a vessel should not be purchased. There are many vessels all over the lakes that are not quite up to modern ideas or that are worn out, yet that are quite presentable and might be foisted upon the government by political friends. The minister shakes his head, but he is human as I am.

Mr. FISHER. Quite.

Mr. OSLER. The government can get a new vessel constructed in Canada nearly if not quite as cheaply as it can be built anywhere else. Our fleets on Lake Superior have been built at our own ports by Canadian labour and they are the best vessels on the lakes to-day. And I am Canadian enough to say that, even if it costs a thousand or two more the government should get the vessel built in Canada by our own labourers rather than go outside. But when the government are proposing an expenditure like this, which, speaking for myself, I regard as a proper expenditure, I think they ought to have a new vessel and not run any risks involved in buying an old one, no matter how favourable the conditions may apparently be. It should be a modern vessel, built for the purpose proposed, and built in Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I am ready to say that I will secure a new vessel. It may be that the vessel will be purchased, one that is a year or two old, but I can assure my hon. friend that I will not purchase any old vessel for this work. If I cannot find a suitable vessel that is not more than a year or two old, and perfectly sound in every respect, I shall certainly give instructions for the building of a new vessel for this service, and I shall exhaust all efforts to get it constructed in Canada.

Mr. OSLER. I do not think the minister can purchase an old second-hand vessel for the particular purpose he has in view, that will be as suitable as a new vessel would be, he cannot buy an old vessel that will answer the purpose.

Mr. FISHER. That is quite possible.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I think myself it is desirable we should get a new vessel for this purpose. I am also satisfied it should be a vessel constructed in Canada. Tenders should be asked for a vessel to be built in Canada. Then we will have a good vessel and one that will be worthy the government. I think if the minister would assure us that he will have a new vessel constructed in steel and constructed in Canada, he will meet with the entire approval of the committee.

Mr. POPE. I think the minister ought to give us that assurance, that it will be a Canadian built boat. We have our own ship yards, for instance at Sorel. I hope the minister will give us that assurance.

Mr. FISHER. I think the assurance I have given practically amounts to that.

Quarantine, steamer for service at Victoria, B.C., $20,000.

Mr. EARLE. Would the minister give us some explanation.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle) knows very well that the vessel now in use there is an old vessel, and has been the subject of a good deal of repairing for several years back. I do not think it will pay to go on repairing her. I am satisfied from the reports I have received from the representatives of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and from the officer of this department, that she is too old to be worth repairing much longer. I therefore ask for a sum of money to purchase a new steamer which will be suitable for the work there—to build or purchase one, as the case may be. I do not think there is any steamer in British Columbia that we can purchase for this service, and if so, we shall have to make arrangements for building one in those waters.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Will it be a steel vessel or a wooden vessel ?

Mr. FISHER. I will act on the advice of those who are familiar with the conditions as to whether it shall be a wooden or a steel vessel. I am not prepared myself to give an opinion on that point. I do not know whether there are facilities in British Columbia for building a steel vessel, at the same time, I think such a vessel ought to be built in British Columbia. A vessel of this kind could not easily be taken around the Horn. I would like to see her built in British Columbia, but I will leave it to those who are experts in such matters to decide as to the character of the vessel. I may say this to my hon. friend from Victoria, that when I put $20,000 in the estimates I thought it would be sufficient to obtain such a vessel as is needed there ; but since these estimates were prepared, representations have been made to me by my officers at that station that a larger vessel would be required, one that it would not be possible to purchase for $20,000, and suggesting that this item be largely increased. On these representations I think it is quite likely that I should ask for a larger sum in the supplementary estimates. The service there requires a very staunch vessel. Frequently she has to go out in very stormy weather to meet ships, and the passage from Victoria is exposed to heavy winds. The suggestion is made that a vessel fully suitable for that work cannot be obtained for $20,000 on the British Columbia coast. If that is the case, I should have to ask for a supplementary estimate ; but in the meantime I ask that this item be granted to me, and I assure the committee that I will carefully look into the matter and get the best advice I can from ship building experts as to what the cost of such a vessel is likely to be.

Mr. EARLE. I quite agree with the minister in his remarks about the old steamer that has been in use at the quarantine station at Victoria. I think I am safe in saying that at the present time the government have spent upon her four or five times her original cost. She has never been thoroughly fitted for that service.

Mr. FISHER. She was on the service when I came into office.

Mr. EARLE. Quite so. I may explain that she was bought under peculiar circumstances, at a time when she was the only boat that could be procured in order to introduce the system they have now of fumigating and so forth. I am quite satisfied that $20,000 is not sufficient to procure such a boat as is required. But independently of that service, I may mention another to which it could be put. The hon. gentleman is aware of the terrible calamity that occurred in the harbour of Victoria a few months ago by which 50 or 60 lives were lost. It was claimed by the citizens of Victoria that had a proper vessel been available to go to their assistance every life might have been saved. It has been suggested to the Marine and Fisheries Department that in building a boat for the quarantine service, she should be fitted up with life-saving apparatus so that she might be utilized in case of need for that purpose. A society has been organized there now for the purpose of establishing a life-saving station, and it has been suggested I think, to the Marine Department, by my colleague (Mr. Riley) and also I think by Senator Templeman, that with a somewhat greater expense the steamer doing quarantine service might be made available for the purpose of saving life in any accident that might occur in the immediate neighbourhood. As I understand it, the quarantine steamer is always under steam ; if not, it could be kept continuously under steam at very little cost, and would always be available in case of accidents occurring upon the coast. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he consult with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with a view to co-operating in securing a boat that would serve as a life-saving boat as well as doing the quarantine service.

Mr. FISHER. I may say to my hon. friend that the proposition which he has just made has not been made to me. I suppose it must have been made to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. EARLE. I had supposed that it had been made to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, but I presume I was mistaken. Undoubtedly it has been made to the government.

Mr. FISHER. I would be very glad indeed to consult with my colleague about the matter, and I think it would be quite within the possibilities to manage the service of a quarantine boat at Williams Head in such a way that she would be available, as my hon. friend suggests, for any emergency in the way of a wreck or anything of that kind. The quarantine service to-day is pretty exacting. The vessel has to keep up steam all the time, but at the same time in an emergency I think she might be spared for the quarantine station for a few hours or half a day to give assistance to vessels in distress without interfering with her work in connection with quarantine. It may be more expensive to get such a vessel as the hon. gentleman speaks of, but I have no doubt it will be quite admissible, and while it may not be correctly or properly charged to the quarantine service, still, in the interest of humanity and of the people generally, I think it would be quite justifiable to increase the expenditure, and I should be very glad to consider it carefully. For such a purpose I would have to get a larger vote than the ordinary quarantine service calls for, but such an increased expenditure might be well entered upon.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has made the statement that he proposes to ask for a supplementary estimate.

Mr. FISHER. I said 'probably.'

Mr. BLAIN. The item we are discussing now is :

Steamer for service at Victoria, B.C., $20,000.

My hon. friend has in the service at the present moment an old vessel on which there has been expended a considerable amount of money during his term of office.

Mr. FISHER. And before.

Mr. BLAIN. And my hon. friend says that something was spent before he came into office. That may be true, and I suppose it is. The point I wish to object to is that members on this side of the House during the past two or three years have been making constant complaint against the government because of this kind of a policy. Ministers come forward with an estimate and ask the committee to vote a certain amount. In this case it is $20,000, and even while the committee is considering the question, even before the amount is voted, the hon. Minister of Agriculture stands up in his place and says that it will not be sufficient. He says that he will have to ask for a supplementary estimate to be added to this. Does my hon. friend think that is a fair policy ?

Mr. FISHER. I think that is very honest.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend thinks it is a very honest policy. I rather disagree with him on that point. I think it would be a still better policy for the hon. gentleman to enter into a consideration of this question before he brings down his estimates at all, to make a thorough and complete examination into the whole matter and bring down to the committee a report showing that the old vessel is insufficient for the service, and then make a statement to the committee as to how much we are likely to get for her if she is sold. What does my hon. friend say ?

Mr. FISHER. I was wondering how much.

Mr SPROULE. If the same method of selling the vessel is adopted as that which was adopted at Owen Sound, it will not be much.

Mr. BLAIN. We have been dealing in old vessels before, and the results have been rather unsatisfactory to the House, but we will not charge the hon. minister with that just now. I enter my protest against this kind of a policy. It is the duty of the hon. minister to bring down a fair statement of the amount that is required for this service. The hon. minister asks for $20,000, and while he is asking for it he makes a further statement that it will be insufficient and that he will have to ask for a supplementary estimate. That is not a business proposition, and coming from what was regarded once as a business government, we are not quite willing to accept that kind of a policy. I think the hon. gentleman should ask that this item stand and bring down at some future date a fair statement of the amount which will be sufficient to complete this work, and not ask us to vote $20,000 now and in a week or two, or a few weeks, come forward and ask for $20,000 more. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman does not think this is a business policy, and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman would attempt to introduce into his department a policy that the opposition have been complaining of and which has been very generally adopted in other departments of this government.

Mr. FISHER. I appreciate the compliment paid me by the hon. gentleman when he says that this has not been the policy of my department, and I can assure him that he has not found me out to-day in this either. When I put in the item of $20,000, I based the estimate on procuring a vessel of about the same class and character as the vessel that we now have, which, if she were a new vessel, or in first rate order, would be very nearly able to do the work. I believed, from the information I received, that with $20,000 I would be able to secure such a vessel as that. I have since had representations from my officer there asking for a larger vessel. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle) has suggested here to-night another scheme which would require a still larger vessel and a still greater expenditure. When such a matter as this has to be discussed and decided upon, and when the whole question has to be considered, including the suggestion of my hon. friend from Victoria, it would be quite impossible for me at this date, but perhaps within a few weeks, and I hope the session will be over by that time, I shall be able to get an item prepared which will definitely and clearly show to the House exactly, and even approximately, what such a vessel would cost. I think my hon. friend will justify me in having supposed, when these items were brought in, as they were some three months ago now, that this was sufficient, and I expected it to be sufficient. I have now found that from the requests which have been made to me for something more than that which was made to me before from Victoria—requests which I did not have before me when these estimates were made—that I will require something more, and therefore it is that I expect, as I stated to my hon. friend a little while ago, that, while I expected to do with this sum of $20,000 when I prepared these estimates, because of the information and requests that have reached me since, which in fact seem to be so reasonable that I will have to accede to them, I will have to ask for a supplementary vote to enable me to get a larger steamer. I think that is very honest and perfectly clear, and I do not think it justifies the reflection which the hon. gentleman has cast on the preparation of my estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. That is an explanation which I think is not at all satisfactory to the committee. The hon. gentleman says that he proposes to purchase a new vessel in the west, a vessel to do work in and around Victoria and Vancouver.

Mr. FISHER. No; Victoria alone.

Mr. BLAIN. Victoria alone. Well, in the quarantine district. I suppose my hon. friend would not dare to say that he is proposing to purchase this vessel upon his own information without consulting the representatives in Victoria city?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember that I consulted the representatives of Victoria city.

Mr. BLAIN. I mean the representatives of the government in the west who have brought these further requests to the attention of the government.

Mr. FISHER. I intended to purchase this vessel upon facts which I knew, and which I did not require any representatives to tell me. I know that the 'Earle,' the vessel there now in the service, is no longer fit for her work, and that she must be replaced as soon as possible. On that ground alone, simply as a matter of administration in my department, finding a vessel which was used a great deal and which cost a great deal for repairs and was no longer worth repairing, the estimate was prepared. That information was at my command, and other requests in regard to further and larger vessels had not been received when these estimates were prepared.

Mr. BLAIN. That simply emphasizes the weakness of the policy adopted by the hon. gentleman. He has stated that without consultation with the representatives of the government in the west, he has put in an item of $20,000 for the purchase of a vessel. As soon as that item is put in the estimates a further request comes from the officers in the west whom he should have consulted and from whom he should have obtained full information before putting the item in at all. Now my hon. friend says that after the $20,000 have been placed in the estimates a request comes from the district where the vessel is to be used. The hon. gentleman should have received these representations before he attempted to deal with the matter at all. He should have consulted these people and should have had full information before the item was put in. Then the hon. gentleman would have been able to put in an amount that would cover the total cost and the committee would be satisfied. I am sure he will see that his explanation rather weakens his case.

Mr. EARLE. I would say to the minister that before he brings down his supplementary estimates, I trust he will consult the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) with regard to the matter I brought up.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. EARLE. I am entirely satisfied that $20,000 would not build a boat able to do the quarantine work. In the instance I speak of, all of these lives were sacrificed because there was no boat there able to go out. The 'Earle' was called for but they declined to send her out as she was utterly unfit for such a sea and the people were drowned right in sight of land because of the want of a boat fit to go out in storms such as we sometimes have there. A good boat is required.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows that that disaster occurred since these estimates were prepared.

Mr. PORTER. I was not aware that we had a boat to dispose of in the west. Two vessels have been disposed of by the government in the town in which I live and in both cases they have been sold for very much less than what the officer of the government said they were worth. The last of these steamers was sold for very much less than one-half what the officer of the government said it was worth. The officer estimated its value at $8,000 but it was sold by private sale for $3,250. I do not think any one in the business was aware that the vessel was for sale. A notice in one of the local papers costing a dollar would have brought $6,000 or $7,000 for the boat. I have been talking to some captains and they said they would have given $5,000 for the hull. This boat was sold by the government at private sale, without tender or notice for $3,250. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will not repeat that.

Mr. FISHER. We do better in the west.

Mr. PORTER. I would like to know if he will endeavour to get as much for the vessel as possible, to get its value any way,

Mr. FISHER. I will.

Mr. PORTER. It will not be sold in a secret manner?

Mr. FISHER. I will assure the hon. gentleman it will not be sold in any secret manner.

Mr. SPROULE. I regard this as a very loose manner of voting money. It is not a proper discharge of duty by a minister of the Crown. The duty of the minister as I understand it, in voting money for any purpose, especially for a new undertaking is to submit to the House a well prepared estimate of what the country is being committed to, and will be expected to pay in the aggregate. We are asked here for $20,000 to commence the building of a vessel, but we do not know whether it will cost $30,000 or $1,000,000 in fact we have no information at all. We have so often in this House committed ourselves to undertakings that turned out entirely different to what the government anticipated they would that it makes us rather chary in voting such an item to-night. The government must have known through its officers that this vote is needed, and the lack of information shows disregard of that courtesy with which parliament should be treated. I think the vessel should be built either in British Columbia or down here and preferably by our own men.

Mr. FISHER. It will have to be built there, it could not be taken out.

Mr. EARLE. I think they can build a vessel there. They have just completed one there for the Admiralty which is very satisfactory.

Mr. POPE. Have they a ship-building yard there?

Mr. EARLE. Yes.

Mr. POPE. I do not see why we should not have an assurance that the boat will be built in Canada.

Mr. FISHER. It will be built in British Columbia.

Cattle quarantines and veterinary division, $100,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is the usual quarantine vote, the same as we had last current year and I hope the service will be carried out in just the same method as for the last year. The work has been onerous, but I think on the whole extremely successful. Difficulties have arisen and are constantly arising but by the energy of the officer and by the skill and knowledge of our inside staff on the whole I may congratulate the committee that the health of the animals is better than it is in most countries. This fact is largely due to the measures of prevention and sanitation which our officers have been able to carry out. The work is two-fold in its character: first, the prevention of the importation of disease into our animals from outside the country, and secondly, the looking after, along certain lines and in certain ways, the health and sanitation of our domestic live stock.

Mr. GILMOUR. I suppose this quarantine applies all along the line from coast to coast but more particularly the line out in the Territories?

Mr. FISHER. In the Territories, yes.

Mr. GILMOUR. Last session I called the minister's attention to the danger of Texas fever being introduced into our country. He then said it was not likely to happen; but I think he is now well aware of the danger, from the report of Dr. Rutherford, who has made a thorough investigation into that matter, and who has very ably set forth the result in his report. He states that during the year 24,253 cattle have been imported into Canada from the Texas fever district. As the minister is no doubt acquainted with the report, I will not read it all, but only a small portion of it. Dr. Rutherford says:

Owing to our rigorous winter climate there is no danger of Texas fever obtaining a permanent foothold in the Dominion, but it is within the range of possibility that tick infested cattle entering the country during the summer months might be the means of introducing the disease, and of causing considerable loss before the first frost put a stop to its ravages.

He also states that several officers on the line and others south of the line tell how difficult it is to have these cattle properly inspected. Even after inspection, they may in a short time turn out to be affected with the Texas fever tick. He also cites Dr. Salmon to the effect that animals coming in have been found to be affected, and that a carload was known to have gone into Canada and was there at the date of his report, in October, 1903. After setting forth the dangers, Dr. Rutherford says :

I propose to make a further investigation of the whole subject during the coming winter, and hope to be in a position to recommend a definite policy before the trade recommences next spring.

I would ask the minister if he has fully considered the subject, and if he is prepared, the season is now on when these cattle will be coming in, to state what he has done to meet this danger to our cattle, not only in the west, but all over the country.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to be able to inform my hon. friend that Dr. Rutherford has been able to carry out his intention as expressed in his report. He has made the necessary investigation, and has promulgated regulations covering the point alluded to. These regulations were issued in March last, and deal with the importations from Mexico. These cattle are first of all carefully inspected at the United States frontier by the United States authorities. They then come through the United States in bond, and are again inspected by our inspectors. Section 54 of these regulations says :

Any person contemplating the importation of animals from Mexico, must, in addition to all other requirements of this order, first obtain from the minister a permit stating the number and kind of animals to be imported, the district and state in Mexico whence they are to be shipped, and the probable date of their arrival at the Canadian port of entry. The person applying for such permit shall furnish satisfactory proof of the facts hereinbefore set forth.

Then, section 55 provides :

Animals passing in bond through United States territory for importation to Canada must be accompanied by a certificate of health signed by a veterinarian of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry and by an affidavit from the owner or importer that the said certificate refers to the animals in question. Such animals shall nevertheless be subject to inspection and if necessary to detention before being permitted to enter Canadian territory. If found diseased such animals are to be subject to and dealt with according to the orders of the inspecting officer under instructions from the Veterinary Director General. The expense of treatment, should such be deemed advisable, must be borne by the owner or importer of the animals treated.

We consider that this regulation will completely cover the cases referred to by my hon. friend. My hon. friend spoke of some animals having come in last year. There was an importation, but we held the animals on the borders of Canada and quarantined them for the necessary time before they were liberated. The result of that has been satisfactory, because there has been no suggestion that they brought in any disease. They came through after inspection by the American authorities. The details of the importation are contained in the report. We were notified by the Washington authorities of their coming, and we held them because of the uncertainty of the matter at that time. The regulations which I have just read had not been promulgated, and we could not act upon them ; but we took the steps we did under the general regulations to guard against these animals bringing disease into the country.

Mr. GILMOUR. At how many points can animals come into the country ?

Mr. FISHER. We have adopted a new plan all along the frontier, providing that animals shall be allowed to come in only at certain ports, and at each of these ports we have an inspector :

The following customs ports are hereby declared to be animals' quarantine stations, and all animals imported into Canada subject to quarantine must be entered through said stations, viz.:—Halifax, N.S., St. John, N.B., Charlottetown, P.E.I., Quebec, Sherbrooke and St. Johns, Que.; Niagara Falls, Windsor and Sarnia, Ont.; Emerson, Man.; North Portal, Wood Mountain, Pendant d'Oreille, Coutts and Cardston, N.W.T.; Gateway, Rossland, Nelson, Grand Forks, Vancouver and Victoria, B.C.

Mr. GILMOUR. Are there sufficient yards to detain them properly ?

Mr. FISHER. We are having these provided as rapidly as possible,

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are these the only points at which officers are stationed ?

Mr. FISHER. We have other inspectors ; but these are the only ports at which animals subject to quarantine are allowed to come in.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have you many of those other inspectors ? Are they stationed at certain points on salaries at so much per month and at what points ?

Mr. FISHER. We have a number of inspection points as well as quarantine station points. Animals subject to inpsection only but not to quarantine may enter at the following ports. There is a long list here :

Pictou, North Sydney and Yarmouth, N.S.; St. Stephens, Woodstock and McAdam Junction, N.B.; Comin's Mills, Lake Megantic, Coaticook, Stanstead Junction, Mansonville, Abercorn, St. Armand, Rouses Point, Athelstan and Dundee, Que.; Cornwall, Prescott, Brockville, Toronto, Bridgeburg, Sault Ste. Marie and Port Arthur, Ont.; Gretna, Morden, Mowbray, Crystal City, Killarney, Deloraine, Melita and Winnipeg, Man.; Rykerts, Waneta, Midway, Sidley, Sumas, New Westminster, Douglas and Nanaimo, B.C.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. You have inspectors at all these ?

Mr. FISHER. No, not resident there, but those are the points of inspection where we can have the cattle inspected any time they come in.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are the physicians paid by fees ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. GILMOUR. Are the veterinaries under the minister's charge or under the charge of the mounted police ?

Mr. FISHER. The work in the Territories is done by the veterinaries of the mounted police almost wholly. Sometimes we have to employ civilians, when there is too much work, but the police do practically all the work. The prestige of the police and their acquaintance with the country enables them to do the work very satisfactorily.

Mr. GILMOUR. I am pleased to see steps taken to have these incoming cattle subjected to strict inspection. I think even more stringent means should be adopted to safeguard the interests of the people of the Northwest. It must be borne in mind that although 23,000 head of cattle come in, they come in for the benefit of a very few people, and the interests of the great majority are opposed to their admission.

Mr. POPE. How is it these regulations have just been published ?

Mr. FISHER. They were issued in March under Order in Council.

Mr. POPE. Why were they not issued under Order in Council in March a year ago ?

Mr. FISHER. Because we had not the information necessary and the new Act was only passed last session on which these regulations are founded.

Mr. POPE. But you had the Disease and Cattle Act, which is pretty much the same thing.

Mr. FISHER. We had regulations then.

Mr. POPE. I understood the hon. minister to say that the yards were being built as rapidly as possible for the accommodation of these cattle.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, because the regulations require that the animals should only come in at those points and these were only issued in March. We could not make the regulations until we had studied out the work and conditions.

Mr. POPE. Do I understand that under the old Act you had no power to make these regulations ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but we did not require to do it at that time. We have worked out new regulations entirely. The trade only came up last year from Mexico.

Mr. POPE. There were cattle imported from Mexico before last year. We discussed this question last year somewhat and the danger was then pointed out. I congratulate the department upon having at last taken action in the matter and the medical officer on the new departure he has taken ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Do I understand that there was practically little or no disease produced by the cattle imported from Mexico and the other side into the Territories ?

Mr. FISHER. There was no outbreak of disease that we know anything of among the cattle imported from the other side of the line.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Can the hon. gentleman say as much with regard to the horses?

Mr. FISHER. Not with the same certainty, because there is some discussion with regard to them in the Territories at present.

Mr. POPE. They had some severe criticisms of that importation there with regard to mange and other disease.

Mr. HACKETT. What quantity of cattle was quarantined at Charlottetown last year ?

Mr. FISHER. From the report of the officer there appears to have been none. There was one standard brood mare and six Suffolk sheep imported from the United States.

Mr. HACKETT. What officer has charge of the service ?

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Leckie.

Mr. HACKETT. I see by the Auditor General's Report that he was paid during twelve months at $12.50 a month. What has he been doing during those twelve months ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend must not forget that in addition to the importations there are exports which have to be passed upon by the officer in charge. There were 57 horses, 1,131 cattle, 3,659 sheep and 64 swine exported from Charlottetown, all of which had to pass under his inspection. My hon. friend would be one of the first to complain if we did not have a quarantine officer at Charlottetown.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to ask what has been paid to Mr. Pethick ?

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Pethick has been the general officer of the department for Prince Edward Island and has done a great deal of work also in Nova Scotia and elsewhere. These items are for expenses, and, in addition he has a salary of $700 a year which does not seem to be included in this particular item in the Auditor General's Report. Dr. Pethick does a great deal of travelling on the Island and in Nova Scotia, and sometimes in New Brunswick and Quebec. He is on the regular staff and does whatever the department may require, wherever he may be sent, though he resides in Prince Edward Island and he would be first called upon for work in that province.

Mr. HACKETT. Dr. Pethick, according to this item, employed a French interpreter at $1.50 a day for eleven days. What was that interpreter required for ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that Dr. Pethick was sent to the Gaspé coast, in Quebec, because of an outbreak of hog cholera. The people there are French and I suppose the interpreter was needed.

Mr. HACKETT. But why should that be charged against Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. FISHER. It appears in the Prince Edward Island items because Dr. Pethick's residence is in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. HACKETT. So, the minister charges against Prince Edward Island and expenses incurred by this officer anywhere in the service of the government ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know that it matters very much. I have given the reason why it appears under the heading of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. HACKETT. I was amazed to see this item in the Auditor General's Report, because there is no necessity for a French interpreter in Prince Edward Island. People there can speak the English language. I think it a mistake to have made in our accounts a charge for a French interpreter, making it appear that an interpreter is necessary in the communications between Dr. Pethick and the people of that province.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad the explanation has come out.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not wish at this late hour to open the discussion as to the importation of horses, which has been up on previous occasions ; but I would like to find out from the minister if the government have decided to acquiese in the request of the Horse-breeders' Association and those interested in horse breeding in the Northwest to raise the minimum valuation for horses imported from the United States. The hon. minister does not wish to discuss the tariff, nor do I, but I think that on this item some explanation will be given. I see by the report that upwards of 32,000 horses, many of them inferior horses, no doubt, were imported from the United States during the last fiscal year into the Northwest Territories. I am led to believe that many of these are smuggled, in fact I understand the reports of the officials of the government have been to that effect, and I understand that this smuggling is made all the easier because there is no penalty except a fine—no confiscation or anything like that ; the smugglers can pay their fine and away. Many of these animals are imported at a low figure—$15 per head and so on, and the number coming in from the United States is out of all proportion to the number going over from our side. The Horse-breeders' Association, in convention assembled have condemned the policy existing at the present time. I understand that deputations have interviewed the government and that resolutions have been passed by several of the live-stock associations. And I think it is too bad that the efforts of those who are anxious to improve our stock by the importation of high-priced thoroughbred animals from the old country and from eastern Canada should be made nugatory by the importation of low grade and diseased animals—for many of these, I am sure are diseased—not only during the last fiscal year but for many years past. I would like to find out from the minister if he has decided to respond to the sentiment which is growing in that country against such a policy and in favour of a higher valuation on these animals imported into our Northwest.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) would not ask me to anticipate the information that my colleague the Minister of Finance will give to the House, I hope, on next Tuesday, when he brings down his Budget.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This is not a question of tariff but of valuation.

Mr. FISHER. Being a question of valuation, it is a question of tariff. The Customs law regulates the tariff and the valuation and only by changing that law can we effect the change that the hon. gentleman suggests. So far as the importation of diseased animals is concerned, that comes within my department. Regulations have just been issued and I will see to it that the hon. gentleman gets a copy immediately—the reading of which will explain more fully what is being done than anything I could say within the compass of a few words.

Mr. GILMOUR. Is it not a fact that they come in at all points, driven in in droves, and not by railway only?

Mr. FISHER. Our regulations will provide for that.

Mr. GILMOUR. But I wish to state that they do come in in droves, being driven over the boundary line and on up as far as Edmonton or perhaps even further, the drove being traded and changed along the trail. I know it would take a large number of officers to watch horses that are driven across in that way, but it is worthy of consideration what steps should be taken.

Mr. FISHER. I will read the regulations :—

3. Branded or range western horses, other than those which are gentle and thoroughly broken to harness or saddle, may be admitted only at the following ports :—

Sarnia, Ont.; Emerson, Man.; North Portal, Wood Mountain, Pendant d'Oreille, Coutts and Cardston, N.W.T.; Gateway, Rossland, Nelson, Grand Forks, Vancouver and Victoria, B.C.; and subject to the following regulations :—

(a.) Such horses must be accompanied by a certificate signed by a veterinarian of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry or by a state veterinarian, stating that they are free from infectious and contagious disease and that no infectious or contagious disease of horses has existed in the district whence they have come, for the period of six months immediately preceding the date of their removal therefrom.

(b.) Owners or persons in charge shall afford to inspectors every facility and assistance for inspecting and otherwise dealing with such horses and shall secure and handle them as directed by the inspectors.

(c.) Such horses shall, in all cases, be subject to detention for such period as the inspectors may deem necessary to determine whether they are free from infectious and contagious disease, and shall be isolated, submitted to the mallein test, dipped or otherwise treated if the inspector so orders.

The Department of Agriculture has no power to say what animals shall come in and what shall not come in. All we can do is to say how they should be treated, and to stop them from coming in if they are diseased.

Mr. HACKETT. The question raised is a very important one, and I trust will receive the best consideration of the government. The raisers of horses in Canada should be protected, because this country is capable of raising as fine animals as can be produced in any part of the world. While I am on my feet, I wish to mention another matter in connection with Prince Edward Island. It is a very solemn affair, and one of great importance. If the hon. gentleman will consult the Auditor General's Report D—70, he will find that Mr. W. H. Pethick, Central Bedeque, was paid $2 for burying hogs. Would the minister state how these hogs came to die in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid I shall have to refer to the accounts before I can give the hon. gentleman an answer to his question. It is possible that Mr. Pethick may have buried the hogs outside of Prince Edward Island. However, I shall try to see that in future nothing is charged up to Prince Edward Island that does not actually occur within the bounds of the ocean which surrounds it and bathes its beautiful shores.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FISHER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up on Monday ?

Mr. FISHER. I think we will take one or two Bills, and if we go into the estimates, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will submit his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 6, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

UNION LABELS BILL—ORDER DISCHARGED.

Mr. RALPH SMITH moved that the order for second reading of Bill (No. 35) respecting union labels be discharged.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Might I ask for some explanation from my hon. friend ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. It is simply to place myself in order for the re-introduction of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and order discharged.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 132) to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. gentleman explain ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill is for the purpose of meeting a difficulty that was suggested during the course of the discussion on the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill with respect to the apportionment of freight rates as between two companies operating under a joint traffic arrangement. It was suggested that the Railway Commission had not full control over such an arrangement. I was of opinion at the time that they had that control ; but after looking at the Act, I think that the control would be only with respect to companies operating in Canada, and would not be applicable to companies operating partly in Canada and partly in the United States. Nor do I think the provisions of the Act go far enough to be applicable to a transportation company operating on the great lakes and under the control of a foreign corporation. That is the first amendment. The second is as to the nationality of the directors of subsidized railways in Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION STEEL COMPANY'S STRIKE

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the Minister of Labour if the parties to the strike in Sydney, Nova Scotia, have requested the intervention of the department, or if the minister himself has volunteered any assistance in that matter ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman, I have to say that neither of the parties to the dispute at the Dominion Iron and Steel Company's works at Sydney has invited the intervention of the government or the Department of Labour. The Sydney Board of Trade did so, and overtures were made by the department to both parties ; but up to the present moment neither of the parties has been willing to avail itself of the services of the department. I have the correspondence here, and, if the House will allow me, I will read it. The following is a telegram from the Sydney Board of Trade :

Sydney, C.B., June 1, 1904,

The Hon. Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

The Sydney Board of Trade, at a meeting held to-day unanimously resolved to ask your intervention in the existing trouble between the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and its employees, which has resolved itself into a general strike that threatens to very seriously affect this community. Briefly stated, the employees' contention is that they are not receiving a living wage, or their just proportion of the bounties paid by your government to the company. The company, on the other hand, contends that it is paying average wages, and offers to arbitrate upon this point. The Board of Trade has therefore passed the following resolution :—That, in view of the large bounties paid by the government to the iron and steel industries in Canada, the government be requested to intervene along the following lines, namely, to require the company to show the condition of its affairs to such persons as the government may see fit to appoint, with a view either, (a) to convince the employees that the company is not yet in a position to accede to their demands for higher wages, or, (b) to bring such pressure to bear upon the company as will lead to an immediate settlement of the existing difficulties.

(Sgd.) S. P. CHALLONER,
Secy., Board of Trade.

In response to this the following communication was sent to the vice-president of the company, the president, I understand, being at present outside of the country :

Toronto, 2nd June, 1904,

Dear Sir,—The government much regrets the existing differences between the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and their employees and which have resulted in a strike and a shutting down of the works and earnestly hope that at the earliest moment harmony may be restored and the men be again at work.

The Sydney Board of Trade has telegraphed asking intervention of the Department of Labour, and I beg to offer the department's services towards a settlement of the differences.

Yours faithfully,
W. MULOCK
Minister of Labour

F. Nicholls, Esq.,
Vice-president, Dom. I. & S. C.,
Toronto.

To this the following answer was received:

14-16 King St., East,
Toronto, Canada June 3rd 1904.

Sir William Mulock, K.C.M.G.,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

Dear sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 2nd inst., and may say I share your regret at the existence of differences between the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and their employees. At the time of reorganization of the company's affairs last December, the position of the company was fully explained to the representatives of the men and also to members of the town council and Board of Trade of Sydney, and there has been no change for the better in the iron and steel market since that date. The trend of prices has been steadily downward, and ironmasters have in some cases shut down their works and in others reduced their staff of employees and also their wages. We have made a determined effort under discouraging circumstances to keep the various mills in operation and afford continued employment to our workmen. A short time since they made a demand for increased pay, which, under the circumstances, it is impossible to concede, but as with this demand was coupled the statement that they were receiving less than the standard rate of wages in similar industries, our directors in their reply offered to submit this claim to arbitration, and I inclose a copy of the resolution adopted unanimously by the directors at a special meeting called to consider the situation.

As the men have voluntarily quit work, the company has decided to suspend operations until the iron and steel trade is in a more satisfactory condition, but with a sincere desire to alleviate any possible suffering, arrangements have been made to, so far as possible, give work to any of our late employees who may desire it.

Yours faithfully
(Sgd.) FREDERIC NICHOLLS,
Vice-president Dominion Iron and Steel Co.

He inclosed in that letter the following copy of the resolution referred to :

Copy of a resolution unanimously passed by the directors of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company :

At a meeting of the board held on Monday, May 30th, 1904, it was resolved that the director of works be authorized to ask the officers of the P. W. Association and a committee of the employees of the company to meet the president and himself on Thursday, the 16th day of June next, and to say to them that the directors of this company are of opinion that they are now paying the current rate of wages beyond what it at present is; and that in event of the P. W. Association and the committee of the employees disputing the correctness of this statement as to the rate of wages, that the company will consent to a decision thereon by a board of arbitrators to be chosen, one by the company, one by the employees, and an umpire to be chosen by these two, and failing the choice, that he be a judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia named by the lieutenant governor.

I also sent the following telegram to Mr. Moffatt:

(Telegram.)

Toronto, 3rd June, 1904.

John Moffatt,
Grand Secretary, P.W.A.,
Sydney, N.S.

Sydney Board of Trade has telegraphed government suggesting its intervention with view to removal of present troubles between Dominion Iron and Steel Company and its employees. Government greatly regrets existence of these differences, and hope that without delay satisfactory solution may be found, and if desired will be pleased to lend its friendly services towards removing grounds of friction and re-establishing friendly relations between both sides. Kindly telegraph me whether intervention by government agreeable to employees, directing answer after to-day to me at Ottawa.

WILLIAM MULOCK,
Minister of Labour.

To this telegram the following reply was received:

Dominion, N.S., June 4.

Hon. Wm. Mulock,
Ottawa.

We prefer to be left to settle this dispute ourselves in our own way. Thanks for kind offer.

JOHN MOFFATT.

On the 4th of June I sent the following telegram to Mr. Challoner:

(Copy) June 4, 1904.

S. P. Challoner,
Secretary Board of Trade,
Sydney, N.S.

On request of Sydney Board of Trade I offered to both parties friendly intervention of Department of Labour in present dispute between Iron and Steel Company and their employees, but greatly regret that replies received indicate unwillingness to accept government intervention. Am mailing you to-day copies of correspondence.

(Signed.) WILLIAM MULOCK.

On the same day I forwarded the copies of the correspondence, accompanied by the following letter:

(Copy)

Dict. G. June 4, 1904.

re Request of Sydney Board of Trade for intervention of Department of Labour, in dispute between Dominion Iron and Steel Company and its employees.

Dear Sir:

As promised in my telegram to you this morning, I am inclosing you herewith copies of correspondence between the government and the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, and the representative of its employees, in regard to the communication received from the Sydney Board of Trade, asking the intervention of the Department of Labour, with a view of bringing about a settlement of existing difficulties.

Upon receipt of your telegram I immediately offered the services of the department to both parties, but greatly regret that the replies received indicate an unwillingness to accept government intervention.

It is possible that the parties to the dispute may not desire the immediate intervention of any third party, but that later on they may change their attitude in this particular. In which event I shall be only too pleased to lend the friendly offices of the department, should such intervention be acceptable.

Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM MULOCK,
Minister of Labour.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I would call the attention of the House to the fact that the Public Accounts Committee has not met for some time. I do not know whether this is due to the unavoidable absence from the city of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade), who is chairman of the committee. But we wish the committee to be convened as soon as possible.

Mr. F. B. WADE. I have been absent from the city for a couple of weeks, and I suppose it is owing to that fact that the the committee has not been convened. But, in addition, there did not seem to be any business before the committee. I will have the committee summoned at once, probably Wednesday.

OTTAWA ELECTRIC COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 110) respecting the Ottawa Electric Company—Mr. Champagne.

On the preamble and amendment (Mr. Sproule) that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. This Bill I regard as a very obnoxious Bill and one that ought not to be passed. Through this Bill, the Ottawa Electric Company is trying to escape an obligation that it owes to the city of Ottawa, namely, not be a party to consolidation with other companies in the same business. It now seeks to evade that responsibilty and to secure the power of merging other companies and so to create a monopoly in this city. We have long heard it said in this House that competition was a great protection of the public. Competition, we were told many times, was the life of trade. Following that principle the people of Ottawa tried to secure competition and prevent consolidation. Now, apparently, things have changed, and combination is being effected, and, I am sorry to say is being aided in this House. The doctrine of the Liberal party at one time was, as I said, that competition would cure all the evils that humanity complained of. But, now, as I said the great doctrine of the Liberal party is combination in the interest of these monopolies. Another thing that I regret to notice is that the government is trying to escape responsibility for the conduct of the committees of this House. Not long ago, I drew attention to this fact; and now I wish to read a quotation bearing on this subject. The late Sir John Bourinot has dealt with the question of the responsibility of the government for the action of the committees of the House, and his opinion must carry weight. I have here 'The Life of Lord Elgin,' by Sir John Bouriont. At page 247, I find the following:

The Canadian minister——

Meaning, of course, the Prime Minister.

—having control of the finances and taxes and of all matters of administration, is directly responsible to parliament and sooner or later to the people for the manner in which public functions have been discharged. All important measures are initiated by the cabinet, and on every question of public interest the ministers are bound to have a definite policy if they wish to retain the confidence of the legislature. Even in the case of private legislation they are also the guardians of the public interest and are responsible to the parliament and the people for any neglect in particular.

He goes on to say:—

Responsible government makes the premier and his ministers responsible for the constitution of the committees and for the opinions and decisions that may emanate from them. A government that would constantly endeavour to shift its responsibilities on committees, even of its own selection, would soon disappear from the treasury benches. Responsibility in legislation is accordingly ensured financial measures prevented from being made the footballs of ambitious and irresponsible politicians and the impartiality and indignity of the speakership guaranteed by the presence in parliament of a cabinet having the direction and supervision of business.

Now, we have that doctrine of responsible government in this country—at least, I hope we have. I hope we believe in it. Under that doctrine the government of the day are responsible for the conduct of these committees, and particularly are responsible for all legislation that goes through this House, and so cannot evade responsibility for legislation passing through this House that is in the interest of monopoly and against the interest of the people. Now, this Bill is clearly in the interest of monopoly, as against the interest of the people, and it is being put through the House by the government of the day. Every vote in favour of this monopoly when it was considered in committee on Private Bills, was a Liberal vote. The three whips of the government were engaged in that committee in trying to put this Bill in favour of monopoly through the House. I simply take my stand on the doctrine of responsible government, and I point to the fact that this legislation is legislation in the interest of monopoly and not in the interest of the people, and I say that the government of the day are responsible—either they must protect the rights of the people against monopoly or they must stand convicted of dereliction of duty.

There is another point with regard to this Bill. Something must be added, if it is to be allowed to go through the House, and later on, I intend to move an amendment in that direction. We are hearing to-day a great deal about the principle of public ownership. It is the new evangel of this century.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am glad to say I have been one of those who have been preaching this evangel.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The only thing in which the hon. gentleman has been consistent.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is an excellent gospel. It is an excellent doctrine, and is making great headway in this country. But if the evangel of public ownership is to make any headway, it must apply the principle of public ownership on every occasion, it must apply it in municipal affairs, in provincial affairs and in federal affairs. There is only one way to do it, and it is a practical way and that is to adopt the principle of public ownership by putting a purchase clause in every private Bill of this kind that goes through either the provincial legislature or this federal House; and no council in any municipality to-day will be discharging its duty to itself, no council in any municipality will be discharging its duty to its constituency unless it insists on this purchase clause being in every one of these private Bills. Now, if a man is in favour of public ownership, I don't care whether he be a Liberal or Conservative, if he does not support that proposition, he is not sound in regard to public ownership. I intend to propose in this Bill that the Ottawa Electric Company should be compelled to adopt a clause that I have drafted, and which I will submit later on. Let me give a specific instance where this clause was adopted. In 1891, the Kingston Gas and Electric Company was incorporated at Toronto. The clause read:

But at any time from and after the expiration of twenty years from the passing of this Act—

I would change that a little and make it 12 months.

—the corporation of the city of Kingston shall have the right, on giving twelve months notice to the Kingston Light, Heat and Power Company of such their intention, to expropriate the works and property of said company under and in accordance with the provisions of the general Act.

And so on. Now, if this Ottawa Electric Company is in the public interest, as they say they are, it will be willing to have that clause put in this Bill, and I propose to put it in, just as the Kingston Light, Heat and Power Company had to submit to its being put in their Bill. Further, I am advised that this company said some time ago that if the city of Ottawa desired to expropriate it under the Conmee Act, they would be willing to do so. I am not able to say whether they can expropriate it under the Conmee Act or not. It might be interfering with Dominion legislation unless this Act is incorporated under Dominion law. But to avoid all that, I propose to have this purchase clause put in this Act of the Ottawa Electric Company, and, as I said before, that would be a real test of public ownership in this country. The real test of public ownership in municipal politics will be the insertion of a purchase clause in every agreement made between one of these private companies holding a public franchise and the municipality; the test will be that the legislature of Ontario, by a general Act, and this legislature, in so far as it has jurisdiction in these cases, shall put this purchase clause in every one of these Acts. Now, down in the province of Quebec, they have had some experience with these private companies. In a newspaper called 'La Presse,' published in Montreal, and edited by Mr. Dansereau, there was a significant article of which I will read one or two paragraphs. It was an editorial appearing on June first:

The session of the Quebec legislature for 1904 has been particularly remarkable and marked; if custom declared that we must christen each session, this last one is certainly entitled to be called the session of the electrical trust.

Every measure throwing a shade on the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company or on the surburban street car lines, has been pitilessly rejected; every measure favourable to this formidable trust has been adopted. Never before has a cabal as cynical, as brutal, been organized at Quebec. Ministers, magistrates and a cloud of lawyers have been in the service of the electrical trust and have exercised a deplorable pressure on our lawmakers.

The same thing has happened here in Ottawa. A cloud of lawyers, a cloud of lobbyists in the interests of this corporation, and a cloud of whips in the service of the Liberal party, have been working in the interest of this corporation, and the rights of the people are being taken away from them in the interest——

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Where were you that day?

Mr. MACLEAN. I was away, and I am here to-day. Where was the hon. gentleman?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I was not away.

Mr. MACLEAN. How did the hon. gentleman vote? The hon. gentleman voted in the interest of the monopoly, he backs up his party to-day in the interest of the monopoly. I am here to fight monopolies to-day, and I will fight them, and the hon. gentleman will be in the cellar when the fight comes on. Now, Mr. Chairman, these companies are all powerful in the municipal councils, they are all powerful in legislatures, especially in legislatures that are controlled by Liberals, and they are all powerful in this House; and we are asked to-day to strengthen this monopoly in the city of Ottawa. Ottawa seems to be the peculiar home of a lot of grafters, the men who happen to hold stock in what I call the sawdust bank of this country. They are all more or less in the sawdust business, and they all think that the way to strengthen their monopolies——

Mr. CASGRAIN. The sawdust men are on the other side.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am not sure about that. But their policy is to be shining lights in Ottawa society and give a certain number of dinners every session, and in that way they think they can get any legislation they desire in this country in the interests of monopolies. Now, I say there is somebody else in this country who have interests to be protected besides those who are said to be capitalists, and who are in favour of monopolies—there are the people, and are the people's rights not worthy to be protected? Or are the people's rights to be raided, as they have been raided in this legislature, as they are being raided by this Bill? I think they are entitled to protection, and the way to protect them is to compel this company who are asking for this legislation, to accept the purchase clause. Here is the clause that I referred to, and which I propose to put in this Bill:

4. The powers hereby conferred upon the company are granted upon the condition that the corporation of the city of Ottawa shall have the right to acquire by expropriation the works and property of the company, and such right is hereby conferred upon such corporation subject to the payment of compensation by the said corporation to the company to be determined, in the event of failure to agree, by arbitration in the manner provided for by the clauses of 'The Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903,' of the province of Ontario relating to arbitrations, and the amount of such compensation shall be estimated by the arbitrators so to be appointed in the manner provided for by clause (a3) of subsection 4 of section 566 of the said last mentioned Act, which said subsection is commonly referred to as the 'Conmee Act,.

Here is the provision I propose to insert in their Bill. We will give this company the power they ask for to increase their capital, we will give them the power to buy out this other company, but in giving them these powers we will impose upon them this condition, that the city of Ottawa shall have the right to purchase this franchise on a valuation.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Why didn't they make that a part of the contract ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Because of the cloud of lawyers and lobbyists who surrounded their municipal council when these amendments were going through.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Will the hon. gentleman say that the people want government ownership ? Why did'nt the people oppose the Bill ?

Mr. MACLEAN. They have tried to get public ownership but whenever they do try to get it a cloud of lawyers, some government whips and some ministers line up their followers to defeat public ownership.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Where are the people ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The people demand public ownership.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Then why don't they get it ?

Mr. MACLEAN. They have been blocked time after time, but they are going to get it. All these municipalities are going to have public ownership, and that is what we are going to have in the city of Toronto. The people in England have it to-day and they have it because they have obtained the legislation which they desired in that direction from parliament which was favourable to the proposition, but in some way public ownership in this country is considered to be a crime by the political parties, is considered to be socialistic, as I have said before in this House. Now, all that is changing and I say : Give the people the power to expropriate this company. In the city of Ottawa the people have had a hard fight against the monopolistic companies.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Does not the Ontario law provide for that ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not know if it does because the Ontario law may not reach a Dominion Act. I am making provision by which the people of Ottawa, under this federal Bill, will have secured to them the right to purchase the property of this company.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Have you given any notice of this amendment ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I have not given it in committee but this is substantially giving notice of it.

Mr. GALLIHER. What do the council of the city of Ottawa say about this ?

Mr. MACLEAN. They have not declared upon it yet but they will declare upon it. I am giving them an opportunity to protect themselves.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hon. gentlemen have a great faculty of saying 'hear, hear' and laughing when anybody proposes anything in the public interest, but you ought to see them run to give $175,000,000 of the people's money to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. They shine upon occasions of that kind, but whenever anything is proposed in the interest of the people they oppose it like my hon. friend from British Columbia who says he is a socialist. He is everything. He is a workingman's candidate——

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have never said that I was a socialist.

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, we will change that. He has assumed to speak in the labour interest of this country and I can tell him that the labour interest is in favour of public ownership. I would like him to go to the city of Toronto and state to the working men of that city that public ownership is a delusion and a snare.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I believe in municipal ownership, but I want the hon. gentleman to give some evidence that the people desire it. If the people of Ottawa desire it why do they not get it ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I will tell you why. The people of Ottawa voted a while ago for public ownership of the telephone system. They voted for it twice and the city council declared for it two or three times and yet in some way some of the men who are working for this monopolistic corporation turned up in the interest of the Bell Telephone Company and the people were defeated. The public press of the city of Ottawa has been recreant towards the people in regard to public ownership because in that respect they have abandoned the people and are aiding the corporations.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The people are greater than the press.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, the people are greater than the press, they are going to realize the situation and they are going to demonstrate that they are in favour of public ownership and in favour of a purchase clause. It takes the people some time to find out what the situation really is.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. But the hon. gentleman says they believe in it.

Mr. MACLEAN. They do believe in it, and they are voting in favour of it. This House will eventually vote in favour of it and the hon. gentleman opposite will have an opportunity of showing whether he is in favour of this legislation or not and he will have an opportunity of showing whether he is in favour of this monopolistic corporation.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. If the people of the city of Ottawa demonstrate to me that they are in favour of this legislation I will support it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am going to go one better and I am going to say that the people of Ottawa shall have the right by law to take over this concern if they wish to do so. Now, who is the chief consumer of electricity in the city of Ottawa ? I hold it is the people of Canada represented by the government of the day. The government is the chief revenue producer of this company in Ottawa and what are the relations between the government and this company to-day ? It has not even a contract with the company. It has given it the right to supply electrical energy and light and it renewed the first agreement it made with the company without competition and without any inquiry in regard to the price. It is paying to-day a price which it should never pay for electrical energy in Ottawa. Who gives this company the water privilege from which this power is generated ? The people of Canada. Who are entitled to fair treatment and reasonable prices for electrical light and power ? The people. Can the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his party justify the absence of a contract with this company ensuring to the consumers a fair price? Can they justify themselves being a party to this legislation here which means a merger and which, if a merger takes place, empowers this Ottawa Electric Light Company to put up the rates ? They cannot justify it and I say as the chief consumers of electrical energy in this country and as those who have to pay the monthly bills of this corporation they should say : In our own interest we insist that there shall be no such merger. We will hold you strictly to your agreement. It has been stated in the committee that companies can find ways of getting around all these clauses designed to prevent consolidation. If that is so we ought to do what we can to strengthen the hands of the people by inserting this purchase clause. Some hon. gentlemen may have heard to-day perhaps, for the first time in regard to this purchase clause, but on every occasion upon which I can raise it I propose to raise it and to have it inserted in all this legislation dealing with these agreements. It ought to be inserted in all contracts of the same character made with this government that at any day upon giving due notice and paying a price to be settled by arbitration, the government can step in and take over the franchise, or if a municipality is interested, the municipality may step in and take over the franchise and administer the service in the interest of the people. There is nothing so useful to the public as cheap electrical energy and we in Canada have more electrical energy than all the rest of the world put together. We have all the power that we require to drive all our railways, and all our machinery, to heat and to light all our houses, and we are doing nothing but giving it away to companies without any regulation as to the prices which they charge or as to treating the public fairly. Surely when we have this vast store of electrical energy and when we have no coal in many portions of the country we ought to take the greatest care to surround these grants with proper safeguards in the interest of the people. Nothing of that kind has been done in this country as yet. We have all been busy giving away concessions, giving away grants, giving away the people's money to these corporations without imposing sufficient regulations on them and without insisting upon some kind of a purchase clause agreement. I believe all that will be changed. I hope the government will see that it is responsible for this legislation, and especially that it will not try to shoulder the responsibility upon the committee, that it will assume the responsibility which belongs to it and that, as the chief consumer of electrical energy in the city of Ottawa, it will say to this company: We will not grant you this legislation allowing you to merge with another company. We will increase your capital if you want it increased but in the interest of the people of Ottawa we will impose upon you the condition that they shall have the right to purchase if they desire it.

Mr. THOS. BIRKETT. Mr. Chairman, we have been told by our hon. friends opposite that the city of Ottawa has entered no protest against the passage of this Bill. At the opening of this session of the House I presented a petition from the mayor on behalf of the citizens of Ottawa protesting against the present legislation.

Mr. GALLIHER. Allow me to point out that the mayor of the city of Ottawa is not the council of the city of Ottawa. He is only one officer. What I asked my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) was if the council of the city of Ottawa had entered any protest against this legislation. So far, I as a member of this House have heard none.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman must have heard the protest made on Friday about this very thing, and repeated again to-day.

Mr. GALLIHER. Has any resolution from the city council of Ottawa opposing this legislation, been placed before the House ?

Mr. BIRKETT. In answer to the hon. gentleman's question, I may say that at the last meeting of the municipal council of the city of Ottawa a resolution was unanimously passed authorizing the mayor and the city solicitor to look after the interests of the city in connection with this Bill. I have not a copy of the resolution at hand, but a copy was shown to me this morning by his worship Mayor Ellis.

Mr. MONET. What were the instructions contained in the resolution ?

Mr. BIRKETT. I do not know the details, but the instruction was to look after the interests of the city in connection with this Bill.

Mr. HEYD. I have a circular in my hand purporting to be issued by the mayor and city solicitor, representing that if this Bill should pass it would cause the city a loss of a quarter of a million dollars per year.

Mr. BIRKETT. So it will. Now that the hon. gentleman has brought that matter to my notice, I will explain how it will be a loss of a quarter of a million, or $300,000, a year to the citizens of Ottawa. In the first place, when the Ottawa Company got their franchise from the council of the city of Ottawa, the maximum price was one cent per ampere hour and twenty-five per cent discount, which for the purpose of calculation we may say that it was 75 cents per 100 amperes. When the Consumers Company and the Metropolitan Company got their franchise, that maximum rate was reduced to 52 cents per 100 amperes, and the price they are selling at to-day is 36 cents per 100 ampere hours. If the Ottawa Company should get the privileges they desire under this Bill, it is possible for them to increase the present rate of 36 cents per 100 amperes to 75 cents per 100 amperes. The revenue of the Ottawa Electric Company last year was $217,000 at 36 cents per 100 amperes, and the revenue of the Consumers Company was something in the neighbourhood of $80,000, or, both combined $300,000 in round numbers. Now, if 36 cents per 100 amperes will produce $300,000 and if they increase the price to 75 cents per 100 amperes, will it not produce $300,000 more, which will be an additional tax of $300,000 on the consumers of electric light and power in Ottawa ; a sum which is nearly one-half of our total taxes in the city? I hope I have made that plain to hon. gentlemen. The petition which is placed in my hands and which I have the honour to present to the House is as follows :

OTTAWA ELECTRIC COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 110) respecting the Ottawa Electric Company.—Mr. Champagne.

Mr. BIRKETT. When the House was summoned to the Senate I was about to read the following petition from the city of Ottawa :

To the honourable the House of Commons in parliament assembled :

The petition of the corporation of the city of Ottawa, humbly showeth :

1. Bill No. 110 'An Act respecting the Ottawa Electric Company,' provides :—

(a.) That the capital stock of the company be increased from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000.

(b.) That the company may issue bonds to the amount of $1,125,000 instead of $500,000 as at present.

(c.) That the company may acquire shares in the capital stock, debentures, securities of other electric companies and that the proviso be struck out of the original Act which provides that such stock, debentures or securities shall only be issued 'as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.'

2. In 1898 your petitioners granted a franchise to the Metropolitan Electric Company of Ottawa, Limited, authorizing that company to erect poles and wires for the purpose of supplying electric light and power. Maximum rates for electric light and power were fixed in that franchise.

3. The following clause was inserted in that franchise :—

'15. That the said company shall not at any time during the said period amalgamate or combine with any other company or companies now carrying on or which may hereafter at any time during the said period carry on in the said city of Ottawa, the business of supplying electricity for the purposes of power, light or heat, nor shall the said company enter into any contract, agreement or arrangement with any such company for such purpose or that shall have such effect, nor shall the said company enter into any contract, agreement or arrangement with any such company for the purpose, or that may have the effect of creating a monopoly of the business of supplying electricity for the purposes aforesaid in the city of Ottawa, without the permission of the council of the corporation of the city of Ottawa to be expressed by by-law.'

The purpose of this provision was to prevent the company obtaining the franchise from amalgamating or selling out to any other electric light company. The term of the franchise of the Metropolitan Company was for twenty-one years from 1898.

4. The Metropolitan Company not having entered upon the business of supplying electric light, heat and power, your petitioners in 1901 gave a twenty-three year franchise to the Consumers' Electric Company, Limited. In that franchise the maximum rates for commercial lighting and power were also fixed.

A similar proviso to that in the Metropolitan Company's franchise was inserted in the Consumers' franchise, providing that the latter company should not amalgamate or sell out to any other electric light company.

5. The object of your petitioners in granting, first, the Metropolitan franchise, and then the Consumers' franchise was to secure competition in electric lighting with the Ottawa Electric Company. Your petitioners, at the time these franchises were granted, relied on the provision in the Ottawa Electric Company's Act of incorporation, which provided that that company could only acquire the stock, debentures or securities of other electric companies 'as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.' It is now sought to have this protection to your petitioners struck out.

6. When the Bill in question was before the Private Bills Committee an amendment was moved, that the power to purchase stock in other companies should not only apply to the stock of the Metropolitan or the Consumers' Company. This amendment was lost by 19 to 14. The refusal of the Ottawa Electric Company to accept this amendment indicates clearly that the real purpose of the Bill is to enable the Ottawa Company to buy out the Metropolitan and the Consumers' Company or one of them.

7. Your petitioners are advised that the evident intention of the Bill is to enable the Metropolitan and the Consumers' Companies to get rid of the provisions against amalgamating or selling out to any other electric light company, which were inserted in these companies' franchises by your petitioners for the express purpose of securing competition, and consequently low rates for electric lighting.

8. The rates charged at present by both the Ottawa Electric Company and the Consumers' Electric Company for electric light are about one-half less than they were before the Consumers' Company began to compete with the Ottawa Company. If the legislation now being asked for by the Ottawa Electric Company is granted, and it results in that company acquiring the Consumers' Company, the result will be that the citizens of Ottawa may have to pay from $250,000 to $300,000 every year more than at present for their electric light.

9 Your petitioners strongly submit that your honourable House should not enact legislation which will have the effect of taking away from the city the guarantee which it now has, that there will be competition in the supplying of electric light, heat and power, and consequently low rates.

10. The imposition of large rates for electric light, heat and power would not only compel the citizens of Ottawa to pay very much larger amounts each year for their light but they would have a deterrent effect upon any new industries coming to the city and would seriously retard the growth of the city.

11. In any event, your petitioners respectfully submit that the legislation now asked for should not be granted on the ground that parliament should not authorize a merger of any class of companies which would have the effect of creating a monopoly.

12. In the event of the Ottawa Company, the Consumers' Company and the Metropolitan Company being merged into one company, it would be very difficult, if not impossible, for any other company or your petitioners to enter upon the business of supplying electric light heat and power, because almost all the available water powers in the immediate vicinity of the city of Ottawa would be in the hands of such a merger company or in the hands of persons or companies who could not supply power for the purposes of electric light, heat and power.

Your petitioners humbly pray that your honourable House will not enact the legislation asked for in clause 2 of the Bill of the Ottawa Electric Company, and that such clause should be struck out, or in any event that the Ottawa Electric Company should not be given authority to purchase the stock, debentures or securities of the Metropolitan Company or of the Consumers' Company.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

The Corporation of the City of Ottawa, by J. ELLIS,
Mayor.

Ottawa, June 6, 1904.

This is the protest which the city of Ottawa has entered against the passage of this Bill. The citizens of Ottawa have no objection to any feature of the Bill except that clause. They are quite willing that the company should have additional powers to increase their capital and also additional borrowing powers. On Friday night a great deal was said about this company not being a paying concern. I then gave some figures which had been given to me by a citizen and which I believed to be correct; I now give you the figures direct from the last report of the Ottawa Electric Company. Something was said on Friday to the effect that the reason they wished to merge these three companies into one was in order that electricity might be supplied to the city on a paying basis. The reports which I hold in my hand will go to show that the revenue now derived from the business of the Ottawa Electric Company would place that company on a paying basis if properly applied. The gross revenue from all sources, viz:

Arc and incandescent lighting, heating power and sales of merchandise, was	$217,386.83

Under the heading of expenditure we find:

Gross cost of management, operating and maintenance	$118,890.44
Showing gross profit for the year of	$ 98,496.39

To the expenses as above the following charges are added, viz.:

Interest on bonds	$ 25,000.00
Interest on current liabilities	1,379.95
Making the gross expenditure	$145,270.39
Leaving a net profit for the year of	$ 72,116.44

Now the capital stock of the company is $1,000,000, and $72,116.44 is exactly 7 2-10 per cent on the capital of that company after taking $25,000 to rest account.

There is a profit and loss account of $24,417.27 and there is a peculiarity about this report in that they only paid dividend No. 14 and 15 of 1 per cent each, making a total of $20,000 paid in dividends. Out of $72,116.44 all the shareholders got was $20,000, leaving a balance of some $52,116.44.

Then we have this statement of the profit and loss account.

Dr.

Dividend No. 14 of 1 per cent, paid July 31st, 1902	$10,000.00
Dividend No. 15 of 1 per cent, paid October 31st 1902	10,000.00
Amount placed to credit of 'Rest Account'	25,000.00
Amount placed to credit of 'Reserve Account' to provide for bad debts.	2,173.87
Amount placed to credit of 'Reserve Account' to provide for depreciation of plant	25,000.00
Balance at credit April 30th, 1903	24,417.27

But if you turn to their liabilities you will find that they already have a rest account there of $125,000, and with the addition of this other $25,000 their total rest account is brought to $150,000. On the basis then, of this statement issued by them and audited by their own auditors, I do not think that the plea of poverty by the company have any effect on the minds of the committee. I think it is only fair and right that there should be a reasonable dividend allowed to all who put their money in enterprises of this sort. Still I think there is a certain limit to matters of this kind, and to go beyond that is an abuse. There is another reason why I object to this company absorbing the two other companies. As I pointed out on Friday night, the charter now held by the Ottawa Company is in effect a perpetual charter, while that held by the Metropolitan Company is only for twenty years and that held by the Consumers' Company is only for twenty-three years. So that at the end of twenty or twenty-three years the city would be in a position to purchase the plant of either of these two companies if desired, but if they are merged into the Ottawa Company, which has a pereptual charter, the city will not be able to purchase. These are two of the strongest reasons which I have placed before the committee why the company should not be given the privilege they are asking for, that that portion of the seventh clause should be struck out. When we reach that part of the Bill, I purpose moving an amendment, of which I gave notice to the clerk on Saturday morning about 11 o'clock. I asked him if it was in time, and he said he thought it was. I was told afterwards that, as the Votes and Proceedings had been printed, it could not be printed among the notices. If there were no other reason for delaying this Bill, I think that ought to be sufficient, as the notice was given in good faith and within the requisite time. The following is the notice of my motion :

Mr. Birkett, when the House is in Committee on Bill No. 110, 'An Act respecting the Ottawa Electric Company,' will move that the same be amended by adding the following providing that if the company acquires a majority of the shares in the capital stock, or in the debentures or securities of the Metropolitan Electric Company of Ottawa, Limited, or the Consumers Electric Company, Limited, the company shall not increase the prices or rates for electric light, heat or power beyond those provided for in the franchise granted by the city of Ottawa to the Metropolitan Electric Company of Ottawa, Limited, and the Consumers Electric Company, Limited, and being those contained in By-laws 1857 and 2138 of the city of Ottawa.

In view of the fact that the company, on their own statement, are paying 7·2 per cent dividend on $1,000,000 of capital, while selling light at 36 cents per 100 ampere hours, if they accept this proposition, which has been handed to me by the mayor, they will still have the opportunity, if they so desire, of increasing the price from 36 cents to 52 cents. I am not saying that they should do so, but in the event of amalgamation, they will have that amount of leeway.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is there not a contract already between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Company ?

Mr. BIRKETT. There is, so far as lighting the streets is concerned ; but the reduction in price to 36 cents to ordinary consumers has come about by competition. When the Metropolitan Company started business the maximum rate it was allowed to charge was 52 cents, and the price has been gradually reduced by competition, until now we are paying only 36 cents.

Mr. BRODEUR. Besides the contract for lighting the streets of the city, is there not also a contract fixing the price which the citizens of Ottawa should pay to the Ottawa Electric Company ?

Mr. BIRKETT. No ; the only security the citizens of Ottawa have is the maximum fixed by the charter. I have explained that when the Ottawa Company first got their charter, the maximum rate allowed to them was 1 cent per ampere, with 25 per cent discount, making the price 75 cents per 100 ampere hours.

Mr. BRODEUR. Was not that clause of the charter embodied in a contract between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Company, and is not the city of Ottawa today trying to cancel that contract ?

Mr. BIRKETT. No, not at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. It looks like it.

Mr. MACLEAN. There is no contract.

Mr. BIRKETT. If there is a contract, I don't know of it. The only contract I know of between the city and the company is the one for street lighting. When the Chaudière Company and the Standard Company amalgamated with the Ottawa Company the following was inserted in the charter :

The company shall not, without the consent by by-law or otherwise of the municipality of the city of Ottawa or of the city of Hull, respectively, as the case may be, increase the ordinary prices or rates charged by any of the said other companies for electric light in the city of Ottawa or in the city of Hull, respectively, at the time such purchase, lease or other acquirement, working arrangement or amalgamation is entered into.

Probably that is what the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that even before that charter was granted there was a contract made between the Ottawa Electric Company and the city of Ottawa, by which a certain price was to be charged to the citizens, and that now the city of Ottawa is trying to break that contract. I do not know whether that is correct or not, but that is the information I have.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Where is that information ? I asked for that on Friday night. I said there was no such limitation, and I asked some person to give me information on the subject. Perhaps the hon. minister can tell me where it can be got, because it throws altogether new light on this subject.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. member for Wright (Mr. Champagne), the promoter of the Bill, sends me the agreement between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Light Company, in which section 11 is as follows :

That the companies will not except as hereinafter in this section mentioned hereafter charge a higher rate for incandescent lighting to consumers residing in the city of Ottawa than is at present charged, and consumers are to receive a discount of twenty-five per cent.

So that there has been a contract between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Company.

Mr. BIRKETT. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should ask for an explanation after I have repeatedly given it to him. I said at the outset that the contract between the Ottawa Electric Company and the city of Ottawa provided for a price of 1 cent per ampere, or $1 per 100 ampere hours, with a discount of 25 per cent, that is 75 cents per 100 ampere hours. This is what the citizens of Ottawa paid before the Consumers' Company started business. When that company started business the maximum price it could charge was fixed at 52 cents, and by competition the price has been brought down to 36 cents. So that there is really no contract. The basis of the Ottawa Company's charter is that they cannot exceed 75 cents and the Consumers' Company cannot exceed 52 cents, though competition has brought the price down to 36 cents, and the consumers of Ottawa are getting the benefit of that. That is the only contract I know of.

I have gone over the merits of the question, and I think it ought to be plain to every member of the committee that all we ask for and plead for on behalf of the citizens of Ottawa is that the committee should consider the corporation of the city, should consider the citizens and consumers, and give them the protection that, it seems to me, they are entitled to. I trust the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will come to our assistance and will have the Bill stand until such time as the company and the city can get together and find if an amicable arrangement can be made. I do not see why this should not be done. When the amalgamation took place in 1894, the company and the city council got together and agreed to a contract, and, after they had agreed to it, they came here and the House gave them legislation. Why should they not do that now? I leave it in the hands of the committee. I think surely the right hon. leader of the House will come to the assistance of the city of Ottawa and will have this matter stand until the next meeting.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE. It is not my intention at the present moment to enter into the merits of this clause of the Bill. I may have occasion later on to speak at greater length. I have been asked by the promoters of the Bill to contradict certain statements that were made on Friday night by the hon. senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett). This afternoon I received a letter from the Secretary Treasurer of the Ottawa Electric Company which is as follows:

Ottawa, Ont., June 6th, 1904.

L. N. CHAMPAGNE, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In the published reports of the discussion in the Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons on Friday night last Mr. Birkett is stated to have said:

First. That the Ottawa Electric Company has no restriction upon the rates that it can charge.

Second. That the Ottawa company's rates are not lower than those charged in other cities.

Third. That he (Mr. Birkett) had received a telegram from Hamilton to the effect that the Hamilton rates are as low as the rates charged in Ottawa.

Mr. BIRKETT.

Fourth. That the directors of the Ottawa Electric Company are not acquainted with the company's Bill now before parliament.

Fifth. That an annuity of $15,000 per annum is paid by the Ottawa Electric Company to some one whose name Mr. Birkett did not give.

I am directed to say that Mr. Birkett's statements are incorrect.

First. The Ottawa Electric Company by its contract with the city of Ottawa has a restriction on its rates, both for arc and incandescent lighting.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Champagne) is reading a document contradicting a statement made by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett). If so, he has no right to read such a statement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. For what reason?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. The letter goes on:——

Mr. CLANCY. I call your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Champagne) has no right to read such a statement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not understand on what ground the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) bases his objection.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Champagne) is reading a statement, coming from some outside person contradicting a statement of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) made in this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) did not pretend to speak of the matter as within his personal knowledge. He spoke of something that he had heard and others may have information as good as his.

Mr. BIRKETT. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is quite correct. As to the figures—I think 'Hansard' will bear me out—I said that, personally, I knew nothing about the working of the company, but that I had seen a telegram from Hamilton purporting to show that the charges for electric lighting in Hamilton were about the same as here. So far as the $15,000 annuity is concerned, I said that that had been brought to my notice but that I did not know anything about it, but gave it as I got it. I made no positive statement.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE (reading.)

Second. The rates of the Ottawa Electric Company are lower than the rates charged in any other city in Canada.

Third. The rates charged in Hamilton for incandescent lighting are fifty per cent in excess of the rates charged in Ottawa. The rates charged for arc lights in Hamilton are $85 each; the rates at Ottawa under the contract now being entered into with Ottawa are $52 per annum.

Fourth. The directors of the Ottawa Electric Company are fully in possession of the Bill now before parliament.

Fifth. No person receives an annuity of $15,000 or any other amount from the Ottawa Electric Company.

As Mr. Birkett's statements were made upon the floor of the House, this company will feel obliged if this official denial can be made in the same place.

Yours very truly,
D. R. STREET,
Secretary-Treasurer.

I think the reading of this document is perfectly in order. And, of course, will lead the committee to decide as to the value of the statements made by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) and also the statements signed by the city solicitor and the mayor and the statements made by the Ottawa Electric Company.

Mr. C. B. HEYD. This question, to my ordinary mind is quite clear. I do not see what right—at least what moral right—we, as a parliament, have to override an agreement entered into by two independent corporations, unless with their mutual consent. If the city of Ottawa has entered into an agreement and granted a franchise under certain conditions I do not know why we, at the solicitations of one of the parties should override that agreement and substitute fresh conditions. At any rate we should not do that until the city of Ottawa is a consenting party. So far as I have gathered from those officially entitled to speak for the city of Ottawa—the mayor and the city solicitor—they object to this legislation. I do not think Ottawa will be treated fairly unless this Bill is referred back to the committee to ascertain the real facts of the case. When we thoroughly understand the situation, and after the city of Ottawa has had an opportunity to make her views heard upon this question, only then shall we be entitled to take an active part in this controversy.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) has drawn our attention to the fact that on the 30th June, 1894, an agreement was entered into by the Ottawa Electric Company, the Chaudière Electric Light and Power Company, Limited, and the Standard Electric Power Company of Ottawa, Limited, on one side, and the city of Ottawa on the other side. And the minister has quoted correctly the 11th section of the agreement as follows :

That the companies will not accept as hereinafter in this section mentioned hereafter charge a higher rate for incandescent lighting to consumers residing in the city of Ottawa than is at present charged, and consumers are to receive a discount of twenty-five per cent instead of 20 per cent as allowed at present, and that such reduction shall commence to be made within one year from this date ; and in the event of the said companies being compelled at any time to place their wires underground the present rates shall not be increased unless with the consent of the municipal council of the city of Ottawa expressed by by-law and then only to such an extent and for such term as the council may determine by by-law, but nothing in this clause shall effect special contracts.

I do not know enough about this matter to be able to determine whether, when this contract was entered into between these companies and the city of Ottawa, it was the intention that no other electric light company should be admitted to do business in the city. So far as I see, there is nothing specified in this contract to that effect. Since that time, another company has made an agreement with the city of Ottawa, that company being known as the Consumers' Electric Light Company. That company has undertaken to supply light at a maximum rate mentioned in its contract. I believe that maximum rate is lower than the maximum rate named in this contract of 1894.

Now the Ottawa Electric Light Company are asking for power to increase their capital, and for the right to acquire the property of other electric light companies. I would think it more economical myself, if the municipality had control of the prices, if there were only one electric light company ; but if by the Bill as it is at present before us the Ottawa Electric Light Company may obtain the franchise and the business of the Consumers' Electric Light Company, that company will go out of business, the restrictions imposed upon it will fall to the ground, and in its place the maximum rate provided for in this contract may be charged. If I am correctly stating the case, I think that would be a hardship on the people of Ottawa. Ever since the establishment of the Consumers' Electric Light Company the people who use electric light in this city have obtained it at a lesser price than was previously the case. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the committee, there being a conflict of opinion upon a matter of great importance to the people of the capital, and, as my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) has pointed out, the government of this country being the largest single consumer of electric light in this city, it is not an unreasonable request under the circumstances that this Bill should be referred back to the Private Bills Committee for further consideration. I for one believe that a municipality ought to be obliged to live up to its contract when it has made a contract ; I believe at the same time that if a company makes a contract it should be obliged to live up to it, and that we should not facilitate the passage of legislation that will enable any company to absolve itself from its obligations and mulct the consumers of electric light as well. That will be the effect of the adoption of the Bill now before us ; the people will have to pay a higher price for electric light than they would otherwise pay. I think, unless very good ground is shown for this legislation, unless it can be clearly shown that this company are carrying on business at a loss, the Bill should not pass in its present form. I hope the Prime Minister will see his way clear to let the Bill be sent back to the Private Bills Committee so that, all parties being heard and the committee being in possession of all facts, we may have a further report upon this matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The matter is altogether new to me. It came before the House as an ordinary private Bill, and there was no more disturbance of public opinion in regard to it than an ordinary Bill creates.

An hon. MEMBER. Read the press of the city.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not seen any serious objection to it except in one of the papers. One paper has favoured it, and others have been silent. I may say this to my hon. friend : If I understand the case correctly, the Ottawa Electric Light Company made a contract in 1894 with the city of Ottawa whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a certain rate should be fixed for supplying electrical light to the citizens of Ottawa. That contract was made, as I understand. Then am I right in understanding that later on the city of Ottawa, notwithstanding this contract, made another contract with the Consumers' Electric Company ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Which they had a perfect right to do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, we will see whether they had that right or not. As has been asked by my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Heyd), has the city a right to make another contract with another company because it thinks it can do better ? I think not.

Mr. CLARKE. The reason why the corporation of the city of Ottawa was a party to that agreement made in 1894 is set out in the agreement itself. In consideration of the companies agreeing to certain proposals and restrictions arranged between them and the corporation, the corporation agreed to the amalgamation. But there was no provision made in that contract that the corporation should not give permission to other lighting companies to come in, there was no suggestion of a provision of that kind. It was perfectly free for the corporation of Ottawa later on to allow other lighting companies to come in. The Prime Minister should bear in mind also that Ottawa has power from the Ontario legislature to expropriate property and engage in electric lighting. I think that is an additional reason why a further conference should be held.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no binding power on the part of the city of Ottawa in reference to the agreement that the Minister of Inland Revenue has read. It is simply a permission by the city of Ottawa to these two parties to make electric light in Ottawa, and if they do it, the city requires them to furnish light to the citizens at a maximum price. There is nothing in the contract which says that the city of Ottawa shall not make bargains with other companies. The Bill is a harmless looking Bill, but the effect of it is that this new company may acquire shares in the capital stock, debentures and securities of other electric companies, or of companies possessing powers similar to those of the Ottawa Company. Originally they could acquire stock in consideration for goods, wares and merchandise ; they can acquire it now for any reason whatever.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not for any reason, only for cash.

Mr. HAGGART. They can purchase the stock of other companies, they can make an agreement with the parties who own the stock of other companies, and for any reason or for any consideration whatever, can acquire it. Where did the Minister of Justice get his authority for saying that it is only for cash ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is the general law of the corporation.

Mr. HAGGART. If you own stock in this company and I can purchase it on any consideration I like, it gives power to the new company to do so in the same way. These two companies have an arrangement made with the city of Ottawa by which they furnish light to the citizens at a lower price, and the effect of the Bill is that you can buy out the two other companies which are furnishing electric light at a lower price, and fall back on the old arrangement and charge the citizens what they had a right to do under the old agreement.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY. I wish to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to a violation of the rules of this House. I was quite unable to understand why you took no notice of the objection I raised. I do not know whether it was because the Prime Minister took a contrary view or not, but I desire now to call your attention to a violation of that rule on the part of the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Champagne). This is what Sir John Bourinot says on page 460 :

> Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House, and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member, or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

I desire to know what your view is Mr. Chairman, with regard to the violation of that rule by the hon. member for Wright.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. member for Wright (Mr. Champagne) only said he had seen a telegram stating that the rates in Ottawa were something like the rates in Hamilton. He does not make that statement on his own authority.

Mr. CLANCY. He said it in denial of what the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) said.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. member for Wright only said he had seen a telegram from Ottawa giving certain information ; that was not disputing the word of the hon. member for Ottawa. The hon. member for Wright then gives another statement. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) would be right in raising an objection if the hon. member for Wright was reading a newspaper or a document denying the word of another hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. No, no, that is not it at all. If my right hon. friend will permit me I will read it again.

Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House, and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member, or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

The hon. gentleman was commenting upon what took place in this House. If it had any purpose whatever it was for the purpose of denying what my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) had said, and if it did not have that meaning it would have been useless to have read it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) had made an affirmation of some fact that he knew himself, certainly, his word would have been binding and no one could have contradicted him not only outside of this House, but even in this House, but when my hon. friend only gives information which he got from outside of this House, everybody has the same right as he has.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order was taken some time ago and I do not think it is in order to argue it out. I think the difference of opinion is more in regard to the application of these words than anything else, and I think it had better be allowed to rest.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman refuse to give us his decision?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order should not be taken and pressed.

Mr. CLANCY. It was taken but you refused to take notice of it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No, when the right hon. Prime Minister made his explanation the hon. gentleman sat down and did not press his point of order and I therefore assumed that the point of order was passed over.

Mr. CLANCY. I assumed, Mr. Chairman, that you knew the rules of the House and I therefore awaited your decision.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Heyd), a few moments ago, said that it would be better to refer this Bill back to the committee because it looked as if the Bill was violating a contract existing between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Light Company. I must tell my hon. friend that he is mistaken in that respect. This Bill does not provide for any violation of the contract existing between the Ottawa Electric Light Company and the city of Ottawa.

Mr. CLARKE. What will be the effect of its passage?

Mr. BRODEUR. It will not have any such effect, because the city of Ottawa today is bound by its contract with the Ottawa Electric Light Company under which this company shall charge a certain rate for furnishing light to the citizens of Ottawa. and this increase of capital will not have the effect of releasing the Ottawa Electric Light Company from the contract made between the city and the company in 1894.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no objection in regard to the increase of the capital.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no objection to that ? The increase of the capital will not have the effect of violating any contract. On the contrary, I see by the papers that were handed to me a few moments ago by the promoter of the Bill that the city of Ottawa to a certain extent, has been violating the contract which was entered into by it with the Ottawa Electric Light Company. In 1894 the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Light Company entered into a contract by which it was agreed that one cent per ampere should be charged to the citizens of Ottawa by the company. There were at this time three companies existing in the city of Ottawa. These companies were not giving satisfaction to the public. These companies went to the city council and a contract was made between these three companies and the city of Ottawa by which it was agreed that a certain maximum rate should be charged for furnishing light to the citizens of Ottawa. Amongst these three companies was the company now interested in this legislation. Therefore, there was a formal agreement between the city of Ottawa and this company. Now, what was done by the city of Ottawa a few years later ? Four or five years later the city of Ottawa goes and makes a contract with a new company, violating to a certain extent the contract which the city had made in the first place, by which this new company undertook to charge a less rate than the Ottawa Electric Light Company. Therefore, the people who have put their money into the Ottawa Electric Light Company are deprived of their rights

Mr. HEYD. Did the city have a legal right to make that second agreement?

Mr. BRODEUR. Perhaps it had an absolute right to make that contract, but I am asking my hon friend whether we should consider it fair on the part of the city of Ottawa, after having made a contract with the city of Ottawa for furnishing light to the citizens, finding themselves in a mess and not knowing what to do, to go to this company and say: Let us agree that you shall charge only a certain amount, with the result that an agreement is made and then the city of Ottawa to get a new company to start up in competition with the old company. That is the situation of affairs. If we give authority to increase the capital stock there will be no violation of the contract between the Ottawa Electric Light Company and the city.

Mr. HEYD. The difficulty is not about the increase of the capital stock. There is nobody objecting to that. It is to the application of the capital stock that we are objecting.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that somebody is moving that the preamble be declared not proven and I supposed that the main object of this Bill is to secure the authorization of an increase of the capital stock.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, it is the coloured gentleman in the next clause.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the preamble were rejected it would prevent an increase in the capital stock.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue hold that the city entered into a contract for its citizens to pay a certain amount to the Ottawa Electric Light Company for light and that it was obligatory upon them to take it at that rate?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. Not at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a maximum price fixed by the contract.

Mr. HAGGART. The contract is simply to allow the electric light company to carry on their operations in the town, enabling them to construct works for that purpose and for the consideration they agree that they shall not charge the citizens more than a certain amount.

Mr. BRODEUR. The contract is binding upon the city of Ottawa as well as upon this company.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the hon. gentleman arguing that the city is bound to take light at that price?

Mr. BRODEUR. If the company is bound by its contract the city is bound by its contract.

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly it is, as far as the contract is concerned.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am inclined to think that the city of Ottawa, by forming a new company and making a new contract, to a certain extent violated the old contract. But it does not matter, we are now dealing as between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Light Company and suppose this Bill did pass there would be no violation of the contract except between the city and the company. My hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) spoke about municipal ownership. It has nothing to do with the Bill. I think he will realize, after the fine speech he has made upon municipal ownership, that it has no bearing at all upon the question which is now before the committee. But, there is a point which has been raised by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) to the effect that in this increase of capital for the purpose of subscribing stock in another company there is a violation of principle. I think in that respect my hon. friend is mistaken, because we have again and again passed legislation without any objection giving to companies the right to subscribe to the capital stock of other companies.

Mr. BRODEUR. The general law in Ontario gives this company the right to subscribe the capital stock of other companies of the same kind.

Mr. CLARKE. But this is not the case of parent subsidiary companies.

Mr. BRODEUR. By section 79 of the Ontario Joint Stock Company's Act, if two-thirds of the shareholders consent they have a right to subscribe capital in any company.

Mr. CLARKE. The clause to which the hon. gentleman refers does not apply to the issue between the parties in this case, because if this company gets power to acquire the stock of the Consumers' Company the result will be great loss to the citizens of Ottawa. If the Minister of Inland Revenue argued on the supposition that the maximum price to be charged is the price now charged by the Consumers' Electric Company, then his quotation would be germane.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am merely answering the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), that the provision to enable them to subscribe stock in any other company was an extraordinary one. The hon. gentleman is mistaken as to that. Last session we gave three companies this power.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not say it was an extraordinary thing to allow one to take stock in another, but I pointed to the serious result in this case.

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year we gave the Dominion Gas Improvement Company the same power as is now sought, and among the incorporators were Mr. MacDougall, Mr. George Henderson, Mr. MacCormack and others, and we did not see the mayor and aldermen here to protest: The same power was given to three Ottawa companies last year by this parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not a fact that in all those cases the persons whose stock was to be acquired were the only parties affected, and had the sole right to say whether the stock should be acquired or not? In this case the Consumers' Electric Light Company was created by the city of Ottawa under agreement, and so long as the city of Ottawa, which is one of the parties to the agreement, objects to this legislation, it is not fair for the Minister of Inland Revenue to cite such examples.

Mr. BRODEUR. We gave the same power last year to the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, and there was no protest. For years this parliament has been giving similar powers to other corporations, and I do not see why the Ottawa Electric Company should be refused.

Mr. CLARKE. It is because, in this case, the people who will be adversely affected by it, entered a protest against the Consumers' Electric Light Company which they brought into existence being wiped out, and the maximum charge of the Ottawa Electric Company substituted for the maximum charge of the Consumers' Electric Light Company.

Mr. BRODEUR. If there is any violation of contract, it is a violation on the part of the city of Ottawa, who, having entered into a contract with the Ottawa Electric Company, gave another contract to another company.

Mr. CLARKE. If it can be shown that the Ottawa Municipal Council was a party to giving an exclusive franchise to the Ottawa Electric Light Company. I shall vote for this Bill. I have only been able to glance at the contract, but I do not believe that there is any such provision in it. If the Ottawa Electric Company assume the rights of the Consumers' Light Company of the city of Ottawa, they should assume the obligation in the Consumers' Company's charter, and accept the maximum price which the Consumers' Company may charge.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the Ottawa Company buys the stock of the Consumers' Company, they will be bound by the contract which exists between the Consumers' Company and the city of Ottawa. For my part I have no other understanding about it. There is a contract existing between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Company, and this Bill will not vary that contract. I do not see why we should not accord to the Ottawa Electric Company, the same treatment we have accorded to other companies time and time again.

Mr. CLARKE. I am glad to have the authority of a gentleman so eminent in the legal profession as the Minister of Inland Revenue for the statement that the amalgamation of these companies will oblige the amalgamated company to charge no higher rate than the maximum rate now charged by the Consumers' Electric Light Company.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is nothing of the kind.

Mr. CLARKE. If the statement of the Minister of Inland Revenue is correct, then the interest of the light consumers of the city of Ottawa will be protected. If the Minister is perfectly clear on that point, why not insert such a provision in the Bill so as to make it beyond peradventure?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that the Ottawa Electric Company is willing to stand by the contract which it has with the city of Ottawa. If they buy over the Consumers' Electric Light Company, they will be bound by the contract between the Consumers' Company and the city.

Mr. HAGGART. It is not an amalgamation of two companies at all, it is an empowering Act to allow this company to purchase stock in the other. If this is passed, the Ottawa Company may purchase the whole of the stock of the Consumers' Company. It is true they would then be bound by all the obligations entered into by the Consumers' Company, but after the Ottawa Company acquires the stock of the Consumers' Company, the Consumers' Company would simply go out of existence. What is to prevent that? What possible object would they have in working the two companies? After the Ottawa Company acquires all the stock of the other company are they going to continue the two rates, one at 75 cents per 100 amperes, and the other at 36 cents? The sole object is to wipe out the company they purchase, and to carry on the business under the name of the old company.

Mr. MACLEAN. Under the present legislation and without any violation of contract we, the largest consumers of this electrical energy, get electrical energy at a reduced price. Grant the legislation asked today and we will have to pay maximum prices. The Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) made this proposition to the House and I never heard such a pettyfogging argument. It is as if I should agree with you, a grocer, to buy sugar at a maximum price of ten cents a pound. He says that because I make that agreement I am prevented from buying sugar at four cents a pound from any one else. There is no violation at all on the part of the city of Ottawa. The city of Ottawa puts its statement most fairly.

> The object of the city of Ottawa in granting, first, the Metropolitan franchise, and then the Consumers' franchise, was to secure competition in electric lighting with the Ottawa Electric Company. The city, at the time these franchises were granted, relied on the provision in the Ottawa Electric Company's Act of Incorporation, which provided that the city could only acquire the stock, debentures or securities of other electric companies 'as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.' It is now sought to have this protection to the city struck out.

The city of Ottawa and the people of Canada have a protection to-day in the purchase of this electrical energy, but grant the legislation desired and that protection is at once removed. The Ottawa Consumers' Company is empowered to put up the rates to a maximum of 75 cents. That is not in the public interest. Why should we give this company power to raid this House and the citizens of Ottawa. I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister, not as Prime Minister but as a citizen of Ottawa, does he think it is good legislation in the interests of the citizens ? Is it good legislation to remove this protection from the humblest citizen ? There has been no violation of the contract by the city of Ottawa ; they fulfilled their contract by allowing the company to erect their poles and supply electricity, but now the company seeks to have removed a restriction that was placed in the contract in the interest of the city of Ottawa.

Mr. CLARKE. In the memorandum presented to us to-day, we find :

> The rates on electric light provided for in the franchise given by the city of Ottawa to the Ottawa Electric Company and the Consumers' Electric Company are as follows :
> Ottawa Electric Company. ·75 of 1 cent per ampere hour net.
> Consumers' Electric Company. ·52 of 1 cent per ampere hour net.

What I desire to draw attention to is the next paragraph :

> The present rates charged by both companies are ·36 of 1 cent per ampere hour net.

If the suggestion made is accepted, the amalgamated companies could increase the rates from ·36 of one cent to ·52 of one cent per ampere hour, an increase of nearly 50 per cent. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) pointed out this afternoon the result of the last year's operation under very difficult circumstances of the Ottawa Electric Company. We have not been able to get a statement of the last year's operations of the Consumers' Company, but I point out that if we pass this legislation the rate now charged by the Ottawa Company may be increased from ·36 of one cent to ·52 of one cent per ampere hour. The statement which the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) has presented shows that a very reasonable profit on the investment has been made at the present rates. I would draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the Consumers' Electric Company of Ottawa is composed of leading citizens of the city ; I am sure he would concur in that statement if he knew their names ; men who have a large interest in this community, men who did not go into that company simply as a toy, men who have made it a great success, and in view of that fact it is surely not unreasonable to say that when we give power to the Ottawa Company to absorb the Consumers, which is a fairly profitable concern, the obligations now imposed by the agreement between the city of Ottawa and either of the existing companies, should also be imposed upon the consolidated company.

Mr. BIRKETT. I would like to have it clearly from the Minister of Inland Revenue in what way he makes out that the city of Ottawa are violating this agreement. The arrangement entered into between the city and the Ottawa Company was that the company would not charge more than 75 cents per 100 amperes. It is not a bargain it is an agreement made between the corporation of the city and the company, for the supplying of light to the citizens of Ottawa. They did not agree to take light at that price, but they agreed to give them certain privileges provided they supplied the light at that price and did not charge more. Then, when the Consumers' Company applied for a charter, that was a rival company that offered better conditions to the city. The city, not having given the Ottawa Company an exclusive franchise, said : What are your terms, what advantages are the citizens to derive from incorporating a new Company ? The company said : We will supply you with electricity at 52 cents per 100 amperes.

Mr. BRODEUR. When the new company was formed or when the old company was formed ?

Mr. BIRKETT. The new company was formed in 1901, and the old company got their amended charter in 1894. But there was no violation of an agreement, because the city had fulfilled their agreement by giving the company permission to erect poles and distribute electricity through the city.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend will admit that the Ottawa Company has the right to charge 75 cents ?

Mr. BIRKETT. That it why we are fighting to-day. They can make money, under present conditions ; I showed a few moments ago that they made 7·22 per cent on their capital selling light at 36 cents, and we do not wish them to be permitted to charge 75 cents. If this amalgamation is permitted it may be that the Ottawa citizens will have to pay 75 cents per 100 amperes instead of 36 cents.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is the Consumers' Company opposing this legislation ?

Mr. BIRKETT. We have not the Consumers' Company before us at all, but the city of Ottawa has a certain contract with the Consumers' Company and that we want to protect in the interest of the citizens.

Mr. LANCASTER. On Friday night I stated my views on this matter, and I would not have troubled the committee again except for what has fallen from the lips of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue. I am sorry to say that I cannot agree with his deductions. I am satisfied that the hon. minister did not read the whole Act of incorporation of this company, which we are being asked to amend, or he would not have drawn the deduction that the city of Ottawa is asking us to do anything unfair in refusing to pass section 2 of this Bill, which is for the purpose of amending section 7 of the Act of incorporation. First, dealing with the minister's allegation that the city of Ottawa is trying to violate a contract made with this company by asking this House to refuse to pass this section, I wish to point out that the only effect of the amendment proposed to be made to section 7 is that a restriction which was imposed by parliament on this company's right to buy up other companies, is to be removed. At the very most, the city of Ottawa says, leave us where we were in 1894, and leave the Ottawa Electric Company in the position in which they would be obliged to deal with us if they had not invoked new legislation. The city of Ottawa is asking for no special benefit for itself. It only asks parliament not to take away the restriction, whatever it is worth, which exists in the legislation of 1894 ; and when one opposes the amendment which is intended to take away that restriction, surely it does not lie in the mouth of any one to say, you are asking that the city of Ottawa be allowed to violate a contract. Section 8 of the statute of 1894 presupposes that this Ottawa Electric Company would want to buy up and amalgamate with it all the companies in existence at that time ; at all events, certain companies there named. It is quite clear that the Consumers' Company did not exist at that time ; it did not come into existence, I am told, until 1901 ; but the Chaudière and the Standard Companies named in that statute did exist. What did the Act provide in regard to them ? What did this parliament solemnly declare should be done with respect to the companies that did then exist ? That the directors of those companies could sell out to the Ottawa Electric Company, and that it could buy their rights and franchises, but subject to this :

Provided that after any such purchase, lease or other acquirement, working arrangement or amalgamation as aforesaid is entered into, the company shall not, without the consent by by-law or otherwise of the municipality of the city of Ottawa or of the city of Hull, respectively, as the case may be, increase the ordinary prices or rates charged by any of the said other companies for electric light in the city of Ottawa or in the city of Hull, respectively, at the time such purchase, lease or other acquirement, working arrangement or amalgamation is entered into.

That would not allow this company to buy up the companies that existed then except on condition that the rates in existence at the time of the amalgamation—not the maximum rates, as suggested by the Minister of Inland Revenue, but the rates brought about by competition or by any such force as the city of Ottawa within its rights could exercise—should not be exceeded, unless the city of Ottawa by by-law or otherwise agreed to something else. Talk about violations—where is the violation here, unless it is a violation by the Ottawa Electric Company, not simply of a contract with the city, but of an Act of parliament ? And why should this company have the right, under exactly the same circumstances, to amalgamate with the Consumers' Company without a similar provision being made applicable ? The Consumers' Company is not within that qualification of section 8, because it did not come into existence until four or five years afterwards. The only section that would apply to it would be subsection (d) of section 7 which we are asked to-day to remove. If we do not refuse to amend section 7 of the original Act, we should then, as an alternative, amend section 8 so as to include the Consumers' Company in the restrictive provision we made in 1894 with reference to other companies which were in the same position then that the Consumers' Company is in now. If this Bill passes without some such dealing with the Consumers' Company, what is the effect ? The effect is this, that the companies which are named in the Act of 1894 could not sell out to the Ottawa Company and charge higher rates than are there specified, without a by-law or agreement with the city of Ottawa, but this Consumers' Company, which came into existence in 1901, could do what we said the other companies should not be permitted to do. Therefore it seems to me that the Acts quoted by the Minister of Inland Revenue have no bearing on the case. I do not say that it is ultra vires of this parliament or wrong legislation in every case, to allow one company to buy up stock in another company. But I say that you must look at the circumstances of each case. This is all private legislation, based on an agreement between the city of Ottawa and the Ottawa Electric Company in 1894, and if we allow this Bill to pass without some protection for the citizens of Ottawa, either by refusing to pass section 2, or by adding a clause to provide that the Consumers' Company shall be included in the provisions of section 8 of the original Act, we shall be doing away with the principle which this parliament declared should be carried out in 1894, when this Ottawa Electric Company was given its franchise permitting it to do business. To say that because the contract with the city provided for a maximum rate therefore that rate was agreed to by the city, is no argument at all. It is not common sense. That provision simply meant that the city wanted to get as cheap electricity as it could, and that it bound the company not to charge more than so much ; but it did not bind any one to pay that much if the electricity could be got at a cheaper price. The effect of this legislation, if passed without any amendment, must simply be that although the city of Ottawa has a right, by an Act of parliament which exists to-day, to prevent the Ottawa Electric Company from amalgamating with any other of the companies named in that Act, this Ottawa Electric Company could compel the city of Ottawa and its citizens to recognize rights in regard to other companies which have come into existence since 1894, and to deal with them on an entirely different basis from all other companies which were said to be seeking amalgamation with this company when the Act of 1894 was passed.

Mr. MACLEAN. May I repeat, once more, the argument I have stated in this committee :—The government of the day are the guardians of the people's purse, the farmers of this country have put the government in charge of the purse of the nation. By legislation as it now exists, the people of this country are protected as to the rates they must pay for electric energy in the city of Ottawa. The Prime Minister, and the treasurer of this country, the Minister of Finance, so far as we can gather here to-day, are deliberately in favour of removing this protection to the purse of the people. I ask the Prime Minister to bear that in mind. Also call his attention to this fact—that before any further steps are taken in connection with this Bill, we ought to have the Minister of Public Works here to tell us what we, as a nation, pay to this Electric Company in the city of Ottawa, that is now supplying this House and the various departments at Ottawa with electrical energy. The Minister of Public Works should be here to tell us whether we are getting as good a rate as the citizens of Ottawa are getting, and whether he would advise, as the one having the service in charge, that the protection that we have to-day should be removed. It is in the interest of the city, it is in the interest of the country, it is in the interest of the humblest consumer of electrical energy in the city of Ottawa, that this protection should be maintained. The removal of this protection is not in the interest of this company otherwise than as it strengthens its monopoly. We are supposed to be against monopoly in this country. We will grant the company all their rights ; but why should we give them more ? Parliament in its wisdom, some years ago, limited the company, limited them in the interest of the people of Ottawa, and, probably, of the people of Canada as represented by the government here. If that is the case, no matter what the privileges we may have given in other cases, these do not afford a reason why this protection now enjoyed by the people should be removed. That is the plain issue and I leave it here. We have a protection to-day against monopoly ; we have a protection against high prices for electrical energy,—and the proposal now is to remove that protection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) point out the legislation that protects the people against monopoly, of which he speaks ?

Mr. MACLEAN (reading) :

> The object of the city of Ottawa, in granting, first, the Metropolitan franchise and then the Consumers' franchise, was to secure competition in electric lighting with the Ottawa Electric Company.
> The city, at the time these franchises were granted, relied on the provision in the Ottawa Electric Company's Act of incorporation, which provides that company could only acquire the stock, debentures or securities of other electric companies 'as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.' It is now sought to have this protection to the city struck out.

The protection is there, and the proposal is to strike it out. That is my contention, and it is the contention of the city.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I presume that my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) means that the protection is taken away by striking out the words in subsection D of section 7.

Mr. COCHRANE. Let the minister read it himself.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I prefer, in an argument, to deal with one at a time. I presume that the hon. gentleman refers to the words in subsection D of section 7 'as the consideration of goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.'

Mr. MACLEAN. That is what the city says it relies upon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was not in the committee when this Bill was under discussion, and am not informed as to the effect of this legislation, nor can I say that I have gathered a great deal of information from the discussion to-day. I take it that the objection is to the amendment of subsection D of section 7. That subsection is an exception to the general law of the country, that is to say, it authorizes the acquisition by this company, which was created in 1894, of shares in the capital stock of other companies. That was in direct opposition of section 41 of the Companies' Clauses Act of 1891, which provides :

No company shall use any of its funds in the purchase of stock in any other corporation, unless in so far as such purchase is specially authorized by the special Act, and also by the Act creating such other corporation.

That is to say, in 1894, this company was given special power, as against the general law of the country, to acquire this stock. That power is not being given now ; it was given in 1894. And moreover, it was given subject to this very unusual provision, that the consideration for the acquiring of that stock might be goods, wares or merchandise sold to the other companies in the ordinary course of business. The general law provided that stock was not to be acquired, but, where exceptions had been allowed, it had been the rule to provide that stock of one company acquired by another should be paid for in cash. So, this was a departure from two principles of the law : In the first place, it gave power to the company to acquire stock in other companies, and, in the second place it allowed the company to acquire such stock without paying cash for it, but by paying in goods, wares and merchandise. If there was any violation of principle, if there was any departure from principle, that violation and that departure took place at that time. Without referring to a previous debate, I may say that every one in this House will remember the acrimonious discussion that occurred when, a few nights ago, we considered a similar clause of the Grand Trunk Pacific, where we provided that the capital stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific might be acquired by the Grand Trunk without paying cash. Why, hon. gentlemen even moved an amendment, declaring that, if the stock was acquired, it should be paid for in cash, and they based their argument in support of that amendment on the estimate that this was the general principle of the law. So, which legislation will these hon. gentlemen stand upon ? Do they wish the general law made applicable to this corporation, or do they wish an exception made in the case of this corporation ? I do not know anything about contracts that the company may have with the corporation of the city of Ottawa. I am not concerned with that. I do not know anything about the details of this matter. But let us look at the legislation and see what would be the effect of it, if adopted. It will give this company the same powers that are given to any company incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies' Act of Ontario—no more nor no less. We are told that it will lead to monopoly. But, if so, why does it not lead to monopoly in all these other cases in Ontario ?

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. minister allow me to ask him a question ? Are the circumstances in other cases exactly identical with those in the city of Ottawa ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know whether they are or not. I am simply asking why the argument that is applicable to other companies in Ontario is not applicable to this.

Mr. CLARKE. The circumstances, as the hon. minister (Mr. Fitzpatrick) knows are peculiar—unique. Nobody knows that better than the hon. minister himself. Will the hon. minister state, will he endorse the opion of the Minister of Inland Revenue, that this company will be bound by the maximum rate fixed in the agreement made between the city of Ottawa and the Consumers' Electric Company ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I know nothing of that contract the hon. gentleman speaks about, nor am I aware that there is anything unique in the position of the city of Ottawa. I have had the pleasure of living here for seven or eight years, and it is an ordinary town, governed in the ordinary way. I do not know that there is anything unique about it.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there not this unique about the situation so far as lighting is concerned, that in the contract read by the hon. minister's colleague this afternon, made I think in 1894, between the electric companies that were then consolidated and the city of Ottawa the maximum price was fixed for each electric light ? That since then a contract has been made with another company, and that the maximum price fixed by that contract is much lower than in the previous one ? If that is the case now and if by this legislation we are giving facilities for an amalgamation, the amalgamated company may charge the maximum price, that is the rate fixed in the contract of 1894, which is much higher than that fixed subsequently. The Minister of Inland Revenue, a gentleman well versed in law, has expressed the opinion that if these companies do amalgamate the consolidated company will be bound to charge no more than the maximum rate fixed in the agreement between the city and the Consumers' Light Company. If the Minister of Justice agrees with that opinion, then we can rely upon it.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice lays down a principle of law which I never heard of before, that is, that a corporation cannot acquire the stock of any other corporation under the General Act unless for cash.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will read the law for my hon. friend. Section 41 of the Companies' Clauses Act, chapter 118 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, says :

No company shall use any of its funds in the purchase of stock in any other corporation, unless in so far as such purchase is specially authorized by the special Act, and also by the Act creating such other corporations.

My hon. friend will see there is no doubt about it. That has been the law since 1867, before I came to the bar.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not yet convinced that a corporation cannot pay for anything except in cash where it it authorized to purchase, either by its own Act or by the General Act, and that when it buys shares in any other company it must pay cash.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The first point is as to whether a corporation can acquire the stock in any corporation unless it is authorized by a special Act. I think that point is settled by the section I have read. The other principle of law will be found in section 30 and the preceding sections of the same Act:

Every shareholder shall, until the whole amount of his stock has been paid up, be individually liable to the creditors of the company to an amount equal to that not paid up thereon.

He has got to pay whatever he is called upon to pay in the first instance—in default of a special arrangement it is 10 per cent—he has got to pay that, and then the shareholder is individually liable to the extent of every farthing that is due on the balance. That is the general principle, that the stock must be paid for in cash. As I said a moment ago, there has been a departure from that.

Mr. HAGGART. We are still at loggerheads. I know well that where a party subscribes for stock in a company he is obliged to pay for it in cash. But my question relates to a case where a company is authorized to purchase stock in another company, that has already been paid for, perhaps. Can they make an arrangement to pay other than by cash?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No doubt they can make an arrangement, no question about that. But the point now is what the general provision of the law is. As I have shown, the stock must be paid for in cash. Then there may be a departure from that principle, that is, there may be a private arrangement between the two companies, and if you are dealing with an Ontario corporation the Ontario Act makes special provision for such an agreement. But you must have an agreement, and it can only be for certain considerations mentioned in the Act, and that agreement must be deposited with the provincial secretary or the Secretary of State. But that is not the case here. In the absence of subsection (d) of section 7, the section we are now concerned with, this Ottawa Electric Company could not acquire stock in the other company at all. The power, the authority to take stock is conferred upon them by this section. Now that same subsection would confer upon them the authority to take this stock in a kindred company, that is, a company having kindred purposes. The Act determines the conditions under which they can do it. It was you can take that stock in this kindred company provided you pay for it in goods, wares or merchandise. Now the effect of this amendment is merely to substitute the consideration that is to be paid, that is, cash instead of goods, wares or merchandise.

Now my hon. friend argues that if that amendment is adopted it will lead to all manner of abuses. I really cannot follow my hon. friend. I have no desire to support a monopoly, although this Act provided for a monopoly, this Act has a monopoly in contemplation. Section 8 of the Act of Incorporation of the Ottawa Electric Company provides for a monopoly of that company.

Mr. CLARKE. Read it, please.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is too fast for me. I have no desire to provide for a monopoly, or to be a party to any legislation which will have that effect. Will my hon. friend say that if you authorize this company to take that stock for cash instead of taking it for a consideration to be paid in goods, wares or merchandise, these terrible results will follow? I cannot see it. If they get it for goods, wares or merchandise, or if they can get it for cash, in what respect will the results differ? How can these terrible results follow in one case and not in the other? If they follow at all, they must follow from the fact that this company will acquire the stock. Now how can the result be affected by the manner of payment? It seems to me that is elementary. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and myself may differ in law occasionally, but I have confidence in his business judgment, and I would like him to follow out that point and to show me how the result is to be affected by the consideration to be paid for that stock. I said a moment ago that this Act of incorporation has a monopoly in contemplation. Look at section 8 and see what is provided for there. There were three companies in existence when this Act of incorporation was passed; these three companies were the Standard, the Chaudière and the Ottawa, the latter having been brought into existence at that time. Section 8 provides:

The directors of the company may, for and in the name of the company, purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and take over in whole or in part, upon such terms as may be agreed upon with the other companies hereinafter mentioned respectively, and may thereafter hold, exercise and enjoy the business, franchises, undertakings, property, rights, powers, privileges, and assets or any of them of the Ottawa Electric Light Company, hereinafter called 'The Ottawa Company,' of the Standard Electric Co. of Ottawa (Limited), and of the Chaudière Electric Light and Power Company.

That is to say, it provides specifically for the taking over by this new company of the franchises of the other companies that were then in existence. Now, what is my object in referring to that ? My object in referring to that is to show how my hon. friend from Lincoln has missed the point in referring to the proviso of the Act. He did not refer to the enacting part which provides the conditions under which they could take over these companies. He simply referred to the proviso. In reference to this legislation, parliament very properly said : As we are giving you a monopoly, as we are giving you the whole field to yourselves we make the provision that any arrangement you may make with these companies under which you take them over, will be subject to the control of the corporation of the city of Ottawa as to the rates you are to charge. There could be nothing more reasonable than that, because we were giving this corporation absolute control of the field in so far as the city of Ottawa was concerned. Parliament said : Inasmuch as we are giving you a monopoly, we require that the representatives of the citizens who will be affected by this monopoly shall have the right to determine the rates which you are to charge. That is what the section provides.

Mr. LANCASTER. That prevents a monopoly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It does not prevent a monopoly ; it creates a monopoly.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, it does not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It creates a monopoly with the right to regulate rates on the part of the corporation.

Mr. COCHRANE. You did not give us that before.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not because I knew my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) thoroughly well understood what I said and that he did not require any further explanation. Everybody knows what a monopoly means and everybody knows what the right to regulate rates means. This is a right to supply power or light subject to the right of the corporation to regulate the rates.

Mr. CLARKE. For what length of time was that monopoly given ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is my hon. friend again. There is nothing so dangerous as a man who has a book before him and who seeks to cross-examine on that book.

Mr. CLARKE. I ask my hon. friend for what length of time that monopoly was given ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend has the book there before him, and he can tell.

Mr. CLARKE. I am asking the hon gentleman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is too clever. I have never read the agreement, I know nothing of the arrangement with the corporation, and I trust the committee will take what I say to be a fact when I declare that I know absolutely nothing about it except what I see in the statute, but I cannot understand how it is if you take this stock for cash instead of taking it for goods, wares and merchandise, the effect will be to create a monopoly.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the point I would like to have answered.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It seems to me that the position of this company will be that they will have the right to acquire shares in the other company—the Consumers' I think it is. If they become shareholders in the Consumers' Company and if the Consumers' Company have a contract with the city, the fact that they have acquired shares in the stock of that company cannot affect the contract that they have with the city. That seems to me to be apparent.

Mr. HAGGART. Every one knows that unless they wipe out the company.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If they acquire shares in the company and there is a contract with the city the fact of their having become shareholders in lieu of those who are now in possession of the shares does not affect the contract with the city corporation. If that be correct I cannot see what the trouble is about.

Mr. HAGGART. If they were to work the company it might be so, but they might put an end to the company.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LAVELL. I have a good deal of respect for the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and so I would like him to reconsider some of the points he made in connection with this Bill. The Minister of Justice referred to the original Ottawa Electric Company Act of 1894, subsection 'E' section 7, which allows the company to acquire shares of capital stock of other companies as consideration for goods, wares, or merchandise, sold to other companies in the ordinary course of business ; and he held that that was a special privilege, and that the amendment that was now being asked for would practically restrict the company to buying that stock for cash. However, in answer to the hon. member for South Lanark, the Minister of Justice admitted that if the power were given to the Ottawa Electric Company to acquire shares in other companies without limitation, they would not be confined to payment in cash, but could exercise the privilege which they have under their original charter. As a consequence, the amendment that is now being asked for, would very greatly extend the privilege of the Ottawa Electric Company in buying shares in other companies, as I think the Minister of Justice will on consideration, admit. It is plain, from the original Act of 1894, that the company is not simply constituted for the purposes of providing light, heat, and power for consumers, but that they can manufacture electrical appliances, and can undertake contracts to equip electric lighting and heating companies, so that it is under section 7 in which they are given the power to manufacture these articles, that they have the right to acquire shares in other companies for the purpose of paying the accounts that have been acquired through their supplying appliances to those other companies. This authority of the Ottawa Electric Company under this original charter can only be exercised to any appreciable extent, in the case of new companies of which they would be practically the promoters. That power has been given to a number of manufacturing corporations, both by the Ontario and the Dominion statutes, and except under the most extraordinary conditions it cannot lead to the merger of the Ottawa Electric Company with the old companies.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does it permit the acquisition of stock; that is the question?

Mr. LAVELL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; that is not the question. The question is: what is the danger of a merger?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not discussing a merger.

Mr. LAVELL. I am. I have no objection to this Act whatever, if it does not lead to a merger, and to the formation of a trust. I am quite willing to see the Ottawa Electric Company prosper and grow, so long as it does not grow at the expense of the people. No old established company would need to purchase goods, wares, or merchandise sufficient to enable the Ottawa Electric Company to control an interest in it, but if this Act passes, the Ottawa Electric Company can acquire shares in any company just the same as any private individual can, and by means of their borrowing powers and without pledging their personal credit, by a vote of a majority of the shareholders, they can buy a controlling interest in several existing companies from private shareholders. The hon. minister of Justice said that during the recent debate, members on this side of the House had been insisting that cash should be paid for the Grand Trunk Pacific stock. I do not think that case is analagous to this, but suppose it were; the fact remains that in the case of one railway company buying the stock of another, the public is more or less protected by the law which says, that railway rates shall be regulated by a railway commission, whereas in the case of rates charged for electric lighting, and power, there is no statutory limitation on them.

I am not one of those who say that a monopoly is always wrong. I can see many cases, especially in the handling of public franchises, where a monopoly might be in the public interest provided it was kept under public control and operated under proper conditions. In the case of railways for instance we at least have some attempt made to regulate their powers and rates, but there is no provision of that kind in the case of such a company as the Ottawa Electric Company. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) cited the Ontario Act and said that under the Companies Act of Ontario an opportunity was given to all companies to do exactly what this company asks the privilege of doing. We are not responsible for Ontario legislation and there are many things in the Ontario statutes that will be changed as the people of Ontario grow wiser, but even on this particular point they were wiser in Ontario than this House would be if it passed this Act, for the Ontario House does not permit a company to buy shares in another company except by at least a two-third vote at a general meeting called under special conditions. The Ontario Act goes I think, a little farther than it should go in the public interest, but it does not go anything like as far as this Act will go if we amend it as now proposed and permit the shareholders to buy up the shares of any other companies by a bare majority, something the Ontario Act does not permit. The Ontario Act at least applies to all companies and puts them on an equal basis. If one company has the right to do it, so has every other, but if we read the Acts incorporating these companies, we will see that not one of the existing electric companies of Ottawa has that power now, and if we grant this power to the Ottawa Electric Company it will have the sole right to do these things. In other words it will have a special power and not the general power that will be given to a company incorporated under the Ontario statutes. If the government chooses to take the responsibility of creating this opportunity for forming a monopoly, why does it not take courage and suggest an amendment to the general Act? I do not believe it would go further than the Ontario Act; I cannot believe this House would go as far as this Act. It is admitted all over the world by students of legislation that a clause such as this allowing a company unlimited power to buy shares in other and rival companies is the strongest possible basis for the formation of a gigantic trust. We are not bound to follow precedents but every one who has been before the committees knows how strongly precedents are urged and that if we pass this Bill in its present form we are simply paving the way for all companies that choose to ask for it to obtain similar powers and to be enabled to gobble each other until a series of trusts shall be created in towns where rival companies exist. The Minister of Justice said that this Act in its present form created a monopoly. As I read it it certainly did but it created a monopoly after full notice to all who are interested. It stated the companies it was intended to buy and made special provision in the charter creating that monopoly that no change was to be made in the existing rates. But this Act gives the company power to buy up rival companies without notice to parliament or discussion by the parties interested. We are giving them that right with absolutely no provision for the defence of the public. In this particular case I have no interest personally beyond the responsibility which every member must assume for all legislation. This is special legislation that would be cited as a precedent and as giving one company a power which none of its rivals have. If it is right to put in this clause it should be brought up in a general way and should be introduced as an amendment to the Companies Act.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Why should we interfere with the Act as it now exists ? The present Act prevents a monopoly in the city of Ottawa. The Ottawa Electric Company is permitted to buy shares but only under such conditions that they cannot under any circumstances buy out existing companies. If the amendment is carried this company will have unique powers such as no other company has unless it receives them by special Act of parliament. This large city enjoys competition in the important matter of electric light and power, and it has been shown that by this amendment the citizens might have to pay an additional $250,000 or $300,000. If they acquired these powers the company might charge 75 cents per 100 amperes. The first duty of this parliament is to protect the rights of the people. To-day we have three members of the government rising in their places to defend this Bill and apparently they are the only ones to defend it. Nineteen members voted for it in committee and I have been wondering why some of these men who voted for it do not rise and give some good reason why this amendment should be made. The only reasons we have heard have been advanced by the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) who said that an agreement between the city of Ottawa and this company had been broken ; that the city of Ottawa is to-day breaking faith and is not carrying out its contract, but the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue has failed to show in what respect it is breaking faith. Neither he nor any one else has shown one single particular in which the city is not keeping to its agreement. It has not been shown that the city of Ottawa agreed to take any quantity of light, heat or power for either an unlimited or limited space of time. All that is shown is that the city allowed this company the use of its streets for the manufacture and sale to the people of light, heat and power, in consideration of which the company agrees not to charge more than 75 cents per 100 amperes, so that the only argument really which has been advanced does not hold good. What argument can be advanced ? A great many members, including myself, are not on the Committee on Private Bills, and have not heard a single reason why this Act on our statutes should be amended as proposed. Why, then, should not the Bill be referred back to the committee, where it may be further discussed and further light thrown upon it ? The only other argument, namely, that we should not interfere with the rights of the company to buy the stock of other companies, is invalid, if the lawyers are correct in saying that the general law of the country does not allow one company to buy the stock of another. If that be not the law, and if there are many special Acts for the purpose of enabling one company to buy stock in another, I submit that that is an abuse of our power to legislate. I submit that we ought to go rather in the other direction, and on every occasion safeguard the rights of the people by providing that when a corporation secures a charter from this House it should not be allowed to buy stock in another company and thus make a merger or trust. Here is a case in which such a provision exists, and we are asked to abrogate the clause which prevents the creation of a monopoly. I submit no good reason has been given why we should pass the measure, and therefore it ought to be referred back to the committee.

Mr. HAGGART. A few words in reply to the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and in support of that of my hon. friend from North Leeds. One would judge, from the argument of the Minister of Justice, that this Bill is a limitation of the powers which are at present enjoyed by the Ottawa Electric Company. Clause 7 of that company's charter gives it the power to :

> Acquire stock in the capital stock, debentures and securities of other electric companies or of the companies possessing powers similar to those of the company, as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.

The argument of the Minister of Justice is that this is a power which is in excess of what ought to be given any company, and that the Act amending it is a limitation of that. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Lavell) has struck the right key. He says that this clause enables the parent company, which manufactures all these things, to come to the aid of a subsidiary company by taking stock in payment, but the amendment will give the Ottawa Electric Company the right to control the franchise of any other company by purchasing the majority of its stock. It is a good deal worse to give that power to a company than simply to give it the power to acquire stock in exchange for materials furnished. Then there is a question whether, when one company amalgamates with another, it does not assume all the liabilities. If there is an agreement by which this company, which the Ottawa Electric Company intends to purchase, is bound to furnish the city with light at a certain price, I have always contended that a merger of the two companies makes the company which absorbs the other subject to all of the obligations of the company it absorbs. Therefore, if the Ottawa Electric Company should purchase the other, it would be obliged to furnish light to the city at the same rate. But this Bill will give the Ottawa Company the power to purchase a majority of the stock of the other, and is a great extension of its powers. It gives it the power of purchasing, not only for cash, but under any other arrangement it might make with the stockholders, the shares in the company it desires to control, and the Ottawa Electric Company will become the one which will deal with the city and the consumers. The other company may be kept in existence by the election of a directorate and a president once a year and do no other business. The Bill simply enables the Ottawa Electric Company to obtain control of this other company which has an agreement with the city of Ottawa to furnish light at nearly half the rates charged by the Ottawa Company. The other company may then go on existing in form and doing nothing, and the Ottawa Company be able to dictate its own terms.

Motion of Mr. Sproule, that the committee rise and report progress, negatived.

Committee divided on the preamble. Preamble adopted—yeas, 30 ; nays, 28.

Section 2 agreed to, yeas 30, nays 28.

Bill reported.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When shall the Bill be read the third time ? Now ? Mr. Champagne moves seconded by Mr. Lavergne that the Bill be now read the third time.

Mr. HAGGART. Next sitting of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question was put as to when the third reading shall take place. I heard no objection to the third reading being taken now.

Mr. HAGGART. I would submit the question of order whether, under the rules of the House, a Bill can be put through two stages at the same sitting.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is only one stage.

Mr. HAGGART. Are the committee and the third reading only one stage ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). Yes, generally. It has been decided several times that, when a Bill has not been amended in committee it can be read the third time at the same sitting. It is for the House to say whether it shall be ordered for third reading or not. Mr. Speaker was of the opinion that the general consensus of the House favoured the third reading to-night. Then comes up the question of the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. I objected in time to the taking of this stage.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not considered to be two stages, unless the Bill has been amended in committee. I have not the rule under my hand, but I remember having decided that question several times when I was Speaker—that if a Bill is not amended in committee the House has the right to decide whether it shall be ordered for the third reading the same day or not. It is not a question of procedure, but it is for the House to decide.

Mr. PUTTEE. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move, seconded by Mr. Hackett, the amendment of which I gave notice :

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, with instructions to that Committee to add a clause, providing that the power to acquire shares in the capital stock, debentures, or securities of other electric companies shall not apply to the capital stock, debentures or securities of the Consumers Electric Company, or of the Metropolitan Light and Power Company, or their assigns.

It would seem to me that the case made out here by the hon. senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) would be sufficient in itself to justify this House in returning this Bill to the Private Bills Committee. That hon. gentleman was not at the meeting of the committee when this Bill was considered. He has put before the House to-day a petition of the council of Ottawa, he has submitted numerous arguments, and, altogether, it seems to me, has made out a case that, at least, the members of the House should be willing to investigate, and, for that purpose to send the Bill back to the committee. I had given notice of this amendment before I knew what position the hon. senior member for Ottawa would take on this Bill. I gave notice of this amendment because I was in the Private Bills Committee when the matter was discussed and at that time decided, and I move that amendment now because, I believe, it is but a simple act of justice to the citizens of Ottawa that we should reserve this condition as a safeguard to them against monopoly in light, heat and power in this city. And I think it should go back to the committee because I believe that in the general confusion that existed in the committee at the time this Bill was considered and passed the members did not fully appreciate the strengthening of monopoly that it involved. The amendment that was put in your hands, Mr. Speaker, is acceptable I understand to the city council of Ottawa, to its mayor and to its solicitor. It is also accepted by the officers of the Canadian Union of Municipalities. This organization has become a power in this land, and it has taken a part in the contest for the reason that it is opposed to the encroachment of corporations on civic rights in Canada. They came forward of their own volition to oppose this Bill, they came forward to uphold the corporation of the city of Ottawa in resisting the demands that are being made by the Ottawa Electric Light Company at this time. I wish to point out that even if we throw this Bill out altogether we take nothing at all away from the Ottawa Electric Company. We are not threatening their rights or their powers. If at this time they are asking for something improper, asking for something they have no business to get under their contract with the city of Ottawa, then it is certainly our duty to see that this Bill does not become law, and that no powers are given to them which the city of Ottawa are opposed to.

During the afternoon the position of this company and of the other companies named in the amendment have been set forth clearly, and it is not necessary for me to go into that matter more than to say that the Ottawa Electric Company now promoting this Bill is itself an amalgamation of three companies. It has itself a Bill of incorporation that was granted by this parliament, but it was granted as the basis of an agreement between itself and the city of Ottawa. Under the operation of that Act the price of electric power and of light and heat in the city was not to be above a certain fixed maximum. In 1901 the Consumers' Company was incorporated. It started business with a maximum schedule as agreed upon by the city of 52 cents per 100 ampere hours against 75 cents being charged by the Ottawa Company as the maximum rate. As a matter of fact the competition has set a price, not at 52 cents per 100, but at 36 cents per 100. Both the Consumers' and the Ottawa Company are at this time charging that rate, and the people of Ottawa are getting their light and power at that rate. That has been the result, and it seems to me it has justified the action of the city of Ottawa in trying to escape a monopoly in this line of business. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the question of public ownership is not involved in this matter that we have before us to-day. It is merely a matter of lighting the city of Ottawa that is in dispute. The matter we are dealing with relates wholly to the price the citizens of Ottawa will have to pay for their electric light, heat and energy. That is a different question altogether from public ownership. If the city went into the business of producing electric light and heat, it would be a question of municipal trading in contradistinction to municipal ownership. So it seems to me it is out of the way altogether to introduce into this discussion the question of municipal ownership. It is purely and distinctly so far as I can see, a matter of municipal monopoly, of a monopoly in opposition to the interests of the city and the citzens.

I think I would be justified in saying that the inference to be drawn from the Bill before us is that it is the wish of the Ottawa Electric Company to have a monopoly of their business in this city. I say that is a legitimate inference. In the Private Bills Committee that inference was directly contradicted by the representative of the Ottawa Electric Company. I asked him why they had this Bill before the House if that was not their object, and it was explained to the committee that the reason was this, that in the near future there was to be a considerable proposition put before the capitalists of this district, including and embracing the acquisition of some large water powers around the Chaudière, and that the Ottawa Electric Company expected to be included in this proposition, and therefore they wanted power to go in and buy up some other water powers, buy out some other companies who have control of water powers just above the Chaudière Falls. I accepted that explanation, and put this proposition to the representative of the company : On your own ground, if that is why you are asking for this Bill, then, seeing that the city of Ottawa draws another inference from it, draws the inference that you want a monopoly, in order to meet their objection, will you accept a provision that you shall not invest in any stock or securities of the Metropolitan or Consumers' Company ? If that statement made by them was fair, if it was right, if it was the whole case, then the proposition I made to them would have been accepted. If that is their position to-day, then the acceptance of the amendment I am offering does not hurt the Ottawa Electric people at all, does not in any way hamper their movements, and will not interfere with them in carrying out the amalgamation that they expect to make next year in connection with the water powers at the Chaudière. But, Mr. Speaker, the representative of the company refused to accept this amendment, he refused on this one ground : He said that the company objected on principle to being singled out and being forbidden to invest in the securities of these two other companies. Now I do not think that the representative of the company is the one to bother about the principle, it is for us to look after that principle. It seemed to me then that he was throwing doubts on his own frankness in stating, when this Bill was asked for, that he objected on principle to having the other two companies exempted from the operation of the Bill. Mr. Speaker, I am led to the conviction by the arguments and facts that were put before the committee, both by the representative of the company, by the mayor and council of Ottawa and by the representations of the Canadian Union of Municipalities. I was forced to the conclusion, as I say, that the whole object of this Bill, innocent though it looks to be, is to give the Ottawa Electric Company a monopoly of the business of supplying light, heat and electric energy to the citizens of Ottawa, so that it may be able, if it thinks proper, to raise its rates up to the full maximum that is granted them under their charter. It is for that reason, and especially since it is being supported by the hon. memmer for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) that I ask by my amendment that this Bill be referred back to the Private Bills Committee that we may have the whole matter threshed out there.

Mr. BIRKETT. I desire to make one more appeal to the gentlemen occupying the the benches on the government side of the House not to force this Bill to its third reading now, but to give the over-burdened citizens of Ottawa an opportunity of trying to come to terms with this would be monopoly. I said this afternoon that we had been getting light for 36 cents per hundred amperes. The maximum of the Consumers' Company is 52 cents while the maximum of the company which is seeking this additional legislation is 75 cents. Upon the business done by the Ottawa Electric Light Company last year, when they charged the consumers of their light 36 cents per hundred amperes, they realized $217,000, making a net profit of $72,000 which, on their capital of $1,000,000, represents seven and two tenths per cent. Now, Mr. Speaker, if this Bill is allowed to become law and they carry out the intention they have in view there is nothing under the sun to prevent them putting an additional burden upon the citizens of Ottawa of from $250,000 to $300,000. They have it within their own grasp to charge 75 cents per hundred amperes, that being the maximum which they are allowed to charge. If all competition is removed there is nothing to prevent them from assessing and collecting the full maximum as set forth in their charter which they obtained seven or eight years ago. I would ask the House to consider this matter seriously. This legislation will benefit a few people, I know, but I would ask the House to think of the many people who will not be benefited by it. Surely we are not sent here to legislate for the benefit of half a dozen men who can lobby up and down these halls, but we are sent here to represent the people and the people's request is that this matter be left in abeyance until such time as the citizens and the council of Ottawa have an opportunity of meeting the company and seeing if they cannot came to some amicable arrangement. I would ask the House not to press this Bill to the third reading, but to give an opportunity of trying to come to some arrangement.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the House ready for the question ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I beg to call your attention to the fact that this Bill has not been printed in both languages.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the Bill has not been printed in both languages we cannot proceed with it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Quote the rule.

Mr. HAGGART. We would not ask Mr. Speaker to sit in review upon his own judgment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not decided yet.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not ruled. I do not know whether it is not printed. I say if it is not printed it cannot be proceeded with.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Orders of the Day say it is not printed in the two languages. I find there is only one Bill marked 'E' and 'F.'

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) is mistaken. The words 'English' and 'French' appear on the order paper only on the second reading of the Bill, not after the Bill has gone before the Private Bills Committee. I think he will find that the rules provide that the Bill shall be printed in French as well as English for the second reading and not after the Bill has gone gefore the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is special pleading and I am sorry to hear it from an ex-Speaker. The rule is that a Bill cannot be proceeded with unless it is printed in both languages. The Orders of the Day say that it is not printed in both languages.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say it is not usual to state on the order paper for the third reading whether bills are printed in French or English or both languages. The orders are generally printed with that statement when they are for the second reading but if it is a fact that the Bill is not now printed in French and English it cannot be proceeded with and that is a fact that we must ascertain.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will be sorry to know that the Bill is printed in French.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the vote is taken, I wish to know whether pairs will be allowed to vote.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think pairs can vote on private Bills.

Mr. HAGGART. All right.

Mr. CALVERT. We do not propose to pair on this vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. Pairs are only made on government questions. Am I to understand that this is to be a government question ?

Amendment (Mr. Puttee) agreed to, and Bill referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

SPRAGUE'S FALLS MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Bill (No. 42) respecting the Sprague's Falls' Manufacturing Company, Limited.—Mr. Ganong—considered in committee and reported.

On motion for the third reading.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would remind the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) that the original charter contains a clause similar to that which he sought to strike out in the Ottawa Electric Company's Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. That does not appear in the Bill.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is in the original charter.

Mr. MACLEAN. Two wrongs do not make a right. Does this company enjoy a public franchise ?

Mr. COWAN. Certainly ; the Sprague's Falls,' with power to expropriate the water-power. The Bill was passed about three years ago, and they are now back for an extension of time.

Mr. MACLEAN. It has not made an agreement with the corporation yet.

Mr. COWAN. I have a very distinct recollection of this Bill coming before the Private Bills' Committee.

Mr. CLARKE. If this Bill proposes to give this company any power to expropriate another company that has a contract with a municipality, and under which the municipality might be mulcted in heavier tolls or charges, it should stand until we get information from the promoter of the Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Oh, yes ; we should treat them all alike. If this Bill proposes to do what the other Bill proposed then it should be treated in the same way.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the Minister of Inland Revenue prepared to say that it contains the provision the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) refers to ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have been informed that it is the same provision.

Mr. CLARKE. Then it had better stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. I fail to see any similarity between this Bill and the contested clause in the Ottawa Electric Company's Bill. No new powers are asked for under this Bill and it merely applies for an extension of time. Can the Minister of Inland Revenue, with all his astuteness find a parallel clause in this Bill to the clause objected to in the Ottawa Electric Company's Bill ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand the decision of the House to be that we should not permit any company to subscribe to stock in any other company.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. If we decide to adopt that policy towards one company we shall have to adopt it towards all the companies. That is why I took upon myself to call the attention of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) to it.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Before the Bill is read a third time it seems to be advisable that we should have this point made clear. It has this moment been raised for the first time, and I do not know that it is necessary for the provision to be exactly on all fours with the provision to which exception is taken in the previous Bill in order to have such a company as this, objected to. If the House desires to be consistent I would suggest that the Bill be allowed to stand until a later day in order that the point may be looked into. If that is agreeable to the House I shall move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) would read the clause, as he has it now.

Mr. BRODEUR. It reads :—

Acquire the shares, debentures or securities of any other company.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the suggestion of the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) is timely. This is a matter that ought to be investigated and if the same objections can be urged to this Bill as to the other, both should be treated in the same way.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is the objection ? Is it to be settled here finally and conclusively, that no company is to be organized with the power and right to buy shares in another company ? If that is to be the settled policy of this House I wish to have an opportunity to say something about it.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not understand that that was the decision reached by the House a short time ago. I understood that the objection then raised was that the power to buy these shares would practically void an agreement between the city of Ottawa and the company whose shares were to be acquired, and that the proposed consolidation would entail serious loss to the municipality. On that ground the action of the House was taken.

Motion (Sir William Mulock) agreed to.

WEST CANADIAN COLLIERIES ACT.

On the order being called for

The House to go into committe on Bill (No 80) respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. M. K. COWAN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I desire to move in amendment that this Bill be sent back to the Private Bills Committee for further amendment ? This is an Act incorporating a company already incorporated in England, and the solicitors in charge of the Bill advised me that by inadvertence they neglected to put in a couple of clauses which are necessary to enable them to properly organize the company under the laws of Canada. The promoters and solicitors have asked that the Bill be referred back in order to insert a couple of clauses purely and simply regulating their own domestic arrangements. I therefore move :

That the Bill be referred back to the Private Bills Committee.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

BINDER TWINE SEIZURES.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

What expenses, if any, other than cost, if any, have been paid to or through the government, or to or through an agent or officer of the government, in each case, by the following persons or firms, in addition to the fines imposed, in the cases of the seizures of binder twine, since the first day of January, 1902 :—Wilber Hutchinson, Manager Fairchild Company, Winnipeg ; Alexander D. Nasmith, Wawanesa, Manitoba, Lyttle & Jickling, Carmen, Manitoba ; Charles Lunn, Winnipeg ; Blakeman & Scarth, Virden, Manitoba ; E. H. Howes, Moosomin ; A. F. Reinecki, Regina, N.W.T. : J. W. Morton, Regina, N W.T. ; J. J. Heaslip, Alameda, N.W.T. ; H. Donaldson, Winnipeg ; William Heath, Winnipeg ; W. G. McMahon, Winnipeg ; M. J. Wilson Cordage Company, Chatham, Ontario ; International Harvesting Company.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). No expenses have been paid to or through the government, or to or through any agent or officer of the government in any of the cases mentioned, with the exception of that of the M. J. Wilson Cordage Company, of Chatham, Ontario, in which case there was paid to the agent of the Department of Justice the sum of $245 to cover all expenses and fees in connection with the matter.

DRY DOCK AT FOOT OF LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. GALLERY asked :

1. Has the government received a memorial from the Montreal Board of Trade, asking for the construction of a dry dock at the foot of the Lachine Canal, in the Harbour of Montreal, and for increased wharfage accommodations ?
2. Has the government considered this request, and has it come to any conclusion ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government have received the memorial in question but have not come to a conclusion.

CANADA-FRANCE STEAMSHIP SERVICE—ARRIVAL OF THE 'MALOU.'

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Is the government aware that a steamer called the 'Malou' has recently arrived at Montreal from a port in France ; and that it is claimed that the said steamer is one of the steamers put on the line between Canada and France, in accordance with a contract entered into between the government and Mr. Colombier, during the last session of parliament, and towards the establishment of which line parliament voted a subsidy of $133,000 a year for ten years ?
2. Is it the intention of the government to recognize that the said Colombier has begun the fulfilment of the obligations of the said contract by putting the said steamer on the said line ?
3. If not, why not ?
4. Has the government notified the said Colombier, or any company to which the said Colombier has transferred the said contract, that it is the intention of the government to cancel the said contract ?
5. If so, at what date, and by what means ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister).

1. The government have no official information with reference to the arrival in the port of Montreal of the steamer 'Malou.' The government is aware, not from official, but from other sources, that the 'Malou' will be one of the steamers to be chartered under the contract made between Mr. Colombier and the government.
2. It is not the intention of the government to recognize that Mr. Colombier has begun to fulfil the obligations of the contract by putting the said steamer on the said line.
3. The reason is that Mr. Colombier has failed altogether to carry out most of the obligations under the contract.
4. Yes.
5. Not so far as regards the supposed agent in Montreal. By letter dated 17th May, and personal service on him in France.

RIVIERE OUELLE AND MURRAY BAY FERRY.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to continue the ferry service between Rivière Ouelle wharf and Murray Bay during the present season of navigation ?
2. If so, has any contract been entered into with any person or company ; if so, with what person and company ?
3. What are the conditions of said contract ?
4. Has the government any record of the number of passengers carried during last season between the said points ; and if so, what is the number ?
5. What did the said service cost the government ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. It is the intention provided a suitable steamer can be procured for the purpose.
2. No.
3. Answered by No. 2.
4. No.
5. The subsidy paid last season was $6,000.

ST. ROCH TRAVERSE LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Is one Caron employed as a lighthouse keeper at the St. Roch Traverse ?
2. If so, what is his salary ?
3. Is he obliged to remain at the said lighthouse during the whole season of navigation ? Or is he authorized to fulfil his duties through a substitute ?
4. Is the said lighthouse finished ?
5. If not, when will it be finished ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.
2. Four dollars a day, and he is bound to furnish an assistant.
3. He is employed temporarily.
4. This lighthouse is about being finished.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That does not answer question 3.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, he is obliged to remain, or his assistant must be there during his absence.

PORT ARTHUR AND FORT WILLIAM TELEPHONE.

Mr. MACLEAN asked :

1. What was the reference to the Supreme Court of the decision of the Railway Commission in the Port Arthur and Fort William telephone application ?
2. When was the reference made ?
3. Is there any provision in the law whereby the court will give a speedy decision in such cases ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The reference contemplated was as to whether the decision of the board on the legal question was involved was good law.

2. The reference has not been yet made. The offer by the board to make the reference took place on the 22nd day of March, the next meeting after the decision rendered, but the applicants have not yet decided to take the reference.

3. There is nothing in the law to prevent the Supreme Court from giving a speedy decision in such cases.

I.C.R.—PASSENGER RATES.

Mr. CLARKE asked:

1. What is the local passenger rate per mile in effect on the Intercolonial Railway?

2. What is the through passenger rate per mile in effect from Montreal and Quebec to Atlantic ports?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I have not received this information yet from Moncton. I have sent for it.

Mr. CLARKE. Let the question stand.

Question allowed to stand.

THE FINANCES OF CANADA.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe) moved:

That a Select Committee of eleven members of this House be appointed to prepare and introduce a Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the public revenue, the control and administration of public moneys, the raising of loans authorized by parliament, and the auditing of the public accounts, with power to send for persons, papers and records and that the right honourable the leader of the government be authorized and requested to name the members of the said committee.

He said. Mr. Speaker, I regret that, dealing with this important subject, I have to begin the discussion at this late hour of the night. But, as there might not be another opportunity for dealing with it, I think it advisable to discuss it, even though I must necessarily do so at some disadvantage, speaking to a House wearied by a long day's work. In calling the attention of the government to a question of the amendment and consolidation of the Revenue and Audit Acts, I feel that I am directing their attention to a subject of importance; and I hope to be able to give such information to the House or bring such matters to the attention of the House as will probably convince the government that there is immediate necessity of doing something in the line of improving the Audit Act, which has now been in force for over a quarter of a century. The hon. gentleman will recollect that the Audit Act is the creation of a Liberal government. It was introduced by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Right Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) as a member of the Mackenzie government in 1878. And on the 1st of August of that year the present occupant of the position of Auditor General began the duties of his office. Of course, it was, to some extent an experiment; it was a copy of an experiment, because, in 1866, the English parliament had adopted an Act of which ours was largely a copy. We have, therefore, not only an Act that has been in force in this country for twenty-five years, but we have practically an Act that has been in force for forty years. An Act not originating in our own country, but a copy of the English Act, for which reason also we might anticipate that the time has arrived when some amendment may be required. It is true that our system of government is similar to the British system, but our conditions are dissimilar. This affords another reason why it may be time to take stock of the situation and see whether, after the time that has elapsed since this Act came into force, and the great development that has taken place in the meantime, it may not be proper for the government now seriously to consider and amend the Act.

In 1878, when this Act was introduced, our total expenditure was, in round numbers, $30,000,000; in 1903 our total expenditure has doubled, and is upwards of $60,000,000. We had, from 1874 to 1878, an average expenditure of upwards of $32,000,000, and when this Act was introduced by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) he considered that the question of the amount of the expenditure was important in the consideration of what precautions we had to take in reference to the audit of the moneys of the country. Some hon. member then remarked to the present Minister of Trade and Commerce: Why, in your time there was no audit at all. He said: We did not need an auditor, because then our expenditure was $14,000,000 less than it is now—in 1878. It was not $14,000,000 less, it was $10,000,000 less, but a matter of $4,000,000 or so, in speaking of the finances of the country, was not very wide of the mark for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In 1878, at all events, all parties were united in the opinion that in view of the existing condition of things, with an annual expenditure of $30,000,000, it was necessary to have a strict Audit Act. If it were necessary then, and the question of the revenue was important, surely it is exceedingly important that now, with our present enormous expenditure and with the possibility of greatly increased expenditure in the near future, by reason of the construction of a national transcontinental railway, when we will be handling money upon a scale that has never existed in Canada before—it is important, I say, that we should to-day see to it that in every way the control of the finances of the country is as it should be. The object of an Audit Act in 1878, so far as I can gather from the speeches made a perusal of the Act itself, was that we should have a financial policy controlled by parliament, and that we should have a financial executive administration absolutely controlled by a servant of parliament. Up to that time we had a combination of the Finance Department and the Audit Department, and it was found that that system did not work satisfactorily. The audit, in fact, was under the control of the Finance Minister. When this Act was introduced in 1878 the hon. gentleman who introduced it promised a complete separation to all intents and purposes of the position and duties of the Finance Minister and the Auditor General. He promised that so far as it was necessary to maintain an independent audit, we should have an independent auditor. Time went on. Only a short time after the present Auditor General took the position there was a change of government. But matters progressed fairly well, and we found this fortunate state of things, that for many years the Auditor General had the confidence of both parties in parliament and the support of both parties. I am not intimating that the Auditor General has not, to a large extent, the same support yet, except when it comes to matters which affect the financial management of the affairs of the country. The experience of the last few years has shown that complete harmony in that regard does not exist. In 1896 we had the judgment of the hon. gentlemen who at present control the affairs of Canada as to the importance of the duties of the Auditor General, the great value of his services to the country, and the desirability of raising his salary to $4,200, as expressed by the gentleman who originally introduced the Act, namely, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Now, the Auditor General has been and was intended to be more than a mere auditor, something more than an officer who could cast up accounts and see that the additions were correct. He was intended to be a controller as well, a check upon the executive administration of the government in respect to finances. This was made abundantly clear by the gentleman who introduced the Act and by those who supported it at the time, and it is also clear by the wording of sections 32 and 33 of the Audit Act in particular, and other sections as well. In 1880 it was found advisable to enlarge the duties of the Auditor General, and Mr. Kirkpatrick moved a resolution accordingly. In 1888 an increase of salary was voted to the Auditor General, amounting then to $4,000. Several hon. gentlemen then prominent in the House—Mr. Edgar, Mr. Mills, Mr. Weldon, Mr. Casey and the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier)—were very emphatic in the declaration of the importance of sustaining the Auditor General and preserving his functions entirely distinct from the control of the administration, of making him emphatically an officer of parliament, and of giving him that control over the finances of the country which would practically do away with the possibility of any improper expenditure of money on the part of the executive administration. In 1895 the Hon. Mr. Mills introduced a petition asking that the decision of the Minister of Finance should practically be revoked in favour of the Auditor General, and that notwithstanding that the Minister of Finance had determined that he could not at that time afford it, the promotions suggested by the Auditor General, this ought to be ordered.

It seemed to be the opinion of Mr. Mills and those who supported him then that not only should the Auditor General be generally sustained but that his suggestions should practically override the views of the Minister of Finance as regards a question of policy. In 1896, and that will end the matters of review I have taken the opportunity of referring to, we had the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce again emphasizing the important duties discharged by the Auditor General and suggesting that so valuable had his services become that it was deemed expedient to have the present Senator McMullen read to the House from cover to cover both volumes of the Auditor General's report. Now, this appears to indicate very clearly the views of both the great parliamentary parties as to the functions and duties of the Auditor General and the importance of sustaining his hands and of giving him large powers not only in the interests of the country but of whatever political party may be in power. The more fully the Auditor General is enabled to carry out his views in regard to a careful and prudent executive administration of the moneys of the country the more fully can the government in the end be endorsed by the people who are scrutinizing their acts. I therefore approach this question, as far as a party man can approach a question of this kind, with an honest desire not to make it unnecessarily or unduly a party question. I recognize that in dealing with a matter of this kind I must refer to instances which go to show the necessity for a change and I will naturally refer to instances which are somewhat modern. In doing so I will come to deal with what appears to show the errors of the present administration rather than the errors of the preceding party. But, I am in this singularly happy position that whereas we do not like the tu quoque argument as a rule I will be delighted to have hon. gentlemen opposite instance the delinquencies on the part of those who preceded them of the former administration because the greater the number of instances that are shown of failure to carry out the intention of the Act the more effectually have I placed my case for the consideration of the government. For if I instanced failures of the Act in regard to the present government alone and there were none during the period when the party I support were in power, it might be said that these were owing altogether to the gentlemen who are now in power. I do not think that will be found to be the case, but I think on the other hand I can safely leave in the main instances that appertain to the former administration in the hands of the members of the government and their supporters. Now, are we still of the same opinion as we were in 1878 and down to 1896, as to the paramount importance of having an officer, who, on behalf of parliament and the people shall check and restrain the financial administration—I should say the executive financial administration—as distinguished from the financial policy of the government? I have said that for many years the system worked fairly well. I say now advisedly, and I do not do so at all offensively, that it is practically a dead letter. I say in mitigation of that that it could hardly be otherwise. The Act carried in it the germs of its own failure and when we get an Act of that kind which has stamped upon its face or engraved on its sections, the elements which go to make it unsuccessful, the more time advances, the longer it is in operation, necessarily there will grow up a greater number of precedents and exceptions to its rule so that in the process of time it will be practically a dead letter as it is to-day. Now, I say it could not work satisfactorily because there are certain exceptions which appear to the main sections giving the Auditor General a semblance of power, but which still leave in effect the whole difficulty which the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke when he introduced the Bill. We have not done away with the controlling power of the Finance Minister; we have not separated the Finance Minister from the Auditor General and in the present administration the Finance Minister is still king. I will refer as to this to section 32:

> No cheque for public money shall issue except upon the certificate of the Auditor General that there is parliamentary authority for the expenditure, save only in the following cases:—
> (a.) If, upon any application for a cheque, the Auditor General has reported that there is no parliamentary authority for issuing it, then upon the written opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, that there is such authority, citing it, the Minister of Finance and Receiver General may authorize the Deputy Minister of Finance and Receiver General to prepare the cheque, irrespective of the Auditor General's Report.

By that subsection of section 32 alone, I submit that we failed very significantly to carry out what was supposed to be the object of the Bill. Mr. Mitchell said on the occasion of the introduction of this Bill:

> This Bill gives us another Governor.

Meaning the Auditor General. But, the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> No, it gives the Minister of Finance and not the House a Governor, I am inclined to think.

If that had been the effect of the Act—I would not say a governor of the Finance Minister—but I say that if the effect of the Act had been as anticipated by the right hon. gentleman who introduced it so many difficulties as we have to point out would not have arisen. Clause B provides for emergencies, and I am not disposed to quarrel about that clause. Clause C dealing with the Treasury Board, worded as it was, was almost necessarily a fatal blow to the efficient carrying out of the Act. Many difficulties have arisen under that clause and under the following section 33. These difficulties were anticipated by Sir Charles Tupper when the Act was first introduced, and time has proven that he was right. Mr. Tupper said:

> The difficulty that appears to present itself to my mind is this: you are preparing to give the public an independent parliamentary officer, but who is to see before the payment of public money that under the law it is entitled to be paid? If you leave the government power to override his decision and pay the money, what then is gained by the Act?

Our Audit Act is to some extent a copy of the English Act. I am aware that there is a movement in England to improve their Act, but even if there were not, the conditions are so different in Canada, that I am inclined to think that an Act giving the Auditor General (or comptroller as he is called in England), less power than we would give our officer here, might be effectual in England and not be effectual in Canada. As a rule, politicians occupy a different status in Canada from that which they occupy in England, and I am afraid we will have to admit that in Canada politicians and governments hang on to their positions more tenaciously than they do in Great Britain. Section 32 of the Act could not be expected to give reasonable satisfaction, because the application for money or for a credit as the case may be never originates with the Auditor General, but always with the department. It is the application of the department, or in fact of the government on one hand and the Auditor General on the other hand. If a cheque is refused an appeal is made by the department, and to whom is this appeal made? Why, it is made to the very gentleman who is prosecuting the appeal. The Treasury Board consists of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Customs, the Minister of Inland Revenue, the Minister of Justice, the Secretary of State and one other member of the Privy Council with the Deputy Minister of Finance as secretary. It is essentially the government on a smaller scale. And it is the minister, who applies for and is refused a cheque, and his associates to whom the appeal is made. The only difference is that the minister who made application for the cheque has less direct responsibility than otherwise. He throws upon the shoulders of several the responsibility which he otherwise would have to assume, and as no reasons are given by the board, and the mere announcement of the decision is all that is of record, he is not personally responsible in the matter. Time has shown that this provision has not worked satisfactorily and more and more from time to time inroads are being made on what was supposed at the time to be an adequate protection for the people. We are now at the stage when we must consider whether we are going to practically abandon the theory of a controller in the financial and executive sense as distinguished from the political sense. Section 33 has occasioned a good deal of conflict of opinion. My main object in proposing this motion is to secure a committee that will take into consideration and revise the whole general scheme of an Audit Act. Suggestions have been made from various quarters, and more especially by the Auditor General himself, who has very great experience for over a quarter of a century, in the working of the Audit Act. We occupy in this matter the unique position that we cannot to any great extent find precedents in other countries, and so far as I know we could get any very valuable information by making inquiry abroad.

Decided changes in the 32nd and 33rd sections are required and we also require a number of minor changes as pointed out by the Auditor General in a suggested Act that appears to have been prepared in 1889, I do not know at whose instance. The lines of authority as between the Auditor-General and the various departments should be more clearly defined so that there shall not be the uncertainty that has existed in the past as to the duties of those who have the initiation of the disposition of the money and of the Auditor General, who is intended to have, to a large extent, the control of the money. Either amendments along these lines should be made to the Civil Service Act, the Public Works Act and the Railway Act or the Audit Act should be amended in such a way as to govern these other Acts and avoid constantly arising difficulties. Take for example the question of tender. Tender is a farce to-day in the Dominion of Canada ; it is not even provided that contracts are to be let by tender, much as we discuss that subject when considering the estimates. Not only in certain matters affecting the Department of Railways and Canals, and whether tenders are asked or not, once a contract is let, however outrageous its terms may be, the contention of the departments is that there can be no inquiry into the prices that are being paid. Some twenty-five of the eighty sections of the Act require the consideration either of the government or of a committee.

We want also a more expeditious publication of the Auditor General's Report. This report ought to be published in sections according to departments ; as rapidly as reports of these departments are prepared they ought to be placed in the hands of the representatives of the people, before they assemble in parliament, so that members can familiarize themselves with their contents and be able to intelligently discuss them in the interests of the people. I am not alone in thinking this. In 1887 parliament met on April 13, and the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) on the 15th insisted upon having the Auditor General's Report then. In 1886, parliament met on Friday, the 19th, and on Monday the present Senator McMullen made a violent statement in reference to the necessity of members of parliament having these books in their hands at an early date, although the time had not arrived according to the statutory requirements. Whatever other changes may be made, I think the decisions of the Treasury Board should be made public in the same way as the Blue-books are distributed. They should be published from time to time and distributed so that the people should know exactly what attitude has been taken in reference to the moneys belonging to the country. The Auditor General suggests that the occupant of the office should be styled the Controller and Auditor General. The corresponding officer in England is so called. The Auditor also advocates a Canadian exchequer account corresponding with the English exchequer account.

In support of the position I have taken it will be necessary for me to refer to some instances in which I think the Act has not worked satisfactorily. The provisions as to tender have failed to accomplish the purpose intended. I understand that it has been said by members of the government that I am seeking to invade the sacred region of responsible government by the motion that I propose. If that is so it is rather a peculiar departure, because I belong to a party which is not given to that kind of thing. I am not wedded at all to the proposition which I make ; I ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the House, by my motion, to name a committee to consider this matter and probably to bring in a Bill amending the Act. It is important that we should have such a Bill. I could have brought in a Bill myself and have submitted it to the House, and the House would then doubtless have entertained it and probably have referred it to a special committee. I do not know that there is any radical departure from the principles of responsible government in asking that a committee of members of the House shall assume the duty of investigating such a matter as this and reporting it to parliament leaving it to parliament in its wisdom to either accept or reject it. At all events I was guided in the first instance by a reference to rule 39, which says :

Every Bill is introduced upon motion for leave, specifying the title of the Bill ; or upon motion for a committee to prepare and bring it in.

I was guided further by searching the journals of the House and finding instances in which this course had been adopted in the past. Among others I found that in 1879, as recorded on page 63 and 64 of the Journals of the House, a motion was made by Mr. Macdonald, seconded by Mr. Bowell, that a committee consisting of fifteen members should be appointed to take evidence and send for papers and documents in order to bring in a Bill with reference to the insolvency law. That was subsequently reported to the House. Last year we had the question of the election laws referred to a select committee and we had the committee on the redistribution of seats. I may also cite another authority, which I think will commend itself to both sides, and that is the precedent set by the British House of Commons in April, 1893, of appointing a select committee on the question of national expenditure. So that I think I may fairly submit that I am not asking for any radical departure from the principles of responsible government when I ask the House to name a select committee to consider a question which is of such immediate importance. For forty years we have had practically the same Audit Act in force, for our Act is founded on one forty years old. Since then our expenditure has doubled, and there is no doubt that our expenditure will be on a vaster scale during the next ten or twelve years.

Before I refer to the Davis contract, I want to say that I hope I shall deal with this question in such a way as not to unnecessarily excite the hostility of the right hon. leader of the government. I should be delighted to stop here and now if the right hon. gentleman would give me an intimation that he will appoint the committee I suggest or any committee. I only name eleven members as a suggestion and I want it to be distinctly understood that I do not consider this a party question. It is one from which we should eliminate politics as far as possible. Coming back to the Davis contract, I wish to refer to a letter which is found upon the first page of the Auditor General's Report, dated at the Auditor General's office, Ottawa, March 9th, 1904.

I have the honour to transmit my report on expenditure accounts, appropriation and statutory, and on revenue accounts, for the fiscal year 1902-3.

The following rather lengthy correspondence is introduced in this place because it illustrates the practical importance of several amendments that this office has been asking for some years to have made to the Audit Act.

This refers mainly to the Davis contract and no doubt also to the Corry and Laverdure contract. I propose therefore to refer to these matters and, as I wrote to the Minister of Railways and Canals the other day, I propose to also refer to the question of the Farran's Point Canal. Mr. McDougall says further.

The magnitude and number of the transactions going through this office are now so increased that I feel parliament should seriously consider also the amendment of the Audit Act along the other lines suggested in a former report, to enable this office to cope with the expansion of the business of the country. I feel so strongly on this point that if parliament does not see its way to bring the matter up this session, I shall at the end of the session ask to be superannuated.

I would like to have brought this matter up earlier, but I was advised not to do so as it would have been overshadowed by the discussion of the transcontinental scheme and would not have attracted the attention it deserves. However, on the 3rd of May I gave notice of the motion which I am moving to-night. Before that, when I had the matter in hand, I referred on the 22nd of April to the matter which I proposed to discuss to-night, in a few sentences which I will take the liberty of reading :

I repeat, and it cannot be too emphatically enunciated, that there is a great constitutional safeguard of the people of Canada at issue in the question we are discussing to-night. If hon. gentlemen who are familiar with the laws and practices of parliament will for one moment reflect, they will see that three great safeguards stand out conspicuously in the constitution of Canada. One concerns the paying out of money of the people of Canada. The great safeguard in reference to that, which prevents the administration to a large extent, though not fully, I am sorry to say, from squandering the resources of the people of Canada, was the institution of the Audit Office, and the administration of that office by the present incumbent. Too much cannot be said of the efficient manner in which that gentleman has administered that office, and of the sturdy and loyal way in which he has stood up for the rights of the people as against the Acts of the present administration.

In some instances, in one instance that occurs to mind, into which I shall not go at present, as large a sum as over half a million dollars was saved to the people by the activity and loyalty of this officer. And even then he failed to accomplish all he thought should have been accomplished on behalf of the people. That is one of the safeguards, which stands out conspicuously.

Now, in the controversy that has arisen between the Auditor General and the Treasury Board and the Department of Railways, although the Auditor General was fought at every point, opposed on every issue—and I must say, not very courteously so far as the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals was concerned—in the end, although the Treasury Board overruled the Auditor General on every contention he advanced, and found that Mr. M. P. Davis was entitled to all that he asked, to all that the contract named, and to all that he had sent in his bill for, including the right to obtain payment in some manner for 79 years to come, yet after all that had been done, the government, for some reason as yet unexplained, saw fit to withdraw their decision, to consult with the Auditor General and get him to agree to a substituted contract, a vast improvement it is true upon the contract which was made in 1900, but which yet does not fully secure the interests of the people of Canada. Now the results of that substituted contract carrying out the reversal of the judgment of the Treasury Board, has been that at least three-quarters of a million dollars have been saved to the people of Canada. It will be necessary for me to read a portion of the memorandum of the Minister of Railways and Canals upon which the Order in Council was made.

On a memorandum dated September 26, 1900, from the Minister of Railways and Canals representing that, in the opinion of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, in which he (the minister) concurs, it is highly desirable that the system of electric lock operation and electric lighting which has been satisfactorily adopted on the Soulanges canal and is about to be adopted on the Lachine canal, should be brought into use on the Cornwall canal, where facilities for the creation of the necessary power already exist.

The minister further represents that under lease, dated June 25, 1896, issued to Mr. Michael P. Davis, the following provisions are inserted :—

I am not reading continuously, I am paraphrasing to some extent.

That the lessee shall apply electric power to the satisfaction of the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals for the working of all the locks on the Cornwall canal at $63 per horse power per annum ;

That the lessee shall also supply and work electric direct current arc lights of not less than 2,000 candle power, in perfect working order, at such points and in such number as shall from time to time be deemed necessary by the chief engineer aforesaid, running all night wherever so required, along the canal, at the rate of 30 cents a night. The minister recommends that in pursuance of the said lease, provisions, he be authorized to enter into a contract with Mr. M. P. Davis for lighting the Cornwall canal, the number of lights not to be less than 250 arc lights of 2,000 candle power, or more than 270, at the discretion of the Department of Railways and Canals, to be paid for at 30 cents per lamp for each night during which the light is required and supplied ; further, for the supply of electric power for the operation of the lock gates and valves, and of bridges throughout the said canal ; the amount to be paid for such service to be $63 per horse power per annum for a minimum of 400 horse power.

The minister says that it is highly desirable that this contract should be entered into. Why it was highly desirable I have been at a loss to ascertain. Was it for economy ? It may have been, but it is pretty hard to make that out. Whatever else the government have failed in—we all fail more or less—the present administration I suppose have not failed in the matter of economy—rigid economy, I expect those hon. gentlemen on the back benches would say. Rigid economy in every department of the public service is still the warp and woof of the banner of the Liberal party. They all appear in that. Now, I have read the memorandum of October 9, 1900, that was to adopt the contract for 21 years. We cannot have too much of a good thing, and consequently on October 16, 1900, an Order in Council was made—

On a memorandum dated the 15th of October, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, recommending that the Order in Council of October 9 authorizing the entry into contract with Mr. Davis in respect to the lighting, &c., by electricity of the Cornwall canal, be amended to such effect that the terms of 21 years therein named as the terms of said lease may be extended by successive renewals to July 1st, 1979, thereby bringing it into conformity with the lease the water power granted to Mr. Davis mentioned in the said order.

Now, what was our position in November, 1900, at the time when the contract was entered into ? We were paying, for the year which ended on 30th June, 1900, salaries, wages, care and operation of the Cornwall canal $18,181, and we were paying for lighting $342, a total of $18,423. Mr. Davis had a terminable lease. We were receiving $1,000 and we were carrying out a policy which was inaugurated many years ago of giving leases along the canal for the purpose of developing the power and so encouraging industrial life along the various canals ? The rental, it is true, was not very much, but the benefit to the country was considerable in that way. Light and energy were available under the contract that existed at that time, in which it is recited that we can take that light from Mr. Davis and can procure electric energy from him if we desired it,—we could take it or not as we preferred. And there had been nothing done under the terms of the contract, so that, if the government had seen fit to terminate the lease in 1900 they could have done so without the sacrifice of a dollar. It was provided in the agreemnt entered into in 1896:

Provided always that these presents are upon the express understanding that the lessor reserves the right as follows, namely : If, at any time hereafter, the land hereby demised and the quantity of surplus water leased or which may hereafter be leased, according to the intent and meaning thereof or any part thereof, are or is required for the use of the canal or for any other purpose whatsoever, or if the lessor shall elect to take over any and all buildings and works or erections constructed upon the land hereby demised or the increased flow of water so passing or to pass through the works of the said lessee through Hoople's creek, and to take over any and all works and land through which the said increased flow of water passes, thereupon on reasonable notice (not less than twelve calendar months) being given to the lessee to that effect, this lease or lease for the term then current and all the covenants, privileges and rights of the said lessee shall cease and be void, and the lessor shall pay the then value of all such buildings, lands and works with an addition of five per cent thereto, that may be at that time erected or connected therewith and belonging to the lessee ; and that in default of agreement as to the valuation of such buildings, lands and works, their value shall be ascertained by three arbitrators, one to be chosen by the Minister of Railway and Canals, another by the lessee, and the third by the two arbitrators so chosen, and the award of the said arbitrators or any two of them after hearing the evidence offered by either party shall be conclusive as to such value.

As I say, nothing has been done, no building had been erected and the government were in a position—I am not saying they were bound to do it, but they were in a position if they saw fit—to terminate the lease. It was, as far as I can see—it will to be for the government to give their pronouncement on the matter—a prudent lease. It provided that so much of the surplus water, if any, at lock 30 level at Cornwall canal, as the lessor might deem advisable after navigation and existing mills and mill sites hereafter to be leased shall be supplied, should be granted to and taken by the lessee. It appeared, I say to be a prudent lease. I suppose I need hardly anticipate that the government will say it was not a prudent lease in face of the fact that they afterwards implemented it and put it in operation by fixing prices and entering into the contract to which I will now refer.

It will be necessary for me to read but few clauses of this lease. Let me read first the recital :

An agreement made this nineteenth day of October, one thousand nine hundred, between Her Majesty the Queen represented herein by the Minister of Railways and Canals, acting under the authority of an Order in Council dated the ninth day of October, A.D. 1900, as amended by Order in Council dated the sixteenth day of October, A.D. 1900, of the first part ;

And Michael P. Davis, of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, contractor, of the second part ;

Whereas, by indenture No. 12,336, dated twenty-fifth day of June, 1896, made between the parties above named, the said Michael P. Davis among other things agreed——to supply certain electric power and also electric light at 30 cents per night per light, as by reference to the indenture will more fully appear. It provided that the said Michael P. Davis should supply such light from 1st May, 1900, and current for power from 1st October, 1901. The agreement, so far as the light is concerned, was extended by the deputy Minister of Railways and Canals to 1st August, 1901. It was extended by the acting Minister of Railways, under Order in Council to 1st October, 1901, and it was extended to the 15th November, 1901, by the Minister of Railways and Canals. It was provided further that nothing herein shall be taken to vary other than as above specifield or provided any of the provisions of the last indenture. I have read over the clauses which are material for the purpose of reference later on. Now, it is stated in the minute presented to the Governor in Council that the Soulanges canal had been found to work satisfactorily. This was a case of government ownership and operation. And it is a proper inquiry in this regard to ask why it is that, if the Soulanges canal was working satisfactorily under government control and operation and was costing a comparatively small sum of money, why it was that the government thought it necessary to incur this enormous expense of some $52,000 a year involved in this new contract and more than $52,000 a year when the matter would be in full operation, perhaps—why it was that the government thought it necessary to enter into this new contract making necessary this large expenditure of money.

Now, taking the highest estimates of Mr. Munro, the superintending engineer at Coteau Landing and Mr. Hoffmeister the resident engineer with the electrical company on the Soulanges Canal, the total expenditure for the operation and interest account of the Soulanges Canal would not exceed $11,700 a year. We have made a change and what did we affect by the change ? Instead of paying at the outside some $18,000 a year all told, for the operation of the Cornwall Canal, and I will show that the average operation for the last seven or eight years has not amounted to such a large figure as I have mentioned, we incurred an additional expenditure—not a complete expenditure—of about $52,000. We undertook to take 250 lights every night in the year for 79 years at 30 cents per light per night, wanted or not wanted, used or not used, in contrast with what we were bound to take under the contract entered into in 1896 by which we were to have :

2,000 candle power in perfect working order at such points and in such numbers as is from time to time deemed necesary by the chief engineer aforesaid running all night when required.

In other words, we could take or not take the light just as we liked and we could take just such a quantity as we saw fit. We bound ourselves also to take four hundred horse-power, wanted or not wanted, for the same period of time at $63 per horse-power. This means that for lighting we have 250 x 365 x 30, making $27,275 ; 400 horse-power at the rate of $63 per horse-power, making $25,200, or a total expenditure for these two items of $52,575 a year. Multiply that by the time to which we are committed. Mind you that this not only committed us to an additional expenditure for the time to come, that this did not begin at the end of the old contract which had 17 years to run, but it took immediate effect and put upon us that additional burden for 79 years which would represent, if you multiply the $52,575 by 79, $4,153,425. I will not say that that is the fair way of looking at it. We have to borrow money from year to year and if we borrow the money certainly it will not be less than $4,000,000. However, I do not propose to look at it in that way. I have the figures taken from the public accounts to show the expense of operating the Cornwall Canal from year to year and I will give the years as terminating with the 30th June in each case.

Year.	Total Expenditure.	Lighting.
1896..	$16,128.95	$300.92
1897..	15,791.68	281.23
1898..	13,794.89	318.94
1899..	15,629.44	331.35

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What lighting is my hon. friend speaking of?

Mr. LENNOX. The lighting of the canal as given in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was not lighted at all at that time.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, this is for the light that was used in connection with the operations carried on there. It was not in complete darkness before. You did not carry on your office work in darkness even if you carry on some other matters in darkness. I will go on with these figures for the present and I will refer back to them.

Year.	Total Expenditure.	Lighting.
1900..	$16,204.16	$343.47
1901..	17,044.22	497.03
1902..	16,175.97	.....

Hon. gentlemen need not tell me that although that canal was not completely lighted before that there was no lighting at all, because there were some offices that had to be lighted and to some extent they had lights in connection with the Canal. The coal oil bill in 1895, hon. gentlemen will find in the Auditor General's Report to be: 1,268¼ gallons at 16 cents a gallon, $202.92. And electric light at bridges $98. I will not go into these particulars any further. It will be found that the average of the expenditure was not more than $16,000 in the years I referred to and then when you add the present expenditure to the $16,000 I have already referred to the annual expenditure would have been, if the protest of the Auditor General had not prevailed, $70,000 or practically five times what it is to-day.

Let me point out another matter which will eliminate to a great extent the controversy which has been suggested as to whether I am right in my figures or not. Although in 1900 we committed ourselves to an additional expenditure of $52,000 a year for light and electric energy, we did not by that means curtail, in any degree whatever, the working expenses of the canal. The light and the electric energy were both extras; the same number of men have been employed since the new system has been inaugurated; in fact, the public accounts show a rather larger expenditure for wages than before. Without the sanction of this House; without advertisement for tenders; simply by Order in Council, the government saddled us with an expenditure of $52,000 a year for this purpose.

A bill was rendered in April for light and power furnished from October 24 to April 1, 1902, as follows:—212 lights for 158 nights at 30 cents per night, $10.048.80; 400 h. p. at $63 a year for 158 days, $10,-908.50. I mention this, not for the purpose of casting reflections, but because it is a fact which throws light on this discussion; that this money was demanded by Mr. Davis, and we were paying it without receiving one dollar of advantage in return. It is impossible for any member of the government, or supporter of the government; or opponent of the government, to show that for that money claimed in April, 1902, the country was deriving one dollar of advantage. At the time it was rendered it was evident that no officer of the government was sufficiently in charge to ascertain whether the lights were in operation or not. Mr. Wright, who subsequently had something to do with it was not paying attention to the matter, because he did not understand at that time that the government had taken the matter over, and he was not in a position to certify to the Deputy Minister of Railways anything of his own knowledge in reference to it. The account was prima facie dishonest and unfair, because it commences for services rendered on the 24th of October and continuing to the month of April. For long years we had done without any light at all on the Cornwall canal, but now in the winter months, when the gates are closed and when no power is necessary to open them, we have an account for the power to operate these gates. The Auditor General, of course, asked for explanations, and joined issue with the administration as to the right of this country to be saddled with that burthen. The direct issue was the payment of the $20,000, but the indirect issue was as to whether for eighty years to come we should pay in all a matter of about $750,000. But the broad issue was greater still. It was whether we should abandon the principles of responsible government and the safeguard of public audit introduced by the Liberals in 1878. Taking the contract of 1900, I have shown that according to its reading, and according to the account presented by Mr. Davis, it amounts to $52,575 a year. That contract has been changed; and the present contract, made in 1903, after the Auditor General had protested, after he had called the attention of the government to various matters which requiring further consideration, after he had called attention to the fact that there had been no tenders called for, the Deputy Minister of Railways took it upon himself to say that there should not be even a certificate that the price was fair and just according to the concluding words of section 33. Well, after the Treasury Board had overruled all the objections of the Auditor General, then the government decided to retrace their steps, and we have a new contract changed in some particulars from the old. We have a contract by which for 243 nights in the year 250 lights are to be supplied at 30 cents a light making $18,225 if they are supplied. For 122 nights 100 lights are to be charged for at the same price making $3,360 and 125 horse power instead of 400 horse power at $63, making an annual charge of $7,875 or a total outstanding charge so long as the present condition of things remains, of $29,760, a saving to the country of $22,815 a year or taking it at its present cash value for 79 years, counting money at 3 per cent, a saving to the country of three-quarters of a million practically, or at all avents of $684,450. The Auditor General has shown that he investigated the Soulanges canal and found it to be practically the same, corresponding in all essential particulars with the Cornwall canal. He found that it was similar in the matter of light and expenditure and he obtained engineers to investigate it. Their report was presented to the government and I am at a loss to understand, when the total operating expenses of the Soulanges canal is not more than somewhere between $10,000 and $12,000 a year including the interest, that we should be justified in paying $30,000 for practically the same work on the Cornwall canal.

Mr. HAGGART. Did you say that included interest on the investment?

Mr. LENNOX. That is the way the Auditor General put it and that is the way the engineer put it. That is the way I understood it. If the Auditor General's figures are correct I would not be satisfied with the $30,000 we are paying under the amended arrangement of 1903.

It is surely a strange proceeding to begin the supply of electric current on the 1st of October. It may be that the government will explain that this is perfectly correct. When the government entered into this contract with Mr. Davis and he was to begin furnishing the light on May 1st, it appeared to be all right but it seems to me to have been very unfair to allow Mr. Davis under that contract to begin supplying electric energy on October 1st. It seems also unfair that the people of this country should have to begin to pay this large amount of $63 per horse power, at a season when for four or five months at all events we would not require it. Under the original contract light was to be furnished by the first of May but that condition was altered and finally there was an agreement that instead of furnishing it on the 1st of May it should commence to be furnished on November 15th, 1901. That date is significant as I shall point out later on. Mr. Davis, claimed that light and power were furnished on October 24. It was one of the questions in dispute between the department and the Auditor General, whether as a matter of fact light was turned out on October 24. If we were discussing this question to-night from a political stanpoint I should ask the government to explain how it is that on October 26th, two days after the date at which Mr. Davis says he turned on the electric lights, keeping them continuously in operation until the month of April following, we find the hon. the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) under the authority of an Order in Council, signing an extension of time for the completion of this work until November 15th.

At all events until the 15th of November or later, there was not a light supplied by M. T. Davis along the Cornwall canal. I think the conclusion is irresistible. I have not gone into the details of the correspondence and the discussions between the Auditor General and the government, but have simply indicated some of the difficulties existing. Mr. Aylesworth, who was consulted by Mr. McDougall, was of the opinion that the Auditor-General was not legally correct in some of the positions he took. But whether the position which he took was on all points sustainable as matter of law or not, it was a position, in the interests of the country, and upon the merits he justified in taking it. Mr. Aylesworth thought the government was bound by the contract, although no public tender was asked, and although he thought the government should have limited the contract to the number of lights actually in use and the number of horse-power. Having regard, however, to the literal construction of the contract, Mr. Aylesworth thought the government are bound to pay. So far as the argument I am now making is concerned, it does not matter whether they were or not, but let me say that much as I admire Mr. Aylesworth's great ability, I am inclined to think that if we look to the initiation of the contract and to the basis upon which it was founded, we cannot come to the conclusion that Mr. Aylesworth is correct in his opinion that the country was bound by the contract entered into in November, 1900. I take this ground, that when the Minister of Railways, on the 26th of September, 1900, submitted his memo. to the council, he submitted it too upon the basis of a lease which then was in existence, and which provided that the electric lights should be in perfect working order, to be set at such points and in such numbers as the chief engineer shall deem necessary from time to time, and to run all night whenever required. The minister recommends that he be authorized to enter into a contract with Mr. Davis for the lighting of the canal in pursuance of the lease which then existed, and an Order in Council was made upon the basis of the memo. I have read. Then when the new contract came to be made, it is said that the Minister of Railways and Canals was acting under the authority of the Order in Council dated 9th of October, 1900, as amended by the Order in Council dated 16th October, 1900. And it concluded with those words :

> For lighting of the said canal at 50 cents per night per light, as by reference to the said indenture will more fully appear, and be it further provided that nothing herein shall be taken to vary, other than as herein specified or provided any of the provisions of the said indenture.

So that I submit that upon the proper construction of the memo. presented to council and the Order in Council and the contract made in November, 1900, the government never were bound to Mr. Davis, and their proper duty was to have paid him for what he did furnish and put an end to the matter altogether. I do not propose to lay any weight upon the fact that this was entered into on the eve of an election. Politically speaking that may be of significance, but I do not attach any importance to it in the matter with which I am dealing now. I do not attach any great importance to the fact that the Auditor-General claims—whether rightly or wrongly—that at the time this contract was entered into, electric energy was being furnished in Ottawa at $15 per horse-power, instead of $63. This matter is not perhaps of great moment in the question I have brought up, but it is all-important that the contract was let without tender at a time when we had upon our statutes a law requiring tenders to be called. I do not think the government will say that by reason of the existing lease, they were precluded from calling for tenders. That cannot be argued with any degree of force in view of the fact that no work had been done under the arrangement which was entered into in 1896, that it was practically a mere license authorizing Mr. Davis to use the waters of Hoople's creek and get such surplus water as remained after the government had supplied all that was required for navigation, &c.

Seeing that there was a complete and perfect right of putting an end to that contract any day they liked, seeing that electrical development which has progressed in such a marvellous way had made considerable strides in the years from 1896 to 1900, and was yet in its infancy, and it was not desirable that the government should commit itself rashly where the possibilities were so great of even more wonderful achievement from year to year resulting in lowering the prices—under all these circumstances the government will hardly claim that they were handicapped or hindered by the terms of the lease of 1896. However, that remains to be seen. I say it is important then, in view of the evidence we have not only in this matter, but in numerous other matters spread over the pages of the Auditor General's Report of preceding years, that we should take steps not only for the improvement of the Audit Act but also for the improvement of the various Acts under which the government let public contracts not only in reference to railways, where some of the greatest abuses have existed, and of canals which are in harmony with the railways in this respect, but in the matter of public works generally. I think it important also that we should consider very carefully the effect of the provisions, or what were intended to be the provisions of the 33rd section. I barely referred to that before. I want to make only one suggestion before I close—for I have decided, mainly out of consideration for hon. gentlemen opposite, but also for myself, not to give to-night the other matters I referred to ; perhaps there will be another opportunity to deal with these. I will confine myself to this operation and the others to which I have referred. I had overlooked, in the course of dealing with this question, the matter I particularly wished to present to the government, and that is—assuming that the government are of opinion that there can be and there ought to be some change in regard to the management of the finances of the country—the need that exists for giving some more effective control to the Auditor General or, if not a more effective control to the Auditor General yet, less power to the Treasury Board which is practically the administration. In case the government are of opinion that it is a matter worth considering, I might suggest that something might be done in the direction of committing some matters of the department to a court, say the Exchequer Court or the Supreme Court, not by way of a trial but by way of a reference, just as if matters were referred to the Treasury Board. I anticipate that I may very well be met with the objection : Surely that is the invasion of constitutional government ; are you going to suggest that we should carry on the administration of the affairs of Canada through a legal tribunal ? It does seem to have a very significant bearing upon the argument. I feel that there may be some force in the argument, but the matter is for the government to consider. I am not as strong an advocate of judges as I used to be. There was a time when I thought we could wisely commit even the distribution of our seats in this House to the judges. I remember I used to argue that when I was young, up in the country. But I do not think so now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But there is a good time coming.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, of course, it goes without saying that I would rather depend upon the Conservatives in power. But I would infinitely rather depend upon the present administration or any administration, than upon judges in matters of that kind. But, yet, in this matter, which, probably, does not involve a question of political expediency or policy, which pertains to a matter of detail to a large extent very often involves a very nice question of law, and, as a matter of executive administration, I am not sure at all that that might not be a line which could profitably be pursued. I make the suggestion so that the government may consider the matter ; or, if the matter gets to committee, the committee will have it before them and it will come up for further consideration. Now, I think I am right in assuming from what I have shown that there is a necessity for reconsidering this question. And I am strongly in favour—every man in this House is entitled to his own opinion—of enlarging to some extent the powers of the Auditor General. I am not speaking of the present officer particularly. I have a great deal of faith in him. I have so much faith in him that I would like to see the Auditor General who is in office to-day or any succeeding Auditor General receive a much larger salary than he receives. I think we should give our Auditor General a large salary, and that that salary should command the service of the best man of that class in the country, the class whose minds run in the direction of finances. I am in favour of extending the power of the Auditor General, but more particularly of defining clearly the limits of the powers of the Auditor General and of those with whom he comes in contact and to give to the public ready, prompt, and complete information from time to time of what is transpiring between the government and this official. The more you extend the power of the Auditor General in the hands of a suitable man,—within reasonable limits—the more satisfactory will be the management of the money of the country and the more satisfactory account will the administration be able to present to the people of the country.

I am convinced that many times departmental matters are put through by a department which the government, as a whole, probably would rather had not gone through, but the government has to take the responsibility of them as a whole. I believe that the trend is towards the enlargement of the powers of officials standing in this relation to the government. I have inquired in reference to France and Germany, and have not been able to get the information ; and therefore, like the Minister of Justice, I won't try to talk about a thing that I know nothing about. In regard to the United States, I have looked over a consolidation of their statutes, and it appears to me that they manage this matter in a way that might be beneficially considered in Canada. I do not think we should take our methods from the United States, but we need not hesitate to look anywhere for suggestions. I understand from reading their statutes that they have six auditors and two comptrollers. The chief controller appears to have a staff of officials, for instance, engineers and architects whom he brings to his service from time to time for the purpose of acquainting him with what is going on, and giving him correct estimates. We might find that unduly expensive in our case. But the controller of customs also has the right to say whether an account shall be passed, and he can at any time, within a year after it has been investigated by his subordinates, that is by the auditors, finally determine the matter himself, and this binds the executive department. In addition to that, it appears that after that remedy has been adopted by the controller, it is for the individual who is affected, the contractor, to bring the matter into the courts to have it determined. If the United States is entitled to a verdict, then the controller is justified, if not, he is overruled by the courts.

I will refer to only one other country which can give us any basis upon which to form an opinion, except such circumstances as exist within our own country. I find that so far as I can judge, the tendency in England is to extend the powers of the Auditor General. I understand from reading occasional reports that the Auditor General seems to have been inclined to extend his powers. In the report of the Select Committee on National Expenditure last year, I find on page 4, section 2, this statement :

> Under the Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866 this officer (who is completely independent of all departments, including the Treasury, and whose tenure of office is similar to that of a judge), was appointed not only to see that no money was issued without authority, but also to examine on behalf of the House of Commons the accounts of the expenditure of the grants in supply, and to report to parliament.

That is a pretty broad proposition in itself. Absolutely independent of all departments, including the treasury, tenure of office similar to that of a judge, and who is appointed to see that no money is issued without authority. Now if that is to be taken literally, that no money is to be issued without the authority of the Auditor General, then we need not ask for anything more.

The Comptroller and Auditor General in examination before us stated that he conceived his functions to go beyond mere audit, and that encouraged by the Public Accounts Committee he entered also into the merits of expenditure.

That is what our Auditor General did upon the occasion to which I have referred.

Your committee consider that this retrospective examination, both by the Comptroller and Auditor General and by the Public Accounts Committee, has been well done, and they recommend the Public Accounts Committee, even more than in the past, to encourage the Comptroller and Auditor General to scrutinize and criticise improper or wasteful expenditure, and to indicate where censure is in his opinion required.

It appears therefore that there is a tendency in England to enlarge rather than to curtail the powers of the Auditor General. Now I desire to read the 33rd section of our Audit Act for the benefit of those persons who may not have access to it. It is of great importance :

No payment shall be authorized by the Auditor General in respect of work performed, or material supplied, by any person in connection with any part of the public service of Canada, unless, in addition to any other voucher or certificate which is required in that behalf, the officer under whose special charge such part of the public service is, certifies that such work has been performed, or such material is supplied as the case may be and that the price charged is according to the contract, or, if not covered by a contract, is fair and just.

This was a matter upon which the late Mr. Mackenzie was more pronounced than upon any other. He foresaw, apparently, the difficulties that have arisen, namely, the conflicting questions that arise in regard to extras, and he intended by this section as it now stands to put an end to the question of extras. He said that he had an invincible repugnance to the word 'extras', and that he would consent to amend the section, which was then the 34th section as it was proposed, and which was much looser than it is now, and he would consent to have it include, as section 33 does now, a provision that the price charged is according to contract, or, if not covered by contract, then there must be a certificate of the officer in charge that the prices were fair and just.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Though the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) has done me the honour to request me to name the committee which he has proposed to the House, I am sorry to say I do not think I can avail myself of his courtesy nor do I believe that my hon. friend has made out a case for the appointment of such a committee as he contemplates by this motion. My hon. friend's motion states that he wants a committee :

To prepare and introduce a Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the public revenue, the control and administration of public moneys, the raising of loans authorized by parliament, and the auditing of the public accounts.

I did not observe from the remarks of my hon. friend that he stated anything in regard to the raising of loans authorized by parliament. The speech in which he dealt with the motion was sufficiently comprehensive of itself to perhaps make him leave aside that question which, however, he thought it advisable to introduce in his motion. I cannot see that the hon. gentleman gave us any reason at the present time even to consider what amendment could be devised to the Act which exists to-day for the raising of loans authorized by parliament. Then, I do not remember having heard anything from my hon. friend suggesting the necessity of revising the statutes in regard to the public revenue. I cannot see in that direction what parliament could do more than we have done up to the present time. The levying of the public revenue is controlled by parliament under the direction of the Minister of Finance who delivers his budget speech every year and suggests to the House what is necessary and the sources from which the revenue is to be levied. But, my hon. friend, concentrated his remarks upon the control and administration of the public moneys and upon those points it will be sufficient to follow him. My hon. friend stated that the Audit Act had been on the statute-books since 1878 and that it ought to be revised and amended. The first reason which he gave in favour of amending the Audit Act was that it has existed with very little alteration, if any, since 1878 and that it is now somewhat antiquated. He says that it has been in existence for twenty-six years, or rather, as he said, for nearly forty years since it is a copy of the English Act which has been in existence since 1866. The fact that the Act is forty years old is certainly not of itself a reason why we should endeavour to amend it or think of amending it unless some further and sufficient reason for amending it is presented. My hon. friend stated that the revenue had more than doubled since the Act was put on the statute-book. So it has.

Mr. LENNOX. And so has the expenditure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think that this fact militates against the disposition of the Act itself. In so far as I understand the matter I think the principle and details of the Act are quite sufficient to take care of the present revenue and of a revenue much larger. If there were any evidence required of that we would have it in the fact that our Act is copied from the English Act and the English Act has been found sufficient to deal with a revenue ten times greater than our own. It may be true that the tendency to-day is to enlarge the power of the Auditor General, but it has not been found in practice, and if the tendency is in that direction, a statement which I am not prepared either to affirm or deny, all I have to observe to my hon. friend is that that tendency has not been crystallized into an Act of parliament, so that if it be the tendency there is a contrary disposition to leave his power where they are. Therefore all these reasons have no practical value in my judgment. But, my hon. friend has based the better part of his argument upon sections 32 and 33 of the Act. He thinks that under section 32, subsection (c), of the Act the powers of the Auditor General are not broad enough and that they should be extended. Well, the powers of the Auditor General under section 32 are that if an appropriation is asked for any expenditure it is for him to give his opinion to the government whether this appropriation has been voted by parliament and whether it is an expenditure which ought to be incurred and for which there is authority. When he has done that he has exhausted his authority. His opinion is submitted to the Treasury Board and is passed on by the Treasury Board which is simply a sub-committee of council itself. Cases may arise, as they have arisen more than once during the twenty-six years that the Act has been in operation, where the Auditor General will be of the opinion that an expenditure is not authorized by parliament, that it has not been voted, that it does not come within the purview of the appropriation because all the power that the Auditor General has is to say whether or not the appropriation that is asked from him is authorized by law. When he has done that and when he has come to the conclusion, for instance, as many times it will be the case that the appropriation which is asked by any of the departments of government is not justified or is not authorized, there must be some authority to decide whether he is right or wrong and what authority has to do that? The only authority in my estimation, and I think it is the only authority in the estimation of my hon. friend, is parliament, which will sit in judgment not only upon the Auditor General but upon the Treasury Board and upon the government. After the opinion of the Auditor General has been given it goes to the Treasury Board and the opinion of the Auditor General may be sanctioned or it may be rejected. If it is sanctioned the matter is ended there. If it is rejected there comes into operation all the check which is intended by parliament not only in this country but in Great Britain; that is to say that then the Auditor General has power to constitute parliament a court of appeal to decide between him and the government. It is true that the payment may have been made in the meantime and will have been made, but if the payment had not been made in the meantime it might be that the whole power of the government might be blocked, it might be that the whole administration of the government might be blocked, and therefore it has been thought proper in the judgment of the British parliament, as it has been thought proper also in the judgment of the Canadian parliament, that under such circumstances the administration should have the final word taking of course the responsibility of it and having to abide the judgment of parliament. My hon. friend has stated and stated truly that the reports of the Auditor General have been filled year after year with a diversion of opinion between him and the administration, but if that is the case he has it in his power to make any report he wants to make and to make it as strong as he pleases. There is no authority over him, there is no control, he is absolutely independent. He has the power to make the case as strong as possible and to bring it to the attention of parliament which is the court of appeal to decide between him and the government. I do not think that any more salutary check could be placed upon the administration of public moneys in any country.

Mr. CLANCY. This check only comes after the harm is done.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, but the harm can be undone by parliament, which can censure the government for having acted contrary to the opinion of the Auditor General, and that is the only possible solution of the difficulty. If the Auditor General had power to do as he liked, without any control over him, does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) deny that the consequences might be to stop the wheels of government. For instance, last year the Auditor General had the opinion at one time, that he could deprive the members of parliament of their indemnity. He was right or he was wrong; but members of parliament were not slow to complain that he was wrong, or, that if he were right, then, some means should be found to solve the difficulty. There may be civil servants or contractors to whom the government owes money, and there must be some power to decide as to whether they shall be paid or not. It seems to me that the proper authority to decide in such a case is the body which is intrusted by parliament to administer the affairs of the nation. If they go wrong, then they are responsible to parliament and it is for parliament to decide upon their conduct. If this is not a sound principle, then all our formalities of government are useless, and we had better have something like they have in Russia and make the Auditor General himself the omnipotent adviser as to when and where payments are to be made. For my part, I think there is in England more political wisdom in matters of government than in any other country in the world. I do not believe there is a country under the sun where the principles of responsible government are so well understood and practiced as in England, and I may point out that our Audit Act is copied word for word from the Act in force in England. Although my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) declared that the powers of the Auditor General should be supplemented in some way, I noticed that he was careful not to mention any one particular in which they should be supplemented.

Mr. LENNOX. I merely asked for a committee, and I realize that it would come with poor grace from me to lay down rules as to what should be done by that committee. I did throw out some suggestions, very few, but my chief object was to get this committee appointed and leave it to them to decide.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not expect that my hon. friend would lay down any cast iron rules, but we had the right to expect that he would not remain absolutely silent as to the reasons which he would indicate for the consideration of the committee. The hon. gentleman thinks that the Treasury Board has too great power over the Auditor General, and he thinks that once the Auditor General has given an opinion that he ought not pay any appropriation that is asked for by a department, the Auditor General's opinion should not be revised by the Treasury Board. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) has not told us by what authority the Auditor General's opinion should be revised, nor whether the Auditor General's opinion should be final. For my part I do not think we should appoint a committee, for I do not believe that any better arrangement can be found than the one provided for now in the Audit Act.

Perhaps my hon. friend will pardon me for saying that it is my opinion that everything he has said with regard to the powers of the Auditor General, and with regard to the necessity of this committee, was merely a preface to the discussion of the Davis contract. I shall not pretend to discuss the Davis contract in detail, but I may be permitted to give the hon. gentleman my opinion as to its general outlines. The hon. gentleman complains that when we made the contract of 1900, we did not ask for tenders, but the hon. gentleman knows that the second contract of 1900, be it wise or unwise, was simply a completion of and implementing of the contract of 1896. I understand that my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has no very serious objection to the contract of 1896. He called it a prudent contract, and in many ways I am disposed to agree with him. It provided that Mr. M. P. Davis was to furnish electric light and electric power to work the machinery on the canal. It provided a price at which that was to be done. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) says that that was a prudent contract, and it being a prudent contract the new government coming into office could not have done better than to have accepted it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) cannot seriously complain then that we did not ask for tenders to light the Cornwall canal, when we had a contract already made between Mr. Davis and the government for lighting that canal. In fact we were precluded from calling for tenders. Let us go further, if the contract of 1896 was prudent, was the contract of 1900 imprudent? It was provided in the contract of 1896 that Mr. Davis was to develop electric power, and having developed it, he was to supply the Cornwall canal with electricity and with motive power for working the machinery of the canal. It was provided that the price should be thirty cents per light per night, and $63 per annum per horse-power.

In 1900, Mr. Davis wanted to implement his contract. He was then in the process of developing the power as therefore ready to supply the lights to the government and to furnish the horse-power for the Cornwall canal. But before he finally put in his apparatus it was indispensable for him to know the quantity of light and the number of horse-power required. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will agree with this. Mr. Davis could not put up the plant, he could not put up his machinery, he could not take a step to fulfil his contract until he knew exactly the maximum of light and the maximum horse-power that would be needed. He would not have the same plant to supply a maximum of fifty lights as to supply a maximum of 250 lights; he would not instal the same plant for 100 horse-power as he would if he had to furnish 400 horse-power, and therefore it became necessary that the chief engineer of railway department should determine the amount of power and light required and to form a contract accordingly. Thus was made the contract of 1900 which provided that there should be a maximum of 250 lights and a maximum of 400 horse-power to work the machinery of the canal. My hon. friend does not state that these figures are in any way exaggerated. It has been shown beyond doubt in the record that these figures were not exaggerated, but my hon. friend says: You are paying for light which was supplied in winter when there was no necessity for it. The answer is very obvious. When Mr. Davis had put up this plant it did not matter to him in the least whether the canal was lit or not lit, because the moment he had installed his plant upon the Cornwall canal, that plant being moved by machinery, it was of no consequence to him, as has been abundantly proved, whether the lights were used or not:

the cost was the same and all the time the same. Therefore all of the argument made by my hon. friend is beside the point and does not apply in this matter.

Let me call the attention of the committee to the reports of the experts in reference to the examination and it will be seen that it disposes of three-quarters of my hon. friend's argument. The experts say :

> In an electric plant where the motive power is water, the cost of operating is practically the same whether the plant carries a load or not. It follows that the price of electrical energy cannot reasonably be based on energy supplied, but must in whole or in a large part take into consideration the capacity of machinery at the disposal of the service.

Therefore, Sir, it matters not whether the machinery which had been placed there to supply a maximum of 250 lights, which it is admitted is necessary in summer, was operated in winter or not, the expenditure was the same for the contractor, and it had to be paid. Everything was based on the value of the plant installed by the contractor :

> The machinery and station capacity placed at the disposal of the government for this service does not depend on the number of arc lamps in actual service, but is entirely fixed by the maximum number called for at any one time.
> Although the energy consumed may vary, the generating plant capacity is not changed. Moreover the energy available, but not supplied, cannot be sold to any other party, for systems at present employed to do this service keep a constant draught of current independently of the lights in use. The station operating expenses are not changed, the only possible difference would be in the cost of carbons, trimming and care of the lamps, which would not amount to more than $200 to $300 per year.

This disposes I think altogether of all the objections made by my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox).

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think so. If my right hon. friend will permit me, the objection I take is this. How is it explained, when the government had committed themselves to a $52,000 expenditure that within a year or two afterwards, they could make a new contract and cut off a matter of $22,000 a year ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can give the explanation very easily. I was simply justifying the contract of 1900 upon the fact that that expenditure had to be calculated upon the amount of energy necessary to furnish the light and to move the machinery. The Auditor General objected to this and the Treasury Board overruled him, and I think I was right in saying that the Treasury Board was acting within its rights because the Auditor General, even in the opinion of the legal gentleman whom he consulted, Mr. Aylesworth, was altogether wrong legally, and if he was wrong legally, the Treasury Board was right in overruling him. But after the Treasury Board had overruled the Auditor General the matter was taken up again. He had done what was suggested by the report of the Committee on Finance which was quoted a moment ago by my hon. friend. He had gone into the merits of this contract and the objections which he had made, the reasoning which he advanced, and the views which he had set forth were such as made it appear to the government that it was advisable to have the contract investigated by experts, and this is what was found, this is the reason we modified the contract. There is no alteration at all in the number of lights required ; it was stated and was found that the maximum of 250 lights was right. But, Sir, it happened also that the government Department of Railways and Canals have not yet installed all the machinery to move the weirs, locks and bridges and therefore, the amount of energy, 400 horse-power was not required at that time. It will be required later on, in fact 435 horse-power will be required when all the machinery has been installed. We therefore decided that since all the machinery was not installed and since 400 horse-power was not necessary at this moment, but only 125 horse-power, that we would pay only for 125 horse-power. Let me call my hon. friend's attention to this fact which is very plainly set forth in the new contract :

> Upon the present installation being added to or increased, pursuant to such requisitions, payment therefor shall be computed and made as follows :—the present installation, requiring for efficient operation a line load estimated at one hundred and eleven horse-power, is taken, for the purpose of this agreement (with allowances for extra line load, at one hundred and twenty-five horse-powers, and shall form the basis of computation. The additional installation, according to capacity, shall be estimated on the same ratio of line load (with the same ratio of allowances for extra line load), —the proportion of the capacity of the present installation to one hundred and twenty-five being always adhered to in the result.

This is the reason why we modified the contract which we had made. My hon. friend stated that there was quite a difference in the cost to the government of the lighting and the supply of energy for the Cornwall and Soulanges canals. My hon. friend is altogether wrong in this. In the Cornwall canal he has taken notice only of the actual salaries, and has taken no notice of the wear and tear nor of the interest on the capital supplied. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) makes comparison between the present expenditure of the government for lighting and the expenditure for that purpose when the canal was lighted with coal oil. If my hon. friend is ready to blame the government for having substituted electricity for coal oil, we are prepared to take the blame, but I do not think that those who use the canal will take the same view as he does. For my part I give credit to the late Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) for having been the first to introduce the system of lighting our canals by electricity. Not only should we have our canals lit by electricity, but I hope to see the St. Lawrence all the way down lit in this way, and then navigation will be much more safe than it has been.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). At this late hour I shall not make any very lengthy remarks. As regards the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox), I had a good deal of experience, when I was Minister of Railways, with the present Auditor General. He has powers equal to those given to any Auditor General in any country I know of. Let him have all the possible powers he can desire to draw the attention of the country to any anomaly or wrong there may be in the government accounts, and I have no objection, but the idea of making him the arbiter and sole judge as to the expenditure of the country is another question altogether. Our public expenditure is a matter in which the government must rule. Whether the government administer affairs wisely or badly, the country has given them that power and has not given it to the Auditor General. The proposition of my hon. friend is to give the Auditor General the power of judging whether an expenditure has been properly voted by parliament or not, and to take from the government, after he has expressed his opinion, the power of overruling him. It would be impossible to carry on the government if any such rule were established. Let us by all means have a true and faithful audit; and where there is any wrong done by the government, let the Auditor General report upon it and draw attention to it in the fullest possible manner, and goodness knows he exercises that power to the fullest extent.

I have said enough upon that point, and I intend to make some remarks, which must necessarily be brief, on the other question raised. I do not wish to adjourn the debate, because we may not have another opportunity of reaching the motion again this session. In the matter of leasing water powers upon the canals, what is the system which has been adopted ever since we have had a government? It is this. We first get a report from the department as to the value of the horse-power in any particular canal. If the energy or power is at the disposition of the government, we first fix a price per horse-power. Then it is the duty of the minister to see that the horse-power is utilized for the development of the particular section of the country in which the canal is situated. That has been the rule hitherto followed on all the canals. I have never heard of any horse-power or of any power on any canal being offered to public competition. That was the plan adopted on the Cornwall canal. It was necessary, on account of the erection of the Shiek's Island dam, that a waste weir should be built for the purpose of letting the water out of the dam in case of repairs. At the end of that, there was the possibility of energy being utilized for the purpose of electric lighting or other purposes. What I wish the government to do is this. I would ask it to bring down all the documents in the office of Railways and Canals and to give the names of the parties who have applied for that particular power. I would like to have the dates of the applications, &c., the report of the deputy minister and the minister regarding the value of the power. I want also the report in reference to the leasing of this particular work and the price that ought to be paid for the lights on the canal. To my own knowledge I ordered the deputy minister to inquire into the prices that were paid in the different cities in Canada, particularly Ottawa and places where there was plenty of water-power available; and the prices which he recomended us to pay is the lowest that was known in Canada at that date. I also instructed him to inquire what was the value per horse-power of the energy required for the purpose of working the different gates and the swings of the different bridges. As my right hon. friend has said, I was the first in Canada to decide upon lighting the canals by electricity, generated by water-powers along the canal, and to use the electric power for the purpose of opening and shutting the gates and swinging the bridges. There was not at that time in Canada any electric energy, that I know of, generated by water-power, sold by the horse-power. I asked the deputy minister of Railways to report as to the value, and he based the value upon what power could have been generated by the actual use of a particular work. He arrived at $63 per horse-power, and his report showed that instead of 400 horse-power being required to open and shut the gates, 50 would be all that was necessary. The newspapers are giving importance to the fact that this bargain was made on the eve of an election, that the price was an exorbitant one, that the price now paid in the city of Ottawa is $15 per horse-power. There is a report, it is true, in the Auditor General's Report, which shows that the bargain I made was a fair bargain at the time. No person would erect a plant, such as was proposed down there for the purpose of generating power, if it was only 50 horse-power which was required. The price agreed on was $63, which the experts in my department recommended as a fair price. The price paid for lighting the canal was the lowest paid for arc lighting in any part of Canada. The water used for this particular work was taken from the summit level of the canal and might have interfered with those who had powers below; and I made the condition that if it interfered with navigation or works operated below or any works to be hereafter erected, the government would have the right of stoppage.

The only right given to the agent was this —the right to deepen Hoople's creek to take into the level of the Cornwall canal sufficient water for the undertaking that he proposed and the development of this energy for electrical purposes. He had a perfect right to that. The only question is were the government receiving a fair price as compensation for the privileges they gave him? I say they were receiving a fair price, larger price per horse-power than was given for any undertaking on the Lachine, Welland or Cornwall canals. There were no exceptional advantages given to Mr. Davis. I do not think that Mr. Davis was an applicant in the first place, but that he acquired the right from some other person ; or, at least, that some other person joined with him in making application. I do not remember the circumstances, but I know that the contract had nothing to do with an election. What I want to get from the department is when the application was entertained. It strikes me that it was in 1894 and was entertained in 1895 and that the Order in Council was passed on the 17th of February, 1896. I would like the memorandum to Council, which, I think, was 7th February, 1896. The Order in Council a few days before election did not alter the order of 17th February one bit, except that the description of the land in the memorandum, if I remember aright, was larger in extent than in the Order in Council of June 23rd or June 22nd or whatever the date was. The only change was to restrict the area of land to be granted to carry on the undertaking. So that the lease was founded, not on an order passed a few days before an election, but on an order passed on the 17th of February and a memorandum of 7th February, and a bargain made months—yes, I venture to say a year—before. Yet the Auditor General draws the attention of the people to the extraordinary coincidence that this was done on the eve of an election.

Mr. LENNOX. Who says that ?

Mr. HAGGART. The Auditor General. He speaks of it as a remarkable coincidence that the Order in Council was passed a few days before an election and the lease a couple of days afterwards, and also that the changes made by hon. gentlemen opposite were during an election. The facts are as I have given them; and an election had nothing to do with the matter. The result of an election may have done something to hasten the signing of the lease. After an election, the head of the department may change. In view of that, what is done ? The minister sees to it that every bit of the work in the department is cleared up, if it can be cleared up. If he has made promises for senatorships he tries to get the Order in Council through which is to carry the amount. In this case the Order in Council has been passed that there was nothing to do but sign the lease. It was simply an item in the back-work of the department, and was carried out by the minister and was brought over to the council to receive consent. And this is the scandal that some of the newspapers say is greater than the Pacific scandal—a greater scandal than has exercised the people for a number of years past. I do not know what hon. gentlemen opposite have done ; I am only defending what took place in my own time. It was a simple transaction and perfectly justifiable. As to the figures, I could not follow my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox's) figures very well, but they seemed a little confused in reference to the Soulanges canal.

Mr. LENNOX. I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) will find the figures perfectly correct. He can go over them any time he likes.

Mr. HAGGART. I think I can show they are not correct.

Mr. LENNOX. Then do so.

Mr. HAGGART. The cost of the installation on the Soulanges canal is given on the authority of Mr. Hoffmeister, resident engineer of the Canadian General Electric Company on the Soulanges canal, at $197,000 ; then for lighting the canal and operating all the lock gates, sluice gates and highway bridges by electrical energy, $160,000. The electrical energy which Mr. Davis supplies according to Mr. McDougall's statements amounts to $15,800 a year. But if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) will look at the preceding part of it he will find the cost of operating it by this gentleman's estimate is $10,000 a year. The cost of the plant was, approximately $225,000 with contingencies and items that might be under-estimated, making an addition of $33,750 was $258,750.

Mr. LENNOX. That is the Cornwall canal.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. And the cost of operating, if all the plant ran continuously would exceed $10,000 a year.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not mention that at all.

Mr. HAGGART. Then what would be the value of that ? Say 12 per cent for depreciation and interest—that would be nearly $30,000 alone and after that $10,000 for operating, and you have $40,000 a year.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) seems to think Mr. Davis is losing by it.

Mr. HAGGART. He is not making much, if the cost is as this gentleman states.

According to the report from Mr. Keefer, the engineer employed by the Auditor General to report upon the value of the property, the cost is $225,000, with addition for contingencies and items under-estimated $33,750 or a total of $258,750.

Mr. LENNOX. The Soulanges canal, which is the only one I mentioned, cost $190,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Call it $200,000 and allow 12 per cent—

Mr. LENNOX. We count it at 3 per cent.

Mr. HAGGART. But surely you allow for depreciation in the value of the plant of eight or ten per cent. The cost, according to the hon. gentleman, is $200,000 ; 10 per cent on that is $20,000 as the cost of operating the plant, which is $5,000 less than the Auditor General makes it. I do not wish to go into the details, as I suppose all the papers will be contained in the report when it is brought down. I want, first of all, the memorandum from myself, or whoever was minister at the time. I do not know whether I made a memorandum or not, I mean the memorandum to Council of the 7th of February, on which the Order in Council was passed. Then I want the Order in Council of the 23rd of June, and all applications in the department in reference to this particular work, and particularly the report of the deputy head of the department as to the value of the lighting and horse-power, and as to the value which I ought to attach to the water power which was leased to Mr. Davis.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I will follow the example of those who preceded me, and be brief, taking up the facts in their chronological order. On the 8th of February, 1896, the then Minister of Railways and Canals made a memorandum to Council recommending that authority be given to lease to Mr. M. P. Davis a certain amount of land in the immediate vicinity of the Cornwall canal—the description of the land is in the memorandum here—and, in addition, a certain quality of water power. That memorandum, dated on the 8th of February, 1896, was adopted by Council on the 18th of February, 1896, on which day an Order in Council passed authorizing the leasing of this land and of this water power. On the 25th of June, 1896, a lease was passed which was merely for the purpose of giving effect to that which had been decided on the 18th of February, 1896. Now, what is the lease ? The lease is to be found on page 6 of the Auditor General's Report, and refers to a lot of land at the lower end of Sheik's island. I will not read that. That which is important is contained in the next paragraph, and that paragraph is of such importance that I will read a certain portion of it :

And as pursuant to the said lot of land, and subject to the restrictions, reservations and conditions contained, described and expressed herein and in the annexed general terms and conditions, the lessor has granted, demised and leased, and by these presents does grant, demise and lease to the lessee, the use for manufacturing and mechanical purposes, as hereinafter set forth,——

I would like to draw the attention of the House to what I am now going to say, because I want the House to understand what was given to Mr. Davis. What was given to him was the use of—

—so much of the surplus water, if any, on lot number 30 level, Cornwall canal, as the lessor may deem advisable, after navigation and existing mills and mill sites hereinafter to be leased, are supplied——

He is to get the surplus water, whatever it may be, that is left after all the necessities of navigation are complied with, after all the mills then in existence have been satisfied, and after all the mills to be built hereafter on all the mill sites are satisfied with water—he gets what is left. That is the contract, that is the lease.

—and the lessee shall also have the privilege of using, at a weir hereafter to be constructed by him, on or adjacent to the land hereby demised and as shown on the plan hereunto annexed, for the purpose of power, the amount of water flowing and to flow into the said canal from Hoople's creek, and any increased flow of water into the said canal from the said creek through any works hereafter to be constructed by the lessee.

The next clause provides for the term of the lease. The clause which has reference to that reads as follows :

The privileges, rights and easements are granted for a term of twenty-one years from and after the 1st day of July, 1896, and ended on the 1st day of July, 1917, and thereafter for a term or period of twenty-one years, renewable as is provided and mentioned in the annexed general terms and conditions.

Now, an attempt has been made designedly to lead the public astray with reference to the condtions of this lease. It has been falsely stated to the public that the original lease had in contemplation a lease for twenty-one years. As a matter of fact, the original lease had in contemplation, not only by the terms I mentioned last, but also by the terms governing all leases to which reference is made in this, an extension of that lease to 1980, or for eighty-four years. That is the term of the original lease. Then, in addition, you have got the power leased, you have got the object of the lease, you have got the term of the lease—eighty-four years —and you have got all that is necessary to constitute a lease of the power to Mr. Davis. But in connection with that lease there is a reservation, that is to say, the government provide that while they give that power to Mr. Davis on the terms I have indicated. for a rental of $1,000 a year, for the period I have mentioned, he is then obliged to supply them with power for the purposes of the canal, to move the locks, gates, sluices, and so forth, and also for the erection of a lighting power for the canal. That is the reservation of the lease. The lease provides also :

That the lessee shall supply electric power to the satisfaction of the chief engineer of Railways and Canals for the working of all the locks on the Cornwall canal at $63 per horse-power per annum.

That is the price fixed in the original document. Then it goes on to say that in addition to that he shall supply and work electric arc lights of not less than 2,000 candle power, in perfect working order, at such points and in such number as shall, from time to time, be deemed necessary by the chief engineer. So he is obliged to supply power, he is obliged to supply light to an extent that may be ordered by the chief engineer. Then you have got this extraordinary provision in this document to the effect that, not only in the case of failure on his part to perform any of the conditions of the lease the whole thing is forfeited to the Crown, but also that at any time after he has made his expenditures the government may turn around and, after giving Mr. Davis a year's notice, take over the whole business from him—his plant, machinery, everything, paying him for it the then value with 5 per cent added. They have at any time the right to enter into possession of the whole thing, take it all out of his hands. That is the original contract. My hon. friend spoke of that contract as having met with the disapprobation of the Auditor General.

That is quite true. The Auditor General, dealing with this matter, found it necessary to criticise everything. He starts out with criticising the original contract and suggests all sorts of sinister motives in connection with the making of it. On the 29th of May, 1902, the Auditor General, at page 19 of his report, says that this contract is defective because it does not make proper provision for the payment of the price for the light. Then he goes on to say that the letting of this contract is a violation of the Act. 49 Vic., chap. 37, which provides for inviting public tenders in letting contracts of this sort. I do not require to deal with that part of the question because my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has dealt with it. I venture to say, however, that there have been hundreds and hundreds if not thousands of contracts for leases of water powers made in this country, there was one made within the last few days, and it has never been suggested that these leases of water powers should come under the public works Act.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman understand me to advance the idea that leases should not be made without tender ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I never would have accused my hon. friend of having harboured such a thought. I am dealing with the position of the Auditor General. Then, at page 20 of the Auditor General's Report, I find a letter dated the 4th June, 1902, in which he deals again with the original contract. He says :

Apart from the very manifest principle which should hold in such cases, that the country should be protected from applicants getting prices at their own dictation, there are two Acts, viz. : The Audit Act, section 33, and the Act with reference to the Department of Railways, section 11, which seem to have been disregarded.

Then at page 25 he deals with the same contract. He says :

Then I may call your attention to the rather singular fact that there were two arrangements in connection with the matter : the first was made 11 days before the election of June 23, 1896.

Of course, he is out there because the contract bears date the 25th of June, two days after. But he is so anxious to find fault that he says the contract was made on the 23rd of June, 1896, and of course he suggests all sorts of improper motives on the part of those who made the contract. The Auditor General deals with it again at page 26 of his report. He says :

It must be forgotten that in addition to the $51,000 a year, Mr. Davis also has the right to all rental which the water power will bring.

Then again at page 29 he discusses it in these words :

The government in 1896 might, it seems to me, have kept in view the fact that the first-class water power which was being leased to Mr. Davis should have been held by the government until a lessee was found who would have accorded the government power and light on the most favourable terms.

Now I am done with that part of his criticism. But, what do we find at page 35 ? Hon. gentlemen who have followed me in what I have said will recollect that portion of his criticism in which he states that this contract was made on the eve of an election. What does he say at page 35 of his report ? Under date of October 11, 1902, he says :

Bear in mind that the present Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals was in office when the agreement of 1896 was made, that he presumably was either the author of the carefully prepared agreement of 1896, the one which so fully guards all the public interests by providing against a successful claim by the contractor, for either electric light or energy, the use of which is not obtained by the public.

There you have the Auditor General's views as expressed in his own report in reference to this contract at these different dates. But that is not all. Let us take the opinions of the experts who were selected with the approval of the Auditor General to deal with this matter. You have Mr. Herdt, who is a professor at McGill College, Montreal, and who from a technical standpoint is one of the most competent electrical engineers in the country. You have also Mr. Dion who is at the top of his profession and Mr. Parke, of Toronto. I find, at page 45 of the report, that they say :

> We are of the opinion that—for the time (1896) and the service to be rendered, namely, to supply power for 24 hours per day in small units, and to furnish lamps and light them, the whole scattered over a course covering many miles—the prices to be paid were reasonable. It has been possible since, under certain conditions, mode of delivery, &c., and in very large quantities, to sell power at comparatively low rates, but the lease must be judged from the conditions prevailing at the time it was made and what might reasonably be expected as to the future from the data at hand.

That is as to the price. Then they go on to deal with the time which the lease had to run and they say :

> Under the lease the lessee was required to construct costly works, and it was necessary to have it cover a long period of time.

So, you have the justification in so far as these gentlemen are concerned for the price paid and for the period during which the lease was to run. Now that is the contract of which the Auditor General speaks in such high terms of praise at page 35 of his report and which is approved of by the engineers whose names I gave a moment ago. I say now, that, dealing with the contract made in 1896, and of which the Auditor General speaks in such high terms, that not a single line of that contract, not a single word of that contract has been changed by the present government. It remains in the condition in which it was and there has been no departure from it to the slightest extent. It has been suggested that the renewal of that contract for 21 years is provided for by the contract of 1900. Nothing of the sort. It was provided for by the original contract, wisely and properly provided for, because there is a clause in the original contract which enables the government at any time to step in and take possession of the whole work paying the contractor merely the then value of the work which they take over. What was done by the second contract of 1900 ? By the second contract of 1900, provision was made merely for the number of lights to be used on the canal and for the amount of horse-power which was required in connection with the working of the gates, locks, weirs and so on. As I said a moment ago this was provided for in the original contract of 1896, which also provided that the engineer of the government, should, when the necessity arose, that is when the canal was ready to be put into operation, determine the number of lights and also determine the amount of horse-power required to effectually operate the canal. The engineer did that ; that is to say that when the canal was finished in 1900 it became necessary to light it. The engineer was applied to and he said it would be necessary to have 250 lights to properly light the canal. Is it doubted for a moment that that was the proper number of lights ? Experience establishes the fact now, after the canal has been in operation, that we have not one light more than is necessary and as we have had a comparison made with the Soulanges canal I will take occasion to show that notwithstanding the statement made by the Auditor General and by the hon. member for Simcoe there are fewer lights in operation on the Cornwall canal than on the Soulanges canal. You will find that the experts say that the number of lights required by the engineer is merely sufficient for the purpose of lighting the canal and in addition to that we have our practical experience of the operation of the canal and when the engineer said that 250 lights were absolutely necessary our experience has shown that he was absolutely correct. What was done in 1900 ? I shall not ask the House to take my view of it. I do not want the House to take my opinion because I was not a member of the government at that time and had nothing to do with the making of this contract, although I think it was a very proper contract notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman for Simcoe has said. I will take the opinion of the gentleman selected by the Auditor General to advise him in respect to this matter. I take the opinion of the gentleman selected by the Auditor General to advise him in respect to this matter ; and in regard to the contract of 1900, Mr. Aylesworth says :

> There appears an Order in Council of October 9th, 1900, authorizing the agreement of October 19th, 1900, under which the claim to payment is now made, but it is to be observed that this agreement of October, 19, 1900, in fact amounts to nothing more than a fixing of the quantities of electric horse-power and electric light the contractor is to supply.

The original contract was not departed from to the extent of a hair's breadth ; all that was done by the supplemental contract of 1900, was to do that which the orignal contract had in contemplation, viz. : to provide for the number of lights required, and the horse-power necessary, and which were fixed by the engineer who made the original contract. As Mr. Aylesworth says, all that was done under the second contract was to fix the number of lights and the quantity of horse-power the contractors were to supply.

> The lease previously entered into and dated June 25th, 1896, seems to have conferred upon Mr. Davis the right to supply such electric power and light on the canal as the chief engineer of the department might require, and if it was, under this lease, the right of Mr. Davis to supply the light and power in question, there was no possibility in October, 1900, that there should be competition, or the consideration of tenders, before the agreement then made with Mr. Davis was entered into.

There is the opinion of the gentleman selected by the Auditor General to advise him on this matter, and who says that in view of the contract made in 1896, Mr. Davis had a fair right under the contract to supply the light and power and that the government had no right to call for tenders and no possibility to provide that there should be competition. I draw the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) to page 13 of the Auditor General's Report, where he will find that so far back as the 1st of December, 1901, there were then in operation on the Cornwall Canal, 216 lights. In the report of the experts (page 47) the hon, gentleman will find the following statement :

> The agreement of 1900 calls for a minimum of 250 lights and 400 horse-power. The 250 lights appear to be no more than sufficient to light the canal, as the lamps which are placed is 400 feet apart, are not too close for proper illumination.

The experts confirm the opinion of the engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, who was himself selected when the contract was made in 1896 to determine the number of lights. There is no doubt about the number of lights required. And now as to the horse-power required, it was intended that we should have power required to move the locks, and the gates, and the bridges, and to operate the workshops, and in addition to haul boats moving through the canal by means of wenches, run by electric power. This was a new departure inaugurated by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart). When the time came to determine what was required under this contract the government's engineer gave a detailed statement to the effect that to do the work in contemplation it would require 417 horse-power. The contract was made accordingly, and as the Prime Minister pointed out, it would have been lacking in prudence on the part of the contractors to have installed a plant there without knowing how much power he would require to generate. His contract was to supply not less than 250 lights, and not less than 400 horse-power, and it was proper on his part that he should say : If I am obliged to supply that, give me some assurance that when I have expended my money to supply it, I should have a demand for it. The contractor set to work, and he had his plant installed before the machinery built by the government was ready to use the power. The contractor was ready to supply the electric energy, but the government were not ready to utilize it because it was necessary for the government to determine the extent to which the power should be applied to each particular machine. The contractor said : I am ready to supply the power, and you are not ready to utilize it, and why should I be deprived of the money to which I am entitled under the contract? The government said : Here is a contract which we must abide by, but we have a provision in the contract which enables us to expropriate your plant, and let us see if we can come to a fair understanding about it ; we are not ready to utilize the power, but it is not fair to ask us to pay for something we are not getting. It was not the Auditor General who did that, it was the government that did it. Then the government said to the contractor : We have so much plant installed now and for that plant it is necessary for us to have so much horse-power ; we will pay you for the power necessary to operate the plant we have installed, and as further plant is installed we will pay you proportionately for the power required for it. There is no mystery about that. We want to keep nothing back in connection with this matter. The whole difficulty arises from the fact that when the government contractor was ready to deliver power the government was not ready to receive it to the extent he was ready to deliver it. In law he was entitled to be paid because he was ready to execute his part of the contract, but to the credit of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) let it be said there was a provision in that contract by which we could turn around to the contractor and say : Very well ; if you exact your pound of flesh we will exact ours.

You will be entitled to be paid for what you contracted to deliver and what we are prepared to take, but we will expropriate your plant. Mr. Davis, I say it now, never asked for anything to which he was not fairly entitled, and when the matter was properly put to him, all he ever took payment for was what was delivered to the government, notwithstanding, that according to the strict letter of his contract, he might have been paid for more. There is the whole case. What is there in it which we need to hide, and what is there in it to make all this scandal about ? I have not said a word that I have not corroborated by reference to the Auditor General's Report, and not a word that cannot be so corroborated. I do not find any fault with the very deliberate statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox). I want to deal with the Auditor General, who makes a comparison between the cost of the Cornwall and Soulanges canals. In one instance he says : You have the government plant on the Soulanges canal, and the installation there cost so much and the operation costs so much ; and then he says, you have let a contract for the Cornwall canal, and the operation will cost just so much. Let us see if it is possible to compare them. At page 27 of his report the Auditor General says that the cost of installation of the Soulanges canal is $160,000. That statement is contained in his letter, dated July 14th, 1902. He says that the cost of operation is $5,000 a year ; that is the cost of running a plant, and he puts in $4,800 for interest. He, therefore, says our charges are $9,800. At the time he made that statement, on July 14, he had in his possession a letter from the man who installed the plant, Mr. Hoffmeister, which was written on July 12th, and which will be found on page 29 following of his report. In that letter Mr. Hoffmeister tells him that the total cost of the installation was $200,000. That is on the next page from the page I quoted. At the foot of that page, he tells him that the operating expenses may go up to $5,700. There is the position of the Auditor General with respect to that statement. Then he goes on and says he has derived the cost of installation from his report, and gives it at $160,000. I have a statement from the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways ; and also one which I have made up from the Auditor General's Report. From the Auditor General's Report it will appear that the cost of installation of the plant was, not $160,000, but $212,820 ; and from the Chief Engineer of the Railway Department, I have a statement carried down to date, which shows that the cost of installation on the Soulanges canal is $218,175, and the cost of operation is not $5,000, as was stated in the letter, the cost of operation is $11,131. If to that cost of operation you add six per cent, which is a very small amount for depreciation of plant, and you add three per cent for interest, you have got $29,000 for the Soulanges canal. His statement here is simply as to the cost of operation, to which may be added interest—and the government cannot to-day borrow money at 3 per cent —and you cannot allow less than 6 per cent for depreciation. Thus you have $18,000 and if you add to that $11,000 for operation, you have $29,000 as the cost of the Soulanges canal instead of $10,000, practically three times the amount given in the Auditor General's Report.

A statement appears at page 23 of the Auditor General's Report of the amount of power required to operate the Cornwall canal. As a matter of fact, you have two canals at Cornwall, but the Auditor General does not think it necessary to refer to that. There is, however, the old canal and the new canal, both of which have to be equipped and looked after. The new canal has twenty-six locks and two guard-gates. The old canal has twenty lock gates. On the Soulanges, with which he compares this, you have four lift locks, one guard-gate and one guard-lock, as against forty-six on the other. On the new canal you have sluice gates or valves, 26 ; on the old canal, sluice gates or valves, 20. You have six winches on the new canal, five winches on the old canal, and in addition to that you have on the Cornwall canal a workshop which is now being built to provide for the service on both the Cornwall and Williamsburg canals, and that workshop requires 60 horse-power.

What have you got at the Soulanges ? Four lift-locks, one guard gate, one guard lock, twenty sluice gates, five weirs and seven bridges. Of these the lock gates, sluice gates and five bridges are worked by electricity. You have no winches and no workshops, although one is being built but is not in operation. How could you, in justice or in conscience, compare the conditions existing at Cornwall with the conditions existing at Soulanges ? There is no comparison to be made between the two. Mr. Schreiber, at page 33, very properly says :

> In dealing with the question of the application of electricity to the several purposes of the Cornwall canal operation (which at the present date is a matter of theory and estimate, rather than of conclusive calculation, based on definite experience), provision had to be made, on both the old and new canals, for the lock and guard gates, for the sluice gates or valves, for bridges, and for winches to assist vessels through the locks. In addition, power had to to be furnished for the workshops, which serve not only the Cornwall canal, but also the three canals constituting what is known as the Williamsburg canals.

That is what the Chief Engineer of the Railways and Canals Department says with respect to the Cornwall canal.

Mr. LENNOX. What do you state is a fair annual cost of operating the Soulanges canal ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think I can give the average cost of that, because, in my judgment, it altogether depends on what we have to pay to operate that. The price for the power was fixed in 1896. There is no doubt but that at that time the price was fair and reasonable. The amount we will have to pay for the operation of the Cornwall canal is dependent on the amount of power to be used in connection with its operation ; if 200 horse-power is used, 200 times 63 will be the cost ; if 400 horse-power is used, then 63 times 400 will be the cost. For 200 horse-power it would be 200 times 63, and for 400 horse-power 400 times 63.

Mr. LENNOX. That is operated by the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Cornwall is operated by Mr. Davis.

Mr. LENNOX. I am asking about Soulanges.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot tell any more than my hon. friend. All I know is that up to the present we have expended $218,175, and that the annual charge, independent of interest and depreciation, was $11,131, and they have not equipped one-half the canal. There are five weirs not equipped, which have no electric plant.

Mr. LENNOX. As I understand the hon. minister, he cannot tell us, by way of comparison, how much it does cost on the Soulanges canal for the same service as Mr. Davis is supplying.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not like to make comparisons. I prefer to state the facts and let my hon. friend make the comparison. My figures are official.

Mr. LENNOX. If you will give them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have given them. Perhaps I had better give them again. On the Soulanges canal there are five weirs not equipped. There are two bridges which have not got the necessary appliance to utilize the power. There are no winches to help the vessels through the locks, and you cannot tell what the work is going to cost. But the small equipment that is on it we do know has cost $218,175 and the annual outlay, independent of interest and depreciation is $11,131. But we have something better than that.

Mr. CLANCY. When the work is completed, will the work have to be increased on the Soulanges canal ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not an electrical engineer, but I should say it will and I will give my reasons. On page 30 of the Auditor General's Report, Mr. Hoffmeister says :

> The maximum power required for operating the Soulanges canal, that is, if a lockage is made at every lock and all the highway bridges are operated all at the same time, it would only require 40 horse-power.

That is what he tells us. It is only going to take forty horse-power to work the whole canal. Then he goes on to say :

> But the average power required with a fairly good traffic passing through the canal, it would only require about 20 to 25 horse-power to operate the canal.

All that is wanted is forty horse-power. What we have got already has cost $218,000 and it will cost $11,000 per year to keep it going, independent of depreciation and interest. Providence protect us from government ownership if that is a sample of it. I do not know that it is necessary for me to go further into this matter. The position I take is this, that the first contract of 1896 was made at a time when it was necessary to dispose of this power, and at that time the term of the lease was fixed, the price of the light to be supplied was fixed, and also of the horse-power.

Mr. LENNOX. We were not bound to take anything.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On that point I happen to differ from my hon. friend. All that was left over for this government to do was, when it became necessary to utilize the lights and the power, to fix the number of lights and the number of horse-power. That is what was done in 1900. The only difficulty that has arisen arose out of the fact that the contractor was ready to deliver his power before the government was ready to utilize it, and on a strict reading of the contract he was entitled to be paid for the power he was ready to supply. But after having considered the matter, and when it was found that the quantity required would be 126 horse-power, he agreed to reduce his claim to that amount, and in any addition to that up to 400 horse-power, he would be paid at the price fixed in the lease. The contract of 1896 was made by our hon. friends opposite and we think—in the words of the Auditor General—that it was a provident and a wise contract, and we think that the contract we have made is equally provident and wise because it gives effect to that of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). I am not going to discuss the question of the Davis contract at all further than to say that in the speech just delivered by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) he has shown an impatience which is hardly the proper accompaniment of a good case. He has taken particular pains to discredit if possible one of the chief officers of this House. The hon. minister is not wanting in courage, but if evidence were wanting I do not think he has given any evidence of it in taking the stand he has done. I am not prepared to say that the Auditor General makes no mistakes or that the government made no mistakes, but the House must be very much struck by the admission of the Minister of Justice that a wise provision was put in the contract by the Minister of Railways in the late administration (Mr. Haggart), which they took advantage of when they said to Mr. Davis : We will either use the power of expropriation or you must come down. Without going into the merits of the contract, I say that the government should have been prepared to utilize all the power that Mr. Davis was ready to furnish them. I cannot agree with what has been said to-night, even by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), to the effect that the Auditor General should be reduced to the position of a mere clerk in the office.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No one has said that.

Mr. CLANCY. That is absolutely the contention of the government and that was the position taken by the Minister of Finance last year. Naturally an officer or that kind will be sometimes wrong. And that the government have greater inducements to do wrong is a thing that must go unchallenged. What is the position of the government—and I refer to no particular government ? It is simply governed by the political and party exigencies of the case. They have no other guide. They give the people no reason, and the opposition is powerless. The Auditor General makes his protest year after year, but how does that cure it ? The government are not checked by their own supporters. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to say that the government would look for the condemnation of their own party to uphold the Auditor General or check the overruling of his decisions by the government. He knows there is nothing of that kind. As to the case of England, no complaint has ever been made there that the Auditor General encroaches upon the rights of the government. The strong opinion is that the authority of this important office, the Auditor General ought to be increased. But the tendency here is to diminish it. It can hardly be that in every case of difference between the government and the Auditor General the government is invariably and wholly right. The Prime Minister himself would not say that.

Mr. COWAN. How about the opposition, are they ever wrong ?

Mr. CLANCY. It is not a matter of the opposition. It is a matter with the people. The Auditor General stands between the government and the people. It is not a matter for the opposition at all. If the Auditor General is only to be an officer to see that the columns of figures are added up right and that receipts are duly filed, he will fulfil the duties cut out for him by the Minister of Finance. But should not the Auditor General have more power than that ? Should not he call in question irregularities? Should not he consider whether the expenditures are made according to law ? I think nobody will contend that there should not be an officer charged with that duty. We find the two extremes, on one side the contention that the Auditor General is never wrong and the other that the ministry is always right. True, the Prime Minister said, and I think it was repeated by another hon. gentleman opposite, that the remedy is for the Auditor General to make his report, which comes before parliament and can be here discussed, and parliament is to be the judge. But, is parliament an unbiassed body ? Under our system of party government—using the words in the restricted sense in which we generally use them—can it be said that parliament is a body without bias to judge such matters ? The ministry will be supported, and not a man on the other side will venture to call its actions in question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What remedy would the hon. member propose ?

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think I would be justified in presuming to offer a specific remedy.

Mr. COWAN. How about a general remedy ?

Mr. CLANCY. I do not know what my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) means ?

Mr. COWAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) said he could not offer a specific remedy. I suggest that a general remedy would be sufficient.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) would be more general in his silence, it would be better. He is merely trying to be clever.

Mr. COWAN. Not with you, not for a moment.

Mr. CLANCY. I have escaped the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) because I have rarely found it my duty to reply to what he has to say. That is the only way to escape the honourable member's filth. I said a moment ago that I was not prepared to offer a specific remedy, but what I do offer the suggestion that this is of sufficient importance—and I think the Prime Minister might agree to that—to justify an investigation. There is no proposal to change in any sense the authority of the government. I am not contending that the Auditor General is all right. But surely there should be some medium between the two extremes, and, the way to find this medium is worthy of inquiry. I do not think the country will receive with great favour the remarks made on behalf of the government.

If I have exceeded the time I should have taken at this hour, I apologize to the House. I think the matter is worthy of greater consideration than has been given to it.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). My only apology for saying anything at this hour in the morning is that the works referred to in this discussion are located in the county I represent. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in his very able argument in favour of the motion he has presented to the House, took occasion to bring up the question of the lighting of the Cornwall canal. Now, I do not pretend to go over the ground that has been gone over so well this evening, but I will endeavour to confine myself to a very few points. The hon. member for Simcoe laid some stress upon the statement contained in one of the letters of the Auditor General calling attention to the fact that power could be purchased by Mr. Eddy at $15 per horse-power, while, in this contract, the price was fixed at $63 per horse-power. That price per horse-power, as has been explained by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, was fixed by the Order in Council and in the lease which was executed in June, 1896. I have here a copy of the Order in Council of February 18, 1896, under which this property was to be leased to Mr. Davis and under which he agreed to supply electric power for the working of the locks on the Cornwall canal at $63 per horse-power, and also direct current arc lights of not less than 2,000 candle power at 30 cents per light per night. Now, it struck me, when I first read the correspondence in connection with this matter that the price charged for power was an excessive price.

I do not think I would detain the House in discussing this matter if it were not that it seems to me the press have got an entirely erronous idea of it, and I think it is well that the facts should be thoroughly ventilated. After hearing the explanation of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) I can readily understand why the price was fixed at $6 per horse-power. I can understand that no contractor would develop power, the fifty horse-power which was supposed to be at that time the amount required for the canal, at a rate of $15 per horse-power. It is possible in large deals to supply power for such a concern as Eddy's, in blocks of three, or four, or five hundred horse-power. But that is an entirely different proposition to supplying power in small units. Now we find on the Cornwall canal—I think I am familiar with almost every foot of it—that not only for the new canal, as the Minister of Justice explained, but also for the old canal, we have the different weirs and we have the bridges. Now this power has got to be suplied in units running down as low as one and a half or two horse-power. That means that there have to be transformers to take away down to these small units. The consequence is that there is a bank of transformers at every lock gate for the whole distance of eleven and a half miles, and there are transformers at the sluiceways and at the bridges. So I say the power delivered in these small units is of much greater value than the power delivered in large quantities of 100 or 150 horse-power at a time. However, the fact remains that by the Order in Council signed by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, in February, 1896, the price was fixed, and there could he no variation in regard to that.

I wish to say this, that I think, irrespective of politics, the residents of Stormont desire to see our canal lighted by electricity. We desire to see our canal operated by electrical energy; we desire to see this power developed so that if there is any surplus energy after supplying the requirements of the canal, it may be utilized for manufacturing purposes in that district. I am not going to compare the cost of coal oil with electricity. Where it is possible to aid navigation with electric lights, I think it is the duty of a progressive government to give the advantage of electric lights and also the advantage of electric power. Let me go back a little further. The Conservative government that was in power some years ago built at Sheik's Island a dam from which this power is derived, and that Sheik's Island dam I think I am correct in saying has been an immense aid to navigation on the St. Lawrence river. Instead of vessels taking five or six hours to pass through the Cornwall canal, by that Shiek's Island dam to-day they pass through in half the time. Now by having all our locks operated by electricity, and the canal lighted by electricity, boats can pass through at any hour of the night, and on any kind of night, with perfect safety, and they also go through the locks very much more readily.

If these articles that I have read in the newspapers were any way true, I would feel it was my duty in this House to criticise the contract that has been made. But, Sir, I have looked into this matter as carefully as I could, and I can see nothing unreasonable in this contract. I can see no unreasonable revenue going to the contractor. Why Sir, take the contract as it stands to-day. We find that the greatest revenue which he can receive, to the limit of a cent, is $29,850. We find by the evidence of experts that the cost of operating, maintenance, &c., would be $20,000, made up in this way: They allow $9,400 for depreciation, then they allow for operating expenses $5,800. Let me say here that I have knowledge that the operating expenses at $5,800 are nearly $2,000 too small. The pay-list of the contractor to-day for operation is $700 a month, which would be $8,400 a year, though I am willing to take these figures for the purpose of argument. Then they allow for accidents not elsewhere provided for, $1,000; rental of water power, $1,000, making in all $20,000. Deduct that $20,000 from the utmost revenue that he can receive at the present time, $29,850, and you have net $9,850, or less than 4 per cent upon his investment on that plant. Some one may say: What is that investment? I am informed the investment is over $250,000, but I am willing to take the statement of the Auditor General's engineer, the engineer that he put on of his own volition, Mr. Keefer. Mr. Keefer estimates the cost of that plant at $258,000. Mr. Hoffmeister and Mr. Munro also went into that matter. Mr. Hoffmeister put it at $204,000. But I understand the actual investment on that plant is $250,000. So the contractor at the present time has les than 4 per cent upon his investment of $250,000.

Let me say another thing in regard to this canal. Last year an accident occurred by lighting which cost the contractors $5,000. That is not provided for in any way, that is a contingency he has got to meet. The winter before last during the ice shove, a large number of his poles and his electrical appliances were destroyed. I happened myself that afternoon to be watching that ice shove, and saw these poles snapped off like pipe stems. He suffered much loss then

Only a short time ago there was an accident on the line. A poor unfortunate man through some carelessness of his own came in contact with a live wire and was killed. His widow could not have brought a successful action, but he gave a generous settlement to the family of the man who was killed. Now all these accidents in connection with a plant of that sort have got to be taken into consideration. Why, Sir, we have heard here about the Soulanges canal, and about the expense of operating it. I took the trouble myself to go into the Auditor General's Report to see whether the statement made by the Auditor General was correct, and I found, just as the Minister of Justice has stated to-night, that the cost of these works was very much larger than the Auditor General puts it. He makes a ridiculous statement in regard to the costs of operation. The cost of operation is away in excess of the figures that have been given by the Auditor General. I found further that they are also liable to just the same accidents we have on the Cornwall canal. It might be well to refer you to the page of the report to show you where it costs them some thousands of dollars for little accidents that occur and are likely to occur at any time on those works, and that is a risk that the contractor, or the owners of the work, have got to incur. Let us take one little accident that occurred on March 10th 1901.

Repairs on pole lines due to storm Sunday night March 10, 1901, $2,452.49.

I only give that as an instance of the accidents that are likely to occur.

Mr. COWAN. I understand that in your calculation you had allowed a certain amount for depreciation which you said, with interest on the investment on this contract, did not exceed 4 per cent. Have you in these figures taken into consideration those contingencies and accidents on the lines and that sort of thing ?

Mr. PRINGLE. No, I have not taken these contingencies into consideration. I was speaking of the additional expenses incurred on the Soulanges canal. These are expenses which are incident to these works. I do not think I will trespass upon the time of the House any further. The ground has been covered so completely by those who have spoken before me. I was rather struck myself, at the decision arrived at by the Treasury Board and afterwards to find that they rescinded that order. I could not quite understand it, but we have now had the explanation of the hon. the Minister of Justice. I felt that the decision of the Treasury Board was a right decision. Of course I view it from the legal standpoint. Mr. Aylesworth, at page 39 of the report gives his opinion in very clear language He says :

I think that was the position of matters and the right of the government in the premises prior to the agreement of October 19, 1900, but by the document of the last mentioned date the number of such lights has been, I think, fixed by the agreement of the parties at not less than 250, and I think, therefore, that if on any night any lights at all are required Mr. Davis has the right, if he wishes, to insist that not less than 250 shall be paid for.

Then he says :

As matters stood, so long as this lease was the only contract, it rested with the chief engineer to define the points along the canal at which lights were required, and from time to time to determine the number of lights. The prices and various particulars in regard to the lights are specified by the lease.

The Order in Council of October 9, 1900, and the agreement of October 19, 1900, specify in distinct language the number of lights to be furnished. They are to be, in number, not less than 250 nor more than 270, at the discretion of the department, and the government having by this Order in Council and subsequent agreement exercised the right reserved to it under the lease of determining the number of such lights which Mr. Davis should supply, he is, I think, entitled to rely upon such Order in Council and subsequent agreement, and to say that if any lights at all are required from him on any particular night, the number of them shall be not less than 250.

I am not going to say that the Order in Council of 1900 was a proper order. I believe that possibly an arrangement could have been made at that time fixing the number of lights for the season of navigation and during the winter months. However, as we find the Order in Council fixing the minimum number of lights at 250, if Mr. Davis supplied those lights or if he was ready to supply those lights, I contend that he would be entitled to be paid for them. Under Mr. Davis's contract there was a minimum quantity of power fixed and the moment Mr. Davis was ready to deliver that power it was no fault of his if the government were not ready to receive it, and therefore I say that legally he was entitled to be paid for it and that consequently he was quite justified in filing a claim for the amount he did claim. However, as the hon. the Minister of Justice has explained the Treasury Board followed as they considered the law and they reversed the ruling of the Auditor General, but subsequently a compromise was made and under that compromise the contractor is now paid for 125 horse-power and 244 lights for the season of navigation for 100 lights during the winter months computed at 121 days. There was a good deal of criticism last session in regard to these lights during winter. I do not know whether all the members understand it, but not only are the lights necessary, but power is necessary in the winter time. It is not all necessary for the lock gates, but the weirs and sluices have to be operated during the winter months, so that some power is required in winter as well as in summer, and some lights are required during the winter months. Now, I am glad to say that the experts who were put on this work found that it was a splendid plant. I think everybody who is familiar with the plant knows that it is a splendid plant and that the plant is in the hands of one who will certainly fill his contract with the government. Some stress has been laid on the fact that the government inserted a clause in the lease of 1896, by which they had the right to take over these works at any time. In view of that I think probably that the experts were quite right in finding that it was not unreasonable to enter into this contract for a long term of years as the government had reserved the right to determine it at any time and take over the works. I apologize for having taken up so much time, but it seemed to me that when there have been so many mis-statements in the press in regard to this matter, it was my duty to say something in regard to this work and these contracts.

Mr. LENNOX. I think that although it would be very unfair to ask the House to listen to me for any great length of time, I shall have the indulgence of the House in the exceptional position I occupy just now for a minute or two. I had the ambition to be an independent member on some one occasion and I always wished to vote for the government once if I possibly could. Seeing that there is no opportunity, and probably will not be an oportunity of voting with the government, entertaining the convictions I do, I am not at all sorry for standing pretty well alone to-night. I am proud of the able support of the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who supported my arguments and I am not at all discouraged. I have the idea that it would not be a difficult matter to dispose of such arguments as have been advanced, even by gentlemen on this side of the House, if the opportunity presented itself. I hope I made it clear to the government that I only took this as a sample of many other cases. As the member for Cornwall said, there are a great number of cases which upon the face of them seem to indicate something wrong. Not only as to those I mentioned to-night, but as to others I shall court an opportunity during this session perhaps, of bringing them to the attention of the House. I expected that we would have had some argument from the governement to explain away the fact that the instrument entered into by the government in 1896 amounted to nothing more than a mere option giving Mr. Davis the right to occupy these premises at $1,000 a year, and binding the government to nothing whatever. Therefore, the government were in an easy position to get rid of that option if they thought fit, and they must not now attempt to screen themselves behind the document of 1896. I have not heard any argument to dispose of the established fact, that whereas we were committed by the government to pay upwards of $52,000, that has been reduced to $29,000 by the activity of the Auditor General, and the figures produced by the hon. member for Cornwall show that we are paying about full value for the service, when we pay $29,000. I do not complain of my hon. friend (Mr. Pringle) discussing this matter, although his advocacy of it was a little stronger than anything offered by the government side. Although we are apt to get a little careless about it in this House, we must remember that we are commanded to love our neighbours as ourselves, and as this work is in his own county, it follows I suppose that the hon. gentleman has a very strong affection for the work and for the contractor. I have no brief to defend the Auditor General. He is an appointee of the Liberal government ; he has the esteem and confidence of the Liberal party in Canada. There may be reasons why the present government find him inconvenient. It is not the first time in history, that parties have promoted men to power and have afterwards been most anxious to get rid of them. It is more than whispered that the government find the guardian of the treasury inconvenient. The attempt last session to deprive the Auditor General of the undoubted powers he possesses, has not been forgotten. I shall endeavour when the opportunity occurs later on to discuss more of these Treasury Board overrulings, but in the meantime, I may say that there was absolute power on the part of the government to begin anew this contract in 1900, and by a stroke of the pen, they could have terminated the previous contract, if they wished to do so.

Motion (Mr. Lennox) negatived on division.

CANADIAN FISHING REGULATIONS.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who, I regret, is not in his place, a matter which affects large interests in Canada. This letter was placed in my hands yesterday by the proprietor of a large summer hotel at Gananoque. It is dated Rochester, N.Y., May 31st, 1904, and is as follows :

Mr. W. L. Day,
Gananoque, Ont.

Dear sir,—Your favour of the 27th, and also the booklets received. We surely will do all we can to send our people your way, but we want to say right here, unless you make a move immediately to disabuse the notion that has got abroad here in the city that your fish laws have been changed so as to make them very restrictive, that a number of people who contemplated going over into Canada and spending their vacation, and leaving lots of their money, are contemplating going in other directions. It is unfortunate that such a notion got started, for it will be difficult to overtake it. We would suggest that if you can have it denied authoritatively in some of your local papers, and send us copies so that we can have it copied in our papers, it would be the most effective way.

You will do us a great favour if you will keep us advised of the transfer boats from Gananoque—the hour they leave Gananoque for other points and when they return. Send us some time table, if you can.

With kind regards, we remain
Very truly yours,
F. J. AMSDEN & SON.

I have also a clipping from the Rochester 'Post,' of Thursday, June 2, and the information contained in this item seems to be official. The item is as follows :

CATCH MUST BE LEFT.

Canadian Authorities Demand Everything but the Pleasure.

Nothing said as yet about Seizing Piscatorial Photographs and American Fishermen are still permitted to bring home their rods.

Information of importance to Americans intending to visit Canada this year to enjoy the fishing is contained in the following communication from S. T. Bastedo, deputy commissioner of fisheries, Canada, sent to Frank J. Amsden, of this city 'We are having regulations prepared, and, among other things, perhaps the one that will interest you most is that a number of bass this year which any one will be allowed to take shall not exceed eight, and ten inches is the minimum size. I do not think there would be any charge at the customs office where you are carrying your rods with you, but no fish may be taken home. We allow you to come here and enjoy our fishing and charge you nothing for it ; but in former years where a certain amount of the catch has been allowed to be sent out of the country, this privilege has been abused. Parties have sent fish away by the barrel—in fact, we are informed, made a business of this in order to defray their expenses while here. Of course, there is only a certain class of fishermen who would do this thing, but the abuses have led to the privilege being denied to all.

Some years ago an arrangement was made between the American authorities and the Canadian government that certain districts west to Kingston and east as far as Ogdensburg, covering what is known as the Thousand Islands resort, should be a free international park, that the American Alien Labour Law would not be enforced so far as it applied to this district, and that Americans could fish there in Canadian waters and Canadians could come and go as they pleased. That has been acted upon for years. The Americans were to put up a certain number of pavilions and docks and make common pleasure resorts on their side if the Canadian government would do the same.

The improvements were carried out on the Canadian side, but the Americans have not carried out their part of the arrangement. This Mr. Bastedo is the assistant commissioner for the province of Ontario, he writes this as an official letter, and the result will be to prevent thousands and thousands of Americans from visiting the Canadian waters of the St. Lawrence this year because they are given to understand that if they come here to fish they cannot take the fish out of Canada. I do not know what arrangement exists between this government and the Ontario government in reference to fishing in Lake Ontario and the River St. Lawrence, whether this government has jurisdiction or not ; but I think when Mr. Bastedo sent out a document of that kind stating that Americans can come here and fish, but cannot take any fish home, he should have been sure of his ground. Of course we know that fishermen do not take any fish home, except perhaps when a gentleman takes a large fish which he may desire to express to his friends in New York, or take it to his hotel on the American side, as Canadians do who catch fish on the American side. I think the government should make an official announcement upon this matter so that the Americans may be notified that they can come and fish and spend their money in Canada, and if they choose to take half a dozen fish, they are at liberty to do so. I hope the Prime Minister will discuss this matter with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and let this pronouncement go forth to contradict the statement that has been published broadcast in all the papers of the United States to the great injury of Canada.

PRINTING OF THE VOTERS' LIST.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to renew my question to the Prime Minister with reference to the printing of the voters' list.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). With reference to this subject to which my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) has more than once called my attention, some few days ago I wrote down to the King's Printer, and this is the information which was sent to me :

Since you last reported to the House upon the state of the printing of the voters' list we have been going on with the maritime province lists. Out of thirteen New Brunswick constituencies, twelve are done, and out of 17 Nova Scotia constituencies eight are done. No more of Quebec or Ontario have been done since your statement in 'Hansard.' The maritime province lists will all be done shortly, for they are nearly all in hand. Then I propose (if I get no orders to the contrary) to take up such of the Ontario lists first as will be valid for the longest time. Quebec province is half done as it is, and I propose to bring up Ontario to the same position and then go on 'pari passu.' The lists are taken up as the current work permits. The inclosed extract from my last report (which has been presented to the House) gives a good idea of the state of the business.

Mr. WILSON. The New Brunswick list has been printed twice since I have had one for Lennox. When I spoke before I had a New Brunswick list before me for 1904. I do not think this is fair treatment as I have not had any list since 1900.

THE ALIEN LABOUR COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has any answer to-day to the question I have submitted to him three or four times with regard to the constitution of the commission appointed to inquire with respect to alien labour. The right hon. gentleman has always said he would answer on some other day. I would like to know whether counsel had been appointed, and what was the mode of procedure before the commission.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). Mr. H. M. Mowat, K.C., of Toronto, has been appointed counsel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was he appointed at first ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK No. He is in Winnipeg with Judge Winchester at the present time.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved :

That the House go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

He said : Mr. Speaker, in presenting my eighth budget, I rejoice that I am in a position to congratulate the House upon the continuance, in a very large degree, of that prosperity which Canada has enjoyed for a long time. Some recent conditions have not been so favourable as some might desire. The severity of the winter, the unusually heavy snowfall in central Canada, the lateness of the opening of navigation on our inland waters—all these things have to some extent operated to disturb our ordinary business conditions ; but any disturbance of that kind will of course only be temporary. Far from complaining of the influence of winter, we should recognize the fact that we have compensation in other directions, for the steady cold season lends itself to that great lumbering industry which is so important to Canada. Jack Frost continues to be one of our best friends, and the Canadian winter one of Canada's most valuable assets.

There is some anxiety in the industrial world, among our manufacturers not because of any conditions which exist in Canada, but rather because of conditions which it is feared do exist, or are likely to exist, in other countries, and particularly in the great republic to the south. There is an opinion in the minds of our manufacturing people that the signs of depression which have already appeared across the border will continue, and that there may be a period of severe depression in that country the effects of which would be bound to cross the border in the shape of an increased and perhaps an illegitimate competition. We are not at liberty to ignore considerations of that kind. In the fixing of our own fiscal policy we are bound to take note of these things. Nor should we fail to point the moral of a depression that prevails in the most highly protected country in the world. There is a tendency in the minds of many who are strong advocates of a high tariff policy to believe that such a policy is the best guarantee of prosperity. Yet we have the remarkable fact to-day that our manufacturers in Canada are chiefly alarmed lest there should be a great depression in the very country where depression ought to be impossible, if high tariffs are a guarantee of prosperity. Indeed I think it would not be a mistake to say that as between the two countries to-day, the condition of business is better in Canada with a moderate tariff than it is in the neighbouring republic where they have the highest tariff known throughout the world.

There is much in the outlook to-day which calls for serious consideration, for careful thought and for careful action, on the part of men both in public and private life. But while there is need for thought and for caution, there is no need for discouragement. The business conditions of Canada generally, I believe to be sound, and our crop prospects are all that could be desired. There is no reason why we should not look forward with hope and confidence to a continuance of that great and growing prosperity for which Canada has been so noted during the past few years.

Our last session of parliament was so protracted that before the close we were able to have presented to the House the outlines of the condition of the finances of the Dominion for the year which had then recently closed, and since then the public accounts have been laid on the table, so that only a passing allusion is needed to the finances of the year which ended on the 30th June, 1903. My estimate for the revenue of that year was $65,000,000. The actual revenue was $66,037,068.93, an increase of revenue beyond my estimate of $1,037,068.93. The estimate of the expenditure proved to be a very close one. The estimate was $51,650,000. The actual expenditure of the year was $51,691,902.76, being an increase of expenditure over the amount which I ventured to speak of in my anticipations in the last budget to the extent of $41,902.76. I estimated that we would probably have on the operations of the year a surplus of $13,350,000. The out-turn of the year gave us a surplus of $14,345,166.17. The surplus thus was nearly $1,000,000 more than the sum at which I placed it in the last budget speech. That surplus was the largest in the history of Canada. The revenue increased over 1902 by $7,986,287.90, while the expenditure increased by $932,510.79. Too often it happens in relation to the affairs of government and of public bodies charged with the administration of affairs that where you are blessed with an increase of revenue you also have a corresponding increase of expenditure, but we are happily able to point out that this is not the experience of this government in recent years, for in the figures which I have presented to you I have shown you that while in the year 1903 we increased our revenue by nearly $8,000,000, we only increased our expenditure on consolidated fund account by $932,510,79 :

I have a statement of the principal sources of revenue during the year from which it will be seen that there was a comfortable increase all along the line. It reads as follows :—

The increase in the revenue of 1903 over 1902 is at the rate of 13¾ per cent. I have called attention to the different branches of the service in which the revenue has increased, and while it is gratifying to have such returns from all the departments, I should refer to one particularly, because, I think it is one in which the minister at the head of that department is deserving of the highest praise. I refer to my hon friend the Postmaster General (Sir Wm. Mulock). For many years the affairs of the Post Office Department were carried on with a large deficit. It seemed to be taken for granted that we could not conduct the affairs of that department without such a deficit. It will be well remembered that the late Minister of Finance and other members of the late government also took the view that it was impossible to grant any reduction in postal rates in Canada, because of the very large drain that there would be on the treasury in connection with that branch of the public service. When my hon. friend the Postmaster General came into power, he seemed to take a different view. He seemed to have faith in the idea that it was possible to have increased revenues and at the same to afford increased accommodation to the public. We know of the very important step which he took when he adopted a measure which gave us the blessing—the word is not too strong—of penny postage throughout Canada. I think it was Sir Charles Tupper who estimated that in adopting that system the Postmaster General was flinging away revenue to the amount of a million dollars. That is only another form of saying that you reduce the taxes on the people to the extent of a million dollars. We know, Sir, that the reduction was brought about, that there was a reduction of one-third in the rate of our common postage, that there was a reduction of a material character in the postage to Great Britain. Notwithstanding all that, we find that at a time when we might reasonably look for a deficit, at a time when, if my hon. friend the Postmaster General had come before parliament and admitted that he had a deficit of a large amount he would still have had a splendid record in comparison with the record of his predecessors, but we have a different condition from that, and my hon. friend the Postmaster General is in a position to point out that while granting these reductions, he is able to have a larger revenue than ever before, and not only a larger revenue, but to wipe out his deficits and to convert them into surpluses. The deficit in the year 1896, as stated in the public accounts, was $700,997. There was an inquiry afterwards by a commissioner which resulted in some re-adjustment of the accounts, and I think that in the post office accounts, the figures differed a little from the figures in the accounts of the Finance Department, but, figuring one year with another, the statement will be found to be correct, and so I take the figures which are found in the accounts in the Finance Department. In 1896, as I have said, there was a deficit of $700,997. There were also accumulations of deficits not provided for which had to be dealt with by a special vote, and which are not referred to here. In 1897, the deficit was reduced from $700,997 to $586,539.

Mr. SPROULE. That was by a special vote ?

Mr. FIELDING. The special vote simply dealt with these accumulations.

Mr. SPROULE. That special vote provided for that deficit.

Mr. FIELDING. No, my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is wrong ; the special vote simply wiped out the accumulations of deficits which had accumulated in previous years. The accounts of the Post Office Department showed from year to year certain deficits, and these are the figures that I have quoted; but over and above that there were found these accumulations of arrearages, debts due by the post office which had not been dealt with, and my hon. friend the Postmaster General took a special vote to wipe these out and start afresh.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I say.

Mr. FIELDING. That special vote was for the payment of past deficits and it had nothing whatever to do with the later deficit to which I refer.

Mr. SPROULE. That special vote provided for the deficit up to that date.

Mr. FIELDING. It was not the deficit that I am speaking of, but the deficits prior to 1896, the deficits that my hon. friend the Postmaster General had nothing to do with except to provide for them and wipe them out.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that is what he did.

Mr. FIELDING. The following statement will show the operations of the Post Office Department for several years :

POST OFFICE.

Year.	Revenue.	Expenditure.	Deficit.	Surplus.
	$	$	$	$
1896 ...	2,964,014	3,665,011	700,997

1903....	4,397,832	4,105,178	.....	292,654

In 1899 there was a deficit of $410,021 ; that was the year when the reduction of postage took place.

As my hon. friend the Postmaster General has pointed out, if you compare service with service and omit the items for the Yukon and Atlin districts, there was in the year 1902 an actual surplus ; but I am taking the figures as they appear in the public accounts, and the total expenditure, including the Atlin and Yukon showed a deficit in 1902 of $105,221. In 1903, not taking into account service for service ; making no comparisons as respects the degree or service rendered at one time or another—though we know that these comparisons show very favourably to the present Postmaster General—but simply taking the results as we find them in the public accounts ; in the year 1903, instead of having a deficit of $700,000 as we had in 1896 with the three cent rate ; in 1903 we have a two cent rate (involving as Sir Charles Tupper said a gift of $1,000,000 to the people) and besides that we have a clear surplus in the Post Office Department of $292,000.

It will be found convenient for comparison to have a statement side by side for the two years as to all classes of expenditure, and therefore I present the following statement.

Total expenditure of all kinds	63,970,799 86	61,746,571 81		2,224,228 05

In the year 1902, our expenditures of all kinds amounted to $63,970,799, and in the year 1903 our expenditures of all kinds were $61,746,571. The House may be surprised to learn that at a time when we might naturally look for an increase of expenditure, the gross expenditure for all kinds for the year 1903 was less by $2,224,228, than it was in the preceding year.

With regard to the fiscal year which will end on the 30th of June next, the year has so far advanced now that we are in a position to make a fairly close estimate as to what the actual outcome will be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask whether the statement is correct that you credit the income from Dominion lands to revenue and charge the expenditure to capital ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no change in the method of dealing with that item. I am not sure but perhaps there is some room to debate as to whether those two items are dealt with properly, but however that may be, they have never materially altered the situation and no change whatever has been made by us in the method of dealing with them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the fact ?

Mr. FIELDING. Well, certain portions of the expenditure in connection with Dominion lands arising out of the opening up of the Northwest and the development of the country are charged to capital account. That practice has been continued, although the receipts from the Dominion lands go into the general fund. There is possibly room for fair criticism as to the method employed in former years and at the present time in respect to that account, but it does not materially alter the general result which I am presenting.

I am glad to find that the revenue for the current year, of which the greater part has now expired, has continued very buoyant. The following table will show the revenue for the eleven months of this current year as compared with the eleven months of last year.

STATEMENT OF REVENUE TO MAY 31, 1904, COMPARED WITH REVENUE TO SAME DATE, 1903.

Net increase	.....	.....	4,992,733 99

It will be noticed that there has been a gratifying increase in customs, excise, and post office ; while there is a small decrease in miscellaneous revenues. There is on the whole a net increase of $4,992,733.99 in the general revenues up to date. There is a small increase of something over $20,000,000 from railways, but I am afraid when the time comes to present the statement of expenditure, it will be found that the showing is not so favourable, because the severity of the winter made all railway operation expensive, and in connection with the Intercolonial Railway there has been a very large increase of pay to the working men all over the line which will of course affect the statement for the current year. While the railway revenue shows some increase there will not be as gratifying a statement as we might desire on for the operation of the year. Our total revenue up to the 31st of May is as follows :

Revenue.

Total revenue received to 31st May, 1904	$62,718,117 39
Estimate for balance of year	8,311,685 53
	$71,029,802 92
Or, say in round numbers	$71,000,000 00

In reaching this estimate of $71,000,000, I am taking the receipts to date and for the balance of the year I am not allowing for any increase. There has been perhaps some little check in business owing to the causes I have mentioned, and I am not going to assume that for the balance of the year we will have an increase of revenue, although I am hopeful we may. I am assuming we will hold our own, and therefore on the basis of the receipts to May 31, and the continuance of the revenue for the remainder of the year to correspond with that for the same period of last year, I estimate that we shall have a revenue of $71,000,000. The total expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund to May 31, 1904, was $41,623,560.67. My estimate for the balance of the year is that in closing up the accounts we shall probably expend about as much as we did a year ago, namely, $12,731,931.12. This will bring the total expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund to $54,355,491.79 ; or say in round numbers $54,500,000.

I anticipate, then, that for the current year we shall have a revenue of $71,000,000 and an expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund of $54,500,000, leaving us the magnificent surplus of $16,500,000.

On capital account I estimate that we shall spend during the current year $11,500,000. If, then, we take into account the expenditure on consolidated fund, the expenditure on capital account, the surplus, the sums which we shall set aside as sinking funds, and which merely pass from one hand to the other and go to swell our assets, the result will be, I anticipate, that at the close of the current year we shall have reduced the net debt of Canada to the extent of $7,500,000.

It has been my happy privilege to present from time to time statements of prosperous years in which we have had many surpluses ; and I have thought that it would be well to summarize the surplus account during the eight years that this government has administered the public affairs of the country. In the year 1896-7, the first year that this government was in power—a year during which we had not full control of affairs, because we had taken largely the estimates of our predecessors—there was a deficit of $519,981.44. That was the last deficit, the end of deficits so far as we had anything to do with them. We find, then, the statement for the eight years to be as follows :

SURPLUSES FOR THE EIGHT YEARS, 1896-7 TO 1903-4.

—	Surplus.	Deficit.
	$ cts.	$ cts.
1896-7		519,981 44
1897-8	1,722,712 33
1898-9	4,837,749 00
1899-1900	8,054,714 51
1900-1	5,648,333 29
1901-2	7,291,398 06

1903-4 (estimated)	16,500,000 00
Total for eight years	58,400,073 36	519,981 44
Less deficit for 1896-7	519,981 44
Total net surplus for eight years	57,880,091 92
Average surplus per year	7,235,011 49

It was the good fortune of our predecessors in the eighteen years during which they managed the affairs of the country to have some surpluses and some deficits. Taking them together and striking the average, we find that during the eighteen years of their administration they had an average surplus of $544,539.61, while during our eight years we have had an average surplus of $7,235,011.49.

The question of the public debt is always an important one. In a country like Canada, a comparatively new and young country, it would not be surprising if we had to show large increases of the public debt. I have on several occasions, in referring to decreases which we have been able to show, pointed out that no finance minister in a country like Canada need be ashamed if he has to come before parliament and acknowledge that he is increasing the public debt. That ought to be the normal condition in a young country like ours, with vast resources to develop, with improvements all around us waiting to be done, and with courageous men ready to do them ; but happily we are relieved from any such necessity. The following shows the net debt of the Dominion, beginning with the year 1896, and continuing down to the present date :

Reduction in eight years			1,084,993 66
Average reduction per year			135,624 20

Thus we shall have this happy statement to present to the public, that we have carried on the public affairs of this Dominion for a period of eight years, during which we have engaged in large ventures and great improvements ; we have spent money liberally, our hon. friends opposite sometimes say lavishly ; we have generously provided for all demands for the public improvement of the country ; and we shall be able at the close of the eight years to say that we have not added one dollar to the debt of Canada. On the contrary, from these figures we shall probably be able to show that there has been a reduction in the net debt during the eight years of $1,084,993.66, or an average yearly reduction in our eight years of $135,624.20, against an average yearly increase in the net debt in the preceding eighteen years of $6,563,075.

In these statements respecting the public debt, I am confining myself entirely to the actual operations of the government, and the affairs with which we have had ourselves to do—those for which we are responsible and for which we may take credit, if credit there be, or blame, if the reverse be the case. There is however an item in relation to the public debt which I have ignored here. It will be remembered that at an early stage of the session a question arose as to the relation of the adjustment of the accounts of the provinces with the Dominion to the public debt, and I asked the House to suspend judgment on that point, because I had formed the impression that the method of treating that account in its relation to the public debt was not correct. After fuller inquiry, I am satisfied that an erroneous view was taken as to the effect of that settlement on the public debt. I do not wish to enter fully into that matter to-day. Later, however, I shall bring down a memorandum from the officers of my department showing the position of the accounts. The question however arises, I may say, out of the appropriations made in 1884 by the parliament of Canada as allowances to the various provinces. Certain sums were set apart to the credit of each province, and while, as respects most of the provinces, these sums were immediately carried into the debt of the Dominion, in the cases of Ontario and Quebec they were dealt with in another form. They were not entered up as part of the debt but treated in another way to produce the same result, but I think it would have been more correct, as a matter of book-keeping, to have dealt with them as we did in the case of the other provinces. There has been from time to time discussion as to whether these sums constituted a capital sum of money belonging to each of these provinces, or whether they simply created an annuity. I have always considered that these sums were capital placed to the credit of the province of Ontario and Quebec, properly chargeable to the Dominion, and so long as they remain in the hands of the Dominion, of course they yield revenue to these provinces. It appears however that in the making up of the recent statement of affairs as between the Dominion and these provinces of Ontario and Quebec, the idea that these sums created an annuity ran into the minds of the officials. While they took into account the annuity or annual interest, they ignored the principal sum, and I am satisfied now that in a proper statement of the accounts, the best way would be to charge up that sum against the debt of the Dominion and credit whatever there is on the other side. However, I do not propose to dwell on that feature, but simply call attention to the erroneous view taken by the officials of the Finance Department, for which of course I am responsible, and by the Auditor General when these accounts were prepared.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this the matter which was discussed somewhat earlier in the session, about two months ago, and is the statement to which the right hon. gentleman refers the one he then promised to bring down ?

Mr. FIELDING. My deputy was absent in England and I stated that on his return I would have him investigate the matter and prepare a memorandum. He is doing so, and I will submit it to the House, though not perhaps in connection with the Budget, but I refer to it to show why I claim credit for less dimunition in the public debt last year than the public accounts show. In that respect the public accounts were in error, but the matter will be made right in the accounts of the present year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will see that it is brought down as soon as convenient. Two months have elapsed since the promise was made.

Mr. FIELDING. I have stated the substance more fully than I intended when I began. I am giving an explanation now almost as full as the one my deputy will be able to give in any memorandum he can make.

Mr. BELL. The matter, as it has been treated, would seem to decrease the public debt. As it is to be treated, will it have the effect of increasing the public debt ?

Mr. FIELDING. A certain sum, about $3,000,000, was found by the adjustment of accounts, to be payable by the provinces to the Dominion and was placed to the credit of the Dominion. The other item should have appeared on the other side of the accounts, but assuming it was an annuity, it was not treated as a principal sum. It will not materially disturb the figures I have given. I am confining my remarks to-day entirely to the operations of this government without reference to that item, which is a book-keeping entry relating to affairs of bygone years. In the statement we submitted we have drawn the line clearly between the reduction of debt brought about by our own operations and that which was assumed to be brought about through the operation of these accounts, so that the public accounts, while not strictly correct, in the matter, are correct in this respect, that we have drawn the line distinctly between the operations of this government and what is the result of a mere book-keeping entry. Whatever the result may be, it will have to be carried into the public accounts of the present year. The statement I have made deal with the income and expenditure of the government for the whole period of eight years and the result will be as I have said.

It will be interesting to have a statement showing how our interest account stands in view of this change in relation to the public debt. The manner of computing the interest on the public debt is by taking the gross receipts from our sinking fund and other investments. In 1896 the gross interest on our debt amounted to $10,502,429.90. Deducting from this the interest on sinking funds and other investments, amounting to $1,370,000.56, left a net amount of interest of $9,134,429.34. Following the figures down we find the following result :

—	Interest paid on Debt.	Interest on Sinking Funds and other Investments	Net amount of Interest.
1897.....	10,645,663 27	1,443,003 84	9,202,659 43
1898.....	10,516,757 90	1,513,654 58	9,003,103 32
1899.....	10,855,111 84	1,590,447 91	9,264,663 93
1900.....	10,699,645 20	1,683,050 51	9,016,594 69
1901.....	10,807,954 65	1,784,833 79	9,023,120 86
1902.....	10,975,935 15	1,892,224 09	9,083,711 06
1903.....	11,068,139 17	2,020,953 04	9,047,186 13

So that our net interest account for the year 1903 was $9,047,186.13 against $9,132,429.34 in 1896. Equally agreeable is a statement of the net debt per head.

Any statement of the general debt fails perhaps to convey a very adequate meaning to the mind unless we see what relation it bears to the ability of the country to pay it. As the country increases in population, we might have a considerable increase in debt without any increase in the burden, because the rate per head would not be advanced. The statement I am about to present differs a little from one of the same character which I presented on a former occasion, because the dates chosen are not the same I thought it well to have a statement showing the population on the same date as the debt is fixed, that is the 30th of June in each case. The census date was April. Take census figures for April and apply them to the debt of June 30 and you will lack some of the accuracy which is desirable. I have therefore had the statement of population made up in the Census Department as on the 30th of June of each year and of course the net debt statement is the 30th of June each year. The result is this, beginning with the year 1891 :

NET DEBT PER CAPITA.

" 1904	5,557,991	257,412,439	46 31

We are so near the end of the year 1904, that we can make the estimate closely, and we anticipate that on June 30, 1904, the net debt of Canada will stand at $46.31 as stated in the above table, as against $50.61 on the 30th June, 1896.

My hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) thinks that I have hardly been liberal enough in estimating the population of Canada to-day ; I have taken the figures as they have been furnished by the Census Department, thinking that was the best way.

During the past year we have had some loan operations, the nature of which should be stated to the House although they have been in part already communicated to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my hon. friend whether in his statement of interest on the public debt he takes into consideration temporary arrangements of overdue loans.

Mr. FIELDING. The interest on debt includes actual payments of all kinds for interest and of course that would include temporary loans.

On the 1st October, 1903, two of our sterling loans matured in London :

1. The Intercolonial guaranteed 4 per cent loan..	£1,500,000
2. 5 per cent Intercolonial unguaranteed loan..	500,000
	£2,000,000

The holders of these loans were paid in cash.

On the 1st November, 1903, the 4 per cent currency loan of 1883, which amounted to $2,781,000 on the 30th June, 1903, fell due in Canada. To the holders of this the government offered an extension for ten years at the rate of 3½ per cent. Advantage of this offer was taken by about one half of the holdings—$1,401,600—the balance being paid in cash.

On the 1st April, 1904, the 4 per cent Ruperts Land Guaranteed Loan of £300,000 fell due, and on the 1st May, 1904, the 4 per cent loan of 1874, of £4,000,000, matured.

The holders of the Ruperts Land Loan were paid off in cash and in the case of the 4 per cent loan of 1874 a portion of it, £2,500,000, was extended for three years at the same rate of interest, with the option to the holders at any time prior to 30th April, 1906, to convert their holdings into 3 per cent stock due 1st July, 1938, on a basis of £105 of the 3 per cent's for each £100 of the 4 per cent's. This would be the equivalent of a 3 per cent loan at about £95 4s. 9d.

While our buoyant revenues have enabled us to meet these liabilities to a very large extent we have not been able to meet them entirely. At the present time we have outstanding treasury bills to the extent of £1,000,000, and that is the only temporary indebtedness we have. The treasury bills now outstanding were negotiated as follows :

£400,000 due 6th October, 1904, at 3⅜ per cent.
£145,000 due 6th October, 1904, at 3½ per cent.
£400,000 due 7th November, 1904, at 3 per cent.
£55,000 due 7th November, 1904, at 2¾ per cent.

In the figures which I have given to the House, Sir, we have evidence of the general strength of the financial position of the Dominion, which I am sure will be equally gratifying to hon. members on both sides of the House. I shall submit to the House, as I have done on a previous occasion diagrams showing the growth of Canada's affairs from the year 1867 down to the present date. The eye sometimes receives these things more readily than the ear and these diagrams I trust, will be found useful. I shall not enter into detail in regard to them, but I shall state some of the principal evidences of our progress for periods of ten years.

These figures, which will be found in very much more detail in the diagrams which will be distributed, give very gratifying evidence of the great increase in trade and wealth which has taken place in Canada and of which hon. members on both sides of the House are, I am sure, equally proud. While the condition of the country generally has been good, we have reason to be particularly grateful for the splendid prosperity which has come to the great Northwest. All portions of our Dominion have equal demands upon us, and all portions are, I trust, receiving from the government and parliament their fair share of consideration ; but all portions have not equal inducements to offer to the immigrants who are seeking for homes. The vast territories of the Northwest offer inducements to the land hungry such as the eastern provinces cannot be expected to hold out, and naturally the efforts of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and the officers of his department are chiefly turned to the important duty of filling up the vacant lands of the Northwest. I wonder if we are able to appreciate the vast extent of land still available in these Territories. Canada is a country of such magnificent distances that sometimes it is difficult for us to understand and appreciate the vastness of that territory.

Dr. Wm. Saunders, of the Experimental Farm, in an admirable article in the April number of the 'Canadian Magazine,' has discussed the question of wheat-growing in Canada, and he has given some estimate of the available land in the Northwest Territories for that branch of farming. The figures that he gives are as follows :

	Acres.
Manitoba..	27,000,000
Assiniboia..	50,000,000
Saskatchewan..	52,000,000
Alberta	42,000,000
Total..	171,000,000

It is thus estimated—

Says Dr. Saunders,

—that there are within the limits referred to, after making allowance for lands unfit for agriculture, about 171,000,000 acres suitable for cultivation, by which is meant land of such degree of fertility as to admit of profitable farming.

Further on Dr. Saunders deals with the question of the ability of Canada to supply food for the mother country, and the statement he makes on that question—perhaps hon. gentlemen have had their attention already drawn to it—is well worthy of being repeated. It is headed in the publication I have mentioned, 'A Reasonable Prophecy' :

The total imports of wheat and flour into Great Britain in 1902 were equivalent in all to about 200,000,000 bushels of wheat. Were one-fourth of the land said to be suitable for cultivation in Manitoba and the three provisional territories under crop with wheat annually, and the average production equal to that of Manitoba for the past ten years, the total crop would be over 812,000,000 bushels. This would be ample to supply the home demand for 30,000,000 of inhabitants (supposing the population of Canada should by that time reach that figure) and meet the present requirements of Great Britain three times over. This estimate deals only with a portion of the west, and it leaves the large eastern provinces out of consideration altogether. From this it would seem to be quite possible that Canada may be in a position within comparatively few years, after supplying all home demands, to furnish Great Britain with all the wheat and flour she requires and leave a surplus for export to other countries. With a rural population on the western plains in 1902 of about 400,000, over 67,000,000 bushels of wheat were produced. Add to this the wheat grown in Ontario and the other eastern provinces and we already have a total of over 93,000,000 bushels. These figures are full of promise for the future of Canada as a great wheat-producing country.

It is natural to conclude that, with such a territory to offer to the people, all that is necessary is that its resources and character be made known, when it must attract people from all parts of the world. For a long time the hopes of the Canadian people with regard to the Northwest were hardly realized, although they had spent vast sums in opening up that territory, and every effort was made no doubt to bring people in. But for one cause or another, whatever it may have been, the rate of progress for some years was slow and unsatisfactory. But in recent years we have nothing to complain of on that score ; there has been a very gratifying increase in the influx of immigrants to that territory. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has spent money freely in advertising Canada, and the time has come when the Dominion is reaping a rich harvest, and when all will admit that the money he has expended for that purpose, and which, at one moment, some were disposed to look upon with doubt, is now bearing rich fruit for the building up of this Dominion. I find that the arrivals of immigrants into Canada during the past eight years appear as follows :

Years.	Number.
1896 (calendar)	16,835
1897 "	21,914
1898 "	31,900
1899 "	44,543

1902 "	67,379
1903 "	128,364
1903 (calendar)	134,370

The origin of these immigrants for the calendar year 1903 appears as follows :

British	50,141
Continental Europe	48,046
United States	46,183

We are glad to know that the immigration work continues actively during the present year, and no doubt at the end of the season a very gratifying story can be told.

Glance now for a moment at the extent to which homestead entries are being taken up :

1901	9,108
1902	22,215

As an evidence of the growth of that country, look now at the sales of land by railway companies who have had land grants, and by the Hudson Bay Company :

Last year, Mr. Speaker, we introduced, in connection with our tariff legislation, an important change, which we believed was rendered necessary for the defence of Canadian interests. We thought that one of the great nations of the world had not treated us as fairly as we ought to be treated, and in self defence we adopted what was called the German surtax. I have nothing now to add on that subject, except to call the attention of the House to the effect that that surtax has had upon trade between the two countries. Prior to the adoption of the surtax the imports from Germany to Canada were increasing ; under the operation of the surtax, not only has the increase been arrested, but there has been a very considerable diminution. For the ten months from the 1st of July, 1892, to the end of April, 1903, the total dutiable imports for consumption from Germany amounted to $8,648,600, while for the corresponding ten months of the current fiscal year they only amounted to $5,367,162—a falling off of $3,281,438, or a decline of 38 per cent. To illustrate in a concrete way the result of the surtax, the importations of raw sugar might properly be referred to. During the last fiscal year 174,000,000 pounds of this commodity were imported from Germany, but since the surtax was applied not a pound has been imported under it from Germany. All that trade has been diverted to the British West Indies, including British Guiana. The importations of raw sugar from the British West Indies, including British Guiana, for the ten months ending with April of the current fiscal year, amounted to 188,000,000 pounds. For the corresponding period of the previous year the imports from the British West Indies amounted to 46,515,355 pounds ; estimated from British Guiana, 23,000,000 pounds—in all, 69,000,000, as compared with 188,000,000 pounds for the same period of the current fiscal year. Statistics show that the surtax has resulted also in reducing the importations of woollens, cottons and silk goods, and articles of iron and steel. There is nothing new to be said on that question. We regret that we felt obliged to take that step, and we think that on the whole it has operated to the advantage of Canada, and it has certainly commanded the attention of the wide world. I think that the almost universal opinion has been that the action of the government of Canada was fully justified.

It is now seven years since we had a revision of the tariff. Some changes have been made, but nothing very material. That tariff, I venture to say, has on the whole proved most satisfactory. It has proved a good revenue tariff, as we are bound to conclude from the figures I have given to the House. It has included a considerable measure of incidental protection, and in that respect it will command the admiration perhaps of some hon. gentlemen opposite, who are more anxious for protection than some of us on this side of the House.

Mr. CLANCY. What an abomination that measure of protection is.

Mr. FIELDING. I think, Sir, as to whether or not it is adequate protection we have some evidence of a gratifying character that the tariff, without being excessive is high enough to bring some American industries across the line and a tariff which is able to bring these industries into Canada looks very much like a tariff which affords adequate protection. If my hon. friends opposite wish to see some of the good results of the tariff let them go up to the city of Hamilton and look at the vast industries which have been established there by American capitalists who have come across the line under the operation of this tariff, and who are now engaged in carrying on very large businesses. Let them go to the city of Toronto and they will find similar organizations of American capital starting in the manufacturing business. So, we are able to say that not only has the tariff been a great revenue tariff, but one which has afforded a reasonable degree of incidental protection and one which has brought about, as far as these industries is concerned, very gratifying results.

In our tariff of 1897 there was one new feature of great importance. I refer to the question of the British preference. The desirability of a preferential system between the mother country and the colonies of the empire had long been considered and long been recognized. On both sides of politics it was considered a desirable thing that there should be a preference as between the mother country and the colonies as far as possible. Colonial conferences met from time to time and passed resolutions in favour of such a system, but some how or other no progress seemed to be made. Why ? Because the proposal which was then made was one which Great Britain, at that time at all events, was not prepared to agree to. Hon. gentlemen opposite have differed from us to some extent on that question. They have argued—and I think that I do them no injustice when I say so—that we should not have granted that preference to Great Britain without obtaining a corresponding preference from the mother country. Our view was that no progress could be made along those lines We did not feel that it was possible to start the English people by any such methods. Looking at it from that point of view we felt that the true method for Canada to pursue was to make a start and await developments. In the speech which I had the privilege of making to parliament in introducing the preferential tariff, I used these words :

> Somebody must make a move in this matter, and we propose that Canada shall lead the way.

Now, Sir, looking back over the history of these eight years, I can fairly well say that in leading the way at that time on this great question Canada took a step which has had wide-reaching effect throughout the British empire. We have found that even in the portions of the empire where they have not yet been able to follow our example they have spoken with the warmest admiration of the course which Canada has pursued and they have recognized that in that step much was done for the development of the empire. But, we have not been without some material results. We think, that, even though Great Britain has not formally adopted the preference, good undoubtedly has come to us from the better relations which have prevailed in a business way between the mother country and Canada, and we feel that some advantage has come to us. We know that the great colony of New Zealand has adopted a similar preference and that it is now in operation. Some months ago a conference was held at Bloemfontein of the various colonies of South Africa. At that conference there were represented the various states of South Africa—Cape Colony, the Transvaal, Southern Rhodesia, the Orange Free State and Natal. They agreed to follow in principle the example of Canada, but it was necessary, however, for their various parliaments to take action in carrying out that principle. We now know that recently action has been taken by these colonies and that on the first day of July next the principle of the preference will be adopted throughout all the South African colonies. Whether or not this preference will in all respects be exactly adapted to our conditions is a matter to be considered hereafter. All I am claiming now is that when Canada led the way in 1897 she was leading in a movement which was destined to be of vast importance to our imperial interests everywhere throughout the world. But, perhaps, the greatest change that has come, has been brought about in the mother country itself. We quite realized in 1897 that it was too much to expect the British people to immediately adopt a policy which many of them regarded as at variance with the traditional policy of Great Britain. But, what have we found in recent years? For a long time the movement seemed to make little or no progress. Everybody in England admired the action of Canada, but there was no movement towards reciprocity until the matter was taken up by that very able public man, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. It is a curious fact that at the opening of the colonial conference in 1892 Mr. Chamberlain made a speech in which he rather minimized the value of the Canadian preference. We had a strong hope that before the conference ended and after he had had an opportunity of studying the question more fully his views in that respect would be modified. Of course, the proceedings of the conference were not made public. The public received Mr. Chamberlain's initial speech in which he rather minimized the effect and value of the preference, but they did not receive the discussions which occurred. My belief is that as a result of all the discussions which took place Mr. Chamberlain at the end of the conference found himself enthusiastically in favour of the preferential idea and determined if possible to carry it out. We know what followed. After the matter was discussed at the colonial conference and after the lapse of a few months, Mr. Chamberlain publicly announced his determination if possible to bring about such a policy for the mother country. For that purpose he left the administration and conducted a series of remarkable meetings throughout the country. We have found ourselves in this position in regard to the question that the matter has now become one of party controversy in the mother country. It is unfortunate that it is so. It is not so with us in Canada. We may differ in detail, but I think I am justified in saying, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will not find fault with me in saying, that practically the two great political parties in Canada are a unit to-day in favour of the principle of preferential trade. Though they may differ as to particular items of detail or as to the best method of bringing it about, there is practically no difference in Canada. But, there is a very great difference in the mother country and it has become a matter of party controversy. We find to-day in England that the Liberal party is practically united in favour of what they call the free trade policy and they regard a preference in England as at variance with the free trade idea. In the Conservative party there are very many advocates of the preferential system, but it appears to have been agreed to on both sides now that the matter should be laid aside for the present. Although there may be details in Mr. Chamberlain's plan which we are not called upon to deal with, and which we do not know to-day how we can deal with, inasmuch as he has practically taken up the Canadian policy, adopted it and recommended it to the British empire, to that extent we are heartily in accord with Mr. Chamberlain. Whether or not on all details we can agree with him or what his ideas may be in other matters, these are subjects which are frequently discussed, but which we are not called upon to deal with. I do not anticipate that in the early future there will be any change in the attitude of the mother country on that question. I anticipate that for a while, although the question will be discussed here and there, it will not be as warmly advocated, it will not be such a public issue as it was a few months ago. But, let there be no mistake in that respect. A question of that character which has an imperial side to it, and a question which enlists the warm and enthusiastic support of a man of such ability and force of character as Mr. Chamberlain, is certainly not going to remain a dead letter although in the early future we cannot expect any great results from the movement. What should be our own action in the matter? We may be influenced in our own preferential policy by what may occur in the mother country in the hereafter. We shall claim a free hand in that respect, but for the the present we think it is wise policy to adhere to the preferential system, in the hope that it may be adopted more generally throughout the empire, and that by and by a better understanding may be come to in the mother country and that it will be adopted there as well. It has been sometimes said that Canada should take some further action in endorsing that principle. I do not think we are called upon to take any step beyond that which we have already taken. The attitude of Canada has been clearly laid down at the colonial conference, and while every phase of the government policy has been discussed in this House there has been practically no exception taken to the position assumed by the government at that conference on the question of preferential trade. Now that the matter has become one of party controversy in England, we naturally hesitate to take an active part in it. We are free to say what we think is best for Canada; we are even free to say that we think this system of preference is capable of doing good to the empire. But when we know the matter has become one of party strife in Great Britain, I think it would be unseemly on our part if we were to attempt to throw ourselves between the two political parties over there, and take any active part in the movement. We must be content with stating our position, as it has been stated in the past. We on this side of the House accept the principle of preferential trade. We believe that, while differing in some details, hon. gentlemen opposite will not differ from us on the principle, and therefore we say to the English people that Canada is practically a unit in support of the principle of preferential trade. We must be content to leave the matter at that for the present.

We have some tariff changes to propose this session, but we have no intention of making any extensive tariff revision. Many items in the tariff, I might be almost justified in saying that almost every item in the tariff, bears a relation to some other item, and it becomes necessary to have a very careful inquiry before any detailed revision be undertaken. Before the last revision of the tariff, a commisison composed of members of the administration held a very extensive and thorough inquiry among the business men of the country; all interests were heard and I am sure much valuable information was obtained. Before we could attempt to deal with all the details of the tariff, it will probably be the part of wisdom to have that commission or some such body make some such inquiry. The ministers in one way or another will have to make a thorough investigation before any detailed tariff revision can be undertaken.

But, while we may not be prepared to deal with the details now, there is no reason why we cannot foreshadow the lines upon which the tariff revision might take place. We have to-day practically three tariffs. We have the British preference, we have our general tariff and we have the German surtax. I think it would be found wise in any revision of the tariff that may take place, to continue these distinctions, and to perhaps deal with them more in detail. I think it would be the part of wisdom that we should still have separate tariffs to apply to separate countries, in order that we may be able to deal fairly with the countries that want to trade with us, and to deal less generously with those countries which pursue a somewhat hostile course towards us. We have to-day practically a maximum and a minimum tariff if I may so describe it, and then we have the British preference below that again. It would be well that in the revision that may take place, we should adopt that principle as it now exists and deal with it more in detail. I think it would be well for us to have a maximum general tariff and a minimum general tariff, and the British preference below that as we have it to-day. The maximum tariff would only be applied to those countries which pursue, if I may so call it, a hostile policy—I do not mean to say that they have any hostility to us, but simply that in the carrying out of their own affairs they adopt a trade policy which discourages trade with us. In that case, they cannot complain if we have a maximum tariff, and though we should guard against having an extreme tariff, we would be justified in saying that this tariff should be materially higher than the tariff which we are prepared to extend to other countries which are willing to trade with us on fair and reasonable terms. The minimum general tariff, which would correspond to the general tariff to-day, would apply to such countries as do not legislate commercially in a spirit of hostility to us—perhaps that is not happily expressed; let me say, to countries that adopt more moderate tariff views; low tariff countries. Of course where there are favoured nation treaties in existence they have to be considered, but the principal nations which to-day adopt a high tariff policy have not any favoured nation arrangement, and therefore I think our hands will be free in that respect. So, we would have a maximum tariff as we have the German tariff to-day, to apply to such countries as do not manifest a disposition to trade with us. We would have a minimum general tariff to apply to countries that are disposed to trade with us, and then below that we would have the British preferential tariff to apply to the mother country and to such colonies of the empire as it may be expedient to extend the benefit of that tariff to. I think, Sir, that on this line, guarding carefully against extortionate duties, but also making a distinction between the countries which wish to trade with us and the countries that do not wish to trade with us, I think we can devise a tariff which will be in all its details fairly satisfactory to the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether I quite follow the hon. gentleman. Is it his suggestion that we should apply a higher tariff to other countries which have high tariffs against us, although they may treat us exactly in the same way they treat all other countries.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I think we should do that. Although, if there be special cases of countries which treat us with exceptional unfairness, we would still have to deal with them by special legislation as we have done in the past.

One advantage which we might derive from the treatment of the question as I have suggested, is, that we could deal with separate articles. Very often a general rule will work out some disadvantages when applied. Under our present system, our British preference is one-third off everything, and there may be cases in which that works unequally. There may be cases in which we could afford the one-third off; there may be cases in which we can afford more than one-third off. There would consequently be some advantage to us in having in our tariff columns a maximum general tariff, a minimum general tariff and a preferential tariff; with each individual item stating in each case what the preference should be, and what the difference is to be. This would strike me as being the line upon which a tariff revision might properly be undertaken.

But, Sir, though we speak of that as an outline of the method by which there might be a detailed tariff change, we have to consider the question of things as they are to-day. We desire to deal with certain things as they present themselves to us to-day; we desire to deal with matters of urgency, reserving the question of a more general and more detailed tariff revision until an early date—I would say hopefully next session, but at all events as soon as a proper inquiry can be made.

As I said, we propose to deal with some articles to-day. One of the first matters to which I wish to make reference is the wool industry. Very much of the criticism of the tariff respecting the wool industry, is, I am inclined to think, unjustified. What I mean is that as respects some of these industries no amount of tariff could save them from trouble. From the information I have received, I may say that in every one of these industries there has not been the perfection of management which is necessary in these days of keen competition. I am afraid that they are not all equipped with the most modern machinery; I am afraid that they have not all put themselves in a condition which would enable them to fully enjoy the benefits which the tariff already holds out to them. But, while there may be cases of that kind—and my information is that there are such cases—still the representations that have been made to us lead us to the belief that the woollen industry is suffering severely from competition, and we propose to deal by a special item in our tariff with that industry.

The complaint is made very largely by our woollen manufacturers and by various public men who sympathize with them that although on the better grades of goods they can fairly compete with all persons, even the British manufacturer, a very large proportion of the imports of British woollen goods coming into Canada are really shoddy, goods of an inferior character, against which we ought to legislate; and it is alleged that any increase which we might make in the woollen duties would have the effect of shutting out, not the purer woollen goods, but the shoddy goods. That is argued with much force, and I am inclined to believe that there is something in it. However, we propose to deal with the matter in this way. Our present duty on the class of goods which I may describe as cloths, tweeds, overcoatings, wearing apparel, and goods of that character, is 35 per cent, subject to the preference, which brings the duty on British goods down to 23⅓ per cent. We do not propose to increase the general tariff, but we propose to put a limit on the extent to which the preference shall apply to these goods. We propose to fix a minimum tariff of 30 per cent on this class of goods coming in under the preferential tariff. This change will apply to all woollen goods mentioned in the tariff item 394, with the exception of blankets, flannels, bed comforters and counterpanes, which are placed in a group by themselves.

We deal in a similar manner with the item of twine and cordage. These goods to-day are subject to a 25 per cent tariff, subject to the deduction under the British preference, which brings the rate of duty down to 16⅔ per cent. This is a lower rate of duty than even the most moderate tariff man usually is willing to impose, and we propose to fix a minimum duty of 20 per cent ad valorem, on that class of goods coming in under the British preference. That refers to twine and cordage, but does not touch the privilege already granted to fishermen, and does not touch binder twine.

While in the items I have mentioned the degree of preference we have been giving may work inconveniently, and it may be convenient to grant a less preference than one-third, in other items it may be equally convenient to grant more preference.

On table ware of china, porcelain or other clay, the duty at present is 30 per cent, with one-third off when imported from Great Britain, bringing it down to 20 per cent. We propose to reduce this to 15 per cent, so that in that case the British preference instead of being one-third will be one-half.

We deal in like manner with window glass, the duty on which at present is 20 per cent, with one-third off when imported from Great Britain. We propose that the duty on window glass imported from Great Britain shall be reduced to 7½ per cent. In these two cases the preference to Great Britain is increased, in the case of the woollens it is decreased.

In item 330, schedule A, there is a group of articles from which we want to strike out pails and tubs of wood. The effect of that is to throw them into the general classification of wooden goods, so that they will be dutiable at 25 per cent instead of 20 per cent, as they now are.

In item 323 of schedule A we propose to add a qualification. The item refers to the duties on carriages. We propose to put a minimum value of $40 on an open buggy and a minimum value of $50 on a covered buggy.

We propose to insert in the list of prohibited goods an item to exclude stallions and mares of less value than $50 each.

In item 203 of schedule A we deal with the duties on glass imported in certain conditions. At present there are three rates on that class of goods. I am referring to glass bevelled or to be bevelled, and used by manufacturers. The rates at present are 25 per cent and 35 per cent on different grades. We propose to make another rate of 10 per cent, which will apply to glass panes not exceeding 7 square feet, such as are imported for use in the manufacture of mirrors. As the matter stands now, it has been shown to our satisfaction that the manufacturer of these goods suffers competition under the British preference, but cannot import the raw material under it. The British manufacturers of these goods are few in number, and will not sell them for export in the condition desired by our manufacturers. They prefer to send them out in the form of the finished product. The result is that the manufacturer in Canada has to import his raw material from foreign countries under the full tariff and to compete with the finished article imported from Great Britain under the preference.

I suppose that during the various discussions of the tariff question no item has been more fully debated in this House and outside than that of the duty on oil. Oil, of course, is an article of universal consumption. Even in the cities and towns it is the light of the poorer classes, while in the rural districts it is the light of everybody. It is not surprising therefore that frequent reference is made to the duty on that article and frequent motions have come from both sides of this House looking to the repeal of the duty. From the consumer's point of view merely it might seem reasonable enough to repeal the duty on oil, but there is another side to the question, and those charged with the responsibility of dealing with this matter—not merely the members of the government, but members of parliament who have given it attention—have to recognize that the oil industry has a fair claim on our consideration, and if the repeal of the duty were to wipe out the oil industry in Canada, I am sure that no person on either side of the House would desire to see such a result. What we desire to do is to bring about a reduction in the duties on oil, in such a way that the consumers shall have cheaper oil, and that no injustice shall be done to the oil industry, but that it shall have as fair a chance as others. There are two divisions of the oil industry. Sometimes this is not understood. Sometimes there is an impression that the only people interested in the oil industry are some one company, like the Standard Oil Company, which is supposed to control the principal oil refinery at Sarnia, the local name of which is the Imperial Oil Company. But there are two interests to be considered in the oil industry—the interest of the oil producer and the interest of the oil refiner. They are not always the same. The oil refiners are sometimes also owners of wells, but there are many hundreds of owners in Canada of oil wells who have no interest whatever in the refineries. They are simply producers of crude oil. So we have to consider under what tariff the refining industry may still be conducted in Canada, and under what conditions the production of crude oil may be continued. The situation has been made more difficult by the fact that the crude oil industry in recent years seems to be waning. Unfortunately, the production of crude oil of late years has not increased. No doubt when the duties were established many years ago the idea was that the production of crude oil would increase, and we would ultimately be able to supply our own requirements. But that has not happened. For some years the production of crude oil has been diminishing, and, though we have large refineries in Canada, they are really working but a part of their capacity. The question is, on what conditions we can provide sufficient crude oil to give employment to the refiners, and, at the same time, deal fairly and generously with the people who have invested their money in the industry of producing crude oil. The method on which we have determined is to aid the crude oil industry by a bounty. We will allow a bounty of 1½ cent per gallon to the producers of crude oil in the Dominion. That will not be a heavy burden on the treasury. I shall make a comparison between what we give in that way and what the people will receive in another way. The duty on refined petroleum a few years ago, when this government came into power, was 6 cents per gallon and was reduced to 5. We propose to cut the present duty in two, and make the duty on coal oil 2½ cents per gallon. That will be a reduction of 50 per cent on the oil duty, as it now stands, and 58 per cent on the oil duty as it stood when this government came into power. Let us see how this will affect the people in a financial way. The consumption of refined oil and naphtha in Canada for the calendar year 1903 was as follows :

	Gallons.
Canadian oil..	7,755,790
American..	17,999,660
Total..	25,755,450

gallons refined oil consumed by the people of Canada last year. It is only reasonable to suppose that the 5 cents duty increases the cost of the home produced article as well as of the imported article. If, therefore, we reduce the duty 2½ cents per gallon, that reduction, so far as the consumer is concerned, applies practically, not only to the 17,000,000 or 18,000,000 imported, but would, of course, bring down the price of the Canadian article to the same extent.

Mr. HENDERSON. Theoretically.

Mr. FIELDING. Not only theoretically, but absolutely certain, because if the price comes down in the one and not in the other, the other will not be consumed, so that the effect of this reduction will be an immediate reduction in the price of oil at the refineries in Canada, and from the refiner to the various distributing companies, and from these to the shop-keepers, and in due season it will reach the consumer. If it be true that the consumer pays the duty, I presume he will pay this as well as others, and there is not much doubt that the consumer pays an increased price, under the present system, not only on the imported oil, but on the Canadian as well. We have a consumption in Canada of 25,755,450 gallons. The saving to the people of 2½ cents per gallon on that quantity will amount to $643,886. We will pay a bounty only on the crude oil produced in Canada, which amounted last year to 16,852,640 gallons. Observe that the bounty being paid only on the Canadian crude will apply only to a limited quantity, whereas the reduction of price will apply to the whole consumption, whether Canadian or American. We find then the saving to the people by this policy of $643,886 in the shape of reduced price on oil. On the other side of the account, the people will pay out, through the treasury, $225,789 in the way of bounties. Deducting the amount which the people will pay from the sum which they will receive, there is a net gain to the consumer on the year's operations of $390,097. Besides, the people will receive further advantages by having fuel oil placed on the free list, and that is an important item to manufacturers who use oil as a fuel. There will be a further advantage in a reduction of the duties on all the products of petroleum. Thus, paraffin wax candles are reduced from 30 per cent to 25 per cent ad valorem, and paraffin wax is also reduced from 30 per cent to 25 per cent ad valorem. Illuminating oils of the highest grades are reduced from 25 per cent to 20 per cent ad valorem. Crude petroleum of the highest character, the duty on which is now 2½ cents per gallon, will be reduced to 1½ cents per gallon, while petroleum in the cruder forms will be on the free list.

Mr. OSLER. Will oil used by gas companies for the manufacture of gas be on the free list ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, except in the higher grades. If advanced in its manufacture it will not be on the free list, but will pay 1½ cents per gallon instead of 2½. In the cruder form it will be free. In these we have given very large reductions. We propose to abolish also the duty on molasses, but only when imported from countries entitled to the preference, that is to say, molasses from the British West Indies. That is now dutiable at 1¾ cents per gallon, and we put it on the free list, believing we will thus not only encourage trade with the British West Indies, but reduce the price materially of an article much used by the working classes.

We propose to transfer to the free list a number of articles which I have not yet mentioned, some of which are not very important in themselves, but have importance in relation to the industries with which they may be connected. We were asked to place goats on the free list of animals imported for the improvement of stock, and this we propose. We were asked to put whale oil soap on the free list, because it is an article much used by nurserymen, and we are agreeing to that. We were asked to put on the free list hydro-fluo-silicic acid, used largely by miners in their smelting and mining operations, and we have decided to comply with that request. We have also put on the free list what is known as plain basic photographic paper, baryta coated, for albumenizing or sensitizing, used by photographers. We also propose to admit free glass of certain sizes for the making of dry plates for photographic purposes. The paper is at present charged 35 per cent duty and the glass 20 per cent. Neither of these articles is made in Canada, and we have reason to think that by placing these articles on the free list we can bring into Canada a very large and important industry. We shall lose no revenue on it, because it is not a large item, but our expectation is that by transferring this to the free list we will bring into Canada a very important industry.

We have been asked to put on the free list also for the benefit of the farming population, what are known as ferment cultures for use in butter making, and this we propose to do.

We propose that printing presses, not made in Canada, at present paying 10 per cent, shall be made free.

We propose that machinery of a kind not made in Canada, when imported for the manufacture of linen shall be made free. We have reason to believe that in this way we can encourage the development of the flax industry in Canada.

We propose that machinery of a kind or class not made in Canada for the manufacture of certain classes of brass goods shall be placed on the free list. The goods which these machines will make are at present on the free list and we propose to assist the manufacturers by giving them free machinery.

We propose also to include on the free list, at the request of the dentists of the country, artificial teeth.

We propose to put on the free list, at the request of the farmers of the country, quassia juice which is used in spraying.

We propose also to place on the free list, crude petroleum, fuel and gas oils, 40 Beaume gravity or less at 60° temperature, .8233 specific gravity.

We propose to put on the free list well-drilling machinery and apparatus of a class or kind not made in Canada for drilling for water or oil: this is not to include motive power.

We made provision last year for the placing on the free list of certain machinery of a kind not made in Canada for use exclusively in alluvial gold mining for one year; we propose to extend that for one year.

There are one or two changes which do not affect the duties but relate solely to the administration of the department. In item 608 we propose to strike out all the words after the 'United Kingdom' in the third line. The item refers to the importation of tea. It now requires that there shall be an English certificate as to the character of the tea. We are advised that this certificate is of no substantial value, but imposes some charge upon our importers, and our own Customs regulations for the examining of tea are ample. We therefore propose to strike out the requirement for the English certificate.

There is an amendment to the item in the tariff respecting the duty on spirits. It does not, however relate to the rate of duty in any way; it is simply a matter in the administration of the department, an amendment to the form of the item, and therefore I shall pass it over.

Item 462 of Schedule 'B,' that is, on the free list, related to philosophical apparatus, for the use of universities, schools, &c. We repeal that item, and re-enact it in a larger and more ample form as follows:

462. Philosophical and scientific apparatus, utensils, instruments, and preparations, including boxes and bottles containing the same, of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada, when specially imported in good faith for the use and by order of any society or institution incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific or literary purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use or by order of any college, academy, school, or seminary of learning in Canada, and not for sale, subject to such regulations as the Minister of Customs shall prescribe.

We have had some representations from the manufacturers of neckwear who have made it clear that they suffer some disadvantage, very much of the same nature as that which I have mentioned in connection with certain classes of imports, that is to say that the finished article comes in under the British preference while they are obliged to get the raw material from countries to which the British preference does not apply. We therefore propose to provide a special rate of 10 per cent for silk fabrics when imported by manufacturers of men's neckwear for use in their factories under regulations to be made by the Minister of Customs.

I have now given you, Sir, a statement of all the details wherein we propose to change the tariff. But we have some further proposals to make which although they may not relate to details are of the utmost importance. As time rolls on, changing conditions arise, and it is the duty of the government and of all men in parliament to observe these changing conditions and adapt their tariff legislation to the conditions which may confront us. In the world's trade, many new conditions have grown up, and we are particularly interested in the conditions which have arisen in the great high tariff countries. We cannot meet these by mere academic discussions of the principles of free trade or protection. Mr. Cleveland, on a memorable occasion, used an expression which is very frequently quoted, 'It is a condition and not a theory which confronts us.' We recognize that fact in tariff matters as in many other matters, and we say that many new conditions have arisen and are arising of which we are obliged to take notice. In low tariff countries or in free trade countries, Great Britain for example, these disturbing conditions seldom exist. England conducts her business generally upon rational lines. She sells at a profit, and what is known as the system of dumping or slaughtering is hardly known in connection with British trade. But, Sir, in the case of all high tariff countries these objectionable conditions arise. It seems to be the inevitable result of high tariff policy that monopolies, trusts and combines will flourish. They may possibly exist in low tariff countries, but they flourish under a high tariff policy as they could not possibly flourish under other conditions. We find to-day that the high tariff countries have adopted that method of trade which has now come to be known as slaughtering, or perhaps the word more frequently used is dumping; that is to say, that the trust or combine, having obtained command and control of its own market and finding that it will have a surplus of goods, sets out to obtain command of a neighbouring market, and for the purpose of obtaining control of a neighbouring market will put aside all reasonable considerations with regard to the cost or fair price of the goods; the only principle recognized is that the goods must be sold and the market obtained. I quite realize that what I may call the extreme free-trader, that is the theoretical free trader, if there be such a man, who attaches more importance to a theory than to the practical things of this life, may ask: 'Why should we care about that; do we not get the benefit of cheap goods? Well, if we could be guaranteed for ever or for a long period that we would obtain cheap goods under that system the question would be a very fair one. If these trusts and combines in the high tariff countries would come under obligations, with sufficient bonds, to supply us with these goods at the lowest prices for the next 50 years, it would probably be the part of wisdom for us to close up some of our industries and turn the energies of our people to other branches. But surely none of us imagine that when these high tariff trusts and combines send goods into Canada at sacrifice prices they do it for any benevolent purpose. They are not worrying about the good of the people of Canada. They send the goods here with the hope and the expectation that they will crush out the native Canadian industries. And with the Canadian industry crushed out what would happen? The end of cheapness would come, and the beginning of dearness would be at hand. Artificial cheapness obtained to-day under such conditions, at the expense of dearness at a very near day in the future, is not a system of which we could approve or which any of us on either side of the House could encourage. This dumping then is an evil and we propose to deal with it. Perhaps it would not be too much to say that ninety per cent of the complaints that are made to us by our manufacturers are not that the tariff is too low, speaking generally, but that this dumping and slaughtering condition exists, and that the tariff under such conditions fails to give them the protection they would desire. Well, if ninety per cent of these grievances result from dumping, we shall be prepared to deal with it to-day. We think it is in the interest of legitimate trade that this question should be dealt with. It is not the first time that Canada has set an example in matters of this kind and possibly the step we are about to take will be followed by other countries. Our friends on the other side of the House will recognize this dumping evil as fully as and perhaps more fully than even gentlemen on this side of the House. We differ from them as to the manner in which it should be dealt with. Their remedy is a general increase of the tariff all along the line. Perhaps they would not go quite so far as to increase all duties, but that is the principle they suggest. A high tariff is their remedy for this evil. We object to that because we think it is unscientific. The dumping condition is not a permanent condition, it is a temporary condition and therefore it needs only a temporary remedy, that can be applied whenever the necessity for it arises.

We propose therefore to impose a special duty upon dumped goods. That special duty, subject to a limitation which I will mention, will be the difference between the price at which the goods are sold, the sacrifice price, and the fair market value of those goods as established under the customs law of the country. But this is subject to a qualification, they are subject to a limitation. If an article is sold at a lower price in Canada than it is sold in the country of production, then that will be the evidence of dumping, and the difference between the fair market value in the country of production and the price at which it is sold—or if hon. gentlemen prefer, dumped—that difference shall constitute the special duty, within the limitations. As regards certain articles upon which our duties are low and upon which we grant protection in the form of bounties as well as in the form of duties, as respects certain of these items in the iron schedule chiefly, the limitation shall be 15 per cent ad valorem; that is to say, that special duty shall be the difference between the fair price and the dumping price provided it shall not exceed 15 per cent ad valorem. The additional duty over and above the present duty I call the special duty, and it is so called in our resolutions. Then in case of other articles, the limit is 50 per cent of the present duty. It is a duty over and above the existing duty, and it is limited by these two conditions: In one case, or in a few cases of like character, the limitation is that it shall not exceed 15 per cent, and in the other case it shall not exceed one-half of the duty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman state what the law is now? I thought there was some provision as to charging a duty upon the regular price in the foreign country. I am not familiar with that, and I only ask for information.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be glad to explain to the hon. gentleman the difference between the present law and what we propose. There is a provision in the existing law that where there is an undervaluation you can levy duty upon the true valuation. Suppose, for illustration, that an article of which the true value is $100 is entered at $80, you can impose the duty on the whole $100. You get therefore an extra duty in that case, if you care to look at it in that way, to the extent of the rate of duty on the difference in value. In what we propose, you get the whole difference itself. If the article is sold at $80 and if the fair market value is $100, under the law as it stands to-day you get your duty of say 30 per cent on that extra $20. Under what we now propose you not only get the duty on the full one hundred dollars, but an extra duty, which means the $20 itself, subject to the limitation that it shall not be greater than one-half of the duty. Thus, if the duty is 30 per cent, the extra duty, or the special duty as I describe it, cannot exceed 15 per cent, and the whole duty could not exceed 45 per cent. The principle is that we will impose as a special duty the difference between the true value and the unfair value. But we put a limitation on that, as limitations are put upon all forms of taxation. Our information is that the average of dumping in Canada represents about 15 per cent. There are some cases in which the dumping may be more and some in which it may be less ; but from the best information we can obtain we think that the dumping averages a cut price, an unfair price, an illegitimate price, to the extent of about 15 per cent. With the limitation that we are putting on, it is a special duty corresponding with what we believe to be the average amount of dumping. I may say there is also a special clause with regard to a possible evasion of the provision by the consignee of the goods. Under the first clause of the resolutions we empower the Minister of Customs or the collector of customs, or any other officer—my hon. friend the Minister of Customs suggests that I had better read the provision so that it may go on the 'Hansard' at once :

That whenever it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Minister of Customs or of any officer of customs authorized to collect customs duties, that the export price or the actual selling price to the importer in Canada of any imported dutiable article, of a class or kind made or produced in Canada, is less than the fair market value thereof, as determined according to the basis of value for duty provided in the Customs Act in respect of imported goods subject to an ad valorem duty, such article shall, in addition to the duty otherwise established, be subject to a special duty of customs equal to the difference between such fair market value and said selling price : provided, however, that the special customs duty on any article shall not exceed one-half of the customs duty otherwise established in respect of the article, except in regard to the articles mentioned in items 224, 226, 228 and 231 of schedule A, the special duty of customs on which shall not exceed fifteen per cent ad valorem.

The expression 'export price' or 'selling price' herein shall be held to mean and include the exporter's price for the goods, exclusive of all charges thereon after their shipment from the place whence exported directly to Canada.

The foregoing provisions respecting a special duty of customs shall apply to imported round rolled wire rods not over three-eighths of an inch in diameter, notwithstanding that such rods are on the customs free list : provided, however, that the special duty of customs on such wire rods shall not exceed fifteen per cent ad valorem.

I have mentioned that there might be an attempt to evade the effect of these provisions through what is called a system of consigning goods, that is to say, the manufacturer would not actually sell his goods but he would consign them perhaps to himself or to an agent in Canada. He would comply for a moment with the conditions of the customs law, and then later on the dumping process might be completed. It is thought well to guard against such a contingency from the beginning ; so while we propose in the first clause that the customs officer shall have the power of levying this extra duty to which I refer, we have a special clause to provide that if there be any attempt to evade these duties by the method of consigning the goods, there may be an inquiry, and the Minister of Customs may be authorized to deal with these as the circumstances may require. That clause reads as follows :

If at any time it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, on a report from the Minister of Customs, that the payment of the special duty herein provided for is being evaded by the shipment of goods on consignment without sale prior to such shipment, the Governor in Council may in any case or class of cases authorize such action as is deemed necessary to collect on such goods or any of them the same special duty as if the goods had been sold to an importer in Canada prior to their shipment to Canada.

If the full amount of any special duty of customs be not paid on goods imported, the customs entry thereof shall be amended and the deficiency paid upon the demand of the collector of customs.

Provision is made that regulations concerning that matter may be made by the Minister of Customs, and there is a clause providing that it shall not apply to articles subject to excise duty, because they do not properly come under the conditions to which I am calling attention.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that subject I would like him to answer this question. Supposing an importer goes into the States and buys goods, say $100 worth, for $75. He enters them for customs duty in Canada at $100. He has bought these goods at $75, we will say, or $50. How are you going to reach that case ?

Mr. FIELDING. In that case we will inquire what is the ordinary selling price in the United States for the consumer in the United States. The ordinary selling price in the United States will demand the true value, and the $75 that he pays will be deemed the sacrifice value, and we will tax him on $25 up to the limit I have mentioned, not exceeding one-half the existing duty.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister does not understand me. The importer has bought those goods at a proper price, at one-half the value in the United States. How are you to know that he has purchased them at that price when he enters them here at their full value ?

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose no system we could possibly devise would not be open to some criticism. There are a thousand things in the Customs Department about which these questions might be asked, but we find the Minister of Customs and his officials have ways of discovering these things. I do not imagine that a clause of this character can be administered without some difficulty, but that is no reason why the clause should not be enacted.

I have now presented to the House all the provisions which we propose to make in relation to the tariff. The tariff is a delicate and complicated piece of machinery which requires careful handling. It would be very easy by rash and ill-considered changes to create a serious disturbance in the business affairs of the country. We believe that in the changes we have made, we have dealt with the matters of greatest urgency. We believe that we have gone far to meet the legitimate demands which have been presented to us for revision of the tariff. As respects the other articles in the tariff with which we have not dealt, and of course there are a great many, all I can say is that we do not claim for a moment that the tariff is perfect, but we do say that before we should enter upon a policy of numerous changes, there should be a careful inquiry and that inquiry we are prepared to make so that if there are inequalities or other defects in the tariff we shall be able to remedy them in due course.

Mr. BELL. In what way is it intended to make the surtax operative ?

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend refer to the special duty that I am speaking of ?

Mr. BELL. No, I do not refer to that, but to the general tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. We have made no change regarding the surtax. It remains as it is at present.

Mr. BELL. That is the German surtax ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BELL. But I understand that the hon. minister stated that he is going to have a maximum tariff imposed on certain imports, maximum tariff and a general tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. No ; I said that in the working out of the general revision of the tariff to take place later, I thought it would be well to set forth each individual item and set forth the difference in rates which we might see fit to establish. In that case there would be a maximum general tariff, a minimum general and British preference. But, that does not refer to any thing that is to be done at the present time. It is simply an indication of the lines upon which we should proceed in regard to the fuller revision of the tariff. As to how we shall deal with the surtax that will depend on what the state of matters may be at the time. If there be a special state of things we shall have to get special legislation concerning it.

Mr. BELL. I thought that in the earlier part of my hon. friend's speech in which he was referring to the tariff, he stated that he was about to adopt practically what would be a maximum, a minimum and a regular tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. No, that all refers to the manner in which the detailed revision of the tariff will be brought about later. It had no reference to anything we propose to-day. We have practically that system to-day because, we have the German surtax, the general tariff and the British Preferential tariff. The change that I was suggesting was that it would be well to set these forth in separate columns, dealing with each item separately. I have submitted to the House all that the government have to propose on this great question. We quite realize the difficulties connected with tariff changes ; we quite realize the difficulties which business men experience in regard to the tariff ; and while we have been willing to consider all reasonable requests, while we have been anxious to meet the legitimate demands for changes we have always had a strong opinion that there was a great deal of merit in a policy of tariff stability. I have met many manufacturers, who, while they wanted some particular change, frankly said that rather than go into any broad changes in the tariff policy, they would submit to what they considered a disadvantage for a little while longer, because they recognized that frequent tariff changes are not desired by business men. Our tariff has been in operation since 1897 with a very few changes. It would not be surprising if changed conditions should necessitate changes in the details of this tariff. We believe that in what we have proposed to-day we have met the most urgent matters which have been presented to us. We believe we have met to a very large extent the complaints which have been made by our manufacturers by the introduction of this policy in regard to dumping or slaughtering. We believe that in the form in which the tariff will stand when these amendments have been adopted, as I trust they will be by parliament, the tariff will be in a condition which will give general satisfaction to nearly all classes in this country, but as respects the items with which we have not dealt, we do not for a moment assume that the tariff is perfect. We admit that in a number of instances circumstances may have arisen under which, after proper investigation, it may be necessary to make further changes. We are prepared as I have said to make a careful inquiry into all these things, such a careful inquiry as every business man must desire should be made before such policy is introduced into this House. But, I think we are justified in saying that in the main, we have, by introducing and devising tariff measures to meet the conditions of the country, given a reasonable assurance to the country now and in the future that this government can be relied upon, while guarding against monopolies, trusts and combines, to give reasonable aid to the legitimate industries of the country, and to adopt a tariff policy which will not only be a policy for the benefit of the manufacturers, but a policy, which, while giving them all due consideration, will have regard also to the interests of every class and section of the people and of every province in this great Dominion.

I beg to move :

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, the speech of the Minister of Finance contains some information of a most important character; it has furnished some admissions which to us, on this side of the House, cannot fail to be agreeable. The Minister of Finance casually told us that Sir Charles Tupper had estimated that the reduction in postal rates would represent one million dollars, and the Finance Minister represented this as a lightening of the burdens of the people to the extent of $1,000,000 a year. It occurred to some of us on this side of the House, who have looked with surprise upon the consistent course followed by the Minister of Finance in rolling up large surpluses year after year; that the reduction of his surplus either for one year or for a succession of years, might prove a lightening of the burden of the people, because the money taken out of the people in customs duties is quite as much an exaction as is the money which they pay for their postage.

The Minister of Finance told us that both parties in this country were united in favour of the British preference, and in making that statement he assumed something. I have heard no representative man admit that the Conservative party was satisfied with the preference, granted as it has been granted. We have always thought that for it we should enjoy some quid pro quo from the mother country. Although Sir Wilfrid Laurier had promised the people of Canada to press preferential trade with a view of deriving some advantage in return for it, yet, when he met the British statesmen in England, he disavowed the idea that any one in Canada desired or expected to receive any consideration in return for the British preference. He told them in England, that the preference was given as a mark of appreciation by Canada for that splendid freedom which we enjoy, and upon one or two occasions that language was echoed by the Minister of Agriculture. I do not know that any Conservative in this country (no matter how highly he prizes the splendid British freedom which we as a British people are in possession of), is disposed to feel that we owe any consideration of a pecuniary character, or in the character of a commercial advantage to the mother country for that priceless freedom. We are disposed to make our own commercial treaties so far as possible, or at least to have a voice in their making. We have always entertained the idea—which seemed to be strong in the mind of the Minister of Finance at a later period in his speech—that we should utilize whatever preference favours we have to give in order to receive others in return. The Minister of Finance seemed to oscillate in the course of his speech ,between the attitude of a free trader and that of a protectionest. It almost reminds me of some of his old free trade utterances, when, speaking of the reduction of taxation upon kerosene oil, he described the amount of money which would be saved to the consumers of this country by that reduction as being about $370,000 a year. , I wonder if it occurred to the Finance Minister, how he and his party when in opposition promised year after year to remit the whole of the taxation upon kerosene oil ; I wonder if he realized, that had he and his party carried out their pledges to the people in this respect, they would have relieved the people of Canada not of $370,000 a year but of practically $750,000 a year. The attitude of the Minister of Finance in this connection, reminded me of the story of the Irishman who was advised to buy a new stove because he would save half the fuel, and he concluded that he had better buy two of these stoves to save the whole of the fuel. There was another feature in the speech of the Minister of Finance which struck me as being somewhat out of the ordinary, and that is that he made no reference at all to the finances of the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1905. It is usual for the Minister of Finance not only to review the finances of the last year and the current fiscal year, but also the expected revenue and expenditure for the coming year. There was also a very significant failure on the part of the Minister of Finance to refer to our trade with the United States. We had a chart placed in our hands showing the development of British trade, but we had no information at all as to the expectations of the hon. gentleman in regard to trade with the United States. In years gone by, the Liberals of Canada used to attach enormous importance to that subject. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and others were continually harping upon it in years past, but the budget speech of the Minister of Finance to-day passed over all references to that market of 70,000,000 people in the United States. Is it possible that this is one of the old songs which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) no longer sings ? There was another significant feature of the speech of the Minister of Finance wherein he called attention to the enormous aggregate surplus of some $58,000,000 which the present government has had during its tenure of office. The hon. gentleman is able to claim this enormous surplus, but in return for the $58,000,000 of taxation poured into the hands of the administration, by the willing people of Canada, all he is able to promise in return is a reduction of the public debt by about $1,000,000. The remaining $57,000,000 has been used up and has disappeared, and all that remains to show for the enormous exactions that have been taken from the people of Canada by this government, is the reduction of the debt by about $1,000,000.

Perhaps one of the most expected announcements in the budget speech was that a commission would be appointed to inquire into the propriety and the necessity, and the course of tariff revision. This government has fairly earned the distinction of administering the affairs of Canada by commission, and it was not unexpected that when they came to deal with tariff revision they would entrust that to a commission also. Is it not extraordinary that a government comprising men of such ability ; men vaunted by their friends as being the ablest men in Canada; men collected not only from Dominion public life but from the public life of all the provinces ; men who are supplied with officials in their departments of the highest technical skill in matters of trade ; men who have been receiving delegations from manufacturers and merchants throughout the country ; is it not an extraordinary thing that such men instead of dealing boldly with the tariff, should refer it to a commission, thus gaining time and enabling themselves a little longer to keep in touch with both the free trade element and the protectionist element in this country ? In 1878, when the Conservative party came into power pledged to tariff reform and protection, they did not resort to a commission, but dealt with the question in a bold and fearless manner assuming the responsbility of dealing with it satisfactorily and promptly. It cannot but strike the people of Canada, that this promise of a tariff commission is merely the holding out of a hope to those who are in favour of higher protection as well as to those who are in favour of free trade. The announcement of the Finance Minister on this matter is a clear indication that the coming general elections are not far off, and by the promise of this commission the government hope to leap the gap, and to secure the adhesion of protectionists and of free traders as well. It seems to me that the time has come when the government ought to have made up its mind as to what fiscal policy the country needed, and as to what it was going to do for the country. But after eight years of experience, after having themselves as a commission visited and interviewed the manufacturers and workmen of Canada in 1896, after having obtained every particle of intelligence and information which the manufacturing community could give them, they are now unable to decide whether the interests of this country require more protection, or whether they would be better served by free trade ; and they are going to send a commission through this country to enable them to decide whether they should raise the tariff or lower it, and how they are to proceed to do it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it was impossible to listen to the speech made by the hon. gentleman to-day, and contrast the manner in which he seems yet to look with favour and hope on every measure of a free trade character that promises cheaper goods to the consumers with his attitude when he comes to use those arguments which are generally held by protectionists. The hon. gentleman to-day, when talking about dumping, used the argument of the protectionist as skilfully as any protectionist could. He is well aware of the nature and the effect of dumping. It is practically mercantile piracy, mercantile war ; and when the hon. gentleman turned round to his followers and said that this evil practice rather prevailed in countries which had the highest tariffs, a sentiment which might seem condemnatory of high protection, he was applauded by them ; and when shortly afterwards he went on to develop the arguments of the protectionist against this practice, he was equally applauded. So that it would seem as if neither the government nor the party have any decided opinions on this most important subject. The hon. gentleman says that dumping is not carried on with the idea of doing any beneficial service to the country in which the dumping is done. He says it is done for the purpose of injuring and destroying the industries of that country—that the low prices will not prevail longer than is necessary to accomplish that destructive work, and that the moment those industries are destroyed, up goes the price. That is precisely the argument held and advanced by the protectionists time after time ; and yet until to-day the hon. gentleman has allowed this dumping practice to go on, has not interfered with it, has rather endeavoured to keep himself and his government before the public as if they were still imbued with those opinions which they held when the hon. gentleman, who is now the Finance Minister of Canada, occupied an important position in the Ottawa convention. The hon. gentleman who made the budget speech to-day is credited, probably truly, with having had a great deal to do with the preparation of the trade resolution adopted in that historic conference ; and what does that declare ? It declares :

> That the customs tariff of the Dominion should be based, not as it is now, on the protective principle, but on the requirements of the public service.

How can that declaration, possibly prepared by the skilful hand of my hon. friend and adopted by his party in convention assembled, be reconciled with the promise held out to-day of a step towards that highest development of the protective principle to which any protectionist country has advanced as yet, that is, the adoption of a regular minimum and maximum tariff ? Then, again, how can you reconcile the maintenance of my hon. friend's tariff and his boast to-day of an expected surplus of $16,500,000, following one of over $14,000,000, with this other sentence, also taken from that memorable document :

> That the protective system of this country should be destroyed, and that to that end the tariff should be reduced to the needs of honest, economical and efficient government.

What consistency, what inspiration is derived by the party now at the right hand of the Speaker from these utterances of their past ? They have blotted out every word of this, which was at one time their political catechism ; and still, by the expedient of a commission, hope is endeavoured to be kept alive in their hearts that they may succeed in obtaining the support of the protectionists of this country and of the consumers as well. This historic document goes on to say :

> On this subject the issue between the two political parties is now clearly defined.

Who that heard the hon. Finance Minister's speech to-day can say that so far as protection and free trade in this country are concerned, the issue is clearly defined ? The speech made by the hon. gentleman today was practically a protectionist speech ; and as we have welcomed the conversion of that hon. gentleman to sounder views of political nationality, as we have been delighted to see him renounce the more sectional and provincial views which he once entertained, and rise to the full stature of Canadian manhood, so we may now congratulate him upon recanting what he must have come to regard as the errors of his earlier political education, and the errors of the party with which he was associated, and upon being prepared to advance towards the development of Canadian industries as the policy to be avowed openly and maintained in its most perfect development by the government of the day.

The hon. gentleman has given to us in the course of the day several tariff changes to which I shall refer very hurriedly. Woollens have been raised from 23½ to 30 per cent. That is a step in the direction of higher protection. Twine and cordage have been raised from 16⅔ to 20 per cent, again a protectionist move. On the other hand, I suppose to compensate the mother country somewhat for interference with the preference in connection with the woollen industry, the duty on window glass has been lowered ; but that is not a free trade move ; it is a protectionist move, because the kind of glass reduced is used by the manufacturers of mirrors as raw material. Then pails and tubs are taken out of the class on which a duty of 20 per cent is imposed and are put upon the free list. But when we come to consider what has been done in the case of the carriage manufacturers, there again a certain measure of protection is accorded. A minimum value at which an open buggy can be entered for duty is $40 and a covered buggy $50, a measure taken in the interest of protecting the carriage manufacturers in this country. The next item is practically the adoption of a policy urged repeatedly from this side of the House by gentlemen from the west. It is a move to prevent the importation into Canada of cheap horses.

Mr. HEYD. Scrub horses.

Mr. BELL. My hon. friend from Brant seems to think that is a good move. But how is it he has continued to support so long a government which took so long to make that move ?

Mr. HEYD. I knew they would when the necessity arose.

Mr. BELL. I should think that the gentlemen who represent the west ought to know best when the necessity arose and they have been imploring the government for years to take this step. It is satisfactory at last to see that the government in this measure is following in the course indicated by the Conservative party. Then paraffine oil is reduced and crude oil is reduced to 1½ cents a gallon and the cheaper grades to nothing at all, as I understand it. Molasses, which hitherto paid 1¾ cents per gallon, is made free, a concession undoubtedly to the consumers, and when the government is so disposed to make these comparatively small concessions, one is prompted to ask why they did not make larger concessions. Why is it necessary that they should have surpluses to boast of —surpluses of from $14,000,000 to $16,000,000 ? They could get clear of a large portion by extending the reduction of duties from molasses to sugar. They could also make a reduction in the duty on tobacco, which would prove an immense boon to almost every man who contributes to taxation. But when we come to the free list, there it is my hon. friend shows his skilful hand. The first item is goats. Whether these goats are to be imported for the use of secret societies or for the improvement of the stock of goats in the country, I am not aware.

Mr. COWAN. For the Orange lodges.

Mr. BELL. Or for the consumption of the tin cans, which we know are a nuisance in almost every locality, is not stated, but I presume the leading position in the government's programme is given to that noble animal the goat, from the fact that the goat is clearly an animal which can go it, if put in the front place, the rest of the procession will move along with alacrity. Then there is a great article of industry, whale oil soap largely used. I am reminded very much by these concessions made by the government to the trade of the country of another revision, when they put dragons blood, attar of roses, ice and several other articles on their free list, none of which would very much disturb the balance of trade in the country. Then there are photographic paper and glass to be used in the manufacture of the materials of the photographers' trade. There are also printing presses of a class not made in Canada and machinery for the manufacture of linen and brass, not made in Canada, and for drilling wells not made in Canada. Then showing how the government, when it discovers that it has been false to all its principles, may feel the necessity of procuring an outfit of false teeth in order to make a presentable appearance in public, they have put artificial teeth on the free list. That reminds me that not very long ago they put artificial limbs on the free list, feeling convinced that in their limping condition regarding the tariff they would require the assistance of wooden legs. In their last revision they adopted the wooden leg reform, and they have now the artificial or false teeth reform. Then there is quassia juice. That is an article which enters enormously into the trade of this country. No doubt this is an immense concession, and I only hope that the surplus to which my hon. friend looks forward next year may not be too much impaired by the amount of duty he is going to lose on quassia juice.

With reference to what my hon. friend has said regarding the advantage which the British preference has been to us in setting an example to the world, we are not going to offer any objection. At the same time if he is disposed to adopt such a cheerful tone with reference to the attitude of the government on the subject, we should not forget all that was involved in the manner in which that preference was adopted. The government very jauntily assumed that they were going to give a British preference and put it into effect at once. They made a very blind move and the British government in pity let them out of the difficulty into which they had fallen in their endeavour to gratify British public opinion in this country by a British preference. That preference practically applied not only to Britain but to every country with which Great Britain had a treaty containing the most favoured nation clause. Germany and Belgium and every other country which had a treaty with Great Britain containing the most favoured nation clause was enabled to demand the admission of its goods under the preference and did so. So that instead of its being a well-considered move, it was a move made without a proper knowledge of the situation and without anything like a realization of the consequences. Every word that was uttered in this House by Conservative statesmen, every criticism passed on that measure by the Conservatives, turned out to be absolutely correct. Had it not been for the courtesy of the British government in denouncing the German and Belgian treaties this government would have been compelled, in order to preserve our own markets, to repeal the preference at the next session. Nothing but the fact that the British statesmen, pitying this government in the humiliating position into which it had landed itself, saved it from being compelled to repeal the preference, by denouncing the treaty. We on this side approve of everything in the direction of extending the imperial idea. We are in favour of everything that will draw the different parts of the empire more closely together. We are in favour of developing the trade of Great Britain with Canada and the trade of Canada with the other colonies, but we are not disposed to see our friends who simply blundered into this move and succeeded in securing the denunciation of those treaties in the manner I have indicated, take away the credit of Conservative statesmen who for twenty years had been working for the denunciation of those treaties and to put Canada in a position in which she might give preference to the mother country and the colonies as well.

It was a Conservative policy advocated by Sir Alexander Galt, Sir Charles Tupper, Mr. Foster, advocated by every leader of the Conservative party and although they did not blindly leap into the hole into which the present government plunged themselves, they were endeavouring for 20 years practically, to have these obstructive treaties removed and to secure for this country the opportunity to develop the idea of a British preference not only with the mother country, but with the other colonies as well. Judging from the utterances of the hon. gentleman to-day, he is going to adopt as soon as possible—at the next session of parliament, he says—a tariff which, in order to fill his description of it must be an out and out protectionist tariff, a tariff which will permit of retaliation, which will not be a tariff for revenue but a tariff for protection, a tariff which will protect Canadian industries even to the extent of using drastic measures to prevent dumping, to prevent an attack on Canadian industries by the industries of any foreign country. When he, as the representative of this government promises the people of this country an out and out protectionist policy, it is not at all to be wondered at if hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, who have in the past heard that hon. gentleman and his party speak upon the platforms throughout this country, are filled with amazement. Is it possible that this gentleman and his party can come here to-day and without a blush proclaim that their every utterance for 18 years was an absurd and mistaken one, that their every promise to the people was an impossible one, that they sit to-day in the parliament of Canada pilloried, monuments of incapacity, unable to accomplish anything they ever promised the people of this country. Now that the Finance Minister has come out as a protectionist let me read to him what his friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce said in 1893 :

> The Finance Minister lays down, or did lay down, as a proposition that it was possible to increase our collective wealth by increasing our taxes. I beg leave to tell the hon. gentleman that I regard such a proposition as about the 'ne plus ultra' of folly in a country like Canada. When the hon. gentleman is able to pour water into a sieve and keep it there, when the hon. gentleman is able to leap from one of these buildings and sustain himself in mid-air by grasping his waistband ; when the hon. gentleman can take snow in his hand and hold it before the fire without its melting ; then, and not until then, will the hon. gentleman increase the collective wealth of the community by increasing their taxes. Sir, we do not look for grapes from thorns and we do not look for figs from thistles, but we had better do that than look for prosperity to a policy the very keynote of which is to enrich one or two special classes at the expense of the great bulk of the community. I tell the hon. gentleman that his government and his policy may indeed displace wealth—that they have done to a large extent—but they are helpless and powerless to create it.

Has the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce changed his opinions? He sat to-day beside his friend and colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and saw him deliberately perpetrating this act of folly, saw him, so to speak leaping from one of the windows in this building and hoping to sustain himself by his waistband, yet he did not raise one voice of remonstrance, he did not protest against that act of folly. Apparently he has come to the conclusion that, after all, that and all his other utterances of a like character were folly and folly in the highest degree. It is useless to waste time upon such a subject, but it is not useless to extend my congratulations to the hon. gentleman on the fact that having learned wisdom he is wise enough to retain his position even in the despised Department of Trade and Commerce and to swallow all the protectionist doses that the Premier of Canada and his Finance Minister are disposed to pour down his throat.

It is not too much to say that it is high time that the government proceeded to deal with this trade question. Speaking of the utterances of the right hon. gentleman the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Customs, the Minister of Agriculture, and many other hon. gentleman who raised their voices in this House to denounce protection, the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, in a thoughtful and moralizing spirit, cast his eye backwards over the course of events and told an audience in Nova Scotia a short time ago that these hon. gentlemen talked all this nonsense in the years when they were in opposition, because gentlemen who were along time in opposition were inclined to acquire the habit of talking unmitigated rot. I think it is beyond doubt that the attitude of our hon. friends to-day justifies that position. No one should be as competent to judge these gentlemen as the Attorney General of Nova Scotia. He has been associated with them a great deal; and has studied their utterances, and he says on his authority and his knowledge, that all the utterances of these wise men when they went about the country frightening the timid people out of it as far as they could, were unmitigated rot. They seemed to part with these portions of these utterances to-day with very little regret. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) believed everything he ever said was rot, he could not give it up more cheerfully than he did to-day. I think he believed it was high time to get rid of it, and he is now disposed to walk in the ranks of the protectionists of this country in such a manner as to justify us in coming to the conclusion that he has at least attained his right mind. It was time the Finance Minister did give this country a policy. This government has been in power seven or eight years and what have they done? They have raised great surpluses. When you meet a representative of this party, no matter how humble, and challenge him as to what this government has done, his only answer is: 'Good times.' They talk of great aggregate trade, great savings of the people, great prosperity in every part of this country, good times; from the Finance Minister and the premier to the lowest man in the party who uplifts his voice on the stump or in the corner grocery, the one and only argument in favour of this government is that it has lived in a period of good times. What has this government done to give us these good times? Nothing whatever. Has this government given this country a new market? They have done nothing to develop our markets. They promised to give this country the market of the 70,000,000 people to the south of it, these people who preferred the Yankee dollar to the British shilling. They were going to give us the one market, our own natural market. They were going to develop that continental trade, which was the only trade. There was no doubt about it, they had it in their power, they had a good chance, they had it at their hand; put them in power and they would turn the tap, and the whole volume of trade of the United States would flow into this country. Have they given us any of it? The Finance Minister to-day never mentioned the United States, never referred to their trade, never spoke of reciprocity. Apparently that is a chapter in his life which he is anxious to forget.

There is a colony of Great Britain lying in such a position as to command the entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the colony of Newfoundland. Most important it is that that colony should be added in order to round off this Dominion. What has the government done in that direction? Not one word in the budget speech in reference to it. There is a project dear to the hearts of my hon. friends in the lower provinces, the project of a fast line of steamers to divert the express and passenger traffic to the maritime province ports that now goes from Canada to the continent through American ports. What has the government done to develop a fast line, and the great trade that would necessarily flow from it? Not one word of it mentioned in the speech. It is apparently a matter that is too large for this government to deal with. They prefer to deal with artificial teeth, and goats, and objects of that kind that can be handled, rather than take upon themselves the task of initiating a great modern steamship service which would place Canada in the forefront of the nations of the world. It is time, I say, that this government should take a stand, time that they should find out what is the policy of the people of this country.

And I would ask my right hon. friend: What is the best policy for Canada? Is it that of free trade, which he loved so much in the past, for which he said so many nice things, from which he hoped so much, and for which the Minister of Trade and Commerce hoped so much? Or is it that curse called protection, that ogre which was preying upon the people of this country, fattening upon the people of this country, bleeding them white, crushing them, oppressing them, making millionaires on the one hand and paupers on the other? Is that the policy they are in favour of? We have heard to-day from the Minister of Finance; let us know now what is the opinion of the government. Are they still free traders? Are they in favour of even a modified form of free trade? Are they revenue men as they have them in England, or are they protectionists? They know the free trade argument, for they have promulgated it in this country for a life time, practically. They must know that there is a great deal to be said in favour of free trade, but they must know that to adopt free trade would mean the wiping out of our industries, practically the destruction of the industries we have to-day. Are they looking at the great example of Great Britain to which they are so fond of turning the eyes of our people? There is not one word of warning to suggest that there is anything in the condition of Great Britain that does not apply to this country, and apparently these hon. gentlemen care nothing for it. If they are free traders, why do they not adopt the policy of the mother country? Why do they not give the consumers of this country the advantage of cheapness? They know very well that would mean the destruction of our industries for a time; but if their scientific theory of free trade is all right, granting them time and our natural advantages, the ability of our people, might be trusted to carry them through. If these gentlemen were right in the past, and still believe that free trade would create a more stable basis of prosperity, it would take a long time to try the experiment, but still my right hon. friend must feel that truth is mighty and must prevail. Why is it then that now, when he is in power, when the responsibility of government rests upon him, the responsibility of answering for the stability of our commercial interests, why is it that instead of becoming more and more a free trader, he is becoming more and more a protectionist? If my right hon. friend is influenced by the irresistible argument of what he sees about him in the country, he must come to the conclusion that protection is the best policy for this country, and that he was wrong when he opposed the Conservatives in that policy. Why does he not adopt that policy, take the foundation laid by the Conservatives and proceed, while he is in power, to build up on that foundation and to rear in Canada the fair fabric of commercial and industrial prosperity and well-being? But instead of doing that, he sets up his Finance Minister to make a speech which breathes free trade and protection in the same breath. He flatters the expectation of the people with the promise of a commission, delaying any action the manufacturers might take by the promise of a commission, in order to hasten and get through with the elections before the people have an opportunity of discovering what his real intentions are.

If he will take the trouble to look at the trade returns he cannot fail to make up his mind as to the requirements of the country. Our exports show that practically we are to-day a people who are producing raw materials for other people, more advanced people, to manufacture. What are our great exports? Are they manufactured goods? No, they are goods which have undergone a certain process of manufacture in so far as you may say that the farmer is a manufacturer of cattle, of wheat, of butter and cheese, that the miner is a manufacturer of coal, because his labour has to a certain extent entered into its production. But we know that the exported products from which this trade is built up are the raw materials of the workman, which are utilized in other countries where they are developed by people who have reached a higher industrial development than we have. Let me read a few articles of export and their value:

I have two other tables, one a list of manufactured articles into which labour enters largely and which would have given employment to the people of this country; and the other is what may be described as the raw materials of industry which the people of this country ought to be producing. The iron trade has had nothing done for it to-day. Yet we imported 89,951 tons of pig iron, we import 62,773 tons of blooms, we import 195,824 tons of rails, we import 89,000 tons of wire rods. Now there is something promised in the tariff in favour of the wire rod industry. Of sheets of all kinds we import 74,000 tons.

Of bars and rods of different kinds we imported 84,000 tons. Now, these goods come very largely from the United States and while in this country the duty varies from $2.50 to $7 or $8 a ton, in the United States the duty upon precisely the same class of products rises to the height of $14, $18 and $30 a ton. Nothing is done for that industry. If the right hon. leader of the government or his Finance Minister has come to the conclusion that the country can be benefited by the development of these industries, there, in the iron industry, that brought into this country nearly $30,000,000 worth of these products in the past year, is an endless scope for his action. He has right beside him, in the United States, an example of how that work is to be accomplished. He knows it has not been done by tinkering with the tariff; he knows it can only be done by protection which will be adequate, to use the expression of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, by adopting the protection that will protect.

Then again there is the woollen industry to which some concession has been made today. About six per cent has been added to the protection on woollens, but what is the position of the woollen industry in this country? Canada, a country which is adapted to the raising of sheep for the production of wool, imports $13,700,000 worth of woollen products. The United States, where the duty is 90 per cent, where the population is 80,000,000 as against our five and a half millions, imports $19,500,000 worth of woollens or less than one-quarter dollar per head of the population of what we import and they manufacture all the woollens used in that country with the exception of what costs 25 cents per head of the population. Why? Because the industry there is so protected that it can live. In this country, although remonstrances have been addressed to the government day after day, the imports of woollens have grown from $9,700,000 in 1899 to $13,700,000 in 1903. The protection Canada now affords may be sufficient—if it is not it will be a great misfortune—but if it is why is it that the government does not make up its mind to adopt the protective system throughout and instead of touching the tariff here and there, giving some small measure of relief to this industry or that industry, take its stand upon one side or the other of this great controversy in which all the nations of the world are engaged and either proclaim its belief in protection, and holding that belief in protection, go on and develop the protective system so as to make of this country a hive of industry, fill it with factories, stop the exportation of animals, stop the exportation of wheat and bring about a condition of affairs which would result in the consumption of these things in this country? It might be that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance would have to submit to a great deprivation, that he would have to submit to the aggregate of his trade being largely reduced. That trade naturally would be done in this country. The movement of products would be from the farm to the town, from the town to the farm. My hon. friend could not boast of such an enormous increase in the aggregate trade of the country but how much better off would be the people of the country? How much stronger would the country be and how much better would the interests of this country be served by adding to our population which would consume the products of our farms and prairies in the cities of Canada rather than that our products should be exported to the mother country? We are disposed to do everything we can to develop imperial trade, but no party in this country, and certainly not the party sitting on the other side of the House, are disposed to push that matter of a British preference to the length of injuring Canadian industries. If there was any doubt at one time there is no doubt now after the speech made by the hon. Minister of Finance to-day because he has broken in on the British preference by raising the duty against the woollen manufacturers of Great Britain.

A reading of our trade figures will show us that we are not progressing in the direction in which a protective country should move. We are progressing along the lines in which a free trade country might hope to progress.

Our exports of home products in 1903 as compared with 1896 were as follows:

EXPORTS, HOME PRODUCTS.

Mines	$8,050,000	$31,064,861

We are making progress, but not satisfactory progress, not the progress that this country ought to make. In my mind there can be no doubt at all that in this country, with our population, with our climate, with our natural resources, there is no reason why we should not at an early date, with the protective system, with the manner in which our fertile lands are attracting population from outside countries, make progress very much more rapid than we are making at this moment. We are doing well, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance tells us. We are delighted on this side of the House to recognize the fact that we are doing well and we are delighted to find that our hon. friends on the other side of the House have made up their minds that this country is not going to the bow wows altogether but that we have here a good country to live in. But, we maintain that if our country is not making more rapid progress than it is the government should not stand still. If our policy laid down in 1879 is a wrong one it should be reversed. If it is a right one it should be extended and maintained. Now, as I have already said there may be the one little drawback, as far as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is concerned, that he may find it unsatisfactory to see his exports and imports diminished. He might be in the unhappy position that he would not be able to point to an enormous increase of trade or taxation or to surpluses, but would it not be a benefit to the population of this country that he should be deprived of some small part of the glory and pleasure which he seems to derive from boasting of these things and that we should go on developing this country, and advancing the prosperity not only of the great farming community but of the great industrial community as well ? My hon. friend the Minister of Finance promised us to-day a surplus of $16,674,000. He also promised a capital expenditure of $11,500,000 and a net reduction of the debt to the amount of $7,500,000. Now, it seems to me that my hon. friend ought to have come to the conclusion by this time that he should not boast as he does and that his party ought to have been tired by this time of his boasting of this prosperity. There was a time when prominent gentlemen now seated on the government side of the House maintained that the government could do nothing at all to contribute to the prosperity of the country, that the government was a fly upon the wheel, that the wheel turned indifferently to their posturing or prayers or desires. But, it is not so now. Why, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has only to stand up here and recite figures of the greatness of Canada's trade, of the greatness of her receipts, of the greatness of her revenues and his followers, even at the end of eight years, still cheer him to the echo. I think I detected a little falling off in the spontaneity and force of the applause to-day. It is getting to be an old story—I suppose they will tell me. Is it possible that the conclusion is beginning to come to their minds that it is not always very good financing that would go on year after year taking enormous surpluses from the people of this country simply to enable the government to boast when it goes to the country, of a surplus ?

This government has been favoured with a marvellous good fortune ; it came into power when Canada was very prosperous, and so the Minister of Finance enjoys the annual opportunity of reciting another chapter of the continued story of Canada's well being. To what is that prosperity owing ? We are rejoiced to see it, although we do not think it is used as wisely as it might be. To us it seems that it would be far better for this country, if the government would show less pride in large surpluses and more desire to alleviate the burdens of the people ; to us it seems that it would be better if the government should so adjust the tariff as to make it not a great revenue producing tariff but a great industry producing tariff. What is the secret of this story of success ? Is it due to anything the government has done ? If so, it would be an agreeable variation if some member of the government would point to some act of administration which has contributed to the prosperity of the country. Many hon. gentlemen would seem to have come to this House believing apparently, that the prosperity of Canada was due to the beams from the countenance of the Prime Minister, who was pictured to us as the Sunny Jim of Canadian politics. But, Sir, I do not think it is possible that those effulgent rays from the Prime Minister's countenance could have continued to give to this country the prosperity it has enjoyed for several years. Still, none of all the very clever men who sit in the government have devised any more probable theory as to the prosperity of this country, than the fact that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is Prime Minister. In the press, in the House, on the hustings, we are told that prosperity prevails throughout Canada because the right hon. gentleman is at the head of the government. It is a beautiful thing to know that in Canada there is a man of such radio-active powers that his effluency is not circumscribed by the area of this Dominion, but that his beneficence radiates throughout the world, because we know that the world generally has been prosperous. We have not heard from our friends in the extreme north that the icebergs are being melted by that sun which beams from the countenance of the Prime Minister of Canada, but we do know that the world over, good times have prevailed since my right hon. friend has become premier. Is it not possible that there are other reasons for our prosperity ? We have had bountiful harvests in Canada since 1896, and although the Prime Minister may be responsible for them, we would piously hope that providence may have something to do with it. Is it not possible that part of the good times in this country, part of the large figures in the trade returns, part of the large receipts from taxation, part of the large surpluses, may be owing to the high prices which have prevailed since 1896, for lumber, for animal products, for butter, for cheese, for almost everything that Canada produces to sell. Is the Prime Minister responsible for these high prices ? Perhaps it is that owing to some momentary inertia on the part of the Prime Minister, the cheese and butter industry have suffered a decline this year. It may be possible that because of having his attention too much devoted to that great railway project which is to make his memory famous, his friends say, he has withdrawn to a certain extent his attentive benignity from our great agricultural interests and that the prices of butter and cheese have dropped in consequence. In fact, when one admiring supporter of the Prime Minister was urged to call his attention to the decline in the price of cheese, this gentleman replied that the Prime Minister was very busy just now, but in a little while he would have time to attend to the matter and then it would be all right. But, is it not possible that the prosperity of this country is in a certain measure due to the discovery of the Yukon, to the development of mining, to our gold and our copper and our nickel ? Do the right hon. gentleman and his supporters take credit for that ? Do they take credit for the discovery of the Yukon, a country which was purchased by the Conservatives and the purchase of which they opposed ? Do they take credit for the development of the mining industries of the Kootenay owing to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the construction of which they opposed and denounced as folly ? If in a more thoughtful frame of mind we try to discover what the true cause of our prosperity is, we have to look in another direction. In what phase of the administration of the present government, are we to look for any change from the policy of the Conservative party, with one exception and that exception is that instead of pursuing the cautious and careful financing of the Conservative administration whose policy was to alleviate the burdens of the people and to avoid surpluses, this Liberal government has exhausted every means of extracting cash from the Canadian taxpayer, increased taxation beyond any necessity, and expended the money which they have taken from the people in an extravagant and unjustifiable manner. Is not our prosperity due to the fact, that through a long continued course of a wise and cautious administration by the Conservative government ; of a wisely constructed banking system, of a wisely constructed system of protection to our industries ; the foundations of prosperity in this country were laid, so that when this world wide era of prosperity did arise, Canada was in a position to derive the advantage of it. Was it not owing to a wise government that Canada passed almost undisturbed through the great depression which shortly prior to 1896, struck the United States with cyclonic force ? Was it because this country had been so well and wisely governed that an eminent United States authority at the time, contrasting the condition of things in the United States, where thousands of financial institutions were going down in ruin, with the prosperous conditions of Canada, where no financial distress was felt, wrote as follows :

In the Dominion of Canada separated from us on the north by an imaginary line there has been no panic, no increased demand for money, no stoppage of industries, no restriction of trade, no increased rate of interest, in short nothing beyond the ordinary course of events except so far as these events may have been influenced by contiguity to what may be termed a financial cyclone whose pathway of destruction was contiguous to, but not within Canadian teritory.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who said that ?

Mr. BELL. Mr. Wells in the 'Forum.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In what year was that ?

Mr. BELL. I think it was in 1894. It was at a time when my right hon. friend was not in power, at a time when the affairs of this country were administered by a Conservative administration. The right hon. gentleman received the country's affairs into his hands from that Conservative administration, stable and undisturbed, and running as smoothly as they are described in that extract.

When we come to deal with trade questions we are simply dealing with arithmetical questions. It is nonsense for any one to pretend that there is any mystical influence exerted by man or administration to account for prosperity in the country. In addition to that reason of a supernatural sort for whose origin we look to the Almighty giver of all good there is a reason of a material kind for everything that happens, and you can generally reduce that reason to figures. You can satisfy yourself, if you are a business man, as to the reason and the extent of the good times, and not feel bound to attribute them to any mystical or mysterious agency. To a considerable extent there can be no doubt that the increase of the trade of this country has been due to the good prices of recent years. It is not entirely that we have been producing any more, that we have been so much more active, although we are active, or that we have been so much more industrious, although we are industrious. It is due to the fact that an extraordinary increase of prices has occurred at a time when we have had an unparalleled series of good harvests, when our country has been healthy, free from plague and misfortune of every character, when peace has prevailed in our land, when our industries have been uninterrupted. This is what accounts for that wonderful prosperity to which I feel that the right hon. leader of the government must owe a great deal of the satisfaction with which he has governed this country during his term of office. Our business in this country is very easily understood ; it is very simple. Great Britain has an enormous revenue apart from the revenue from her exports. For her foreign investments it is estimated she has a revenue of $450,000,000, and from her enormous shipping, which practically governs every sea and earns money in every port of the globe, it is estimated that she has a revenue of $450,-

000,000; $900,000,000 per annum is the extent to which Great Britain is the world's creditor; and so long as her imports do not exceed her exports by that sum, she is paying her way, because she is only receiving in kind the debts owing to her from the outside world. But in Canada we have not much of these sources of revenue. The imports of this country, no matter how much they may be, are dependent almost entirely on the amount of our exports. They are paid by our exports, and are limited by our exports; and there can be no question at all that one of the reasons which have operated to place my right hon. friend the Minister of Finance in the fortunate position of being able to repeat again the story of the continued expansion of the trade of this country have been the high prices for our products which have prevailed in the world's markets. These have not been peculiar to Canada. They have prevailed everywhere. One authority, Sauerbeck, puts the index number of the world's prices in 1896 at 61; in 1902 it stands at 69, a gain of 8 points. Bradstreet, another authority, points out that in 1896 it stood at 67.2, and in 1902 at 86·3, a gain of some 19 points. These figures show that the articles which we are in a position to supply to the outside world are being bought from us at high prices, and to a large extent account for our large exports, which in turn account for our large imports. I have prepared a table to show to what extent these advances in prices have affected our trade; and it shows the following increases of prices from 1896 to 1903: cheese, 2·4 cents per pound; wheat, 16 cents per bushel; bacon, 3·1 cents per pound; boards, planks and scantling, $4·16 per thousand; deals and ends. $7.28 per thousand; and butter, 2·5 cents per pound. There have been declines in coal of 42 cents, in cattle over one year of $3.12, in flour of 20 cents, and in hay of $1.22. But in the great items of our exports—cheese, wheat, bacon, lumber—the prices have all advanced enormously. On a few of these items, from the increased prices alone, irrespective of quantities, we gained in 1903 over 1896: in cheese 5·5 million dollars; in wheat, 5·3 millions; in bacon, 4·3 millions; in boards and planks, 4·2 millions; in deals, 2·6 millions; and in butter, 1 million dollars. Therefore it seems to me very much more reasonable and likely that we owe the prosperity of this country at this time, which we all delight to see, not so much to the fact that our good friend the right hon. gentleman who presides over the present government is in power, as to the fact that we have had good crops, that there has been no interruption to our industry, that wars have not taken place within our borders but beyond our borders, that a great centre of industry has developed in the Yukon, that we have enjoyed high prices for our great products, and generally speaking that we have enjoyed good luck every year such as the right hon. gentleman never hoped to see when he came into power.

These are the things which have contributed to our prosperity and not any act of administration on the part of this government. But I suppose it is for want of any better reason that everywhere and at all times the argument you hear in favour of retaining this government in power is the old story of the full dinner pail. That I dare say is a good enough thing for its own place and occasion, for the stomach, but to hear this argument advanced in this House, to hear the Finance Minister year after year repeat to his listening followers the figures of this prosperity and to hear them cheer over these figures which indicate nothing at all as to the merits or conduct of the government, provokes one to go through what might be a meaningless and senseless task and to point out the fact that if the good times in this country are owing to the administration, then the influence of the government extends to every country in the world, for every country has participated in the good times that have come to Canada owing to the administration of this government. I have collected the figures for seventeen countries, Argentina, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, China, France, Germany, India, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Great Britain, and the United States, and I find that all these have shared in the prosperity. The aggregate trade of all these countries in 1902 was $17,417,456,485, and in 1896, the year in which this government came into power, the aggregate trade of these seventeen countries was only $13,834,198,136. They have increased their trade in these years by $3,583,257,849, an increase of 26 per cent, so that it is quite clear that if we are to attribute the welfare and prosperity of this country to the administration that we have had, that administration is apparently so effective and so powerful in the direction of inducing and sustaining prosperity that its influence has extended until it might properly be called world wide. Canada is a country that should make enormous gains, a country that is rapidly deriving wealth from outside countries. A large population is flowing from other countries into Canada bringing means of subsistence, entering into active operations, adding to the wealth of this country and developing its trade. We are not limited to the growth of our own population; we are receiving population from abroad. The countries which I have cited, include the oldest countries in the world, those that may be thought to have reached their full development. Only one in the list, Argentina, is in circumstances something like our own. The others are all old countries. The fact to be learned from these figures is that at the present time we are living in a period of inflation, that the country is wealthy because the world is prosperous, the world is wealthy. It would not be well to leave the consideration of a budget speech without to a certain extent calling the attention of the country to the manner in which the government is administering the affairs of the country, and considering whether it is utilizing its position for the advantage and relief of the people, or for the convenience, advantage and relief of the government, and its supporters, those who have the strongest claims upon it. Has this government administered the affairs of the country in such a way as to lighten the burdens of the people or in such a way as to increase their own glory, to advance their own welfare, to comfort and to make everything pleasant for those who are nearest the administration? Is this a government which properly fulfils the ideal of Liberal administration, knowing no favourites, recognizing no class distinctions, administrating the affairs of the country with a single eye to the welfare of the citizens, even the humblest of them? It is impossible to review the history of this administration and come to the conclusion that they have governed Canada in that way. The members of this government while in opposition placed themselves on record as opposed to everything that led to increased debt, to increased expenditure and to increased taxation. What is their record now that they are in power? They have lived up to the policy and followed the course which they condemned as an improper one for their Conservative opponents to follow when the Conservatives were in power. The trade of this country has increased; its prosperity has been great. The outlay of the government has increased in every direction; the increase is enormous. The revenue has increased and that portion of the revenue which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues condemned the late administration for increasing, the taxation of the people, has increased enormously. In this present session this administration has passed through this parliament a measure which if it be carried out will add to the debt of this country, a debt which is fixed at $257,000,000, an increase of something like $170,000,000. Not only has the trade increased, but everything else has. Revenue and taxation have increased; and if my hon. friend's views are given effect to, in a very short time the debt will be increased to an enormous extent. My hon. friend the Finance Minister points to a reduction of debt this year of about a million dollars, and the First Minister leads the way to an increase in our public debt of $170,000,000.

My hon. friend the Finance Minister has developed to-day another idea which must be exceedingly distasteful to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the course of the last number of years, he has taken great pleasure in telling us of the savings of the people and seems to think it an evidence of prosperity that the people should have increased their deposits in the savings banks. That idea is a new one coming from that side. In the old days the Minister of Trade and Commerce used to scoff and sneer at this argument when advanced by the Finance Ministers of the Conservative party. He said that the deposits in the savings banks were evidences of debt and not of prosperity. He asked: 'Where is the money? You have not got it. If a run were made on your bank to-day, you would have to go to England and borrow it. You owe it.' and then he used the very significant phrase: 'It is interred in the public works and railway subsidies to keep some one behind the minister in good humour.' I would like to know how far that utterance applies to the present condition of things. We voted railway subsidies with a very liberal hand last session and railway guarantees with equal prodigality. I wonder if these caustic remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce can apply as truthfully to the bank deposits of to-day as they did to the bank deposits in the days of the Conservative administrations. We used always to think that it was a good thing for the people to be careful and to go on swelling their bank deposits, but there was a higher wisdom than that which was revealed to the world by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and that hon. gentleman must have been overcome by deep sadness when he heard his bosom friend and companion the Minister of Finance deliberately promulgate such a heresy as to ask the country to believe that there is any advantage or merit in the fact that the people are saving and depositing their savings in the banks. Bank deposits, he said, are evidences of debt and not of prosperity. You have not got the money. You know you have not got it. The money is spent. It seems to me it would be well if the Minister of Trade and Commerce would take his erring colleague aside and prevent his making such shocking breaks in public. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce ought to start a kindergarten, where he might educate his colleagues in private and not be put to the pain of teaching them in public of the falsity of the doctrines which they are giving to the people.

If the trade of this country is growing and its prosperity, its expenditure is not lagging behind. The Conservatives had the idea, when they were in power, that they ought to reduce the expenditure, and the average Conservative expenditure from 1892 to 1896 was $42,141,763, or nearly $400,000 per year less than it was from 1887 to 1891. Their total expenditure in 1896 was $41,702,353, deducting the Quebec subsidies $2,394,000, which the Minister of Finance very ingeniously added to the expenditure of the Conservative administration for that year, although that money was not spent in that year. It appeared in the public accounts as a sum on which interest was being paid to the province of Quebec since 1882, and it is still shown in the volume which the Finance Minister issues to the public as a sum of money on which the government is paying interest. It was not treated as a debt until he saw fit to do so. Therefore the correct figures for 1896 of the expenditure are $41,702,383. The Conservative administrations were economical. In the years 1892-1896, the Conservative government was a government of retrenchment. That government must have been listening attentively to the speeches of my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce and of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs and others, and was trying to live up to the idea of statesmanship held up to them by these gentlemen. But since 1896 there has been no retrenchment. The very gentlemen who preached so loudly in favour of that policy have shown no taste for it, and the total expenditure of the Grit government has exceeded the average total expenditure of the Conservatives in the period, 1892-1896, in every year, as follows :

In 1897 by..	$ 830,992
In 1899 by..	9,400,872

Now they were getting comfortably seated in the saddle and began to see what they could do. In 1900 they exceeded the expenditure of the Conservatives by $10,575,703. They had by this got into their stride, and in 1901 they exceeded the expenditure of the Conservative government by $15,841,109. In 1902 they again eclipsed the record and exceeded the average Conservative expenditure by $21,829,036. But in 1903, possibly owing to the fact that the session was considerably prolonged and they had no opportunity to spend the money voted for public works and possibly because there was a degree of uncertainty as to whether we would have elections or not, they seem to have practiced some measure of economy and reduced their expenditure sufficiently to make its excess over the Conservative record only $19,604,808.

Well, we all know that in 1893 the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government, repeatedly said that if we were entrusted with power he would reduce the total expenditure of this country by from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 per annum. His colleagues went further. The Minister of Customs thought he could save $6,000,000 per annum. But from $2,000,000 to $6,000,000 per annum was the saving which these hon. gentlemen pledged themselves to make if they were ever put in office. They were satisfied it was the easiest thing in the world to do if they only got the opportunity. But what has happened since ? Since July, 1896, the Prime Minister has been administering the affairs of Canada and not only has he failed to reduce our total expenditure by $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, but he has largely increased it. In 1893 the Conservative expenditure was $40,853,727. In 1897 this government spent $42,972,756, or an increase of $2,119,028. Their record is as follows :

		Increase.
1897..	42,972,755	2,119,028
1898..	45,334,281	4,480,554
1899..	51,542,635	10,688,908
1900..	52,717,466	11,863,739
1901..	57,982,866	17,129,139
1902..	63,970,799	23,117,072
1903..	61,746,571	20,892,844

Thus the premier of Canada, after pledging himself to govern this country with $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 less than the Conservatives had spent, has led his party into an expenditure greater than that of 1893 by $23,117,072, in 1902, and greater by $20,892,844 in 1903. No words are needed to emphasize the importance of this statement. He must stand condemned of having spent, without knowledge of the subject, having spent recklessly, or never having made the slightest attempt at economy, this enormous sum in excess of the Conservative administration. The Conservatives did not aim at rolling up enormous surpluses, they did not aim at a great revenue or at great taxation. The Conservative policy of finance was the same as that of Great Britain, the same as that of any civilized country in which the ideal is the greatest good to the greatest number. They adjusted their taxation to their expenditure, and when it was necessary to call upon the people for extraordinary contributions, they did so. When it was possible to relieve the people of a portion of their burden, they did so. The Conservatives, between 1891 and 1895, made great reductions in the tariff, and they were taunted with having no surpluses in those days. On the other hand this administration can point to surplus after surplus. The Conservatives, instead of having surpluses, left the money in the pockets of the people. Between 1891 and 1894 they made reductions on sugar, molasses and glass, and in 1894 they made a general reduction affecting hundreds of items in the tariff. The Liberal speakers always contended that taxation in this country was too high. Sir, I do not know anything more graphic, more interesting than to read the eloquent and burning words that fell from the lips of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, of the late Hon. David Mills, and of my right hon. friend, and of an hon. gentleman who is now adorning a seat in another chamber, when they denounced the high taxation of this country. Now what is the record of this administration ? Why, this government, since it came into power, has taken from the people in taxation and received in revenue the following sums :

IN YEARS FROM 1897 TO 1903.

—	Volume of Taxation.	Revenue.
1890	31,587,071	39,879,925
1891	30,314,151	38,579,310
1892	28,446,157	36,921,871
1893	29,321,367	38,168,608
1894	27,579,203	36,374,693
1895	25,446,198	33,978,129
1896	27,759,285	36,618,590
1897	28,648,626	37,829,778
1898	29,576,455	40,555,238
1899	34,958,069	46,741,249
1900	38,242,222	51,029,994
1901	38,743,550	52,514,701
1902	43,389,111	58,050,790
1903	49,015,505	66,037,068

The administration which, in 1896, took $27,000,000 from the people, were condemned by these hon. gentlemen who, in 1903, take $49,000,000 in taxes from the same people who they declared were oppressed by the Conservative administration. Why, Sir, such a record has never been made by a party in any parliament in the world. No wonder the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce laughs. He may well laugh. The idea that any man in Canada was such a fool as to believe one word that hon. gentleman uttered when he was denouncing this expenditure, when he was talking about the people being bled white, when he was describing the state of affairs of this country, the oppression, the depression, the gloom that existed, talking of it in such terms and such tones that he drove the people out of his own county, and out of the country generally, into the United States in order that they might escape from the intolerable burden of a taxation of $27,000,000, which he increased on coming into power by considerably more than 50 per cent. No wonder he laughs. It is the greatest joke that has ever been perpetrated, not only upon a country but upon a suffering people. And the people of this country listened to him, believing him, and he is now in office; he is now taking $49,000,000 a year from those same people whom he pitied so much when the Conservatives were taking from them $27,000,000. No wonder the hon. gentleman laughs, no wonder he chuckles and keeps his seat, keeps his place in that fifth wheel to the coach, the Department of Trade and Commerce, that asylum for incapables, as he described them. He keeps his emoluments and keeps his smile; he chuckles and grins, and well he may. But what will the people of Canada say about it? It is not likely the laugh will be altogether on the same side of their faces.

Now let us look at the increased expenditure in this country. The best way to measure this is to show how it affects the individual. Let me read this table showing the taxation and expenditure per head since 1895:

Year.	Taxation per head.	Expenditure per head.
	$ cts.	$ cts.
1892-95	.....	8 41
1896	5 46	8 14
1897	5 57	8 28
1898	5 69	8 63
1899	6 65	9 72
1900	7 15	9 95
1901	7 19	10 76
1902	7 95	11 72
1903	8 87	11 17

This table shows that although the people were bled white seven years ago, under the then rate of taxation, they have recuperated with astonishing rapidity, because they are now able to pay $8.87 per head whereas seven years ago they were almost exhausted when they paid only $5.46 per head. The Minister of Trade and Commerce can well laugh and smile over the situation. Evidently the patient has improved under this system of blood letting, he thrives upon it, so long as it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce who performs the operation.

Let us now look at the expenditure under the Conservative regime:

	Total Expenditure.
1890	$41,770,333
1891	40,793,208
1892	42,272,136
1893	40,853,728
1894	43,008,234
1895	42,872,338
1896	44,096,384
Total	$295,666,361
Average	$ 42,236,052

The Liberal administration, the careful administration, the economical administration, the administration who bled for the people's suffering and who are now bleeding the people, had an expenditure as follows:

1897	$42,972,756
1898	45,334,281
1899	54,542,635
1900	52,717,467
1901	57,982,866
1902	63,970,800
1903	61,746,572
Total	$379,267,377
Average	$ 54,181,054
Excess Conservatives—
For seven years	$83,601,016
Average	11,943,002

Now, with such a record as that it is very natural that the people of the country should wonder how they manage to get clear of the money, but when we come to examine the figures in detail we find that there have been increases in every direction, as the following table will show:

INCREASE OF EXPENDITURE.

	1896.	1903.	Increase.	Per cent.
Administration of Justice	758,270	959,948	201,678	26·6
Arts, Agriculture and Statistics	210,878	436,402	225,524	107·
Census, 1891	549,992	1,149,879	599,587	109·
Civil Government	1,396,628	1,554,792	158,164	11·
Fisheries	427,251	527,829	100,578	235·
Immigration	120,199	642,914	522,715	435·
Quarantine	95,247	263,331	168,084	177·
Lights and Coast Surveys	466,058	964,144	498,086	107·
Miscellaneous	172,363	528,231	355,868	207·
Ocean and River Service	181'452	417,137	235,685	130·
Public Works	1,299,769	4,065,553	2,765,784	213·
" Collected Revenue	159,460	562,404	402,944	253·
Railways and Canals Collected Revenue	3,826,226	7,221,705	3,395,479	91·3

Through all of these departments there is an increase which averages just about as the census averaged; that is to say that a public work which is going to cost the people of Canada under Conservative administration $1 is going to cost $2 under this administration. When our hon. friends opposite boast of their increased aggregates of their increased revenue and of their magnificent surpluses they might as well tell the whole story at once and say that they have made their expenditure and taxation fit in with each other. What is the justification of the whole thing? The justification is the surplus. If you challenge any hon. gentleman opposite in this House or out of it as to the administration, he points to the fact of the enormous surplus. That is the one justification; that is the one answer. You may take the government on any point you please, you may point to a record that ought to earn for it the condemnation of the people and the answer is 'good times and surpluses.' Conservatives do not aim at surpluses. Conservatives understand that the policy of the country ought to be that the revenue should not be in excess of the expenditure, that it is good financing to require that the taxation of the people should be reduced and the consequence was that during the period of good times which prevailed previous to 1896 the Conservative administration remitted taxation upon sugar and relieved the people to the following extent:

REMISSION OF TAXATION.

1891	$ 227,477
1892	5,200,000
1893	4,000,000
1894	4,821,000
1895	5,603,521
Total	$19,851,998

	Surpluses.	Deficits.
1891	$ 155,977
1892	1,354,555
1893		$1,210,232
1894		4,153,875
1895		330,551
Net deficit		$4,182,227
Total taxation remitted		$15,669,771

Instead of hanging this up and piling up surpluses they left the money in the pockets of the people, a place where it will do far more good. After providing for the deficits which occurred at the close of that period there was an amount of money remitted to the people of this country of $15,669,771 under Conservative administration. Was it not better for the people that the Finance Minister of that day had not so much pride in surpluses? Was it not a better governed country, a more happily governed country when the ambition of the Finance Minister of that day was to make his revenue and expenditure agree and not to have his revenue enormously in excess of his expenditure? It was more scientific financing. It was better financing in the opinion of those hon. gentlemen who are now supporting my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in his course in gathering up surpluses. I have been quoting considerably from my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have no doubt that within his recollections he has treasured up some of his eloquent utterances on the subject of surpluses. I would be very glad to call to his attention and to the attention of the administration as well some of the opinions that were held and proclaimed by him in the past in reference to surpluses. In 1882, for instance, Mr. Tilley had a surplus and the hon. gentleman representing Oxford was indignant about it. He was amazed that Mr. Tilley should boast of such a thing. He evidently knew that Mr. Tilley did not understand what an improper thing a surplus was. So, he addressed him in these words. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce who speaks as being decidedly in favour of a surplus at the present day talked in this fashion of our benighted friend, Mr. Tilley, when he had a surplus :

I ask how it was got. $1,100,000 we derived from two of the most odious and oppressive taxes which were ever imposed in a civilized country before under similar circumstances at least.

The taxes on breadstuffs and fuel. If he really wants to relieve the people, let him remove the taxes on breadstuffs and fuel.

The right hon. gentleman has been in power seven or eight years and he has not removed the taxes from breadstuffs and fuel. He was very much persuaded of their iniquity in 1882. Is it that the right hon. gentleman has seen the light since that time ? Is it possible that he can sit contentedly and quietly in the government and cheer the surpluses that are made up to a large extent from the duties on breadstuffs and fuel, from these two odious and obnoxious taxes whose imposition, was a disgrace to the former administration ? Yet, the right hon. gentleman sits there contentedly and quietly and smilingly assists in taking from the people of Canada and putting into surpluses, in the year of grace 1903, $226,524 on breadstuffs, and $1,914,330 on fuel. Then, there was another wise gentleman who knew of the iniquity of surpluses, a gentleman who has since passed to his rest, but who was a very prominent man in this House, the late Mr. Justice Mills, and he spoke in the same strain. Mr. Mills said :

He boasts of a surplus. I say that a government is not entitled to have a surplus.

There is no stimulus to economy when a large surplus remains in the hands of a government.

A large surplus invites to extravagance and has invited to extravagance in this country.

I wonder if it has recently invited extravagance. In the hands of this present government no doubt it no longer invites extravagance. The taxation and expenditure of this country have almost doubled in the hands of these hon. gentlemen who boast of the fact of having a surplus every year. Evidently in their hands a large surplus invites to extravagance and has invited to extravagance. But, there is a good reason for the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, the hon. Minister of Finance and others, why it was unquestionably advisable that they should not have surpluses.

A large surplus unduly burdens the people. The $16,500,000 which the Minister of Finance boasts of this year amounts to almost $3 per head of the population of Canada. The average family of six contributes $18 per year to swell the glory and the shoutings about surpluses of the Liberal party in this House to-day. From the poorest family in Canada $18 is exacted, which could be remitted to them, because there is no reason why the government should have that surplus, if it did not choose to have it. The government of Canada has taken out of the pockets of every family of this country the sum of $18 in order that they and their followers may swagger about this country, and boast that they have the greatest surplus that has been.

Mr. COWAN. And you would propose to increase the tariff so as to increase the surplus.

Mr. BELL. My hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) is not so green that he does not know that you can increase a tariff without increasing the revenue. If he does not know it, then I would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he speaks to enlighten the hon. gentleman on that point. A surplus takes money out of the possession of the people to whom money is worth six per cent, or seven per cent, or eight per cent, or nine per cent, or ten per cent per annum, and it puts it in the hands of the government whose money is only worth three per cent. A surplus diverts money from a position in which it could earn an average of seven per cent, to a position in which it can only earn three per cent. It is a diversion of a portion of the national wealth from a more productive to a less productive application. It is therefore mischevious. It causes great demands on the treasury ; it emboldens every man who wants to come to the administration with a scheme. Every land-grabber, every corporation broker, every one who is in a position to pull the wires here is emboldened, to do so, because he knows that in the hands of this administration there is a surplus this year of sixteen and a half millions of dollars.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have been boasting a great deal of the debt of this country. Probably nothing could be more unfair or more absurd, than the manner in which the Finance Minister of this government contrasts the record of this administration during the past six years of abounding and overflowing prosperity with the condition of Canada during the eighteen years of Conservative rule. During this period of abounding prosperity this government have managed to reduce the debt of Canada by $1,000,000, whereas the Conservative administration which made Canada, took it in the rough, built it up, furnished it, gave it a home, gave it all these things which are necessary to a civilized people, had to take some $6,500,000 a year to add it to the debt of this country. What has this government done with the $58,000,000 of surplus? What has it done in the way of the construction of great public works? Where are the great canal systems, or the great railway systems they have built? Sir, the Conservative government which came into power in 1878 and remained in power until 1896, gave Canada the Intercolonial Railway at a cost of $65,000,000; gave Canada her canal system at a cost of $36,000,000; assumed provincial debts to the amount of $10,400,000; built branches of the Intercolonial Railway at a cost of $20,500,000; assumed the cost of the deepening of the St. Lawrence, $2,500,000; paid for the Quebec and North Shore road, $2,250,000; paid for the cost of the Northwest rebellion, nearly $5,000,000; they paid all these sums amounting to $142,500,000 out of revenue, and they added to the debt of the country $118,000,000. And in face of this, all that the Minister of Finance can boast of to-night is that during these years of marvellous prosperity, the Liberal government have reduced the debt of Canada by one million dollars. The Minister of Finance must have very little respect for the great men of the past who represented the Liberal party in this country. These gentlemen opposite cannot have forgotten the Mackenzie regime. That government built no great public works in Canada. Surely the late Alexander Mackenzie was a good man, and a capable man, and his associates were very good men, but what was their record as to the public debt? Mr. Mackenzie did not live in a period when the tide of prosperity was flowing abundantly. In 1874, when he came to power the national debt was $108,000,000; in 1875 it was $116,000,000; in 1876 it was $124,000,000; in 1877 it was $133,000,000; and in 1878, when the Mackenzie government left power, the national debt was $140,000,000, an increase of $32,000,000 during the Mackenzie regime, when some of the gentlemen who are now ministers of the Crown were at that time also administering the affairs of Canada. In so far as the Liberal record in connection with our debt is concerned, this government seems to owe a very great deal more to the good fortune which has put them in power during a period of world-wide prosperity, than to any special wisdom with which they have conducted national affairs.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have fairly enough reviewed all the points raised by the Finance Minister. I have dealt with his surpluses, with his taxation, with his trade proposals, with his tariff reform. While I congratulate the government on showing some disposition even in a very faint-hearted fashion to grapple with the trade question of this country, I am perplexed to know why it is that they should resort to the old expedient of delegating their powers of government to a commission. Whatever else this government may be known as in history, it will certainly be known as a government which eclipsed all others in the employment of commissions. No matter what the inquiry to be made, or the work to be done, a commission is employed by them, and even when it has to make up its mind as to policy it resorts to a commission to suggest that policy. Well, judging by something that has occurred recently perhaps it is as well that the government should not trust to itself, but that it should call in some of its wise men to do its thinking for it. Last session the government promised a commission to inquire into transportation, and as to the best and most economical means of carrying Canadian products through Canadian ports. But the government would not wait for that commission; nothing could wait; time could not wait, and so they went on to decide on a railway policy without the assistance of that commission. And, Sir, judging of what we have learned of that railway policy in the course of two sessions of parliament, of its innumerable and fatal defects; we cannot help regretting that the government did not adhere to its first determination, and let this commission decide on its railway policy. Perhaps it would be well for us at this time to conclude, that it may be in the highest interests of Canada that this government should not allow itself to make up its mind on the subject of its tariff policy, but should delegate that duty to a commission. If that commission be well chosen, it may be that it will be better for us that the government should avail of such an opportunity of letting itself down from that position of uncertainty and hesitancy which it has occupied for the past eight years, under cover of the findings of a commission. There is no doubt that the government to-day recognize the fact that protection is and is to be the policy of this country. They recognize the fact that all the progressive nations of the world are making headway under that policy. They must know and recognize the fact that for Canada to go on and fulfil her destiny, she must not abandon her industrial development, but must increase it, and thus hasten the day when the country will pass out of a position of hesitancy and doubt into a position where the government will have a clear and well-defined policy, and will follow it to the end. For this reason, although it is an undignified and unsatisfactory method, we shall welcome the opportunity which the appointment of a commission will afford to assist the government in deciding upon the step upon which it has probably already in its own mind decided.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I believe the House was occupied to a rather late hour last night, and after listening to two such speeches as we have had to-day, they will be disposed to thank me for moving the adjournment of the debate. I therefore move that the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 8, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. BENJAMIN RUSSELL moved :

That the petition of John F. Stairs and others, presented this day, praying to be permitted to lay before the House the petition of the provisional directors of the Alliance Bank of Canada for the passing of an Act to extend the time within which to obtain a certificate from the Treasury Board, as required by section 14 of the Bank Act, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for presenting petitions for Private Bills, be read and received, and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

He said : I ask leave of the House to make this motion with reference to the petition which I presented a moment ago on behalf of the Alliance Bank for the extension of the time within which the company are required by their charter to obtain the customary certificate from the Treasury Board. The reason the petition was not presented earlier and the legislation obtained is that the parties have been hoping from day to day that they would be able to get along without any extension of time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman's remarks are quite inaudible here.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know that my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has such confidence in me that he will know what I say is all right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not even hear that brilliant sally.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am asking for leave to have a preliminary petition, which I presented a few moments ago, referred to the Standing Orders Committee for the purpose of determining whether the petitioners should have leave to have a Bill introduced here for the purpose of extending their time for getting their charter under the Banking Act. This is a banking company incorporated under the Act of last session. They anticipate that they will not be able by the 4th October, the limit fixed by the law, to complete their organization and be in a position to obtain their certificate.

Mr. BELL.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) would be justified in his request, because much more serious action was taken by the government in the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. Certainly there should be no objection from that side of the House.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Notwithstanding that, I am going to raise a qualified objection, not to the immediate motion, but to the practice. It is not good practice to extend the time for the organization of banking companies. We have done it once or twice this session, and I suppose we will have to be reasonably consistent and permit the hon. gentleman to get his Bill as others have done. I think that the rule requiring a bank to be organized within a year of the granting of its charter is a wise rule. I suppose that the practice is objectionable in the case of any company, but the principle of parties having banking charters and hawking them around is very unsound. I think that in view of the present banking conditions of the country, if any parties want to organize a bank they should have the men, the capital and the organization in sight before coming to parliament. If, after getting a charter, they are not able to organize within the time prescribed by the Banking Act they should have an exceptionally strong reason for asking an extension of time. We have granted the privilege in one or two instances, and to be reasonably consistent I suppose we will have to permit the hon. gentleman to have his Bill. I, however, would ask hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to recognize the soundness of the principle, and not encourage these applications hereafter.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON. I am glad to see that the hon. the Finance Minister takes a different view in regard to this from the view he took last year. It will be within the memory of the House that I moved an amendment to the charter when it came up last year, and protested against the numerous applications that were being made for new bank charters. I think that the statements that I then made are well borne out by results, because, so far as I am aware, only one of the nine charters granted last year has yet produced any result, and it appears that, as the Finance Minister has said, after hawking around these charters year by year the promoters are unable to procure the funds requisite to establish these new banks. I am glad that the matter has come up again, because it will afford me another opportunity of perhaps pressing more effectually on the House the view which I expressed last year, and I would take this opportunity of intimating to the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Russell) that possibly when the Bill reaches the proper stage I may again present my amendment and may ask him, under the new condition of things, if he will not accept it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to say that as far as the gentlemen interested in this Bill are concerned, I do not think they are deserving of the expression which has been used by the Minister of Finance and my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), because, knowing them as I do, I can assure the House that they have not been hawking these charters around. So far as I am aware, they are not disposed to do that. I was not aware that this matter was coming up to-day, my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Russell) did not notify me, and perhaps I am speaking without the book, but I believe that the conditions which have made it necessary to ask for the extension of this charter are conditions which not only afforded ground for an amendment to the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill, but they are conditions which have made it necessary for this country to effect a temporary arrangement for three years of loans on the public credit of this country. This bank received this charter last year, and every one knows that the condition of the money market since then has made it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to float any enterprises. While I agree with the Finance Minister that, as a general rule, and in ordinary cases, extensions of this kind should not be granted; and while I thoroughly agree that bank charters should not be hawked around the country, nevertheless I do not think the circumstances in this case call for any reproach of that kind, and the condition of the money market seems to me to make the case absolutely exceptional. I simply say this because I think I know the gentlemen who are connected with this company in Nova Scotia, and they really do not deserve any such reproach.

Mr. FIELDING. In the remarks which I made I had no reference to particular individuals. I did not even know who the gentlemen connected with the charter were, but now that I begin to think, I remember one of them, and certainly he would not be open to any such reproach. My remarks had no reference to the individuals connected with the charter, and certainly with regard to the only gentleman whose name I ever heard connected with it, I would not suggest the idea of his hawking a bank charter. I was speaking generally, because we have had a number of applications of this kind. Nothing was further from my thoughts than to refer to any individual. I was referring to the general rule.

Motion (Mr. Russell) agreed to.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John's and Iberville). (Translation.) Moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) an Act in amendment of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Will the hon. gentleman kindly explain?

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. (Translation.) The Bill is the same as the Bill I introduced last session and also the session previous. Its object is to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme and Exchequer courts to federal matters exclusively. The Bill is set down exactly in the same terms as the above mentioned Bill. As my hon. friend from Montmorency is aware, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Sir Elzéar Taschereau, has had the opportunity of commenting upon this question in Montreal and of expounding his own views as to its purport. He acknowledged that the jurisdiction of these courts should be restricted to Dominion matters. Moreover, a number of newspapers in Ontario, the 'Toronto News' among others, have declared themselves favourable to the idea of restricting the jurisdiction of these courts to federal cases. These utterances have induced me to reintroduce this Bill, believing as I do that the most enlightened people in Ontario would join hands with the people of the province of Quebec in asking that the Supreme and Exchequer courts shall not decide any but Dominion and maritime cases, and litigation as between two provinces, or as between the individuals and the government of a province, or as between the inhabitants of a province and the authorities of another or several other provinces. I have previously discussed this question in this House and as my hon. friend from Montmorency has without any doubt followed closely the discussion, he must be familiar with the Bill I now introduce.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

I. C. R. PASSENGER RATES PER MILE.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Lefurgey—asked :

1. What is the local passenger rate per mile in effect on the Intercolonial Railway system ?

2. What is the through passenger rate per mile in effect from Montreal and Quebec to Atlantic ports ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railwys and Canals) :

1. The local passenger fares are based as follows : The first class fare is three cents (.03c.) per mile up to 100 miles ; and from 100 up to 400 miles the rate per mile is lessened until 400 miles is reached, when the rate is two cents (.02c.) per mile, or $8.00 first-class for 400 miles. This is the lowest rate per mile first class. For distances 800 miles and over the rate is two cents (.02c.) per mile first class. For any distance over 400 miles, but under 800 miles (say 600 miles) the rate is based by adding the tariff for 400 miles—$8.00 to the tariff for 200 miles—$4.78, making $12.78 first-class fare for 600 miles. The second-class rate per mile is two-thirds of the first-class rate. Return fare is one and one-half first-class fare.

2. In regular through fares Montreal and Quebec to Atlantic ports, the rate per mile is as follows : Montreal to St. John, 1 91-100 cents first class ; 1 23-100 cents second; Montreal to Halifax, St. John, 1 97-100 cents first; 1 25-100 cents second. Quebec to St. John, 1 84-100 cents first; 1 23-100 cents second. Quebec to Halifax, 2 07-100 cents first ; 1 38-100 cents second. Regular fares are as follows : Montreal to St. John, $14.15 first; $9.10 second; Montreal to Halifax, $16.50 first; $10.50 second. Quebec to St. John, $10.65 first, and $7.10 second. Quebec to Halifax, $14.00 first ; $9.35 second. On steamship passengers Montreal and Quebec to St. John, 1 01-100 cents first ; 74-100 of a cent second. Montreal to Halifax, 90-100 of a cent first ; 66-100 of a cent second. Quebec to St. John, 1 30-100 cents first ; 95-100 of a cent second. Quebec to Halifax, 1 11-100 cents first ; 81-100 of a cent second. Steamship fares as follows : Montreal and Quebec to Halifax, $7.50 first, and $5.50 second.

Mr. CLARKE asked:

1. Is the Postmaster General aware that in the city of Toronto certain superior officials of the post office department, in Toronto, are, or have been, canvassing letter carriers who have not taken advantage of the provisions of the Post Office Act, chapter 28, 1902, and amending Act, to induce them to petition the government to further extend the time under which letter carriers or other officials may avail themselves of the provisions of the foregoing named Acts?

2. Is it a fact that since the first of May, 1904, a petition has been presented for signature to Toronto letter carriers or other officials who have not taken advantage of the provisions of the Acts hereinbefore named, praying for an extension of the time for availing themselves of the provisions of said Acts?

3. What is the name or names of the officer or officers canvassing and soliciting such signatures?

4. By whose instructions, or by what authority is such officer or officers making such solicitation or canvass?

5. Is the officer, or are the officers, who have engaged in this work of canvassing or soliciting, officers who come within the class of officials whose salary or salaries may be affected by their taking advantage of the Acts hereinbefore named ?

Hon. C. S. HYMAN (Acting Minister of Public Works) :

1. No.
2. No. The department has no knowledge of any such petition being presented for signature.
3. The department is assured that no officer has canvassed or solicited signatures.
4. The question is irregular in stating that there has been such solicitation or canvass. No instructions or authority of any kind have been given to any one to make such solicitation or canvass.
5. The question is irregular in asserting that officers are engaged in such work.

With general reference to the whole question it may be said that certain letter carriers being badly advised failed to take advantage of the Act in question within the prescribed time and have recently sought the advice of some experienced clerks in the Toronto post office. These clerks being wholly dis-interested themselves, but taking an interest in the welfare of the letter carriers, have, it is said, expressed to the letter carriers asking such advice, that the Act was to the advantage of the letter carriers, and that they, the clerks in question, if in the letter carriers' position, would have gladly availed themselves of its provisions. In this way the department understands some of these letter carriers have reached the conclusion that they made a serious mistake in not coming in under the Act, and are now petitioning, asking for such legislation as will permit of their doing so.

THE DOUKHOBORS.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. Has Professor James Mavor, of Toronto University, been commissioned to investigate or settle a dispute between the Doukhobors and the Dominion government ?
2. If so, what is the nature of the dispute ?
3. Has Professor Mavor's report been received ?
4. If so, what are its findings ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of Interior) :

1. No.
2. 2, 3 and 4. Answered by No. 1.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I ask the attention of the Minister of Militia to a return which he brought down the other day in connection with the investigation held into a complaint against one of the officers of the 9th battalion. The report is incomplete in that it does not contain several letters which were referred to in the testimony, and which were produced at the investigation as exhibits 'Q,' 'R,' 'S,' 'T.' I would like the minister to supplement the report by bringing these exhibits down.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will take the hon. gentleman's statement from 'Hansard,' and have the matter looked into.

CANADIAN FISHERY REGULATIONS.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if he has any announceent to make now in reference to the statement I made in the House yesterday ? The letter I referred to then has been published in the newspapers of the United States and it is doing great harm.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will give an answer to the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

VENTILATION OF THE CHAMBER.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. May I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that at the present moment the thermometer in the chamber registers seventy degrees ? When formerly the windows upstairs were open, we could get fresh air and now that the hot weather is coming on, I do not see why arrangements should not be made to keep the windows open. I do not know whether or not it is the intention of the Minister of Public Works to roast us out, but I can remind him that he and his friends will have to take their share of the roasting. These new fan wheels are in operation only when the House is not in session, but with the galleries crowded as to-day and the windows closed, and several hundred little stoves in here heating up the atmosphere, it is simply unbearable.

Hon. C. S. HYMAN (Acting Minister of Pulic Works). I regret exceedingly that we are making it too warm for the opposition, but I will immediately consult the architect of the department to see if it is possible to give relief.

Mr. SPEAKER. Since I have been appealed to, I would like to say that I have frequently called for fresh air with almost as much earnestness as at times I have to call for order, but I regret to say that it is almost as difficult to secure one as the other.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That the Speaker do now leave the chair, for the House to go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) who preceded me in this debate, was good enough to put a number of very explicit questions to me last evening. He was also good enough to introduce sundry quotations from speeches of mine into his own. So far as I could gather they seemed to fit in very badly, but that is a matter of detail. The hon. gentleman's thirst for knowledge is great; the hon. gentleman's need for knowledge is greater still. It will be my endeavour and my pleasure to satisfy the craving of the hon. gentleman. Before I sit down, I trust to be able to furnish him with full information on all matters as to which he has asked information, and likewise to supply him (and possibly some other gentlemen), with a good deal of other information for which he has not asked, but which it is very desirable that he should become acquainted with. In the meantime, I may observe that I have but one quotation to make, and there is but one thing that I desire to know at this moment in particular. If you will do me the honour, Mr. Speaker to refer to 'Hansard' of 1897, page 2177, you will find the following paragraph:

> I consider the argument of the free trader unanswerable. I believe at this moment that if Canada took a liberal step in the direction of free trade, it would go a long way to place her upon the road to the greatest prosperity. The reasons why I consider Canada should turn about and adopt a free trade policy are, (a) that we may free ourselves from the dominating influences of the United States; (b) on account of the failure of the national policy; (c) because of the startling revelations of the census.

I am advised by an hon. friend of mine now sitting in this House, that this particular paragraph is an extract from a newspaper report of a speech delivered in the town of Pictou, in the year 1891 or thereabouts, by a gentleman of the name of Adam Carr Bell.

Mr. Speaker, I am filled with a burning and consuming anxiety to know: (a) Whether the said Adam Carr Bell is a namesake or possibly a godchild of the hon. member for Pictou; (b) whether it is possible that some pestilent Grit may have succeeded in procuring the habilements of the hon. member for Pictou, and have masqueraded before the good citizens of Pictou as the only true, original and reliable old Adam; (c) I desire to know from the hon. member for Pictou who the fellow is anyway, and what he thinks of the statements and sentiments contained in the paragraph which I have just read. The hon. gentleman does not appear disposed to gratify my laudible curiosity.

Mr. BELL. If the hon. gentleman will permit me—I thought he was going on with his speech—I may inform him that he has read a garbled report of a lecture delivered by me upon the subject of speculative free trade, the opening paragraph of which announced that no reference whatever to practical free trade as a policy for Canada would be made. It was a lecture, not a speech, and was given from a strictly academic standpoint. I may say further that I never made a free trade speech in my life on any hustings or in any county. I took part, I am glad to say, in the campaign of 1878 in favour of the protectionist theory, and have supported that view on every occasion on which I have appeared in public from that day to this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The form of words the hon. gentleman used in the paragraph I have just quoted is singularly open to misconception if he intended it to be regarded as the statement of a purely speculative opinion, but if I have not been further misinformed, the hon. gentleman about the year 1891 was rather coquetting with the Liberals in that country——

Mr. BELL. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—which may possibly have influenced to some extent his speculative views on the question of free trade.

Sir, I am happy to say that there were several things said by the hon. gentleman last night with which I am able to agree. They were, so to speak, some nuggets picked out of the flood—what shall I call it?—of alluvial matter poured forth by the hon. gentleman. For instance, the hon. gentleman was good enough to state that the present tariff is a great revenue—producing tariff, a statement which I entirely endorse and concur in. The hon. gentleman was further good enough to state that our imports are paid for and limited by our exports—another statement with which under normal conditions and with certain limitations, I entirely agree. In the third place, the hon. gentleman declared that you can easily increase taxes while diminishing revenue—a statement in which I entirely concur. He was likewise good enough to warn us that surpluses are dangerous things—a matter on which, considering the experience of himself and his friends during the three years immediately preceding the year 1896, he was of course well qualified to speak. Lastly I may add I heartily and most unqualifiedly endorse the statement of my hon. friend that after men have been in opposition for a certain period, say six or eight years, they are likely to talk unmitigated rot; and the hon. gentleman not only made the statement but proved it to the hilt. It may be that the hon. gentleman did not entirely see what all these statements and admissions involved; and on that point, before I sit down, I shall have a word or two to say.

But although there were these points of agreement between myself and my hon. friend there were also points of difference between us. The hon. gentleman said that we increased the taxes. I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to a little confusion of mind. Taxes and revenue are not the same thing, as he seems to have supposed. We did not increase the taxes; we greatly increased the revenue and greatly reduced the taxes. The effect of the British preference was far-reaching; it was enormously to reduce the rate of taxation in this country, both nominally and still more really. Then, Sir, for the first place as hon. gentlemen opposite now appear to admit, it went a very long way indeed to convert the entire tariff into a revenue tariff. It did Canada a great deal of good indirectly by creating the best possible feeling towards us in the minds of our very best and largest customers, and indeed it may be said in many cases to have secured for us a substantial though not a legal preference in the English market. For myself I have always advocated the preference as being much more in the interest of the Canadian consumer than of the English producer, though I was quite willing to benefit the latter also if the opportunity should occur and I admit frankly I was very sorry that it was found necessary to make any change in it. The hon. gentleman declared that at this present moment all the world was prosperous, and that our prosperity was merely a part of what was being enjoyed all over the world. Sir, I was under the impression that the people of England at this moment were suffering from a rather serious depression. I was under the impression that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had recently found it necessary, in a time of peace, to increase the income tax, and to bring it back almost to the limit of the old and very heavy war tax. I was under the impression that English consols had fallen from 113 or thereabouts before the war to something like 85 within the last few months, about the lowest figure which those great securities have touched in the last 50 years.

The hon. gentleman talked about Germany also. I was under the impression that Germany for two or three years back has been suffering from a very severe commercial depression, from which it is only beginning slowly to recover. He talked of the United States. The merchants and the manufacturers in Canada have been dinging into our ears for some time past that there is great danger of a very severe depression in the United States, and have been begging us to take precautions to guard against such a depression. He might have added that the great commonwealth of Australia has been suffering from a most prolonged drought and other depressing circumstances for an unusually long time. As England, Germany, the United States and Australia are by far the best customers we have $420,000,000 out of our whole trade of $460,000,000 being done with these countries, it does not appear to me that the argument that all the rest of the world with which we have dealings is prosperous fits very well in the mouth of the hon. gentleman at the present time. Sir, the exact reverse is the fact while these great countries have been suffering from serious reverses and depressions, it has been the good fortune of Canada, and Canada alone, to maintain her progress.

The hon. gentleman—and I must take issue with him here—went some distance out of his way to condemn the proposition of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to issue a commission to investigate the condition of the tariff. The hon. gentleman misapprehended, I think, the statement of the Minister of Finance. What the Minister of Finance had in his mind—and I thought he made it sufficiently clear—was not to relegate the duties and powers of this government to any commission at all, but to appoint, as we did several years ago, a committee of our own number, to visit as many as possible of the cities and towns of Canada and see for ourselves how we could best deal with the industrial conditions of the country. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman is perhaps not very well acquainted with the fiscal history of Canada for the last eight and twenty years. If he had been, it might have occurred to him that the condemnation which he attempted to level at my hon. friend applied with far greater force to those gentlemen who in 1878-1879, when they came into office, did not endeavour to settle the tariff themselves, but employed several paid commissioners sitting in Ottawa many months to draw up a tariff of which the Finance Minister of the day was but the mouthpiece; and I will tell the hon. gentleman this further fact, which he is perhaps not aware of, that that commission, though nominated by the government of the day, was appointed by a certain committee of manufacturers, and that that committee of manufacturers, in one instance at least, paid their deputy for his services a great deal more than the government paid him.

Sir, there was one point slightly alluded to by the hon. gentleman, on which I am disposed to agree. I do not advise the people of this country to count on a continuance of the most remarkable unbroken prosperity which we have enjoyed the past few years. No man in Canada has had better cause to know than I that, as a rule, cycles of good years are succeeded by cycles of bad years. No man knows better that a series of fat years is generally followed by a series of lean years. I can tell my hon. friend also this. I have never contended that the tariff is the sole factor in creating or maintaining prosperity. There are many factors which go to make up national prosperity. You may have a good tariff and a bad land system, and you may have a good land system and a bad tariff. Or you may have both good together, and yet, by the operation of causes over which you have no control, by being involved, for instance, in war with your neighbours, or by a hundred other conflicting influences which may militate against your prosperity, you may not have such a satisfactory condition of affairs as you would desire. I know also that this country of ours is not very easy to govern. No country probably, under federal rule, is. And I do not pretend to say that you can govern for seven or eight years a country like Canada and give no cause for criticism. Mistakes may be made and may have been made. Experiments may have failed. Faults or follies may have been committed. The government do not pretend to be infallible. It is even conceivable that men who have never sat in cabinets, who have never known what it was to be responsible for the good conduct, administration and development of a country extending from ocean to ocean—it is even conceivable that such gentlemen may at times commit errors, and may say things that they will afterwards have occasion to regret, and commit themselves to policies which they may afterwards find out to be absurd.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is talking from experience.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I am not. I have very little to withdraw, unless indeed it may be that at one time—a long time ago, and probably before the hon. gentleman had much to do with political life—I had certain affiliations and dealings with the Conservative cause. But unless I am entirely mistaken, there was a time when my hon. friend himself was a highly respectable young man, when he taught in the Sunday school, and took the chair for his worthy relative the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), and even canvassed the county for him. I agree with my hon. friend from Pictou that this is a proper time for us to take stock, to examine our resources and to see how far we are justified in committing the country to the great undertaking into which the government are proposing to embark. Now, I notice that my hon. friend from Pictou—and therein my hon. friend only did as most hon. gentlemen on the other side do when they rise in this House—did profess great, even extreme delight, at the extreme prosperity of the country. Like the others too, he gave thanks to Providence that he was not as other men—not as those wicked Grits who could never find a good word to say for what—how did he call them?—our illustrious predecessors did who held the reins of power before us. But after having professed his extreme delight in our present financial condition, I notice that, following the example of those other gentlemen, he proceeded to the best of his power to detract, belittle and minimize the prosperity of the country. The truth is, I fear, that the prosperity of the country at this present moment is gall and wormwood to those hon. gentlemen. I did watch their faces attentively, as the hon. gentleman did me the honour to watch mine, when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance was unfolding word by word and step by step every proof, every indication men could well ask for, of the extreme prosperity of this country. And if they were delighted I can only say they are the most admirable experts at concealing their feelings in their countenances I have ever seen. I fear much that the hon. gentleman and his friends are a good deal in the same frame of mind as that in which the habitans of Lower Canada were in the year of grace 1837, when the St. Lawrence would not freeeze, and the government were able to make use of that great river to transport their troops from point to point. Le bon Dieu, they said, n'est pas un bon patriot. I am inclined to believe that in like manner every hon. gentleman opposite, if he spoke the truth, would say: it is very hard of Providence to be so kind to these demoralizing Grits. The adjective that they usually couple with the substantive Grit is, I think, somewhat shorter and stronger and less parliamentary than the one I use, but nevertheless I think that my expression, 'demoralizing' perhaps describes the whole situation a little the better.

The hon. gentleman took me severely to task because, as he said, while he was calling my attention to certain things, which I ought to have laid seriously to heart, I was smiling. Sir, the impeachment is true. I was smiling. Certain recollections had occurred to my mind, and I shall tell him what they were. I remembered two remarks made by two very eminent men with whom I was formerly acquainted, which, I think, were admirably descriptive of Conservative feeling and methods; and when the hon. gentleman was 'rooting and routing,' to use a Scotch phrase, among our surpluses, and proving to his own satisfaction that it was a great iniquity for us to have $57,000,000 surpluses when they had none, I could not but recollect the remark made by the late lamented Jos. Rymal namely, that he would rather meet a she-bear robbed of her whelps than a Conservative out of office. There also occurred to my mind, when my hon. friend was lamenting the enormous amount of surpluses going into such unworthy hands, another remark made by the late lamented Sir John Macdonald on a certain occasion when, addressing an appreciative audience, he likened himself to a boy who was throwing down acorns, and in his own picturesque language observed to his hearers that if they wished to save their bacon they must divvy up and share the acorns. Sir, I can well understand how the sight of my hon. friends' surpluses and the spectacle of those golden acorns rolling on the ground—and none for them—must have harrowed the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. And then to see them garnered into the public treasury instead of being generously distributed among the faithful. It was not what they were used to—and they felt it.

The hon. gentleman's mode of arithmetic is simple and in a certain sense effective. I listened attentively to his review of the financial position, and I can say this for him, that the rule he applies certainly saves a great deal of trouble. It is a simple rule. You have only to debit everything and credit nothing and report the result. The hon. gentleman's argument matched his arithmetic. His criticism was a belated criticism. It might have been pertinent—ten, twenty or even thirty years ago. But it is liable to this grave objection, that it ignores the most patent facts, it ignores the complete change of conditions. Sir, I have to tell the hon. gentleman that Canada to-day in 1904 is further apart from Canada as we found it in 1896 than the Canada of 1896 was from the Canada of 1866. And that is no idle rhetorical flourish. Sir the growth of the last eight years, in many ways far exceeds the growth of the thirty years preceding.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are, to my mind three great indicia by which to judge the prosperity of a country like Canada. All others are relatively insignificant—I do not pretend to say they are not of importance in their way, but, in my judgment, they shrink into insignificance beside these three. The first of these indicia is: How rapidly is the population, occupation of new and large areas of land advancing in the country. Next, what is the growth of the volume of trade? Next, what is the growth of the revenue of the country? I will add a fourth, which applies more particularly to my own province of Ontario? What is the condition of the farmers? What is the condition of the agricultural class? How many chattel mortgages remain on their farms? How many mortgages have been paid off? How as to the value of their lands? Still more important: How as to the saleability of their lands? The question I put to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House is this: Were the farmers of Canada ever, within the memory of living man—at least, since the Crimean war—as prosperous as they are to-day?

Now, I will proceed to analyse each of these indicia to which I have referred. I will take, first, the population. Here—and it is one of the few points on which we differ—here, I do differ, I differ very considerably, from some of the calculations submitted by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). He erred, it is true, on the right side. In his position, it is better, if he errs at all, to err on that side. But he has under-estimated, I think considerably, even seriously, the growth of population in Canada since 1896. I have here a rather curious and interesting statement which hon. gentlemen will find on page 450 of the first volume of the census of Canada of 1901. That statement gives in detail, not merely the number of immigrants, but the date on which the immigrants came to Canada and settled in Canada. And it is a curious and most significant fact that the number of immigrants who settled in Canada, and have remained here, in the last half of the decade included in the census, that is from 1896 to 1901, were nearly 100,000 more than those who came to and remained in Canada in the first half or the decade, or from 1891 to 1896. The precise actual facts are that in the decade from 1891-1901 234,000 immigrants came to Canada and remained there. Of these about 160,000 came in the latter half from 1896 to 1901 and 74,000 in the first half from 1891-1896. Sir, that is a pregnant and significant fact. It proves, in the first place, one thing to which I have called attention in this House more than once, and that is that, since this government came into power, the population of Canada has increased in ratio altogether greater than it did in the five, or even fifteen, years before. It proves another thing; it proves that the report of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) as to the number of immigrants who have settled in Canada during that time was almost literally and absolutely correct. And it proves, by inference I think, this—that if you are able to bring 100,000 more immigrants into the country, and keep them there, during the last half of the decade than during the first half, there is the strongest presumption that you have, at the same time, been able to retain in Canada your own people who, in former times, were leaving the country in such numbers. The self-same causes that enabled you, as I have said, to keep 100,000 more immigrants in Canada, contributed most powerfully to prevent any great exodus from Canada during those five years. There are other matters in connection with this table to which, on another occasion, I may refer, matters of importance, matters of interest. But I have a word or two to say in that connection with respect to the other matter of which I spoke, and that is the enormous area of new land and territory which, within the last few years, has been brought into cultivation or into occupation. But, first, let me call attention to the fact that, in the three years that have just elapsed, the years 1901, 1902 and 1903, we have brought into Canada, and, there is every reason to believe we have settled in Canada, and retained in Canada, 244,892 immigrants. Sir, I am not blind to the fact that quantity is not everything. I am happy to be able to inform the House —and that is a point on which also I shall have something to say later on—that the quality of these immigrants is equal to the quantity, and Canada may congratulate herself, not only on having the largest immigration she has ever known, but by far the best immigration, composed of the best class, composed of the wealthiest class, we have ever seen come into Canada. As to area being occupied and likely to be brought under cultivation—another matter to which I attach great importance—hon. gentlemen will see that, in the three years referred to, 64,005 homesteads were taken up, equal to an acreage of 10,240,000 acres. There were sales made by various corporations during the same three years of 7,051,833 acres, without counting the large amount known to have been purchased from private parties. This means that over 17,250,000 acres, mostly new and virgin land, have passed from the control of the companies or of the Crown into the hands of actual settlers. I would like the House to consider what that means, and what justification it affords for what might otherwise be considered the too roseate views which gentlemen on this side of the House have expressed as to the future of Canada. I find that by the last census the total amount of occupied land in the great province of Ontario was very little over 21,000,000 acres, and of that, less than 14,000,000 were improved. So that, practically speaking, we have, within the last three years, added to the available area of Canada an extent of land equal, and more than equal to the whole cultivated area of the great province of Ontario. Sir, I say these are most pregnant facts. And, if you will compare the influx of immigrants and the magnitude of the sales which have been made in the period from 1896 down to the present time, with the actual results of homesteads that were taken up and of the sales that were made during the period from 1885 to 1895 then, those who choose to study the history of this country with something like a pretense to fairness will understand why it was that we who then sat on the other side of the House found little to admire or commend, found little ground to talk of the prosperity of Canada in those days.

Sir, I say again these are most pregnant facts and although I shall have more to say on the point of policy hereafter, still at the same time the mere circumstance that we have been able, as this return shows, to keep in Canada with scarcely an exception the immigrants that were brought there during the last half decade, is a very conclusive evidence of the soundness of the policy we are now pursuing and of the great results that may be expected to accrue from it. I have looked into this matter with some care. I believe that the exodus, if not completely stopped is at any rate balanced by the number of repatriated Canadians returning to Canada year after year. I have not the slightest doubt in my own mind that taking the average of the last seven or eight years, partly owing to the cessation of the exodus, partly owing to the large number of immigrants who have been brought in, the average up to this year of 1904 will, in all human probability equal an increase of 150,000. Some years it may be less, some years it may be more, but on the whole eight years I believe on the present calculation that our present population is fully up to 6,000,000 or at any rate will be by the conclusion of the current year. Further than that, we have effectually wiped away the disgrace that the best and the flower of our population were leaving us to seek their homes in a foreign land.

Now Sir, as to the increase of trade,—and here I ask pardon of my friends because owing to the lines taken up by the hon. gentleman who preceded me (Mr. Bell). I must go over ground already traversed by my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding). In seven years I said that the growth of trade of Canada had increased more than double what it had increased in the thirty years before ; it is a mere matter of arithmetic. In the interval between 1866 and 1896 a period of 30 years, the growth of trade was a little over $100,000,000, if indeed it was over that at all. In the interval between 1896 and 1904 is well up to $220,000,000, being, as I said more than twice as much as the total growth in the 30 years before that interval. Some of the hon. gentlemen opposite take a different view from myself on this question of exports and imports. I for my part am of the opinion that it is highly desirable that the imports of a country should balance or thereabouts with its exports, and I am not frightened if the imports should occasionally exceed the exports. In my judgment the fact that the imports and exports are very close together is not a proof that we have been losing but rather a proof that the people of Canada are getting good value for their money, rather a proof that trade is in a wholesome condition than anything else. But for the benefit of these hon. gentlemen, of whom I dare say there are some, who may conscientiously believe that it is a matter of the greatest importance to the country that the exports should exceed the imports, I desire to present this table of figures. I have here a table of the total imports into Canada and the total exports from Canada during the seven years beginning on the 30th of June, 1890, and ending on the 30th of June, 1896. Sir, deducting settlers' effects which cost us nothing as you know, we imported in round numbers $834,469,000 in seven years.

We exported during the same time goods to the value of $779,871,000.

That Sir, was under the national policy, under a highly protective policy.

In the seven years from 1897 to 1903, both included we imported, less settlers' effects, $1,230,000,000 of gross imports.

We exported during the same time $1,286,000,000.

In other words under the last seven years of the national policy our imports exceeded our exports by over $50,000,000. Under the seven years of our policy our exports exceeded our imports by an equal sum. Personally I do not attach any great importance to that but as some hon. gentlemen opposite appear to do so, it is well that they should be made acquainted with the actual state of the case.

Now Sir, I come to an interesting point, a doubly interesting point, inasmuch as on it depends, to a very considerable extent, the justification of this government for proposing to you to engage in an enterprise that may well be supposed to tax the utmost resources of this country I refer to the growth of revenue. The growth of our revenue during the past seven years has been far greater than it appears on the surface. Sir, the gross revenue is but an imperfect test. An increase in gross revenue may very well coincide with a loss of net revenue. The true test that I propose to apply is the growth of the net revenue in the last seven years. How stands the account to-day ? It is a curious and instructive statement and for reasons which will presently appear, in order to make it more complete and perfect, I have gone back to the year 1871.

In 1871 the gross revenue of Canada was $19,335,000, and what may be called the fixed charges, the charges for interest of debt, the subsidies to provinces, the sinking funds and collection of revenue, amounted to $11,012,000 leaving a net revenue in 1871 of $8,322,000 in round numbers. The exact figures are as follows :

Total revenue for 1871....	$19,335,000
Interest on debt....	5,591,959
Subsidies to provinces....	2,624,949
Sinking Fund....	421,666
Collection of revenue....	2,374,114
Fixed charges....	$11,012,688

In 1896 our gross revenue had increased to $36,616,000, and our fixed charges of the same sort as those to which I have alluded had increased to $26,333,000, without taking into account payments to Indians, which are chiefly a treaty obligation, and called for $880,000 more.

In the 25 years from 1871 to 1896, therefore, the total net revenue of Canada, beginning at $8,322,000 had merely increased $1,000,000 to $9,405,000.

Sir, how stands the case to-day ? In 1903 the gross revenue of Canada had grown to $66,037,000 ; the charges of a fixed character amounted, included payments to Indians, to $33,400,000 in round numbers.

In other words we had a net revenue of $32,000,000 in 1903 as against a net revenue of $9,400,000 in 1896.

The gain in our net revenue in those seven years amounted to $23,000,000.

It is true our expenses had increased. Our gross expenses has increased $14,000,000. Our gross revenue had increased $30,000,000. Our net expenses, to which I shall come presently had increased $7,000,000 and our net revenue $23,000,000.

The hon. gentleman appears to think that all this is blameable. It may be or it may not be. The hon. gentleman quoted speeches of mine quoted speeches of the late Hon. Mr. Mills, quoted speeches of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and divers others, and he appeared to think that the fact that in 1896 we considered that it was expedient to retrench and practice economy was sufficient reason to condemn the expenditure now made without entering into any comparison or inquiry as to why the expenditure was incurred. I have to tell these hon. gentlemen that if, which God forbid, Canada should fall back into the slough from which we rescued her, the slough of stagnation, of depopulation, of disgrace and disohonur, if the time should come when you see the people of Canada leaving her by the million, when you see afterwards the immigrants who come to our shores leaving her by the million, when you find that it is doubtful if the increase in the population of Canada amounts to one-half of one per cent, and that in a country well able to support 50 or 100 millions, when that state of things returns, then I will say to these hon. gentlemen that they will be justified in quoting the speeches that we made under such a condition of things and saying that it is our bounden duty to exercise the strictest economy. I have several questions to ask these hon. gentlemen and I have several questions to ask the people of Canada in respect to this expenditure. First of all I have to ask : Is the expenditure justified ? Is it out of proportion to the increase in the wealth and population of the country ? Has it caused extravagance ? Has it produced undue taxation ? Why, Sir, these hon. gentlemen, during the seven years they sat opposite to us, have never that I can recollect, moved to reduce one single item of taxation that we have imposed on the people of Canada. They have done nothing more, it seems to me, than clamour to put more taxes on. Let us consider how much of this expenditure is justified by the growth of Canada, how much is justified by the increased cost of wages and material and how much of it is directly profitable. First of all, I would like to clear the deck. I would like to settle how much the government is really answerable for in this matter. I have here a statement of the receipts and expenditures in 1896 and a statement of the receipts and expenditures in the year of grace, 1903. I say, Sir, that if you choose to deduct the cross entries which do not cost the people of Canada one penny, and which can merely be regarded as a matter of book-keeping you will find that the total result is that there is an increase in the expenditure not of $14,000,000, but of $7,000,000, for whch I shall be prepared to render account. The whole expenditure on the Yukon of $1,500,000 is defrayed and well defrayed by the additional receipts which we obtained from that territory and will not cost the people of older Canada at any rate, one cent. Nor was that an expenditure for which there was any equivalent in 1896. The expenditure for railways and canals and collections on public works, amounted in 1896 to a total of $3,594,000. To-day we have to pay $3,750,000 more but we have received on the other hand, an additional revenue of $3,500,000, the difference being due to the fact that we have made our canals free and no revenue is received any longer from that quarter. We spend on the post office $440,000 more than we spent in 1896. We receive from the post office $1,430,000 more than we received in 1896.

Mr. CLANCY. By increased postage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By increased postage? By increased postage! By increased postage! I do not know what kind of business my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) who interrupted me carries on, but if he pays increased postage he is an exception, to everybody else in Canada. For sinking fund, which is really in all conscience a cross entry, we paid $565,000 more in 1903 than we did in 1896 and we receive from interest on our investments $650,000 more. Our customs cost us no doubt $335,000 more than they did, but our revenue from customs has increased by about $17,500,000. In miscellaneous items of various kinds we expend $700,000 more and we get very much nearer to a million than $700,000 more in return. If hon. gentlemen opposite will do me the favour to add these together—

An hon. MEMBER. It is not worth while.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quite sure hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to do it, but I am glad that I am able to bring these facts to their notice, because they will never from reading their newspapers, or from listening to their leaders have the slightest chance of realizing what they mean. Our cross entries amount to $7,290,000 on the debit side and $7,780,000 and more—if I choose to take a strict account—on the credit side. There remains $7,000,000 to be accounted for. I am prepared not merely to endure, but to invite the strictest criticism from these hon. gentlemen as to the way in which we have laid out these seven additional millions. How has it been done? Half a million has been expended as these records show, in the increased expenditure for immigration another half million more and the cognate services of agriculture and quarantine. Half a million has gone to improve the lighthouse service in the St. Lawrence so as to make that great channel of commerce safer and more commodious than it has hitherto been. Half a million has gone—and it never could have been better spent—to provide the people of the Northwest Territories, into which about 400,000 people have gone within the last four or five years, with proper facilities for carrying on the government in a reasonable and fair manner. All these are not merely justifiable, but they are highly productive expenditures. I take first of all the sums spent for immigration. You will add to that sum the expenditure for additional government in the Northwest Territories. We have been repaid ten fold: I venture to say that we have been repaid one hundred fold for all the additional expenditure which is incurred by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) or by the government at large for either of these particular purposes. Take settlers' effects for the last five years, mere settlers' effects which are to all intents and purposes a free gift to the people of Canada. Settlers' effects in these five years were received as follows:—

Year.	Value.
1899	$2,800,000
1900	3,065,000
1901	3,740,000
1902	4,580,000
1903	6,442,000

Being a total roughly of some $20,000,000 of a free gift to the people of Canada in the shape of settlers' effects, brought in by the people for whom we have been expending this trifling sum, and mark you that amount is probably not one-fifth of the capital which these people are bringing into this country. One of the most hopeful features of the present immigration is that it is very largely composed of people well to do in their own country, who not merely bring in settlers' effects, but a large amount of capital to promote the settlement and development of our country. But, that is a trifle. What of the immigrants themselves? What cash value will the honourable House put on the annual addition to our population of 100,000 immigrants? What annual addition to our income would it represent? What does it mean if we get 500,000 settlers and most of these of the very best class? It is indeed particularly interesting when you consider the class of immigrants which is now going into the United States to examine the returns of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior in respect to the nationality of the men who are now settling in Canada.

I have not time to go through them as fully as I would wish, but I will take simply this last year in which 128,000 immigrants were settled in Canada. Of these 128,000, there came from Great Britain 41,000, from the United States 49,000 ; about 10,000 from the Scandinavian countries, from Germany and from France and from Belgium ; first-class immigrants all of them. Out of that 128,000 over 100,000 were immigrants from countries of the highest standing in the world. How does that compare with the immigration now pouring into the United States ? I have here the Statesman's Year-book for 1904, and I see that while eighty per cent at least of the immigrants coming into Canada belong to the northern races, the best races of Europe ; of this total of 850,000 immigrants to the United States last year scarcely more than 180,000 or twenty per cent came from the British Isles, Germany, Sweden, Norway, and other countries I have spoken of. We get eighty per cent of immigrants of the first-class, and our friends on the other side of the border are receiving about twenty per cent of an equally valuable class of immigrants. I may add further—and having reference to the value of these immigrants it is a matter of first-rate importance—that the returns which I have also here, go to show that an enormous proportion of these immigrants which we get ; for more than the average proportion in an ordinary country, are able bodied young men or abled bodied young women. That is the true way to increase the wealth of this country. If you can put 100,000 such families in the Northwest ; if you can give them lands ; if you can provide the facilities for transport, it is almost impossible to estimate how much you will add to the national income, and how much you will add to the volume of trade, domestic as well as foreign.

The wheel has revolved. We are getting back to-day what we lost in the eighteen years from 1878 to 1896 ; we are getting back what we lost and we are keeping what we get.

Now, Sir, I am about to enter on a matter which I fear will not altogether please my hon. friends opposite, and yet it is necessary to discuss it. I want to compare the number of immigrants who are coming in now and who are staying in Canada (as we have the best grounds for believing) I want to compare them with the results of the immigration between 1880 and 1890. Between 1880 and 1890, according to the reports of these gentlemen opposite, we brought into Canada 886,000 immigrants all told :

Year.	No. of Immigrants.
1881	47,000
1882	112,000
1883	133,000
1884	103,000
1885	79,000
1886	60,000
1887	84,000
1888	88,000
1889	91,000
1890	75,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

That is the statement made and constantly repeated through several volumes of our predecessors' records, and they are careful to distinguish between the immigrants who declare their intention to settle in Canada and the large number of immigrants who were passengers for the United States. In all reason and conscience our natural increase during the ten years from 1880 to 1890, ought to have amounted to a million of souls, I will accept—accept for the moment only—that most fraudulent census of 1891, as to which I shall have a word or two to say presently. But I accept that, mind you, for arguments sake alone. That census claimed that the population of Canada had increased between 1880 and 1890, to the extent of 500,000. It is very doubtful if the population of Canada increased in these ten years by 300,000, but I give them the benefit of the doubt, and as you see I can well afford it. On their own showing, if they gained 500,000 people in these ten years, they lost 1,386,000. They brought in 886,000 immigrants ; they had a natural increase of 1,000,000 to account for; and where did these immigrants go ? Instead of showing an increase of 1,886,000, all they could show was an increase of 500,000 ; a loss on their own showing of 1,386,000. Where did they go ? Of these immigrants 700,000 are not accounted for. There is scarcely 140,000 of these immigrants who came in during that decade to be found in Canada. Even making all allowance for a large death rate, is is clear we lost 700,000 of these 886,000. They came—I was inclined at one time to the impressison that they did not come and that this was a purely bogus statement. I am now inclined to withdraw that. They came, they saw, they departed. It was Cæsar's case with a difference : Veni, Vidi, fugi. And our own population—and this is a matter of far greater importance in my eyes—where did they go ? Go seek for them in Boston, in Buffalo, in Chicago, in Dakota, Minnesota and Michigan. Look at the United States census returns and you will see that 440,000 were lost to Canada in those ten years. The actual facts are as follows : In the 30 years from 1870 to 1900 our losses were :

In the decade from 1870-1880	347,059
" " 1880-1890	443,070
" " 1890-1900 (mostly from 1890-1897)	445,551
In all	1,235,680

By United States census of 1900 it appears that there were at that date in the United States :

Born of Canadian parents on both sides	522,301
Born of Canadian fathers	425,617
Born of Canadian mothers	344,470

I beg to point out to the House, that I take not merely the increases recorded, but I make allowance for loss by death which it is necessary to replace in order to keep up the number that the United States census show——

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is himself entitled to the full credit for the whole of that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am entitled for the credit of it? Sir, I did not govern Canada during that period. To their great loss, the people of Canada threw out an honest and capable government of which Alexander Mackenzie was Prime Minister, and I grieve to say, I deeply grieve to say, that this is part of the price they had to pay for their folly. Remember, Sir, that those we lost were the flower of our people; we gave gold and we gained brass. Let these gentlemen opposite quibble and evade and prevaricate as they will, these facts are published in their own census returns; they are verified by the census returns of the United States, and they are confirmed from point to point by the last census of Canada. And, Sir, under those circumstances I am told that there are some who want to go back to these times, that there are even on the Liberal side some who are found to praise that policy and to call the men under whose guidance these things took place, statesmen worthy of applause. I point to one damning fact which of itself alone ought to be sufficient to convince the most incredulous. In 1896, ten years after that Canadian Pacific Railway was built and finished, the total number of homestead entries (abating cancelments) were 1,300 in that year—that was not a single case for they had been going down from year to year—and in 1903 the total number of homestead entries was not 1,300 but 31,000.

Under these circumstances these hon. gentlemen have the audacity to complain because I said that the country was being bled white. No truer words were ever put on paper, Sir. Do the hon. gentlemen know that during the thirty years from 1870 to 1900, Canada lost one million and a quarter of her people? The facts are there; they are in the United States returns, verified by our own returns; and you must add to that, if you want to ascertain the true loss, this fact, that the United States returns show that over and above the 1,181,000 Canadians found in that country at the time of their census, there were 522,000 who were described as having been born of Canadian parents on both sides, more than 400,000 who claimed a Canadian father, and nearly as many besides who claimed a Canadian mother. I am sorry that these things are true; it is an unfortunate showing; but there is no use of disguising the fact. And here I may call attention to a circumstance —and it is the one good thing that emerges from all these deplorable facts—which shows that the alarm expressed in some quarters as to the diminution of the birth-rate is somewhat uncalled for. How could the birth-rate be kept up while we were losing every year about 50,000 of our most vigorous population? But now I have no doubt, as I have said before, that the ladies of Canada will be equal to the occasion and will do their duty by their country. These are no idle guesses. I am speaking of accomplished facts in referring to what happened in the eighteen years from 1878 to 1896, and I have under my hand the record of what has occurred in the last seven years.

But, to return to our expenditures. I suppose nobody will dispute that an expenditure of half a million for lighthouses is a useful and productive expenditure. We are spending, it is true, $1,000,000 more per year in 1903 than we did in 1896, when the service was starved to the bone, for militia purposes. Well, Sir, if we can afford the money, we have a right to spend it. It only amounts to 33 cents per head on a population of 6,000,000 for the defence of our country, and I do hon. gentlemen opposite the justice to say that up to the present time they have never raised a voice against that expenditure. I claim that another million is the very least that can be allowed as due to the increase of population. I come to the item of $3,000,000 for public works. Here if anywhere there is ground for attack. I am not prepared to deny that the government may have been a little too generous to their friends, and to their opponents also; because a considerable amount has been spent on public works in the constituencies of our opponents, although very little of that was done when I was in opposition. I admit that there is a danger in a large surplus I admit that the government may have been a little too generous, and their friends may have been a little too exacting in their demands, but, after all, there was a fair ground for increase in these cases. In part this is capital expenditure. It is not fair to compare the expenditure of 1896 in that respect with the expenditure of 1903. Every one knows that the expenditure of 1896 was put far below the average of the last preceding half a dozen years. Every one knows that it was reduced to a point at which it was impossible to maintain the public services efficiently. I find that from 1890-1896 the average expenditure on public works amounted to $2,250,000. The expenditure of $4,000,000 to-day is very little more in proportion. I am fairly entitled to add 25 per cent for the increased cost of labour and materials. Any man who has gone into building operations within the last three or four years knows that I rather underestimate than overestimate the increased cost from those causes. Then, if you add $1,000,000 for the increase of population, the result gives you $4,000,000 exactly; so that it is literally true that taking into account the increased cost of labour and materials, and the increase of population, we are spending no more than was spent in proportion during the half dozen years before 1896. It is well to point out that our net income has nearly quadrupled in that interval. I may add that this expenditure differs from most other expenditures, because it does not involve an addition to our fixed charges, and is capable, if need be, of being largely reduced; and if I may venture a caution to my colleagues, I would say that it is well that this expenditure should be kept within reasonable bounds.

Now, I want to apply the per capita test. I take the expenditure, less cross entries, for 1895 and for 1903 and the expenditure for 1896 and 1903. For reasons which I will enter into more fully shortly, I believe that the difference in population between 1895-1896 and 1903-1904 amounts to fully 1,200,000. I believe that our real population did not exceed 4,800,000 in 1896, and that our present population is now quite up to 6,000,000. I am not particularly careful about this matter, but such as it is, I will give the results. In 1895 (deducting the $7,000,000 of cross entries above referred to) the government of the day expended about $38,000,000. We expended in 1903 about $44,000,000. This would give $7.92 per head in 1895 as against $7.33 per head in 1903. A similar calculation would give $7.70 per head in 1896 as against $7.33 in 1903. I say I do not attach very much importance to this, but if hon. gentlemen want to go into these minute details, we have our answer ready for them.

I will take a larger side of the question—the debt per family; and here again I think the Minister of Finance was a little too generous to his opponents. When we came into office we found these hon. gentlemen engaged in many costly public works which they had not completed. There were many railway subsidies to be paid, large sums to be expended to complete the canals, and a variety of public works had been undertaken which would involve a large increase in the public debt. Of these matters my hon. friend took no note, although they account for a large part of the surplus which we accumulated. But, throwing all this away, I will assume that the debt was $258,000,000 in 1896, and that the debt is $258,000,000 or thereabouts at the present time.

How stands it, Sir? Well, on the percentage of population as I gave it, of 4,800,000 for 1896, we would have a charge of about $270 per family for their share of the national debt in that year. In this present year of grace, 1904, the charge per family could not well exceed, if my hon. friend's calculations are correct, a matter of $215 or $216. The net debt per family is, therefore, about $50 or more less to-day than it was in 1896. I am sorry to perceive that hon. gentlemen opposite do not like these statistics, but that perhaps is to be expected. We know that a certain personage does not like holy water; and it would require, I fear, very strong exorcism—and judging from those empty benches opposite, I must have been applying it—to dislodge the demons of ignorance, prejudice, envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness which swell the souls of those hon. gentlemen when they look on the achievements of this most virtuous and discreet of governments.

I wish to say now a word or two regarding this same census of 1891. Bit by bit, degree by degree, as the progress of the investigation goes on, proofs of fraud and recklessness and of the most intolerable stupidity and carelessness in the compiling of that census are accumulating and are evident throughout. Not merely was it cooked as to population, but most atrociously as to industrial statistics. I was unable, the last time I spoke on the subject, because the investigation had not gone far enough, to give the details now in my possession as regards some of the industrial statements therein. But I can give some of them now. First we will take—and a curious illustration it is—the condition of the carpet factories, or, as they are called in the volume I have in my hand, 'industrial establishments for the manufacture of carpets.' Sir, of these there were in 1881, according to the census of that year, 11 in Canada. In 1891, according to the volume I have in my hand, those 11 had grown and flourished and expanded to 557—an absolutely abnormal growth. It may interest the House to know how these were worked and managed, how this great result was achieved. Time will not permit me to go over them all, but I will take, out of compliment to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition—who, I am sorry, is not here—the province of Nova Scotia. In Nova Scotia in 1891 there was a total of 106 industrial establishments for the manufacture of carpets. The working capital of these 106 amounted to $833, being an average of $8.25 a head. To do the census enumerators justice, they seemed to have taken pains. The total amount paid in wages, the total value of the raw material, the total value of the articles produced, the amount of fixed capital in land, are all given. The amount of fixed capital in land reached the sum of $570. The wages amounted to $7,355, which would give $70 a year in wages paid by each, being an average of about $1.25 per week. I am proud to say that Nova Scotia is pre-eminent in this industry, although some of the other provinces run it close. Ontario, which is usually an extravagant province, had 344 industrial establishments for the manufacture of carpets, and it absolutely required $114,000 of working capital, being at the rate of $300 per factory. But when we come to our thrifty friends of the maritime provinces, we get a much better result. In Prince Edward Island there were 25 industrial establishments of this sort run by 3 men and 22 old women, giving an annual return of $2,000 among the 25, being at the rate of $80 per year. Do hon. gentlemen want more details, because if they do I can give them ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very well, I am always ready to oblige. Going a little further—and mind you, these are but sample bricks—I find that the industrial establishments for weaving in Canada amounted, in 1891, to 2,085. The total working capital is put down at $67,000, being an average of $33 per industrial establishment. These were manned by 409 men, 1,916 women and about 120 boys and girls. Carrying out the doctrine of average so dear to my hon. friends, it would seem that the 2,085 establishments may have employed each about one and a quarter man, or woman, or boy, as the case may be. But to prevent any jealousy, I may say that while Nova Scotia undoubtedly carries off the palm in the matter of industrial establishments for the manufacture of carpets, New Brunswick is equally distinguished in industrial establishments for weaving. New Brunswick had 371 industrial establishments for weaving. and—just think of the frugality of my hon. friends in New Brunswick—the working capital they required amounted to a total of $189, being at the rate of 50 cents per establishment. And these 371 industrial establishments, according to this same veracious volume, distributed $14,500 in wages, being an average, as nearly as I can roughly calculate, of about $38 per year, or 75 cents per week for each. That is not all by any means. It has a most pleasant feature, to which I call the attention of the House. Here you have an absolutely unparalleled industrial expansion, such as I have never seen, or heard, or read of—and my studies of statistics have been prolonged for many years—and yet there is absolutely no friction between capital and labour. I am proud to say that there was a complete absence of strikes, unless, indeed, it be paralytic strikes which, considering the fact that most of these establishments were operated by ancient ladies well stricken in years, is not much to be wondered at. As to any agitation for greater wages or shorter hours of labour, the thing was absolutely unknown. Employers and employed were not merely united, but it is literally true that they were a unit in the great majority of these 'industrial institutions.' Now, I do not know who conducts the campaign literature on the other side. But if it is my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), I have a mind to make him a sporting offer. Here is magnificent material for a campaign document. Sir, it would require a much less ingenious gentleman than my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) or my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) to construct such head lines as 'Rise and Decline of the Carpet Weaving Industry,' showing how that industry had expanded under the Conservative rule from a miserable 11 establishments in 1881, to 557 in 1891. And, Sir—this is a further detail not yet in possession of the House, which I feel it my duty to give—you have the further fact that under the baleful influence of the Liberal administration, and, I suppose, of a British preference. 550 industrial establishments for carpet making shrinking to 10 in 1901. It is true that the 10 appear to produce a great deal more than the 557 did, but that is a mere detail quite unworthy of the hon. gentleman's notice. Now, my offer is this : I think a most admirable campaign document, illustrative of the great effects of the national policy, could be produced. If my hon. friend will give me bonds that he will pay for the printing and see to the distribution, why, Sir, I will write it myself.

Mr. CLANCY. And will the right hon. gentleman send it out under his own frank?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was about to say that I will arrange with the Postmaster General, if it cannot be all distributed during the session I will frank it. On a former occasion I pointed out to the House—and laid a considerable number of documents on the table in proof of my assertion—that this census of 1891 had been conducted with such remarkable energy that the census enumerators in twenty-one counties in the province of Quebec had discovered in March in two months 40,000 more people than the parochial authorities had been able to find in January. So, you have here the great triumphs of the national policy—557 industrial establishments created out of 11, and done it so cheaply too ; and, next the discovery of 40,000 people who had not been known to exist before. But, that is not all ; there is a greater feat in store behind. In the course of my examination, and my hon. friend's examination, of the census we discovered that we had not at all appreciated sufficiently the energy and ability with which the census of 1891 had been conducted. It gives me pleasure, Sir, to give to the House certain details. If my hon. friends opposite will condescend to look at the first volume of the census of 1891, they will find that the total average of each country is given. If they will go to the second volume which I have here, they will find the number of acres occupied in each county also given in detail. Sir, the results are very remarkable. Having added 40,000 people to the population of Lower Canada, I suppose it occurred to them that it would be only right to provide the 40,000 with a local habitation. And this is the way they appear to have done it :—According to the first volume of the census the county of Bagot contained 214,840 acres. But, in the second volume we find that the thrifty inhabitants of Bagot occupy 247,654 acres—and the details are given at great length, so much in garden and so much in farm, so much in pasture land and so on. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to dispute the facts. Here are the details set out in full. I give them Bagot as an illustration. As I have said, Bagot according to the surveyor's account contained 214,840 acres. But, according to the census enumerators' account, which gives total occupied in crop, total in pasture, total in wood and forest, and total in orchard, the areas of occupied land were 247,645—that is 191,000 improved ; 132,000 under crop, 57,000 in pasture, 56,000 in wood and forest and 1,700 in orchard and garden. And so it went on. Beauharnois, according to the surveyors had a total area of 89,280 acres and this was converted into 114,564 ; Chambly had 87,319 acres, converted into 101,105; Chateauguay had 159,840, increased to 174,216 ; Deux Montagnes had 165,187 acres, expanded into 183,402 ; Hochelaga's 51,505 became 74,800 ; Iberville's 120,960 became 139,191. And so with Jacques Cartier, Laprairie, L'Assomption, Laval, Lévis, Napierville, Quebec city, Richelieu, Rouville, St. Hyacinthe, St. Jean, Soulanges, Trois Rivières, Vaudreuil, Verchères and Yamaska ; all these counties received at the hands of these gentlemen an increase of something like ten per cent. The total area of these counties, according to the first volume of the census, is 2,624,003 acres, while the total area of occupied land according to the second volume of the census is 3,015,083 acres.

Now, I call that a great feat, Sir. If it be, as many have thought, a thing deserving of high commendation that a man should make two blades of grass grow where one grew before, what eulogy would be too great for the man who contrived to extract 400,000 acres in Lower Canada out of nothing ? Why, Sir, two whole counties like Nicolet or Bagot have been added by these generous persons to the total area of the province of Quebec. I know this is an unbelieving generation ; I know it is a commonplace to say that the age of miracles is past. But I say : Perish such scoffers, the age of miracles is here. All you want are the proper accessories. Given a Conservative administration, given a national policy, given a census commisioner who is a competent man and who thoroughly understands his business—and the miracle is there. You evolve 550 industrial establishments out of 11 ; you bring 40,000 people from nowhere. You create 400,000 acres out of nothing. Let my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) if he can, equal that. I know he is a zealous, a capable, a most efficient minister. I know he has added millions upon millions to the agricultural wealth of the country and I hope he will go on and add still more. But we have his census, a census which cost twice as much—as hon. gentlemen opposite have informed him—as the previous census did. But where are his 557 industrial establishments evolved out of 11 ?—Where has he found 40,000 people more than the parochial authorities had found ? Where has he discovered 400,000 acres more territory than the surveyors found in the province of Quebec.

So much for the past ;—a word or two as to the future. And here again I admit that I do not desire to count too much on continued prosperity. We have had great good fortune ; I trust we may continue to have it. But I would not desire that we should count too absolutely on that. Let us see what policy the opposition have to propose ; let us see what policy we have to propose. Sir, what have the Liberal party done in the past ? They have diminished taxes and increased revenue. What have the Conservative party done in the past ? They have increased taxes and reduced revenue. Their policy was tried for eighteen years and you have seen in what that policy culminated. What did these hon. gentlemen say, in effect to us ? This : We cannot deny, they say, that Canada is prosperous ; we cannot deny that your policy has been successful, even phenomenal ; therefore, let us change it ; let us go back to the good old days, when trade increased at about the rate of one half of one per cent ; when population was at a standstill, when taxes went into private persons' pockets ; when Canada was a by-word for corruption from one end of the civilized world to the other, when these men gave away an empire to a set of railway promoters for a less sum than would pay the cost of their surveys—surely if you want to go back to the good old times, these are the very men to bring that about. They think the farmers are too prosperous and they declare it is time to bleed them ; the surplus is too large, the taxes are too low ; too much goes into the Treasury, too little goes to other parties ; they wish to cut down the surplus, to increase the taxes to enrich the few at the expense of the many. Again the two policies are before the people of Canada to choose which they will have. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite is a policy of high tariff and low revenue, a policy which was tried and found wanting during a matter of 18 years, under which we lost a million of our best people and another million of immigrants, who ought to have settled on our shores, a policy of degradation and a policy of stagnation. What did the national policy do for us hon. gentlemen opposite want to know ? I have here a curious and interesting little statement. It is known to all men that between the years 1860 and 1870 the United States were visited with a terrible and desolating civil war. That war raged most fiercely, and was most severely felt in Virginia, Tennessee, the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, Mississippi and Missouri. Sir, what was the result in ten years in those 12 or 15 states that I have enumerated. In 1860 their population was 9,849,000. In 1870 their population was 11,166,000. They had increased therefore, in that period by nearly 1,316,000. The point to which I desire to call attention is that in these 13 southern states, which for four years bore the brunt of a desolating civil war, which for 6 years thereafter were handed over to the tender mercies of negro legislators, and carpet-bag administrators, the rates of growth—even admitting, which I do not admit, that the statement in our census for 1880 and 1890 is correct—was considerably larger in those four years of civil war, and 6 years of negro rule, than it was in the Dominion of Canada after 10 years of Conservative mis-government. Sir, do hon. gentlemen want to restore that condition of things or does the country desire to restore it ? Yonder are the very men to do it.

Now Sir, what of the Liberal policy ? How do we propose to perpetuate this prosperity and to keep up the stream of immigration ? Let the hon. gentlemen hear and listen and learn if they can. How do we propose to increase the national wealth of this country ?

An hon. MEMBER. Taxation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, our policy was to reduce taxation.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was a failure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know or do any of these hon. gentlemen know that the result of the British preference last year was to reduce the rate of taxation from about 30 to 18 per cent, and remember that this reduction affected not merely the goods imported directly from Great Britain but had also a most powerful effect in regulating the price of other goods which the people of Canada had to pay for those imported from other countries and those produced by our own manufacturers. If they do not, let them consult the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce and they will see.

Our policy is simple, sensible and straightforward.

First of all we desire to bring in large immigration and to make vast areas of territory available for settlement. Next we desire to arrange for continuous settlement, a most important point ; we desire to bridge the obstructive gaps which separate the settled portions of the country We desire to provide fair railway competition so that the settlers may get fair value for their products and we desire above all to put the taxes into the public exchequer.

What will this railway policy do for us ? It will throw open 300,000 square miles, one way with another, I grant not all good but even the bad has its resources. I grant that much of it is probably not profitable, but much remains which is very valuable and available for settlement.

Now a word as to the risk we are taking. I want to show our probable outlay, taking the most unfavourable possible view, compared with our resources and with the resources which the Conservative party possessed when they engaged in a similar undertaking three and thirty years ago. These hon. gentlemen are never weary of telling us that Sir John Macdonald did wisely in 1871 in accepting the risk which he accepted. There may be two opinions as to that. I will state presently what risk he took, and compare that with the risk which we ourselves are taking. Now I will suppose that we have to do the whole work ourselves. I will suppose, although there is no just ground for any such supposition —that there is no return. I will suppose that this road is to cost one hundred, one hundred and twenty or one hundred and fifty millions, if you will. Sir, it will do no such thing, the interest on the great bulk of the outlay will be provided in a few years, directly by the Grand Trunk, indirectly through settlement. I point out that if we succeed in opening up 300,000 square miles, one single family per square league will pay for our outlay ; one person per mile will pay us many times. How does our risk compare with the risk run, as they say with so much wisdom and foresight, by our Conservative predecessors ? If hon. gentlemen will look back to the figures I gave a little while ago, they will see that in 1871 Sir John Macdonald's total net income after deducting charges over which he had no control, was very little over $8,000,000. Our net income is over $32,000,000. Sir John Macdonald, if his bargain had been carried out as proposed, risked at the very least $7,000,000 out of his $8,000,000 in the enterprise. That amounted to at least 90 per cent of his whole income. At the outside we propose to risk a matter of 10 per cent or 12 per cent of our income. I do not believe any thing like that will be risked. I do not believe there is the slightest fear that the Grand Trunk will abandon the enterprise in which they have joined us. I do not believe that there is the least doubt that a very large part of the interest on our expenditure will be repaid to us long, long before the next decade has closed. More than that I have pointed out that our net income to-day in 1904, is fourfold the net income of Canada in 1871. I point this out further that although there is a temporary rise in the rate of interest there is a very strong probability that in all human likelihood the rate of interest will fall again long before we shall require to become extensive borrowers, and then we will obtain our money at a rate about one half what Sir John Macdonald had to pay. Then too the facility of construction is vastly greater now than it was then. I remember perfectly well the conditions under which that enterprise commenced in 1871, and as I recollect there was not a single railroad on the American line within 300 miles of the Manitoba frontier or within about 400 miles of the proposed route of railway proposed to travel.

Sir, we have provided from the start for a large traffic on this road. We have a great corporation enlisted as supporters in this enterprise and the movement of population in that direction is now as well established as anything can well be, and lastly there are no onerous concessions attached to this road, by whomever it may be built ; there is no monopoly of the rights of building roads, no exemption from taxes, full control over freight rates. But hon. gentlemen call these trifles. I would like to hear my hon. friends from the west state what is thought there as to the importance of the concessions to the people of this country. The great drain has been stopped, the new blood is pouring in. We have a very considerable surplus to assist us. The risk we run as compared with the risk run with the full approval of these hon. gentlemen is almost absolutely insignificant. There is the very best reason for believing that the influx of settlement into the region we shall open up will far more than repay to our revenue all that we can possibly lose thereby.

And now. Sir, in conclusion what shall I say to my hon. friends opposite ?

An hon. MEMBER. Nothing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh ye of little faith, ye strainers at gnats and swallowers of alternative camels, blind leaders of the blind, you gentlemen who will pose as Conservative statesmen and lend yourselves to policies which a demagogue might be ashamed of, you gentlemen on the opposite side who are everlastingly deafening our ears with your zeal for British connection, although you never held up your little finger to help British connection, you gentlemen who admire British institutions in theory, and not in practice, and who have proved yourselves the most successful imitators of the worst Yankee tricks that were ever invented, from tariff abominations to gerrymanders of sorts you never learn. Must I apply to my hon. friend the Speaker for permission to bring to this august hall a blackboard on which I may prove to these hon. gentlemen that two and two make four, that 1871 is not the same thing as 1904, that between 1896 and 1904 there is a great gulf, a gulf almost as wide and deep as that which separate the innocent lambs on your right from the goats or Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should more correctly say the wolves in sheep's clothing who gnash their teeth on your left. These hon. gentlemen for so long have shut their eyes to the plainest facts that they have lost the power of vision. They have been so politically colour-blind that they cannot tell black from white, or right from wrong, or truth from falsehood, and what makes the case sadder still is that when benevolent parties like myself hearing of this bad case of political cataract, have tried in a spirit of the purest philanthropy to let in a few rays of light to their darkened minds, and still more darkened consciences, the patients are apt to use bad language, and rear and bite the hand that would heal them. You know, Mr. Speaker, from your researches in Holy Writ, and I know from my personal experiences the fate that is apt to befall reformers who in an evil moment cast economic pearls of truth before a certain description of animals. To my Liberal friends I have also a word or two to say. Remember what befell the children of Israel, when they had come very close to the borders of the promised land. They had trounced the Midianitish men, but thereafter they were in imminent danger of falling victims to the wiles of the Midianitish women, and it required very sharp and drastic remedies to save them from disaster. I say to them to beware of those Delilahs, with whom our camp has been swarming since 1896, who will take all they have and give them nothing in return, who will make a mock of them who will shear them, strip them and sell them exceedingly cheap. For myself I think I may say that I am immune, and that I can defy the craftiest daughter of Eve who ever wore scissors at her girdle to shear my locks. Delilah may get my scalp but she never could get my hair. I say to my hon. friends that they have builded better than they knew, and that when they go to the country, they will go with a record that was never yet approached. Sir, it is a simple fact that the record of the Liberal party from 1897 to 1904, let hon. gentlemen say what they will, is not merely the best in the history of Canada since confederation, but it is the best in the commercial history of the world for the last seven years. Sir, they have wiped out the reproach which for 30 years we have had to endure. It was said : You Canadians boast that you possess a magnificent territory, a territory of vast resources, a territory of unsurpassed fertility in great part, a territory of great area, a territory which is able to contain and support in prosperity fifty million or one hundred million of people and yet you have only 5,000,000 of inhabitants and you have not been able to keep your people in your own territory. You have become a little better than a mere breeding ground for the people of the United States. For 30 years the record with which you were faced was that every third person between the age of 18 and 40 born and reared in Canada, found his way into the United States and of the immigrants that came into the country you are only able to keep ten per cent. All that was true, all that was deplorably true, but I am glad to say that we have changed all that. In the present decade there is very good ground to hope that we will gain a million to be added to our own population, and instead of losing half a million, and those, too, the flower of our own population, we are gaining the flower of theirs. Now, I say to my hon. friends that I advise them not to be mock modest about these things. I advise them to claim credit for all that they have a right to claim credit for. I admit that we have had great good fortune, but the greatest opportunities will come in vain unless these opportunities are well used. It is true that we have had a good chance, but it is not true that we have gained population in the ratio we have lately done from the United States without great and long continued exertion. The ground was ploughed, the ground was harrowed, the seed was sown and we are now reaping the crop of the exertions of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior in the last seven years. Sir, it is not true that our increase in trade, especially in the matter of the increase in agricultural products, has been obtained without exertion and without careful provision on the part of this government. Least of all is it true that the overflowing treasury that we are now possessed of and which we have filled at greatly reduced rates of taxation from those which prevailed before could have been gained without adopting what was substantially a revenue tariff, as an hon. gentleman opposite was forced in spite of himself to admit the other evening. That is what I claim for the Liberal party ; no more, no less. Let our opponents juggle as they will, let them mis-state, let them misrepresent and detract as they please, they cannot alter these great facts that in the last seven years the net revenue of Canada has quadrupled, that in the last seven years the increase in the volume of trade is double that which took place in the past 30 years, that our population is increasing to-day in all probability at the rate of 1,000 per cent, certainly at the rate of 500 per cent faster than it was in the decade before. Now, Sir, I do not pretend to say that I or anybody else can undertake to guarantee this country against reverses. We may have to face a world wide depression, as other countries have had to face it. We may have a succession of bad harvests. There may be difficulties, dangers and disappointments. There may be financial troubles, wars and rumours of wars. We may have a chapter of adverse accidents to encounter, but if my hon. friends of the Liberal party are only half as constant to good government and good principle as these hon. gentlemen opposite have shown themselves to evil ones, Sir, I believe that the close of the next decade will see Canada still standing where Canada is to-day, and that is not merely amongst the foremost but the first, primus inter pares, of all the nations, not only of those with whom we trade, but of every considerable nation throughout the civilized world.

Mr. RUFUS H. POPE (Compton). I have listened with particular interest to the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright). He is an old parliamentarian and an old politician ; he has retired to some extent from active work in his political party, and having found himself on the shelf, and it being a year since we heard from him last, I thought that possibly during the intervening twelve months he might have discovered something new to talk about. I was disappointed. We heard the old speech of last year from the Knight of South Oxford. We will probably hear it again. At his time of life and in view of the great exertion that it is for him to speak, I think it would be permissible that in the future his speeches be reprinted from year to year in 'Hansard' of sessions to come. The gallant Knight from South Oxford, evidently on false information supplied to him, charged my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) that in a moment of weakness he had spoken words that might be interpreted as indicating views favourable to free trade, and he told the member for Pictou that he would give him information on that subject as well as on others. Well, there is no man in this House, who from his experience of having jumped from one political party to another, is better able to give advice on that score than is the member for South Oxford. I was carried back many years in memory as I listened to the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I cannot resist the temptation of referring to some of the things which were brought to my mind in connection with his public life. Before the general elections of 1896 when the Conservative party was beaten in the country, there was one lonely politician travelling his native province, forsaken and unattended. Somebody called attention to his solitude, and the member for South Oxford replied :

> Wolves hunt in packs but lions hunt alone.

The lion of course, was the right hon. gentleman himself ; to-day the lion is in his den. Here is another sample of oratory from a speech which Sir Richard Cartwright delivered at Norwich in 1895 :

> He declared if the Liberals won he would be called upon to take the difficult and dangerous post of Minister of Finance. He said it was a post which I will neither seek nor shirk. It is not one which any man who understands the situation is likely to court for some years to come, and as far as I am personally concerned it may very well be you will render me a service by keeping me out of it.

He thought he would be Finance Minister, and so also apparently the Prime Minister thought, but when the hour came to select a Minister of Finance the member for South Oxford was rejected and another found in his stead. They probably had discovered in the meantime in the diagram with which they have supplied us, this statement of the trade in Canada between 1875 and 1879 when Sir Richard Cartwright was Minister of Finance, and they feared that experience again. Even this Liberal administration that has broken every pledge it has given to the people, that has rejected every plank of its own platform to adopt the platform of its political rivals; that is constantly stealing other people's clothing and casting off their own; even that party cannot find it in its heart of hearts to make Sir Richard Cartwright Minister of Finance. But this was not the first time Sir Richard Cartwright was rejected; he had another bitter experience of the same kind in days gone by. This letter will explain as to how he felt on the occasion of his first turn down.

(Copy.)

Kingston, Oct. 12th, 1869.

My dear Sir John,—I notice with great regret that Sir F. Hincks has been gazetted. From the tenor of my former note of the subject you will probably not be surprised to learn that I fear I cannot support that gentleman. Of course as in duty bound I will await your explanations of the grounds of this appointment, but it is so unlikely that they will be such as to enable me to concur in it that I think it only fair to notify you at once that however well disposed I was and am towards yourself and the rest of your colleagues, I cannot feel the same confidence as heretofore in the administration in which Sir F. Hincks holds office.

So far as you are concerned I do not suppose one supporter more or less matters much just now, and so far as I myself am concerned I am thoroughly alive to the gravity of the step I am taking, but this is a matter in which I have no option.

Yours very sincerely,

(Sgd.) RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT.

Sir John Macdonald, K.C.B.

Well, Sir, from a gentleman who there announced such high principles, I would expect to find that after 1896 he would retain some shadow at least of the principles set forth in this letter to Sir John A. Macdonald. At a banquet given to Sir Richard Cartwright not very many years ago the Prime Minister took occasion to pay compliments to Sir Richard Cartwright and here is what he said about him:

In the days of Mr. Mackenzie, when the country was much depressed, there were many who believed that if the tariff was increased, that policy would be justified by the necessities of the revenue, and that it would be a valuable policy for the country at large. I can give you the story without betraying the secrets, because these things happened before my day, but if the voice of Richard Cartwright had prevailed at that time this policy would have been adopted. If it was not accepted it was on account of other influences which prevailed with the government of the day, and for sixteen or twenty years Sir Richard bore the brunt of the obloquy of not having responded to public sentiment, whereas the truth was, he was ready to respond to public sentiment. For eighteen years he bore the brunt of all the obloquy, and never whispered a word. . . . It is not every day you can find such abnegation, and such loyalty to the party, and I have reason to believe and repeat to you—I not only repeat it to you, my colleagues, but I wish my words to be heard all over Canada—that Canada little knows the debt of gratitude it owes to Sir Richard Cartwright.

Here is a statement by the Prime Minister that while Sir Richard Cartwright was not true to his principles, he still continued a minister of the Crown hanging on to his salary, advocating a policy he did not believe in, and throwing Canada's trade into a depth of depression the like of which was never witnessed before. And if to-day we have the prosperity which the hon. gentleman can boast of, it is due to the policy of the Conservative party, fought against and denounced as it was for twenty years by the party now in power. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) complained that the Conservative party had been true to themselves, and that while they attended to the constituencies represented by their friends they neglected the constituencies which returned opponenrs. Well, there is no fear that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will forget his friends. No one who reads the public accounts can charge him with ingratitude.

As I was looking through the pages of history, I could almost fancy that all the Canadian public were named Cartwright. I found F. L. Cartwright, with $1,000; Col. R. Cartwright, with $2,800; secretary Cartwright of the Railway Commission, with $4,000; Rev. Cartwright, of the Kingston penitentiary, with $1,200; Henry George Cartwright, with $550; the secretary of Sir Richard Cartwright, nephew, with $2,200; and, last but not least, the salary of the gallant knight himself; making a total of $20,250 a year that the people of this country pay for the privilege of having the Cartwright family in Canada. If the gallant knight for South Oxford wants to publish the literature of the Liberal party, let him take the sheet which I have just read; and if he feels that he cannot circulate it I will reciprocate the kind offer he made to this side of the House, by having it printed and circulated for the benefit of the Liberal party, in order that the people of Canada may know the great financial sacrifices which the Cartwright family have made for the country. Alexander Mackenzie said that Canada does not care for a rigid adherence to principles of government. I wonder what that hon. gentleman would say now if he were here to witness the giving away not only of principles, but, what is more sacred, the very life of the gallant member for South Oxford, a man of such wonderful abilities that he selected himself to be Minister of Finance before he gained power. I listened to-day to the old chestnuts which the hon. gentleman was telling us. Mr. Speaker, I am going to be charitable. There is a time in every man's life when the mind ceases to operate on the present and future, and only applies itself to the past. Consequently the hon. gentleman is confined to those two or three old stories on this subject which he has given us so many times in the past.

In regard to the hon. gentleman's position in this House, every man's history or position in Canada is what he makes it. If he found himself driven from the Liberal party in 1896, wandering about alone in the province of Ontario—if the party to which he belongs and which he had been affiliated all those years could not afford to tolerate him as one of their associates on the political platform—if he had achieved such a failure as that, I want to ask what was the result of his labours in those years when he was deriding Canada, and applying to it all the bad names and adjectives that he could find in the English language. The only effect of it was to turn away from our shores hundreds of thousands of people who would have come here to make homes for themselves. We on this side of the House had to fight for our great western country, and none knows it better than the hon. gentleman himself, whose articles defaming this country were published in magazines and sent broadcast by American railroad companies throughout the known world. Under these circumstances it is not to be wondered at that the western states were settled before western Canada. There was a true patriotic people and no Richard John Cartwright in the United States. At that time we had to fight for the building of a railroad into our western country, against the opposition of the right hon. gentleman both in this House and in the country, and against his threats to the farmers that it would mortgage their farms for the rest of their lives. The hon. gentleman's course tended to prevent the people of Canada learning the real truth as to our western country, so that when the railroad was constructed, and the time for settling the country came, and we applied to our own people what did we find? We found that the speeches delivered by hon. gentlemen opposite and their resolutions moved in parliament had the effect of turning the tide of immigration to the western states instead of to western Canada. So we had to begin to convert our own Canadian people to a realization of the wealth and the future possibilities of that great western country, as well as to remove the prejudice against it which had been created in the minds of foreigners. At that time the United States had no surplus population, while they had plenty of territory, and they were bringing in millions of foreign people to settle upon their vacant lands. It was not until a later period that the Canadian Northwest began to fill up, and during the later years of the Conservative administration we began to send immigration agents into the western states and into eastern states as well—and some of these men continue to be employed by the present government and are doing good work—and in that way we laid the foundation of that influx of population into that country which has taken place in recent years, including the return from the United States of many Canadians; and the members of this House will not complain if every Canadian who went to the United States learns of the true value of our great Northwest, and returns to the land of his nativity. We will welcome every one of them. With regard to settlers' effects, that question is confined chiefly to the west. No settlers' effects to any particular extent come into eastern Canada. The law with regard to them has been the law of the land for many years, and it may continue to be for some years to come, so that no special credit can be taken for it by one party or the other.

No hon. gentleman on the other side can say that he, and he alone, or the policy and the party to which he belongs, created that inflow of people. It is the natural overflow of the United States, and England, and of eastern Canada, that is beginning to come into Canada instead of going abroad, as it did in all those years I have referred to. But if you take settlers' effects, you will find that in 1902 the value of $1,500,000 went from Canada into the United States. That would be almost altogether from Eastern Canada. You can run down through a period of several years, and you will find each year settlers' effects to the value of a million and a quarter dollars have gone into the United States, so that when the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) claims that the exodus from Canada to the United States is a thing of the past, he cannot, if he has any sincerity or truth, base that claim on anything except his own belated imagination. The right hon. gentleman only gave one set of statements. When I heard him give quotations from the Bible, I began to hope that he had been imbibing in his heart of hearts the truths of that great volume, and that we would have no more one-sided statements presented by him, but in this I was sadly mistaken.

OTTAWA RIVER RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 78) respecting the Ottawa River Railway Company.—Mr. Ethier.

On section 4,

Section 13 of the said Act is repealed.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I move that this section be struck out.

Mr. ETHIER. As I am promoting the Bill I think it but right that I should furnish some explanation concerning the motion of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie). Last year this House granted a charter to the Ottawa River Railway Company. In that Bill, which was sanctioned on the 24th of October, there was an unusual—I might say an extraordinary—clause. That is the section 13, which this Bill proposes to repeal, and which reads as follows :

The company shall deposit with the government, within six months from the passing of this Act, plans of the main line between Grenville and Montreal, and on the approval of such plans shall deposit with the government the sum of $25,000 as a guaranty for the construction of the line.

Within six months from the 24th of October the company had the surveys from Montreal to Grenville made and the plans deposited in the hands of the Railway Commission, and these were approved on the 25th of May last. In the meantime the company obtained legislation from the legislative assembly at Toronto for a charter from Hawkesbury to Georgian bay. Now it is applying to complete its system from Hawkesbury to Ottawa, and is asking that this condition requiring a deposit of $25,000 should be withdrawn. The Railway Committee decided in favour of withdrawing it, but at the instance of the hon. member for Argenteuil, we are disposed, in order to show our good faith and sincerity, to have the section amended in this way :

That section 13 of the said Act is amended by striking out the words 'within six months of the passing of this Act' on line two thereof, and substituting therefor the words 'on or before the 1st of October, 1904.'

If my hon. friend will withdraw his motion, I would propose that section 4 of the Bill be struck out and that in its place be substituted the clause I have just read.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does the hon. member for Argenteuil withdraw his motion ?

Mr. CHRISTIE. Yes.

Amendment (Mr. Ethier) agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. POPE.

SPRAGUE'S FALLS MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

On the order.

Resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Henderson for the third reading of Bill (No. 42) respecting the Sprague's Falls Manufacturing Company, Limited.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). I ask that this Bill be allowed to stand in the absence of the Minister of Labour (Sir Wm. Mulock). That hon. gentleman intended to look into this Bill, and I do not know whether he has had an opportunity to do so or not. I would ask that the Bill be allowed to stand until his return.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no desire to press the Bill. I only moved the third reading in the absence of the promoter (Mr. Ganong). I suppose it will come up again on Friday evening.

Order allowed to stand.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 126) respecting certain patents of Siegfried Gironcoli.—Mr. MacKinnon.

Bill (No. 129) respecting certain patents of Edwin R. Cahoone.—Mr. German.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That the Speaker do now leave the chair, for the House to go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be presented to His Majesty.

Mr. RUFUS H. POPE (Compton). Mr. Speaker, before we went to dinner, I had had a half hour's pleasant occupation in discussing matters connected with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and something of his record in relation to the public affairs of Canada. I am not disappointed that that right hon. gentleman has not returned this evening. I can excuse him owing to the condition of his health, and I believe it is not altogether too pleasant for the gallant knight to listen to the truths set down in his own record. We had discovered, during our discussion this afternoon, a certain page of Canadian history which may be called the Cartwright page ; and on that page are engraved the names of many Cartwrights, who are being paid for their services—good or bad—to this country at the rate of about $20,000 a year. I take it for granted that these gentlemen have been occupying for the last seven or eight years the positions they now occupy. For I know that the gallant knight is of charitable, friendly, family-loving disposition and would not allow any children who bear his name to be out in the cold a moment longer than is necessary. And so, we find that the occupancy of these positions by these gentlemen has cost the public about $160,000. And what do we get for all that, besides the odd services that may be rendered by these gentlemen, the foundation of whose influence in securing the position that they occupy is the name they bear. It is that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) delivers us a speech once a year—and the same old speech. It seems to me that this is a little hard even for a speech from such a great authority as the gallant knight from South Oxford is estimated to be by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. We also this afternoon spent a few moments in reading a letter which he had written to the late Sir John A. Macdonald in days gone by, telling the great statesman that it would be impossible for him to occupy a position in the government or support him further if Sir Francis Hincks were taken into the administration and made Finance Minister. In those days the people would have expected the right hon. gentleman to act upon a higher plane than the mere consideration of salary. However, he saw fit to stamp his record, even in those early days, with the principle that he could not belong to a party in which he was not permitted to dictate his occupancy of the position to the Finance Minister or member of the cabinet, and so he left his former party. He had not then an opportunity to show his great ability as Finance Minister. But that opportunity came to him later on, and certainly his record as Finance Minister of Canada is not one that he can be very proud of, especially when he looks at the diagram to which I took occasion to refer this afternoon. In that diagram appears the great monument, the high tower, of dismal failure in Canada which was the production of his genius as Finance Minister.

Then it can be said that he has twice as high a tower as any one else in the financial world has ever been able to build when dabbling with the finances of Canada. I do not know that there would be any better place for the hon. member who at other times has offered us free epitaphs to have his written than on the top of that very tower which he, through his financial genius, has constructed as part of the financial history of this country. I also referred to that lonely march of that hon. gentleman through Ontario previous to 1896, which the Prime Minister will remember. I have no doubt that the heart of the Prime Minister who was known to be a sympathetic man went out on many occasions when he thought of his old colleague wandering about in his native province from place to place when nobody even would have him speak. I understand that history is repeating itself and that now he is wandering around for a constituency. I also gave the Prime Minister's testimony as to the great suffering of the right hon. gentleman during the eighteen years that he occupied that position of smothering his true feelings for the benefit of a hypocritical party. It is a sad sight indeed to think of a man, such a lion as he represented himself to be in his wanderings through Ontario, a lion of force and energy, of honesty, economy, and of purity and all those elements that should make a man attractive in this country. Suffering in that way, it was hard to feel that after eighteen long long, long years he was pent up and had to act that double life which I am sure a man of his stern integrity would feel to be irksome. We can forgive him, I and older men on this side of the House can forgive him for those vindictive adjectives which he used to hurl against us. It was his only relief, his only possibility of remaining alive; his very existence depended on his having some ventilation, and he used to pour it out on us, volume after volume for eighteen years. Now that his party is in power he is wandering in search of a constituency and is only utilized in this House once a year to repeat a speech that has been repeated so often that it has become buffoonery and serves only for amusement for the man who utters it. It is a sad come down and is poor encouragement for younger men to enter public life, to suffer eighteen years, to be true and faithful and struggle on, under that terrible load of suffering and at the end of that time to have no constituency and be a poor old man like a wanderer going from door to door no one willing to have him. I do not suppose that any man could be more humbled or humiliated than the gallant knight of South Oxford, when he was not offered that position which he said he was going to have, the position of Finance Minister, which his leader had said he should have. When they went away down by the sea and picked out that secessionist and made him Finance Minister, it must have been an unkind cut to the man who thought he had always been loyal. The gallant knight stated when we thought of establishing the Department of Trade and Commerce that it was absolutely useless, that it was the fifth wheel to a coach and of no possible utility. In order to humble him that was the place selected for him by his colleagues. Of all political histories, taking his record as found in resolutions in the 'Hansard' of Canada, one way one year and another way the next year, looking at his fights against the industries that are to-day being endowed or bonused or given increased protection, like the woollen industry, which within a year he has denounced as being run upon old fashioned ideas, and having to suffer from that rather than from competition—looking into all these things I know of no life that is so sad as that of the gallant knight of South Oxford—driven from party to party from constituency to constituency, driven from his constituency into the open road among the thistles and the weeds, and there left wandering until allowed to find a little rest in the department which he had said was of no use on earth, and goodness knows where his final resting place will be among the gentlemen who have him in charge.

The gallant knight took an opportunity to lecture this House for five or ten minutes last year as to the purity of the party with which he was associated, and the infamous corrupt character of the party on this side of the House. I thought that perhaps his memory had lost itself; I was not surprised at that, age does have that effect, but it was astonishing to me that he didn't remember some of the history of the other side of the House. I thought that the gallant knight himself bore a reputation for electoral purity, and that he had fought his fights with an honest purpose, an honest desire, and with honest influences. I was astonished on looking up his history, to find him to be a self-confessed corruptionist. I found, Sir, that speaking in Napanee in 1873, Sir Richard Cartwright is reported in his own paper to have said:

> He knew there was a large number of men in the country who wanted to be bought. He knew that because he had bought them twice.

When I read that and read a little farther down remarks made at the Club Nationale by his leader, as follows:

> I would have you rely mainly on the justice of your cause, yet I have learned by experience that we must not forget those human devices that are so essential to victory.

It was then that I discovered the thread that kept together the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister of this country. It was that which accounted for the fact that they have never absolutely separated. There was one thing that they held in common, and that was the idea that power must be had, let the cost, or the conditions, or the influence used, be what they might. I was astonished when I read that, and I could not allow this opportunity to go by without putting this part of the record of the gallant knight of South Oxford on the pages of 'Hansard,' so that he may see that I have attempted to draw a true picture of his political life, and that I have not left out the facts which he must know I possessed at the time I was speaking. There may be many things I have not mentioned, but if there are it is because they have passed from my memory, or I have not a record of them. I would not like to mention anything in connection with his political history except from documentary evidence. Anything I have said of the gallant knight of South Oxford is to be found in the printed documents and in historical records of this country and of other countries, in the courts of law and in various places where a man's history that is so peculiar as his is can be found. Now, before I consider the question of tariffs or revenues, it would be as well that we should follow up a little further the record of the gallant knight of South Oxford as it has appeared from time to time in the pages of history and in 'Hansard.' It does seem strange that a man who is supposed to be possessed of such extraordinary ability as the gallant knight of South Oxford should be living the peculiar life that was pictured by the right hon. Prime Minister in his description of him at the banquet some year or two ago. But we find this statement so recent, and we find this utterance coinciding so well with all the utterances of the gallant knight from South Oxford during the past twenty years, that if we had not the word of my right hon. friend himself at that banquet that his colleague had led a double life we would be disposed to disbelieve him. We would be disposed to think that it was one of those things that just leak out the same as information leaked out with reference to certain things that took place in this House the other evening. But I find the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce using the following language:

> I say our protective system was a huge mistake in so far as it was honest at all, and in so far as it was not honest, it was a huge scheme of robbery. A small ring and clique of combiners and protected manufacturers, who, as I have told you, have been permitted for years past to make a prey and plunder of the people of Canada, have held sway.

He says again:

> I stand by the declaration I have made, that protection is nothing more nor less than a deliberate, legalized and organized robbery; and, more than that, if you do not stamp it out it is the very high road to political slavery first, and industrial slavery afterwards.

Considering that, considering the speech that we had delivered yesterday, and considering the promise we had from the lips of the hon. Finance Minister that not only had he done something in the way of protection yesterday, but that he had retained in the tariff of Canada the elements of incidental protection and that he proposed to consider for the future whether he would do more or not through the investigations of the commission, I ask is it not astonishing that the man who gave utterance to these words, and did so over and over again, should be the man who was selected to second the speech made by the hon. Finance Minister yesterday? But, Sir, that is not all:

> Our policy from first to last has been to destroy the villainous system of protection by free trade, revenue tariff, or continental free trade.

Well, Sir, they have our policy and here I believe I speak for my hon. friends beside me. Our policy is death to protection and war to the knife to corruption.

Mind you, he had discovered that men could be bought, because he tells us that he had bought them himself. He knew that corruption had been going on.

We strike and we will strike for liberty and freedom from this system of protective taxation.

The system that the right hon. gentleman has supported and drawn his salary under as a minister of the Crown for the last seven years.

And I can tell the hon. gentleman that we will not rest until the slavery that has been imposed upon us has become a thing of the past, and until Canadians are as free as Canadians ought to be free, to make the most they can of the opportunity God has given them.

Well, Sir, the Cartwright family have made the most of the opportunities that God has given them.

Our policy from first to last has been to destroy this villainous system of protection which has been grinding out the vitals of this country. . . . . We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound and unjust to the masses of the people, and we declare our convictions that any tariff changes based on that principle, must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours. This issue we unhesitatingly accept, and upon it we await, with the fullest confidence the verdict of the electorate of Canada.

They waited, they got the verdict, they got office, and they maintained the system.

I will not be satisfied until the last vestige of protection has been removed from the soil of Canada. Our great reform is to put away from the soil of Canada the last vestige of protection.

He repeats that twice in that famous statement.

If the Liberals were successful, they would cut off the head of protection at once, and trample on its body.

Perhaps if the right hon. gentleman had not been so unfortunate as to become so lame that he cannot trample, he might have been trampling on the body of protection; but if he had been trampling on the body of protection, he would have been walking roughshod all over the colleagues who have sat to the right and to the left of him for the last seven years.

We have been attacking this policy year by year. This is an accursed system, a system accursed of God and man.

These are terrible words about a policy which he has supported for the last seven years.

The system of protection has been the bane and the curse to Canada—the bane and the curse of Canada, I repeat.

I think I have read enough to show that if that right hon. gentleman had had that sincerity that some hon. gentlemen on his side of the House have had on some occasions, he would have pursued a different course. We all remember that when the right hon. leader of the government tried to induce another member of his government who did not agree with the principles of the party to remain silently in possession of a cabinet position and let somebody put through the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill, the hon. gentleman got down and out. Where did the right hon. gentleman learn that trick? He has known of one hon. gentleman who had for eighteen years been passing these resolutions and making these speeches from one end of Canada to the other, enunciating doctrines that he did not believe in. What an example this is to young men in public life in Canada! Here you have the life-history of a man like the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, all these years, had been teaching and preaching a doctrine that he did not believe in, and which was an impracticable and impossible doctrine to apply in this country, asking the young men of Canada to follow under the flag which he raised and to support and endorse the false principles which he enunciated. I believe it would be better for men like this to be confined to no party at all, and that they should be required to depend absolutely on public opinion, because if that were the case we would not be bothered with them in public life in this country so long as we have been bothered with the hon. gentleman. It was under the cloak of party that, searching from place to place through the great province in which he was born, he managed to pawn himself off from time to time upon the indulgence of certain political alliances which found him a seat in this House. We have something more. In 1882 Mr. Cartwright, referring to Mr. Tilley's surplus, said:

I ask how it was got. $1,000,000 was derived from two of the most odious and oppressive taxes which were ever imposed in any civilized country before, under similar circumstances at least—the taxes on breadstuffs and fuel. If he really wants to relieve the people, let him remove the taxes on bread stuffs and coal.

Well, there is a tax to-day on breadstuffs and fuel, and there has been a tax on them since 1896. If that tax was infamous then, it is infamous now, and it has been infamous for the last seven years during which the hon. gentleman as a member of the government has levied it. If, Mr. Speaker, we are not to accept the word of public men in opposition; if public men are allowed to break with impunity every pledge and every promise they make to the people, what is to become of public life in Canada. Here are men sitting on the treasury benches who are committed by resolution year after year published in the 'Hansard' and published in the press; here are men with resolutions of the Ottawa conference staring them in the face; here they are to-day, the openly confessed violaters of every principle they ever professed. What respect can the public have for men who profess one doctrine in opposition and practice another when in power. If such conduct goes unpunished, it will be impossible to build up that moral tone in public life which makes a country great. And, Sir, the word of a Canadian statesman should be as good as his bond in power or out of power. What respect can the people of Canada have for a leader of public opinion, who like the knight from South Oxford allows himself to occupy the miserable position of being fifth wheel to a coach, as he himself said, and who for the sake of the emoluments of office goes back on all his resolutions and all his pledges to the people. If that is the price of great men they come cheap in this country. Mr. Fielding, in Nova Scotia, had this to say:

> That while it is as a rule inexpedient to deal with Dominion questions in this House, in view of the obnoxious character of the duty on breadstuffs, the House must firmly protest against the imposition of such duties.

Mr. BROCK. Is that the same Mr. Fielding?

Mr. POPE. If it is the same Mr. Fielding who thus spoke in the Nova Scotia legislature, he is to-day the Finance Minister of Canada. Are all these gentlemen on the Treasury Benches of the same kidney? Is the Minister of Finance as great a sinner as the Minister of Trade and Commerce and are they all sinners alike? Mr. Fielding, referring to the coal trade said:

> Referring to the coal trade he said the Liberal party would not preach one doctrine in Cape Breton and another in the rest of the Dominion. If the coal business could not be carried on without protection, then it is better not to carry it on at all. Protection was not a necessity for its welfare; the coal business is not a pauper business.

You would hardly believe it, Mr. Speaker, that the Mr. Fielding who thus spoke and who pledged himself to free coal, is the man who to-day dictates the fiscal policy of the government which maintains a duty on coal. Again Sir Richard Cartwright said:

> Now if there be a principle of political economy clearer than another, it is the principle that the worst tax which could be imposed is a tax on a necessity of life like coal. Moreover it is a tax exceedingly partial and unjust in its operation. It will fall on the poorest classes of the community in the depths of the Canadian winter. It is absolutely sectional, pressing heavily on the people of Ontario, and not at all on the great masses of the people through the other provinces. It will form a standing grievance. It is a most doubtful benefit to Nova Scotia.

Well, Sir, the province of Ontario was not so selfish and so narrow as to endorse this statement. The province of Ontario believes that there should be reciprocity of tariffs between province and province. In view of such language from the gallant knight, and in view of his practices since he came to power, it is no wonder that he is going around to-day alone, looking for a constituency. If he had been consistent in his conrse there would have been at least some one to have gone along with him; there is nothing so faithful as a dog. The robbery which the hon. gentleman spoke of is going on to-day, and it has been going on for eight years, and the hon. gentleman has been approving of it with his vote and his talents. Sir Richard Cartwright, speaking on the Budget on April 26th, 1897, and referring to the preference of 12½ per cent which he said was open to all countries, said:

> And lastly, what my free trade friends will remember and lay to heart, we have turned the ship's head in the right direction and toward the open sea.

His song then was: now we are under full sail; we have been in power for one year, we have fifty odd majority who will swallow everything we ask them to swallow, the flag of the Liberal party for free trade is floating, our barque is in full sail with Captain Cartwright on board. But she did not sail far. She struck a rock before she left harbour. I do not know whether there was any of these two cases of rye whisky on board that the Minister of Agriculture furnishes, but whatever the causes may be the ship did not sail far, and yesterday the knight from South Oxford got another slap in the face, what we call a double backer. He had told the country that one of the things that did not deserve protection was the woollen industry; but yesterday his colleagues wiped out the preference so far as woollens are concerned and further protected the woollen industry. So to-day the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) gets up in the House to endorse the new condition; he will endorse any condition that helps out the Cartwright family. I believe the hon. gentleman to be clever, notwithstanding all his faults, notwithstanding the cruelty that has been shown towards him by the party to which he belongs, who haven't the decency to point the open road for him in the future, and notwithstanding the weak character of his speech to-day; and he must have said to himself as he sat down, thank God I have got even with you for what you did yesterday. Mr. Fielding said:

So far as protecting the industries of this country are concerned, eternal vigilance must be the price of protection.

That is what our Finance Minister said a few years ago. To-day he is not satisfied with one tariff or two tariffs, but he wants three tariffs ; and he is trying to make them subject to the dictation of an autocrat who sits in the government. We shall see about that. We have had various tariffs in this country, but we have never before had a proposition to place in the hands —I will not say of one member of the government, but one citizen of Canada, the right to say what our duties shall be, when they shall be lowered and when they shall be put up. Talk of Russia ! Sir, they know nothing in Russia of the limit of legislation as compared with that of the supposed Liberal party of the Dominion of Canada—men who were supposed to be, if not the fathers of Liberal thought, at least the men expected to perpetuate Liberal principles in Canada. The Finance Minister makes this proposition in face of the fact that he formerly said that one of the absolute necessities of business was stability of the tariff, even at some cost to the industries of the country. He has laid down that principle again and again in parliament ; and here you find him proposing legislation under which you will not know from one week to another what the tariff will be. When the hon. gentleman tries to put this dumping act into effect, he will get into more trouble than the man who tries to run a monkey team in a theatre. Do you think the electors of this country are going to allow any one man to dictate when the tariff shall be changed, put up or put down ? When the people of Canada get acquainted with this proposition of hon. gentlemen opposite it will be known as the dumping tariff, because in my opinion it will dump them out of power. I find that Sir Wilfrid Laurier said :

We will get a treaty with the United States if we can ; and if England objects we will consider her objection. Let Lord Salisbury take care of the interests of England and we will take care of the interests of Canada.

The Liberal party will never cease the agitation until they have finally triumphed and obtained continental freedom of trade.

I do not know what they call a triumph. Perhaps seven or eight years of power is not considered by them as a triumph :

What my hon. friend has said as to my protection proclivities is perfectly true. I do not deny that I have been a protectionist, which I am still.

The policy which we advocate, is the removal of all commercial barriers between this country and the great kindred nation to the south. The Liberal party as long as I have anything to do with it will remain true to the cause until the cause is successful.

Well, Sir, the right hon. gentleman gained power and went to Washington, and came back again ; but he did not bring anything with him except the bills of expenses. The people of this country had the chance of paying $45,000 or $50,000, I forget the amount exactly, but approximately that is correct. The only other benefit we had was that that trip to Washington taught the Prime Minister never to go there again, and he has said on more than one occasion that he was not knocking at that door any more. We are glad to hear that ; but that is one of the principles which the Liberal party said they were going to put in force. We have sat in the House and heard the changes rung hour in and hour out that the Conservative party never could get anything from the United States because we did not treat them fairly—because we wanted an alien labour law, or this or that for the Dominion of Canada ;—because we were British in sentiment we could not expect to receive any benefits from the United States. So the right hon. gentleman said : Put us in power. He had never been in power ; he had been only playing politics up to that time. This is what he said :

When the Liberal party comes into power it will send commissioners to Washington to propose a mutual agreement by which there will be free trade along the whole line.

It does not occur to him for a moment that his proposition will not be accepted. The new Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the greatest French Canadian, will be going down to Washington. So he went. He said :

There will be free trade along the whole line, doing away with restrictions and removing the customs-houses that go so far to cause friction between the two countries.

What a farce ! Mr. Speaker, the reading of that language and its comparison with the language which these hon. gentlemen have used as an introduction to the present legislation, is alone enough to drive them from power if there were enough thinking people in this country. The right hon. gentleman also said :

If we come to power on that day, I promise you that a commission will go to Washington, and if we can get a treaty in natural products and a list of manufactured articles that treaty will be made. The policy of the Liberal is to give you a market with sixty-five millions of British men upon this continent.

We have not yet got that market. To show how little these gentlemen knew what they were talking about, and how foreign the responsibility of government was to their thought, we find them now proposing a dumping clause by which they are going to exclude, if they can, these very 65,000,000 people. Such a contradiction of policy was never before presented to any nation on the face of the earth. They have not learned the lesson yet, Mr. Speaker. He goes on to say :

The Liberal party believe in free trade on broad lines, such as exists in Great Britain ; and upon that platform, exemplified as I have told you, the Liberal party will fight its next battle.

They fought that battle. They put their faces towards the open sea, and all got on board. I ask you, where is free trade in this country as it is in England to-day ? What did these hon. gentlemen do ? As is well known, the right hon. gentleman went to England. He had the opportunity of his life, in the judgment of people who knew English sentiment at that time. It was previous to the Jubilee, when the whole British empire was looking for something better in the way of British sentiment than we had known in the past. That noble sovereign, Queen Victoria, was to have her great Jubilee.

All the true and honest men of the different parts of the empire—black and white—were to be present to do homage to that great sovereign. Canada, which is one of the brightest spots in the empire and which never cost the empire a farthing, sent over her Prime Minister. That Prime Minister had promised us in London or Hamilton that the first thing he would do when he went to England would be to treat for reciprocal trade on reciprocal conditions—preference for preference—between Canada and England. Was that promise carried out ? It was not. It was broken like so many others, and what was the excuse ? The excuse given was that this government wished to give England a preference without imposing upon her the bane of protection, which had been a curse to Canada, and also they wished to give it freely as a recognition of the splendid liberty which England had given us. Certainly, Sir, England has given us liberty, but nothing more than the rights which British people enjoy everywhere in this great empire, be they black or white. The Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier stood at the foot of the throne to tell our late beloved Queen how Canada valued British liberty and British connection. But, Sir, there was a time when we were given the opportunity to show our faith and loyalty. That time was when the empire called on all her sons to give the mother country their aid in South Africa. We had the opportunity then, and we know with what generosity of feeling the First Minister responded to this appeal to protect the British flag. We have not forgotten the stand he took on that occasion.

On the subject of a preference, we found Mr. Fielding indulging in these remarks :

England, which, after a great struggle under Bright and Cobden, has made the people's food free, was asked to turn back the hands of the clock and tax the food of the people. England was asked again and again to accept this condition ; and just so long as that demand was made, the great journals and leaders of thought in England scoffed at preferential trade of that kind.

Well, Mr. Speaker, time has gone on and the hands of the clock were not turned back, but have gone on ticking every day from that time to this. And every day the strength of the position taken by us, not from a selfish standpoint, but from the best standpoint in the world, the strengthening of the empire, has become more apparent. Anything that strengthens Canada strengthens the empire in its most vital part. We are a highly intelligent people as compared with other people in the world. Consequently the more of us there are in this country, the stronger will be the British empire, and the nearer to the very heart of the empire will be a people prepared to live and die for the perpetuation of British institutions. Any act, commercial or otherwise, that strengthens Canada strengthens the empire just as much as if it were strengthening the empire in London—aye, more, because we have fresh air and plenty of space and opportunity in this country for the application of men's ingenuity. And we have hope in the future of Canada. Yes, we had that hope when this country was being painted black by the oracle of hon. gentleman opposite who addressed the House this afternoon. Under those circumstances, the clock has gone on keeping time, and we have witnessed the departure from the British cabinet of one of the most able of British statesmen, Mr. Chamberlain, who has taken up this same fight, not for us alone but for all the empire, and the ground upon which he stands is no selfish, narrow, contracted ground, but broad and generous, and his policy, if carried out, will do more for the development and prosperity of this country than all the legislation this government has passed or can ever hope to pass. It means the entry of our agricultural and lumber and the other products we send to Great Britain, into the British market under a system of preference. Hon. gentlemen opposite have adopted certain principles of protection in this country. Why should they object to the adoption of a system in England which will protect us in the very market where our goods have to be sold ? The greater price we are paid for our products, the greater value is added to every acre of land in this country. And in no part of the Dominion will greater benefit be experienced from the adoption of Mr. Chamberlain's policy than in its eastern portion. Our eastern provinces cannot compete with the great west in the raising of grain, but in the manufacture of dairy products and the fine qualities of beef, mutton and bacon, we can hold our own, and if given protection in the British market, we could distance all competitors.

Yesterday was an important day, as is always that on which the annual statement is made of the finances of Canada, and as time rolls on and our population increases, that day becomes more important. There may have been a few people pleased with yesterday's statement because there were some changes in the tariff, but in my judgment there were many more who were disappointed. And if you take all those to whom that speech was addressed, you will find that not one in twenty-five understands what the tariff really means. I am competent there are not ten men on that side who can tell you how that tariff, which was brought down yesterday, really will affect the trade of this country. Still, when the Finance Minister got up and said: behold this splendid combination tariff that I have created,' there was tremendous applause on the other side, and from none did that applause come more fervently than from those who did not understand what it meant. We know that it has a disturbing element. It has a disturbing element because we cannot have a law hanging over every man's head whereby he may be compelled to pay a special duty in addition to the ordinary duty, under certain conditions, without its having a prejudicial effect on trade conditions. But that is not all. Protection as understood by hon. gentlemen on this side, means but one thing, but as expressed in the resolutions moved by the leader of the opposition on more than one occasion. Our national policy takes in all the great natural resources of this country. It embodies a great constructive principle which can be applied in the tariff for the upbuilding of the nation. But when we take up the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, we find it an unknown quantity. It may be one thing to-day and something else to-morrow.

You will never develop the great resources of Canada with any such fluctuating tariff as hon. gentlemen opposite are now proposing. I agree with the Minister of Finance that a fixed tariff is essential to the prosperity and advancement of the country. I take him at his word. He did not much improve the tariff last year. But he dared not go twelve months longer under the tariff we had. In order to avoid the difficulties which faced him last year, he did improve his fiscal policy then somewhat, by proposing bounties on silver-lead and on iron. But he dare not now come down and say: I am a protectionist, because he has been talking free trade. And so you have an exhibition of a government, a set of men acting together for party purposes and personal gain who cannot announce any principle, who cannot lay down any rule of broad minded legislation that they can undertake to follow. I do not know what would have been the result if we had here the government we had seven years ago. Because, Mr. Speaker, there has been a great change in the personnel of the government. It was said to be a strong government, because it contained Mr. Tarte, because it contained Mr. Blair, because it contained Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Louis Davies, Mr. Geoffrion, Mr. Dobell, Hon. Mr. Mills and Sir Henri Joly. These men are all gone. And whom have we in their places? Read the history of Canada and you learn nothing of their names. A record of municipal politics might enable you to trace them, but you do not find their names in the national history of Canada. Whether, with the old cabinet we would have had this bulldozing in the trade relations, I do not know. Whether we would have had these half-hearted changes, I do not know. But I do not believe we would. I believe that they would have made such an impression upon the Prime Minister, that they would have bolstered his courage sufficiently, that he would have come forward and said: I am now for the national policy, because the principles of the opposition in this House are the only principles by which Canada can be successfully and well governed: I forsake the pathway of the past; I apologize to Canada, and I am now the head of a strong protectionist government. But we have now an administration of weaklings, the successors of the strong men of earlier days. And so we must accept vacillating legislation, doubtful legislation, legislation in which we find no vestige of principle, while the Conservative party stands for principle as a unit. We know how difficult it is, even when men are agreed upon a principle, to lay it down sufficiently strong to make it work out to the development of the country's resources, to overcome local prejudices and feelings of provincialism that exist to a greater or less extent everywhere. Even if the Prime Minister and his party were united, it would be difficult enough to bring down legislation to upbuild Canada as she should be upbuilt. But when you have a party made up of here a free trader, there a low protectionist, there a high protectionist, and the other fellow nothing at all, it is impossible to get, through such an aggregation, a straightforward policy based upon sound principle.

The Finance Minister yesterday consoled himself with the fact that we are having pretty good times; not quite so good as they were a while ago; they are beginning to pinch here and there a little. He mentioned one or two industries that were very promising in different parts of Canada and I suppose he thought he had knocked the last spots of the sun, by the changes in the tariff that he now proposes. But let him look at Sydney and the condition of the industries there and read the quotations. Let him look at the Soo and the industries there. Let him look at the cotton industry, look at the price of butter and cheese: let him look where he will and see if he cannot find a few spots still left. If there is an industry in Canada that should be in a most flourishing condition, it is the pulp industry, of which I will speak of later on. The Minister of Finance is beginning to realize, as everybody else is realizing, that we are beginning to feel the effect of competition from abroad. Why, Sir, to look at the trade figures alone is quite sufficient. Take our total exports $214,000,000,—and our total imports—$224,000,000. There you have a balance of trade against us for 1903 of $10,410,000, exclusive of coin and bullion. Sir, we are a young nation, with lots of energy, with plenty of raw material, great water powers and immense possibilities, and what we want is men and money, and especially money, in order to develop these great resources. A tariff that gives us at the end of the year $10,000,000 less money as a result of our trade than we had at the beginning is not a tariff that tends to the develpment of Canada. If the Prime Minister discovers that we have too much money, that we are too wealthy, that we have money to give to the United States or Germany more than they give to us, instead of keeping it at home, his policy is a right one. But if Canada needs money, his policy is wrong, because the figures show that we are $10,000,000 worse off at the end of the year than we were at the beginning. During the by-election in Montreal the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made a speech on this subject. He said : Look at the volume of trade—four hundred odd million. True, more than half that is against us, or is money that we are sending away, but, at the same time, there is the volume of trade. According to that, a man whose wage is $1.25 a day and his expenditure is 75 cents a day would have a total volume of trade of only $2. But if you take a man whose earnings are $1.25 a day and whose expenditure is $1.50 a day you have one whose total volume of trade is $2.75—and this man, according to the Prime Minister, would be growing rich. If we were an old, completed nation, with a number of people living in luxury, following the hounds across country spending their time as ladies and gentlemen do in great centres, all this would be very well. But you are legislating for a different kind of nation altogether. We are a bee hive ; we have to work, we are a comparatively poor people ; our history is comparatively a short one, and every man should work, word, work ;—that is the way to build up the country ; and every man should have protection for his industry and his labour. You cannot expect much good from the policy of a man who lays down the principle that the volume of trade is an indication of a nation's wealth. When our policy proceeds on that theory you may look for hard times before very long.

I have shown that the balance of trade is $10,000,000 against us. Let us look at some of the details. In 1903 our exports to Great Britain amounted to $125,000,000. Our imports from Great Britain amounted to $57,793,000. That left a balance of trade in our favour as between ourselves and Great Britain of $67,000,000. For the year previous, 1902, the balance in our favour on our trade with Great Britain was $68,000,000. But now, if you take the figures of our trade with the United States of America you will find that our imports were $128,000,000 while our exports to the United States were $49,000,000, leaving a balance against us for 1903 of $79,000,000 in our trade with the United States. What we ship to Great Britain are our great agricultural products mainly. We ship, probably $100,000,000 of grain, animals and their products and other products of our farms.

It comes back to Canada, the policy of the hon. gentleman has been that when this $67,000,000 got back here they would not keep it here to furnish employment for the people and encourage industries in this country where possible, but to send every dollar of that to the United States to pay for industrial life in the United States. You cannot upbuild Canada on these lines ; its an absolute impossibility. When we have the money in our own hands, why do we not legislate to keep it in our own hands, by giving prosperity, by giving profitable investment ? You will find in the United States that the old farmers on the flats of the Connecticut river and other valleys invest money in the bonds of railways and enterprises of all sorts in the United States. Their surplus money is not sent to us, but is invested in their own country, and by following a policy of that kind for nearly a century they have built up the greatest nation on the face of God's earth to-day. They are adopting the same policy on the southern part of the continent of America. and does it require much argument to show that it must ultimately be adopted here if we want to upbuild this country ? We have the opportunity if we seize it ; but it will not be by allowing the balance of trade to be as it is to-day, $75,000,000 against us, and going from bad to worse year after year while the hon. gentlemen have been in power.

Now they propose a dumping policy. I want to know where they are going to begin to dump. The right hon. gentleman must be with me in saying that any policy adopted should be one that we can understand, and that laws should be such that a lawyer could understand and define them. The legislatiion now proposed no man can understand. You have a dumping axe, or whatever you like to call it, that comes down at 15 or 50 per cent, but can the right hon. gentleman tell me when dumping is going on ? I would like to ask him how he is going to find out when dumping is going on ? Let us take, for example, the case of animals. We import $2,341,000 worth of animals to compete with the animals of Canada. Is it time to say that dumping is going on ? Will he say he is going to dump now with animals coming in to that extent ? Take, for example, pork products. Last year we had from the United States $2,221,000 of pork products, ham, bacon, under the head of provisions, that could be produced, by our own farmers. When are they going to begin to dump on that amount ? Then take lumber. Here you have $4,000,000 worth of wood and its products. Are they going to begin to dump ? Take paper. We have over $2,000,000 worth of paper coming in, when we are the greatest fibre producing people in the world. We have immense forests of timber, and are they going to begin to dump on this ? Hon. gentlemen are as silent as the grave. If the whole row of seventeen ministers sat there, you could not get a reply, because they dare not say. We have here on our statute-books a law which they cannot interpret, and they dare not tell us at what stage they are going to put it in force. That is what they mean by stability of legislation.

I should also like to refer to the question of expenditure. I find that when the Conservative party left office in 1896 we had an expenditure of $36,949,142.03, and in 1903 I find that the present administration had an expenditure of $51,691,902.76, or an increase of $14,712,760.73 chargeable to consolidated fund.

Now, Sir, if we take the total disbursements, we find that in 1896 they were $41,702,000 ; in 1903 they were $61,000,000, an increase, in round numbers, of $20,000,000, after making a proper disposition of the $3,000,000 in connection with the North Shore Quebec Railway subsidy vote.

When these hon. gentlemen appealed to the country for power, I had been supporting a government for about seven years, and since that I have been about the same number of years on this side of the House. They appeal to our constituents apparently in earnest that the party then in power was too extravagant, and must be turned out in order that the expenses of the country may be reduced. They cried out against that tremendous expenditure of $36,000,000. All we now have from that poor old remnant of a politician, who now occupies that position of the fifth wheel to a coach, is the eloquent statement that taxation has changed to-day, and that the thing which used to be taxation is not taxation now. Why ? Because I am now getting $8,000 and the other Cartwrights, big and small, are getting the balance of the $20,000, which makes all the difference in the world. This $20,000,000 has to be accounted for. Hon. gentlemen can pass their estimates through this House, but the time will come when they will have to face the people of Canada and show what they have done with the money ; and I do hope that some hon. gentleman will do what has never yet been done, show the great public works that remain as monuments for the expenditure of this tremendous amount of money over and above what we expended for the government of Canada.

The total debt in 1896 was $325,000,000 and in 1903 $361,000,000, or an increase in the total debt of $35,000,000. The total assets have increased $32,000,000, thus leaving $3,000,000 of a total increase in the indebtedness of the country since they came into power. Adding to that the $3,000,000 which have been charged to the wrong account, you get $6,416,006 as the actual increase of the debt. These are figures such as are not given to us in any cooked form. Whether that debt has increased $3,000,000 or $6,000,000 or $1,000,000 at the end of this year, as the Minister of Finance said yesterday, makes no difference for the purpose of my argument. We do not find that this wonderful increase of expenditure is devoted to the reduction of the debt. That is sure. We have not put our revenues there ; we have expended these revenues, and still have this indebtedness.

We have a total revenue for the last five years of the Conservative regime of $182,000,000, an average of $36,000,000 a year. For the last five years of this administration we have had a total revenue of $248,000,000, an average revenue for the last five years of $49,000,000, an average increase of $13,000,000, or a total increase for the five years of $66,000,000. I want the hon. gentleman who leads this government, or some of his associates, to show to this House and the people of Canada what great construction has taken place in Canada, representing that $66,000,000 of increase. They have imposed heavy burdens upon the people of Canada in the way of taxes, for which, so far as I can see, in the length and breadth of Canada we have no great public work of utility to Canada.

Now, Sir, if we do not find it there where can we find it ? When we of the Conservative party were in power, we spent money. We do not deny the fact. We increased the public debt by some hundred million dollars, but if you look at the $65,000,000 we put into the Canadian Pacific Railway, if you look at the $20,000,000 we put into the Intercolonial Railway, if you look at the $33,000,000 we put into the canals and public works of that kind, you have the accounting for a larger amount than that by which the Conservative party increased the public debt. I want hon. gentlemen opposite to show us a Canadian Pacific Railway, to show us extended works, to show us great construction representing this money that they are sucking out of us from year to year in extra taxes. This is a government composed of men who said that a dollar should not be taken from the people of Canada except to pay the mere running expenses of the administration. Is that the reason why the running expenses of the administration have been put up year after year ? Is it to provide a sink hole for the money taken out of the pockets of the people ? Why not apply this money to the reduction of the public debt ? Let me say to my right hon. friend that the people of Canada are not all asleep. They have not all money to burn. Some of us have to work for our living in this world. We know what it is to earn our livelihood by honest investment, or ingenuity, or actual labour. The mass of the people want to know what has become of the money. If you will take the figures of the various departments for 1896 and compare them with those of 1903 you will find how the expenditures have increased. You will find that under the head of interest on debt there has been an increase of $565,709 and justice, $201,678. I ask you if there is any better administration of justice in Canada now than there was then. We get no better administration of justice than we have always had in Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite may talk about the Yukon. They should reduce the Yukon somewhat. There is not so much coast line as there used to be when we left power. They have given away part of it. They have found Canada too big to govern. There was an increase in civil government of $158,164, fisheries $100,578, and the only break in the list of increases is that furnished by the geological survey. In immigration there has been an increase of $522,715. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce worked at some length this afternoon upon the question of immigration. He said that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) deserved great credit for the settlement of the west, that the hon. Minister of the Interior deserved all the credit that the records of this country would give him. I dwelt at the outset of my remarks this afternoon on the question of immigration and I wish to enter my protest against a system of immigration which fills that country with men from the slums of Europe and gives no similar opportunity to the men of eastern Canada. I know that in the district where I live a poor man can go across the line 35 miles and he can buy a ticket to the Northwest of Canada for less money than he can buy it from his own village. I say the principle is wrong. Surely we need not put an obstacle in the way of a man who is born in Canada under our own flag. Surely he should enjoy advantages equal with those extended to Doukhobors, Galicians, Americans and everybody else on the face of the earth. We have been asking for quality and asking for quality only. We say that we do not want, merely for the sake of putting people into this country, to take any class of people who will lower the ability and standing of the people of Canada, and we also say that the men of eastern Canada are entitled to the same consideration as if they were born in some of the lower parts of Italy or Russia. I would remind the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that when we were in power and striving to put immigrants into the west he supported Mr. Somerville's resolutions proposing to strike $50,000 off the item for immigration and if he will look through 'Hansard' he will find himself and his leaders great and small on record as fighting session after session against putting any immigrants into our western country. For quarantine there was an increase of $168,084 and for Indians $197,407. The Indians must be growing. For the branch of the superintendent of insurance there was an increase of $4,908, lighthouses, &c., $498,086, mail subsidies $214,369, and so you will find increases in all the departments except that of the geological survey, chargeable to collection of revenue and to capital accounts making a total increase in the year 1903 over 1896, when we left office, of $17,098,339. That accounts for some of the taxation hon. gentlemen opposite wrung out of us. The only decrease, as I have already said, is in the geological survey ; all the rest of the departments show increases, while we have in the country only half a million more population than we had when hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. I say that an increase of $17,098,339 is a misappropriation of the taxes secured from the people of Canada. It has not been applied as it should have been towards a reduction of the public debt. If hon. gentlemen opposite had been true to their promises, if they had given us some reasonable amount of retrenchment, if the enlargement of the expenditure had been in proportion to the increase in population we would say nothing about it, but after adding $17,000,000 to the expenditure, I ask them if it would not have been reasonable to have expected that they would have applied $10,000,000 at least to the reduction of the public debt. I believe that the people of Canada are anxious to know something about these expenditures. One word as to the surplus. The hon. Minister of Finance glowed with surpluses. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce did not say much about surpluses. He did not know anything about them when he administered the affairs of this country. He had no experience of handling surpluses and he denounced them every time we had them as being the result of wringing taxes out of the people. With his inexperience, with his past record and with the fact that, as he showed this afternoon, he has taken to reading the Bible, I believe he shows his one sincere position in order to assure the salvation of his dear old soul. There may be $14,000,000 of a surplus. I am not a financier, I am not a book-keeper and I do not propose to begin to be one now. But everybody looking at the items, going over the Intercolonial Railway returns, the returns of the sales of Dominion lands and the various other items, must admit that if the book-keeping was done as a financial or banking or commercial house would be obliged to do their book-keeping instead of being $14,000,000, the surplus would be about $4,000,000. For the purpose of bolstering up their statement they have charged the extra expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway and the bounties on iron and steel to capital account, and summarized these amounts to $10,000,000. If the Minister of Finance would do his book-keeping honestly, he could claim a surplus of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, and then according to the opinion of his colleague (Sir Richard Cartwright) he should reduce the public debt by that amount.

I thank the House, Mr. Speaker, for the attention with which it has listened to me. I look forward with a great deal of confidence to the future of Canada, because like all good Conservative boys, even before I could vote I was taught that on this northern half of the American continent we should build up a great nation, worthy of the mother country and of the British flag. I have never lost confidence in my country. As I go from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I am proud to see on every hand the glorious monuments to progress and prosperity, which have been erected by the Conservative party under the leadership of that grand old man, Sir John A. Macdonald, whom the present Prime Minister vainly attempts to imitate. I rejoice at the development of the great west, the foundation of which was laid by the Conservative party in face of the opposition of the Liberals who called it: a frozen region, a sea of mountains, and everything that would defame it. I hope that the Liberals have forgotten the wicked words they uttered in derision of that country. It would have been in the best interests of Canada that they were never uttered, it is in the best interests of Canada that they should be forgotten. These gentlemen now on the treasury benches have forfeited their right to claim any share in the great development of the Northwest. That credit belongs to the Conservative party, and to its great leader Sir John A. Macdonald, whose patriotic efforts were always directed towards making Canada a great nation.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). Mr. Speaker, it is rather late in the evening to attempt to make a speech on this great question, but I shall shorten my address by treating, in the manner in which it deserves, that part of the speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope), which he devoted to vilifying the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The character of our friend, the right hon. knight, is too well known throughout Canada to be detracted from in the slightest degree by the attempted disparagement of the member from Compton (Mr. Pope). When he and his shall have been forgotten, the name of Sir Richard Cartwright will be remembered with pride by the descendants of the men who now sit in this House. I shall, therefore, only deal briefly with that part of the speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) in which he pretended to treat of public questions. To strengthen his argument, that the present government was extravagant, he was forced to make the assertion that the books kept by the Finance Department were falsified. Well, that is a strong statement to be made by a man who knows absolutely nothing about the matter. He might just as well have said that the books were falsified to the extent of $30,000,000 as $3,000,000, because he would have no more justification or data for the one statement than for the other. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) had contended that our expenditure last year was some fourteen million dollars more than in 1896, he would be near the truth, and he did not need to disparage the book-keeping of the Minister of Finance to sustain such a statement. To me it is quite immaterial what the expenditure is, so long as that expenditure has been made prudently and wisely made in the interests of the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman cannot find one item of that expenditure which he and his friends on the other side of the House dare attack. For years they have been saying in a general way that the government is extravagant, but they have never attempted to attack one single item of the increased expenditure. Had they done so, the hollowness of their argument would be apparent to all. Let us see how this increased expenditure of $14,000,000 was disposed of. Was it prudent for this government to pay $473,000 more a year for interest on the debt, for which the Conservatives were mainly responsible? Could we help ourselves, without repudiating our honest obligations? Was it prudent to put $514,000 more into the sinking fund, in order to enable us to meet our obligations when they mature? Was it wise and prudent to spend $191,000 more on the administration of justice, in view of the fact that within the last eight years our population has so vastly increased, and the bounds of our country have been so immeasureably extended? Was it wise to spend on arts, agriculture, and statistics, $1,064,000 more than the Conservatives spent? The whole question is one of judiciousness, and when we look at the results obtained we will see that that increased expenditure was amply justified. We find that the number of immigrants who came to this country in 1896 was only 31,000, while last year it was 125,000. Was it prudent to spend more money to bring about that result? The number of homestead entries in 1896 was 1,384 ; last year it was 31,000. If we can continue such development of agriculture and immigration as this wise expenditure has brought about, are we not amply justified in incurring it ?

Was it wise to increase the expenditure on militia by $824,000 ? I do not know. The military men in the House approved of the expenditure ; it was not called in question by anybody in the House ; and I am inclined to think that so long as we have a militia we might as well spend as much money upon it as is necessary to make it efficacious for the emergency if it presents itself. We spent $2,900,000 on public works. The question is, were those public works necessary ? As they were not strongly objected to at the time, I assume that it was a judicious and wise expenditure. There has been an increase in the collection of customs of $280,000. Has that been a judicious expenditure ? Why, we collect to-day some $17,000,000 more than they did eight years ago, and the cost to-day is 3.31 per cent, while eight years ago it was 4.43 per cent. Therefore we are doing the labour much cheaper than they did it ; and while it cost $280,000 more per annum, we are in receipt of an increased revenue of $17,000,000. I regard that as a judicious and necessary expenditure. But the hon. gentleman does not find fault with the Inland Revenue Department, where the revenue has increased from $7,900,000 to $12,000,000, while the actual expenditure has decreased by $7,000. He does not find fault with the Post Office Department, where we spent some $500,000 more, but wiped out an annual deficit of $700,000, besides reducing the postage on letters to represent $800,000 more ; so that by the judicious expenditure of $500,000 per annum the people are bettered to the extent of $1,500,000. Does he object to the increased expenditure on railways and canals of $3,000,000 when the revenue has correspondingly increased, and at the same time great benefits have been conferred upon the people of Canada ? Does he object to the expenditure of $1,000,000 on the Yukon and an increased expenditure of $1,000,000 on the Territories. Does he object to an increased expenditure of $500,000 on the ocean service and $500,000 more on the census ? There is where our money has gone to. Have we judiciously and wisely expended that money ? Have we derived a benefit from that expenditure That is the principal object the people of Canada have had in view. I think there is no reason for the aspersion our friend has cast upon the bookkeeping of the department. Neither is he wise in calling in question the judicious expenditure of public money that has been made.

Our friend also falls foul of our immigration policy and the quality of the immigrants we have placed in the Northwest.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are a little jealous that this tremendous development has not taken place during a Tory regime ; but we have had the proud satisfaction of hearing the hon. leader of the opposition say that after a visit to the Northwest, he was agreeably surprised to find what admirable settlers the Galicians made—that particular class of people who for years have been very much abused and maligned and belittled, and pronounced unfit settlers for our great Northwest.

Our friend thought he struck something of a financial character that he could retail to the House with a great deal of gusto when he told us that the balance of trade had been against us last year to the tune of $10,000,000. Why, that is not a very serious offence. I myself do not regard it as of any importance whether the balance of trade is for us or against us. But if under the present fiscal arrangements the balance of trade against us last year was $10,000,000, what is it likely to be if we adopt that fiscal form of policy which the hon. gentleman and his friends advocate ? The best evidence of what the results will be is to be obtained by taking a look back and seeing what they have been in the past ; because what has been will be under similar conditions. Now, let us take the results of the tariff policy of the present government and compare them with the results of the national policy during the eighteen years that it was in existence. I prepared this table last year, expecting that somebody who would want to figure as a political economist of high repute would work off that balance of trade argument when the opportunity arose, and that it would be just as well to have our powder dry. From 1879 to 1884 our imports were $572,000,000, our exports $480,000,000 or a balance of trade against Canada of $91,000,000. From 1885 to 1890 our imports were $612,000,000, our exports $484,000,000, or a balance of trade against Canada of $127,000,000. From 1891 to 1896 our imports were $656,000,000, our exports $609,000,000, or a balance of trade against Canada of $49,000,000. During the past six years up to 1903 the imports entered for consumption were $928,000,000, while the exports, the produce of Canada, were $947,000,000, or a balance of trade in favour of Canada of $18,000,000. Now, a brief summary of the results of the past twenty-five years shows that between 1897 and 1902 the average balance of trade in favour of Canada was $3,084,000, or a total balance of trade in favour of Canada of $18,000,000, while from 1879 to 1897 the average annual balance against Canada was $14,000,000, and the total balance against Canada for the eighteen years was $268,000,000. And yet our friend comes forward and tells us that our fiscal policy is bad, that our trade regulations are bad.

The hon. gentleman spoke with great vigour on the next point, namely, that we had nailed the flag of free trade to the masthead. Why, he and everybody else who is familiar with the history of Canada must know that such a party as a free trade party never had the control of affairs in this country—that it is only a remote dream of some of the most ardent political economists of that stripe. But we did object in 1895 to the policy of our friends on the other side of the House, because we believed, and we have proved, that it has decreased the value of farm and other landed property, that it has oppressed the masses to the enrichment of a few, that it has checked immigration, that it has caused great loss of population, that it has impeded commerce, and that it has discriminated against Great Britain. Was not every statement made at that convention in Ottawa true ? Have they ever been controverted ? And the convention proceed to put this opinion on record :

> In these and many other ways that tariff has occasioned great public and private injuries, all of which evils must continue to grow in intensity as long as the present tariff system remains in force.

Then the convention laid down the policy of the Liberal party :

> That the highest interests of Canada demand a removal of this obstacle to our country's progress, by the adoption of a sound fiscal policy, which, while not doing injustice to any class, will promote domestic and foreign trade and hasten the return of prosperity to our people.

That is the policy of the Liberal party, and for the past seven years that policy has been amply justified by its results. All we need do is to compare the conditions of the country to-day with what they were in 1896. Every statement we made on the public platform as to the evil effects of the policy of our friends opposite we have demonstrated. To-night and on many other occasions we have proved absolutely the accuracy of the Liberal contentions and the soundness of the Liberal policy. Is it not true that the adoption of the policy of the Liberal party has brought prosperity to our country ? Is it not true that it has put an end to discrimination against Great Britain ? Is it not true that it impedes commerce less than before ? Is it not true that it is preventing the loss of population, checked emigration, worked for the betterment of the masses as against the classes, and increased the value of landed property ? Our policy has in every particular done the exact opposite of what the policy of our friends did. They brought about all these evil conditions, and we have at last restored Canada to her own. I think, Sir, I have devoted as much time as is absolutely necessary to a refutation of some of the arguments of our hon. friend (Mr. Pope), and have shown the absolute absurdity and untruthfulness of many of his contentions.

But when the Liberal party attained power under the flag of freer trade, they found a condition that required treatment—not too radical but sufficiently radical to remove some of the evils under which the people were suffering. And what has been the result ? After seven years of experience of the application of the Liberal tariff policy, we can show a progress hitherto unparalleled in our trade and commerce. Our hon. friend opposite alluded to our export and import trade. I intend to allude to it also but only very briefly, and simply to show the wonderful development which has taken place. The goods entered for consumption in Canada in 1896 amounted to $110,000,000. Last year they amounted to $232,000,000, or an increase of over 100 per cent. In 1896, among those goods which were entered for consumption, was $1,669,000 in coin and bullion. Last year there were $8,976,000 of coin and bullion entered among our imports for consumption. I am sorry the amount was not $118,000,000, because the higher we can make it, the better for the people. But while we were importing six times as much coin and bullion under the Liberal as we did under the Conservative administration, they were exporting exactly six times as much out of the country. They exported in 1896, $4,000,000 worth, while last year only $600,000 of coin and bullion went out. They also imported in 1896, $2,188,000 worth of settlers' effects, but last year we imported $6,442,000 worth. Each one can draw his own conclusions and put his own meaning and attach his own significance to that statement. And the quality of our immigration is best represented by the amount of settlers' effects. In 1896, the foreigners brought in $49,000 worth and last year only $36,000 worth. The British brought in $425,000 worth in 1896, and last year, $1,117,000 worth. The Americans brought in $1,714,000 worth in 1896 and last year $5,287,000 worth. So that almost the whole of the settlers' effects which come into this country come from the English, Scotch, Irish and American settlers. Yet, Sir, we are told that that is not anything to the credit of this country. Well, I am not one of those who place too much faith in immigration. Neither would I be at all anxious to fill our country too rapidly. I would much rather that the people who are in it to-day were happy, prosperous and contented than pauperize them by doubling or making their number four times as great as it is. But, if we can induce a quality of immigrants to enter who will assist in developing our country and at the same time better the conditions of the people who are here as well as their own, then I am prepared to spend quite a lot of money to bring in that class, and I am exceedingly gratified to find, by a careful examination of the census of the United States for the last ten years, that our immigrants are away and beyond superior to theirs in character and quality. Their immigrants are almost exclusively composed of that class which we on this side do not consider a desirable addition to our people.

So much for the imports. Now take the exports, and let us see what a wonderful development has taken place in Canada during the period the present tariff policy has been in existence. Hon. gentlemen opposite may attribute our development to what influence they please. They may call in to their aid Providence and good luck or anything they like. As long as we have the result, we do not care how it was immediately brought about. But the improvement is here ; and if the present government should remain in power, it is here to stay. Look at our exports. In 1896 we exported $8,000,000 worth of minerals. Last year we exported $31,000,000 worth. But the greatest development that has taken place is in animals and their products and agriculture. In 1896 we exported $36,000,000 of animals and their products. Last year we exported $69,000,000. In 1896, we exported $14,000,000 worth of agricultural products. Last year we exported $44,000,000 worth. Altogether in farm products we exported in 1896, $50,000,000 worth and last year $114,000,000 worth. Providence may be responsible for that to a considerable extent. Providence permits the sun to shine, the seeds to germinate, and waters the soil with the rain from heaven.

But somebody is required to put his hand to the plough, to plant the seed with judgment, to exercise intelligence in the marketing of the crop—and to be assisted, as far as possible, by the present government in removing any restrictions which interfere with his marketing it to the best advantages. That is where the aid and assistance of the present government comes in. Then we have the increase in provisions—in 1896 $21,000,000 and last year $50,000,000. Cheese, 1896, $14,000,000 ; last year, $24,000,000. Butter, an increase from $1,000,000 in 1896 to $7,000,000 last year. Bacon, an increase from $4,000,000 in 1896 to $16,000,000 last year. And so, altogether we exported last year $214,000,000 worth of the produce of Canada, where, in 1896, we exported only $109,000,000. Our total exports and imports in 1896, the produce of Canada, amounted to $222,000,000, as against $448,000,000 last year. Is that not something to be proud of ? Is that not something the government can take some slight credit for ? We do not want to attribute all the credit to the government ; we want to leave a little of it to the intelligence and industry of our people. But it is a wonderful significant thing that such a change should have taken place in so short a period of time ; that just when the affairs of our country were being managed by this new set of men this great increase of trade should have taken place. It is a singular coincidence. Each man must infer from it whatever he thinks right. And how do we find ourselves at the end of the seven years ? We find ourselves away ahead of any other nation under the sun in the increase of our foreign trade. Canada stands at the top, with an increase of 103 per cent. The United States had an increase of 67 per cent ; Germany, 58 per cent ; Australia, 38 per cent ; Great Britain, 24 per cent ; France, 22 per cent, and Sweden, 9 per cent. Why should we feel discouraged ? Why should not we feel proud of our country ? Why should not we have faith in our government, during whose reign these things have occurred ? We have increased the revenue of the country from $36,000,000 to $66,000,000, and if we had continued the old tariff we could have increased it by four or five millions more. And how has all this affected the common people ? You find them all sharing in the enjoyment of this era of prosperity. In the twenty-five years following 1868 the deposits in the savings banks increased from $68,000,000 to $245,000,000, an increase of $177,000,000. During the past seven years they increased still further by $225,000,000. Then take the aid that business men required in the giving of discounts. In the first twenty-five years of the history of the Dominion these increased from $86,000,000 to $224,000,000, or an increase of $158,000,000. During the past seven years the increase was $182,000,000. Take the bank assets. During the first twenty-five years these increased from $121,000,000 to $316,000,000, or an increase of $195,000,000. During the past seven years they have increased to $641,000,000, being an increase of $325,000,000. Then take our shipping—increased from 49,000,000 to 70,000,000 tons in the last seven years. Take our railways—increased from 16,214 to 19,883 miles ; passengers carried, from 13,000,000 to 20,000,000 ; railway earnings, from $50,000,000 to $83,000,000. All along the line you find an increase of 50, 60, 70, 80, 90 or 100 per cent. In only one column do we find that the figures are greater under the Conservative government than under the present government. In 1896 there were 2,118 failures for $16,000,000. Last year there were 1,101 failures, representing $8,000,000. The only item in which the late government excelled this government was in bringing about conditions which made it twice as likely that a man would fail if he engaged in business, and twice as many did fail before the present government came into power. Everywhere to-day we find prosperity. Every town and hamlet is prosperous. Every farm is increased in value ; every farm mortgage lessened ; every man assured of employment at increased wages. And yet our friends opposite say that we have mismanaged the country.

But, Sir, I intend to devote myself to the question that was presented for our consideration by the Finance Minister yesterday. He told us something that the member from Compton said not ten men in this House could understand. I am willing to take my place with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope), who said he did not understand it. But, from some of the observations he made, I could understand that a much simpler problem than that presented in the financial affairs of this country would call for the use of the hon. gentleman's whole endowment of the mental powers. The thing we are particularly interested in here to-night is not the character of Sir Richard Cartwright, not the views he entertained twenty-five or thirty years ago, not the views entertained by any man when the conditions were entirely dissimilar from those we have here to-day. The question is what is best to be done under the circumstances under which we find ourselves placed. The government have considered the matter, and have given us their views in the resolution that was introduced in the House yesterday: 'That it is expedient to amend the customs tariff of 1897.' A great many people have been thinking for some years that changes in the tariff were absolutely necessary. I have come to the conclusion myself, after very careful examination of the question in some of its phases, and after having had the opportunity of accompanying different deputations to interview the government, that it would be a good thing if we could revise this tariff and better adapt it to our present conditions. A tariff that was admirably calculated to draw us out of the condition of stagnation in which we stood in 1896 might not be the best tariff under the changed conditions of to-day. And it may be, as has been represented by the Minister of Finance, that the best plan to be adopted is, before we make a general change in the tariff, to have those members of the administration who are best qualified to pursue such an investigation do what they did seven years ago—go out into the promised land and make a strict search into its conditions and report their observations to their colleagues, and, with the advice of their officers in the departments, once more present to the people of this Canada a tariff possibly better suited to its needs and its requirements even than the modified tariff of to-day. Therefore, when the minister says that this is the intention of the government, and that he had in his own mind a maximum tariff to be applied to nations that might not treat us with such favourable consideration as others, and a minimum tariff with those who are prepared to deal with us on fairer and more equitable terms, and further, to have a preferential tariff in favour of Great Britain that shall not be injurious to the people of Canada, I am heartily in accord with him. I am exceedingly glad that the government had the courage to raise the tariff on certain items, especially to raise the tariff on woollens by putting them back on the 30 per cent list.

I think they were wise in that. The arguments that were presented in the petition of the woollen men left them no other course. I sympathize with them in the position in which they found themselves. They had given a voluntary preference to the people of Great Britain greater than under the circumstances was in the true interest of the people of Canada, and when it was found impractical, every day working that while it was beneficial to the great mass of the people it was doing an irreparable injury to one of the prime industries of the country, I am glad to say that the government could swallow their pride and remove from the statute books something that was a grievance and a menace to the woollen industry of the country. It might be said and it has been said that the woollen people did not require that relief. I am in a position to prove that the woollen industry was suffering and absolutely required this relief and I think the financial returns will best prove that.

If we take the principal items that are affected by the change in the tariff what do we find?

In 1896 there were imported of cashmeres, cloths and doe skins, $1,170,000 worth.

In 1903 there were imported $2,381,000 worth.

And during the 10 months of the present year $1,900,000 worth, or during the past 10 months an increase of 50 per cent over the entire year 1896.

Take wool coatings and we find that during the same period they had increased from $488,000 to $944,000, and to $764,000 during the past 10 months, or an increase of 50 per cent.

Tweeds increased from $428,000 in 1898, to $1,600,000 during the past 10 months. This gives total import of the goods in reference to which the woollen men complain, of $2,096,000 during the first 10 months of this year, an increase of 100 per cent. At the same time the raw wool, out of which the Canadian manufacturer makes his stuff was imported in 1896 to the extent of $1,215,000 and last year to the extent of only $1,374,000, an increase of 11 per cent in the raw material of the woollen mill while there was an increase of 300 per cent in the importation of manufactured tweeds. Why should not the owners of woollen mills participate in this grand prosperity which has come to this country. Why should their industry be singled out almost exclusivly as the one which should not participate. No amount of argument based on one particular woollen mill engaged in a particular line of industry, will avoid objections as apparent as this, when we realize that the importation of raw material used by these men had increased 11 per cent in the last seven years while the importations of the manufactured product increased by from 50 to 100 or 300 per cent. I say that the government was wise in making that change and I am rejoiced at it.

I need not say that I sympathize with the duty value which is placed upon horses and mares, and also with the duty value placed upon carriages. I felt gratified when the government introduced something that was going to remedy an evil that had long been tormenting the manufacturers of this country, an evil that only assumed its present magnitude owing to the high protective policy of our friends across the line, the policy which our frends on the other side desire to make the law of the land. Nowhere is it possible to create such tremendous corporations except in a country where they have fattened at the expense of the producing class of the country. In order to prevent this unfair discrimination, this unfair dumping as it were in order, to wipe out Canadian industries the government have introduced what they think will, even if it is not perfect, at least to a certain extent be effective in removing these grievances. It is quite a simple proposition to any one who is willing to devote the time to it, and is quite within the power of the government to enforce to a considerable extent with the aid of the efficient appraisers and employees that they have in their departments.

I have worked this out in two or three different phases, and I find this result. If a person buys, for instance, $100 worth of goods, on which the duty is 30 per cent, he would pay in all $130 for these goods. If he has a 10 per cent cut from the American dealer and after that pays 30 per cent duty, he pays $27 odd and gets his stuff for $117, or $13 cheaper than he ought to, and our manufacturer has $13 less of protection. If he happens to be found out under the law as it was before yesterday afternoon, he would have to pay 30 per cent protection on the full value of these goods, but having paid on 90 the result would be that they would cost $120 laid down in his establishment. Under the new law, a man buying these goods at $90 would have to pay 30 per cent on the full value, but if he paid the special duty of $10 that would bring up the price he would have to pay to the original $30. This works no hardship to the individual, it takes from the American manufacturers who desire to dump goods into Canada, $10 that otherwise would go into his pocket, and puts it into the treasury of this country. I look forward with a good degree of confidence to the operation of this dumping clause. This clause which we have been informed cannot be understood by ten men in this House, will be understood in Canada within 24 hours after it became law by every manufacturer who is troubled by having his legitimate business interfered with this slaughtering adopted by the people on the other side of the line.

On the coal oil question I am not sufficiently well informed to pretend to speak, but I do not see anything in any of the tariff changes that can be objectionable. The tariff on the contrary contains everything to commend it to the people of this country. I have dealt with the past and the present. What about the future? Our friends opposite desire that we shall establish the American high tariff policy in this country. I, on the other hand, with the members of the Liberal party, do not think that the establishment of that tariff would be in the interests of the people of Canada, and I am not a free trader either, as you must all understand by this time. I am willing to go in for protection if you choose to call it that, so long, as the protection is in the interests of the people of this country, but as my ideas are so much better presented in the language of another man, I shall read them. He says:

> One object then of import duties was to raise revenue for the government. Another object was to develop a nation's home industries, as nearly as possible to the point of producing everything its people required. These have been the two main purposes of tariff laws down to the present time. Few better objects than the second could engage a government's attention so long as wise methods were adhered to. Next in importance to security of life and property is industrial growth, which furnishes supplies for additional people to live upon, and is the chief means of developing character and civilization. The more nearly a nation produces at home every variety of commodity it needs, the more independent it may be, and the better prepared to bear the suspension of its foreign trade by war. Also, the more closely a nation utilizes its varied resources, the wider is the opportunity for choice of occupations, and the higher the devolopment of individual skill.
> The greater the variety of industries, the fewer the competitors of each person, and the greater the number of his customers.
> When a protective duty on a commodity imported will induce persons to establish its production at home, the public advantage of possessing another industry, to employ labour and capital, and turn untouched raw material into wealth, unquestionably justifies the imposition of the duty if by the tax added to price, and by the stopping of exports that tends to follow stopping of imports, the people are not required to give more for the new industry than it will be worth.

That is the key to the whole situation. We can afford to protect the people of this country, but if we protect them too highly we are paying more for the benefit that will accrue than it will be worth. Have the people of the United States paid too dearly for their prosperity? Have they anything particularly to boast of? We look with pride at the wonderful development that has taken place in the United States during the past few years, but the development has been one-sided. The rich have been becoming richer and the poor poorer. Just let me read for your information something about the steel corporation: The steel corporation's total capitalization is $1,404,000,000; its net earnings for its first nine months ending November 30, were, $84,779,298, exceeding ten per cent on its stock. The steel corporation supports a million people counting families of employees, controls two-thirds of the American steel industry, owns 115 lake ships, 6 railroads, 80 per cent of the known deposits of Lake Superior iron, 105,000 acres of land in Pennslyvania, and leases 98,000 acres of gas land.

This industry is controled by a few men. Look at the condition of the United States before you attempt to copy their tariff and see what you will find there:

Perhaps the most accurate count of industrial trusts is that of the national census of 1900, from which pools and loose combinations are excluded. A summary of its figures is given by Superintendent Merriam in the 'Atlantic' for March, 1902. The total is 183, with 2,203 plants, and with a capital of $3,569,615,808. Their total output for the census year, $1,661,000,000 shows that they absorb less of the industrial field than is commonly supposed. The total output of all manufacturing (not yet computed) is expected to reach about $13,000,000,000.

Where did these few men get this $3,659,000,000 to put into these trusts? Where did Carnegie get his money, supposed to be worth $1,000,000,000? Was it the result of honest labour? No, it was by taking from the producers of the United States more than was his fair share and that as a result of the introduction of a high tariff. Briefly then, a high tariff bears heavily upon the mass of the people for the benefit of the controllers of these great institutions. It may be said that I exaggerate the conditions in the United States. Well, I do not need to give you my opinion. Let me read you an opinion that you may very well believe in. There is being formed in the United States to-day and they will have their meeting in St. Louis, an organization for the express purpose of inducing the people of Ireland to remain at home and not submit themselves to the conditions as they exist now in that highly protected and prosperous country? What do we find? We find the very first man who expresses an opinion is Cardinal Gibbon, a man in whom we have confidence. He said:

I know under what circumstances people live in America. My advice to the young men and women of Ireland is to endeavour to find a livelihood in their own land. Any man or woman who could eke out a livelihood at home should take my advice and stay there instead of emigrating to America to enter on the keen struggle for existence under trying circumstances that are in progress here.

We are everlastingly hearing about the tremendous development of the United States, of its millionaires, its trusts, its wealth, its development and its trade. We do not hear from the submerged, not the tenth, but the ninetieth that live there. Take for instance the statement of Dr. Ludden, Bishop of Syracuse, who writes as follows.

'All the places are filled, all the offices are occupied, and even a smart young Irishman coming here—an educated Irishman, full of brains and full of ability, full of muscle and full of strength—even he has great difficulty to find a position and if he is to get anything to do it must be in the most menial, common and laborious occupation. If he cannot find this, he has simply to do what we call hang around the saloons and liquour stores and descend in the social scale as low as it is possible for a human being to go. I have seen it and I know it, and hence I would like my voice and my advice to reach every young man in Ireland—if he can possibly find a competence and a decent way of living at home—to remain there.

What does John Redmond say?

I have seen the Irish labourer in the great steel works. I have seen him working like a white slave, stripped almost naked in the furnace, working ten and twelve hours a day and sometimes sixteen hours for a dollar and a half, which in America is a wretched and miserable wage. These men work under conditions which make the duration of their capacity to work for any man ten years, and then they are thrown aside. They scarcely lead the lives of human beings at all; they have no happiness, no recreation, no health, no home life, and too often, as an inevitable consequence, no religion. I say that the poorest man in Kerry is better off in Ireland than these men in America. We must put a stop to our people being deluded and seduced into leaving Ireland to find only in America conditions infinitely worse morally, physically and materially than the poorest in Ireland.

This is the picture that other people paint of the United States and our hon. friends on the other side of the House desire us to establish a tariff in this country that will inevitably have for its end the forming of combinations, the making of multi-millionaires and the sinking of the mass of our people in poverty and misery. If what these bishops and leading men in the Roman Catholic church state represents the true condition of the United States how does it compare with the condition of Canada to-day? Can any one truthfully say that an Irishman working on a farm in Ireland under the conditions that we think they have in that country could come to Canada and find the conditions which exist in the United States to-day ? They cannot be found. There is not a hamlet in this country where you cannot find work for an Irishman who is honest and industrious and Mr. Redmond and his ecclesiastical friends need not be afraid to send them to Canada because we are living under conditions and under a tariff which will not permit conditions such as those that exist in the United States. A great many workmen are under the impression that a high tariff is of particular advantage to them and that under it they get high wages. It is a most absurd contention. High wages certainly do exist sometimes with a high tariff but low wages also exist where tariffs are high. If high wages in the United States were to be attributed to the tariff, why are wages not equally high in Germany, Russia and if no wages are to be attributed to no tariff at all, why are wages so much higher in England than in Germany or France ? Any man knows that high protection which keeps out competition will give him more work, but anybody of intelligence knows that where there is free trade in labour and a man can sbift from place to place, it is this competition in the labour market that fixes his wage and not the amount of the duty. In this country the men that are getting the highest wages, the bricklayers and the stonemasons, are the men who are not protected at all except through the influence of trades unions and the loyalty that one has for the other.

It is a great mistake for people to suppose that high tariffs better the condition of the working classes. It is true that for years the condition of the working class in the United States has been good, but that was due largely to the fact the country was full of untold wealth. In Canada the conditions are peculiar. There has never been such development in our country as there has during the past seven years under the existing tariff. And while in some high tariff and low tariff countries there are signs of approachng trouble, there is not a shadow of depression visible on the horizon of the Canadian industrial nation. I am more familiar with the conditions in my own city of Brantford, and I know what the results are there. I beg to present to the House the following statement of the employees in the several manufacturing concerns in 1903, as compared with 1896, and the result, is, it will be admitted, most satisfactory :

	1,439	3,820

It will be seen that the number of employees in these factories have increased from 1,439 in 1896 to 3,820 in 1903. And the president of the Brantford Board of Trade, speaking with later information says :

In 1902, there were 3,870 employed, while in 1903 this number had risen to 4,570, an increase of 700. In 1902 the wages paid amounted to $1,506,000, while in 1903 they amounted to $1,742,000, an increase of $236,000.

And yet some people say that Canada is not prosperous.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. How many are employed in the Bailey Cutlery Works.

Mr. HEYD. I am very sorry to say there are not many. But when Canada gets big enough to sustain an industry of that kind, such an industry will survive and not till then. There are other reasons which I might give to the hon. gentleman, but I do not need to mention them now. However, here is some information which will be interesting to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith). In the Brantford newspapers we find that the following manufacturers want the following number of labourers, and the statement is given of the wages to be paid.

Buck Works :
12 labourers at $1.50 per day.
12 moulders (piece work).
12 stove plate moulders.

Cockshutt Plough Works :
12 labourers at $1.35 per day.
3 blacksmiths at $1.50 to $2.

Verity Works :
20 labourers at $1.35 per day.
2 blacksmiths at $1.50 to $2.
6 hammermen, $2.
12 handymen at $1.40 to $1.75.

Waterous Works :
6 labourers at $1.45.
6 blacksmiths at $2 to $2.50.

Massey-Harris Works :
24 handymen, $1.35 and over.

Schultz Bros. :
12 carpenters, $2 to $2.50.
6 bricklayers, $4.
20 plasterers, $3.50.

Cockshutt Road Company :
15 shovellers, $1.75.
15 cement men.

A summary of the above table shows that the following workmen are required :—

Labourers	50
Moulders	12
Stove platers	12
Blacksmiths	11
Hammer workers	6
Handymen	36
Carpenters	12
Bricklayers	6
Plasterers	20
Shovellers	15
Cement men	15
Total	195

Here we have 195 men advertised for in Brantford, and there is a further advertisement for 100 more men to work on a new railway. And yet they tell us that Canada is not prosperous. Why, the city of Brantford is only a specimen of what is going on all over the country. The same thing is going on in Peterborough, in Hamilton, and in other cities, and it is gong on under the present tarff. These gentlemen opposite told us that twenty per cent was too low a tariff on harvesters. But is was high enough to drive the Deering Company over here to establish a factory in Canada and to invest millions of money and give employment to hundreds of working men. The tariff is big enough to drive one industry after another from the United States over to this country. It is adequate for that purpose. And have we not the statement of the leader of the opposition, that, when he was asked whether or not if the Conservative party came into power they would raise the duty on agricultural implements, his reply was :

I said if it were necessary for the purpose of preserving that great Canadian industry, I would be prepared to raise the duty.

If the industry can be preserved it is not necessary to raise the duty, and the best evidence that it can be preserved is that the Cockshutt Plough Company has enlarged its factory three times in seven years, and that the Verity Plough Company, and Goold, Shapley and Muir have done the same thing, and all of them have largely increased the number of their employees during that seven years. That is a specimen of the development in Canada to-day, and yet some people want to change the tariff under which such things are accomplished, and introduce a high tariff which might bring about the conditions which exist in the United States. I am quite satisfied that when this commission examines into the various industries, the government will be able to revise the tariff once more in the interests of the people of Canada, so that there may be continued to us that prosperity inaugurated seven years ago, under which our people are so happy and so contented. I believe in the tariff changes made by the government so far as I can understand them. I believe these tariff changes will bring about a certain degree of prosperity to the woollen industry, and I am satisfied that those interested in that industry are content with the change. If the announcement of the Finance Minister is carried out, and when that commission investigates the existing conditions, I am satisfied that a tariff suitable to the changed conditions will be given to the people by this government, and that the fiscal legislation of the Liberal party will redound in the future to the welfare and prosperity of the people of Canada, as it has done in the past.

On motion of Mr. Vrooman the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier the House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 9, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

COLD STORAGE AND VENTILATION ON OCEAN STEAMERS.

Mr. E. D. SMITH—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

What was the kind of ventilation, if any, last season, in the compartments in which perishable cargo was stored on the steamers 'Livonia,' 'Tritonia' and 'Devona'; and was the system in proper working order in each such compartment when these steamers left the port of Montreal ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture).

SS. 'Livonia.'

This vessel did not carry perishable cargo from the Port of Montreal last season.

SS. 'Tritonia.'

No. 1 'tween decks. two 24 inch cowl ventilators; one 11 inch ditto; and one 36 inch ventilator with steam driven propeller fan.

Nos. 2 and 3 'tween decks: one 24 inch cowl ventilator; one 24 inch ventilator with steam driven propellor fan; and one 36 inch ventilator with steam driven propellor fan.

No. 1 orlop deck: three 12 inch cowl ventilators; and one 14 inch ventilator with steam driven fan.

No. 1 hold: 2 intakes and 1 outtake.
No. 2 hold: 2 intakes and 2 outtakes.
No. 3 hold: 2 intakes and 1 outtake.
No. 4 hold: 1 intake and 1 outtake.
No. 5 hold: 1 intake and 1 outtake.

SS. 'Devona.'

On this vessel the cold storage and cooled air compartments occupied all the space in the 'tween decks. The holds were ventilated by two steam driven propellor fans, by ten cowl ventilators, and by three trunk ventilators.

The system of ventilation in the steamship 'Tritonia' and steamship 'Devona' was on proper working order when these steamers left the port of Montreal.

LORD DUNDONALD'S SPEECH.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the House to an article that appears in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of yesterday. The article is not very long and I will read it to the House. It is as follows :

A MILITARY SENSATION.

Lord Dundonald's Speech at Windsor Banquet.

Deplores the interference of politicians with the appointments to the Canadian volunteer force—The condition, he says, is intolerable.

Toronto, June 7.—The 'World' this morning publishes the following sensational story under an Ottawa date :—

A Montreal officer who was present at the military dinner at the Windsor Saturday, stated here to-day that Lord Dundonald's sensational speech, although carefully written out and intended for publication, had been carefully suppressed by the Montreal newspapers. This is what the general said :

When a nation is in peril the commanding officer had the supreme control of the military appointments, and he is responsible to his country for its efficiency in war. In time of peace, unhappily, through political intriguers, we are in their web, and appointments are made without regard to military efficiency and to the great peril of the nation's safety. Officers in command of the forces of this country should not be selected because of their particular politics, but unfortunately this is the case.

A most flagrant instance of political interference has recently come before me in connection with the appointment of officers in the new eastern townships cavalry regiment, the Scottish Light Dragoons. The commanding officer of the corps had selected officers because of their apparent fitness from a military point of view. The names reached me and were sent to council, and gentlemen, what do you think happened ? The list having my approval was returned with the name of one officer stricken off, and initialed by the Minister of Agriculture.

The gentleman whose name was stricken from the list was Dr. Pickell, the mayor of Sweetsburg, and warden of the county of Missisquoi, a man chosen of the people and well qualified to serve his King and country. His political colour was not, however, that of the Minister of Agriculture, and consequently he was not considered fit to serve his King in the military force of Canada.

'If,' said Lord Dundonald, 'the Hon. Sydney Fisher has been as well versed in soldiering as in agriculture, he would have better understood the responsibilities of officers, and this would not have happened.'

Mr. FISHER.

After making a few more remarks, the general said : 'It is intolerable that my recommendations, made in the best interests of the force, should be so grossly interfered with by any minister, not connected with the department.

Lord Dundonald's speech was greeted with tremendous applause.

Lt.-Col. Whibbard also made a speech in which he endeavoured to shield the Minister of Agriculture, saying that it was difficult to suppose that Hon. Mr. Fisher would be guilty of such an act.

It goes without saying that the speech is the talk of both Ottawa and Montreal.

The question I would like to ask is as to whether the government is aware of this article which is published in the 'Citizen.' It is a very serious matter and I think requires some explanation.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I have to inform my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) and the House as well that the government's attention has been called to the reported speech of Lord Dundonald. The matter is a very grave one and I have only to say that to-morrow the government will be prepared to make a communication to the House upon it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not on Monday ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In answer to the question just put to me by my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) why this matter should not be postponed until Monday instead of to-morrow, I would say to my hon. friend that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is under a very serious misapprehension and stricture, and I think it is better that the matter should be cleared up at the earliest possible moment.

CANADIAN FISHING REGULATIONS.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called perhaps the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) will make the announcement that he promised to make to the House.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I received the statement which I intend to lay on the table of the House, but it was too late to submit to my colleagues and I will submit it to the House to-morrew.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That the Speaker do now leave the chair, for the House to go into commitee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to detain the House very long and I do not propose to weary it with long arrays of figures. The question of figures and statistics has been dealt with by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken from this side of the House. I propose to deal more generally with the question. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) made a very charming speech. It gave great pleasure to the members on his own side of the House ; and we do not begrudge them that, because it is seldom they have had an occasion since this session opened to indulge in a little fun or a little laughter. They had some justification for their mirth yesterday, because the figures with regard to our manufacturing industries quoted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce were amusing if they were not correct. The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that the statement of the Finance Minister, in which he was able to boast of continuous prosperity, must have been gall and wormwood to the members of the opposition. Let me tell the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he is mistaken there. No matter what party may be in power, the Conservatives of Canada will always be gratified when a Finance Minister in his budget speech is able to present indications that Canada is prosperous, even though mismanaged. The Minister of Trade and Commerce evidently cannot conceive that other men have loftier and more patriotic views than he entertains. The hon. gentleman inferentially took credit to the government that the farmers of Canada are more prosperous to-day than they were some years ago. Let me call his attention to the fact that in the states of the union which some years ago he so ably represented as immigrant agent, in Kansas, the Dakotas and thewestern states generelly, the farmers were in an infinitely more depressed condition than ever were the farmers in any part of Canada. During some years of prosperity the farmers in these states recovered their position, and so keenly did they rejoice at their translation from commercial slavery to freedom, that they made bonfires of the mortgages which they had redeemed and which at one time they thought must swamp them. Providence has sent to these states a bounteous harvest for several years in succession, and as the farmers of Canada have had the same experience of late years they are prosperous in a degree. The Minister of Finance presented a budget which was eminently satisfactory from several points of view. He was able to speak of large revenues, increasing deposits in the banks, progressive trade, and he took credit for that to the wise administration of himself and his colleagues. Well, Sir, the reason of this prosperity is that we have had good crops, higher prices for our produce, and greater areas of virgin soil brought under cultivation ; thus presenting to our people new sources of wealth which we trust will be of advantage to our country for many years to come. The budget was more remarkable for what it omitted than for what it contained. The Minister of Finance presented a diagram, presumably to show the progress Canada has made since confederation ; but that diagram was remarkable for the omission of any indication as to the imports by Canada from the United States. It is a most extraordinary thing that the Minister of Finance should deliberately suppress the one part of that diagram which the government wished the country to be ignorant of. I do not think the Minister of Finance realized what he was doing when he deliberately placed before the country a diagram purporting to show the progress of every branch of our trade, and omitted to show our trade with our most important and largest customer, the United States. Another omission which is unprecedented is that the Minister of Finance made no reference whatever to the anticipated revenue and expenditure for the coming year. I presume we may take it for granted that there is an election to be held before next session, and that the Minister of Finance did not want to bring forward any estimate which might be found to be fallacious. There was another very extraordinary omission from the budget speech. This government has committed the country to an expenditure for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway of anywhere between $120,000,000 and $170,000,000, adding 50 per cent to our national debt, and yet the Minister of Finance had not a word to say as to how this money would be raised or as to what effect the scheme will have on our future revenue and expenditure. These omissions were apparently made after great thought and deliberation, and evidently with the view of misleading the country. The election is near ; these figures would not be pleasant reading for government supporters in the political campaign, and so they are hidden from the people. The Minister of Finance claims that the debt of this country has not been increased during the eight years this government has been in power. That may be true if we take as gospel the system of book-keeping which the Finance Minister has adopted, but even according to the minister's own figures he shows that this government has taken an increased taxation from the people of $57,800,000 as compared with the revenue under the Conservative government in like period, and yet the Liberal government has only reduced the debt by $1,084,000. I would point out that the Minister of Finance takes credit on revenue account, for payments on account of public lands to the extent of $1,695,000, an item which surely should be credited to capital account, because we are using up the capital in our lands, and by no possible argument could this be credited on the revenue side of the account. The erroneous and false method of book-keeping which the Minister of Finance has adopted, is an imitation of the vicious principle which has been followed by the Ontario government and I think by some other provincial governments.

They are crediting year by year to revenue account the money which they derive from sales of timber lands, amounting to enormous sums. They are making no provision to replace the capital which is exhausted from year to year; and as time goes on this, instead of being an asset, will turn into a liability. The exports from Canada to the United States in 1896 were $44,448,000, in 1903 $71,783,000, an increase of $27,000,000. Our imports in 1896 were $58,570,000 and in 1903, $137,000,000. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, while not very sure about it, stated that it was probably a beneficial thing for the imports and exports of a country to be about an even keel; which is the same as saying that a man who has $1,000 a year and spends the whole of it is about as well off as he would be if he spent only $750 and saved $250 for a rainy day. I find that the products of the forest exported from this country in 1903 amounted to $36,000,000. If we take the value of that timber in the stump, or the capital value belonging to this country, we find that we drew upon our capital last year to the extent of over $7,000,000, which went to swell the exports of the country and to diminish our assets. The expenditure in a growing country is naturally an increasing one, and I would not for a moment suggest that the expenditure to-day should be on the same plane as it was in 1896. But what I do claim is that the expenditure has gone up by leaps and bounds, that it is far in excess of the requirements of the country, and that it has not been caused by necessary works or proper development, but largely by extravagant expenditure and expenditure on useless works. All the work done by this government has been done at a cost vastly in excess of the cost under Conservative rule, while allowing for any increase in wages that may have occurred since 1896. I need only give one instance, that is the cost of taking the census. Any one comparing the cost of that service in 1901 and in 1891 will see at a glance that the extravagance there has been utterly reckless and uncalled for. The government have had at their disposal, without increasing the debt of the country, over $57,000,000. What have they done with it or what have they done for it? They promised us before they came into power that they would give us a fast Atlantic service; they promised vastly improved navigation on the St. Lawrence and on the great lakes. They have spent some money on the St. Lawrence, but the navigation has not been improved, as is evident from the increasing number of wrecks. On the great lakes I think I may safely say that nothing has been done since 1896 to render navigation safer. I do not know of half a dozen lighthouses erected since 1896 on the coasts of the great lakes, where the business is so enormous that we almost wonder where it comes from. If you take a marine map of the United States coast, which also includes our coast, showing the lighthouse stations on the American coast, and then look at what we have, every Canadian should be ashamed of the negligence that has been displayed by Canada in this matter. I know that within the last three weeks vessels coming down and overtaken by fogs have been delayed for days on the coast because of the lack of foghorns and lights. It is claimed by the Finance Minister that the debt of this country has not been increased, but that the debt per head has decreased. The debt per head in 1896 was $49.08; now it is $46.69, a reduction of $2.39 per head; but the debt is spread over a larger number of people, which makes it smaller per head. The rate of taxation in 1896 was $5.46 per head; now it is $8.87, or an increase of $3.41 per head, not on the old population on which the debt was figured, but on the increased population, showing the increased taxes per head to be more than the reduction of the debt per head for the whole eight years. Now there is no question that our trade is increasing. Our trade ought to increase. We have a vast area of virgin soil, we have enormous natural resources, and we only require to delve into these from year to year to increase our wealth, without reference to any government, good or bad. But a good government ought to so develop our natural resources and bring them before the people that wealth shall be obtained from them at the lowest possible cost and to the advantage of the greatest number of people. But I claim that the government have been absolutely neglectful of this vast natural wealth. Since 1896, when we were just beginning to realize what we had in this country, the government had taken over $57,000,000 out of the people, and what have they done to show to the people what our natural wealth is? The only item in the whole list of expenditures that shows a decrease is the geological survey. I contend this government would have been wise, and and it would have had the support of every one on this side of the House, had it taken a sum going into the millions, to find out for the people of this country, in detail as far as possible, the extent of our natural resources, and the best way to utilize them. This government have not taken one single step towards that end. We have in this country great water-powers, vast timber resources, and immense deposits of minerals. We do not know any more about a great part of this country than we did two hundred years ago, as we found when the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill and its mountains of information were laid on this table. From Nipigon for hundreds of miles to the east we have only the reports of a few surveyors and prospectors, who went up and down the rivers. We have no cross surveys and no adequate knowledge of the country. I contend that the first duty of the government, when it came into power. and knowing the strides which this country was making, was to have devoted a large sum of money each year to a systematic exploration of our country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, so that we should have at least some little preliminary knowledge of what we own. We would then have been able to deal intelligently with any scheme that was presented to this House.

People anxious to invest would be able to know where to go with the prospect of finding what they wanted, and we would be in a position to ascertain, to some extent at all events, the value of our national heritage. We are as ignorant of that to-day practically as we were thirty years ago. If England is anxious about her coal supply and is appointing commissions to inquire into the question, and if England put on an export duty on coal to prevent her natural resources in that commodity being depleted, is it not equally the duty of this government to try and arrive at some idea of our natural resources ? We are depleting our timber at a rate which no one in Canada realizes. It is quite true that this timber is more or less under the control of the different provinces, but surely it is in the interests of the country at large that this government should suggest the taking of some steps in order to reach an agreement among the provinces on some plan for the reforestering of the immense tracts which are now being laid bare. The greatest wealth Canada possesses is being exhausted and without our getting practically any return compared with the enormous value we are losing. Although this matter comes not directly under the control of this parliament, surely it is something concerning which this parliament might well take steps to initiate some policy or have some policy adopted by the provinces. If England is anxious about her coal, is it not time that we should be anxious about our timber ? In the United States their timber wealth has been enormously reduced, and the different States of the Union are beginning to realize that the greatest mistake they ever made was in not replanting the forests which were cut down. In the old world one of the most important branches of every government is the preservation of its timber resources, and the cutting of timber is there regarded as almost a sacred thing. That will be the case some day in this country, but the longer you put off dealing with the question, the greater will be our loss.

Mr. WRIGHT. Suppose we undertook to reforest the province of Ontario, would not the timber become the property of that province, and we would incur all the expense ?

Mr. OSLER. I thought I had made myself plain. I said that the timber belongs to the provinces but that nevertheless the question is so important that I think this government ought to bring it to the notice of the different provinces and endeavour to have some general plan adopted for the preservation of our forests. While the timber lands belong to the provinces, the provinces belong to this country. Our statistics are made up largely of the exports of the natural products of the different provinces, and our Finance Minister takes credit for these in his budget speech.

We have another asset, which is practically in the same condition as our timber, and that is our water-powers. If by any good luck, the government's scheme of railways to the north should be successful, if the country there is what hon. gentlemen opposite have painted it, the water-powers ought to be the most valuable asset in that whole territory. And surely if the government are prepared to spend $150,000,000 in developing that country, it is their duty to take some steps to have that enormously valuable asset, our water-powers, preserved. Yet not a single step has been taken by the government or any province to see that in some way and at some time our water-powers shall enure to the benefit of the state and not to that of private corporations, who are getting these powers all over the country at practically no cost. If our country were mapped out from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the boundary line to the north, and if we had reliable reports to publish to the world showing what there is in this country, you would thereby give a greater incentive to immigration and the investment of capital than you could by any other means. Foreign capitalists, while they know in a general way that Canada has great natural resources are absolutely ignorant where to go and look for any particular branch which they are prepared to develop, and no one can give them any information except private parties who are probably trying to land something upon them at a big price which they have obtained from the government for nothing.

The Minister of Finance has told us that depression exists or at all events is looming up in the United States, the most highly protected nation on the globe, and inferentially assumed that it would not come to a country which is not so highly protected. It is quite true that no system of finance that could be devised would prevent the recurrence of periods of depression and prosperity. The United States are very highly protected, and the result is that when the pendulum swings with a great swing in the years of prosperity, every manufacturing industry is expanded to its utmost limit, and that limit is reached just when prosperity is at its highest. What follows ? Almost immediately there is a feeling about for an outside market and the process of dumping begins. That process is carried on until the manufacturers regain their level, after perhaps some years, and we, as being the nearest neighbours, suffer to the greatest extent. That will always happen so long as we have to the south a nation vastly larger than ours. The manufacturers of Canada are fairly prosperous. Two years ago they were prosperous. Last year they were doing fairly well. This year I am bound to say that in three cases out of five they are just making ends meet, and there is no profit. If things continue another year, in the majority of cases the large manufacturers will be running their establishments at a loss.

The policy of this country, surely, should be to realize this and to have what we might call a fixed policy, not a vacillating policy, one that changes with every change of prosperity among our neighbours to the south of us, a policy that provides for contingencies, and as far as possible protects our manufacturers, giving them at all events their home market to the extent that that can be done. Now, we have a very striking illustration of what I mean in connection with one of our largest manufacturing industries, the woollen trade. It was very seriously affected by the preferential tariff. That tariff I contend was a mistake, although the Minister of Finance said that it was hailed by both sides. My contention is that the preference should have been given for a return preference from the other side. Had we kept that in view, and were we now in a position to say to Great Britain : We will give you a preference in consideration of your giving us a preference—Mr. Chamberlain's hands would have been strengthened and he would have been making much greater progress in winning the country to his side, though I believe his ideas will prevail in a short time. We have weakened him materially by giving away for nothing what we ought to have exchanged with our friends on the other side on equal terms. The government saw, three or four years ago, that the preferential tariff bore especially hard upon one of our large industries, the woollen industry. The year before last this grumbling grew to a rumbling, and last year to a mighty thundering; and this year, the catastrophe arrived and the largest woollen industry in Canada closed down. During the season the Finance Minister, discussing that very branch of industry, hinted to the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) that he, as representative of one of the largest companies, was closing down his mills for political effect. When these mills were closed the government were up against the fact that a million of capital had been wiped out and hundreds, perhaps thousands, of artisans were thrown out of employment and were leaving the country. Not till then—too late to save that capital and to keep these people in our country—the government come down with an amended tariff, though they ought to have known, if they had had an inkling of the opinion of the country or any knowledge of what was going on in the country, that the woollen mills were going to destruction if they kept their tariff in force. They have repented too late ; and I hope they will be severely punished for their long persistence in this sin at all events. Outside of this, the principal item of the proposed amendments to the tariff is the change in the coal oil duty. While not professing to be very well up in the technical details of that industry or able to judge how the tariff will effect one part or another, I venture to say that the change in the tariff which the government have proposed and brought about will have the effect of placing the last remaining wells, and the last native coal oil industries that are owned in Canada, in the hands of the Standard Oil Company. If it were possible to suggest to my friends on the government side a source of campaign funds which they do not already know about, I would tell them that there is no industry upon this continent that has any connection with Canada that can afford to subscribe to their campaign funds in the next election so generously as the Standard Oil Company. We already see how skilfully this change in tariff is being worked. Standard Oil agents in all the towns and villages are advertising : 'In consequence of the change in the tariff, coal oil will be reduced 2½ cents per gallon ; come and buy.' That will continue just so long as it suits the Standard Oil Company, or until they can control the balance of the Canadian oil industry. That will not be a very long time. Then, Mr. Speaker, before many months, after next election, you will find that—without any advertisements in the newspaper—the agents of the Standard Oil Company will put up oil half a cent or a cent at a time until the people of Canada will be bled to an enormous extent.

Mr. HEYD. Nonsense.

Mr. OSLER. We shall see. If the hon. member (Mr. Heyd) will watch the trend of affairs, he will find the same result follow as has followed the abolition of the duties on binder twine, barbed wire, and these other things that are controlled by great monopolies in the country to the south of us.

Mr. HEYD. What is to prevent the dealer in coal oil at any time going to the United States and ordering coal oil to be imported subject to a duty of 2½ cents per gallon, if the Standard Oil Company unreasonably raise prices here ?

Mr. OSLER. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) is not serious. Now, there is one principle which, I think, is accepted by political economists without exception ; and that is, that if there is to be a tariff, that tariff should be as simple as it is possible to make it ; it should be so plain that there need be no difficulty in interpreting it, and so simple that it may be brought into effect with as little friction as possible and as little difficulty to both importer and seller. But this extraordinary, bungling tariff that the Minister of Finance has submitted is so complicated that, I will be bound to say, it will have to be changed before the next session. It is almost impossible to define any articles under that tariff. Some importer, let us say, calls the attention of the government to the fact that a certain article is being brought in at a slaughter price. The government have to find out what the market price of that article really is. It may be an article the price of which may suddenly and greatly change, as for instance rails or some other iron product, the fall in the price of which according to our experience may be from twenty to forty per cent within three weeks. In such a case the government will be absolutely unable to deal with the question in such a fashion as to do justice to the parties. This change puts in the hands of the government an arbitrary power, it even puts in the hands of the officials of the government an arbitrary power, to help their friends and put obstacles in the way of men who do not agree with them, this difficulty being a clear, gratuitous addition to the ordinary difficulties there are in every case in the carrying out of the details of a tariff policy. The government have, we contend, increased the expenditure of this country without giving value for the money which they have taken out of the pockets of the people. They have not spent money in developing the country in the manner which they promised and which the country would support. They have not taken as efficient steps as they should have taken to ascertain the value of our natural heritage, and they are allowing that heritage to go to waste because of the lack of information. The government have not given adequate protection, they have not given the protection which is due to the men who have put their money into manufacturing enterprises in this country. They are dealing with these industries from time to time as it may suit them, or as the necessity of the case may be forced upon them, and in that way they are destroying the confidence of the people in the stability of our tariff and the safety of investing money in our enterprises. They resort to any means or any scheme by which they will be able to say : This is not protection. They have resorted to the worst form of protection, that is the bounty. Two years ago, I think it was, they proposed an enormous bounty on our steel, which would affect principally the works in Nova Scotia. The result was a great rush of speculation, an unhealthy development, which caused a great loss to the people of Canada and the necessity of a reorganization. Proper protection would not have brought that about. In addition to this the government say that bounties are a capital expenditure.

I do not intend to occupy the time of the House longer, but I wish to say a word to show the difference between the two parties. The policy of the government is one of vacillation, of taking advantage of the condition of affairs from day to day, of advocating one policy in one place and at one time and another policy at another place and another time, as it may suit the people whom they address. They have not realized that in this country the first necessity is to have a fixed policy so that every man who runs may read, and every man who goes into business may know that he is protected and that he is entering that business under certain conditions. Another difference between the two parties is that the Conservative party have always believed in the future of their country. The gentlemen who are now in power, more especially the men who spoke so eloquently and so enthusiastically yesterday, never believed in their country in times of depression, and did all in their power to belittle this country and to destroy its credit, by writing letters to the 'Economist,' to the public press, by advising our men to leave this country—they did all in their power when this country was undergoing a period of depression to belittle it and, in a measure, to throw dirt on it. The Conservatives to-day are as delighted, as proud of the prosperity of this country as any member on the other side of the House, and I say further that if it should be the misfortune of this country to again drift into a period of depression, no man on this side of the House will be found throwing dirt at the country or decrying its future. The Conservative party have always had, have to-day and will always have, confidence in the country, whether in prosperity or in adversity.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON (Haldimand). Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to discuss all the points made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Osler), but I may perhaps be excused for dealing with a few of them before proceeding with the discussion as I had intended. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) argued that inasmuch as we exported from this country last year lumber which, upon the stump, would have been worth seven millions of dollars, we had thereby, so to speak, exhausted the capital or the assets of this country to that extent. I noticed that, later on, the same gentleman thought that we had not expended sufficient sums in geological surveys of this country for the purpose, I suppose, of ascertaining its mineral and other resources, in order that these might be exploited. Does not the hon. gentleman see that so long as these minerals remain in the land and are not shipped out of Canada, we are not exhausting the assets of Canada ? Does the hon. gentleman not see the danger of his argument in calling for the exploitation of these natural riches ? If we are losing Canadian wealth in sending our fine timber out of the country, then in like measure we are exhausting her wealth by shipping minerals out of the country. Sir, this is simply to reduce that argument to an absurdity. The fact is, that if we export that timber from this country and get back money return for it, either money or something equally valuable in kind, that money increases the capital of this country, and we are thereby enabled to develop those same mineral resources about which the hon. gentleman has so much anxiety. Then what about the growth of our forests ? I have been told that there are already in existence in Canada limits on which the lumbermen are now beginning their second cut after thirty years' of cutting upon them. I had a most interesting conversation with one of the gentlemen chiefly interested in the question of forestry in the province of Ontario. He told me, Sir—and he is a man of standing—that after careful consideration he was forced to the conclusion that we had in Ontario alone an area of land which, if given over to forestry, and for that it is only fit, would be sufficient to produce in actual growth several million dollars' worth of timber every year. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) went on to say that we should take pains to preserve this enormous wealth and go carefully into the matter of reforestry. I would tell that hon. gentleman that the provincial government in Ontario, with which perhaps I am somewhat intimately acquainted, has initiated a policy of reforestry which it is constantly expanding. What about the national parks and forest reserves which have been set apart for the preservation of the timber ? What about our forest rangers, whose duty it is to prevent fire among our timber ? What about the recent resolution of the Forestry Association asking this government to see to it that when the new road is built precautions shall be taken to prevent the destruction of forest wealth, so that after the districts have been cut over, the timber may be cut again after some years ? I think the hon. junior member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is worrying himself needlessly about the destruction of our assets so far as they consist in the timber wealth of this country. He said, too—and I was surprised at the hon. gentleman when he said it—that the Liberals had expended more money on the public works of this country, in proportion to the amount of public work done, than the Conservatives had done. The public works, service for service, had cost them more. Why not ? As I understand, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is one of the chief managers of that great corporation, the Canadian Pacific Railway. Surely he must know that that railway has to pay more to its wage-earners than it did when the Conservatives were in power. Surely he must know that for materials and labour that railway has to pay more than when the Conservatives were in power. The prices of both labour and materials have gone up, and to advance the argument that the government is extravagant simply because public works cost more, service for service, than in the days when the Conservative government was in power, is a method of argument which surprises me, coming, as it does, from a gentleman who occupies so conspicuous a place in the financial world of Canada.

Why, Sir, he put a question which I did not intend to answer so soon, but I will do so now. He said that the Liberal surpluses amounted to $57,000,000, and he asked : What have you to show for this immense amount of money ? I will give the hon. gentleman some of the items. We have spent on the public works of Canada $6,445,766, and of that $2,638,311 was spent upon improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence, between the ports of Montreal and Quebec. We have spent upon the Montreal harbour itself $503,535, we have spent upon the harbour of port Colborne $447,440, we have spent on the St. Andrew's rapids $94,350, on the Lévis graving dock $96,590, and on the St. Lawrence canals $18,394,220 ; and yet the hon. gentleman, patriotic Canadian, as I believe him to be——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I maintain that the hon. gentleman is a patriotic Canadian.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Yes ; and yet he puts the question : What have we done with this money? He goes on to say that we have done practically nothing to improve the water-ways of Canada—a pretty advertisement for us in the old country, where the hon. gentleman is known ; a pretty encouragement to the commerce along the St. Lawrence, which we are all anxious to increase. Yet we have this absolutely unfounded statement in reference to the improvement of that water-way given to the House here. We have spent on the Yukon $1,940,310 of this surplus, and most of that has come back from that same Yukon. On the Ottawa government buildings largely occasioned by the fire, and even hon. gentlemen opposite will freely acquit us of responsibility for that fire, we have spent $457,574. We have spent on the Halifax garrison $2,834,516, and as loyal Canadians and British subjects there is no man amongst us who will cavil at that. The hon. gentleman may ask : What have we to show for that expenditure upon the Halifax garrison ? It is disbanded, the men have returned to their homes, it is true ; but we have to show as a result of that expenditure a record of loyalty which Canada may well be proud of. I maintain that this has been an expenditure which has brought us more in the way of advertising in the old country, if we wish to come down to such a common cash nexus as that, than every dollar of that expenditure which was made at Halifax. We have spent on railway subsidies $11,828,321. The hon. gentleman surely will not cavil at railway subsidies. Possibly he may do so at these particular subsidies, but in the old days I think his voice was silent, as far as protests went, against railway subsidies. I maintain that by the granting of these subsidies we have opened up vast new territories in which have been established thousands of new homesteads in Canada. We have spent for railway subsidies nearly $12,000,000 really, and this shows where some more of the $57,000,000 of surplus has gone. We have spent on iron and steel bounties $2,199,342 ; on Dominion lands, $1,659,040 ; and on militia, $2,402,171. Mr. Speaker, I dare not enlarge upon the question of the militia, because it is now ten minutes after four, and at six o'clock I presume you will leave the chair. I shall leave the subject over, for, once I had entered upon it, I believe I would exhaust the balance of my time ; and if I had any comment to offer, it would be, not that this expenditure has been too much, but that it has been perhaps a great deal too little. Next, on Manitoba school lands grant we have spent $267,029 ; on consolidated fund, transfer and discount, and expenses of loan of 1897, $1,847,908 ; and on government railways, in raising the Intercolonial Railway from a condition which was not much better than that of a tan-bark road to one of the best equipped and best served railways on this continent, in promoting the efficiency of that road and increasing its mileage from Lévis to Montreal, we have spent $16,974,203. For the expenditure of this money we have no apology whatever to offer. I have not only accounted for the $57,000,000 in regard to which the hon. gentleman asked the question as to what had become of the money, but if he will add these totals up he will find that I have accounted for $69,392,315 instead of the $57,000,000. But he says more ; he says that the per capita reduction of debt is not very creditable to this government. For the life of me, I cannot see what would be more satisfactory than that. If I owed some creditor a thousand dollars and some solvent man came along and offered to share that with me, and thereby reduce the debt which I had to pay to $500, in consequence I would consider myself very much better off than I was before. The very same argument may as well apply to Dominion finances as to private finances. We have a debt of a certain sum, but if more people are here to share the burden, the burden is less. Although the debt may not be greatly reduced, we are all glad to know that it is somewhat reduced. Still, if the people who are now here to share this debt are greater in number this fact goes to increase the expenditure of this government to provide for the necessities which they have as citizens of this country. My hon. friend said another thing which struck me with some surprise, and it was that we did not know very much more about Canada to-day than we did 200 years ago. It was only in 1757, which is much less than 200 years ago, that that great man Voltaire, the wise Voltaire, the learned Voltaire, in writing to M. de Moncrif, made the remark that it was a pity indeed that men in the old world should be killing one another because of a few acres of snow. His reference was to Canada. The great Voltaire knew so much of Canada as to describe it as a few acres of snow in those days, and yet this hon. gentleman says that we know little more about Canada to-day than we did 200 years ago. I think we know what our area is, what our resources are, at least we are beginning partially to understand, we know that we have the greatest unoccupied area of agricultural land in the world, we know its immense fertility, we know that we have thousands and tens of thousands of miles of the richest agricultural land in the world, we know that we have the greatest timber forests in the world, we know that we have mineral resources, that they are immense, although as yet very largely unexplored, we know that we have fisheries which need take second place to none ; and yet the hon. gentleman has said that in many respects we know little more about Canada than we did 200 years ago, when all we knew of it was that there were some Indians here, who, for a very inferior brand of whisky, would turn over certain valuable furs. I do not know that it would be eminently profitable to further follow the argument of the hon. gentleman. There are certain hon. members on this side of the House who have made a special study of that hon. gentleman. I am not an expert on the hon. junior member for West Toronto. I am sure that he and I are personally extremely good friends, and I shall turn him over to the tender mercies of those experts who, in the course of further debate, may find it to their advantage to deal with the subsequent portion of the hon. gentleman's remarks. But I will take up one more of his utterances as the foundation for the balance of the remarks which I propose to make, and that is that the expenditures of this government have been extravagant. I wonder if I have discovered—I almost doubt it—the literary author of 'Leaflet Number 15,' of that delightful Conservative literature now emanating in such large quantities from the press of this country. It reads as follows. I think this is a production which should be embalmed in 'Hansard' :

> Millions on Millions of the People's money thrown to 'Grafters' with a lavish hand.
> The 1903 session of parliament broke the record for reckless extravagance.

To raise election funds, the Liberal government poured out the people's money into the grafters' 'barrels' like water.

Read for yourself the official statement of the enormous votes the government forced through parliament last session, in spite of the strenuous protests of the opposition.

Then follow in detail the main estimates, and the supplementary estimates of 1903 and 1904, not confining it to one year. Then we are given the bounties on iron and steel, the bounties on lead, the railway subsidies, and they charge up $120,000,000 for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway as being voted last session. There is set down $10,000,000 for the Canadian Northern subsidy and $150,000 for bridges in Quebec. The whole of the Quebec bridge is given as voted last session, amounting to $6,678,200, as well as the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Pacific of $31,000,000. And they make a grand total of—what do you think? Two hundred and fifty-six million dollars that we voted here last session. Then they go on to say in this document:

Remember that the Liberals used to denounce an annual expenditure of $38,000,000 as excessive——

An annual expenditure, Mr. Speaker. Then this so called vote, which was not a vote at all, is now reduced to annual expenditure, and they compare this vote so called, which I repeat was never voted, to their expenditure of $38,000,000, and this pamphlet continues:

—and promised to reduce the expenditure by from $2,000,000 to $7,000,000 per year. That is the way they have kept their promises. If you approve this voting $256,000,000 of your money in seven months——

I wonder how much more would have been voted if the session had lasted for twelve months.

—you will keep the present government in power; if not you will put in the Conservatives who protested against it.

Sir, I fancy that this veracious document should run through many editions. I can picture almost what the second edition will be after this session. The first edition I have read to you; the second edition will surely run somewhat as follows: 'Millions upon millions; the people's money poured forth in an increasing stream.' Then they will go on to say: Inasmuch as we have had the Grand Trunk Pacific over again this session there is $171,000,000 voted for the Grand Trunk (since that was the estimate of the leader of the opposition). They will add supplementary estimates of one or two or even three years if necessary; they will add capital expenditure and consolidated fund, and at the end of it all they will say: 'Why, these Grits voted $256,000,000 last year; they voted $250,000,000 this year; they voted over $500,000,000 in the two years, and in two years more at the same average they will have voted a billion dollars of your money; people of Canada think of where you are drifting; do you see your finish? Such, Sir, I fancy will be their second edition of pamphlet No. 15.

Mr. LOGAN. An édition de luxe.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Some gentleman says it is an édition de luxe; I hope I have suggested a reductio ad absurdum. I would pass away from this subject interesting though it may be, and I come to the budget speech so ably presented by the Minister of Finance. I may say that so far as the county of Haldimand is concerned, an agricultural county in the main, I believe that the changes in the tariff announced by the Finance Minister will be eminently satisfactory. I know that the reduction of the duty on coal oil will be a satisfaction to the people there, because they have been asking for it for years past. I was somewhat surprised to find that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is opposed to the reduction of the coal oil duties, but then he lives in a city where they illuminate their houses with electric light and gas, and he has little sympathy for those of us in the country who have to depend on tallow dips or coal oil. The prohibition of the importation of inferior animals will be welcomed by the farmers of this country, because if there is one thing which the Canadian farmer wishes more than another it is improvement in our herds, and the announcement of the Finance Minister in this respect tells of a movement in that direction. The free importation of animals to improve breeding,—even including the goats about which certain unsympathetic remarks have been made—is also a move in the right direction, as is also the free importation of ferment cultures for butter making.

But, Sir, while my county is an agricultural county in a large measure, it has started on the road of being a manufacturing county as well. We have at Niagara Falls an immense power development going on; we expect when that is completed that many thousands of horse-power will be distributed all over the Niagara Peninsula and we hope to get the advantage of cheap power. When that power is distributed among our small towns the people of Haldimand expect a growth in their manufacturing industries. And so, Sir, we view with great satisfaction the announcement of the government that it has said 'stop,' to that dumping process to which no patriotic Canadian can for a moment consent. We are not in my county free traders to a degree, nor protectionists to a degree. We believe in building up Canada; we believe there should be fair competition. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that so great is the manliness of the people in my section of the country that they do not fear fair competition, but when that competition is not fair, when it becomes assassination in place of trade, then the people I represent will stand for the government which is the first government in the history of the world to have framed legislation to stop that abuse which has crushed out so many infant industries in various other countries. That announcement of the Finance Minister will be received with eminent satisfaction in the part of the country which I represent.

And now taking up more particularly what I intended to deal with, I need not apologize to the House for so doing. That pamphlet No. 15 on the face of it is so absolutely silly, is so absolutely dishonest, that we Liberals, from the party standpoint would rejoice to see it find its way into every house in Canada because we can disprove its statements from end to end, and in doing so we can shake any of the little confidence still remaining in the people of Canada in that Conservative party which once was great. But, when a respected member of this House, a man of prominent position in Canada, rises in his place and repeats once more that old unfounded allegation, that the Liberal government is a government of extravagance —in view of the statement made by the Finance Minister, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce who dealt in a broad and able way with this subject ;—when in face of all that, he repeats the statement that this a government of extravagance ; when his party press through Canada is thundering forth against the prodigals so called at Ottawa ; then I need not apologize to this House for taking up this expenditure item after item as found on page thirteen, part I, of the public accounts of 1903, and discussing these items on the floor of this House by way of proving how utterly false are the charges of extravagance made against us by hon. gentlemen opposite. First, I take up the interest on the public debt. I will not weary the House with all the figures I have here, I will deal with them in round numbers. but for the sake of accuracy, and in order that hon. gentlemen opposite may not be able to question or to refute one word of what I say with regard to these figures, I have carried these figures out in my notes to the very last cent, and with your consent, Mr. Speaker, and the consent of the House I will hand in my notes to 'Hansard' at the end of my speech in order that these figures may correctly appear in the report.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Very well. We find in the first place, that the difference in expenditure between 1895 and 1903 is $13,559,897.71. I chose to compare our expenditure with that for the year 1895, for the best of good reasons. That was the last year in which the Conservatives made an absolutely straight expenditure. I say that in no offensive sense. In the year 1896 realizing that a great deficit threatened them, and knowing that they were about to go to the country, they—I will not say cooked the accounts, but they certainly very prettily par-boiled them ; and they cut down the expenditure ; and they starved the service ; and they let wharfs go to ruin ; and lighthouses tumble down in order that they might make a better appearance before the people of the country than they had any right to claim. I therefore refer to the year 1895, and the difference between the expenditure then and now, amounts to $13,559,000. It is for that increase that I propose this afternoon to account.

In the first place there is an increase in the interest paid on the public debt amounting to $601,844.73. It has been pointed out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that while there is this increase in the payment of interest upon our debt, there is a larger increase still, to wit: $684,906.10 as a result of the interest paid to us upon our sinking fund. So that, that whole matter of increase is more than balanced by the increase on the other side of the ledger. But I do not intend to leave my argument there, because there is yet a better face to be put on the matter for the Liberal government. In 1895 the Conservatives added to the public debt $6,891,000, and in the year 1896 they added $5,422,000 making a total of $12,314,000, added to the public debt by the Conservatives in the two years 1895 and 1896. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is evident that in the year 1895 our Conservative friends had no interest to pay on that $12,000,000 of debt, and it is equally evident that in the year 1903 we did have interest to pay on that twelve million of increase which the Conservatives were responsible for. So, taking the rate of interest as between three and four per cent—and we know from the statement of the Finance Minister that we have been paying that sum on our temporary loans ; as high as four per cent recently—and allowing interest on the $12,000,000 increase for which we are not responsible, you will find that nearly $500,000 of that increase is owing to the Conservative increase in the debt over which we had no control whatever. Had they kept within their estimates in 1895-1896, as they should have done, in view of the depressed state of the country, we would not have to shoulder that increased charge, and would be able to show $500,000 more of a balance on our ordinary expenditure this year than is possible, owing to the extravagance of hon. gentlemen opposite.

The next item I come to is under the head of charges of management, and there we find an increased cost by $67,082.79. Was this an extravagant increase ? How do we account for it ? Let me call your attention to a few points. In the first place, we employ the Bank of Montreal in London as our financial agent to look after the national debt and for that service we pay it £150 per million of debt.

Hon. gentlemen opposite paid exactly the same. In the same way, for payments on current accounts we allowed the Bank of Montreal a commission of ⅛ of one per cent. Hon. gentlemen opposite paid exactly the same. As brokerage for purchases of stock for investment in sinking funds we allow the Bank of Montreal ¼ of 1 per cent. Hon. gentlemen opposite allowed exactly the same. In these three items there has been no change.

We have in Canada seven offices of assistant receiver generals—at Toronto, Montreal, Halifax, St. John, Winnipeg, Victoria, and Charlottetown; and we find that the expenses of these offices have been decreased by the Liberals in the case of three and increased in the case of four; but the increase in the whole seven amounted to the small sum of $451.90, an average increase of $64.55 per office. Yet the volume of business has vastly increased, the expense of living has increased, and as a consequence the members of the public service have a right to demand some increase in salary, a demand which has been met in many cases. In the same manner we find that the salaries paid in 1903 in the government savings banks still kept open in the maritime provinces, are exactly the same as those paid by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1895, also in spite of the increased cost of living, on which the public service there might very properly found a demand for an increase of salary.

Hon. gentlemen may think that I am taking an undue amount of time over such small items as these, but in view of the strong statement made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I propose to take a little time to prove beyond peradventure that this government is not extravagant. I go on then to two items which alone more than account for the increased expenditure. For printing new notes and cancelling old notes and signing new ones the government spent $54,562.18 more than the Conservatives did in 1895. Is anybody surprised at that? There is some commerce in Canada now. In the old times there was a lot of swapping of jack knives. Look at the returns, and you will find what an immense volume of business has been done, and how largely in consequence the currency has had to be increased. And naturally, if we increase the currency because of our business requirements, it passes rapidly from hand to hand and in the process gets worn out and destroyed; and it surely would be most incongruous for this cleanest of all clean governments to retain a dirty currency. So we call in the old paper and issue new paper. We are not going to apologize for that; and that accounts for over $54,000 of the increase. The balance is due to the increased charges we have paid in London for bill stamps. As you know, we, in concert with most other colonies of Great Britain, go to the London money market for our financial requirements, and are governed by the conditions there obtaining. I believe that it was owing to the South African war that this form of British taxation was increased. That is something over which we had no control, but for which we had to pay $12,713.76 more. If you add these two sums together, you will find that I have more than accounted for that increase of $67,275.94. Then, we spent $618,277.10 more because we put that much more into the sinking funds. We took it out of one pocket and bought securities with the money, and put them into the other pocket. We are not a dollar worse off, but probably a little better off, because these securities will probably increase in value as time goes on. There is the $618,277.10 accounted for, then, in less than sixty seconds by the clock.

In premium discount and exchange, we spent less by $51,064.69 than hon. gentlemen opposite. But I want to be perfectly fair and frank in the discussion of this subject, claiming credit for the government only when it is their due, and blaming the Conservatives only when they are deserving of blame. This matter also is controlled by conditions in the money market of Great Britain, over which we have no control, and for which no government, whether Liberal or Conservative, can properly be blamed or praised.

I therefore pass on to the next item, civil government, in which I find an increase of $132,563.75. This is but an increase of 9 per cent in eight years, a little over 1 per cent per year, a very small increase in this item in view of the vast increase in the commerce of the country and in its population, bringing as it always does increased business in the government offices. The public accounts give thirty-three subheadings under this caption, and almost every one of these could be subdivided. I would not be justified in taking up the time of the House in so minute an analysis; but if hon. gentlemen will take the time to make it, they will find that the minutest item of expenditure is as justifiable as the largest which I have quoted. Yet I would have you note this fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservatives in their term of office, during Canada's sluggish time, as I may fairly call it, increased the expenditure under civil government by no less than $35,000 a year, while we, in these growing times, have only increased it by $20,000 a year.

To the expenditure for administration of justice the same remarks would very well apply. There is an increase of $204,265.11, but of that $120,400.41 is on account of the Yukon, and the Yukon, as I propose to prove, has paid for the Yukon. We can therefore deduct that amount. This leaves but $83,865.70 of an increase, and when we think of the increased business before the courts, that seems a very narrow amount by which to have augmented the cost of the administration of justice in this country. I will call attention to a further thing. Hon. gentleman after hon. gentleman opposite has risen in this House and recommended that the salaries of the judges in Canada should be materially increased. I must say that in that I think hon. gentlemen opposite are right, for occasionally even they are right. That is not the point under discussion, however. The point is that had the government acceded to their request, this increase in the administration of justice would have been still more largely augmented. That being the case, it does not lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to say that we had already increased it too much.

The expenditure under Dominion police has increased by $6,337.21 an increase so small that I would not weary the House with it, but for my desire to be accurate and complete in the statement I am making. We have increased the number of men somewhat, and we have increased their pay somewhat because of changed conditions and the increased amount of work they have to do. I may say that, under the very able command of Lieut.-Colonel Sherwood, of Ottawa, that force has reached a state of efficiency unexcelled on this continent. We have no apologies to make for the Dominion police. Passing on to legislation, I find an actual decrease in the expenditure of $152,365.72. This is a decrease for which unlike the decrease which I noted under 'premium, discount and exchange,' we can really claim some credit. How does it come that we have managed so materially to lower the expenditure on legislation? Let me give you one item, Sir, which far more than accounts for it. We have abolished, as we promised, that heavy burden, the Franchise Act. In 1895 that Act cost us $239,963.33. But in 1903, because we sent it into the abomination of the scrap heap, the cost is not one cent. Thus by doing away with that cumberous and expensive machinery no less a sum than $239,963.33 was saved at one stroke. If I may be allowed a parenthesis for one moment, I may say that we take credit, not only for having saved that amount of money, but for having abolished something which was almost intolerable. Any hon. gentleman who has worked in the province of Ontario in connection with the voters' lists, under the old Act, knows the difference between then and now. In the old Act there was an income clause requiring that a young Canadian, if not a property owner or a farmer's son, must be in receipt of $150 per annum before he could exercise the privilege of citizenship; and often did I argue that a youth who was getting $12 per month and washing and mending was entitled to vote, because $12 a month represented $144 a year and surely the washing and mending represented the other six. But since the Liberals have come into power, the right of a young man to exercise the franchise no longer depends on the value of sewing on his shirt buttons and mending his socks. The days of small things are over. Perhaps my hon. friends opposite will say that they are over in expenditure also. Well, I hope they are, provided the expenditure is a wise and prudent expenditure. I come now to the subject of penitentiaries, which I am sure cannot seriously interest any member of this House. In 1895 our expenditure was $449,599.81 and in 1903 it was $477,839.82, showing a gross increase of $28,241, but we have also increased our revenue by $15,012.56, leaving a net increase of only $13,277.45. That increase is more than accounted for by the purchase of a quarry at Kingston, by putting in brick making plant at St. Vincent de Paul, by increasing the salaries of the wardens and keepers, and by the increased cost of supplies for the maintenance of these institutions. So that the smallness of the increase is an evidence of economy and not of extravagance. In arts and agricultural statistics, there is a large increase of no less than $326,271.73, the expenditure having been in 1895, $216,740.30 and in 1903 $543,-012.03. But of this increase $100,000 is due to the increased cost of the census as compared with what hon. gentlemen opposite paid in 1895. I shall not discuss that subject, because it was most ably dealt with by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He put the case in a nutshell, and we say that the reason we have paid so much more for our census than our hon. friends opposite did for theirs, is the good, valid and proper one that broadcloth always costs more than shoddy. The next item of increase is that of $59,540.27 on exhibitions. But who will say that these exhibitions, in which we have so prominently and creditably figured for the last few years, have not had a very large share in inducing the great increase of immigration to Canada on which we are to-day congratulating ourselves? At one time Canada appeared before the eyes of the world as a place of ice and snow, only fit for the habitation of esquimo, but when the people of Paris saw the magnificent crops of peaches and fruits of all varieties that are grown in this country, they naturally said to themselves: these do not grow in snowbanks. This expenditure therefore has been a very wise one, and is one of the causes of the increased influx of people into this country. We come then to agriculture and dairying, and in this item there is an increase of $177,092.50 over 1895. If I were to go into the details at length, that would lead me into a particular discussion of the question of cold storage. I shall not weary the House by going into that question, because we have dealt with it before and it may come up again in some other shape, but shall confine myself to this point of that subject. Our hon. friends opposite claim that they inaugurated cold storage. So they did, but it was cold storage of so inefficient a character that Australian butter, which had a much longer distance to go, was bringing at that time from ten to twelve shillings per hundred pounds more than Canadian butter in the British market. But after the present government had perfected the system, the conditions became changed and almost the reverse was the case, which goes to prove that whereas Australia had a perfect system of cold storage, hon. gentlemen opposite had a poor one, not because a good system could not be got, but because they did not know how to get it. I pass on to immigration, a subject which has been largely dealt with by previous speakers. The amount of the increased expenditure on immigration is $447,860.77, but I would call attention to the fact that whereas in 1895 we had had but 2,394 homestead entries, in 1903 we had 31,383, and whereas in 1895 we had but 18,790 immigrants, in 1903 we had 128,364. And, of these 128,000, 91,265 were English speaking, the kind we value more than almost any other, except perhaps some from the northern states of Europe. And I would further call attention to this point, that last year these people cost Canada but $5.02 per head, which is a decrease of $2.32 per head compared with the preceding year. This goes to show that Canada is becoming so well known and advertised, through our expenditure that people are flocking to it in increased numbers at a decreased expenditure per head and that the seed generously sown is now giving an equally generous return. Think of 9,387,561 acres of land being acquired by settlers through purchase and free homesteads, or as my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, remarked, more than half the lands of Ontario under plough now in one single year. Think what that is going to mean. In 1895 there were sold but 114,713 acres for $222,489, whereas last year there were 4,229,011 acres sold for $14,651,757. The increase is not only in acreage, but also in the price of the land sold. It represents an advance of fifty per cent in the value of the land per acre in those eight years of Liberal rule. So we might continue ad nauseam, though I fancy a good patriotic Canadian could take a pretty good deal of this splendid progress without feeling sick over it. But time presses. The next item is that of quarantine which shows an increase of $162,010.61. I do not wonder that Conservatives did not spend more than they did in 1895, because our quarantine is composed of two sections—the human quarantine and the quarantine of animals. They had only 18,000 people to look after,—so far as quarantine of immigrants went—whereas we had 128,000. Therefore they did not require to spend so much on human quarantine. That accounts for $70,000 of this increase, and the balance is due to the extreme care and watchfulness of the department in keeping disease out of the flocks and herds of Canada. Previous to the advent of the Liberals to office, there was an embargo placed by the United States on Canadian cattle, but the hon. Minister of Agriculture succeeded a few months after he took office, in having that embargo removed.

You will remember, Sir, the immense advantage that was to the people of Canada ; how our exports went up from 4,000 cattle in four and a half years bringing us $50,000 to a number bringing us in hundreds of thousands of dollars to say nothing of the increase in value of cattle on the local market. Our cattle now, I admit, are largely going to the Northwest ; but, even last year, we shipped 10,000 cattle to the United States. That in itself is a considerable item which the farmers in Canada would not like to lose. If we prevent the spread of contagious diseases among our cattle we keep open the United States market. But, so soon as these diseases become prevalent in Canada the Americans will put on the embargo and we shall find ourselves with the market of the United States shut against us as well as the market of Great Britain which has been closed to us so long and which we have made such efforts to reopen.

In pensions the increase is only $3,575.39. But this is almost a purely automatic increase.

I pass now to superannuation, where there is an increase of $81,033.21. I fancy I hear some gentlemen of the opposition saying, during the general elections which may possibly be upon us in a year's time or less : An increase in superannuation ? We understood you Liberals were going to abolish superannuation. Sir, so far as the future is concerned, we have abolished it. But we are reformers, not despoilers. We have no desire to interfere with those civil servants who came in under the old Superannuation Act, influenced, largely, no doubt in seeking employment in the civil service by the knowledge that their declining years would be taken care of. So, we pay to these people the superannuation guaranteed to them when they entered the civil service. But, we have passed an Act abolishing superannuation since July 1, 1898, so far as regards all those who entered the civil service after that date. So, this increase of $81,033.21 is not our increase, but represents what we are bound to pay because of the contracts of hon. gentlemen opposite. Therefore, we wipe this off the account.

Then, militia calls for an increase of $388,995.62. Of this, $270,231.89 is under the head of pay of staff, permanent force, active militia, allowances, clothing and necessaries. It is a well known fact that this increase was not because of an increase of pay to the men. Many of us thought that the pay to the men should be increased. But the government could not see eye to eye with us until this session, and so kept the pay at fifty cents per day for the private soldier. What has this increase been expended on ? I will tell you. For one thing, on the purchase of clothing, equipment and so on. So, while we have spent a larger sum our wardrobe is now fairly well supplied, whereas, in the days of Conservative rule it was meagre in the extreme ; and how we could have fitted out our regiments in case of necessity arising to increase them to a war strength, or anything like it, passes my comprehension. That is an expenditure for which we have the goods in store to show, something that hon. gentlemen opposite will not cavil at. And this accounts for $270,-231.89 of this increase.

The coronation contingent cost $62,630.43. I must assure you, Sir, that the coronation contingent gave excellent value for the money it cost. The British papers were full of favourable comments. We think that that contingent did not disgrace the country that sent it forth ; and we believe that had hon. gentlemen opposite been in power—for we think their loyalty almost equal to our own—they would have despatched such a contingent under similar circumstances.

The Dominion arsenal cost $96,403.99 more. But, then, we are able to turn out three times as many cartridges as we could under hon. gentlemen opposite. And that is an absolute necessity in view of the spread of rifle clubs which require ammunition for their practice. If there is one thing on which hon. members of this House seem to be a unit, it is on the advisability of the organization of these rifle clubs. But you can understand, Mr. Speaker, that a rifle club without cartridges, to shoot would not be good for much. They would be much in the position of a rifleman of whom the story is sometimes told. He aimed at the target several times and failed to hit it ; and was told by his commanding officer to fix bayonets and charge it. That would be about the position of rifle clubs without cartridges—they might become proficient in the use of the bayonet but they would never learn to shoot.

In Mounted Police the increase was $343,-909.75. Well, why should there not be an increase ? Look at the number of people going into the west. Would it be surprising if an increase in expenditure on mounted police were found necessary ? But you will be surprised to learn, Sir,—no, I beg your pardon, you will not be surprised to learn, Mr. Speaker, because you keep yourself well posted on the questions of the day ; but hon. gentlemen opposite will be surprised to learn—that this increased expenditure on mounted police is not because of the development of western Canada, but it is because of the number of police we have had to send to keep order in the distant district of the Yukon. We find that, as against this increase of $343,909.75 for mounted police no less than $590,702.93, or almost twice the sum is chargeable to the Yukon. And the Yukon has paid for the Yukon. Therefore, instead of having spent more money on the mounted police, there has been a decrease, service for service, as compared with the expenditure of hon. gentlemen opposite, in spite of the great increase in population in the Northwest. That is, because of the better administrative ability shown by the Minister of the Interior, we have actually been able to reduce the expenditure on this service.

On public works chargeable to income the increase is $2,323,236.38—a very large increase, I grant you. But what are the facts? Our total expenditure was only $4,065,553.27 —in this young and lusty and growing country of Canada, requiring the development and improvement of the public works over an enormous area ; half a continent, no less. Why, in 1896, our Conservative friends were prepared to spend—including their main and supplementary estimates the latter of which were printed but not brought down—$3,998,610, or actually, within $66,943 of what we spent this last year. And their income then was $34,000,000 and their expenditure $38,000,000, a deficit of $4,000,000, whereas our income is $66,037,068.93 for the year, with a surplus of $14,345,166.17—a very different state of things indeed. But there is, I think, still another reason why this increase is beyond cavil. We Liberals will not object to it, this expenditure of the government to whose support we of the back benches are pledged to the very last man, a government that we honour and venerate, a government that, behind its own closed doors is a happy family. We will not cavil at the increase. And how can hon. gentlemen cavil at it in view of the fact that it is less by $155,740, than the expenditure of the year before, made under the then Minister of Public Works, the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Mr. Tarte) who has since been welcomed to the organization of the Conservative party—welcomed back I must say—the man whom they discovered, they tell us, to have been the custodian of the brains of the Liberal cabinet. His expenditure was no less than $155,740 greater, and he is now declared by our friends opposite to be a great administrator and an able financial genius.

Next, we come to railways and canals. We find there an increase in the expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund of $75,599.-52. Well, we have somewhat increased the mileage of our railways and canals. And, as you increase public works, it necessarily follows that the expenditure upon them must increase, for the greater the quantity you have to look after the higher the expenditure for up-keep must be.

Then, you have mail subsidies and steamship subventions, an increase of $286,017.96. Do not hon. gentlemen opposite know that the increase of our commerce is owing largely to the fact that we ourselves have taken means to open up new channels of trade. We believe that that is the way to increase trade and we are confident that the people of Canada believe it also. We have no fewer to-day than thirty-three services, as against eighteen in 1895, under hon. gentlemen opposite. The principal new ones are those to France, to Belgium, and to South Africa. And we hope that very shortly indeed a new service will be inaugurated between this country and the great republic of Mexico, with its population twice as great as ours—this service being the result of the so-called junketing tour of that energetic and able gentleman the Postmaster General and Minister of Labour (Sir William Mulock).

That junketing tour, Sir, which he took actually at his own expense, if we except possibly the cost of the axle grease on the government car which otherwise would have been rusting on some siding in Canada. He went at his own expense throughout, and, with his eyes open, as always, to the advantage of Canada, he studied existing conditions and we hope and believe that the result will be that he will establish still another steamship service, both on the Atlantic and the Pacific, which will still more largely increase the foreign trade of Canada. I shall refer to some more of the delightful Tory campaign literature. I ask hon. gentlemen if they are proud of leaflet No. 13, which speaks of a minister of the Crown going on a junketing tour to see the gaisha girls of Japan. It may be a funny thing, it may excite a smile, but is it quite worthy of the party which has rejoiced to call itself the gentlemen's party. I am glad to see that the man who wrote that article has been overruled by his friends in the party and that in the larger page subsequently published that disgraceful reference—for it is nothing else—is omitted and while his trip is mentioned, there is no nasty, low insinuation coupled therewith.

So we pass on to ocean and river service, in which there is an increase of $212,043.91. This expenditure is in the interests of commerce and of this amount we are expending on Dominion steamers, $100,000 more than the Conservatives spent, and for this last year we paid nearly $100,000 as a balance for a steamer to replace the 'Newfield.' The Conservatives had no similar item in 1895. These two items practically account for the increase.

Then we come to lighthouse and coast service. This is almost an incredible case. There is an increase of $488,240.42. Our Conservative friends spent in 1895, $12,219,-29 on lighthouses, and we are spending, including a steel lightship for the Lurcher shoals, $397,375.85, almost $400,000. And yet the junior member for West Toronto, (Mr. Osler) was good enough to say that we are neglecting the improvement of navigation on our waterways, notwithstanding the fact that we are spending $400,000 to their $12,000 in the improvement of our lighthouses in Canada. To my mind that fact speaks for itself. The only excuse that can be made for the Conservatives for neglecting the lighthouses is that they had very little commerce to light in the days when they controlled the destinies of this country.

I now pass on to still another heading, to wit, marine hospitals. In that there is an increase of only $10,161.10. I believe that an extra wing was built which accounts for part of this increase, but apart from that I can dispose of this increase quickly and satisfactorily in this manner: more commerce, more sailors, more sailors, more sick. Surely that is a precise way of dealing with the subject. I suppose that our merchant marine has enormously increased, and it is reasonable to suppose that with that increase the number of sailors will also increase.

I come now to steamboat inspection in which there was an increase of only $3,786.-21. This is a still smaller item with which I would not deal at all except for the sake of accuracy, and I might again say: more imports, more steamboats; more steamboats, more inspection. The revenue from this source has so increased that it almost balances the increased expenditure.

In the item of insurance inspection, there is an increase of $4,929.75, a small item mentioned also for accuracy. Of this amount $3,691.63, nearly the whole amount, came back to us in increased fees.

Then we come to fisheries, in which there was an increase of $84,006.17. Will any hon. member on the opposite side from the maritime provinces—and there are still some remaining, although, Mr. Speaker, if we can read aright the signs of the times, there will shortly be few maritime members on your left—will any of that remnant say to me that this government has spent too much on the fisheries of Canada? When we remember that of this amount some $37,610 was spent in fish breeding and that $11,331.49 of the small increase was spent for supplying cold storage for bait of deep-sea fishermen, the increase seems very slight. On this service we spent $527,829.12 against a Conservative expenditure of $443,-822.95.

On geographical surveys there was an increase of $10,594.85. On this subject the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) himself answered the complaint. We spent but $78,746.26. That hon. gentleman says we should spend millions on it. That shows the consistency of hon. gentlemen opposite. They make wholesale charges of extravagance, and when we come to the items their cry is that we do not spend enough, that we should spend more. I have yet to find an example where hon. gentlemen are not inclined to go one better and yet they make that general omnibus charge of extravagance against us.

On scientific institutions there was an increase of $49,512.63. That surely is money well spent. What increases the riches of a country so much as the advancement of science? What is going to overcome that sad lack under which the provinces of Ontario and Quebec so long laboured, the absence of coal? The advance of science, the advance of knowledge of electricity by which, taking advantage of our enormous water-powers, we will be able to smelt ores by water-power, through one transforming stage, that of electricity. We know how this enterprising government sent men to the old country to study the question of smelting ores by electricity, and we know also that, smart and clever and business-like as are our American brethren to the south of us, great as are their resources and enterprise, they never sent a commission abroad to find out this for themselves. I hope that as a result of that knowledge which we have obtained by this means, before a great while we will have immense and valuable enterprises in portions of Ontario and Quebec where in the past such development was utterly impossible owing to the fact that we had no coal for smelting.

In subsidies to provinces there was increase of $151,828,42. Why not? Is that not fixed by statute? Is that not a matter of population of provinces? I would not object if it was $1,151,000, because an increase of that amount would mean that our population had grown by leaps and bounds. No apology need be made for such an increase, nor yet for the increase in the item for the poor Indians.

Under the heading of Indians there is an increase of $122,411.24. Time was when possibly politicians might have spent a little more than was equitably due upon the Indians. That was in the days of hon. gentlemen opposite, when they gave these wards of the government the right to vote. In my part of the country, in Haldimand, and the adjoining constituency of Brant, we have Indian reserves and I am bound to say that when I think over the record of these poor Indians, I am almost inclined to think that perhaps it was cruel to deprive them of the franchise for I know that they were more active voters than white men are. In the famous Coulter and Montague election, I remember that on one of the Indian reserves, before 8.30 in the morning—I will admit with the aid of certain white necromancers and scorcerers—14 dead Indians voted. But who will say that to-day any government will spend too much money upon the Indians since we know they are now devoid of political influence? The fact is that this government has adopted the very wise policy of educating the Indians so that they may become estimable and valuable citizens. We spend a large amount of money to bring people from the old world to the new. Is it not reasonable and decent to spend upon the aboriginal inhabitants of this country, the men who owned it before the foot of white man ever trod its shores, a reasonable amount of money to bring them up to a condition of something like equality with ourselves?

Then I pass to the government of the Northwest Territories. There was an increase there of $498,839.72. I shall not discuss that for one moment. We know the increased number of people who have gone in. We know the vast amount there is to do in these territories and no man will say that we have spent too much money there. We have to make these incoming settlers comfortable, we have to give them safe and stable government there. Did we not do so, they would write back to their friends, the influx of population would cease and those who had already gone into the country would, as in the days of Conservative rule, leave the country and establish their habitations to the south of the boundary line. We come now to miscellaneous. There is an increase here of $311,396.32. It divides itself into a great number of subheadings. I hardly think I dare venture to take up the time of the House in discussing these subheadings.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I shall only mention a few of them. First, there is the Paris agency, $6,500, a new service entirely. You cannot make an omelet without breaking some eggs. Look at the magnificent trade omelet we have made for this country. One of the eggs that we have broken to get this trade omelet is the Paris agency, which has cost us $6,500, a mere bagatelle compared with the increased commerce we will get from that source in the future. The next is the astronomical observatory and apparatus, $10,497.85. That is a service in the interest of science. The next is the result of the increase in the gold output consequent upon the discovery of gold in the Yukon, being the assay office, the increase being $14,993.90.

Hon. gentlemen opposite did not require anything of the sort; in fact, I do not know that in those days there was really enough gold in Canada to require an assay to be made of it. Then, we return to Messers. Petersen, Tait & Company, the amount of their deposit, $56,940. That was money which they had paid into the treasury. They got it back out of the treasury and there was no loss in the transaction. The next is half-breed claims commission, $2,978.24. Why do I mention such a small sum as this? Just to emphasize the business-like methods of this government in contradistinction to the unbusiness-like methods of the late government. When these half-breeds made claims to the present government their claims were submitted to a commission and settled, with the result that these half-breeds are loyal and contented citizens of the Dominion. In the old days these half-breeds had claims, they sent these claims to the Dominion government, the Dominion government pigeon-holed them or threw them into the waste-paper basket and the result was that we had a serious rebellion in the Northwest Territories which cost between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, to say nothing of the scores of bright young lives which were given up in the service of the country on that occasion. There is something in the association of the ideas and the association of ideas is so strong in this case that I must be pardoned for having brought this item to the attention of the House. The next item is engraving maps of the Dominion and Northwest Territories, $14,096.53. We know how this has increased the knowledge of the Dominion both within the confines of Canada and beyond them. It is part of that advertising which is bringing such rich results in men and money. Hon. gentlemen will not complain of that. Department of Labour—and now I come to some more of that charming campaign literature—$20,471.54. Will hon. gentlemen say they do not want the Department of Labour ? Will they say that if they came into power they would abolish the Department of Labour ? I think not. They dare not do it, however much they might wish to and I do not say they wish to. I have here pamphlet No. 8, headed 'Starvation Wages.' Then follows a schedule of the wages paid on the Intercolonial Railway that hon. gentlemen opposite say are not enough, and that the government think also are not enough, for since the time that those wages were paid they have increased them. This is another example of the hypocrisy of hon. gentlemen opposite in claiming that the expenditure is too great because here is an item in regard to which they want to make it still more. I do not complain so much of that as I do of this which is only second to that pamphlet from which I quoted a short time ago headed 'Junketing Ministers.' In this pamphlet, No. 8, these hon. gentlemen say :

> And this is the government that says the workingmen should be grateful to it because it is paying a 'minister of labour' $8,000 a year !

Hon. gentlemen opposite very well know the miserable insinuation contained in that clause and the absolute falsity that lies within the four corners of that half truth. They surely know that the Minister of Labour is also the Postmaster General, that as Postmaster General he draws exactly the salary which his Conservative predecessor, as Postmaster General drew, and that in addition to the salary of the Postmaster General he does not draw one single cent of pay for the immensely increased amount of labour which he in his generous anxiety for the good of the labouring classes has taken upon his shoulders.

Marconi wireless, $10,000. We led in assisting that young man to whom the great universities of the old world are now stretching forth a hand and upon whom they are showering honours and conferring degrees. We took him in when he was more friendless than he is now and gave him financial aid. His method has proved to be immensely valuable beyond peradventure, and we in Canada have the honour of having been in the forefront in assisting in the development of this modern wonder of science from which we will reap substantial financial benefits far beyond our investment. We have contributed $60,000 toward the Ottawa Improvement fund. Who will cavil at that ? Not hon. gentlemen opposite. Sir, that vote of the money of the people of Canada for the improvement of Canada's capital is an outward and visible proof that Canada is no longer a number of isolated provinces experimentally strung together by a British Act of parliament, but that Canada is a united nation from ocean to ocean and from the southern boundary to the Artic sea, one and indivisable. Who will object to the beautifying of our capital as the capitals of all other countries are beautified at the general expense of the people ? For the consolidation of the statutes we spent $12,722.08. Who will say, especially those in the legal profession, that that expenditure has been made before its time ? Alaskan boundary commission, $59,-993. That is an expenditure—I may perhaps be pardoned for saying it—on a necessary evil. Hon. gentlemen will be surprised to learn that also in this delightful literature which has furnished us with so much instruction and amusement, the visit of the hon. Minister of the Interior to England last summer, where he worked, as, I suppose few men have ever worked in the interests of Canada, is actually put under the heading 'junketing tours.' What do you think of that, Mr. Speaker ? A junketing tour. That important mission of the hon. the Minister of the Interior classed as one of the junketing tours ! These sums taken together reach a total of $269,193.14 and by tracing out other and smaller items I could very easily account for the small balance of $60,000, but I shall not attempt to do so as I do not desire to detain the House. Then, upon the Yukon provisional district the government had to provide $807,806.89 that hon. gentlemen did not have to provide, but the Yukon has paid for itself so that nothing is lost by the people of Canada.

Now, I am glad to say that I take up my last bundle of notes, which I shall pass over as rapidly as possible. The increase in the expenditure on account of the collection of customs was $311,396.32. Is any one surprised at this increase. Frankly, I am very much surprised at the smallness of it, because I notice that we have collected $19,361,260.90 more than hon. gentlemen opposite collected in 1895, that we have actually collected in excess of their collection more than the whole sum which they gathered in customs revenue with an increased expenditure of only $311,396.32. It follows also that while the expenditure in 1895 was $5.13 per $100 of revenue collected, it was only $3.31 per $100 of revenue collected in 1903 by this government. There was an increased expenditure upon excise of $7,-119.41, while there was an increase in revenue of $4,208,046.29. Comment is unnecessary in that, although I believe hon. gentlemen opposite are very much concerned to find that they have to pay a little more for their smoking tobacco than they did in the good old days of Tory rule. I do not wonder that they made tobacco cheap in those days. The people had to have a sedative. They were restless. Cheap tobacco was a necessity, but, when we have our pockets full of money we are prepared to pay a little more, we do not resent paying a little more for our tobacco and cigars and we are glad to know that this small increase, which is a considerable increase in the aggregate, is being expended on public works which will be of immense advantage to the people of Canada.

And so while our smoke goes upwards we can see through it as through a glass, darkly, public buildings springing up all through Canada as the result of this expenditure. I am not asking that the price of my smoking material be decreased one jot or tittle. Then, for weights and measures, electric light, and gas, the expenditure in 1895 was $98,173.67 and in 1903 it was $121,-575.02, an increase of $23,401,35 ; an increase accounted for by the increased amount of inspecting done in Canada, and indeed I may mention that for some of this increased expenditure we get back an increased revenue. In the expenditure for culling timber there has been a decrease of $6,-921 ; it is unnecessary to comment on that. For the inspection of staples, there is an increase of $63,906.46. But we have added a chief inspector of hides, an inspector of binder twine, and a rattling good one at that ; two chief inspectors and several assistants for the inspection of grain, and a warehouse commissioner at Winnipeg. The growing commercial interests of the country, and the increased services demand of the government to meet these growing interests in this regard, that is ample to afford justification for this expenditure. In the matter of the inspection and tests to provide against adulteration of food, there is a decreased expenditure of $4,443.31, for which we claim no credit.

Then we come to the post office service, and it shows an increase of $511,531.01. In 1895 the Conservatives spent on the post office service $3,593,647.47 and in 1903 the Liberal government spent on the post office service $4,105,178.18. If there is one thing in Canada which the people now understand it is the magnificent record of this government in connection with the administration of the Post Office Department. The people are so thoroughly acquainted with the splendid administration of that department now, that it absolves me from the duty of explaining this increase. It is an increase of more than half a million dollars, but against that we have an increased revenue from the post office of $1,605,042.87, in spite of the fact that we have a two cent rate of postage where the Conservatives charged three cents for a letter. We have wiped out the old post office yearly deficit of about three-quarters of a million dollars, and we have a surplus in its place of more than one-quarter million dollars. We have, as I stated, a two cent postage rate instead of a three cent postage rate ; we have better pay for the employees ; better service for all ; and we have increased, not before it was time, the salaries of the postmasters throughout Canada.

Then with regard to the expenditure on public works. In 1895 the Conservatives spent $151,698.22, and in 1903 the Liberals spent $562,403.51 an increase of $410,705.29. This is quite a large item but of this amount I find that no less than $281,391.87 was spent on the telegraph lines in the Yukon, and we have already seen that the Yukon has practically cost this country nothing. Then, a large part of the balance of the increase is accounted for by the extension of land and cable telegraph lines in the lower St. Lawrence, where every effort is very properly being made to improve the condition of navigation. I point this out to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) as one of the increases, and I think he will agree with me in saying that it is a very useful expenditure and not an extravagant one.

Then for the cost of collection of revenue on railways and canals ; there is an increase of $3,517,578.65, the largest increase of all. But let me point out that the revenue from the same sources has increased $3,-347,131.52, in spite of a falling off in the canal revenues of $109,676.57, consequent upon the abolition of tolls ; an abolition made in the interests of commerce, and but for which there would practically be no increased expense at all in this item, as otherwise the increased receipts would balance the increased expenditure. I need say nothing of the greater facilities which this increased expenditure has given to the merchants of Canada, resulting in an increase of wealth out of all proportion to the net loss on the expenditure. Then in regard to minor revenues, there is an increase of $1,073.01 which is a small item and which I only mention for the sake of completeness in dealing with the subject. In Dominion lands, there has been an increase of $56,628.30. I do not think we need be very shamefaced over this modest increase, in view of the fact that our income from this source has increased since 1895 by the tidy sum of $1,527,722.05. Then we come to trade and commerce, and there is an increase of $19,649.18 only, in spite of the fact that our foreign trade has increased from $224,420,485 to $467,061,494. Surely, in view of such a showing we need not be ashamed of that increase.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I have come to the end of my remarks, and I will ask you whether there is anything surprising in the fact, that after the careful study which I have made of these statistics, I have come to the decision to vote with pleasure in support of a government which is enterprising without being extravagant, and economical without being parsimonious.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). The hon. gentleman from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) has accomplished a very great feat. He has gone through about 365 items, and extracted from about 365 pages of paper probably 365 ideas ; although, what bearing they may have upon the subject we are discussing I fail to see. The practice of the present administration is, that no minister ever defends his department, and that some volunteer has to be pressed into service when defence is offered. The hon. gentleman from Haldimand has done better than all the other volunteers, because he has defended in his own way—I won't say much about the way—not one department but every department of the administration. The hon. gentleman has shown us in this year of grace 1904, what a real independent member of parliament is. He announced that he was an independent, and it is well that he mentioned it, because any one that has followed his record would never have dreamed it. I do not know that we could expect him to be independent.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is one of the government whips.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not a question of government whips at all, but I think that the plums which have fallen into the mouth of that hon. gentleman are quite sufficient to guarantee his ceaseless support of the government for all time to come ; at least so long as the Liberal party is in power.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I am satisfied.

Mr. LENNOX. You are probably better satisfied than your supporters are. The hon. gentleman is perfectly satisfied with himself.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I am satisfied with the government.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think I ever knew a gentleman who seemed more perfectly satisfied with himself than the hon. member from Haldimand, but the trouble is that the gentlemen who sit on his side of the House are not nearly so satisfied with him as we are. He endeavoured to be amusing but he was not amusing to his friends, although he was to us. Let me remind him that there is a broad distinction between expenditure and extravagance and that when we speak of extravagance we are not necessarily speaking of large expenditure. So long as expenditure is in the interest of the people we will not complain, but when it descends to reckless extravagance and to squandering the resources of the country to secure votes to bolster up the government, then we on this side of the House do complain. The hon. member for Haldimand said that the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) was inconsistent in complaining of extravagance while asking for a larger expenditure on the geological survey. The hon. gentleman does not understand the question. What the member for Toronto said is ; that we want rapid development in this country, and if that can be obtained by geological surveys it would be a wise expenditure to strengthen that branch of the public service. It is the same thing with reference to the wages paid to the employees on the Intercolonial Railway. We believe that an honest day's work deserves an honest day's wage, and the Conservative party will stand up, as it always has, for the application of that principle to the working classes of this country.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. What wages did you pay the employees on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman will get a chance to speak when I sit down.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Why don't you answer that question ?

Mr. LENNOX. I don't even hear the hon. gentleman. The Conservative party is the party which always took care that there should be fair remuneration for the labour classes in Canada. It was the Conservative party that organized in 1878, that policy which gave employment to the labouring people of Canada, and afforded the means of paying them fair wages.

The hon. gentleman who has been endeavouring to discuss the public questions of the day, although with no great degree of success, referred to what the hon. member for West Toronto had said in reference to our not yet having obtained all the improvements we desire on the St. Lawrence route, and told us that was a pretty encouragement for immigration and a poor class of literature to disseminate in Great Britain. These hon. gentlemen ought to understand that question pretty well. If they will search the records for eighteen years subsequent to 1878, when the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Minister of Trade and Commerce was the chief spokesman or chief writer of the party, they will find the kind of encouragement he gave to people to come to this country. They will find that that hon. gentleman did all he could to prevent people coming by spreading broadcast not only through Great Britain but through the United States literature calculated to discourage immigration to Canada in the most effectual way. The hon. member for Haldimand complains of some literature that he got in some way. I hope he got it honestly. I hope he did not steal it, because they are awfully down on stealing on that side of the House. I hope too that it will do him some good. But I notice that he has not fully grasped the meaning of that literature. He chooses an isolated sentence, and fails to convey to the House any idea of its meaning. He complains that Mr. Sifton's visit to England should have been spoken of as a junketing tour. Well, I do not think the expression is a happy one. It was at the time parliament was in session that Mr. Sifton was in England and the Minister of Agriculture in Japan, and in consequence we in the House of Commons found it impossible to get a good deal of the information we wanted from time to time from the responsible ministers of the Crown. But I do not think it should be called a junketing expedition. I think we might better call it a pot-latch, which is an Indian term, and no doubt the hon. member for Haldimand is familiar with the Indian language ; for undoubtedly, so far as we can learn, it was a complete and thorough give-way feast on the part of our representatives. The hon. gentleman took a position which I am afraid will destroy his chance of reward for some time to come. It is the unhappy fate of most of the extreme advocates of the government's position never to be rewarded. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who I am sorry is not in his usual form at present, is a conspicuous instance of how extremists are never rewarded. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, with whom I sympathize, is another instance of how the most pronounced and vigorous extremists never come to their reward.

Mr. COCHRANE. His family gets it.

Mr. LENNOX. But that does not compensate him for the fact that in the formation of the cabinet he was overlooked, and that the coveted prize to which he had been looking forward for many years was passed over to the hon. gentleman now sitting beside him, the hon. Minister of Finance. The hon. member for Haldimand has gone so far beyond what is reasonable in defending the government that I am afraid that if another junketing expedition is made to England, he will not be selected to join it, even if his party continues in power, which is not likely. The hon. gentleman protests too much ; he announces too much; in fact, he says too much in every respect. From the beginning to the end of his speech he boasts of the enormous expenditure of this government, as contrasted with that of the former administration—which must have been a source of great pain to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, who denounced any advance in the expenditure, and proclaimed that a retrograde movement should be made in the direction of economy and retrenchment, and said that that would prevail if the Reform party got into power. The hon. gentleman tells us of an expenditure by the present administration of $16.-000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, and of $18,000,000 upon the development of our water-ways. That is just where the shoe pinches at the present time. Under a wise and statesmanlike policy of transportation for this country, definitely mapped out, and carried on judiciously, a large expenditure may be justified. But when hon. gentlemen do as this cabinet has done—rush headlong into expenditures, and then suddenly change their whole line of policy, and, instead, of developing the traffic of the west through central Canada to our own ocean ports, put it under the control of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company—then the more they say about that policy under which they spent about $35,000,000 or more, the greater is their condemnation. The hon. gentleman boasted too of railway subsidies. I think he may well boast. While he was talking, I looked at the index of 'Hansard' of last year, and I found under the heading of subsidies more than eighty subjects classified as being subsidized last session. I think hon. gentlemen opposite have gone mad in the matter of subsidies. Instead of the hon. member for Haldimand boasting of the amount they have spent on subsidies, it would be well for him to call on the government to halt in this matter if they expect to retain their seats, because the people will not stand this subsidy business much longer. As an illustration of the way it works out, I may state that a little while ago the Dominion government granted a money subsidy to the James Bay Railway of $1,500,000. The company went to the Ontario government and got a guarantee of $5,000,000. Immediately after the close of the recent session of the Ontario legislature we had the announcement that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, reviled as it is by hon. gentlemen who support the government, is going to build a parallel line between the same termini without asking a dollar of assistance of any kind from either the Dominion or the Ontario government. This shows that this matter of subsidies is one that requires immediate attention, and I am very much mistaken if the people of Canada do not attend to it at the next general election, whenever hon. gentlemen opposite have the courage to bring that election on.

The hon. gentleman referred to the iron and steel bounties and the lead bounty, but not to the shipping bounty. He did not tell us, of course, that the other day a government official went to Collingwood to ascertain the value of dry-dock facilities, said to have been constructed there by certain gentlemen of that town, and that he valued these at $500,000, and that we are now paying, and will pay for twenty years to come, a subsidy of $15,000 per year as a bounty to that industry alone. And should the present government be returned again to power, no doubt the same gentlemen will exercise the same power over the government as they have been doing lately. How they managed it, I do not know. But the hon. gentleman from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) seems to be able to bring this government to book in some peculiar way, and I wish him luck when he goes to Oro and Vespra and the other townships round about and explains how it has come to pass that these sums are paid by the government into the lap of Collingwood. He is another Independent, and the ways of these independents on that side are past finding out. I am not in harmony with the hon. gentleman when he boasts of these bounties. I remember when not only supporters of the present government outside the cabinet, but even ministers now in the cabinet, taught us that of all subventions, bounties and subsidies were the most odious abominations of protection. I do not know what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) would say now, but I heard him say a couple of years ago that there was no use talking about this dumping business because you could not do anything with it by means of a tariff or a bounty, and that on the other hand it was a blessing in disguise—very thickly disguised I always thought. That, however, was his view then. Hon. gentlemen opposite are fond of taking up the statements of members on this side and holding them out as the policy of the opposition. Well, as I understand it, the opposition policy is the one which our leader announces. It is a policy with which we are in harmony, or it would not be announced. But individual members on this side may express their independent views without committing the party to them. In anything I say in the House, unless it be something on which our leader has pronounced a policy, I am simply enunciating my own views, and I want to put on record here and now my opposition to the scheme of bounties and bonuses and subsidies in Canada. I listened to the glowing language —and it was more glowing than sensible describing the illimitable resources of Canada. I heartily agree with him. But if Canada has such a fertile soil for the teeming populations of other countries, if it offers such a productive field for immigration, if it has mines and minerals and fisheries, if its agricultural resources are so great, and if our growing trade and commerce requires greater facilities for the handling of its traffic, then the time has come when we do not need to subsidize these various industries in order that they may live. I am straight and square in favour of adequate protection, or, if you have any better term than 'adequate protection,' you may substitute it. I am in favour of such duties as will protect our people in the various ranks of industrial life, but I am opposed to subventions and subsidies and devices of that knid. I believe that they are unfair and unequal. They are not fair to one of the great classes, at all events, which should be protected and cared for and whose rights should be respected in this country. But before I deal specifically with that subject, let me refer for a moment or two to other matters to which the hon. gentleman has referred. He talked of exhibitions and an hon. gentleman beside me suggests that he made an exhibition of himself. I am not disposed, however, to be severe on the hon. gentleman in his absence. He did not remain to hear the other side, but hastened out of the chamber after he made his speech, and no doubt he remembered the old line :—

> He who fights and runs away
> May live to fight another day.

If our exhibitions generally are conducted on the same lines as the one of which we have had an explanation from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) the other day—I refer to the permanent exhibition connected with the Colonial Institute which, the minister was compelled to admit, was under charge of the Home Department of Trade and Commerce, into which is thrown everything that nobody else will have anything to do with, and in that respect resembles the Department of Agriculture in Canada—the less we have of them decidedly the better for the people.

With regard to immigration, the hon. gentleman showed that there is no field in the world so favourable for industrial pursuits to-day as Canada, and for those who are seeking permanent homes were they will be comfortably off, the resources of Canada offer inducements to be found nowhere else. In these remarks I entirely concur and am prepared to say that we are to-day receiving back a large portion of those whom the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his colleagues succeeded in driving from Canada from 1878 to 1896. Now when we have a loyal opposition which does not defame the country, but extols its advantages, which is loyally endeavouring to support the government where it can, we ought to have a larger immigration ; and I venture to say that had it not been for the unfair and disloyal utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite when in opposition, our population would be double to-day what it is.

My hon. friend from Haldimand did not tell us anything about these little harbours at the mouths of creeks. I am going to spend a little time in classifying that expenditure, and showing how much money we have frittered away upon public works where there is no justification for the expenditure of even a single dollar—unless it can be a justification by a government to show that they have spent money for the purpose of keeping themselves in power. No one who has followed the discussion of the estimates in this House during the last three or four years can fail to know that in the record there are abundant instances of such expenditure. I do not intend to go into those instances now; but, before the session closes, I intend to show what the expenditures have been in these cases where there was no justification in the public interest, but where the only object of the expenditure was to offer a sop to a locality to win its favour for the government.

The hon. gentleman Mr. A. T. Thompson) spoke of superannuation. But he did not tell us the important fact that superannuations were made by this government for the purpose of making places for their followers. For that purpose they have superannuated a great number of men who were more capable than are their successors in office. He says that no superannuation system obtains now. The hon. gentleman has a bad memory. I think that I remember that last session he himself spoke in favour of the increase of judges' salaries and of the change in the superannuation of judges. What the hon. gentleman means is that if the superannuation is of some civil servant who has been drawing $800, or $1,000, or $1,200 a year, it is an iniquity, but if it is to superannuate a gentleman who has drawn for twenty-five or thirty years a salary of $5,000 or $6,000 a year, then it is a virtue which he will commend. I am not quite in accord with him in that view. There was one remarkable thing about the hon. gentleman's speech, and that is that he talked of everything but the budget. I think he is to be commended for that. I am going to do pretty nearly the same, because there is mighty little to talk about if one confines himself to the budget. The budget has been a vanishing spectacle year by year. When I entered this House four years ago and heard my first budget, I thought it was a pretty weak performance—except in the matter of congratulation. That congratulation has been the main point of the budget ever since. But in everything else it has grown weaker year by year, more mixed and muddled year by year. It would be difficult for any hon gentleman to make a speech if he confined himself to that budget, particularly would it be difficult for a supporter of the government. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House can at least deal with the budget as a negative quantity; they can criticise it for what it does not contain rather than for what it does. Even when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) spoke he had to steer clear of the budget—not for lack of ability, for I do not believe anything of that kind—but through lack of material. He had to abandon the budget and take up one of his old speeches delivered on former occasions in this House. However interesting it was as a reminiscence, still, though he gave it with vigour, it had not at all the effect of novelty. He used about the same language and brought in his points in about the same order as on former occasions.

Now, I have a word or two to say with regard to the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to grant a bounty of 1½ cents a gallon upon the production of crude oil. I have already said that I am absolutely opposed to the principle of bounties. Bounties serve no purpose except to enrich the few at the expense of the many. They cannot effect the object the hon. minister says he desires. And the hon. gentleman does not think they will effect that object—and I can demonstrate that in a moment. He says that we produced crude oil last year to the amount of over 16,000,000 gallons, and he tells us he is putting on the bounty in order to increase the production of crude oil, so that the refiners may have more employment than before. But when he tries to figure out what his bounty of 1½ cents per gallon will cost, on what does he base his calculation? Why, on something over 16,000,000 gallons—showing that he does not expect a single gallon of increased production by reason of this bounty that he is offering. The hon. gentleman knows that he is giving a sop to the Standard Oil Company, and wiping out this industry which he is professing to serve. I am opposed to bounties and in favour of adequate protection to all our industries, a protection which will work out so that each industry will be protected in the same degree. In another way the Finance Minister is most misleading in the calculation he puts before the people as to this bounty of 1½ cents per gallon on crude oil. He gave us to understand that the people would pay 1½ cents per gallon more on coal oil. But, as a matter of fact, it will be 3 cents a gallon on coal oil, because it takes two gallons of crude oil to make one gallon of burning fluid. Did not the hon. gentleman (Mr Fielding) know that, or did he not want to tell the people the truth and the whole truth with regard to this matter?

Mr. FIELDING. Will the bounty be paid on the crude or on the refined?

Mr. LENNOX. It will be paid on the crude.

Mr. FIELDING. Why, then, should the calculation be made on the refined?

Mr. LENNOX. For this reason—that the people do not burn crude oil, but refined oil. But hon. gentlemen opposite probably think that the people should burn something else. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) thought, if I understood him aright, that the tallow dip was good enough for the common people. Perhaps the Minister of Finance thinks that unrefined oil would be good enough for the bulk of the people in the country. The cost of his bounty will be 3 cents a gallon on the refined oil.

Now, I am requested to read for the benefit of the House what the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said. I have here the Ottawa 'Free Press' of this day——

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that a Liberal paper ?

Mr. LENNOX. I believe so.

An hon. MEMBER. The Liberal organ in this city.

Mr. LENNOX. The 'Free Press' says :

It was a reminder of the days when Sir Richard dealt his blows with the force of a mental giant and when every blow left its mark on the adversary. The havoc he wrought with those blows of his explains why Sir Richard is not very popular on the opposition side of the House to-day.

That is enough for an introduction. I think you will say that they are doing him justice—unless they are making him ridiculous. The 'Free Press' goes on :

Be that as it may, Sir Richard had been charged with having been recusant to free trade, but he was able to show that the idea was a figment of the imagination. He had never in his life been a free trader.

As a protectionist he had taken part in the campaign of 1878, and he had championed the cause on every hustings from that day to this.

Sir Richard made avowal that he had once delivered a lecture on speculative free trade, but in the opening paragraph he had expressly declared that it had no reference to practical free trade as a policy for Canada.

Surely there was no apostacy to principle here. And then came the pungent drollery, the caustic humour with which he showed how first one and then another on the opposition side, who had at an earlier period of their life appeared on free trade platforms assailing protection as the Scottish Calvinists used to assail the papacy, and forsaken the faith to which they had pledged themselves.

Now I shall read a few lines here from an excellent authority :

A bounty is merely the means of making a present to the manufacturer at the expense of the people at large. It creates no wealth in the country. It is a means of transferring money from the pocket of one man to the pocket of another ; it is a means of compelling the people generally to enhance the profits of the manufacturer, to put into his pocket money that he never earned.

I would be very sorry to have it understood by the great agricultural classes of this country, I was in favour of bounties in any shape or form. I am not in favour of them, because I recognize that the system is unfair to the great agricultural class of this country.

I have heard nothing which is better sense or more concise than the statement made in this passage by the hon. member for South Simcoe at the last session and so I have read it to the House. I think it will be received as containing a very considerable amount of wisdom.

The hon. gentleman who preceded me (Mr. A. T. Thompson) spoke on every available subject, except the interest of the rural constituency which he represents. I want to say that although it may be in the interest of some classes to have a bounty imposed, to be taken out of the pockets of the people, yet it can never be in the interest of the great agricultural class of this country, and whatever other interest we may be able to serve, I for one, so long as I represent a rural constituency, aye, and even if I should represent a city constituency, will feel that the first interest to be considered in this country, having due regard to all other interests as well, is the interest of agriculture.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ARCH CAMPBELL (West York). The budget debate always excites a great deal of interest not only in this House but also in the country. It is, I suppose, the most important debate we ever have had in parliament. It is time, I think I may say, of stock taking, a time when we review the affairs of the country for the past year and make an estimate of those affairs for the coming year. By that means we ascertain where we are, where we stand, whether we are progressing or retrograding. Any man who does not at a certain time of the year take stock of his affairs to find out whether he is going ahead or behind, is not a good business man. So in parliament if we do not as a nation take stock once a year and ascertain how we are standing, we are not conducting the affairs of the country as we should. The budget speech which was delivered the other day has excited great interest throughout the country. It was one of the most important speeches that has ever been delivered in this House. It must be exceedingly gratifying to the people of this country to read the record of the progress and advancement of this Dominion of Canada. The gentlemen to your left who have preceded me have found it a very hard road to travel, and their speeches have been the shortest that I have ever listened to in a budget debate. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) occupied only twenty-five or thirty minutes. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) hardly came up to that time; in about twenty five minutes he said all he could say. It is an evidence that they can find very little to criticise in the position of the country and the manner in which its affairs have been conducted in the past year. One can scarcely credit the state of affairs that has been revealed by the Finance Minister. If we did not know it was true, we could scarcely realize that this Dominion is making such tremendous progress as it has been making within the last few years. The story of the extraordinary advancement of this Dominion reads almost like a fairy tale, and is exceedingly gratifying to every well wisher of the country. There are two ways in which we can ascertain the progress of a country, just as in the case of an individual. If a merchant or a farmer or a trader is increasing his sales from year to year, selling more goods, doing a greater business, it is an evidence that he is prospering and is adding to his estate, and so with a nation. We find that this Dominion has made wonderful progress within the last few years when compared with the record of previous years. What we buy and what we sell is of great interest to us. I remember that when our Conservative friends were in power, they boasted very often of the progress the country was making. They pointed to an increase in the trade of this Dominion of $3,500,000 per year. That was the average during the eighteen years they were in power. The trade of this country increased from $172,000,000 in 1878 to $229,000,000 in 1896, an increase of $66,000,000 or about $3,500,000 per year.

It is a matter of record that our hon. friends on the Conservative side were exceedingly gratified with the progress that had been made. If you look over the speeches of the late Minister of Finance you will find that he pointed with pride and satisfaction to the record of the increased trade of the country as an evidence of a wise administration of the affairs of the country under his rule. Now, Sir, taking that as a criterion, we may judge of the progress of the country during the seven years that it has been under the guidance of the Liberal party, and we find that the trade of the country increased from $239,000,000 in 1896 to no less a sum than $467,000,000 in 1903, that the trade of the country increased not at the rate of $3,500,000 a year, but at the rate of nearly $32,000,000 a year. I think that if we look with pride and gratification to the fact that under the regime of our Conservative friends the foreign trade of this country was increased by $3,500,000 a year it must be exceedingly gratifying to them now to find that that trade has gone up to the extent of about $32,000,000 a year. We find also that the increase in trade has been largely in Canadian products. We find that the total exports of Canadian products for the seven years previous to the advent of the Liberal administration, from 1890 to 1896, were, in round numbers $696,000,000. Comparing that with the last seven years of the Liberal administration, from 1897 to 1903, we find that the total exports of Canadian products were $1,166,000,000, or an increase in these seven years over the previous seven years when the Conservative party ruled, of no less than $470,000,000. You can hardly realize that that $470,000,000 has gone into the pockets largely of the farmers and producers of this country.

It is interesting to ascertain how this increase has occurred. We find that of products of the mine, from 1890 to 1896, we exported $42,730,000. During the last seven years this was increased to $170,000,000, or an increase in these seven years over the previous seven years of $127,000,000. Then, we have the fisheries. Our exports of the products of the fisheries for the seven years previous to 1896 were $69,468,000. During the latter seven year period they increased to $78,898,000, or an increase in these seven years of about $9,000,000. Of the products of the forest the exports increased from $176,000,000 during the first seven year period to $213,000,000 during the last seven year period, or an increase of $37,000,000. Then we come to the products of the farm. The exports of the products of the farm show a wonderful increase, an increase from $331,000,000 for the previous seven years to no less than $573,000,000 for the last seven years, or an increase of $240,000,000 for the last seven years over the previous seven years. Then, I am also glad to know that the exports of manufactures have increased from $51,000,000 to $100,000,000 or an increase of $50,000,000. These facts are exceedingly gratifying to us. They show that our products are being sold to good advantage and that we are reaping enormous profits from them.

If we examine the list of exports we find that we can pick out some items in that trade of particular interest to the farmers of this country. We find that the exports of butter rose from $6,140,000 during the seven years previous to 1896 to nearly $29,000,000 during the last seven years, or an increase of $22,000,000. Then, take cheese. The exports of cheese during the seven years previous to 1896 amounted to $87,000,000, whereas, for the last seven years they amounted to $133,978,000, or an increase of $46,000,000 in that one article alone. We may take hams, bacon, and pork, the exports of which increased from $15,572,000 to $77,558,000 or an increase of $62,000,000.

It is well to ask the reason why it is that we have made such astonishing progress in these lines, that we have been able to sell so much more of these goods during the last seven years than we were during the previous seven years. The rain fell and the sun shone, during the first seven years the same as during the last seven years. The crops grew and Providence blessed this country during the seven years between 1890 and 1896 the same as Providence has blessed this land from 1897 to 1903 and it is interesting to know how it is that we have made such wonderful progress and that we have been able to sell so much more in the last seven years than we were in the seven years previously. It is an advantage to have added to the wealth of this country the enormous sum of money that has gone into the pockets of the people. Our hon. friends say, as they have been saying to-day, that this is largely owing to Providence. They give no credit to the government of this country at all, but I think a little investigation will show that under the wise direction of this government the farmers have been enabled to take advantage of the opportunities presented to them in very many ways. For instance, let me point to a few of the reasons why this increase has taken place. We all remember that when the government took charge of the affairs of this country in 1896 our cattle could not go into the United States without being quarantined for a certain length of time at the border. What was the result of that? In the four and a half years during which that quarantine was in force we only sent to the United States 3,762 head of cattle at a valuation of $52,000, in round numbers. What did this government do? The Hon. Sydney A. Fisher, the practical businesslike intelligent farmer who was placed at the head of the Department of Agriculture, a man who knew what this country demanded, a man who understood what the farmers wanted, a man who realized the responsibilities of his position, immediately set himself to work to effect a remedy. With the Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture in the province of Ontario, he went to Washington and there, like business men, they brought this matter to the attention of the American government, the state of affairs was explained and by bringing their business ability to bear upon the authorities at Washington, they secured the removal of this quarantine that had proved so disastrous to the interests of the farmers of Canada. What was the result in the next four and a half years? In the next four and a half years after the quarantine was removed instead of sending 3,762 head of cattle to the United States, we sent no less than 349,393 at a valuation not of $52,000, but at a valuation, getting it back in good Canadian money, of no less than $5,329,000. Will any man say that that was not one act which contributed largely to the welfare of the great agricultural classes of this country? Ever since, the exportation to the United States of our cattle has been going on. We have a great many cattle that we cannot send across the ocean. It does not pay to send them 3,000 miles to market. We find that in the great cities of the United States, such as New York and Boston, where there are millions and millions of people, a market for these cattle, and the result is that the farmers of this country sent in four and a half years after these quarantine restrictions were removed no less than 349,000 head of cattle at a valuation of $5,329,000.

The system of cold storage, brought to perfection by this government, has also contributed in a large degree to our prosperity because before cold storage was brought to a successful development our perishable produce could not be sent to the markets of the world in proper condition. The late government started with a crude system of cold storage, filling the steamers with ice that was melted before the vessels got to the ocean, with the result that the goods arrived in the old country in a worse condition than they were in when they started on the voyage. Under the present Minister of Agriculture, who understands his business, the cold storage system was perfected. He first established the system on the railways throughout the Dominion, giving the railway companies a bonus to induce them to fit up their cars so that the perishable products could be carried from the farmers' door to the world's markets. Then, cold storage warehouses were erected in Montreal, and the minister made arrangements with the steamship companies to fit up mechanical appliances in their vessels so that our products could be properly cared for on the ocean voyage. In the first year of the experiment, 17 ocean steamers fitted with cold storage sailed from Montreal, and last year there were 35 steamers so fitted. Last year there were 144 sailings from the port of Montreal alone, of ships furnished with mechanical cold storage of the most modern and approved type. As the result of these experiments, the export of our butter and cheese and poultry and eggs has enormously increased; and the farmers have been enabled to realize a higher price than heretofore. That has contributed in large degree to the prosperity of the farmers of Canada. That is the reason why our farmers got $470,000,000 more for their products in the last seven years than they did before. But that it not all. The Minister of Agriculture established in all the provinces of this Dominion dairying schools to educate the people in the best methods of manufacturing butter and cheese. Our exports of butter have largely increased, but we are yet only at the beginning of that trade. There is a market in the old country for ten times the quantity of butter we now export, and with a continuation of the efforts of the Minister of Agriculture we hope to capture that market.

Some people may say that while our products have increased, the people of Canada have not got the money, but let us see how that pans out. Is not this a pretty sure criterion. In 1878 the deposits in the banks of this country amounted to $79,000,000, and in 1896 they amounted to $245,000,000, an increase in eighteen years of $165,831,000. But what has been the story since 1896? Instead of having $245,000,000 on deposit in the banks as we had then, the people of Canada had in the year 1903 no less than $461,000,000, or an increase in these seven years of $216,000,000 against an increase of only $165,000,000 during the long eighteen years of Tory rule. That is remarkable progress. It redounds largely to the credit of this government of wise and practical men, who by the methods they have adopted to encourage and facilitate the manufacture and transportation of our products, added to the general prosperity of the Dominion. Another test we might make, can be taken from the post office returns. The correspondence of a prosperous and progressive nation is constantly increasing. The postal record shows us that in 1878 we posted 44,000,000 letters; in 1896 116,000,000 letters, or an increase in eighteen years of 72,000,000 letters. But what has been the wonderful record since 1896? Last year we posted 235,000,000 letters, or an increase of 119,000,000 over 1896, as against an increase of only 72,000,000 in the eighteen years of Conservative government. These are strong, convincing, and indisputable proofs of the progress we have made.

And, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know that the manufacturing interests of this Dominion, which we all know are a great factor in the welfare of a country, have shared in the general prosperity. Our manufacturing industries during the last seven years have made far more progress than during the eighteen years of Conservative rule. In 1896 we exported $9,365,000 worth of manufactured products, and in 1903 that rose to over $21,000,000 worth, an increase in seven years of over $11,000,000 worth.

Compare that with the previous record, from 1878 to 1896. The increase was only a little over $5,000,000 in eighteen years under the national policy, which according to its advocates was going to build up this Dominion, which was designed especially for the benefit of the manufacturing interests of Canada, which hon. gentlemen opposite have never ceased to laud and which they claim had laid the foundations, broad and deep, of the future prosperity of the manufacturing interests of this Dominion; and yet under that national policy, during the eighteen years of its continuance, our exports of manufactured goods only increased $5,237,000. Since the abolition of the national policy, since the tariff was revised by practical men on business lines, the manufacturers of this Dominion have gone on increasing by leaps and bounds, so that during the last seven years they have increased their exports by $11,259,000, against an increase of $5,000,000 under the national policy in eighteen years.

Now, I believe the manufacturing establishments of this Dominion should receive wise encouragement from the Dominion government. I think the welfare of this country largely depends on the success of its manufacturing establishments. You can see them in the neighbourhood of our towns and cities, employing from 500 to 1,000 men, adding to the population, increasing the value of land all round, giving value to the products of the farm, and the market garden. So I say it is a wise thing for the government to encourage the building up of manufacturing establishments in every way they possibly can; and the revision of the tariff made in 1897 contributed in a large degree to the building up of the manufactures of this country and making them as prosperous as they are to-day.

Let me point out one or two ways in which the tariff has been revised. You can revise the tariff in such a way as to paralyze the industries of this Dominion. The government in 1897 went about their work in a businesslike way. They reduced the duties on the natural raw products of this country. Take, for instance, iron and steel, the great raw product that enters into the manufacture of every implement used on the farm, of every ship that sails on our seas, and of every railway train that passes over the land. Under the national policy which our Conservative friends have so lauded, this raw product, so necessary to the commercial life of the country, was taxed to the extent of about 60 per cent. This government came into power and cut that duty in two, with the result that our manufacturing establishments throughout this Dominion have been enlarging their plants, increasing their output, and sending their goods to all parts of the world. There is a factory in my own county which has doubled and trebled its production in the last seven years—the Dominion Radiator Company, of Toronto, which is now sending its goods to all parts of the wide world. Even the public buildings in far-off Russia are heated by radiators made in the city of Toronto. These works were not prospering under the old system, when they had to pay that enormous duty on their raw material. Their output was curtailed, they could not compete with other manufacturers, and they were not able to make a profit. But since then they have grown and have extended their works, until now their goods are going to all parts of the world. Take the Massey-Harris Company, who use from twenty-five to thirty tons of metal every day, paying an enormous duty upon it. They were handicapped and unable to send their goods abroad; but as soon as the duty was reduced, they were able to compete with their neighbours, enlarge their plant, double their output, employ double the number of men and largely increase the wages of those men. They have grown and have extended their works until now the whole world is their market. And recently we have had the Deering Company established in the city of Hamilton, investing millions of capital, employing, I am told, 10,000 men, and prepared to manufacture agricultural implements and send them to all parts of the world. I could point in the same way to other manufacturing establishments. Go to Ottawa, Montreal, Hamilton, Peterborough, Halifax or anywhere else in this wide Dominion, and you will find that the manufacturing establishments have increased and prospered, doubled their output, and given employment to more men and at increased wages. I do not say that the tariff is perfect. I have thought that certain revisions of the tariff could be made, some reductions and possibly some increases, that would still further bring prosperity to our manufacturing establishments ; and I am glad to know that the government have wisely decided to give some redress by placing some goods on the free list, and thus placing the establishments in a better position to manufacture their product at a lower price than before, and to supply the consumers not only of Canada but of the wide world.

In this connection I might point to the revision of the coal oil duties. That seems to me to be a sensible change. At present we have five cents a gallon on refined oil and five cents a gallon on crude oil. It takes two gallons of crude oil to make one gallon of refined ; so that we have this anomaly, that there is a duty practically of ten cents a gallon on the raw product and only five cents a gallon on the finished article. In the revision of the tariff the sensible thing has been done ; the duty on the refined has been reduced to 2½ cents a gallon, the benefit of which will be enjoyed by the consumers of oil throughout this Dominion ; and crude oil has been placed on the free list, which I hope and believe will result in every single gallon of the 16,000,000 gallons or whatever quantity of oil is used in Canada, being refined in the Dominion. Our refiners get their crude oil in free, and have 2½ cents a gallon of protection on the refined. So that we will compel all the refiners of this Dominion, I believe, to refine the entire product of this Dominion in this country itself. That will give employment to double the quantity of men now engaged in that industry. We only produce in Canada one-half the quantity of oil we consume, so that if we refine the whole product in Canada, we will employ just about double the quantity of men and at the same time give the consumers their coal oil cheaper. Therefore I think that provision is wise and sensible and will promote the interests of the people.

The results of this development, the effect of the prosperous times we have had, brought about largely by the wise legislation of this government, are seen in another direction. We have an enormous territory in the Northwest, and what we require above all in Canada is people. It is almost incredible that in this great Dominion, so rich in natural products, mineral treasures and other resources, with the Canadian Pacific Railway running through from end to end and with branch lines extending in every direction—it is almost inconceivable that for ten years we did nothing but mark time and not only did not add to our population, but could not keep the immigration we brought in. Instead of there being in the country, the 860,000 people which the returns show were brought in previously to 1896, it was found that we had not retained our natural increase and that those whom we brought in had gone out of the country again to the United States. We found also in the eastern states Canadian boys and girls who had fled from this Dominion to the busy centres of trade on the other side of the line. At the head of the American banks and other great establishments, you will find Canadian boys, who had been born and raised and educated in Canada and had gone to this foreign country, and who, by their enterprise, ability, industry and integrity had raised themselves step by step until they had reached the highest positions. Was it not lamentable that all these bright young men and women should have been forced to leave our country ? and under the regulations which then existed, we find that in the decade previous to 1896, of the immigrants who had come in and who had cost this country a large amount, nearly all had gone to the United States. But when the present government came into power, under the wise administration of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who knew the situation and who knew the Northwest, a new departure was made. Immigration agents were sent not only to Europe but to the United States, to Michigan, Kansas, Dakota, Illinois and the western states, and by means of the literature they distributed and the information they were able to give, the stream of immigration was turned back again and every year since, that stream flowing into Canada has increased and continues to grow as the years roll on. What does the last year show ? Why, from 1890 to 1896, only 271,216 immigrants were brought into Canada, and the public returns of the census showed that these immigrants did not remain in Canada. But from 1897 to 1903 no less than 366,946 immigrants came into Canada, or an increase in those seven years of 95,730. In those seven years the settlers' effects that were brought in were nearly a million dollars more than they were in the previous seven years ? Our Conservative friends may say that those immigrants did not remain in Canada, but we have a test which will show that they did. Take the returns of the homestead entries and what do we find ? In 1896 there were only 1,857, whereas in 1903 they amounted to 31,330. From 1890 to 1896, there were only 22,845 homestead entries, and in the last seven years they increased to 75,530, showing an increase of 52,685. Why, we increased the homestead entries more in the last seven years by nearly 13,000 than they amounted to in the whole eighteen years of Tory rule. We have proved conclusively that the immigrants we are now bringing in are remaining in the country and helping to build it up, and it is exceedingly gratifying to know that the class of immigrants we are getting is of the very best character. Last year 80 to 90 per cent of those who came were the very best class we could desire—from the United States, Great Britain and Scandinavia. The inferior class, which we do not desire, went to the United States. I think that this record of prosperity must be exceedingly gratifying to the people, and that the government, in adopting the regulations they have made, in the perfecting of the system of cold storage, and in the encouragement and improvement of the making of butter and cheese, have contributed to a great extent in bringing this about.

The government have also been wise in other directions. They have not confined their legislation to the farmers and manufacturers, but have been looking particularly after the interests of the great labour and artisan classes. I say that the man who works behind the plough, the girl who sweeps out the office, are the class which any government should protect. They are the helpless ones who need aid, support and encouragement. The wealthy men and rich corporations can look after themselves, but the man who is alone in the field, the man who shoves the plane and guides the plough is the man the government should look after and protect. What has this government done in that direction ? One of the first things they did was to abolish the sweating system. Of all the iniquities that ever disgraced the annals of any country, the most disgraceful, was the condition which existed under the late government in the sweating system. It has been proved beyond doubt by the commission which was appointed to investigate this system, that in Montreal and Toronto the big contractors who had secured contracts for supplying clothing to the militia and who were given big prices, sub-let those contracts to others, who in turn again sub-let them, and it was proven beyond a doubt that poor women in Montreal and Toronto were forced to work the whole day long making this clothing at the rate of 25 cents a day.

This great Dominion of Canada, though paying out large sums for the manufacture of these goods, did not regard the rights of the poor people, but neglected their interests and so enabled the contractors to fleece them, to reduce their wages to a starvation level. This government at once abolished that system ; they provided that every contractor, no matter what his colour, nationality or creed might be, should pay the current rate of wages to every person working on the job. Whether the contract was for the building of a post office, the construction of a wharf, dock or pier, the making of a railway, the digging of a canal or the manufacture of clothing required for the army and navy, every person engaged in the work must be paid the current rate of wages, whatever that might be. And so, this government has looked after the interests of those who, above all others needed the government's guidance and support and protection. I remember when, but a few years ago, a scandalous case arose which was discussed at some length in this House. The contractor who was building a railway—I think it was the Toronto, Hamilton and Burlington—sub-let his contract to an American. The American sub-contractor came over here, employed a large number of men, and set them to work on the railway. A progress estimate was made of the work done, and the sub-contractor was given his pay, with which he cleared out, and not one of these men received from him pay for the work they had done. Some time after, application was made to this parliament for an amendment to the charter of the company. And, under this government, a stipulation was made that before that legislation was passed and the amendment made, a settlement had to be made with the men who had done the work on the railway but had not been paid for it. I remember another case in the western part of Ontario. The government let a contract, and the contractors sub-let the work, and the sub-contractors defrauded the men out of their wages. But this government stopped all that. Under the present system, they can say to the contractor : It does not matter to us whether you sublet your contract or not ; but if you do sublet it we will not pay you a single dollar until every man on the job has received his just wage. Is not that what a government ought to do ? It is to the credit of this government that they had this law enacted since they came into power and that they have carried it out so efficiently. Then, they have brought into force a Conciliation Act with a view to avoiding those strikes and lock-outs arising out of difficulties between manufacturers or contractors and their employees ; and I am glad to say that, under the efficient administration of the Minister of Labour (Sir William Mulock) this Act has been the means of avoiding a great many strikes and settling a great many difficulties that would have been an injury both to the men and their employers. So, in these cases—and many more might be cited—the government have shown themselves to be progressive ; they have moved forward with the times ; they have not only protected and encouraged, as I said, the great agricultural classes and the manufacturing classes, but they have also looked after the rights and interests of the artisans and labourers, who so much need the assistance of the government.

Looking over the government's record, I cannot but believe that the tariff revision next year which they have announced will be one that will help the great industries of this country as well as the great body of consumers. The government have shown their ability in the past to solve the difficult questions involved in a tariff policy. and to do it in such a way as to bring about great prosperity to the Dominion. And so I believe that, when the revision of the tariff takes place next year, changes that are needed will be found to be wisely made. There are some articles the duty on which could be advantageously increased, while on some others a reduction would be in the interest of the country. You can afford protection to manufacturers in either of two ways—by increasing the duties on what they manufacture, or reducing the duties on their raw material. A reduction of the cost of raw material enables them to sell their goods at lower prices than before, and so to increase their sales and relatively reduce the cost of their manufacture. This was largely the plan adopted by the government in 1897, and I feel sure that when the revision takes place next year it will be made on broad lines that will prove the wisdom of the administration.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) who preceded me said that the expenditure of the Dominion had largely increased. That is quite true. It is also true that when we were in opposition we condemned the expenditure of the then Conservative administration. But we not only condemned the expenditure ; we pointed out instances of sheer waste of public money. It is no argument to say that the expenditure has increased and to infer at once that this is conclusive proof of the extravagance of the government. This government has been spending more money it is true ; but the country has been growing and more expenditure has been necessary. Take any corporation or any firm in a large way of business, and you will find that their expenditure is very much larger than it was seven years ago. This government has done a business of $467,000,000, against a business of $239,000,000 seven years ago. It would be absurd to expect this increase in business to be effected without an increase of expenditure. When we were in opposition, we condemned the public expenditure, which was then about $37,000,000 or $38,000,000. But we also pointed out specific cases in which public money might have been saved ? We pointed to the Curran bridge in Montreal, where $470,000 of the people's money was thrown away. We showed that we had here a Minister of Railways and Canals, a deputy minister, a chief engineer and all the necessary staff, and yet, within telephone and telegraph communication, within 120 miles, of the city of Ottawa a work was carried out that cost the people $470,000 more than it should have cost. We pointed to the Tay Canal, where $500,000 of the people's money had been spent. We showed that it cost to operate that canal $3,000 a year and that the total receipts were $127.76. We pointed to the Langevin block, on which $400,000 was expended uselessly. We showed that the government had let a contract for that building, and that it was afterwards found that the contract was so loosely and carelessly drawn that the contractor was not obliged to put a roof on the building, and so a new contract had to be made for the roof.

In that way we pointed out case after case where the money of this country was squandered in many ways and enormous sums spent uselessly. If our Conservative friends could point to the same conditions to-day, if they could show where money is being wasted as we showed before 1896, then I think they could make a case against us. They are not justified in pointing to the increased expenditure when they know that when they left office they had started the deepening of the St. Lawrence and Welland canals, had let contracts for these works, and that it was necessary for this government to go on and complete them. If I remember correctly, we have expended more than $11,000,000 in carrying out and completing work started under their regime. The Trent Valley canal was started under them—$1,000,000 were spent upon it, contracts were let, and it was absolutely necessary for the new government to go on and complete that work. Thus we have spent a great deal of money upon it. We have extended the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. That extension was fought and opposed at every stage in this House by our Conservative friends. It was called the Drummond County deal and the Drummond County steal, and all the opprobrious names they could think of. Now, realizing their mistake, they want to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Georgian bay. We wisely spent $1,000,000 or $1,500,000 in extending it to Montreal. The Intercolonial Railway before that stopped at Lévis, although the great metropolis of Canada was almost within a stone's throw of the end of the line. The Intercolonial Railway was obliged to take whatever rates the Grand Trunk would give them on freight that went to the maritime provinces, but immediately the line was extended to Montreal it was in direct competition with the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canada Atlantic, and all the enormous traffic that came down the Welland canal. In consequence the receipts of the Intercolonial Railway have more than doubled in the last seven years and are increasing year by year. It is true that we have spent a great deal of money on the Intercolonial Railway, but that was absolutely necessary. The enormous development that took place in Sydney made it necessary that the road should be laid with heavier rails from Port Mulgrave to Sydney. That stretch of road had been laid with rails of only 45 pounds to the yard. It was absolutely necessary that a new steamer should be bought. The old ferry took over one car at a time and then came back and got another. That would do in Conservative times, when the country was standing still, but when the country began to move forward by leaps and bounds, when the life blood of this nation was running at a higher rate of speed than ever before, when new life permeated this whole Dominion, then we had to move forward. It was necessary to provide a steamer to carry trains across the Straits of Canso. It was necessary that that section of the road should be laid with heavy 90-pound rails, and this was done. The terminal facilities at Sydney were altogether too small, and the same conditions prevailed in Halifax and St. John. New cars had to be obtained, the bridges had to be strengthened, rails had to be relaid, locomotives had to be replaced, the little tu'penny-halfpenny one-horse locomotives that could only haul half a dozen cars would do all right when this country was governed by the Tory party, but when a new party came in, then it was necessary that we should move forward with the times and improve our position. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway have spent millions of money in the last seven years in providing new cars, in increasing their locomotive equipment, in relaying tracks, in strengthening bridges and replacing wooden bridges with iron and steel structures. The Intercolonial had to do the same thing. We have spent large sums of money on the Intercolonial Railway, but to-day we are reaping the benefit from that expenditure. I believe that this expenditure has now almost ceased, and we shall reap a large revenue from the Intercolonial, I have no doubt, within the next few years.

Then the government has also expended a large amount for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. The development taking place in the Kootenay district made it absolutely necessary that a line of railway should be extended into that country, and the Crow's Nest Pass road was built. The government had the choice of either building the road themselves or subsidizing the Canadian Pacific Railway for building it. It was thought that if the government built that road they would have a piece of road with no connections to the east or west, and would be absolutely at the dictation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other road or roads, in the matter of freight rates of freight they might get over it. Thus the government wisely concluded that it was better to subsidize the Canadian Pacific Railway to build that line. But they took great care to protect the rights and interests of the people of Canada. They said to the Canadian Pacific Railway: You must give to the Dominion of Canada a fee simple to 50,000 acres of coal lands. The Dominion of Canada have to-day a deed in fee simple to 50,000 acres of the best coal lands there as a guarantee that the obligations of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be carried out. They stipulated, in order to avoid the discouragement or embarrassment to manufacturers or smelting works that might start there, that there should be no monopoly on coal. The government stipulated that coal should be furnished to those who required it at a fixed rate of $2 a ton at the pit's mouth, and, as a guarantee that they would carry that out, they were to deed to the government 50,000 acres of coal lands, so that if they should disregard their obligation, we have this enormous reservoir of coal which we can open up and so control the markets and the price. Not only that, but they stipulated that the Canadian Pacific Railway should give running powers to any other road that is now built or that may be built in Canada over the Crow's Nest Pass for all time to come. As long as the sun shines and the rain falls that road will be under the control of the Dominion of Canada, and the government can give running powers over it to any road upon terms to be settled by the Governor in Council. They also stipulated that the Canadian Pacific Railway should give reduced rates between the east and the west, and it was estimated that the concessions made by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the people of this Dominion would amount to between $600,000 and $700,000 every single year. That estimate was based on the amount of freight handled at that time, and, of course, the figures would be very much greater now. In five years the people of Canada got back every single dollar of the subsidy given to the Crow's Nest Pass in the reduced rates on traffic both ways between the east and the west. These concessions will still go on all along the years, so that the bargain made by the government was a wise one. But, of course, it takes a considerable amount of money. We cannot have our cake and eat it, too; but it was a wise thing to do, it was a wise expenditure, and I have always taken the position that I do not care what the expenditure is, $25,000,000, or $50,000,000, or $75,000,000 a year, so long as we get value for it. If it gives good returns to this country it is a wise expenditure. This government, by their wise administration, have been able to go on with great works, have been able to deepen the canals, to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, to subsidize the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, to subsidize all the different railways running all over this Dominion and to construct public works necessary to the convenience and prosperity of the people in the maritime provinces. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) pointed to the fact that little wharfs and piers were built where there were very few settlers. It is the life and salvation of these fishermen down east that these wharfs shall be provided for them and the government have, by meeting the wishes of the people and providing all these necessary conveniences, aided, encouraged and increased the happiness of the people to a very great degree. Not only have they done that but owing to the wise care which they have exercised in the management of the affairs of this country, notwithstanding the large expenditure they have made on the public works of this Dominion, in subsidizing railways, in deepening our canals, in extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, at the end of seven years we find the public debt of this Dominion $1,000,000 less than it was in 1896. Contrast that with the record of our Conservative friends. For the eighteen years they were in power they added $6,700,000 every single year to the debt of this Dominion. Not one single year passed by in the whole of the eighteen years during which they did not add $6,700,000 to the public debt and in the eighteen years that they were in power they increased the public debt by $118,000,000 while this government have been able to carry on the public works and improve the conditions of the people, increase their comforts, facilitate and improve transportation and open up the canals, doing all this work and at the same time relieving the people at the end of seven years by reducing the debt to the extent of $1,000,000. This is a record that any government might be proud of. I am sure it is a record that the people of this Dominion will look upon as one of the best records that was ever made by any government. It is a record I am sure will meet with the approval of the people and when the elections come on, be it sooner or be it later, I have no doubt that from one end of this broad Dominion to the other the people will say: Well done, good and faithful servants ; enter ye into another seven years of power.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (South Wentworth). Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that we on this side of the House are not able to please hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to the length of our speeches. If an hon. gentleman rises on this side of the House to make a lengthy speech some hon. gentlemen opposite is sure to say that the time of the House is being wasted. But the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Campbell) found fault rather with the shortness of the speeches which have been delivered on this side of the House. He evidently wants quantity rather than quality, and I am sure the House will agree with me when I say that he has set a worthy example in that respect during the last hour and a half. It is true that the hon. gentleman went over a great deal of ground, and I am sure that hon. members who have been longer in this House than I have been, must admit that they have heard a great deal of that speech once or twice before ; an hon. gentleman beside me says six times. The chief argument throughout the hon. gentleman's speech was, that, this country being exceedingly prosperous, the government in power at the present time are entitled to the credit for that prosperity. Last night we had an excellent speech from the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd). But that hon. gentleman was more modest. He was willing to give Providence credit for at least some small portion of the prosperity we have had in this country during the last few years. But, the hon. member for West York was not at all satisfied with the statement of the hon. member for South Brant because he was willing apparently to take credit on behalf of the government for all of the bountiful harvests that we have had for the last five years. The money value of these harvests, or of the good crops that we have had during the last five years, I am informed on good authority, is something like $500,000,000 greater than it was in the previous seven years. I do not know whether the hon. member for West York is willing or not to say in public that the government has had anything to do with the raising of these magnificent crops. But, it is evident from the tone of his remarks that he thinks it has. The hon. gentleman, as usual, takes a great deal of credit to the government because of the increase in our exports and imports and he wishes to gauge the prosperity of the country on that basis. In regard to our exports and imports he lays a considerable amount of stress upon our exports of agricultural implements. He scores the government that preceded this one on the ground that during the time it was in control of the affairs of this country our agricultural implement manufacturers were not exporting large quantities of agricultural implements while at the present time they were exporting to the extent of $2,228,000 a year. The hon. gentleman might have gone a little farther. He might have stated, if he had desired to be absolutely fair, that in 1896 we did export $593,464 worth of agricultural implements. The business of manufacturing agricultural implements in this country only got on its feet some twelve or fifteen years ago. After the national policy had been put in operation the effect was immediately manifest. The larger proportion of the agricultural implements used in Canada were made in this country and the manufacturers got into the position of being able to export a large quantity of these products. This export in 1896 amounted to no less than $593,464. But, that was not all. At that time the manufacturers of these implements gave employment to our own good Canadians who made almost all of the implements that we used in this country. We imported only $304,000 worth. What is happening to-day? Although we exported $2,228,000 worth we imported $3,255,000 worth under this magnificent tariff which is now in operation. Of course that goes to swell the export and import total and the hon. gentleman takes credit for that condition of affairs. I am sure the people are not satisfied with the fact that three and a quarter million dollars worth of agricultural implements were made across the line that should have been made in Canada. The hon. gentleman who spoke previously, said that a protective tariff of twenty per cent had brought these large factories to the city of Hamilton that are locating there at the present time. I am bound to say that even a twenty per cent protective tariff will in some cases bring industries into this country—not in all cases. Here is an example. For a great many years the International Harvester Company, the McCormicks, the Deerings, and other large manufacturers of agricultural implements on the other side of the line consented to pay that twenty per cent duty, brought their implements into this country and sold them in competition with those of our own manufacturers. It is true that they charged a little higher prices, but twenty per cent when the implement is invoiced at not more than $50 is not a very serious item and they were able not only to maintain their position on equal terms with the Canadian manufacturers but they were able to retain a foothold in the market in the hope relying upon the assurances of hon. gentlemen opposite that when they got into power they would have a free trade government or that they would have unrestricted reciprocity and that they would then be able to bring their implements in free. But, when this government had been in power a number of years and when these manufacturers found that these hon. gentlemen were not prepared to carry out the principles upon which they had appealed to the people previously to the election, they came to the conclusion that both political parties in this country were determined to maintain some sort of protective tariff, and that the only thing they could do was to come across the line. But, this was not until after the lapse of a long number of years and until after we had imported into this country scores of millions of dollars worth of these agricultural implements the manufacture of which had given employment in the United States to thousands of men. At last this low tariff brought this industry to this country. What would have been the consequence if instead, a twenty-five or thirty per cent tariff had been put on and that tariff had been maintained all these years and that the Liberal leaders had not preached free trade? The implement manufacturers on the other side of the line would not have believed from the assurances of these hon. gentlemen while in opposition that there might be a change in the policy of this country but they would have known that protection was the fixed policy of this country with the result that these industries would have been brought into this country fifteen years ago instead of now.

Had that been done then, we would have been saved from sending out of this country millions of dollars in capital, and thousands of Canadians to work in the factories of the United States. The hon. gentleman claimed that these industries were brought to Canada on account of the present tariff, but he did not say that it is absolutely the same tariff now as under the Conservative regime so far as agricultural implements are concerned. The hon. gentleman tried to show that our prosperity was in some way due to the Minister of Agriculture, who, being a horny-handed son of toil, and knowing everything about agriculture, set to work to revolutionize matters when he took charge of the department. Well, one of the first things the Minister of Agriculture did was to go to Washington with the Hon. John Dryden to induce the Americans to do away with the cattle quarantine. That was a wonderful accomplishment of the minister. The Conservative government maintained a quarantine against American cattle for years, so that Canadian live cattle might be allowed to enter into the United kingdom. It was admitted by the English government that our cattle were free from disease, but the embargo was maintained as a matter of protection to the British farmer. However, when Mr. Fisher came into power, he got the cattle quarantine between Canada and the United States removed, and so he gave up all hope for ever of having our cattle admitted into the English market. Last year we exported to the United States 10,432 head of cattle, valued at $292,000, or an average of $27.90 cents per head. Well, any farmer who would send an animal worth only $27.90 to be fattened in the United States is not a good farmer. The good farmer is the farmer who will fatten his cattle at home. Did not this government remove the duty on American corn, to compel the Canadian farmer not to grow corn himself, but to buy foreign corn in order to fatten his cattle? However that may be, a few farmers sent cattle to the United States last year to the value of $292,000. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) did not say a word about the fact that last year we imported $497,000 worth of American cattle into Canada. The hon. gentleman is quite satisfied to let the Americans send in half a million dollars worth of cattle, if he can only find a market in the United States for $292,000 worth of calves and lean animals. But, our cattle trade with Great Britain is not a trade in lean cattle and calves. It is a trade in fat cattle, as will be seen from the fact that last year we exported to the British market 161,170 head worth $10,842,000, or an average of $67 a head. These were fat cattle fattened on Canadian farms, and exported to the British market in their finished state, as they should be exported by good farmers. Gentlemen on the other side of the House boast year after year that they have taken down the cattle quarantine regulations so as to enable us to send $292,000 of calves and lean cattle to the United States, forgetting to state that American cattle to double that value were imported here. What have they done to open up the British market for our cattle? Nothing. What have they done to open up the German market for our own produce? A few years ago we did a trade with Germany amounting to $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 worth of agricultural products more than we do to-day. But that trade has disappeared. I will not say the government did wrong in putting the surtax on German goods, but I do say that if they claim credit because we sell $292,000 worth of cattle to the United States, they must also have the discredit of destroying that large and profitable market which we had in Germany.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why do the farmers send their cattle to the United States?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The hon. gentleman can ask the farmers that; I suppose it is because the hon. gentleman made it easy for them to do so. Now, I am not one of those who say that a government cannot do anything to assist in making the people of a country prosperous. I believe a government has it in its power to do a great deal in this direction, and I am glad to know that the Liberal party have changed their opinion on that matter, because twenty-five years ago when the farmers came to the Mackenzie government to ask for relief and assistance, they were told to go home and work harder, that governments could do nothing because they were merely flies on the wheel. I want to point out to hon. gentlemen opposite some things they might have done to benefit the farmers of Canada, and which they have neglected to do. I want to remind them that the agricultural industry is the greatest in this country, and while this government is increasing the duty on woollen goods, and increasing the duty on other manufactured articles, with all of which I perfectly agree, they have forgotten the farmers of Canada. Why didn't the government help the market-gardeners? Where is the member for West York (Mr. Campbell) on that question? When we on this side strenuously advocated the cause of the market-gardener the other night, where was the member for West York (Mr. Campbell). Unfortunately, and I sympathize with him greatly, he was selected at that particular time to act as speaker. I am sure the member for West York regretted that. I am sure he regretted that he could not make one of those stirring speeches of his in favour of the market-gardeners. I am sure he was sorry he had not an opportunity to vote in favour of a higher tariff for the market-gardeners, particularly in view of the fact that on many other occasions he had neglected to avail of such an opportunity. I am told that the boundaries of the constituency of West York have been changed, and that the market-gardeners are no longer in force in that riding. Perhaps that may account for his failure to-night, to make a plea for the market-gardeners. Let me point out that the trade returns show, that last year we imported into this country a very large amount of agricultural products. Our manufacturers have a duty of from 25 to 35 per cent on their products, or an average of 28 per cent omitting the agricultural products, which I will enumerate, but the agriculturists are not so favoured. Last year we imported the following:

Articles imported.	Value.	Rate of duty collected. Per cent.
Butter	$ 145,221	15
Cheese	50,296	16
Lard and lard compounds	43,543	18
Bacon, ham, shoulders and sides	411,068	14
Pork, barrelled	497,592	21
Poultry and game	60,101	20
Other meats, fresh, dried and salted	102,553	20
Seeds	437,630	10
Tallow	6,432	16
Melons	16,331	25
Tomatoes, fresh	69,014	19½
Vegetables, fresh or dry, salted	210,983	25
Animals, living	1,507,619	20
Grain and grain products	1,375,255	15½
Cider	2,856	10
Eggs	122,590	14
Apples, green or dried	90,204	15
Blackberries, raspberries, strawberries, gooseberries cherries, plums, quinces, cranberries and fruits, n.o.s.	261,521	23
Hay	126,646	12
Hops	162,394	22
Trees and plants	56,379	23
Total	$5,756,228

The average rate of duty was 18 per cent. What I want to know is, if it is right and proper, and I say it is, that the manufacturers of this country should be protected to the extent of 28 per cent, why is it not equally right and proper that the farmer, who toils day and night, who earns his money as hardly as any other people in this country, should also have protection? I know that hon. gentlemen opposite will smile and sneer, and say, of what advantage is it to put a duty on wheat, cheese or butter? Do we not export enormous quantities of these products, and does not the Liverpool price fix the price in Canada? Then what is the use of putting a duty upon them? It would not raise the price a single cent. I say if it does not, put it on; it cannot do anybody any harm. But I fancy if would have the effect of giving the farmers of this country their home market for these $5,756,000 worth of agricultural products which are now imported, instead of their taking the chances of getting their products damaged and spoiled by sending them across the Atlantic. The home market is the best market. Almost everybody will admit that. Hon. gentlemen opposite, who used to sneer at the idea of a home market for the farmers, are now coming to the conclusion that it is their best market. I want to preserve this home market for the farmers, and it can be preserved for them, by giving them as high a duty on their products as is imposed on things they have to buy. That is fair, surely.

Let us discuss some of these items separately. I want to know why the farmers of this country cannot supply this market with butter, cheese, lard, pork and grain products. Then, I want to speak of another class of goods that are luxuries. However much we may disagree with hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to other things; however strong protectionists we may be, and however honestly we may hold our convictions, however consistent we may have been during the last twenty-five years with regard to protection, and however inconsistent these hon. gentlemen may be in that matter; we can, I believe, all agree on one thing; protectionists, free traders and revenue tariff men will agree that luxuries should be taxed a little higher than the necessaries of life; and a large proportion of these agricultural products that come to this country are luxuries, and as such they ought to pay more than 28 per cent. They ought to pay at least 35 per cent, which is a common rate of duty in our tariff. Just consider that we bring in seventy-nine carloads of these green tomatoes which our market-gardeners around our cities and town could grow. They are a class of men who are industrious, frugal, persevering and hard working. Our market-gardeners and fruit growers are two classes of men who perhaps earn their money as hardly as any other class in the country. Their productions are subject to droughts, frosts, floods and all manner of insect pests, and they have to be continually on the fight. Theirs is a business that calls forth the highest kind of intelligence, and they are a class of citizens who form the backbone of the great agricultural class. Their life is one that necessarily calls forth the highest qualities in a man. These men employ a great many men in their business. This government are paying out millions of dollars a year in bonuses. I think we have paid up to date over $4,000,000 in direct bounties to establish industries in this country. What are these paid for? Is it not to give employment in this country? I think that is the great object; and, if so, there is no class among farmers that employ more men than the market-gardeners and fruit growers. They employ ten times the number of men to the square mile that any other class does outside of manufacturers. These are a class of men who ought to be encouraged. They are engaged in an occupation which is particularly hazardous. They ought, therefore, to have at any rate as much protection as is accorded to other industries, namely, 28 per cent. But, as a matter of fact, they are only getting an average of 18 per cent. But the tomatoes I have referred to are luxuries and ought to be subject to a higher duty than the average. They ought to pay 35 per cent or even 45 per cent; but they have to pay only 19½ per cent. No wonder the market-gardeners are complaining every year that they are not properly treated by this government. The wonder is that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) has not been more powerful—has not raised his sturdy voice in council and before the Minister of Finance from time to time on their behalf. I am sure that if the hon. gentleman had raised his influential voice on this question in the manner he has done on other questions, he would have convinced the government that 19½ per cent protection is not sufficient for the market-gardener. Go over the various items which the market-gardeners grow, and you will find that the duties are below the average and that these gentlemen have a just grievance against the government.

I might take up another department of these agricultural products—the fruit industry. I find that we imported into this country 28,391 barrels of apples, 200 carloads, and exported some 20,000 carloads. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite will say: if you export in such large quantities, what good would it do you to put a higher duty on the small quantity you import? It would not raise the price a cent. Well, let us have the duty in any case. We will then get the market and that is what our farmers want. What they want is a market at their doors for the 28,000 barrels which they now have to send across the ocean, but which would be consumed at home if these 28,000 barrels of American apples did not come in. They would have that much less to send across in the magnificent cold storage system, of which hon. gentlemen opposite boast so much and to which I shall refer later. Of dried apples we imported no less than eight carloads, and I suppose we had a thousand carloads last year lying upon the ground which went to waste, for a small portion of which this home market might have been preserved. We imported no less than 1,214,239 pounds of cherries and others of those small fruits, which are absolutely luxuries. Turning to the months in which we imported those articles, I find that they were brought in a few days and weeks before our own could be put on the market. But they took the keen edge off the appetites of the consumers of these luxuries. The men who consume these are men well able to pay a little extra duty. I am sure that the hon. the Minister of Finance would not object if there should happen to be a little more money in the treasury. He has a great transcontinental railway scheme on hand, which he will find he will not be able to build for $14,000,000. He will find that his surplus of $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 will not be sufficient to build a road which is to cost $150,000,000. He seems to think it will, but in my experience, and I think it is the experience of most business men, when you want to buy a farm, you will not be able to pay for it out of the interest. You will either have to put down the cash or give a mortgage for the capital sum, and will have to pay the mortgage when it falls due. The hon. minister will find the same thing in the case of his transcontinental line ; and if by raising the duty on those early products, a little more money should go into the treasury, paid by people who can well afford to pay, I am sure he will have no objections. But I am confident a great deal less will come in if the duty is raised, and the keen appetite of the consumers will be preserved for the first products of our own fruit growers and market gardeners. They will be given the opportunity to take advantage of the early market. I may point out that the quality of the fruits produced in Canada is superior to that of any brought a long distance.

Besides these, we also imported no less than 43 carloads of cranberries. Is there any province in the Dominion where we cannot grow cranberries ? We can grow them in every province, yet we have had to import 43 carloads. And of peaches we imported no less than 150 carloads, also 82 carloads of plums, 294 carloads of driend prunes and 150 carloads of other dried fruits, making a total of 444 carloads of dried fruits. Of canned fruits we imported 40 carloads. I want to say a word with regard to these plums and peaches. Everybody who lives in Ontario, especially in the southern portion, knows that we can grow those products there in superabundance. Not only can we grow enough to supply this Dominion, but to supply another dominion as well if we only had proper encouragement, but there are some things we need. We need better varieties. Those can be secured to a large extent by experimenting, and that can be done by the government a great deal more economically than by several thousands of different fruit growers. We have an experimental farm in British Columbia, two in the Northwest, one in Ottawa and one in Nova Scotia, covering a great variety of climate, but not one is so situated that those in charge of it can do anything in the way of experimenting with regard to the varieties of fruits grown in such quantities in the southern part of Ontario. Not one can grow fall wheat or Indian corn. We want an experimental farm in the southern fruit belt which will enable us to test the various kinds of fruits produced and do something in the way of hybridizing and creating new varieties, which will enable us to discover varieties, that will carry better than those we have at present. But even with the varieties we have we could supply the Northwest with all its requirements, if proper encouragement were given in the way of higher duty. Very large quantities of the fruits imported are a little earlier than our own, but there are very large quantities also which invade our markets when our own fruit can supply them. It may then be asked how is it that we do not do so ? One of the chief reasons is that our plums and peaches, being of a perishable nature, cannot, be set up on the shelves and sold like hardware or groceries or dry goods as the California plums and peaches can. These California fruits can be placed on the shelves and sold almost like turnips, and a good many of them do not taste very much better. Nevertheless they are handsome and have great keeping qualities, and the dealers prefer to handle them, no matter if their quality is not as good as ours, because they will keep longer and occasion no waste. The dealers can put them on the shelves and keep them there from day to day until somebody comes along and buys them. They know exactly what profit they can get, just as in the case of dry goods and groceries, and have not to take into account any waste, whereas Ontario fruits require a good deal of skill in the handling and a good deal of energy and care. They must be put upon the market immediately, and the dealers must use energy and skill to have their customers take them off their hands quickly. That means trouble and annoyance, which the dealers in the Northwest do not like, and who can blame them ? That is the position in which our fruit growers are to-day. Then the dealers prefer to push these goods, on which they have no loss. They send their travellers all over the country. The wholesale fruit firms in Winnipeg are a very great power in that country, far different from the fruit dealers here. Here fruit is grown around every city, and a large portion of it is handled at retail upon our markets. But, in that great city of Winnipeg almost every pound has to be brought in, and the handling of that fruit is an enormous industry. So, the wholesale fruit merchants are a power. These fruit merchants being able to handle this California fruit with so little loss are a powerful force against us. We want the government to come to our rescue and be a powerful force on our side. Surely it is to the interest of the government that this great industry that can be carried on so well in Ontario and in British Columbia should be made magnificently successful. For British Columbia is now coming forward as a fruit growing country. It is well known that in large districts in British Columbia fruit can be grown as perfectly as here, and in some places they grow fruit that will ship better than ours will. It is to the interest of the fruit growers of British Columbia and of Ontario to secure this market in the Northwest. Here, we have the great market of the Northwest, with a splendid fruit section on the coast to supply the western half of it, and another fine fruit section in Ontario to supply the eastern half. All we want is the assistance of the government to get a firm hold on that market. A few years ago, we had no hold upon it, no systematic effort being made on behalf of Ontario fruit-growers or on behalf of British Columbia fruit-growers to assure Canadian fruit of a place in that market. In British Columbia the fruit-growers business has been, until very lately, in its infancy. You will read in the Winnipeg newspapers that the Ontario fruit-growers are a lot of fools and do not know how to pack fruit. That is the method the wholesale dealers use to induce the people of the Northwest and Manitoba to believe that Ontario fruits are not the fruits to handle. I do not blame them. It is a matter of business with them, because they can make more money out of California fruit. But a great many people who come from Ontario, especially those now living in Manitoba, want our fruit. If it were not for the retail dealers who come from Ontario and the consumers there who know the fine, luscious quality of our goods, we would not get a little piece of that market. because, as I say we have the wholesale dealers against us. But, as long as we have the retail dealers and consumers on our side, we can capture a considerable portion of that market. We want to get into such a position that the Winnipeg merchants will find that they have to handle the Ontario fruit, and when they handle it they will find a way to get it into the hands of the consumer. Here, I say, is a way in which the governmen can do something for the farmers of this country. They have not done it, but they ought to do it. If some hon. gentlemen opposite who speak in such laudatory terms of the government would spend the same energy in urging upon the leaders of the administration the importance of this method of doing something for the farmers, the fruit-growers and the market gardeners of Canada, they would be accomplishing more than by lauding the government to the skies in the speeches they make in this House.

These are some of the ways in which the government can help the producers of this country. And I take it that the producers are the class who ought to be helped if any help is given out by the government. Almost everybody is a producer of something to sell ; farmers, manufacturers, miners and lumbermen are all producers, and these give employment to almost the whole population of our country. If the government looks well after the producers, I take it the consumers will be able to take care of themselves. A country in which the producers are making money is one that can afford to pay well persons engaged in professions, or others not producers. The producers of Canada can be assisted in different ways. I have mentioned one, and there is another, and a very important one. It is all very well for us to grow the best products, to manufacture the best goods ; but this will be of little use unless we can get these products and these goods to the market. It is true our home market is our greatest market, that it probably takes nine-tenths of our whole product. Nevertheless we have a surplus. As a great agricultural country, no doubt it will be a great many years before we shall be able to consume in the Dominion all the products of our farms. For many years to come we must have a large surplus to sell. And so, the government can do a great deal to assist us by perfecting the means of transporting our goods to the markets of the world, in the cheapest and most perfect fashion. We know that, in one respect we are situated more favourably than any other country, while, in other respects our situation is not so favourable. We have the advantage of a great system of water transportation, including the magnificent river which carries our cargoes to the seaports. Even large ships can come far up into the interior of our country. But we know that our neighbours to the south, being energetic and determined that they will have, as they have had in times gone by, the major portion of the trade of carrying these goods, are continually improving their transportation facilities. It is the duty of our government to leave no stone unturned by which they can improve our transportation facilities and cheapen the carriage of our goods. I know they have undertaken a gigantic scheme to bring a portion of these western products to the sea-board. For my part I think that a large portion of that scheme will not tend to cheapen the cost of transportation. In no degree can it be shown that this extravagant scheme, calling for the expenditure of an enormous sum of money, and requiring the hauling of the goods for 1,800 or 1,900 miles through a country which is unproductive, can possibly be the cheapest means of carrying those goods out of the country. I think if even a small portion of this money were spent upon our great waterways and in the development of that system of transportation, far better results could be obtained than by the expenditure of this enormous amount on the scheme proposed by the government. We find that, in shipping grain from the upper lakes to Montreal, we have an advantage over New York of not less than 1½ cents per bushel. But we find also that, when grain has to be transhipped at Montreal for Liverpool, we lose that 1½ cents per bushel. The St. Lawrence route, though shorter than that by New York, is not developed. There are many hindrances, many obstacles, all of which I believe, could be removed by an energetic government. When we are compelled to pay at the port of Montreal so high a rate on goods brought down through our magnificent system of canals, which by the way was inaugurated and nearly completed under a Conservative administration —the advantage which the country gains from its enterprise and great expenditure is neutralized. I find that last year we exported from the port of Montreal $70,000,000 worth of goods. For instance we exported 24,272,390 bushels of wheat, and on that we were compelled to pay 1½ cents a bushel more than would have been paid for the carriage of wheat from Boston or New York. That amounts to $364,085. I find that we exported from that port 21,182,840 pounds of butter and on that we paid 5 shillings a ton more than we would pay from Boston or New York. That amounted to $12,709.

We exported from Montreal 184,494,040 tons of cheese. We paid on that 3s. and 9d. a ton more than we would pay from Boston or New York. That amounted to $83,022.

Of apples we shipped 800,987 barrels and paid 10 cents a barrel extra on them. This cost us $80,098. That makes a total of $539,914.

At the same ratio, if we took the balance of exports from Montreal and found the increase—I have no doubt that the freight rates were in the same proportion—we will find that the total excess freights amounted to $829,920. As the price we received for these export goods, to a large extent, sets the price of the goods sold in this country, there is no doubt that we lost a good deal more than this. It may be safely said that we lost $1,000,000 because the route from Montreal out past the banks of Newfoundland is not in the condition it ought to be in. First of all, the ships have to go slow a large part of the way, and cannot make good time. Then occasionally wrecks take place, and we have in consequence high insurance rates. The port of Montreal has large harbour dues, and all these things combined with others that might be mentioned go to make up the reason why our steamers have to charge a higher rate of freight from that port notwithstanding that many of them are bonused. We pay out annually something between $100,000 and $150,000 to these steamers simply to come to Montreal. Ostensibly this is paid for the carrying of mail matter, but we only sent about thirty-nine tons of mail matter to the old country in the last year, and if you quadrupled the rates on ordinary freight the freight on this mail matter would be only $1,500; yet we paid $150,000 to one line of steamers to go to Montreal and St. John, so that we ought to have the very best service there. Some people say the insurance people have no right to charge the high rates that they do; that they are discriminating unjustly against our routes. Whether that is so or not I cannot say, but on looking at the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the past year I find that a considerable number of shipwrecks occurred on the St. Lawrence, and a large portion of those shipwrecks occurred through faults that might have been prevented if the Minister of Marine had in the last three years devoted his energies to thoroughly improving this St. Lawrence route, and if a proper pilotage system had prevailed, most of these shipwrecks could have been averted. Let me read the result of the examination by the commissioner, Mr. O. G. V. Spain, into some of these shipwrecks, and what he says in regard to the reasons why they occurred. I come first to the wreck of the steamer 'Carrigan Head':

This British steamship grounded opposite No. 3 lightship, Lake St. Peter, River St. Lawrence, on April 24, 1903. A formal investigation was held into the casualty at the harbour commissioners' office, Montreal, and the finding of the court was as follows:—

That the captain was not to blame for the disaster. That the officer of the watch was not to blame for the disaster. That the quartermaster carried out the orders of the pilot. That pilot Angers was not to blame. That the casualty was due to the buoys being out of place.

Why were the buoys out of place? Why is there not a proper patrol over this river to see that the buoys are always in place? Surely it is the duty of the Minister of Marine and of the government to see that the buoys are in place. Had this been done the wreck would not have occurred, insurance rates would not be so high, and we would not have to pay such high freight rates on our produce.

Then there is the wreck of the steamship 'Iberian':

This British steamship grounded on the south side of the channel, near Isle aux Raisins, River St. Lawrence, on June 6, 1903, and at a formal investigation into the causes which led to the casualty, held at the harbour commissioners' office, Montreal, the court found:—

That nothing in the ship or her equipment contributed toward the accident.

That the conditions of the weather prevailing at the time of the casualty were favourable, but navigation was rendered difficult, though not unsafe, by smoke from bush fires, which limited the distance the buoys were visible to about half a mile.

That proper precautions were taken with regard to speed, the ship steaming about four (4) knots per hour——

No wonder we have to pay high rates when ships can only go four knots an hour. That is a fast Atlantic service. Surely that broad river, one of the most magnificent in the world, ought to be so improved, the channel of it ought to be so wide, so deep, so safe, that a steamer could go, not at 4 knots an hour, but at full speed night and day. The report proceeds :

—and a good look-out was kept, the captain, first and third officers being on the bridge as well as the pilot.

That no blame is attached to the master or officers for the casualty.

The buoys were apparently in their proper position.

That the casualty was due to Pilot O. Naud in attempting to pick up the buoy which marked the south side of the channel—starboarding his helm to avoid a bateau, which he supposed was on the north side of the channel, whereas it was on the south side, and obscuring from view the buoy he was looking for. Owing to this error of judgment the ship ran out of the channel and grounded before it was possible for the pilot to see his mistake.

The court is of the opinion, that the pilot, having proceeded about half the distance between the buoys without seeing the spar buoy he was looking for, should have anchored.

The next one is the steamship 'Protector' :

This Norwegian steamship stranded at the mouth of the Saguenay river, on June 4, 1903, subsequently becoming a total loss. At a formal investigation into the case, held at the harbour commissioners' office, Quebec, the court found :—

That the ship was properly equipped and in a good and sea-worthy condition when she left Chicoutimi.

That she was supplied with proper and sufficient charts and sailing directions.

That the reef on which she stranded was properly marked on the Admiralty charts.

That the entrance to the Saguenay river is properly and sufficiently buoyed for the purposes of navigation.

That some blame attaches to the master for the stranding of the ship, in that he took no steps to ascertain whether the pilot was steering a proper course, in waters that any practical seaman could have navigated without the assistance of a pilot ; the channel being perfectly straight, and at no part less than six (6) cables wide.

That the master committed a grave error of judgment in taking no steps towards saving his vessel after stranding by jettisoning cargo from Nos. 1 and 2 holds and the deck cargo forward whereby the strain on the vessel would have been minimized, and the salvors enabled to place and work their pumps on arrival. The court is of the opinion that had these steps been taken the vessel would have been floated, and saved.

That the casualty was caused by the wrongful act of Pilot Nazaire Delisle in steering an improper course, the evidence going to show that he had never piloted a vessel out of the Saguenay river before, and that his knowledge of the river was so limited as to be dangerous.

Now, what I maintain is that no pilot should be retained on that river or allowed to navigate a vessel on the St. Lawrence unless he has a certificate that he is a practical experienced pilot of some standing. The merchandise of Canada is of too great importance and the credit of the St. Lawrence route, which is shaken and damaged by just such things as this, is of too great value and importance to be longer imperilled by the employment of pilots who are not the best that can possibly be obtained.

The next wreck reported is that of the steamship 'Stord,' of which the report says :

This British steamship stranded at Ste. Anne des Monts, Gulf of St. Lawrence, on June 10, 1903. The causes which led to this casualty were the subject of a formal investigation, held at the harbour commissioners' office, Quebec, and the finding of the court was :—

That the ship was properly equipped, and in a good and sea-worthy condition, when she left St. John's, Newfoundland.

That she was not properly and sufficiently equipped with charts, in that there was only a general chart of the Gulf and River St. Lawrence (No. 1271) on board ; but that the sailing directions on board were sufficient.

That the coast, in the vicinity of the place where the vessel stranded, is properly and sufficiently buoyed and marked for the purposes of navigation.

That blame attaches to the master for the stranding of the ship, in that he was attempting to navigate his vessel in close proximity to the land with a general chart ; and in that he omitted to study his sailing directions sufficiently to inform himself of the set of the currents in those waters.

That the vessel was not proceeding at a safe rate of speed considering the distance from the land and conditions of the weather.

That the master used every possible means to save his vessel after stranding.

The court considers that the master committed an error of judgment in attempting to navigate his vessel with a small scale chart, and that he deserves censure for his insufficient study of the sailing directions, and for proceeding at an unsafe speed, but refrains from dealing with his certificate in view of the fact that he was almost constantly on deck from St. John's, Newfoundland, to the place of stranding, during trying circumstances when it is necessary to display the greatest caution and judgment ; also owing to his past clean record.

In the evidence taken on the fog-signals along the coast between Cape Magdalen and Matane, suggestions were made for improvements, which the court will take steps to bring before the notice of the authorities at an ealry date.

The fog signals were not perfect. There is an opportunity for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to improve that route by establishing some more fog signals. These gentlemen are experienced, and it is their opinion that the route was not properly marked. Then, there is the case of the barque 'Sardhana.' The report of the commissioner appointed to investigate the wreck of this vessel states :

> That the aids to navigation—in so far as the fog-signal at Point des Monts is concerned —were inefficient ; the evidence of various witnesses going to show that it was impossible to hear the fog-signal, even after the vessel stranded, within a mile and a-half of the lighthouse.

These are the results of the examinations of a few of the wrecks that occurred, and they go to show plainly that the fault lies with the government and with the minister who is in charge of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It shows that he has not devoted his energies during all these long years to the improvement of this great route, this route by which almost all the products originating west from the port of Montreal find their outlet to the sea. The evidence of these gentlemen appointed by the government themselves goes to prove that most of these accidents could have been prevented if proper signals and buoys had been provided. These are some of the things that I desire to call to the attention of the House, and I say that it is the duty of the government to bend their energies in this direction so as to make the St. Lawrence route so safe that it will be as easy and as cheap to carry goods by that route as by any other route from the Atlantic coast. There are other things that go to make that route cheap and safe. A large portion of the goods that we send from the port of Montreal are perishable goods. Three of our large exports are butter, cheese and apples. All of these are perishable products and require the best of care. It does not matter how much education our butter-makers may have, it does not matter how much money may be spent upon educating our factory men to make the best butter that it is possible to make, it does not matter how much energy our farmers may bring to the work of producing good butter if you cannot carry it across the ocean in perfect condition. From $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 of our butter goes across the ocean and finds a market there. Most of it is sent in cold storage, and if we were to judge from the laudatory remarks which the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House made, we would come to the conclusion that the cold storage system as it at present exists is the most perfect in the world. We would imagine that every ship that sails from the port of Montreal is equipped with cold storage chambers that will carry every pound of butter across the Atlantic and land it in perfect condition in England where it will bring the highest prices. The cold storage system was inaugurated by the Hon. Mr. Montague when he was Minister of Agriculture, not at all, as the hon. member for West York tried to make this House believe, by the present hon. Minister of Agriculture. That system then inaugurated has no doubt become a great deal better than it was eight or ten years ago. It would be a curious thing if after eight years of experience the Minister of Agriculture, with the able men he has in his employ, with the funds of the government at his disposal with which to equip these steamers as they are equipped except partially by the steamship companies, though the steamers sailing out of Boston and New York provide their own equipment, should not be able to carry out a better system of cold storage than that which previously prevailed. It would be strange if there was no improvement. There has been improvement. It would be strange indeed, after the long experience we have had with this very simple matter of cold storage, a thing that has been in operation in Australia and other portions of the world, which has been utilized for the carriage of perishable products to Great Britain for twenty years, a system which is in operation in all our cities and towns where you can place goods in cold storage and maintain them for months, if the government, with ample funds at their disposal, were not able to have a perfect system of cold storage. I am sure you will agree with me that it is not very much to their credit that they have failed to perfect that system. Last year the hon. minister promised a thermograph record would be placed in every one of the chambers in ocean vessels for carrying perishable products. I find, however, that there are only 199 thermograph records taken, 155 in cold storage chambers, 32 in cooled chambers, and 12 in ordinary storage. Then I find the hon. minister in his report saying that a number of these boats carried butter in cold storage chambers at a temperature, not that which the hon. minister prescribes, but a temperature very far away from that which any experienced man knows they ought to maintain. The hon. minister maintained last year in his report 20 degrees as the proper temperature for the carriage of butter. The butter shippers ask for a temperature of ten degrees. You would think that the boats would carry the butter below 32, the freezing point, but I find in the hon. minister's report that no less than nine boats carried it at an average temperature, not on a single day, but at an average temperature of over 32 degrees, and some of them averaged as high as 40 degrees, 43 degrees, 36 degrees, 35 degrees, 39 degrees, 38 degrees, and so on.

I find on turning up the thermograph records that a very large number carried butter to London at temperatures ranging from below 32 degrees to 45 and 50 degrees. I find that the 'Iona,' sailing September 5, carried apples at a temperature of from 66 to 45 degrees. How could you expect apples, or pears, or any perishable fruits to be landed on the British market after a journey of fourteen days at a temperature of 45 degrees to 66 degrees, confined in a close cold storage chamber? Then, I find that on the 'Hibernian,' sailing August 22, there was a temperature of from 68 to 42 degree; on the 'Hurona,' sailing July 12, a temperature of from 50 to 40 degrees; on the 'Devona,' June 28, a temperature of from 37 to 38 degrees, on the 'Iona,' June 13, a temperature of from 42 and 32 degrees, on the 'Kildona,' a temperature of from 42 and 29 degrees, during their respective voyages across the ocean. All these vessels carried butter at the temperatures which I have mentioned except the first two, which carried apples. Then, taking the Liverpool service, I find that the 'Ionian' had a temperature of from 41 to 38 degrees, that the 'Kensington' had a temperature of from 45 degrees to 30 degrees, and that a number of other steamers had temperatures very much higher than they ought to have been for butter. This goes to show that the cold storage system that the hon. member for West York lauded so highly is not the perfect success that the House might have been led to believe if they had accepted that hon. gentleman's remarks as representing accurately the facts of the case. I am not going to say there was not a very large number of boats which carried butter at a proper temperature. Certainly the large majority of them carried it at a proper temperature and there is a very great improvement in this respect, but the point I wish to make is: That after these long years of experience it is astonishing that there should have been a single cargo go out from the port of Montreal shipped in cold storage not carried at a proper temperature. Every one of these cargoes can be carried at a proper temperature. It is only a matter of looking after them properly. It is not that it can not be done, it is simply a matter that requires somebody to attend to it. There should be some body to keep urging it upon the steamship owners, who, I have no doubt would be quite willing if it were continually brought to their attention to see to it that a temperature was maintained to carry butter in a proper condition.

The result is that our exports of butter dropped from between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 worth to between $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 worth. That is largely due to the fact that a great portion of our butter landed in England in a poor condition. Of course the blame was laid on the butter makers. My experience is that if anything goes wrong the blame is put on the producer. He is a long distance off; he is not in parliament to defend himself; he is not in the public eye, and so he is an easy mark for blame. Now, I doubt that the butter producer is responsible for this. I believe that the butter makers of Canada, with their experience and intelligence, are able to put up butter in as good shape as the people of any country in the world. I have no reason whatever to doubt that these cold storage chambers on the steamers with a temperature of 35 or 40 degrees instead of 20 degrees, are the sole and only cause why Canadian butter arrived in a mouldy condition on the English market, and why our exports of butter have decreased by millions of dollars. We were promised at the outset that this government would do a great deal for fruit-growers, and they started in a feeble manner to imitate the policy of Dr. Montague when Minister of Agriculture. Dr. Montague held that it was the duty of the government to see that Canadian fruit and butter were properly looked after in transit, and he could not understand why, if Australian fruit and butter could be carried through the tropics half way around the world in good condition, Canadian fruit and butter should not reach the English market in like manner. Dr. Montague experimented with butter. He bought a certain quantity of butter at 20 cents per pound, sold it in the English market, and proved that Canadian butter could compete with any butter in the world. Our butter export trade which was then practically nothing has since amounted to $5,000,000 and over some seasons. These experiments of Dr. Montague cost the country about $1,000, and I can well remember how the Liberals of that day loudly condemned the Conservative Minister of Agriculture for making this useless expenditure. But when they came to power, as they did in many other cases, they adopted the Conservative policy and swallowed themselves. They started experimental fruit shipments to the old country. They have been at it for eight years, and still without success. Let me point out that the Bartlett pear, one of our best pears, is a fruit that we ought to be able to ship in cold storage. I have kept them in cold storage in this country for several months, and I have taken them out in such sound and hard condition, that I have been obliged to put them in a warm room for a few days to ripen them sufficiently for use in the canning factory. Now, after eight years experimenting, the Minister of Agriculture is yet unable to have these Bartlett pears sent to England in good condition. We are voting here thousands and thousands of dollars to the minister and surely he should have sufficient control over his cold storage, to so regulate it that this fruit might be carried for an ocean voyage of ten days and landed in sound condition on the English market. Yet, last year I believe there were only two carloads of these pears sent across, and both were an entire loss. In addition to apples, practically the only thing which the fruit-growers can ship in cold storage chambers at the present time, are some of our late fall pears that will keep in good condition in any old sort of place. Mr. Fisher and other gentlemen in the neighbourhood of Burlington have been shipping these pears for a number of years without cold storage, and have been making money out of the business. We can keep our pears in good condition in our own cold storage chambers and yet the Minister of Agriculture, to whom the member for West York gives so much credit and who has costly apparatus at his disposal, cannot arrange that they may be kept for the ocean voyage of ten days. But, Sir, only a comparatively small portion of our perishable goods require to go in cold storage. We export $20,000,000 worth of cheese, and that does not require cold storage. All that it needs is that the air should be constantly changed and kept as cool as the outside air of the ocean. The same thing applies to shipments of apples. On this side of the House I urged on the Minister of Agriculture years ago, that all that is required for cheese and apples was to have the steamer holds properly ventilated, I showed him the enormous loss that we were sustaining by the neglect of this precaution, but he did not heed us. It was at last ascertained, when we came to make a milder kind of cheese that it would not carry under the old conditions, and at last the commissioner appeared before the Agricultural Committee one day, and stated that our cheese had been so damaged during the previous year by being carried in ill ventilated steamship holds, that it had received a black eye in the old country, and he prophesied that for the following year our cheese exports would be reduced by $3,000,000. I thought that in all probability he was right, and I watched the matter closely, and true enough next year our exports of cheese instead of increasing by one and a half million dollars as had been usual, decreased by one million dollars, so that we lost about two and a half million dollars on our cheese exports for that year. I on this side of the House had cautioned the Minister of Agriculture year after year that this would happen; I told him the farmers of Ontario were losing at least a million dollars a year on their apple shipments on account of this fact, but the Minister of Agriculture did nothing. He only woke up when he heard from his commissioner. The minister sent a circular to the steamship owners asking them to provide that the holds should be ventilated.

The hon. minister thought to take a little credit to himself, and what did he do ? He came to this House and asked for a vote of $40,000—not to ventilate the steamers. That was a simple matter. He did not require any vote for that. All that was required was for him to point out to the steamship companies the necessity of the case, and to tell them that if they did not ventilate their holds, and let the agents of the government see that they were properly ventilated, he would report and publish the fact. That would not have cost the country a cent. But that did not suit the hon. gentleman. These hon. gentlemen opposite have come to regard money of so little account, that unless they can come to this House and ask for a vote of $100,000 or some other large amount, they do not think they can do anything for the people. So the hon. minister asked for $40,000, and that vote has been repeated several times, to assist the steamship companies to fit up their steamers with cool air chambers and a refrigerating plant and thus reduce the temperature below that of the ocean air. I had grave doubts at the time whether this would work out as the hon. minister seemed to think it would. I rather imagined that the steamship people, having to pay at any rate a portion of the cost of fitting up the steamers, and having to set apart a considerable amount of space for the refrigerating plant would have to charge a considerable extra rate for the use of them. The minister assured us that the rate would be the same. So the money was voted and the chambers were fitted up in a number of these steamers ; and what do we find ? We find that the temperatures in these cool air chambers are just about the same as in chambers which are properly ventilated. I find, for instance, that on the 'Cervona,' the temperature of the cold air chamber was 62 to 54, and on the 'Pretorian' with ordinary ventilated storage, 65 to 56 ; almost the same temperature. On the 'Kildona' with cool air temperature 56 to 58 ; on the 'Ionian' without cool air, the temperature was 45 to 62. I might read a dozen or so of reports of temperatures of steamers fitted up with cool air chambers : but I could only read twelve with regard to the ordinary storage, because these were all the hon. gentleman had recorded and it would be found that there is very little difference in this temperature in the cool air chamber and that in a properly ventilated chamber. It was pointed out to the minister last year that the only way to secure the object in view was to have his agents at Montreal, put a thermograph into every storage apartment, and have his agents on the other side examine them and report. This would not cost the country a single cent, as the hon. gentleman has his agents now. In order to see that the holds are properly ventilated, he should have a compartment on deck or somewhere when the exact temperature of the ocean air would be recorded; and if the record of that corresponded exactly with the record in the holds where the cargoes were, he would know that the fans were going; otherwise he would not know. It is all very well for him to have his agents go and see that the steamers are provided with the necessary apparatus; but it is another thing to know that the apparatus is working all the way across the ocean. If it is not, it will not produce any result. In response to a question which I put to the minister last year, he promised that in every one of the holds carrying perishable cargo there would be a thermograph, but I find that they were only put into twelve; but fortunately even these twelve show the advantage of them. I have examined the record of vessels going from Montreal on the same date and arriving on the other side at the same time. If the fans had been going and the holds had been ventilated, they would have shown exactly the same temperatures. I find that the 'Livonia' had temperatures ranging from 45 to 60, and for five days the temperature was 50 or lower. I venture to say that in that case the fans were going and the ventilating apparatus was in operation. At the temperature which prevailed during those five days, you could carry summer apples, pears, or any other perishable cargo that goes from this country to the other side, except perhaps butter, and I do not know but you could carry that in a temperature of from 45 to 50, if you were sure of having it all the time. What do I find with regard to the 'Tritonia' that went at the same time? She never showed less temperature than 60, and that only when loading, when the 'Livonia' was about from 57 to 60. The 'Tritonia' showed a rise to 68 at about the same time as the 'Livonia' showed from 45 to 50, and the temperature rose gradually until it reached 73, when the vessel was across to the other side; whereas the 'Livonia' never got above 55, a difference of from 15 to 18 degrees during the whole voyage. This is exactly the result which I wanted the minister to prove. There is the proof that it is absolutely necessary to take some steps to see that these steamers are ventilated. All you have to do is to put a thermograph, which costs $10, into each apartment which carries perishable goods and to put another on the deck. These thermographs will last a number of years, and by their use we could secure absolutely safe carriage for all our apples and cheese across the ocean. But that did not suit the hon. minister. He must put cool air apartments on the steamers at a cost of $100,000, and what has been the result? That of 2,000,000 barrels of apples exported last year only 8,000 barrels were carried in cool air chambers, and that of 229,000,000 pounds of cheese exported only about 3,000,000 pounds were carried in cool air chambers, that is, one cheese in seventy-five. Why was this? Because the shippers found that where the ordinary storage is well ventilated, they can carry cheese and apples across in as perfect condition as in the cool air chambers that cost the country $100,000 and in which shippers have to pay 36 cents a barrel extra on apples and ten shillings a ton extra on cheese. The shippers therefore will not ship in them, because they can get as good service without paying these extra charges. Since a large number of steamships have found it to be in their own interest to provide proper ventilation, these cool air chambers are neglected and the $100,000 is thrown away. This service, for which the people have to pay an enormously increased cost, is not required if the minister would do what he is asked to do by members on this side of the House. If the hon. member who preceded me had devoted a little more of his energies in this direction, he would have been of more value to his constituents. I want to make a statement here to show the difference in value to the shipper between ventilated boats and boats not ventilated. On the 'Lake Champlain' a shipment of 325 barrels of apples last season gave the following results:—

139 brls. landed tight
17 brls. landed slack — Average price, 12s. 8d.
25 barrels slightly wet, average price, 9s.; loss of 88 cents per barrel.
87 barrels wet, average price, 7s. 6d.; loss of $1.32 per barrel.
28 barrels wasty, average price, 3s. 6d.; loss $2.20 per barrel.
32 barrels slack and wet, average price, 3s. 6d.; loss of $2.20 per barrel.

These apples were evidently carried in a chamber not ventilated, and you had the result, a loss of from 88 cents to $2.20 per barrel upon all those not landed in tight or even slack condition. Compare the shipment by that boat with a shipment by another boat, the 'Ionian' of 2,190 barrels, last season:—

1,803	barrels landed tight... ..	82·4 per cent.
204	barrels landed slack... ..	9·3 "
147	barrels slightly wet	6·7 "

Take a thousand barrels of apples at the prices at which those were sold on the 'Lake Champlain' and make comparison with a thousand barrels sold at the same prices but landed in codition in which those were that went by the 'Ionian'—

By the 'Lake Champlain'—
47	per cent tight or slack, at 12s. 8d.	$1,428.00
8	per cent slightly wet, at 9s..	172.80
26	per cent wet, at 7s. 6d..	280.80
19	per cent wasty, slack and wet, at 3s 6d.	159.60
		$2,041.20

Those apples, if sold at the same prices, and if they arrived in the same condition as those shipped on the 'Ionian,' would bring the following results :—

91·7 per cent tight and slack, at same prices as per 'Ionian'	$2,787.68
6·7 per cent slightly wet	144.72
1·6 per cent wet	28.80
Total per 'Ionian'	$2,961.20
" 'Lake Champlain'	2,041.20
	$ 920.00

That shows $920 realized more on a thousand barrels landed in the condition in which those sent on the 'Ionian' were landed than would be realized on a similar quantity shipped by the 'Lake Champlain.' What does that mean ? That would mean on our exports of apples last year alone to the old country, some 2,000,000 barrels, a million dollars ; and 2,000,000 barrels is only a small portion of the products of this country. According to the Bureau of Statistics and Industry, the apple crop of Ontario alone was 50,000,000 bushels. If the price at Liverpool sets the price in this country—as no doubt it does to a very large extent on No. 1 at any rate and to some extent on No. 2—this million dollars would only represent a small portion of the loss. This is a matter of paramount importance. I do not say that a million dollars loss occurred on the apples we shipped, but I say that if they were carried in the conditions in which they were carried on the 'Lake Champlain'—and that was the condition almost in every boat before these ships were ventilated—that would have been our loss. That only shows what can be achieved by a proper system of ventilation upon these boats. I think I have talked long enough. I think that the government could do a great deal, if they liked, for the people of this country, and I have pointed out two things they ought to do. The cargoes to which I am just referring were carried last season, 1903.

In referring to the enormous prosperity of the country during the past year, the hon. gentleman who preceded me found of course, as do all the speakers on the opposite side, a great deal of comfort in the great expansion of our exports and imports, and they take credit to themselves to a very great extent for this expansion. In this connection, the hon. gentleman might have mentioned the article of binder twine, for instance. Last year I find that we imported 14,204,000 pounds of binder twine. Before these hon. gentlemen came into power, we imported 3,364,000 pounds. What does that mean ? It means simply that under the late administration we manufactured all our own binder twine except the small amount of 3,000,000 pounds, whereas now we are importing the larger portions. But of course that 14,000,000 pounds imported swells the trade and navigation returns. It keeps up the figures of trade and commerce, but none the less it threw out of employment a large number of Canadians. Hon. gentlemen opposite however do not take this into consideration. They do not seem to think it is of any moment that a large number of Canadians have not found employment. They say the country is prosperous and the people busily employed. But, Sir, if that be the case, to what is it due ? It is due simply to the fact that the policy which was inaugurated by the Conservative party has, to a very large extent, been left alone. Why have our large industries prospered if it be not because the protection they enjoyed in the past has been continued ? But where are our binder twine factories and our barbed wire factories ? These are industries that the hon. gentlemen opposite did meddle with and these have disappeared. All the industries which are flourishing to-day are flourishing, not because of what these hon. gentlemen did, but because of what they did not do. And what about the industries that they did meddle with ? I have mentioned two, but I might mention others ? I might mention the woollen industry, in respect of which they partially carried out their promise of free trade, revenue tariff and so on, which they had been promulgating for eighteen years, and what was the result ? Last year we imported $13,516,915 worth of woollen goods, whereas in 1897 we only imported $7,125,148 worth. There was an increase in our imports of over $6,000,000, which of course made the trade and navigation returns look bigger. But these hon. gentlemen found out that after all to swell the trade and navigation returns was not the best policy. They found out that the platform laid down by the Conservative party twenty-five years ago of adequate protection to our native industries is the only policy under which these industries will thrive. They found that, whenever they interfered with that policy, whenever they attempted to carry out the promises and fulfil the pledges they had been making for eighteen years, while they increased the trade and navigation returns, they injured and demolished our industries. And so it has come to pass that, whereas eight years ago practically no hon. gentlemen of the other side would dare on the public platform to avow themselves protectionists, we find them now, one by one and two by two, coming forward frankly as believers in the protectionist doctrine. This session we find the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) openly avowing himself an out-and-out protectionist. Last year he made a speech which abundantly showed that he was a protectionist, but he took care not to avow it. The year before that he made a speech which was not quite so strongly protectionist as the one of last year. And so, year by year, they are showing themselves more and more convinced that the policy of the Conservative party is the policy for this country. Even the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), who has been a life-long free trader, who, on platform after platform, has denounced protection and declared that a revenue tariff was the proper tariff for this country, now proposes, not a reduction in the woollen duties, but an increase in those duties, the object being, not to get more revenue, but to give more protection. And he was quite right. But he has been a long time in learning what was right. If the hon. minister had taken the advice of members on this side, he would not have reduced those duties so low as to make this late increase necessary. Had he taken that advice we should not have imported $13,000,000 of woollen goods; the figures in our trade and navigation return would not have been so large, but we should have had woollen mills in full operation that are closed to-day, and hundreds of operatives at work in Canada that to-day are out of employment. We should have had an industry thriving that is seriously injured to-day, and will take a long time to revive even with the protection he now at this late hour affords it. But it is a consolation to us to know that the platform that we on this side have advocated for twenty-seven years, ever since 1878 and before, is at last recognized by hon. members opposite as the policy for this country. It is true that, not believing in that policy, they do not carry it out scientifically. How could you expect them to? How can you expect men to carry out efficiently a policy that they adopt, not from conviction, but as a matter of political expediency? The men to carry out a policy are the men who believe in it thoroughly. And, until the people of this country come to the conclusion that they had better put the Conservative party in power, they will never have a protective policy carried out in its entirety. Hon. gentlemen opposite have taken many steps in our direction; I prophesy that it will not be many years before they come a step further. Their adoption of our policy, as I said before, is a matter of congratulation to the country and of satisfaction to us. But however efficacious it may be in keeping these hon. gentlemen in power, however large the number of the votes it may secure for them, it is a matter of congratulation for us that at last they have come to believe in the policy that we have so long believed in and so strongly advocated. But, as I have said, they must come a step further. I trust that the Finance Minister will take that step even before the close of this session. I have pointed out how our farmers are suffering, and I need not say that the farmers have a right to be treated in as fair, as generous and as liberal a manner as any other class. The hon. Minister of Finance has an opportunity—for this session is not yet closed—to right the wrong under which they labour. I am sure that the hon. gentleman, knowing that he is not infallible, will be glad of the opportunity to change his mind; and I trust that before this session is over he will concede to the farmers, the fruit-growers and gardeners of this country the protection which, in view of the importance of their industry, they well deserve.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

CANADIAN FISHING REGULATIONS.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In answer to the statements made by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) yesterday as regards the fisheries regulations, I beg to submit the following memorandum:—

MEMORANDUM.

For submission to parliament in reply to the inquiry of the honourable member for South Leeds, as to the fishery regulations in Ontario affecting American anglers visiting Canadian waters.

The position of the matter is that since the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Imperial Privy Council in the fisheries reference, the Ontario government has assumed the right of disposal of the fisheries as a proprietary interest, by the issue of fishing permits and licenses, collecting the fees thereon, which had previously been done by the Dominion government.

The exclusive right to make fishery laws and regulations, however, belongs to the federal government, and the Ontario government has been pressing for regulations which it regards as in the best interests of the fisheries asset which has become its property. Its wishes have to some extent been complied with when deemed expedient.

In the case in point Mr. S. T. Bastedo, Ontario deputy commissioner of fisheries, visited Ottawa, and fully discussed certain proposed regulations with the Dominion commissioner of fisheries, which resulted in an appended Order in Council, 30th May, 1904.

It will be observed that either Mr. Bastedo carried away with him a wrong impression of the exact significance of the intended regulations, or his letter is incorrectly quoted in the newspaper clipping read by the honourable gentleman; as the inference may be drawn that only eight bass may be taken and that none may be carried home.

Whereas, section 9 of the Order in Council fixes the number of fish to be taken at eight black bass, four maskinonge, twelve pickerel (doré) and four lake trout for each and every day; while section 10 permits every day an aggregate catch of 10 pounds of speckled or brook trout ; but to be limited to thirty such trout, if too small to weigh 10 pounds in the aggregate.

As to the question of the visitor taking his fish home, section 12, while providing against the sale and export of speckled trout, black bass and maskinonge, for five years, specially permits any person from a foreign country, fishing in the waters of the province, and applying and paying for an angler's permit, upon leaving, to take with him the lawful catch of two days' fishing.

This would be sixteen black bass, eight maskinonge, twenty-four pickerel (doré), eight lake trout, and either 20 pounds of speckled or brook trout, or sixty such trout, if too small to aggregate 20 pounds.

This would seem an ample and generous prize for any true sportsman to carry home with him.

So far as the department is advised, in the section of the river referred to by the honourable gentlemen, including the Thousand Islands, where arrangements were made between Canadian and American authorities before the Ontario government assumed the issue of permits, the latter government is allowing United States fishermen free angling, whereas in all other parts of the province, they are required to take out a license or permit for the season.

PRIVY COUNCIL, CANADA.

At the Government House at Ottawa, the 30th day of May, 1904.

Present :

The Governor General in Council.

The Governor General in Council is pleased, in virtue of the provisions of section 16 of the Fisheries Act, chapter 95 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, to order that the General Fishery Regulations for the province of Ontario, established by the Order in Council of the 18th day of July, 1889, shall be and the same are hereby amended by adding thereto the following sections :—

9. No one shall fish for, catch or kill, in any of the waters of the province, in one day by angling, or shall carry away a greater number than eight small or large-mouthed black bass, four maskinonge, twelve pickerel (doré) or four lake trout.

10. No one shall fish for, catch or kill in any of the waters of the province, in one day by angling, or shall carry away a greater number of speckled trout or brook trout than in the aggregate shall weigh more than ten pounds, and no greater number than thirty speckled trout or brook trout, though said number weigh less than ten pounds.

11. No small or large-mouthed black bass less than ten inches in length ; no speckled trout less than six inches in length ; no pickerel (doré), less than fifteen inches in length, or no maskinonge less than thirty inches in length shall be retained or kept out of the water, sold, offered or exposed for sale or had in possession ; but any one who takes or catches any of the fish mentioned of less than the minimum measurement named, which measurement shall be from the point of the nose to the centre of the tail, shall immediately return such fish to the waters from which it was taken, alive and uninjured.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

12. The sale and export of speckled trout, black bass and maskinonge, is hereby prohibited for a period of five years from the date of this Order in Council, provided, however, that any person from a foreign country fishing in the waters of the province, and applying and paying for an angler's permit, may, upon leaving the province, when the same are accompanied by him, take with him the lawful catch of two days' fishing.

The Governor General in Council is further pleased to order that any previous Orders in Council which are in conflict with these regulations be rescinded in so far as the province of Ontario is affected.

(Sgd.) JOHN J. McGEE.
Clerk of the Privy Council.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY. I obtained an order of the House on April 25th for certain papers in connection with the Murray Harbour Railway and Hillsboro' branch. I call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that they have not been brought down. On the 30th of May an order of the House was issued for certain letters and petitions with reference to a letter from the Minister of Marine dated the 22nd of April. On the same date I obtained an order of the House for returns with regard to the chicken fattening station, and also a further order for papers with regard to the Murray Harbour Railway and the Hillsboro' bridge. I would like to have these returns brought down at as early a date as possible. As the session is drawing to a close, we wish to get this information so that we may make some use of it.

LORD DUNDONALD'S SPEECH.

Hon. SYDNEY A. FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). In view of the question that was asked of the government yesterday, in regard to the matter referred to by Lord Dundonald on Saturday last, at a banquet held in Montreal, I have to make the following personal explanation :—

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take this earliest opportunity permitted me to state the exact facts, in regard to the incidents referred to by the General Officer Commanding, Lord Dundonald, in his speech at the military banquet in Montreal, Saturday, the 4th instant.

In consequence of the reports which appeared in the press of Lord Dundonald's utterances, the Minister of Militia wrote the following note to the General Officer Commanding :

June 8, 1904.

Dear Lord Dundonald,—Will you be good enough to read the inclosed newspaper clipping from this morning's ' Citizen ' and let me know if it correctly reports your utterances and the attendant circumstances.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) F. W. BORDEN.

Rt. Hon.
The Earl of Dundonald,
Major General.

To which Lord Dundonald replied as follows :

Militia Headquarters, Canada,
June 8, 1904.

Dear Sir Frederick Borden,—I am obliged for the extract from this morning's 'Citizen.' Though I made some notes for my speech at Montreal, I did not refer in these notes to the 13th Light Dragoons or to Mr. Sydney Fisher, and have therefore nothing to refer to with regard to this portion of my speech beyond memory.

The 'Citizen' states that I said :—

'A most flagrant instance of political interference has recently come before me in connection with the appointment of officers in the new Eastern Township Cavalry regiment, the Scottish Light Dragoons. The commanding officer of the corps had selected officers because of their apparent fitness from a military point of view. The names reached me and were sent to council, and gentlemen, what do you think happened ? The list having my approval was returned with the name of one officer striken out, and initialled by the Minister of Agriculture.

'The gentleman whose name was stricken from the list was Dr. Pickel, the mayor of Sweetsburg, and warden of the county of Missisquoi, a man chosen of the people and well qualified to serve his King and country. His political colour was not, however, that of the Minister of Agriculture, and consequently he was not considered fit to serve his King in the military force of Canada.'

The above is substantially what I said, except that I also stated that Mr. Fisher interfered with the organization of the corps and with the names of other proposed officers as well as Dr. Pickel. With regard to the first portion of the extract you sent me I did not say that all appointments are made in the militia through political intrigue. The substance of what I said, if my memory serves me right, was that : 'In time of peace the hands of the general were liable to be embarrassed by political intrigue and consequently the interests of the country suffered.'

Yours very truly,
(Signed) DUNDONALD.

The Hon.
Sir Frederick Borden, K.C.M.G.,
Minister of Militia and Defence.

In regard to Lord Dundonald's general statement that I interfered with the organization of the corps and with the names of other proposed officers of the corps as well as Dr. Pickel's, let me say this : That the only grounds on which I made any suggestions in regard to the establishment of this corps were the immense importance of the appointment of leading officers with military qualifications, who knew the country and the people of the eastern townships, the district where the corps was to be established ; that I took no exception to anybody's appointment on political grounds alone as evidenced by my recommendation and endorsement of many well-known Conservatives ; that no one believes more thoroughly than I do that the first necessity in the recommendation of officers on the establishment of a new regiment is military qualification, and general personal suitability, and that no political considerations should be allowed to interfere with this. Should occasion arise for the discussion of details in regard to these general statements, I shall be prepared to furnish them and to prove what I am now stating.

In regard to what Lord Dundonald calls 'a most flagrant instance of political interference,' through my having stricken the name of Dr. Pickel from the list recommended by him to the Minister of Militia, I have this to say. Lord Dundonald says :

'The gentleman whose name was stricken from the list was Dr. Pickel, the mayor of Sweetsburg, and warden of the county of Missisquoi, a man chosen of the people and well qualified to serve his King and country. His political colour was not, however, that of the Minister of Agriculture, and consequently he was not considered fit to serve his King in the military force of Canada.'

In the list of proposed appointments signed by Lord Dundonald in which the item appears of Dr. F. A. Pickel to be major, there is an asterisk opposite his name and a foot-note stating :

'As a special case, and will be required to pass the qualifying examination.'

When I first saw his name upon the list, knowing him personally and knowing something of military matters in the neighbourhood, I was aware that he had never been connected with the militia and had never shown any interest in military matters or participated in any such movement. I therefore suggested that his appointment as commander of a squadron should not be made.

Further investigation confirmed me in this and also proved to the commanding officer who recommended his appointment that I was right. Dr. Pickel himself so appreciated this fact that he was reluctant to accept the position.

On May 19th, in the absence from Ottawa of the Minister of Militia, the commanding officer of the regiment, Col. Smart, came to my office asking that I should press through council the passage of the general order authorizing these appointments. The next morning I received the following from Col. Pinault, Deputy Minister of Militia :

Ottawa. May 19. 1904.

Dear Mr. Fisher,—Will you kindly sign the inclosed, for the minister, and if possible have it passed to-day.

Very faithfully yours,
L. F. PINAULT.

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa. Ont.

At the same time I received from Col. Smart the following letter :

13th Scottish Light Dragoons,
Montreal, May 19, 1904.

Dear Mr. Fisher,—Immediately on my return this evening I met Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley and discussed fully with him all matters in connection with our interview of to-day. Colonel Whitley was pleased to learn that everything was arranged satisfactorily, and at his request I telephoned to Sweetsburg with a view of getting from Dr. Pickel his final answer as to whether or not it was his intention to remain in the squadron, because, as I stated to you to-day, he had intimated to me his lukewarmness in the matter. I now have his final decision, which is that he gives up all connection with the squadron. In accordance therefore with Dr. Pickel's request, I can now, as commanding officer of the regiment, request you to kindly make the change in the 'Gazette' by leaving Dr. Pickel's name out.

I sincerely hope that this will meet with your approval, and in view of the short time between now and date of camp, you will kindly see that all recommendations pass Council tomorrow.

Thanking you for your kind consideration and assistance, believe me.

Yours very sincerely,
CHARLES A. SMART,
Lt.-Col. Commanding, 13th S. L. Dragoons.

In view of above, I certainly recommend that Lieutenant-Colonel Smart's suggestion be followed

FRED. WHITLEY,
Lt.-Col. Commanding,
Eastern Townships Cavalry Brigade.

Montreal, May 19, 1904.

I signed it and sent the recommendation with the following note to the Clerk of the Privy Council :

Ottawa, May 20, 1904.

Dear Mr. McGee,—I send you a recommendation from the Department of Militia and Defence which I have signed for Sir Frederick Borden. He and I have discussed this matter and agreed that this should be put through.

You will note that I have stricken out one of the appointments to be Major, F. H. Pickel. I have received a letter from the colonel who made these recommendations, saying that Mr. Pickel does not wish to have his name included.

If you would be kind enough to make an order on these recommendations so as to put it through to-day, you will much oblige, as the Militia Department is very anxious to have it put through.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

J. J. McGee, Esq.,
Clerk of the Privy Council,
Ottawa.

This is a simple statement of the facts of the case, which, without referring in any way to the propriety of the General Officer Commanding discussing in public official recommendations, without referring to the broad question of propriety of an official of the government of Canada criticising the official action of a member of that government—absolutely disapproves the charge that for political reasons I had undertaken to strike out a name which had been submitted to the Minister of Militia for appointment in the service.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Mr. Speaker, as my name has been referred to in connection with this matter, I crave the indulgence of yourself and the House to make a personal explanation. I confirm literally and entirely the statement just made by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). He had for several years advocated the organization of a mounted force in the Eastern Townships—his own home and that part of the Dominion, in the general good government of which he has a right to feel a special interest—and when the time came to take the question up, I naturally looked to him for advice and assistance. And let me say at once that recognizing myself to be the man upon whom—and upon whom alone—the entire responsibility rests to this parliament and to the Canadian people for the proper administration of the militia, I am always desirous of consulting everybody, whether colleague, member of parliament, officer or private citizen, who is willing to offer advice, or from whom I am likely to gain information. I was aware that Lt.-Col. Whitley, one of the ablest and most efficient cavalry officers in Canada, had been consulted with reference to the organization of the proposed new cavalry regiment mentioned in the Montreal speech of the General Officer Commanding, and also that Lt.-Col. C. A. Smart had been recommended by Lt.-Col. Whitley and the General and approved by me as commanding officer thereof. Toward the end of March last I wrote to Lt.-Col. Whitley, expressing a desire to see him. Having learned afterwards that he was in England, I requested the General to suspend the work of organization until Lt.-Col. Whitley's return, having previously explained the reasons to the military secretary, for the information of the General. About the end of April Lt.-Col. Whitley returned, and early in May brought Lt.-Col. Smart to Ottawa to have a conference with me. This conference was of a most pleasant and satisfactory character. Both officers expressed a strong desire to have the general order containing the appointments connected with the organization of the regiment, with its several squadrons, put through promptly, in order that the regiment might be able to go to camp this year. This I promised to do. Finding that I would be obliged to be absent from Ottawa from the 18th to the 26th of May, I instructed my deputy to take the general order containing the proposed list of appointments, so soon as completed, to my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to be by him submitted to Council, in view of the urgency of the case. I telegraphed to Lt.-Col. Whitley to meet me at Montreal on my way from Ottawa to Nova Scotia, which he did. He then repeated his previous request as to the necessity for putting the appointments through immediately. I told him of the instructions I had given my deputy, and asked him to go to Ottawa to assist in the final adjustment of the list. He promised to do so or send Lt.-Col. Smart.

My colleague has already stated what followed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (North Victoria) Have the government any further particulars from Lord Dundonald concerning this case ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At three o'clock precisely—I looked at the clock at the moment—I received a letter from Lord Dundonald as follows :

Ottawa, June 10, 1904.

The Hon. Sir Frederick Borden, K.C.M.G., Minister of Militia.

Dear Sir Frederick Borden,—I inclose a copy of a memorandum which I have sent by bearer to Col. Hughes.

Yours very truly,
DUNDONALD.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he will be good enough to read that memorandum ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not had the opportunity of reading it myself yet.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the hon. minister read it ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The document belongs to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes). It is addressed to him. It is only a copy which is addressed to my hon. friend the minister.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The document I received is a memorandum.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All right, let us have it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume the hon. minister has received the same memorandum. I received mine shortly after three o'clock.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have had no communication from the General Officer Commanding, except the one which was read here to-day by my hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture, until three o'clock to-day, when I received the letter which I have just read, informing me that Lord Dundonald was inclosing to me a copy of a memorandum which he had sent to my hon. friend.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Might I ask the hon. minister whether he has consulted with Lord Dundonald from time to time in relation to the interference of the Minister of Agriculture ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Surely my hon. friend does not expect an answer to a question of that kind.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would respectfully suggest that if there be any memorandum or statement from Lord Dundonald, submitted to the Minister of Militia, with regard to the position of that officer, it ought to be submitted to the House. The House ought to be informed by the hon. minister of the matters stated in that document. That I think would be only fair, and I am surprised that that has not been done. Whether the memorandum was communicated to my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) or any one else does not matter. It is a statement of the general's position, which ought, in all fairness to him, to be submitted to the House in connection with the statement made by the two ministers of the Crown. Otherwise, we shall have only a statement of facts made from the standpoint of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture and the hon the Minister of Militia. The government is not acting justly in permitting this incident to be submitted to the country without placing also before the people the statement of the general. I can hardly suppose that that is the intention of the government, but of course that is a matter for them to decide for themselves.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to observe to my hon. friend and the House that my hon. colleague, the Minister of Militia, has stated what took place between him and General Lord Dundonald. The Minister of Militia wrote the general to inquire whether or not the speech attributed to him was correctly reported. General Lord Dundonald answered and his answer has been read. To-day after three o'clock —after it had been stated that this matter would be referred to in the House to-day—my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, received a letter from General Lord Dundonald informing him that he had sent to Col. Hughes a document of which he sent him a copy. The original of that document is in the hands of Col. Hughes and not of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia. The General Officer Commanding did not apply to my hon. colleague to have any defence put before the House, if he had any. I do not know what is the tenor of this document which he sent to Col. Hughes, but I presume it is a defence, and he sent it, not to his chief, the Minister of Militia, but to Col. Hughes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would respectfully suggest that whether Lord Dundonald sent it to Col. Hughes or not—whatever value may be attached to that incident—if it purports to be a statement of the facts from Lord Dundonald's standpoint, it is not fair to a man, who is not a member of this House, to withhold that statement of facts from the House and to send this matter to the country on the statement alone of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Militia.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What I have to observe is this. If General Lord Dundonald had any document to send to anybody, he should have sent it to his minister. He has not chosen to do so, but has chosen to send it to Col. Hughes, and it is for Col. Hughes to do what he pleases with it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may say, after the incident of yesterday, when the right hon. the First Minister brought the matter before the House and gave notice that it would be considered to-day, I reviewed a great many of the letters I had received from time to time, since February last, from officers, and also from others not connected with the force in the eastern townships, from Sherbrooke away on the extreme east and all over the district, where this 13th Regiment is being organized—complaining of the interference of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in the organization of and appointments of that corps. I did not consult Lord Dundonald directly or indirectly until yesterday, when the First Minister gave notice to the House that the matter was coming up. I then sent a letter to Lord Dundonald with a memorandum asking him for confirmation of my data in connection with this matter, and after three o'clock to-day I received the memorandum which has been referred to. Let me say here that if the hon. Minister of Militia is in possession of the details contained in this memorandum—and I presume he is—and if the Minister of Agriculture is in possession of these details, as he must be, then I maintain it was their plain duty, without any request from this side, to have stated all sides of the case to this House, inasmuch as Lord Dundonald has not a seat on the floor of this House and has not a voice in this chamber.

We know, from experience, that there are no better artists in the wide world in making a plausible case to present to the country and to cover up their own doings than the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues. But, before entering into the case, I may be permitted, briefly, to refer to the relationship existing between the General Officer Commanding and the government of the country. First let me quote from Anson. 'On the Law and Custom of the Constitution' with regard to the commander in chief, whose position in Great Britain corresponds to that of the General Officer Commanding in Canada. Anson says :

> The Commander-in-Chief is henceforth to exercise a general control over the military forces of the Queen at home and abroad, and a general supervision of the military departments of the war office. He is charged with the general distribution of the army, with the preparation of plans for its mobilization, and for offensive and defensive operations, with the collection of military information, with appointments, promotions, honours, and rewards. He is the principal adviser of the Secretary of State on all military questions.

And here let me say that the Secretary of State corresponds to the Minister of Militia :

> When the office was created, in 1793, it was hoped that by vesting in the Commander-in-Chief the exercise of the prerogative as to promotions and appointments in the army such matters would be dealt with by an officer, free from the prepossessions of party and politics, who would regard no other interest save that of the army.

So we see that the position of Commander-in-Chief was created in order to get away from the very disabilities that had affected the former procedure, and to keep party politics and other outside influences from dictating the appointment of officers. Page 392 of the same volume gives the position of the Secretary of State, as follows :

> Especially is the Secretary of State bound to maintain the discretionary prerogative of the Crown in the appointment and dismissal of officers, their promotion or reward, or the acceptance of their resignation. This prerogative is exercised through the Commander-in-Chief, on the responsibility of the Secretary of State; and it is the more important that power of this sort should be in the hands of a non-political officer such as the Commander-in-Chief, because our army, unlike the armies of other European countries, is not divorced from the political rights of citizenship. The soldier, if duly qualified, may exercise the franchise; the officer may sit in the House of Commons. Plainly then, the King or a minister of the Crown might use, or be pressed to use, the powers of appointment, promotion, or dismissal for political or party ends. The history of the last century attests the reality of this danger. The office of Commander-in-Chief as constituted in 1793, was intended to meet it.

From this you will see clearly that the object of creating the Commander-in-Chief in England at the close of the eighteenth century was to avoid exactly such unfortunate incidents as that which has caused this discussion to-day. Now, we find the position of Commander-in-Chief or General Officer Commanding as he is called in Canada provided for under our own regulations and orders—page 1, section 3 of the regulations and orders of 1898 :

> The General Officer Commanding is charged by statute, under the orders of Her Majesty, with the military command and discipline of the militia.
> 2. He is the principal adviser of the Minister of Militia and Defence on all military questions; is charged with the general supervision of the military branch of the department; issues general orders; and holds periodical inspections of the militia.
>
> 3. He is charged with the distribution, quartering and localization of the militia; with the preparation and maintenance of detailed plans for mobilization; with the preparation of schemes for offensive and defensive operations; and with the collection and compilation of military information.
>
> 4. He recommends to the Minister of Militia and Defense fit and proper persons for appointment to commissions in the militia; and proposes fit and proper officers for promotion, for staff and other military appointments, and for military honours and rewards.
>
> 5. He is charged with the military education and training of the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the active militia, including the supervision of the Royal Military College of Canada, and the several Royal Schools of military instruction throughout the Dominion.

Here we see the duties of the General Officer Commanding clearly laid down. But the public have been appraised from time to time that, however well disposed the Minister of Militia may be—and he has always claimed, and, I believe, has always endeavoured so far as in him lay, to keep the militia of this country free from the influences of party politics—that, from time to time other powers and other influences, have been at work against which the combined efforts of the General Officer Commanding and of the Minister of Militia were futile. And we find, from time to time, as reports from all over the country show, the strong, stern hand of the politician and ward heeler influencing the Minister of Militia and the General Officer Commanding in appointments to office. From the very first day the Minister of Militia took his present place, until the present time, the members of the opposition and the Conservative party generally have done what they could to uphold him in keeping the militia free from political influences. I challenge any hon. gentleman to place his finger on a single instance where the Conservative party in this House or out of it, in the press or on the platform have introduced party politics into questions relating to the militia. It remained for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) who has never had anything to do with the militia, to force it to an issue so that no self respecting General Officer Commanding could longer put up with the meddling and interference ; it has been left, I say, for the Minister of Agriculture to force the issue and bring about the crisis which has now arisen. I am sure that the Minister of Militia will be the first man to bear me out when I say that, even in relation to matters in which I have a special interest, and when I have had splendid opportunities to make political capital for my own friends in connection with the militia, I have never once, in this House or out of it, raised my voice in an attempt to blame the government captiously or to make party capital out of these questions. We, on this side of the House, have let opportunities go by because we preferred to keep the militia of the country perfectly free from party politics. But, from time to time cases arise. It was only yesterday the Toronto 'News,' the organ of a friend of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister—so great an admirer of the Prime Minister that, it is said, he keeps his picture at the head of his bed——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, he has not the picture of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), but only one of the First Minister. The Toronto 'News' goes on to show that the St. Catharines Field Battery is disorganized. And it gives the facts—I do not vouch for them, but they are there as a matter of newspaper statement—to show that this disorganization is due to the intermeddling of party politicians. In the same locality we find a difficulty arising in the case of a corps of cavalry.

It is very strange that it is along the border that these gentry are found who most insist on meddling in party politics. We have a corps of cavalry in that region of which, I believe, the officer commanding is Col. Gregory. The regiment has been newly organized and enlarged I believe, and it was the desire of all the officers in that regiment and the general desire on the part of the whole community that Col. Gregory should be continued in command for another year or two under a regulation of the Minister of Militia. The General Officer Commanding, whose duty, I have clearly shown it, is to act in such cases, informed Col. Gregory of an extension of his command. The minister will be able to correct me in this, as the authority comes from that end, and I have not asked either the General Officer or the officer in this case. This information was conveyed to the officers of the regiment, and an officer of the political faith——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend has appealed to me. Col. Gregory's tenure was extended one year ; if the General Officer Commanding made any other communication to Col. Gregory than that, he had no right to do it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister knows as well as I do that the regulations allow an extension of three years.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Quite so, and it was extended one year ; that is the usual extension.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The regulations permit of an extension of three years, and the General Officer, acting on his prerogative, under the direction of the Minister of Militia, extended that to three years, two years in addition to the one previously given. An officer second in command, not yet qualified to command, communicated with the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), and he, in language more befitting Canal street, Buffalo, than an hon. member in this House, stated that Lord Dundonald would be taught that he had no power to give the extension. I shall give the story, and then we shall see whether the facts bear it out or not. He made the statement that there would be no extension of command, and the notice which Lord Dundonald had given was cancelled.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Let me tell my hon. friend that there is not one word of truth in the statement that the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) ever spoke to me or wrote to me with reference to Col. Gregory, or, so far as I know, with reference to any other officer connected with that regiment. Neither is there any truth in the statement that the General Officer Commanding asked me or recommended me to extend Col. Gregory's term three years.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I notice that the gentlemen opposite are fulfilling their function in this House of merely being an echo, to pound the desks for ministers when the signal is given them. I have not said that the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) wrote or spoke to the minister, but I have stated that the hon. member for Welland stated that in his county.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Those are my words. I have said that he stated that in his county, and whether he interfered or some one else interfered, it rests with the minister to tell.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I interfered, if you want to know.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How did the minister become apprised of it ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon gentleman (Mr. Hughes) that that is not at all the question before the House. For that matter, I might say that there is really no question before the House now.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I purpose concluding with a motion. The minister must have become aware of some intuition, since he tells us the General Officer Commanding did not notify him, and yet he did stop this extension of Col. Gregory's time.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman, who seems to know more about the General Officer Commanding than I do, has informed the House that the General Officer Commanding recommended the extension. I did not. I do not know it, if he did.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister said just now that he stopped the extension. Those are his own words, and I am taking him at his own word. I am not saying that the General Officer did anything. I do not know what the general did only from what Col. Gregory and his friends say.

Not long since the General Officer Commanding took a trip to the Pacific coast, leaving, I presume, the Adjutant General in command. We have an ordinance corps in Canada, a very necessary corps, which is now under the military wing of the department, and when Lord Dundonald got safely away on the coast, we find two majors promoted to senior rank, who could not be promoted, so the current story goes, while Lord Dundonald was here. I refer to Major Belanger and Major Bliss, who were raised to the rank of lieutenant-colonel——

Mr. SPEAKER. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. gentleman——

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am coming right straight to the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. An hon. gentleman who moves the adjournment can bring up any matter he sees fit.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is true in a general way, but an hon. member who moves the adjournment must confine himself to the question for the discussion of which he moves the adjournment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The adjournment has not been moved.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman will not move the adjournment, there is no question before the chair, and we must proceed with the orders on the paper.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I wish to abide by your decision. But is it necessary that I should move the adjournment; may I not move another motion ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. SPEAKER. The only motion which it is now in order for the hon. gentleman to move is the adjournment. I had understood that the hon. gentleman would move the adjournment, but the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has contradicted that statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did I contradict ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman contradicted the statement that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) had intended to move the adjournment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not do anything of the kind. It is an entire misunderstanding. The point I took is that the adjournment was not moved by the hon. Minister of Agriculture or the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden), and the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) can therefore initiate any thing he sees fit on the motion to adjourn the House. That point I think is a very plain one, by which I am prepared to stand, subject to your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The position, as I understand it, is this : Yesterday some hon. gentleman asked for an explanation from the government of what I may be permitted to call the Lord Dundonald incident. To-day two members of the government, sitting on the treasury benches, offered the explanation demanded. As I understand it, that is the end of the question. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) rose to make some remarks, which I submit he could not have made without moving the adjournment of the House. Now, since he is about to move the adjournment of the House, he has a right to discuss this question, and I think he is to be allowed general latitude, but I think he must try, as every member must, to limit himself to the subject under discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would conceive it to be the right of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to rise in his place after these explanations had been made on behalf of the government, the adjournment of the House not having been moved, and discuss the transportation question, or any question he may see fit. He is not limited.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think that is a proper interpretation of the rules. I differ entirely from the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He is speaking now in regard to the matter which was brought up on the motion for the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I was discussing political meddling.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am prepared to rule that that is not a proper interpretation of the rules governing the motion to adjourn. I think the rule is that the gentleman who moved the adjournment of the House must confine himself to the subject under discussion, and that he could not, on a motion of this kind for the purpose of discussing this subject, refer to the question of transportation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I submit, with all respect, that there was no subject under discussion when the hon. gentleman rose, and therefore he is at perfect liberty.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I admit at once that if the matter stood as the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) puts it, and the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) had stated that he desired to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing transportation, he had a right to do so; but, if he continued to discuss the matter before the House, I do not think he could mix up transportation with it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The question before the House is political meddling, by gentlemen connected with the Liberal party, with the Minister of Militia and the appointing of officers in the militia. If I understand the question aright, I think I am confining myself very closely to the issue. However, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling and I shall not take up any more of the fifty odd cases that I could refer to that have been brought to my notice within the last few days, but I will come down to the hon. Minister of Agriculture—come down to him. I have here a very long letter which I shall not read at length. It has been sent to me from the eastern townships and it concerns the meddling of the hon. Minister of Agriculture in that arrangement for the erection of the drill shed at Sherbrooke. It goes on to say:

I heard nothing further about the matter until about February, when a letter was read before the city council from Mr. Fisher to Dr. Pelletier, stating that if the city would allow the valuation of the present site the government would at once proceed to construct a new shed, and the south ward site was stated to be the site decided upon. I then wrote Col. Biggar again, requesting him to come down and look over the situation once more, telling him at the same time that the proposed site on the Paton property could be bought for one-half the price which it was stated the government intended to pay for the south ward site, and got a reply from him, simply acknowledging my letter and saying he had reported on all the sites in Sherbrooke and that he would be glad to come down if sent by the department.

We then got up a petition to the minister, copy of which I inclose, and this was very largely signed, quite as largely by Liberals as by Conservatives. Indeed, it was entirely non-political, and this petition was presented by the deputation referred to by the minister in answer to your fourth question. You will notice that three of this deputation, Dr. Austen, Mr. Armitage and Major Odell, are on the government side of politics.

In stating that there were two deputations, and that the first deputation consisted of Col. E. B. Worthington, with the mayor and Dr. Pelletier, this answer is misleading, and is really not correct.

Then follows a lot about the sites but it concludes as follows:

When we waited upon the minister——

That is the Minister of Militia.

When we waited upon the minister——

I would like the right hon. First Minister to hear this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is very far from the question.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. (reading).

When we waited upon the minister—from whom we received every courtesy—Mr. Fisher was present, and made himself, to say the least, very disagreeable, accusing the English of running down the French, &c., in Sherbrooke, and he evidently very greatly resented our going to Ottawa in connection with the matter, especially, I gathered, his own friends (politically) and thus interfering with his pet schemes.

There can be no doubt that Mr. Fisher's determination to build the drill shed in the south ward is to give the English-speaking people in the north ward, where the majority are, of course, Conservatives, and the 53rd regiment, a slap in the face. So far as Dr. Pelletier and his friends are concerned, the proposed site in the south ward is absolutely political. In fact, he admitted to Mr. Armitage, one of the deputation, the day before we went to Ottawa, that it was entirely a matter of politics, and that by giving the French people in the south ward a drill shed he would secure his next election, and this statement Mr. Armitage repeated to the Minister of Militia when the deputation waited upon him in Ottawa in presence of Mr. Fisher himself.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that is germane to the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wishes me to express my opinion I am bound to say that I do not think so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who signed the letter ; name, name.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are these hon. gentlemen very anxious to know ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The letter speaks for itself. It is written by the lieutenant colonel, I presume, in command in that district.

An hon. MEMBER. What is his name?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. All that hon. gentlemen need to do to find out is to turn up the militia list. He is a gentleman who has done his country service in South Africa. He is a gentleman who has reflected credit on the militia of this country. Be he Conservative or Liberal he reflects credit on the country which has given him birth and it will be well for the hon. Minister of Agriculture if he could say as much for himself. Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up any of the other cases of political interference which I have in my possession but will proceed forthwith to take up the incidents connected with the affair in Montreal. It is evident to the general public of this country that the hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) occupies a very unenviable position before this House and country. I believe the hon. Minister of Militia would like to do what he honestly thinks is right for the militia of Canada irrespective of party politics, but we find hon. members from the west on the one hand meddling with appointments, we find the hon. Minister of Agriculture in the east on the other hand meddling with appointments in the militia and we even find the right hon. First Minister as well as the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce meddling in these appointments and looking after their own relatives.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. How have I meddled in any militia appointment, when and where ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Let me ask my right hon. friend a question. Has my right hon. friend ever interferred in the Militia Department in relation to any appointment?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) has made the statement that he has.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The right hon. Prime Minister is able to answer irrespective of the hon. Minister of Finance.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware of ever having interfered on behalf of anybody in reference to the militia. Perhaps my hon. friend has some fact to bring to my attention, and if so I might then be able to say yes or no. At this moment there is only one instance which I remember and I shall not mention it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I shall not mention it either.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I thank my right hon. friend for acknowledging that I was right. I had my desk half full of letters from all over the country in regard to this matter long before Lord Dundonald ever made his Montreal speech, and I want to tell the House and the country that many of us wondered why he had borne the brunt and odium of all these doings. I can readily see how, at last, goaded on to desperation by the interference of a man of the calibre of the Minister of Agriculture, he might not have observed the ordinary rules of military etiquette and how he might have been goaded on to make the statement he did make in Montreal. I wrote him in order to fortify myself in relation to this data and I received the following communication a few minutes ago which I shall read to the House. When I have presented it to the House I shall ask the House to compare the statements made herein with the statements made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Ottawa, June 10th, 1904.

Dear Col. Hughes,—In reply to your letter the following memorandum gives the facts connected with the Montreal incident.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) DUNDONALD.

Then follows the memorandum.

In accordance with general orders approved by council, I gave orders in the customary manner in the month of February last to organize the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons as a cavalry regiment, with headquarters in the eastern townships of Quebec. Lt.-Col. C. A. Smart was gazetted as commanding officer on the 19th February and other officers were also appointed to the same regiment. Shortly after the promulgation of the order authorizing the organization of the regiment, I received an order from Sir Frederick Borden through Col. Pinault, the deputy Minister of Militia, desiring him to stop the organization. No explanation or reason for this step was vouchsafed, but indirectly I learned that the Minister of Agriculture was responsible for the delay which thus occurred.

I greatly desire to have the organization proceeded with, as the time for holding annual camps was approaching. I accordingly twice communicated with Mr. Fisher by telephone on two dates some distance apart, and made appointments with him in order that the reason for the obstruction might be obtained.

The general was even polite enough to allow the meddling of the Minister of Agriculture at that time and was polite enough to telephone him twice to make appointments so that he might meet him and have those differences whatever they might be removed, in order that the interests of the militia force of Canada might be looked after properly.

Mr. Fisher did not keep either of the appointments. On the second of the occasions above referred to, when speaking to Mr. Fisher on the telephone, I explained the urgency of completing the organization of the regiment without delay, otherwise it would be impossible for it to go into camp. I also inquired what Mr. Fisher had to do with the organization of the militia ; to this Mr. Fisher responded by inquiring whether I thought he had no right, as a cabinet minister, to interfere. My answer was that in my opinion Mr. Fisher had no right to interfere with Colonel Smart's selection of officers, as I understood he had been doing.

You will notice that the Minister of Agriculture arrogates to himself the right to boss the Militia Department as well as looking after the hens and the eggs and calves in the Agricultural Department.

It is perhaps unnecessary to say here that Colonel Smart's duty was to select officers for commissions and submit their names to the General Officer Commanding through the proper channel in order that he might make recommendations to the Minister of Militia. I became convinced of Mr. Sydney Fisher's continued interference with the duty of Colonel Smart in the selection of officers. Subsequently I sent in a list of officers for the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons to be approved of by the Minister of Militia and gazetted. Included in that list was the name of Dr. Pickel, mayor of Sweetsburg, to command a squadron, a local man of prominence, whose appointment would, I believe, have advanced the interests of the militia. Dr. Pickel was not qualified professionally as on officer——

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, 'hear' 'hear,' was that the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) that spoke ?

Mr. LOGAN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member for Cumberland could very properly explain —we would not expect the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) to know, but the member for Cumberland can very readily explain what provisional officers mean.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This letter continues :

—indeed only two out of sixteen of the proposed officers for the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons were militarily qualified. It was impossible, as will be understood, to procure duly qualified officers, as the cavalry regiments in the eastern townships had been increased since May, 1903, from four squadrons, numbering 300 men and 26 officers, to 20 squadrons, numbering 1,600 men and 180 officers on the peace establishment ; and with a war establishment of some 2,700 men. All the gentlemen, however, on the list submitted, undertook to qualify professionally after appointment in the usual manner. This course is customary, and has been forced upon us by the lack of qualified officers. It is a course which has always met with the approval of the Minister of Militia. This list of officers for the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons was submitted to the minister and included in the proposed general order which also included other regiments of the militia. The list of officers of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons was struck out of the general order by Sir Frederick Borden and I was informed of this circumstances by Colonel Pinault, the deputy minister, in a letter of which the following is a copy :—

Ottawa, May 19, 1904.

Dear Lord Dundonald,—Late last evening I placed before the minister the 'Gazette' dated 18th inst., for approval and submission to Council. With the exception of the part relating to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, which the minister desired held over for further consideration, it was approved, and as the minister intended to leave the city this morning for a week or so, rather than delay the submission of the remainder of the gazette he cancelled and initialled the appointments to the 13th instead of returning the draft to you for that purpose.

Very faithfully yours,

(Sgd.) L. F. PINAULT.

Major General the Earl of Dundonald, C.V.O., C.B., Commanding Canadian Militia.

A day or two after the first list was cancelled a further list was submitted to me by the adjutant general, which I was informed would be acceptable and the organization of the corps would be permitted to proceed.

This latter list of officers to be gazetted was sent to Council and when returned, the name of Dr. Pickel had been erased and the erasure was initialled by the Minister of Agriculture, who was acting for Sir Frederick Borden.

Thus far it will be seen that Dr. Pickel had been appointed the same as any other officer had been appointed to that corps, who was not professionally qualified, and the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture to the effect that Dr. Pickel was only a provisional appointment and that his was an exceptional case, falls to the ground. As every one connected with our militia knows in every newly organized regiment nearly all the officers must of necessity be appointed provisionally until they can go to the military schools and qualify. Therefore to say the least of it, either the Minister of Agriculture did not understand what he was talking about, or he sought in that statement which he read to mislead the House and the country in relation to the position of Dr. Pickel in this matter. I continue to read :

When in Montreal on the 3rd of June fuller details of the interference of the Minister of Agriculture were communicated to me in conversation, as well as by letter from Colonel Smart, which I received on the morning of June 4th, the day on which I spoke at the officers' banquet.

Colonel Smart's letter read as follows :—

You will notice that this letter is from Colonel Smart, the officer commanding the new regiment of Scottish Horse in the eastern townships.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the date of that letter ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Montreal, 4th June, 1904. I can read :

(Copy.)

13TH SCOTTISH LIGHT DRAGOONS.

Montreal, June 4th, 1904.

My Lord,—As requested by you last evening, I have the honour to submit the following facts, in connection with recommendations for appointments submitted by me, and to which the Hon. Mr. Fisher took exception.

Let me point out in passing that the period for the annual drill was fast approaching and any one who has had charge of the organization of a regiment knows that you have to exert yourself when you start in February or January to get a regiment into shape, to appoint your non-commissioned officers and recruit your men and get them in harness. That requires a lot of hard work and exertion even without being hampered as those officers were by the Minister of Agriculture, who deserves the severe censure of the House and condign punishment at the hands of the Prime Minister of this country, I read :

I submitted the name of Dr. F. H. Pickel, who is mayor of the town of Sweetsburg, and warden of the county of Missisquoi, to be major, in command of 'E' Squadron. Dr. Pickel is a gentleman of means, can ride fairly well, and was quite willing to take the necessary time to qualify himself for the position of major. Mr. Fisher objected to him for no other reason than that he was a strong political opponent of his, and was quite determined to block the whole organization, unless Dr. Pickel's name was withdrawn.

That is the statement of Colonel Smart, the officer commanding the regiment, who was being hampered and interfered with and meddled with by the Minister of Agriculture. Colonel Smart continues :

This, I refused to do, as I had invited Dr. Pickel to come into the regiment and told Mr. Fisher that some one else would have to be responsible for the withdrawal of Dr. Pickel's name. After my last visit to Ottawa I consulted with Colonel Whitney, and we came to the conclusion that unless we induced Dr. Pickel voluntarily to withdraw, the organization would be hung up indefinitely.

And the Minister of Agriculture in the face of his knowledge of the fact, has the hardihood to stand before the House and the country and tell the House and the country that Dr. Pickel volunteered to withdraw from the regiment and did not want the job. Colonel Smart continues :

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

I, therefore, communicated with Dr. Pickel and explained to him that owing to a new regulation, objections were taken to the appointment of unqualified officers, to field officer's rank, and asked him if he would be good enough to allow me to withdraw his name temporarily, to which he consented.

Loyal man ; rather than block the organization of the whole regiment ; rather than have the eastern township district deprived of the benefit of a militia force, he was loyal enough owing to the tyranny of the Minister of Agriculture to withdraw his name temporarily and let the organization proceed. Colonel Smart continues :

I then communicated with Mr. Fisher, saying that I would agree to the withdrawal of Dr. Pickel's name in the meantime, and on the strength of this I believe the appointment passed through Council. Your Lordship will observe that I have not withdrawn Dr. Pickel's name absolutely, and have kept the position of major in 'E' squadron vacant, in hope that I may yet have Dr. Pickel appointed.

I know this is a surprise to the First Minister. I do not believe for a second that the First Minister thought his Minister of Agriculture would stoop to such a position as is outlined here, and I am satisfied that before many days are over, he will call on the Minister of Agriculture to hand in his resignation and take his place on the back benches :

Hon. Mr. Fisher also took exception to the name of Mr. T. R. Pickel, who is also very enthusiastic, and would make a capital cavalry officer.

Evidently the Pickel family do not get on with the hon. minister——

I had submitted Mr. Pickel's name, recommending that he be appointed captain in 'E' squadron——

This is the second Pickel, and now the Minister of Agriculture is in the third pickle——

—but Mr. Fisher insisted that I substitute the name of Lieutenant R. Steacie, making him captain, and Mr. Pickel first lieutenant. I pointed out to Mr. Fisher, that Mr. Pickel being a resident of the townships was entitled to a senior rank in preference to Mr. Steacie, who lives in Montreal, and moreover as Mr. Steacie is a relative of mine, it would place me in a false position, and appear as though I was unduly advancing him, at the expense of others. However, Mr. Fisher evidently had his mind made up on the matter, and insisted on the change to which I reluctantly agreed. I regret to say that this has caused some dissatisfaction, and I would like at the first opportunity to transfer Mr. Steacie to another squadron, and recommend Mr. Pickel for his captaincy.

I understand that the 'Gazette' will show that this Captain Pickel was actually gazetted captain of the squadron, and through the meddling and tyranny of the Minister of Agriculture, he was forced to give up that position, and let this Montreal officer be appointed over his head. Now we come to the place which shows how solicitous the Minister of Agriculture was for the defence of the country and for getting the best fitted men for these positions :

With regard to the adjutancy; Captain Converse, whom I selected for this position has served in the militia for about fifteen (15) years, and for a long time served as sergeant major in the Duke of York's Hussars. Mr. Fisher asked me to drop this gentleman and substitute Mr. Adams of the 6th Hussars, a gentleman who is very deaf, and whom I consider physically unfit for the position. I absolutely declined to consider this at all——

The man had some self-respect. He was willing to be trodden on to some extent, but when it came to an appointment like this, he refused to consent. Colonel Smart goes on :

—and Mr. Fisher waived his objections. He then asked me to recommend Mr. Adams for major to command 'E' squadron and this I also flatly declined to do.

Out of five gentlemen whom Mr. Fisher recommended for commissions three have absolutely declined to come into the organization so that after all the trouble and worry inflicted on the regiment, Mr. Fisher has only been able to find two officers, both of whom are unqualified, and do not in any way compare with Dr. Pickel whom he rejected.

The above are the main facts in connection with this unfortunate matter, but if there is any further information desired, I will be pleased to submit it.

I am, Your Lordship's humble servant,

(Signed) CHAS. A. SMART,
Lieutenant-Colonel.

His Lordship, the Earl of Dundonald,
C.V.O., C.B.,
Major General,
Commanding Canadian Militia.
June 4, 1904.

Colonel Smart is the officer commanding the regiment, and I may say that Colonel Whitley, whose name is mentioned here, is the brigadier commanding the cavalry brigade in the eastern townships. Lord Dundonald continues :

I may here state that I have just communicated with Colonel Smart and it is by his permission and desire that I include this letter.

The following extract from the 'Montreal Gazette' of June 9, except for a few slight omissions and inaccuracies gives a very fair report of what I said at Montreal on the subject in question. The word 'education' should read 'etiquette,' and the word 'champion' should read 'warden.' The reference to lack of etiquette at Ottawa had no application except to official matters connected with my duty.

'When a nation is at war, and when national danger stares a nation in the face, it entrusts the promotion and the selection for the advancement to the general whom it entrusts to lead it. Political intrigues, intrigue for personal advancement other than that deserved by military efficiency, is dormant in time of national terror. (Hear, hear.) But when peace comes and all is quiet, and the vigilance of a nation for its national interests is at rest, political wiles and political schemes then begin to weave their nets, the nation no longer, at that time being watchful. But I do not care, gentlemen, who the man is, if he advances one man and penalizes another on account of the political colour of his party, I say that man, whosoever that a man may be, is not a friend of his country. (Applause.)

Recently, gentlemen, a gross instance of political interference has occurred. I sent a list of officers of the 13th Light Dragoons to the 'Gazette.' I was astonished to receive the list back with the name of one officer scratched out, and initialled by the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Sydney Fisher. That gentleman was a man I considered well equipped to serve the King in the 13th Scottish Regiment (applause) —Dr. Pickel, Mayor of Sweetsburg, chosen of the people, one of the champions (wardens) of Missisquoi. What better man could serve the King. I feel certain that had Mr. Fisher's life led him to soldiery instead of to agriculture, he would feel annoyed, perhaps on personal grounds, on the extraordinary lack of education (etiquette) involved in scratching the name of a gentleman put forward by a man whose business it is to find sufficient officers for the militia. (Applause.) But on personal grounds, gentlemen, I don't in the least mind. Lack of etiquette affects me little ; I have been two years in Ottawa, gentlemen, (Laughter.) It is not on personal grounds that I inform you of this, but it is on national grounds. (Hear, hear.) I feel, gentlemen, anxious, profoundly anxious that the militia of Canada may be kept free from party politics. (Hear, hear and loud applause.)

Now, I can readily understand the position of Lord Dundonald, a distinguished officer who has been sent here to look after the best interests of the militia of Canada, an officer whose family has been distinguished in history from generation to generation. One of his ancestors was the famous admiral who commanded the British frigate at Navarino ; another fell at the capture of Louisburg in the eighteenth century ; and the General Officer himself is distinguished in every part of the world where he has served. The Strathcona Horse and other Canadian corps followed him again and again to victory in South Africa, and I can readily understand the annoyance that an officer of his standing should feel, on coming out here, with the best interests of the empire at heart—with the best interests of Canada at heart, because the interests of Canada are the interests of the empire—at having to put up with this thing from week to week, and finally becoming so exasperated as he did at that banquet in Montreal as to strike from the shoulder, determined that come what might he would for all time to come put a stop to such petty meddling as has been indulged in by the Minister of Agriculture. Lord Dundonald, I suppose, cares not what happens to him so far as his future in Canada is concerned ; but whatever it may be, I feel sure that he will continue to have at heart the best interests of Canada and all parts of the British empire. What he has done has been to strengthen the hand of the Minister of Militia, in putting a strong iron heel down on the Minister of Agriculture and any others in this country who would seek to introduce party politics into the militia of Canada. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FISHER. Before that motion is put, Mr. Speaker, I think I should make some reference to the various statements which have appeared in the documents that the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has submitted to the House. I shall not discuss in any way the propriety of the General Officer Commanding taking the hon. gentleman as his medium of communication to the parliament of Canada, when he is an official of the government of Canada and subordinate, in the Department of Militia, to my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I interrupt a moment? I presume the hon. minister is not acquainted with the constitution of the country or he would not make a statement of that kind. A member of parliament is superior to any military man in Canada, and a member of parliament—even be he an admiral as Lord Napier was or General Officer Commanding or ordinary colonel or lieutenant colonel—is absolutely independent, as a member of parliament, of any minister of the Crown.

Mr. FISHER. I fully accept my hon. friend's statement, but I do not think that it in any sense conflicts with what I have just said. The hon. gentleman may be the means of communication to parliament on behalf of any one who has no official connection with the government, but when the matter is one affecting the relations between an officer and a member of this government, I decline to acknowledge that the hon. gentleman, or any other hon. member is the proper medium of communication between that official and the parliament of Canada. I wish to cast no reflection upon General Lord Dundonald further than to say that, in his position of General Officer Commanding, he is setting a bad example to the militia of Canada when he neglects the courtesies of official position and violates the canons of official discipline, as he has done in this matter.

Regarding the hon. gentleman himself, I confess that I never appreciated how low I was, until I heard him say that he had to descend to my level.

I was rather astonished at his statement with regard to the Sherbrooke drill shed; and when the proper time comes to discuss that question, I shall be quite ready to meet him or any other hon. gentleman on that side, and go into details of that matter, and have no doubt that I shall convince any fair, impartial mind that in what I did I acted in the interests of the militia of the district as well as of the people.

The hon. gentleman read a letter of which he declined to give the name of the author.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FISHER. He read a letter, which, I understand, came from Col. Fraser, a colonel in command of one of the regiments in the district of Sherbrooke. He stated that it came from an officer who had served his country in South Africa. Sir, Col. Fraser never was in South Africa and never served his country outside of Canada. It was a brother of his who went to South Africa, but not the gentleman who wrote that letter. The hon. gentleman also referred to my leader the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and for once in his life, after the reply of my right hon. leader, for the first time under my observation, the hon. gentleman actually showed some signs of shame. For once in his life he was speechless for the moment. It is not usual for the hon. gentleman to be speechless. We all know his record in militia matters in this country and outside, and we all can remember well how his tongue was wont to wag in criticism of his military colleagues in Canada and elsewhere, men far superior to him——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Let me say here——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order. I want the same fair treatment that I have accorded the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is this, that when an hon. member in this House rises to ask another a question, he should not be interrupted.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman has just shown his sad lack of knowledge of the rules and regulations of this House. He has just given us an exhibition either of his utter ignorance or his deliberate desire to override the decencies of debate in this House. With regard to the matters which have been brought forward in the communication which Lord Dundonald has seen fit to send to the hon. member, I wish to refer to some of them because they are personal to myself. In this communication, General Lord Dundonald first of all accuses me of having put obstructions in the way of the organization of this regiment in the eastern townships. I have just this to say in reply. I think I was the first to recommend and urge the establishment in the eastern townships of a cavalry regiment. The establishment of such a regiment I desired for two reasons. In the first place, because I believed it would be in the interests of the militia of Canada, and in the second place I believed it would lead a number of our young farmers in the townships, who own horses, to become military horsemen and in that way contribute to the military strength of the country. I found that apparently what I wished has been carried out. I noted with satisfaction the reports of recommendations for appointments pointing in that direction. It was some time after that I received letters from gentlemen in the eastern townships asking for appointments in this regiment. I sent these letters on to my colleague the Minister of Militia and requested consideration for them. I had nothing whatever to do with any further work in that connection, nor did I take any part or action in the matter until about the month of April last, when I received some communications from the townships indicating that Col. Smart, who had been appointed to the command of this regiment, had come out there and was proposing appointments, some of which indicated that he was not familiar with the country or the people, and which I believed would be inimical to the success of the regiment. I referred these matters to my colleague and pointed out to him that in the organization of such a regiment in the townships, it was extremely desirably that men familiar with the country and the people should be given permanent positions in that corps, providing always they had the requisite military qualifications. My hon. colleague has explained what action he took. I had no further discussion of the matter with anybody, although I received some letters which I referred to my colleague, the Minister of Militia, until I was asked by him to meet Colonels Whitley and Smart with him. I did so, and I then had placed before me by Col. Smart a list of the appointments which he proposed to recommend. These were numerous and most of the appointments were those of people I knew personally and in many cases of well known Conservatives of the district.

I took no exception to this. But I found a recommendation in regard to the neighbourhood of Sweetsburg, which, I confess, surprised me, and to which I did take exception. I must premise my explanation in regard to this matter by saying that Senator Baker, of Sweetsburg, is the acknowledged and active leader of the Conservatives of that district. I found this list of proposed names for the staff for the neighbourhood of Sweetsburg. First, Mr. John M. Gibson, a nephew of Senator Baker, and talked of as a possible Conservative candidate in the constituency of Missisquoi, to be third in command of that regiment. Dr. Pickel one of the strongest Conservative workers of the neighbourhood and a family connection of Senator Baker, to be major in command of the squadron which, though gazetted for Adamsville, was to be changed to Sweetsburg to suit his convenience. Mr. G. H. Baker, son of Senator Baker, to be senior captain of the said squadron. Mr. Thomas R. Pickel, son-in-law of Senator Baker to be the junior captain of the said squadron. Then there were the names of two gentlemen, Messrs. Steacie and Reynolds of Montreal to be lieutenants. And down at the bottom of the list Mr. Thomas F. Cotton a Liberal, son-in-law of the above-mentioned John M. Gibson, and grand nephew of Senator Baker. I told these gentlemen that, putting aside any question of military qualifications, which I afterwards went into, such a list of officers for that squadron in that neighbourhood would be held to be an instance of political preferment, and that it would be impossible to remove from the minds of the people of the district of Bedford the impression that the colonel who made such recommendations and was responsible for the success of this regiment had deliberately undertaken to turn that squadron, if not the whole regiment, into a political Tory organization. I pointed out, what was a notorious fact that, for years, in the old times, the military organizations of the district of Bedford, the 52nd Brome batallion, and the 60th Missisquoi batallion had been well known Tory organizations, that no Liberal was welcomed into their ranks, and, if, by any chance a Liberal got into their ranks he had to take a subordinate position and was always hopeless of promotion or preferment. And I said that, if such a recommendation as that were to go through and be known to the district of Bedford, nothing under heaven would remove the impression from the people of the county and of the country that the new regiment was to be conducted on the lines of the old regiments there, and that it would receive its baptism and would make its beginning as a Tory organization. I said that this was contrary to the interests of the regiment, and that such a list as that I could not approve. I venture to say—and I am within the judgment of everybody in this country—that it was not I who was guilty of introducing political preferment, but it was the gentlemen who were responsible for these recommendations. And I venture to say that, in the interests of the militia and with the object of removing all questions of political preferment from the regiment, I was right in making the protest that I did against that list. Sir, what were the military qualifications of these men? Mr. John M. Gibson is a graduate of the military school of Kingston. For many years he has taken no part in military affairs. But I pressed on Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart that the fact that he was a graduate of the military school was sufficient to stamp him as eligible to hold high command, and I believed that it would be right that he should be the highest officer in the regiment chosen from the district. Mr. John M. Gibson is a well known Tory. But I endorsed his appointment and said it was a right one, because he had the military qualifications. In regard to Provisional Lieutenant Baker, he had been in camp one year and I said that that was sufficient justification and entitled him to consideration, and I endorsed his appointment as captain of this particular squadron. But, in regard to Dr. Pickel and Mr. T. R. Pickel I said that I did not consider that their military qualifications entitled them to the positions to which they were being appointed. I did not object to their being appointed to some positions. I do not know much about military matters, but I do know enough to believe that before a man had put upon him the responsibility of being officer in command of a squadron in a cavalry regiment he ought to have some military experience and some military training. Therefore, I objected to Dr. Pickel being appointed as major of that squadron. Other names and proposals were in the list that I saw. Amongst them was the proposal that a certain Mr. W. H. Russell should be appointed as major of the Stanbridge squadron and, in the same squadron, appeared the name of Lieutenant Holland, V.C., of Montreal, not as major but as captain. Now, Mr. Russell is a well known Liberal of the county of Missisquoi. I pointed out to Colonels Whitley and Smart—and took the initiative in doing so—that it would be more fitting that Lieutenant Holland should have command as major of that squadron as he was a gentleman holding the Victoria Cross and one with South African experience. I suggested that change and that the experienced military officer should be given the command of the squadron, even though it meant that a well known Liberal should be put in a subordinate position. Another name that I found in that list was Lieutenant Guy Carr, of Compton, a gentleman living outside the district but in the eastern townships. I said that I knew Captain Carr to be an old cavalry officer. He was a well known Conservative in the county of Compton, but I welcomed his name in the regiment, was delighted to see it there and so expressed myself.

Mr. MONK. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) when all this occurred ?

Mr. FISHER. On the occasion to which my hon. friend the Minister of Militia referred—the occasion when he asked Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart to come here to discuss matters connected with the regiment. I explained that on opening my remarks. Another name was that of Surgeon Major Macdonald. He is a well known Conservative politician of my own county who has always consistently—as, according to his principles he ought—opposed me in my political campaign. I insisted to Colonels Whitley and Smart that Surgeon Major Macdonald was the right man to have the highest medical position in the regiment because I had known him for years as an enthusiastic militia man ; he had been in an infantry regiment and if he were willing to take a position in a cavalry regiment as medical officer, it was his due, and I hoped he would take it.

I think this fairly enough disposes of the question as to my general interference, and as to the position I have taken. I will sum up this—and I take the full responsibility of saying it—that this regiment was to be established in the eastern townships and I wanted it to be a credit to the eastern townships ; I wanted it to be a cavalry regiment of which all the people of the eastern townships would be proud. As much as possible, if men of the proper military qualifications could be found in the eastern townships, I wanted it to be officered by eastern township men.

Not because I had any jealousy of outsiders, not because I objected to men coming from Montreal or elsewhere to command in the eastern townships, but because I believed and I believe it still, that men who are of the people there, men who know the country, the conditions and the character of the people are more likely to succeed in recruiting the rank and file for a regiment in the eastern townships and more likely to make it a success. When I saw that Col. Smart was appointed to the command of this regiment I recognized at once that, so far as I knew the militiamen of my district of the eastern townships, there was no man there qualified to take command of the newly organized cavalry, and I supposed that the man selected by Lord Dundonald and Col. Whitley, the brigadier of that district, was a man properly qualified. There was no objection to Col. Smart holding command of this regiment. The only suggestion I did make was that any further appointments to that regiment should be made, as far as possible, from the people of the locality who had the proper military qualifications. I believe that in asking for and insisting on that I was doing what was in the best interests of any regiment in the militia of this country. I have now explained the only cases in which I have discussed political matters in this connection. I only discussed them because I found in a particular squadron a list of officers which appeared to have not only a political complexion but even a family complexion, and I warned these gentlemen who, not knowing the country, not knowing the individuals, not knowing the relationship in connection with these people, I believed innocently, were led by local people into doing a thing which if it had been allowed to go through would have been a fatal blow to the efficiency and the success of this regiment. Sir, I plead guilty to that much interference in the matter on the ground of politics. And if that much of such interference is not in the interest of the regiment and of the country, and if men who apparently may have been—I do not say they were—carrying on these intrigues in regard to military appointments, these political intrigues to which Lord Dundonald refers, had been permitted to carry through their proposal, instead of being an interference on behalf of Liberals, of which I am accused, it would have been a deliberate interference and political intrigue on the part of Conservatives for the purpose of making this regiment what the old regiments there were, a Tory preserve and a Tory organization. If that is political interference I plead guilty to it, because I object to the Tories getting the advantage of intrigues in militia matters just as much as I would be ashamed to undertake any political intrigues in militia matters for the benefit of the Liberals. There is but one other matter to which I wish to refer. Lord Dundonald's last communication to the House has been before me for only a few moments. I have only had the opportunity of hearing it read and of glancing over it, but I must correct several statements which are here contained in regard to myself. Lord Dundonald says.

> I accordingly twice communicated with Mr. Fisher by telephone on two dates some distance apart, and made appointments with him in order that the reason for the obstruction might be explained. Mr. Fisher did not keep either of the appointments.

I am speaking now from memory as I suppose Lord Dundonald was writing from memory. Lord Dundonald did call me up on the telephone to discuss this question. When he began to discuss this, I suggested to him that I did not care to discuss such a matter over the telephone and that if he wished to talk the matter over with me I was at his disposal. I do not know that I am called upon to seek out Lord Dundonald and to get him to ask his permission to discuss these questions with him. I think that, if Lord Dundonald wished to discuss these matters with me, he might very easily have come to my office instead of calling me up by telephone, and have asked to have a few quiet minutes in my office to discuss this question. I intimated to him when he called me up on the telephone that it was impossible to discuss these matters over the telephone but that I was at his disposal if he wished to discuss them with me. On the second occasion Lord Dundonald again called me up and again began to discuss these questions. I cannot for the moment remember the full words of what he said. He is right in saying that he explained the urgency of completing the organization of the regiment without delay. I agreed with him. He also then went on to say that the trouble was one of political interference. I said I regretted if there was any political interference. I had in mind the list of officers I had seen. Lord Dundonald went on to discuss the question with me, and I again said to him I did not care to discuss the questions over the telephone. Lord Dundonald then said to me: I am responsible for the militia of Canada and I cannot be interfered with in this way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear, that is right.

Mr. FISHER. These are just about the words he used. I said that nobody wished to interfere with him that I knew of. He went on again and repeated that political interference was blocking the completion of this organization.

Mr. FOWLER. So it was.

Mr. FISHER. He again repeated that he was responsible for the militia for Canada. I said then to Lord Dundonald: ' I beg your pardon, Lord Dundonald, but I think that it is the government of Canada that is responsible for the militia of Canada and not you.' I also said that if I had done anything in this matter I had done it as a responsible minister of the government of Canada because I believed it was necessary to make this regiment as great a success as possible. Those may not be the exact words but that is the exact substance of what I said, and without in any way desiring to attribute motives or to put thoughts into Lord Dundonal's mind, I fear very much that that gentleman has been influenced by the information which I gave to him that I considered it was the government of Canada and not he who was responsible for the militia of the country.

Lord Dundonald goes on to say a number of things to which I shall not allude with regard to Mayor Pickel, &c., as I have already dealt with them. He however, then goes on to show clearly by a letter to Col. Pinault, that he was perfectly well aware of the fact that I had been requested by my colleague to sign this particular recommendation. He knew perfectly well that that list of officers was to be gazetted with the understanding that that name should be striken out. And yet his words at the banquet of Montreal, I submit to any unprejudiced person, would lead the public to believe that I, the Minister of Agriculture, had taken a recommendation of my colleague the Minister of Militia and had changed it on my own responsibility. Now, if Lord Dundonald had felt as he appears to have felt, if he had shown that courtesy and attention to etiquette which might reasonably have been expected from one gentleman to another, or if he had shown a little common sense, which he might perhaps have learned in his two years' sojourn in Ottawa, he would, instead of rushing into a public speech, have asked either the Minister of Militia or myself for an explanation in regard to these things before making misstatements and creating a wrong impression in the public mind and amongst the officers who were present at that Montreal banquet.

Now, I have only further to say that I have Col. Smart's letter to Lord Dundonald. I do not wish to cast any reflection on Col. Smart. I do not wish to say anything derogatory of him as an officer but I do venture to say this, that the tenor of this letter is such as to create an impression on the mind of anybody who reads it or hears it read which is not consonant with the facts as they have occurred. I have in my office to-day letters from Col. Smart and Col. Whitley in which they express their extreme satisfaction with the stand I took in regard to this regiment and with regard to these matters. I have letters from both these gentlemen thanking me in profuse terms for the interest I have taken in the regiment and asking my co-operation. I have letters from both of these gentlemen thanking me for pushing on the question of the establishment of that regiment and especially letters from Col. Smart thanking me for putting through the order which Lord Dundonald complains of. I will just now show the House and the country how utterly unfounded are these statements of Lord Dundonald and Col. Smart himself when he refers, as he does in this letter, to the case in regard to Dr. Pickel. I will read again Col. Smart's letter to me of May 19, on which I acted, passed and signed the order and recommendation to council. Col. Smart in his letter of June 4, to Lord Dundonald says :

I, therefore, communicated with Dr. Pickel and explained to him that owing to a new regulation, objections were taken to the appointment of unqualified officers, to field officers rank, and asked him if he would be good enough to allow me to withdraw his name temporarily, to which he consented.

I would point out that Col. Smart and Lord Dundonald were actually proposing to name a gentleman who had no military experience of any kind whatever, who never had been associated in any way with military matters, to the position of field rank, not an ordinary subaltern in a squadron or company, but to a position of field rank in which he would have command of a full squadron and be responsible for the men under him in every respect. He says also :

Your Lordship will observe that I have not withdrawn Dr. Pickel's name absolutely, and have kept the position of major in 'E' squadron vacant in the hope that I may yet have Dr. Pickel appointed.

Then, I have Col. Smart's letter to me on which I acted and I took no official step until I had received this letter from Col. Smart. This letter is dated May 19th. I would say in regard to this letter that Col. Smart came to me early on the morning of that day in my office when we talked over these matters. After that he went from my office to the Department of Militia and Defence to have his recommendation embodied in a report and put through having said that he would try to get that report to my office that afternoon to have it passed by council. It did not reach me however, until the next morning. Col. Smart went back to Montreal that night—May 19, and met Col. Whitley as he says :

Immediately on my return this evening I met Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley and discussed fully with him all matters in connection with our interview of to-day. Colonel Whitley was pleased to learn that everything was arranged satisfactorily and at his request I telephoned to Sweetsburg with a view of getting from Dr. Pickel his final answer as to whether or not it was his intention to remain in the squadron.

Col. Smart says in his letter to Lord Dundonald :

Your Lordship will observe that I have not withdrawn Dr. Pickel's name absolutely.

And yet he asked him for his final answer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And got it.

Mr. FISHER. And got it.

In accordance therefore with Dr. Pickel's request I can now as commanding officer of the regiment request you to kindly make the change in the 'Gazette' by leaving Dr. Pickel's name out.

I acted in this matter not as a partisan politician, but I acted as a friend of the regiment, as a friend of the commanding officer who was asking me to do this, and I only signed the recommendation to council after I had received a letter from that gentleman telling me that Dr. Pickel had given his final answer as to his connection with the regiment and after the commanding officer himself asked me to strike his name out. I did that, not in my own position as Minister of Agriculture, but, as is common in connection with the affairs of government, acting for my colleague who had requested me to act for him.

Now, I do not think that there is anything further for me to say except this, Col. Smart says that he has kept that position open for Dr. Pickel. Col. Smart on several occasions asked me to make a recommendation of an officer to fill that position. I said that I did not know anybody in the district with sufficient military qualifications to fill it and that I would not recommend anybody until I had been able to find such a one.

Captain Guy Carr, a well known Conservative in Compton county had been for many years a cavalry officer in that county and when it was proposed that he should be exchanged into this regiment I thought he was a suitable man to occupy the position of Major of the regiment. The only name that I suggested to take Dr. Pickel's place was that of a qualified military man who was a well-known Conservative. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need go any farther. I would not have taken up the time of the House this afternoon had the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) not brought up these extraordinary letters and had he not undertaken to make insinuations and to make attacks upon me personally. I leave myself to the judgment of the House and through the House to the judgment of the country as to whether I have done anything to interfere with the efficiency of the militia of Canada or anything which is not consonant with the dignity of a public man.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, if anything were required to justify the remarks which Lord Dundonald made in Montreal I would think it would be the very distinct admissions which the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has made to-day. He has admitted the whole case distinctly and absolutely. There can be do doubt of that and strange to say in making that admission he has to a very considerable extent in regard to the facts set forth in Col. Smart's letter, made a statement in absolute contradiction of the statement which he has read to the House this afternoon. Let me remind the hon. gentleman what he then said :

> This is a simple statement of the facts of the case, which—without referring in any way to the propriety of the General Officer Commanding discussing in public, official recommendations, without referring to the broad question of the propriety of an official of the government of Canada criticising the official action of a member of that government—absolutely disproves the charge that for political reasons I have undertaken to strike out a name which had been submitted to the Minister of Militia for appointment in the service.

That was the statement of the hon. gentleman as read to the House this afternoon. The remarks to which we have just listened are not at all consistent with another portion of his written statement which is as follows :

> In regard to Lord Dundonald's general statement that I interfered with the organziation of the corps and with the names of other proposed officers of the corps as well as Dr. Pickel, let me say this : that the only grounds on which I made any suggestion with regard to the establishment of this corps were the immense importance of the appointment of leading officers with military qualifications who knew the country and the people of the eastern townships, the district where the corps was to be established; that I took no exception to anybody's appointment on political grounds alone, as evidenced by my recommendation and endorsement of many well known Conservatives ; that no one believes more thoroughly than I do that the first necessity on the recommendation of officers on the establishment of a new regiment is miliatry qualification.

The Minister of Agriculture distinctly admitted this afternoon, that because Dr. Pickel was a Conservative and because he did not think it was desirable that so many Conservatives should be officers of that regiment, he suggested, indeed insisted, upon the withdrawal of his name and absolutely refused to permit the organization of the regiment to be proceeded with unless Dr. Pickel's name was withdrawn. If the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture do not mean that, I would like to know what they do mean. Why should the Minister of Agriculture be concerned as to whether any man appointed by the commanding officer of this regiment, was a Liberal or a Conservative ? Surely we have partisan politics introduced into enough of the aspects of life in this country without having the Minister of Agriculture running around and interfering with that which does not concern him, and of which he knows nothing ; interfering with the work of those who know ten thousand times more about it than he does, and insisting that the officers of this regiment shall have a particular political complexion. And, if you get qualified men to serve their King and country in a regiment of Canadian volunteers what difference is it whether they are Liberals or Conservatives.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture was anxious that men of proper military qualifications should be appointed, and he sets himself up as an expert against the men who are charged with organizing this regiment. These gentlemen were Colonel Smart, against whom there is no word of reproach so far as his capacity is concerned, and Lt.-Col. Whitley, who is described in this way in the memo. which the Minister of Miliia read :

> I was aware that Lt.-Col. Whitley, one of the ablest and most efficient cavalry officers in Canada had been consulted with reference to the organization of the proposed new cavalry regiment mentioned.

And now, from the letters which were read by the Minister of Agriculture we find that his recommendations were necessary to every appointment that was made. These military men, these officers of experience, were not to be allowed to pronounce upon the military qualifications of the gentlemen proposed as officers, but the Minister of Agriculture, an expert, so it seems, in military service, is to be allowed to interfere and to prevent these men from serving their King and their country. That is the position of the Minister of Agriculture before the House and the country to-day. Let me tell him, when he sees fit to make an attack in a sneering tone upon the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) who has served his King and country with distinction not only in Canada but in South Africa; let me tell the Minister of Agriculture that he had better bear in mind that he, and not the member for North Victoria is on trial before the country to-day.

The Minister of Agriculture has admitted the whole case. No comment is necessary. Lord Dundonald's remarks are absolutely justified by the Minister of Agriculture himself. The Minister of Agriculture wanted no appointments, so he says, that would be inimical to the interests of the regiment. Does he suppose that he is a better judge of what is inimical to the interests of the regiment than one of the best cavalry officers in Canada who was in consultation with the efficient officer selected to command this cavalry corps. The statement of the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, in which he admits this uncalled for interference, has absolutely justified every word that Lord Dundonald has uttered with regard to this unfortunate matter.

Has the Minister of Agriculture ventured to contradict the very distinct statements which have been made by Lt.-Col. Chas. A. Smart, who says :

I submitted the name of Dr. F. H. Pickel, who is mayor of the town of Sweetsburg, and warden of the county of Missisquoi, to be major in command of 'E' Squadron.

It does not require very much knowledge of military affairs to know that in the formation of a regiment of this kind, as you cannot get qualified military men you must get men of prominence, men who are willing to be qualified, men who are enthusiastic in the service and who are likely to make good officers after they have been duly qualified. These officers were selected by the men who are charged by this country with the performance of that duty. Lt.-Col. Smart continues :

Dr. Pickel is a gentleman of means, can ride fairly well, and was quite willing to take the necessary time to qualify himself for the position of major.

Let me point out once more, that of the sixteen men selected for officers in this regiment only two were properly qualified, but Dr. Pickel who happened to be a Conservative, is the only man according to the Minister of Agriculture, to be debarred from entering the service of his King, because he has not the necessary military qualifications. Col. Smart has no objection to this letter being made public, and indeed Lord Dundonald states he has desired that it should be made public. He proceeds :

Mr. Fisher objected to him for no other reason than that he was a strong political opponent of his, and was quite determined to block the whole organization, unless Dr. Pickel's name was withdrawn.

The Minister of Agriculture has not put it in quite such strong terms as that, but he has practically admitted the same thing in his last statement to the House, although the first statement which he read was of an entirely different conplexion, Col. Smart continues :

This, I refused to do, as I had invited Dr. Pickel to come into the regiment, and told Mr. Fisher that some one else would have to be responsible for the withdrawal of Dr. Pickel's name. After my last visit to Ottawa I consulted with Colonel Whitley, and we came to the conclusion that unless we induced Dr. Pickel voluntarily to withdraw, the organization would be hung up indefinitely.

Now, this gentleman is stating the conclusion at which he arrived, after consultation with the officer above him, Lt.-Col. Whitley, who has been described by the Minister of Militia as one of the ablest and most efficient cavalry officers in Canada. After consulting with this gentleman, Lt.-Col. Smart came to the conclusion that the partisan interference of the Minister of Agriculture in the organization of this regiment, with which the Minister of Agriculture should not interfere at all, was of so serious a character, according to the deliberate opinion of these two gentlemen, that the whole organization would be stopped unless the name of Dr. Pickel was withdrawn. And my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture has the hardihood, has the courage to stand up in this House, and before the people of the country, and say, that in playing that part he played a part of which no public man in this country might be ashamed, a part indeed of which he declares himself proud. Col. Smart continues :

I, therefore, communicated with Dr. Pickel and explained to him that owing to a new regulation, objections were taken to the appointment of unqualified officers, to field officers rank, and asked him if he would be good enough to allow me to withdraw his name temporarily, to which he consented.

I would like to ask the Minister of Militia whether or not the officers senior to Dr. Pickel in the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, are all militarily qualified, because that is very important.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I believe they are.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the minister able to state that as a fact ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is my belief. I think there is no doubt of it. I have not the whole record before me. I have only the particular 'Gazette' which we are considering. But my belief is that they are all qualified.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is Lt.-Col. Smart correct in stating that of sixteen officers of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, only two had the necessary military qualifications ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Nine out of sixteen possessed military qualifications.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The necessary military qualifications for their rank ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Some of them were taken from former regiments. Some of them were from regiments that had been disbanded, with the expectation that these officers would be utilized. Others were taken from regiments in the city of Montreal. Without any doubt about it at all, I state that nine out of the sixteen had military qualifications.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia must not suppose for a moment that we do not understand the difference between his answer and what I am asking. I am asking whether more than two of these men possessed the military qualifications necessary for the rank to which they were appointed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will only say that the 'Gazette' shows that an asterisk was placed by the General Officer Commanding opposite certain names, with the following note :—

As a special case, and will be asked to pass qualifying examination.

That asterisk appears opposite only five names, so far as I can observe. In addition to those five, however, there are appointed lieutenants provisionally, and they should be added to the five namely, T. R. Pickel, H. W. Reynolds, and T. F. Cotton. That would make eight. That is the exact condition of things revealed in the original 'Gazette,' which I have here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that my hon. friend the Minister of Militia has made it very plain to me yet. It is perfectly clear that a considerable number of the officers besides Dr. Pickel had not the military qualification necessary for their rank, and therefore that part of the objection of the Minister of Agriculture disappears entirely. Lord Dundonald has stated, and I have not understood the Minister of Militia to contradict him, that in the organization of a regiment of this kind, it is always necessary to take unqualified men, with the understanding that afterwards they shall become properly qualified. Lord Dundonald with regard to that has said this :

Dr. Pickel was not qualified professionally as an officer ; indeed only two out of sixteen of the proposed officers for the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons were militarily qualified. It was impossible, as will be understood, to procure duly qualified officers, as the cavalry regiments in the eastern townships had been increased since May, 1903, from four squadrons, numbering 300 men and 26 officers, to twenty squadrons, numbering 1,600 men and 180 officers on the peace establishment ; and with a war establishment of some 2,700 men. All the gentlemen, however, in the list submitted, undertook to qualify professionally after appointment in the usual manner. This course is customary, and has been forced upon us by the lack of qualified officers. It is a course which has always met with the approval of the Minister of Militia.

Therefore that part of the argument of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture absolutely fades away, and we are left with the bald fact that the only obstacle which stood in the way of Dr. Pickel's serving as an officer in this regiment was that he happened to entertain political opinions different from those entertained by the hon. the Minister of Agriculture. That is all there is about it, after the hon. minister's own statement and after the best consideration which we can give to the facts brought before the House. That conclusion absolutely justifies the statements of Lord Dundonald.

And here let me remark that whatever else we may say of Lord Dundonald, I think we all believe that he came to this country, and has remained in this country, inspired solely and absolutely with a sincere desire to advance and improve the militia service in Canada. I do not think he has had any other object or aim throughout his entire career, and I believe that those of the military men of Canada who have come in contact with him and have thus learned to appreciate and to honour him, will bear me out in that tribute. He is a man of simple, straightforward character, a thorough soldier in every respect; and I can well understand the irritation which he would feel, and from which he undoubtedly would suffer, when he found that the organization of a cavalry regiment in the eastern townships was being hung up and delayed, and stood in danger of being indefinitely postponed, simply for the reason that certain officers proposed to be appointed to that regiment did not entertain political views in harmony with those of my hon. friend the Minister of the Agriculture.

The government, however, adopted a rather curious mode of dealing with Lord Dundonald. From the statements which we have heard read in the House this afternoon, it is perfectly obvious that what must have been construed as an attack upon that officer was proposed to be made in the House to-day, without calling on Lord Dundonald for one word in his defence. That is the position in which the matter presents itself. If the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Militia proposed to read these statements in the House to-day, would it not have been a fair thing for them in the first place to have either called on Lord Dundonald for an explanation of the remarks he made in Montreal, or to have submitted to him a statement of the facts as they understood them to be, and to have asked from him any defence which he might desire to make? I would have thought that the fair and courteous course, but it was not the course that evidently was intended.

I will say in conclusion that while I regard this as a very regrettable incident, it will not be without benefit to the country, if, in the future, it will lead to the withdrawal of partisan interference in the appointment of officers of the militia, whether that interference may come from the government now in power or may be sought to be applied by any government which may come into power in the future. We do not want political interference in military matters in Canada. The people pay a considerable amount for the military service of this country; they are willing to pay that amount for an efficient military service; but we do not want that service to deteriorate or become inefficient by reason of party politics entering into it in any way. We have had this afternoon a confession which indicates that party politics has been entering into it for some time past, on the part of the Minister of Agriculture at any rate. I trust that there will be an end to that, and that the Minister of Militia will see fit to confide solely to officers who are experienced and capable, the organization of such regiments as this without considering, at the instance of the Minister of Agriculture or any one else, whether the gentlemen sought to be appointed are Conservatives or Liberals in their political opinions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The occasion of this debate Mr. Speaker, is the unfortunate—I shall not characterize it to-day by any other term—speech which was delivered some few days ago by Lord Dundonald at a banquet. After the explanations we have had from my hon. colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), and also on behalf of Lord Dundonald by my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes), I think it preferable at this moment not to push further a discussion of the consequences which may flow from Lord Dundonald's remarks. Not that I should have any hesitation in my own mind, or that there should be any hesitation in the mind of anybody, but it is preferable, in a matter of this gravity, that we should proceed with prudence and deliberation. Having said that much regarding the speech of Lord Dundonald, I may be permitted to say a word of his methods in organizing the militia, in so far as they are revealed by the incidents which have taken place in connection with the organization of the 13th Light Scottish Dragoons. Lord Dundonald is certainly—I am willing to give him every credit in that respect—endowed with good motives. No one who knows him can question that. He bears a very honourable name, as was said by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) a moment ago, a name made famous by his forebears in British history, and to the lustre of which he has added himself by his own services in South Africa and elsewhere. I have no desire in the slightest degree to reflect upon him as a soldier, but perhaps I may not be offensive if I say that it is not the first time that a good soldier may have lacked discretion. Lord Dundonald, in his position, is charged with the organization of the militia, but he must take counsel here when organizing a regiment. He is a foreigner—no—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I had withdrawn the expression before hon. gentlemen interrupted. He is not a foreigner, but he is a stranger.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, he does not know the people of the eastern townships, where these light dragoons are to be enlisted. I doubt if he ever was in the town of Sweetsburg, or in the county of Brome, or the county of Missisquoi, or, if he has been in any of these places, it could only have been for a very short period, when passing through. It was advisable that a regiment should be recruited in those districts, but in what way? If this regiment of 13th Scottish Light Dragoons was to be organized and recruited from the counties of Brome and Missisquoi, how could Lord Dundonald possibly know personally who should officer it? How could he know what officers should be appointed? Perhaps he knew Col. Smart, but Col. Smart himself was from Montreal, and he had to go to the counties and get there his information from somebody. He had to get information from parties in and around Sweetsburg and the other towns in the counties of Missisquoi and Brome. Well, it is evident that Col. Smart happened to fall into the hands of certain parties who represented rather a small family compact. The list he made was composed almost exclusively of gentlemen connected with the Conservative party. My hon. friend said a moment ago that in militia matters there should be no politics, and in this I heartily agree, but it so happens that this regiment was to be officered almost exclusively by Conservative politicians. It is no harm to be a Conservative. It may be a mistake, but I do not count it a sin. But I submit to my hon. friends on the other side, is it not proper that whenever a regiment is organized in any part of the country, it should be officered as far as possible from both parties? I do not know how things are now, but once upon a time, when I was in the militia myself, there was a battalion organized, with which I was connected, and in organizng it, the man who was our colonel went and consulted everybody. He consulted men who could not take any part in the organization, but whose advice was valuable. But in the present instance, it so happens that there is a gentleman in the eastern townships who is connected with politics and holds a position of some respectability in that part of the country, I refer to my

hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture. Was his position to be considered a bar to his offering any advice? Was he to be precluded from expressing an opinion simply because he happened to be Minister of Agriculture? Had he not as much right to give advice in the matter as Col. Pickel and the others about Sherbrooke, or in the counties of Missisquoi and Brome, who happened to be consulted? Was my hon. friend, simply because he happened to be Minister of Agriculture, bound to say: it is all wrong, you have chosen none but Conservative politicians to be officers of the regiment, but I cannot say a word about it? If we are all in agreement on this principle that volunteer associations should not be political preserves, if we all agreed that politics should be kept out of them, I think that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture ought to be commended for having pointed out to the general that he was making a mistake in choosing nearly all his men of the one stripe and so few of the other? That is all my hon. friend did. He wrote to the General Officer Commanding that there were in that regiment too many of one stripe and not sufficient of the other. He went over to the militia office and had a conference with the Minister of Militia and Cols. Whitley and Smart. Together they discussed the personnel of the staff. My hon. friend made some representations, and it seems to me that the representations he made were in the best interests of the force and should have been accepted. As a matter of fact they were accepted at that conference, but unfortunately Lord Dundonald came to the conclusion that having signed a list of names recommended to him—a list probably of men about whom he knew nothing—that list was as sacred as the laws of the Medes and Persians and could not be interfered with—that even the Minister of Agriculture, acting for the Minister of Militia,—which is not denied by Lord Dundonald—could not have a word to say, but that the list had to be accepted simply because it was signed by Lord Dundonald.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend is not doing Lord Dundonald justice?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In what way?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He never made any objection to the Minister of Militia acting or to any one acting for him. What he objected to was the Minister of Agriculture going to the officers who were organizing that regiment under him and interfering with them in the duties they were performing under his directions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. Here is the speech of Lord Dundonald. He said, would you believe it gentlemen, I sent an order to the cabinet and that order was interfered with. Here are his very words:

> A most flagrant instance of political interference has recently come before me in connection with the appointment of officers in the new eastern township cavalry regiment, the Scottish Light Dragoons.
>
> The commanding officers of the corp had been selected because of their apparent fitness from a military point of view. The names reached me and were sent to council and gentlemen, what do you think happened? The list having my approval——
>
> 'My approval'——
> —was returned with the name of one officer stricken out and initialled by the Minister of Agriculture.

And, in justice to the Minister of Agriculture it should be said that it was initialled by him acting for the Minister of Militia, as was well known by Lord Dundonald. Under these circumstances, I ask my hon. friend if I am doing any injustice to Lord Dundonald when I say that he wanted to have his recommendation to council, the last word to be said, and minister and council simply to bow and accept his recommendation?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say, yes, because the Prime Minister has left out of account the letter from Lieut.-Col. Smart which was before Lord Dundonald before he made these remarks, in which Lieut.-Col. Smart said that the Minister of Agriculture had interfered with him on political grounds.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And at that very moment the Minister of Agriculture, who was acting for the Minister of Militia had the letter of Lieut.-Col. Smart begging him to leave off the name of Dr. Pickel. Sir, we are not accustomed—I give all credit to Lord Dundonald for good motives—but we are not accustomed to be dragooned in this country. Lord Dundonald, with all the respect I have for him, must learn that this is a responsible government and that when he sends a recommendation to council, it is the right—it is the right, I say notwithstanding what anybody may say to the contrary—of the minister in charge of the department, if he does not approve of the recommendation to strike out any name.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will he or will the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Militia deny that this name was struck off while the Minister of Militia was present with the Minister of Agriculture, before the recommendation was sent to council. If he does, all I can say is that we can prove to the contrary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What does that prove?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It proves that the Minister of Agriculture had interfered before.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was corrected by the Minister of Agriculture, acting for the Minister of Militia and approved by the council.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, but it was changed before that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was not changed before that time. I do not wish to pursue this discussion further. I merely wish to vindicate the course of my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher). Lord Dundonald, or whoever commands the militia in Canada will commit the greatest of mistakes if, when appointing officers to the militia in parts of the country of which he knows nothing, appointments concerning which he must take the recommendation of somebody, if he does not take advice not only from one side but from both sides of politics on these matters.

Mr. E. B. OSLER. I regret, as all must regret, the incident that has come before us to-day; but I regret still more the evident joy with which supporters of the government hailed it as giving them a chance to get rid of a man who has been so strong to resent the interference of politicians in appointments in the militia. There is no explanation wanted from any one as to the position the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) took in this matter. He interfered for a political purpose, according to his own statement. If he cannot see that it was a political motive and nothing else that influenced his action, then he cannot see what every one else in the House can see. The Prime Minister made a statement that seems to me rather extraordinary. He stated, as a reason for the interference of the Minister of Agriculture, who happens to live in the district where the corps was being organized, that the General Officer Commanding, Lord Dundonald, did not know the people and did not know the country. If that is to be the ground for taking out of the hands of the General Officer Commanding the selection of those to fill these appointments, then it means that in every locality where the General Officer Commanding is not perfectly familiar with the people and the country the member of parliament who may represent that section is, for the time being, to be the Minister of Militia so far as that district is concerned. That is what the Prime Minister tells us in so many words. Surely that is a condition of affairs which could not be allowed, and I am sure the Prime Minister did not mean to convey the meaning that his words conveyed to me, and I think must have conveyed to everybody who listened to him. Any officer commanding the militia has a difficult position to fill. He ought, I think, to receive all the courtesy and all the help possible from his minister and from all the members of the government. I think, from the correspondence and from the admissions that the Minister of Agriculture has made, that Lord Dundonald was thoroughly right in being indignant at the way he was treated. I think that no man with knowledge of his profession and proper regard for his own dignity could do other than resent the treatment the Minister of Agriculture meted out to Lord Dundonald in connection with this matter. Evidently it is not the only case which has aroused this feeling on the part of Lord Dundonald. He came here as an eminent soldier and he has won the confidence, I believe, of every volunteer in the country—certainly of every one whose opinions I have heard expressed. He is looked up to with the greatest respect, and all have anticipated the very best results from the improvements he has made. I regret very, very sincerely that this incident has happened. I regret still more the manner in which it has been treated by the members on the other side of the House. They seem to have a feeling of delight that Lord Dundonald has got into a scrape and that they might be relieved from his continued occupancy of a position he has filled with such credit.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA. I do not wish to prolong this debate which I think has gone a little too far. I must say I was rather surprised at the turn the debate took from the beginning. I did not expect that the Minister of Agriculture would be here to defend his case. To me the case was a simpler one than that—it was the case of an official of the government under the authority of the ministers of the Crown having made a public speech in which he had spoken in what may be called, mildly, rather uncalled for terms of one of the members of the government of which he is the servant. I think it is well that we should understand exactly the point at issue, not only before the House, but before the country. That point is whether the General Officer Commanding the militia of Canada is a servant of the government or not. If he is not a servant of the government, I quite accept the conclusion of hon. gentlemen opposite and say that he should not be interfered with by politicians. But, if it is acknowledged, as I always thought it was acknowledged, that he is a servant of the government, that he is appointed and paid by the government and therefore must report to the minister—who is responsible to the House—before stating anything to the country, then, I think the course of Lord Dundonald is absolutely indefensible. Instead of being the case of Lord Dundonald against Mr. Fisher it is simply the case of a servant of the government who has been speaking in public and saying things he should not say. Lord Dundonald has thought proper to choose the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to plead his case here to-day. If Lord Dundonald is a servant of the Crown, how can it for a moment be entertained that it is a proper thing for a servant of the government to ask an independent member of parliament, whether Liberal or Conservative, to plead his case against one of the ministers of the government of which he is a servant ? So I would now ask the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) who has constituted himself a warm defender of Lord Dundonald, whether he considers the General Officer Commanding the militia as a servant of the Crown just as any other deputy minister of the Crown is ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think if my hon. friend asks the Minister of Militia and the First Minister he will find that when the Minister of Militia and the First Minister and the whole outfit were crawling before the General Officer Commanding it was I who taught the people of this country that the General Officer Commanding is a servant of the people of this country.

Mr. BOURASSA. Then I think we have a judgment from the counsel, not of the prosecutor but of the accused. The hon. gentleman has been standing up here trying to justify the speech that was made by Lord Dundonald at Montreal, trying to justify the accusations brought by Lord Dundonald against the Minister of Agriculture, and now he is stating before the House that he knows and acknowledges that Lord Dundonald is a servant of the Crown. Suppose the Deputy Minister of Public Works should make a speech in Montreal and say : 'I want to have a wharf built at Montreal or Quebec, in a certain way, but the Minister of Militia interfered and knowing nothing of public works has forced me to change my plans. It is a danger for the future of public works in Canada that a minister of the Crown should interfere with the prerogatives of the Deputy Minister of Public Works.' What would the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes), what would the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) say ? That is the whole question in a nutshell. I am not going to challenge the opinions of Lord Dundonald as far as military matters are concerned. I quite admit that he has a high reputation and no doubt he deserves it. But, it seems that Lord Dundonald and the other gentlemen who have been General Officers Commanding on coming to this country have never realized that they were servants of the government and that they were bound to make their suggestions to the Minister of Militia and through the Minister of Militia to the parliament of Canada. If a General Officer Commanding, Lord Dundonald, or General Hutton or any one else, thinks that the policy pursued by the Minister of Militia and the parliament of Canada is not a proper policy, then there is only one of two courses open to him, either to abandon his views or to tender his resignation; and then, when he is a free man, when he has left the service and has ceased to draw his salary from the public chest, he would be free to say what he thinks, to criticise the action of the Minister of Militia or of any member of the government, or to criticise the military policy of Canada. He would be then free to go back to England and to say that he could not get on owing to political interference, and that he had tendered his resignation. But so long as this General Officer Commanding is in the position of any other public servant, he is bound to be silent, bound to do what would be the duty of any officer in his position in any civilized country ; and I do not think that it is a well advised course on the part of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to come here and try to justify the action of Lord Dundonald.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does my hon friend mean to say that Lord Dundonald would be more justified after ceasing to be General Officer Commanding in attacking the government for its acts than he would be while he was General Officer Commanding and could take the responsibility of his acts ? I presume Lord Dundonald asks no favours, I presume he knows his business, and is quite ready to abide by the consequence of his acts ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I think Lord Dundonald would be justified, once he handed in his resignation, in saying to the people of Canada, of Great Britain and of the empire, that the policy pursued by Canada in military matters is not a proper policy. Certainly when he is a free man, he is entitled to act as a free man; but I say he has not the right, being the deputy head of the militia of Canada, while in command of the militia having authority over the other soldiers, to give such an example of gross breach of discipline. It very ill became the hon. member to come here and take up the defence of Lord Dundonald as he has done to-day. Another General Officer Commanding thought that some officers, including the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) were not proper persons to give their views on military matters and wanted to lecture the hon. member for setting a bad example. Everything was then at issue according to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes). The Governor General had to act, the government had to act, the parliament of Canada had to act in order to show that the hon. member for North Victoria should be free from the attacks of the military head of the militia of Canada. I do not say that I disagreed with the hon. member for North Victoria. I never disagreed with him on that question. I think he was right in saying that General Hutton had not the right to attack him, a member of parliament, and to say that Col. Hughes, member of parliament, should not speak in the parliament of Canada because he happened to be a colonel in the militia of Canada. If it was an improper thing for the General Officer Commanding to come in conflict with the liberty of a member of parliament who happens to be a member of the militia under the authority of the General Officer Commanding, what shall we say of the action of a General Officer Commanding who gives to the public opinions and criticisms of the man who is acting as responsible head of the department of which he is a servant? He criticised the action of his superior acting in his official capacity. Sir, I think it is sufficient to put the case in that light to show that whatever might be our opinions as far as Lord Dundonald personally is concerned, whatever might be our opinion even as to the policy of the government in military matters, it could not be suffered for five minutes that a public servant of the government of Canada, drawing pay from the people of Canada under the authority of the minister, should publicly criticise the gentleman who at the time was acting as minister of the department of which he is a servant. Therefore I think it should no longer be considered that this is the trial of the Minister of Agriculture. It is the trial of Lord Dundonald who has seen fit to bring before the parliament of Canada his case through the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes).

Mr. INGRAM. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite have lost sight of the fact——

House in committee on Bill (No. 89) to incorporate the Cedar Rapids Manufacturing and Power Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Geoffrion) who is in charge of this Bill is not here. Unless somebody else is desirous of promoting it perhaps we had better have the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. I am not objecting to the Bill, I have not had it before me at all, but when the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is absent perhaps we had better allow it to stand.

Mr. OLIVER moved :

That the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 68) respecting the Hudson's Bay and Northwest Railways Company be read a second time, and agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amendment ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment seems to be an addition to clause 3, as follows :

Clause A.

The company may expend money in improving the water-ways of the Mackenzie river and of the Thelon river, and of any branches or tributaries of either of the said rivers, for the purpose of affording a continuous system of transportation in connection with the company's lines of railway ; provided that, before commencing any such expenditure or any work for that purpose in any of the said rivers or branches, the company shall submit plans of the work proposed to be undertaken, and obtain the approval of the Governor in Council thereto.

And then clause B :

Clause B.

Section 6 of chapter 70 of the statutes of 1899 is hereby amended by striking out the word 'Mackenzie', in the fifth line thereof, and substituting therefor the word 'Slave.'

Motion agreed to.

LORD DUNDONALD'S SPEECH.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Sam. Hughes that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, refering to the matter debated this afternoon, I join with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in expressing the view that although the circumstance was regrettable from one point of view, yet, having regard to the fact that this will probably call public attention to the methods that have been prevailing in the past, in the end, it will be beneficial to the country. Leaving aside for the moment the fact that the hon. gentleman who occupies the responsible position of Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) has confined himself very much to an explanation of the position of affairs without taking any very strong ground in the discussion, we have a trio of gentlemen, namely, the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) attempting to justify this matter in all its different phases. I will devote myself for a moment or two to the most important of these gentlemen, and that is the right hon. the First Minister. The right hon. gentleman tells us that he quite agrees with the statements that have been made by more than one hon. gentleman who has spoken that this is a matter, probably above all other matters in connection with the government of Canada, which should be clear and free of party politics.

The manner in which my right hon. friend proceeds to show that this is his belief is certainly somewhat singular. He points out that it is usual when anything is occurring in a riding to consult important personages in the riding and he particularly points out that it is customary to consult the member. Therefore he asks: Is the hon. Minister of Agriculture debarred from being consulted because he is Minister of Agriculture? In reference to that I say 'no' if the position is for sale, and I say decidedly 'yes' if we are to have decent methods prevailing in Canada. If we are to have, as is almost admittedly the case in reference to almost every other department of the public service, the sale of the different positions for the purpose of bolstering up the government and of consulting the interests of local politicians rather than the interests of the country, whether it is a matter of a public work or of the appointment of a judge or whatever it may be, if that method is also to be carried out in regard to the important question of selecting fit and proper persons to be officers in the various departments of the militia service of Canada, then, I say: Yes, a fit and proper person is the hon. Minister of Agriculture because it was in his territory that this new branch of the service was being created. He more than any other would know the local conditions and know as a matter of political expediency whether it was or was not in the interest of the party that a certain person whose name had been proposed should be appointed or not. It is very happily expressed in an independent Ottawa paper, the 'Evening Journal' of to-day, which says:

> In this case especially, the district in which the regiment is raised, being the personal stamping ground of the Minister of Agriculture, a suspicion is not unreasonable until something more is known that the minister may be actuated by motives which have no connection with the militia service.

I submit to the House, that, having regard to the utterances of the hon. Minister of Agriculture this afternoon and the evident bias he displayed, instead of freeing himself from that imputation, he has stamped indelibly on the minds of the hon. gentlemen who have heard him a very broad and definite suspicion that there are influences at work in this country which are not in the interest of the militia service. The right hon. gentleman also says, and in this he just echoes practically the language of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture represented that there were too many Conservatives among the officers named. That is exactly where the difficulty lies. The hon. Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, as has been said by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, in the very heated address he gave, establishes beyond all question that the fact is that it was a party necessity, aye and a party prejudice that actuated the minister in his determination to strike the name of Dr. Pickel from the list of officers presented by the commanding officer. It is not a question of too many soldiers, because, when it comes to sending our men out to the front to take the risk of losing their lives, of sacrificing their personal interests and of undergoing the hardships of warfare whether in South Africa or elsewhere, there is no discount upon Conservative soldiers. On any occasion we could not have too many of them. The proportion could not be too large and I am exceedingly proud of the fact that on every occasion the percentage of Conservatives was overpoweringly large when they marched upon the field of battle in defence of the country and in defence of the empire.

But when it comes to a matter of what might be regarded as positions of emolument or honour, there may be too large a proportion of Conservative officers. In this idea the Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture seem to be at one. I believe that on reflection, the Prime Minister will find that the speech he made this afternoon was, to say the least, injudicious. He told us that the chief cause of this trouble was that there was too large a proportion of Conservatives in the list of officers. I never understood until now, that when it came to the question of whether a man should serve his King or not, the question of Conservative or Liberal was ever raised. It is a national disgrace to Canada that it should be raised now. I regret the incident in one respect, although in another respect it may be well that it has haappened, should it bring about a better state of things. I regret that the Prime Minister and his Minister of Agriculture should plunge us into national disgrace by their definite announcement, that in the future the question of politics will enter into the selection of officers for the militia of Canada. I do not believe that there is any other country under the British Flag in which a responsible minister of the Crown would dare to make such a declaration. The First Minister was excited this afternoon; he was in a fighting mood. He told us that he had been an officer once, although he did not indicate in what particular branch of the service, and I must say I never heard of the right hon. gentleman in that connection, although I do remember something about the banks of the Saskatchewan, but that has passed into ancient history. The right hon. gentleman told us, referring to Lord Dundonald, that he would not be dragooned by any foreigner into assuming any position. When there was a protest from this side of the House against calling Lord Dundonald a foreigner, the right hon. gentleman took back the word, as he found he had said more than was perhaps desirable. It is said that in what is in sober comes out drunk, and the truth slips out sometimes when a man allows himself to become excited. The substitution of the word 'stranger' for the word 'foreigner' did not greatly better the case. At all events I think I speak the sentiments of the Conservatives of Canada when I say, that in the case of this valiant British officer who has seen service for the empire in other parts of the world, who has added additional lustre to the great name he bears, when such a man comes amongst us, the Conservatives of Canada do not regard him as a stranger. We receive him as one of ourselves, and as a valiant defender to that great empire to which we all belong. As to the details of the case we are discussing, the Prime Minister told us that the chief officer in command had no local knowledge of the situation. Well, is is evidently because of the local knowledge and the local prejudices of the Minister of Agriculture, that we have been led into this deplorable incident. It is bad enough to bring party politics into expenditure or public works but when it comes to introducing partyism into the question of who shall fight for the empire and for Canada, it is an unfortunate thing indeed. Let politics stop outside our volunteer force; for God's sake don't import party politics when it comes to selecting men to defend the country. I contend that Mr. Fisher, with his local knowledge, and his local prejudices, was above all the least qualified to recommend these officers for positions. The Minister of Agriculture told us that Dr. Pickel was a strong political opponent of his, and unfortunately in this case, as in the case of the Auditor General and others, the party who tried the case was the man who was interested in the prosecution. It may be an accident, but it is peculiarly significant that the Minister of Agriculture at this particular juncture was taking the place of the Minister of Militia. The Prime Minister told us that it was the right of the cabinet council to scratch off such names as might be objected to. I am not at all sure of that. I am not up in military law, but the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) read authorities which lead us to a different conclusion. When it comes to the cabinet or to the minister scratching the names of officers off the list approved by the General Officer Commanding because they are a little off colour in their political persuasion, I have no hesitation in saying that it is about the worst thing that could happen in the interest of the country. The Minister of Agriculture may be a high authority in aesthetic culture, he may be able to tell us as to the shades of a rose; or as to something in the Oscar Wilde line, but when it comes to a question of robust soldiering, I venture to say that he is the last man to whom we would look for a correct judgement in that regard.

It must have been noticed by the House that the Minister of Agriculture got very angry this afternoon. There was enough to make him angry; but I am glad that it did not make him any more formidable. I have noticed that some large men, when they are angry seem to become more formidable. It rather dwarfed the Minister of Agriculture. We had providence intervening on our behalf, and he really did not look any more dangerous than on other occasions. Now, I have a complaint to make of the Minister of Agriculture, and that is, that while he complains of the hon. member for North Victoria for having brought forward this question, and objects to the medium of communication between Lord Dundonald and the House of Commons, yet he took the very unfair position, the position that reflects no credit upon him, of suppressing a portion of the truth and of refusing to give the whole truth to the House of Commons and through it to the people of Canada. When we reflect on what took place this afternoon—the repeated request of the hon. leader of the opposition that the document which was in the hands of the Minister of Militia should be given to the House; when we know that although it was spoken of as a copy it was practically a duplicate of what came into the hands of the hon. member for Victoria; and when we know what that document contained; it is a very serious reflection upon the government—yes, upon the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, because it was at his instigation that it was refused. It is only of a piece with what we have had on many occasions, that is, that whenever these hon. gentlemen find that by going half way with a story, they can give it a different colouring, they absolutely refuse to divulge the information which will convey to the people the truth and the whole truth in regard to the matter. But I say the House and the people owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for North Victoria—I was going to say the minister, and no doubt he will be a minister sooner or later—for bringing this matter before the House; otherwise we would not have had an adequate conception of what is the real truth of this case. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) objects particularly to the fact that a servant of the Crown should make a disclosure. I want to say that the hon. member has not exactly a correct conception of this matter. The officer of whom we are speaking is not a servant of the Crown so much as he is a servant of parliament and a distinguished servant of Canada for the time being; and it is all-important, when issues arise between the administration and this officer, that the people should know exactly what is taking place between them. It is a case of concealment—a case of the government unfairly suppressing a portion of the facts. It is a case of the government having announced that they would deal with this matter to-day unfairly and dishonestly, retaining a portion of the facts, and refusing to give them to the House, it is a case of the hon. member for North Victoria coming to the rescue, and through the agency of the distinguished officer who has communicated the information, giving that information to the House and the country. I am glad indeed that we have by this means the opportunity of ascertaining what the exact facts are. Well, we have this trio—the First Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Labelle—all uniting in a certain conclusion of the whole matter. The personal organ of the Minister of Agriculture has already dismissed the commanding officer. It points out that he must retire, that there is no alternative ; and the vicious, excited way in which the Minister of Agriculture spoke this afternoon leaves no question on our mind that so far as he is concerned he is determined that this official, who has forsooth had the temerity of opposing what he describes as a Minister of the Crown, meaning himself, shall certainly get his walking papers and be sent home. Whether that is the case or not—and I suspect that Lord Dundonald is not very particular in that regard—it has come to this, that the Chief Officer Commanding the militia of Canada cannot have a voice on a matter upon which he has formed an opinion, and upon which he alone, as distinguished from the Minister of Agriculture, is entitled to have an opinion. Whether this incident will result in Lord Dundonald retiring from connection with the militia of Canada or not, it will perhaps be a salutary lesson to gentlemen such as the Minister of Agriculture, that there is a limit beyond which they cannot swell themselves, and that they must remember that they cannot set the bounds entirely in regard to the selection of officers for the militia service. I am glad, therefore, that this matter has come up. We have a number of cases at the present time involving the issue as to whether certain officials or certain members of the cabinet shall have complete sway as against the best interests of the people. There is a united desire on the part of the three gentlemen whom I have named to get rid of this officer, just as there is a manifest desire to get rid of the Auditor General. But in both of these cases the people will be heard from, and we shall see whether the hon. gentlemen will not be obliged to withdraw from the exalted position they assume.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP. Mr. Speaker, I would not occupy the time of the House, even for the few moments that I intend to speak on this subject, were it not that I feel that it is one of the utmost importance to this country. We are to-day writing a page of Canadian history which a few years hence when hon. gentlemen opposite may be on your left, and the hon. gentleman at your left may be on your right, they and this country may all wish had never been written. I hope it will not be thought presumptuous on my part if I venture to call the attention of the House to the fact that this afternoon, not only the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture, but even the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, appeared wholly to misconceive the question before us.

On listening to these hon. gentlemen, one would think that it is Lord Dundonald who is on trial before this House. But it must be evident to everybody who has followed the debate, that although the chief defendant has absented himself from court, and although his co-defendant fled even before him, still it is really the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Militia who are on trial here to-day. And when we consider the circumstances which have come to light, surely we are not to be blamed if we cannot help coming to the conclusion that the gentleman who is in command of His Majesty's forces in this country was not treated with proper respect by these ministers of the Crown. It would be difficult to come to any other conclusion even if we were to judge them solely by the contempt they show for this House in absenting themselves from this debate to-night. This afternoon again and again we heard it said—and I was sorry to hear the language used—that Lord Dundonald was a servant of the minister and a servant of the government. Surely no one seriously would contend that a gentleman in command of His Majesty's forces in Canada is a servant of either the Minister of Militia or the government. I would rather say that he is in the same position which the ministers themselves occupy—that he is peculiarly a servant of the people. And, Sir, it is a proud position to be a servant of the people. And if we admit that they are all servants of the people, then we, the representatives of the people, surely have something to say regarding the way in which they behave themselves ; and while I would be sorry to use any term which might be objectionable, I am more warranted in finding fault with the Ministers of Militia and Agriculture for their absence from the House, when their conduct is being discussed, than they were in their strictures upon General Lord Dundonald. In dealing with matters of which we can only know by hearsay, we may perhaps arrive at some accurate opinion if we view them in the light to be derived from the facts as they have been disclosed to-day. What are these facts ? A speech was made a week ago by Lord Dundonald in Montreal. Whether that speech was wisely made or not, it is not for me to say, but it was made, and I presume no one doubts that Lord Dundonald may be called on by the Minister of Militia to answer for any speech he may make. But the Minister of Militia undertook to controvert that speech. He undertook to answer it in this House, and the Minister of Agriculture himself appeared before this House as witness to contradict the charge made by Lord Dundonald. What was that charge ? It was distinctly that the efficiency of our Canadian militia was being impaired by political intrigue and party influence, and with that charge Lord Dundonald associated directly the name of the Minister of Agriculture. All those who were present this afternoon heard the statement made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in reply to that charge. The hon. gentleman did not speak impromptu or in excitement or without consideration, but he read a carefully prepared statement, purporting to give an exact account of what took place. And surely we have the right to expect from a member of this House, and particularly from a minister of the Crown, the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. After the hon. gentleman had read his statement he was followed by his colleague the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), who very minutely confirmed and corroborated every statement made by the Minister of Agriculture. And I must say—as I said at the moment to an hon. gentleman opposite who happened to be sitting beside me—that if the statement of the Minister of Agriculture were true, if he stated the whole truth, then he had made out a good answer to the charge of Lord Dundonald. Hon. members of this House must have come to the same conclusion, namely, that the charge of Lord Dundonald was ill-founded, and had the case rested there and gone to the country in that position, no doubt that would be the general verdict of the people. No doubt the general verdict would be that the Minister of Agriculture had not interfered politically, that he had merely, happening to act in the absence of the Minister of Militia, formally signed a document for the Minister of Militia, and only signed it because Dr. Pickel had declined to act and had requested Col. Smart to withdraw his name. But we had additional light shed on the matter. A little later my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) read to this House a statement of Lord Dundonald, and the effect of that statement was such that the Minister of Agriculture felt compelled to rise to his feet and expressly and explicitly declare that he did interfere and that his interference was due to the fact that there were too many Conservatives in the appointments. The English language would fail to enable any man to speak more definitely and clearly than the hon. Minister of Agriculture did when he said that he had struck certain names off the list of officers for political reasons. What are we to think of the Minister of Agriculture and of the government and of the right hon. the First Minister himself ? Perhaps the absence of the right hon. gentleman to-night is due to his dread that his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, might make another similar break this evening to that which he made this afternoon. We find the Minister of Agriculture himself, when driven into a corner by my hon. friend from North Victoria, expressly admitting that political influences had actuated him in striking certain names off the list, what are we to say as to the truth of the charge made by Lord Dundonald. I am not here to defend Lord Dundonald, but simply, as a representative of the people, to inquire whether the charge made by him is true. It is rather singular that hon. gentlemen opposite, even down to the Minister of Agriculture, will disclaim the propriety of introducing politics into militia matters. Sir, every man in this country, whatever may be his politics or profession or occupation, will admit, speaking in the abstract, that nothing could be more ruinous to our militia system than the introduction into it of politics. Yet we find the hon. minister, though admitting that such a doctrine is founded on truth, most reluctantly compelled to admit that he has introduced the system of political warfare even into our militia organization. After having seen and heard the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon and after having had the facts complained of by Lord Dundonald disclosed to us, we can quite understand that the unfortunate head of the forces in this country may have been goaded almost into desperation by the pin-pricks of the man who made such an exhibition as was made by the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, and determined to put an end no matter at what cost, to that hon. gentleman's interference. It seems to me that the members of the government might well pause to consider the effect which such an exhibition as we have witnessed is calculated to have on Canadian credit and reputation in the motherland. We are a great country and are bound to become greater, but we cannot afford to be regardless of the reputation we are building in the motherland and in other countries as well ; and I venture to say that there is not a minister on the treasury benches, nor is there one of their supporters who, speaking privately, would deny that such an episode as this is calculated to injuriously affect the credit and reputation of our country and tarnish the honour of Canadians in the motherland and all over the world. Far be it from me to suggest what might be done, but this is a case in which the members of the cabinet might well lay aside party prejudice. I have nothing to say regarding the propriety or impropriety of Lord Dundonald's remarks, except that the provocation may have been such as would influence any jury to decide that it justified him in taking what he believed to be the proper course in the interests of the militia and the defence of the empire, even if he personally had to fall in consequence of the stand he took. I can quite understand —and I am speaking without personal knowledge of Lord Dundonald, whom I have never seen—I can quite understand from Lord Dundonald's history in the past, that a man who has fought for his Queen on so many hard fought fields, should have deliberately risen in Montreal, knowing he was about to put a check to all possibilty of a future military career for himself in this country, and called attention—as he deemed it his duty to call attention, no matter at what personal cost—to what he considered a vicious system in the hope that by so doing he might have that vicious system suppressed.

That, Sir, I should think, from what we know of the man, was very likely, the feeling that actuated him. And, I venture to suggest that, if the government would lay aside political prejudices, if they would rise to the occasion, if they would be as large minded as Lord Dundonald was, supposing him to have been actuated by the sentiments I have indicated, they might well say: There was a wrong on your side, but, perhaps there was a wrong on our side: If you did speak, you had provocation. And it must be admitted that he had provocation because the hon. ministers themselves have said that politics should not be allowed to interfere in militia matters and they were allowed to interfere in this case. If the government would take that position, how much better it would be for our country, how much it would redound to the honour of hon. gentlemen opposite themselves? I do not speak as a party man; as a party man I would rather they should dismiss Lord Dundonald, dismiss him with all the ignominy and odium they could heap upon him, because, I am thoroughly convinced the people would resent such an action on their part. But, as a Canadian, as one who wishes to see our militia force made as efficient as possible, I desire that the best officers that we can get from England should be secured for our service; and, every time a general comes out here and finds things made difficult and unpleasant for him, it will be all the harder for us to get good men to come and take command of our militia. As a Canadian, therefore, I would beg the government to see whether it may not be possible, through the mutual concessions I suggest, to cause this unfortunate incident to be forgotten and to arrange that we may retain the valuable services of Lord Dundonald. The one and only argument that we have heard in justification of the Minister of Agriculture is that he was, in this case the Minister of Militia. The question is asked over and over again why the General Officer Commanding should not yield to the decision of his chief. But what right has the Minister of Militia to abdicate his functions, and to hand over to the Minister of Agriculture the power to declare who shall and who shall not serve His Majesty in the forces of Canada? Under the system of responsible government, to which the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) referred, what right has a gallant knight, decorated by His Majesty, who cannot descend to certain acts in his department, to step aside and allow a humble colleague to do what he would scorn to do? The result of it is that we are liable to lose the services of a most valuable and efficient officer. I trust that the government will consider whether it would not be in the interest of the force in Canada to abstain from political interference with that force, and also retain the services of Lord Dundonald. If they do so, I am quite sure that, from one end of the country to the other they will receive more credit than they can possibly gain by persisting in the course outlined by some of the hon. gentlemen who spoke on that side this afternoon.

Mr. F. D. MONK. It is very satisfactory to see that defenders of Lord Dundonald have not been wanting during the debate which has taken place this afternoon. It would have heen a pity indeed if a man occupying such a position as he occupied, with such a career as he has had, and with such services to his credit since he has been in Canada, should have had his case passed over with the mere personal explanation with which it was intended that it should be smothered this afternoon. I think it is a great pity that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) should be absent from the House at a time when a discussion of this importance is taking place. For, in reality, under the motion that has been made by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) it is not the case of Lord Dundonald which we are discussing here, but it is the case of the Minister of Agriculture himself, who stands impugned, accused, before this House, of violating the most elementary principle of our Militia Law which requires that there shall be no political interference with the organization of our militia forces. Let me speak for the province of Quebec and from very reliable information which I have received. I am happy to say that, uniformly throughout that province, it has been recognized that, since his arrival in this country the General Officer Commanding, with a great deal of tact, a great deal of energy and a deep knowledge of the affairs he has been called upon to administer, has greatly improved the militia administration in the province of Quebec. He has improved the army service; he has improved the Intelligence Department. He has many things in common with the French Canadians of my province; he speaks their language fluently; and from military men of that race in my province, I have heard it uniformly said that the relations existing between him and them have been generally satisfactory. Now, I do not wish to repeat what has already been said, but it seems to me that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has lost sight of an important aspect of the affair which should be stated. The ministers of the Crown occupy a dual position. As ministers, they themselves, are servants of the Crown. They are named by the Crown and their duties are defined by the statute—

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. They are responsible to the people.

Mr. MONK. Not as ministers ;—as ministers they are responsible to nobody but the Crown. They are responsible to us as privy councillors, that is as constitutional advisers of the Crown. And it is just as illegal for the Minister of Agriculture to interfere with the administration of any of the departments of state except his own as it would be for me to interfere with the Department of Agriculture or any other. Of course that is a distinction that is recognized by all the authors who have written on constitutional law. It is a virtue of the custom of parliament that the constitutional advisers of the Crown happen at the same time to be ministers in charge of departments. It has not always been so. Less than a hundred years ago it was not so in England. But from the very fact of the introduction of constitutional government in England and of its subsequent introduction in this country, the custom has taken root which requires that those who, as advisers of the Crown are responsible to parliament, should be those called upon by the Crown to take charge of the different departments of the state. I mention this fact because there seems to have been an impression, from some of the observations made this afternoon that it was quite legal and regular and constitutional for the minister in charge of one of the departments of state to go over into another department and order this or that to be done. And my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture himself, when he admitted to-day in his subsequent exp'anation—changing completely the facts of his first personal explanation —he seemed to think it was not only his right but his duty, long before the departure of the Minister of Militia, to interfere with the constitution of this regiment and to see to it that it should be organized upon a proper basis, and the theory which my hon. friend the Prime Minister advocated when he spoke this afternoon was that, as a minister of the Crown, having charge of the Department of Agriculture, and with duties strictly circumscribed by laws passed by parliament, the Minister of Agriculture still had the right, when the organization of this regiment was decided upon, to go to the Department of Militia, to have conferences with the officers charged with the organization of that regiment and to interfere, to, in fact, take an important part himself in the organization of that regiment. I submit that by so doing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) was clearly going beyond the limits placed upon his authority by parliament itself. This is a point of some importance, and I give a few words in explanation of it, because the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who is a great deal fairer, I know, than he desires to appear to be, seems to have ignored that fact. If the House will take the trouble to refer to the statute creating the department of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture and defining its limits, it will be found that parliament has strictly circumscribed the subjects upon which he can exercise jurisdiction. In section 2 of chapter 24 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, section 4, I find the following :

> The following subjects shall be under the control and direction of the Minister of Agriculture, that is to say, agriculture, immigration and emigration, public health and quarantine, the marine and immigrant hospital at Quebec, arts and manufactures, census, statistics and the registration of statistics, patents of invention, copyright, industrial designs and trade marks, experimental farm stations.

Beyond that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture has no right of interference whatever. His authority is strictly circumscribed by parliament, and he has no more right to interfere with the Department of Militia, or with the organization of a regiment, than any other private citizen. Otherwise, if we were to adopt the theory of the right hon. gentleman, we would find that in reality every member of this House, conversant with the localities where regiments were to be organized, would have a right, as members of this House, to interfere and to control the organization of such regiments ; and what would that be but political interference and the introduction of politics into our military organization, a condition of affairs entirely undesirable in this country ?

Now, let us for a moment leave the Department of Agriculture, and turn to the organization of the Department of Militia. I shall quote one or two sections in regard to this department, in order to show with what care parliament has determined and defined the duties of the Minister of Militia and the duties of the Officer Commanding, whose conduct has been, to a certain extent, under discussion this afternoon. The Department of Militia is organized under chapter 41, Revised Statutes of Canada, and by section 4 of that statute it is enacted as follows :

> There shall be a Minister of Militia and Defence who shall be charged with and be responsible for the administration of militia affairs, including all matters involving expenditure and of the fortifications, gun boats, ordnance, ammunition, arms, armouries, stores, munitions and habiliments of war belonging to Canada.

2. The Minister of Militia and Defence shall have the initiative in all matters involving the expenditure of money.

3. The Governor in Council shall, from time to time, make such orders as are necessary respecting the duties to be performed by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Now, how are defined and how has parliament expressed itself in regard to the important functions of the General Officer Commanding? We find that definition at section 37 of chapter 41, Revised Statutes of Canada:

There shall be appointed an officer who holds the rank of colonel or rank superior thereto in Her Majesty's regular army, who shall be charged, under the orders of Her Majesty, with the military command and discipline of the militia, and who, while he holds such appointment, shall have the rank of major general in the militia, and shall be paid at the rate of four thousand dollars per annum in full of all pay and allowances.

Under the regulations provided for in this section it is stated of the General Officer:

He is the principal adviser of the Minister of Militia and Defence on all military questions; is charged with the general supervision of the military branch of the department; issues general orders, and holds periodical inspections of the militia.

He is charged with the distribution, quartering and localization of the militia; with the preparation and maintenance of detailed plans for mobilization; with the preparation of schemes for offensive and defensive operations; and with the collection and compilation of military information.

He recommends to the Minister of Militia and Defence fit and proper persons for appointment to commissions in the militia; and proposes fit and proper officers for promotion, for staff and other military appointments and for military honours and rewards.

It is sufficient to read chapter 41, creating and organizing the Militia Department, and the regulations governing the duties of the Minister of Militia and the General Officer Commanding to see that the will of parliament was that in the organization of regiments the approval of the nominations of all officers and of all promotions should be carefully guarded by the General Officer Commanding. Had this discussion been left this afternoon with the general statement, the personal explanation of the Minister of Agriculture, what would have been the impression left upon the House and on the country? It would have been that the Minister of Agriculture at the instance of the Minister of Militia, absent for a short time, had merely performed a purely ministerial service to his colleague in initialling for him the list of these nominations. And what would have been the position before this House, before parliament, to whom all these men are ultimately responsible, and before the country, of the General Officer Commanding? It would have been that the statement made by him at a dinner given to him by his brother officers in regard to that most important branch of the administration of the state was a statement not founded on fact. It seems to me if the General Officer Commanding was aware that that was the turn which the proceedings in this House were going to take this afternoon, he should have put simultaneously into the hands of his superior, the Minister of Militia, and of my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) a man of military experience and with a military career, the memorandum which he did put in their hands, a memorandum which throws a very different complexion on the whole subject. Is there or is there not truth in the statement, uncontradicted, but rather confirmed, by the Minister of Agriculture, that the organization of this regiment was determined upon early in the winter, in the month of February last; that its organization was approved by the government and handed over to the officers who legally had charge of that organization? Is it a fact that from the very inception the Minister of Agriculture interfered with that organization, blocked it and, for political purposes, as he admits this afternoon, endeavoured to organize the regiment himself and to obtain the nomination of the principal officers of that regiment?

It is impossible to refer to that very frank statement made by the colonel in command of the regiment to Lord Dundonald without being extremely surprised at the state of affairs revealed. Is it a fact that Dr. Pickel, whose nomination is here in question, was objected to for on other reason than that he was a strong political opponent of the hon. Minister of Agriculture? Is it a fact that the hon. Minister of Agriculture was determined to block the whole organization unless Dr. Pickel's name was withdrawn? That has not been categorically contradicted by the hon. Minister of Agriculture and uncontradicted it gives us a clear explanation from the hon. gentleman of the reason that actuated Dr. Pickel, who, seeing that the regiment could not be organized unless he withdrew, which withdrawal was due to the unwarranted personal interference of the Minister of Agriculture authorized his name to be withdrawn. Is it a fact that the hon. Minister of Agriculture instead of confining his observations and remarks to the efficiency of the new regiment gave himself the trouble to look up the pedigrees and assure himself of the political affinities of the gentlemen whose names had been submitted to the hon. the Minister of Militia? In face of these facts and the other facts stated in the letter evidently written by the colonel in defence of the position taken by the General Officer Commanding is it not a fair question for parliament and the members of parliament to inquire if we are going to again this year vote a sum, as we are asked to vote, of over $2,000,000 for the organization of the militia which cannot be an effective militia, if, when regiments are organized, the only question inquired into is as to the political tendencies of the officers appointed ? I yield to no one in vindication of the rights and authority of this parliament. Nobody, as far as I have seen this afternoon, has called in question the right of the government to control the Department of Militia and Defence as it controls every other department, but I say this that I for one on behalf of my constituents will oppose any increase in the expenditure for militia purposes if we are going to have in the organization of our regiments such interference as has been admitted this afternoon by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. This is surely not a question of political division. I do not consider it is such. I am prepared as I am sure all other members of this parliament are prepared to vote the necessary sums to place the defence of this country upon such a basis as will allow us to hold up our heads firmly and defend our country against any invader. But, at the same time, if we are to find in the constitution of any government men as unpatriotic, as unfair to the faithful servants of the Department of Militia and Defence, as the General Officer Commanding, it seems to me, has shown himself to be on this occasion, I say that we will be entitled to scrutinize with great care the expenditure which is foreshadowed to us in the estimates brought down to parliament this year.

As to the fact that the General Officer Commanding saw fit to make that statement which he did make at a dinner given to him by these officers, who, after all, may be called upon at any moment to stand the brunt of the fighting and to see to it that the forces which they organize are effective, it may be that he might have adopted some other form of communication, but if the provocation to which, since the month of February, the interference of the hon. Minister of Agriculture has subjected him to had been imposed upon myself I venture to say that I would have taken the first opportunity of freeing myself and my co-workers from the interference of a man who had nothing whatever, as minister to another department, to do with the administration of the Department of Militia and Defence.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, a few words in reference to the episode which has been engaging the attention of the House for the last three or four hours. Let us look at the facts briefly in reference to it. A gentleman was appointed commander in chief of the militia of Canada under an Act of parliament which requires that an imperial officer of at least the rank of colonel shall be appointed who is responsible not only to the people of this country but responsible to a certain extent as an imperial officer to the imperial authorities. At the dinner which was given to him in Montreal he complained of political interference on the part of one of the ministers in reference to some appointments made in connection with the officers of some of the battalions. Whether he was right or wrong, as my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) have stated, it matters very little. If he has been wrong it is for the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) to discipline him. The real question before the House and which is one of serious moment to the people of this country is whether political interference shall be permitted in militia matters. Before I pass from the first part of this question, I wish to say that I am not of the opinion that the Commander-in-Chief of the militia force of Canada was not fully justified in the action he took. Let us consider the circumstances. He sends an Order in Council to his minister. The Order in Council is cancelled and some of the names submitted by the Commander-in-Chief, who, I suppose acted upon the report of the officers of his department, are approved of. The general states in his memorandum which he sent to Colonel Hughes that he was informed that this Order in Council which he presented for the approval of council was acceptable to the government. Let us be particular as to his words.

A day or two after the first list was cancelled a further list was submitted to me by the adjutant general which, I was informed, would be acceptable and that the organization of the corps would be permitted to proceed.

Mr. CLARKE. Who said that ?

Mr. HAGGART. The Commander-in-Chief, Lord Dundonald, said that. Having that assurance he prepares the Order in Council. To his astonishment he gets it returned to him with a portion of it approved of, but with one person's name struck out at the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture. That is the position that Lord Dundonald, the Commander-in-Chief, was placed in. He submits gracefully to the cancellation of the Order in Council. He prepares another Order in Council submitted by the adjutant-general, and he is informed that it will be acceptable. It is returned to him with the name of one of the officers whom he recommended stricken out. What greater insult to the Commander-in-Chief, or to the adjutant-general. Had the minister in charge of the department asked the Commanding Officer to strike out the name before it was presented, or had he been asked to withhold the recommendation to council, I have no doubt he would have done it. But would any gentleman submit to the treatment measured out to Lord Dundonald in this respect ? The returning of the list with the initials of the Minister of Agriculture objecting to the appointment of the officer recommended, was an insult to the Commander-in-Chief, that no English gentleman would have submitted to. As to whether Lord Dundonald is an official or an employee of the government it matters not. He is the Commander-in-Chief of the militia, loaned us by the imperial authorities, and he derives his authority under statute. Did you listen to the ingenious statement of the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon? He gave us to understand that Dr. Pickel's name was stricken off at the suggestion of the colonel of the regiment, and with the consent of Dr. Pickel himself. But, when Col. Smart's letter was read, it completely set that statement of the Minister of Agriculture at rest.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Minister of Agriculture read a letter dated May 19th from Col. Smart, informing him that Dr. Pickel had requested to be relieved entirely of any connection with the regiment.

Mr. HAGGART. Ah, yes; but Col. Smart's letter explains that, and puts a different face on it. Col. Smart came here to get his officers gazetted, and he found that the minister refused to gazette with the name of Dr. Pickel included. Col. Smart then went to Dr. Pickel and Dr. Pickel, who is a gentleman, said: Rather than see no regiment in this county, I will withdraw my right to be an officer. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not in his place this evening, because I want to say that he stated at a caucus down in the eastern townships, that no Pickel would be appointed to any position in the regiment. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not here, because I want to have his statement as to whether that is true or not. It is published in the public press this afternoon. The Minister of Agriculture stated further: that the appointment of officers in this regiment were to be in his own hands. Is that true or not? It must be true, because the statement of the Commander-in-Chief is corroborated to the fullest extent by the statement of the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon. He told us that he did not interfere with the appointments to that regiment, but he also said that the 53rd regiment was virtually a Conservative regiment, and he was bound to see that the officers of the new regiment of dragoons should not have the Conservative tendencies of the officers of the 53rd. He told us that Dr. Pickel was an active political partisan, and that the officers were evidently recommended by Senator Baker, the Conservative organizer in that section, because Senator Baker's son was one, his son-in-law another, and a man who was married to his niece, another. Then, the Minister of Agriculture told us that he was bound to see that the new regiment would not have the political tendencies of the 53rd.

Mr. FISHER. May I interrupt the hon. gentleman to ask, whether it is true that he stated a few moments ago, that I had said in the eastern townships that no Pickel would be made an officer?

Mr. HAGGART. I stated that I read it in the papers.

Mr. FISHER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I thought he stated it for himself.

Mr. HAGGART. I will read the article which is taken from the Montreal 'Star.'

Mr. FISHER. If it is taken from the 'Star,' I can understand it.

Mr. HAGGART. It is dated Knowlton—I don't know where that is.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry for you.

Mr. HAGGART. Here is the article to which I refer:

Knowlton, June 10.—The disclosure made by Lord Dundonald in his recent speech at the banquet tendered to him in Montreal did not come with such surprise to the people of this section of the country as it did to those of other parts of Canada.

It had been known and generally discussed throughout this district that the Hon. Sydney Fisher held a caucus at Cowansville several weeks ago with some of his political supporters, at which he told them that the commissions in the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons were at his disposal, and that he had under consideration the naming of the officers.

It has been reported too, by Mr. Fisher's friends that he had assured them that the recommendation of Dr. Pickel as major and of Mr. T. R. Pickel as captain in 'E' squadron of the regiment, would not be sanctioned, and that nobody of the name of Pickel would receive a commission.

Mr. FISHER. I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, that that statement is a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end.

Mr. HAGGART. I made the statement on the authority of this paper, and it has received corroboration by the statements made by the hon. gentleman here this afternoon. He told us that he opposed the appointment of Dr. Pickel, and that of five or six other officers, because he was bound to see that the Scottish Dragoon regiment would not have the political complexion of the 53rd battalion.

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HAGGART. And now he says, 'hear, hear.'

Mr. FISHER. That it would not be the same old Tory organization that the old regiments were.

Mr. HAGGART. Very well, then. The colonel of the regiment selected the officers, and together with the District Officer Commanding, he recommended the officers to the General Officer Commanding. These were the men who ought know what officers to select, but the Minister of Agriculture, the political representative of that section of the county steps in and declared that these officers would have to receive his imprimatur.

Mr. FOWLER. His incubator.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that the way our militia is to be treated? Does the Minister of Agriculture expect that an English gentleman. an officer of the imperial service will submit to that? There may be a question of precedence between the General Officer Commanding and the Minister of Agriculture, and it may be extremely impolite for the General Officer Commanding to consult by telephone with the Minister of Agriculture. He states that it is a matter of necessity that time is necessary. The general makes an appointment with the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman does not keep it. He telephones again to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman—oh, the idea of discussing any matters of such importance with him over the telephone. He says he is a cabinet minister and the general knows where his office is; if the general wishes to consult him, or to have any conversation with him in reference to the matter, let him call at his office and see him. It is a question of who is the superior, the officer commanding the militia of Canada or the cabinet minister. You will notice that the statement of the minister differs from that of the general in that particular. The general says that on two occasions he made an appointment with the minister, and the minister failed to keep his appointment. The minister in his statement says he told the general: 'I have an office up town, you know where my office is, I am a cabinet minister, and you can come up and call on me.' That is a question of veracity between the two gentlemen. But the question before us is this: was there any political interference with the general in his appointments? Can it be denied that there was, after the statement of the Minister of Agriculture to-day? He gave the whole case away. He admitted it by attempting to justify himself. In fact, the right hon. gentleman who leads the government attempted to a certain extent to justify it. He asked if it was not the duty of the General Officer Commanding to consult the two parties in reference to who should be appointed as officers of this regiment, and he thinks that the general acted indiscreetly in not doing so. Is the General Officer Commanding to be influenced in his appointments by political considerations at all? No. He took the right course. The colonel who was to raise the regiment recommended the officers; the general submitted the list to the officer commanding the district; and the Minister of Militia, acting on that information, and without any political information at all, recommended it to council. If we are to have an efficient commander-in-chief, he must be a man of honour who has respect for his own reputation. Will any man of honour, a British officer, submit to the indignities to which the General Officer Commanding has been obliged to submit, and retain his position? In reference to the charge that he communicated his objections to Colonel Hughes instead of to the Minister of Militia, what position was he in? He saw in the papers that this question was to be debated in the House to-day. The communication that was sent to him by the Minister of Militia was simply the question whether the report published in a certain paper was correct or not. He answers that. He was not consulted at all in reference to the case that the Minister of Militia or the Minister of Agriculture would make. There was nothing left to him but to get some friend of his, a brother officer, to state his case before the House to-day; and, as a man of honour, he sent to the Minister of Militia a duplicate of the statement which he had sent to his officer friend in the House. The question, then, for the people of the country to consider is not so much whether it is a breach of discipline on the part of the commander-in-chief. If it is a breach of discipline let him suffer for it. But I say there has been no breach of discipline in his case. He has cut the painter; he has been insulted long enough; his advice has not been taken; and there was no other course for him as a gentleman to take. But the question for the people of the country to consider is this, whether there has been any political interference with a department which, in every government, must be considered above and beyond party politics, if we are to have an efficient force to defend the country. But who can doubt that there has been political interference in this instance, after the statement of the Minister of Agriculture in this House to-day?

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I wish to say half dozen words in reference to this matter. And first of all let me reiterate what my hon. friend on my left has so forcibly said, that every hon. member who has called in question the action of the Minister of Agriculture and who has defended the action of Lord Dundonald is just as jealous of the prerogatives of this parliament and of the rights of ministers of the Crown as any hon. gentleman who has attempted to defend the Minister of Agriculture. Not one of these gentlemen would sustain any action on the part of any officer that would invade the prerogatives of hon. gentlemen opposite. But Lord Dundonald, as the officer commanding the Canadian militia, is responsible, in the eye of the people at any rate, for the efficiency of that force, and it is to him rather than to the Minister of Agriculture that they look for the maintenance of the efficiency of that force and for the preservation of order and discipline in it. The attempt made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture this afternoon to defend himself from the allegations made at Montreal by Lord Dundonald has not been entirely successful. As has been pointed out, the hon. minister has frankly admitted that he has been interfering, and interfering to the detriment of the organization of the regiment in question, by objecting to the appointment of officers whose names were sent to him by the General Officer Commanding. He admitted frankly in the speech he made this afternoon that the name of Dr. Pickel was scored out because of his political affiliations.

The minister himself made that perfectly clear this afternoon. There were too many Tories being nominated for commissions from the district of Sweetsburg. The Minister of Agriculture, who was desirous that there should not be a semblance of politics in the administration of the force or in the organization of this regiment, thought that he knew more about the gentlemen who were being nominated to hold commissions in this new corps than the colonel to whom was given the responsible task of organizing it, or of his superior Lord Dundonald who had endorsed his recommendations. And because there were two Tories nominated by those best calculated to judge, this hon. minister steps in and stamps his foot down vigorously and says the organization of this regiment will not be completed unless a change is made in the personnel of the officers. There were too many Tories in the 53rd Regiment, he said, and he must see to it that the error of having Tory officers is not repeated in the regiment we are about to organize. But what prevented the political friends of the hon. gentleman joining the 53rd Regiment? Was there any barrier to their being admitted to commissions in the regiment at all? If they are not to be found in the regulations of the militia, the hon. gentleman himself might give the reasons why.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have.

Mr. CLARKE. There were no good reasons given, and the allegation that men were debarred from holding commissions in the militia force because of their political affiliations cannot be substantiated by the hon. gentleman.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is true.

Mr. CLARKE. I regret that the hon. minister reiterates that statement, because I have known something of the militia force in my section of Ontario during many years, and I never knew of any time or occasion when any gentleman in the militia force, because of his political affiliations, was debarred or prevented from receiving promotion or from being given a commission. Let me tell the hon. Minister of Militia that this is not the first time complaints have been made of the injury of the militia force by the promotion of political partisans by hon. gentlemen opposite. If this condition of things should continue, if the manly protest of Lord Dundonald does not produce the desired effect, grave danger will result to the force in the future. I have had pointed out to me an abuse in the organization of the army medical corps in the city of Toronto recently. The applications of men eminently qualified to hold positions in that corps, whose presence would be a guarantee of its fitness and excellence, were turned down, and political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite appointed because of pressure brought to bear on the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Give the names.

Mr. CLARKE. I will give the hon. minister the names in private and will give him the opportunity of making a statement any time he sees fit respecting these names. I have nothing to conceal; but I am surprised that the Minister of Militia should have allowed such a condition of things to exist in connection with the establishment of this new regiment in the eastern townships, from which so much was to be expected. The testimony borne by hon. gentlemen opposite themselves as to the character and qualifications of Lord Dundonald to occupy the position he now holds is the strongest possible proof that can be adduced that all he is aiming at is the efficiency of our militia force. Has Lord Dundonald interfered in political matters? Has he given any indication that he desires the appointment of officers in any regiment because of their political affiliations? None at all; but as my hon. friend (Mr. Northrup) has said, after having been repeatedly pin-pricked by gentlemen who ought to have known better, he became restive and felt it his duty to enter an emphatic protest, once for all, against such political interference, and to take such steps as he thought necessary to make the Canadian militia what we all desire it shall be. I shall not take up any more time except to enter an emphatic protest against the action of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. The statement made by Lord Dundonald and the protest he has entered will find a responsive echo in the breast of every man in Canada who has any regard for the militia force of this country, who desires to see it in a state of efficiency, removed altogether from the influence of party politics. Lord Dundonald is not an unknown man. He came here with an illustrious record. He had earned his spurs. He earned them long before he came to Canada. He is not a foreigner nor a stranger, Mr. Speaker. His name and his fame are known wherever a man wears the British uniform, from one end to the other of this great empire, and his sole aim since he came here has been—and the Minister of Militia knows it as well as anybody—to promote the efficiency of our militia force, in whose welfare he has taken such a great interest. Is it because hon. gentlemen opposite feared that, becoming exasperated, the General Officer Commanding would enter his protest, they made provision in their new Militia Bill that in future the General Officer Commanding may be a Canadian? Have they found these sturdy Britishers who have been invited over here to command our forces not as pliable as they would like? Have they found that these men would not allow the force to be degraded into a political machine? Is that the reason we are to have this change made, so that those who may command our militia in the future will be men who will bow their heads meekly, and not stand up as men and soldiers should—as Lord Dundonald has done—in emphatic protest against a course which must be destructive of the best interests of the force and inimical to the best interests of Canada? I hope we shall never again, no matter what changes may take place in the force, witness an occurrence such as we have discussed in this House to-day. I repeat there was nothing else for Lord Dundonald to do than to let the people know what was going on in his department behind the scenes. There was nothing else for him but to let them know where the sore spot is. He, who was to be held responsible for the efficiency of the militia, was handicapped at every turn because the nominations made by his officers in the organization of a new regiment were being ignored and set aside solely on the ground that the persons nominated had the misfortune to differ in politics from the Minister of Agriculture. The picture is not a very happy one and does not reflect much credit on the Minister of Agriculture. There was nothing left for Lord Dundonald to do, under the circumstances, but make the speech he did, let the consequences be what they may.

Mr. RUFUS POPE. As this unfortunate subject, Mr. Speaker, which has attracted the attention of the House this afternoon, seems to have originated in the section of country, from which I come, it will perhaps be not altogether out of place that I should say something with regard to it.

The point has been raised this afternoon, and made a good deal of by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who, apparently, has been transformed into a fighting man fit to be head of the department of war, decided that Dr. Pickel had not the qualifications to enable him to fill the position of officer in the reorganized militia force of the district. Previous to this militia reorganization of this particular part of the eastern townships, reorganization took place last year in the county which I have the honour to represent. The old 58th battalion was reorganized as mounted infantry. The principle adopted in that case was that the colonel was called upon by the Department of Militia and Defence to reorganize or create a force of mounted rifles from the old 58th battalion of infantry that had existed in the county for many years. As I understand it, the colonel was given carte blanche to select his officers, irrespective of whether they had passed any examination or not. Mr. Speaker, I am not versed in military matters, and do not pretend to have any knowledge of the details of this reorganization. It not being a political matter, so far as the county I represented was concerned, I took no particular interest other than to give such indirect assistance as I could by communicating, as representative of the county, with the Department of Militia at the instance of those interested. The reorganization took place. Young men were selected for their worth as citizens first. Though not pretending to know anything about militia matters, I believe that the upright, honest, straightforward, patriotic young citizen is the best foundation for a soldier you can find. They were selected on that ground. The officers of that reorganized corps had not passed their examination. The Minister of Militia was good enough to establish a school at Sherbrooke in the autumn after the first year of their drill, and in that school these officers became qualified, and this year they are going out full qualified men after having passed the requisite examination. Under these circumstances, I think that the argument presented to this House by the Minister of Agriculture that Dr. Pickel was not qualified falls to the ground. In the case I referred to, we had an entire regiment, or whatever they choose to call it, reorganized with officers who had not the necessary qualifications. So far as Dr. Pickel is concerned, I am not here to defend him; and. if he were present, it would not be necessary for any man here to rise in his defence, for he is quite capable of defending himself anywhere. He is very popular, a man of splendid character and of precisely the right age. And, as I understand it and know the facts, when the reorganization of this militia force in the county of Missisquoi was proposed they were looking for a man of character, some natural leader of men, to take a prominent position in the militia force and make the organization absolutely successful—not to make it, as the Minister of Agriculture said this afternoon, a political machine; not at all; but to make it what the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) and every other good citizen of Canada would desire, as perfect a militia organization as it was possible to get in that vicinity. In order to accomplish that Dr. Pickel was sought. He did not seek the positon; he is beyond seeking positions; positions are offered to him. The people who know him best offer him the best it is in their power to give him. Those interested in this reorganization sought him and asked him to fill this position. He accepted it with modesty; he felt that he was not a qualified officer, and made certain excuses on that ground. But finally he said: I am a good, loyal citizen of Canada, and if my connection—temporary, if nothing else—will do something to help the reorganization of this militia force and put it on a proper footing, I consent. These were the conditions under which he consented. And we can readily understand that, when it was represented to him that his connection with the force, from the very fact that he was a prominent Conservative, was checking the work of reorganization, he would say at once: I do not want it; it is nothing to me; put me out and go on with the reorganization, if it will please the Minister of Agriculture and help on the work, leave me out. Every one who knows Dr. Pickel knows that that is the way he would regard it, and the Minister of Agriculture knows it perfectly well. So far as the family history in connection with Senator Baker, or with any other Conservative family of the eastern townships, that the Minister of Agriculture has presented here to-day, I do not think it is altogether a ground of fault-finding for those Conservative families to say that they are built of the peculiar stuff of loyalty and patriotism that, when you want to form a militia corps, you are obliged to go to a Conservative family to find the leaders, the men in whom the rank and file will have confidence. It may suit the purposes to-day of the Minister of Agriculture. I listened to that hon. gentleman—of course, I speak under prejudice; I understand that perfectly well; I own the corn, I speak under prejudice. At the same time I listened to the speeches the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) delivered. At first I remarked the articles that had been prepared and typewritten for him and that he read; and then I listened to his second speech, in which he contradicted every position taken in those typewritten articles, and in which he confessed the crime—if it is a crime—with which he is charged. If it is a crime for a public man in a high position, moved by influences which do not appear on the surface, to prefer one citizen as against another as a defender of this country, then the Minister of Agriculture is as guilty as any criminal who ever stood in the dock and that is proven by his own confession in this House. Now, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made a speech this afternoon. He insisted that the General Officer Commanding should understand that the government of this country would not be dragooned. Yesterday we had a statement from one of the right hon. gentleman's lieutenants in the Senate. And, putting these two things together, we have the principle laid down by the Prime Minister that if the General Officer Commanding chose to do anything for the militia of Canada without consulting the Privy Council he would be guilty of dragooning the government.

The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) also said that in his early days he was a military man. I was surprised to hear that. We knew there was a period in his life when he expressed a willingness to be a soldier. We knew that he had said that he would shoulder his musket on the banks of the Saskatchewan to fight on behalf of a rebel. That is the only time I ever heard of the right hon. gentleman shooting a gun in the Dominion of Canada. I do not know if he refers to an earlier part of his career, there may be an earlier part when the right hon. gentleman was unknown to Canada. But, Sir, he is not the only soldier. We have another soldier in the rank of the government, the Minister of Agriculture. It may not be known to you Sir, but I shall inform you in order that you may carry it back to the constituencies in which you commune now and again. The Minister of Agriculture is a gallant officer. True he has never passed any examination, true he has never fought any battle for his country true he has never substantiated any principle that he ever fought upon. But nevertheless he is supposed to be a gallant soldier. He found, perhaps for the benefit of his health, perhaps because he had been promoted to a high position as a member of this government, and become to some extent an aristocrat, that it was incumbent upon him to own a saddle horse, and he bought one. This horse was not easy to ride, and you can understand as well as I can that a man who has toiled hard and long upon the farm, pulling weeds and hoeing corn and digging away and spreading manure, is not suited to a horse that is not docile and to a certain extent cumbersome. It was suggested to the gentleman who was keeping the livery stable in this city that exercise might be given to this horse, and he went to the Minister of Agriculture. It was intimated to him that the volunteers were about to go forth to their annual drill and that somebody might be induced to ride this horse and pay him for its use and, being a great financier, as well as a patriot and a man of war, he determined that his horse should serve his country which he had never done, and that he should get paid for its use. The double temptation was great, and the horse went forth to battle. He battled for 12 days which is the rule in this country and fought those imaginary battles that are fought under these conditions, and then he returned. As you know the volunteer, the man who leaves his business and goes forth into these imaginary battles receives for himself and his horse $1.50 a day, and if you multiply that by 12, you will find that he gets $18 altogether. That is what the man got for the horse belonging to the Minister of Agriculture and himself for those 12 days. Now, Sir, it is the Minister of War we are speaking of, and to show his deep patriotism, his intense interest, as he portrayed it this afternoon, in the development of the militia system of Canada—I was surprised to hear him as I did not know that he possessed such intense interest and patriotism—the generosity of that Minister of War or that pro-Minister of War was so great that when this man came to him with that $18, which he had received for himself and the horse, the Minister of War took the whole $18. We do not often get such sacrifice, such evidence of deep patriotism, such soldierly feeling, perhaps in the empire, not alone in Canada. When I heard the minister to-day and saw him standing with defiance and saying that he assumed the entire responsibility in this matter, although we have had some humorous and ridiculous situations, I do not think we have ever seen anything as funny as the valiant position taken by the pro-Minister of War. Of course there were no guns pointed towards him and he was absolutely safe when fighting this great battle. Sir, a man who had taken $18 for the use of a horse for 12 days when the poor devil only got $18, could not stoop to any position other than the most honourable, and when I heard him I said to myself : At last that animosity, that miserable feeling which I should not entertain towards the Minister of Agriculture must vanish, and when I go forth from this House I must bow with that great respect that should be given by every citizen of Canada when he meets a man moved with these deep, manly, warlike feelings, which the Minister of Agriculture is supposed to entertain.

The representative of the Prime Minister in the Senate yesterday said that the General Officer was to be a servant of Canada. We are all servants of Canada and the true servant is the man who does his work without prejudice. I have heard that the general has not brought this question before the House with a lawyer's dexterity. That is the absolute test of his honesty as a soldier ; let it come here as it might. It is said that he gave the memorandum to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) when he should have given it to the minister. When was that presented to this House ? After the clock pointed to the hour of three. The master owes a duty to the servant as well as the servant to the master, and it is the duty of the master to protect the servant until he does not deserve protection. I ask whether that servant had not the right to expect a letter, a request from the minister to go to his office in order to discuss this situation, to see if he had any defence for the position he took in Montreal. He waited until three o'clock. Would you ask him to wait until four ? Was he to go to the master who had said nothing to him, or was he to present to parliament his simple defence and let parliament decide on its merits ? I believe the general took the right course. We are all servants, the Prime Minister is a servant, the President of the United States is a servant, the King of England is a servant if you like. Do you, Mr. Speaker, or the right hon. Prime Minister or any member of the government tell me that because the King of England receives a salary, that because the President of the United States receives a salary, or that because the Prime Minister receives a salary, there is to be no distinction between any of these, and the most menial servant who labours in this country ? Has the time arrived when no distinction is to be made ? I say that the King of England has a right to be treated according to the position which he occupies, that the President of the United States has the right to be treated according to the position which he occupies, and the right hon. Prime Minister according to the position that he occupies, and I say that the General Officer Commanding who stands at the head of the militia force of Canada, has the right to the same treatment and not to the treatment of the most menial servant in the land.

Mr. GEO. W. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that perhaps the most regrettable thing in connection with this question is the fact that a responsible minister of the Crown and a man who, entertains a very high opinion of the prerogatives and privileges of a minister of the Crown should stand up in this House and in the presence of the commons of Canada make a statement in reference to a matter of this kind such as the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has made this afternoon, a statement, Sir, which before he got through, he was obliged to contradict when he found that there was in possession of an hon. member on this side of the House, a memorandum setting forth the case which contained a clear, distinct and absolute refutation of the statement which the hon. minister had made in his first, prepared and typewritten remarks. I say, Sir, that the conduct of the hon. Minister of Agriculture is a humiliaton not only to himself but a humiliation to the government of which he is a member, and a humiliation to this parliament. It is astonishing that an hon. minister of the Crown, or a supposedly hon. minister, would attempt to misrepresent the facts to the members of this House. In the typewritten statement which the hon. minister read this afternoon to us he claimed to be actuated only by a desire that the portion of the militia force situated in the eastern townships that was being reorganized should be reorganized in the best possible manner and that he was purely and absolutely concerned in seeing that the interests of the militia force were safeguarded. But, before he got through his verbal statement, he made it plain that he was actuated by a desire to introduce politics into the militia of that part of the country and see to it that Conservatives were not appointed to positions of honour in that regiment. Now, Sir, I regret that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) has been compelled by force of circumstances to lower himself in the estimation of the country, for I do consider that he has lowered himself and that he has lowered the position which he occupies in the country. He has been looked upon as a very good Minister of Militia, as good a Minister of Militia as a Liberal could possibly be. But, I am afraid that as a result of the line he has taken to-day he will shrink considerably and that his glory will become considerably lessened in the eyes of the people of Canada. We find that the names of sixteen persons were recommended for appointment as officers of this regiment. Of these persons only two, Major D. W. Stewart and Captain G. Carr, were qualified according to the militia regulations for the positions to which they were appointed. In fact, the very man who was put in the place of Dr. Pickel was not a qualified officer under the militia rules. So that the only argument which the hon. minister or the Minister of Agriculture could possibly bring forward to justify the striking out of the name of Dr. Pickel is the fact that he is a Conservative. Lord Dundonald, the ablest, the best and the most popular Commander-in-Chief that Canada ever had is to have his head struck off merely from the desire of the Minister of Agriculture to introduce politics into the militia. No Tory need apply —that is written on the door of the Militia Department. Perhaps if the general had been a little more yielding, a little more pliant, a little more submissive in his intercourse with the Minister of Agriculture, perhaps if he had been able to realize a little tin god when he saw one he would not have had as much difficulty with the hon. minister as he had. But, in his innocence, he had the temerity to use the telephone with that high and mighty personage, the hon. the Minister of Agriculture. He communicated with the hon. minister by telephone. He attempted to discuss this matter with him, but so great a man as the Minister of Agriculture, this expert on chicken fattening, was not to be treated in such a cavalier manner as to be talked to over the telephone. This great man, this minister must be approached in a more servile, a more submissive manner, because he resents the attempt of the Commander-in-Chief to talk to him over the telephone. We have had some striking differences of opinion as to what has occurred in connection with this matter. We have had such wide divergences of statement that somebody must be telling what is untrue. In plain language somebody must be lying. Who is it? Is it the general, Lord Dundonald, because the statement of Lord Dundonald in respect to what took place between himself and the hon. minister does not coincide with the statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. The divergence is so great and the points of divergence are so essential that it is impossible that it is a mere matter of mistake. The statements of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Col. Smart do not coincide. There is the same wide divergence, the same variance between their statements as there is between the statement of the hon. minister and Lord Dundonald. Col. Smart has no prejudice in this matter as far as I can understand. I believe that Col. Smart is of the same political complexion, at least I have understood so, although I have not the honour of the acquaintance of that gentleman, as has the hon. minister. Col. Whitley who is the brigadier of the district is of the same political complection. Whatever object they would have in changing or colouring would be to do so on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture. But, they are honest, truthful men. We have the statement of Col. Whitley. The statement of Col. Smart is an entirely different and distinct statement from that of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. He says in this letter of May 19, that Dr. Pickel was induced to consent to the withdrawal of the recommendation that had been made and as my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) said that very consent reflects the highest credit and honour upon Dr. Pickel, because if there were no other evidence in the case, that would stamp him as a man of such honour and integrity as would convince any non-partisan person that he would be a most excellent man to have in the militia of Canada. Whom are we to believe? Are we to believe the statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture which is absolutely contradictory in itself or are we to believe the statement of those three gentlemen who have no object whatever in misstating or misrepresenting the facts.

It seems to me that apart from any question of political partisanship we must of necessity believe the statements of two honourable men like Lord Dundonald and Col. Smart. That being so, what sort of an opinion are we to form of the Minister of Agriculture who would so far forget his ministerial position—of which he seems jealous enough when it comes to a question of precedence—what sort of opinion are we to have respecting such a man; what sort of opinion can the country or even his own supporters have respecting him, when he can get up in this House as he did, and make a statement with the sole intention of misleading hon. members, and misleading the people of this country. It has been said that Lord Dundonald was guilty of a grave breech of etiquette, if not discipline, in placing that memo. in the hands of the member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). Let us see how fair the government have been to Lord Dundonald. Yesterday, the Prime Minister announced that the matter would be taken up to-day, and from that hour to the present no communication, so far as we have been informed, has passed between the Minister of Militia and Lord Dundonald. There has been no request to Lord Dundonald to give his side of the case. If the members of the government had been honest, if they desired to be fair to General Dundonald, the Minister of Militia would have read General Dundonald's statement when he was asked to do so. Nay, he would not have waited to have been asked. If the Minister of Militia were a fair man and desired to do justice and fair-play to the gentleman who is claimed, to be an officer of his department; he would not have waited to be asked to read that memorandum, but in connection with his own presentation of the case he would have presented Lord Dundonald's side too. But Lord Dundonald knew well the class of men he was dealing with; he knew well how little dependence was to be placed on their sense of justice, and consequently, in order to protect himself, he placed in the hands of my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) a memo. which at the same time he sent to the Minister of Militia. Why, Sir, in the conduct of a trial, when the plaintiff's attorney states his case to the jury, he also states the pleadings on the other side. Lawyers are not generally supposed to be fair to their opponents, but, Sir, the fairness of lawyers shines out in contrast to the manner in which the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture have treated Lord Dundonald in this affair. Sir, this seems to me as a most regrettable incident, regrettable because of the unworthy conduct—I hope I am not unparliamentary—Mr. Speaker shakes his head.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That means that you are parliamentary.

Mr. FOWLER. The unworthy conduct—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman means to say that, because it would be unparliamentary.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, Mr. Speaker, we will consider it not said; we will let the meaning go just the same. I was somewhat surprised at the statement which fell from the lips of the Prime Minister to-day. Is it to be said by the Prime Minister of a British colony, that a man of British birth and of British parentage, when he comes to a colony of Great Britain, is a foreigner. The Prime Minister when he used the word saw that he made a great mistake. A man who had shed his blood for this great empire; a man whose ancestors for many generations back have fought and bled to the upbuilding of this great empire of ours; such a man to be characterised by the Prime Minister of a British colony as a foreigner——

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. FOWLER. Who says oh? I can quite understand a remark of that kind coming from an hon. gentleman opposite. I have heard the words the Prime Minister has uttered. I can understand something of the feeling that actuates him towards British generals and British officers; but, Sir, thank God, that feeling is not widespread throughout this Dominion of Canada. The Prime Minister amended the word 'foreigner,' by calling the General Officer Commanding a stranger. Dundonald, the man whose name is a household word throughout Canada, to be called a stranger in Canada. The amendment was very little better than the original in the mouth of the Prime Minister. No, Mr. Speaker, Lord Dundonald is neither a stranger nor a foreigner on any soil where the British flag floats. Now, the Minister of Agriculture expressed a great desire that a certain lieutenant who had been in South Africa and who had won the V. C. should be an officer in this regiment. That was right. I believe promotion should go to the most deserving, and that the men who have gone in active service to fight for their country should have a share of the honours. But the Minister of Agriculture and his friends were not always so favourable to that idea. When the coronation of the King was about to take place in London, there was a little junketing trip for some members of the militia of Canada. The Minister of Militia and the government were not so solicitous then that the men who fought in South Africa should be placed on the coronation contingent. We moved from this side of the House, that such men should be given the preference, but it did not suit the purpose of the government, and they voted our motion down. But now it suits the Minister of Agriculture to tell another story, and he says that he was actuated by a desire that this lieutenant who had gallantly won the Victoria Cross should be an officer of that regiment. This lieutenant was and is upon the force, and it was not necessary that he should take the place of Dr. Pickel; there were other vacancies to which he could be appointed. But, any port in a storm; any excuse will suit the Minister of Agriculture when an excuse is hard to find. So far as I am concerned I am not actuated by any desire to make political capital out of this regrettable thing. I am desirous, as are all the members on this side of the House, for the welfare of the milita of Canada. I was at one time connected with our militia, and I am anxious indeed that nothing should be done to injure the efficiency of the force upon which we have to depend in case of difficulty with our neighbours to the south, or with any other nation. I regret exceedingly that the usefulness of a man like General Dundonald—the best and most efficient Commander-in-Chief we ever had in Canada—should be cut short by the conduct—the narrow-minded, bigoted conduct of the Minister of Agriculture. That is what I characterize it. I can characterize his conduct in no other terms that could properly fit it, and I submit with confidence that these terms are not unparliamentary. I say that the narrow and bigoted, politically bigoted conduct of the Minister of Agriculture, will have a most serious effect if the result be, that we are to lose the services of General Lord Dundonald to the militia of Canada.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume, Mr. Speaker, that you will accord me the right of closing the debate, unless some gentleman on the other side wishes to speak.

Mr. FIELDING. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to say, lest there be any misunderstanding, that in the view of the government the question before the House to-day is not the propriety of Lord Dundonald's conduct. That is a separate question. The course of the discussion to-day has perhaps inevitably taken the form of personal explanations by the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture. In the view of the government, the question of the propriety of Lord Dundonald's course is a different matter, and we have purposely refrained from discussing it to-day. It will come up in due course. I merely wish to make this explanation.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), in his remarks, seemed to take for granted that the general officers sent here by England had never realized any responsibility to the government of the country. While that may have been true in the case of some former General Officers Commanding, it has yet to be shown where Lord Dundonald has been anything else than thoroughly constitutional. The Minister of Militia, thank heaven, is the only minister to whom the General Officer Commanding owes allegiance. Let it be understood that no General Officer Commanding, and no other military officer of this country, has to pay allegiance to any Minister of Agriculture, be he never so small or never so great. Lord Dundonald has never yet been charged with being unconstitutional or with failing to recognize to the fullest extent his responsibility to the Minister of Militia. Lord Dundonald has ever been considerate in his dealings with the officers and men with whom he has been associated in Canada. He recognizes to the fullest extent his allegiance to the Minister of Militia and the powers of parliament in relation to the militia of this country. He has never sought to override his minister by claiming that he had a right to approach in his official capacity the Governor General of Canada. And, Sir, Lord Dundonald has never yet been insubordinate to his minister. I have watched his career very carefully; and when hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House sought, in reference to a speech which he made some time ago in Hamilton, to make it appear that he had been guilty of insubordination, his minister never admitted the charge. But there are times when patience ceases to be a virtue; and, as my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has said, the pin pricking of the Minister of Agriculture, not merely during the two or three days that he was acting Minister of Militia, but for many weeks, since last February, all through the months of March, April, and May, and even into the month of June, Lord Dundonald has borne with a great deal of patience. There is a feeling abroad—it was displayed by the Minister of Agriculture on this occasion—that the position of the General Officer Commanding in Canada, because he happens to be an imperial officer, is one of servitude. Let these hon. gentlemen disabuse themselves of any such notion. By accepting service in this country, in the position of General Officer Commanding, neither Lord Dundonald nor any other officer occupies a position of servitude to these people, and is not to be insulted and taunted and thwarted and belittled on every occasion. They may just as well realize once for all that the people of this country are not going tamely to submit to their petty tyranny in order to drive these officers out of the country. However, we shall have that discussed later on. The Minister of Agriculture did me the honour to refer to my having a position on the staff of this country, and he criticised Lord Dundonald for sending to me the communication which was presented to this House to-day, instead of sending it to the Minister of Militia. It has been pointed out, Sir, by more than one hon. member on this side of the House, as well as by hon. gentlemen on the other side, that Lord Dundonald was not called on by the government for any statement here to-day. Had the bald statement of the Minister of Agriculture, supplemented by the statement of the Minister of Militia, gone to the country in the way in which it was read by him to this House to-day, I leave it to this House and the country if a false impression—if I am parliamentary I will say a deliberately false impression—would not have been conveyed to the people of this country. That was only prevented by the fact that yesterday, when the First Minister announced that he was going to bring this matter up to-day, and when he declined my request to have it postponed till Monday, I wondered what the other side of the case might be. As I have already stated, I have in my desk letters on this matter from honourable citizens of the Eastern Townships ; but I wrote a letter and sent it to Lord Dundonald, asking him if I might have an interview with him or have some statement from him on this subject ; and at ten minutes after three to-day that statement was read by me for the first time. I presume that His Lordship waited until the last minute to get a request from his minister or from the government, in order that he might have his case presented to the country side by side with that of the Minister of Agriculture. But, true to the spirit of unfair play which has characterized the hon. Minister of Agriculture in the past, and which has characterized him in the present instance, the General Officer Commanding would have been given no opportunity to have his case presented to the people of Canada and the empire at large had I not taken the course I did ; and the bald statement of the Minister of Agriculture would have gone before the people of Canada and the empire, and would have been in itself deceiving. The Minister of Agriculture referred to my position on the staff, and implied that Lord Dundonald had demeaned himself by addressing a letter to one who occupies a position on the staff. As I pointed out to-day, as a member of parliament I am absolutely independent. That question has been fought out by me before this. I had the honour of educating the Minister of Militia, and he knows it. I had the honour of educating the Prime Minister, and he knows it. I have not yet taken the Minister of Agriculture in hand. I may before the end of the session——

Mr. FISHER. He is a bad subject.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—and if I tackle him, he will be educated—let him make no mistake. He will be a sadder and a wiser man when I am through with him. I had the honour of educating these gentlemen some years ago on their duties in relation to members of parliament holding positions in the militia service of the country. A member of parliament owes allegiance to no superior ; the people alone are his masters, and these gentlemen may just as well understand it. I have had the honour of being offered the highest civil service position in the militia of this country. Many years ago I was offered the position now held by Colonel Pinault—that of deputy Minister of Militia; but I had seen a former deputy Minister of Militia, a former adjutant general, treated by members of the Liberal party before committees of this House worse than slaves were ever treated. And I made up my mind that if I became a civil servant, to be treated as those gentlemen were, there was only one way to teach them their duty and that was by appealing to them through the hide. I determined therefore that I would always be in a position to treat those gentlemen as they deserved without violating my duty as a servant of the country. Accordingly, neither did I accept long years ago the offer of the position of Deputy Minister of Militia, nor did I later in 1894 accept the position of Adjutant-General of Canada. I declined to be a civil servant in this country. The hon. Minister of Agriculture had had the brazen hardihood to stand up in this House and tell us how he did interfere in the appointments of officers to this regiment and had struck off the names of Conservatives. Let me tell him that I had the honour of commanding a regiment a good many years and that I am in the service thirty-seven years. I had an officer who had risen from the ranks to a captaincy, and had been in my regiment some fifteen years, and I never knew until this spring that he was a member of the Liberal party. I only knew it when in conversation one day he told me himself. Neither directly nor indirectly have I ever, as the best officers in the regiment can testify, permitted politics to interfere in my conduct of its affairs. Liberals as well as Conservatives can bear testimony to that statement ; and although I am now out of the regiment, my hon. friend will find that the officers who served under me and the men also are to-day staunch supporters of mine simply because I have always treated them as men and not as politicians. I wish to emphasize this aspect of the case to the First Minister. As pointed out by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), the Minister of Agriculture has been guilty, I shall not say of treason, but of very improper conduct, and if the right hon. gentleman does not dismiss his colleague from the cabinet, he will be recreant in his duty to the Canadian people. The question has been asked by the same Minister of Agriculture why there were so few Liberals in the corps. I need hardly tell the hon. gentleman that the policy pursued by the Liberal party during many years has not been such as to induce Liberals to wear uniforms of His Majesty and come to the defence of their country. The policy of the Liberal party would lead us to come under the Stars and Stripes. Their policy during many years tended towards annexation and was no encouragement to young Liberals to fall in and wear the uniform of men determined to uphold British institutions. It is the teaching of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues which accounts for so many of our young Liberals not being found in the force. However, I am proud to say that they have torn themselves away from these gentlemen and are now coming into the force in large numbers. Just one more reference to the hon. Minister. It was not Lord Dundonald—as the First Minister has attempted to point out—who selected these officers, but Col. Smart who, I am told, is a Liberal, and Col. Whitley and Col. Roy, all Liberals. These are the three who were selecting officers for the regiment and who had to approve of these officers before sending in their names to the General Officer Commanding. They had no interests to serve other than the best interests of the regiment. But the Minister of Agriculture was not content to accept their selections, and sought to gratify his petty spite and prejudices by keeping good and efficient men out of the service. Another statement of the First Minister was this. He referred to Lord Dundonald as a foreigner and a stranger. Let me tell the right hon. gentleman that Lord Dundonald is a Britisher and so are all Canadians, irrespective of language, race or nationality. We are all Britishers, Sir, and mark you we intend to remain Britishers. It was Britain which won, has held, has upbuilt and has peopled this country, and let me tell the right hon. the First Minister that we intend it shall remain British. It shall not be annexed to the United States. It shall not become independent of Britain, because the people who never hesitated to come to the front in times of necessity have decided that it will remain British if they know their business. Let me tell you, Sir, further that Canadians owe allegiance first to the empire of which Canada forms a part, and that they intend remaining British; and should the time ever arrive when any Canadian government will demand the allegiance of Canadians to an independent Canada on the one hand in preference to the old empire, including Canada, on the other, the rebel will be he who declines to stand by the old British empire. I think, judging by the general conduct of these gentlemen, that the time has arrived when we may as well lay down the law to them ; and if the time should ever come when these hon. gentlemen will undertake to bring about such a condition of affairs as they would lead us to believe they have in view, they will find that they will have to depend not on horses alone and that it will require some thing more than horses to accomplish what they desire. Let me tell the right hon. the First Minister furthermore that Lord Dundonald is no foreigner and no stranger in this Dominion.

Motion (Mr. Sam. Hughes) to adjourn, negatived.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it will be admitted on both sides that it is rather late to resume the adjourned debate on the budget ; and to place ourselves in order, I would move that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply, merely to have an intervening proceeding before renewing the motion to adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 13, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 134) to amend the Act respecting the Jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway Debts.—Mr. C. Marcil.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire, by way of personal explanation, to bring to the attention of the House a speech which is reported in 'Hansard' of June 10 as having been made by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). The hon. member, speaking of the 2nd Dragoons in the Niagara peninsula, in connection with alleged political interference in militia matters, is reported as having said :

> An officer second in command, not yet qualified to command, communicated with the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), and he, in language more befitting Canal street, Buffalo, than an hon. member in this House, stated that Lord Dundonald would be taught that he had no power to give the extension. I shall give the story, and then we shall see whether the facts bear it out or not. He made the statement that there would be no extension of command, and the notice which Lord Dundonald had given was cancelled.

Further down he said :

> I have not said that the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) wrote or spoke to the minister, but I have stated that the hon. member for Welland stated that in his county.

Now, Sir, I am not aware what sort of language is peculiarly fitted for Canal street, Buffalo. Evidently the hon. member does, possibly from experience. But I do say that no officer, second in command or otherwise, of the 2nd Dragoons asked me at any time to interfere to prevent Colonel Gregory from getting an extension of his command. I at no time spoke to the minister or to any officer of the department suggesting that Colonel Gregory should not get an extension, or that any recommendation that should be made for him to have an extension should be cancelled. During the last winter I had the honour of dining with Colonel Gregory and other officers of the 2nd Dragoons at St. Catharines. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) also was present. On that occasion Colonel Gregory stated that he had been recommended for an extension of his term of command. I had the honour and pleasure then of congratulating him upon that fact, and never at any time did I suggest that he should not get or receive that extension. The statement that I said that Lord Dundonald would be taught that he had no power to give the extension is absolutely and unequivocally untrue. I never made such a remark; I never made any remark which, by any tortuous construction, could be so interpreted; and I defy the hon. member to bring any individual who will suggest that I ever made any remark that could possibly be interpreted in that way, I am inclined to think that it has been evolved from the hon. member's own vivid imagination.

THE COAL OIL DUTY.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the government to the serious state of affairs among the crude oil producers in the counties of Lambton, Essex, Kent, Elgin and Middlesex. When the government brought down their tariff resolutions they do not seem to have made any provision for paying the crude oil producers their bounty. The crude oil is gathered in tank wagons and shipped in pipe lines to the receiving station. The crude producer takes receipts for the oil as he delivers it, and receives payment for the receipts from the Standard Oil Company or from the independent refiner. For several days they have been receiving only $1.62 a barrel. Previously they received $2.09 a barrel. What I am anxious to know is how these men are going to get their bounty money. There are hundreds of them scattered throughout those counties, who have been receiving payment from the refiners at the $1.62 rate. I would like the Finance Minister to explain how these men are likely to get their money, and how soon.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I am sorry that I cannot give the information which the hon. gentleman wants, nor is it possible for anybody to give it. The payment of a bounty requires an Act of this parliament. Notice of motion has been given, and in due course that notice of motion will come forward. If it is found to be in any way defective, we will, of course have it rectified to make it serve the purpose announced. It will then be crystallized into an Act of parliament, and that Act, as usual, will take effect from the date on which the announcement was made. Until that Act passes we shall not be in a position to pay a cent of bounty to any one. As to the details which the hon. gentleman mentions, these have been brought to the attention of the government by several gentlemen. To these and other questions relating to the tariff we shall give careful attention, and when the resolutions come up to be dealt with, we shall endeavour to make them as satisfactory as possible. But it is not possible at present to state to my hon. friend more than I have now said.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Seeing that it is customary that tariffs, when they are changed, are brought into effect on a date when no inconvenience would be caused to any one, had the Minister of Finance, in his statement with reference to the tariff on oil, stated that it would come into effect on the 1st of July, I feel satisfied that we should have had very little trouble, and the government would have had time to investigate the matter. But it seems to me that the government of this country were anxious to make a sort of fireworks display——

Mr. FIELDING. Order. The hon. gentleman has a right to ask for an explanation. He has no right to make a speech unless he intends to move the adjournment of the House, and I think there is nothing in the circumstances to warrant it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then let me state the predicament the producers are in. They are not likely to receive the bounty themselves——

Mr. COWAN. Why not make the speech on the tariff?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will make it, my good fellow; and you will not perhaps be so happy after it is made.

Mr. COWAN. My learned friend always makes me happy.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to state what is within the knowledge of the Minister of Finance, that the citizens of the town of Sarnia have sent to the government a largely signed petition having regard to the supposed readjustment of the duties on crude and refined oils. I would ask the Minister of Finance if he has any objection to laying that petition on the table?

Mr. FIELDING. I know of no objection I have already furnished a copy privately to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I will have another copy prepared and laid on the table.

THE LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I have a matter of some importance to bring up respecting one of the most important industries of this country, namely, the fishing industry, and more particularly a very important branch of it carried on in Prince Edward Island—the lobster fisheries. Early in April I received a communication from some people at the eastern end of Prince Edward Island, accompanied by a petition signed by ten or fifteen of the most important business people in King's county, protesting against certain abuses of the lobster regulations that had taken place during the last two years. I read a copy of the petition which was forwarded.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman intend to move the adjournment ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. If necessary I shall do so. The matter is of such importance that I thought possibly the motion would not be necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER. It may lead to debate and it would be more in order for the hon. gentleman to make a motion.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I shall do so. This is the petition :

Souris, April 11th, 1904.

Hon. Raymond Préfontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—The undersigned lobster packers of Prince Edward Island wish to call your attention to the following abuse of the granting of licenses for packing lobsters on Prince Edward Island :—

We were given to understand that, acting under an Order in Council passed some time since, no more fishing licenses would be granted upon Prince Edward Island.

Last season, through the influence of Mr. J. J. Hughes, M.P., for this county, a fishing license for packing lobsters was granted to Mr. McEachern, of Black Bush, thereby opening a new factory between that of Mr. A. D. McIsaac and Messrs. Matthew and McLean.

This season we understand that Mr. Hughes has gone into partnership with Mr. John Ryan, of Priest Pond, and is securing for him another license for packing lobsters between Matthew's and McLean's factory and Donald Leslie's, Campbell's Cove.

We consider this action on the part of the department very unfair, and we should either have licenses for every person that asked for them for packing lobsters, or else the Order in Council should be adhered to.

Before these latter licenses were granted, there were five factories from Black Bush to East Point in a distance of eighteen miles, and if these two factories are allowed to run, it will mean seven factories in a distance of eighteen miles on a straight shore.

We trust, therefore, that your department will see fit not to grant any license to Mr. Ryan, and that the license of Mr. McEachern will be cancelled, otherwise that all fishermen applying for licenses for packing shall be granted to them.

We remain, truly yours,

This petition is signed irrespective of party allegiance. A number of those who signed it are strong supporters of the present administration. It is simply a protest, as it says, against an Order in Council, but I afterwards found there was no Order in Council, but that the government was simply following out certain lines of policy respecting this industry. The parties who forwarded this petition thought the matter of such grave importance to the lobster industry that they wired me that they were prepared to present the petition in person if that were necessary. I immediately communicated with the department, and received the following letter from the deputy minister :

Ottawa, April 15th, 1904.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of to-day's date, addressed to Mr. Venning, I have much pleasure in inclosing copy of the lobster fishery regulations at present in force in the Dominion.

Touching your inquiry with regard to the establishment of new caneries, I may say that owing to the ever increasing number of lobster canneries along the Atlantic shores of Canada, it has been found necessary, in the interest of fishermen as well as of the fishery, to curtail as much as possible the issue of new licenses, particularly in localities where the number of lobster canneries has reached the maximum of what the fishery will stand, and with this end in view, the department has adopted the policy of refusing applications for new canneries, and in this connection, applications for licenses to reopen canneries which have not been operated for period of two years, are regarded as additional ones.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) F. GOURDEAU,
Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

A. A. Lefurgey, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons.

I was not quite satisfied and thought it my duty to push the matter further. The deputy minister stated that when they thought there were a sufficient number of lobster canneries in operation along a certain line of the coast it was the policy of the government not to grant new applications. I had a map of the district made, and found that within a space of some twenty miles there were seven factories in operation, and I considered that the establishment of any new factories along that coast was not justified. I therefore interviewed the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and he said he would look into the case and send me a communication. On the 22nd April I received the following communication from the minister :

Office of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada,

Ottawa, April 22nd, 1904.

Sir,—In view of the policy of the department to prevent as much as possible an undue increase in the number of lobster canneries on the Atlantic coasts, by placing necessary restraint upon their multiplication, as well in the interests of the canners themselves as in that of the preservation of the fishery, which could not but inure to the benefit of the fishermen, it became necessary to adopt measures to that and in carrying out a careful administration of provident rules and regulations in this regard.

It was therefore decided to limit the licenses where it was regarded that the number reasonably allowable, compatible with profitable results and rational protection, had been reached, hence, it was deemed expedient, under such conditions, to, as much as could be, restrict the business to canneries already established, and incidentally to encourage and turn the attention of the operators to the export of live lobsters, a branch of the industry which has been shown to be capable of producing very much larger returns to all concerned.

In dealing with applications for licenses for lobster canneries, the issue of new licenses has been avoided, unless peculiar and exceptional conditions obtain, and in the category of new applications is included requests for the reopening of disused canneries in which operations have been closed for a period of two years and over.

I believe I need scarcely assure you that in adopting such a policy the department was solely actuated by a desire to so adjust the interests involved as to effect as much protection as possible consistent with a minimum amount of restriction to an established and legitimate industry, but I am sure you will readily appreciate the difficulties which necessarily surround all such attempts, when dealing with fishing interests, which are so susceptible to varying conditions.

To that part of the letter I do not think any one can take exception otherwise than that it leaves too much latitude to ministers, which may lead to abuse, as in this case. That is the definite policy of the government—not brought down in an Order in Council, but just as rigid—and should be just as strictly enforced as an Order in Council would be, to prevent illegal fishing on the Atlantic coast with regard to lobsters. He goes on :

In explanation of the authorization of two new lobster canning licenses on the eastern coast of Prince Edward Island, I may say that after carefully considering urgent representations, I recognized the fact that under the circumstances, the fishermen of the particular locality, were placed at a great disadvantage by reason of a practical monopoly by lobster packers, who fixed the prices to be paid for the lobsters and compelled the fishermen to supply them on their terms.

The fishermen then appealed for authority to pack the lobsters actually caught by them, as a remedy against being coerced to dispose of them at the packers' own prices, and with some reluctance, in the light of the general policy above outlined, I consented to grant such relief ; but only on condition that they should organize themselves into a proper company, satisfactory to the department, for such specific purpose, when two licenses, and two only would issue.

The effect of this concession, you will observe, in no way operates to increase the number of lobsters actually taken in the locality, nor does it increase the number actually packed there ; but merely enables certain fishermen to themselves put up their own catch, instead of selling it to the packers, on terms dictated by the purchasers.

Hence, as the primary object of the regulations is to conserve the lobster fishery for all parties concerned, it would seem that in this special case, the interest of the fishermen have been accommodated without involving any unnecessary increase to the packing or catching power of the canneries or fishermen of the district.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) R. A. PREFONTAINE.

A. A. Lefurgey, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons.

This was the communication I received from the Minister of Marine, and as I was not satisfied that the hon. minister had made out a case justifying such a departure from an avowed policy, and as I had been down to Prince Edward Island and made some inquiry into the matter, I was obliged to put several questions on the order paper. On April 28th, I put certain questions to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on this subject :

1. Have any new licenses been granted for the establishment of any new lobster canneries in Prince Edward Island, other than the two mentioned in an official letter of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, dated April 22nd, 1904 ?

To this the minister answered, ' No. '

2. If so, what is the location of the same, and the names of the persons to whom granted ?

Answered above.

3. What applications have been received for reopening of the canneries closed for two years, and the names and locations of same ?

3. William Moore, Wood Islands ; William Sudsbury, Sea View ; William Adams, Sea View ; John T. McKay, Sea View ; Arnold Malone, Miscouche.

I knew of several of these cases, these being men who had been engaged in the business of lobster packing. I knew their applications had been in, and they had been endeavouring for some time to reopen canneries that had been running before. But it was evident from the answer of the minister that these men, who had been engaged in the business of lobster packing and whose livelihood depended on the business, had not been allowed to reopen in these places even though the lobster packers there were not within twenty-five per cent of what they were along the eastern shore of King's county, where they had granted two new licenses.

4. Have any been granted ; and if so, what are the names and localities ? If not, is it the intention of the government to reopen any of these ?

4. No license have been issued for any of the canneries referred to in the answer to question No. 3.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I considered in view of the knowledge I already had of these cases, and of the knowledge I gained on my trip to Prince Edward Island a month ago, that there was a manifest injustice and unfairness in the action of the Minister of Marine in refusing to open these factories when he allowed the opening of two new lobster factories in the part of the Island to which the petition refers. On the same day I asked another series of questions :

Referring to an official letter from the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, dated April 22nd, 1904, the following statement appears :—' In explanation of the authorization of two new lobster-canning licenses on the eastern coast of Prince Edward Island, I may say that, after carefully considering urgent representations, I recognize the fact that under the circumstances the fishermen of this particular locality were placed at a great disadvantage by reason of a practical monopoly by lobster packers, who fixed the prices to be paid for the lobsters, and compelled the fishermen to supply them on their terms.

That was the passage I read from the letter of the Minister of Marine, and I was anxious to know, in view of that appearing as the reason for the establishment of these two lobster factories where he had received his information. Therefore, in view of the expressions 'practical monopoly' and 'urgent representation,' I asked also :

1. What is the usual arrangement between lobster fishermen and packers with regard to prices paid and basis of payment ?
2. Do not packers arrange with fishermen at stated prices for lobsters delivered at factory ?
3. What was the price paid by the lobster packers in the section referred to in above letter of April 22nd, 1904, during the season the monopoly was complained of ?
4. What were the average prices paid in other parts of Prince Edward Island during the same season ?
6. What are the names of the fishermen who applied for authority to pack in this section ?
7. What are the names of the fishermen who were being coerced to dispose of their lobsters at the packers' own price ?

Now, this was a series of questions right in line with the paragraph I quoted from the minister's own letter. Therefore, I could not understand it when the minister replied to these questions that he had no information in the department, although it must have been on the basis of information in the department that he established two new lobster canneries. Yet, in answer to every one of these questions, without some information as to the subject of which neither he nor his department could have acted, he replied that he had no information in the department ;—no information as to the fishermen who complained of this monopoly ; no information as to the prices that were paid in that locality that would create a monopoly ; no information as to the prices paid in other parts of Prince Edward Island that he could compare with the prices paid there that he might judge whether monopoly prices were paid or not. When I was on the Island, I took the trouble to inquire as to the prices paid in the locality complained of and in other places in Prince Edward Island, and I found that the prices paid to lobster fishermen were practically the same as elsewhere and that the fishermen of that locality were earning as much money in the season as most of the other lobster fishermen on Prince Edward Island. Now, I asked him two other questions :

Where are the two factories mentioned in said letter of April 22nd, 1904, on the eastern coast of Prince Edward Island located or to be located ?

The answer to this was :

Only one license applied for at Priest's Point.

He referred to two in his letter, but one had been established last year and, the petition called for the cancelling of that license. The last question was :

What are the names of the parties to whom said two licenses mentioned in said letter of April 22nd, 1904, were or are to be granted ?

And the answer was :

One license to Hughes & Ryan.

In face of the minister's letter that there was a monopoly among the lobster packers in that section of the country, and that the minister with great reluctance was departing from the avowed policy of the government not to establish any new factories nor to reopen any old ones, and in view of his words that he was granting these licenses to open two new factories only on the application of a certain number of fishermen formed into a company to carry on this fishery, it seems strange to find a license granted to a supporter of the government in this House. The minister was not justified in allowing political influences to prevail or to prostitute the avowed policy of the government in relation to the lobster fishery in Prince Edward Island. I may say that the lobster fishery of Prince Edward Island, as along almost the whole Atlantic coast—in contradistinction to most of the other fisheries in Canada has not been progressing ; and the utmost care must be exercised in carrying out any policy that the government sees fit to adopt with regard to that fishery. A commission has been appointed and has been working on the problem of protecting the lobster fisheries for some years. In view of this serious state of affairs in the lobster business in Prince Edward Island, it seems clear that there has been a grave violation of the policy of the government, and, as I have pointed out, the minister has not seen fit to justify his case—for he declared that he had no information in the department that there was a monopoly existing. Therefore, he has clearly not justified his action in allowing an hon. member of this House to use his position to secure a license for himself in a locality which was already well supplied with lobster canneries, and which I can show, from information I have gained, was not suffering from a monopoly, but in which the fishermen were being treated as well as anywhere else in Prince Edward Island. No complaint has been made of any of the lobster packers named in this petition, and those who signed the petition are employing the same number of men right along, and the hon. minister in putting forward such a plea as he did in the last part of his letter, in saying that the establishment of another factory would not tend to increase the number of lobsters caught and cause the employment of any more men along that shore is an absolute absurdity, because these same people are employing the same number of hands in that locality as they employed regularly for a number of years past, and the other factory is just filling in by an addition of five to eight boats a factory. The minister will see that the principle laid down in his department is violated by an action which, upon the face of it, bears the impress of a political favour to a member of this House, and he is putting the fishermen in that locality in a worse position than they were before, because all of this ground had to be allotted again amongst an added number of fishermen. The department by the establishment of two new factories, along a shore line where there were already sufficient, has cut off the catch of the men, whom he professes to be looking after.

From the information I have gained I find that from Cow River to East Point there were six factories almost evenly distributed, and that in all these factories so far as I can learn the prices to be paid to fishermen were arranged between the fishermen and the packers early in the season before any fishing commenced, so that the fishermen always knew the price they were to receive before they put their hands to a trap, and if they were not satisfied with the price they always had the option, and had plenty of time to make arrangements with other packers in any other part of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Will the hon. gentleman tell me the prices paid in that locality ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am coming to that if my hon. friend will wait. As regards the statement that the fishermen ever asked for permission to pack their own lobsters, and that this permission was to be granted by the establishment of a proper company satisfactory to the government, the facts are that Mr. Hughes, M.P., formed a partnership with Mr. John Ryan, of Priest Pond, and this company is now employing four boats to fish the ground formerly occupied by one. They have now in this locality three factories all running full blast on the ground formerly occupied by one, so you can readily understand that the protection meant to be given to the fishermen of the locality was very poorly afforded when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries allowad two factories to be established on the ground formerly occupied by one. I asked several questions of different lobster packers in the locality as to whether any complaints had been made to them at any time during the past four or five years. They said that they had been packing lobsters for some 25 years past, and during all that time any fisherman or any one else was perfectly free under the Conservative government to establish as many factories as they pleased, but in all that time not one of their fishermen ever thought of establishing a factory. Under the Conservative policy of allowing any one to establish factories none of these fishermen wanted to establish factories. The number of factories then varied as the catch varied during different seasons. They also say that these fishermen had been with them during almost the whole period they had been operating along this coast. The coast line, they say, is fairly straight, and they have always divided the ground fished by the boats of different factories as defined by land marks, each fisherman operating on his own section exclusively and no one else being allowed to hinder him. I also inquired about this Mr. Ryan and what he had been doing. I found that he had been employed by one of the firms along this shore, I think Matthew & McLean, for quite a long time, and up to the very time he left their employment to go into partnership with J. J. Hughes, he had made no complaint to them about the price he was being paid by the people with whom he was employed. The price that has been paid along that coast has been $1.10 per 100 pounds for the fish, boarding the fishermen during the day-time, that is two meals per day, finding the traps, boats and everything that they require, giving each man as well, enough salt to salt his herring for bait and at the factories on the south side the fishermen earn from $2.50 to $2.75 per hundred pounds, the fishermen finding everything including traps, boats, &c. I wish to point out to the members of this House that the fishermen under these prices were making as much money as the average fisherman throughout Prince Edward Island. They were making from $150 to $170 per year and made more per man clear in each season by these arrangements, reserving so much ground for each 300 traps and allowing them to draw lots for positions.

I have given the House all the information I could get. I could get no more information from the Department of Marine and Fisheries than I have presented to the House and I am perfectly satisfied to leave it to the intelligence of the hon. the First Minister and the other members of this House whether the Minister of Marine, in his statement of the case as I have fairly presented it to the House, was justified in departing from the avowed policy of protecting the lobster fisheries of Prince Edward Island, and in apparently using the Department of Marine and Fisheries in order to satisfy a political supporter of the party opposite. This is not the only department of the government which is being misused for the purpose of satisfying political friends.

We had an instance, only the other day where a department of the government, the Militia Department, which, possibly more than any other should be kept free from political partisanship, was most grossly misused by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who had no connection with that department, and who should, therefore, have not interfered with it at all. Now, we have this case in connection with the department of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who, while professing to have an established policy and to carry it out for the protection of the fisheries, has been guilty of almost as gross an abuse as that of which the hon. Minister of Agriculture has been guilty in connection with the Department of Militia and Defence. I want to say that if it is the policy of this government that no new cannery shall be established along the Atlantic coast or along the shores of Prince Edward Island, and that no old factories shall be reopened, we want the same treatment meted out to every private individual in Prince Edward Island, who wants to undertake the establishment of a cannery along these shores and to engage in the lobster fishery. In view of the fact that in this case an important departure from the avowed policy of the government has been made, that the name of an hon. member of this House is coupled with it and that throughout the length and breadth of the land for the past three or four seasons all applications for the privilege of establishing new canneries and reopening old ones have been disregarded it seems to me that this is a plain case of prostituting the policy of the department in favour of political partisans. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) is not present perhaps a word of explanation from me in regard to this matter may not be out of place. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) is in the habit of taking up questions in this House that he does not very well understand ; in fact, I am inclined to think that if he only spoke upon the questions that he did understand he would not say so much. This is really a small matter and I am surprised that my hon. friend should have seen fit to bring it up in this House. However, as my name has been mentioned in connection with it I deem it my duty to give some explanation. In regard to the question as to whether or not a practical monopoly in the lobster canning business existed on this part of the coast I make this statement and it is a statement of fact: From a place called Black Bush, on the north side of the island, to Souris, on the south side of the island, a distance of between forty and fifty miles.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Black Bush to Souris or to East Point ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Black Bush to Souris and around East Point. There were just two men interested in the canning business in that vicinity, namely, John McLean, a gentleman who will probably be my opponent in the next election, who has been nominated for that position, and his brother-in-law, Charles Sterns. Along that particular piece of coast some few years ago there were several factories. These people whose names I have mentioned had factories there. Factories were also owned by Messrs. Fred. Morrow, C. C. Carlton and Dennis Murphy. These factories were closed and in consequence of their closure, due to the regulation of the department against granting any licenses, these two men, the brothers-in-law, had about forty miles of coast line under their own operation. There was just one man, Joseph Pope, who had a small factory that he was running on his own account and these gentlemen were so determined to allow nobody to fish but themselves that they went opposite to his factory and set their traps. To show how the fishermen were complaining, the fishermen in that locality, a few years ago, knowing that they were getting unreasonably small profits for their industry, for the hard labour they were performing, organized a delegation which came to Souris, waited upon Mr. John McLean and asked him to allow them to go into partnership with him in the business. They catching the fish and doing nearly all the labour wished to participate to some extent in the profits of the business. They thought it would be better for him as well as for themselves because under ordinary circumstances the fishermen would take a greater interest in their work and have a greater interest in preserving the property. The answer of Mr. McLean to the delegation, according to my information from the fishermen themselves, was that if they were not satisfied with their position he could get other men to take their places. I wonder if the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), who is opposed to monopolies and all that kind of thing and who is a friend of the workingman, would approve of that kind of thing.

Mr. CLARKE. I was not paying much attention to the hon. gentleman, but I think it is a pretty fishy transaction.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Yes, it is a fishy transaction on the part of my political opponents. According to the statement made by my hon. friend from Prince, the price paid in that particular locality per 100 pounds was $1.10. That is correct, but according to my information the fishermen had to board themselves although salt and bait were provided. According to my information, from the fishermen the ordinary price paid in other localities was from $1.50 to $1.75 per 100 pounds, the men having their board provided for them.

Mr. CLARKE. How about the salt ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. My hon. friend seems to think this is a great joke.

Mr. CLARKE. No, no.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Oh, yes, my hon. friend does. Under these circumstances the fishermen came to me and asked me if it was possible to get them a license to can their own catch of fish. I certainly approved of the proposition and tried to comply with the request. I think that if there are any men who ought to profit by this industry they are the men along that coast who do the labour, the men who have to do the actual work, rather than the merchants who live at other places and who have other means of making a living. I make that statement. I do not know whether my hon. friend opposite will agree with and endorse it or not. It is my opinion, at all events and it is the opinion of the fishermen in that locality as my hon. friend and my opponent will probably find out. I got a license under these circumstances for the McEacherns and McDonalds who formed a company last year and went into business on their own account. These men made twice as much money out of the business when they were canning for themselves as they had made before when they were fishing and allowing other people to can their lobsters. This year Ryan, to whom my hon. friend refers, and McPhee were going to organize another company and they applied for a license to can their fish.

My esteemed friend, the gentleman who will probably be my opponent in the next election and who has a practical monopoly of that coast line, prevailed upon McPhee to withdraw from the business and not go into partnership with Ryan. Under these circumstances Ryan was not able to proceed with the business alone, and he came to me and I agreed to go into partnership with him rather than that it should fall through. That is my connection with the matter, and I am not ashamed of it. I am not ashamed to go before the fishermen of Prince Edward Island, and the fishermen of the eastern part of King's county and explain the transaction. I understand from Ryan that he is doing well, and if there are some four boats fishing on the ground where only one fished before, he must be fishing a larger area. To show you how the friends of the hon. gentleman opposite have tried to establish a monopoly on this part of the coast line, I may say that when Ryan was prepared to put out his lobster traps and rope opposite his own cannery last spring ; Mr. John McLean, who has prompted my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) to bring up this question and who has given him all the information which he possesses—although he does not very well understand it yet—

Mr. LEFURGEY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Mr. John Maclean did not give me the information which I possess. I took particular care to get the information from reliable men from Souris and Charlottetown ; people that the hon. gentleman knows well possibly, and they gave me the information when I was down myself.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I understand the question very well. Mr. McLean sent a large party of men to prevent Ryan by force from putting out his traps opposite his own factory, and Ryan was obliged to go some distance away from his own factory, because he could not raise a mob to protect him.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Where were all these oppressed fishermen that they did not flock to his assistance ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Now then with regard to this petition which my hon. friend presented ; I was not present at the moment, and I do not know whether he read all the names or not.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I read all the names.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Was the name A. D. McIsaac on it ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Yes. A. D. McIsaac was on it.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Well, A. D. McIsaac told me that his name was forged to that petition, and that he felt like taking proper steps to bring the parties who forged his name to justice. I believe the name of D. C. Leslie is on that petition ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. I do not recollect just now.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Well, D. C. Leslie did not write his name ; I know his handwriting and it is not his handwriting. I cannot say anything as to the other names, but these two I know of. Mr. McIsaac who is an honest respectable man gave me that information, and that will show you what value ought be attached to the petition and to the manner of men these are who would send this petition here. It would show the kind of men they are to use my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) to present such a document into this House. So far as this fishery regulation is concerned I do not know that I altogether approve of it. In my opinion it is weak in this respect : that it limits the number of factories that may be established along the coast line, but does not limit the number of traps that may be put in the water, and it is the traps that catch the fish and not the factories. The limitation of the number of factories without limiting the number of traps that can be put in the water would not preserve the industry. The two gentlemen who had a practical monopoly of that coast line were enabled under the present regulations to put down as many traps as they wished and consequently the issuing of these licenses to the fishermen themselves does not injure the industry. Now, these are the facts of the case, and again I regret that my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) brought the matter before the House. I do not think he has gained anything by it; I do not think his friends have gained anything and I leave the matter there, for the present.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) brought the matter before the House for the purpose of gaining anything politically from it. He presented the matter to parliament for the reason that it concerns the public interest. As I understand it, certain regulations were made by the department limiting the number of lobster factories along the coast, and then certain exceptions were made for this locality which do not seem to have been applied throughout the island generally. Of course, it was very kind of my hon. friend (Mr. J. J. Hughes), if he has gone into this matter for motives of pure philanthropy, and I am sure we all rejoice to hear that Ryan is doing well, because if Ryan does well the hon. member (Mr. J. J. Hughes) will do well also. But, this would not seem to exactly coincide with the policy laid down in the letter from the minister. The minister says that the exceptions have been made in the case of fishermen desiring to catch lobsters, so that they may not be obliged to work for those who are engaged in the business of canning; and he suggests that the fishermen who desire to put up the lobsters should form themselves into an association. One would have thought that if there had been a large number of oppressed fishermen, they would have formed themselves into a company as directed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but that does not seem to have been done. The majority of fishermen seem to be going on as they were before. I gather that one firm was formed last year consisting of Mr. McEachern——

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. There are several McEacherns.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At all events, there was one firm formed last year consisting of two fishermen, but this year only one of the oppressed fishermen on that coast was so dissatisfied with his own condition that he went into the business and my hon. friend from King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) very kindly came to his relief and went into the partnership with him. That would hardly seem to indicate the distressful conditions of affairs which my hon. friend (Mr. J. J. Hughes) described to the House. Of course I know nothing about the signatures to that petition, but it is said to be signed by respectable men; men who are known in the community in which they reside as reliable men; men whose word is to be depended upon; and my hon. friend from King's will see that if this petition really has been signed, the statements it contains would amply justify my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) in bringing in to the attention of the House. In the first place, they refer to the granting of licenses in a manner which amounts to an abuse, and then they go on to say that there was a regulation of the department that no more fishing licenses would be granted upon Prince Edward Island.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. My hon. friend will notice that there is not one fisherman's name on that petition; they are canners.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I don't attach very much importance to that either one way or the other if they are respectable men.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Their interests are the other way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What these men set out, is that certain regulations have been made but have not been adhered to, and that the departure from these regulations can only be described as an abuse. I do not pretend to be as familiar with the facts as my hon. friend (Mr. J. J. Hughes) I am merely drawing his attention to this for the purpose of showing that there really is something before the House for discussion. Then the petition continues:

> Last season through the influence of Mr. J. J. Hughes, M.P., for this county, a fishing license for packing lobsters was granted to Mr. McEachern, of Black Bush, thereby opening a new factory between that of Mr. A. D. McIsaac and Messrs. Matthew and McLean.
>
> This season we understand that Mr. Hughes has gone into partnership with Mr. John Ryan, of Priest Pond, and is securing for another license for packing lobsters between Matthew & McLean's factory and Donald Leslie's, Campbell's Cove.
> We consider this action on the part of the department very unfair, and we should either have licenses for every person that asks for them for packing lobsters, or else the Order in Council should be adhered to.

The point of the petition, as I understand it, is that there should be regulations and that these regulations should be adhered to, or else depart from the regulations altogether and leave the field open to every one. You should not have regulations which are broken by means of influence such as that described in the petition. The petition continues as follows:

> Before these latter licenses were granted, there were five factories from Black Bush to East Point in a distance of eighteen miles, and if these two factories are allowed to run, it will mean seven factories in a distance of eighteen miles on a straight shore.

We trust therefore that your department will see fit not to grant any license to Mr. Ryan, and that the license of Mr. McEachern will be cancelled—

That is one alternative. That alternative contemplates an adherence to the regulations of the department. The other alternative is certainly a fair one, and it is as follows :

—otherwise that all fishermen applying for license for packing lobsters shall be granted.

My hon. friend cannot see anything very unfair in the two alternatives ; they are perfectly plain and straightforward, and I should think in the public interest. This petition has been signed by men who purport to be lobster packers ; Mr. C. H. S. Sterns, Messrs. Matthew & McLean, Mr. Donald C. Leslie—my hon. friend, I think calls in question his signature.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. It is not his handwriting.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not make any difference whether it is his handwriting or not. If he authorized any one else to write his name, it is the same as if he wrote it himself. The other names are : Mr. James W. Dingwell, Mr. Edwin McFarlane, Mr. H. D. McEwen, Mr. Angus D. McIsaac, Messrs. A. A. McDonald Bros., Mr. W. W. Jenkins. While not professing to have a very exact knowledge of the facts or the conditions with reference to the lobster fisheries in Prince Edward Island, I think, under the circumstances which have been disclosed by my hon. friend from East Prince, he was amply justified in bringing this matter before the House.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like the hon. member for King's to understand that I had no personal object in bringing this matter up. I do not bring matters up in the House from personal motives. The fact that the hon. member's name is unfavourably connected with a matter of so much importance to the fishing industry of Prince Edward Island is his own misfortune, and not my fault. The petition was sent to me, and I was asked to look into the matter and bring it up in this House. I have only done what the hon. member would himself do if his constituents sent him material that contained charges of such a nature as this one. I am glad that the hon. member feels the seriousness of the position he has got himself into, and I think hon. members will agree with me that in presenting this case to the House, I did it fairly and squarely, upon the information which I had from the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the information which I gained with regard to the industry from those engaged in it in Prince Edward Island. If the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not given us information that would justify his departure from an avowed policy, the position of the hon. member for King's is that much more serious. The hon. member for King's has apparently put himself in the position that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is in with regard to Lord Dundonald's case. He is acting for the department to his own benefit. Instead of the department acting, it is delegating its powers to people who have no right to act, and who are very likely to act from motives that are not just in line with the policy of the government. As the Minister of Agriculture made a fatal mistake in introducing politics into militia appointments, so the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had apparently made Mr. Hughes, the member for King's, his deputy in the information he obtained in regard to this matter. The charge certainly comes home to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and it is his duty to clear himself. He has not the information in the department, and for that reason I think his action in this case was unjustified. My statements with regard to the prices paid for lobsters and the wages paid to the men were got from reliable men engaged in the fishing industry, and I gave them exactly as I got them from those people. The fact that only one fisherman is engaged in packing, of all those who were complaining of the monopoly in that part of the island, is sufficient to justify me in bringing the matter up ; and the fact that the hon. member for King's got the minister in this position, and went into partnership with one fisherman, is no justification for claiming a monopoly for the sole purpose of benefiting Mr. J. J. Hughes, M.P.

TORONTO HARBOUR.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. I desire to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the unsatisfactory condition of the equipment existing in connection with the navigation of Lake Ontario near Toronto harbour. The complaint made by mariners is that they find it very difficult, especially in foggy weather, to make the harbour at the eastern entrance because of the insufficiency of the appliances there. I have received a letter from Mr. Church, the solicitor of the Lake Ontario Navigation Company, inclosing clippings from the papers of Friday last, describing the difficulties the mariners have to contend with. These difficulties were accentuated during two or three days of last week when there was a great deal of foggy weather. The harbour could have been made if there had been sufficient fog signals and other appliances. With the permission of the House I will read a few lines taken from the 'World' of Friday last :

The fog nuisance, although somewhat abated yesterday, was still sufficiently in evidence to make trouble. The steamer 'Argyle' was the victim yesterday. With a crowd of 500 on board, being an excursion of the Presbyterian Church of Cobourg, she was compelled to lie for about forty-five minutes within half a mile of the eastern gap, there being no sound from the bell located there to indicate her bearings. It is not stretching facts to say that practically the sole topic among marine men is the absurdly inefficient equipment for giving warning during fog.

The Richelieu and Ontario, St. Catharines, and Niagara Navigation Companies are all interested in this matter, and I would ask the Prime Minister to see that steps are taken to implement the apparatus, which is insufficient at present.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What do they complain of—the insufficiency of the signals or the insufficiency of the alarm ?

Mr. CLARKE. The insufficiency of the alarm.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN. On the 30th of May last, an order of the House was passed for copies of correspondence in relation to the construction or improvement of the landing at Beaton, B.C., and also for copies of the letters of resignation of certain officers of the 9th regiment on the same day. These returns are not down yet, and I shall pass the list over to the right hon. gentleman.

LORD DUNDONALD'S SPEECH.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to certain correspondence between the hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Col. Smart as well as Col. Whitley, which was referred to on Friday last by the hon. minister. That correspondence, I would suggest, should be laid on the table. We should also have any departmental correspondence on the same subject, some of which has been referred to and the contents stated to the House. It would be desirable that all this should be placed before the House. Two gazettes have also been referred to and their contents commented upon. We should have them as well, and I would suggest that all other documents bearing upon the incident, in connection with which these documents were mentioned, should also be laid on the table. The government should inform the House whether or not it was understood by the colleagues of the Minister of Agriculture that the name of Dr. Pickel had been struck off without the recommendation of the General Officer Commanding and what were the reasons for striking it off. It seems to me only proper that the House should be informed whether or not that fact was brought to the attention of His Excellency when the Order in Council was presented to him and whether or not he was informed of the reason why that name had been struck out. These are suggestions of mine and it will be for the government to take what action it may see fit. I make them in view of the duties prescribed in the statutes for the General Officer Commanding ; and I think, having regard to those regulations which have the force of a statute, that this is information which may not unreasonably be demanded by the House in case there should be any further discussion of the unfortunate incident to which I have referred.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. colleague the Minister of Militia is not in his seat, but I have reason to believe that he is preparing correspondence for the further information of the House.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 42) respecting the Sprague Falls Manufacturing Company, Limited.—Mr. Henderson.

CEDAR RAPIDS MANUFACTURING AND POWER COMPANY.

Mr. M. K. COWAN. I would like to say that the solicitor who resides in Montreal, after this Bill was reported, made the statement that he did not understand the committee to have adopted the Bill in the form in which it is submitted to the House. In view of that slight misunderstanding, I would ask that the Bill be referred back to the Private Bills Committee in order to give him an opportunity of being heard.

Motion agreed to.

THE WEST CANADIAN COLLIERIES, LIMITED.

House in committee on Bill (No. 80) respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 4,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the attention of the government has been directed to the very comprehensive powers included in this clause, but they are a little unusual. We have coal mining, smelting, the operation of open hearth steel plants, bridge construction, machine shops, manufacture of the products of coal, farming and stock raising, dealing in shares and securities of other concerns carrying on similar business, construction of houses, churches, schools, hospitals and other buildings—but as that is limited by the clause 'for the use and benefit of workmen' and so on, it may not be objectionable—acquiring real and personal property, easements, hydraulic properties, patent rights, plant, machinery and so on in connection with the works ; manufacture, use and supply of electricity, water, gas and electric, hydraulic compressed air or other power—it may be all right, but it seems rather comprehensive.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Bill is rather of an unusual character, because it purports to confer powers upon a company created under the English Act, and which remains for the future beyond our legislative control. I confess that when I first looked at it, I thought we were giving this company more extended powers than were provided for in the articles of association. But I have had the Bill examined, and I find that the powers granted are in accordance with the articles of association and are, as I am informed, identical with the powers which the company now possesses.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand why we need to give the company these powers if it already possesses them under its memorandum and articles of association. It seems inconvenient that we should confer upon this company the same powers conferred upon it by its articles of association, and, at the same time, we expressly stipulate that it shall be enabled to amend its constitution without reference to this parliament and in accordance with the Companies' Act of Great Britain. I have not worked out the effect of this, but it seems to me it might lead to awkward consequences. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) who has charge of the Bill has communicated with the promoters on that point, but it seems to me a little dangerous to give to companies differing powers derived from a double source. In my own province of Nova Scotia we have had some companies which were constituted by the Act of the legislature of Nova Scotia and which, when they wanted wider powers, secured charters from the government of Canada. If there is the slightest variation in the powers granted by the two different authorities, it is exceedingly difficult to tell what the precise powers are. I think the promoters should be careful, in their own interest, to see how far this goes. You have perfectly plain sailing if you do not attempt to give powers here that are not contained in the company's memorandums and articles of association. But if you vary from that, you are almost sure to get into trouble.

Mr. LOGAN. What is done in the case of subsection (f) ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The words 'and the business of general merchants,' are struck out by the committee.
