Mr. LOGAN. It seems to me that the hon. leader of the opposition is right in suggesting that this is rather dangerous legislation. We are giving powers in this Bill that we are denying every day to Canadian companies—I think there is no doubt about that. It is, in effect, a suggestion to promoters who desire to get larger powers, and cannot get them from this parliament, to become incorporated under the English Act, and then, when they come here we merely pass in review, as it were, the powers they have received, giving them by confirmation powers that we would not give in the initiative. Of course, there may be a great deal of this legislation in Canada, but this is a very striking instance of our giving exceedingly broad powers ; and, as the leader of the opposition says it is rather confounding matters to have this joint or confirmatory legislation.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to be rather absurd to give to a colliery company power to become a stock-raising concern. We are striking out the words that give them the power of going into the business of general merchants, but it seems to me it would be more reasonable to give them power to do business as merchants than to go into stock-raising, for they might want to do business in connection with carrying on their collieries. I fail to see why they want powers for stock-raising.

Mr. COWAN. They own large areas of land in the western country and to use that land they require these powers.

Mr. FOWLER. I have no doubt they want all that is asked for here, but it does not seem to me in accordance with the rules that have heretofore obtained in this parliament to give a company the very extensive powers that it is proposed to give to this one.

Section agreed to.

On section 5,

Mr. FOWLER. This is pretty broad. It does not say that these various works shall be only in connection with the company's collieries. It lays it down broadly, and the works enumerated might be works of a general character entirely separate and apart from the object of the company.

On section 14,

Section 18 and such other provisions of the 'Companies Clauses Act' as may be inconsistent with the provisions of the 'Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890,' of Great Britain, or of any statutes of the imperial parliament in amendment thereof, or in substitution therefor, shall not apply to the company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a very remarkable clause : it involves the necessity of comparing our Companies Clauses Act with the Companies Clauses Act of Great Britain and with any Acts that may be passed in the future in amendment of that Act by the imperial parliament and of thus ascertaining whether the conditions of the one are consistent with those of the other. It is the most remarkable clause I ever observed in any Bill brought before this parliament. I think the whole Bill ought to receive more careful consideration by the government than it appears to have received. I have done my duty in calling attention to it. I do not believe this Bill in the present form will be in the interest of the country or of the corporation itself. You have some amendments evidently made to its powers as granted under the Companies Act of Great Britain. I would think the best way to deal with a corporation of this kind would be to let it act under its powers as originally created. It can be constituted under the Companies Act of Great Britain with powers to operate a business in this country. Then, if it requires for its undertaking in Canada any powers, such as the expropriation of land, the building of railways, &c., this parliament might very reasonably afford such powers to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have not had my attention especially directed to this Bill, and it seems to me that if this were the first departure we should hesitate before going further. I remember, however, that last year we put through a Bill somewhat on the same lines. I would like to suggest to the gentlemen responsible for this Bill the question whether they have considered that under our Companies Act provision is made for the incorporation of foreign companies with all the powers which such companies possess so far as not inconsistent with our own Act. It seems to me that might all have been done under the ordinary Companies Clauses Act without coming before parliament at all, and I quite appreciate that when it comes before parliament it should be dealt with with considerable care. Under the circumstances I would ask that the committee rise and report progress so that I may have an opportunity of looking into the matter further.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that for the construction of a small branch of railway, the power of expropriating land, the erection of a telegraph line, &c., the company might desire some legislation here, and I would not object to giving those powers, but it does not seem to me that the Act has been drawn up on a very scientific or logical basis. It mixes up the powers conferred by this parliament with the original constitution of the company, and then in the very last clause, which we are now considering, it calls upon those who seek to ascertain the powers of the company, to study this statute, the memorandum and articles of the company, the English Companies Act and all amendments to it, the Companies Clauses Act of Canada and to find out if possible from all of these what the powers of the company are. I should think that a good lawyer labouring 8 or 10 hours a day might possibly work out the powers of the company in 10 days or a fortnight.

Mr. WADE. Say 20 hours a day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am suggesting a very diligent and skilful lawyer, but it might take longer for most of us. Under these circumstances I would think it as well that those who are promoting the company should have a little care as to the form in which this Bill goes through parliament.

Mr. WADE. The gentleman who appeared before the Private Bills Committee stated that the members of the company reside I think, in France. They first went to London and sought incorporation, but then they found that would not serve the whole of their purpose, and they wrote to instruct this solicitor to get a charter here. We made a great many suggestions to him as to the manner in which he might proceed but of course he was in the awkward position of not being able to communicate with his clients as they resided at so great a distance. The committee dealt with the Bill in the best manner they could.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like some one to explain to me what that last clause means. Nobody seems to know what it means, and I do not think this parliament should pass a clause of that kind without some explanation being given. Section 14 reads :

> Section 18 and any such other provisions of the Companies Clauses Act as may be inconsistent with the provisions of the 'Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890,' of Great Britain, or of any statutes of the imperial parliament in amendment thereof, or in substitution herefor, shall not apply to the company.

Mr. WADE. The meaning of that was this : The provision which was submitted to the committee was that no portion of the Companies' Clauses Act should apply to the promoters of the Bill, wanted their charter to be under the English Companies' Act. There was a good deal of discussion over it and it was framed in such a way as to provide that only such portions of the Canadian Companies' Clauses Act as are not inconsistent with the English Companies' Act, should apply ; so that only the English Companies' Act and the remainder of the Canadian Companies' Clauses Act, if there is any remainder, shall apply to this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me to bring in any future statutes of the imperial parliament.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, it would.

Mr. WADE. The head office is in London and they wanted to carry on their business from London. At least that is what was represented to the committee. It was represented that they were organized under the English Companies' Act and they did not want to be subject to two Companies' Acts. We did not think it made very much difference one way or the other.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to this clause. It seems to me that this parliament should not pass such loose legislation as is proposed by this Bill. Who is going to interpret the clauses of our Act, compare them with the clauses of the English Companies' Act, 1862 to 1890, and say where they are inconsistent? Is it going to be liable to the interpretation of the court, and is this company going to get from this parliament powers which are certainly not defined in this Bill? It seems to me that we are going very far in the matter of private legislation and that the hon. Minister of Justice and government should take some care in seeing that Bills which are passed here in relation to private matters should be such as would be easily interpreted and not require the examination, not only of our own Acts in regard to companies but also of the English Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) must be aware that the Minister of Justice is not responsible for private legislation. There is no principle better understood than that. I have no responsibility for drafting the private Bills that go through this House. Parliament is responsible for that, not the Minister of Justice. I am responsible for the legislation that I introduce into this House. If I were to be made personally responsible for all the private Bills that go through parliament it would be absolutely necessary for me to do nothing else.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I take a wider view of the scope of the duties of my hon. friend. I do not mean to say that he could be held responsible for all the private Bills which go before the private Bills committee, and which come before this House, but, on the other hand I say that he has the general supervision of legislation both public and private which comes before parliament and if his attention is drawn to any such flagrant mis-use of the powers conferred upon this parliament in regard to private legislation as seems to be included in this Bill, his duty, I respectfully submit, is to see that this legislation is properly curtailed and kept within bounds.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, as the Bill is standing in my name I would like to say that I have no objection in view of what has been said by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to have the Bill reviewed either by the private Bills committee or some other special committee if it is thought necessary. But, I would like to point out that the Bill relates to an existing company, a company having extensive operations both in coal mining and railways, and as I understand the purpose of the Bill it is to combine under one name and under one organization several enterprises which are really the property of the same individuals who constitute this company. I did not follow the discussion very accurately but I would not wish whoever is reviewing the Bill again to think that this is only a question as between British legislation and Canadian legislation. It is not something which is merely a question of law. There is a matter of business to be settled. There is an existing company which has spent a very large amount of money in active coal mining operations and in the building of a short line of railway and the members of the company, having entered upon kindred enterprises in the vicinity, now desire to have all these enterprises amalgamated under one name and have a single set of powers.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Minister of Justice moves that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Justice in reference to that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to have a chance to look over this Bill not having seen it except hurriedly at the present time, and especially in respect to the amendments. I am, perhaps, somewhat slow of comprehension, and I like an opportunity of considering anything before expressing my opinion about it. I would like to have these amendments before me so that I may consider them. I do not agree with the view which apparently obtains in this House that a company ought to be granted for a special purpose only. I think that incorporation ought to be granted to companies for any purpose for which parliament wishes to confer powers on them. I fail to understand the reason of the rule which has apparently been adopted up to the present time, but I would not endeavour to press my personal view as against the view of the House upon that point.

Mr. OLIVER. Is it understood that when the committee rises and reports progress, the hon. Minister of Justice shall take the responsibility of reviewing the Bill?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

THOMPSON RIVER IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 79) to incorporate the Thompson River Improvement Company.—Mr. Morrison.

On section 12,

Mr. GALLIHER. Was this section expunged in the Private Bills Committee?

Mr. COWAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLIHER. Why?

Mr. COWAN. Very strong objection was taken by some members of the committee who are familiar with the business of this company, and who are engaged in similar business themselves. We thought the whole matter was covered by section 11, and so clause 12 was stricken out and the tolls would have to be submitted to the Governor in Council where all parties could be heard.

Mr. GALLIHER. Does not the Columbia River Improvement Bill of last year, contain a clause similar to this clause 12 ?

Mr. COWAN. Yes, but we thought that section 11 was all that was required.

Mr. GALLIHER. The result is that before tolls are charged by this company they have to go to the Governor in Council and get them approved.

Mr. COWAN. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would my hon. friend point out where we get jurisdiction at all in this matter ?

Mr. COWAN. That question was debated at considerable length in the committee. My own view was that the jurisdiction was entirely in the province, but the majority thought that as we had been conferring similar powers on other companies we should do so for this company.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am disposed to consider that it is not within our power to pass this Bill.

Mr. COWAN. That is the view I held at first.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot see anything in the Bill which shows that it has reference exclusively to navigable waters. It is not because we passed the Columbia River Bill yast year that we should pursue the same course this year. When we were passing that Bill last year, it occurred to me that we were going beyond our powers.

Mr. FOWLER. This river is navigable.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How far is it navigable ?

Mr. FOWLER. For nearly two hundred miles.

Mr. WADE. We held that it was a navigable river, and that it was necessary to come to this parliament. The only question in my mind was as to whether they should not go to the provincial parliament as well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was any information given to the committee as to whether this river is navigable at the point mentioned in the Bill ?

Mr. FOWLER. This river is navigable for nearly two hundred miles of its length. The Kamloops lake is navigable; the town of Kamloops is situated at the confluence of the North Thompson and South Thompson rivers. And the North Thompson is navigable for quite two hundred miles. It was necessary to come here and get these rights, and I may say that an application has also been made to the provincial legislature.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is a clause here which gives power to blast rocks and remove shoals and other impediments. It is quite clear that it has reference to some part of the river that is not navigable.

Mr. COWAN. In order to place the position of the committee before the House, I wish to say that the majority of the committee were firmly of the opinion that this parliament did not have exclusive jurisdiction. The Bill deals with tributaries and with branches which are not navigable. We felt that we did not have the right to give power to attach the booms to the shore ; and that that was entirely within the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. FOWLER. I know of my own knowledge that the river is navigable for at least two hundred miles, and that steamers ply on it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It turns on a question of fact.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a matter of fact. Steamers in which I am interested have ascended the river for one hundred and fifty miles from where it joins the South Thompson up towards its source, and therefore it was necessary to come to this parliament. An application has been made to the provincial parliament as well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very likely it is a case in which the complete carrying out of the undertaking would involve legislation from this parliament, as well as from the provincial parliament.

Mr. FOWLER. I think so.

Mr. WADE. We discussed that point, and I was of that opinion ; but it seemed to me that if the parliament of Canada had any jurisdiction at all in consequence of this being a work which would obstruct navigation, that then the attaching of booms to the shores would be a purely incidental matter and this parliament would have jurisdiction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would doubt that a little.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) can take his Bill and the risk with it.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

QUESTIONS.

CANADA-MEXICO STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

1. In the contract establishing steamboat services on the Pacific and Atlantic oceans between Canada and Mexico, is it the intention of the government to insert therein any provisions retaining to the government control over the freight and passenger rates ? If so, what will be the nature of such provision ?

2. If there is to be no such provision, is it to be left to the contracting company to charge such rates as it chooses ?

3. What precaution, if any, is to be taken to prevent the companies combining with other companies (by land or water), so as to prevent the country, in return for the subsidy, obtaining the benefit of competitive or reduced rates ?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). A clause will be inserted in the contract my hon. friend refers to, giving the government control over the rates. That answer applies to questions 2 and 3 as well.

GEOGRAPHY OF CANADA.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. At what date was the book 'Geography of the Dominion of Canada' issued by the Department of the Interior ?

2. Where is the said book distributed ?

3. If it is distributed abroad, in what countries ?

4. How many copies have been issued and distributed ?

5. Is it distributed to the schools in Canada; and if so, what schools ?

6. Has the said book been translated into French ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister).

1. April the 8th, 1904.

2. In the United States, Great Britain and Canada.

3. Great Britain and the United States.

4. 100,000 copies.

5. Copies are sent to school children in Canada on their applying for them. There has been no general distribution to the schools.

6. Yes. So soon as the French edition is available, it is intended to extend the circulation to France.

THE FISHING BOUNTIES.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Hackett—asked:

1. On what principle are bounties paid to fishermen in the maritime provinces ?

2. Why are not fishermen engaged in the lobster fishery allowed to participate in the bounty, as well as those employed in other branches of this industry ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The bounties are distributed in accordance with the statute passed in that behalf.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER moved.

For copies of all correspondence between the government and any person, or persons, in reference to the granting of pensions to those of the Canadian South African contingents who were wounded or suffered any disability in such service.

Mr. RALPH SMITH.

He said : Mr. Speaker, I wish, if possible to find out whether or not the government has settled on any policy in reference to these men. Those who have suffered disability are in receipt of small pensions from the British government ; but that pension is altogether inadequate for their maintenance, particularly in the cases of serious disability. I do not wish in any sense to detract from the claim set up on behalf of any man who participated in that war when the whole world was jealously watching every movement of England and wishing the success of her enemy's arms. The men who went out from Canada to defend the empire on that occasion did a great deal for the furtherance of Canadian interests, not only in England, but in other countries. The benefit which Canada derived and is still deriving from the efforts of those men, voluntarily undertaken, and the personal sacrifices they made, should call forth the gratitude of the Canadian people, especially to those who suffered at the hands of the enemy. In my own county there is a young man who joined the ranks and went to South Africa, and became totally disabled by losing the sight of both eyes. I need not inform this House that I refer to Trooper Mulloy. Wherever the English language is spoken, the name of Trooper Mulloy is known ; and if it is not the general policy of this government to do something for every one who suffered a disability, there certainly should be some definite policy with regard to him. He receives at the hands of the British government 65 cents per day. He is a young man of more than ordinary ability. He is a young man who previous to his disability, was inspired with an ambition to make his mark in the world, and he is now going to college under great difficulties, having to employ assistance in his work in order to place himself in a position to make some sort of livelihood. I have known his family for many years, and they are a family whom every man in this House would respect if he knew them. Out of respect for the family I do not wish to refer to their financial position. I can say this, however, that there was a time when they were very well off, being well-to-do farmers. But circumstances have changed since then, and they are not as well off to-day as they were some years ago ; and, Sir, the responsibility will to some extent rest on this young man of maintaining his aged mother, with whom I think it is his intention to make his home while she remains here. If the government intend to do anything in this matter, it is high time for them to make some announcement of their policy. This young man, I believe, has drawn some $2,000 all told from the patriotic fund, which was subscribed by private citizens some years ago ; but that is not a fund on which the country has a right to throw any individual. The country's gratitude ought to extend to these individuals. I do not suppose there is a country in the world outside of Canada which would leave these persons in the position in which they are to-day. I do not say that we ought to copy to the fullest extent the pension policy of the United States; but there is this to be said, that no American citizen suffers from having fought for his country's rights without receiving full recognition, no matter where he may live; and if we are ever to have a full and free Canadian sentiment in this country, we shall have to recognize the claims of men who are willing to step into the ranks and defend the country's interests when trouble is at her doors. It is all very well to discuss the question as to whether or not we have a right to have anything to do with the imperial wars, and all that sort of thing; but we cannot expect our citizens to stand on the threshold of their country's troubles and discuss who is right and who is wrong before they fight in her interest. If these young men had done that, Canada would never have benefited from their efforts in South Africa. I think this question ought to be put at rest by some announcement from the government to-day in reference to what they intend to do. I do not wish to prolong this discussion or to say anything that would offend the sensibilities of any man, but I wish to urge on the government the necessity and advisability of doing something in this instance.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Last year my hon. friend spoke to me several times during the session privately with reference to this matter, and I informed him that I intended to bring it up some time during the session. At my request he postponed bringing the matter before the House, as I was in hopes that I might be able to give him some answer. I told him on the occasions when we talked it over that the pension list was being prepared by the imperial government, and I thought it wise to postpone consideration of any particular case until we could consider the whole. Unfortunately the matter was brought up by my hon. friend when I was not present, but that was no fault of his. He had postponed it at my request until nearly the end of the session, when I was called away and he had to bring it up in my absence. I have read the debate which then took place and I have had the pleasure of hearing what my hon. friend has said to-day, in a great part of which I entirely agree. There can be no question as to the nobility of the conduct of those representatives of Canada who served in South Africa. There are some reasons, which may be known to some hon. members of this House, which are known to my hon. friend at any rate, with reference to Trooper Molloy which should appeal specially and personally to me. However, in considering matters of this kind, we must proceed on general lines. It is not, I think, desirable that we should deal with individual cases except perhaps in very rare instances. The work of classifying and determining the merits of the applications which have been made for pensions by Canadians who served in South Africa has not even yet been completed. I should have said that the men who enlisted in Canada for service in South Africa were perfectly well aware that they entered into a contract with the imperial government to accept from it the same treatment as imperial soldiers received. The work of determining the list has been going on for two years. There are something like ninety provisional or temporary pensioners, that is pensioners receiving pensions for a limited period of time. There are something like twenty getting permanent pensions. The list is not concluded, but the result will probably be that there will be about thirty permanent pensioners and something over a hundred pensioners for a term, which may or may not be renewed according to the deserts of the special or individual case.

Mr. CLARKE. What authority is giving the pensions?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The imperial government.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the Canadian government?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that is not the arrangement.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not understand the reference to the lists not being completed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The question seems to resolve itself into this. We have a pension list in this country. We are paying pensioners who served in the Fenian raid. We are paying pensioners who served in the Northwest rebellion. Surely they deserve as much consideration as the men who served in South Africa. Surely the men who defended the integrity of the soil of Canada against the invader and put down rebellion within this country are entitled to as much consideration as those who served the army in South Africa. The logical result then is that we should apply the pension rate in Canada, but not more, to the men who are pensioned upon the British government and who served in South Africa.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There were some who received special treatment.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. None so far as I know.

Mr. BRODER. Oh, yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I was not aware of that. However, the point I am going to make is this. In whatever we do we must proceed upon the same lines as we have proceeded upon in the past and apply the same rules, and I am quite willing to do that. If it should turn out that the pensions which the men who have served in South Africa are receiving is below the Canadian pension, I should say we should do exactly as we did in the case of the pay. The House will remember that the parliament of Canada supplemented to the Canadians who served in South Africa the difference between the imperial rate of pay and the Canadian, and upon the same principle, I would be disposed to make up to the South African pensioners any difference that there may be between the rate of the imperial pension and the rate of the Canadian pension.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the difference ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not able to say but I do not think there is any very material difference. I have made some inquiry, and I believe that the Canadian pension would not be materially if at all higher than the pension which Molloy is now receiving, but there would be a difference in some cases, and generally speaking I believe the Canadian rate of pension is slightly higher than the imperial rate. That is as much as I am able to say to-day, but as soon as the list is completed, I will look carefully into the case. The papers which my hon. friend has asked for will be brought down, and I hope, before the end of the session, to be able to make some explicit statement as to what will be done.

Motion agreed to.

STEAMSHIP LINE, CANADA AND FRANCE.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency) moved for :

Copies of all deeds, papers, documents, correspondence, &c., now existing in any department, and filed since the 15th of September, 1903, in relation to the contract executed in the course of last session, for the establishment of a line of steamers between Canada and France ; and to the subsidy payable for the said purpose ; or to any matter or subject connected with the said contract and the said subsidy.

He said : It will be remembered that when this question was brought up last year everybody was agreed that if a first-rate line were established between some port in France and a port in Canada, the commerce of this country would greatly benefit, and when the resolutions were brought down, granting $133,000 a year for ten years towards the establishment of this new line, it passed without a dissenting voice.

Now, it will also be remembered that, when the matter was brought up last year, it was stated by the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that negotiations were being carried on with one M. Colombier of Bordeaux. And, when it was asked what references had been asked for in relation to M. Colombier's standing and financial ability, a telegram was produced from the British consul at Bordeaux saying that the House of Colombier was a respectable house, not of very large means, but quite able to grapple with the proposition that was at its door. It was suggested at the time, and my hon. friends on the other side were warned from this side, and warned very pointedly, that probably M. Colombier was not the prime mover in this scheme but that he was personne interposée and for the purpose of giving the contract to one Mr. Carbonneau. Now, Mr. Carbonneau had not enjoyed, up to that time, a very savoury reputation in Canada ; and I must say, that reputation has not been enhanced by his actions since in Canada or France. But hon. gentlemen opposite were very set, and declared that they did not know Mr. Carbonneau officially, but that all negotiations were being carried on with M. Colombier and not with Mr. Carbonneau. On several occasions my hon. friends on the other side were told by gentlemen on this side of the House that Mr. Carbonneau was really the person interested and that M. Colombier was only acting for Mr. Carbonneau. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) who I regret not to see in his place to-day gave us assurance in these words, which I quote from 'Hansard' :

On this occasion the government is taking every precaution to achieve success.

For, it had been pointed out that this was a third or fourth attempt to establish a line of steamers between France and Canada and it would be too bad if, on this fourth occasion, the scheme fell through. It was all the more important to establish a line of steamers between Canada and France because it was almost, if not quite, impossible to derive benefit from the Franco-Canadian treaty which had been entered into some time before, unless we had steamers plying between France and Canada. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) who came before the House with considerable data, and who seems to be the sponsor of this line and to have many friends amongst those who were connected with the enterprise, even went so far as to tell us that four ships were then under contract to be built and delivered by the 1st of April, 1904. I do not know where he got his information. It was precise information and, from it, it seemed that everything was ready so that these gentlemen not only could get the $133,000 that the contract gave them, but that this line of steamers would certainly be established for this season of navigation. Now, we find from answers which I had the honour of putting to the government, that very soon after the end of last session if not while the session was still in progress, the contract given to M. Colombier was transferred to Mr. Carbonneau whom the government did not know officially. They had been warned, at that time, as I have said, that Mr. Carbonneau seemed to be the principal agent and principal factor in this scheme—the head pusher as my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) suggests. The government ignored Mr. Carbonneau ; they did not know him officially. Yet, strange to say, almost immediately after the contract had been entered into between M. Colombier and the government that contract was transferred to Mr. Carbonneau. And what do we find further ? We find that Mr. Carbonneau afterwards transferred the contract to some company by the name of Le Transport Canadien, Limited. Now, the line has not been established. It is true that two steamers have made two trips from France to Canada. The first steamers sailed from some port in France—Bordeaux I believe, calling at St. Pierre et Miquelon Islands and coming as far as Halifax. Of that trip we have very little information. Another trip was made by a steamer called the 'Malou' which arrived out the other day from the port of Bordeaux at Montreal. Concerning this, we have more information. The vessel seems to have carried quite a number of passengers, but, if the information in the newspapers is correct, the steamer was not at all fitted for the service. In fact, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in answer to questions that I put, said that it was not admitted by the government that by causing the sailing of this steamer to a Canadian port M. Colombier had fulfilled any of the obligations he had entered into under the law passed last session. Now, it seems, the government are in negotiations with the firm of Armstrong. How they have got into the game—because it seems like a game—I do not understand. I do not know whether Mr. Carbonneau, after transferring his contract to the Transport Canadien has transferred it to the Armstrongs. If current rumour is true, Mr. Carbonneau has transferred the contract a second time to the firm of Armstrong which is now in negotiation with the government. All this will appear in the papers which I ask to have brought down. I would ask the government also to bring down the contract which was entered into last year. It is not mentioned in my motion, but, if necessary, I would ask leave to amend my motion to cover that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) will find that the contract has been laid on the table.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was laid on the table, but I cannot find any trace of it in any of the departments of the House. I have searched all the offices of the House, but cannot find it anywhere. I applied to the clerk without success. Through some mistake, it seems to have been taken away and it is not available. Under these circumstances, if necessary, I will ask to amend my motion so that a copy of the contract may be produced with the other papers.

At all events I think it is in order for us to call the attention of the government to the fact that what we said last year is true, that the prime mover in this scheme was Mr. Carbonneau, and the government should have taken special precautions to see that he had nothing to do with the contract, especially that he should not be the principal person contracted with under the name of M. Colombier. Mr. Carbonneau is well known in this country. His reputation was made a good while before this contract was negotiated for. He was connected—as was pointed out—with an enterprise in Montreal which fell to the ground and which was one of the causes why La Banque du Peuple had to go out of existence. And his reputation was not bettered by anything he did on the other side, either in England or in France. And I know that before the end of the session and before the Bill actually passed, certain papers were handed over to my right hon. friend the leader of the House in which the past career of Mr. Carbonneau was exposed. Now, Mr. Carbonneau to-day is practically a fugitive from justice. He cannot go to France. He cannot set foot in England. He cannot come to Montreal, because a dozen capiases have been issued against him, and he will be arrested as soon as he appears in that city. He cannot go to the Yukon. So, here is a man who was pointed out to the government by hon. gentlemen on this side as the principal one with whom they were contracting. It was known to everybody except the government that Mr. Carbonneau was at the bottom of this scheme. All the ministers were blind to the fact, but almost everybody else in the House knew that Mr. Carbonneau was really the man ; and the evidence to prove that we were right in this assumption is that when the contract was passed between M. Colombier and the government, it was immediately transferred to Mr. Carbonneau. I hope the papers will be brought down as soon as possible, because, of course, this is a matter that must be fully ventilated in this House. I would ask permission to amend my motion by adding :

And also a copy of the contract executed between the government and M. Colombier.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend, I think, will find that contract in the hands of some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side, but, of course, I have no objection in the world to the motion or the amendment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As has already been stated by the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), there is no objection to these papers being brought down and they will be brought down immediately. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has thought it advisable to pass some strictures on the government because it was reported last year that Mr. Carbonneau was behind this project. This report was true; he was behind the project, but the government had nothing to do with him. It insisted on having all negotiations with M. Colombier, who belongs to a very respectable house. The report, as I say, was quite true, as I understand, but we had no official knowledge of the fact in the department. It has been reported, and I believe it is beyond doubt, that almost immediately after the contract was signed it was transferred by Mr. Carbonneau to M. Colombier, who transferred it to a company called the Transport Canadien. The government would not recognize this assignment. The criticism of my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) would certainly be entitled to great weight if it were shown that the government had had anything to do with Mr. Carbonneau and had been willing to recognize or to accept the assignments said to have been made by M. Colombier to Mr. Carbonneau and by Mr. Carbonneau to the Transport Canadien. But the government did nothing of the kind; the government held Mr. Colombier strictly to his contract, and I am sorry to say that we have been once more disappointed, and that M. Colombier has not been able to carry out his contract. The merely colourable attempt which has been made to implement the contract is one which cannot be entertained. So far as I know, only one ship has been sent out by M. Colombier, that is the ship to which my hon. friend has just referred, the 'Malou.' The 'Malou' left St. Malo on the 2nd of May. It touched at St. Pierre and Miquelon, where it left a large number of fishermen of the class who always come there especially to fish on the Grand Banks, then proceeded to Halifax, and I believe also went to Montreal and landed some immigrants.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And to New York also.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And to New York, so it is impossible to ackowledge that as accomplishing the agreement, and M. Colombier has been notified that his contract will be cancelled and all assignments made by him will not be recognized. The government has had some inquiries and some negotiations also with the firm of Armstrong & Whitworth, the large shipbuilding firm. These negotiations with the great firm of Armstrong & Company have not yet been completed, and if the firm of Armstrong, Whitworth & Company are willing to enter into a contract with us, I think we could do nothing better than enter into a contract with such a respectable firm as this. We would then have what we have so long wished to have, a service to France, which has not yet been obtained.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The government do not seem to have been very much more successful with this enterprise than with the fast Atlantic service, at least up to the present time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No; it has baffled the efforts of many governments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems remarkable that we should have a statement last session from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that four ships would be completed by the spring of this year. It now appears that no ship has been even commenced, much less completed. When a responsible minister of the Crown makes a statement of that kind to parliament, and it has been so absolutely lacking in fulfilment, one would think my right hon. friend would think it worthy of some explanation when responding to the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain). On what basis, on what authority, from what information, did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries make so extraordinary a statement to the House last year? It seems to me to be absolutely unheard of that such a statement should have been made in this House when it seems to have been absolutely lacking in any foundation whatever. One could hardly suppose the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be so reckless in his statements to the House as to pass a remark of that kind without some authority or foundation for it, and yet we are not informed of any reason that he had for giving to the House so important a piece of information.

The right hon. gentleman says that the government did not know Mr. Carbonneau, although he believes the contract was assigned to him almost immediately after being entered into. Can it be true that if the government did not know Carbonneau officially, it really knew him practically, and was well aware that at the time that the contract was being made for his benefit, and with the intention that it should be assigned to him? That has been the current rumour, and if I am not mistaken it has been repeated more than once in the press. Under these circumstances, it hardly seems a justification to say that the government did not officially know Carbonneau if, as a matter of fact, a member of the government who has made important statements to the House on the subject did know and negotiate with Carbonneau and was aware that the contract was proposed to be assigned to him. However, when the papers are brought down we will have further information, and there will be further opportunity of discussion. In the absence of the documents to which my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has referred, we have little information, and I should think that at some time before the end of the session we might at least be favoured by the government with some information of the extraordinary statements to which attention has been called. Every one in this country would naturally suppose that by this time we would have had four steamships engaged in a profitable and advantageous trade between France and this country. Instead of that we have nothing accomplished and are exactly where we were last year, the government still continuing negotiations. The only difference between this and the fast Atlantic service seems to be that while the government is continuing negotiations in this case, it has absolutely abandoned negotiations in the other case. I am depending for that statement on the authority of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, I think, gives the House to understand that. How long will it be before the two enterprises are exactly on the same footing, namely, that nothing shall have been accomplished and no negotiations shall be in progress? Perhaps we might have a prophesy on that from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who, from his experience, will be well able to inform the House just how long it will be before the government will abandon negotiations, having accomplished nothing in regard to the service between France and this country.

Perhaps my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce would not like to hazard a prophecy, but if any one in the House could give us any information upon that subject I would suppose that he should be called upon to do it. It is a pity the service has not been proceeded with. I assume that the government have taken it up on good grounds. I do not recollect all the data which was placed before the House last year but I recollect that I was impressed with the idea that service would be beneficial to this country and would build up some trade. It is therefore to be regretted that nothing has been accomplished and I trust that before the end of the session we shall have some further information about the negotiations, because, in matters of this kind, we have become so accustomed to the methods of the government that we feel that even when negotiations are going on we have not reached that hopeless condition in which the fast Atlantic service finds itself to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The late government were negotiating for a long time for a fast Atlantic service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And they would have accomplished something if this government had not interfered.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. With a big string to it.

Motion as amended agreed to.

LABOUR UNION LABELS.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide for the registration of labour union labels, and to provide pecuniary penalties for the unlawful use of such labels when so registered. —Mr. Ralph Smith.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On resolution of Mr. Ralph Smith.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not wish to offer any opposition to this resolution at the present time, but I want it very well understood that I would like to see the draft of the Bill based on this resolution. I do not know if my hon. friend has considered the question as to how far an organization not incorporated may have a label which may be in effect a trade mark, because that is really what it is intended by this resolution to make a trade union label.

Resolution reported, read a second time, and agreed to on divison.

Mr. RALPH SMITH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 135) respecting labour union labels.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE COMPANIES' ACT, 1902.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 75) to amend the Companies' Act, 1902—Mr. Cowan.

On section 1,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill is introduced for the purpose of removing a doubt suggested by the terms of section 5 of the Act as it now stands. That section provides for the incorporation by letters-patent of companies for any of the purposes or objects to which the legislative authority of parliament extends, and it then proceeds to say:

Except the construction and working of railways, or of telegraph or of telephone lines, or the business of banking and the issue of paper money, or the business of insurance, or the business of a loan company.

It is conceivable that this exception might be construed to cover the class of companies mentioned in the proposed subsection, although really it was not intended to do that. I quite agree that possibly a doubt may exist, and that it is desirable to remove that doubt, but I do not think my hon. friend has gone about it in the proper way. If he would pardon me, I would suggest that that doubt should be removed by enacting provisions to the following effect :

The expression, 'the construction and working of railways, or of telegraph, or of telephone lines,' in section 5 of the Companies Act, 1902, does not include the acting as a contractor in railway or telegraph, or telephone construction ; and nothing in the said Act shall be deemed or taken to prevent or to have prevented the granting thereunder of a charter by letters patent constituting a company for the purpose of acting as such contractor.

2. The expression, 'construction and working of railways' in section 3 of the Companies Act, chapter 117 of the revised statutes, does not include acting as a contractor in railway construction, and nothing in the said Act shall be deemed or taken to prevent or to have prevented the granting thereunder of a charter by letters patent, constituting a company for the purpose of acting as said contractor.

I move that these clauses be substituted for the first clause of this Bill.

Mr. INGRAM. What does section 5 provide now ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The evident intention of parliament was to reserve for parliament the incorporation of companies having for their object the construction and the working of railways, or telegraphs, or telephone lines, and also companies incorporated to carry on the business of banking and the issue of paper money, and the business of insurance or the business of a loan company. The amendment would declare that a company could be formed for the purposes of contracting for the construction of a railway or of a telephone or telephone line. Instead of adopting the amendment suggested by the member for Essex (Mr. Cowan) I put in an interpretation clause so as to make it quite apparent that all we want to do is to declare that a company may be formed by letters patent, not to operate a railway or a telegraph, or a telephone line, but merely for the purpose of doing the contractors' work in building it.

Mr. INGRAM. A person requiring anything further than that would have to get a special Act of Parliament ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Now that the hon. Minister of Justice is proposing this very important amendment to a very important Bill, would he have any objection to allowing the committee to report progress, so that we would have time to consider his amendment ? I think what he proposes is reasonable, but still we ought to consider it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is quite a proper suggestion, and I concur in it. My hon. friend from Hamilton had better move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. BARKER. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Lennox for the second reading of Bill (No. 73) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. LENNOX. I have already spoken on this matter. I presume the Minister of Justice will give his views.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Since this Bill was under consideration before, I have looked into it further, and I cannot see that there is any difference between it and the Bill introduced last session by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). This Bill is somewhat different in form, but in substance it is the same, and it is subject to the objection I then urged, which was that the Bill was unconstitutional and beyond the powers of this parliament to pass. The argument in support of the constitutional propriety of the legislation, so far as it depends on the claim of jurisdiction, appears to be based on subsections 10 and 11 of section 92 of the British North America Act. I cannot see how it is possible for us, under any proper construction of that Act, to claim that we have jurisdiction with respect to railways beyond those matters affecting their construction, operation and management. I would like to draw my hon. friend's attention to a case which I do not think he mentioned, that is, the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway vs. the County and Township of York, where, at page 70 of the 25th volume of the Appeal Reports of Ontario, Chief Justice Burton says :

The railway in question is one of the subjects placed under the exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament of the Dominion, and it follows that in all matters affecting its construction, operation and management, including the expropriation of the lands required—everything, in fact, necessary to its full and efficient working—the legislation of the Dominion is of paramount authority, even though it interferes with property and civil rights, and trenches on matters assigned to the provincial legislature by section 92 of the British North America Act.

Again, the question was up for consideration in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway vs. Notre Dame de Bonsecours, which my hon. friend will find in the Privy Council reports for 1889, page 367. There it was held that railway legislation, strictly so called, is the measure of parliament's jurisdiction. So far as complete provision for these purposes requires it, parliament has power also to deal with matters assigned to the local legislatures, but we cannot go any further than that. Under this Bill my hon. friend has in comtemplation a distinct interference with a civil contract made in a province between an employer and an employee, and I think that the only way he could attempt for a moment to justify our interfering in a matter of that kind would be to deal with it as a matter affecting insurance or the regulation of trade and commerce. In the case of the Citizens' Insurance Company vs. Parsons, Appeal Cases, page 112, their Lordships say :

> Regulation of trade and commerce includes political arrangements in regard to trade, requiring the sanction of parliament, regulation of trade in matters of interprovincial concern, and may, perhaps, include general regulation of trade affecting the whole Dominion, but it does not comprehend the power to regulate by legislation the contracts of a particular business or trade (such as the business of fire insurance) in a single province.

Then Sir Horace Davey, in regard to the Dominion License Act, arguing, said :

> Regulation of trade and commerce means general regulations as applicable to trade generally, of what may be called, for want of a better word, a political character, that is, for regulating trade and commerce between the Dominion and foreign countries, or, for instance, for regulating the trade between the provinces themselves. But it does not include minute regulations affecting the terms and conditions on which persons carrying on particular trades are allowed to do so in particular localities.

It seems to me the passage of this Bill would be a distinct interference with the rights of the provinces with respect to the relations between the employer and the employee, a distinct interference with what I would call a civil contract within a province. On that ground I object to this legislation, as I did to the legislation introduced last session by my hon. friend from South Wellington.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the object of the Bill of the hon. member for South Simcoe is at all to interfere with civil contracts. If I understand it, any railway company and the employees of that railway company would be just as free to make contracts after it became law as they are now. The only difference would be that the existence of a contract providing for an employee receiving aid from a railway company would not be a bar to any action brought by any employee of a railway company or his representatives. I do not know of any employment so hazardous as that affected by this Bill. And I do not know if any other class of workmen who are deprived of remedy against their employers in case of injury. Take for instance, the case of civil servants. The only conceivable ground really for taking away the right of action from these railway employees is the extremely hazardous nature of their employment, and are we to understand that the Minister of Justice takes the view that it is utterly beyond the powers of this parliament to give any relief to that class of men ? The hon. minister has not said that this is legislation which ought to be given by the provinces, and we must therefore presume that such is not his opinion. If it be not and the hon. gentleman is disinclined to give effect to any legislation here, what is to become of that class of men ? Are the people of this country disposed to compel these men to submit to this hardship, namely, that before they can receive employment in any railway company they must contract away their right or that of their legal representatives to take action against the company in case of damage. Does this mean that the great railway companies have taken possession of parliament ? The hon. gentleman laughs, but it means that or nothing. It means an utter disregard for this class of men. It means that they are singled out as no other class is by being compelled, before they can enter the employ of any railway company, even of the government railway, to sign a contract which will prevent them of their representatives from obtaining any relief, in case of injury or death, except such small insurance as they may be carrying, and for which they have to pay the premium themselevs. True the railway companies contribute a small sum, but that contribution would not amount to what an accident would cost in a year. I regret sincerely that in case of such hardship and gravity, the Minister of Justice should have made up his mind that here is no chance of legislating to relieve these men. The explanation has not been quite so elaborate or so clear as he has made with regard to other matters. He does not hold out to the persons seeking this kind of legislation the slightest hope of any relief. Even if they should go to the provincial legislature they cannot get full relief nor can they by applying to this parliament. I say I have witnessed this scene with a good deal of pain and with a good deal of disappointment.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE. I recognize in this Bill language very similar, and propositions very similar, to those contained in Bills with a similar object introduced by me last session and the session before last. This Bill is, perhaps, more radical than the Bills I introduced, as it absolutely takes away the right of the employee to contract himself out of liability. The Bill which I introduced on two former occasions left the right of contract but allowed the reasonableness of the contract to be decided by a court or a judge. Now, the great difficulty in the case is this : That no plaintiff so far, has had financial resources sufficient to get a decision from an Appellate Court. There are two judgments now upholding the rights of the railway companies but they are only the judgments of trial judges. It may be that the case would be otherwise decided by the Supreme Court or the Privy Council; but it is not very likely that we shall have a plaintiff who is able to go that length. I would ask the Minister of Justice whether, having regard to the fact that there are some 25,000 or 30,000 railway employees, he would or would not be disposed to state the facts and submit a case to the Supreme Court for their opinion as to the constitutionality of the Act now before us. If the Ontario Act does apply, that is an end of it, and if it does not, then some legislation such as this, I think, might well be passed by this parliament.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER. I was not present when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) made his remarks with respect to this Bill, but I understand that his contention is that this parliament has no jurisdiction in the matter. The present state of affairs was created by the legislation passed by this parliament in 1874 and 1878. That is the way I understand it. That legislation gives the Grand Trunk Railway the authority to organize this insurance company and to make just such contracts as are being made. That being the case, surely this parliament has the right to regulate the legislation it passed on those occasions. It seems to me that the merits of the case are very strong so far as the employees are concerned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not touch the merits.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand perfectly that the Minister of Justice did not argue the merits of the case, but has simply given his view of the law. But the merits are so strong that, where there is a reasonable doubt—and I think there must be a reasonable doubt in the minister's mind—it seems to me he ought to allow this legislation to go through and then let the railway companies fight it out in the courts if parliament has not the jurisdiction. The number of railway employees in the country is very large and is rapidly increasing, and, if the Grand Trunk Pacific is carried through there will be many more. It seems to me that some relief is absolutely necessary. Look at the circumstances. A man goes into this employment which, as was stated by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) is a hazardous one. His wages, while, perhaps, a reasonable return for his labour, are not large. He makes a contract with his employer—must do it in order to be employed—not to seek damages in case he is injured, no matter how much fault there may be on the part of the employer. And if he is killed his family is precluded from seeking compensation for loss of the bread-winner. This is an undesirable state of affairs and one which parliament should seek to remedy. This is the only place these people can come to for redress of their grievances, and this Bill is calculated to give that redress. It seems strange that this parliament, which controls the Intercolonial should, not, in this case at least arrange to have this obnoxious clause abolished, so that, when employees of the Intercolonial, if injured through the negligence of their fellow employees shall receive compensation for such injuries. The authorities are very clear. There is a case reported in 30, Supreme Court of Canada in which the chief justice gives his opinion that this contract can be enforced so far as the railway is concerned. We have here the judgment of the highest court of the land upholding this sort of contract. Therefore, the only way to get clear of it is by some such legislation as that proposed in this Bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is that Grenier vs. the Queen ?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a case I argued myself.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, the case was argued by the Minister of Justice himself. It seems to me there can be no question as to what the judgment of the court was.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The judgment was all right.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me the case was exactly in point.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, but they held the contract good——

Mr. FOWLER. That is what I say.

Mr. FITZPATRICK—under the civil law of the province.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand the minister to say that we should interfere with provincial rights in passing such legislation as this ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. This is a Dominion railway. Surely, we have the right to pass legislation incidental to the working of the road.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. 'Construction, maintenance and operation.'

Mr. FOWLER. This comes under the head of operation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would add a word to what I have already said. There is something in the suggestion of my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) as to the propriety of having the question decided. I have no doubt as to the soundness of the position I have assumed. But I have asked my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) who promotes the Bill to have it referred to the committee. We can discuss it there. My view is that we might gain the object sought by making an amendment to section 242 of the Railway Act. And, as I have already expressed doubt as to the constitutionality of a part of subsection 3 of section 242, I do not know but that it would be wise to make an amendment that would meet his views, and then perhaps we might have a reference to the Supreme Court to have the matter decided. I do not pretend, while I have my own opinions on this subject, that I know everything that is to be known about it, and I quite appreciate the importance of coming to the assistance of these people who are connected with the operation of railways. At the same time I realize the importance on the other hand, of leaving all matters respecting contract within the provinces to the laws of the province, and in the case of Grenier vs. the Queen the Supreme Court decided formally that a contract entered into by the husband of the woman who was the plaintif in the case was binding on both parties. The question was raised and discussed. I was present and expressed that opinion and my opinion was sustained by the court.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the difficulty. If the contract was not binding it would not be necessary to have legislation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I said that the contract is good under our civil code. This would operate with extreme hardship against the employees of railways in our province where we have no such doctrine as the law of contributory negligence and common employment. These I understand apply to the English provinces. In our province notwithstanding an accident might be caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant there is compensation but in the other provinces—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think in all the provinces that is abrogated by statute.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am speaking more of the common law. In Ontario for instance, you have the Workmen's Compensation Act. I am willing to have the matter referred to the Railway Committee where we will discuss and where I will suggest an amendment which would meet what my hon. friend has in view and in all probability—of course I cannot now speak with authority, as I have not consulted the other members of the government—we could have the matter referred to the Supreme Court for judical determination. That would be my own opinion.

Mr. LENNOX. As I understand it the Minister of Justice purposes referring this to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, I would suggest that the matter go to the Railway Committee, where we may have a fuller discussion than here, and then I will myself suggest an amendment which I think will go as far as my hon. friend intends, and possibly it might be determined that the government might have the matter referred to the Supreme Court.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the Minister of Justice to say that in his opinion the Bill introduced by my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) is not a constitutional Bill. Some years ago when this very legislation was brought up in the province of Ontario, after soliciting information from the Grand Trunk Railway Company—that I think being the only company at that time which had a Provident Insurance Society under the Act of 1874—after receiving information they concluded that the majority of the employees of the Grand Trunk were not in favour of being excluded from the benefits of the Compensation for Injuries Act of the province of Ontario, but after getting that information they placed on the statute-book an amendment to the Compensation for Injuries Act to the effect that all employees connected with the insurance society in the Grand Trunk were excluded from the provisions of the Compensation for Injuries Act and therefore it was only those who were not connected with it in any way at all who come under that Act in Ontario. What I want to know is if this Act is an extension of the redress for the railway employees of the Grand Trunk Company who are connected with the Provident Insurance Society, would they by reason of assigning away their rights or contracting themselves out of any benefit or redress which they have other than simply the usual compensation of the Provident Insurance Society.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That was the only redress.

Mr. INGRAM. That is a most extraordinary position. Here is a provincial government exercising control over Dominion railways. The railways for which they have apparently legislated are railways partially within one province and partially within another and therefore they hold when you go to the government of the province of Ontario that that province has no jurisdiction over these railways. The Minister of Justice shakes his head; I take it for granted they must have control according to his opinion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. With respect to those contracts which arise within the limits of the province.

Mr. INGRAM. In so far as they affect the employees Provident Insurance Society but not otherwise. I do not see how the employees who feel that this is a great hardship are going to get their grievances re-dressed unless this parliament takes hold of the matter and places legislation on the statute-book, legislation that will relieve them. I cannot see any other way.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood the Minister of Justice to say that he would move an amendment to section 242, subsection 3. I endeavoured to make it clear when moving the second reading of the Bill that I merely wanted to accomplish my purpose and would be very glad to have the assistance of the government. Why should not the Minister of Justice let the matter stand over and introduce his amendment so as to have it come up before the Committee of the Whole House at a subsequent time ? Why should we not consider it as we did the Railway Act of last session ? We did not have to go to the Railway Committee with that, and it seems to me it is a great advantage to discuss it in the whole House.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I prefer to have the matter go before the Railway Committee. There can be no loss by having it discussed very fully there. No detriment can come to my hon. friend or his Bill by having it discussed in that committee with the understanding that so far as the government is concerned we will see that the Bill is reported back to the House. Of course in so far as the reference to the Supreme Court is concerned, I can only express now my personal preference, I would prefer to recommend to the government that we should have a reference to the court, but of course I cannot commit the government now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the constitutional question is concerned, there will not be much advantage in sending the Bill to the Railway Committee, but there are other questions that affect the merits of the Bill, and to these I presume the minister refers. I have not given the constitutional questions any consideration. Has the minister any opinion as to whether it is within the power of parliament ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I have not recently given the matter careful consideration either, because I presume, in view of the decision in Grenier vs The Queen that I was committed to the view I expressed then and I have not departed from it. I think that view was upheld by the court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we all agree that in the absence of legislation from the parliament of Canada the question of liability must be determined by the law of the provinces. But that is not an end of the question submitted by my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox). The question still remains whether or not this subject is so directly connected with a matter over which we have jurisdiction that this parliament can in that respect interfere with the law of the provinces. Of course the Minister of Justice is quite as familiar as I am, or more familiar than I am, with the extent to which the doctrine of incidental jurisdiction, if I may so express it, has been carried by the courts.

It occurred to me while the discussion was going on that it might be possible for this parliament, for example, in a Bill incorporating a railway company, or in a Bill dealing generally with railway companies, to make provision requiring notice of action. Legislation of that kind is of very frequent occurrence on the statute-book of Canada, and probably in some cases which are not very far from the matter which we are now discussing. Well, if you concede that that would be possible, you are not really very far away from what my hon. friend from Simcoe is urging. He is urging just the converse of that, namely, that employees engaged by that company for the operation of the road may not by contract with the company deprive themselves of certain rights in connection with injuries which they may sustain while engaged in that work. I have no strong opinion on the subject, because I have not considered it, but I think the proposition would be quite arguable, and I would be inclined to think that the course suggested by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, namely, to have the whole of this question, in connection with some other question mentioned by him, referred to the Supreme Court, would perhaps be the best course to adopt.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Perhaps I am trespassing upon the rules of the House, but I would like my hon. friend to understand my reason for, at the present time at all events, agreeing with the course proposed to be taken. A careful reading of the Grand Trunk Act does suggest a doubt on the question. Incidentally a doubt has been raised in respect to the question of jurisdiction, and in view of that doubt I would be quite satisfied to recommend to the government a reference of this question to the Supreme Court.

Mr. LENNOX. Do I understand my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to move that the reference of this Bill be to the Railway Committee ? I recognize that there is no use of dividing the House on the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion at present is for the second reading only. The other motion cannot be made until the motion for the second reading is disposed of.

Mr. LENNOX. Do I understand the hon. minister to move that this order be discharged and that the Bill be referred to the Railway Committee ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The proper course is to move the second reading, and then some one may move to refer the Bill to the Railway Committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not wish to be understood as agreeing to the propositions which were advanced by the hon. Minister of Justice, great deference as I certainly have for his opinion. The cases that I referred to in the argument in chief my hon. friend has not seen fit to deal with. I have referred to the cases to sustain my argument. I have endeavoured to make it clear, and I think I have from the authorities I have cited made it reasonably clear that what we can do is to restore this matter to the position in which it was before. That is all my Bill aims at, and if we do that we will not meet that question arising under section 92 of the British North America Act. As regards the question of incidental rights, I have also cited cases. In regard to the main proposition, that we are only restoring matters to the position in which they were in law in the various provinces before, I would say that that is the position which I endeavoured to take in my argument, and it is a position which the hon. Minister of Justice has not dealt with on this occasion. In Quebec in two cases and in Ontario in two cases it has been decided that owing to the legislation passed by this House the parties cannot recover, and owing to that legislation only. It seems to me that this House is in a position to so modify its own legislation in such a way that provincial law will prevail. I shall not trespass upon the time of the House further, but I am very much disappointed that we cannot have this matter referred to the Committee of the Whole House ; but as no good purpose would be served by dividing the House upon the question, I will not press the question to a division.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. (Translation). In my opinion, it would be unwise to pass such a law. Should this parliament adhere to a legislation of this kind, there would be a matter of conflict between the provincial and federal laws, and that is most assuredly undesirable. In the case of a matter pertaining to provincial jurisdiction that may only incidentally be submitted to this parliament, is it wise to pass legislation that might conflict with the provincial legislation? I contend it is not. We have this instanced in our statutes in connection with the Insurance Act. In one clause of this Act, it is stipulated that the policy shall not be voided through the insured making an untrue statement in connection with his age. Now, in the province of Quebec, it is provided in our law that such untrue statement is sufficient to cause the insurance contract to be cancelled. Which legislation, one may wonder, is likely to obtain, should an emergency of this kind come to happen? Jurists are giving their attention to this puzzling question. Why did this parliament interfere in the matter when, under the local legislation, that contract was being cancelled? No available argument has been alleged so far for justifying that interference.

Many lawyers believe that this legislation does not come under the jurisdiction of this parliament because the contracts are subject to the local jurisdiction. Like several judges who have incidentally studied the question, Mr. Holt, in his Treatise on Insurance, believes that this matter is not pertaining to the federal jurisdiction. However, owing to the interference of this parliament, we have a legal conflict of this kind in the province of Quebec, that is we have a provincial law providing that the insurance contract is voided in the case of an untrue statement as to the age, and a federal law stating the contrary, which means that the untrue statement does not cause the contract to be cancelled.

It is now suggested that we should have a double legislation in order to regulate the relations as between employers and employees. We would then be in this strange position that, according to the provincial law, the contract is having legal force, whereas our federal legislation would state the contrary. Would it be wise for this parliament to pass such legislation? I submit it would not, and I contend we should not legislate in such a way as to cause legal conflicts.

Motion (Mr. Lennox) agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved :

That Bill (No. 73) to amend the Railway Act (Mr. Lennox) be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Mr. F. B. WADE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 76) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

An hon. MEMBER. Explain.

Mr. WADE. I have explained this Bill once before. The Bill is the same as that which I introduced last session. Section 343 of the Criminal Code contains a provision for the punishment of parties who are guilty of stealing gold, quartz, or ores, &c., but the difficulty experienced in the past has been that it was impossible to prove the ownership of the gold or amalgam that was stolen. For instance, a party might trade with the employees of the mine, or they might steal gold or amalgam themselves, and there is no way of identifying it. The mine owners have been labouring under very great hardship in the past. There has been very great complaint throughout the province of Nova Scotia, although I suppose there is scarcely any complaint from the other provinces on account of the difference in character of the gold. In Nova Scotia the complaint is very general that around all the mining camps there are parties who trade in gold, either trading with the workmen or with those who have an opportunity of breaking the quartz. This has been so ruinous to the mine owners that they determined to take some action, and at the meeting of the Miners' Association of Nova Scotia last year they adopted a resolution and urged it on the attention of the government. The Bill which was introduced last session did not go through, and they brought it up again in their general meeting. They are unanimous in asking to have this law enacted. I could give very many instances of how the present law works. A party may be in a mining camp, he may be a pedlar, he may be in possession of hundreds and thousands of dollars' worth of gold, and yet it is absolutely impossible to prove he is a thief, because the ownership of the gold cannot be proved. This Bill is designed to remedy that evil by casting the burden of proof on the person who is found in possession of gold or gold amalgam. The Bill does not apply to any other province in the Dominion except Nova Scotia. The provisions of the Bill are taken from the West Australia Act. They are almost identical with what is aimed at here, namely, that on the party who is found in possession of gold or gold amalgam is cast the burden of proof as to how he came by the gold or gold amalgam. I fancy that if this Bill becomes law the stealing that is now going on will be done away with.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 343a,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is in the province of Nova Scotia a feeling that some legislation of this kind should be enacted. I am informed by men who are familiar with the subject, that there have been a great many thefts of gold and a good deal of difficulty in obtaining convictions. I would be inclined to ask, whether the words which concern the burden of proof are not a little too comprehensive.

Mr. WADE. That is the whole principle of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the important part of it, I know.

Mr. WADE. That is what the mine-owners are contending for. If a person comes by the gold honestly he can easily show it, but if he is not able to show that, the presumption is that he came by it dishonestly. I am informed that there are people in cities who deal in an underhand way with parties from these different camps. I have a very strong letter in my possession from Mr. George Stewart, whom the leader of the opposition knows well, saying that this legislation is imperative and that some mines have actually been closed down in consequence of the evil complained of. Near one mining camp in which I was interested, there was a chap who kept a beer shop, and on learning that the yield from the mill was a certain amount, he said: 'They have beaten me this month by two ounces.' This is a very serious thing, and I hope the leader of the opposition will not object.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not objecting.

Mr. WADE. The matter has been very carefully considered by the Mining Association of Nova Scotia; I have given it a great deal of thought since last session, and I can see no other way of attempting to remedy the evil.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree with the principle of the Bill, but the language is certainly very unrestricted, although I cannot at this moment suggest how you would get at the intention in any different way. Is there any precedent for this legislation in the statutes of the other colonies.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is borrowed almost word for word from the West Australia Act. I do not think that we should dispose of this Bill to-night. I will have to consider the question of the penalty, and when the matter comes up again I will bring the West Australia Act with me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If such a law has been enacted elsewhere and has not been accompanied with any injustice or evil results, I do not think I would object to it.

On section 343b,

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that this section goes very far. Under it, a person absolutely innocent of any crime might be arrested and put to the expense of proving his innocence. The Bill says that any one is guilty of an offence who is deemed 'to have been watching and patrolling outside and in the vicinity of any premises on or about which gold, reasonably suspected of being stolen or unlawfully obtained or held, is found and seized by any peace officer.' It seems to me that it would be important to connect the patrolling and watching with the offence that is really committed; because a man may be watching and patrolling outside with some other object altogether. He will also be deemed guilty if he is proved 'to have been accompanying any person having in his possession any gold reasonably suspected of being stolen or unlawfully obtained or held.' A person might be in the company of a dishonest man for a perfectly legitimate purpose. He might be in the company of a man who had really stolen the gold and yet be absolutely innocent of any knowledge of the crime. I quite understand that there is a necessity for some such legislation as that contained in this Bill; but it seems to me that this section goes much further than prudent legislation should go. We must be careful, in passing any such legislation, not to expose innocent persons to the trouble, annoyance and disgrace of being prosecuted on what under other circumstances would be a charge of receiving stolen goods.

Mr. WADE. So far as I am concerned, I am only seeking to accomplish a certain purpose, and I do not want the Bill to pass this House so framed as to subject any innocent person to improper prosecution. I am quite willing that every safeguard should be adopted to prevent that. The proviso in section 343c, to the effect that 'no person shall be convicted of an offence under this section if he proves to the satisfaction of the justice that his presence was innocent, might be extended to the section under discussion. I assume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) is not familiar with the industry of gold mining in the province of Nova Scotia. Usually the parties who traffic in stolen gold have confederates. What is designed here is to prevent a confederate trafficking with miners. Sometimes they go round among the miners with strong waters. The object of this provision is to punish both the man who has the gold in his possession and the man who is in his company at the time it is discovered. This is what the mine owners want. If any safeguard can be thrown about it so that innocent persons will not suffer, I will be content.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it should be subject to the qualifications in section 343c, because it makes the guilt of one man depend not upon his own criminal intent, but on the guilt of another.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Let me take the instance stated by the hon. member for Annapolis a moment ago. Suppose a pedlar goes to peddle strong drink to the miners, and is found in company of a man who has stolen gold. It is, I suppose, an offence against the laws of the province to peddle whisky without a license.

Mr. WADE. They call it 'siwash' around mining camps.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This man would have to admit that he was there selling liquor without a license in order to prove his innocence of the greater offence. Therefore, he would have to admit his guilt, which is against the principles of criminal legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. In Nova Scotia he would not be allowed to peddle it with a license.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not be troubled much with that consideration, because I do not think he would have any injustice done to him if he were obliged to admit that he was selling liquor. I think we should have, with regard to both these subsections, some such proviso as that contained in 343c, though I do not know that I am perfectly satisfied with the language used.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am not such a strong temperance advocate as my hon. friend who sits beside me. That was an extreme case; but a man might be there on other business which he would not wish to divulge, and might be perfectly innocent of complicity in stealing the gold; but, in order to prove his innocence, he would have to divulge some secret which it would not perhaps be in his interest to divulge. This is going so much against all sound principles of criminal legislation that I think we should proceed with great prudence and so frame the law that innocent persons would not be exposed to the humilation of being charged with this offence.

Mr. FIELDING. The need of this legislation is very much felt in mining districts. At the close of the discussion we might let the Bill remain in the committee, and have a conference with the Minister of Justice to see if the objections could be met. Of course, care should be taken that no innocent man suffers; but one only needs to have knowledge of the mining business in Nova Scotia to realize the need of legislation of this kind.

On section 3,

This Act shall apply only to the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is there any other example of criminal legislation being made applicable to one province only? Rather strange that what should be an offence, and such an offence as theft, in one province, should not be in the others. There are gold mines elsewhere than in Nova Scotia, and if this legislation be proper to apply to Nova Scotia why should it not extend to the whole Dominion? It is somewhat singular that we should legislate in criminal matters only for one province.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have a criminal procedure applicable to Quebec alone.

Mr. WADE. It would be impossible to make this law applicable to the whole Dominion. How would it operate in the Yukon, for instance, where gold nuggets are currency? It would create a revolution out there. I do not know that any evil of the kind exists in the province of Quebec or Ontario. I have heard no complaints, but it applies particularly to Nova Scotia in consequence of the character of its gold. It is a rough heavy gold, and it is very easy for workmen or others to break off these ingots and carry them away. I have seen two pieces of quartz containing $4,000 worth of gold, and the man could enrich himself in a very short time by breaking off pieces and carrying them away. I would ask the committeee to allow me to read part of a letter from Mr. George W. Stuart, of Truro, who is one of our foremost gold miners in Nova Scotia, and whom my hon. friend the leader of the opposition well knows. He is writing to the secretary of the Mining Association :

Will you please state for the next meeting of the council the matter of writing Mr. Wade to press to an immediate finish the amendment of the criminal law in connection with gold stealing.

Only last week one of those peregrinating parasites—an Armenian pedlar—sold no less than 53 ounces of gold here in Truro, procured in the eastern districts. This gold, every grain of it, of course, was stolen from the various mines by the employees, and sold to this miserable wretch of a pedlar at a reduced price, and all manner of trash in the shape of cheap brass jewellery, much of it given in exchange and any cash that might be received would be spent in raw whisky.

The evil effects of this nefarious business is far-reaching, even to the extent of closing down mines, tying up capital and throwing many men out of employment.

Did we have a law such as we have earnestly asked for, this pilfering would soon cease altogether.

Take the case above referred to, this man (pedlar) would have been arrested and when arrested he would at once plead ignorance of law and give up the gold and every man's name he purchased from, the man who sold to him would be traced to the respective mines they worked in and the gold restored to rightful owners and the miners prosecuted. I trust the council will urge Mr. Wade to introduce this Bill at once in the early days of the session ; we are absoutely suffering from want of it.

Then, Mr. Stuart goes on to use even stronger language. I am sure he voices the entire sentiment of the mining industry of Nova Scotia. Further than that, he speaks the opinions of the honest employees in the mines who desire this law to be passed because they are now resting under a suspicion from which they should be relieved.

Progress reported.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION—YUKON REPRESENTATION.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will have to ask that the next two orders, the second reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act, and Bill (No. 118) to amend the Yukon Territory Representation Act, be allowed to stand, in the absence of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton).

Mr. CASGRAIN. Of course, I have no objection in regard to the second order, that regarding the adjourned debate on the second reading of the Yukon Territory Representation Bill, because it was understood that my hon. friend would introduce legislation amending generally the Yukon Territory Act. But, I am very much afraid that, if we adjourn the debate on the first of these two, that is the Bill to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act, it will not come up again this session.

Mr. WADE.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think we ought to give my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) assurance that, if he will agree to postpone it now another opportunity for the discussion of it will be allowed, because the postponement is to suit our convenience.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Very well, on that understanding, I agree.

Order allowed to stand.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 119) to amend the Canada Temperance Act—Mr. Law—read a second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that the only change made in the law by this amendment is to make this offense punishable by hard labour and not by imprisonment only. The disadvantage of the present law is that it is found that when it becomes too cold to stay outside, the prisons fill up by the influx of those who break this law, thus causing expense and injury to the public. But, under this proposed amendment, the person guilty of infraction of the law would be called upon to do something for his country in the way of hard labour.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And then you will let them out on ticket-of-leave.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That depends upon the applications made by my hon. friends opposite. When they are meritorious I act upon them.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PROHIBITION OF CIGARETTES.

Mr. W. S. MACLEAN (Huntingdon) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 128) to prohibit the importation, manufacture or sale of cigarettes.

MOTION AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For copies of all correspondence with and by the government or any department thereof, or with the officials of any department of the government, relating to applications for employment on the surveys of the proposed Railway Company of Canada, or the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, in relation to such applications, since the 30th May ult., up to date. —Mr. Clarke.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the House adjourned at 10 o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 14, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the government whether all the measures in the shape of legislation which are to be brought down this session are before the House, and if not, what other measures, if any, the government propose to bring down?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think there are perhaps one or two minor measures to be brought down, and we propose an amendment to the election law, which will be brought down at a very early day, and perhaps another measure, the tenor of which I will give my hon. friend later on.

Mr. INGRAM. What will be the nature of this amendment ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the direction of improvements generally.

THE COAL OIL DUTY.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG. I would like to request the government that all petitions, pro and con, with reference to the duty on oil be laid on the table. A number of petitions have been presented to the government from towns and villages in western Ontario asking the government not to interfere with the duty on oil, and there have been one or two asking that the duty be interfered with. I would ask that all the petitions be laid on the table.

THE TELEPHONE QUESTION.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to make a personal explanation. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice a short time ago said that a reference had been made of the telephone question to the Supreme Court. I put a question on the paper asking whether a reference had been made, and if so, what reference. The answer given by the Minister of Railways was that no reference had been made. I take this opportunity of letting the public, and especially those directly interested, know that no reference has been made to the Supreme Court, and that the Minister of Justice was in error when he made the statement he did. I also take this opportunity of informing the government that in the Railway Committee an arrangement was made that certain amendments of mine to the Railway Act should be considered in committee two weeks hence, and I wish to take this opportunity of informing the government that that arrangement does not preclude my bringing forward my amendments in connection with the Bill of the Minister of Justice to amend the Railway Act.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That the Speaker do now leave the chair, for the House to go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. ROBT. HOLMES (West Huron). In resuming, Mr. Speaker, the debate on the fiscal policy of the government, I wish to state at the outset that in my opinion the budget is one of which the hon. the Finance Minister has every reason to be proud. It is one which, I believe, the country will cordially and heartily endorse, and on which the Liberal party has reason to congratulate itself and the country. It is a budget that will bring to every patriotic Canadian a sense of pleasure and gratification, a feeling of confidence and hopefulness for the future and the assurance that the affairs of this Dominion are in good hands and will continue to be managed in the best interests of the people. I well remember a prophecy made on the accession of the Liberal party to power by one who proved himself a false prophet, that the Liberal party would not be able to govern the country more than six months. Our record, Sir, of the eight past years flatly contradicts that prediction, and shows that the affairs of this country have been well managed and are perfectly safe in the hands of the Liberal party.

The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), in the course of his remarks, said he would not discuss the budget at length, because there was nothing in it. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask is it nothing that the Finance Minister was able last year to announce a surplus of over $14,000,000 ? Is it nothing that he is able to estimate this year a surplus of $16,500,000, the largest in the history of the Dominion ? Is it nothing that the Finance Minister has been able to announce substantial surpluses seven years in succession, and that the total of these amounts to over $57,000,000? Is it a fact not worth mentioning that we have been able to deepen our canals, enlarge and improve our harbours, extend the Intercolonial, erect the necessary public buildings in various parts of the Dominion, and carry on the general affairs of the country without adding one cent to our taxation ? Is it nothing that the Finance Minister has been able to announce a reduction of over $1,000,000 in the public debt this year below what it was when the Liberal party took office ? Is it nothing to be able to prove that while the Conservatives added an average of $6,500,000 to the debt every year for the eighteen years they were in office, the Liberals have not added one single cent ? Is it nothing that the per capita debt to-day is only $46 as compared with $50 in 1896 ? Is it a fact not worth noting that our commercial prosperity to-day is not only greater than it ever has been in our history, but exceeds that of any other country in the world ? Is it a matter of no consequence that our imports are $241,000,000 to-day as against less than $120,000,000 eight years ago, and that our exports are nearly $230,000,000 as against $121,000,000 eight years ago ? Is it nothing that our total trade, which is the barometer of a country's prosperity, amounts to $467,000,000 to-day as compared with $224,000,000 in 1896, being an increase of $243,000,000, and that our increase alone is $19,000,000 over the total trade of 1896 ? Is it nothing that our export trade with the mother country is $63,000,000 more than it was eight years ago, and that our total trade with the mother country is $88,000,000 more than it was in 1896, and that, in fact, our increase is as large as our entire trade with that country was in 1895 ? Are we to be told that it is really of no account whatever that our railway tonnage should be 23,000,000 more than it was eight years ago and that our business failures are $8,000,000 less in value than they were eight years ago, and much less than at any time during the last twenty-one years ? Is it nothing that the deposits in our chartered banks to-day are $196,000,000 more than they were in 1896, the increase alone being greater than the total deposits in that year ? Is it nothing that the deposits in our savings banks amount to $21,000,000 more than they did in 1896 ? Yet in the face of all these incontrovertible evidences of marvellous and unequalled prosperity of this wisely and well governed Dominion, there are some members who have the audacity to say of the best budget ever brought down, 'there is nothing in it.'

My hon. friend from South Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith), who preceded me in this debate, endeavoured to belittle the administration of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in so far as the hon. minister had endeavoured to do something for the farmers. The hon. gentleman, in an interesting speech from the standpoint of a fruit exporter, dealt with the question of cold storage and its effect on the transport of apples and other perishable fruits. With that question I do not purpose dealing, because I think there are others in this House who are more competent to discuss it, but I would make a brief reference to the course which the hon. Minister of Agriculture took with regard to the quarantine. The hon. member for South Wentworth endeavoured to belittle what the hon. minister did, and in order to give point to his arguments he sought to convey the idea that because our exports of cattle to the United States last year were smaller than in other years, therefore the Minister of Agriculture had accomplished nothing in the interests of the farmers. But he omitted to tell this House that in the four and a half years which preceded the removal of the quarantine—the removal of which was brought about, as everybody knows, through the efforts of the Minister of Agriculture—we only sent to the United States 3,672 head of cattle, or an average of a little over 700 head, and that in the succeeding four years, after the removal of the quarantine, we sent an average of 87,343, or a total value of $5,329,000. Nor did he inform the House that prior to the removal of the quarantine our farmers had on hand a large number of stockers, which were of comparatively small value, and for which they had no market at the time ; and while I would agree with him that it would be wise for our farmers to feed all their cattle possible on their own farms, it is my firm conviction that the price of the stockers has increased by virtue of the removal of the quarantine, as our farmers now enjoy the benefit of an increased market, and there is no demand in the United States for stockers which there was a short time ago.

He also dealt with the question of an increase in the duty on market-garden products. He was very earnest in his advocacy of the claims of the market-gardener, but as that question has been dealt with recently from this side of the House, I do not propose to weary the House by entering into it again. I would only call attention to the fact that my hon. friend, who is an exporter of fruit, makes as much use of the American market as is possible under present circumstances, and I do not think he would like to be thrown out of that market, to which market-gardeners from the Niagara section have convenient access. And he also endeavoured to convince us that it would be the part of wisdom for the government to increase the tariff so far as small fruits are concerned. He laid special stress upon the fact that California fruit was preferred in the west and more especially in Winnipeg, over Canadian fruits. But he did not tell this House, as he might have done, that one reason for this is that the Canadian packers do not take quite the same interest, I am sorry to say, in placing their fruit properly on the market that the California Fruit Agency does. It is a well known fact, and I am not impugning the Canadian packer. But those who have made inquiries for fruit sent out by the California fruit agency know that that fruit can be depended upon to be exactly what it is represented. And, by this means, the California people have established themselves in the western market while our Canadian packers have not met the conditions by proper care with reference to packages and the putting up of the fruit. Now, let me call attention to the duties that are now charged upon some of these articles. The duty on peaches coming into Canada is one cent a pound. The duty on plums is 25 per cent. The hon. gentleman (Mr. E. D. Smith) instanced plums in particular. The Canadian plum is admitted to be superior in flavour to the American plum, but they cannot be transported with the same degree of ease, and that is one reason why they do not get the preference in the market. The duty on tomatoes is 20 cents per bushel, and 10 per cent ad valorem. The duty on grapes is 2 cents per pound. Now, I am not a consumer of grapes to any great extent, but I think I know something of the conditions of the market. I believe I am not underestimating the value when I say that, in certain seasons of the year and in certain sections of the province of Ontario, grapes are sold as low as 2 cents per pound. At those seasons, the duty represents 100 per cent. It seems to me that, on some lines of fruit, the duty is large enough. On blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries, strawberries, cherries and currants, the duty is 2 cents per pound. Cranberries, plums and quinces, 25 per cent. Prunes, including raisins, dried currants and California or silver prunes, 1 cent per pound. The hon. gentleman (Mr. E. D. Smith) laid great stress upon the opinion that we ought to look after the producers, and said that if we looked after the producer the consumer would be able to look after himself. Well, I think there are times when it is right to look after the producer, but there are certainly times when it is the duty of the government to look after the consumer as well. The consumer has interests that deserve consideration as well as those of the producer. I do not know but that sometimes the hon. gentleman's expression could be reversed and that, with regard to some things in Canada, if we look after the consumer the producer is able to look after himself. The producer is less important, certainly so far as numbers are concerned. It is the duty of the government to look after the consumer as well as the producer.

Then, the hon. gentleman from South Wentworth dwelt at length on the argument that we ought to protect the farmers. I think the time has come, so far as the general principle is concerned, when we ought to cease statements of that kind in this House. I think almost everybody will admit that, so far as protection to the farmers is concerned, we can do comparatively little. We may do something but, generally speaking we cannot protect the farmer. And I think the House knows that perfectly well, and that the members of the opposition know it as well as we do, and, I think, in private conversation they would be prepared to admit it. But, in connection with their argument in favour of protection to all classes they feel it necessary to advocate protection to the farmer though they know that it cannot be carried out to its logical conclusion.

Now, one of the important features of the budget is the reduction of the duty on coal oil. I do not profess to be an oil man or to know much of the oil trade, beyond what I have read in the newspapers and gathered from conversation. I am free to admit that the newspapers are not always reliable. Sometimes, their statements are hardly in accordance with the facts. For instance, I read in the Hamilton 'Spectator' the following:

> The reduction in the duty on coal oil amounts to exactly nothing. The Standard Oil Company may want it for its own purposes; but the people of Canada will benefit not a cent from it.

Then, in the Ottawa 'Free Press,' the day after the change was made in the coal oil duties I find this advertisement:

> TO THE WHOLESALE TRADE.
> We have reduced our prices on all grades of refined oil, benzine and gasoline 2½ cents per gallon in consequence of a reduction of the same amount made in the tariff.
> The Queen City Oil Company, Limited.

I also read in interviews the opinions of producers who are, apparently, in sympathy with a reduction of the duties. The Toronto 'News,' no matter what may be the personal opinion of the editor, is not a paper that is regarded as especially friendly to the Liberal party. It is well known that the proprietor is a Conservative, and therefore, we must count the paper as an independent paper with Conservative leanings. Speaking of the oil duties, it says :

The immediate changes are regarded as undoubtedly a step in the right direction. The reduction of duty on refined oil is excusable by the fact that Canadian oil wells and refineries are not able to produce sufficient oil to supply the market, while the placing of fuel oil for manufacturing purposes on the free list will be of the greatest assistance to manufacturing interests.

The needs of the oil refiners are met by cutting the duty in two, while the domestic producer is rewarded with a bounty. The price of oil to the consumer should fall at once.

Mr. A. D. Gall, of the Gall, Schneider Company, makes this statement :

Every consumer of coal oil in Canada will now be able to get oil at least 2½ cents cheaper per gallon, and a further reduction may be possible as soon as the question of the bounty adjusts itself.

Mr. Fairbank, who is spoken of as one of the largest oil producers in the Petrolia section, is quoted thus :

J. H. Fairbank said he thought it a wise piece of legislation on the part of the government, and that from the information at hand the crude producers would not materially suffer.

The argument has been advanced that the effect of the reduction in the duty on oil will be to endanger the oil business in Lambton and other counties in western Ontario. I do not suppose that any one will call in question the party fealty of the Petrolea correspondent of the Toronto 'Mail and Empire.' I assume that this correspondent is a Conservative and voices the sentiments of his political friends. Speaking of the reduction of the duty on coal oil this correspondent, as will be seen in the 'Mail and Empire' of June 9th, makes the following statement :

The fact that the government had announced a bounty of 1½ cents per gallon on all crude oil produced from this date did not at first strike the minds of the inhabitants, and it was felt that the town had received a blow which it would take years to recover from. This morning, however, it was realized that while the situation is not to the liking of the inhabitants, it is not as bad as it might be. The price of crude oil yesterday morning was reduced from $2.09 per barrel to $2.06, and this morning a further drop was announced to $1.65 per barrel, but this later figure is supplemented by the bounty of 52½ cents to be paid by the government, making the price now $2.17½ per barrel. If the producer had any guarantee of the length of time the government would keep the bounty in force, he would feel much easier in his mind. . . . . Leading producers are all rather chary at the present time of expressing an opinion, but whatever the outcome, the people of the town will not be knocked out by the blow, but will go ahead and develop oil territory wherever they can get it, and will try and make the production reach the present and future wants of the people.

So, on that point at any rate, this correspondent who I presume is a Conservative, speaks rather favourably, if we read between the lines.

I have here one or two other expressions of opinion from producers about Petrolia similar to those of Mr. Fairbank. It is not necessary to quote them in full, but I may merely say that they show that these producers are satisfied with the reduction both on crude and on refined.

Now, I wish to quote from a Liberal paper, but only as to what I take to be a statement of fact as to the opinion in the west. The Winnipeg 'Free Press' says :

One of the tariff changes that will be most popular in the west is the cut in the coal oil duty. When the Liberals came into power they found this duty six cents a gallon. In their first revision they cut it to five cents per gallon and this has now been reduced to two and a half cents. The record gives ground for hoping that ultimately the whole duty will go and coal oil will be free. . . . . The new duty came into effect on Wednesday. To-day the wholesale price of oil is 2½ cents per gallon less than it was on Wednesday. The whole benefit of the reduction will be enjoyed by the consumer.

In another item the Winnipeg 'Free Press' has the following :

Immediately upon receipt of the information the Imperial Oil Company notified all its agents to put the selling price 2½ cents a gallon less than it has been ; and the reduced rates went into immediate effect. The reduction applies to all grades of illuminating oils and naphtha. On the stocks already in hand, imported under the old duty, the company will lose by the reduction, but large shipments are coming in under the new rate.

The reduction will be greatly appreciated throughout the west, where the high price of coal oil has for years been a grievance.

While there are some who take a view the very reverse of that which I hold, and who believe that the oil industry has received a blow from which it cannot recover, I believe I am divulging no secret when I say that hon. gentlemen in this House who have received letters and telegrams approving the change in the oil duties and congratulating the Liberal party upon it, find that those messages come signed by Conservatives as well as by Liberals.

It is not my purpose to deal at any very great length with the tariff. We on this side are charged with inconsistency because we do not follow out the radical ideas we held at one time. But it has been well said that the man who never changes his views is likely to hold views that are very much in need of changing. In a practical world we must govern ourselves to some extent by the conditions as we find them. We may not be prepared to go as far as hon. gentlemen opposite are, but we are prepared to recognize the changes in conditions, and, in a practical way, to modify our policy to meet the circumstances of the country as they actually exist.

With the general tariff changes, I have no fault to find. If the argument advanced by our friends opposite is a good argument that with increased duties, competition among the manufacturers will keep down prices of manufactured articles there is no reason to fear increased prices as far as woollens and other manufactured articles are concerned. If the manufacturers do not enter into combines I believe the people will derive benefit in connection therewith. I am not one of those who believe in the spirit of retaliation. I do not believe in erecting a tariff wall against our American friends simply because they have a tariff against us. Being contiguous to the United States we must trade with them and the best policy we can pursue is one of maintaining amicable relations as far as it is possible to do so. I admit that I do not like the spirit manifested by our American friends. I do not like the spirit of tariff hostility that they have frequently displayed towards us, but I do not know that it would be wise to raise our tariff as high as theirs, although in the nature of things there may be and I dare say there will be a general revision of the tariff which will perhaps place us in a more equitable position than that which we occupy at the present time. It seems to me that the government have dealt with a serious situation in so far as the dumping clause is concerned. How that will work out and how it may prove by experience, I am not prepared to say. I anticipate that it will prove to be an obstacle greater than anything we have at the present time in the way of the undue and unfair slaughtering of goods which has been carried on by our American friends. But. I would like to see our own Canadian people manifesting a greater spirit of self-dependence than we have displayed up to the present time. I think, that, with our national resources and with our circumstances as favourable as they are, we should endeavour by self-assertion and independence to control our own markets without depending so much on paternal assistance or aid.

There are one or two points not specially dealt with in connection with the tariff that I want to allude to. They are perhaps the outcome of our system. Reference was made the other evening to the question of immigration. One of the speakers on the other side of the House with a swing of his arm and a good deal of force in his manner said that he did not think we ought to encourage immigrants to come here from the slums of Europe. I agree with him entirely but I think we have very little reason to find fault, as far as the immigrants which we are receiving are concerned. It is well known, and if it is not well known it ought to be, that the government make no special arrangement as far as immigrants are concerned except to look after immigrants and do what they can to secure them by legitimate means. No assistance is offered to immigrants and as far as undesirable immigrants are concerned I do not think we have a great deal to fear in that respect. I well remember that when the Mennonites came into the Northwest Territories as settlers some of our friends of the opposition offered very strong objections against them. They were said to be an undesirable class. It was said that they differed from our own people in their habits of life, and in their religion. It was said that they had certain peculiarities which our people did not approve of. But I believe that our hon. friends on the other side of the House will now admit that the Mennonites are among the best settlers we have in the Northwest. The Mennonite settlers are the wealthiest in that western country. Objection has been taken to the Doukhobors and Galicians on the score that they are undesirable settlers. I am quite free to say that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is himself a convert to the view that the Galicians are a desirable class of settlers. I do not know that he has ever taken exception to them but there have been hon. members on the other side of the House who seemed to think that it was not advisable to allow these immigrants to come into our territory. What are the facts as far as the Doukhobors are concerned ? I am told by those who reside in the neighbourhood of the Doukhobors that a Doukhobor's word is as good as his bond, that if he goes into a store and asks for credit promising to pay for his goods at a specified time in the future the merchant will give him the credit which he desires and he will meet his engagements on the very day that he promises to do so. I find on looking into their transactions that when they require any article for their use they buy, for instance, ploughs by the hundred, overalls by the thousand, and sugar by five carload lots, I find that notwithstanding their peculiar views and religion they are assimilating themselves very rapidly with our own people, and I believe that within a very short time they will be a very desirable class of settlers indeed. When we take the figures showing the number of settlers who have come in during the last year I do not think we have very much ground to fear as far as an undesirable class of settlers is concerned. I find that we received over 50,000 British settlers, over 40,000 settlers from the United States and a little over 38,000 from continental Europe. One of the American papers, alluding to the settlers who have come in, speaks of them as a very desirable class. The Philadelphia 'Ledger' makes the following reference to the settlers coming into this country :

The Canadian newspapers report that 4,000 immigrants entered the Dominion by way of the port of Halifax alone during a part of March. The majority of these newcomers are sturdy homeseekers who will go to the new Northwest provinces and settle in the great wheat region. If the recent batches of immigrants are like many of their forerunners, the very best of the immigrants will settle on Canada's homestead land and the least desirable, who could not have withstood the tests of our immigration laws, will eventually come down into the States by the back door. Canada is wont to complain that she is buffeted by fate, is a step-daughter of the British empire, the victim in all controversies, but in gaining new citizens she is now leading the world—not in quantity, but in quality.

I find, taking the figures of immigration for a few years back, a very favourable comparison indeed with reference to the present administration. They are as follows :

Years.	Numbers.
1896 (calendar)	16,835
1897 "	21,914
1898 "	31,900
1900 (1st 6 months)	23,895
1901 (fiscal)	49,149
1902 "	67,379
1903 (calendar)	134,370

We spent on immigration last year alone $447,000 more than we spent in 1896, but, of course, the settlers brought in to the country $18,000,000 of settlers effects and they brought $25,000,000 in cash. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding the adverse criticism we sometimes have from our hon. friends opposite, the money we have spent in immigration has been money well spent. It is a good investment, it is giving us good returns at the present time and it will bring us increased results in years to come. Lord Selkirk away back as far as 1811, predicted that there would be in the great Northwest no less a population than 30,000,000 people. While we have not realized that prediction fully up to the present time, any one knowing the fertility of the Northwest and its attractiveness for settlers can easily anticipate that in the near future we will have that large number of people in that territory. In view of the European settlers who are coming to our land, in view of the American settlers who are coming to our land, in view of the Canadians who are going into the Northwest Territories to make new homes for themselves, settlers from the east, the west, the north and the south, let me adopt the language of the poet who has said :

I hear the tread of pioneers
Of nations yet to be—
The first low wash of waves
Where rolls a human sea.
The rudiments of empire
Are plastic now and warm ;
The chaos of a mighty world
Is moulding into form.

Our Conservative friends have taken exception, in the course of this present session to the wisdom of the present government in putting corn on the free list. I take issue with them there. I think if there is one thing that the government ought to receive praise from the farmers of Canada for it is simply the placing of corn on the free list. It has been the means of contributing very materially to the success of the farmers of Canada. It has not reduced the price of coarse grain. It may have displaced, as some of our friends opposite say it has, a certain amount of coarse grain, but it has not reduced the price of coarse grain, and I think one of the wisest things our government ever did was to place corn on the free list, whereby they enabled the farmers of Canada to a large extent to feed cattle with the same facility and ease as his American competitor can do it, and therefore to place him in a better position to dispose of his cattle in the English market than he otherwise would have been in. I find that the government are not alone in the idea that they should remove the duty on corn. Let me quote from an address delivered by the Hon. Mr. Montague, the late Minister of Agriculture. In the course of that address he said:

The Conservatives were willing to give Americans free admission for their corn if they would give us free admission for our barley, but as they refused, the duty on corn remained.

You see that the former government were just as willing to remove the duty provided circumstances were favourable on the American side, as our government have proved themselves to be. Mr. Jacob Woodley, a farmer who resides at Westover, makes the following reference to free corn :

As farmers we want American corn. If we did not want it we would not buy it, and when we buy it we want it as cheap as we can possibly get it, especially when we have to compete in the markets of the world with our beef and pork. I have used some of that corn, and expect to use more of it. If we did not do well out of it we would not buy, and as a natural consequence they, the Americans, would not ship it here.

The argument is sometimes put forth, that because we buy 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 bushels of corn from the Americans, they have some unfair advantage on our market, and that they are forcing into our market a large percentage of their production of corn. In 1903 we imported altogether some 6,000,000 bushels of corn, and we exported over 2,000,000 bushels. This importation represents only one quarter of one per cent of the corn produced in the United States, so that our market is not of very much value to the Americans. The removal of the seven and a half cents per bushel duty has been of considerable benefit to the Canadian farmer, because when circumstances are favourable he can use the American corn for fattening his cattle which he can thus place on the English market on a fair basis of competition with the American cattle producer. It is true that we have not been able to avail ourselves of this advantage during the last year or two, simply because the price of American corn has been higher than in former years ; but my contention is, and although I am not a farmer I think I can demonstrate to the satisfaction of hon. gentlemen, that generally speaking it would pay the farmers of Canada to sell their coarse grain at the remunerative prices they can obtain for it, and use American corn for the feeding of their stock.

Our opponents take issue with us on the expenditure, and they say that we are spending too much money on this, that, or the other thing. Well, Sir, growing as Canada is, reaching out to the right, and to the left, to the north and to the south, with marvellous strides, our expenditure cannot be stationary. I well remember hearing the late leader of the Conservative party, Sir Charles Tupper, say in this House, that in view of the rapid extension of this country it would be unreasonable to expect that our expenditure would be stationary. The point to be considered by this House ; the point to be considered by the people of Canada is : are these expenditures wisely made? If they are not wisely made, then we have the right to criticise and condemn them. But, if our expenditures are for the general benefit of the country, and I contend they are, then all criticism falls to the ground. Let me call attention to some of the expenditures made by the present government, and I think the House will agree with me that they are wisely made ; at all events they certainly have not been criticised by members of the opposition. Last year we expended $846,000 more on the militia than in 1896. I suppose our friends on the other side will admit that this has been a wise expenditure. We spent, on necessary and desirable public works, $2,750,000 more than in 1896, and here again our Conservative friends will admit that this money has been wisely spent.

Mr. WILSON. I don't know.

Mr. HOLMES. Well, I do know, and whether the hon. gentleman knows it or not, I know further that whenever the estimates come up for consideration, my hon. friend who interjects the remark, and others of his friends with him, have asked for increased expenditure.

Mr. WILSON. I would like the hon. member to name a single item that I asked for.

Mr. HOLMES. It is not easy for me off hand to mention a particular item that the hon. gentleman has asked for, but I am within the judgment of this House in saying, that he as well as other members of the opposition have asked for increased expenditure when the estimates were under consideration. If he has not so asked, he is an exception on the other side of the House, and I accept his apology. Now, Mr. Speaker, we spent $500,000 more on lighthouse and ocean service, than was spent in 1896. I suppose our friends on the other side will admit that this money was not improperly spent. Indeed the Conservative press are contending now, in view of the lamentable accident which occurred the other day, that we should spend more money on this service so as to improve our navigation system. We spent $100,000 more on the fisheries service, and about $500,000 more on immigration than we did in 1896, and I am sure my hon. friends opposite will not object to that expenditure. We spent $332,000 more on the customs service than we did in 1896, but against that we collected $17,170,000 more in customs revenue. We spent $8,000 more on excise service than we did in 1896, but our revenue from this source increased by $4,000,000. We spent on postal service for the benefit of the people of Canada $400,000 more than we did in 1896 but the revenue from our postal service has increased by nearly $1,500,000. Let me digress for a moment at this point. I wish to call attention to the exceptionally favourable condition of our postal service under the able administration of the present Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock). The business people of the country admit, and the people of Canada generally admits that we have at the present day the best postal service we ever had in the history of the Dominion. We not only have had a saving of one-third on our domestic postage, but we have had a saving of one-third on our foreign postage. I well remember when Sir William Mulock proposed to reduce the rate of postage, member after member on the Conservative side of the House got up in their places and predicted it would be necessary to put a special tax upon tea or upon sugar, in order to make up the deficit they thought would follow the reduction of the postal rate. They could hardly be blamed for this, in view of the fact under Conservative rule we had a deficit of $700,- 000 or $800,000 annually in the Post Office Department, notwithstanding that we also had a three cent rate of postage. To the credit of the present Postmaster General, be it said, that it was not only unnecessary to put a special tax upon any article of consumption, but that he has been able to give us increased facilities all over this Dominion, and in addition to that he has turned the old annual deficit of Conservative days, into a surplus. The people of this broad Dominion appreciate the fact that they are now reaping advantages and benefits in the post office service to which they were strangers before the Liberals came into power. It is true that the expenses of the Intercolonial Railway have increased over $5,000,000, but every dollar of that has come back to the people of this country.

Now Mr. Speaker, I have given a brief review of the expenditure made by this government, and in conclusion permit me to say that the prosperous state of the country, as revealed through the budget speech, is sufficient to justify the warmest eulogy of this government. Some of our Conervative friends say: that the government are entitled to no credit for the existing prosperity, but the member for South Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) was frank enough to admit that government was responsible to a certain extent for prosperity or for depression. No less an authority than the Toronto 'Mail,' commenting on the budget speech delivered in 1882, said:

> Instead of bringing the country to the brink of insolvency, the present government has caused every vein to quiver with healthy activity.

If that be true, what language could be more suitably applied to the present government? What government ever in Canada before has caused every vein to pulsate with healthy activity? Our friends on the other side of the House have endeavoured as far as they can, to minimize the credit that should accrue, and has accrued, to the government because of their wise administration of public affairs, but the people of Canada know better, and I have not the slightest doubt that they will pay their tribute of confidence in this Liberal government in the days to come. The prosperous state of the country, as revealed in the budget speech, must commend itself to both Liberals and Conservatives who look upon the question from an impartial standpoint. There are Conservatives who are willing to admit, that Canada now enjoys a higher state of prosperity than ever before; there are Conservatives who are candid enough to say, at least in private conversation, that this government has been a good administration; there are Conservatives who are frank enough to acknowledge that the administration of this government has been superior to that which preceded it. And, Sir, whether these Conservatives are willing to vote for the government or not, it makes no difference so long as in their heart of hearts they give the credit to this government for its wise acts of public policy. The good times have been shared in by all; by the farmer, by the manufacturer, by the artisan, by the invester; and the record of the government as portrayed in the budget speech is one on which the government can confidently appeal for the approval of the country. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that be the day near or be it far, when it shall be necessary to appeal to the electorate for the endorsation of the policy of this government, the far-seeing, hard headed, thoughtful electors of the Dominion, will show their appreciation of a government whose policy has worked to the best interests of all classes of the community. We on this side of the House claim with pride, that this government is the best government Canada has ever known. We make that claim in view of the facts which have been disclosed; we claim it in view of the record of the government which stands without parallel in the history of the world, and which record has been ably presented to the country by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, the remarks of my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Holmes) are for the most part of a very general character, and I think they have already been pretty well answered by hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I do not propose to speak at any great length, and therefore my hon. friend (Mr. Holmes) will excuse me if I fail to follow him through all the phases of his eloquent speech.

Perhaps just a passing word might be given to the eloquent peroration with which he concluded. I do not quite remember whether he described this government as the best government this country ever possessed or the best government the world ever possessed—some hon. gentleman on that side of the House go that far occasionally. He claimed for it, that it had caused the veins of the country to pulsate with a splendid activity. Well, he was altogether too modest. Why did he not claim that it had caused the veins of the whole commercial world to pulsate with a splendid activity? He has as much justification for the one contention as for the other. But I observe that my hon. friend, like a great many others who address the House on this question, fails absolutely on every occasion to point to one single measure introduced and carried out by his administration to which the prosperity of this country is in any way due. That is the difficult aspect of the question from their standpoint. It is all very well to claim for Canada prosperity. We know we have it; we know also that we have had prosperity all through the world; and unless we can attribute the prosperity which prevails in Canada to some act of the present administration, are we not forced to agree with an hon. gentleman whose authority my hon. friend from West Huron will not dispute, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who said that the prosperity which Canada in common with the rest of the world has enjoyed during the past eight years is due to causes over which governments have no control whatever.

Having said so much, I shall now refer to the speech with which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) introduced his budget. Although that speech contains some rather noteworthy statements, I may be permitted to draw attention to the fact that it was perhaps as remarkable for its omissions as for what it actually contained. The hon. Minister of Finance, as was pointed out by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell), made no estimate whatever of the revenue or the expenditure for the coming year. In that respect he departed from the course which he and all the other Ministers of Finance have followed on previous occasions. Not only did he make no reference to the revenue or the expenditure for the coming year, but he gave the House not the slightest explanation of that remarkable omission. Let me point to another omission in the speech of the hon. gentleman. One would have supposed that the Minister of Finance, speaking on a matter not only of political import, but of business importance to the whole country, would have been disposed to give to the people a fair and accurate statement of our affairs, and not to confine himself solely to those aspects of the business and the finances of the country which might be of use to his party in the distribution of campaign literature. The hon. gentleman went over a period of years with regard to our trade returns, but he made not one reference to the increase of taxation or the increase of expenditure. My hon friend dealt generally with the increase of trade in this country during the past eight years, but he made not one reference to a subject on which the hon. gentleman who sits beside him (Sir Richard Cartwright) has dilated at great length in days gone by—the relative trade of this country with the United States as compared with its trade with Great Britain. Not one word out of the mouth of the Minister of Finance; and stranger still, not one word out of the mouth of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who used to continually harp on that matter in days gone by. That indicates that these hon. gentlemen were not giving fair candid statements with reference to the business of this country, but were making campaign speeches for distribution throughout the country, and therefore saw fit to omit from their remarks every possible aspect of our present conditions which might in any way call for criticism from gentlemen in this House or from business men throughout the country as a whole.

Now, it will be necessary for me to lay before the House some statements, which I will do very briefly, to remedy the omissions from the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. Let me say, in the first place, that I do not object to a reasonable expenditure in this country. We could not reasonably expect that from 1896 to the present time there would not be some increase of expenditure in a rapidly-growing country such as this. The point we have taken in this House is that expenditure, especially on public works, should be conducted on some systematic basis, and should not be made the means of distributing favours to partisans, and should not be regulated solely by partisan considerations. We are glad to see money expended in this country, and we expect that our expenditure shall reasonably increase; but let us bear in mind that we have been warned by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce that matters shall not always be in this country as they are to-day. It was only a day or two ago that the Minister of Trade and Commerce uttered a last warning on that point—a warning which had been given to this country many times before by the Minister of Finance. That warning declared that just as surely as night follows day so periods of expansion and prosperity are followed by periods of depression, by lean years such as we have had in days gone by; and what I have said in this House before, and what I say now, is, that if you fix a standard of expenditure upon an unduly high scale in the years of prosperity, you will find it very difficult indeed to reduce that scale to the proper standard when you come to the lean years of depression. Let me point out the record of the administration during the past years as compared with the five years of the late Conservative administration:

TOTAL EXPENDITURE.

1892	$ 42,272,136	1899	$ 51,542,635
1893	40,853,728	1900	52,717,467

In 1896 total expenditure by Conservatives	41,702,383
Decrease under Conservatives	$ 569,753
In 1903 total expenditure by Liberals	$61,746,572
In 1899 total expenditure by Liberals	51,542,635
Increase under Liberals	$10,203,937

Let us look at the matter in another way :

Total expenditure from 1899 to 1903.	$287,960,320
Total expenditure from 1892 to 1896.	210,709,819
Average annnul expenditure during past 5 years	$57,592,064
Average annual expenditure, 1892 to 1896	42,121,964
Average increased expenditure under Liberal government	$15,470,100

Now, I do not for one moment say that some portion of this increase was not justified ; but let us compare what the Conservatives did during the period from 1878 to 1896 with what the Liberal administration now in power has done from 1896 to 1904 in the construction of great public works. Look at the deepening of the canals, the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the construction of great public works throughout the country under the Conservatives. Under the present administration the work of completing the canals has been carried on and there has been an extension of the Intercolonial Railway at some considerable cost ; but no such great work has been undertaken during the past six years as that which was so bitterly opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, the building of a great highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, binding together all the scattered provinces of Canada.

Another matter which was brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Pictou, and to which I will very briefly refer, is the increased taxation during the past six years. I shall give to the House a few comparative figures on that point, and I shall do this because in all sincerity I do not understand that any of the members of this administration, who claim that taxation was too high under Conservative government have ever been able to give any satisfactory reason why that taxation should be maintained at its present figure. The hon. gentleman who just sat down (Mr. Holmes) claimed as a great boon to the country that we are taking $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 out of the people every year beyond the actual necessities of government. Does not my right hon. friend remember the declaration of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in days gone by ? It is well perhaps for the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce to sit in his seat and wear a sneering smile when his past utterances are brought back to him. I am sorry he is not here today, because I would like to put to him one or two questions. But he and other members of the administration will have to square themselves with the people some day on this point. The gentlemen who stated that taxation was too high in days gone by, that surpluses were an evil, that the exaction of one dollar from the people beyond the actual requirements of the government was highway robbery, cannot justify themselves to-day by sitting quietly in their seats, wearing a jaunty smile and drawing their salaries from month to month. That will not do. Let me point out what a comparative statement of the taxation shows, and then I will give you another table and will have the pleasure of quoting my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who spoke for his party in days gone by, and I am sure there is no member of the administration—least of all the Prime Minister—who will for one moment dispute the authority of that hon. gentleman or deny that the principles which he then laid down are those to which regard should be had at present.

In the first place let me point to a comparative statement of the total receipts from taxes under the Conservative and Liberal administrations.

Under five years of Conservative administration the total receipts each year were as follows :

1892	$28,446,157
1893	29,321,367
1894	27,579,203
1895	25,446,199
1896	27,759,285
	$138,552,211

Under Liberal administration the following is the record :

1899	$ 34,958,069
1900	38,243,223
1901	38,745,550
1902	43,389,112
1903	49,015,506

This shows that whereas in 1892 the taxation under the Conservative government was $28,446,157, in 1896 it declined under the same administration to $27,759,285, showing a decrease under Conservative government of $686,872.

In 1903 the taxation under Liberal administration amounted to $49,015,506 and in 1896 the taxation under Conservative rule was but $27,759,285, showing an increase under Liberal government of $21,256,221 between 1896 and 1903. And that was under the administration of these gentlemen opposite who were writing letters to the 'Economist' newspaper in Great Britain, when the Conservatives held office, for the purpose of decrying their own country ; pointing out that the people were being bled white by taxation.

The total taxes collected from 1899 to 1903 inclusive, under Liberal government, amounted to $204,348,460 and from 1892 to 1896 inclusive, under Conservative government, $138,552,211, showing an increase in taxation in five years of Liberal government of no less than $65,756,249.

And yet the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when these things are brought to his notice, and when his former utterances are quoted to him, has no answer but a jaunty and often sneering smile and a tirade of more or less senseless epithets applied to hon. gentlemen who sit on this side. I do not know whether the right. hon. gentleman was sincere in what he said with regard to these and many other matters in days gone by, but I am giving him credit for sincerity, and I suppose it is from that standpoint that we must consider his present dumbness. If he makes no answer to our arguments, it is simply because he has nothing to offer but the smile he usually wears when any of these questions are discussed.

The average annual taxation during those five years of the present administration is $40,869,692 and the average annual taxation during the five years of Conservative government amounted to $27,710,442, making an average annual increase during the last five years of $13,159,250. What was the view which these gentlemen took in the olden days of excessive taxation and especially of undue exaction from the people ? I take the liberty of quoting, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself quoted the remarks I am about to read, only two years ago ; and when we find one minister of the Crown turning to another as the Minister of Trade and Commerce turned to his leader on that occasion, I think a special significance may be attributed to the remarks to which he then directed the attention of the Prime Minister. And this was the view of the Prime Minister in days gone by, given expression to in a very meaning quotation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce only two years ago :

> I do not tell you that we must have no taxation, but I do say that the government has no right to take a cent from you or me, except that for the necessities of the revenue, and if the government takes from you any portion of your earnings, whether the portion be large or small, to give to somebody else, that government is as much a robber as the highwayman who puts a pistol to your forehead and says : 'your purse or your life.'

That was the view of the right hon. gentleman and that was the view emphasized only two years ago by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. Well, Mr. Speaker, have those words any application to present conditions when we find that men who denounced surpluses in days gone by as no better than robbery, stand up in this House and pride themselves on the fact that they have taken from the people fourteen and a half million dollars more than the necessities of the revenue demanded ?

But we are told that the rate of taxation has not been increased, that it has actually decreased. Now, to meet that, I shall repeat the figures that have already been given to the House by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) in the very able address he delivered in the course of this debate. This table shows the taxation per head and the expenditure per head for the several years since 1895 :

Year.	Taxation per head.	Expenditure per head.
	$ cts.	$ cts.
1896	5 46	8 14
1897	5 57	8 28
1898	5 69	8 63
1899	6 65	9 72
1900	7 19	9 95
1901	7 19	10 76
1902	7 95	11 72
1903	8 87	11 17

The amount of taxation per head counts for nothing nowadays, I understand, in view of hon. gentlemen opposite, for they tell us it is not a fair way of looking at the burdens of the people. Is it not ? What did the Liberal party say about it in 1894 and 1895 ? My hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) will remember what the Liberal party said about it then, because he spoke for the Liberal party on that subject. I have here a quotation from his utterances. He spoke in 1894 and again in 1895 to a resolution presented by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in which he demanded among other things, that the tariff should be so adjusted as to make taxations conform to the requirements of the expenditure. That was the position of the Liberal party at that time. Here are the words of the Minister of Customs on the subject :

> The hon. gentleman said that the taxes we had in 1878 were heavier then than they are now. That is a very strange statement for any one to make. I want to give hon. gentlemen opposite what I consider is a true way of measuring this, because the mere assertion made on one side of the House or the other will carry no weight. I would ask those hon. gentlemen to turn to page 11 of the Trade and Navigation Returns, prepared, not by Mr. Laurier or by the member for South Oxford, but prepared by the government themselves, and what is that statement ? One of the columns shows the amount of the customs duties paid per head of the population—

And now will my hon. friend the Minister of Customs and the right hon. Prime Minister who would defer to the Minister of Customs, I am sure, on a question of that kind mark the words as follows :—

> That is the way to measure your taxation. Take the taxes of 1878 and see how much was paid by the population then. You will find it was $3.13 per head. Take the sum this last year, and it was $4.26 per head.

Now, will my right hon. friend say that the Minister of Customs did not make a perfectly clear statement, or that I have not made a perfectly fair comparison, in giving the statement which I have just laid before the House ? And if they admit that, if they are not prepared to withdraw that as well as every other principle on which they relied in those good old days, they will concede, I am sure, that they have increased the taxation so much per head as appears in the statements which I have just read. Let my hon. friend the Minister of Customs bear this in mind—that the taxation per head for this country according to the statement I have laid before the House and according to the public returns, has increased 37 per cent since the present administration came into power and the expenditure per head has increased, for the same period, by no less than 62 per cent.

Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) dwelt on the question of preferential trade. He says that the attitude of the two parties in Canada is practically the same on that question. I am glad to hear my hon. friend the Minister of Finance make that statement. The agreement must have come about very speedily, if it has come about at all. The policy of the Conservative party was set forth by a resolution in this House. I do not recollect that hon. gentlemen on the other side were prepared to support the policy which we then declared. But I want to tell them, speaking with whatever authority I may possess, that the Conservative party has not changed its policy on this point since 1899, when a resolution, proposed by Sir Charles Tupper was voted down by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. If there has been a change it is on the other side, not on this, because we are prepared to stand by the words of the resolution now as we did then. The words of the resolution are these :

> This House is of opinion that a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Ireland and the colonies would greatly stimulate increased production in and commerce between these countries and would thus promote and maintain the unity of the empire, and that nothing which falls short of the complete realization of such a policy should be considered as final or satisfactory.

Therefore, if the Minister of Finance says that the parties are at one in regard to the question at the present time, it means that these hon. gentlemen are doing in policy what, I trust, they will very soon do otherwise—cross from that side of the House to this. What was the attitude of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself long after we proclaimed that policy. Why, his contention in 1901 and 1902 was that it would be absolutely absurd to expect any system of preferential trade with the mother country unless we adopted free trade and did away with our tariff altogether. I have the right hon. gentleman's words under my hand, but, unless he contradicts what I have said, I will not weary the House with them for I have already too many quotations in this speech. And what was the attitude of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in those days. His attitude was that any effort to be made by Sir Charles Tupper along the lines he had suggested—that is, any effort to obtain a preference in the mother country in return for a preference given to the mother country —was arrant humbug ; and he went further and characterized as arrant humbug resolutions of boards of trade throughout the country urging upon the government to make efforts in that direction with the least possible delay. The two parties stand on the same platform now, do they ? Well, I have some recollection that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when he was in Great Britain did not stand on the same platform or advocate the same policy as that announced by the Minister of Finance this year, and announced with even greater emphasis by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech of last year. What did my right hon. friend say when he was in Great Britain, after he had secured the return to office of his party in this country pledged to do whatever he could to obtain a preference for the products of Canada in the mother country ? He went to the mother country and told the people and statesmen of Great Britain that we wanted no preference in their makets for our products. But only last year, and previously at the Colonial Conference, we were treated to a series of threats by these gentlemen directed against the mother country, that the preference we had granted in 1897 would be withdrawn unless a similar preference were granted to the products of Canada by the mother country. The people of Great Britain were told in 1897—were they not ?—that Canada had not granted the preference which was then given to the mother country with any hope, or, indeed with any desire, of obtaining anything in return. It was given—said my right hon. friend—' in return for the splendid freedom with which you have endowed us. ' And further he said—and this is especially to be noted—we do not want any preference in return, because we do not wish to see the mother country cursed by that protection which has wrought so much of evil in Canada. My right hon. friend will not deny, and has never denied that utterance. The published reports of his speeches contain these words, and I have them under my hand, if he should see fit to deny them. Why should we now demand a preference in return if we had already received compensation for the preference we gave ? Why do we now desire to see the mother country cursed by that protection which has destroyed Canada in the view of my right hon. friend ? Why do we make these threats against the mother country ? My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, in his speech of this year—and I have a number of quotations from his speech of last year, with which I shall not weary the House—says :

> For the present we think it is a wise policy to adhere to the preferential system in the hope that it may be adopted more generally throughout the empire and that by and by a better understanding may be come to in the mother country and that it will be adopted there as well.

But no one understood that to be the policy of this government up to 18 months ago because the language of the Prime Minister in 1897 was followed by words of the Minister of Agriculture in two or three speeches in Great Britain in 1901 in which, speaking with all the responsibility of a Minister of the Crown, he again repeated to the British people that no preference was desired by Canada because the preference which we had given was accorded to the mother country for altogether different reasons and upon an altogether different principle. When the Chancellor of the Exchequer was asked in the parliament of Great Britain : 'Do you propose to exempt Canada from the tax on food products ?' he replied : 'No. I do not propose to exempt Canada from this tax because Canada desires no such exemption.' Does my right hon. friend now desire to see the mother country cursed by protection ? Does he stand for and believe in Mr. Chamberlain's policy ? I am sorry that if he has repented, his repentance has come so late because I venture to say that if the government of this country had expended as much time and effort in procuring a reciprocity treaty with Great Britain—because that is all it amounts to—as they have expended in endeavouring to obtain reciprocal trade relations on fair terms with the United States, we would have had preferential trade on a fair basis and we would have had that preference in the markets of the mother country which would have done so much not only for the east but for the west of Canada and which would have poured population into this country in even greater numbers than we have beheld with so much satisfaction during the past three or four years.

The terror of imperialism in invoked whenever this question is raised. Well, I would like to know what greater danger we run by making a reciprocity treaty with the mother country, which is not a foreign country, than by making a reciprocity treaty with the United States of America ? What greater dangers are there in making a reciprocity treaty with Great Britain and Ireland than in making a reciprocity treaty with the United States of America ? Gentlemen who are very much alarmed at the prospect of reciprocity with the mother country were not afraid to take part in the deliberations of the commission which sat at Washington. Is there any greater danger in one case than in the other ? I would like to know what the danger is.

Let us look at it in another aspect. We have given a preference to the mother country. Do we run any greater danger of imperialism by receiving a preference in return ? Where does the danger come in ? I have endeavoured to concern myself with this a little as I propose to stand as strongly and as firmly as any one for all those liberties which we enjoy in Canada, and especially for the right of self government in Canada, which we shall never give up. But I do not understand why we run more risk in the one case than in the other, and I do not understand that we incur any risk at all, having given a preference to the mother country, by merely receiving one in return. When any government in Great Britain proposes to give to us a preference in their markets upon terms which are inconsistent with our rights of self-government we shall know very well, on this side of the House at least, what answer to give and we will say that no advantage of that kind would for one moment be considered if it involved the least diminution of those rights of self-government which we have enjoyed for so many years and have won by so much effort and at so great a cost. That is my position and I believe it is the position of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Then we are told that this government dare not interfere, dare not announce any policy on the subject, dare not become a party to any resolution because, forsooth, this has become a party question in the mother country and it would be impolitic to express our opinion. Well we have not always been so careful in the past. We interfered for example in connection with the war in South Africa by passing a resolution in this House, yet, I think that there was somewhat of a party question in the mother country even at that time. When will this cease to be a party question in Great Britain ? Suppose that Mr. Chamberlain's project carries eventually and he comes into power and is prepared to negotiate with Canada ; does any one suppose that the free traders of Great Britain will be absolutely eliminated, or that this will not continue to be a party question in the mother country ? Is it the policy of the government that we shall sit still and fold our hands until the last sole survivor of the Cobden club has passed away ? If not, it seems to me we are a little too careful in Canada at the present time and that we might well in this country state at least our willingness to enter into negotiations for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not some fair basis of mutual preferential trade cannot be obtained. I have always thought that when the principle was once adopted by the statesmen of the two countries it would be largely a matter for the business men of the two countries to work out. I believe it could be worked out and worked out with advantage to the mother country as well as to Canada herself.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) contends that Canada led the way in preferential trade. We know how Canada led the way. She led the way because there were two warring factions in the cabinet and a system of preferences to the mother country was agreed upon as a compromise between these two factions; and we know that the leader of one of the factions, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, stated distinctly and emphatically when he spoke upon the subject in 1897 that he agreed to it because it was some installment of free trade and because the ship's head was now at last pointed towards the open sea of free trade. Now that same hon. gentleman will stand up in the House and vote, if a vote should be taken, in favour of an increase in the woollen duties that takes away 60 per cent of the preference upon those articles and he will rejoice no doubt to see in that regard the ship's head pointed in exactly the opposite direction.

I do not know that I need discuss the attitude of the hon. gentleman very much, particularly in his absence to-day, but I am almost inclined to think that his views upon that question or any other question will not be very highly regarded by very many of his fellow countrymen until he can give some better explanation than his leader has given of his attitude between 1878 and 1896 as compared with his attitude from 1896 to the present time. We have an explanation from the right hon. gentleman of the attitude of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce from 1878 to 1896 and I am bound to say that if the remarks of the right hon. Prime Minister on that occasion were intended as a eulogy of Sir Richard Cartwright it was the most cruel eulogy that one friend ever pronounced upon another.

I spoke of omissions from the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. He said not one word about the conditions of our import trade with Great Britain as compared with our import trade with the United States. This was a favourite text in days gone by. How does the matter stand to-day ? The British preference was given for the purpose of encouraging trade with the mother country and Conservatives have been taunted with this, that whereas their policy led to an increase of our trade with the United States, the Liberal policy was especially designed to bring about larger trade and better trade relations with the mother country. I have here a statement of imports from the United States for home consumption, excluding coin and bullion from 1896 down to the present time, distinguishing dutiable from free goods. In 1896 our dutiable imports from the United States amounted to $29,101,646 and our free imports to $24,427,744 or a total of $53,522,390. I trace it up from year to year until I come to 1903. Then I find our dutiable imports from the United States amounting to $68,538,323 and our free imports amounting to $60,251,914, or a total importation from the United States of goods valued at $128,790,237, a percentage of increase from 1896 to 1903 of no less than 120 per cent in our importation of free and dutiable goods from the United States of America. I come now to Great Britain. Our dutiable imports from Great Britain in 1896 amounted to $24,360,179, and our free importations amounted to $8,458,326, a total importation in that year of $32,824,505. Tracing it up year after year, distinguishing in the same way between dutiable and free imports, I come to 1903 and find then that our dutiable importations from the mother country were $42,210,165 and our free importations from the same country $16,582,873, making a total importation from Great Britain and Ireland of goods valued at $58,793,038 or an increase during the period that I have mentioned under the British preference of 78 per cent or a little more than half of the percentage of increase of importations from the United States of America during the same period. Taking our importations from all the world and tracing them up in the same way I find that in 1896 our total imports amounted to $67,349,759 and our free importations to $38,128,402, making a total in that year of $105,361,161. In 1903 our dutiable importations from all countries of the world amounted to $136,796,065, and our free importations amounted to $88,017,667 making a total importation of goods from all countries of $224,813,719, or an increase from 1896 to 1903 of 86½ per cent, being 8½ per cent of an average increase from all countries over the increase from the mother country which has been blessed by this preference upon which hon. gentlemen pride themselves so much.

Increase since 1896 { From United States .... 75¼ millions.

It is to be observed that the increase of our total importations since 1896 is as follows from the different countries that I have named: from the United States $75,250,000, Great Britain $26,000,000 and from all other countries $119,500,000. Let us remember that in days gone by this was a favourite subject of comment by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce who spoke at that time as the financial exponent of the Liberal party. He especially emphasized one point, he emphasized it over and over again and although I have called his attention to it at least three times in this House on every occasion he has evaded any answer. Our imports from the United States for home consumption during 1903, less coin and bullion amounted to $128,790,237, our exports to the United States, excluding gold bearing quartz, silver concentrates, coin and bullion amounted to $49,532,827 leaving a balance of trade against us and in favour of the United States of no less than $79,257,410. Our imports from Great Britain for home consumption, less coin and bullion, in the same year amounted to $58,793,038, our exports to Great Britain excluding gold bearing quartz, silver concentrates, coin and bullion amounted to $125,198,057, leaving a balance of trade in our favour and against the mother country of no less than $66,405,019. The statement is as follows:

One thing that ought to be remembered is that if we take the $66,000,000 balance of trade in our favour with Great Britain and add $13,000,000 of our own money, the product of our resources in Canada, we are just able to make up the $79,000,000 which we have to pay to the United States. How does it come about that with the British preference the relative conditions of trade between this country and the United States as compared with those between this country and the mother country as so extraordinary as I have pointed out? Of course, one realizes that the mother country is our customer. The United States can never be our customer in respect to many of our products. The United States is our rival in the markets of Great Britain and it is for that reason that I for one am prepared to support proposals for a reciprocity treaty with Great Britain rather than for a reciprocity treaty with the United States of America. The people of the United States are our commercial rivals; the British people afford us our market, and I suppose it will continue in future that our exports to the mother country will be greater than our imports from the mother country.

Let us look for one moment at the rate of duty. The rate of duty upon dutiable goods imported from the United States during the past year was 24·91 ; the rate of duty upon dutiable goods imported from the mother country was 23:32 : the rate of duty on all goods, dutiable and free, from the United States during the past year was 13·25 ; while the rate of duty upon all goods imported from Great Britain was considerably higher, being no less than 16·71 ; showing to what extent the United States has the advantage over the mother country in respect to free goods at least. Let us remember that both with respect to the trade from Great Britain and with respect to the rate of duty, there will probably be a still greater change in favour of the United States, in view of the proposed alterations in the tariff. I do not wish for one moment to be understood as not standing for protection to the woollen industry of Canada, but I do not forget that when this preference was given to the mother country, the duty upon many articles which we especially import from the mother country was raised, while the duty upon some at least which we import largely from the United States was correspondingly lowered.

I shall consider the tariff proposals of the government only briefly now. because they will more properly be discussed in committee. They are described by the government press in certain quarters, as being in the direction of higher protection, while in other quarters the idea of increased protection is discounted, and attention is called solely to certain reductions. It is interesting to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance drawn as willing captives in the train of the so-called robber barons who were described in such terms of opprobrium in days gone by, by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). If the government is adopting any measure of higher protection, let us remember that according to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) the government is embarking upon an orgy of the most awful corruption, because it is not long since he said :

I do not mean to say that a government may not be corrupt and yet not protectionist. That may be. But I do say that human nature being as it is, it is almost impossible for a government to be protectionist and escape being corrupt.

And I will add this further ; I will add that while I think protection and corruption are practically inseparable ; I will add that I likewise believe for my part, that protection and true freedom are all but absolutely incompatible.

According to the view of the right hon. gentleman, then, this government is plunging into a career not only of wild corruption, but into a career which will land the country in an absolute condition of slavery. I have before quoted the remarks of the Prime Minister on this question and I need not quote them again. Sufficient it is to say that the Prime Minister, only two years before he came into power, denounced protection as absolute slavery and robbery and he has since prided himself that having begun life as a protectionist he is now a free trader. Be that as it may, a more recent utterance of the Prime Minister in Montreal, informed us that he is now neither a protectionist nor a free trader, but a practical man. Let me remind the right hon. gentleman that almost the last public utterance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce upon this question, before 1896 was in moving a resolution in 1895, when he said :

I doubt if there ever was a country so wholly and utterly unsuited to protection as a country like Canada.

Might we be permitted to inquire whether he still adheres to that view so honestly and firmly pronounced. No one has questioned the honesty of his former utterances except his leader.

If inquiry into the tariff be necessary before revision takes place one would have supposed that such inquiry would be required as to certain matters that are dealt with in the tariff, notably the oil industry, which, as I understand it, presents a pretty complicated question for consideration. But the pretense of a necessity for inquiry was not always put forward by the government. In 1901 those who desired to revise the tariff were told by the government that the Joint High Commission was sitting ; in 1902 the excuse of the government was that the Colonial Conference was about to take place, and in 1903 the excuse was that until we learned the exact outcome of Mr. Chamberlain's agitation for a system of mutual preferential trade within the empire, it would be unwise to interfere with the tariff. But this year, there being no other excuse available for the government, we are told that these ministers who have been collecting information on this subject for the last four years, must have an inquiry. Have they not technical officers in their departments ? Have they not received delegations from the manufacturing, the agricultural, the lumbering, the mining, and indeed all industries in Canada ? Have they not had an enormous mass of information placed at their disposal, and why is it that they shirk from making a tariff revision this session ? That question will present itself to every thoughtful man in the country.

In connection with the oil duties, the Minister of Finance presents a very charming picture by which the people will be saved $643,886 per annum upon the oil duties, while they pay a bounty of nearly $225,000. That is a very excellent condition of affairs, if the government could have any assurance that under existing and probably future conditions, the reduction in the price of oil will correspond with the reduction in the duty. When we get into committee I would like to hear some explanations from the Minister of Finance on that point before I would be prepared to join in his felicitations to himself on making that change in the tariff. There are various interests to be reckoned with in this connection. There is the oil refining industry which must not be lost sight of by any means, because it affords remunerative employment to many Canadians. There is the producer of crude oil to be considered, and his interests are very important.

I would not at first blush, and without hearing something further from my hon. friend the Minister of Finance than I have been able to hear so far, be inclined to agree with him that the interests of those producers are so thoroughly safeguarded by the proposed bounty as he seems to imagine. Is this bounty to be permanent ? Bounties are not usually provided with the intention that they are to be permanent. What is the view of the government on that point ? How is this difficult situation to be adjusted ?—because we must endeavour as far as possible to do justice to all. How is it that under conditions of that kind the government were able to spring to a conclusion without any difficulty whatever, whereas with regard to a great many other industries of Canada, the conditions of which are not of so complicated a character the government have found it absolutely necessary to postpone their decision ? One would like to understand something of the reasons why very difficult and complicated conditions were met promptly in the one case, and why less difficult and less complicated conditions in other cases receive no amelioration without a certain inquiry. These are considerations to which we cannot shut our eyes, and as to which we shall exact certain information from the government when we come to discuss this matter in committee.

With regard to the increased duty on woollens, I speak with all the diffidence of one who has not the experience possessed by a great many other gentlemen in this House. I have not had an opportunity of consulting very much those familiar with the conditions of the woollen industry; but, speaking from what I know on the subject and simply from the standpoint of common sense, I would have thought that the importation of shoddy would have been better met by a specific duty. I think that the importation of what is called shoddy ought especially to be dealt with, because not only is it destructive of the interests of our manufacturers, but it seems to present unfortunate conditions from the standpoint of the purchaser, consisting as it does of goods which look well, but which do not wear well, and in the end do not give that value to the purchaser which he has a right to expect in consideration of the money he pays for them. However, we shall have further opportunity of discussing that question when we get into committee.

As to the provision against dumping, this I am sure, must have been enthusiastically heralded by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I was very much struck with certain observations which he made on that subject two years ago, and I was especially struck with an article in the leading organ of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario, the Toronto 'Globe,' on this very subject only last autumn. The argument presented by the Toronto 'Globe' was this : Far from dumping being any disadvantage to the people of Canada, it was the very thing the people of Canada wanted. How, asked this great organ of public opinion, can it be of any disadvantage to Canadians to buy for $1.00 goods worth $1.50? Shall we exhort our fellow-countrymen to refrain from purchasing them ? The trend of the argument was that if there was one thing above another that we should welcome in Canada, it would be the wholesale importation of manufactured goods from the United States to be sold in Canada for one-half of what they could be purchased for in this country. I went through a great part of the maritime provinces, into the eastern townships of the province of Quebec, and into the western part of the province of Ontario, and I pointed out to the people whom I addressed from every platform, that dumping, as I believed, was a very serious evil. I said to them : When the Canadian industry has been wiped out, when the Canadian factory has been closed, when the Canadian employee has been driven to seek his home in the United States of America and to work in those very factories which are sending these goods into Canada, and when you come to add up the account, even then, with the dumping of goods at reduced prices, I believe you would find the account against this country ; but add to that consideration the fact that when our factories have been once closed, and the employees driven to a foreign country, you will find these trusts closing their hands, and compelling the people to pay 50 per cent more than the value of the goods; then make up the account and see where this country will be in the long run. I was not heralded by any Liberal newspaper as setting forth sound doctrine. My arguments were ridiculed; and yet when the Minister of Finance utters practically the same doctrine only the other day in the budget speech, he is heralded as the proclaimer of glad tidings by every Liberal journal throughout the country. That shows to what extent partisan politics will drive us.

Let us see what my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce thinks of his question of dumping; and I commend his remarks especially to the Prime Minister, because we all know that that right hon. gentleman put forward the present Minister of Trade and Commerce as the great exponent of the fiscal policy of the Liberal party in days gone by. Surely nothing has occurred since which would cause him to lose confidence in the well weighed utterances of that hon. gentleman. I will not put this statement forward as the utterance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce merely. I have a right to put it forward as the deliberate utterance of this government through the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this very question only two years ago; and I will let my right hon. friend repudiate it, if he sees fit to do so, as the deliberate utterance of the government of which he is the head. Here is a statement of the views of the government on the question of dumping:

> I have heard it said by hon. gentlemen opposite, and even by some friends of mine, that Canada is a dumping ground for American manufacturers. I have heard plaintive wails that heathen Yankees, not having the fear of God or of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association before their eyes, come to Canada and actually have the audacity to sell goods to Canadian consumers at a lower price than that at which they sell them to their own people.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Whose views are those, please?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These are the views of the government as pronounced by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce less than two years ago. That was in the finest vein of sarcasm of the hon. gentleman; and he continued as follows.

> It is even said, though this lacks proof, that they sell them at less than cost in their greed to monopolize so profitable a trade; and it is said that there are many Canadians so unpatriotic, so dead to all lofty feeling, that they will actually purchase American goods for no better reason than the fact that they can obtain them better and cheaper than they can similar goods in their own country.

That was the sympathetic way in which the government only two years ago treated the complaint by the producers and manufacturers of this country that they were suffering from the dumping of American goods. Once more we have a right about face by the administration and we welcome it if the measures taken to cure the evil will only prove effective, but I believe the government are taking these measures in a very half-hearted way and that they will not prove effective. We will have some opportunity no doubt hereafter to consider the reasons which lead us to that conclusion. My right hon. friend seems to be touched with the merry spirit of this utterance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I do not know which portion of it has excited his risibility.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The comments of my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was endeavouring to be a little humourous and am glad that I hit the mark. Well, we are to have a very curious system, very curious measures to remove this evil, and very effective no doubt my right hon. friend thinks.

Sir WILFRD LAURIER. I hope so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose those hopes will be realized just as was the expectation of my right hon. friend that he would absolutely destroy protection when he came to office or that he would reduce our expenditure by $4,000,000. Does my right hon. friend think these hopes will materialize any better than did his splendid prophecy at Toronto with regard to the fast Atlantic ocean service? He only hopes now but then he had a certainty. Then he produced a telegram. At present, however, we are not on very safe ground. Then we had an assurance and a certainty, but now we have only a hope. What then is likely to result since our expectation now must be so faint as compared with that which the good people of Toronto and all the good citizens of Canada were led to entertain at that time? Goods have at present to be entered at their market value in the country they come from. The customs law requires that, and no change in that respect has been outlined by the Minister of Finance. The imposition of a special tax will turn therefore altogether upon the individual discretion of each customs officer, and we will have this extraordinary condition of things all over Canada. Importers will be met with one reception at Toronto, another at Montreal and another at Halifax, depending altogether on the judgment, vigilance, experience and knowledge of each customs officer. A thousand things which are uncertain will enter into the enforcement of this statute, and I venture to say that the expectations of my right hon. friend as to the effect of this measure will be found hardly up to the results even of his assurance with regard to the fast Atlantic service, because the expectation in that case was kept up at least two or three years, although it has absolutely faded away for the present. Cannot the increased duty be evaded by some system of annual discounts or some other such arrangement? Men familiar with business life can inform the House better on that point than I can. Last but not least, the hon. gentleman's remedy will absolutely fail to operate when prices are generally depressed to an undue degree in other countries. When prices come down all over the United States, goods will be sold in Canada at what might be called dumping prices otherwise, but at the same prices as in the United States. Where will the protection be found then? The market may be so glutted at home that the American manufacturers will be compelled to send their goods to Canada at the prices ruling in the United States. We must not forget that the United States produced thirteen thousand million dollars worth of manufactured goods in 1901 and exported only three and a half per cent of that quantity. Let us consider for a moment what an enormous surplus they would have for export in a time of depression. If only ten per cent instead of three and a half per cent had to be marketed in some foreign country, that would mean an increase of exports to thirteen hundred and fifty million dollars. Where would those goods be dumped first? No doubt in Canada, which is the best customer of the United States for manufactured goods. I venture therefore to think that this provision will not prove a sufficient safeguard for Canadian interests. Further than that, if goods should be sold in the United States as low as fifty per cent of their value, the duty proposed would still enable them to be sold in this country at lower prices than they can be manufactured at in Canada. Canadian manufacturers cannot specialize their manufacture as the Americans can. We have only a home market of 6,000,000 as against a home market of 80,000,000 which the Americans enjoy. I have been astonished sometimes, on going through the industrial establishments of our country, to observe the enormous number and variety of articles which men are compelled to manufacture in order to retain the Canadian market. I have not been able to understand how it is possible to turn out such an extraordinary variety of articles and carry on business with any profit; but I have been told that unless they do turn out this almost infinite variety of articles, it is absolutely impossible for them to hold the market, because the dealers demand this large variety and if they cannot get it at home they will get it from the United States or Great Britain.

Another criticism which has been mentioned is one to which attention is directed by a very able man, Mr. William McMaster of Montreal. I am not sufficiently familiar with the tariff to know how much importance is to be attached to it, but I attach importance to it because Mr. McMaster has raised the point. He says:

> 'Our important point,' said Mr. McMaster, 'is what effect this will have on free trade. For instance, steel for many edged tools is admitted free. Would it be fair to allow a man importing free to get the advantage of slaughter prices, while others importing, say under a five per cent duty, would have to pay this additional charge; it would really amount to a bonus on the free goods. No doubt these points will be settled ere long, but in the meantime I can certainly endorse the principle of the change.'

But Mr. McMaster is very careful not to endorse the means by which that change is to be carried out. The general conditions of trade call strongly for a tariff on fairly protective lines. I have a statement here of the principal dutiable imports from Great Britain and the United States and I will call attention to some of the figures. I shall not read the whole statement, as it would take up too much time—and I fear that I have already unduly trespassed on the time of the House—but I shall quote some of them. The increase in imports from Great Britain and the United States was as follows from 1896 to 1903:—

This table showns very important increases in importation of a great many different articles. First, there are seven articles of animal products and of farm produce and then there are some twenty articles of manufactured goods. I realize that, with respect to some of these manufactured articles we cannot legitimately hope to have the whole Canadian market. But I do believe that with respect to many of these articles we should have full control of the Canadian market, or at least to a far greater extent than we have at the present time. Look at iron and steel manufactures, in which we increased our importation from Great Britain and the United States by more than $16,000,000 in the period which elapsed between 1896 and 1903. The tariff on iron and steel and manufactures of iron and steel has not been touched at all, except in so far as it may be modified by the proposed dumping provision in which I have not a great deal of confidence. One of our great iron industries, that in the province of Nova Scotia has been in more or less trouble. Another, that at the Soo is being re-organized. In respect of both industries, we have reason to believe that the government has been asked to give greater protection. I should think that in that respect, and in respect of many other articles which I have enumerated the interest of the country calls for a readjustment of the tariff upon a fair and reasonable basis having regard not so much to the interest of the manufacturers themselves—because I am not standing for their interest especially—but having regard to the interest of the whole country, the interest of the people who obtain employment in great manufacturing establishments. These, even more than the men whose capital is invested, are interested in seeing that these manufactures are put upon a thoroughly sound basis, a basis which will enable the men who have employed their resources in these industries to give to the labouring men a fair and reasonable wage.

For the year ending June 30, 1903, Canada imported :

Breadstuffs, to the value of	$11,557,644
Provisions and vegetables to the value of	2,572,876
Agricultural implements to the value of	3,155,779
Woollen and cotton goods* to the value of	24,045,709
Hats, caps, leather and manufactures of, to the value of	4,024,616
Iron, steel and manufactures of, to the value of	42,156,215
Electric apparatus to the value of	1,646,489
Paints and oils to the value of	2,864,000
	$92,023,328

* Raw cotton not included.

From 1896 to 1903 our—

Importations of breadstuffs increased	$ 5,139,887
Importations of iron, steel and manufactures of, increased	31,953,163
Importations of woollens and cottons increased	8,827,213
Importations of electric apparatus increased	1,324,558
Importations of hats, caps, leather, &c., increased	1,295,761
Importations of agricultural implements increased	2,685,904
Importations of paints and oils increased	1,269,715
Total increase in these articles	$52,496,191

And the question for this parliament and for the Canadian people is whether or not the labour involved in the manufacture of a great many of these articles, a very large proportion of the total of that sum of fifty-two and a half million dollars might not have been given to our own people at a remunerative wage rather than to the people of other countries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have detained the House very much longer than I expected to do when I began. Let me say, in order to be brief, that I stand by the principles which I advocated last year as those upon which we should proceed in the re-adjustment of the tariff. And, for the purpose of being brief, I will read those principles instead of describing and elaborating them :

Our policy should be to accomplish the following objects :—

1. To so arrange our tariff that all legitimate industries at present established in this country should be so protected as to insure as far as possible permanency under conditions of depression as well as in times of commercial expansion.

2. To invite capital and attract labour to the establishment of other industries which the resources and raw material of our country amply justify.

3. To preserve by means of an adequately protective tariff our own home market for our own people and to have the policy of the government so declared and understood.

Because that is the very basis of all investment for the purpose of expanding the industries of Canada.

4. In framing our tariff to have regard solely to the interests of Canada which have been committed to our charge, although recognizing that in consulting our own interests we must not be unmindful of the tariffs raised against us by other countries.

5. To so frame our fiscal policy that labour in Canada shall be paid a fair living wage, remembering always that our labouring classes and therefore our producers and manufacturers cannot be expected to compete on even terms with countries in which the condition of life among the labouring classes is altogether different. We do not desire to reduce our labouring population to the low standard of living, to that hard fierce struggle for existence which prevails in many countries. We do not want our labouring classes to compete without protection against the pauper labour of any country.

6. To utilize the labour of our own people in the conversion of our own raw material into finished products required for use in our own country. It is surely bad policy to export our raw material, to send our labouring classes abroad to another country to find work in its manufactories and to send after both our money to pay for the finished product which we require.

And I say that not only the labouring men of Canada, not only the manufacturers of Canada, not only those who have capital invested and those who receive a wage out of the investment of capital, but the farmers of our country as well are intensely interested in seeing that we have a stable policy of protection carried out. The people of Canada are beginning to realize, the farmers I think are beginning to realize the value to them of the home market and of important industrial centres, of which we have few in this country to-day. Farmers, newly arrived farmers in the North-west, pointed out to me a year and a half ago that in making their homes in Canada they felt the disadvantage of not having in western Canada those great industrial centres and centres of population that afforded them a market in the United States. That condition would come to us in the west of Canada, as well as in the east, if we had in force a policy such as I suggest, and such as we on this side of the House have fought for. Winnipeg and other great points in the west would become manufacturing centres, great industrial centres, before many years had passed, if we had in Canada a tariff adequately and firmly protective of our home market. And, Sir, with a policy such as I have outlined and with a thoroughly national system of transportation, whereby the people shall own and control the national highways, constructed by means of the national credit and out of the national resources, the development of this country will proceed on sure lines, on a stable basis and in a legitimate direction. and we shall have no cause to fear for the future material prosperity of the country which we love so well.

I therefore beg to move :

That all the words after 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor :

No readjustment of the tariff can be regarded as satisfactory which does not provide such protection to our labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will secure the Canadian market for the Canadian people.

That at the present session there should be a thorough adjustment of the tariff based on a declared and stable policy of adequate protection.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will be the first to admit that the speech which we have heard to-day from his lips is a very old friend. At all events, it is an old friend of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House ; it is on this side of the House an old acquaintance. We have heard it before, and we have heard it during the present session even, from the lips of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). I shall not say we have heard it too often ; quite the contrary, because if, after all, the policy of my hon. friends on the other side of the House is confined within the four corners of that speech, and if, as time goes on, and year after year rolls upon us, we have the same thing over and over again, then after all we on this side of the House should be comforted with the thought that there is not much to find fault with in our policy. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has dilated at some length on the question of figures. He has reproached us once more upon the fact that we have increased the expenditure. I do not know that it requires any justification on my part, or if I should endeavour to make a justification, that much labour would be required for that purpose, because I think that the expenditure which we have incurred has been amply justified, not only by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, but even by hon. gentlemen on the other side. I would like to know, Sir, during the years we have been in office what items of the expenditure which have been proposed by this government have been opposed by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House ? The truth is that we are not sufficiently extravagant in the eyes of hon. gentlemen opposite, because again and again we hear them proposing to us to increase the expenditures which we have brought to the attention of the country. I have not time to go over these, but if I had time I am sure I could recall many instances in which hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have asked us to supplement estimates which we were bringing before the House and to vote more money than we were providing for. The chief object of my hon. friend's criticism has been the question of surpluses. My hon. friend, I may tell him again, is a good hand—not yet equal to Sir Charles Tupper, I admit—but not a bad hand at a scrap-book. He has quoted some sentences from speeches of my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) to the effect that the Minister of Finance had no need of having surpluses. Sir, I do not think if the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) were here he would have anything to recant, to apologize for or to explain on this subject. I have to say to my hon. friend that in such a new country as this a large amount of public money must be expended. We have to build railways, to build wharfs, to improve the canals and this involves a large expenditure. In the eight years we have been in office we have spent no less than $56,000,000 on capital expenditure providing for the construction of railways in different parts of the country and for the improvement of the canals, and I may say that at this time the country is the wealthier for the expenditure which we have made in that direction. Not only have we made the country all the wealthier for the expenditure which we have made, but I venture to say we should perhaps have spent a little more. We have been able to expend no less than $56,000,000 in that way on improvements which have added to the wealth of the people, and have been able to do this without adding one dollar to the public debt of this country.

There is our justification and I ask my hon. friend what are we to do ? We have carried on this work with our surpluses. It is because my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), year after year has been able to make a record as that which he has made, it is because, year after year he has been able to have surpluses amounting to this large sum of money that we have been able to add to the wealth of the people of Canada without adding one cent to the public debt. If we had followed the suggestion of my hon. friend, if indeed it was a suggestion, or if we had done what his words imply, we would have taken means to reform the tariff in such a way that instead of having this surplus to carry on these public works we would have been obliged borrow the money in the markets of the world. Is that the policy of my hon. friend ? If the argument advanced by my hon. friend this afternoon means anything it means that my hon. friend objects to the policy we have pursued. If it means anything it means that instead of carrying on these public works and of meeting these expenditures out of the money which we have placed in the public treasury he would have done the same thing by borrowing the money in the markets of the world. It means that instead of carrying on the public works of the country without putting any greater burden on the shoulders of the people, and without adding to the public debt we should have borrowed the money. If that is the position which my hon. friend takes I am willing to take issue with him. I am not only willing to take issue with him in this House, but am willing to allow that issue to be placed before the Canadian people. My hon. friend a moment ago rather stated that we would change sides in this House ; he rather intimated that when the general elections came on in this country he and his friends would come to this side of the House and we would go to the other side of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. So you will.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have heard that before. I heard that in 1900 and it is a promise which has not yet been fulfilled. I am not strong in the line of prophecy but if my hon. friend wants to come into power it will not be by suggesting that in order to carry on the public works we should borrow the money instead of meeting these expenditures out of the revenue of the country. That is the difference between my hon. friend and myself on this question and I am willing to leave it to the clear judgment of this House as to the better policy to pursue.

My hon. friend spoke at some length upon the dumping clause of our tariff. I could not say from the statement of my hon. friend whether he was in favour of our policy or against it. I gathered that two years ago when my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) made a speech rather against it, my hon. friend was rather in favour of it. But since that time it seems to me that my hon. friend has changed his mind and that he is now rather against it. At all events he did not speak enthusiastically about it. He said that I did not speak enthusiastically about it. My hon. friend spoke of my previous statements about the fast Atlantic service. I well remember that on a certain occasion when I was in Toronto I received a telegram from England. I thought it was settled and I so stated to the people of Toronto but I have learned since that occasion that it is not always best to be too sure. But, we have reason to hope that this policy will bring about the effect for which it has been designed. My hon. friend did not dare to attack it but he rather suggested that it would not be effective because it might be evaded. What feature of the tariff law is there that is not liable to be evaded ? I am sure there will always be some parties in this country and on the other side of the line also who will endeavour to evade the law and I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), within six months, or perhaps within a less time, will have to deal with that question. There are parties who will try to get over this law, to defraud the revenue and to prevent the Canadian people from deriving the benefit from it, but that is no argument against the law. If that were an argument against this law it would be an argument against the whole tariff. My hon. friend cannot point to a single law of any kind whatever and especially one which put a restriction upon free importation or free act of any kind on the part of the community which will not be subject to being evaded, and certainly when a law of this kind is adopted to put a stop to an illegitimate traffic which has been taking place for many years as it has been for the protection of the Canadian manufacturers in the lines of business in which this traffic has been carried on, I have no doubt that great efforts will be made to get over the law. I have no doubt that many hon. gentlemen opposite who are in favour of it are disposed to damn it with faint praise because it comes from this side of the House. Well, we will have to see how it will work. All the business men the country will concede that not only is this a good measure but that it is a bold course which has been taken by the government and one which shows that this government is alive to the necessities of the trade of this country.

My hon. friend also stated that he did not altogether approve—I do not know that I understood him correctly,—of the commission which we were instituting in order to have an inquiry as to how the tariff has been working and as to how it can be improved. My hon. friend did not altogether, as I understood him, condemn the idea, but he did not commend it either. He stands betwixt and between ; he says neither yes nor no. He said : If you have an inquiry in order to deal with the tariff why should you deal with the oil duties ? Again on the oil duties my hon. friend did not say very much. He did not attack us on our policy. In regard to the oil duties we did not have any hesitation or difficulty, in deciding upon the policy which we have adopted and I think that policy can be very well defended in very few words. We found the duty on refined oil when we came into office six cents per gallon. We then reduced it by one cent per gallon and this year we have cut the duty in two. We have reduced the duty on refined oil to two and a half cents per gallon. We have wiped out altogether the duty on crude oil but we have given a bounty of a cent and a half per gallon to the producers of crude oil. Why did we do that ? The reason is obvious and I hope it will commend itself to my hon. friends opposite. The producers of Canadian oil cannot supply the Canadian market. The production in Canada cannot supply more than one-third of the total consumption of oil in Canada. Two-thirds have to be imported. It is a well known fact that if we had wiped out the duty on crude oil without giving any bounty to the producers we would have closed up every oil well that is producing oil in the province of Ontario. There is no doubt as to that. It is a serious question and it is one in regard to which there can be no dispute. I do not think the oil industry has been a very profitable industry to anybody for many years past but it is a well known fact that thousands if not millions of dollars of Canadian money have been invested in that industry. It so happens that we cannot compete on equal terms with American oil and if we had not given to the producers in the province of Ontario a bounty of one and a half cents a gallon which enables them to keep their wells open the whole of the plants and the whole of the money which have been invested would have been wiped out and Canada would have lost probably millions of dollars instead of having a profitable industry going on. Instead of having that condition of things, in order to give the consumer the benefit of cheap oil, we thought we were justified in giving a bounty out of the public treasury which will amount to from $150,000 to $180,000 a year. We rely upon the good sense of the people of Canada that they will agree to give this bounty to their fellow citizens who have invested their money in the oil regions so as to keep their industry in operation. This is the justification for our policy and if we are wrong we invite the criticism of our friends on the other side.

Mr. CLANCY. Why does not the right hon. gentleman apply that rule to all other industries ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what we have been doing.

Mr. CLANCY. Oh, no.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what we have been doing as I shall show. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is too critical ; I will be able to show him that we have done that for every other industry. At all events, if we have not the approbation of his leader, we have his own approbation with regard to this particular item of our policy because my hon. friend has approved of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He approved of it, and I understood his leader to say that he was not sure whether or not our policy would decrease the price of oil. My information at the present moment is, that the day after the Minister of Finance delivered his budget speech the price of oil was reduced two and a half cents a gallon to the consumer, and that is the best justification for the policy we have adopted.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How long will you continue the bounty to the producer ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no time limit contemplated in the resolutions. The policy of the government is to maintain it, so long as the conditions require that it should be continued.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker ; we are now face to face with an amendment moved by the leader of the opposition, no doubt with the full concurrence of his party, by which the people of Canada are invited to abandon the policy under which this country has thrived and prospered this last seven years. It is now seven years since the Minister of Finance introduced the tariff which has since been known, and will long continue to be remembered by grateful generations as the Fielding tariff. When the Minister of Finance concluded his first budget speech in 1897, we on this side of the House believed that he had opened a new page in the fiscal history, nay, in the general history of Canada. Great were our expectations then, but greater still has been the reality. Under the Fielding tariff, Canada has developed as no country has developed during the same period. Our languishing industries have been revived ; new industries have sprung into life ; agriculture, long depressed and sore tried has flourished ; trade has more than doubled in volume ; the revenue has become unprecedentedly buoyant ; hope, confidence, national pride have risen high in the hearts of Canadians. The name of Canada, up to that moment scarcely known beyond her borders has since become a synonym for national progress, and an object of attention from the whole civilized world. True it is that during those seven years this tariff has been the object of constant carping and cavilling on the part of the opposition—an opposition which styles itself His Majesty's loyal opposition, but which never loses an opportunity to arouse passions and prejudices. It is also true, Sir, that during these seven years, the opposition has been forced to shift its ground more than once. Scarcely had the Minister of Finance uttered the last word of his budget speech in 1897, than the leader of the opposition arose and with tears in his eyes and indignation in his voice, he denounced the tariff which had been introduced as the death knell of the industries of Canada. In the face of what followed it was absurd to maintain that line of attack, and as Canada developed and prospered the opposition had to change their batteries and adopt other means of attack. They passed without compunction from one extreme to another ; from the extreme of vilification to what must have been to them the extreme of laudation, for they said that the tariff was simply their own tariff, the old national policy under another name. When the absurdity of this position became manifest, once more they changed their ground, and then stated that if the country had prospered it was not due to the tariff, but was the work of Providence. That has been repeated all through this debate. Well, Sir, I may tell my hon. friends opposite, that no one on this side of the House will take exception to that argument. We recognize that we owe an immense debt of gratitude to Providence. Providence has blessed us with good crops, good prices, buoyant revenue and increased trade, and I may say without boasting that for these blessings our prayers go forth to Heaven every day. I would like to invite hon. gentlemen opposite to join with us in those prayers, did I not fear that their gratitude would be insincere. In human affairs we know that Providence acts through human agencies and we are inclined to think that these gentlemen opposite cannot forgive Providence, because it suited Providence to choose us poor Grits to be the instruments through which to lavish His bounty upon this fair land of Canada, of which my hon. friends opposite are the fortunate though disgruntled citizens. In the 16th century there lived in France the celebrated surgeon, Ambrose Paré. He was eminent in his profession, and he was as modest as he was eminent. One day he was called to the bedside of an illustrious patient, and he was lucky enough to bring him back to life and health. On being asked how he managed to do it, he simply uttered these words : ' I treated him, God cured him.' My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who is also a modest man, who adds modesty to all his other good qualities, was called in 1897 to the bedside of a patient endowed with a strong constitution, but whose constitution had been much impaired by empirical treatment ; and in the same way, he may say of this patient, ' I attended him, God cured him.' Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House tell us, and repeat every day, that if the country is prosperous, it is all the work of Providence ; yet they are not willing to leave that work in the hands of Providence. They think—it is one of their pet notions—that they can perform the work much better than Providence can. This is the object of the amendment which they have placed in your hands ; and they expect that the Canadian people will take the work out of the hands of Providence in which they have placed it, and put it into theirs. Well, I do not expect that because Providence is with us, the Canadian people will be against us, though that apparently is a reason why the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House should be against us. Sir, when we adopted the tariff which has been in force since 1897, we did not act from any set notions; we did not pretend to give expression to any fad or any stereotyped theory; but we thought it was a tariff well suited to the needs of the country. We thought it was the application of practical notions to the requirements of all classes of our population. It was a tariff which was devised first of all to promote the revenue, and next, as an incident, to protect Canadian productions against foreign productions. It never entered our minds that this tariff was to be eternal—that it was to, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, be there for ever. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance stated on more than one occasion that the tariff should be revised from time to time as necessity required. He has been invited more than once to revise the tariff—invited by friends, invited by foes. Up to this year my hon. friend has resisted all such invitations; but to-day there are signs of the rising storm—signs of the rising of economic disturbance; and it would be well to trim our sails and set the ship, so as to have her ready to weather the storm. This is what is done by the changes this year. They are reform, and nothing but reform. My hon. friend the Finance Minister has stated that they do not go as far as he would like; and he has stated the course he intends to follow with reference to future changes. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition also proposes changes of the tariff, but very different changes. He does not propose to reform; he proposes to revolutionize. He practically says to the people of Canada, let us undo what we have done in the last seven years; let us tear out our tariff. Sir, it is always an easy task to destroy. The difficulty is to build up again. What is proposed by my hon. friend? He proposes to destroy the tariff, but what will he substitute for it? My hon. friend wants what he calls adequate protection. But what is adequate protection? He says it is—no, he declines to tell us. Again, I make a slip; but I am sure I can correct it without a murmur from the other side of the House. He has not declined to tell us what adequate protection means—he has not declined, because he cannot do it. He cannot any more tell us what is adequate protection, and what is not, than he can tell us the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. The two things are not definable. My hon. friend has chosen to keep us in the dark as to his meaning. But though my hon. friend has not told us what he means by adequate protection, at all events we have it from his own lips, from the lips of some of his followers, and from some of his organs, what is at the bottom of his thought, and what he means by adequate protection. In his own mind it means high protection, the very highest protection, American protection. I I am quite warranted in what I say, that what my hon. friend means by adequate protection if he means anything, is the American standard of protection. I find this in the chief organ of the Conservative party, which is to-day, and has been for some months past, I may say for some years past, the Montreal 'Star.' The chief organ of the Conservative party is no longer the Toronto 'Mail,' the Hamilton 'Spectator' or the Toronto 'World,' but it is the Montreal 'Star,' which is like the sheep of Jacob—all the other sheep have to pay it obeisance. For more than twelve months the Montreal 'Star' has had this placard at the top of its editorial page, though I may say it no longer appears:

BUILD UP CANADA.

To the government of Canada.

Give the manufacturers, workingmen, and farmers of Canada the same kind of tariff as that which has made the United States the home of the most prosperous manufacturers, workingmen and farmers in the world.

To the manufacturers of Canada.

Force the government to give you as good a tariff as that which has made the American manufacturers rich. When you get this tariff, pay your Canadian workmen American wages.

To the workingmen of Canada.

Take a leaf out of the book of the American workingmen. Help your employers to obtain for themselves and for you a Canada-for-Canadians tariff.

To the farmers of Canada.

Profit by the experience of the American farmers, the wealthiest farmers in the world, who support a high tariff and prosper under it and because of it.

This, then, so far as it can be, is the adequate protection of my hon. friend. Therefore, if I am right in my conclusion, and I think I am, we have to choose between the Canadian tariff and the American tariff. If that be the issue, Sir, we on this side of the House are ready to accept it, and we stand by the Canadian tariff. It so happened that in the year 1896, on this continent there were two general elections, one in the United States and one in Canada. It so happened that in both countries the party in power was defeated. It so happened that in both countries the tariff was revised, but it was revised on very different principles. In the United States the tariff was levelled up; in Canada the tariff was levelled down. In the United States the McKinley tariff, which had been the highest tariff ever adopted by any naiton, was found to be inadequate—not high enough. It was supplemented by the Dingley tariff, which was still higher. In Canada the tariff of the day was considerably lowered. What was the result ? You have it in the condition of the two countries and the two peoples at the present time. In Canada you have hope, abundance, contentment ; in the United States you have dejection and almost despair. Who can doubt that ? True it is that immediately after the adoption of the Dingley tariff there was a boom, to use an American expression. Everything was booming. Capital flowed into many industries, because a fictitious atmosphere had been created which tempted adventurous men with money. Many industries were denuded of their legitimate capital in order that it might be put into trusts and combines ; and for a time everything was booming in the United States. That was the time when it was stated that England was invaded by American products. That was the time when the Montreal 'Star' advised Canadian workmen, manufacturers and farmers to adopt the American tariff. That was the time of combines and trusts. During the few years which followed from 1897 up till last year, no less than fifteen combines and trusts were organized in the United States. There was the coal trust, which as you know caused the largest strike which ever took place in any country, which almost created a revolution in the United States ; the iron and steel trust ; trusts on farm implements, on chemicals, on sugar, on tobacco, on paper, on glass, on leather, on rubber goods, on electrical apparatus, on radiators, on elevators, on flour, on clocks, and even on beef for some time. But the time came—and it was not very long—when, to use an American expression, the bottom was knocked out of this tariff, and to-day the United States are in a most deplorable condition. The steel trust, for example, which threatened at one time to capture the whole iron and steel industry of the world, is no longer a dangerous competitor, but is struggling for its own existence and has had to discharge thousands of its operators. The railways, which at one time had not sufficient rolling stock to carry their traffic, are discharging their operatives by the thousands. Within the last few months the Pennsylvania Railway Company—the largest in the States—has discharged no less than 11,000 of its operators, and the New York 'Herald' fifteen days ago published a statement, which has not been contradicted, that the total number of men discharged by the railway companies since last April is no less than 75,000. We have escaped all this. Our railways are doing good business and so are our manufacturers. Is this then the moment when we should abandon our tariff and adopt the American tariff ? Nor is this all. Many a time in this House we have been told of what wonderful things another very highly protected country was accomplishing. I refer to Germany. How many times have we not heard from the other side of the prosperous condition of the German people, how their trade was invading the world, how German manufacturers were even crushing the trade of old England ? Sir, while it may have been true for a time that Germany was making headway, what is her condition to-day ? Germany followed the example set by the United States, the same example which hon. gentlemen opposite urge us to imitate. Germany adopted a tariff copied largely from the tariff of the United States. And in Germany, as in the United States, trusts and combines ruled the roost. I have a list here of the German trusts and combines in operation in Germany, taken from the consular reports of Great Britain and Germany. There are combines in coal, iron, steel, sewing machines, farm implements, enamelled ware, chemicals, sugar, flour, twine, cotton and woollen yarn, linen goods, ribobns, lead pencils—nothing too small—wood pulp, cement, glass and rubber goods. Unfortunately, there as elsewhere the day of retribution came, and came also the inevitable crash. And in the year 1900, three years ago, Germany began to suffer the first pangs of depression and hard times. The trusts had absorbed a large portion of the capital of her land banks. The land banks commenced to fail right and left, and it is estimated that $200,000,000 of capital was lost by the failures of these banks. Wholesale dismissals of mechanics took place, and the wages of those who remained were gradually lowered. Strikes among the working classes have become a by-word in Germany to-day, and to add to all this, socialism has become rampant in that country, and yet this is the tariff you are invited to adopt in this country. I do not think that the Canadian people, in the full enjoyment of the results achieved under our tariff, will make the mistake of abandoning it at a time when the country is so prosperous.

But what are the objections raised against our tariff ? I listened this afternoon to my hon. friend, I have listened to this debate very attentively, and have heard the same song sung by every hon. gentleman opposite. We have been told again and again that our relations with our neighbours are not satisfactory, because the balance of trade against us with the United States is very large. I do not deny it. I wish it were otherwise. But if it is in that condition, it is not our fault but theirs, and they have much more to suffer than we. Trade between nations, to be profitable, must be like trade between individuals ; but unfortunately, while we are willing to trade with the Americans, they are not willing to trade with us. What is the remedy suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite ? They say, since the Americans will not buy from us, we should not buy from them. I am ready to adopt that policy to a certain extent; and so far as we can dispense with trading with the United States, I should be prepared to do so. But to tell us simply that the balance of trade is against us is no argument at all. What we must look at is what is behind the balance of trade. To tell us simply that we have a balance of trade against us is an exploded argument, but I shall discuss it because it has been advanced again. It is such an old fallacy that I would have expected it to be discarded long ago. It is a fallacy so glaring and so manifest that I am almost surprised it should be advanced in a House like this ; but as it is pleaded, let us examine it. Bastien, in one of his books, gives a very striking example of how the balance of trade works. A ship left Havre, in France, in 1840 or thereabouts, loaded for New Orleans with a cargo of articles de Paris, valued at 200,000 francs. She reached New Orleans. The freight on these goods amounted to ten per cent and the customs duty to thirty per cent, and they were sold at twenty per cent profit. The sale therefore realized 352,000 francs. The money was immediately invested in cotton, and the same ship came back to Havre with a cargo of cotton. The cargo was charged in France with ten per cent freight and sold at twenty per cent profit, realizing 464,000 francs. Therefore the shipper made a double profit. He made a profit on his outward cargo of articles de Paris and also upon his inward cargo of cotton. He made over 100,000 francs altogether, and enriched himself and his country to that extent. But how did the entries balance in the customs ? In the customs returns there appeared an export value of 200,000 francs and an entry of imports to the value of 352,000 francs, showing thereby a balance of trade against France of 152,000 francs. Therefore, France, according to the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite, was a loser by the operation. But what followed ? That same gentleman, encouraged by his first experience, thought he would tempt fortune again, and he shipped another cargo of the same goods to New Orleans, valued at 200,000 francs. Then an occurrence happened which would cheer the hearts of my hon. friends on the other side. The entry in the customs returns showed an export of 200,000 francs from France, but the ship was lost at sea, and therefore the balance of trade remained in favour of France to the extent of 200,000 francs. This is an apt illustration of the logic of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Let us, Mr. Speaker, be spared this bugbear of the balance of trade because it is simply a nonsensical bugbear. Let us go beyond the figures and examine the situation.

Last year our imports from the United States all told, including bullion and everything else, amounted to the very large figure of $137,000,000 and our exports only amounted to $71,000,000, showing a very large discrepancy between the two. These are the figures which startle my hon. friends opposite and lead them to exclaim : How can it be possible that we should trade with such a country ? She sells us $137,000,000 worth and will only buy $71,000,000 worth. Is there not something wrong ? Well, let us examine. First of all, out of this $137,000,000 imports from the United States the goods on the free list amount to no less than $69,000,000.

I ask any hon. gentleman on the other side whether we could dispense with any of these goods ? That is the question. Could we, for instance, provide our own raw cotton ? Can we provide the coal that is needed for use in Ontario ? Can we produce many other of the articles that are required in connection with our industries ? Sir, this free list has been canvassed and compared with the greatest care possible. It has been made to include only raw material or products which the country cannot manufacture at all or cannot manufacture with success. Therefore, I say we cannot dispense with the goods imported from the United States which are on this free list. I have never heard in this House, outside of one item, any exception taken to this free list. The only objection taken is with reference to the matter of corn. We have been told more than once that corn ought not to be on the free list. I take issue at once with our friends opposite on that point and declare my opinion that when we put corn on the free list we conferred on the farmers of Canada one of the greatest boons we could confer upon them. The result has been an increase of the exportation of our animal products, especially the products of our pork-packing establishments. On the other hand, there are some articles that, we are told should be on the free list that are now dutiable. For instance, it is said that coal should be on the free list. We have not thought it possible to make this change, though I must say there are many good reasons why it would be advantageous to have coal free. It so happens that on this continent the distribution of coal is peculiar. On both shores, the Atlantic and the Pacific the coal beds are in Canada ; in the centre of the continent the coal beds are in the United States, it would seem natural under such circumstances that we should have reciprocity in coal. That policy would be to the advantage of the Americans on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, and to those Canadians who live in the interior. Up to the present time we have thought—and in that I think we are supported by hon. gentlemen opposite—that it would be advantageous to put coal on the free list but that we had better keep the duty on it in order to have if possible, the exchange of that commodity in the near or distant future as the case may be. I have here a list of some of the leading dutiable articles coming from the United States to this country. Let me examine briefly some of the articles in that list. The first is coal oil crude and refined, of which we import $1,414,319. Could we dispense with that ? Everybody would be very glad if the Canadian oil wells could produce all that we need. But they are insufficient. We have tried it again and again, and all that they can furnish is about one-third of our consumption. Therefore, we must have American oil. Then, there is bituminous coal of which we import about $7,000,000 worth. Can the people of Ontario dispense with the coal of Pennsylvania and Ohio? Of coal dust we import about $400,000. That also is necessary. Of sugar and molasses we import $352,000 worth. Molasses is on the free list. Of locomotives, we import $1,106,521. We have some plants in Canada for the manufacture of locomotives, but, unfortunately, they are insufficient for the requirements of the country. We must import American locomotives whether we wish to or not. There is a duty on locomotives which must be paid by the Canadian railways whenever they import the locomotives from the United States. They would prefer to buy locomotives in Canada, but they cannot find them here and they must go to the American market for locomotives. Of fertilizers we import $100,000. We cannot dispense with that. Our importation of rails from the United States amounted to only $86,000. Our rails came chiefly from Europe. In the case of this article, what can we do more than we have done? We are all anxious to have rails manufactured in Canada. Last year, we put a duty on rails, to become effective as soon as they are manufactured in this country, and we are still waiting for somebody to undertake this manufacture. Oranges and other tropical fruits—our imports were $600,000. We imported of printing paper $246,000 worth. Who can cavil at that? We have a duty on printing paper, but it was reduced some years ago. That reduction was made at the prayer of the press themselves, because there was a combine in Canada who were exacting an undue price from them. In order to relieve them from the influence of this combine we reduced the duty, I believe, to fifteen per cent. Altogether this list covers items of importation under duty amounting to $12,000,000. And I am sure that I am within the mark when I say that we have to import these articles from the United States and could not get them from anywhere else. This list added to the free list of $69,000,000 makes a total importation of these articles free or dutiable of over $80,000,000 where we benefited by the American trade. Now, let us pass to other articles which we import from the United States on the dutiable list. Somebody will ask me—in fact the question was asked this afternoon—why do not you manufacture these articles in Canada? Sir, we have a tariff against the United States varying from 25 per cent to 35 per cent, an average of 28 per cent. Under that tariff manufactures ought to thrive. I am told, however, that they do not thrive and that we ought to increase the tariff. For my part, I am always prepared to consider the case of an industry which, being in existence, finds itself pressed by foreign competition. But, when I am told that we should increase the duty with a vague expectation that, by so doing, we shall found an industry and build it up, I am always more or less sceptical. I am sceptical because of the experience of the Canadian people as I have seen it exemplified in this House. I remember the occasion—I was sitting on the other side of the House; it was in 1885 or 1887—when Sir Charles Tupper then acting as Minister of Finance introduced what was called the iron policy. He more than doubled the duties that had, up to that time, been paid on iron, and he made bold to say that within five years, Canada would produce all the iron needed for our market. Well, nearly twenty years have elapsed since that time. In the meantime, not satisfied with the duties placed upon iron, the government of that day introduced legislation to give bounties upon the production of iron. And still the industry did not thrive and prosper. Not satisfied with this, the present government increased the bounties given to iron producers. And what is the result? To-day, the iron industry of Canada is not able to supply the wants of the Canadian people. It has not been a success. And, though the Canadian people have been paying heavy duties and heavy bounties ever since to establish that industry, yet, after more than fifteen years, we have not reached the goal which I hope we shall reach some day or other. But there is one class of goods which come from the United States, which have come in in a manner which we regard as undue and to which we want to put a stop. That is the class of goods that have come in by dumping and slaughtering, by making Canada a dumping ground and slaughter market. We have taken means to prevent that if we can.

My hon. friend rather jeered us this afternoon when he spoke of the policy we have introduced upon this subject. He asked how this policy could be conciliated with the old declarations of free trade. Sir, I care not for theories, I want to be practical, and this country must be practical above all things. Well, Sir, let me say this, and I think I am speaking words which will be understood by everybody, the last word on free trade and protection has not yet been spoken. The conditions of manufacturing are changing every day. The shoemaker, the cabinet maker, all the old craftsmen with which we were familiar in our younger days, have disappeared. Formerly, in every village, boots, and shoes and furniture were made by the people of the locality. The shoemaker, the tailor, the cabinet maker were artisans in every locality. They have all disappeared. To-day these things are all made in large brick manufactories, where there is a great aggregation of capital, where there are thousands and thousands of men congregated, not only men but women and children also. But if it so happens that through new methods which have been adopted in highly protective countries such as the United States and Germany, if it so happens that large combinations engaged in manufacture, after supplying the local market, resort to slaughtering their goods, in this country for example, flooding the market and depriving our artisans of their work, scattering them, ruining the capital which has been invested in them, I say that under such conditions theory must be abandoned, and it behooves every parliament to try to remedy such a situation. That is the thing we have to do at the present moment.

How will our policy work out, was the question put us this afternoon by my hon. friend. It will work out in this way: As soon as it has been shown to us that an article is being slaughtered in this country, then the Minister of Customs will immediately be able so to arrange the tariff and so to tax that article as to make the slaughtering of the article impossible of accomplishment. A few months ago I was shown an invoice from Detroit in which an article was set down at a certain price for the American consumer, and at another price, at least 30 per cent below, for the Canadian consumer. This is the regular practice, and I know there are business men in this House who are aware that this is the regular practice, where American shippers, American manufacturers make invoices in which there are double prices, a price for the American consumer and a price for the Canadian consumer. I may be told: But is it not to the benefit of the Canadian consumer? Certainly it is to that extent. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance dealt with that question in his budget speech. It will be to the profit of the individual consumer who may purchase that article at a cheaper price than it can be sold in the United States. But whilst it may be a benefit to the individual Canadian consumer, it is to the detriment of our community as a whole, because it throws a number of our people out of employment, and causes the destruction of large amounts of capital invested in these industries. At all events, such is the policy we have adopted, and I think it will work well. But I may be told: Why, instead of making a contingent tariff that will go up or down as necessity arises, why not make it absolute so that it will apply under all circumstances? For this reason, that we do not wish to tax the Canadian people on other industries without any profit to the Canadian consumer; therefore we have preferred, instead of adopting a regular, absolute, and tyrannical tariff, to adopt a contingent tariff that will go up or go down as the circumstances of the case may require. At all events, this is an experiment. It is not only an experiment, but it is a new device which has been introduced into the world, because I do not think that anything like it has before been tried anywhere. We invite the fair consideration of our friends on the other side of the House to this policy. We have prepared it according to our best judgment, and we think it ought to work satisfactorily, and will destroy an evil which is becoming manifest in modern industrial conditions. We have in this country, as in other countries, and indeed in all countries, manufactures carried on under a customs tariff, whereby a fictitious atmosphere is created, artificial conditions, under which manufacturers are carrying on their operations. They have a right to expect therefore that the condition of things under which they have built up their manufactures shall be maintained. This policy which we have adopted we believe will commend itself to the fair judgment of the Canadian people the more it is debated and discussed.

Now, Sir, I have stated the policy of the government upon this occasion. This is not, as has been stated, a regular revision of the tariff. That may come or it may not come, it will depend upon circumstances. At all events, there is one thing which I think we ought to do. We are not above being instructed. We are not above receiving outside information. My hon. friend rather jeered us this afternoon because we proposed to make an inquiry into the industrial condition of the country. If there is one thing for which the country will be grateful to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance it will be this, that he has announced that at the proper moment he will have an inquiry made into all the conditions which at present regulate Canadian manufacturers and Canadian production. I have no doubt that we will receive valuable information, we will receive instruction. We will not be above receiving information, and acting upon the information received, as the occasion may demand it, and as opportunity arises.

Sir, we have now been eight years in power. That is not a very long time in the lifetime of a nation, though it may be perhaps a long time in the life of a party. But after having been eight years in office I think I can say in the presence of friends and adversaries that we have not been imitators, we have been ourselves. We have not walked merely in beaten paths, we have hewed out our own way. We have altered our policy according to the difficulties that arose, and we have endeavoured to solve the problems as they presented themselves to us, not by the application of antiquated formulae that had been in vogue in older communities, but by framing a policy that would be applicable to our own conditions and to our own circumstances. In the first budget speech which was presented to this House by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, we introduced a preferential tariff. We did not imitate any other nation, we were the originators. We adopted a policy which we thought suited to our condition, both as a colony and as a young nation, believing it to be in accord with sound economic conditions. We adopted a policy which we thought would advance Canadian trade with Great Britain, our mother country, and which would at the same time afford considerable relief to the Canadian consumer. A year ago we imposed the German surtax. In doing so we did not borrow legislation from other countries, we devised a remedy which we had reason to believe would compel a powerful nation to give us the fair treatment which that nation denied us, or at all events, would force it to respect us. This year again, in order to meet a modern evil which has resulted from new methods in highly protected countries, we have invented a policy which we have every reason to believe will prove entirely effectual. As it was in the past so it shall be in the future; we shall face any difficulties, we shall face any problems as they arise and we shall endeavour to settle them by ways and means altogether Canadian in their conception, altogether Canadian in their character.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House at any great length but I wish to make a few remarks on some of the things referred to by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who has just taken his seat and then to deal with some matters which should be touched upon. I was rather amused at the statement of the right hon. gentleman when he said that the speech of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) reminded him of his old friend. It was an old friend that he was bringing to life. Well, all I wish to say is that we will never be able to cause hon. gentlemen opposite to bring in their old friends. They will never be accused of standing by their old friends, and I have noticed that whenever an intimation is given by the right hon. gentleman or by any of the members of his cabinet, that they intend to invite to their presence even in the smallest degree the friend of my hon. friend, protection, they are cheered to the echo. They would like to make him their guest. They are stealing him inch by inch. But, they will never be found standing by their old friends. They remind me a good deal of a character in the book of Dr. Drummond—Batiste Trudeau. He went away from home and when he came back he came on the fast express. When he got home he did not know some of his old friends. He could not drink the old whisky, or eat the old food, or smoke the old cigars, but by and by Batiste came home in the caboose of the freight train. It is in the caboose that hon. gentlemen opposite will come home, and when they do they will know their old friends. They are on the fast express now riding roughshod over all their principles. I heard the right hon. gentleman state in 1895 in my own riding, in the town of Morrisburg, that the goal of the Liberal party was free trade as it was in England and that they would stand by that principle to the death. Why are they changing? They are turning their backs on every profession they ever made and the right hon. gentleman's party are cheering to the echo every intimation that they intend to adopt protection. They are trying to get away from themselves. I do not blame them for trying to get away from themselves. If I were ever in their company I would be one of the first to try to get away from them. England has had free trade for fifty years. They claim that they have improved the conditions of this country. The right hon. gentleman gave us the reason why a large expenditure was necessary by saying that this was a young country. When he was discrediting and condemning expenditure ten years ago the country was younger then than it is to-day. The right hon. gentleman speaks about the changed conditions. Sir, every man in this country knows that but for Manitoba and the Northwest having been opened up our factories would be filled to the doors with unsold goods. Who deserves the credit for having opened up that country? The Conservative party built up that country, as the ancient city was built up with sword in one hand and trowel in the other, fighting hon. gentlemen opposite. They deserve the credit. Providence forsooth. Balaam wanted to serve God but he wanted to serve him in his own way, until the ass had to tell him he was wrong.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BRODER. Balaam was riding the ass and he must be on that side of the House. There is no trouble on that score. We will see about this patient that the right hon. gentleman referred to. He referred to the patient being very ill when they came into power and he said that they had administered the medicine and that the providence had cured him. Let us see whether they administered the medicine that they had prescribed for the patient. Let us look for a moment at the doctor's book, let us look at the records of the drug store and see whether or not the hon. gentlemen gave the patient the medicine they prescribed. I am sorry the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) is not in his place because he is the mouthpiece of his party and he is the man who gives Pointers Nos. 1 and 2 when he goes to Toronto to speak on behalf of his party and instruct the country as to the keynote of their new policy. What did the right hon. gentleman say in 1894? Take 'Hansard' of March 28, 1894, page 314 and see the prescription that the right hon. gentleman laid down for this sick patient:

Sir, I think calm reflection on the part of our people will endorse the statement that Canada to-day, above all things and before all things, must be made, if it is going to prosper, a cheap country to live in and a cheap country to produce in. More than that, Canada, above all and before all things, must have access to larger markets, and notably to the most important of all markets, the market which lies to the south of us.

That is the prescription that was laid down for the patient but have they given the patient the medicine which they prescribed ? The patient is well without that remedy. They dare not apply the remedy and they know it. Nobody knows it better than the right hon. leader of the government. They never applied the slightest portion of the remedy that they proposed for this country, they dare not live up to their professions and principles and they dare not apply them. Then, the right hon. leader of the government says that we would introduce the American tariff. What is portrayed in the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) ? He has proposed as the goal of his party in the future a minimum tariff, a maximum tariff and a preference. That maximum tariff is to meet the maximum tariffs of other countries. What does that mean if it does not mean in part at least the application of the American tariff to this country ? He has fixed his tariff in his coal oil deal for the express purpose of encouraging the greatest monopoly that the United States possesses to-day—the Standard Oil Company. He refers to Germany as a country that has combines. Has not England combines with her free trade policy ? An American combine has dictated to some extent the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. They have allowed them to use tank vessels to bring oil into this country in order to coerce our Canadian industry and now they are putting down the duty so as to enable them to bring crude oil into this country, in competition with the wells which the right hon. gentleman says are being kept open by the bounty which the government are giving. When the right hon. gentleman makes a statement that but for this bounty every well in Canada would be closed, where was the right hon. gentleman when he was preaching free coal oil in this country a few years ago ? He wanted to close every well in this country. That must have been his goal. Why not apply the remedy ? He says : We built our public works out of the surplus. Does any man pretend to say that it is a correct policy to tax the people on the ordinary articles of consumption for public works ? This is a new principle in this country, and Sir, I want to say while I am on my feet that number of boxes of cheese shipped from Montreal as a whole. Now, let it be remembered that this cold storage output is shipped from Montreal, because it is shipped during the warm months while the port of after year and while turning their backs on their principles they pretend that they are applying their surpluses somewhere else.

And as to reviving the industries ; have the woollen industry and the steel industry been revived ? It is a peculiar thing with these gentlemen that when the doors of an industry are closed under their policy, they take enough of the old Conservative policy to pry the doors open again, and then they shout 'hurrah boys' all along the line. It is not the policy of the Liberal party that helps the woollen industry ; you had to take some of the Conservative policy to do that. The right hon. gentleman is not willing to trust Providence altogether. He is like the old Methodist minister who came home from the conference on Saturday night to preach on Sunday, and who was hurrying back on Monday morning. One of his people asked him : why are you in such a hurry ? And he replied : I must get back because the stationing committee is in session. His friend said to him : why don't you trust in Providence ? And the minister answered : I trust in Providence, but I don't like to trust Him with the stationing committee. And so, the Prime Minister will not trust Providence under certain circumstances ; neither would I, if I were in his place.

Now, the most pernicious form of protection may be a bounty ; it gives us no revenue, it does not give you a market, and it takes revenue out of the public chest. And yet the right hon. gentleman praised highly to-night the bounty they are giving to crude oil and steel.

I wish to refer now more particularly to the policy of the government in relation to the dairy products of this country. A great deal has been said which is wide of the mark by hon. gentlemen opposite on this question. I would not like to say anything unparliamentary, but I think it would be perfectly parliamentary to say that some of these gentlemen opposite can make a little truth go further than any men I ever saw. For instance, the gentleman from West York (Mr. Campbell) in eulogizing the Minister of Agriculture made this statement, speaking of cold storage :

He has established the system on the railways throughout the Dominion, giving the railway companies a bonus to induce them to fit up their cars so that perishable products would be carried from the farmers' doors to the world's markets.

That statement is made all over the country by Liberal speakers, and that statement is not true. I will read from the report of the hon. Mr. Fisher himself to show that the statement is not true. In his report of 1896, which embraces six months of the Conservative regime, and six months of the Liberal regims, the Minister of Agriculture makes this statement :

A cold storage for the safe carriage of butter was begun in 1895. Arrangements were made whereby refrigerator cars for carrying butter were run during the summer on the main lines of railways leading into Montreal. These cars were used to pick up small lots of butter as offered at the different railway stations. Shippers by these cars were allowed to ship butter at the usual 'less than carload rates' without any charge for icing or special service As far as space permitted, merchants were allowed to use these cars for the shipment of dairy and creamery butter between points at which the cars touched. During 1895 cars were run for at least part of the season on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways

Here we have the positive statement made by Hon. Mr. Fisher in his report, that the arrangement for carrying butter on cars from the producers' factory to the port of outlet, was made by his predecessor; and yet the member for West York (Mr. Campbell) gives the present Minister of Agriculture the full credit for it. I think this statement should set that question at rest. While the Minister of Agriculture and his friends take such wonderful credit for the increase in shipments of dairy produce, let us see whether or not they are keeping pace with our competitors. It is all very well for these gentlemen to eulogize the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) and to declare that there was nothing done in this country until the Liberals came to power, but let us look at the record. I quote from the report of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1895, and the Liberals were not in power then.

The action was followed by the inauguration of the cold storage service, in which arrangements were made whereby refrigerator cars for butter were run during the summer on the main lines of railway leading to Montreal. These were used to pick up small lots of butter offered weekly. The shippers of butter by these cars were allowed to ship at the usual 'less than carload rates' without any charge for the icing or special service. As far as space permitted, merchants were allowed to use these cars for the shipment of dairy and creamery butter between points at which the cars touched.

Now, that is an extract from the report of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1895, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite will get up in this House and say that the Liberal government instituted this whole business. This extract proves that the formula laid down by the Conservative party before they left power has not been exceeded by hon. gentlemen opposite. Further than that, they have not opened to us one new market that we did not have when the Conservatives were in power. In the trade returns there is a larger amount shipped under the heading of 'other countries' but every country we ship to now we shipped to exactly the same country when the Conservatives were in power. But the most serious part of it is, that these gentlemen opposite with all their boasting are not keeping pace with our aggressive competitors, and that is a very serious matter for the Canadian farmer.

Instead of eulogizing each other through the country, these hon. gentlemen might better sit down and study the conditions of the markets to which we ship our products, and endeavour to overcome the difficulties that hinder us in those markets. Now, I will take the liberty of proving the statement I make. I have some figures here compiled from the English trade returns, with this exception, that, as the shipments of butter made from Canada through Portland in the winter are credited to the United States, in order to guard against any inaccuracy in the statement, I have rectified that by taking our own full returns without giving any credit to the Americans for any part of the butter or cheese shipped through Portland. In 1896 Canada shipped 5,889,241 pounds of butter of 1·73 per cent of what England imported; in 1903 Canada shipped 24,283,271 pounds, or 5:34 per cent, which is ½ of 1 per cent less than we shipped the year before. Victoria shipped 17,344,880 pounds in 1896, and 10,995,824 in 1903. New South Wales shipped 871,024 pounds in 1896 and 2 281,552 pounds in 1903. New Zealand, which will be one of our most serious competitors in the future, shipped 6,313,776 pounds in 1896, or 1·85 per cent, and in 1903, 27,986,448 or 6·15 per cent. Russia—and here is a most extraordinary thing to prevail as against Canada—in 1896 shipped to Great Britain 17,002,160 pounds or 4·99 per cent, and in 1903, 54,244,736 pounds, or 11·93 per cent—away ahead of Canada, notwithstaning the boasting of hon. gentlemen opposite. Is that the kind of thing that ought to prevail? And I might say right here that the greater bulk of that butter is shipped from Siberia. If Canada is not able to compete with Siberia under such wonderful rule as she gets from the other side of the House, it is time our people did something about it. Sweden shipped to Great Britain in 1906, 36,268,848 pounds of butter and in 1903, 23,769,984 pounds. Denmark, a country that might be compared with the province of Ontario, with about 2,000,000 people, sent to England in 1896, 137,623,808 pounds of butter or 40·45 per cent and in 1903, 198 425,248 pounds, or 43·63 per cent. In other words that little country of Denmark is supplying England virtually with one-half of all the butter she imports. If England would bring the 48,000,000 acres of tillable land which she has to such a state of cultivation as lands in Denmark and Sweden, she would not need to buy a bushel of wheat or a pound of butter or cheese from abroad. I want to call the attention of this House to another feature of this return which is very serious. England has increased her import of butter from 1896 to 1903 by 114,572,192 pounds. What part of that increase has been contributed by Canada? I want to draw the attention of this House and the country to the fact that notwithstanding the boasting of hon. gentlemen opposite, of that amount—taking into account the falling off in the imports from the other countries—Denmark has contributed 60,000,000 pounds, Russia 37,000,000, New Zealand 21,000,000, Holland 12,000,000, and Canada 18 000,000 pounds. Hon. gentlemen opposite need not stand up and boast of what they have done for the prosperity of this country while they have this problem to deal with. Hon. gentlemen say they are practical. They are not as practical as Siberia, New Zealand or Denmark. We can apply the same argument largely to the greater proportion of the products which Canada is obliged to export. Turn up the records, and see the quantities that Holland, New Zealand, Australia and other countries ship to England, of meat and the other products in which Canada is supposed to be largely interested. The farmer of Canada is face to face with this serious fact, that he is confined to fewer articles to-day out of which he can make money than he was twenty years ago, and in the near future he will be confined to still fewer. There is a problem which confronts hon. gentlemen opposite and every public man in this country. While we are shouting, prosperity, prosperity, prosperity, the Greeks are at the door. What have hon. gentlemen opposite done for the farmer, with their wonderful expenditure and their $57,000,000 of surpluses which they have had since they have been in power? How much money have they spent on the farmer's industry? They have spent a great deal on post offices for villages containing 500 or 600 people, on wharfs in the county where the Finance Minister proposes to run, and where they are not needed in the public interest; but what have they given the farmer? I find that the provincial governments have expended in 1902 in the interest of the farmer the following amounts:

Quebec	217,359
Nova Scotia	10,967
New Brunswick	31,483
Manitoba	130,852
Prince Edward Island	6,251
British Columbia	15,426
Total	$646,678

Now, notwithstanding the millions of surplus which hon. gentlemen opposite had under their control, the Dominion spent in 1902, the following amounts in the interest of the poor farmer for whom they profess such consideration:

Aid to agricultural societies	$ 7,000
Experimental farms	101,941
Printing and distributing reports	4,000
Agricultural and dairying, including cold storage	187,688
Promoting dairying interests	21,731
All told	$322,360

or less than half a million dollars out of the $57,000,000 of surpluses which the Finance Minister boasts of. What a miserable amount to dole out to that numerous body of people who are the source of our prosperity. What have the government done to improve their condition? They give the farmer a miserable $300,000, and then leave him to plough his furrow alone, no matter how long it may be. In 1903 the aid to agricultural societies was $7,500, a very small amount each. To experimental farms, $89,974; printing and distributing reports, $7,000; fumigating stations—that should belong to the quarantine—$3,200; agriculture and dairying, $210,000; or a total of $317,192 to the large farming interest—this great interest which must succeed if the country is to succeed. Then what was given by the provinces? The amounts expended by the provincial governments are as follows:

Ontario, 1903	$378,846
British Columbia, 1903	15,699
Manitoba, 1903	144,570
Nova Scotia, 1903	36,000
Quebec, 1903	234,162
New Brunswick, 1902	31,488
	$848,006

Let us compare these grants with what the federal government of the United States pays. I shall not deal with the several states of the union, some of which spend very liberally on the farming interests and others less, but shall simply compare the expenditure by the federal government with ours since 1896. The federal government expended as follows:

1896	$2,905,569
1897	3,025,480
1898	3,193,308
1899	3,493,375
1900	3,625,851
1901	3,963,897
1902	4,579,990
1903	5,332,357

They go up into the millions to encourage the farmers of that country, and our country which boasts of millions and millions of surpluses doles out to its great farming interest the miserable pittance of $300,000 odd dollars. Then these gentlemen expect the farmer to press them to his bosom and weep over them.

There is a great deal said about the price of cheese, and listening to hon. gentlemen opposite one would think that cheese did not bring any price at all when they were out of office. But what were the prices then? Let me take the seven years previous to their coming into power and the seven years since, and see how the prices compare. During the seven years previous to the advent of the present government, or previous to 1896, the average price of cheese was 9 5-10 per pound. Since these gentlemen have come to power the average price is 9 8-10 cents in other words, with all their boasting, 3-10 of a cent is all the difference in price, and that is largely due to the high prices of last year alone. And should the present decline in the market continue, that 3-10 of a cent will disappear. These hon. gentlemen opposite do a great deal of boasting, but the Conservative party did good for their country and made no fuss about it. They did their duty as public men, but hon. gentlemen opposite, in everything they do, are actuated solely by party interests. You will find that spirit permeating the whole party, and you will find that every one supporting it is actuated by the hope of some day getting into some government position. The government know how many are rapping at their door. Go up and down the canal banks around the St. Lawrence, and you will find men tumbling over each other drawing good pay from the treasury, but doing very little work. They discharged one man, Dr. Hickey, on the plea of economy —a man who was one of the most efficient superintendents on our canals—and they have only put three men in his place. There was an old buoy boat, and if the late government took a man from that boat and employed him cutting weeds along the canal these hon. gentlemen raised a great outcry about economy. But since they have had charge of the canals they have got another boat and another lot of officials, which is the way they understand economy in the interests of party.

So far as butter is concerned, what do we find? Nobody in this country has a more vivid recollection than myself of the various changes in the butter business. When we had the old system in force, when the farmers did their dairying in their homes, we succeeded in getting good prices, and that business flourished until the Danish butter drove our farmers' dairying butter out of the market, and those who were engaged in the business lost heavily. But butter has never been as cheap in this country as it was in 1878, the last year of the Mackenzie administration. It was then selling at from 8 to 10 cents all through August, September and October. That was the last year of the Grit regime, and what was the effect of that depression? The effect of that was to largely drive our farmers into the production of cheese. The system of making butter at home became to a great extent replaced by the making of cheese, because the prices for the latter were more remunerative. For some years, therefore, our people largely discontinued producing butter, and the Conservatives then became mainly instrumental in inducing our farmers to take up that business again. The plan laid down by the Conservative party, which these hon. gentlemen opposite have been obliged to follow, was to establish a system of instruction throughout the country, under which lectures on the art of butter making were given in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Any man who can recall the circumstances in Prince Edward Island will admit at once that the butter making interest, which is so prosperous down there to-day, was put on its feet by the Conservative party. In fact the foundation of the whole business was laid by the Conservative party in the island, just as it was in all these other provinces. To prove that statement I need only refer to the report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year 1896. Speaking of the encouragement given to the butter interest, he says in his report of 1896 that as the result of what the previous government had done there was exported from Montreal during the shipping season of 1894, 32,055 packages of butter, and during the season of 1895, 69,664 packages. And in 1896, the last year of Conservative rule, 157,321 packages were shipped, which shows that the ratio of increase during the last three years of the Conservative regime was due to the efforts of the Conservative party to establish this industry on a sound footing, and it shows also the present condition is also the result of the Conservative policy being continued by hon. gentlemen opposite. There has been no change whatever made by these hon. gentlemen in that policy beyond some improvements in the matters of cold storage. I am quoting from the report of the Department of Agriculture for 1896, which acknowledges this result from the policy of the previous government.

Now, let us look, at the item of cheese for the moment. And in this case also I turn to the official report for my facts. Yet it is a very peculiar thing that, while there is so much credit taken for the cold storage system, the number of packages of butter and cheese and so on going by cold storage is given in one year and is not given in the next. The fact is that some years it has not proven successful, and the minister did not want to give the facts then. But the people ought to know the facts. They pay the money and they have a right to be able to judge what advantage the expenditure of that money is bringing to them. But there is no continuity in the publication of the figures so far as that is concerned, and it is not possible to understand just what the results with regard to this system have been. I have here the report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year 1903, and from this report it appears that 43,800 boxes of cheese were shipped by cold storage. Now, we are told that this cold storage system is what has caused the great increase in this industry. Let us see. I have here a little pamphlet, called 'The export trade of the port of Montreal,' issued by the Montreal Board of Trade. This gives the number of boxes of cheese shipped from Montreal as a whole. Now, let it be remembered that this cold storage output is shipped from Montreal, because it is shipped during the warm months while the port of Montreal is open, say from the 15th of May to November. The railways carrying this product converge at Montreal, and practically all the cheese brought in during that time is sent to that port except some few boxes which may go to Portland. In the year 1903, the total number of boxes of cheese shipped from Montreal was 2,395,932. We have already seen that the number shipped in cold storage was 43,800. So, about one box in fifty of the whole export was shipped in cold storage. This one box, apparently, was so cold that it kept the other forty-nine frosty. So, because one package out of fifty went by cold storage, we are to give all the credit of the increase in the business to the Minister of Agriculture.

There is another little matter. I want to call attention to. The Minister of Agriculture—and I suppose he is in cold storage now ; I don't know how that is—says that we shipped butter for the years given according to this table :

1899..	429,734
1900..	227,863
1901..	410,893
1902..	525,735

Here is a marked falling off in 1903. And what reason does the hon. minister give ? He says :

> There was ample space for all the cargo offered, either for cold storage or cooled air. It may be noted that there was a falling off in the shipments of butter for the season of 1903. This was due to the relatively high prices for cheese, which induced the combined factories to make cheese instead of butter.

That is a most extraordinary statement and one that of itself needs explanation. But we are left all the more to wonder what the explanation can be when we turn back only two pages in the same report and find there:

> The quantity of butter exported that year was 34,128,944 pounds, an increase of over 7,000,000 pounds.

It is no wonder that the rank and file of the hon. gentlemen opposite tell things that are wide of the mark when the Minister of Agriculture will tell us in so many words that the reason why we shipped so little butter is that cheese was high and yet in this same report show that we shipped 34,000,000 pounds of butter in 1903 as against 27,000,000 in 1902.

Now, there is just one other matter I wish to speak of before I sit down—and it is high time that somebody talked about it. There is a great deal of boasting by hon. gentlemen opposite about what they have done for the farmer. Thank God, the farmer is able to take care of himself in Canada, and it is a good thing that he is, because if he were not, he would be sure to come out behind in the race. These hon. gentlemen opposite boast about their Minister of Agriculture. What has he done to assist the progress of the farmer ? It is the energy and push of the people of this country that has pushed him along, just as you would push a wagon up hill. What has he done to put the people on the soil? How many people did he induce to go upon the soil in the last decade? If we are going to create a true Canadian sentiment in Canada and bring into harmony with Canadian feeling the great foreign element which is coming into our country we must put people on the soil. These hon. gentlemen ought to consider that question. Now, the increase in the population of Canada according to the last census was 538,076. The rural population in 1891 was 3,296,161, while, in 1901 the rural population was 3,349,516, or an increase in the rural population during the ten years, during five of which hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, of 53,375. This is against a total increase in the population of 538,076. In other words, we put into the cities, towns and villages through the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, 485,701 souls and only put upon the boasted soil of Canada 53,375. And then they talk about what they are doing for the farmers of this country. They have succeeded in putting one man on the soil and nine men into the cities, towns and villages. That is the outcome of what hon. gentlemen opposite have been doing for Canada according to their own figures. Is there any remedy for this condition of things ? I am ready to admit that every country has more or less trouble with this question, but I say that the conditions of this country are so different from those of others that there is not justification for such a state of affairs here. Is there any remedy ? It is well understood that the cities, towns and villages are being made more attractive to the people of Canada, electric light and electric cars, and all these other things are attracting the young and the ambitious, and, Sir, there ought to be some corresponding attraction to fasten the people to the soil. Are hon. gentlemen opposite dealing with that question ? Sir, they have not touched it. Is there no possibility of making the farmers' home more attractive ? Is there no possibility of making the boy realize that there is room for his ambitions on the farm ? Sir, hon. gentlemen opposite have taught the people of this country too constantly and too exclusively, with regard to the farmers' business, that it is to be looked at only from the standpoint of whether it will pay or not. Is there no other consideration that ought to weigh with people than the mere question of five or ten cents on one side of the account or the other ? Yet, that is the only cry throughout the country—will it pay ? I can tell hon. gentlemen opposite that the serious economic and social problem that stares Canada in the face is the fact that our people are leaving the soil. It is not in the power of their petty policy from the tariff to reverse the current. I do not, for one, propose to circumscribe the ambitions of any boy in this country. But it should be pointed out to every boy on the farm that while he hears great things about the one man who goes to the city and succeeds, he does not hear anything of the nine out of ten who, going to the city, do not succeed.

A false idea of life in cities and towns was held out to the boy on the farm. Will hon. gentlemen opposite endeavour to remedy that difficulty? They have not turned a furrow, they have not raised a stone to effect that object. This is a serious economic question, it is a great problem which ought to be treated seriously. There is this to be said in reference to the farmer and his family. The necessity of finding employment for his boys and girls, that stares the city resident in the face, does not stare the farmer in the face. He is sure of raising a virtuous family, and he is sure of finding employment for them at home. That is a consideration that hon. gentlemen opposite have left out of sight. But these things ought to be considered. It must be possible to make the country more attractive to the people, and to remove as far as possible the false ideas of town life from the country boy who has had no experience of the world. Hon. gentlemen opposite ought to sit down and deal with that problem, because if it is not successfully solved, this country will suffer seriously in the future. How are they going to assimilate the foreign elements now coming into this country, and imbue them with the true Canadian spirit? It is impossible to do so under the policy they are pursuing. What will be the effect? The effect will be that, unless we place people upon the soil, unless we heed that cry of back to the land, which is now being raised in some parts of Europe, and which ought to be a popular cry even in this young country of ours, this country will suffer seriously in the future. This I say is a problem to which every public man should give heed or he will fail in his duty if he does not.

Mr. JAS. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the opposition in deciding to shorten this budget debate, have exercised better judgment than they have shown on any other occasion during the last four years. To prolong this debate would only afford the friends and supporters of the government an opportunity to point out the marvellous, the phenomenal, results that have been achieved by the present administration. I do not envy the position occupied by our hon. friends opposite in being obliged by the exigencies of the case to offer some criticism on the statements of affairs presented to this House by the hon. the Minister of Finance and by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. I do not marvel that a considerable portion of that criticism partook of personal abuse of these gentlemen, particularly of the latter. It is a trite saying among lawyers, I believe, that if you have a bad case you may abuse the opposing counsel, and our hon. friends of the opposition who have so far spoken have availed themselves of that privilege to the fullest extent.

In this and in many other respects their speeches have been very much alike, all fashioned on the same model. I do not make any exception in regard to the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Broder). The only respect in which he differed from the others was in the remark he made in opening his speech when he said that a certain beast, the name of which I will not now repeat, but which is known by its loud braying, was about to instruct the government in regard to this tariff. Now, Sir, I was very much pleased to see my hon. friend from Dundas taking part in this debate. I made the acquaintance of that hon. gentleman under very pleasant circumstances some time last winter. We happened to have an election in Prince Edward Island to fill the vacancy made by the death of the late lamented Mr. Farquharson, and our opposition friends sent down a good deal of help to Prince Edward Island on that occasion. Among others they sent us a distinguished gentleman from Halifax, an Italian, I think, by the name of O'Mullin, who was to speak of course to his countrymen and enlighten them on the public questions of the day. He was a very fluent gentleman, and took a very active part in the election. Then there was another gentleman from Montreal sent down, I think, by the Montreal 'Star,' whose name was Prieur, I suppose he was an Irishman. He worked among his countrymen at Rustico and other places, and was supposed to have made many conversions. Then came my distinguished friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) who had some 1,200 or 1,500 miles to travel in that inclement season of the year, in midwinter. The roads were covered with snow to the depth of seven or eight feet. But notwithstanding all these impediments, the hon. gentleman made his appearance. We could not imagine why he was sent that long distance. He is a well spoken gentleman, yet we could not think it was on account of his oratorical ability. Although he is a very good example of the sturdy Canadian, we could not think that he was sent there on account of his good looks. Then what brought him? Report had it that he took with him a very good breed of the goat, which he wanted to present to our friends down there. He and William the goat, came together for quite a long distance. At that season of the year steamboats were not crossing the Straits, our friends had to cross in small ice boats. When they came to the Straits that separated New Brunswick from Prince Edward Island and looked at that mode of conveyance, this small and fragile boat about 18 feet keel, built of light material, though strong, and when William and his master began making preparations to cross, it is reported that William looked at the storm tossed ocean in that tempestous winter season, looked at the icebergs, and at the frail bark in which he and his master must cross the Straits, and William shook his head and beard, and refused to go any further, and implored his master not to risk his life in that frail looking canoe. But the hon. member for Dundas having put his hands to the plough refusel to turn back, so he and William separated. When the canoe had carried his master over the waters as far as the eye could see, it is reported that William retraced his steps through New Brunswick and eventually found his way back to Ontario. It would appear that in the absence of William, his master lost all heart for the contest, at all events, those gentlemen who came to enlighten us on that occasion did not succeed in accomplishing the result they desired. My hon. friend and farmer from Dundas, who came down to instruct the farmers of Prince Edward Island, did not appear to have made much impression upon them.

Now, Sir, at one of the meetings at which I was present and which the hon. gentleman addressed, he referred to the iceboat in which he had crossed the Straits and said that the same means of crossing was still employed that were in vogue twenty or thirty years ago. He complained that he had to cross in boats that had been so long in use, when a wag in the audience said 'judging by your remarks you must have come over in an ark.' In fact the hon. member for Dundas and his leader seem to dwell in the past, they belong apparently to a past century. For them there is no ray of light, no star of hope in the future.

Now, Sir, my hon. friend from Dundas said something about the tendency at the present time of young men and women to leave the farm and go to the cities to live, and he seemed to intimate that the government should do something to prevent that state of things. Does my hon. friend not know that a high tariff policy is just the very thing that would bring about such a result ? The policy that he and his friends are advocating would be the very policy that would influence young men to leave the farms and dwell in cities because it would cause an artificial growth in the cities at the expense of country districts. The Conservatives in this House and the Conservative press in the country seem to take some credit to themselves for acknowledging that the country is prosperous and is developing and prospering beyond the dreams of even the most sanguine a few years ago. They know that if they denied it or attempted to deny it they would cover themselves with ridicule. But they acknowledge it with a very bad grace, and they try to minimize and explain it. They say among other things that it is due to the action of Providence and to prosperous times the world over. Far be it from me to deny the munificent influence of Providence upon the affairs of nations as well as upon those individuals. We know that all history, sacred and profane, is filled with examples of the fact that when the people have elected or selected wise, prudent, moral men for their rulers, Providence has blessed the land and that when the people unfortunately have acted otherwise Providence in a large measure has withheld this blessing. Then again they say that during the 18 years that they were in power we had not only hard times in Canada but hard times throughout the civilized world. That is a hard saying. Surely they will not say that their malign influence extended throughout Christendom. If they had not made this statement themselves I would not have referred to it, but if that be true why fly in the face of Providence ? Why try to obtain power again and bring about this condition of things ? Why not be satisfied with the present results and accept the prosperity that is coming to them and to us and to all Canadians alike ? How can we account for their insane desire on this point ? Milton in Paradise Lost tells us that when the fallen angles were cast out of heaven they took counsel together. Their leader stood up in the midst of them and declared that even if offered pardon under certain conditions he would not accept it because he would prefer to reign where he was, rather than to serve in Paradise, and all his legions shouted their approval. So it is with our Conservative friends. With them it is either rule or ruin. What care they for the interests of the country ? Power in their estimation is the only thing under heaven worth striving for. But, while reluctantly admitting the prosperity of the country they tried to distract the attention of the people by saying : Look at the enormous taxation ; look at the enormous expenditure. Do they not know that a large revenue does not necessarily mean high taxation ? Do they not know that we may have very high taxation and a very small revenue just as we had under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite ? Do they not know that when the government obtained power they reduced the taxation by 13 per cent which would be equal to several millions of our present importations and that the revenue immediately increased and has kept on increasing ever since and do they not know that under such circumstances an increasing revenue is one of the best and surest proofs of increasing population and of the augmented wealth and prosperity of the people ? But, if the revenue, or the taxation of the country, as hon. gentlemen opposite prefer to call it, is burdensome did they ever propose to reduce it ? No, Sir, nothing of the kind, but they say that if they had the power they would increase it. We must know that over three-quarters of the entire revenue is derived from customs and excise duties. Do they propose to reduce any of these duties ? No, they do not. On the contrary they have opposed every reduction that the present government have made and they have moved resolution after resolution in this House declaring that the customs duties from which we get over half our revenue are too low and ought to be raised. In a word, in one breath they say that the taxation of the country is too high and that the government should be turned out of power for not reducing it, and in the next breath they say : Put us in power and we will make it still higher. Barnum the great showman is credited with having made the statement that about two-thirds of the people were standing around most of the time waiting for some one to fool them. Evidently the Conservative party and press of this country think that the Canadian people come within the category of the people referred to by the great showman. I am inclined to think that our Conservative friends have underrated the intelligence of our people and that they will have a rude awakening when these people get a chance of expressing their opinions at the polls.

Now, a word or two about the expenditure about which our friends opposite say so much. Every school boy knows that as a country increases and develops the expenditure must necessarily increase. Still, hon. gentlemen opposite are fond of referring to the United States as a country that we should imitate in many things, particularly in our fiscal policy. They declare the United States to be the greatest country on earth. I take exception to that. Measured by any standard you wish the United States do not begin to compare with our own empire in point of population, wealth, power or constitutional liberty. I also take exception to that statement as regards their fiscal policy. If their policy is so much better than ours and if high taxation and high protection would produce beneficial results why are they not doing so in the United States where high protection might be employed perhaps more advantageously than in any other country in the world ? Why does it not bring about prosperity there ? Why are hon. gentlemen opposite declaring that they are afraid of the hard times that are sure to come in the United States ? If protection is beneficial to the farmer how is it that the farmers of the United States by thousands and tens of thousands are selling their property there and coming to Canada ? How is it that in the New England states, the very home of protection the farms are practically unsaleable ? They have been abandoned and they will not bring the price of the improvements that have been made upon them. If the fiscal policy of the United States is all that hon. gentlemen opposite claim for it surely it is up to them to explain these things. The United States is no doubt a great nation and great has been its material growth during the past century, but, Sir, I believe that ours in Canada will be fully as great during the present, because we are better equipped for the race of life now than they were 100 years ago. I believe that we are better off in many respects and particularly better off in regard to our fiscal policy and in our trade ideals. But, Sir, if the United States is a country to be copied what are the revenue and expenditure there? —about $600,000,000 per annum. As that country grew its expenditure increased and as this country will grow our revenue and expenditure must necessarily increase also.

Therefore, I say our revenue and expenditure must necessarily increase with our growth and development, and so far from it being something to complain about, something to worry over, it is, under proper conditions, something to be proud of, and is the best and surest evidence of our material advancement. And another important fact that should not be lost sight of in connection with this matter is that our expenditure on consolidated account at the present time is but half our net revenue, whereas under the Conservatives it swallowed up, not only our entire net revenue at the time, but very often we had to borrow money for the ordinary expenses of housekeeping. Now we are paying our exependiture on consolidated account and on capital account out of the revenue of the country, and we have begun to reduce the national debt, which, under the Conservative administration, was mounting up at the rate of upwards of $6,500,000 a year. This surely is something of which we as Canadians and we as Liberals must feel proud.

But be the expenditure what it may, the Conservatives in this House are responsible for every dollar of it. They know that every dollar must be voted item by item in Committee of Supply ; and, Sir, I have been a pretty constant attendant in that committee for the last four years, and I have yet to learn that the Conservative party ever challenged by their vote a single item of the expenditure in those four years. It is true they have criticised freely. They have found fault generally, which is a very easy thing to do ; but they had not the courage to vote against a single item in the Supply Bill. If I am wrong in this statement, I am speaking in the presence of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I want them to correct me. Not only am I correct in what I have said, but in many instances hon. gentlemen opposite rose in their places and declared the expenses were not large enough. But, Mr. Speaker, is the expenditure honestly carried out ? Because, after all, that is the great question. I say, 'yes,' so far as human foresight can provide and government supervision extend, and if this statement be not true, then the Auditor General has failed in his duty, and the opposition have failed in their first and most important duty as well. To begin with, the Auditor General has the most ample powers to analyse, criticise, investigate, examine, inquire into and check every dollar of the expenditure, and, in the words of the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), the Lord knows, he exercises those powers to the fullest possible extent. Then the opposition have the right, nay, the duty, of still further investigating every item that in their opinion requires examination, and the constitution of the country places every facility at their disposal for so doing. They can summon the public officials and witnesses from every part of Canada and examine them under oath before the Public Accounts Committee, and every scrap of written information and evidence in every department of the government service is at their disposal. Either then there has been no malfeasance in the government service and in the public expenditure, or the opposition have failed in their first and most important duty as an opposition. They can choose whichever horn of the dilemma they wish. But to do the opposition justice, they have, I think, tried to do their duty in this respect. Time and again they have instituted inquiries before the Public Accounts Committee, but in no case has any wrong-doing or dishonesty been brought home to the government. Perhaps the most important question brought before the Public Accounts Committee since the advent of the Liberal party to power was the investigation into the purchase or leasing of the Drummond County Railway, at that time called 'the Drummond County steal'; but everybody knows that it ended in a fiasco. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) himself rose in his place in the committee and declared that the opposition had never charged dishonesty. Other investigations have since been held, but all with similar results, and the microscopical examination of the Auditor General's Report by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) only discovered two items this year which, in his opinion, required investigation. On these he eagerly pounced, and on the 18th of May last he moved the following motion in the Public Accounts Committee:

For all accounts, vouchers, papers and other documents in connection with the account of R. Smith, amounting to $30, as shown on page L—20 of the report of the Auditor General.

The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was going to see that the expenditure of this country was honestly carried out; he was going to see what rake-off there was in that $30; he was going to see whether the government had any contribution to the campaign fund from that. His eagle eye scanned the accounts, and let it be small or great, he was prepared to pry into it, because on the same day in the Public Accounts Committee he moved for:

All accounts, vouchers, papers and other documents in connection with the account of R. K. Smith, amounting to $400, as shown on page L—20 of the report of the Auditor General.

Well, Sir, what was the result? There was no result. The matter still rests there and at the last meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, there was not a quorum present to do business. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) and his friends were not ready to go on with the investigation. From this simple statement of facts, the public can see how absolutely unfounded are the disgraceful and discreditable statements contained in the Tory campaign literature, with which the country is now being flooded, and how absolutely incorrect and untrue are many of the statements contained in the Tory press throughout the country.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is still other and perhaps stronger proof of the accuracy of what I say. Previous to the election of 1900, no two men in Canada were so reviled and abused as the Hon. Mr. Blair, then Minister of Railways and Canals, and the hon. member for St. Mary's Division of Montreal (Mr. Tarte) then Minister of Public Works. These two men were represented as violating nearly every commandment of the decalogue, and it was broadly stated that but for them the government might, perhaps, be worthy of support. The hon. member for St. Mary's Division (Mr. Tarte) was particularly assailed. He was represented as the very incarnation of evil, as being dishonourable, dishonest, unpatriotic and guilty of every crime in the calendar. So far was this campaign of abuse carried, that many persons in some of the rural districts, were astonished to think that such a man was allowed to live in the country at all; and so far as I could discern, the Montreal 'Star' was the greatest offender in this dishonourable and discreditable business. In fact, so great was the horror excited in the minds of some of the simple country people where that paper did most circulate, that mothers were accustomed to frighten their children to sleep by saying 'Hush, darling, or I will give you to Tarte.'

Well, a few years passed by and Messrs. Blair and Tarte were no longer members of a Liberal administration. Immediately, they became heroes and saints, and not only heroes and saints, but the only honest, capable and patriotic men that the Liberal government or party had had. With unbecoming and indecent haste, that party and press which had so reviled these men, stood ready to receive them into its fold, as heroes and leaders, and to invite them to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. What, Mr. Speaker, can the honest, intelligent electorate of Canada think of such conduct? Will the Conservative party through their campaign literature and press, ever again be able to vilify and besmirch the character of our public men? Surely not, Sir, at least within the lifetime of the present generation. Now, Sir, my point is this : either the Conservative party and press were lying when they declared Messrs. Blair and Tarte to be guilty of all those crimes with which they charged them, or they were and are ready to associate with and make leaders of men who ought to be within the walls of a penitentiary. Again they can choose whichever horn of the dilemma they wish.

But, honourable gentlemen opposite have another grievance to air, another complaint to make. They say that the balance of trade is against us ; that we are importing more than we export, and we must, therefore be going to the dogs, notwithstanding the evidence of all our senses to the contrary. It would, I think, do our Conservative friends no harm to take a short course in political economy at a kindergarten. Of all the fallacious theories that was ever advanced, perhaps the most fallacious is this balance of trade theory. The Prime Minister referred to it to-night and explained it excellently well. With the example of Great Britain before their eyes, where the imports have exceeded the exports, by millions, and tens of millions, for the past half century, and where the wealth of the country has at the same time enormously increased, one would think that hon. gentlemen opposite would be less dogmatic in their declarations. Take again, the case of Ireland, where the exports have exceeded the imports not for half a century only but for centuries, where the very life-blood of the nation and people were drawn upon to pay the rents to the absentee landlords, where everything was goint out, and nothing practically coming in, and you have, as you must have, because of this, one of the poorest, if not the poorest nation in Europe. But according to the theory of honourable gentlemen opposite, it ought to be the richest. They tell us that the United States' export have for years been greater than their imports, and in consequence of this they have grown wealthy. No, not in consequence of this, but because of the rapid development of their almost illimitable national resources, and because of the enormous inflow of population : with perhaps, some other contributing causes. So long as their exports exceed their imports, their foreign trade is not and cannot be in a healthy condition, as I think a few concrete examples will abundantly prove. Suppose I buy a cargo of wheat consisting of say 100,000 bushels for $1 per bushel, which I ship to Liverpool or London and sell at a profit of 50 cents per bushel. I then take my money, $150,000, and invest in merchandise, which I bring to this country. I have certainly made a profitable trade, and what is profitable for me is profitable for my country. But the outward or export entry is 50 per cent less than the inward or import entry : and, of course, the reverse of this would also be true : if I sold at a loss, the export entry would be greater than the import entry, and what would be my loss would also be my country's loss. Now, Sir, it will make no difference if I do not reinvest my money, but bring it back in the form of gold or exchange. Some other man, who is an importer, by reason of my profitable transaction, would be able to import a larger bill of goods than it would under other circumstances be possible for him to do, because the country would have the gold or exchange to pay for them. All trade is, in its last analysis, barter, and it changes not the essence of the transaction whether money is or is not used to facilitate the trade ; and any nation importing more than it is exporting, and not parting with its gold reserve, must be trading at a profit. All profit in trade is made by taking things from where they are relatively cheap to where they are relatively dear, and all nations of the world could therefore profitably trade with one another and the imports of all be greater than the exports of all. Why, even a red Indian who traded furs for blankets, rifles, powder and other things he required, would know that the fewer furs he parted with and the more blankets, rifles, powder, &c., he received, the richer he would be. In other words, the smaller his exports and the greater his imports, the better for him ; and what is true of the individual is in all such cases true of the nation. When two nations make war on each other and blockade each others ports, it is not for the purpose of preventing exports but preventing imports. For they well know that they can inflict greater damage upon their enemy by preventing them from bringing things in rather than sending things out. If we fully realized this, if we fully realized what very dependent beings we are, all depending upon one another, and the greater that interdependence the greater our civilization, we would, I think, try to act differently. Only savage tribes and barbarous nations want to or can afford to live by themselves. Why do we dig canals, bridge rivers, construct railways and subsidize steamship lines, if not to trade with our neighbours and other nations ? Would we go to all this expense and exertion if this trade were not good for us ? If other nations will not give us their goods for nothing, and they are not likely to do that, our imports, under ordinary conditions, can never injure our business, because we must make or produce things to give in exchange for the things we receive. There is no other way in the end to pay for them. So much, then, for this balance of trade business.

But our hon. friends opposite ask us—and they ask, too, in a tone that implies that in their opinion no satisfactory answer can be given—what has the Liberal government done for Canada ? Well, Sir, I will try and answer that question. Travellers who have visited Europe tell us that over the north transept in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, there is a slab which bears this inscription : 'Si monumentum quaeris, circumspice'—If you seek a monument, look around you. The great cathedral itself is the best monument to Sir Christopher Wren, the distinguished architect who planned it. To my hon. friends opposite I would therefore say : If you seek a monument, open your eyes and your ears, and look around you. Be not as those who have eyes and see not, ears and hear not. Open the Trade and Navigation Returns and the Trade and Commerce Returns, and read and understand them. To be more specific, the Liberal government have reduced the taxation by some thirteen per cent, thereby freeing the trade of the country to that extent, and leaving some millions in the pockets of the taxpayers of the country. They have completed the canal system, giving us fourteen feet of navigation from the head waters of the great lakes to tide water. They have made many valuable and substantial improvements in the harbours and channels of the great lakes themselves as hon. gentlemen opposite well know. They have deepened, lighted and buoyed the St. Lawrence river, the great artery of our commerce from the interior to the ocean. They have built wharfs and piers and dredged the harbours and rivers of the maritime provinces, thereby enabling us to trade more easily with one another and with the outside world. They have also in many places constructed boat harbours, where the property of that hardy and most deserving class of our population, the fishermen, who pursue their arduous calling on the Atlantic coast and in the gulf of St. Lawrence, can be protected from danger, and they are developing our fisheries. They have extended the Intercolonial from Point Lévis to Montreal and to points in the maritime provinces, and made it a first-class up-to-date railway, and not the one-horse affair, that it was in the days of the Conservative administration. They have immensely aided and developed the great agricultural interests of the country. They have given us penny postage and a surplus, where formerly we had a deficit of three-quarters of a million dollars. They have given us peace, concord and national amity, or at least tried to do so, where formerly we had discord, strife and national enmity. They have brought about such a condition of things in Canada that the best blood of Europe and America is flocking to our shores; and, perhaps best of all, they have practically stopped the exodus. No longer are Canadians fleeing from their country as from a plague stricken land. Our own young men and women are now remaining at home to build up a strong Canadian nationality under the protection of the British flag. Canada is no longer typified by Rachel of old, who wept for her children, and would not be comforted because they were not. And last, but not least, they have given us clean, honest, progressive government in contradistinction to—what shall I say ?—to the Conservative government that we had between 1878 and 1896, whose record, beginning with the Pacific scandal, ended with the shocking revelations of 1891 and 1892, and the unseemly and disgraceful scenes of 1895 and 1896, when Canada was pointed to with the finger of scorn by the independent press of the mother country ; when her name became a synonym for dishonesty, malfeasance and corruption in high places ; when Canadians had reason to hang their heads in shame, until finally the junta turned upon and rent each other, calling one another by the most opprobrious epithets the English language could supply. In contradistinction to all that, the Liberals have given us clean, honest and progressive government. They have given us peace, concord and plenty at home ; honour and respect abroad.

Si monumentum quaeris, circumspice.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). I have listened, Mr. Speaker, with some interest to the essay of my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. J. J. Hughes), and I am of opinion that if he chose he could give it to the 'Hansard' reporters without any trouble. I think he read the whole of it, but whether he did or not is a matter of very little interest. His speech, instead of being in favour of the policy of the government, was the reverse, for if it meant anything, it was a plea for free trade pure and simple. He must have imagined himself back in the days of unrestricted reciprocity and pictured himself as one of those who had nailed their colours to the mast and was determined not to take them down under any provocation. He spoke of Messers, Blair and Tarte. Well, if the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte) is not a member of the government to-day, it is because he stood by his principles. That hon. gentleman was always an ardent protectionist, as his right hon. leader knew full well, because the right hon. gentleman told us, when the hon. member for St. Mary's entered his cabinet, that he was taken into the government to represent the Conservatives who had voted for him in 1896. Mr. Blair, who is now Chairman of the Railway Commission, was a man perhaps of as much ability as any one in the cabinet, and that would not be saying too much. He was a man who was lauded by the Liberal party so long as he was a member of the government, and so important and influential was he that they went back on what honourable men would call their principles and gave one of the best appointments at their command to one who had denounced them for taking up a wildcat scheme which had not been asked for by the peoople of his or any other province. He left the government, and so afraid was the government of his influence in the province of New Brunswick that they were very anxious to have him shelved. Just one more allusion to my hon. friend and that is regarding what he said about the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder). He said that my hon. friend went down into Prince Edward Island and did not amount to very much. They looked upon him as an old farmer and did not want to hear any discourse from him. I do not wonder at that when they had so distinguished a luminary as the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. J. J. Hughes) to represent them—and a gentleman who has given us to-night so convincing an illustration of his great ability as an orator. I want to say a few words in reply to the right hon. leader of the government. He said that his party were not imitators. In some respects that is true. They do not for instance imitate the Conservative party in keeping their pledges, but they do imitate the vices of that party, as we have abundant evidence to prove. They speak of preferential trade as if that were their own pet scheme, but I have a dim recollection of the leader of the government appearing in Toronto in 1895, just before the general election, and I remember his saying to the people of Toronto that he was just as able to formulate a policy of preferential trade as was Sir Charles Tupper. I think he went so far as to promise that if the Liberal party should succeed at the general elections, he would send a commission to England to arrange with the British government for preferential trade. Well, the Liberal party did succeed. Did the right hon. gentleman carry out his pledge ? Did he send a commission to England to arrange for preferential trade ? I think everybody knows he did nothing of the kind. Instead of doing that he went to England himself and said : I am giving you preference as a free gift for which we do not ask anything in return. Is that what this country expected when the right, hon. gentleman took office ? Did not the country expect, as they do of every public man, that the right hon. gentleman would carry out his promise ? I want to make a few references to some remarks made by another hon. member, who, I am sorry to see, is not in his place. I refer to the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes). He said that the leader of the Conservative party had predicted that this government would not retain office six months. That prediction was made by Sir Charles Tupper. Sir Charles Tupper had kept these people in opposition so long that he had forgotten their characteristics. He supposed that they would be as consistent as was the Liberal-Conservative party in 1878 when they went to the country. You remember, Sir, that Sir John Macdonald went to the country on the pledge that he would give protection if returned. That was the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party in 1878. Sir Charles Tupper presumed that it would be impossible for the leader of a great party to go to the country on the principle of free trade and then come back and copy a trade policy which he had been denouncing for eighteen years. The difference between the Liberal-Conservative party and the Grits was this. When the Liberal-Conservative party came to power in 1878, they brought down their policy, and Mr. Mackenzie, the leader of the Liberal opposition said that they had brought out the whole white elephant. Well, when these gentlemen came to power, they had a session because they had refused to pass sufficient estimates in the previous session to carry on the business of the country, even for three or six months, and we had to have an extra session. After the session, what did they do ? They did what they had denounced the Conservative party for doing. They sent a committee of their party around from place to place to get the advice of people on the tariff question. This is what we had done previously, and that is what they purpose evidently to do in the near future, or else they are simply making that statement for the purpose of getting through the next general elections and have no serious intention of keeping it. I am not libelling them because they have so often failed to carry out their promises that the people are convinced that when they make a promise, they intend only keeping it in case it should suit them.

The Liberals have added nothing to the public debt, the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) said. Is it nothing that they have taken in taxation $89,222,222 more than would have been taken had the rate of taxation under the Conservatives in 1896 been continued ? This is a strange state of things for the party which boasts that they are the party of low taxation. And you remember as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, the distinct pledges given by the leaders of the Liberal party when in opposition that, if they were allowed to come into power, they would reduce the expenditure by $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 a year. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made these statements himself in Toronto. And every Liberal of prominence all over the country reiterated the statement. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said that we were bleeding the people white by taxation. Yet these gentlemen who denounced the policy and taxation of the Liberal-Conservative party now endorse the policy of this government, though they are taxing the people, not thirteen per cent less, as the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has said, but taxing them $2.37 per head more in customs and excise duties than they were being taxed in 1896. That is a fact that the public accounts issued by hon. gentlemen opposite will demonstrate, so there is no use in anybody trying to make out different figures. These hon. gentlemen boast that they have reduced the public debt a little over a million dollars. But what has been their income during the past seven years ? Their income over and above the income that the Liberal-Conservative government were getting on the basis of their income of 1896 was $130,000,000. That is, they have taken from the pockets of the people $130,000,000 more than the Liberal-Conservative government would have taken. And this immense sum, I may say, they have squandered, because I think I shall be able to show before I sit down that it is not sufficient for the hon. member to say as the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) said the other night, that more money had been spent in this way or that. For instance, that hon. gentleman said that this government had spent $18,000,000 on the canals, and he seemed to think that we ought to be perfectly satisfied with that information. But we want a more complete explanation than that. We want to know whether we got value for this money. And I think the experience of hon. gentlemen on this side is that we have been very poorly served considering the amount of money we have spent.

The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) quoted a statement of Dr. Montague to show that that gentleman was in favour of free corn. He showed that Dr. Montague had actually offered to put corn on the free list if the United States would give us free entry for our barley into their country. Well, would anybody object to that? That would be a fair trade—at least, it would suit the people in my section better than anything else we could give. But was this anything like a fair statement to prove that Dr. Montague was in favour of putting corn on the free list? Hon. gentlemen opposite have made a gift of free corn to the United States, as they made a gift of the preference to the mother country.

The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) said that this government had spent $191,000 more on the administration of justice than was spent in 1896 and said that surely we would be satisfied with that, seeing the increase was so small. Well, I would ask any hon. gentleman who was a member of this House during any portion of the eighteen years when hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition if, during every session of parliament, this expenditure upon the administration of justice was not criticised by the members of the Liberal party generally. They said: What have we a Minister of Justice and a Solicitor General for? Why do we pay these gentlemen big salaries unless they are ready to do the business? I am not going to say they were absolutely right. It may be possible, now and then that having a case in an outside town or city at a distance from Ottawa, you can hire a lawyer there cheaper than you can send a man from Ottawa? But the principle is the same, and these people who were criticising these things year in and year out should try to do better now that they have obtained power.

The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) referred to the census and said that surely no person would find fault with half a million more spent on this census than was spent on the last. Well, I should like to have some better reason than a statement of that kind for this large increased expenditure. If I remember well, there were certain letters that passed between hon. gentlemen opposite and one William Kelly who had an interview or two with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). He wrote a letter saying that there was a man nominated for the local house for his riding who is an active man and a good organizer, and he intended to take an active part in the campaign if it could be arranged satisfactorily. And he evidently got a letter from Mr. Blue or some one else for he wrote to Mr. Blue that he would accept the $300 extra and be satisfied. Then, we have Mr. Hurley who was the representative for East Hastings in the last parliament. Mr. Hurley came to Ottawa and, so far as we could learn in the Public Accounts Committee, he evidently met somebody who told him that the account he put in was not big enough. So, he added $50 to the itemized account. And this is the way he did it: He charged $25 for room rent, $15 for horse-hire and $10 for stationery furnished to the man under him. When he appeared before the Public Accounts Committee he was not able to show a single room that he had rented in any part of the district in which he had taken the census that had not been charged for in his itemized account. And, when asked closely about horse-hire, he said: I had to go out here and there driving in connection with the census work, and I thought $15 would not be out of the way. Then we asked him about the stationery. He said he had to buy a fountain pen—and he still had the pen, for he took it out of his pocket and showed it. Then he had to give some stationery to those under him, and, when he was in the county council he was allowed $10 a year for stationery and he thought that charge would be about right. If that kind of thing was done all over the country, I do not wonder that this census cost $1,190,268.99—and I believe it is not yet finished—as against $549,991.76 for the census of 1891. But that does not seem to be anything in the estimation of hon. gentlemen opposite.

The hon. gentleman for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) says that no free trade party has ever been in power in this country. I think that is true. But there is only one reason for it—the party that was a free trade party when in opposition on coming into power, forsook its principles and is no longer a free trade party. And Mr. Longley, with whom the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is well acquainted, said, in a speech he made recently, that there used to be a free trade party in this country, but there was no such party now, and that men would not be able to carry this country very far if they announce free trade as their principle. I quite agree with him and believe that what he said was perfectly true.

We have heard a good deal about the Liberal platform. It was a good deal like the platform on a railway car—for the purpose of getting in on. The member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd), whom I consider a level headed man, made a reference to immigration, in which he said:

> I am exceedingly gratified to find that, by a careful examination of the census of the United States for the last ten years, our immigrants are away and beyond superior to theirs in character and quality. Their immigrants are almost exclusively composed of that class which we on this side do not consider a desirable addition to our people.

Now that is a most astonishing thing to me, and if the hon. gentleman had been at all familiar with the facts I do not think he would have made that statement. I find that in ten months of the year 1902 there were rejected in Montreal alone 1,439 immigrants that the American officials would not allow to enter into their country for various reasons. In the whole country, for the ten months of 1902, there were 2,129 rejected; and for the year 1903, there were rejected 5,158. Now I would like to know where these rejected immigrants are. They were rejected on our shores, and in answer to a question I put the other day I was told that from the 1st of July, 1903, to the 15th of March, we had deported 405 immigrants. Now the balance, which is over 4,500, are still somewhere in Canada. And yet the hon. member for South Brant says that we are getting a better class of immigrants than the United States. I wonder if he knows that the United States has along our southern border 116 officials to prevent undesirable immigrants entering the United States from this country. If he will read the reports of the United States commissioners he will find that is the fact.

Now the hon. member for Brant says that the woollen men were never fairly dealt with. He was glad to see that the change had been made, but my impression, Mr. Speaker, is that if no change had been made he would have supported the government just as heartily as he does now. He says:

> Protection is not of very great use to the working classes.

If that is so, why did the government increase the duty? It does seem to me that if it is of no use to the working classes, it is a piece of folly on the part of the government to increase the duty. I am surprised that hon. gentlemen who have been free traders all their lives should tell us that the United States are on the down grade because of high protection, and then should go to work and raise the duty in this country. But the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not take that view. The member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) found a good deal of fault with some of our campaign literature because we had the audacity to print in it the appropriation of last year. Now, Sir, I think that is perfectly legitimate. I do not see why any person should find any fault with that, so long as we stick to the truth. There may be some difference of opinion as to what certain things will cost, but the principle is there. Now there are some parts of it that I am sure even the Finance Minister would not object to. There are the regular appropriations brought down in the estimates by the Minister of Finance himself on six different occasions, beginning on the 16th of March and ending on the 21st of October, which amounted altogether to $73,864,503. Now I do not think there is a man in this House who would object to the accuracy of these figures. If there is, let him come over and see me to-morrow, and I will take last years' estimates out of my desk and will show him the whole amounts. I think I am in a position to satisfy him on that point.

Then there were the bounties on iron and steel. The Auditor General's Report says that we paid last year $1,401,804 on that head. Now that is one of the things I am surprised at. The Liberal party used to oppose the bounty system when it was adopted by Conservatives, they were in favour of doing away with the whole thing. But when the Liberals came in they did not allow the existing bounty system to run out, as it would have done, but they renewed it and extended the time. They were not satisfied with bounties on iron and steel, but they gave a bounty on lead, and on manilla. Now we have got a bounty on coal oil. It does seem to me that if it is ever justifiable to give a bounty at all it should be on some new industry in order to give it a start. But bounties will not continue the business, because you cannot afford for ever to tax the whole people for the benefit of the few. It seems to me this is the worst kind of taxation, and I am surprised that so level headed a man as the Minister of Finance should ever have gone in to this bounty business.

Then I suppose there will be some dispute over the Grand Trunk Pacific item. I think we had a perfect right to put in the estimates of the cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific, because that Bill was passed by this House, and we had the strongest assurance of the leader of the government, and of the Minister of Finance and other lights of the Liberal party, that they had made a sure contract that would be carried out. I am sorry that they took that view of it. As I did not speak on the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill this year, I would like to say a few words about it on this occasion. I want to say to the Finance Minister and other members of the government that in my judgment they would do much better for this country if they built a few roads north and south. Take the country I live in. There are people who, I suppose, have been living forty or fifty years one hundred and ten miles north of Napanee, and they are still thirty or forty miles from a railway. It seems to me when we have got such a large surplus and are so flush with our money, that instead of building a railway through the wilderness from Moncton to Winnipeg and then on to the Pacific, we would do much better if we tried to accommodate some of the people who have been living in our back country for so many years. I am not in favour of giving bonuses to companies to build railways. If you cannot get companies to build railways without bonuses, then I think the government should build them, where they are necessary, and I think the government should run them. I think the people should get the benefit of them. There is a railway running north of my town to which we gave a bonus of $30,000. This government gave, I think, $3,200 a mile, and I am not sure but that the Ontario government gave them $3,000 a mile, that is my recollection. But to-day, for twenty miles, you can haul freight by teams as cheaply as you can take it by that railway. That would not be the case if it was a government railway, because the government would carry the freight at a reasonable rate for the people. But here we are giving our good money to build railways all over this country, and what for? To make millionaires out of contractors and out of the owners of these railways.

That is the way it looks to me and I do not think it is right. I want to say that I am in no way in favour of the Grand Trunk Pacific because I think it is a useless expenditure of money that ought not to be made and I question very much if it ever will be built under the present circumstances, because it does seem to me that if the people are wise they will take very good care that it is not built. I need not go through this whole list. It does not matter much whether the hon. member objects to it or not. It amounts to $250,000,000 which is a small matter for a country like this—so the present government seem to think. I would like to take up a little time in saying something about the promises made by the government and the way they have been performed. I think if there is anything that an honourable man esteems it is to be considered a man of his word and I cannot see any reason why any public man should say: This is only politics; it is part of the game. I would be just as much ashamed to make a promise in reference to a political matter that I did not intend to carry out as I would be to make a promise in reference to a business matter that I did not intend to carry out. I do not see the difference. If I am elected again—I may not be—but if I am it will be because I tell the people I shall do certain things and do them. If I have any strength in my riding it is because the people know that when I tell them that I will do anything I will do it.

I say we can reduce the amount of Canada's expenditure by two, yes, three million dollars per year.

The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in 1895 made that promise to the people himself. How has he carried it out?

We demand strict economy in the administration of the government of the country.

This is from the resolutions contained in the Ottawa platform. In 1896 the expenditure on consolidated account was $36,949,000, leaving out the hundreds. What was it according to the budget speech of the hon. Minister of Finance the other day?—$54,500,000. The whole expenditure in 1896 was $41,702,383. Now, the hon. gentleman, may take a little exception to that because this is not exactly what the public accounts say, but he will remember that they added in 1896 $2,349,000 which had been passed in 1882, because they thought that for purposes of comparison it would be better to swell the accounts for 1896 as much as possible. Therefore the expenditure in 1896 was $41,702,383 and the budget speech says that for the year 1904 it will be $66,000,000 or an increase of $24,297,000. Is that not a fine showing? Hon. gentlemen opposite regard that as something to be pround of. As the Irishman says, they ought to be proud because they have made such a mess of it.

We are asking for a reduction of taxation.

Hon. David Mills, formerly Minister of Justice in this government.

These villainous customs taxes are impoverishing and ruining our people.

Who said that?—Sir Richard Cartwright.

We are the party of low taxation.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier.—These are the gentlemen who have made these promises. These are the people who have totally ignored them. If there was anything they seemed to be sore about when they were in opposition was superannuation. I recollect how Senator McMullen—we called him the Hon. James in those days—talked about how the people were being bled to maintain the superannuation system, how they were being taxed and saying that the people who were being superannuated were walking around the country as gentlemen. I think he was right and I think so still. When Mr. Foster was Minister of Finance he had a Bill passed which he said, if honestly administered, it would not cost the people of this country one cent to pay for all the superannuations of men in the service made under it. That Bill became law. But what are the facts? I do not know whether this government are a long way worse than we would be if we came back to power. We have learned a lot from them. If they want offices for some of their friends they superannuate civil servants and put others in their places. We had an example of this in the Kingston Post Office. They superannuated the postmaster, Mr. Shannon, and put Mr. Gunn in his place. Mr. Gunn was only three years the senior of the superannuated postmaster. They superannuated the deputy postmaster general and I will venture to say that any man who knew Colonel White would say that there never was a man in the service who was better up in his business than he was when he was superannuated. We are paying him—I do not know whether it is $3,000 or $2,500 a year and then we are paying the present deputy postmaster general, $4,000 a year. I have not the slightest fault to find with the present deputy postmaster general, I think he is a good man for the position, but I do not think a position of that kind should be made for any man at the expense of the people. I do not care who he is or where he belongs; I do not think that any man should be superannuated at the public expense. In addition to that we remember that last year the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) introduced a Bill to superannuate the judges at full pay. I made a few remarks on that occasion against that proposition and I am no more in favour of it now than I was then. I think it is a grievous outrage to say that you shall tax the poor man who earns from $300 to $500 a year to enable a man to live in luxury who has a salary of $5,000 or $6,000 a year for fifteen or twenty years. I say it is an outrage and I do not believe if it were submitted to the people that they would endorse it. I quite understand the explanation made by the hon. Minister of Justice. He wanted to get rid of some gentlemen that were in the way. The law ought to be made such that we should not be obliged to hire men to leave their positions. A responsible government ought to be able to carry on the business of the country irrespective of the feelings of any one. I am speaking for the men who live in the rural districts. We have no millionaires in our section of the country. We are all workingmen. We know how hard it is to earn a dollar. There are only a few men who know how to spend a dollar and get value for it and there is no men less capable than some of the representatives in this House. I have a table here that I would like to put on 'Hansard.' It may be tedious to read it, but it may be useful. Without any reference as to whether it is tedious or not I will have to read it unless the hon. minister will consent to have it put on 'Hansard' without being read.

The following statement will show the receipts from Customs and Excise from the year 1896 down to the year 1903, and a comparison is made in this statement of the taxation taken from the people under the Conservative rule and the increased taxation taken from them under Liberal rule. The following is the table:

RECEIPTS FROM TAXATION, PUBLIC ACCOUNTS, 1903.

And according to the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1904, the revenue from customs will be $36,807,063, and from excise $11,915,964, or a total of $48,723,027; or, a grand total of taxation taken from the people by this government over and above what the Conservative government was taking from them in 1896, of $89,222,285. Now, Sir, the 'Farmer's Sun' which used to be very favourable to the Postmaster General, I don't know how is it now, inserted a very interesting item which I purpose giving to the House. The 'Farmer's Sun' stated that the probabilities were that this year the farmers would have 200,000,000 pounds of milk which would be worth $12,000,000; they would have 2,000,000 hogs worth at $8, each would bring them $16,000,000; they would probably have 65,000 horses, which if sold for $120 each would bring $7,800,000, making a grand total of $35,800,000. And the 'Farmer's Sun' stated, that in addition to this $35,000,000 for butter and cheese and hogs and horses, the farmers would have to put their hands into their pockets for $14,000,000 more to pay the taxes that this government is taking out of the people of this country.

Mr. CLANCY. The Postmaster General did not write that.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think he did.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) allow me to put a question to him ?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. What would the hon. gentleman do if he had it in his power to give effect to his views ?

Mr. CLANCY. Put the Postmaster General out first and then we would tell him.

Mr. WILSON. I would not put the Postmaster General out on any personal grounds, but I would certainly put him out politically. My policy would be that we would not import so much ; we would manufacture the stuff in this country and we would have both the goods and the money. That is the policy we want in this country.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman means that he would increase the duties ?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, Sir, that is what I mean.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. And thus increase the taxation on the people ?

Mr. WILSON. No, Sir, that does not follow. If the Postmaster General will look at the public accounts he will see that under what he calls comparative free trade, he is taking $2.37 per head more out of the people than we took in 1896 when we had protection. That is what would happen again. We would make the goods in this country ; we would give the people employment ; and we would have the goods and the money, and the people would prosper.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The first step would be to increase the taxes.

Mr. WILSON. Not at all.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The first step would be to increase the duties.

Mr. WILSON. That would not necessarily increase the taxation. In no place in this country was that question discussed in 1878 more than in the riding I represent. It was then represented by the Minister of Finance in the Mackenzie administration. We had a gentleman in that riding named A. R. Roe, who I believe was as well up on the national policy as any man in Canada, and he showed up that question to such an extent that the Minister of Finance insisted that he should speak first so that he might have an opportunity of answering him. But when this occurred two or three times, Mr. Roe used tell the people what the Minister of Finance was going to say, and then answer it. In the end the Minister of Finance would not even speak at the same meeting with Mr. Roe he was so afraid of him : Mr. Roe has gone to his reward long ago.

Mr. INGRAM. What became of the Finance Minister ?

Mr. WILSON. The Finance Minister was left at home. I have here another table which shows the total receipts from all sources and if hon. gentlemen permit I will place on 'Hansard' but if not I will read it to the House. Very well, I will read it, and it is as follows :

Year.	Receipts.	Increase.
	$ cts.	$ cts.
1896	36,618,590 72
1897	37,829,778 40	1,211,187 68
1898	40,555,038 03	3,936,447 31
1899	46,741,249 54	10,122,658 82
1900	51,029,994 02	14,411,403 30
1901	52,514,761 13	15,896,110 41
1902	58,050,790 03	21,432,199 31
1903	66,037,068 93	29,418,478 21
Total income from all sources		96,428,485 04

According to the speech of the hon. Finance Minister the receipts for this year will be $71,000,000, an increase over 1896 of $34,381,000, or a total increase over 1896 of receipts in the eight years of $130,809,895. Now, what have they done with this money ? They boast about the public works they have built; but if we were bleeding the country white in 1896 and before that, what are these people doing ? When you think of every man, woman and child in this country being taxed $2.37 per head more than they were in 1896, how can these people tell us that they have reduced the taxation, and that they are the party of low taxation ?

I want to say a few words about the Quebec bridge. I think it was simply outrageous to put that concern into the hands of a private company if it was to be aided as largely or nearly as largely as it has been aided by the public treasury of this country. When the Prime Minister informed this House that he was going to grant a bonus of $1,000,000 to that bridge, he brought down a report from an engineer that it could be built for $4,060,000. When I read that, with the knowledge of the aid that has been given since, I thought of what the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte) used to say when he was Minister of Public Works and was getting his estimates passed. When he was cornered a little, he would say : 'Well, I don't know anything about these questions ; I depend on my engineer, and if he deceives me, it is bad for him.' I thought that if the Prime Minister would just say to the engineer who gave him that report : 'I want an explanation why you deceived me to the tune of three or four millions of dollars ; you only told me half the cost ; I want your explanation, and if it is not right, you will have to go.' But I am somewhat of the opinion that the instructions which the engineer got at first were of a very different character from what the engineers got later when they were expected to build the bridge and all the approaches. Why was not a fair estimate of all these things given in the first instance ? Was it because it was thought that if that were done this House would not pass the bonus of $1,000,000 ? I do not think that is the way to carry on the business of this country. It is stated that Mr. Parent, the premier of Quebec, who is president of the bridge company, has only put in $5,000 out of a total subscribed capital of $267,680. That was certainly not a company in a position without government aid to build a bridge of that kind, and it never ought to have been granted a charter or any assistance from any government to undertake a public work like that. It was a public work which, if necessary at all, ought to have been built by the government. If not, it should not have been built by being assisted so largely by the government. Now, the case just stands this way :

Provincial aid	250,000
Municipal aid..	300,000
Making a total of..	$ 924,353
Federal guarantee..	6,678,200
Paid-up capital..	267,680
Total funds provided... ..	$7,870,233
Estimated cost..	4,060,000
Excess of cost over estimate..	$3,810,233

Now, I do not accuse the First Minister of deliberately and wilfully deceiving us, because I do not think he would do that; but I say he was not sufficiently informed, or that bridge would never have been built by a private company with a capital of less than $300,000.

I want to refer to a little matter regarding the Montreal Rolling Mills. The steel corporation of the United States came over and took them by the throat and said to them straight, because the tariff of this country enabled them to do so : 'Unless you buy your rods from us, we will enter your market and put you out of business.' What was the result ? They simply capitulated, bought their goods from the American company and took this market. That would not occur if we had a proper tariff.

I confess that I could not just follow the hon. Minister of Finance the other day sufficiently to satisfy myself that he was quite clear in regard to the dumping part of his tariff. I think it showed pretty clearly that he himself has come round to be a protectionist. The old free trader says : It is our business to buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest ; but he went on to say, as every protectionist would say, that it was not always in the interest of the trader to buy in the cheapest market, because it may not be the cheapest market very long ; and when those who control it get the upper hand of you, they might put you in the soup. I am sorry my hon. friend Mr. Ross, of Victoria, is not in, because he is a very nice old gentleman, and I would like him to hear what I say. He was very anxious, I am told, to be the candidate again, though a very old man, and he took occasion to write a letter to a newspaper, which I have no doubt the Minister of Finance has seen, in which he pointed out that although his constituency had a population of a little less than 11,000, he had succeeded in getting twenty-eight appropriations for it —for breakwaters, wharfs, refuges for boats, and one thing and another—amounting to $116,000, or $10.50 a head for every man, woman and child in it. If that is the way public moneys are frittered away, no wonder we are not reducing the debt very much. It is not very creditable to find that these people have had $130,000,000 more than the late government were getting, when they said the late government were bleeding the country white, and they have not reduced the public debt more than $1,000,000.

Sir WLILIAM MULOCK. To which of those appropriations does the hon. gentleman object ?

Mr. WILSON. I am not sufficiently familiar with the locality, but I would like to know to which ones the Postmaster General can point as necessary.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. We say they are all necessary.

Mr. WILSON. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is speaking without knowledge or is carried away by his party views.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Will the hon. gentleman say that any are unnecessary ?

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. gentleman could do that himself.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I will indicate the necessary ones and that is the whole list.

Mr. WILSON. I recollect that when the Grand Trunk Pacific was being discussed, not one hon. gentleman opposite could tell within ten million dollars what it would cost. They made some statement about its costing only $13,000,000, but that was absurd. I shall take occasion, before the session closes, to call the attention of the Prime Minister to a rubber combine. There are 74 wholesale rubber jobbers, and there is not one who does not belong to the association. They have the guarantee of the manufacturers not to sell to any one who is not a member of the association. If the Minister of Finance is prepared to take the matter up, I will furnish him with the by-laws and report of the last annual meeting and the sheets they give their travellers when they send them on the road. Each one has to make a declaration, and his travellers also, every two or three months—they used to have to make it once a month—that he will stand by the arrangement entered into or forfeit a check for $500, which he has to put up. They have raised their prices anywhere from ten to twenty per cent, and besides that they have lessened the discount from two to seven per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. Are they manufacturers ?

Mr. WILSON. Jobbers. I cannot tell about the manufacturers.

Mr. FIELDING. The goods are made in Canada ?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, and the law provides that you can institute an investigation; and if these things turn out, as I say they will, you will be able to reduce the duties. You are able to take the duties off altogether, and I am not sure that you can prosecute the people under the Criminal Code. I think that something should be done, and if the Finance Minister will appoint any time within a few days, I will give him the informaton.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a method provided under the combine clause of the tariff; and if my hon. friend pursues that method, we will deal with the matter.

Mr. WILSON. You will not take the responsibility ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will prosecute the inquiry if we have a foundation to go on.

Mr. WILSON. If I furnish you with the by-laws of the association and the report of the annual meetfng will that be sufficient ?

Mr. FIELDING. Let my hon. friend make his case and we will deal with it on its merits.

Mr. WILSON. I have stated my case.

Mr. FIELDING. Let the hon. gentleman look at the combine Act and say that if a commission should be appointed, he will be prepared to sustain the charges he makes, and if he does, he will find that the commission will be appointed.

Mr. WILSON. You want to put me to all the cost and trouble before you will proceed.

Mr. FIELDING. The commissioner will be paid by the government, but the hon. gentleman will have to make out his own case.

Mr. WILSON. And that will have to be done for nothing.

I shall not pursue that any further, but shall take up another matter, and that is the purity of the Liberal party as exhibited in the courts. In my own riding we have had a good many contests, and the Liberal party have never been able to unseat a Conservative member in Lennox since 1882. We have unseated three or four Liberals if not more, but although the Liberal party put in their protests at our last local election, and although our member had only three of a majority, they were unable to unseat him. I have taken up a good deal of the time of the House and have not got through more than one-half what I intended to say, but I am certainly in favour of a change somewhat different from that proposed by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, and I think he will find it in the resolution proposed by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 15, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 136) to incorporate the Similkameen and Keremeos Railway Company.—Mr. Morrison.

Bill (No. 137) respecting certain patents of the Canadian Office and School Furniture Company Limited.—Mr. Clare.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. W. S. CALVERT moved :

That that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for receiving petitions for Private Bills be suspended in reference to the petition of the Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company, presented this day, praying for an Act to change the name of the company to the Rio de Janeiro Tramways, Light and Power Company, and granting powers to construct and operate tramways, railways, telegraph and telephone lines in Brazil, subject to the laws thereof, and that it be read and received forthwith.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose there is some explanation ?

Mr. CALVERT. This company, I understand, was incorporated under the Companies Act on the 9th instant. They have powers given under the Companies Act, but these are not sufficient. I understand that they wish to construct and operate railways, tramways, telephone and telegraph lines in Brazil, subject to the laws of that country. The reason given to me for the delay in seeking this legislation is that the negotiations between the people of Brazil and the company here were not concluded until a very recent date. Therefore, they took out letters of incorporation under the Companies Act and paid a fee of $2,900 to the government. All the corporators are Canadians. I do not think this legislation interferes in the slightest degree with any company or corporation in Canada. The contract entered into between the people in Brazil and this company provides that the company shall start operations this year. Therefore, if legislation should be left over until next year it would interfere very much with the contract entered into. This is simply the case of a number of Canadians who seek to do business in a foreign country, and I hope the House will grant the necessary legislation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Do I understand that the powers sought apply wholly to tramways, telegraphs and so on in Brazil, and not in Canada ?

Mr. CALVERT. Only in Brazil.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). By command of His Excellency I have to inform the House that it has pleased His Excellency the Governor in Council to relieve the Right Hon. the Earl of Dundonald from the position of General Officer Commanding the militia of Canada. I am prepared to lay the Order in Council immediately upon the table of the House, but as there is other correspondence, and I expect to be able to produce the whole of it during the present sitting of the House, I will keep this order until I am able to lay the whole of it before the House.

QUESTIONS.

OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Mr. POPE—by Mr. Taylor—asked.

1. What were the receipts on the government system of railways for the current year up to the 31st of May last ?

2. What were the expenses of operation of the government system of railways for the current year up to the 31st of May last ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). This information has been prepared but it cannot be got ready until about the 20th of the month.

COST OF LABOUR COMMISSION, 1886.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

1. What was the cost of the commission issued in 1886 to inquire into the relation of capital and labour in Canada ?

2. How many commissioners were then appointed, and what were their names, and how much was each paid ?

3. When did the commissioners make their report ?

4. What was the nature of this report ?

5. What action was taken on the report ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General) :

1. $81,718.98.

2. Fourteen (14) commissioners were appointed. Their names, and the amounts paid to each are as follows :—

Hon. James Armstrong, Ottawa..	$7,142.17
John Armstrong, Toronto..	2,400.00
G. Boivin, Montreal..	1,737.90
U. Carson, Ottawa..	2,040.98
J. A. Clark, St. John, N.B..	3,440.40
A. T. Freed, Hamilton..	3,152.19
W. A. Gibson, Ottawa..	2,831.38
Wm. Haggarty, Sydney, N.S... ..	1,862.17
S. B. Heaks, Toronto..	3,122.84
Jules Helbronner, Montreal.. ..	6,507.80
John Kelly, St. John, N.B..	1,637.11
Patrick Kerwin, Quebec, Que.. ..	3,072.98
H. A. McLean, Halifax, N.S....	3,119.65
Michael Welsh, Halifax..	3,586.91

3. First report, February 23, 1889 ; second report, April, 1889.

4. Each report is somewhat voluminous, and deals with a large number of subjects, which will appear on reference thereto.

5. The only action which appears to have been taken was in the session of 1890, when parliament passed an Act to provide for the collection and publication of labour statistics through a bureau, and appropriated $10,000 for that purpose, but the Act remained a dead letter.

FISHERY WARDEN, ALBERTON, P.E.I.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. What is the name of the fishery warden at Alberton, Prince Edward Island ?

2. When was he appointed and who recommended him ?

3. What amount of salary does he receive ?

4. How many licenses were issued to persons engaged in the fisheries at Alberton last year; and what are the names of the parties receiving such licenses ; and what fees were paid for the same ? What description of fish was to be taken ?

5. Have any complaints been received by the department with regard to the conduct of the officer now in charge ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). It has been necessary to write to the inspector of fisheries for some details involved in this question before a reply can be given. The information will be obtained forthwith.

POSTMASTER AT CHESLEY, ONT.

Mr. DONNELLY asked :

1. When did the office of postmaster of the village of Chesley, Ontario, become vacant ?

2. Has a successor to the late postmaster been appointed ?

3. If not, when will the government make the appointment ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General) :

The postmastership of Chesley became vacant on the 5th May last. No appointment has yet been made to the office, the matter being under consideration.

RECEIPTS FOR CARRIAGE OF CANADIAN NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. What sum has been collected in each year since the 30th June, 1897, for the carriage of Canadian newspapers through the mails ?

2. What sum was collected for the period 30th June, 1903, to the 30th April, 1904 ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). As the Act came into force only on the 1st January, 1899, no postage was collected on Canadian newspapers between the 30th June, 1897 and the 1st January, 1899.

The amounts collected since the Act came into force, are as follows :

1898-1899 (6 months).. .. ..$	21,703.20
1899-1900 (12 months)..	104,859.05
1900-1901 (12 months)..	107,344.14
1901-1902 (12 months)..	116,576.13
1902-1903 (12 months)..	129,417.64
1903-1904 (to 30th April).. ..	100,071.08

CARRIAGE OF MAILS AT CAPE TRAVERSE, P.E.I.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Hackett—asked :

1. Who had the contract for carrying the mails between the shore and the ice-boats at Cape Traverse, Prince Edward Island, during the years 1902, 1903 and 1904 ?

2. Was the contractor paid by the day, or a certain amount per trip ?

3. What are the names of the party or parties employed in carrying mails between the ice-boats and the shore at Cape Traverse for said years ?

4. What was the total amount paid for this service for the years 1902, 1903 and 1904 respectively, and to whom was it paid in each year ?

5. What is the name of the person carrying mails between Cape Traverse and Summerside during the above-named years, and the amount paid in each year ?

6. Were tenders invited by public notice for this service ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. 1902, no service performed ; 1903, John P. Irving ; 1904, John P. Irving.

2. The contractor was paid by the day.

3. Mr. Bell and Mr. Irving employed the men required for the performance of their contract.

4. 1901-2, Cape service not operated ; 1902-3, J. P. Irving contractor at $8 per day with men and horses, $384 ; 1903-4, J. P. Irving contractor at $7 per day with men and horses, $217.

5. 1902, No service ; 1903, J. P. Irving, $132 ; 1904, J. P. Irving, $147.

6. It was deemed impracticable to invite tenders owing to the uncertainty of service and its short duration. The assistant post office inspector was instructed to make the best arrangements possible.

MURRAY HARBOUR BRANCH, P.E.I. RAILWAY.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Hackett—asked :

1. What was the actual cost of earth excavation on the Belfast and Murray Harbour Branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway, between Southport and Murray river, and the cubic yards of earth excavation ?

2. What was the rate per yard, and the cost per mile ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The actual cost of earth excavation on the Belfast and Murray Harbour branch between Southport and Murray River was $57,361.08.

The total earth excavation was 294,159 cubic yards.

2. The rate per cubic yard was 19½ cents. The cost of earth excavation per mile of line $1,333.98.

EQUIPMENT AT EASTERN GAP, TORONTO ISLAND.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Have any complaints been received by the government respecting the insufficiency or equipment of the bells or bell-buoys at the eastern gap, and at or near the southern shore of Toronto island ?

2. If so, when and from whom were such complaints received ?

3. What steps, if any, have been taken by the government to remedy the defect complained of, and to improve the aids or appliances to navigation, the insufficiency of which is said to have been complained of ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.

2. On 11th June, 1904 from Thos. L. Church, solicitor for the Lake Ontario Navigation Company, Limited, and steamer 'Argyle.'

On the same date and on 10th June, 1904, from the general manager Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company.

On 10th June, 1904, from the agent of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Navigation Company, Limited.

On 10th June, 1904 from manager Niagara Navigation Company.

3. Before the receipt of these complaints the department, had already taken steps to establish a powerful fog alarm operated by compressed air, at this place ; and it is expected that the same will be in operation this summer.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to inquire from the Postmaster General (Sir Wm. Mulock) if he has three letters from Hiram Walker with reference to the dismissal of the postmaster at Wilton, riding of Lennox ? I would like to ask him also if he got a note inclosed by me with a letter from Thomas Prest, authorizing him to take the word 'private' off the letter which he had written to the hon. the Postmaster General with reference to the dismissal of the postmaster at Wilton.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I will make inquiry in regard to the hon. gentleman's question and give him an answer to-morrow.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS ON SURVEYS.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. May I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if all the correspondence received up to date from the Associated Society of Engineers in the west with respect to the employment of alien engineers on the Grand Trunk Pacific has been laid on the table? There was a supplementary return moved for on the 30th May, and I would like to know whether the correspondence called for by the second order has been brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As far as I know, but my hon. friend the Postmaster General can answer the question.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I have no recollection of the order. Probably I was not in the House at the time but I will make inquiry and give the answer to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the return which was brought down comprised all the correspondence up to that date and I think the hon. the Postmaster General, if he looks in to it, will find that I am correct in making that suggestion. It would be well that the return should comprise all correspondence up to the date at which the return was complied with, and I think it would be desirable, if there has been any correspondence since that date on which the return has been laid on the table, that it should be placed before the House in order that it may be advisable in any discussion that takes place on the subject. I presume that the Postmaster General would not have any objection and would not require us to move for another return.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am not aware of any omissions from the return that was brought down. The hon. gentleman perhaps has some cases in his mind and if he can give me a memorandum of them I will call attention to the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be very glad to do so. I think I had information of subsequent corespondence which was not included in the return that I examined. That went down to a certain date and I had information that there was further correspondence a few days after that date. What there is subsequent to that I do not know. I have not been in correspondence with the parties and I do not know. All I am suggesting is that if there is any beyond that it would be just as well to have it before the House so that it will be available for any discussion which might take place.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Inasmuch as there may be further correspondence, for instance to-day I received a couple of letters —instead of bringing down the return piecemeal, if it meets with the approval of the hon. gentlemen, we might let the matter remain until the report of the commissioners is presented which will be in the course of a short time. Then you will have the complete correspondence to date.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course we will be glad to meet the hon. gentleman as far as possible in that regard.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am indifferent to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does anybody know precisely when the report will be received? time there might be no objection to complying with my hon. friend's suggestion, but if on the other hand there is a prospect that it will be considerably delayed perhaps it would be well to bring down such correspondence as is available.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Then perhaps my hon. friend would make a motion to cover everything up to a certain date and that will be complied with. If there is anything subsequent to that we will bring it down whenever ordered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With the consent of the House I would move now :

That an order of the House do issue for the additional correspondence ordered since the last return in the matter of applications for employment of aliens on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway surveys.

Motion (Mr. R. L. Borden) agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to say to the government in regard to what was mentioned yesterday by the right hon. Prime Minister after I had left the House for a moment, that I gathered from him that some further legislation which had not been mentioned during my presence was within the intentions of the government. What I would like to say to my right hon. friend is that the session is now so far advanced that I think he should have all the legislation before the House at a very early date. There is not very much business before the House at the present time beyond the estimates and it is usual, I think, to have all government legislation of any importance brought down before a great deal of progress is made with the estimates. I trust that the government will find it convenient to inform the House of the proposed legislation either by the introduction of a Bill or otherwise at the earliest possible moment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend that I have just sent to the clerk a notice that the government will ask for leave to take Mondays for government business and when making that motion on Friday perhaps I will be able to give the information my hon. friend desires.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That the Speaker do now leave the chair, for the House to go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty, and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, representing as I do, one of the ridings in which crude petroleum is produced and in which an independent Canadian refinery is situated, and believing as I do, that the production of crude oil and the refining of same, forms one of the most important industries in our Dominion. I am anxious to give to the House all the information I can, hoping that this government may see the justice of my plea, and that they will abandon the resolution with reference to oil, which is now before the House.

I realize my utter inability to do justice to this industry in attempting to defend it. I also feel that an irreparable wrong will be done this industry if this resolution is adopted. At the outset, let me state that with reference to this industry I am purely and simply a producer. I have not a dollar in a refinery, or a by-product manufacture. I cannot believe, that the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) was conversant with the facts, needs, and requirements of this industry, when, on the 7th of this month, he placed on the table of this House, a resolution, which, if allowed to carry, will blast and blight our business for all time to come.

The hon. the Finance Minister was right when he stated, that no item in the tariff had received more attention in past years, than had the duty on oil since 1868. The Act which refers to crude oil, and its by-products, has been amended eleven times. Several of which amendments were not very important, while others were of vital importance to our industry. In 1868 there was an excise tax of five cents per gallon being paid to the revenue of this country. In 1877 that tax was taken off. Some years later a tax was placed on oil, and since that time it has been howled at, the tariff tinkered and tampered with, and now, before the present government leave office they give it a parting kick. If this were all, the industry might not have so much to complain of, but when you find members of parliament, backed, I am sorry to say, by many of the newspapers of our country, making a football of this industry, not only on the floor of this House, but on the platforms through our country, making the most reckless, unfair, and untrue statements. With reference to our business the wonder to me is that the industry is alive to-day.

And, Mr. Speaker, were it not for the unfailing, dogged, determined pluck of our people and the confidence they have that there is plenty of oil to be found in Canada, if only capital could be induced to take hold of the business ; were it not also that ten million dollars have been invested in this industry by men, most of whom know no other business, the Canadian oil industry would not now be in existence. No other business could be kicked from pillar to post, discouraged at every turn, cut and slashed at from one end of this Dominion to the other by men who have not the first conception of the necessities of that industry, and still live. The cry of the oil people is : Will the time ever come when a definite policy with regard to the oil tariff can be assured to them for any number of years ? Our industry is largely a speculative industry, and we all know that it takes little to discourage capital and divert it from an enterprise of such a nature. Were it not for the constant agitation carried on in this country and the frequent tinkering with the oil tariff, there is not a doubt in my mind that to-day we would not only be supplying the home market, but we would be exporting large quantities of oil. In order to show how, with reference to our industry, great quantities of oil can be produced out of a very small area of land, I wish to call the attention of the House to a few statements in the ' Oil Investors' Journal,' with reference to the Texas field, and what result the Texas field will have on our market I will not venture to assert. For instance, in the year 1902 the Beaumont field in Texas produced from about 200 acres of land, some 17,000,000 barrels of oil ; in 1903, the Sour Lake field, from about 200 acres of land, produced 7,000,000 barrels of oil ; the Batson field, from a little over 200 acres, has within three months produced over 4,000,000 barrels of oil. And when I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that oil in Beaumont was selling in the year 1902 for two and three cents a barrel, you can readily see that there is a possibility of Texas oil being a factor in our market.

Mr. HEYD. Did you say it was sold for three cents a barrel ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, Sir ; and I will read from the 'Oil Investors' Journal' to satisfy you as to that :

Mr. Oliphant's figures at best are approximate, and he is correct in valuing the oil at what it brought the producers. Spindletop oil sold as low at 2 and 3 cents early in 1902, such prices being the inevitable outcome of the subdivision of the hill into very small tracts of land, which were sold at enormous prices —$3,500 for a thirty-second of an acre being the average figure, although instances are on record where a twenty-fourth of an acre brought $12,000.

Mr. COWAN. What is the nature of the Texas oil as compared with our oil ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The gravity of the oil in the Batson field is stated here.

Mr. COWAN. I understood it was the Beaumont field oil that was selling at two or three cents a barrel.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Batson field is within twenty or thirty miles of the Beaumont.

Mr. COWAN. Is it the same quality of oil ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No; the Batson field is of lighter gravity than the Beaumont. I will read what this paper has to say :

Value of Batson Oil for Refining.

The best oil so far found in southeast Texas is undoubtedly the Batson crude. A sample of this crude oil which was submitted to the Smith-Thiele laboratory for analysis showed the following results —

	Specific gravity.	Degrees Beaume.
Crude oil	·880	29·1

Mr. COWAN. That is not the oil that was selling at two and three cents a barrel.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No.

Mr. COWAN. I would like for my own information, to know what the gravity of the oil was that was selling at two or three cents per barrel, and which the hon. gentleman thought might come into competition with our oil.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have not the information with me, but I may say with reference to the Beaumont and Sour Lake fields that the gravity is not as high as it is in the Batson field, which has lately come into existence. Now, Sir, let me point out what they have accomplished in that field within three years. Six refineries have been built in Beaumont and Port Arthur, and they are shipping their product to the north. Between the 1st of January and the 28th of April they shipped out of Port Arthur 3,116,-242 barrels, which will give you some idea of the extent to which the oil is exported from that field. Dozens of Standard Oil tank steamers are bringing that oil to Philadelphia, New York and the northern states. Now, Sir, previous to the present agitation in this country, which was brought about by the Standard Oil Company to serve their own selfish ends, every one of the seventy drilling rigs owned by the people of Petrolea, and in connection with which over 200 men are employed, were distributed throughout the length and breadth of our Dominion searching night and day for crude oil and gas. But, Sir, for several weeks past, if you were to go to Petrolea you would find numbers of drillers walking our streets, the rigs shut down, the development at a standstill, and confidence in the future of our industry shaken as it never was before. And, why, Mr. Speaker ? It is because the government of this country have been dickering with the Standard Oil Company and with the tariff, and they have placed the producer, the independent refiner and the consumer entirely in the hands of the Standard Oil Company.

About six years ago the Standard Oil Company purchased a small refinery in the town of Petrolia, and before one year had elapsed four other refineries in our town had been purchased by them, thus giving them the control of the refining industry in Canada at that time. The Standard Oil Company then purchased a large block of land in the town of Sarnia, they tore down the Petrolea refineries, making use of such of the materials as they could in building their plant at Sarnia ; they then built a plant larger than was necessary for the refining of our product and commenced to take control of our market. About four years ago the Standard Oil Company refused to supply the gas companies of Canada with the product used to assist in the manufacture of gas. In consequence of that the gas men came to the government asking for free oil. This request was refused by the government. Representatives of the gas companies came to Petrolea and contracted with the independent producers, many of whom have been supplying gas companies up to the present time. When the Standard Oil Company found the gas men were obtaining the crude oil for manufacturing, word came from New York—from which centre we must expect to receive all future orders—to supply the gas companies with oil, and consequently the Standard Oil Company commenced at once to squeeze the Canadian producers out of competition, and they have been successful.

Mr. HEYD. In what way did they squeeze out the producers ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. By the action of this government, Sir.

Mr. HEYD. But you have not told us how.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. They have absolute control of the market ; not a doubt about it.

Mr. HEYD. That does not answer my question. How could they squeeze out the producer, except by lowering the price ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Have not the trusts and monopolies squeezed out the binder twine and barbed wire factories ?

Mr. HEYD. You have not explained that yet.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HEYD. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of importance, and I do not want to ask the hon. gentleman a question unless he is willing.

Mr. BENNETT. Tell us about cutlery.

Mr. HEYD. Never mind the cutlery ; we are not discussing that now. The hon. gentleman says the Standard Oil Company squeezed out the producers and I want to know how they could do it except by reducing the price of crude oil ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If you listen to what I have to say, you will find out before I get through how they do it. The petroleum Act was amended on the 29th of June, 1897, by this government, granting to the Standard Oil Trust the importation of oil in tank ships. I want you to notice the step by step taken by the Standard Oil Company, leading up to the 7th inst. See how well laid their plans were, and how successfully they have been carried out. By tank ships, many of which they own, the crude oil can be brought from Toledo, Ohio, to Sarnia, where the Standard Oil Company's refinery is situated, at a very small cost.

About two years ago, a number of producers, being dissatisfied with the treatment they were receiving at the hands of the Standard Oil Company, purchased land and built a refinery in Petrolea, which has been extended, and employs 65 men and cost $250,000. This company has been most successful in competing with the Standard, and within the past few months, have secured independent distributing stations, situated in the principal cities and towns, in the Dominion. It has over 300 stockholders, many of whom are among our brightest and best business men, and all but one or two I understand are Canadians. But then, Mr. Speaker, this government does not believe in Canada for the Canadians. It is Canada for the binder twine trust, the Standard Oil Trust, and any other trust that will pay the price.

Well, about one year ago, the Standard Oil Company stated to some of our prominent producers, that unless the tariff on crude oil was reduced to such an extent that they could import, manufacture, and distribute its products throughout our country at a profit, they, the Standard Oil Trust, would be compelled to agitate among the members of parliament, and the Ministers of the Crown, and on the platforms and in the press throughout our country, until they received what they wanted. Naturally our people felt that they should at least investigate the matter. A meeting of the producers was called ; explanations were made to our people, that unless the duty on crude oil was reduced to where the Standard Oil Company wanted it, they would at once, apply to parliament. A committee of 25 producers was appointed, to meet with the representatives of the two refineries, to hear their grievances. The committee was called; the Standard representatives refused to treat with so large a committee, whereupon the committee was reduced to nine. The nine men met the representatives of both refineries, and, after discussing the question for several days, refused to accept the Standard's proposition. The Standard men then came to Ottawa, and were refused their request, which was, to leave the duty on refined, at 5 cents per gallon, but reduce the duty on crude to 2 cents per gallon.

Why the government of this country would refuse any concessions last year, and this year grant more than any desire the Standard Oil Company ever made public, is one of the Chinese puzzles of the present session. The Standard Oil Company were prepared, up to two months ago, to pay for all crude oil coming into this country, a tariff of 2 cents per gallon. If the refined oil will be all made in Canada, as we are assured it will, now that the crude can come in free, what matter if the tariff be 2½ cents or 5 cents if the Standard have control of our market ? It is estimated that it will take 1,000,000 barrels of crude, to refine sufficient oil to supply this country for one year. 1.000,000 barrels of crude oil at 2 cents duty per gallon, would amount to $700,000. This is a dead loss to the country, and a clear gain to the Standard Oil Company, because they would have paid that and had control of the market. Now they have the same control of the market, and don't have to pay a cent for it. However the government refused the Standard Oil Company control of our markets last year. The Standard men went home, and in a few months they started the agitation again among the producers. After months of manipulating with the producers and the government of this country, they finally obtained signatures from about 100 producers, many of whom were in their employ and others situated near Standard pipe lines, through which their oil had to be shipped, while a large number signed it through fear. This petition was brought to the government a few months ago. I have a copy of it here, and I will recite a few clauses, so as to give you the nature of the petition :

> Therefore while we strongly assert that any reduction in the present tariff upon the refined products of petroleum would be disastrous to our mining industry, and injurious in many ways. And we inseparably connect this assertion with our further statement, when we say that for the purpose of increasing the manufacture of refined oils in Canada, we assent to the reduction of the present tariff upon crude oil of 5 cents, and 2½ cents per gallon for all purposes.

The Governor in Council retaining or acquiring the power to make all regulations regarding the importation of such oil.

There was another petition presented at the meeting held in the town hall, Sarnia, at which the Standard representatives were present. That petition was largely signed by the citizens of Sarnia, from a purely selfish motive. Though not owning an oil well, they, from purely selfish motives, thought that a few more men would be employed in Sarnia if the crude oil was brought in; and they were assisted in the matter by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Johnston), who, I believe, has received several telegrams of congratulations from the Standard Oil Company, New York, and their supporters. I cannot help thinking that the hundreds of farmers in his back townships will have a different story to tell. I will read a paragraph or two from that petition, which will show the generosity of the people of that town, towards our industry:

That the reduction of the duty on crude to 2 cents, while maintaining the duty of 5 cents on refined, would not in the opinion of your petitioners result in the loss of any revenue of this Dominion.

That in view of these facts, your petitioners would humbly request that the duty on crude oil be reduced to 2 cents per gallon and that the duty on refined oil be maintained at 5 cents per gallon as at present.

Brave patriotic people of Sarnia! Do they not realize that by their action and this government's action, the Canadian oil industry is vitally injured, and drillers and workmen are left to eke out an existence as best they can?

The independent producers, circulated a petition, and it is to-day in the hands of the government, with some 400 names on it, asking that no action be taken. Many towns and townships in Western Ontario, presented petitions, asking that no action be taken. I believe the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) received a petition from his own town demanding that no reduction be made on the duty on oil.

Mr. HEYD. What do you mean by a petition from my town?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. A resolution passed by your board of trade.

Mr. HEYD. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The representatives of the Standard Oil Company have been here and in Montreal, the latter place being very easy to reach for a quiet talk. The representatives of the producers, and the independent refiners have been here, but the Standard Oil Company won, and the people all over this country are asking to-day what was the price they paid. Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite could tell us?

Mr. CALVERT. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Standard Oil Company asked to have the duties changed as they are to-day?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot tell you anything about it, but if you ask the ministers, they will tell you.

Mr. CALVERT. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the Standard Oil Company did not ask anything of the kind. They did not want the duties taken off coal oil, and what has been done has been done for the people of Canada generally, and the producers, so far as I know, are perfectly satisfied with the position taken by the government.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. You would be expected to make just such an answer.

Mr. CALVERT. Certainly.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was referring to the fact that the government of this country are against us and also the Standard Oil Company, and I am sorry to say that in many cases the press to some extent is against us. I am glad to say that previous to the government taking action, many of the prominent newspapers were strongly opposed to any reduction in the duty on oil. I have here a book of clippings from many newspapers with reference to the oil industry and many of these are of a most condemnatory character of the policy of the government.

What guarantee has the producer that this is the last slash he is going to have? How do we know that before the year is out something else may drop. I would like to ask the Finance Minister why has this industry been singled out for special attack, at this time? Why did the government not wait until their commission was appointed before dealing with the matter.

The oil men court investigation, they invite inspection of their industry, but they condemn any action being taken without a fair trial.

The oil industry of the Dominion has been neglected and ignored by the government. Previous to their coming to power, a few thousands of dollars were spent each year in development for gas and oil, which was of great use to men looking for a new oil and gas field.

Since 1898 not one dollar has been spent in development, and the mining reports show that thousands of dollars worth of tools and drilling material is stored at Edmonton, rusting and rotting, while the industry is being sold to the Standard Oil Company.

The government of this country, both in the reports of the provincial House and the Geological reports of this House, seem to try and take as little notice of our industry as they can possibly do.

Take the report of the Bureau of Mines of Ontario ; it takes up 43 pages of that report talking about the peat industry. While the oil industry, in which more money for development is spent in one day by private individuals than is spent in a whole year in developing the peat industry, less than three pages is given, and the log of one well ; yet there has not been less than 500 wells drilled in all parts of Ontario during that time. Never in our history have drills been so successfully worked or at least, so continually at work throughout the length and breadth of our Dominion as within the past two years. In the Geological Department here even a worse state of things exists. The last report devoted to the gas and petroleum industry of our country is dated 1891. The report of the Bureau of Mines devotes a few pages to statistics, and gives the log of a few wells, but not a general summary of the work.

I have had occasion to spend a great deal of time in the Geological Department, and I find a most deplorable state of affairs. Here is Dr. Bell, a man who has done more for the development of the mines and resources of this country than any man living. A man who has devoted a life-time to his country, being 48 years in the civil service, appointed as acting director, which office he has held for going on four years, am I not justified in asking why this man is not gazetted ? He is a man, who has been responsible, more than any other man, for the development of our resources, a man eminently qualified to fill the position. A man to whom the people of this country are indebted for the greater part of the topography of this Dominion. A man whose ability cannot be questioned, whose writings and works are of the greatest interest to our people and to the civilized world.

Dr. Bell is one of the best scientific men of this age, his explorations and writings are invaluable to our country. He is a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, the Geographical Societies of London and America, the Chemical Society of London, and of the Royal Society of London. The last mentioned distinction is considered the culmination of the ambition of British scientists and last year King Edward conferred on him the Companionship of the Imperial Service Order 'for faithful service.' He is a perfect storehouse of information about Canada, and I hope the Minister of the Interior will not let another week go by without gazetting him. Dr. Bell is merely holding his office from day to day, and cannot be expected to initiate new regulations, hence he cannot do justice to his department or to the country.

It is not the fault of the civil servants of the Geological Department that more information is not furnished with reference to the oil industry, it is the fault of the Minister of the Interior. Tens of thousands of dollars are spent each year in prospecting and developing the mines of this country, and the oil business is taken little notice of. $123,930 was spent in the Geological Department in 1903 and only a little mite of this has been spent in furnishing information about gas or oil. $152,666.25 is to be voted this year being an increase of $28,736.25. I wonder how much the Minister of the Interior can spare for oil and gas development.

While I am at the question, I would like to call the Minister of the Interior's attention to what I believe a most serious blunder in his management of the Geological Department.

When I first came here I had occasion to obtain a number of reports of the Geological Department and was compelled to pay for same. On inquiry I found that the department had a man whose sole duty was to collect the money for these reports, and that his salary amounted to more than the money collected. Another instance of this business government. Tons of these reports are in the cellar moulding and rotting. Surely if this government can spend from $123,000 to $153,000 each year in obtaining information, a few hundred dollars would be well spent in distributing it. What is the sense of sending men through this land gathering information and then bottling it up and keeping a man to collect 10, 15, 20, or 25 cents on these volumes, when he does not collect enough to cover the salary he is paid. Surely the Minister of the Interior will remedy this state of things, and first of all place Dr. Bell where he ought to be.

Part of this matter may appear a little off my subject, but it all has a distinct bearing on the oil question because we have been neglected at every turn.

Remember this, that every barrel of crude that comes into our country, brings with it all the by-products, all the benzine, gasoiene, naphtha, tar, coke, fuel oil, lubricating oils of all kinds from that used on the bycicle and sewing machine to the grade used on the railroad engines, besides paraffine wax, paraffine candles, vaseline, and most of the 'ines' in the drug store, chewing gum, hair oil, all of which are taken from the crude oil. Who do you suppose will control the market for all these by-products ? Is it the man who will manufacture them ? No. You will find the Standard Oil making the first price. Why? Simply because the crude comes in free, and brings in all these by-products with it, and the Standard is, and will be, the only refinery that will handle the American crude. How much will the farmer and the workingman get out of these things ? When the farmer goes to buy lubricating oil for his machinery, will he be able to get it for less ? Will he be able to buy his machinery for less because the manufacturers get the fuel oil in free ?

Will the workman buy his tools at any lower price? Will his benzine to mix paints be cheaper? Will the man with his gasolene and naphtha launch or his automobile obtain any benefit through these articles being on the free list? I fear not. It may be like the Grand Trunk Pacific—start off with a great blowing of trumpets, offering great things to this Dominion, and then, within one short year, fall with a thud, leaving hon. gentlemen opposite sorry for ever having launched such a wild-cat scheme. So, to-day, the Standard reduce the price of refined and raise the price of crude as a sop to the people for what they have accomplished. It is strange how soon the managers of the Standard in the distributing stations jump into print to assure the people that no one is hurt. They have given a regular pyrotechnic display—the Minister of Finance objected to my using the expression 'fireworks,' so I had to hunt up another word. They have been making that display, and, no doubt the government of this country have made arrangements with them practically for that display. Certainly, this is small politics. But rumour has it that the Finance Minister did not prepare this resolution, that it is the production of the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman), who has, without previous knowledge, given out the word that he was thoroughly acquainted with the oil business and knew the condition exactly. Mr. Speaker, I stake my reputation on the assertion that neither of these men prepared the resolution, and that they do not know the meaning of several of the expressions used in it. Who, then, prepared the resolution, if it was not the Finance Minister or the minister-to-be from London? I believe that what I am about to state is a fact, and that is that the resolution was prepared in its entirety by the Standard Oil Trust, and that the principles contained therein were dictated to the government by a representative of that trust. And I defy hon. gentlemen opposite to disprove that charge. The Standard have been operating in this country for about seven years. During that time the price of refined oil has gradually increased. Who can say that the price will not be increased when this storm blows over? Who knows that the price is going to be continued as low as it is to-day. It was not the consumer in this case that agitated the question at this time. No; it was the Standard Oil Trust, and the government could not stand the pressure. I do not find fault with American capital coming into our country and developing our industries. Far from it. But what I do find fault with is an American monopoly, whose policy is dictated from New York controlling the Canadian producers, the Canadian refiner and the Canadian consumer, bleeding the people of this country for all they are worth and taking the profits to New York to pay out fat dividends to American holders of Standard stock. Why do not the Standard Trust, with their millions of capital develop our industry? They have spent some money in wild-catting; why do not they go at the development of this country's oil resources? Oil has been found in many places throughout this country, and it would be most beneficial to the country if the Standard would spend money in developing some outside fields. The Leamington field has given us a new proposition. Formerly we thought the oil was only obtained at about 500 feet below the surface..

Mr. COWAN. Will the hon. gentleman tell us where there was ever a well in the Leamington district at which oil was struck at 500 feet?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) misunderstood what I said. Let me repeat: I said that the Leamington field has given us a new proposition. Formerly, we thought the oil was only obtained 500 feet below the surface. But this field has several large producers at 1,100 feet, being a continuance of the Ohio strata. And these have been found within a few months. Why has not the Standard put money into the development of that field, I would ask the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan)?

Mr. COWAN. I can tell my hon. friend that the development of that field has been by American money principally.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is true; but what encouragement will American capital have to continue in that business under present conditions?

Mr. COWAN. Because——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. COWAN. I will not answer the question if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) who has the floor does not wish me to. He asked a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. COWAN. Well, if the hon. gentlemen object, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is there a man in this House who believes that this change in the tariff will lead the Standard Oil Company to take an interest in the development of the oil industry in this country? I do not believe that even the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) has sufficient faith in the Standard for that.

Mr. COWAN. But I believe that this will raise the price of crude oil.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No, they will let the poor Canadian hunt around, and if he strikes anything real good and sure he will find the man from New York right alongside to divide up with him. We sit here and are asked to vote money for the development of our mining industries, and, at the same time, we strike a blow at one of the greatest mining industries that we have.

Let us look at the producing end of the business. Previous to the 7th instant, the producer and the independent refiner were masters of the situation. To-day the Standard has absolute control. The Ohio field is the nearest oil field to the Standard oil refinery. Consequently they will use no other oil. The price of crude oil in South Lima on the 6th instant was $1.08 ; loading on tank cars, 8 cents ; transportation to water-front, 5 cents ; cost of hauling to Sarnia, 10 cents—making a total cost at the Standard refinery at Sarnia of $1.31. Add to that the bounty of 1½ cents per gallon or 52½ per barrel, and you have a total cost of $1.83½.

Mr. COWAN. Those are not the market quotations at the water-front—$1.31 is not the price of North Lima oil at any water-front point in Ontario.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) that these quotations have been investigated, and these statements have been made on the platform and in front of the Standard Oil Company's representatives, and they did not dare to deny them.

Mr. COWAN. What are the prices to-day ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The price of crude oil in Petrolea on June 6th was $2.09. The difference against the producer and in favour of the Standard is 25½ cents per barrel. Do you expect them to give more to the Canadian producer, when they can get a better article for less money ? What does the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) think now with regard to the producer ?

Mr. HEYD. Does the hon. member mean to say that the Ohio crude is better than the Canadian ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes. The Canadian crude is 31 gravity on the average ? But North and South Lima oil average 38 to 40 gravity. And I will show the hon. gentleman in a few minutes the difference between oil at 31 and oil at 38 to 40 gravity. It will surely be good news to the producer when he sits down to figure it out. Hon. gentlemen opposite will say that the price of crude is raised. Yes, but the Standard is paying on the price of Pennsylvania crude to-day, not on the price of Ohio crude. Will the Standard pay 29 cents per barrel more for a worse article, of a less gravity? Now Ohio crude is of a lighter gravity, as I told hon. gentlemen ; hence more refined oil can be taken out of it, which will give it a preference over Canadian crude. Even at the same price, the Standard could afford to pay more for Ohio, and I will prove that. I have taken here, Sir, 100 gallons of crude oil, 100 gallons of Canadian crude and 100 gallons of Ohio crude, and I have divided them up into their different parts.

CANADIAN CRUDE OIL 31 GRAVITY.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the selling price of all these articles in 100 gallons of Canadian oil, amounts to $9.90. The selling price of all these articles I have referred to in the American oil amounts to $10.93, leaving a difference against the producers of oil in this country of about one cent a gallon. 100 gallons of Ohio crude is worth $1.03 more than is a like amount of Canadian crude. If you add the 25 cents per barrel less than the Standard may pay for Canadian crude oil to the 35 cents per barrel which is the extra value of Ohio crude over the Canadian crude, this gives the Standard trust 60 cents of a lever to hold over the head of the producers and independent refiners in this country, and encourages the Standard to the extent of 60 cents per barrel to use American crude, which in turn wipes out the bounty of 52 cents per barrel, and leaves the producer at a disadvantage of 8 cents per barrel with bounty added. Now, I wonder where you think the producers are with reference to that question. You will be told by hon. gentlemen opposite, who, no doubt obtain any information they require from the Standard Oil Company, that the price paid the producers in Canada has been raised and lowered with the oil market of the United States for years. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that that is not the fact. Pennsylvania crude regulates the price paid in the United States. A little over three years ago Canadian crude oil was selling at $1.75 per barrel, and Pennsylvania at $1.68, a difference of 7 cents in favour of Canadian crude. On the 6th of June, 1904, Canadian oil sold at $2.09 per barrel. On the same date Pennsylvania sold at $1.62 per barrel, a difference in favour of Canadian crude of 47 cents per barrel. Why this difference? What brought it about? Simply the fact that about two years ago an independent refinery was started, and producers had two buyers in the market ever since. This independent refinery has always paid from 2 cents to 3 cents per barrel more for crude than the Standard, hence we do not want to see it wiped out. What else do you do for the producer? You restrict his market A number of producers, as I have mentioned, have been supplying gas companies, railroads and manufacturing companies with crude oil. That market is taken away. What else has been done to the producer? He is held up to the gaze of everybody as a bounty-fed industry? Can you conceive of anything that would damn an industry in the eyes of our people more quickly than to call it a bounty-fed industry? I imagine that I hear hon. gentlemen opposite, in about a year from now shouting on the hustings. Away with this bounty-fed industry; it has no right to live, blot it out. The price of crude is controlled by the Standard, the value of crude is jeopardized, the market restricted, the bounty cry will help to kill us, and worst of all, and more humiliating than anything else, we are entirely given over to the Standard Oil Company, body, brains, boots and everything else. They place whatever restrictions they see fit on our oil. New York dictates, and we must obey. Talk about Canada for Canadians. The government of this country believes in giving up Canada for the Americans, Canada for the monopolists, Canada for the trusts and combines, Canada for the foreigners.

I have been asked the question several times. What is the price paid? Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite can tell something about that. Current gossip in the corridors says it is not less than $500,000, some say $1,000,000. You can depend upon it that when the Standard raises the price of oil one or two cents that amount will be collected from the people in a little over a year. Perhaps the Minister of Finance will explain why he made such a sweeping change when apparently no one outside the Standard Oil Company were asking for it. Not a deputation, so far as I can learn, has been to Ottawa asking for a change. It is only the Standard Oil Company that are asking for the tariff to be reduced. In face of the rising demand to assist other industries, and when the feeling of our people all over Canada is in favour of higher protection, you single out one industry and deal it a blow that will cripple it for many years to come, if not retard its growth for all time. I believe I am justified in demanding of the Minister of Finance on behalf of my people, an explanation why this action is taken. Would it not have been better for the Finance Minister to wipe out this industry instead of encouraging capital to invest in it and then kill it by inches? If you do blot out our business you drive thousands of the best of our people to foreign lands to assist in the development of their oil fields. Thousands of our people know no other business, and they will be obliged to seek other fields where they can find a like business. Mr. Speaker, our people are spending for the development of this industry hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, while, with a stroke of the pen, their lives, financially speaking, may be blotted out. What assurance have our people to-day that their industries will live and be protected for the next thirty days?

If there ever was an industry, that needed a definite tariff policy, it is the oil industry. Let us look for a few moments at the independent refiner.

About two years ago a number of producers and retail men, being dissatisfied with the treatment they were receiving at the hands of the Standard Oil Company, built a refinery, in Petrolea. They have added to it, until they have a plant that cost them $250,000. Within the past few months they have enlarged the company, until they have among its stockholders, some 300 of the brightest and best men in Canada. They have purchased distributing stations in the principal cities and towns in our Dominion, and are fighting the Standard all along the line. They had a deputation here a few days before the 7th, to wait on the Finance Minister begging of him to leave the duty alone. What did the Finance Minister mean when he said on page 4508 of 'Hansard:'

But there are two interests to be considered in the oil industry—the interests of the oil producer and the interest of the oil refiner.

I wonder if the hon. Minister of Finance had more than one refinery in his mind at that time. He must have known that there are only two refineries in this country and that one of these, the Standard Oil Company have been here begging and pleading to him to reduce the duty while the other company have been here begging and pleading to him to keep the duty on. He seems to have acceded to the wishes of the Standard Oil Company in that respect.

The Canadian capitalists can go. They can look for places to invest their money elsewhere. Did he think of the independent refiner then? No, the Standard was on top and the poor Canadian refiner must suffer. There is only one independent refinery in Canada, and they came begging to the government, not to allow crude oil into our country at a reduction.

I wonder what these men think to-day. I wonder how they will like to take their orders from New York.

Up to the 7th of this month they were a free and independent company, bought crude oil in the open market, and owing to good business management were able to compete with the Standard Trust.

What is their position to-day? Do you expect them to build pipe lines to Toledo, build boats to bring the oil to Sarnia, build a pipe line from Sarnia to Petrolea, a distance of 17 miles, when they find that they have the Standard to fight in the American market for crude, and the Canadian market for refined, and by-products?

No, there is not a man in this House would put a dollar into a venture of that kind.

Since coming into business, they have paid the producer from 2 to 3 cents per barrel more for their crude oil, than did the Standard.

Will the producer want to see them wiped out? No, most emphatically, no.

You cannot expect any company with a working capital of a few hundred thousand dollars, to compete with another company with a few hundred millions, and especially when the larger company has the advantage, at every turn, and more especially with the Standard Oil Company with a reputation that is among the blackest on the pages of history.

The most profitable end of the refining is the by-products, and as every barrel of crude brought into our country, brings with it, all the by-products, the Standard will naturally have absolute control of that end to the detriment of the independent refiner. Consequently the independent refiner, wherever he may be situated, in our country, is without a shadow of a doubt under the control of the Standard Oil Trust.

The Standard control the price of crude, and the price of refined in the United States. On the 7th of this month they were given absolute control of the crude and refined market in Canada, and having that, they control the price of all the by-products, and last but not the least they control the price the consumer will pay.

I have tried to prove to you that the producer and the independent refiner are in the hands of the Standard Trust. Now a few words with reference to the position of the consumer.

With the Standard Oil Company having full control over the price of crude, and the price of refined, and the by-products, where else can the consumer be but receive his price dictated from New York? Does the farmer and workingman expect to get his oil cheaper? Time alone will tell that. It may be said cheaper to-day. He will eventually land where he has before when alleged attempts were made to help him by this government.

The history of the Standard Oil has been written several times, and any of you who wish to read, will learn, that the Standard have bought railroads, pipe lines, refineries, men councils, representatives in parliament, and dare I say governments?

We will admit that the crude oil will come into this country, be manufactured and the by-products sold here. Let us see what that will do.

Take the Finance Minister's figures; he says the consumption of refined oil in Canada is 25,755,450 gallons.

He says the saving to the people of 2½ cents per gallon on that quantity will amount to $643,886.

If the refined oil is all manufactured in Canada, as the Finance Minister states will be done, then there will not be any duty to collect, and instead of a saving it will be a loss.

Let us look at the true state of affairs. The government collected in duties on oil and its by-products in 1903, $885,945.44.

Now the crude coming in free brings with it the by-products, and the qualities that make refined oil. No refined is imported. Consequently the loss to the country in revenue is $885,945.44.

Add to that the bounty as estimated by the Finance Minister, $225,789, and we find a total loss of $1,111,734.44 to the revenue of this country and nothing gained.

This amount will be taken from the people in some other way by the government, but then the Standard Oil Company require it to help pay the 700 per cent dividend, to the New York stockholders.

The petroleum industry has done a great deal towards increasing the revenue of this country.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of pump tubing, gas pipe, lead pipe, casing-boiler plate, wire rope, iron and steel, and well supplies of different kinds, are imported each year on which duty is collected and these goods are used in the oil development, or if they were made in Canada would afford employment to Canadian workmen.

It is estimated that 1,000 cars of soft coal come into Petrolea alone, each year, practically all of which are used in the producing and manufacture of oil.

The Standard brings soft coal in at Sarnia by the boat load.

Why did not the Finance Minister take the duty off soft coal ? I am sure that he could do nothing that could please the people of Ontario better. Why not take it off for mining purposes, if nothing else.

Tens of thousands of dollars are collected from the oil men each year as duty on the articles mentioned.

Would it not be following out the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, to have the coal and the articles we cannot purchase in Canada, such as casing, tubing of different kinds, wire rope, and many other articles, that we are compelled to buy and pay duty on, placed on the free list.

I want it to be distinctly understood that I am not in favour of a free trade policy. I am not a free trader. I do not believe in free trade as it is in England like hon. gentlemen opposite, or in reciprocity, or in annexation with the United States.

One of the Standard Oil Company arguments and one which will be used no doubt by hon. gentlemen opposite, is that the oil fields of Canada, are exhausted, and they have tested them and no new fields can be found. That statement was made by them months ago. Since that time the Leamington field has made great developments, and an entirely new field within ten miles of their refinery is being developed.

The fields being developed to-day, are as follows : The Petrolea field, Oil Springs, Bothwell, Dutton, Leamington, Pelee Island, Euphemia, Thamesville and Chatham. These are all producing fields.

Then there is large development work going on in New Brunswick, and the Northwest Territories, besides drilling rigs scattered throughout different parts of our country.

Remember that 12,000 people at least are directly interested in our industry, and every farmer in Essex, Kent, Lambton, Elgin and Middlesex would like to have his farm tested for oil.

Remember the oil business is a matter of labour, from beginning to end. Pumping rigs, drilling tools, boiler works, machine shops, refineries, well supplies of all kinds ; the handling of the oil, every move you make requires the labouring man, who with the farmer is the bone and sinue of this country.

No credit has apparently been given the oil business, for developing the gas fields of this country, and furnishing towns and villages with fuel and light. At Leamington the other day a well was struck that poured out as reported, gas at the rate of six million cubic feet per day. I wonder that more companies are not formed in different parts of our country to develop for oil or gas. The natural gas and petroleum report for 1891 gives a number of places outside of the developed fields where oil has been found. It tells of oil being found near Collingwood, also in Wentworth county, in Barton township, in Oxford county, at Norwich, Ontario in Bruce and in the city of Ottawa. Who can tell but that gentlemen opposite while legislating here to injure the oil producers of this country are not sitting on top of rivers of oil. These are all outside of the tested oil fields, and if logs could be obtained of the dozens of wells drilled, much more interesting reports could be obtained. This report is thirteen years old. It looks like as if it had been kept in the cellar. Look at the oil development in the United States exporting $70,000,000 worth representing 1,070,000,000 gallons more than the home consumption. The total amount exported from Russia in American gallons, more than she consumed in 1902, was 422,488,925 gallons. I might tell you of Galicia, Austria-Hungary, Roumania, Germany, Itlay, Great Britain, New South Wales, New Zealand, Algeria, Persia, Dutch East Indies, Sumatia, Borneo, Java, Phillipine Islands, Hawaii, Korea, all of these countries produce petroleum many of them in very large quantities and here we are with a country big enough to bury half of them, and we are told by the Standard Oil Company that our oil fields are exhausted.

War if constantly pursued by a nation is sure to destroy its trade and commerce, and very soon will bring it to bankruptcy, so with the oil industry. Constant tinkering with the tariff ; members of parliament for ever howling on the platform condemning it ; the press in many instances only too glad to get a slap at it ; a government with an unsetttled policy ; all this is enough to drive any industry to the wall, and discourage capital. Give the oil business a settled tariff ; give us a full report of our labours ; give us the encouragement of the press ; give us the support of the members of parliament for ten years, and I feel confident that we will not only supply our home market, but that Uncle Sam will have to raise his duty higher to keep us out. Not only that but we will bring millions of dollars into this country from foreign lands. On the other hand let the government, the press, and the people of this country keep on discouraging our industry, and it is bound to diminish our chances of success. I have great faith in the industry, but I have no faith in the hon. gentlemen opposite.

I imagine I see them on the hustings holding forth to their electors, with arms outstretched, and their voices at the highest pitch, telling the electors the wonders they have accomplished, in reducing the duty on refined oil, and placing crude oil on the free list. But then, Mr. Speaker, all the gentlemen opposite will not take that course, it would be quite out of keeping with the policy of the government of this country, if they were to follow one set of rules for the whole of Canada. They are a kind of go as you please party, with a policy for every riding. I can imagine I see the member for Brantford (Mr. Heyd) telling his constituents that they are all right, but what does his constituents say—I quote from the Toronto 'World' of April 13, 1904:

'AGAINST REDUCTION IN DUTY.

Brantford Board of Trade suspicious of Standard Oil.

Brantford, April 12.—(Special.)—A strong resolution protesting against the reduction of the duty on crude oil from the United States was carried by the Board of Trade here tonight. A. K. Bunnell, city treasurer, in introducing the motion, stated that the movement for the duty reduction was being instituted by the Standard Oil Company under the pretext of making oil cheaper for Canadian consumers and incidentally giving employment to more men in their factory at Sarnia.

Mr. Bunnell further pointed out that the history of the company did not indicate that it would be advisable for them to enter the Canadian field more than at present. They would, he said, retard the future development of the Canadian oil fields and eventually increase the price of oil for the consumer.

A copy of the resolution will be forwarded to C. B. Heyd, M.P.

Then the member for West Lambton (Mr. T. G. Johnston) who assures you, that he has smooth sailing, and is perfectly satisfied with the result, had better listen to this little matter that happened in his own town. I quote from the Toronto 'Telegram' the following:

LOWER DUTY ON OIL.

Sarnia Trades Council will not declare itself on the question.

Sarnia, March 15—With Mayor Cook and President Gedes, of the Board of Trade, and eight other representative citizens, President George Lambert, of the Sarnia Trades and Labour Council, was recently numbered on a committee to petition for reduction of the import duty on crude oil, as desired by the Standard refining interests here. Lambert was not present at the public meeting which appointed the committee and has been unwilling to take an active part in the appointed work until he received the advice of his trade body, at the same time declining to sign the petition on behalf of the 800 men who constitute the council. It is now given out authoritatively that the Trades Council withhold any say in the matter of the duty reduction—neither supporting nor opposing it, and leaving their president to act as he sees fit individually. The labour men do not go into particulars in reporting their action to the public, but explain that inasmuch as the settlement of the question will affect every union organization in Canada as well as the Standard Oil Company, the wishes of the Trades Council at Sarnia—the Standard's Canadian headquarters—are better left unexpressed, however honest they might be.

The deputation will proceed to Ottawa as soon as Dr. Johnston, M.P., for West Lambton, intimates the time that the ministry is willing to go over the oil question.

I might also call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Brant to the 'Courier' of the 4th of March.

Mr. COWAN. A very strong Conservative paper.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What about the Galt 'Reporter'?

Mr. COWAN. I don't know.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Suffice it to say that all these newspapers condemn in the strongest terms any action being taken by the government in the direction indicated. The poor man's vote counts for as much as the vote of the manager of the Standard Oil Company, and these 800 men will see through the deal, aimed at ruining their Canadian co-workers in Petrolea, and elsewhere, and will resent the action of the member for West Lambton. But what about the hundreds of farmers in his townships, with oil wells on their farms? I feel confident that when the farmers of those townships realize the position they have been placed in by this government, they will resent it, and resent it most emphatically. It will take more than standard talk and standard money to obtain their votes. How will they like to be bounty fed, when their market is practically wiped out by the Standard Oil Company? How about the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan)? In what way will he vote?

Mr. COWAN. I have no complaint.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What will he say to the farmers in the new oil field which is to be of great value to our industry? The Finance Minister could have read him petitions from that direction that would be instructive, asking the business to be left alone. Here is what the 'Wheatley Journal,' has to say:

Mr. J. Woodward, the well known oil expert and drilling contractor of Oil Springs, Ont., has been visiting the Wheatley and Leamington oil fields during the past few days and has pronounced the outlook one of the best for the largest producing oil fields in the Dominion. Mr. Woodward states that the depth of the wells, being four times that of wells in other Canadian fields, indicates long life to wells. The rock is all limestone, except the surface, with a light gravity of oil and plenty of gas, which is a feature of the best producing American fields. Mr. Woodward is a man of twenty-six years experience in the oil business in all its branches, and in his judgment thinks that we have the largest oil fields in western Ontario, and from what he can learn, is of the opinion that if the tariff on crude oil is not removed during the present session of parliament it will not be asked for again for many a long year.

Mr. COWAN. That is Mr. Woodward's opinion. That is not the 'Wheatley's Journal's' opinion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, we will have to try and get something else to satisfy the hon. gentleman. Here is something :

Leamington, Ont., March 30.—Another oil gusher was struck here on Saturday when the Leamington Oil Company shot its No. 3 well. Thirty quarts of nitro glycerine were used for the shooting, starting 600,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

Mr. COWAN. They say the gas is all played out up there.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Perhaps you brought some of it down to Ottawa.

On the same evening oil started to flow and on the following afternoon 80 barrels had flown into the company's tanks. The natural gas escaping from the well at present is estimated to be about 600,000 cubic feet a day, and the company is negotiating to supply the town of Leamington with gas.

I can imagine, Mr. Speaker, that these gentlemen are not anxious to have the duty on crude oil reduced. What about the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver)? I believe he is out of the House at present. I might refer to what the Montreal 'Herald' of April 4, 1904, says :

Important oil strike.—Advices have been received in the Canadian Pacific Railway offices of an important oil strike in the Swift Current district, near Cranston, Alberta. It has been known for some time that oil existed there, but the first big strike was reported on March 22. The latest report is that a well has been sunk and an output of fifteen barrels a day is being secured.

I might also refer you to the Winnipeg 'Telegram' with reference to that field. It starts off thus in big letters :

Largest oil fields in America. Such will prove the Alberta petroleum districts. Former Winnipegger tells of richness of western fields.

I will not take time to read this, Mr. Speaker, but will hurry on. How will the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) vote ? Let us see what comes from Dunnville :

There is considerable excitement here over the discovery of oil while a local company was drilling for natural gas, which abounds in this district. They struck a vein of crude oil at a depth of 800 feet on the farm of Joseph Boose, six miles from here. In six hours the flow produced a barrel of a fine grade of amber crude oil, which would be equivalent to four barrels a day.

I can imagine that the hon. member for Haldimand will be voting with the government on this occasion. I might also refer to the New Brunswick field, in which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) who is also absent from the House, is directly interested. I cannot believe that he will approve of this great injury being done to the oil industry of this country. I might continue, Mr. Speaker, but will only refer to one or two other members. One, the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) the only man in this country who claims to know the needs of the oil industry. I wonder if he is interested in this company. You would naturally expect a man that knows all about an industry to have some practical interest in that industry. I wonder if these men will approve of his action. The London 'Free Press' says :

A London syndicate with a capital of $5,000 have leased for gas or oil purposes several farms south of St. Mary's, and will begin operations of boring for gas or oil at once.

I might also refer to the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes), who quotes from papers, and tries to get satisfaction out of them. He referred to Mr. Fairbanks, whom hon. gentlemen opposite will probably refer to frequently. All I can say is that Mr. Fairbanks is a perfect gentleman in every way, an ex-Reform member of this House and is a crude oil producer. He sold to the Standard Oil Company the first refinery that they purchased in this country. He was one of the strongest advocates of the reduction of the duty to two cents per gallon, and has assisted the Standard Oil Company in every possible way. The hon. gentleman also refers to telegrams of congratulations which have been received, from Standard supporters no doubt. The hon. member would like to see a greater spirit of national independence—these are the words he used. Is he likely to obtain this through driving our industries out of existence ? Not one member opposite has given more than a passing remark with reference to the oil question. Most of them frankly admit that they do not know much about it ; but when it comes to voting on the tariff, you will find them coming into their place, and when the First Minister cracks the whip they will all bob up serenely.

But then the ordinary Reformer looks upon the tariff as a measure to be treated in any way that may be to the advantage of the person discussing it.

I must mention an argument that I have heard advanced by an hon. member opposite. He came rushing to me as though he had found something, and said: Armstrong, I have a solution of the whole problem. Your people are all right. I said : How is that? The reply was: Why, formerly refined fixed the price of crude. Now crude fixes the price of refined. That was some days ago, and I haven't found the point yet. I imagine that remark must have had its origin with the man that knows all about the business.

Hon. gentlemen opposite don't seem to have the same fear of the Standard Oil Company as had Judge Lister, the late M.P. for West Lambton, who on June 20th, 1887, made these statements on the floor of the House:

I deny the statement of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) that the foreign oil is better than the oil manufactured here. I say that the oil manufactured here is equal to any petroleum oil manufactured in the world. I frankly admit that in the past the oil was inferior, but the difficulties which the refiners encountered have been overcome, and we are manufacturing to-day as fine a burning oil as can be produced in the world. In regard to the question of protection, every one understands the ground which I take upon that, and the ground which the party with which I am associated takes; but I say that, if the protection to native industries is the policy of the government, it would be unfair to this immense and growing interest to do anything to cripple it at the present moment. We know perfectly well, as far as the United States are concerned, that the whole oil interest of the United States is practically controlled by the Standard Oil Company, and we know that they have been bringing oil into this country to sell at a less price than the cost of producing it, in order to get the control of this market. It would be against the interest of this large industry to do what my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not 100 per cent enough?

Mr. LISTER. 100 per cent? The moment you strangle that industry you will get the price put up at once. The people of Canada are to-day getting their oil much cheaper than they ever did before. If my hon. friend from the sea thinks he will be able to get it cheaper, perhaps he would for a time, but the moment the Standard Oil Company came here, he would have to pay a higher price; and to put the trade restrictions which my hon. friend proposes here would be to give them an advantage of at least 15 or 20 per cent more. So long as this is the policy of the government, that interest—the oil industry—ought to be protected and preserved against the United States as any other in the country. If free trade is to be the order of the day, that interest must go with the rest, unable to exist without a high rate of duty; but, if protection is to rule, that industry, which is a Canadian industry, a purely native one, an industry belonging peculiarly to Canada, should be looked after as well as any others.

Also at 1148 of 'Hansard' of the same year, he said:

So far as the manufacturers to-day are concerned, they are manufacturing an oil better than ever manufactured in Canada, and an oil equal in every respect in its burning qualities to that manufactured in the United States, and safer, so far as inflammable qualities are concerned, than any made in the States. The hon. gentleman has told us that there is a duty of 100 or 120 per cent. I say there is no such duty at all. The hon. gentleman will readily understand that the amount of the duty depends on the cost of the refined article. Sometimes it is 60 per cent, sometimes 50, sometimes 70; but, be that as it may, as far as this industry is concerned, under the previous administration this protection or duty, or whatever you may be pleased to call it, was put upon coal oil, and under that duty the industry has gone on and assumed the proportions it has attained to-day. And I may say to hon. gentleman that, in spite of the high protection which the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) speaks about, the oil industry of Canada to-day is in a most depressed condition. Crude oil is worth less than 70 cents per barrel, and this is a lower price than has been reached, except on one occasion, in the whole history of the oil trade in this country, and refined oil is cheaper than it ever was before. I will not pretend to say that it is as cheap as it would be if there was no duty upon it at all. I do say, however, that, if you take off the duty, the Standard Refining Company have but one object and that is to secure the Canadian market, one way or the other, and destroy the oil interests of Canada, and, if they succeed in doing that, the people of Canada would have to pay a much greater price for their oil than they are paying to-day. This is a large industry in this country; it is an industry belonging exclusively to Canada, and if there is any industry which requires to be fostered in this country it is the oil industry.

Perhaps the Finance Minister thinks by bringing about this state of affairs he will raise a popular cry for his followers. They can say with extended chests: Look at what we have done—cut the tariff in two on coal oil, crude oil free, by-products reduced. Is there an election near? And the Grand Trunk Pacific not quite ripe enough to pick.

Or is the government in a tight corner on the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme and wish to attract attention in a different direction?

Canadians look at the refined oil selling for a lower price in the United States, but do not take into consideration that the Americans sell by wine measure, while we have to sell by imperial measure, which is $\frac{1}{5}$ more, for instance oil quoted on the other side at 12 cents per wine gallon, would cost at the same price 14½ cents per imperial gallon. Instead of the American paying part of the tariff to get their crude oil, and the by-products into Canada as they did before, the Canadians pay the bounty now and loose the revenue. The manufacturer in this country will naturally ask, whose head will next come under the Reform free trade axe.

The government claim that by reducing the duty on oil, it will reduce the price to the consumer. Let us see how this policy has worked out in the past seven years, under hon. gentlemen opposite. I find the following figures in the Trade and Navigation Returns:

In the year 1897, the amount of binder twine imported into this country for home consumption, amounted to 3,364,840 pounds, valued at $180,190, plus duty of 10 per cent, $22,198, making a total of $202,388, which makes the price to the importer, with customs duty added, six cents per pound. The government made a promise to the farmers that by abolishing the duty, it would reduce the price to the consumer. Let us see how that was carried out.

In 1903 there was entered for home consumption: Imported, 14,204,515 pounds, valued at $1,810,238, which makes the price to the importer at the port of entry 12½ cents per pound. You will observe that as the result of taking off the duty, the farmer has had to pay 6½ cents a pound for his binder twine, an increase of one hundred per cent and a loss to the farmers of this country of $823,273.47. Then what about the hundreds of workmen who might be employed in manufacturing that binder twine in this country? They are not taken into consideration by this government. And here our factories are shut down and our farmers are to-day in the hands of the binder twine trust of the United States, and paying twice as much for twine.

Let us look at barbed wire fencing imported for home consumption. In 1897 we imported 5,034,499 pounds, valued at $80,467, plus duty at 15 per cent, $12,506. Total, $92,973. This gives cost per pound of 1 8-10 cents to the importer. When barbed wire was duty free to the farmer, the government said: Surely you will get it at a great deal less price than before. Let us see how that works out. In 1903 we imported for home consumption 30,503,400 pounds. Just think of the number of men that would employ if manufactured in our own country. This amount was valued at $702,809, which, without duty, gives a valuation of 2 3-10 cents per pound, and proves to-day, that barbed wire fencing costs the farmers ½ a cent per pound more in 1903, without the duty, than it did in 1897, with a 15 per cent duty.

The loss to the farmers of our country is $152,517, and the increase in the cost of wire 28 per cent. We imported in 1897, 5,034,499 pounds, and in 1903 30,503,400 pounds. I wonder how many American workmen are engaged in the manufacture of these articles for us. It would be very interesting to have statistics to show the amount of money that has been paid out to workmen in the United States for the manufacture of these articles. This government reduced the duty on coal oil in 1897 and gave the Standard Oil Company the privilege of bringing in oil in tank ships: Result, an increased cost to the consumer of about 75 per cent. With the same flourish of trumpets, to catch the votes of consumers, they are making use of the same arguments with reference to the coal oil industry that they did with reference to the binder twine and barbed wire industry. Let us read, as a fitting climax of these arguments, what the hon. Minister of Finance has to say against trusts.

Mr. PATERSON. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) allow me to ask him a question? If I understand him, he is arguing that by taking off the duty, the price of the article in our market was enhanced. Would the same effect be produced with regard to crude oil by putting it on the free list? Like causes, we are told, produce like effects.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Restricting the manufacturer and the producer in this country and turning over these industries to the trusts, what can you expect but to have these articles increased in price? I was about to quote the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on the subject of trusts.

> It seems to be the inevitable result of high tariff policy that monopolies, trusts and combines will flourish. They may exist even in low tariff countries, but they could not possibly flourish under other conditions.

They have been able to flourish apparently under the low tariff policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Think of the trusts and monopolies this government have created in the eight years they have been in power. The Standard Oil Company came into this country about the time this government assumed office. Perhaps the campaign fund was assisted then. Another election being not far off, further assistance is required and the people will continue to pay, pay, pay. Every man who votes for this resolution is a Standard man and will be so branded throughout the Dominion. As representatives of this great Canada, we are sent here to do justice to all without fear or favour. Then, do not give away our industry to a foreign trust, and compel the producer, the consumer, and the independent refiner to receive their instructions from New York. The jubilee was a grand thing for us Canadians. It brought us nearer to Great Britain and made us better subjects. The Boer war, though it is to be deplored, yet brought us closer to the mother country. Our brothers and sons shed their blood that we might receive the protection of this mighty empire. The British preference will cement us still closer. We are all glad that we are British subjects, glad that we are living under the British flag. The greatest pride we have is that we are Canadian British subjects. Then, let us protect our country, protect our people, protect our industries so as to let foreigners know that they are welcome to come in and assist in developing our resources and to help to build up our industries; but, if their object is to tear down and destroy for the sake of filling their coffers in foreign lands, then, we want none of them.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). I suppose the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) who has just taken his seat does not expect me to go as fully as he has done into discussion of the oil question. Unfortunately, I am not as familiar as he is with that industry, and, if I undertake to discuss the question of the effect of the duties now, such action on my part might seem premature. In opening my remarks Mr. Speaker, I may say that it is with certain hesitation that I undertake to speak before this House in a language with which I am not very familiar. I know that when one speaks in a language that is not his mother tongue, he exposes himself to the danger of making very grave mistakes. And we find, Sir, in the political discussion of these latter days, that certain men and certain newspapers are not above taking advantage of mistakes of expression by those who are speaking in another language than their mother tongue, to cast upon them very serious reflection. Therefore, I say, I hesitate all the more in undertaking to speak in a language with which I am not very familiar. At the same time if, in the discussion of the questions which I shall touch upon to-day, I use some expressions improperly, I expect that there is fairness enough and sense of justice enough in this House to cause my mistakes to be overlooked.

My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) who has just taken his seat tried to convince this House that the government was pledged to support the Standard Oil trust in the change of duties that have been submitted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I may tell the hon. gentleman at once that the government in undertaking to reduce the duties on refined and crude oil, has not acted at the instance of the Standard Oil Trust, but, on the contrary, had in view in the revision of the tariff the sole benefit of the people of this country. I am sorry that the hon. member has thought fit to cast a slur upon the government in this connection. Had he known what this government has done against the Standard Oil Trust on past occasions, even within late years, I am sure he would not have said what he did on that point. Does the hon. gentleman forget that, some years ago, when the Standard Oil Company came to this country they made a combine agreement with the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific railway, by which their oil should be transported from Sarnia to Montreal at a less price than the oil imported from the United States by way of Niagara Falls to Montreal. That question was brought before the government. Complaint was formally made of discrimination on the part of these two railway companies; and the government, after having investigated the question and given it full consideration decided to break down that combine agreement between the Standard Oil Company's side and the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Company's. In that instance, the government certainly showed that they were faithful servants of the people. Other instances could be given of the same kind. Let one suffice. Some years ago there was in Montreal an independent company engaged in the oil trade—the Gall-Schneider Oil Company. When this government introduced its measure under which oil might be imported into this country in tank vessels, this Independent Company petitioned the government for the right to use a piece of land in Montreal fronting on the Lachine canal. And the government, seeing that the granting of this privilege would contribute to make this company absolutely independent of the Standard Oil Trust, came once more to the rescue of the people, once more decided the question against the Standard Oil Trust and leased the piece of land required, thus making it possible for the Independent Company to bring in oil in tank vessels as the Standard Oil Company were doing.

Here is another instance, and now, because this government thinks fit to reduce the duty on coal oil, not for the benefit of the Standard Oil Company but in order that we may be delivered from the shackles of the Standard Oil Trust, this government is charged with being the friends of that trust. I am sorry, Sir, that the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Armstrong) has chosen to discuss this question in that light. In reference to the coal oil duty he seems to be able to see only two companies, the Canadian or Independent Refining Company, and the Standard Oil Company. The government is not acting in favour of either one of these companies, the government is acting solely with the interest of the people of this country in view. My hon. friend speaks of the Independent Refinery as not receiving from this government sufficient protection. The majority of the shares of this company are not owned by Canadians, they are mostly in the hands of Americans, and will my hon. friend tell me how much watered stock that independent company, which has in the last few years raised the price of oil in combination with the Standard, after having increased the price as they have done—will he tell me how much watered stock they have issued during these three years? If I am correctly informed, and I know something about it, this company was formed three years ago. The next year after it was formed it paid a large dividend, in the second year it issued 40 per cent of watered stock; and I am informed that not long ago it issued more stock, or those who had stock in that company took some stock in another company, at 100 per cent of what the stock cost those people. Now we see how independent these people are, and how they are working for the interests of our own citizens. We were in the hands of these two companies and the government thought to reduce the duty on coal oil in order to give our own people more protection and cheaper oil. The hon. gentleman says there was an understanding between the Standard Oil Company and this government because the very next day after the Minister of Finance delivered his budget speech, there was a reduction on coal oil. I see by the papers that not only did the Standard Oil Company reduce their price, but the Gall-Schneider Company which is affiliated with that Independent Company has also reduced its price by the same amount as the one by which the duty was reduced. Mr. Speaker, I assert that this step of the government has been taken exclusively for the benefit of our own people, and has already inured to their benefit. I do not wish to discuss at greater length the coal oil question which has been discussed by my hon. friend from Lambton.

If you will permit me I will refer briefly to some of the subjects discussed last night by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson). In that speech the hon. gentleman spoke of the preference, and condemned in strong terms this government for having given a preference to Great Britain. I was much surprised to hear the hon. member for Lennox make that statement. Sir, in 1897 this government thought it would be in the interest of this country to give a preference to Great Britain, and we already witness the good effects of that policy in the fact that our trade with Great Britain has increased enormously. The policy of giving a preference to the English manufacturer in our market has induced the British consumer to buy more largely of our products.

Now, Sir, we are charged by some hon. members opposite with having reduced the British preference. The statement is absolutely incorrect, and I will prove it. If the hon. gentleman will look at all the facts he will see that so far from having reduced the preference, on the whole we have increased it. Take the woollen industry. On woollens there was a preference of 33⅓, but by the change in our tariff that preference is reduced to 14·28. On cordage the preference is reduced to 20 per cent. In these two instances only have we reduced the preference to a certain extent. But at the same time we have increased the preference on certain other classes of goods which are sent to this country, a reduction which will operate both for the benefit of Great Britain and for the benefit of Canada. Take chinaware, in which we have increased the preference to 50 per cent. On window glass we have increased it to 62·50 per cent; so that if we have reduced the preference on the two items I have mentioned, we have increased it on two other items. Taking the four items together, we find that the average preference amounts to 46·79 per cent, or 13·46 per cent more than we had before.

In face of this fact how can hon. gentlemen assert that the government has reduced the preference?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lennox went on to say that we had increased taxation, because, as he says, the revenues have been larger. Well, Sir, it is possible to have a larger revenue without at the same time increasing the taxes levied upon the people. How is that to be done? Under a very high tariff with absolutely no imports, the revenues will be much less, because, instead of the articles being imported they are manufactured here; and though the people pay more taxes, the money goes into the pockets of the manufacturers instead of into the public chest. But it is also possible to have larger revenues at the same time that you reduce the taxes levied upon the people. Let me prove that by this statement. In 1890 the average rate of duty levied upon imports our total imports was 21·21 per cent. The average rate of duty from 1896 to 1903, both inclusive, was as follows:

	Per cent.
In 1896..	18·28
In 1897..	17·87
In 1898..	16·95
In 1899..	16·70
In 1900..	15·98
In 1901..	16·06
In 1902..	15.99
In 1903..	15·87

So, Mr. Speaker, instead of having increased the taxes of the people we have virtually decreased them as I have just proven. We have been charged also by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) with having largely increased our expenditure. It has been shown by my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) how this increase of expenditure has been brought about. But, I may say that we have virtually not increased the expenditure in some respects because we are now charging less to the country for the collection of the revenues that go into the public chest than was charged under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite. I think this is a fair criterion as to whether the government has been economical or lavish in its expenditure. I find by the reports, that in the Department of Customs in 1895-6, the last year of the Conservative regime, for every $100 that the Minister of Customs was receiving the country was expending $4.43 to collect that money. Now, as a result of the devotion to the public interest of a man like my hon. friend the minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) we find, that, instead of expending $4.43 to collect $100, we are simply spending $3.31 to collect $100 or a reduction of $1.12 per $100. I will not claim the same credit for myself but I will claim the same credit for the department which I have the honour to administer. In 1895-6, the last year of the Conservative regime, for every $100 collected it cost the Inland Revenue Department $5. Now, we see that in the year 1902-3, instead of it costing $5 for each $100 collected, it only cost $3.50 and I expect that this year we will have a better showing still than that.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman a less number now engaged and paid than in 1896 in connection with the Inland Revenue Department ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether my hon. friend has understood exactly the point that I have made.

Mr. CLANCY. Quite.

Mr. BRODEUR. All that I wanted to prove was that when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power—I know he is not responsible for it because he was not then in this House—it took $5 to collect $100 while during the year 1903 it only took $3.50 to collect the same $100.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not the question I asked.

Mr. BRODEUR. Whether we have a larger number of employees or whether we are spending a larger sum that shows all the same that we are very much more economical than his friends were.

Mr. CLANCY. Not a bit of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think that cannot be disputed. I am sorry that a man of the intelligence and brilliancy of my hon. friend from Bothwell should dispute such a fact as that. If to collect $100 it costs to-day $3.50 and if some years ago it cost $5 to collect the same amount of money it seems to me a very simple proposition that this government is more economical than the other government was.

Now, the hon. member for Lennox stated that we had increased the debt considerably. It has been shown several times already that on account of the large surpluses we have had in the last few years instead of increasing the debt it has virtually been decreased. But, the best way to ascertain whether the debt has increased or decreased is to take the debt per head. I suppose my hon. friend from Bothwell will not deny that the debt per head is very much less to-day than it was in 1895 and 1896.

Mr. CLANCY. The debt per head is, as the hon. minister has stated, less for two reasons. One is that the population has increased and the other is that we have been able to renew our loans at a lower rate than formerly.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but at the same time my hon. friend does not deny the fact that the debt has decreased. I am very glad to have that admission and it shows once more that I was perfectly right a few minutes ago in appealing to his intelligence and briliancy to endorse what I was saying.

Now, coming to the question of the tariff, I may say, that it has been charged against the administration of this government that we have an enormous balance of trade against us in our relations with the United States. It is true that apparently there is a balance of trade against us in our relations with the United States, but if we take the trouble to compare and examine the figures, we find that instead of having a balance of trade against us we have virtually a balance of trade in our favour. We imported last year for home consumption from the United States goods to the value of $128,790,237. We exported goods to the value of $71,209,969, leaving a balance apparently against us of $57,580,268. But we must admit that out of this $128,790,237, $60,000,000 worth represented goods which came into this country free and I suppose nobody would dispute the fact that these goods which come from the United States free are not imported for the benefit of the United States but are imported for the benefit of Canada. I will try to show by some figures how these importations were for the benefit of Canada. Take coal ; we imported more than $7,000,000 worth of coal. I suppose nobody will deny that it was for the benefit of this country. It is a well known fact that we have no hard coal in this country. We have to go to the United States and will anybody deny that it was for the benefit of this country that we imported that $7,000,000 worth of coal ? The following table will show the goods we imported free of duty.

GOODS IMPORTED FREE OF DUTY.

Goods.	Value.
Corn	$ 3,250,329
Coal	7,835,936
Cordage	2,054,494
Cotton	6,532,939
Drugs	2,397,801
Furs	1,207,123
India rubber	1,816,682
Metals and minerals	10,526,740
Seeds and roots	1,345,629
Settlers' effects	5,289,883
Tobacco	2,241,297
Wood	5,023,038
Wool	351,509
Sundries	10,380,514
Total value	$60,251,914

I suppose that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) will not deny that the importation of wool free of duty is to the benefit of the country. We have, therefore, imported free of duty goods to the value of $60,251,914, and deducting this from the total imports of $128,790,237, instead of having a balance of trade against us we have virtually a balance in our favour of $2,671,646. Let me put that in this way : The balance of trade is apparently against us. We imported for home consumption last year $128,790,237. We exported $71,209,969, leaving a balance of $57,580,268. Of this $128,790,237 on exports $60,251,914 are on goods which came in here free. In deducting this last sum from the above sum we reach a balance of $68,538,323, imports upon which duties are levied. Our exports being as above quoted, $71,209,969, our dutiable exports being $68,538,323, we have virtually a balance in our favour of $2,671,646.

It would certainly not be fair in establishing the balance of trade between Canada and the United States to 'mettre en ligne de compte' raw material required for our markets or imports for the benefit of our farmers and producers.

Day after day the Conservative newspapers are calling upon us to adopt the same tariff against American goods as the Americans have against our goods. It has been stated time and again, both in this House and outside, and especially in the province of Quebec during these last two years, that it would be a great benefit to the farmers of Canada if we put the same duty on agricultural products coming from the United States as the United States duty on our products. I am here to assert, Mr. Speaker, that if we increase our customs duties on United States agricultural products, instead of it benefiting our farmers, it would expose them to retaliation which might prevent them from exporting any of their products to the United States. Take, for example, the commodity of hay. We imported from the United States last year hay to the value of $126,645. That seems to be quite a large amount, and the Conservative newspapers of Montreal frequently quote it, and say to the farmers: 'Look how you are treated, you produce large quantities of hay in your own fields, but at the same time the government allows this enormous quantity to come in from the United States.' Well, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the other side of the question it is not so alarming. The Conservative newspapers, while they give the figures for our imports of hay from the United States, always neglect to state that we exported last year to the United States hay to the value of $3,596,557. That is not such a bad showing after all, then we can set off this $126,000 worth of hay imported against the $3,500,000 worth that we exported. But there is also another side to the story which must not be lost sight of. I find that out of this $126,645 worth of hay imported to Canada not less than $121,000 was imported into the Yukon and British Columbia, while a very trifling quantity indeed was imported into the eastern provinces. In view of this, the charge so frequently made by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that we are not sufficiently protecting our poor farmers on their production of hay, falls to the ground. I presume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) does not contend that we can compete in the Yukon or in British Columbia with the Americans in the hay trade.

Mr. MONK. Since my hon. friend appeals to me, I would like him to explain what protection he is giving to the farmer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are giving him a good market.

Mr. MONK. I don't know about that.

Mr. BRODEUR. We are opening up new markets to our farmers for their agricultural products. That is what they require, and not high duties; and there is no reason to grieve over this paltry importation of hay from the United States.

Mr. MONK. What new markets has my hon. friend given to the farmers?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have opened up in England a very extensive market for hay. Some years ago Canada was not exporting any hay to the English market, but now, owing to the policy of this government and the friendly trade relations we have established with the mother country, we are sending large quantities of hay to England. I desire to put on record a few figures in order to show how fallacious is the charge made every day against the government, that they are neglectful of the interests of the farmers in not putting a higher duty on agricultural products. In the item of live animals we imported last year from the United States $1,507,196 worth, and our total exports of live animals amounted to $14,455,576 worth.

Mr. INGRAM. To the United States?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; the total export of live animals. Let me add that out of that $1,507,196 worth of live animals imported from the United States, there was imported into the Yukon, and British Columbia, and the Northwest Territories, and Manitoba, no less than $1,420,000 worth, there being imported into the eastern provinces only $87,000 worth. Now, in the item of barley we imported from the United States only $1,038, and we exported $457,333 worth. I presume that the one thousand dollars' worth of barley which we imported cannot affect in any way the trade of the farmers of this country in barley. Of oats, we imported last year $70,651 worth, and we exported $2,632,886 worth. Of pease, we imported last year $17,617 worth, and we exported $1,056,266 worth.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask my hon. friend if that was exported to the United States for home consumption? Have these been exported to the United States for home consumption, or did they merely go through the United States in bond?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am speaking not simply of the exports to the United States, but of the total exports, in order to show that our exports are so large that the paltry quantities of goods imported into this country cannot affect our farmers in any way. Of wheat we have imported $57,794 from the United States, and we have exported $29,088,781 ; and yet my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says the poor farmers are very badly treated. Of beans we have imported from the United States $26,332, and we have exported $79,801. Our total imports of these grains have been $173,432. Out of this we have imported into the Northwest, Manitoba, British Columbia and the Yukon, $125,000 ; consequently we have imported into the eastern provinces only $48,000, while we have exported $33,315,067. Now, I will give the figures with regard to hay. We have imported $126,646. Of this, we have imported into the Northwest, British Columbia and the Yukon $121,665 ; so that our imports into the eastern provinces have been $4,981; and I may say for the benefit of my hon. friend from Jacques Carties that we have imported into the province of Quebec, to the great injury of our farmers, the large sum of $104.

Mr. MONK. As my hon. friend is referring to me, I would like to ask him if he is in favour of greater protection for the market-gardeners ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the market-gardeners are having as much protection as they want. They are pretty well satisfied with the tariff as it is to-day. If at certain seasons of the year, let us say from January to May, we import strawberries, I do not know how they can affect very much those who raise strawberries in the county of my hon. friend, because, if I am correctly informed, in that part of the season, they are not producing strawberries.

Mr. MONK. What about lettuce ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose my hon. friend will not seriously contend that the lettuce produced by the farmers of this country is subjected to very serious competition from outside. I am sure he will not say that, and I see, from the way he made the interruption, that he did not speak very seriously.

Mr. MONK. I do, very seriously.

Mr. BRODEUR. I find that of apples we imported last year from the United States $79,830, and we exported $2,759,047. Of butter we imported $131,745, of which there was imported into the Northwest, British Columbia and the Yukon $116,000, and into the eastern provinces only $15,000, while against that we exported $6,958,906. Of cheese we imported from the United States $30,401, of which there was used in the west $17,400 and in the eastern provinces $13,000, while we exported $24,776,406. Of eggs our imports from the United States were $121,563, of which there was imported into the Northwest, British Columbia and the Yukon $120,000, leaving only $1,000 for the eastern provinces, while we exported $1,441,254. Now, the total provisions, including meats, which we imported from the United States were $1,774,896, of which there has been imported into the Northwest, British Columbia and the Yukon about $750,000, and into the eastern provinces about $1,250,000 while we have exported $50,569,442. These figures prove conclusively that the charge which has been made for some time in the press of the province of Quebec, that this government was not protecting the farmers of this country, but was permitting imports from the United States, is fallacious and cannot be sustained for one moment. And I may add that if to-day we see some of these agricultural products imported into the Yukon, whose fault is it ? It is the fault of hon. gentlemen opposite, who, when they had the opportunity of having railway connection with that country and giving the farmers of the east a chance to send their products there, objected to the construction of that railway. Consequently they are guilty of everything that has happened as a result of their action.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL.

WEST CANADIAN COLLIERIES, LIMITED.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 80) respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. HENDERSON. When this Bill was before the committee an evening or two ago, I understand a decided objection was taken to the last provision. Has that been removed, or is the Bill in the same position as that in which we left it ?

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice would like to look into this Bill before it passes, so I think we had better rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That the Speaker do now leave the chair, for the House to go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty, and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. When you left the Chair, Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock, I was trying to establish—and I think I succeeded in doing so—that the raising of the tariff on agricultural products coming from the States would not in any way benefit our farmers. I showed that our imports of agricultural products were much lower than our exports, and that therefore the prices of our agricultural products could not be in any way affected by the imports from the United States. I think I have shown also that the imports from the United States cannot in any way affect the agricultural products of the eastern provinces, because these imports are sent into the Yukon or British Columbia, and consequently the imposition of higher duties on them would not put our eastern farmers in any better position, because it would not enable them to export their products with any profit to those distant countries. I think I have clearly established that our country is to-day more prosperous than the great republic to the south of us. We have an abundance of wealth, our farmers, our labourers, our industrial men are in a prosperous condition. Is that the case to the south ? No, on the contrary, all the industrial classes there, are in a very depressed condition. I have in my hand a statement showing that for some months, instead of giving employment to the same number of labourers as formerly, a number of companies have been obliged to dismiss thousands of their employees and reduce the salaries of many others. Here, on the contrary, every one who wants to work can get something ; every one can earn money and live in comfort. But in the American republic the conditions are different. I see by the Montreal 'Gazette'—and I suppose no hon. gentleman opposite will question the authority of that newspaper—that according to the annual report published in April last of the New York State Board of Mediation and Arbitration, there were more strikes in the United States last year than ever before. The strikes in the building trade alone during the summer in New York State caused a loss in wages of $6,754,751. I find also in the Montreal 'Gazette' the following statement :

> Susquehanna, Pa., June 12.—The Erie Railway Company has discharged 10 per cent of its working force, or 108 men, from its shops in this place. Like discharges were made in all shops on the system. This is the second discharge of 10 per cent within 30 days. The company is reducing expenses in all directions.

There is another example of the crisis which exists in the United States. And I may ask my hon. friends opposite whether they can point to any similar example in this country to that which I quote from the Montreal 'Gazette.' On the contrary I find evidence in the newspapers of the same date that there is a growing demand for workmen in this country. For example 'L'Industriel,' of Shawinigan, publishes an advertisement asking for a hundred men at from $1.50 to $1.25 per day. So we find, on the same day a statement in a prominent Conservative newspaper in Quebec that, in the United States, the railways are discharging their employees, and advertisements in the trade papers of this country asking for employees. So, the demand, from our friends on the other side for a tariff similar to that of the United States is not a reasonable one. I have much faith in their good sense and in their devotion to the best interests of the country, but I suppose they must be convinced, as I am, that it would be useless for us to try to copy the Americans in our tariff policy. It is better for us to maintain a system in accordance with our own conditions, not with a view to copying the United States, but with a view to promoting the growth and development of Canada. I read, only the other day, that in Fall River, in one day in April last, 10,000 people were discharged from the factories in that city because there was no more work to give them. I find also a statement with regard to the condition of employment under the steel trust. The number of workmen employed under the trust last year was 350,000, whose salaries amounted to $225,000,000. Through discharge of men and reduction of wages, the payments of accounts of salaries have been reduced by $60,000,000 since last year. We find also that, on the Southern Railway they have reduced the number of men employed by 3,000 ; on the Gould system by 7,500 ; on the Harriman lines, 8,000 ; on the Western lines, 10,000 ; on the Vanderbilt lines, 12,000 ; on the Pennsylvania system, 13,000 ; on lines running into Chicago, 20,000 ; and on lines of minor importance, 2,000. These figures indicate that Canada to-day is in a very much more prosperous condition than the United States. So, I am sorry that our friends on the other side are trying to induce this country to accept a fiscal system that has been so detrimental to the interests of the country to the south of us.

Now I see that my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) declared the other day that the policy of the government should be to reduce the duties on sugar and tobacco. These are his words which I quote from page 4527 of 'Hansard :'

> Why is it necessary that they should have surpluses to boast of—surpluses of from $14,000,000 to $16,000,000 ? They could get clear of a large portion by extending the reduction of duties from molasses to sugar. They could also make a reduction in the duty on tobacco, which would prove an immense boon to almost every man who contributes to taxation.

I have every reason to believe that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) has the sympathy of those on his side in this and so we must take this utterance of the hon. gentleman as a declaration of policy from the other side in favour of removing the duties on sugar and tobacco. I am sure hon. gentlemen have not given to this question the consideration that it deserves when they ask that duties which have done so much to build up the tobacco industry should be removed or decreased. When this government came into power in 1896, it is true, a movement had been begun among the tobacco growers in Quebec and Ontario in favour of an increase in the duty on tobacco. Several delegations came here and asked for this increase of duty as a protection to the tobacco growers. But the government of that day seemed to be much more inclined to protect other industries, and refused absolutely to protect the important industry of tobacco growing. I confess that when this government increased the duty on tobacco, we did not expect such favourable results as those we see to-day in the increase of the industry. And I am here to assert that, in spite of the increase of 10 cents on raw leaf, tobacco is selling to the consumers to-day at a lower price than before. I find by the reports of the department that in 1895-96 the number of tobacco factories of foreign leaf was 27, while only 10 were engaged in the manufacture of domestic leaf. At the end of last year the number of factories engaged on foreign leaf had fallen from 27 to 23, but on the other hand, the number of domestic and mixed tobacco had increased from 10 to 30. And that is the result in the number of pounds manufactured ?

In 1895-6, under the Conservative regime, we manufactured 9,609,184 pounds of foreign leaf tobacco, that is to say almost all the whole consumption was of foreign leaf tobacco. In fact we only manufactured and consumed in that year 474,205 pounds of Canadian tobacco. Now I am glad to inform our friends opposite that this policy has been so fruitful and has produced such good results that to-day, instead of consuming 9,000,000 pounds of foreign leaf tobacco, we manufactured last year 7,726,316 pounds ; and instead of consuming only 500,000 ponds of Canadian leaf, I am glad to announce to the House that last year we consumed nearly 5,000,000 pounds of Canadian leaf tobacco, or to be more exact, 4,921,181 pounds. So Canadian leaf has practically displaced foreign leaf, and that result, I claim, is entirely due to the progressive policy of this government.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the minister at this point if it is the intention of the government this year to reintroduce the law against contracts made by the American tobacco trust, which law was introduced last year and then dropped ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That has nothing to do with the subject under discussion, but I may tell my hon. friend that the question he has raised is now engaging my attention, and I expect that before long these exclusive contracts will entirely disappear. Well, at all events we claim that the policy of this government has displaced in this country the use of foreign leaf to the benefit of our farmers and Canadian manufacturers. While our hon. friends opposite were in power they were asked year after year to come to the rescue of the Canadian farmer ; year after year they were petitioned to give the farmers a little of that protection which they were willing to give so lavishly to other industries. They were willing to give protection to industries relying for their raw material on imports from the United States and other countries. Why did they not give some protection to those Canadian industries which relied on Canadian raw material ? Why did they compel those industries to rely on foreign raw material when we could have built up industries relying on Canadian raw material ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the minister a question. I notice among the tariff changes that the duty is increased on woollen goods that are made from imported materials and not increased on woollen goods that are made from Canadian wool. I would like to know how the minister can justify that distinction? He is arguing in one way and acting in another.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am dealing with the question of tobacco just now ; I will be glad later on to take up the question to which my hon. friend has drawn my attention. But I may say that the point he tries to make in no way invalidates my argument. I have proved that the policy of his friends when they were in power tended to refuse protection to Canadian farmers ; whereas we have to-day given protection to our Canadian farmers and have produced the results I have just pointed out. But that is not all. Not only have we come to the rescue of the Canadian farmer in that respect, but we have also done much for the Canadian consumer, as I will prove. I find by the figures which have been handed to me that the consumer pays to-day less for his tobacco than he was paying in former years, that the fishermen of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are paying to-day less for their tobacco than they were paying before the change in the tariff. In 1895-6, the Canadian consumer was paying for the foreign plug chewing tobacco eighty-one cents a pound ; to-day he is paying for the same tobacco, a Canadian tobacco, just as good as that made from foreign leaf, if not better—he is paying to-day fifty-three cents a pound instead of eighty-one cents. For plug smoking tobacco he pays to-day fifty cents a pound whereas he was paying eighty cents under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite. For cut smoking tobacco the Canadian consumer is paying to-day forty-six cents a pound, while under the beneficial regime of hon. gentlemen opposite he was paying ninety-six cents or $1 for foreign leaf tobacco. So we find that in these three kinds of tobacco the consumer is paying to-day fifty, sixty and sometimes seventy per cent less than he was paying under the Conservative regime. Not only have we succeeded in replacing foreign tobacco by Canadian tobacco, but we are giving the consumer to-day a better tobacco and at a lesser price.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the hon. minister if he smokes ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not smoke, but I do not think my hon. friend will dispute these figures. Will he undertake to dispute these figures ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Most assuredly.

Mr. BRODEUR. He cannot do it, because they are absolutely correct. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have shown that the policy of this government has been beneficial to the farmers, particularly during these latter years.

Mr. MONK. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that subject, I would like to ask him about the petition presented by the tobacco growers of the province of Quebec that the excise stamps should all be of the same colour, inasmuch as the green stamp does harm to the sale of the Canadian grown tobacco. What is going to be done about that petition ? Are we going to have stamps of a uniform colour ?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend's question would draw me far away from the subject I am now discussing, nevertheless I may tell him that this complaint about stamps existed when his own friends were in power, and they were never able to mature any plan to remedy the evil. But I may say that I am now considering seriously this question and am having reports made by my officers, and I hope that before long I will be able to do something which will satisfy the tobacco growers of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss much further the questions at issue in this debate. The issue between both parties is now well established. We have on one side persons asking for what I may call a trust tariff, and on the other side we have a government who desire to maintain a people's tariff. A trust tariff is against a people's tariff. Hon. gentlemen opposite want to establish trusts and combines in this country. We want, on the contrary, to have a tariff framed in the interest of the country, in the interest of the people, for the people alone and not for the trusts and combines. A tariff should be based not on theories but it should be framed with regard to practical exigencies and circumstances. That is the policy of this government in every instance, where we find that some legitimate industries are suffering, these industries will be sure to get relief from this government. We are not going to create combines or trusts but what we want is to give fair aid and protection to legitimate industries. That is the policy of the Canadian government and we are willing to stand by that policy. I may say the tariff changes which were brought down some days ago have given entire satisfaction to the people of this country. Our hon. friends opposite are a little bit disheartened as a result of these changes in the tariff. We are glad to see that these changes are meeting with the general approbation of the people. We are glad to see that men who at one time were not very friendly to this government are now willing to trust this government because of what we have done. We are satisfied with what we have done but our work is not finished and we will be glad to work to the end for the advantage of the people of this country.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur), it seems to me in the latter part of his speech took a different ground in regard to the tariff from that which he took in the earlier part of his remarks. If I understood him correctly he explained to the House how that paying an extra duty on tobacco had not been the means of raising the price of tobacco to the consumers but that on the other hand the price of tobacco had been reduced. If I understood his remarks in the earlier part of his speech correctly I understood him to say that if the government put on extra duty on articles generally according to what we propose on this side of the House, the money would go in the hands of the manufacturers and the prices of these articles would be enhanced. It may suit the hon. gentleman to make that argument in regard to tobacco but surely the rule in regard to other things must work the same as it does in regard to tobacco. The present government, as I understood, had not increased the duties on farm products to any greater extent than those duties were when they came into power but they have, I think, reduced the duties somewhat on wheat and flour. The hon. gentleman referred in his opening remarks to the observations made by my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) in regard to the oil duties. I shall not detain the House by engaging in any lengthy discussion on that point because the ground has been so fully covered by my hon. friend from Lambton. However, there is one thing I would like to add and it is that it seems to me that the government have tremendous confidence in this great corporation known as the Standard Oil Company. If they realize their most sanguine expectations all right, but we know what the history of the Standard Oil Company is and while I do not want to have anything to say prejudical to any great corporation from my position in this House,

I wish to say that the Standard Oil Company's reputation for keeping agreements which they do not make in black and white is not the best in the United States and I would warn the government to be on their guard in regard to the promises which the Standard Oil Company have made them in connection with the reduction of the oil duty. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue used what I might term an elementary argument in regard to the cost of collecting the revenue of this country. I noticed that he brought a blush to the face of the hon. the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) when he referred to the tremendous economy which that hon. minister's department is displaying in collecting the revenues of this country. It seemed to me, I repeat, that this was a very elementary argument. It is the same argument that applies to most businesses where the output is increased and the running expenses on the percentage basis are less. If the revenue of this country jumped up a few millions of dollars it would take that much less on the percentage basis to collect it, the same as when a man's turnover in business runs up to a million dollars when it was only half a million before, his running expenses are so much less. I was a little surprised that the hon. gentleman would use such an argument in this House. He also referred to the decrease in the debt and I propose a little later on to take up that question. I will not deal with that just now. He also referred to the question of our balance of trade with the United States and he demonstrated by the figures which he produced to the House that in reality there was no balance of trade in favour of the United States. I could not follow his argument very closely but I think that the figures which I shall produce later on will show that he was in error in respect to that question also. Then he referred to the question of hay. He mentioned the fact that we are now exporting to Great Britain a considerable amount of hay and I understood him to say that it was because of our commercial policy with Great Britain which had been brought about by the present government and which was not in effect heretofore that this unexampled exportation of hay to Great Britain had been brought about. I fail to see how he works this out. I cannot see what these hon. gentlemen have done to make a commercial treaty with Great Britain, or to alter the conditions as they existed under the previous administration. If in return for the preference which they gave to Great Britain they had obtained a preference for our agricultural products I think his argument would have been well founded but as they did not succeed in getting any preference I cannot understand on what he bases that argument. It seems to me that the market gardeners' question was a rather delicate one for him and I take it for granted that in the magnificent and beautiful county of Rouville there are no market gardeners. I think if there had been the hon. gentleman would not have dealt with that question which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) raised in reference to the tariff. But Sir, the hon. gentleman spent a good deal of time in discussing the question of hay. We all know that in that part of the province of Quebec which the hon. gentleman has the honour of representing in this House there has been in the past and there is to-day produced from the farms a tremendous amount of hay and that several years ago and further back than that even the people in that part of the country sent their hay to the United States. The hon. gentleman, in discussing this matter, dealt with other agricultural products and he was trying to show that in regard to special articles of agriculture in regard to which we had a surplus production the balance of trade was not against this country and that hay was one of these articles. I am informed, and the hon. gentleman will correct me if the statements which I make are not absolutely right, that he, in years gone by, talked a good deal throughout the province of Quebec previous to and during election campaigns about what the members of the present administration, if they came into power, would do in regard to these agricultural products, not only in regard to hay, but in regard to eggs, grain, animals, and all those things which are the product of the farm and which were being exported to the United States.

When the Liberals were in opposition, they pledged themselves to make a treaty with the United States under which these articles would be admitted free of duty into that country and they held that by a mere stroke of the pen they could have accomplished this object. Well, the United States duty on hay was $2 a ton in these days, and when the Liberals came to power the Americans, to show there was no ill-feeling, raised that duty to $4 a ton. Notwithstanding all the coquetting of the Liberals with the authorities at Washington, the United States has raised up higher trade barriers against us, than ever before. The Minister of Inland Revenue told us that were it not for the Conservatives in the House of Commons and the Senate, the Yukon Railway would have been built, and we could now send Canadian products into the Yukon. I would like to have the minister elaborate this argument somewhat. I would like to have him explain in what way the conditions would be different and how we would be enabled through this railway had it been built to send Canadian hay to the Yukon. He would have to demonstrate that if we had a railway the freight rates would be less than they are at present, and

I think he would fail in that. We have bonding privileges over the narrow strip at Skagway, and the freight rates are to-day less than they could possibly have been over this railway, for while we had the treaty right to navigate up the Skeena river, we had no right to stop along the shore to get fuel for our steamers, and in this we would be handicapped, but more than that by the existing route we have the advantage of the long water haul to Skagway whilst by the route the hon. gentleman speaks of we would have had a more difficult route composed of part river, lake, rail, &c. We now have access to the Yukon over foreign territory, and the only way we could be interfered with would be by the United States abrogating the bonding privileges which exist there ; in their own interests I do not think they are likely to do that. The hon. gentleman seems to forget, that if there was a higher duty on some agricultural products, then the Yukon and contiguous territory might be supplied from the fertile region of Alberta and the agricultural districts of British Columbia. If that were so, we could compete with the American products which now find their way into that territory. Yesterday in discussing the question of protection, the Prime Minister was rather severe on the opposition, and he made statements which to my mind were not warranted by the facts. The policy of protection was adopted by this country in 1878. It was fathered by the Conservative party and so far as I know, the Conservative party has never changed its mind on that policy. It is no easy thing to administer a protective tariff in a country which previous to its adoption, had a policy of free trade, or a revenue tariff policy. The conditions in this country were peculiar at that time. We had only recently completed confederation ; the country was not so strong or so prosperous as it is to-day ; some of the provinces had come into confederation unwillingly it is said, and taking it all in all, the Conservative party had great difficulty in putting into force and carrying out the National Policy. Yesterday, the Prime Minister referred to the strikes and industrial commotion which have existed in the United States, and he said :

> In Canada you have hope abundant and contentment ; in the United States you have dejection and almost despair.

Well, I think the right hon. gentleman has exaggerated the conditions in the United States. I visit the United States quite frequently, and I have not noticed any such conditions as the Prime Minister has spoken of, nor has my reading led me to think that such is the case. The right hon. gentleman seems to be under the impression that the Conservative party of Canada seek to adopt the United States tariff. I may tell the right hon. gentleman, that I have never heard such a thing argued from this side of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Never.

Mr. KEMP. The desire of the Conservative party in this country is to adopt a tariff which will be in the interests of Canada, and of all sections of the Canadian people, without reference to the tariff of any other country. The right hon. gentleman also told us that since 1897, fifteen combines and trusts were organized in the United States, and that similar combines and trusts had been formed in Germany, both being protectionist countries. But, the right hon. gentleman altogether overlooked the fact, that in free trade England, a similar state of things exists as regards these trusts and combines. I wish to draw to his attention, an article by Mr. H. W. Macrosty on the ' Growth of monopoly, ' in the ' Contemporary Review ' for March, 1899, in which it is stated :

> It is often asserted in Canada that protection fosters combines and that a country enjoying free trade is exempt from the evils of monopolies and trusts. An article entitled, ' The Growth of Monopoly,' by H. W. Macrosty, in the ' Contemporary Review ' for March, 1899, told a very different story. At that time, according to Mr. Macrosty, single amalgamations, while not entirely excluding competition controlled the screw, cotton, thread, salt, alkali, and india-rubber tire industries in Great Britain. In many cases where an actual consolidation had not taken place there was an agreement to mantain prices. In Birmingham 500 employers and 20,000 workmen were working under agreements to maintain prices, which were fixed by committees after examining the conditions of manufacture. Mr. E. J. Smith, the author of the Birmingham scheme of trade combination, said in January, 1898 : ' It was first adopted seven years ago in the metallic bedstead trade, and has been so successful in that industry that the trade is to-day one of the most envied in the country. Since the firm of J. & P. Coates, of Paisley, after being formed into a limited liability company for the manufacture of sewing thread with a capital of £5,750,000, absorbed Kerr & Company, and Clarke & Company, of Paisley, Chadwick & Company, of Bolton, and Jones, Brook & Company, of Meltham, the capital being raised to £10,000,000, on which a dividend of 20 per cent is being paid.

I have here a list, besides those I have named, of no less than 81 large consolidations and trusts which exist in Great Britain at the present time, some of them having a capitalization of upwards of £12,000,000 sterling ; so that the fifteen trusts to which the Prime Minister referred as existing in the United States are not in it with the frightful conditions which exist in free trade Great Britain.

The Prime Minister referred to the United States as a country of dejection and almost despair. But, Sir, it was the Prime Minister as well as the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance who only a few years ago wished this country to adopt the policy which would bring it under the fiscal system of the United States, that country where according to the Prime Minister such dejection and despair exists at the present time. In order that the matter may be on record, and that we may not forget what the attitude of those hon. gentlemen was at that time, I will read a few extracts from the right hon. gentleman's speeches of a few years ago. In a speech delivered in this House in the year 1888, the right hon. gentleman said :

We, on this side of the House, believe that the motion of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) exactly meets the case ; we believe that the solution of the problem is complete in unrestricted reciprocity with the great nation to the south of us.

He also said, in a speech at Oakville in the year 1888 :

We know that no great reform has been carried without struggles, without defeats. We are prepared for those struggles. When Sir Richard Cartwright proposed his resolution last session he knew that it would be defeated. He will renew it next session, and he knows it will be defeated then ; he will renew it the session after that, and he knows it will be defeated ; he will renew it again and again, but in the meantime there will be a general election, and we believe the result of that election will be a return of a majority, whether Conservatives or Reformers, pledged to support a treaty of unrestricted reciprocity between Canada and the United States. This is the policy which we have to place before the people. There are other issues, there are other questions, but every other question must take a back seat and leave the first place to unrestricted reciprocity. This is the cry. This is the reform which we press not only upon the people of Ontario, but especially upon the people of Halton, with the hope that the people of Halton will give no uncertain answer, but such an answer as will be a victory for the principles of the Liberal party.

Again, in Toronto in the year 1889, the right hon. gentleman used just as plain language. This is what he said :

But there is alongside of us a kindred nation economically situated as we are—the United States—and we claim that that commercial alliance which at this moment is not possible with England is possible with the United States, and the policy which we have advocated, which we still continue to advocate, is the removal of all commercial barriers between this country and the great kindred nation to the south of us.

I will just give one more extract, which is rather an amusing one. I have heard something about stealing clothes in connection with the fiscal policy of the country. The Prime Minister got so enthusiastic for unrestricted reciprocity and for doing away with the customs-houses in those days, that he actually thought the Conservative party wanted to steal the clothes of the Liberal party ; and here is what he said in Toronto in 1889 :

There are at this moment indications that the government of Sir John Macdonald are preparing, as the vulgar phrase goes, 'to dish the Liberals.' What, you will say, is the meaning of this ? Well, the literal signification of it is that Sir John, still audacious, intends to steal the clothes of the Liberal party, and is preparing at the next election to present himself in the habiliments so boldly stolen.

I have other extracts in the same direction ; but I merely read these to show what was the last defined policy on the trade question of the great Liberal party. Since that time no other policy has been defined by them either in this House or out of it. The policy of protection, as I have said, was decided many years ago. The Prime Minister said yesterday that he was a little skeptical about inaugurating a tariff which would be the means of bringing into existence new industries. He admitted that the industries already established perhaps required consideration ; but he was not enthusiastic about pursuing a policy which would be the means of bringing into existence new industries. The attitude of the Liberal party all along has been one of the greatest opposition to the policy of protection. We had frantic appeals to the people, who were told that they were being robbed and bled white ; we had the commercial union agitation ; and, we had the question of the secession of the maritime provinces. When we remember the attitude at that time of the present Finance Minister, who was a man of influence, and the campaign he carried on, we can realize what a difference there is to-day from the conditions which had to be dealt with by those who inaugurated the protective policy of this country in days gone by.

But, Sir, when these hon. gentlemen came into office they found a house ready built. The foundation was not only laid, but the whole structure was completed and the building furnished and provisioned, and all they had to do was to take possession and carry on the government without being agitated by any such important question as that of inaugurating a policy of protection. The right hon. the Prime Minister has boasted that his party are not imitators, that they have followed out their own ideas and made their own policy, and in this connection he referred to two things which they had originated. One was the preferential tariff and the other the German surtax. I need not discuss the question of the preferential tariff, because my hon. leader went into that very fully yesterday, and dealt with it in a masterly way. But the right hon. gentleman took credit for the German surtax as a policy which his government had originated. Well, what was the situation regarding this surtax ? It was introduced into this House in 1903, but in the year 1900, or the year before that, there was a great agitation in this country, through public bodies, regarding the way in which Germany was treating us by shutting out our products. And in the session of 1901 the leader of the opposition introduced a resolution, a part of which had reference to the German surtax. In the speeches delivered on this resolution Germany was directly referred to, and there can be no doubt that the leader of the opposition was the originator of the policy of the German surtax. Let me read a part of the resolution dealing with this matter which was moved by the leader of the opposition in the session of 1901 :

This House is further of opinion that equivalent or adequate duties should be imposed by Canada upon the products and manufactures of countries not within the empire in all cases where such countries fail to admit Canadian products and manufactures upon fair terms, and that the government should take for this purpose all such available measures as may be found necessary.

Hon. gentlemen opposite, however, voted that down, and in voting it down they voted down the German surtax. And all through 1901 and 1902 appeals were continually being made to the government to do something in order to get even with Germany. I think, consequently, it is only due to the House that this information regarding the German surtax should be placed before it.

In budget debates there are two questions which seem always to come to the front. These are the question of expenditure and the question of the tariff. I should like for a moment or two to deal with the question of expenditure, and I would like to discuss the statement which the Finance Minister made to this House regarding surpluses. In this connection I would put my hon. friend in the position of a president of a financial corporation. He is a man whose word in regard to the finances of the Dominion is taken all over this country. When he makes a statement people believe it to be true, and why should they doubt it ? When he tells us that he has so much revenue, that his expenditure is so much, and his surplus is so much, they take such statements as what the same terms would mean when used by the manager of a business corporation. My hon. friend said :

Our last session of parliament was so protracted that before the close we were able to have presented to the House the outlines of the condition of the finances of the Dominion for the year which had then recently closed, and since then the public accounts have been laid on the table, so that only a passing allusion is needed to the finances of the year which ended on the 30th June, 1903. My estimate for the revenue of that year was $65,000,000. The actual revenue was $66,037,068.93, an increase of revenue beyond my estimate of $1,037,068.93. The estimate of the expenditure proved to be a very close one. The estimate was $51,650,000. The actual expenditure of the year was $51,691,902.76, being an increase of expenditure over the amount which I ventured to speak of in my anticipations in the last budget to the extent of $41,902.76. I estimated that we would probably have on the operations of the year a surplus of $13,350,000. The out-turn of the year gave us a surplus of $14,345,166.17.

There can be no doubt in the mind of any one who is familiar with figures as to what that means. It means that the Finance Minister had a surplus of $14,345,176 in 1903, and that he expected a surplus of $16,500,000 in 1904. What I would like to know from this government is why they are taking $16,500,000 out of the pockets of the people which they do not require ? Why have they this surplus ? Why is it necessary for them to take this money from the people? When we look back and realize that the revenue in 1870 was but $15,520,225, we can have some idea of the tremendous amount of money which is being taken from the people without necessity. But my hon. friend the Finance Minister went on to boast of his surpluses, and it seems to me very strange that he should do so. He went on to show that in the eight years, since 1896, the present government have had a total net surplus of $57,880,091.92. That, it seems to me, is not a matter of which this government ought to be proud.

When he got to the question of the coal oil duties, he told the people he was going to save them a net amount—deducting the amount he was going to pay as a bounty on oil—of $390,097, providing, of course, the Standard Oil Company will do exactly as he supposes it will, which may be open to some doubt, and provided further that the same number of gallons which was consumed last year will likewise be consumed this year, namely, 25,755,450. Should this large quantity be consumed, he will save this infinitesimal amount, considering the tremendous figures we have before us, of $390,097. But what is the situation ? What would the people say if the Minister of Finance introduced a Bill for the purpose of raising revenue and put a direct tax of 64 cents on every gallon of oil people consumed ? And if he were enabled to carry out a policy of that kind, he would tax the people $16,483,588, or about the amount of the surplus he has to the end of 30th of June, 1904. That is his exact position. Take his own words. He, of course would not juggle with figures. and the people believe that any statement he makes is correct. Well, he has $16,500,000 more than he needs, which he is taking out of the people, and therefore it is about time that instead of boasting of these things the government should endeavour to relieve the people of that burthen. It seems to me that the Finance Minister, with all his ability, should ever keep in view the idea of every Finance Minister, namely, making the revenue and expenditure as nearly as possible balance. But that never seems to have entered the hon. gentleman's mind. It seems to me that it would be better to have occasionally a sligh deficit in our finances than to go on taking such an enormous sum out of the pockets of the people.

Then, Sir, we were told, in regard to the debt of this country, that, at the end of the fiscal year, if the estimate of the Minister of Finance turned out to be absolutely correct our national debt would be $1,084,993.66 less than it was when the Liberals came into power in 1896. Now, that is a most remarkable statement also. I would like to read to the House a short table that I have prepared contrasting the revenue received during the last eight years of the Conservative government with that of the eight years of Liberal government :

TOTAL REVENUE.

8 years of Conservative rule.

1889	$38,782,870
1890	39,879,925
1891	38,579,311
1892	36,921,872
1893	38,208,609
1894	36,374,883
1895	33,978,129
1896	36,618,591
	$299,344,190

8 years of Liberal rule.

1897	$37,829,778
1898	40,556,510
1899	46,743,103
1900	51,031,467
1901	52,516,333
1902	58,042,333
1903	66,037,068
1904	71,000,000
	$423,756,592

Revenue for 8 years of Liberal government	$423,756,592
Revenue for 8 years of Conservative government	299,344,190
	$124,412,402

During the 8 years of Liberal rule, $124,412,402 has been taken from the people, in excess of what the Conservative government took during the last eight years of their government.

Revenue for 1895	$33,978,129
Revenue for 1896	36,618,590
Average for two years	$35,298,359

The revenue which the Liberal government have taken from the people, for the year ending June 30th, 1904, therefore, is more than double the average revenue taken from the people for the last two years of the Conservative regime.

In connection with this question of the debt, this extra amount of $124,412,404 which the Liberal administration have taken from the people is to be considered. The minister has said that, if his estimate is realized the debt will be $1,084,993.66 less than it was when the Liberals came into power. This is but a poor showing considering the immense amount of money that they have taken from the people in excess of what the Conservatives took during the last eight years of their regime.

But is this a complete statement of our debt that the Minister of Finance has given us ? Have we all the figures so that we may fairly estimate what our liabilities are ? It seems to me that this government has done what occasionally men in business and sometimes men out of business do ; they have become endorsers ; they have followed very largely a method, which they may be credited with having inaugurated, of pledging the public credit in connection with various enterprises instead of paying out money from the treasury of becoming endorsers. In his financial statement the Minister of Finance has done a thing which some foolish business men do, who, when they endorse a note for a friend, take no account of it, but forget all about it. He has not brought down and placed before us any record of the guarantees which this government has given with respect to various enterprises. If the hon. gentleman were in his place I would like to ask him what kind of book-keeping that is. Should we not have in the annual financial statement, a full account of the guarantees for which this government are liable. Are they not in the books of the department ? They must be, and we ought to have a record of them. Our financial statement ought to cover all our indirect as well as our direct liabilities. The railway subsidies voted last year amounted to $13,500,000 as a minimum and $18,000,000 as a maximum. This is a liability which should appear in our statement somewhere or other. We have guaranteed the bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway Company to the amount of $10,010,000. Then, there was the obligation we entered into in connection with the Quebec bridge, $6,678,200. We guaranteed the Montreal Harbour bonds to the amount of $3,000,000 and now there is talk, from time to time, of the government assuming this whole Montreal Harbour debt. Then, there is the tremendous obligation that this government have made the country liable for in the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, which may be $150,000,000 or may be $170,000,000. We do not know yet what the amount of the obligation to which the country will be made liable this session will be ; but I think we are safe in saying that the country will consider itself lucky if, at the end of this session its real indebtedness, instead of showing a reduction of $1,000,000 or so, as the Minister of Finance has estimated, is not actually double what is shown in our statements of the net debt.

In connection with the boasts of hon. gentlemen opposite that they have a buoyant revenue there are a few remarks to be made. We have a revenue tariff, and hon. gentlemen opposite take pride in saying that it is a good revenue producer. It is. But, in practice, it is found to be too high for a revenue tariff and too low for a protective tariff. It produces too much revenue and it does not sufficiently protect Canadian industries. Now, we are sometimes charged in this House with not criticising the estimates sufficiently. I think we on this side criticise the estimates, and take a good deal of interest in every item. It is very seldom that the government will consent to reduce any vote. They are responsible to the people and to this House for their action. I feel satisfied that we spend a great deal more money than there is any necessity for. In this connection I would draw attention to a letter from the hon. member from Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Wm. Ross) in regard to what he has done for his constituents :

Editor 'Herald'.—I think it but fair that the people of Victoria should have some idea of the amount of money spent, and to be spent, in Victoria :

Black Rock, boat harbour	$ 500
Boularderie Centre wharf	5,600
Englishtown wharf	5,400
Green Cove boat harbour	6,600
Iona wharf	6,000
Neil's harbour breakwater	16,600
Nyanza wharf	1,500
St. Ann South Gut wharf	1,300
Protection to St. Ann's beach	1,750
Little Narrows Big Pond wharf	2,000
Kempt Head wharf	5,950
Little Narrows boat harbour at Big Pond	1,000
North River, St. Ann's, Seymour Point wharf	2,000
Telegraph line, Meat Cove to Ingonish.	2,500
Telegraph line, Dingwell to Meat Cove.	600
North Ingonish breakwater	27,250
Big Harbour, Port Bevis wharf	3,700
Boularderie Centre wharf, to complete approach	670
Breton Cove boat landing	4,600
Iona extension of wharf	5,000
McKay's Point wharf	6,000
Middle River, protection to river channel	2,400
North Gut, St. Ann's wharf, at Morrison's Point	2,000
North River, St. Ann's, repairs to wharf.	900
South Gut, St. Ann's, repairs to top of wharf	500
Protection to Ingonish breakwater	1,750
Lower Washabuck beach protection	400
Telegraph line from Big Bras d'Or to Upper Kempt Head, Boularderie island, with telegraph station at Boularderie Centre, Ross' Ferry and Upper Kempt Head	2,000

A daily mail from Baddeck to Englishtown ; a tri-weekly mail from Baddeck to Baddeck Forks ; also a tri-weekly mail for the districts of Oona and Washabuck.

You will see, Mr. Editor, that the above figures will prove that I have not been asleep in the interests of my constituents in Victoria.

Now this is a letter which the hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Mr. Ross) sent to his constituents, giving details of an expenditure of no less a sum than $115,000 spent for various purposes in his constituency; and when I remind the House that the population of Victoria is only 10,571 souls, and that the total vote cast in the last election were only 1,857, I think the hon. member will come to the conclusion that this reckless way of spending money in that constituency cannot be justified. To use a well-known expression, that is what the government is 'up against' in consequence of their tremendous revenue and surpluses. They invite demands from all quarters.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. The very question the hon. gentleman is now discussing was introduced by a speaker last evening, and he was asked whether he was opposed to any of the items in that list. I repeat that question to-night, and I ask the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) whether he is preparel to indicate any particular item there which he regards as unnecessary.

Mr. KEMP. In this list to which I refer ?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. KEMP. I cannot say, Mr. Speaker, whether I am opposed to these items or not, because I have not sufficiently studied them. I presume if I went over them carefully I would find a good many that I would be opposed to. I do not believe that the Postmaster General can justify that sort of expenditure.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). The hon. gentleman was a member of this House last session when parliament voted these various moneys. Did he on that occasion object to any or all of them ?

Mr. KEMP. Well, I will take occasion to look up the 'Hansard' and see exactly what observations I did make in regard to these various items. The Postmaster General says that this money was voted last session. I did not say that, but I presume it must have been voted last session if he says so.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Or during the preceding session.

Mr. KEMP. I say the amount of money thus expended is altogether absurd and ridiculous. The tendency is for members to get these amounts voted, and what is the object ? Surely it must be to influence elections in their favour. But I say that this sort of thing invites unnecessary demands from various quarters, it invites wire pullers to come to this government for all sorts of concessions. In the old days the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Ross) was a member of the administration of the late Alexander Mackenzie, who was represented as sitting on the government treasury box with a gun in his hand to keep off all kinds of adventurers who wanted to rob it ; therefore I am surprised that the hon. member for Victoria should himself support a policy of this kind. It seems to me it would have been better for him not to have written that letter and refer to these matters in the way he did. Now, Sir, these gentlemen in years gone by talked a good deal about reducing the expenditure. The Prime Minister was going to reduce it by two or three million dollars a year. It would be unreasonable for me to pretend that any such reduction could be made, that the yearly expenditure of this country could be reduced by two or three million dollars less than it was in the Conservative regime. But I do say this, I say it to the Postmaster General, to the Minister of Customs, and others who used to preach economy so loudly, that these tremendous amounts of money, these surpluses they boast of, they have no right to take out of the pockets of the people, and the people will hold them to account for it.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman favour lowering the tariff ?

Mr. KEMP. I am in favour of adjusting the tariff in such a way that it will not produce such an enormous revenue. If you shut out foreign goods whenever you raise the tariff, you do not get so much revenue, and at the same time you preserve the market for goods manufactured in Canada. That is my position.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. And you put money in the pocket of the manufacturers instead.

Mr. KEMP. Well, that is the old argument of the Postmaster General, but it is not supported by the theory of the Minister of Inland Revenue, who told us that since the duty was raised on tobacco it had been cheaper.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There is competition in that case.

Mr. KEMP. It seems to me that there are enough wise ways of expending public money in this country. There are some things that we require to spend money upon, for instance the St. Lawrence route. Can we not do something to stop these frightful wrecks that are taking place in the gulf and the lower St. Lawrence ? And if we go a little beyond our jurisdiction, can we not spend some money on the coast of Newfoundland when we have this buoyant revenue ? Then there are the Canadian lakes which they say are not as safe for navigators as they are on the American side. Then there is the question of coast defence. These are matters which might well receive the attention of the government. I think we might expend more money on these things and less upon little bits of harbours and breakwaters in some small constituency of 10,000 people such as the government are doing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to review the attitude of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House at the present time in regard to this question of protection. I have in my mind the attitude of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) and the attitude of the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) at the present moment ; and it seemed to me when the Minister of Inland Revenue was talking that he was very much in the same category as these hon. gentlemen. He was willing to put more duty on an article that he was familiar with and which might be grown in the part of the country where he lived, but he was not in favour of a general revision, for a general revision, I presume, effects members of this House in most all the constituencies. From time to time we have had theories put forward in this House as to what a tariff should be and what it should not be. I hold in my hand five pamphlets, campaign documents that hon. gentlemen opposite are sending out by the carload, I presume, because I suppose they want to cover the whole country. Here are two of them with photographs of the Prime Minister. One is entitled ' Seven years of Liberal administration '; another, Record of the Liberal government '; another, ' Wise expenditure and unprecedented progress ; another, ' Can the farmer be protected ? ' another, ' The tariff issue in Canada.' Now these are campaign documents that are going out, and they represent the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. In looking over one of these pamphlets I see this at the very outset :

It is important that the people of Canada should know exactly how the political parties stand with respect to the tariff.

Turning over to the last page I see this :

The Liberal policy is directly opposed to the policy of protection. The Conservative papers and politicians recognize this and vilify Messrs. Sifton and Fielding and Fisher and other ministers who have prominently championed the consumers. . . . . No matter what individuals may say, the two parties stand distinctly divided on the tariff, the Liberals for low tariff, the Conservatives for high tariff, and any voter who is interested in tariff matters can therefore have no difficulty in expressing his opinion at the poll.

These are recent productions of hon. gentlemen opposite. No two meanings can be taken from statements of that kind. Now the hon. member for South Brant told us in this House what his views on protection are. I want to read just a few lines from a statement he made in discussing the budget on March 10, 1902, page 1457 of 'Hansard.' Referring to the cutlery industry he said :

It is an industry that is made up entirely of Canadian labour, because 14 cents worth of raw material, after Canadian labour and Canadian intelligence is expended upon it, is converted into $8.50 worth of finished razors. That is the kind of industry we ought to encourage in this country. A dozen shears worth $6.12 in the open market are made out of raw material that only costs 78 cents. It is too late to talk to these men after their industry is stifled. It is no use to tell them then that stability of the tariff is a desirable thing. I recognize that stability of the tariff is a good thing; but there is no use offering a stone to a man who is hungry or a straw to a man who is drowning. These men want to be protected now, not after their industry is stifled; and in these particular lines, I think the government might well listen to the plea that has been made.

The claim made by the carriage men——

Take particular note of this:

The claim made by the carriage men is also one entitled to consideration. They do not ask for more protection; they simply ask for the Canadian market. They want the valuation of a slop-made buggy increased to $50, so as to prevent the country being overrun with a quality of buggy that is of no use to the purchaser and is likely to injure an industry capable of conferring great benefit on the people of this country.

That is the statement made in 1902 by the hon. member for South Brant.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely not the present hon. member for South Brant.

Mr. KEMP. Yes, he said that. That hon. gentleman in discussing the budget this year, after quoting the Liberal platform of 1893, went on to say:

That is the policy of the Liberal party, and for the past seven years that policy has been amply justified by its results. All we need do is to compare the conditions of the country today with what they were in 1896. Every statement we made on the public platform as to the evil effects of the policy of our friends opposite we have demonstrated.

He referred to the Liberal platform of 1893 and I will not read it, because I am sure the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) or the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) could recite it by heart, they are so familiar with it. Every one knows what the Liberal platform was in regard to the question of protection. The hon. Minister of Finance in 1897, I think it was, said that that was the policy of the Liberal party. We have the campaign literature of the Liberal party. I have referred to my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Ross). I am sorry that neither the hon. member for South Ontario nor the hon. member for South Brant is in his place because I am sure they would be interested in seeing what their position is in regard to protection. The hon. member for South Ontario, speaking in the budget debate in 1901, said:

I have not departed from the principles of free trade, but, as I engage in the business of the country, I try to find out the necessities of the country and see what is best for the country, and, under the circumstances, I have come to the conclusion, that, if this tariff should be changed at all, it should be changed in the direction of lowering the duties.

Then he went on to say:

I do not mean by that altogether, a changing policy. That seems to be a contradiction, but, it seems to me, that, in looking at the tariff and in studying it, the English tariff is the ideal one. It is a certain tariff continuing for several years, and it is only for revenue.

The hon. member for South Ontario used to sit on this side of the House and we were all glad to have him near us. He has a very genial disposition and we all thought a great deal of him, as we still think a great deal of him. He moved his seat over near the hon. Minister of Finance and I have wondered when I have seen him engaged in conversation with the hon. Minister of Finance so much recently, what it was all about. When the tariff changes were brought down it could be easily understood. The hon. member for South Brant had two industries in his constituency that took up a great deal of his attention, the cutlery industry and the carriage industry, and the hon. member for South Ontario had a carriage industry in his consituency. This carriage industry has been very much exercised in regard to these slop buggies that were being brought in, and I am sure that great pressure must have been brought to bear to induce the hon. Minister of Finance to go back to the awful condition of affairs that prevailed under the old administration or to recognize specific duties. But the hon. member for South Ontario has the credit no doubt of having to some extent influenced the present government to go back to those conditions and to introduce again specific duties. They have done it in regard to buggies because we have it that the hon. Minister of Finance is going to make the duty on an open buggy $14 and on a covered buggy $17.50. It does not make any difference what it costs, the value is put at $40 for an open buggy, and $50 for a covered buggy. I can very well understand the difficulty that the hon. Minister of Finance was in when he was urged to take this action and I am sure that the hon. Minister of Customs must have been very much worried in reference to this application to have the duty on buggies increased. When these gentlemen came to them and said that they must have increased duties because these carriages were produced so cheaply in the United States, the hon. Minister of Customs no doubt said: There is a 35 per cent duty on buggies and there never was an ad valorem duty under the old administration of more than 35 per cent. Therefore, we could not make the duty any more than 35 per cent. But, they urged their case strongly and then no doubt a duty was named of 35 per cent with a specific duty of $4 or $5 on each buggy brought in. But, that would look like what the Conservatives used to do and they would not be able to do it in that way. Then, these hon. gentlemen no doubt said : We will inaugurate something new ; we will raise the price of buggies to $40 and $50 for the purpose of customs. Let us analyse this thing a little farther and see where we land in regard to the question of protection. Thirty-five per cent on an open buggy amounts to $14 and 35 per cent on a covered buggy amounts to $17.50. I do not know what these buggies coming in from the United States cost. These are cheap buggies which are used by the farmers. The hon. member for South Ontario had gone up and down the country and decided that the English tariff was the thing for his constituents. He wanted lower duties. They will, in the United States get $25 for an open buggy, or $35 for a covered buggy. If the price is any more than that the hon. Minister of Customs will be able to tell me ; but if, at any rate, they sell at that price that would mean a duty of 55 per cent on the open buggy and 50 per cent on the covered buggy. I will raise that valuation by $5. Suppose these buggies are worth $30 and $40 in the United States then the protection would be 46 per cent on the open buggy 44 per cent on the covered buggy. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite if that is not the whole policy of the government on this question of protection. Here they come and tell us that they believe in the tariff platform of the Liberal party as laid down in 1893, that they do not believe in the American tariff, that they do not believe in having such a tariff as will produce trusts and yet here is a tariff that is higher than the American tariff. These hon. gentlemen say one thing one day and another thing another day. They are looking north by south all the time. When the budget was delivered the hon. member for South Brant was just as anxious as he could be to get on his feet. He was the first hon. gentleman on the government side of the House to get up and defend the government in regard to this matter. He had got what he wanted for carriages. He knew the trouble he had had in Brantford in regard to the cutlery industry which is closed up. He knew that the best people in Brantford had invested a lot of money in the cutlery industry. That hon. gentleman during the course of his speech was questioned by my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith), who asked him :

> How many are employed in the Bailey Cutlery Works ?
> Mr. HEYD. I am very sorry to say there are not many. But when Canada gets big enough to sustain an industry of that kind, such an industry will survive and not till then.

Put that alongside of what he said in 1902. It may be unparliamentary to say that any hon. member of this House is insincere, but it is not unparliamentary to say that the whole Liberal party is insincere, and I am fairly entitled to take advantage of the privilege to describe them as such in respect to the tariff question. The fact is, that when a government supporter wants to get anything for his constituency, he cares nothing about what the farmer has to pay for his buggy or for anything else, even if it comes to putting on a duty of 50 per cent. I am not exactly sure what is meant by what is called the 'dumping' clause in the budget speech. Our present law is rather elaborate; the Customs Act is composed of 254 sections ; forty-nine sections were amended in 1888, and year after year every clause almost has been dealt with in some way. We know that the laws of the United States are much more strict than our laws are with regard to under valuation. After giving the matter some thought I take it, that the government intends to amend section 4 of the Customs Act as amended in 1888 by substituting the 'dumping' clause in the resolution, for it. But what evidence of dumping will the government be able to obtain. The 'Globe,' referring to an editorial in the New York 'Post,' stated that dumped goods did not have the mark of Cain upon them, and I thought that was a very apt allusion. Generally the conditions under which goods are dumped in another country, are, when there is an over production, or when prices are demoralized, and if such conditions exist in the United States as have been stated by the Prime Minister, then this dumping clause will have no effect. If the manufacturer in the United States sells an article in his own country at a cut price, and if he sells it at the same cut price in Canada, then it cannot be said that he is dumping his goods here. It is my opinion that we should adopt the same system of valuation for duty as is in force in the United States, and then there will be no necessity for this dumping clause. The United States have few ports of entry, whereas we have ports of entry at various points throughout the different provinces, and we will need an expert at each port to tell whether goods are dumped or not. In Montreal and Toronto we require to have experts in prices of all kinds and these men have to be paid large salaries. How are the customs officers throughout the country going to tell the real price of the thousand and one kinds of merchandise that are brought in ? I believe it will be impossible to enforce this law, and I fear that the benefit will not result from it which the government seem to hope. We on this side of the House are in favour of putting an adequate duty on all kinds of goods so as to protect our home industries, and if the government now in power would adopt that policy, they need not have to resort to all these complicated methods which they constantly seek to devise. The Minister of Finance raised the duties on wool-lens and I congratulate him on that, but I fear that even now the protection is not sufficient to resuscitate the woollen industry in this country. However, half a loaf is better than no bread. I am glad that the government is returning to the principle of imposing specific duties, because I believe that without specific duties it will be impossible to develop and protect certain industries in this country. I am also glad that the Minister of Inland Revenue has helped the native tobacco industry by the duty which this government has imposed, if the result is as he claims. I am not objecting to these increases of duty ; I am merely pointing out what to my mind are the defects in the fiscal policy of the government. The Minister of Finance told us, that we were likely to have an inquiry into the whole tariff question, but it seems to me that if he were able to arrange the duties on coal oil and buggies and woollens without any investigation, there must be certain other industries which the government know require protection and as to which they did not require an investigation because the needs of these industries have been placed before them again and again by deputations which have come here to wait on the ministers. But some excuse had to be found for postponing the revision of the tariff this session. One year the excuse was given that the revision of the tariff was postponed because of the joint high commission ; another year the excuse was given that it was because the colonial conference was meeting ; another year, it was because of the agitation concerning our trade relations with Great Britain and the colonies, and so this year another excuse had to be found and we are promised an inquiry. I think, however, that I will be able to show from the remarks of the Finance Minister, that he is even yet a little hazy about this matter. This delay is working injury to a lot of our manufacturers. I am not going to talk blue ruin ; but there are a considerable number of other industries which need assistance just as much as the woollen industry and the carriage industry ; and the problem could be solved just as easily in those cases as in the others.

The Finance Minister said we might have to change the tariff because of changed conditions in other countries. I do not think that is the way to look at this question. We want a tariff that will be stable, one that will be suitable to this country in all conditions. The conditions in another country may be good or bad, but we do not want to raise or lower our tariff in order to meet those conditions we want a tariff that will meet all conditions. If it is all right when trade is poor, it will be all right when trade is better.

The Finance Minister said that the tariff was sufficiently good to induce manufacturers from the United States to settle in this country. I suppose he had in mind the American Locomotive Company, which has built a factory at Longue Point. I was talking to an officer of high standing in that company a few days ago, and I asked him what induced the company to come to Canada. He said : 'There is a good demand for locomotives, and the duty on them is 35 per cent ; and one reason which influenced them was that they claim they can do more business if located in a British colony with other British colonies than from the United States.' This man had travelled in Russia and in many other parts of the world, and he said that there was something in favour of an article that was made in a British colony. This is an argument in favour of mutual preferential trade between Great Britain and her colonies. In this connection I might point out that the great Westinghouse Electric Company settled in free trade England, and put up buildings on 160 acres of land a short time ago ; and we may well ask why it did that ?

We have been promised a tariff commission. What the Finance Minister said on that subject was this :

> We desire to deal with certain things as they present themselves to us to-day we desire to deal with matters of urgency, reserving the question of a more general and more detailed tariff revision until an early date—I would say hopefully next session, but at all events as soon as a proper inquiry can be made.

The Prime Minister said in regard to that :

> Now, Sir, I have exposed the policy of the government upon this occasion. This is not, as has been stated, a regular revision of the tariff. That may come or it may not come, it will depend upon circumstances.

So that those are the remarks of the Finance Minister and of the Prime Minister, there is nothing very definite about the revision of the tariff. It may come or it may not come next session. Therefore, we are in the same position in regard to that as we were before. With us on this side of the House, protection is a constructive principle of politics, and the sooner hon. gentlemen opposite say what they mean by their tariff policy, as they did in regard to their policy of unrestricted reciprocity, the better for this country. We want to give a fair chance to Canadian workmen, Canadian brains and Canadian capital against foreign workmen and foreign capital. We want to say to foreign labour : You are protected at home in your own country ; hands off Canadian labour and Canadian capital. I believe it is the duty of this government to see in what way the industries of this country are being injured from time to time by the foreigner, and to say to him, hands off Canada. I do not think we ought to wait to revise the tariff until the chimneys are smokeless or until the windows are broken. The government pursued that policy in regard to the cutlery industry in the constituency of my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd), also in regard to the woollen industry. I do not think we want a repetition of that sort of thing. The Finance Minister is not what may be called an enthusiastic protectionist; and it seems to me that in order to administer a protective tariff properly, we need a Finance Minister who is an enthusiast on the question of protection. The stock-in-trade of hon. gentlemen opposite is the prosperity of Canada—the tremendous revenues they are rolling up, and the big surpluses they are enabled to show as the result of this buoyant revenue. I think we might well ask the government, what acts are to their credit with which the pleasant occupation of spending money is not connected? The spending of money is connected with a revision of the tariff. It might cause the government a lot of worry, but nothing to what the old administration had, when it put the protective tariff on the statute-book.

Before taking my seat, I would like to point out the amount of manufacturing done in this country. The Minister of Agriculture, for some reason, changed the mode of taking the census the last time from the mode followed previously, so that shows the condition of the industries somewhat differently. The industrial part of the census taken under this administration in 1901, I regret to say, is not published yet. I have been informed, in answer to a question on the order paper, that the figures are in the Printing Bureau, but we have not them at our disposal. I have the figures, however, and they show that according to the last census the output of the industrial establishments of this country was more than our total imports and exports. Our total exports and imports in 1903 were $467,664,685, and the output of our industries in one year, according to the census, was $481,053,385. I believe, however, that if the output of our industries were taken correctly, including all the products into which motive power enters, it would show that we are producing in our industrial establishments something nearer $750,000,000 annually. According to the census, the amount of capital invested in our industrial establishments was $446,916,487. And yet I heard one gentleman, who knew what he was talking about, say that he believed that three-fourths of the capital employed in our industries in this country was borrowed capital; so that you would have to add to the sum I have named a tremendous amount. So that we have at stake in this country a tremendous amount of money, taking together the capital paid up and the capital borrowed, and it should be the duty of the government to watch carefully these industries. The wages paid amount to $102,984,668 annually. Then we have this tremendous growth of imports from the United States. It has often been pointed out by hon. gentlemen opposite that many of these imports consists of raw materials, but it is not of the imports of raw material that we complain. In 1896 we imported from the United States $29,101,646 worth of dutiable goods and in 1903 dutiable goods to the amount of $68,538,323. Our whole imports from that country are going up by leaps and bounds. I shall not refer to the question of the balance of trade against us in the United States, because that has been threshed out time and again, but I may mention that the balance of trade against this country from all sources amounts to $10,410,000. This should not be. In the United States the condition is exactly the opposite. There the exports in 1903 amounted to $1,420,141,679 and the imports to $1,025,719,237, leaving a balance of trade in favour of the United States of $394,442,442. The excess of exports went in 1898 as high as $615,432,676.

Here is another illustration of our position. The imports of the United States in 1902 were $11.87 per head, while the imports for the same year in Canada amounted to $38.90 per head. Surely that is evidence of some weight regarding the amount of goods we are importing and the amount we are manufacturing. What we require is a protective policy suitable to the conditions of the country, and we do not want to be hewers of wood or drawers of water either for the United Sates or any other nation in the world.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman through all his criticism of the budget nor is it my intention to call in question the receipts and expenditures or the methods used by the government in spending money. Ever since I have been able to follow the discussion of public affairs, I have found that the usual custom with all governments is to spend as much money as they can and that it is equally the custom of all the oppositions to find fault with such expenditure. The question I propose to consider to-night is simply that of the tariff; and to my mind the budget brought down by the government this year is the most promising, intelligent and businesslike we have had since the late Sir John Macdonald introduced his protective policy in 1879. Like the budget of that year, the one brought down this year is inspired with the idea of helping Canadian trade and industry without any regard to outside circumstances, except in so far as they can affect Canadian business. That the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Kemp) and his colleagues on his side should criticise the budget is only natural; and I shall only refer to their criticisms to show the weakness of the ground on which they stand. For instance my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) has just told us emphatically that the policy of the Conservative party is not to copy that of the United States on the tariff question. But the chief organ of that party in the province of Quebec has been giving as the Tory platform——

Mr. KEMP. What I did say was that we do not propose to copy the American tariff.

Mr. BOURASSA. Exactly.

Mr. KEMP. I think the hon. gentleman said the American policy.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am glad my hon. friend has repeated what he has said, because what the Montreal 'Star' has been urging the Conservative party to force this government to do is to adopt the American tariff in our statutes. Not only that; but a former member of this government, the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) left the cabinet and joined to all practical purposes the Conservative party in order to force the Canadian government to adopt the American tariff. These hon. gentlemen have endorsed the attitude of the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte). They have endorsed his speeches and his articles in his newspaper 'La Patrie,' in which every day during the past fifteen months we have had an appeal to the government to adopt the American tariff in order to produce the same results in this country as that tariff has produced in the United States. Well, I repeat that we are ready to take issue with the opposition on this point.

My position on the tariff question is well known. Even before some members of this government and before many members of the Liberal party had come to the conclusion that we needed protection, I declared most clearly and emphatically that I believed a system of moderate protection was required for this country. In the elections of 1896 and again in 1900, and every year since, in parliament, I have advocated a policy of moderate protection suited to the requirements of the trade and industry in Canada. On that ground I am still standing, as far apart from the present position of the Conservative party which is asking us to copy the policy of the United States as I was apart from the policy of the Liberal party when many of them wanted the government to copy the policy of England. What I desire is that we should not go outside our own borders to borrow a policy. What I desire is that we should not go to England or the United States for lessons in political economy; or rather, there is one lesson we should learn from them, and it is that we should have a policy of our own, suited to our own needs. The budget of this year is the most comprehensive and sincere realization of that wish.

The hon. member (Mr. Kemp) disputes the fact that there has been depression in the United States under a high protective tariff; but what have we heard for the two last years from Conservative speakers? They have been preaching to us that we should raise our tariff in Canada because before long the depression in the United States will be such that a higher tariff will be the only way in which we can save our own industry. Only last year the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) urged the government to increase the duties on steel and iron because the condition of the steel and iron trade in the United States was coming to such a point of depression that it would be impossible for the steel industry in Canada to stand the competition. Sir, I think that the government have taken the only proper way to meet the danger of dumping from the United States and Germany. Certainly so far as the tariff of this year is concerned, I hail it with the greatest satisfaction and congratulate the hon. the Minister of Finance on the means he has taken to prevent Canadian trade and industry from being interfered with by unfair competition from foreign countries on that ground.

I cannot refrain from recalling my first address to this House on tariff questions—I think it was in 1898. On that occasion I caused a good deal of scandal amongst my hon. friends on this side by making exactly the same arguments that have been used this year by the Finance Minister as to the disadvantage to the Canadian consumer, resulting from dumping by foreign countries. I am glad that at last the government have opened their eyes to the danger and have adopted a policy which, on the one hand, does not commit us to the heresies of the Conservative party and cause us to fall into the excesses of high tariff, and thereby into the state of depression that exists in the United States—and yet, on the other hand, will protect Canadian industry against exceptional cheap prices, the only object of which is to destroy Canadian industry and leave us entirely at the mercy of the combines in the United States. Now, the hon. member says that there will be difficulty in exercising the power that we are asked to put into the hands of the hon. Minister of Customs. Undoubtedly there will be difficulty. There are difficulties in applying the present tariff. Every day attempts are made by the importers of this country to deceive the officials of the minister as to the value of the articles imported under the scale of duties now in force. But, Sir, merely because there are difficulties in the way, merely because there will be attempts to defraud the treasury of this country and to evade the obligations of the law, is that any reason why we should not adopt a suitable law and take the proper means to protect Canadian trade and Canadian industry against unfair competition? Should hon. gentlemen opposite come into power and adopt a high tariff, such as they say is required by Canadian trade, does the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) believe for a moment that there will be no attempt on the part of importers to evade the duties? The higher the tariff the greater the efforts that are made to evade the duties. Highly protected countries are always more subject than low tariff countries to attempts to defraud the treasury and evade the customs duties. In adopting this proposed amendment, the government have taken a course which will make us an example to many other countries that are suffering from the same evil that we complain of. And, at the same time, it will be a warning to the manufacturers and traders of foreign countries and to their agents in Canada that we do not want to stand any more unfair competition.

As to the amendments that are made in the tariff this year, I do not intend to discuss them at great length. So far as the amendments proposed by the Minister of Finance to the preferential trade system, I may say, without entering into details, that I am amply satisfied with them, not so much because of the particular effects of these amendments upon special industries, but because this is the first step taken by this government within the last five years to destroy the legend that has grown up in this country that the preferential tariff is something sacred, something that belongs to the shrine of imperialism, which cannot be touched, and which the government must not attempt to amend. The government have come back to the spirit in which that legislation was introduced in 1897, that is, that the preferential tariff was adopted for the benefit of the people of Canada, especially for the benefit of the consumers of Canada, and that it is to be dealt with by this parliament in the interests of the people of this country, as circumstances may require from year to year.

I admit that, from the declarations made by the Minister of Finance last year, we might have expected more changes in the preferential tariff than those which have been proposed by the government. In fact, Mr. Chamberlain himself told the people of England last fall that the Minister of Finance of Canada had virtually announced that he was going to repeal the preferential clause in case the British government and the British people were not prepared to meet us with equally favourable treatment. However, I entirely approve of the government for not having made more changes at the present time in the preferential tariff, since they have made the announcement that a general revision of the tariff is to take place before long.

So far as the general revision is concerned, I may say that I am also fully satisfied with the broad lines that have been given by the Minister of Finance as to the principle upon which that revision is to take place. Hon. gentlemen on the other side have criticised the idea of appointing a commission to look into the details of that revision. I entirely differ from the opposition on that point —although I am sure I am far from believing, on general principles, in government by commission. Where questions of policy, of law or of constitutional principle, are concerned, I believe it is the duty of this parliament to deal with them without invoking outside interference or help to prepare the work. But here is a question of business, which, with a lapse of time and the changes of industry and trade, is becoming more and more complicated every year. Here is the question of a tariff, any single item of which may cause disturbance in trade. For the moment you touch the tariff upon one item there is a reaction upon many other items which do not appear, at first sight, to be connected with it. Then there are the questions that arise between the different kinds of industry. For instance, steel, cotton and wool are the big industries that import most of their raw materials and turn out large quantities of products, and these become, in their turn, the raw material of some secondary industries, which, therefore, are directly affected the moment a change of tariff upon some products of the primary industries is proposed. The question has become more and more complicated for us. I am sure that one of the difficulties the government had to contend with in receiving all those delegations from manufacturers was that one day they must have been asked to raise the duty on an article, and the next day some other manufacturer would urge a reduction of the same duty, because to increase the duty would be to raise the price of the raw material of some secondary industry and so, in effect, neutralize the protection given to it.

But there is one feature of the tariff question that is still more important to my mind and requires the preliminary work of a commission of experts before we deal with it, that is the question of our foreign relations as affected by the tariff. The influence of tariffs on trade relations between different countries has been increasing daily all over the world. Originally, all protective nations adopted tariffs for their own use and without regard to anything except their own industries and their own consumers ; right or wrong, it was a mere question of internal policy. But, by and by, as the interchanges of commodities between nations grew, and especially when large protective and manufacturing countries began to compete with Great Britain and to take away from Great Britain the supremacy which she held at one time in the matter of exchange between nations, the tariffs of the different countries have become more and more every day instruments of international relations.

The Prime Minister announced last year that he wanted to press upon the British government the necessity of granting to Canada the right to negotiate her own treaties. The government this year announces that when they next revise the tariff they are prepared to adopt the principle which has been adopted by Germany, by France and by several other protective countries, namely, the principle of a double-edged tariff, or a maximum and a minimum tariff. What does that mean ? It means that we intend to begin a national life of our own so far as trade matters are concerned, and we wish to prepare for that by taking into our own hands the instruments wherewith we may meet foreign countries and deal with them as they deal with us, to apply to them a high tariff when they apply to us a high tariff, and apply to them a low tariff when they apply to us a low tariff. In other words, we want to deal with foreign countries on an equal footing. I cannot but applaud that idea. However, I must say that I take some exception to the definition which has been given by the Minister of Finance to that policy. He told us, if I remember aright, that the maximum tariff would apply to all countries that had a high tariff, although not discriminating against us ; that the minimum tariff would apply to the countries having a low tariff, although they gave us no special favour ; and that alongside of these tariffs, the preferential tariff would still apply to Great Britain and some of her colonies.

Well, Sir, I cannot see, if this is really the ground upon which the double, or I would say, the triple scale of tariff is going to be based, I cannot see how it is going to be worked out in accordance with what I understand to be the intention of the government. I do not see how their minimum tariff will stand as an offer for reciprocity to foreign countries so long as we retain the preferential tariff with Great Britain. Great Britain offers us no favour, she treats us just as she treats hostile countries, she offers us the same tariff that she offers the United States and Germany. At the same time I do not see how we are going to apply the maximum tariff to countries with a high tariff when we would have a minimum tariff to apply to foreign countries who have a low tariff, but who offer us no favours. The way the minimum and maximum tariff should apply is this : The maximum tariff is to apply to countries who refuse to make trade arrangements with us ; the minimum tariff will be offered as an inducement to foreign countries who, having a high or a low tariff, would yet be willing to make a special arrangement with us and give us better treatment in compensation for the lower tariff we offered them. It seems to me, Sir, that we have altogether a false conception as to what is favourable treatment or harsh treatment in trade matters. The country that treats us harshly is not the country that has a high tariff and applies it to us in the same way that it applies it to all countries ; the country that treats us favourably is not the country that offers us a low tariff, or even that offers us a free entry into its markets when it gives the same privilege to all countries. Take for example the United States, with an average tariff of about 45 per cent. Supposing the United States were to offer us a preference of 25 per cent off, while retaining a duty of 20 per cent against our goods ; would not the United States thereby offer us much better treatment than the treatment we at present receive from the British government who, while giving us free entry to her markets, also gives free entry to her competitors and our competitors ? who gives, for instance, no better treatment to us than she gives to Germany ?

The mistake we make is to introduce sentiment into the consideration of these trade questions. I well remember, even before I was a member of this House, when the Conservatives adopted the French treaty. The Conservative press and some members of the Conservative party, who at that time were not afraid of French domination, who at that time could derive no benefit from stirring up popular feeling in the province of Ontario against the province of Quebec—the Conservative press, I say, complained in the province of Quebec that some of the Liberals voted against the French treaty although that was the first treaty ever concluded by a Canadian government with the land of our origin. The position I took at that time was that in matters of trade I was first and foremost a Canadian, that if I were a member of the Canadian parliament I would grant no favours to France unless reciprocal favours were granted by France to Canada ; that my duty would be first of all to protect the interest of the Canadian people and to allow the people of France to look after their own interest. The position I took upon that question was exactly the same as the position I now take upon our trade relations with Great Britain. I say we shall not obtain any better treatment from the people of Great Britain, who are shrewd business men, so long as we show ourselves unable to deal with trade questions on their merits, so long as we say that because we are a British colony, because we are proud, and justly proud, of being a British colony, in matters of trade we are going to introduce an element of sentiment, we are going to make the people of Canada believe that while Great Britain treats us as she treats all the other countries in the world, we are bound to give her an advantage in our markets. I say the best way to obtain preferential trade with Great Britain is to show her that our people are as intelligent as they are. The best way to make trade arrangements with Great Britain, or with the United States, or any other country, is to show that we are prepared to stand upon our own bottom, ready to defend the interests of Canada first and foremost, without regard to the interests of any other country.

Now, Sir, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition thought fit yesterday to make a slight allusion to my opinions and some of my utterances upon that subject. He said, in substance : How is it that gentlemen who were connected with the Anglo-American Commission, with a body endeavouring to get a treaty of reciprocity with the United States, and who were not afraid of the dangers which might arise from such a treaty with the United States, are now so much afraid of a treaty of reciprocity with England, and deprecate the idea of imperial preferential trade because they fear that it will endanger Canadian autonomy ? Sir, I am accustomed to being misquoted by Conservatives. I have been misquoted and misrepresented by many Conservative newspapers, and I am sorry to say that now, for the first time, I must put the leader of the opposition in the same category. Sir, in all the speeches I have made in the province of Quebec against the adoption of Mr. Chamberlain's policy, I have stated most emphatically that I was desirous, and most desirous, of concluding a treaty of reciprocity with England. There is more : one of the articles of the programme of that very organization, La Ligue Nationaliste, which caused so much scandal at the beginning of this session is that Canada should negotiate a treaty of reciprocity with England. But, what I have stated, what I state to-day and what I shall go on stating as long as it is not acknowledged by this parliament and the people of Canada, is that in our trade relations with Great Britain we should stand on the same ground as we stand in regard to our trade relations with all other countries; that Canada is a self-governing country in trade matters, and that we should show the same spirit in dealing with Great Britain as we should show in dealing with other countries. What I am most surprised at is that this should cause so much scandal in this country. Have hon. gentlemen opposite forgotten the events of twenty-five years ago when their leaders and their party, being taunted with disloyalty because by adopting the policy of protection they were discriminating against the mother country, they declared to the four corners of this land that if protection for Canadian industries was detrimental to British interests, so much the worse for British interests ? As to my hon. friends on this side of the House who have also, though to a less extent, become so tender on the question of the loyalty of Canada, even in trade matters, have they forgotten the day when they were advocating through the length and breadth of this land the policy of commercial union with the United States which certainly would have brought us very near the point of political union ? I was not at that time old enough to take part in the fights of the Liberal party and I do not know what stand I would have taken ; but I will reply here and now to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that I am in favour of concluding the best reciprocity treaty wih the United States the moment we can do so without any sacrifice to our interests and dignity, and likewise I am ready at any time to negotiate the best reciprocity treaty with Great Britain and with any of the British colonies the moment that Great Britain is ready to treat us on equal terms, and to give us advantages similar to those which we give to her. Where is the disloyalty in that ? How can it cause a scandal ?

The policy that I have opposed for the last four years and that I am going to deal with now is not the proposition for a treaty of reciprocity between Great Britain and Canada, but it is the policy of Mr. Chamberlain. The policy of Mr. Chamberlain is as entirely different from the policy advocated either by the hon. Minister of Finance or by the hon. leader of the opposition as the American tariff is different from the Cobdenite free trade policy of England. The Minister of Finance told us that both parties in Canada were united in approval of Mr. Chamberlain's policy. He told us the same thing last year, though, I must say, I was glad to find that the tone was not exactly as tender and warm this year as it was last year. Last year the hon. Minister of Finance told us this :

> It is recognized in England to-day that the line that Mr. Chamberlain is taking is the outcome of the policy of Canada, and therefore what Mr. Chamberlain is doing is precisely what we have been doing for seven years in the Dominion. . . . My sympathies are with the right hon. gentleman. . . . Our hearts go out to him.

It was a fervid declaration of love. This year naturally, after one year of honeymoon without much intimacy, the sentiment has grown a little cooler.

> I think——

Says the hon. gentleman :

> I think I am justified in saying, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will not find fault with me in saying, that practically the two great political parties in Canada are a unit to-day in favour of the principle of preferential trade. . . . Although there may be details in Mr. Chamberlain's plan which we are not called upon to deal with, and which we do not know to-day how we can deal with, inasmuch as he has practically taken up the Canadian policy, adopted it and recommended it to the British empire, to that extent we are heartily in accord with Mr. Chamberlain.

The hon. leader of the opposition has echoed these words. But it is rather interesting—and to my mind nothing is more illustrative of the fallacy of all this imperialism—to compare these expressions of Canadian sentiment with the declarations of Mr. Chamberlain. Speaking at Birmingham in November last, that distinguished statesman said :

> We know as regards Canada that the Prime Minister of Canada, that the leader of the opposition, that Mr. Tarte, one of the most distinguished representatives of French Canada, are all in favour of this principle. . . . . They gave us voluntarily of their own accord a preference of 33⅓ per cent, and one result of that preference is that our trade with Canada has gone up in the last few years until it is nearly double—it has increased by something like £6,000,000—and the Canadian government and the Canadian opposition say that if we are willing to reciprocate they are willing to negotiate and see if they cannot give us further advantages.

Yes, in England, as here, both Canadian parties are supposed to be for it; but in England it is expected that both parties will grant more favours to Great Britain; and here the Finance Minister comes down with a decrease of the British preference; and the only fault found with this measure by the hon. gentlemen opposite—the men who have for four years denounced me all over the country as a disloyal rebel on account of my opposition to Mr. Chamberlain's policy—is that we are not decreasing the preference sufficiently. We have had it from the mouth of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) who has just taken his seat.

On general grounds, the Minister of Finance has told us and properly so that the movement is not over, that when a political movement of that magnitude is taken up by a statesman of the strength and will of Mr. Chamberlain, it is not likely to rest there, and that therefore we should wait a little while to see what progress Mr. Chamberlain may make and be prepared to meet him. I think it is only proper that for once the policy of Mr. Chamberlain should be shown to the people of Canada not in the colours in which it is being painted by Canadian statesmen and newspapers but in its true colours, as they are exhibited to the people of England by Mr. Chamberlain himself and by his friends.

Now I propose, by undisputable evidence, to show that if a treaty, founded on the policy of Mr. Chamberlain as it is represented to us by both the Liberal and Conservative parties in this country, were proposed in England, not only would both parties in England be opposed to it, but Mr. Chamberlain would be the foremost denouncing it. And likewise, I hold that if the policy of Mr. Chamberlain were presented to the people of Canada in its true colours, not only would both parties here be united against it, but I am sure that from the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite, from the worthy descendants of those high minded patriots who at one time hanged good Canadians because they wanted this country to be ruled in accordance with the principles of British institutions, and who soon after pelted the representative of the Crown because the public chest was no more to be confounded with their private purses—I am sure that from the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite, we would get annexation manifestoes such as those which in days gone by were prepared and signed by men who afterwards became their leaders and the highest representatives of Canadian loyalty.

What is Mr. Chamberlain's policy? We have been told many a time, and even yesterday the hon. leader of the opposition told us, that Mr. Chamberlain's policy was but a reciprocity treaty between England and Canada. My hon. friend from St. Mary's division of Montreal (Mr. Tarte), whom I regret not to see in his seat, has told us in the province of Quebec many a time and his words have been echoed by several members of the Conservative party in that province—that the only issue that Mr. Chamberlain was proposing was to give us big favours for a very small return, that he was proposing to advance the price of our farm products, butter, cheese, hay, wheat, grain, cattle, meat, in fact all the products of the farm, by granting a liberal preference, and that all he was asking in return was so small that it was not worth mentioning. On the other hand, Mr. Chamberlain declared at Glasgow, on the 6th day of October, that what the colonies were prepared to do was to give to England 'a substantial advantage' in return for 'a very moderate preference.' What is that substantial advantage that Great Britain is going to obtain? First of all—and that is the way Mr. Chamberlain, in his eloquent and forceful speeches, has always put the question before the working men of England—first of all, the working men of England will secure in the colonies a permanent market for their manufactured goods; because, he says, the colonies are prepared to renounce the development of their industries so as to secure for British workmen and British trade a large and increasing market. What Mr. Chamberlain wants is, that the colonies should become a dumping ground for British products. There is not the slighest doubt about that, as I shall show. What Mr. Chamberlain wants further is to prevent the colonies from making trade arrangements with foreign countries. In order to do that he does not want to make a separate reciprocity treaty with any single colony. To that extent I would be entirely in favour of his policy; and as I have time and again said in the province of Quebec, I am ready to discuss on the part of Canada, as distinct from the other colonies, our trade relations and reciprocity with England. But Mr. Chamberlain does not want that. What he wants is to create an imperial tariff that will apply at the same time to Great Britain and to all the colonies, and which tariff will be prepared by an imperial council sitting in London, so that none of the colonies will be in a position to make trade arrangements with any foreign country. Is that the policy to which both parties in Canada are united? Is the Minister of Finance ready to stand up here and say that the Liberal party will renounce the right of taxation in this country ; and the right to make our trade arrangements with foreign countries ? Are the leader of the opposition and the member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp), ready to stand up here and say that they will stop the development of industries in Canada, so as to give employment to British labour ? If so, let them speak no longer of adequate protection for the Canadian manufacturer, the Canadian workman, the Canadian farmer.

But, further, Mr. Chamberlain wants to secure for Great Britain an abundant supply of cheap food—and, as he said himself at Glasgow—'another product of the empire, that is, men,'—men for the army and men for the navy ; because the workmen of England will not hear of conscription, and the British government being afraid of adopting conscription, they want to come to the colonies to take advantage of 'that splendid wave of imperial sentiment,' and get from the colonies that which the people of Great Britain will not themselves give for their own defence. Is the Canadian government and is the Canadian opposition ready to stand up for that policy ? Why, Sir, we are advertising this country throughout Europe as a country in which the working man and the farmer may live in peace. The Minister of the Interior, in pursuance of his intelligent and progressive policy, has been for the last five years advertising Canada as a country of wealth and a country of peace. Are we going to invite the foreigner to come and live with us, and then are both parties in Canada going to join hands and say to Mr. Chamberlain : 'All right, come and get the young men of Canada for the army and navy of the empire—take that splendid product of the empire, men,—and we will fill up their places with Doukhobors and Galicians.'

But, what is most amusing is, that that splendid advantage which is offered to us in the British market, reduces itself simply to a small preference on wheat. And even on this ground, Mr. Chamberlain takes good care to tell the people of Great Britain, that the moment the preferential tariff would have been adopted, the price of wheat would go up a little, but that soon after the price would go down, so that after a few years the price of wheat in England would be lower than before the adoption of a preferential tariff. I am told that the legislature of Manitoba has adopted a resolution in favour of the preference, because it thinks it is going to stimulate the cultivation of wheat in the west. Is it of good omen for the farmers of Manitoba, that three or four years after we have closed our bargain with Mr. Chamberlain, the price of wheat is going to be lower than it is to-day ? That is the ground upon which Mr. Chamberlain has been standing for months back. He has proved to the people of England that so long as the registration duty on imported wheat was in force during the war, it was the foreigner who paid the tax. He has proved that the American transportation lines found a way to carry wheat cheaper, so that the price of wheat in England was not raised. He proved to the people of Great Britain, that when the wheat duty was increased in Germany in 1885, the price of wheat did not increase as fast in Germany as in Great Britain. He has proved, that when the wheat duty was increased in France, the price of wheat did not advance as fast as it advanced in England. He says that for the first years the foreigner will pay the duty, and that the imposition of the duty will have so stimulated the production of wheat, not only in Canada, but in Egypt and India, that the price of wheat will soon be lower in England. That is the very argument used by the Minister of Inland Revenue to-night with regard to the production of tobacco in Canada. Is it of good omen to the farmers of Manitoba and the great west, to know that after that bargain is concluded with Mr. Chamberlain, lands that are not now cultivated in India and in Egypt will produce wheat to such an extent, that the price of their wheat product will be lowered ?

Now, Sir, I promised the House that I would give a short quotation from Mr. Chamberlain, as to the effect of his policy upon Canadian industries. I cannot take it from this book which contains Mr. Chamberlain's orations for the past year, because Mr. Chamberlain was careful to strike out a few sentences from the revised edition, and so I must quote from the speech as reported in the London 'Times' the day after it was delivered. What did Mr. Chamberlain say as to the 'substantial advantage' we are going to give to England for 'a small preference ?' In the pamphlet which has been sent broadcast to the colonies, Mr. Chamberlain is made to say—and he is speaking from the bottom of his heart to the colonies :

> After all, there are many things which you do not now make ; many things for which we have great capacity of production—leave them to us as you have left them hitherto. Do not increase your tariff walls against us. Pull them down where they are unnecessary to the success of this policy to which you are committed.

I call the attention of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) and of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to this, in connection with their proposal for adequate protection. When they criticise this government because the tariff is too low, let them remember that Mr. Chamberlain is asking them to pull down the tariff walls further.

> Do that because we are kinsmen—without injury to any important interest.

Mind the last words : 'without injury to any important interest.' That is from the colonial edition, but the English edition which appeared in the London 'Times' read in this way :

Do that without regard to your important interest.

So long as Mr. Chamberlain was speaking to Canadians, through the ears of the good Scotchmen of Glasgow, he could say : never mind the important interests of Canada ; but when the colonial edition was issued the words 'without regard' were replaced by the words 'without injury.' Fortunately, I had more time than the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) to make these comparisons. Let us read further. Here again is the text in the book :

The colonies are prepared to meet us. In return for a very moderate preference they will give us a substantial advantage. They will give us, in the first place, I believe they will reserve to us much at any rate of the trade which we already enjoy.

In the genuine edition for Glasgow, London and a few other small places in England where people have a right to vote for the British parliament—that is, in the 'Times,'—the report reads :

I believe they will reserve to us the trade which we already enjoy.

Then he goes on, according to the book :

They will not—and I would not urge them for a moment to do so—they will not injure those of their industries which have already been created.

This is of course also in the report of the London 'Times' ; but here is a short sentence which I commend to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) who said the other day that we should develop and start as many new industries in Canada as possible. I also commend it to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), who says that the policy of the Conservative party is to start as many industries as we can—to arrange the tariff so that it will bring less money into the public chest and will result in the erection of new industries. What is the word of Mr. Chamberlain to these hon. gentlemen ? According to the report of the London 'Times,' it is :

They will arrange for tariffs in future, in order not to start industries in competition with those which are already in existence in the mother country.

That sentence disappeared from the pamphlet edition of the speech.

Is that the policy of adequate protection to which the Conservative party is committed ? Is that the policy on which both parties in this country are united ? Is that the reciprocity treaty which the hon. leader of the opposition would like me to uphold ? Sir, I will apply to that policy a very able definition which has been given by Prof. Shortt, of Kingston, in what, to my mind, is the most comprehensive discussion of that problem, both from an imperial and a purely Canadian point of view. Here is what he says :

What the imperial preferential advocates, on the two sides of the Atlantic, are trying to do is to divide an expected mutual benefit in such a fashion that each party shall receive about three-fourths of it, on the ground that the other must concede something extra for the sake of sentiment.

I think this is the best definition that has been given of the imperialist policy. But that is not the only advantage Mr. Chamberlain wants. He not only wants us to stop developing this country, to renounce our right, of which the Conservative party are so proud, of starting new industries in this country. Not only is Mr. Chamberlain asking us to renounce our right of becoming a self-sustaining nation in order to have the honour of supplying the empire with cheap food, and of becoming the dumping ground of the English manufacturer ; but he has made up his mind that we are also to renounce some of our political liberties. I have been attacked for saying that if Canada adopted Mr. Chamberlain's policy Canada would lose a good deal of her autonomy. In the debate on the address, I quoted Mr. Chamberlain's speech at Glasgow, in which he said, in reply to Sir Edward Grey, that the only means by which an imperial council could be created was by the adoption of that fiscal policy on which, according to the Minister of Finance and the leader of the opposition, both parties in Canada are united. He said that he started with the fiscal side of the question because the moment it was accepted by the colonies an imperial council would be forced upon them ; and at Birmingham he gave a definition of what that imperial council would be :

That imperial council, whenever it is established, will have to do with such delicate matters as imperial defence, as imperial legislation, as imperial taxation.

Now, Sir, I will repeat what I have said in the province of Quebec and in the province of Ontario. If the people of Canada have made up their minds that they are prepared to sacrifice a part of their legislative power to a small body of gentlemen sitting in London under the hand of the colonial secretary, they are free to do it. If the Canadian people have made up their minds to endow that small council sitting in London with the power of taxation over the people of Canada, let them have their will. If they have made up their minds to give to that small council the right to draw men from this country to supply an imperial army and navy, let them do it. But again I say, as long as the people of Canada are not acquainted with the consequences of that policy nobody in this House, neither the Minister of Finance nor the leader of the opposition, is to say that both parties in this country are united on that policy, and no Canadian newspaper is to denounce as disloyal those who raise their voices against it. The first duty of Canadian statesmen, whether they approve of Mr. Chamberlain's policy or not, is to state frankly what Mr. Chamberlain's policy is—not what they want it to be, but what it will be if the people of Great Britain ratify it. I may be told that if Mr. Chamberlain's policy is what I have pointed it out to be, we are not obliged to accept it. Why then raise in this country hopes and expectations that cannot be fulfilled? Why, then, keep the people on the other side of the ocean under a misapprehension as to the sentiment of this country? We have had in the budget of this year, the most Canadian budget we have ever had, a declaration of fiscal independence on the part of this country. It declares that we are prepared to trade with foreign nations. It declares that we have adopted the preferential policy for the benefit of the people of Canada; and so far as that is concerned, I greet it. But I say, do not tack on to it declarations of adherence to a policy the very opposite of the policy we are propounding. Let not the opposition speak of adequate protection, of Canada for the Canadians, of the defence of Canadian industries, and at the same time profess attachment to a policy which would mean the destruction of Canadian industries, which would not mean Canada for the Canadians, but Canada as the dumping ground for the manufacturers of Manchester and Birmingham.

But, Sir, I may be asked, if the proposed policy of Mr. Chamberlain will be so unfavourable to the colonies, how is it that the people of Great Britain refuse to adopt it? Well, one of the reasons may be that 'lack of imagination' on the part of the people of the motherland of which Mr. Chamberlain complained so bitterly. I will not style it in that way. I will say that the common sense, the shrewdness, and the safeness of the people of Great Britain are what is saving her and us from the imperialistic mania—from that distasteful policy propounded by Mr. Chamberlain during the last few years, and unfortunately endorsed by some of the public men of Canada.

Then we should not forget, when considering these big advantages which Mr. Chamberlain is offering to the people of Great Britain in exchange for a small tax on food, that the people of Great Britain cannot afford to increase the price of their food to-day for any future advantage which Mr. Chamberlain can offer. I have the authority of Mr. Chamberlain, as well as that of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, that one-third of the people of Great Britain are at present underfed—that 13,000,000 men, women and children in the British island have not sufficient to eat every day. I have here the statement of Mr. Chamberlain endorsing that of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, to the effect that out of every seven workingmen in Great Britain now at the age of 25 who reach the age of 65, three will have to go to the workhouse. Is it surprising, therefore, that the people of Great Britain should refuse, even were they to derive great advantages within a few years, to have the price of their food increased to-day, when on that price depends the life or death of one-third of the population?

But there is more than that. The people of Great Britain have not lost the sentiment of the balance of government. Happily for us, they know that the British empire has been built, both in commercial and military matters, upon the sound principle of decentralization, of the self-government and the independence of the different parts of the empire. They know that the only way by which the empire can stand together is to have the legislative tie as slender as possible for the slenderer that tie will be the stronger will be the sentimental tie. It has been rightly stated in England that Mr. Chamberlain wanted to bribe the colonies. Let me say here to the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp), and to all those hon. gentlemen who have so often taxed me with disloyalty, that if their loyalty requires to be bribed by the British government at the expense of the food of the British people, my loyalty and that of my compatriots, the French Canadians, is made of different stuff. We are loyal to the British flag and the British crown and British institutions, without being paid for our loyalty at the expense of the lives of 13,000,000 of the British people. We do not want to be bribed, but at the same time we do not want to be deprived of any of our liberties; and I believe that I am expressing here, not only the sentiments of French Canadians, but the sentiment of the large majority of the population of Canada, if the policy of Mr. Chamberlain were exposed to them as it is in reality, and not as they suppose it to be. It may be asked: But how is it, if Mr. Chamberlain's scheme is so disadvantageous to the colonies, that the colonies appear to be so much in favour of it? Well, that is easy to explain. Consider first the conspiracy of the press. Where is the newspaper in Canada which has shown up to our people the policy of Mr. Chamberlain as it is shown up in England? We have a few weekly papers which have done so, but not one of the large party papers has exposed this policy in its true aspect. What we have had is nothing but the sentimental and noisy arguments of the case—the sentiment of imperialism—and there is no worse bottom for making a good bargain than that of sentiment. My hon. friend from Toronto should not forget the rebuke that he and some of his colleagues were given at the last congress of the Chambers of Commerce in England during the South African war, when an attempt to induce the Scotch and English members of that body to pass a resolution in favour of preferential trade was met with the protest of a good Scotchman, who stood up and said: Our colonial friends should understand that sentiment is one thing and business another. We have also the strange attitude of leaders of both parties, who are afraid to show up the policy of Mr. Chamberlain in its true light. I am happy to say in the presence of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), that the first comprehensive declaration on the subject made by a leading statesman of this country was made by him when he showed the people of Canada, by his speech at the Canadian Club last fall, what the consequences would be if Mr. Chamberlain's policy were adopted.

If hon. gentlemen want to know what mischief bogus sentiment can accomplish, let them go back to the time of the South African war. At one time if any one were to stand up in this country—not in England, because in England there is free speech—and say that the South African war was unjust, he was exposed to be denounced for disloyalty. I have had some experience in that line. The South African war was supposed to be a crusade for justice and equal rights, and it was most disloyal heresy to take the opposite view. But to-day, when the war is over, people are beginning to see through its hypocrisy, and we find now that the last word of that war is the introduction, under the British flag, of yellow slavery into that country ; and those who stood against that war have no reason to be ashamed of the stand they took, either as Canadians or British subjects. It is as a British subject, proud of my British citizenship, and as a Canadian devoted to Canada first and to Great Britain afterwards—devoted first to the country of my birth and the people whose interests I have been sent here to represent —it is as a Canadian and a British subject, desirous of remaining at peace with Great Britain and of seeing this country of ours develop and prosper rapidly, and become more and more every day the brightest jewel in the British crown—it is because I desire to see this country fulfil all the promises of its past and grow and prosper in that spirit of liberty with which the very air we breathe is impregnated—that I have stood and will continue to stand as a determined opponent of Mr. Chamberlain's policy. What I have to say to the leader of the opposition on that question and, in a milder way, to the Minister of Finance——

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes ; because as far as that question is concerned, his deeds are better than his words. What I have to say is this. I think we should make it clear, both in England and here, that the Canadian people are ready to go a long way in order to have the best trade relations with Great Britain and make the best trade arrangement with the motherland and our sister colonies—and in doing that the government will find no more hearty supporter than myself—but I think it is about time, to paraphrase the eloquent language of the First Minister, that upon this as upon any other issue, we should look to the interests of Canada first and last.

I hope this will be the last time I shall hear it said in this House that I am an opponent of British connection or of good relations between Great Britain and Canada. I hope that it will be the last time at least when I shall hear such a charge from a gentleman of the standing of the hon. the leader of the opposition. The others I do not mind any more than I mind those newspapers which have taken up the habit of garbling words and of painting men under false colours, so as to gain a party success which they could not gain by discussing public affairs in a fair spirit and by describing men and their opinions as they are, and not as they would have them. As far as the people I represent are concerned, we are ready to make the best of arrangements with Great Britain, but at the same time we want it known that neither in political or military matters are we to consider any interests as superior to our own ; that the best service we can render to Great Britain, in our opinion, is to develop our country, to keep its population here, to bring in population from outside, especially from the United Kingdom. If Great Britain wants to have a strong foothold in America, she cannot gain it by closing our manufactures in order to give employment to the workmen of England ; but she can gain it by sending here the best of her sons to till our soil, and by sending capital to make use of our water-powers, instead of leaving it for Americans to come over here and Yankeefy this country. If Great Britain wants to keep the empire safe, she cannot do it by urging us to give our money towards the support of the British army and the British navy, nor by asking the people of the colonies to enroll themselves in the army and the navy. No ! On the contrary, she will keep the empire safe by maintaining a policy of peace and harmony with other nations and by allowing the colonies to develop themselves under the inspiration of the splendid principle of liberty which was introduced here with the British flag, and of which we French Canadians are as proud as any English speaking member of this House, or as the people of any constituency in Canada. Let the principle recognized be the principle of decentralization; let population grow ; let industries develop ; let Canada look to herself, New Zealand look to herself. Australia look to herself. Cape Colony look to herself. So will the empire be safer than by breaking up the old fabric that has stood so long the battle and the storm, and won the admiration of the world, rather than by following the footsteps of the German empire or the Roman empire, which sacrificed the provinces, the weaker parts, for the benefit of the centre. The principle of decentralization is the bottom principle of the British empire, and Mr. Chamberlain should be plainly warned that the colonies will resist to the last his efforts to change the empire. While I am happy to support the budget of the government I hope that the time will come when the government will make the opinion of Canada known to Great Britain, and, as was said by the Prime Minister, let the Canadian policy be one to express the views of the Canadian people and for the maintenance and protection of Canadian interests.

Mr. JAMES J. DONNELLY (East Bruce). I have listened attentively to the speech of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and was glad to learn from his opening remarks that there is at least one gentleman on that side who appreciates the benefit this country had derived from the tariff policy introduced by the late Sir John A. Macdonald and the Conservative party in 1878. The hon. member appears to be very favourably impressed with the proposition of the government to appoint a commission to consider the tariff. I am inclined to think that many other hon. members on that side are also favourably impressed with the proposition, and especially so in view of the general election, because they will now be able to go into high tariff districts and preach high tariff, and into low tariff districts and preach low tariff. The greater part of the hon. member's speech was what might be called a personal explanation of his views in reference to the tariff policy of Mr. Chamberlain. I shall not deal with that. I think that at this late hour, hon. members are not in the humour to listen to long speeches. I shall endeavour to condense my remarks as much as possible.

During the course of this debate much has been said in reference to the present prosperous condition of the country. We on this side of the House are as proud of the present prosperity of the country as hon. gentlemen on the other side can be; but it still remains for supporters of the government to show that the present prosperity is, to an important extent, due to any efforts of the present government, unless we give them credit for adopting the tariff policy which they strongly opposed when in opposition. We have had placed before us the diagram showing the increase in the exports of the country. I have looked up the items in the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I find that one of the principle items is wheat. In 1896 we exported 9,919,542 bushels of wheat. Last year 1903 we expoted 32,985,749 bushels. Here is an increase of no less than 23,000,000 bushels. What has the present government done to bring about the present increase in wheat? Very little that I am aware of. The Conservative party, under the leadership of the late Sir John Macdonald, secured the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway into our western country. The early settlers who went into that country were men of small means, and, for a time, there was no marked increase in the export of wheat But, in course of time, they went into wheat growing on a larger scale and their success encouraged men of capital to go into the business upon a scale larger still. The result was there has been a marked increase in recent years in the export of wheat. The following figures show the increase of our exports in the three important staples:

Exports	1896.	1903.
Cheese..	13,956,571	24,712,946
Bacon..	$ 4,381,968	$15,906,334
Cattle..	7,082,542	11,342,632

So that, in the three items that I have mentioned, we find a total increase of about $24,000,000. The increase in the lines that I have mentioned are largely due to the improved conditions of farming and also the bountiful harvest with which Providence has blessed us.

It seems to me that the government have taken a step in the right direction by increasing the minimum valuation upon horses imported. But, to my mind they have not gone far enough to prevent altogether the importation of American scrub horses. Under the change they have made, the minimum duty on horses will be $10 per head, while the minimum duty on Canadian horses going into the American market is $30 per head. In 1903 there were several carloads of low grade horses brought from the western states into the county of Bruce. This would be of comparatively little disadvantage if they were used for work only, but the danger is they may be used for stock raising, and in that case there is danger from the inferior breed of horses. The horse breeders of Ontario have expended large amounts of money introducing from Great Britain the best breed of horses to be had, and it is very important that the strain of our horses should be kept up.

The government by their increase in the duty on woollens have shown that they have at last come to the conclusion that a little protection may be a good thing for a languishing industry.

I wish to say a word or two with reference to the furniture industry. During the present session I met a deputation of prominent furniture men who came here to interview the government. They told me that what they wanted was to have the same duty placed on American furniture coming into Canada as is now placed on Canadian furniture going into the United States. In western Ontario at the present time, there is a large amount of capital invested in establishments for the manufacture of furniture, which manufacture appears to be a natural industry in this country. We have the raw material in the shape of timber, and the industry gives employment to a large number of persons and thus creates a home market for the products of the surrounding farm.

Where we find prosperous manufacturing industries we ought to find prosperous towns and villages. Where we find manufacturers prospering we find land values increasing. From the report of trade and commerce I find that we exported to the United States furniture in 1903 to the value of $14,754, while we imported furniture from the United States to the value of $518,217. In other words, we paid to the Americans $35 for furniture for every $1 that were received from them. And yet, Sir, this government refuses to grant to our furniture manufacturers the same degree of protection that the American people give to their furniture manufacturers. Speaking as a farmer, I wish to see not only our farmers protected but our manufacturing industries protected also. We are often told that the price of farm products is governed entirely by the British markets, I cannot agree with that statement. If that is so, how is it that land lying within twenty miles of the city of Toronto sells for $100 an acre, while an acre of land equally productive in the outlying districts only brings $45 per acre ? The British market is open to the products of both districts. To my mind the reason is because the land surrounding the city of Toronto finds a market for its products in that city, and the same principle applies throughout Canada.

Mr. HORACE HASZARD (West Queens, P.E.I.). I do not intend at this late hour to repeat to any extent the figures which were so ably presented by the hon. the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, and also by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. To my mind the budget speech should satisfy every man in Canada regardless of his politics if he has the interest of his country at heart. I agree with the Minister of Finance in his reference to one or two unfavourable conditions which existed during the past winter, owing to the severe weather, the heavy snowfalls and the late opening of navigation. But I think experience has shown that long winters with heavy snowfalls, although they delay the opening of navigation, have resulted in rich harvests for the farms, the fisheries and the forests.

I think it is admitted on all sides that Canada is prosperous to-day as it never was before. The Conservatives admit that fact, the only question is as to who is responsible for the wonderful increase in our prosperity. In the first place we are all willing to grant that Providence has had a great deal to do with the remarkable progress of Canada, but we also claim that it is under the wise and judicious management of the Liberal party that these results have been attained. Time and again hon. gentlemen in the Conservative party have asked us to point out what the Liberals have done to bring about this wonderful progress. Well, Sir, if time permitted I could easily point out many things they have done. We know that the Minister of Agriculture, for instance, has done a great deal to increase the volume of our exports of cheese, butter and other articles that come under his purview. Those of us who are engaged in business cannot fail to witness the great increase of our trade with Great Britain in those lines.

Now I wish to deal with some remarks of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) who undertook to reply to the Minister of Finance. He spoke in regard to the duty of kerosene oil, and stated that the Liberals ought to have taken that duty off years ago. I would like to know how that tallies with the remark of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) who, in this House to-night, gave lengthy reasons why the duty should have been retained on kerosene oil. There are two distinct statements from the Conservative side that cannot be made to tally at all. So far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to go back to the people of my province and tell them that this government has reduced the duty on kerosene oil, because I know it will result in benefit to our people. The people in my riding were told in the last election campaign that when the Liberals came into power they promised to reduce the duty on kerosene oil, but instead of cutting it down by one-half they only reduced it by one cent a gallon. Now, I am glad to find that the government have seen fit, in the interest of the farmers and the labouring classes generally, as against a few rich manufacturers, to make a further reduction in the duty of kerosene oil. In other ways also I think this government have dealt with questions affecting the public people in a way that is commendable. Although I do not think it is necessary to protect the woollen industries to any great extent, still I am glad that the government have granted some relief to some of those industries which, I am told since I came here, are suffering. At the same time I wish to say that I believe that if those depressed woollen industries had adopted modern methods and modern machinery they would have been able to hold their own as well as some other woollen manufacturers in Canada are doing to-day. I could name woollen mills that are prospering to-day and were quite satisfied with the tariff as it stood before this last change. I have noticed that the Conservatives are greatly given to finding fault. If the duties are lowered they find fault. We are told to-day that taking the duty off binder twine had a bad effect. That question has been so fully dealt with thata- I am not going to enter into it. I have also noticed that when the duty was slightly increased the Conservatives found fault also on that score. Tobacco has been mentioned time and again, but I think the Minister of Inland Revenue has made a very satisfactory explanation in that regard this afternoon.

I need not take up the time of the House in talking about that at any further length. I notice that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) produced a table showing the increase in the exports of home products from 1896 to 1903. The increase in seven years was $108,251,674 or $15,464,525 per year, and he claimed that that was not a satisfactory showing. But, let us look on the other side of the question. In 1878 the total value of domestic articles exported was $67,989,800. It increased in 1888 to $81,382,072 or an increase in ten years of $13,392,272, being $2,072,253 less than one year under the Liberals. In 1896 it had increased to $109,915,337, showing a total increase in 18 years under Conservative rule of $41,925,537, or an average increase per year of $2,329,193. The hon. member for Pictou also claimed that the Liberals are adopting the Conservative policy excepting the cautious financing of the Conservatives. I do not think it necessary to dwell at any length upon that point for the reason that that is also a question that has been fully dealt with. If the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte), had been in his seat when that hon. gentleman made his statement, I think he would have smiled as he had some experience as to how the Conservatives managed the finances of the country in years gone by. The Liberals have so managed the affairs of this country that notwithstanding the fact that the expenditures have been increased in nearly all of the departments, we have yet to hear from the Conservatives in this House or in the country any great attack on the Liberals on account of their expenditures. They know full well that any extra expenditure will be accounted for by the fact of there being greatly increased revenue. What are the conditions prevailing in Canada to-day ? There is full employment for willing hands at high wages. Our manufacturers are prospering as they never prospered before. Mortgages are being paid off as they never have been before and savings bank deposits have increased very largely. Has this prosperity which Canada is enjoying been world-wide ? The Conservatives have claimed that it has been world-wide, but my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has very clearly pointed out that such is not the case. We have only to go to Germany, Russia, Australia and even the United States to find that the measure of prosperity which Canada is enjoying has not been world-wide. I was very pleased indeed to hear the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that a commission would be appointed to revise the tariff at an early day. I think this is a very practical way of dealing with the affairs of this country. I do not know that anything better could be done. As has been pointed out, the Conservatives some years ago, appointed a commission to deal with this matter which was not satisfactory, but I think we have already learned that the commissions appointed by the Liberals since they came into power, have produced good results, and I think we ought to feel quite satisfied that in the different provinces we can make some suggestions to the hon. Minister of Finance when the time comes, that will be valuable to him and beneficial to the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite would, no doubt, like us to adopt a policy of high protection, but they are not willing to grant that any changes should be made from time to time, claiming that the policy of high protection should be, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, unchangeable. I think that changed conditions require that the tariff should be modified or changed from time to time. Sir, a policy of moderate taxation and general good government such as the Liberals have adopted and which has increased the total volume of the trade of Canada from $230,000,000 in 1896 to $459,000,000 in 1903, should satisfy all true Canadians who place country before party. As has been pointed out by my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Canada of to-day is as far apart from the Canada of 1896 as the Canada of 1866 was from the Canada of 1896. I think that very aptly illustrates what has been done since the Liberals obtained power in 1896. Fault has also been found with the preferential tariff as arranged by the Liberal party. It has been claimed that it was not made absolutely perfect and that it did not anticipate every possible contingency from the outset, but hon. gentlemen opposite do not dare to question the advantage it has been to us in setting an example to the world. Several hon. gentlemen have already dealt somewhat fully with that question. I am only going to say that if nothing else ever came from that preferential tariff than the advantages we are experiencing to-day, I would consider that it had achieved very great results. Its advantages are well known to those who have had any experience in exporting to the markets of Great Britain. During the last three or four years, or since this preference has come into force, the products of this country have received a much greater share of attention in Great Britain than they ever did before. I have had a good deal of experience in shipping to the markets of Great Britain the products of this country, and I am proud to say that we have been able to reach a higher point for our cheese and butter than has been reached in almost any part of the world or by countries, at any rate, which have been shipping to the markets of Great Britain. I also know that no person need have any better passport to Great Britain than to call himself a Canadian. That is no doubt the result of the good feeling which has been brought about by the Canadian government in offering this concession to the people of Great Britain. I was also very glad to notice that even the surtax on German goods has had a very beneficial effect in having already turned aside a good deal of trade in sugar from the German market to that of the West Indies. We know very well indeed that only a short time ago the British West Indies were on the verge of bankruptcy, and we believe that the surtax on German exports will add immensely to the welfare of the West India Islands. I think that is something we ought to feel proud of, because whatever else may be said we do hope and feel that we would like to see all of the British possessions enjoying as large a measure of prosperity as is possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for a short time I am going to try and point out to some little extent the reasons why I am of the opinion that this country should not adopt a high protection policy. We have been told from time to time that it is necessary in order to protect ourselves against the United States and other protectionist countries, but still I am one of those who hold strongly to the opinion that tariff wars are not conducive to the well being of any country, but that on the contrary they are detrimental to the business of any country. I do not believe there would be any good in the world in our undertaking a tariff war with the United States or any other country. Let us look for one moment at what is known as free trade England, and let us see whether or not it would be advisable for us in the face of all that has been going on in that great country to range ourselves with the protectionist countries.

Notwithstanding that during the past few years an immense amount of money had to be obtained in Great Britain for war purposes, and notwithstanding that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had to increase the income tax and obtain revenue in other directions, the trade of Great Britain is in a better condition to-day, than at any other time in the history of the motherland. The year 1903 has been a record year, as the following comparative statement from the Board of Trade returns will show :

	Imports (C.I.F.) including bullion and specie.	Exports (F.O.B.)
1901..	£521,990,198	£347,864,268
1902..	528,391,274	349,238,779
1903..	542,906,325	360,457,316

The total trade of Great Britain for 1903 amounted to £903,000,000 sterling or £25,000,000 more than in any previous year. It may also be noted that in some of our exports to Great Britain for the year 1903, Canada has taken a leading place. We exported to Great Britain during that year, cheese to the value of £4,820,000 sterling, out of a total importation to England of £7,054,000, and I am glad to say that Canada headed the list of the countries which exported cheese to England. In wheat, the supply from the United States to Great Britain declined from 43,000,000 cwts. in 1902 to 24,000,000 cwts. in 1903. Canada increased her exports of wheat to Great Britain from 9,500,000 cwts. in 1902 to 10,800,000 cwts. in 1903, but as the total quantity of wheat received in 1903 in Great Britain amounted to 88,000,000 cwts. it will be seen that there is still ample opportunity for utilizing the 171,000,000 acres of land suitable for cultivation in Manitoba, Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta as estimated by Professor Saunders, director of the experimental farm.

The imports of butter to Great Britain in 1903 were valued at £21,000,000 sterling, and the value of the eggs imported was £6,617,000. If time permitted I could enumerate many other articles for which Great Britain affords an almost unlimited market. Let me call attention to the important fact that the exports from Great Britain last year all increased, with the exception of one item, viz., telegraph cables and apparatus. There were increased exports in iron and steel manufactures, machinery and mill work, cutlery and hardware, cotton, yarn and textiles, glass manufactures, chemicals, woollen goods, yarns and smaller commodities. This would show that the trade of the United Kingdom is on a sound commercial basis, while the trade of protected Germany has lately undergone a severe crisis. Sir Robert Giffen in a report made in 1888 reviewed the relative progress of the United Kingdom and Germany, and he showed that in Europe, Germany was running Great Britain hard in northern Europe and France in southern European countries, but yet the general proportion of trade for Great Britain was higher than for France or Germany, and outside of Europe the preponderance of the United Kingdom was beyond question, while in the British possessions it was overwhelming. A similar review of the conditions in 1894, 1897 and 1902 gave the same results. The German imports to Great Britain increased in cotton, woollen goods, glass, iron manufactures. In 189611900 the cotton imports from Germany into Great Britain averaged £698,000, whereas the total export from Great Britain to all countries amounted to £58,000,000 sterling. I am mentioning these things to show that though it is frequently stated in this chamber that in order for a country to be prosperous the imports and exports should about tally. That is not the case in the prosperous motherland. The imports there are far in excess of the exports, and yet Great Britain is prospering as it never prospered before. Large importations to a great extent mean the employment of the people, and it is even claimed by British statesmen that imports enrich a country. I do not know if that could be applied to my own province, for Prince Edward Island is not a manufacturing centre, but wherever manufactures are carried on elsewhere in Canada, I feel it is not a bad sign of the times that the imports should increase to a greater extent than the exports, because when we import largely of goods we cannot produce in Canada, it certainly means employment for skilled mechanics and labourers. I think this contention will be apparent if the facts are looked into carefully. If time permitted I think I would be able to prove that the experience of France, Germany and Russia as well as other countries has not been such as to warrant the contention of the opposition in this House, that generally throughout the world, good times have prevailed and all countries have been prosperous. I am glad to be able to believe that among all countries in the world, our own land has been exceptionally prosperous. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish further to intrude on the indulgence of hon. gentlemen, but I cannot close my remarks on this first occasion I have had the honour of addressing the House, without referring to a statement made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) in regard to the admission of Newfoundland into the confederation. I am sure we would all be most pleased if that desirable object could be obtained. I trust the time is not far distant when the government will see its way clear to take the matter up seriously. There is in the lower provinces especially, a strong feeling that the admission of Newfoundland into confederation is absolutely necessary to complete this great Dominion of Canada. The area of Newfoundland is 42,000 square miles, one-third of which is in lakes and waterways, leaving 28,000 square miles of territory, 25 per cent of which is suitable for agriculture. This would lead us to believe that not only from the sentimental standpoint, but also from considerations of material gain, it would be well that Newfoundland should become one of the provinces of the Dominion. I had the pleasure of listening the other evening to a very able speech by the Hon. Mr. Morine, the leader of the opposition in Newfoundland, and I was much impressed with what he said . But I did not quite agree with his idea, that Canada should make an offer to the people of Newfoundland to come into confederation. I fear that such an offer would be unavailing at the present time, but I do hope that at no distant day, a joint commission will be appointed by Newfoundland and Canada to discuss the matter in its different phases and to arrive if possible at a result, which will redound to the mutual welfare and future happiness of both countries.

I feel that that would not only help us in every way, but, looked at from a maritime standpoint, it would enable us to add something to the strength of the maritime provinces in having added to this Dominion about ten representatives. We are now losing some of the representation of the maritime provinces, while we are adding to the representation of the great Northwest. We are all proud to know that the west is growing so rapidly that that is necessary ; we are all proud to know that that great part of Canada is coming to the front. At the same time we cannot but regret that the maritime provinces are losing some of their strength owing to their population decreasing, and for that reason we look upon it as important that Newfoundland should, if possible, be brought into the Dominion.

At this hour of the night, Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to make any further remarks ; but I shall hope to have the opportunity, when the estimates are being discussed, of perhaps concentrating my ideas to some better advantage, and making a speech at a time when I shall not feel so uncomfortable in detaining hon. gentlemen as I do at this late hour.

House divided on amendment of Mr. R. L. Borden.

Progress reported.

LORD DUNDONALD'S SPEECH.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourns I beg, by command of His Excellency, to lay on the table of the House certain papers respecting the removal from office of the Earl of Dundonald, and I beg at the same time to move that the papers be printed and that rule 94 be suspended.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion is put, I would like to inquire whether or not the papers include all letters written by the Minister of Agriculture to the Department of Militia, as well as to the proposed officers in the regiment—with respect to their political opinions, for example ; because if we are to have a record of the correspondence, the result of the interference of the Minister of Agriculture in this matter, we ought to have a complete record, and not any partial statement, such as that which was presented to the House the other day, and which was contradicted by the Minister of Agriculture himself when he came to speak on the subject. Therefore, I would ask my right hon. friend whether we are to have everything, or only such documents as it suits the purpose of the government to produce ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend that it suits the purpose of the government to produce everything. My hon. friend has no right to assume anything else. I may say that the papers which I produce to-day are not complete, but we propose to bring some others to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Am I to understand then, that it is the intention of the government to produce, without evasion and without equivocation, all letters which have been written by the Minister of Agriculture with respect to this matter, whether to persons connected with the Department of Militia or to persons proposed as officers in this regiment, in order that the House may judge of the character of the interference which undoubtedly he did make in the affairs of this regiment. That is what I would like to know, and I think I have a right to ask my right hon. friend, because without that the record will not be complete.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to say to my hon. friend that it is the purpose of the government in this instance, as in all instances, to bring down, without evasion or equivocation, all papers which are on record and on file connected with this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But I want my right hon. friend to understand that I am not satisfied with all papers that are on file in the Department of Militia. The letters of the Minister of Agriculture to which I refer, and of which evidence can be produced if necessary, are not on file in the Department of Militia ; but, nevertheless, they have been written and do constitute an interference by the Minister of Agriculture in the affairs of this regiment. All I am asking and want to know is whether it is the intention of the government to produce these as well as the documents on file in the Department of Militia ? Because I venture respectfully to submit to my right hon. friend that without those documents the record which the country will desire to receive will not be complete.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can add nothing to what I have said already, and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture is as anxious to produce everything as I am, because he has nothing to hide in reference to this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I have to say is that if the government will not produce all of those letters, I will endeavour to supplement the return myself.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then I understand there has been some interference with the Department of Militia on the part of my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend has no reason to suggest anything of the kind, because I have told him—and he understands it, if he understands the English language at all——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He does not.

An hon. MEMBER. Foreigner.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He understands that the letters to which I refer are not on file in the Department of Militia, but their existence has been public property in certain communities in this country for many days past. The Minister of Agriculture knows of them and has copies of them I have no doubt. They are not documents which are on file, but they constitute an interference by him, and I would think it only fair, if the government propose to make a complete, fair and truthful record of this matter, that these documents should be produced as well as those which are on file. That is all I venture to suggest, and I trust that my right hon. friend will not regard me as unreasonable in making that moderate request respectfully and sincerely so that the House and the country may have an opportunity of judging fairly in this matter.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Bills first of all and then if possible supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What particular Bill will be taken up ? I am only desirous of knowing whether one of importance, the Militia Bill, will be considered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not quite sure, but perhaps so.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.35 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 16, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—ALIENS EMPLOYED ON SURVEYS.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. The Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) was good enough to inform us yesterday that he would make a statement to-day respecting the bringing down of some further correspondence in relation to questions between the Association of Engineers and the government as to the employment of aliens. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to make that statement to the House ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). I do not know if the hon. gentleman quite appreciates what I said. The hon. gentleman intimated yesterday that all the correspondence had not been brought down, and I stated that I would make inquiry upon that point and inform the House. I have made that inquiry, and I find that the Department of Labour, over which I preside, made a return which included all the correspondence that was available, but that there may have been some, I think two or three letters, that had been forwarded to the Department of Railways and Canals. My deputy informs me that he understood the Department of Railways and Canals was also in possession of some correspondence. There has been some correspondence, one or two letters since. There was an order made yesterday, and my department is now collecting everything that has not been brought down since the last return, and I suppose that in a day or two that return will be made.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the Department of Railways and Canals bring down the correspondence it has ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. We ought to have it all grouped together in one department, I presume. I will endeavour to have it all included in one return.

DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to say that, as I stated to the House yesterday, that some further papers would be brought down with respect to the removal of Lord Dundonald, these papers will be brought down before the close of the present sitting of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I presume they will include all that I have asked for ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) if he is ready to give me an answer in reference to the letter I spoke to him about yesterday ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). The hon. gentleman yesterday inquired whether I had received certain letters from a certain named person in connection with a certain matter, and I told him I would make inquiry upon the subject and make a statement to the House. This inquiry has reference to an order of the House made for a return of the correspondence upon a certain subject. The department has made a return in compliance with the order of the House, and every paper that is properly produceable before this House under that order has been produced. I do not think it would be proper for me to give categorical answers as to whether I have or have not received certain correspondence. If that correspondence is of a public nature it belongs to the public, if the correspondence is of a private nature no person has a right to inquire whether such correspondence has been received.

Mr. WILSON. I may be allowed to say to the Postmaster General that I have obtain from Mr. Prest permission authorizing the Postmaster General to remove the word 'private' from that correspondence. I wrote a note to the Postmaster General asking if he would be good enough to give me a copy of the letter. I have also information that Mr. Walker wrote three letters, and none of these letters were private.

EXTENSION OF THE FISHING SEASON.

Mr. A. C. BELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, as I see that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) is in his place, I wish to ask him if he has received any communication from the fishermen asking for an extension of time for the taking of lobsters on the coast east of Halifax ? I understand that the fishermen have not been doing much this season. I have some correspondence myself upon the subject, and I would like to know what information the minister can afford us upon it.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I have received several requests for an extension of the time of the fishing season, and the government are considering that matter at the present time.

PAPERS RE ALASKA BOUNDARY AWARD.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know what progress has been made in the preparation of the documents which were to be brought down in connection with the arbitration respecting the Alaska boundary. A few months ago the Prime Minister informed us that these documents would all be brought down, and I then suggested that they be brought down in such a way that we could readily understand what the proceedings were, and what the issues had been before the commission, in order that we might be able thoroughly to appreciate the whole question. It seems to me that the papers might have been brought down and printed within the period that has since elapsed. There may be reasons for the delay that I do not know and which have not occurred to me. But in the ordinary course, the period of a few months would seem to have been sufficient for the preparation of the return. The government are now proposing to take every day as a government day, and therefore we are not in a position to put any motion upon the order paper in regard to that matter if we desired to do so. I would therefore suggest that the Prime Minister should expedite this matter as much as possible. Perhaps he would now inform us when we may expect it ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not later than next week, probably the middle of the week.

THE INSPECTION AND SALE OF SEEDS.

Bill (No. 125) for the inspection and sale of seeds (Mr. Fisher) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. CLANCY. I would say that before we proceed with this Bill the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) promised to bring down the recommendations made by certain persons outside, and any expressions of opinion received in regard to it. The hon. gentleman has not been good enough to favour us with those yet.

Mr. FISHER. I think that what my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) alludes to is the way in which this Bill was distributed amongst the people to give them an opportunity of studying it during the last recess and also an epitome of the expressions of opinion received from the people to whom this Bill was sent. I have here in my hand a statement of the distribution as made of 32,000 copies of this Bill. We sent out the Bill for the purpose of eliciting an expression of opinion from the people who are interested in it, in the following way : To seed merchants in Canada, wholesale and retail 6,500 copies, to all the members of the Dominion Seed Growers' Association 430 copies, to all the officers of the different farmers' institutes, agricultural societies and farmers' clubs in all of the provinces, 6,340 copies, to newspapers in all provinces together with newspaper bulletin 970 copies, to members of parliament 210 copies, exchange list, that is experimental stations abroad, 230 copies, to individual applicants 550 copies, per department farmers' mailing list and to lists of members of agricultural organizations whose names were in the department, about 15,500 copies, in store about 1,270 at the date this memorandum was made out. I might in explanation, say that arrangements were made with the superintendents of the farmers' institutes in each of the provinces so that one man on each deputation or delegation was instructed to discuss the subject at every meeting. They were provided from the office of the seed division here with printed charts, with samples of various seeds and summary information showing the results of the investigations in the seed laboratory of the department here. There were about 900 of these farmers' meetings held. We have no absolute definite information that this Bill was read and discussed at all of them, but the reports that have been received from the institute lecturers would indicate that it was discussed at all of them, and that there is a strong desire on the part of the farmers in Canada for an Act that will tend to suppress the evils connected with the seed trade. Twenty-seven of these reports have been received from agricultural lecturers each of whom spoke at a large number of meetings and they all clearly show that the provisions of the Bill were fully supported by the farmers at every meeting. The only suggestions that have been made by farmers were to the effect that the Bill should be made more stringent. A large number of letters commenting on the Bill have been received from individual farmers during the past two months, and in all of them there has been an urgent appeal for the passage of this Bill and asking that it shall be made law without any unnecessary delay. I may say further that no communication has been received from any farmer entering any protest at all, or in any way pointing out that the provisions of the Bill would hamper his operations. We have received communications from some 13 seedsmen, more than one letter from many of them. In some of these the provisions of the Bill were pointed out as being too stringent. Several of the seedsmen considered that having to label all packages of timothy, alsike and red clover seed would greatly hamper them in carrying on their business. Letters were received from two seed merchants in support of the Bill as it now stands. We received a number of resolutions that were passed by the following organizations: The Farmers' and Dairymen's Association of New Brunswick, on February 23, 1903; the Nova Scotia Farmers' Association on February 9, 1903; the Ontario Agricultural and Experimental Union on February 5, 1904; South Renfrew Farmers' Institute at meetings held at Brudenell, Killaloe, Stewartville, Loch Winnoch, White Lake, Burnston, Gratton, Mount St. Patrick, Shamrock and Renfrew, on February 27, 1904; the Central Farmers' Institute for British Columbia on April 27, 1904; the South Brant Farmers' Institute; resolutions adopted at different meetings held in the riding, February 29, 1904; the East Peterboro' Farmers' Institute on December 5, 1903; the Metchosen Farmers' the Farmer' Institute convention held at Indian Head, Assiniboia, Feb. 11, 1904; the Farmers' Institute convention held at Brandon, February 10, 1904, and Farmers' Institute meetings in Haldimand, Monck, Brant, Oxford and Norfolk, 33 meetings in all where after discussion, votes on this question were taken and resolutions passed. I am informed that there was no opposition to these votes.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman the resolutions that were passed, and can he tell the committee whether these Farmers' Institutes propose to adopt the hon. gentleman's Bill or a Bill in this direction?

Mr. FISHER. We received a good many of these resolutions from the officers of these institutes, though not all of them. We also have letters from several others of the Farmers' Institute, lecturers who state in general terms that a large number of resolutions favouring the Bill have been passed by a number of local Farmers' Institutes. In these cases particulars have not been received by the department. The council of the corporation of Matsqui, British Columbia, have also passed a resolution. While I am on my feet, perhaps I may say a few words in general terms upon this Bill.

Mr. CLANCY. Before the hon. gentleman proceeds to explain, I would like to say that I must confess that I am somewhat disappointed at the information the hon. gentleman has given us. I am thoroughly in sympathy with a measure in the direction in which this Bill goes, but it was rather a surprise to the committee, I am sure, to me to learn that the hon. gentleman has received no support generally for his Bill, as it is, from localities in Canada the least interested in many features of this Bill. I would like to know, to what very great extent the maritime provinces and the western provinces are interested in the cultivation of clover for instance. I am surprised to find that the Bill has been so little endorsed generally throughout the country. We all know that when resolutions are passed at these meetings in favour of a Bill, such resolutions refer to the provisions of the Bill generally, and not to its details. I think there should have been more general approval before the Bill was presented to the House.

Mr. FISHER. There were in all thirty-three farmers' institute meetings.

Mr. CLANCY. How many of these passed resolutions ?

Mr. FISHER. A vote was taken in all of these, and there was no dissentient vote. These meetings were held in Haldimand, Monk, Brant, Oxford and Norfolk ; some of them large seed-growing counties in the province of Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to read one of these resolutions.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And at the same time state how many persons were present at each of these meetings ; as a rule there are about half a dozen.

Mr. FISHER. This is a specimen resolution which was sent from Burford, Ont., and it is written by I. T. Taylor, secretary of the South Brant Farmers' Institute, and addressed to myself :

Feb. 29, 1904.

Dear Sir,—At a series of Farmers' Institute meetings held in South Brant during this month, the subject of good seeds, and weeds was discussed, and the Bill called the Seeds Control Act introduced by yourself at the last session of parliament, was brought before the farmers and discussed. The following resolution was adopted at seven different meetings in the riding, and I was instructed to forward a copy to you :—

Resolved (re Seeds Control Act), moved by Thomas Parkes and seconded by Owen McAlister, that we, the members of the South Brant Farmers' Institute having been made acquainted with the provisions of the Seeds Control Act which was introduced in the House of Commons last session and laid over on account of opposition from seed merchants and other, and for non-support by those directly interested, desire to express our hearty approval of the said Act, believing that it would be in the direct interest of the farmers of the Dominion if such a law were placed on the statute-books, and that a copy of this be sent to our representative and also to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. CLANCY. That looks like a stereotyped resolution prepared and carried around.

Mr. FISHER. I have no means of knowing anything of the kind ; it was not prepared and it was not stereotyped by any body in connection with my department. My statement is, I think, correct, that this Bill was discussed at several hundred farmers' gatherings of one kind or another since last session of parliament, and the opinion of the farmers expressed at these meetings was practically unanimously in favour of it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) himself says that he is in sympathy with the principle of the Bill. There are several interests in the country which are affected more or less by this Bill ; there are the farmers who buy the seeds ; there are the men who deal in these seeds, retail and wholesale, and there are the producers of the seeds. The origin of this Bill was a feeling amongst the farmers that they had no means to protect themselves against paying for bad seed, and against the even far greater injury to them of sowing weed seeds instead of genuine seeds. This feeling was most insistent amongst the farmers of Quebec and the maritime provinces, who have suffered more than the farmers of the great province of Ontario in this respect.

Mr. CLANCY. Where did these bad seeds come from ?

Mr. FISHER. It is rather difficult to trace where they come from, but of course they are sold to the farmers by dealers. In the maritime provinces hardly any seed is raised for sale ; in Quebec a certain amount is raised for sale in a few localities, but the great bulk of the seed raised for sale in Canada comes from the province of Ontario. Most of that seed is raised in perfect good faith by the men who raise it. They raise it to the best of their ability under their present conditions and methods, for the purpose of selling it in a legitimate way. As a matter of fact, everybody knows, nobody better than the seed merchants who purchase it, that a great deal of that seed is not of first quality, but is mixed with weeds or other seeds, while a good deal is not well ripened and consequently is not germinal. I do not say this as any reflection on the men who raise the seeds. They have been carrying on this business for many years to the best of their ability and in a practical way ; but at the same time the results have not been what the purchasers of the seed had a right to expect.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that farmers generally have not in their minds the idea that the grain or seed they are growing is to be used as seed. Does the hon. gentleman mean the farmers or the seed growers, and to a large extent the seed merchants ?

Mr. FISHER. I was speaking more particularly of small seeds like the seeds of grasses and clovers. Seed grain is raised very frequently without any intention of it being sold for seed purposes.

Mr. CLANCY. So is clover.

Mr. FISHER. Sometimes clover is, although I am in the judgment of those who know the business when I say that in most cases it is grown for the purpose of being sold as seed.

Mr. CLANCY. Not at all.

Mr. FISHER. That is my opinion. The hon. gentleman may be right and I may be wrong.

Mr. CLANCY. In the locality where a great quantity of clover seed is grown I know that is not the case. Much of it is for export.

Mr. FISHER. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that it is grown for export, and not to be sold in Canada ?

Mr. CLANCY. Not especially. It is not grown to be sold as seed.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot accept that statement altogether. The man who raises clover seed, speaking of the large farmers, would probably at the outside require for himself a few hundred pounds, and he might very easily have a thousand pounds or more, perhaps several thousand pounds, and he certainly would not be cutting and thrashing all that and making it into seed for his own use alone. He would use as much as he wanted for himself, but a great deal of it would be sold. As a matter of fact, we know that in certain sections of the province of Ontario men raise large quantities of clover and grass seed for sale. Those men have been carrying on the business, I believe, to the best of their ability ; but old, cultivated land is frequently found to produce other seeds and weed seeds. The result is that a very large portion of the seed bought by the seed merchants has not been thoroughly cleaned before being put on the market, and is not of a quality which the purchaser would wish to take. Of the three classes chiefly interested in this business, we have first the producers, next those who buy the seeds from the farmers, the merchants, who clean the seeds and sell them again to farmers, retail merchants and jobbers. There are a number of great commercial houses in Canada engaged in this business. I think the great majority of them do their business excellently well. They do the necessary cleaning of the seeds. They have special machinery and appliances for the purpose. They sell to the local dealers, and these in turn sell to the farmers. My object in drawing this Bill, and in all these investigations and discussions which have preceded it, has been to try to secure for the farmers of the country as pure and good seeds as it is possible to get for them, keeping clearly in mind the necessities of the business in all its branches—to interfere just as little as possible with the course of this business and with the people engaged in it. I wish to avoid as much as possible interference with the ordinary channels of trade or the practices followed, except when those practices are not in the interest of the community. I want to state very emphatically that I do not think there has been intentional fraud on the part of those engaged in the seed trade in Canada. The men who grow seed grain and clean it necessarily obtain in that process different grades. They have the very best seed, that which is practically absolutely pure and germinal. Some merchants adopt standards, differing from others. Some divide their seeds into a greater or lesser number of grades and sell the seed according to its grade. The majority of farmers, I think, do not appreciate or understand the great difference there is in the purity and cleanliness of the different grades of seed. The result has been that a great many people, I will not say were intentionally inclined to be fraudulent, but as a matter of fact were selling to the farmers of the country grades of seeds which the producer, if he knew their quality, would not have thought of buying at the prices which he paid for them.

This condition of affairs is what justifies the passage of such an Act. It is impossible for the ordinary purchaser to be able to know that he is getting exactly the seeds he intended buying. In some things a man can judge what he is getting. If he buys a horse he can examine it and tell in a general way what it is worth. But the ordinary farmer, when he buys seeds, cannot tell whether he is getting good value, because in order to do so he would have to examine them under a microscope or powerful magnifying glass. He would require to know also the different varieties of seeds, and this therefore seems to me a legitimate case for the passing of a law to regulate transactions of this kind. After careful consideration of the question I brought in an Act last session, but the seed merchants think that its provisions are too stringent and have found that they could not carry on their business under it. I have therefore in the present Bill considerably modified the provisions of the Act in the direction desired by those engaged in the trade. I have not however gone quite as far as the seed merchants asked, for if I had, I would not be able to protect the purchasers. This subject is one of great importance to agriculturists and I am quite willing to adopt any suggestions which may make the law more workable and effective.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman will not find that support for his Bill from public opinion which is necessary in order to make any law effective. The question has not been presented to our farmers in such a way that they could have an opportunity of giving their views upon it, but has simply been presented at institute meetings by men whose object was not to have the defects of the measure discussed but to have it extolled as something which could not fail to benefit the farmers. And the only support he has been able to secure for his Bill in its details is one which he took care to secure. All he has been able to produce is a copy of a resolution passed at an institute meeting in this province, but any one knows how easy it is to secure an endorsation of that kind. I happened to be present at one of those meetings and I found that the farmers, instead of being invited to discuss the measure, were simply treated to an elaborate panegyric of it. Let me refer to the very first clause :

No person shall sell——

That prohibition applies to every man, whether he grows seed for himself upon his twenty-five acre farm or whether he is a large farmer or a dealer in seed, who may be buying and selling in the ordinary way.

No person shall sell or expose or have in his possession for sale for the purpose of seeding——

How is the minister going to determine whether a farmer has seed in his possession for the purpose of seeding or not? The thing is abolutely unworkable. Every one does not grow seed to sell as seed and, though the Minister of Agriculture may say that the Bill is adapted to the conditions, yet, without presuming to contradict the hon. gentleman, I may be allowed to humbly suggest that that does not settle the question—it is not proof. I venture so far as to tell the hon. gentleman that his Bill is based upon wrong principles, that is upon principles that cannot be reduced to practice in this everyday world. If the hon. gentleman wished to provide against seed merchants willingly, knowingly, allowing seed to leave their warehouses in utter disregard of its composition, that might be a very proper measure. My experience small as it has been, I think, is a fair guide to the actual conditions. I believe we have very few seedsmen in Canada who will knowingly send out bad seed. It is to the interest of every reputable seed merchant—I am speaking more particularly of the province of Ontario—to be most careful about the kind of seed he sends out because his house may be brought into disrepute in a single day if the seed he sells is other than he represents it to be. He can only hope to gain and keep the support of men by being careful and reliable. The hon. minister has not said that in the province of Ontario there has been any widespread complaint on that ground. I have not heard of a single case of any reputable seed house in Ontario sending out a pound of bad seed. If there is a general outcry on that ground, I confess I have not heard it ; and if there has not been a general outcry, I would ask the hon. minister from what quarter comes the demand for this Bill, this mischievous Bill so far as appears on the face of it, which is now introduced for the second time ? The hon. minister must have had something to warrant him in introducing so drastic a measure. He must have information to show that, the farmers have been made, intentionally or unintentionally, the victims of bad seed. If there is any complaint in the province of Ontario perhaps he will give me some evidence of it.

Mr. FISHER. Let me deal in order with the two points the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy has raised. In the first place, speaking of the resolution which I read, he seemed to think it was a resolution that had been put before a lot of farmers' institutes and passed in stereotyped form. In answer, I may tell the hon. gentleman that no such resolution was prepared by anybody that I know of. The meetings were left entirely to themselves as to the form of the resolution and as to whether they would pass resolutions or not, or give any expression of opinion. I will read one or two resolutions to show that the form was not stereotyped. Here is another which reached me from German, and was the expression of opinion from the Farmers' Institute of East Peterborough :

Resolved, that in the opinion of the Farmers' Institute of East Peterborough the Bill respecting the inspection of seeds offered for sale is a step in the right direction, and the government will have the hearty support of this institute when considering this Bill.

Mr. GILMOUR. Does this refer to the Bill of this year or of last year ?

Mr. FISHER. To the Bill of last year which was a more stringent Bill.

Mr. GILMOUR. I know it was. Last year's Bill was an impossibility.

Mr. FISHER. And yet, this farmers' institute said that we should have their hearty support in considering that Bill. I have another resolution here, but I see that it comes from Midland, New Brunswick. As my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) speaks especially of Ontario I can hardly read this to prove to my hon. friend anything about Ontario, but the form of it will show that the resolution is not stereotyped :

Moved by F. E. Sharp, seconded by W. W. Fawcett and resolved : Having had the results of this work given to us to-day and knowing that the conditions referred to are common to the whole Dominion, this convention of the New Brunswick Farmers' and Dairymen's Association——

This, it seems, was the provincial association, and not simply a local institute.

——urge upon the minister the necessity for immediate legislation which shall fix proper standards of grading with respect to the purity and vitality of seeds of grasses and clover, and shall establish a system of official control to prevent imposition upon the farmers by such regulations and penalties as will ensure its observance.

And this is the letter accompanying the resolution. It is dated from Chatham, New Brunswick and signed A. G. Dixon :

I beg leave to submit for your consideration the inclosed resolution, which passed unanimously at our annual convention held recently at Sussex, N.B. This resolution seemed to express the sentiment of 300 farmers present. If such legislation should be obtained and the observance of such law carried out, it would save the farmers from being imposed upon by unreliable seedsmen and dealers from which they have suffered such a loss in the past.

Mr. CLANCY. Where are the resolutions from Ontario, the seed growing province ?

Mr. FISHER. I have one here from the south riding of Renfrew.

Mr. CLANCY. Of course, we know what that is in advance.

Mr. WRIGHT. It will be all right.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) does not need to believe anything he does not wish to. But this is a resolution from Ontario, and my hon. friend should take that for gospel. The letter accompanying the resolution is as follows :

At the several meetings held during the past winter in Brudenell, Killaloe, Stewartville, Loch Winnoch, White Lake, Burnstown, Grattan, Mt. St. Patrick, Shamrock and Renfrew, the inclosed resolution was presented and unanimously adopted, and consider it of the greatest importance that the farmers of this section should be able to secure seeds practically free from foul seeds.

This is signed by Gregor MacIntyre, secretary South Renfrew Farmers' Institute. And this is the resolution :

Whereas, at the various branch farmers' institute meetings held in the south riding of Renfrew during the present winter the matter of having such a Bill passed by the House of Commons as was introduced last session by the Hon. Sydney Fisher, whereby some guarantee will be given to farmers, who of necessity must buy a large amount of seed each year, that he is getting clean and fertile seeds.

And whereas, at all these branch meetings the members have either by resolution or otherwise, expressed their unqualified approval of having such an Act passed.

It is resolved by the members of this Central Farmers' Institute, that we heartily approve of the efforts now being put forth in this direction and the members of this institute desire that our secretary be and hereby is requested to notify our representative in the House of Commons of the action that has been taken by the various branch institutes of the riding and to request that he use every legitimate means to assist in having such a measure become the law of the land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will leave that subject for the resolutions in favour of this measure. They all embody the idea that the farmers have a grievance, a difficulty in their business, and they want to see that difficulty removed and their situation improved.

Mr. CLANCY. I sat down to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to give some evidence of a popular demand for this Bill, some evidence of the difficulty, of the evil that induced the hon. gentleman to introduce this measure. The hon. gentleman has merely given us some advertisements of his measure. I would like him to tell us from what quarter the outcry has come for a measure of this kind.

Mr. FISHER. I have not got that information under my hand to-day, because it was all produced last session. If the hon. gentleman will look up the debates of last session he will find the information I then gave to the committee, and which I will repeat before the Bill goes through if the hon. gentleman desires it. I think when the hon. gentleman opened his remarks this afternoon he stated that he believed in the principle of the Bill, believed, I thought he said, that there was a necessity for some such a Bill.

Mr. CLANCY. No.

Mr. FISHER. Then I understand that he does not believe in the necessity of such a Bill ?

Mr. CLANCY. I did not say that.

Mr. FISHER. Does my hon. friend think there is no necessity for legislation in regard to the business of seed distribution in this country?

Mr. CLANCY. I will say to the hon. gentleman that I think all questions of this nature should receive attention from time to time, but the legislation must be upon such grounds as will commend itself to the approval of the people, whether in that line or any other line. I am in sympathy with any measure that will correct such evils as can be corrected by law. I ask the hon. gentleman to point to one seed merchant in the province of Ontario who has been guilty, either by inadvertence, deliberation or disregard, of sending out bad seed to the farmers. There may be such cases but I am not aware of them ; but if there are, a remedy should be found, and a drastic remedy.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I have not yet heard the Minister of Agriculture produce any demands for the introduction of this Bill. But I understand that the Minister himself is a practical farmer, and if he is, he knows how much weeds cost the farmers of this country, and therefore he does not require any prompting, I should think, from other farmers. Besides, if he were not a farmer, he has only to travel on the railroad through the country to see what weeds are costing the farmers, what harm they are doing to the farms. If you travel over the railroads at the present moment you will see in many fields nothing but yellow mustard, and you will see in other fields nothing but white daisies. There are other weeds just as obnoxious. As has been said by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr.

Clancy), I think this Bill is in the right direction. But it is a question with me whether it is not too drastic for the seedsman and farmers, even as it stands now. But we all know that we must place before us a high ideal in order to obtain fairly good ends. I had the pleasure of attending two farmers' institutes last winter, and one gentleman came there, a farmer I think, and he showed us a number of obnoxious weed seeds in different kinds of grain. In one pound of clover he said he had found over a thousand weed seeds.

Mr. CLANCY. That is an extraordinary statement.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I am only giving his statement. I never counted them or measured them. However, I have no reason to doubt his word. We know that when a man grows seed he grows it for sale, he sells what he does not require to sow on his own ground, he does not grow seed to burn. His object is to make money out of it, and he could not make money if he destroyed it. Besides the seedsmen, the farmer also sells seed and gets as much money as he can for it. I think the seedsmen are in sympathy with this Bill, because they desire to buy pure seed. To my knowledge they have means of cleaning it up, they have got the machinery for cleaning nearly all the weed seeds out of the pure seed. Unless they do this there should be a law to make them do it. If this Bill is carried and put into force we will not see in every second field these obnoxious weeds. At present these weeds are a source of great loss to the farming community, and if the Minister of Agriculture can do anything to relieve the farmers of this heavy loss he will accomplish something very desirable. The object is to give the farmers pure seed and to induce the farmers to be sure and raise pure seed, but when the minister puts in this Bill, as I I see there is in one clause, a provision that 99 per cent of a quantity of seed must be pure and that 99 per cent of it must grow, then I think he is going a little too far because I am satisfied that no man can raise seed 99 per cent of which will grow, no matter how pure the seed may be. He ought to try and make this Bill workable, but I think it is going a little too far to oblige every seedsman and every second farmer to pay a heavy fine or serve one month in jail if he is found selling impure seed.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it would be desirable if the hon. minister would give us an explanation of the differences between the present Bill and the Bill he introduced last session. I would also like to know how the hon. gentleman proposes to deal with a farmer who is growing seed and wishes to sell some of it to a neighbouring farmer. The hon. gentleman understands that in every farming township there are a number of farmers who make a specialty of growing timothy and clover seed, and naturally they become sellers to their neighbours. What I would like to know is how far this Bill, if it is passed, will apply to those ? Will the Bill make them occupy the same position as the seed merchant who sells seed to the general purchaser ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend from Bothwell put a question to me a few minutes ago that I would like to answer. He said that he would like me to point out a single case in Ontario where seedsmen had sold bad seed. I will just give him a very concise reference to a bulletin which was issued by my department in 1902 on this question. In that bulletin are lists of various samples of seed which were bought in the places indicated where they were exposed for sale by seed merchants and merchants who were selling seeds. These are some of the facts in connection with the quality of these seeds. At St. Catharines a sample of timothy was found which contained 31,982 weed seeds in the pound.

Mr. INGRAM. What month was that bulletin issued in ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that these collections were made in Ontario in April and May.

Mr. INGRAM. In 1902 ?

Mr. FISHER. In 1902. There are 1,350,000 seeds of timothy in a pound and in this particular sample there were 31,982 weed seeds in the pound.

Mr. CLANCY. What variety of weed seeds ?

Mr. FISHER. I have the details of about twenty species of weed seeds that were found in varying numbers in the Ontario samples. Eleven samples contain Cinquefoil ; ten, sheep sorrel ; nine, May weed ; eight, lambs quarters ; seven, peppergrass ; five, Canada thistle, and five, false flax, shepherd's purse, cockle, dock and worm seed. Mustard was also found in a few samples. In a sample purchased in Brantford there were 79,000 weed seeds to the pound. Brant county is a seed-growing county.

Mr. INGRAM. To a very limited extent. There are dozens of counties far ahead of Brant in the matter of seed-growing.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but still it is one of the seed-growing counties in the province of Ontario. In another sample obtained at Brantford there were 26,000 weed seeds ; in one obtained at St. Catharines, 10,000, and in another one at Mallorytown, 10,500. I will now take alsike clover. There are 700,000 seeds in a pound. In one sample obtained at Toronto there were 14,400 weed seeds in a pound; in another sample obtained at Toronto 49,000 weed seeds; in a sample obtained at Hamilton 14,500, in one at Pembroke 14,000, in one at Galt 23,500. These are the largest numbers and they run down to seven, eight and nine thousand weed seeds in a pound. Of red clover there are 350,000 seeds in a pound. In a sample obtained at Brantford there were 13,000 weed seeds, another sample at Brantford 10,000, a sample at Ottawa 10,000, another sample at Ottawa 20,000, another sample at Ottawa 5,500, another sample at Ottawa 675, a very pure sample, in another sample at Pembroke 10,300, in another at Ottawa 10,000, in another at Pembroke 36,900, Renfrew 13,000, Carleton Place 19,900, and there are various other smaller figures. This shows the hon. gentleman that even in the province of Ontario there are foul seeds sold to the farmers in grass and clover seed.

Mr. CLANCY. How was that information obtained ?

Mr. FISHER. That information was got by an officer going around the country and buying seed.

Mr. CLANCY. When ?

Mr. FISHER. I told the hon. gentleman —in 1902.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to assume from that statement that strong complaints were received from the farmers of Ontario as to foul seeds in 1902 ? Are we to assume that from any correspondence which the hon. gentleman has in his department ?

Mr. FISHER. This is a statement of the samples that were purchased at that time to find out what the quality of the seeds sold in general trade was ? There were a number of other samples procured in which there were not so many weed seeds. I have given those which show that there were foul seeds in large numbers in some of the samples obtained.

Mr. INGRAM. If the evil was general would the farmers complain generally of that state of affairs ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I think they would. I think that what the hon. member for Elgin said a few minutes ago is perfectly true that one has only to go around the country to see what an immense number of weeds there are growing in our fields. The farmers want to get rid of these weeds. What I said before was that the farmers cannot detect these weed seeds in the seed which they buy themselves. It is practically impossible. A very clever well-informed and observant farmer can take a sample of seed in his hand and know only in a very general way whether it is fairly clean or not. That is about the extent he can go. But by a laboratory analysis you can get that information.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman received complaints from Ontario ?

Mr. FISHER. Not in the correspondence, but I may have general letters in the department. This question was dealt with last year. I have not with me to-day for the purpose of this discussion the information which I gave to the House last year. I think that I did give to the House then considerable evidence of the fact that there was a general demand in this country for this legislation. Four or five years ago, when the work of the seed laboratory was first begun, there was comparatively little information of an exact character before the farmers of the country. But, they felt they were buying bad seed. I have had numerous conversations with farmers and I have had complaints of various kinds with regard to seeds but at the same time until the seed laboratory was established and until analyses were made of seeds, the information which is given in this bulletin was not available to farmers. When they got that information I venture to say that a great many farmers were startled and taken aback and felt that something must be done to save their farms from this evil. They knew the evil existed but they did not know to what extent it existed, they had no details or information upon which they could found any charge or argument and the seed laboratory has supplied that to a considerable extent.

Mr. INGRAM. It strikes me as a remarkable state of affairs. I hold in my hand the report of the Bureau of Industries for Ontario for 1902, and I will point out to the hon. gentleman that on pages 8 and 9 it deals with fall wheat, spring wheat and barley, and on the following page with oats, pease, beans buckwheat, rye and corn and there is not one single word of complaint about foul seeds. Page 11 of this report deals with hay and clover and hay and clover seed, and there is not one single word of complaint from the correspondents of foul seeds.

If the complaints are general throughout Ontario, surely these correspondents who are practical farmers, would have drawn the attention of the provincial authorities to these serious complaints. We know that in Ontario it is at present an offence to allow thistles to grow on the highways and the farms, but that law is not observed. What is the use of enacting a stringent law of this kind, when we know it is impossible to carry it out. I do not believe that any farmer in this House could guarantee that the seed he sells is actually pure, and if this law is passed you would prohibit a farmer from selling his seed if there is even a small percentage of foul seed in it. If this law cannot be carried out, it will do more harm than good. The best guarantee that you can have against foul weeds, is to have first-class farmers who will look after the cultivation of their crops.

Mr. FISHER. These answers read by the hon. gentlemen are sent in to the provincial Department of Agriculture on special forms of questions which are prepared, and there is no question on that form with regard to weeds. They are statistics as to the crop and its general condition, and the questions include no reference to weeds, so that the hon. gentleman's criticism is not well founded. A good many of the provisions of this Bill only apply to clover and grass seeds, so that if my hon. friend would study the measure he would find it is not so drastic as he seems to think.

Mr. McGOWAN. My experience is that some legislation along the lines suggested by this Bill is very desireable. I know a good many farmers who have had their farms poisoned by foul weeds, and there is a general opinion amongst the farmers of my locality that some legislation of this kind should be adopted by parliament.

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McGOWAN. I would point out to the hon. minister, that in my locality a number of farmers have purchased turnip seed in which there was a good deal of foul rape seed and that has done a great deal of damage. I am sorry the minister does not provide against that in this Bill. It would not be well to have the provisions of this measure too drastic, but at the same time there certainly should be some legislation passed in this direction.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister is mistaken when he says that these correspondents make no reference to weeds. Here is a report in regard to spring wheat in which it is said that the crop is good in point of yield and quality. They would not say that the quality of the grain is good if there were foul seed in it. Then again, in reference to the grass crop, it is stated in one of these reports that it is not of good quality, and if that were caused by reason of foul seeds, surely it would be so stated. I am not a practical farmer, but I do know that practical farmers are not in such a fortunate position to deal with this matter as are the managers of the government farms, backed up by any amount of money. It is for the ordinary farmers of Canada who are trying to live by the products of their farms that we are legislating here, and we should be careful not to pass any law which will militate against the interests of this most deserving class of the community.

Mr. STEPHENS. It appears to me that unless the merchant was able to have the seed which he sells tested,—which of course could not be done in most cases,—it would be impossible for him to know whether 90 per cent of the seed would germinate as is required in the Bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The objects aimed at by this Bill are of the most desirable character. Nothing could be more important in the interests of the farming community than that the country should, if possible, be rid of the noxious weeds that infest it. But, to pass legislation of a character so onerous, so tyrannical, and with such heavy penalties as are provided in this Bill, is a very serious matter, when you may have it directed against persons who have no dishonest intention whatever.

We have had in the province of Ontario for a long time a law to prevent the spread of thistles, and to have them cleared away from the highways, but that law is inoperative. I do not think it should be. It is one that could be enforced much more easily than the Bill we have before us, which on its face is of an impracticable character. It is desirable that some regulation should be placed within the reach of every farmer which would enable him to have an inspection and analysis made of the seeds he buys, and to have it made free; and the farmers should be invited as much as possible to have this inspection made. But after having made that provision, it is rather drastic legislation to provide that every one engaged in the seed business, and who may not have the skill or ability to analyse seeds, shall be liable to such heavy penalties as are provided in this Bill. These are of a character to render it inoperative and impractical. While in full sympathy with the object aimed at, I think the Bill should be of such a practical character that it could be put into operation, and, while safeguarding the interests of the dealer and the producer, would also safeguard the interests of the farmer who buys seed for his own use.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have had considerable experience, not only in growing seeds but in selling them. The law for the prevention and destruction of thistles growing on the highway is entirely different from the Bill now before this House. A farmer is not going to complain against his neighbour because he allows thistles to grow on his wayside, for he does not think it desirable to have the enmity of his nearest neighbour. But I can assure you that if a farmer buys from a seed merchant a hundred pounds of clover, and finds after he has sown it that there is a lot of foul seed in it, he will have no qualms of conscience about hauling the seed merchant over the coals and making him responsible for the damage done to his farm. I am delighted that something has been done by the Minister of Agriculture on this matter. We have been labouring too long in the province of Ontario under the evil of foul seeds, and it is time we had some redress. If any one has any doubt of this, let him take the Canada Atlantic and go from here to the town of Arnprior when the fields are ripening, and if he does not see the necessity of a Bill of this kind, he will certainly be very blind indeed. With reference to what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says in regard to a stereotyped resolution being passed everywhere, I do not know whether that hon. gentleman has the power of being omnipresent or not; but I can assure him that the farmers of South Renfrew are intelligent enough to frame a resolution for themselves, and do not require a stereotyped resolution; and I hurl the accusation back in the hon. gentleman's teeth with all the force of which I am capable.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not understand the hon. member for Bothwell to say that the resolution passed at South Renfrew meeting was a stereotyped resolution sent there for the purpose of being passed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understood him to say that all the resolutions were stereotyped, that passed in South Renfrew included in the number.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman misunderstood the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. WRIGHT. At the various meetings held in the south riding of Renfrew, two practical farmers were present—Mr. Clendinning from the western part of Ontario, and Mr. Hutton, who lives near Smith's Falls; and they had a large chart of the various kinds of seeds which had been bought at different places, showing the amount of foul seeds contained in them. At every meeting this question of foul seeds was discussed, not only by these men, but by the farmers, and at every one of these meetings resolutions were passed extolling in the highest terms the action taken by the Minister of Agriculture on this subject. I know from the experience I have had in selling seeds that something of this kind should be done. Another thing to which my attention has been drawn, and which has not been brought out by the Minister of Agriculture, is that when the farmers go to buy clover seed they cannot tell whether they are getting late or early clover; and it would be well if the label which the Bill provides shall be attached to each package of seeds, giving the name of the kind of seeds, should state whether it is late or early clover. The Minister of Agriculture has received one testimonial which is not among those he has read to-day. That testimonial came from the hon. member for Bothwell, who tells us that he attended just one Farmers' Institute meeting, and that at that meeting he noticed that there was not a single individual opposed to this Bill. This is an important fact, and I suppose that the reason the hon. gentleman in his search for thunder, did not visit any more of those meetings, was that he discovered that there was not a single individual opposed to this Bill, and that cooled his ardour. I think we should have the name of that place, and have the hon. gentleman's testimony added to the others.

Mr. GILMOUR. I will say at once that I am in favour of this Bill or any other Bill that would carry out the purpose intended. The minister has told us that the farmers' institutes throughout the country have voted unanimously and have sent in petitions in favour of legislation of this nature. I do not wonder at that. Ninety-nine farmers out of every hundred desire legislation for this purpose; but it is one thing to seek legislation for an evil; it is another thing to make legislation for that evil. With that statement I want to say this, with regard to the difference between this Act and that of last session. In this Act you propose to relieve the farmer of all onus of selling foul seed provided he does not give a certificate that it is free from the foul seeds named in section 3. Section 7 relieves the farmers of responsibilities and penalties unless they should give a certificate that the seeds sold are free from foul seeds.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. GILMOUR. And the whole responsibility is cast upon the seed merchants?

Mr. FISHER. The farmer can only take advantage of the exception in section 7 if he sells on his own premises. If he sells the seed generally he cannot do so.

Mr. GILMOUR. He can also sell it to the merchants and be so relieved. He can sell it anywhere and any place and unless he gives a certificate he is not liable.

Mr. FISHER. He cannot sell except at his own home and be free from responsibility.

Mr. GILMOUR. This Bill in section 7 provides:

> The provisions contained in this Act shall not apply to—> (a.) any person growing or selling seeds for the purpose of food;
> (b.) any person selling seeds direct to merchants to be cleaned or graded before being offered for sale for the purpose of seeding.

He can take it to town and sell it to a merchant.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. GILMOUR. He shall be relieved if he sells to any one, unless he gives a certificate that it is free from foul seeds. The whole responsibility is cast upon the seed merchant and I do not think the seed merchant can comply with this Bill. I would like the hon. minister to bring down such a law as would enable the seed merchant to comply with it. Unless the seed merchant can comply with this measure, he will be in a worse position than before. If he cannot comply with the laws of the country, he would naturally go out of business.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend asks me whether the seed merchants have protested or whether they have agreed to the provisions of this Act. I would say in the first place that I have not understood that the seed merchants took exception to the general provisions of this Act. But they have protested against the provision to which my hon. friend has just alluded, and by which the farmers are allowed to sell to their neighbours and escape the provisions of the law. They have also pointed out certain difficulties in living up to the Act, but I do not think those difficulties have arisen with regard to the quality of the seeds. I think that the seed merchants have practically accepted the provisions of sections 3 and 4 which indicate the grades. There is one point in this, however, in which the seed merchants differ from this Bill. They are quite ready to adopt what they called a minimum standard, below which no seed should be sold in the country at all, for grass and clover seeds. I understand they are willing to accept a minimum standard and object to any grading above that standard. This Act does not grade but it provides that if a merchant chooses to put a certain specimen of grain and mark it No. 1 quality or anything to indicate superior excellence, under those circumstances it must come up to a certain grade. And it indicates what that means in section 4 :

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any seeds of timothy, red clover, alsike, or any mixture containing the said seeds, in or from any receptacle, package, sack or bag upon which is marked 'No. 1' or any other designation which represents such seeds as of first quality, unless they are free from the seeds of weeds named in section 3 of this Act.

Then it goes on :

And contain out of every 100 seeds not less than 99 seeds of the kind or kinds represented, or seeds of other useful and harmless grasses and clovers, of which 99 seeds 90 must be germinable.

That is the distinction we think necessary to justify the marketing of seed as No. 1 or of the highest quality. If seedsmen say that is too severe, they need not mark their seed. In the Act last year we undertook to fix the different grades. In this Act we do not. We fix a minimum grade below which no seed can be sold by anybody. That is, there must not be more than three seeds in the thousand that are seeds of certain weeds. The seed merchants who have discussed the matter with me seem to think that this is a grade that would be quite practicable.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would like to ask why it is that when some clovers are included in this Bill, alfalfa is not included also ?

Mr. FISHER. This Bill does not pretend to deal with the whole question. We would be very glad to go much further, if we felt we could do so successfully. We have undertaken in this Bill to deal with the most common seeds that are sold. And I think I am safe in saying that, of the grass and clover seeds, that are sold in this country, the three kinds here named alike, red clover and timothy would cover, from 95 to 98 per cent of the sales. If we can get the country educated up to the point of dealing with these we can later on deal with those which are sold in less quantity.

Mr. STEPHENS. Alfalfa is sold in my county to a large extent.

Mr. ERB. Section 4 provides that 99 seeds out of 100 are to be of the kind or kinds represented. Then, of what kinds may the hundredth seed be ?

Mr. FISHER. It could not be a seed of any of the weeds named. It might be the seed of some other grass or of some harmless plant.

Mr. ERB. May not some of the 99 seeds be those of harmless grasses ?

Mr. FISHER. It says so in the Bill—that the seed shall contain not less than 99 seeds of the kind or kinds represented or seeds of other useful or harmless grasses. That would not prohibit the sale, if, for instance, in the timothy a few clover seed were found.

Mr. ERB. It would not be permissible to have the hundredth seed that of any of the kinds mentioned in sections 3 and 4 ?

Mr. FISHER. No. As has been pointed out to me, a pound of red clover consists of 350,000 seeds. One in a hundred would be 3,500 seeds. That would be a very large proportion of noxious weed seeds and seed so foul could not be classed as No. 1.

Mr. ERB. Have the seedsmen represented that it is possible to have grass seed without having more than one seed in one hundred that of one of these weeds ?

Mr. FISHER. Not only have they said so, but a great proportion of the samples that were tested would grade No. 1. The question was asked me by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Stephens) a few minutes ago as to the way in which a merchant selling seeds could find out whether those seeds were up to standard or not. In the first place, the country merchants, in practice, buy their seeds from reputable seedsmen whose business it is to test their seeds before they send them out.

Mr. STEPHENS. My question referred to germination.

Mr. FISHER. So far as that is concerned, it is easy for a man to test the germinating power of his seeds in a week or ten days. He might want to sell the seeds within a day or two of buying them it is true. I am advised that a man accustomed to handling seeds can judge pretty fairly by the look of the seeds as to its power of germination. But, in any case the seed laboratory is at the disposition of those who wish to have their seeds tested.

Mr. BLAIN. If I understood the hon. minister, he said that he had sent out an officer of the department throughout Ontario to purchase samples of seeds in different places, and he told us some of the results. If what he told us is a fair example of the class of seeds sold in Ontario, the position of the farmers is a very serious one. Surely, the minister does not mean to say that the seed sold by the merchants in the ordinary way in Ontario is as bad as the examples he quoted to the committee. I would like him to state whether his officers found this condition general in Ontario.

Mr. FISHER. The instances I gave were taken from the bulletin which was published in 1902. The samples were collected partly by an officer of the department and partly through correspondence with the institute workers throughout the province. We asked these gentlemen to buy from the ordinary dealers here and there enough seed for a sample and send it to us. I may point out that the statement I made a few minutes ago was in answer to a demand from the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) whether in Ontario any bad seeds were being sold. In the list I quoted from were a large number of samples which were very good.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the hon. gentleman ought to quote the good as well as the bad.

Mr FISHER. I am quite willing. They are all given in the bulletin and have been before the public for about two years. In making my statement I said that there were others not nearly so bad as those I quoted. and many of them quite good.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of them were found bad ?

Mr. FISHER. For instance, take the case of timothy in the province of Ontario. In seven samples out of twenty, more than 5,000 bad weed seeds were found. Eight samples had between 1,000 and 5,000 bad weed seeds.

Mr. INGRAM. Were all these samples the same weight ?

Mr. FISHER. The samples were taken from the ordinary packages in which the seed was being sold and sent to the laboratory to be analysed. From half a pound to a pound was taken and sent to the laboratory here in each instance to be analysed. There are two analyses made of every sample. The samples were taken from men who were selling seeds as a business, either country storekeepers, merchants or regular seedsmen.

Mr. ERB. How many samples were pure ?

Mr. FISHER. There was one containing 191 weed seeds in a pound, I would call that pure under the provisions of this Act ; there was another containing 181 weed seeds, that is also practically pure. Another contained 634, another 815 and another 916. All the rest contained over 1,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of the twenty samples came up to the standard ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that all of them came up to the minimum standard in this Act.

Mr. COCHRANE. This is an important question, and I would be glad if legislation could be devised that would remedy the evil that exists. I understand the Minister of Agriculture to say that it does exist in the province of Ontario. As I understand it, suppose I raise seed not entirely pure and sell it to a seedsman, there would be no penalty on me. I think the Minister of Agriculture made too wide an assertion when he said that no foul seed could be sold under this Bill, because I think I can raise grass seed not entirely pure and sell it on my own premises, or sell it to a seedsman, and no penalty could be imposed on me under this Bill. Now, I want to ask the minister if any machinery has been invented whereby a seedsman can clean the seed and make it pure ? Suppose that I raised foul timothy seed and took it to a seedsman, is there any machinery whereby that merchant can clean it and bring it up to the standard ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that there is undoubtedly machinery which will bring it up to the minimum standard. As to bringing it up to the maximum standard, it would depend a little on the nature of the impurities in the seed. But a great deal of even pretty foul seed can be brought up to the first quality mentioned under this Act by machinery which is well known, and which is in use to-day among the seedsmen of the country. I may say to my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) that I have such a list as I mentioned from every one of the provinces

Mr. SPROULE. I listened to what the minister said with regard to the situation of the seedsmen under this Bill, and I must admit that my experience is not like his, because wherever I have conversed with seedsmen with regard to the Bill of last year, they said they could not comply with its provision, that if such a law was enacted it would compel them to go out of the business. I admit the desirability of a law that will give us pure seed, but I do not think the present Bill will accomplish that end. The only question to my mind is whether, if this Act is passed, it can be made workable. It seems to me there are a few provisions that go too far. For instance, section 3 says :

> No person shall sell, or offer, expose, or have in his possession for sale, for the purpose of seeding, any seeds of cereals, grasses, clovers or forage plants containing any seeds of the following weeds.

Then follows a list of the weed seeds. The section goes on :

Unless each and every receptacle, package, sack or bag containing such seeds, or a label, securely attached thereto, is marked in a plain and indelible manner—

(a.) with the initials of the christian names, and the full surname and address of the wholesale or retail seller ;

(b) with the name of the kind or kinds of seed ;

(c.) with the common name or names of the aforenamed weeds, the seeds of which are present in the seed sold or offered, exposed or had in possession for sale.

Now if I correctly understand that section, every package containing the seed for sale must have the initial of the wholesaler or retailer upon it, as well as the kind of seed contained in it, with the names of the weed seeds present, and a list of those is given Now take oats for instance. The seedsman usually keeps his oats in a bin. You want to purchase some seed oats and he takes them out of that bin. As I understand this section, he would require to have upon that bin the name of all the weed seeds present in those oats.

Mr. FISHER. Only those that are mentioned here.

Mr. SPROULE. Wild oats is among the names of weed seeds mentioned here. The name 'wild oats' has to be put on every bin containing oats, because there are few lots of oats which do not contain wild oats. Then we find mentioned bindweed, perrennial sow-thistle, ragweed, great ragweed, purple cockle, cow cockle, orange hawkweed or paint brush, ergot of rye, and some others. Every one of these weeds. if the cereal contains any of these seed weeds, must be marked on the bin containing the oats, or on the bag, or whatever receptacle they are sold in. I think this provision will pretty surely be ignored. I do not think one seedsman out of a hundred would attempt to carry that out, and a law that cannot be carried out is worse than useless, because not only does it do no good, but it creates a contempt for law. Then section 4 says :

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any seeds of timothy, red clover, alsike or any mixture containing the said seeds, in or from any receptacle. package, sack or bag upon which is marked 'No. 1' or any other designation which represents such seeds as of first quality, unless they are free from the seeds of weeds named in section 3 of this Act.

If he sells the seed as No. 1, it means he sells it as of the first quality, and it can only contain a certain percentage of weed seeds. Then the seed must also contain a certain percentage that will germinate. Now, how is the purchaser to tell whether every seed will germinate or not ? Suppose a quantity of seed sold as being of the first quality was found to contain more weed seeds in the crop than is allowed, or a greater percentage of seeds that did not grow than is allowed under this Bill, and an action for damages was instituted against the seedsman, how are you to prove it ?

There has been no sample taken in advance to enable you to ascertain what percentage of seeds is germinable and what is not, and to ascertain what percentage of weed seeds is contained in it. I take it that if seeds are sold under this Act as No. 1, or first quality, it will leave the seedsmen open to an action at law if it is found afterwards that the seeds which he sold injures a man's farm or .if they contain weeds when they were supposed to contain no weeds. But, an action cannot be maintained under this Act because of the difficulty of proving the offence to the court. It seems to me that this makes the law in that respect unworkable, and I think in some other respects as well it is unworkable. While it appears to be an improvement on the Bill that was introduced last year, I think still that it would be utterly impossible for seedsmen to comply with its provisions. The hon. Minister of Agriculture said that it is an easy matter to use machinery to clean the seed so that it will come up to the minimum standard, not the maximum standard. My experience and information are that weed seeds are taken out by sieves and where you have weed seeds of about the same size as the ordinary grass or clover seed you are cleaning, it is absolutely impossible for any machinery in the world to do that work, and to make the grass seed perfectly clean.

Mr. WM. ROSS (South Ontario). I presume the discussion regarding the quality of seeds in the province of Ontario must have arisen because Ontario province is the great producer of seeds in Canada. Perhaps you might say that the entire crop of red clover and alsike not of timothy, though a large proportion of timothy may be included—is produced in Ontario, and this is due to the fact that the other provinces either do not grow these seeds or their climatic conditions are found unsuitable. I was very much impressed with the general provisions of the Bill introduced last year. I think there is no observant member of this House or observant Canadian who travels through this country, especially at this season of the year and now on for the next two or three weeks, but will notice that the crops of hay and often times grain as well are sadly spoiled by the large proportion of weeds which are growing in them. To whom that is due we cannot tell. Whether it is due to the carelessness of the man on the farm or the man who sells him the seed, the fact is that the weeds seem to have spread over the entire country. The wild mustard seems to be increasing at an alarming rate. Although certain scientists have discovered that by spraying it can be killed, that process, I have been informed, has not been found altogether satisfactory. This is one of the most noxious weeds we have. However, the fact is that the country is being fast overrun with weeds. Under these circumstances if this House could bring forth a proper measure which would regulate the evil in such a way as to prevent the spread of weed seeds, it would be a boon to the country. But it seems to me that a great deal must depend upon the man who cultivates the farm. If he will continue to sow seed that is bad he must of course have all the weeds which go with it, and the consequences. I am not opposing this Bill at all, but I want to criticise it and I want to hear from other members of the House in regard to it. I feel that the difficulty is in the actual working of the Act. I have been accustomed to handling seeds nearly all my life and the great difficulty I see is in connection with the working of the Act. I am a little afraid that in this Bill we have something in the nature of paternal legislation, that we are undertaking to look after the business of the man who should look after his own interests. I have sometimes thought, as I have listened to the discussions upon different Bills in this House, that we have too much paternal legislation. I do not presume to call this Bill paternal legislation, and I feel with the majority in this House that something should be done whether this Bill is in the right direction or not. We had a Bill last year and I thought some of its provisions very drastic indeed. After we had discussed it and after I had thought over it during the recess, I felt that the Bill should be modified in some way. It has been modified in the Bill, which is now before the committee, but, looking at the clauses, there are some features of it yet which would need some modification. Take clause 4, for instance: it seems to me that when you say that of every 100 seeds, not less than 99 shall be of the kind or kinds represented it is rather high. In red clover there are some hard seeds and it would be very difficult to comply with that clause. If it were put at 97 or 98 seeds the proportion would be a little better. Then, it states that of those 99 seeds, 90 must be germinable. Ninety per cent is a high standard of germination. Almost any one who is accustomed to dealing with seeds day after day, and having perhaps a dozen or two dozen samples presented to him can tell what proportion will grow. A real expert seed buyer will be able to tell you a week after a crop has been offered to him by sample, just what proportion of the crop will grow. I think if the number of germinable seeds was made 85 instead of 90, it would be a better proportion. Then, the minimum clause is an improvement upon the provision of last year's Bill. The minimum clause provides that:

> No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, for the purpose of seeding in Canada, any seeds of timothy, alsike or red clover, or any mixture containing the said seeds, if the seeds of the weeds named in sections 3 and 4 of this Act are present in a greater proportion than three to one thousand of the seed sold, or offered, exposed or held in possession for sale.

In case there were a million and a quarter seeds in timothy, that would give 3,750 seeds which would be allowed which is a fair proportion, and if there were 3,750 seeds of that kind allowed in a pound, I should think that would be sufficient. In regard to clause 8 the penalty is very serious for such an offence. It provides that any one who violates the provisions of the Act shall for each offence, be liable to a fine for the first offence not exceeding $5 and not less than $1. Suppose you load a car with 200 bags of seed, and suppose that all the bags were found not to comply with the provisions of the Act, if you had 200 bags which do not comply with the provisions of the Act, and you had to pay $5 each in fines that would amount to $1,000 on a carload of seed. I think, that, considering the value of a car of seed, it is an enormous fine to impose. This Bill is designed to regulate a very old and valuable trade, a trade which is very largely carried on in the interest of the country. The capital invested in the province of Ontario in farming operations is over a billion dollars and that is all at stake in connection with every farm that there is in this great province, because every farmer sows seed. Under these circumstances, I think that the fine should be as small as it is possible, considering the interests which are at stake, and that it should not be any higher than is necessary to regulate this old standard trade. Recognizing the rapid spread of weeds throughout the country, I think that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is to be commended for the steps he has taken to check this evil. The establishment of a seed laboratory and the distribution throughout the country of information regarding noxious weed seeds, their habits and how to kill them and regarding the germination of seeds have given the farmers an immense advantage. If the majority of the House think, that this Bill will regulate the seed trade, I am prepared to support it. I am prepared to support the minister in anything that is right and proper in connection with this matter. I believe that in a year or two after this plan of education has gone on a little further, possibly we may be able to get a Bill which will suit every interest. I am not saying that the present Bill does not suit every interest now, but looking at it from the ordinary experience of every day business life, I can see that even this Bill, which is an improvement on last year's Bill, may require to be amended from time to time in accordance with existing conditions.

Mr. FISHER. I appreciate the support which my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Ross) has given to this Bill, and I may say that most of the difficulties which he has pointed out are of minor detail which can be very easily modified. As to the fines, it can be very easily arranged that where only one package is sold the penalty shall be so much per package, but if there be a large number of packages sold, the aggregate penalty should not exceed a certain reasonable amount. I shall be glad to consider that in committee.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the correspondence which the minister has had in connection with this Bill between last session and this, include any correspondence from the representatives of the different provinces. Has he had the co-operation of the provincial ministers of agriculture ?

Mr. FISHER. I am reminded now, that there is a letter from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture of British Columbia, and also a letter, or perhaps more than one, from the Hon. Mr. Elliot, Commissioner of Agriculture in the Northwest Territories. I think there are one or two letters from Mr. Ferris, of New Brunswick, and possibly from Mr. Dryden, of Ontario, but I am not sure.

Mr. BLAIN. One would have thought that the minister would have communicated with these gentlemen who represent the agricultural departments of the different provinces. Has the minister sent a copy of this Bill to the ministers of agriculture for each province ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know if it was sent to the ministers, but it was sent to the deputy head of the department in each province, so that it was thoroughly understood and known in the departmental offices.

Mr. BLAIN. Just in a formal way ?

Mr. FISHER. The same as it was sent everywhere else. In reply to my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Ross), I would say that the provisions of this Bill are about as mild as they can be to accomplish the object in view. I am much gratified to find throughout the country a very great awakening on this subject, and I have most gratifying testimony from the farmers as well as from the seed merchants of the good results from the investigation by my department, and from the discussions that have arisen. There is no doubt that in the last three years there has been a very considerable improvement in the handling of seeds throughout Canada, and a very general demand on the part of the farmers for better seeds, which has led to an improvement in the seeds offered for sale. There is to-day a considerable quantity of refuse seed some of which is sold in this country and this Bill aims to do away with that absolutely. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked me about the methods of cleaning seeds. As a farmer I never myself raised seed, having always bought it.

Mr. INGRAM. Have you done any ploughing ?

Mr. FISHER. Quite a lot. I have never raised a crop of seed for sale, but I am informed by those who have, that the seed merchants who have complete machinery for the cleaning of seed, can clean it so as to live up to the provisions of this Act. The system of screens and sieves is only a part of the best cleaning machinery ; there is a system of drafts and blowers——

Mr. SPROULE. That is done by the fanning mill.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but the results do not depend upon the size of the seed. The ungerminable seeds are much lighter as a rule and they are blown away ; even an ordinary fanning mill properly worked can almost always clean the dirtiest grass seed.

Mr. GILMOUR. Not the ordinary fanning mill.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Chatham mill can.

Mr. FISHER. I believe the Chatham mill is a very good one, and is quite capable of cleaning the dirtiest seed. But any good fanning mill can clean seed so as to bring it up to the minimum standard fixed in the Bill, as a general rule. Therefore, I feel that with proper care, with care that we may fairly ask should be exercised by a person engaged in this trade, the seed merchants can live up to the conditions of this Bill. When the seedsmen interviewed me a little while ago, I think I am correct in saying that their chief objection was to that clause of the Bill which allows farmers to sell seed to their neighbours without being subject to the conditions of the Bill. I have kept that clause in the Bill, because I have felt that a farmer buying from his neighbour has not only the protection of requiring the seller, if he choses, to sell to him subject to the provisions of this Act and to give him a certificate, but he has also the protection of knowing from his own observation whether his neighbour's field from which he has taken the seed was clear and clean or not. He has this special protection which the ordinary purchaser has not. The farmer is not allowed under this Act to sell promiscuously. He is only allowed to sell to his neighbour on his own premises.

Mr. GILMOUR. He is allowed to sell to the merchant as well.

Mr. FISHER. He is allowed to sell to the merchant seeds to be cleaned. He can only sell on his premises seeds to be used for seed purposes. Otherwise, under section 7 he can only sell seeds for the purpose of food, or to merchants to be cleaned or graded before being offered for sale. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he would forbid a farmer selling seeds to a seed merchant? If he did, he would stop the whole trade in the country.

Mr. GILMOUR. No, I do not. But I ask the hon. minister whether it would not be better to fix a minimum standard, and leave it at that, instead of making provisions for three or four different grades which no person can comply with. I would be very suspicious of a seed merchant who would make these marks. I would rather take the mark of a firm of standing that had been in existence for forty or fifty years, such as that of which my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Bruce) is at the head.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend seems to have lost sight of the fact that this Bill simply requires the minimum standard, but that if a seedsman wishes to label his seed as of No. 1 quality, he has to comply with certain provisions. Would my hon. friend think it wise not only to fix a minimum standard, but to allow every seedsman to call that No. 1 quality ? I do not think the farmers of this country are prepared to say that that should be done.

Mr. GILMOUR. The word of the man who has been in business for thirty or forty years that the seed is pure would be sufficient.

Mr. FISHER. There are people engaged in the seed business whose word is as good as the bond of other people ; but there are a lot of other people engaged in it not of the same standing, and there are others who are selling seed at second and third hand, and we should apply machinery to prevent these people doing what they ought not to do. Nobody need do more than live up to the minimum standard, but if any one undertakes to tell a farmer that a seed is of first quality, he is required to comply with the condition of section 4. With regard to section 3, it is an actual concession. It provides that a man may sell seeds with those weeds in them, provided he says what weeds are in them. It is not a dominating clause ; it is a concession to the seedsmen of the country.

Mr. GILMOUR. I have not consulted any seedsmen in regard to this measure ; but if I were a seedsman and had to comply with the provisions of this Bill, I would just label my seeds according to the minimum standard, and would then tell the purchasers which was pure seed.

Mr. FISHER. I am quite satisfied that the majority of well known seedsmen do not to-day sell any seeds as No. 1 which would not come up to the provisions of section 4.

Mr. GILMOUR. Perfectly true but they would not put their foot into a trap of that kind.

Mr. INGRAM. Why should fixing of the maximum proportion of seeds of the weeds that may be tolerated be left to the decision of the Governor in Council ?

Mr. FISHER. That is also a concession. If that section were not here, one weak seed of some wood would condemn a whole carload. We have to make some regulations by which what we call absolute purity shall be defined. As the government desire to take up supply this evening, I would ask that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Experimental farms, $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The Prime Minister intimated yesterday, I believe, that we were to have another Bill brought down this session. It seems to me we ought to know something about the provisions of that Bill before we go on with the estimates. The opposition has an undoubted right to know what the House is to be committed to, and to call for the redress of grievances before supplies are granted. I do not think it is asking too much of the Prime Minister to request him to give us some information of the purport of the Bill to which he referred.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) takes me rather unawares ; I did not expect that I would be called upon to give an explanation this evening of the matter he has referred to. Perhaps he was not in his place when I gave the information to which he refers. I stated, in answer to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), that on moving the motion of which I have given notice for to-morrow to take Monday as a government day for the rest of the session, I would advise the House as to what legislation we would propose. I hope that will be satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. It was because of the announcement made yesterday that an explanation would be given ' to-morrow '—that is to-day, as the intimation was given yesterday —that I put the question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I said I would give the explanation on introducing the motion of which I have given notice for to-morrow—Friday. When I move to take Monday as a government day the House will be entitled to know what further legislation the government intend to bring down.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that, in this item, there is an increase of $10,000 over the expenditure of last year. What is the explanation of this ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I may say, in the first place, that I am asking additional sums in the supplementary estimates for the current year, which will soon be brought down. A very considerable proportion of this increase is due to the increase in wages and salaries on the farms, which has been found absolutely necessary. We have the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa and four branch farms, and they employ in the aggregate—I am making rather a guess—between eighty and ninety men, in addition to the staff of officers. Wages have gone up generally throughout the country. I was informed a little while ago that if I did not immediately increase the wages on the farms at Indian Head and Brandon, all the men on them would leave. These were experienced men who had been a good while on the farms, and we found, as a matter of fact, that we were not paying wages equal to the farm wages of the community around. I was obliged, therefore, to agree to an increase of from 20 to 25 per cent all round on the ordinary wages of these farms.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the rate of wages on these farms ?

Mr. FISHER. The foremen are the highest paid men, then the teamsters, then the men in the barns attending the cattle, and then the labourers. I find that on the Experimental Farm at Ottawa one teamster is entered here on the list at $8.75 per week for last year.

Mr. CLARKE. And has to board himself ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. This case may be taken as a criterion of the wages. You could not keep the man at the wages paid.

Mr. CLARKE. What do the labourers get ?

Mr. FISHER. About $7 or $7.50 a week.

Mr. CLARKE. And have to board themselves ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. We do not board men on any of the farms. On each of the western farms there is a boarding house, but the men have to pay their board at these houses.

Mr. CLARKE. How many hours do they work ?

Mr. FISHER. The teamsters and labourers work ten hours. The men who take charge of the cattle and work inside the barns begin a little earlier and stop a little later, but their work is supposed to be lighter and nicer work, and they get paid for Sundays, because they have to be there on Sundays. Besides the ordinary wages, we had to increase the pay all along the line, including the pay of the officials. I am proud to say that in the Director of Experimental Farms, Professor Saunders, and the other officials, we have a very efficient staff of experienced experts, men who have shown by their work there how valuable they are to the country, and how thoroughly equipped for their duties. There is a very considerable demand, not only in Canada, but in the United States, for expert service, and we have to pay these men proportionately to what similar men get elsewhere for similar work. And I have even had to contend with direct offers from other countries to these gentlemen to tempt them away. As a Canadian I am proud of the fact that these men, who are also Canadians, are so well treated and so satisfied to remain in the service of Canada, that some of them at any rate have refused offers of considerably higher pay in other places rather than leave their work here. They are devoted and enthusiastic to their work on the Experimental Farm, they take an interest in their work, a pride in it, and several of them have refused to leave it for higher pay and go elsewhere. These offers come from a foreign country. In view of this fact, and with my knowledge of these men, their energy and capacity, and in view of the fact that in other walks of life all through the country men are being paid higher than they were two years ago, I have felt bound in the interests of the experimental farms as well as in the interest of these gentlemen, to increase their salaries. These increases have been going on for the last year or two, and the result is that the item which was voted last year of $90,000 will not be sufficient to pay the expenses of the farm for the current year. I shall therefore be obliged to ask for $10,000 more for this year's work. I had a conversation on this matter with Prof. Saunders, and we agreed that we could not carry out the work required on the farm without more money.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the labourers employed throughout the year ?

Mr. FISHER. Most of them are. We have to dispense with a few of them in the autumn, but during the winter we employ as many of them as we can on what is called the seed distribution. During the winter we put up tens of thousands packages of seeds, which are sent out over the country to the farmers, and in this work we employ men who are not engaged in the field and in the barns. There are generally a few men on each of these farms who are not employed all the time during the winter, but practically a good employee is given work nearly the whole year round. I am informed that the increase of wages and salaries would not be less than 25 per cent on the old rate. I am also informed that we have increased the staff somewhat, and with the increase of the staff, the increase of wages and the increase of salaries, we will use up $75,000 out of this $100,000.

Mr. CLARKE. How much is the labourer getting ?

Mr. FISHER. The common labourer is getting the same as the city labourer, $1.50 for a working day. Teamsters get a little more, and foremen a little more still.

Mr. LOGAN. What increases, if any, have been made in the staff at the Nappan farm, and what are the wages paid to the men employed there ?

Mr. FISHER. There is no increase in the staff at Nappan. There is a slight increase in the number of labourers there. The pay of the labourers is about on the same scale as the pay at the central farm. But on the western farms in Brandon, Indian Head and British Columbia, the pay is higher. We cannot get labour there at the same price.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the pay of the labouring man at Nappan ?

Mr. FISHER. Ordinary labour runs from $1.40 to $1.60 a day, the men boarding themselves. Of course there are some skilled labourers who get higher wages than that.

Mr. SPROULE. How many employees are there on the central and other experimental farms ?

Mr. FISHER. On the Central Experimental Farm, excluding the officers, there are about fifty employees. There are ten or twelve men, varying a little as the seasons go, on the branch farms making a total altogether of very nearly one hundred employees.

Mr. SPROULE. In addition to them how many skilled labourers have you ?

Mr. FISHER. That includes the skilled labourers—all except the officers.

Mr. SPROULE. How many officers have you ?

Mr. FISHER. Nine. At the Central Experimental Farm there is the director, Prof. Saunders, Prof. Fletcher the botanist and entymologist, Prof. Shutt, chemist, Prof. Grisdale, agriculturist and Prof. Macoun, horticulturist, making five officers proper. Then besides that there is Mr. Gilbert in charge of the poultry, Mr. Fortier his assistant and in the office they have three stenographers, an accountant and assistant clerk. Mr. Fletcher has two assistants in his work. Mr. Shutt has two assistants in the laboratory and there are two clerks in the office. That I think covers the whole staff. That makes altogether at the Central Experimental Farm, including officers, office staff and assistants, foremen and employees in the neighbourhood of seventy-five. On each branch farm there is a farm manager and a book-keeper or secretary to the manager who has to do stenographic work and keep the books. On the farm at Nappan there is a horticulturist. The other farms have no such officers. Mr. Sharp, in British Columbia, is himself a horticulturist and there is no fruit growing to speak of at Indian Head or Brandon.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you not a horticulturist and a bee-keeper at the Central Farm ?

Mr. FISHER. Prof. Macoun who is the horticulturist of the whole system is here and he has under him an orchard foreman and a garden foreman. The farm foreman, Mr. Fixter, takes care of the bees.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon minister give us a statement of the wages paid to the labourers on the different farms so that we will have an opportunity of knowing what the current rate of wages in the different parts of Canada is ?

Mr. FISHER. The rate of pay here for the common labourer is $1.50 a day, that is the usual rate of labour in the city. At Nappan it is about the same. There may be one or two men who only get $1.40 a day although I do not believe that there are. At the three western farms the pay is $1.75 a day.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that include board and lodging ?

Mr. FISHER. They pay for their own board and lodging at all of the farms.

Mr. BLAIN. When the hon. gentleman took office what did these labouring men get ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that the ordinary labourer was paid at that time $1 a day in the winter and $1.25 a day in summer at Ottawa. I have no details of what was paid in the west.

Mr. SPROULE. What difference do you make now between wages in winter and summer, if any ?

Mr. FISHER. Now, they generally average a dollar less per week in winter than in summer.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister mentioned some increases in salaries and some additions to the staff of officers that he proposes to make. Will he give us a statement of these ?

Mr. FISHER. I think perhaps I did not express myself correctly. I have been increasing the staff and salaries. The actual scale on the farms to-day requires this extra $10,000 to meet the increases which have been made in salaries and in the staff. During the last year I have appointed Dr. Charles E. Saunders to the office of experimentalist here. That has reference to plant breeding. Dr. Saunders the director has himself for many years been conducting experiments in the breeding of plants, the breeding of new varieties both of wheat and fruit. This is a very special class of work requiring expert knowledge and treatment. I found very soon that Prof. Saunders was overburdened with the work and responsibility that were thrown upon him, and that it was impossible for him to continue to deal with this work which requires extraordinary attention to detail. At certain seasons of the year the experimentalist has to watch very closely every little detail and every change in connection with the experiment which he is carrying on. It was utterly impossible for the director to do this and attend to the general management of the whole of the farms. I felt it necessary to have somebody who would be specially charged with this work. There was some assistance which a new man coming in would be able to render the director and relieve him of some of the very onerous duties which he had been carrying on for many years and in the performance of which he practically endangered his health. Dr. Charles Saunders is an expert in this particular work. There are very few in Canada who have studied and practised plant and fruit breeding and I was glad to secure the services of a gentleman who had studied under Dr. Saunders, and who had shown expert knowledge. Within the last year I was obliged to appoint another assistant chemist to cope with the increased work. Mr. H. W. Charlton was appointed to this office, I think two years ago, but it is an increase the full effects of which we are trying to meet this year by the supplementary vote.

Mr. INGRAM. It is not an increase, if he was here last year.

Mr. FISHER. It is not an increase for next year, but I will be obliged to ask for a supplementary vote of $10,000 so as to overtake arrears. I do not expect any increase next fiscal year. The work that is done on the farm to-day would require for this fiscal year $100,000, and I am asking $100,000 for next year. We had to pay during the currrent year certain amounts, the obligations for which were incurred last fiscal year, when I did not get any extra vote.

Mr. INGRAM. What are the arrears ?

Mr. FISHER. It is rather hard to say which individual thing incurred these arrears. There were a number of expenditures incurred last year which the vote of last year did not meet and which had to be paid out of the vote of this year. I believe that the supplementary vote of $10,000 will clear up all the expenses to the end of this fiscal year, and I hope $100,000 will be sufficient to cover entirely the expenditure of the next fiscal year. I also added Mr. Fortier as an assistant to Mr. Gilbert in the poultry division. Mr. Gilbert's time has been so taken up with addressing public meetings and institutes and forwarding information with reference to poultry, that he has not been able to undertake any new experimental work for several years back, and for which there is a great necessity. There have been greatly increased demands from the French Canadian farmers of the province of Quebec for information about everything connected with poultry, and I felt it would be very important to have a gentleman who could give explanations in French as Mr. Gilbert does in English. Mr. Fortier commences with $700 per year ; he was engaged last September or October.

Mr. INGRAM. Is he provided with a house ?

Mr. FISHER. No. $700 is all he gets and of course his travelling expenses. Last autumn there was an additional typewriter put into the office whose name is I think, Mr. Dupuis, or something like that.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that include all in connection with what you call salaried officials ?

Mr. FISHER. I am just informed that last year there was a Miss Hagar added to the staff at $480 a year. This young lady was employed at some special tabulated work of a scientific character in connection with the results of some experiments.

Mr. SPROULE. How many employees were on this farm in 1896 ?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say off-hand.

Mr. SPROULE. How many were there three years ago ?

Mr. FISHER. I can only give an estimate which has been made on the spur of the moment by the director, that there are about four now where there were three then. There are about 100 on all the farms, of whom about 75 are on the central farm. The officers and office staff number about 25 and the farm employees about 50.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us the cost of the salaried officials of the Central Experimental Farm ?

Mr. FISHER. The total amount of the salaries for all the farms, including the managers of the branch farms and the office help, is $33,498. The Auditor General's Report shows that the salaried officials of the central farm last year cost $23,296. It would be a little more now, owing to the increases which I have mentioned. The wages paid to all employees below the salaried officials amount to the following : Central, $21,000 ; Nappan, $4,800 ; Brandon, $5,600 ; Indian Head, $5,300 ; Agassiz, $4,400.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice by the report of the minister on the experimental farms that some experiments were made at Nappan in the keeping of bees, and the only report on them that I can find is the following :

Six colonies were put into winter quarters last December. All died during the winter.

This does not give us very much information on bee-keeping. The report should give us the reason why all these died. The weather is no colder down there than in other parts of Canada where bees are successfully kept.

Mr. FISHER. I have not any further information on that point, except that the director informs me that all over Canada last winter there was an extraordinary mortality of bees. If there had been any special reason for the death of the bees in that case, I think it would have been stated in the report.

Mr. DANIEL. It seems rather remarkable that they all died, that there was not a single bee left. I think bees flourished in other parts of the country.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is a strange thing that we are paying gentlemen of scientific knowledge to keep bees, and the only information we have is that they all died. We have not a bee left to tell the story. We have a Minister of Agriculture, and when we ask him for information he cannot give it. What is he here for ? I want to tell the hon. gentleman that there are plenty of men keeping bees in the riding which I represent, and those bees did not all die. We have an experimental farm, and I, as a farmer, am prepared to pay any reasonable amount for the management of the experimental plots ; but I am not prepared to pay for a deputy to take care of hens, and when we ask for information the minister tells us he has not all the details. The details of the hen department are something like those of the bee department—we have an account of what we pay, but not of what we receive from it. I am willing that we should pay any reasonable amount for the experimental plots, but when it comes to paying nearly $22,000 for help on a farm of some 200 or 300 acres, it is difficult not to enter a protest. In my opinion, if the hon. minister cannot make the farm pay, leaving the experimental plots out of the question, he should get out of the business. How many acres in that farm ?

Mr. FISHER. 465, of which 200 are worked as a stock farm, and with the exception of the ground taken up by the buildings and their surroundings the rest is devoted to experimental work.

Mr. COCHRANE. And we pay $21,000 for labour on that 200 acres ?

Mr. FISHER. $21,000 covers all the labour, including experimental work, arboretum, vines and shrubberies, orchards, gardens and everything else.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have heard a good deal of that orchard. In our section of the country, we would not consider that orchard kept in proper condition at all. The farm, outside the experimental plots, should pay its way, especially a farm which has the advantage of the care of so many scientific men, and for which you can obtain any quantity of cheap manure in the city. If you cannot make it pay, what is the use of keeping it ? I see that we pay in the neighbourhood of $2,000 for feeding stock. What experiment is there about feeding stock ? The farmers in the section I have the honour to represent know as much about feeding stock as any of the gentlemen on this farm. Unless the hon. gentleman can succeed by experiment in devising some method of feeding stock cheaper than it costs now, there is no advantage in having stock on the farm at all. Judging by the information given us by the Agricultural Committee, if it costs as much to feed and fatten stock in our section as it does on the experimental farm, every farmer who feeds stock would lose money. What is the use of experimenting in keeping milch cows if you cannot raise enough on that farm to feed them ? And all these men who are employed on the farm are kept around the buildings all winter. How long could the hon. minister run a farm of his own if he had to keep all the men employed all winter ?

Mr. FISHER. The great bulk of the labour on the farm is expended on experimental work. In the farm report there is a full statement of the expenditure in connection with the 200 acre farm which is run as a stock farm. Out of 465 acres, only 200 are run that way. The rest are given to experimental work which brings in no return at all. But we have been complimented on that work over and over again by all sorts and conditions of people and from all sides of politics. The labour expended on that is much greater than the labour employed on the 200 acre farm which is set aside for stock. Over two-thirds of the whole wages are spent in experimental work and the work about the grounds and the arboretum and that kind of thing. There is an account kept at the farm of the labour on each branch, and although it would be a considerable task to work it up, I could obtain from the book-keeper a statement showing how much labour is charged against each individual piece of work. Page D—37 of the Auditor General's Report, contains a summary of this kind of work. At the bottom of the page the hon. gentleman will find a division on a certain scale of the different expenditures. This is not all wages.

Mr. COCHRANE. Salaries of officials cover $23,296.29.

Mr. FISHER. That is not wages at all. Just below that are the farm wages $21,000.

But if the hon. gentleman will look at the bottom of the page he will see a division of this expenditure under different headings. The different departments have some expenses besides labour.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain the difference between 'farm work' and 'care of stock.'

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman can put them together if he chooses. Farm work is one thing, but care of cattle includes a good deal of experimental work. When a man feeds cattle for experimental purposes, he must take a great deal more time than where cattle are fed merely with a view to profit. In the experimental work the feeding requires careful measuring, weighing and accounting, and all this means labour and expense.

Mr. COCHRANE. If my information is correct, the hon. gentleman's experiment in fattening stock resulted in greater expense than we get for the beef in the section I represent. If that is the case, the experiment is useless.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know what report the hon. gentleman refers to, but, as a rule the experiments in feeding at the farm have been profitable—that is they show that the farmer who carried on feeding in that way would make a profit.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, that is very well, being in a city like Ottawa. But if that were carried on in my section, it might not pay.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, we cannot work the farm at Ottawa as if it were in Northumberland.

Mr. COCHRANE. But if its experiments are such that farmers in the country cannot carry them out, they are in reality a failure. He may make a success of feeding when he sells the beef at 75 cents to $1 per hundred more than we can get. But if we fed on that basis, we would be losing money.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) forgets another thing—that when the experiments are being carried on, different systems of feeding are tried one against the other. While all may show a profit, one will show more profit than others. Even where loss occurs, the information so gained is valuable to the farmer, because he needs to be warned against mistakes as well as advised what he should do. It is of the very nature of experiment that some things should fail.

Mr. COCHRANE. How long does it take a scientific gentleman to arrive at a conclusion. The Minister of Agriculture, with his scientists about him has been experimenting for seven or eight years. How long a time is required ?

Mr. FISHER. That depends on how much knowledge is required. If a man is contented with a little he can arrive at it very soon, but if he desires a great deal of knowledge it will take much more time to acquire it.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is about as much satisfaction as we generally get. The minister takes a long time to explain, and when he reaches his conclusion, we are in just as satisfactory a position as we were before he commenced. Does he tell me and the farmers of this country that it requires eight or nine years to come to the conclusion what is the best way of feeding an animal so that he may give us practical advice as to the way in which beef can be most cheaply produced ? I think it is worse than a humbug to talk to the farmers in that way, to tell us that it will take us long to get the information we want as the information we want is great. I am here to say that, at the end of eight or nine years scientific men should have been able to reach a conclusion as to the cheapest way to feed an animal.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the scientific feeders of stock at the farm do not feed the same as my hon. friend from East Northumberland does.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know how that hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) feeds.

Mr. COCHRANE. I feed to make a little money.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman makes money, I congratulate him.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the hon. minister to say that in the experimental feeding of stock different quantities are fed to different animals in the same group, whereas in the ordinary commercial feeding all would be fed the same. Of what advantage is this scientific feeding to the practical farmer ?

Mr. FISHER. I was speaking of the difference in cost of the different methods of feeding. Even under ordinary conditions, a man, who is what we call a good feeder will recognize the difference of individuality in the animals, and he will give each the quantity of feed of which it can make the best use. We try experiments not with one animal, but with a group of animals.

An hon. MEMBER. The same herd.

Mr. FISHER. The same herd. But we attempt to get groups of animals which will as much as possible correspond with one another. Take, say, a dozen steers here and another dozen as nearly as possible like them in another group. We feed one group in one way all winter, or a certain number of months, and another group in another way for the same number of months, and note what the results are. I think the farmers will recognize that there is a good deal of individuality in each animal, and if we were to experiment with a single animal the result would be of little value. We have to take large groups of animals in order to make a fair test. Sometimes we have even to duplicate the experiment before we are in a position to give forth a statement which the farmers may depend upon. In that respect I wish to compliment Prof. Saunders because he has been exceptionally careful, in sending out reports, to send only those upon which the farmers may rely and may base their work. I think the reputation of the experimental farms on this continent and wherever their reports reach, has been largely due to the fact that the work has been done with great care, and no hasty conclusions have been jumped at. If to-day the reports of the experimental farms are received as authoritative, it is due to the extreme care and accuracy with which experiments have been conducted. I do not think my hon. friend realizes the amount of extra work, of extra labour, of extra time and extra money which must be put upon these experiments to give them that character.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman says he arrives at an average by experimenting with different groups of animals. We had one of the employees before the Agricultural Committee who told us that they fed one animal in one way, and another animal of the same herd and in the same stable in another way; they were not grouped together in the way the minister describes.

Mr. FISHER. There are different classes of experiments. The experiment he alluded to was feeding dairy cows, not herds. If the feeder was feeding a group of shorthorns he fed each individual in that group to the best advantage in order to show what that group could do, each of them was dealt with to the best advantage. Another group of cows was also dealt with, each to the best advantage. The experiment I referred to was where a group, say, of ten or a dozen steers were taken and fed in a certain way to see how much gain they would make in a certain period; and another group were fed in a little different way. For instance, we have been making experiments between one group of steers loose and another group of steers tied up. but feeding them in exactly the same way in order to see which group would make the most gain. It is evident that it would be more economical for the ordinary farmer to feed his steers loose than to feed them tied up. if they made equally as much gain. We have had varying results. The first year the result of that experiment was a little different from the result of the second years experiment. Although we have now been going on for three years, we may have to go on three years more before we can arrive at such a conclusion as can be relied upon. Those that are tied are tied with a chain around the neck, and the chain is attached to an iron rod. I think the first seasons' work was in favour of the group that was tied up, and the next seasons' work was in favour of those that were loose. It is of great benefit to the farmers to be able to get such experiments made for them. In issuing these bulletins of the reports, we try to give as many details as we can without encumbering the statements.

Mr. ALCORN. The minister has spoken of experiments in feeding different herds of cattle, but these experiments must necessarily be made upon a large scale with a considerable number of animals. Does he think that the whole experiment is of general benefit to the ordinary farmer in the community?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. The ordinary farmer does not need to do all these things for himself. After he has obtained the results from the experimental farm he can say: Such and such a method of feeding animals has been tried and proved to be the best. I will adopt that method.

Mr. ALCORN. Can he in reality practically follow the method prescribed in the bulletins?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, there is nothing to hinder any farmer who keeps stock from feeding his animals in the same way as they are treated in the experimental farm.

Mr. ALCORN. Will the hon. minister say it is practicable for every farmer in the country to pursue the methods prescribed in these bulletins to his own pecuniary profit?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, there is no doubt whatever that if he would take the reports and bulletins as issued and use a little common sense in applying what he finds there to his own conditions and circumstances, he would be immensely benefited. As a matter of fact we know that a very large number of farmers do find that they are benefited because we get countless letters from farmers, some of them asking questions, but explaining that they have been very much interested in what they have read, that they have applied the methods and that they have derived great benefit from them.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the farmers have been so much benefited by the information received from your bulletins why are you going on with the experiments still? The question is how long you are going to continue these experiments to arrive at a conclusion.

Mr. FISHER. We will have to continue these experiments as long as the world goes on and agriculture lasts. There are constantly arising new problems to be dealt with in this country and to stop where we are would simply be stopping after we had progressed only a small distance upon the road to the attainment of knowledge.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is hifalutin.

Mr. FISHER. It is not hifalutin. It is a simple fact and I am glad to know that we realize that in the agriculture of this continent there are problems which have to be solved.

Mr. COCHRANE. We know all that.

Mr. FISHER. Then the hon. gentleman knows it all.

Mr. COCHRANE. No.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman does he is in a hopeless condition.

Mr. COCHRANE. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that I made no such statement. It is just such gentlemen as he that are in that deplorable condition that they know it all. There was a member of this House, Mr. McMillan, who satisfied himself years ago in reference to the feeding of animals tied up or loose in the stalls and that gentleman was one of the most practical men I ever met with here.

Mr. FISHER. He was.

Mr. COCHRANE. And he settled the question that the hon. gentleman is trying to experiment with.

Mr. INGRAM. Some hon. gentleman seemed to think it remarkable that I should ask the hon. minister how cattle should be tied. Of course they are not practical farmers and they do not understand it. Do I understand the hon. minister to approve any particular method of tying cattle in the stables ? Take milch cows.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman asks me as a farmer what I would do, I would be glad to give him my opinion, but I would not like to give it authoritatively as Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. INGRAM. That is the gentleman I am asking.

Mr. FISHER. The Minister of Agriculture ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. There are a great many methods of tying up cattle, some of which may be found more convenient in one barn than in another. There are certain things which are required to be considered in tying up cattle and if the results desired are obtained by tying them by one method in one barn they may not be obtained by tying them by that method in another barn. As a matter of fact I am reconstructing my own stables on my farm, and while there is one method of tying up animals which I think the best, it is not convenient to put it in my stables and therefore I have to adopt the second best method. But that is a matter of private information that does not apply to the general subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. minister has taken several minutes to tell us how cattle should be tied up. I would like if he would devote one minute to answering the question of my hon. friend and say which is the best method.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot answer that in one word, because under one set of circumstances one method may be better than another method under a different set of circumstances.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman recommend for milch cows the method known as stanchion tying ?

Mr. FISHER. I have put swing stanchions in my own barn.

Mr. INGRAM. That is where the head of the cow is placed between two posts and the cow can work its head up and down, but not sideways.

Mr. FISHER. I said swing stanchions and not fixed posts. These stanchions are made of two uprights with cross-pieces at the top and bottom. The top is fastened with a little chain with a bar at the top and bottom and a chain below. The result is that the stanchion plays fast and loose and the animal can put its head wherever it likes.

Mr. INGRAM. Supposing that at night the milch cow is asleep——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. INGRAM. I am getting down to practical farming. The hon. gentleman used the term of swing stanchion. When the milch cow is sleeping, can she sleep as nature intended when a stanchion such as he has described is used ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. minister tell us really how nature intended the cow to sleep ?

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman had watched milch cows sleeping as often as I have, he would know without any difficulty.

Mr. INGRAM. I am bound to say that there are a good many who do not know.

Mr. FISHER. I have seen them often. They sleep just the same as human beings. Some sleep in one position and some in another.

Mr. INGRAM. That may be very satisfactory for the minister, but for practical farmers it is very unsatisfactory. I suppose we will admit that to have milch cows produce the best possible results, you must, in the matter of rest, adopt such a method as will allow them as nearly as possible to conform to the conditions of nature. If the animals are compelled to occupy positions which are unnatural they will not produce such good results. This is a serious matter as regards milch cows. It is a very serious matter, and I want to point out to those hon. gentlemen who think they are farmers, but who are not practical farmers, that by reason of the use of vertical stanchions, which do not allow the milch cow to sleep or rest as nature intended, the cow does not produce the same as she would if she were left to rest as nature intended. I was expecting to hear from the hon. minister that in the matter of these upright stanchions he would not, as Minister of Agriculture, recommend such a mode of tying milch cows. I have listened to some very able lectures, and I confess that the ablest lecture on milch cows I ever listened to was by a lady, who advanced the theory that you should apply the same rule to dumb animals that you apply to human beings, and treat them with the same kindness. That lady came from Wisconsin, and she knew more about dairying than any half dozen of the so-called professors I hear going around the country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. According to the Auditor General's Report, Page D—36, you have expended $59,287.60, less proceeds of sale of 61 steers, amounting to $4,082, leaving a balance of $55,205.60. Does that show a loss of that amount on your operations ?

Mr. FISHER. No ; we buy steers and fatten them for experiment and sell them again. The purchase price goes against the expenditure, and the selling price goes in as an offset to the general expenses of the farm. The money from the sale of crops, fruit, &c., goes into the consolidated revenue account. In round numbers, there are generally sales of $5,000 or $6,000 from the Central Experimental Farm of various products, which do not appear in this account. The suggestion that this is a balance against the farm is not correct, but even if it were we do not pretend that the sales from the farm cover the expenditure. The expenditure is for the purpose of carrying on experiments, and not for raising crops or fattening animals to sell. Some of these steers were fattened for experiments by various methods and sold in the spring, whereas, if we tried to make money out of them as an ordinary farmer would, fatten them off by what we considered the best method and probably make more profit.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, that is the loss, including the cost of experiment ?

Mr. FISHER. No ; there is included in that $55,000 the salary of the director, of the scientific staff, the work of distribution of bulletins, the distribution of seed, the care of the arboretum, the care of the grounds and buildings, and all that kind of thing.

Mr. SPROULE. One would expect that there would be some return from the poultry business, for instance. Poultry can only be raised for two purposes—for sale as food or for the eggs the hens lay. For last year we have a cost of $1,588 for poultry and a return of $322. The farmer who would not be able to make a better showing would soon reach the poor-house.

Mr. FISHER. The expense of the poultry division includes the salary of Mr. Gilbert who attends to the poultry, and who spends a great deal of his time travelling about the country and addressing public meetings on poultry matters. It also includes the cost of experimental work, such as the comparing of different breeds and ascertaining the results.

Mr. SPROULE. The keeping of fowls is not like the care of an experimental plot from which very little return would be expected. One would suppose that the poultry would be kept in such a way as to show what kind of a return a farmer would have from the work.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the arboretum a new idea started lately?

Mr. FISHER. No, it was started very soon after the beginning of the farm.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the hon. minister give me the total expenditure in connection with the Central Experimental Farm for the year 1902-3 ?

Mr. FISHER. There are certain expenses which apply to all the farms. At the end of the farm report of last year will be found a statement of expenditure on Dominion experimental farms for the year. It shows a total expenditure on the Central Experimental Farm of $44,104.36, against which is to be set the proceeds from the sale of steers amounting to $4,082, leaving a total expenditure of $40,022.36. This, however, does not include the whole of the salaries of the officials, which are apportioned to the different farms in what is considered by the director and the accountant to be a fair and proper proportion ; and the Auditor General has sanctioned and endorsed that division.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The total expenditure is stated in the Auditor General's Report to be $55,205.

Mr. FISHER. In that case the total salaries of the officers are charged to the Central Farm ; but though they reside here, a good deal of their correspondence and distribution and other work is divided among the different farms.

Mr. TAYLOR. Am I to understand from the hon. gentleman that the statement which he has just read from his report is a correct statement of the total expenditure in connection with the farm for the year 1902-3 ?

Mr. FISHER. That is the statement my official gives, and I suppose it is correct. It has been audited by the Auditor General.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will give the hon. gentleman a statement from the Auditor General's Report, and I will ask him and his officers to contradict it if they can. At page D—36 the total expenditure charged to the Central Experimental Farm for the year 1902-3 is $59,287.60, and that is only a portion of the expenditure. At V—94 there is another expenditure charged of $9,996.92, made by the Public Works Department and charged to the experimental farm; making a total expenditure in connection with the experimental farm of $69,284.52 last year. Is that correct ?

Mr. FISHER. What the hon. gentleman says is taken from the Auditor General's Report is correct so far as it goes ; but I have given the hon. gentleman a statement in regard to the division of certain work among the different farms.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is taken into account by the Auditor General in these amounts.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed by the director that that is not the case.

Mr. TAYLOR. The total expenditure is as I have stated, and from that the proceeds from the sale of the steers, amounting to $4,082, is to be deducted. I want the hon. gentleman to verify or contradict that if he can.

Mr. FISHER. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that I am assured by the director that the total expenditure there given includes the total salary of the director, the total salaries of all the officers of the experimental farm, and all the work done at the experimental farm for the various other farms. It also includes the cost of the purchase of steers amounting to $2,787.85. With regard to the item of the Public Works Department, that is totally different. There are constantly required repairs and additions to the farm, and for that purpose we have in the Public Works Estimates an item of $10,000 for repairs and maintenance of all the farms, not the Central Farm alone just in the same way as the Public Works Department maintains the buildings and all the public buildings of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. If my hon. friend were a practical farmer, as he pretends to be, and purchased supplies and kept accounts, he would keep an account of everything in connection with his farm.

Mr. FISHER.

My hon. friend claims to be a practical farmer, but he has not given us any evidence of it. A practical farmer, when he purchases supplies, would keep an account of every item and charge that item against the proper department. But to find out what this thing is costing the country, we have to look not only at the experimental farm accounts but at the public works accounts. The total cost of the farm last year, according to the Auditor General's Report was :

D—26..	$59,287.60
V—94..	9,996.92
		$69,284.52
Less revenue, sales of stores D—36..	$ 4,052.60
Other services, D—125.. ..	2,974.00
		$62,228.52

Showing a net loss to the country on the running of this farm of $62,228, without making any charge for interest on the investment. What farmer could run his business at that rate and keep it going ? My hon. friend charges up the loss against experimental work, but I would refer him to the record of his predecessors, and he will see by the Auditor General's Reports that this same work was done as well, if not better, in every department by his predecessor and at much less cost to the country. Let me compare the expenses under the Grit administration and the Tory government. In 1895-6 according to the Auditor General's Report, the expenditure was : B—7, $34,205.87 ; Q—70, $5,999.44, making a total expenditure under the late administration in 1895-6 of $40,205.31. From this deduct the revenue $3,784.74 and you have a loss of $36,420.57. That loss has been increased by $30,000 under the hon. gentleman. Let us go into this question further so that our farmers may know what this practical farmer is costing them. I shall take the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6, under the heads of departments which then existed and which are continued to-day, and not including the great number of new departments which the hon. gentleman has established :

	1895-6.	1902-3.
Salaries in general..	$3,434 43	$5,974.46
Farm work	3,929 99	5,073 23
Care of stock	1,738 45	3,087 45
Dairying department ..	323 36	611 02
Horticultural department.	2,163 57	4,896 37
Chemical department.. ..	191 74	4,332 62
Botanical and entomological	275 75	3,755 06
Poultry department	416 91	.....

And Mr. Gilbert was running that department then as he is to-day.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Gilbert's salary is not charged up there.

Mr. TAYLOR. A proportion of it is. Mr. Gilbert's salary and Mr. Saunders' and all the salaries were combined and a portion charged to each of the farms then established at Nappan, Indian Head and elsewhere.

Mr. FISHER. Not in the figures which the hon. gentleman is reading.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, the hon. gentleman can verify it for himself by the Auditor General's Report. Mr. Gilbert's salary is now charged to the Central Farm, but then it was divided as was Prof. Saunders'.

	1895-6.	1902-3.
Poultry department	$ 416 91	$1,588 93
Forestry department ..	1,502 82	1,302 51

The hon. gentleman has not increased the forestry department although he has increased the arboretum very largely. I find the office expenses in 1895-6 were $1,760, but under the hon. gentleman's administration they have increased to $4,395.06. The hon. gentleman has stuffed the place full of political hangers-on from cellar to garret, which accounts for this large increase in expenditure, and all these men are not doing more work than the others did.

	1895-6.	1902-3.
Drainage	225 50	$1,546 72
Drawing manure	299 05	213 56
Distribution of seed grain	781 80	1,613 67
Seed testing and greenhouse	775 50	1,089 19
Preparing exhibits	212 60	388 81
Arboretum	341 88	1,730 24
Distribution of bulletins.	525 50	75 00
Fencing	175 13	.....

Last year the hon. gentleman did not purchase any unless it went through the Public Works Department.

	1895-6.	1902-3.
Contingencies	$3 875 00	.....
Apiary, a new account ..	.....	32 00
Roadmaking, new account	.....	12 81
Experimental department, new account	.....	2,655 07
Drawing gravel	.....	104 00

Nothing was charged in 1895-6 for the experimental department, but the hon. gentleman has expended $2,655. The total of these items in 1902-3 taken from the Auditor General's Report,—and there are travelling expenses and other items amounting to $11,000 which I have not taken into account—amounts to $44,478.28 as against $19,173.25 under Conservative rule. Adding the $11,000 to this makes a total of $55,000 against the $19,000 under the Conservative administration. I remember the late member for Huron keeping us here until daylight, dilating on the extravagance and iniquities in connection with running the experimental farm by the late government, when that farm was run at $30,000 less than it costs to-day. To-day we have a net loss to the country on the running of this farm as I have shown, of $66,000 as compared with $36,000 under the late government, and there is not a man in the House—not even the hon. gentleman and his professor who is sitting beside him—who can say that there is more efficient work done to-day on that farm than there was previous to these gentlemen taking office. They are spending a lot on travelling expenses and fads, such as we were given an example of in the cheese curing station at Brockville. Here is a loss to the country of $62,228 on this experimental farm. My hon. friend beside me gave an illustration of the way things are done when he showed that $1,500 was spent on chickens which gave only a revenue of $300. But that is a small affair compared with what the hon. gentleman is doing all over the country. I would like to explain how it comes that he has increased the expenditure in connection with the experimental farm at Ottawa from $49,000 to $69,000. What is he doing for the $30,000 increased expenditure that he has put upon the farm ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not looked at the Auditor General's Report of the several items the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) read. I can only say that, on the face of them they show that the items are not compared on the same basis. For instance, the hon. gentleman quotes one item for something like $4,000 or $5,000 for salaries, and puts that against another item of $59,000 and says they are on the same basis. It is evident that these two figures do not represent the same service. Why, Professor Saunders has had a salary of not less than $4,000 a year ever since he became connected with the Experimental Farm, and we have always had nearly the same staff of officials as now.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said that at that time the salaries of the heads of this service were distributed over the different farms, so that a proportion of Professor Saunders' salary would be charged at Nappan, a portion at Indian Head and so on. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) tell me what the salaries of all the officials on the farm at Ottawa were last year ?

Mr. FISHER. The amount was $23,296.

Mr. TAYLOR. I gave $5,974, and that is all that is charged in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FISHER. But he gives the total at $59,000 and that includes the whole $23,000 of salaries.

Mr. TAYLOR. I gave the hon. gentleman the total of over $59,000, quoting the Auditor General's Report, and there he will find the items which makes up this total sum. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) has the Auditor General's Report before him. Let him contradict one single statement of mine, if he can.

Mr. FISHER. The items the hon. gentleman refers to do not make up the total of

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) had better let this item stand until he can come down prepared to give the committee and the country a statement showing the total expenditure on this Experimental Farm at Ottawa, and the revenue, so that we may know what it costs. The hon. gentleman contradicts the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FISHER. Not at all, I am quoting from the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. TAYLOR. If he is ready to accept the Auditor General's Report, then he must take the figures I have given, because they are from that report. If he is not satisfied, let him bring down a statement showing the expenditure and revenue with regard to this farm.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the minister (Mr. Fisher) and the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) are both right. On page D—38, we find the figures which have been correctly given by the minister, while on D—29, we find the amount for salaries $5,974.96. Where is the misunderstanding?

Mr. FISHER. There must be some difference in the way the salaries are divided. I do not know exactly what the difference is. The director informs me, in regard to salaries that, as the details are given, the director's salary and the accountant's salary are divided among all the farms. But the salary of each official is put in that official's department. For instance, Professor Fletcher's salary is put in with the entomological and botanical division. There can be no doubt that, as my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) says, there is a difference in the way these two items are made up. The hon. member for South Leeds has given one statement from the Auditor General's Report, while I was looking at another in the same book.

Mr. INGRAM. Where the explanation is, I am bound to say, I do not know.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know the difference. They are both in the Auditor General's Report, and both correct, I suppose.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When the hon. gentleman brings us the information with regard to this matter, I would also like him to bring us some explanation with reference to this bee trouble. I find that over $140 was paid in wages to look after these bees, and the bees are dead.

Mr. FISHER. The bees the hon. gentleman speaks of were in Nova Scotia, the bees at the experimental farm are not dead.

Mr. INGRAM. What amount of poultry have you?

Mr. FISHER. There are about 200 birds and 400 or 500 chickens this spring.

Mr. TAYLOR. To satisfy the minister that I was right. I may say that I have in my hand the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6 giving the salaries at the experimental farm, on page A—10. Prof. Saunders' salary is $4,000, the accountant's $900, the stenographer's $920, assistant accountant's $468, making a total of $5,888. Then on page B—9, 1896-7, the total expenditure at the Central Experimental Farm is given as $40,294. About the same figure as I gave for the previous year, $40,205, when our friends were in power.

Mr. FISHER. The salaries at the experimental farm are given at $17,766. I find just below that the whole of Mr. Shutt's salary was charged to the chemical department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I gave in my statement the items for the chemical department.

Mr. FISHER. I shall have to examine this, I will look into it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see by the Auditor General's Report that the total expenditure is $69,000, less receipts of $7,000, showing a loss of $62,000.

Mr. SPROULE. We had better leave the item until we get this information, because there are many other questions we would like to discuss.

Mr. FISHER. The statement in the report is in just the same form as it has been for years back. The Auditor General himself goes over that with the accountant of the farm and endorses it according to the accountant's statement. It is just as much endorsed by the Auditor General as are the details in his own report. I am not acquainted with the exact methods by which it is made up. I could not get the details without the assistance of the accountant and his books, and I do not think any member would have the patience to go through them. Still, if the hon. gentleman insists upon it I will get it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman admits himself that his statement and the figures that appear in the Auditor General's Report do not agree.

Mr. FISHER. I find on page D—36 and 37 that the statement in the Auditor General's Report is exactly the same as I gave, only it is divided in a different manner. In the experimental farm report the statement is divided into certain lines, and in the Auditor General's Report it is divided in a little different way, but the total is almost exactly the same, namely, $44,478, while in the farm report the total is $44,104, a difference of only $374.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Auditor General's Report he will find that $24,000 is exclusively for the wages of the staff. It includes that and nothing else.

Mr. FISHER. In the Auditor General's Report, at D—37 ?

Mr. TAYLOR. D—36 and 37. It says : Professor Saunders, $4,000, and it proceeds to give the names of other officials, whose salaries total, in round numbers, $24,000. Then, if you add to that the wages of the farm labourers, you get $44,000. The result is that the hon. minister is paying $44,000 in salaries and wages of officers and labourers, and he has a return of $3,000, to say nothing about the steers. The hon. gentleman does not say in his report that the working of the farm alone cost $44,000. He gives it as the total expenditure, whereas the Auditor General's Report shows that he has paid $44,000 for wages alone when he has only a return of $3,000.

Mr. FISHER. The accounts in the Auditor General's Report at pages 36 and 37, to which the hon. gentleman alludes, refer to the salaries of the general staff.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. FISHER. Well, the farm report, to which my hon. friend alludes, at page 429 only includes the proportion of the salaries that is charged by the Auditor General to the central farm. That does not include the whole of the salaries. It is the same all through, and it applies, not only to Professor Saunders, but to the other men who are engaged in the work of the farm.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why did not the hon. gentleman tell the farmers of this country that it cost $69,000 for the making of these experiments and the running of this farm ? He tells them that he spent $44,000, while the Auditor General's Report shows that he spent $69,000.

Mr. FISHER. The Auditor General says that I spent $69,000, but that, in the first place, includes the public works expenditure on the farm, which is not included in the farm report ; and, in the second place, it includes the whole of the salaries of the general staff, which are not fairly chargeable to the central farm alone. The report goes on to give the expenditures at Nappan, Brandon, Indian Head and the other experimental farms, which are not charged to the central farm, but which are charged to these other farms. The aggregate of the whole farm system comes to the same amount in one case as in the other, but in one case it is divided in a certain way and in the other case it is divided in another way.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the salaries of the general staff were not included in the year 1895-6 ?

Mr. FISHER. They were included in just the same way.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Proportionately as they are now ?

Mr. FISHER. In the farm report they were put proportionately, just as they are in the farm report now. In the Auditor General's Report they were included, just in the same way as they are in the present report.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then this comparison must be fair.

Mr. FISHER. The comparison is fair if the same class of division is taken, but the hon. member for South Leeds has taken one division in one year and another division in another year.

Mr. TAYLOR. But my hon. friend must see that by the Auditor General's Report, pages 36 and 37, there is an expenditure of $44,000 absolutely chargeable to the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, not one dollar of which is chargeable to the other farms. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page D—35 he will see that there is an expenditure for contingencies of $128. That is not included in this $44,000. Then there is feed for stock, $930, which is not included in the $44,000. But, if you include all these items, it gives you $59,000 ; and if you add $9,000, chargeable to public works, you get a total expenditure of $69,000. Why does the hon. gentleman not show these figures in the report that he gives to the farmers of this country ?

Mr. FISHER. That report includes the whole of the salaries of the officers. It includes the salary of Professor Saunders at $4,000, for instance, which is not divided at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why should it be ? He is giving all his time to the farm here now.

Mr. FISHER. No ; Professor Saunders' work applies just as much to the affairs of the branch farms as to the Central Experimental Farm. The work of all these other gentlemen applies as much to the one as to the other. There is a system of making two divisions of the expenditure. One is shown by the Auditor General at pages 36-37 D of his report, and the other is shown by the farm report, in which the expenditure is divided up according to the farms. In the Auditor General's Report it is not divided according to the farms.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why should it be ?

Mr. FISHER. The sum total is the same in the two. In one case the salaries of the principal officers are proportionately divided between the different farms and in the other case they are not.

Mr. TAYLOR. It should be so stated that the farmers can understand it.

Mr. FISHER. I think they understand it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not from the hon. gentleman's report. We have all the details of this $44,000 of expenditure, and it is all in connection with the experimental farm here. I am going to give the items which go to make up the $44,000, which added to the $11,000 and the $9,000, make a total of $69,000. We have at page D—36 of the Auditor General's Report the following list :

Salaried Officials ($23,296.29).

Saunders, Wm., director of farms, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	$4,000 00
Brettell, C. T., herdsman, 12 m. to June 30, 1903, at $50	600 00
Charlton, H. W., clerk, 12 m. to June 30, 1903, at $75	900 00
Charron, A. T., assistant chemist, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	1,000 00
Cramp, T. M., assistant accountant, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	758 31
Ellis, W. T.: head gardener, 12 m. to June 30, 1903, at $45 ; taking weather observations, 12 m. at $6	612 00
Fixter, John, foreman of farm work, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	1,100 00
Fletcher, James, botanist and entomologist, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	2,050 00
Gibson, A., assistant botanist, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	700 00
Gilbert, A. G., manager poultry department, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	1,000 00
Grisdale, J. H., agriculturist, 12 m. to June 30, 1903, at $125	1,500 00
Guignard, J. A., clerk, 12 m. to June 30, 1903, at $75	900 00
Hager, Margaret M., clerk, March 10 to June 30, 1903, at $40	149 00
Hay, W. H., accountant, 5 m. to November 30, 1903	416 65
Holz, Herman, foreman horticultural department, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	540 00
Macoun, W. T., horticulturist, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	1,400 00
McMurray, A., clerk, 9 m. to March 31, 1903, at $75 ; less 22 d. in Sept., 20 d. in March at $75	570 00
O'Hanley, M. C., stenographer, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	800 00
Pelletier, Eugène, clerk, 12 m. to June 30, 1903, at $75	900 00
Saunders, C. E., experimentalist, 6 m. to June 30, 1903	600 00
Shutt, F. T., chemist, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	2,000 00
Watson, J. F., stenographer, 12 m. to June 30, 1903	800 00

Then we have a page and a half of the names of farm labourers, whose wages added to those of the officials I have just read, made a total of $44,000. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he is going to show the people of this country by his report what the actual expenditure has been, in view of the statement which appears in the Auditor General' Report ? I could give a list of the farm labourers if I wished to detain the House. Their wages, added to the salaries of the officers whose names I have read, make a total of $44,000. The Auditor General's Report shows that the expenditure added to this amounts to $69,000, which, if it is reduced by $7,000, gives a total loss of $62,000. If the hon. gentleman can explain this statement in any way, let him do so before he asks this House to adopt this item, and let him show what this farm is costing the people under his management. I say that last year it ran in debt $62,000 without charging one cent of interest on the investment ; and if the minister can contradict that, I want him to do so.

Mr. FISHER. The Auditor General's accounts are there, and can be dealt with on their merits. If the hon. gentleman wishes to put that construction on the accounts, I suppose I will have to let him.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. gentleman must admit that he has made a loss of $62,000 on the farm. He says he spent $44,000 and the Auditor General says $62,000, and the minister has plenty of clerks and stenographers at his disposal to find out where the mistake is.

Mr. FISHER. These figures have been submitted to the Auditor General and declared to be correct.

Mr. SPROULE. The Auditor General is not responsible for the kind of book-keeping the Minister of Agriculture adopts. The Auditor General can only ascertain if the money was properly paid out under the various heads for which it was voted.

Mr. FISHER. All the items are submitted to him and classified, and he certifies them as correct.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then the statement of the member for Leeds is correct.

Mr. FISHER. He can draw his own conclusions from the figures.

Mr. SPROULE. If the statement made by the hon. member for Leeds is incorrect, it is the duty of the minister to tell us in what respect it is incorrect.

Mr. AVERY. I think it would satisfy both sides of the House if the minister would let the item stand until he brings down that statement.

Mr. FISHER. I really don't know what kind of statement I can bring down. I suppose I could bring the whole books of the farm here and lay them on the table.

Mr. AVERY. We do not want all the books; we just want a detailed statement from the books.

Mr. FISHER. The detailed statement appears in the report.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do they not agree then ?

Mr. FISHER. Because as I have tried to explain over and over again, so far as I can see, the only difference is that one gives the salaries of the officials divided between the different farms and the other does not so divide them.

Mr. SPROULE. The Auditor General's duty is to examine the accounts to ascertain if the payments made are according to law. But it is not his duty to compile the expenditures under the different headings, so as to show the House and the country the full expenditure in connection with the farm. That is information which should be given by the minister and which the people should know so as to enable them to judge whether we are getting a fair return for our expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. I understand that the alleged discrepancy is between the statement in the farm report, and certain portions of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. SPROULE. That is one discrepancy, but there may be others which we have not ferreted out.

Mr. FISHER. I am quite sure that I am willing to give any explanation it is in my power to give.

Mr. SPROULE. What the House wants is the expenditure in the various lines connected with the central farm, and the returns which we receive in the shape of revenue.

Mr. FISHER. The revenue, except for the steers does not appear in the farm report, because that goes into consolidated revenue, but it appears in the Auditor General's Report. In the statement at the end of the farm report the salaries of the officials are charged up partly to the central farm and partly to the branch farms. If you look at the end of the volume you will find the entry: salary of superintendent, including portion of salaries for work done at Ottawa. That is charged to each of these different farms. If that is totalled up, it will be found to come to the amount charged in the Auditor General's Report for the salaries of the whole experimental farm system, only in the Auditor General's Report they are put down to the central farm, because these officers live in Ottawa, and their salaries are paid here, though work extends over the whole five farms. in the farm report they are divided and apportioned, but the details of their salaries are just the same in the two reports.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will turn to his own report, he will find at page 429 the item: 'Distribution of trees and tree seeds, including $85.58, value of tree seeds supplied by Brandon and Indian Head farms, $157.' Now, if he turns to the Auditor General's Report at page D—32, he will find the expense in connection with the Central Experimental Farm for the distribution of seed grain, trees, &c. How much is the amount there?

Mr. FISHER. $4,562.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the hon. gentleman says in his report that he spends $157 for it.

Mr. FISHER. That is a totally different thing. At page 432 of the farm report, under the summary of expenditure, is this item: 'Distribution of seed grain, potatoes, &c., from Central Experimental Farm, including value of grain supplied from Brandon and Indian Head experimental farms, $5,871.' That work is not done as a portion of the central farm work. It is done for the whole Dominion of Canada. If the hon. gentleman will look carefully at the item of $157, he will find that it is for the distribution of trees and tree seeds, and does not include the distribution of 'seed grain, potatoes, &c.,' mentioned in the other item.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I understand the question before the House, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) wishes to find the difference in the expense of running the farm in the year 1895, and in the year 1903. The Minister of Agriculture does not seem to be able to give it. Would it not be advisable for him to examine into that, and give a fair statement to the House? I am sure the people of the country are anxious to have it. The Minister of Agriculture also made the statement that he thought the expenditure on the stock part of the farm would amount to about one-third of the whole; that would be over $18,000. Since then the hon minister has stated that he did not think it would cost nearly that much. Would it not be an advantage for the members of the House and the people at large to know exactly what that stock farm did cost—how much the minister spent on it, and how much was returned from it. I think it would be advisable for the hon. minister to have a statement brought down to the House in regard to these matters.

Mr. FISHER. A comparison between the expenditure of the year 1895-6 and that for the past year can easily be obtained by examining the statements which are put at the end of the reports for both years in the same way. With regard to the expenditure on the 200 acres of land, it is given in detail at page 78 of this year's report. It shows a total expenditure on live stock feeding operations of $10,438.94 and a total revenue of $12,684.20, leaving a balance of returns over expenditure of $2,245.26. There are statements of a similar character with regard to the production of crops on the farm, in respect to grain, hay, roots, corn, pasture, &c., giving all the details.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. minister stated that there was a balance of $2,000, as I understood him, after he had grown the grain and marketed it. He did not take into consideration the expense at all of growing the grain.

Mr. FISHER. The grain is taken at its market value.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But you have not taken into consideration anything about the work of the farm.

Mr. FISHER. The market value of the grain covers all that. The market value is sufficient to cover the cost of raising, and the other portion of the report shows that the market price, which is charged to the animals, is sufficient to leave a profit on the raising of the grain and hay.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Had you over $2,000 profit.

Mr. FISHER. I say that taking into account the expense of caring for the stock, we have a profit of $2,200 on the operation of feeding. There is another statement showing what it costs to raise so many thousand bushels of oats, so many hundred tons of ensilage and so on, and I say that taking those things at the market price shows a profit on the feeding of the stock. We have a profit first on the raising of the things and second on the feeding of them to the stock. The report of the experimental farm shows that.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does it show the amount paid for labour ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, on each crop.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand that you could not give me that information.

Mr. FISHER. I could not give it offhand, but it is in the report.

Mr. HALLIDAY. According to the farm report, page 429, the steers purchased for feeding experiments cost $2,787 and the steers sold realized $4,082. Turn up the Auditor General's Report, D—36, and I find there were 52 steers charged up for feeding purposes, whereas the sales of the steers amount to 61. That statement is very misleading.

Mr. FISHER. On that page there is a statement of 40 steers and then of 12 steers, making 52 in all. The sale was 61, but that must have comprised some steers which we had on the farm and did not have to purchase. We raised some, and I suppose the difference is made up by those we raised. We raise a number of calves every year, and when they get to the selling age, we sell them along with the other steers.

Mr. HALLIDAY. In the farm report the statement is misleading. You purchase so many at $2,787, and the proceeds of your sales were $4,082, making a profit of $1,297.

Mr. FISHER. In the farm report we have been showing the value of the stock at the beginning of the year and at the end of the year. If we sold so many animals at the beginning of the year, it would make that difference, but there were other animals raised which came to take their places.

Mr. HALLIDAY. You have charged $3,080 for feeding the stock and in this report at page 78 there is not near that amount charged.

Mr. FISHER. In that statement we had so many horses, cows and steers at the beginning of the year and so many at the end, and the difference of course is the difference of stock taking. The value of the animals at one date is balanced against their value the other date.

Mr. HALLIDAY. There is a discrepancy of $200 between the farm report and the report of the Auditor General.

Mr. FISHER. I can only account for that by supposing there was some stock on hand.

Mr. HALLIDAY. No, that was for feeding the stock. In the Auditor General's Report there is a charge of $3,087.45 for feeding the stock, page B—37.

Mr. FISHER. That is the care of the stock.

Mr. HALLIDAY. They charge in this item $2,856 for taking care of the stock.

Mr. FISHER. The only explanation I can give is that horses that are working on the 200 acres were charged in the statement of the stock and not the horses working on the arboretum and that kind of thing, whereas the item care of stock on page D—37 includes these.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I understand anything about book-keeping—and I think I do because I have been at it since I was eleven years old, and that is a good while ago now—the explanation of the minister is no explanation at all. The Auditor General's statement seems to be quite correct, whereas the report of the minister is very misleading. If the hon. minister will take his own report, page 429, he will see that the total expense of the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa is given at $44,104.36. If he will take page D—37, of the Auditor General's Report, he will find charged for salaries in the experimental farm alone $44,478.28. Why do not these figures agree ?

Mr. FISHER. I have already told the hon. gentleman several times, but I will tell him again, that the Auditor General included the whole of the salaries of Prof. Saunders and other officers and that only a portion of these salaries are charged against the experimental farm in my report at page 429. In the farm report, the rest of these salaries are charged in the succeeding pages to the other farms. In the Auditor General's Report they are not. Therefore, they are not charged twice in either case.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will take up the Auditor General's Report and turn to the item beginning D—29, I think I can satisfy him that the total expenditure by the Auditor General's Report is the amount that I stated, not dividing the salaries. That amount is $59,287, and besides there is the amount spent by the Public Works Department to which I have referred. On page D—29 the first item is salaries general detailed (page D—37) $5,974.96. The next item is botanical and entomological department $3.787.56. In that charge there is an item for salaries and wages of $3,755.06. The next item is the chemical department, $4,706.86, in which there is an item for salaries and wages of $4,332.62. The next item is travelling expenses, $1,651.66. And I would ask the hon. gentleman to read the details of that item as given in the Auditor General's Report. and ask his officers what these items for 'sundries' mean. For instance, Mr. Fixter charges for transportation $62.22, living expenses $35.25, and sundries $5.

Mr. FISHER. These are all detailed in the accounts rendered by the Auditor General and passed by him.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are certified by the minister, I suppose, or by the accountant of his department, and the Auditor General has to pass them, no matter whether they represent tips to the waiters, or drinks at the bar, or anything else.

Mr. FISHER. That is not the way the Auditor General generally does. When an expenditure is made of the exact nature of which he is not advised or does not approve he generally protests.

Mr. TAYLOR. The next item is exhibitions, $692.98, which includes an item of wages detailed of $388.81. The next item is telegrams and telephones, $144.06. Then office help, &c., $4,543.71 which includes salaries and wages detailed of $4,395.06. Then comes printing and stationery, $826.68. Then newspapers and periodicals, $109.09. Then seeds, grain, trees, &c., $446.44. Horticultural department, $5,102.92; distribution of seed grain, trees, &c., $4,562.56; seed testing and care of greenhouses, $1,691.39; Arboretum, $1,892.06; forestry department and care of grounds, $1,335.81; live stock, $1,496.08; farm work, $5,082.35; draining, $1,958.06; implements, tools, hardware and supplies, $708.67; blacksmithing and harness supplies, $379.54; manure and fertilizers, $310.42; dairy department, $715.27; poultry department, $1,773.45; bee supplies $218.47; contingencies, $128.06; division of cereal breeding and experimental, $2,805.47; feed for stock, $930.44; museum, $2.50; care of stock, $3,087.45; road-making and drawing gravel, $116.81; steers for feeding experiments, $2,787.85. These items make a total of $59,287.60. Now, will the hon. gentleman tell me how the expenditure in connection with the farm, taking the items I have given as quoted from the Auditor General's Report and the salaries and wages included in which are summarized at page D—37 showing an amount of $44,478.28, agree with his statement. It is true the hon. minister figures the wages and salaries out pretty nearly, but still there is a discrepancy of about $400, because the amount he gives is $44,104,36 as against $44,478.28. Between his statement and that of the Auditor General there is $300 or $400 of a discrepancy. The Auditor General says here that the total expense in connection with this farm is $59,287, yet the hon. gentleman tells the farmers by this report that the experimental farm at Ottawa only costs $44,000. Now by what system of book-keeping can the hon. gentleman contradict the statement of the Auditor General? I have given every detail from his report, every expenditure; let the hon. gentleman bring down a statement if he can that will contradict that. I say that the loss to this country last year was $62,228.52 as against a loss in the last year of the Conservative administration of $36,420.57, dealing with every item in the same way, when the work was done just as efficiently as the work is being done by the hon. gentleman to-day.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it is necessary to go over the figures again. The hon. gentleman has again deliberately included in the one statement the whole of the salaries of the officials, and applied it to the Central Experimental Farm in the statement of the Auditor General's Report. In the other statement the whole of these salaries are not charged to the central farm, only a portion of them. That is the whole difference, and I have explained it over and over again. I cannot bring down any statement other than is shown by these figures here. They are the figures of the Auditor General's Report in both cases.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do they agree?

Mr. FISHER. The sum total on page 37 is not the same total, the details are not the same, the items are not the same, but because the totals are nearly the same the hon. gentleman has jumped to the conclusion that they ought to be the same. The Auditor General will have to cook the accounts to make them the same. The one includes the whole salaries charged to the central farm; the other includes only a portion of the salaries, but includes a lot of other things which, in the aggregate, nearly makes up the difference in salaries; and because they nearly make up the difference the hon. gentleman jumps to the conclusion that an attempt has been made to make them the same.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman says that the total of $44,478.28 contains different items than those that are contained at the foot of that page and on the head of the following page.

Mr. FISHER. No, I say they contain totally different items from those on page 429. In that case the $44,478 are for salaries and nothing else; in the other case the total is $44,104.36, which contains a portion of the salaries which are fairly chargeable to the central farm, and also all the other expenses fairly chargeable to the central farm. Because the figures are so nearly the same the hon. gentleman jumps to the conclusion that they are actually the same, whereas they are totally different.

Mr. DANIEL. Even supposing the item with regard to the salaries of these officials is correct and is distributed as the minister states over the different farms in the country, that explanation would not apply to the item of wages. Even allowing his statement to be correct that in his own report of the experimental farm, the item of salaries of officers is distributed in the proportion that he thinks is just—

Mr. FISHER. That the Auditor General thinks is just.

Mr. DANIEL. Whoever makes up the items—distributing that among the various experimental farms, still that explanation would not apply to the item of wages. Now, the item of wages, which the Auditor General puts down to the central farm at Ottawa, amounts to $21,181.99; whereas the amount of wages that the hon. gentleman debits to the central farm amounts to only $9,900. Now, surely such a discrepancy as that merits more explanation than we have had. I cannot understand how the Auditor General debits the central farm with $21,000 in wages, while the minister only debits it with about $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 429 of the experimental farms report he will find the following charges:

Salaries of officers engaged in the general work of the farms, proportion chargeable to the Central Farm	$1,792 49
Wages, farm work, including experimental work with grain and other farm crops: also salaries of officers in charge	6,840 84
Wages, care of stock	3,087 45
Chemical division, proportion chargeable to the Central Farm	1,412 90
Botanical and entomological division, proportion chargeable to the Central Farm	1,442 56
Horticultural division, including salary of officer in charge	5,110 92
Poultry division, including all supplies; also salary of officer in charge	$1,992 04
Forestry division and care of grounds	1,335 81

And so on. These are the divisions including the wages spent in each. The $21,000 odd off wages shown in the Auditor General's Report includes the care of farm stock and the expenditure for wages in the horticultural division, the chemical division and so on as shown in the farm report. The items are divided up on a different plan and therefore it is almost impossible unless you have the details of the whole work to be able to compare them.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the mode which the hon. gentleman has adopted in his report of explaining these expenditures to the country is one calculated to deceive the people. When you find in a detailed report such as this is supposed to be two items, one referring to wages for the caring of stock, and another to wages relating to the farm work, you naturally conclude that these are the only wages which are paid at the Central Experimental Farm. If these other items include wages it is only a reasonable request on the part of the members of this committee that the amount spent in wages, whether in the care of stock, or farm work, or in the botanical and entomological division, should be credited to the word 'wages' and then we could understand what was meant. It is absolutely impossible for any one to get a clear understanding of the cost of these various services from this report.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman may be right in his judgment that this is not the proper form of these accounts, but with the exception that they have been somewhat amplified in later years and more detailed, these accounts in the report have been practically the same ever since the farm reports have been issued. It may be an incorrect system, but it is the way in which these farm accounts have been made up for the report to show the expenditure of the farms ever since the inception of the farm system.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would the hon. minister tell the committee what he pays to the superintendent of the farms at Brandon, Indian Head, Agassiz and Nappan?

Mr. FISHER. $1,500 a year apiece.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. gentleman tells us that the balance over and above the $44,000 of expenditure that he shows in his report at page 429 and which is chargeable to the other experimental farms, has been divided. If he will turn over the page in his report he will find the following charge:

Salary of superintendent, including proportion of salaries for general work, Ottawa, $2,545.62.

And the same for the farms at Brandon, Indian Head and Agassiz. Deducting $1,500 that leaves $1,000 that they have paid as their proportion of the wages paid by the experimental farm, which would amount to .180. The Auditor General in his report at page D—36 states that the cost of these farms has been $59,227. Will the hon. minister explain to me where the difference has gone ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the details of that difference.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman said that the difference is made up in the wages that are charged to the other farms. He is misleading the people, because there is only $1,000 charged there.

Mr. FISHER. That would not make up the difference.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it does not make it up. The hon. gentleman should be able to give us a statement explaining that.

Mr. FISHER. I will try to give the information.

Mr. TAYLOR. He has told the farmers that it only costs $44,000 when the amount is $69,000, according to the details which are given in the Auditor General's Report. My hon. friend says that he has charged that to the other farms, but when we take up his report in regard to the other farms he only charges $1,045 as their proportion of the expenses at Ottawa. So, there is a discrepancy of $20,000 to be accounted for. We must know where that has gone.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be better for the hon. minister to allow this item to stand and bring down a statement giving that information.

Mr. FISHER. I will be quite ready to do so, and if hon. gentlemen opposite will say what they would like in the way of information I will try to get it. I do not wish to force the item through without full information. I am quite satisfied that the information is get-at-able and will prove perfectly satisfactory to the committee. It is the right of the House to have all the information that hon gentlemen have asked for and I would be only too glad to bring it down. I know what my hon. friend from South Leeds wants, I know what my hon. friend from East Elgin has asked for, but if there is any other information that is desired I will be glad to bring it down. I take it for granted that hon. gentlemen do not wish to waste the time of the House, that they do not wish to obstruct. Of course I could not for a moment think that they would do that, because at this late date of the session I take it that they must be anxious to put the work through.

Mr. SPROULE. I can assure the hon. gentleman we have no desire to obstruct the work. We only wish to get the information so that it may be understandable and that it may be presented to the country in such a form that the country will understand it as well.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the hon. minister has shown a desire to furnish the committee with all the information that he can, but he evidently could not give us the information which we desired in reference to some of these items.

Mr. FISHER. I could not go into the details of the accounts on the spur of the moment.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain the item at the bottom of page D—37 of the Auditor General's Report :

Salaries, general, $5,974.96.

Mr. FISHER. I will try to find that out.

Mr. INGRAM. Some time ago I asked the hon. gentleman for information about the number of members of the agricultural societies of the Northwest.

Mr. FISHER. I have sent to the Northwest to get the details. I think the information has arrived by this time, but I will ask my deputy minister. As soon as it arrives I will give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there any other revenue from the experimental farm except from the sale of the stock ? I see you keep bees ; what do you do with the honey ?

Mr. FISHER. We sell honey, and eggs, and fruit ; the farm crops are all fed on the farm. The details of the sales are in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister understands that we want an account of the total expenditure on the experimental farm here in the various lines, and as well, the revenue from that farm on account of the sales. That will apply to all the farms. We want the expenditure on the various farms, taking into account the proportion that belongs to each of them, because I understand the minister to say that a certain portion of what should be charged to the other farms is included in the expenditure of the central farm here.

Mr. FISHER. That appears in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. SPROULE. We would like to have that charged to each of the farms in every line, public works or any other line.

Mr. FISHER. The details of the public works expenditure are given exactly on the different farms. If we build a barn at Agassiz, for instance, it is taken out of that $10,000. The details are all in the Auditor General's Report, but of course the hon. gentleman does not wish himself to look it up, and I will have to get one of the officials to look it up and hand it to him. Now, first of all, I understand he wants an explanation of what is called the discrepancy between the statement at the end of the farm report and the statement in the Auditor General's Report; and, in the second place, he wants the actual statement of the expenditure on the central farm here for the work of the central farm, not including these salaries of officers which are for the whole system.

Mr. SPROULE. The proportion properly charged to this central farm.

Mr. FISHER. Exactly. He wants it divided up on the principle which is applied in this statement at the end of the farm report. That is the principle on which that statement is made, and I venture to say that statement will be found to be absolutely correct. The only difficulty at present is that I do not quite see where the whole of the difference between that and the statement in the Auditor General's Report comes in. I thought it was almost all due to the difference in regard to the amount of salaries charged, but if the figures of the member for Leeds are correct and cover the whole. that cannot be the only difference. I will find out if there is any other difference. If there is anything I have not covered, I should be only too glad to be reminded.

Mr. SPROULE. And the aggregate of the revenue derived from the different farms.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. When the superintendent of the experimental farm was before the Agricultural Committee I gave notice that I intended to ask as to the revenue and expenditure on each of the farms separately

Mr. FISHER. The total revenue and the total expenditure ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes. The director, not having come before the committee again, we thought this was the best place to ask for that information.

Mr. FISHER. Undoubtedly. If that is all the information the hon. gentleman wants, I will try to bring it down. If hon. gentlemen are satisfied with it, I suppose they will allow the item to pass after the usual fair discussion on the next occasion. I move that the committee rise.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). In accordance with the statement of the premier early in the day, I beg to lay on the table the remainder of the correspondence relating to the removal of Lord Dundonald.

Mr. TAYLOR. That will be printed with the other ?

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose the previous order for printing will cover it.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will proceed with supply, the estimates being those of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Postmaster General, and perhaps Customs. I am not quite sure as to their order, but probably we may begin with Marine and Fisheries.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 17, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ALLIANCE BANK OF CANADA.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville) presented the report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders as follows :

Friday, 17th June, 1904.

The Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders beg leave to present the following as their eighteenth report :—

Your committee have considered the petition of John F. Stairs and others, provisional directors of the Alliance Bank of Canada, for an Act to extend the time within which to obtain a certificate from the Treasury Board, as required by section 14 of the Bank Act, and find that while no notice has, as required by the rule, been published in the 'Canada Gazette,' the committee in view of the fact that no interests are likely to be affected by the proposed legislation, recommend that the 51st rule be suspended in reference thereto.

As the time for presenting private Bills has expired, your committee recommend that that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for presenting private Bills be suspended in reference to the foregoing Bill.

Your committee have also considered the petition of the Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company, Limited, praying for leave to present their petition for an Act authorizing them to acquire, construct, &c., lines of railway, &c., outside of the Dominion of Canada, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for receiving such petitions, and they recommend that the necessary leave be granted.

All which is respectfully submited.

(Sgd.) PHILIPPE DEMERS,
Chairman.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS moved :

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 18th report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, that portion of the 49th rule of the House, which limits the time for presenting private Bills, be suspended as regards the Bill respecting the Alliance Bank of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. Listening to the reading of the report I did not understand whether it recommended the suspension of the rule in reference to this particular Bill, or that it recommended a change in the rules.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. There are two motions, the one which I have made in reference to the Alliance Bank and one to be made by my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert) in reference to the Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company.

Mr. SPEAKER. The report is merely in reference to these Bills.

Mr. HAGGART. That is all right.

Motion (Mr. Demers) agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 138) for the relief of Andrew William Mann.—Mr. Macdonald.

Bill (No. 139) for the relief of Jennie Davison Moore.—Mr. Macdonald.

PRIVATE BILL—EXTENSION OF TIME.

RIO DE JANEIRO LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY.

Mr. CALVERT moved :

That that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for receiving petitions for private Bills, be suspended in reference to the petition of the Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company, presented this day, praying for an Act authorizing them to construct, &c., lines of railway outside of the Dominion of Canada, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 18th report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. SPROULE. What authority have we to give power to any company to construct lines outside of Canada ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a growing time. We are spreading over.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to know whether the government is going to take some action to stop this sort of thing, or whether we are going to have a suspension of the rules to the end of the session ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sure my hon. friend would not apply the rule strictly when a Bill is brought in to allow a company to build a railway in Brazil.

Mr. WILSON. Why should it be brought in at all ?

Motion (Mr. Calvert) agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That from this date to the end of the session government orders have precedence on Mondays immediately after questions to be put by members.

He said : I stated the other day to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, that when I moved this motion to-day, I would give him some information as to the legislation which we proposed to introduce during the present session. In the first place, I stated that we proposed to move some amendments to the present election law. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has that Bill ready, and it will be introduced early next week ; perhaps Monday or Tuesday, but not later than Wednesday. I hope so at all events, though I cannot speak with certainty as the Minister of Justice is not here to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the hon. gentleman passes from that would he have any objection to give us an idea of what he proposes under that Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say with certainty, though I think it has reference to the lists in certain provinces, but what the character of the legislation is I cannot say. I think it makes provision for the provinces where the lists are not prepared either by the judicial authority or the municipal authorities. Then the Postmaster General will introduce some amendments to the Civil Service Act, which I think are of very light character. Then the Minister of Railways proposes legislation for the transfer to the Intercolonial Railway of the Canada Eastern Railway. The Minister of Railways will also propose a Bill—but as to that I cannot speak with certainty ; he contemplates—though I cannot say the thing is absolutely certain—introducing a Bill providing for a system of pension upon our own railways the same as is in force upon the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. There may be also some minor Bills of a departmental character but not contentious.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. If the government takes Monday, what will become of private members' business. We have some nine motions on the paper that we would like to have moved, and we ought to have an opportunity of moving them. I take it that they are not likely to entail very much debate ; but we want certain information which they ask for. There are also several important public Bills that will be disposed of. There is one by Mr. Lancaster to amend the Railway Act, and another by Mr. Maclaren, of Huntingdon, to prohibit the sale, importation and manufacture of cigarettes. What is to become of that Bill if the government takes Monday ? This House has expressed itself in an unmistakable manner in favour of the principle of that Bill, and surely the government is not going to slaughter it with the rest of the innocents. There is another Bill to amend the Railway Act by Mr. Lancaster, and another to amend the Yukon Territory Representation Act, and still another with respect to labour union labels. These are all important public Bills, and if the government takes Monday, they are killed for this session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In view of the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) I will try to meet his wishes, and I will ask the consent of the House to amend my motion so that next Monday will be left to private members and the motion take effect only after next Monday.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Could the right hon. gentlman inform us if the proposed Act which the Minister of Justice is going to introduce, will have the effect of laying aside the provincial lists, that are now being prepared by the officials of the Manitoba government and that are now being revised, should an election take place within the next twelve months. Are new lists to be prepared in lieu thereof by officials appointed by the Dominion government ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not like to give any precise information to my hon. friend (Mr. Roche). The hon. gentleman will have all the information within a very few days; four or five days at the most, In the absence of the Minister of Justice who is in charge of that measure I do not think I would be justified in pretending to give him the particular character of the legislation which my hon. friend asks me about. I may say also that I forgot to mention that we propose to introduce a Bill to give effect to the decision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, given in January last with regard to the railway crossing over Yonge Street in the city of Toronto. This decision was rendered by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in the month of January. It should have been rendered by the Privy Council, but through some clerical error it did not come before the Privy Council at the time, and when it did come before the Privy Council, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council had ceased to exist. We therefore have to introduce legislation simply to give effect to the decision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I do not believe that this motion deals fairly with the private members of this House. It is true that the premier has amended the motion so as not to include next Monday, but we must remember that there are twelve Bills in the names of private members and nine or ten motions, and if these Bills do not pass next Monday, which they cannot, as they have to go through at least two stages, then it means that these Bills are killed for this session. I do not think that there has been a session of this parliament in which private members had less time for the consideration of their business. It occurs to me that the government should take Saturday for their business and allow the Mondays to remain with the private members. In fact, I consider that so long as private members have business before the House the government should provide some portion of every week for the consideration of that business. It is very important that the government should consider that matter. We are anxious to have these Bills considered by this House and put through if possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I am to judge of what is to take place next Monday by what has taken place on other Mondays, my hon. friend will have ample opportunity to have his Bill considered on Monday next. If he does not, I will see what I can do for him later on.

Motion as amended, agreed to.

REPRESENTATION OF THE PROVINCES.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the right hon. gentleman when he intends to bring down the papers asked for by the leader of the opposition in reference to the submission to the Privy Council of the reference with regard to the representation of Prince Edward Island, and the other provinces, in the House of Commons. The record must be ready because, I understand the solicitor general has gone to England to argue the cases before the Privy Council. The factum should have been presented to the House before this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am quite sure the papers can be brought down now, I will make a note of it.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to have them immediately, especially those relating to the Ontario case so as to see whether it has been properly presented.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will try to bring them on Monday. I forgot to mention that my hon. friend the Postmaster General will bring down a measure with respect to the Alien Labour law, which he promised some time ago.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—salaries, $77,850.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The only increases are the statutory increases. The total salaries for 1903-4 were $72,700. There are forty-eight statutory increases, at $50 each, $2,400; and two additional junior second-class clerks at $800 each; $1,600; and two third-class clerks, at $600 and $550, making $1,150; making the total increase of $5,150. Mr. Archambault has been promoted from a messenger to a third-class clerkship at $650. His previous salary as messenger was $600. He has been in the service twenty-nine years. I have also made the following appointments, which are included in the estimates, namely: H. Tremblay and R. Frechette, junior second-class clerks, at $800 each; L. F. Gorman, third-class clerk, at $600, and Ida Tetu, third-class clerk, at $550. Miss Tremblay is employed in my office as a French stenographer and typewriter. Mr. Frechette is employed in the accountant's branch, and the accountant speaks very highly of him as an official. Mr. Gorman has been in the department for some years as an extra clerk and is a stenographer and typewriter. The deputy minister recommended him strongly for this appointment. Miss Tetu is a French stenographer and typewriter.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that you are providing for three additional third-class clerks and two junior second-class.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As I have explained, these were employed temporarily, and I propose to put them on the permanent list.

Mr. SPROULE. They may have been employed temporarily, but last year you had fifty-two employees, and now you have fifty-six. So that there must be four more somewhere.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have just stated that there are four more.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that increase necessary for the work?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may state that the work has increased about sixty per cent since I have been in the department.

Mr. HAGGART. I notice that the contingent account is also greater than it was last year.

Mr. HACKETT. Are any of these clerks employed in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounties to the fishermen of the maritime provinces?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The clerks employed for the distribution of the fishing bounty are employed only temporarily during six or eight weeks of the year. They are then paid off.

Mr. KAULBACH. Perhaps my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island is refering to the fishing bounty for dog-fish.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no question of that for the present year.

Mr. HACKETT. I am not speaking about dog-fish at all. I asked the following question of the hon. minister on the 13th of April last with regard to the distribution of the fishing bounty in the province of Prince Edward Island:

Mr. HACKETT asked:

1. What action has the government taken with regard to the following question, asked in this House on the 10th September, 1903:—'.Mr Hackett asked:

'(a.) Has the government received a complaint from certain electors of Prince county, Prince Edward Island, alleging that one John M. DesRoches, of Little Tignish, township No. 2, fishery guardian, had committed fraud in connection with the distribution of fishing bounty checks for the season of 1902, and asking that the same be investigated?

'(b.) Is it the intention of the government to order an investigation into this matter, as requested?

'(c.) If so, when will the inquiry take place, and will witnesses be called to substantiate the charges made?

'(d.) The Minister of Militia and Defence, Sir Frederick Borden: Yes. Yes. A searching inquiry will be made as soon as possible.'

2. Has the inquiry as promised been made; and what is the result? If not, why not?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Preliminary information was procured, upon which the minister came to the conclusion to suspend proceedings for further consideration.

I want to ask the hon. minister whether he intends to prosecute an inquiry into those alleged frauds.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Last year when this question was put to me, I answered it as the hon. gentleman has stated, and I thought the matter would rest there; but on further representations made by the hon. gentleman, I promised him that an investigation would take place. Accordingly I appointed a person to investigate into these charges of fraud and I hope to have his report pretty soon.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that a person has been appointed to prosecute an inquiry?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, I will bring down the information and give my hon. friend the name and instructions and everything.

Mr. HAGGART. I think that is what the hon. minister should do, in view of the fact that those gentlemen who made those allegations are supposed to be inplicated in some personal matters in that connection and in order also to give the fishery guardian charged with these frauds an opportunity of vindicating himself before a proper representative of the government. I think the matter very important and trust the inquiry will be prosecuted without delay.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a campaign sheet issued by his department giving a review of the improvements in the lighthouse and coast service of Canada between 1896 and the 30th of December, 1903. It is a new departure that any minister should have a campaign document published in connection with his department. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but this is nothing else. I know of no greater outrage than for a minister to use his position and department and the public funds for the purpose of publishing and disseminating campaign literature. The hon. gentleman may find precedents, but no matter where he may have selected his models, what he has done is not in the public interest.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. When I got an official of the department to prepare this statement, it was in order to inform people on the other side of what he was doing for the St. Lawrence route. In doing this, I simply followed the example of my predecessor who issued a similar pamphlet. The information in this pamphlet is taken from the report of the Marine Department. It is a condensation of what is contained in that report and better adapted for ready reference. The hon. gentleman would be surprised if I were to show him the numerous letters we have received from England and other European countries asking for more of these pamphlets, so as to post themselves on what is going on in the department. We at first ordered 2,000, and these were distributed only to people connected with the shipping interest and members of parliament.

Mr. CLANCY. It is very fortunate perhaps that some members of parliament got them on this side.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They were sent to every member of parliament.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not questioning that statement. The pamphlet purports to be a review of the progress and development of the Department of Marine since 1896. Why was that date selected ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is after 1896 that the most important work was done. In 1894-5-6, there were great complaints against the St. Lawrence route and we had any amount of difficulty in dispelling the wrong impression that had been formed regarding it. We all know the efforts that were made by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and the shipping interests of Quebec and Montreal in 1896 to convince the government that it was a question of life or death for the St. Lawrence route that certain improvements should be made ; and it has been since that time that large sums were voted in order to improve the route and remove the bad impression which had been formed concerning it.

Mr. CLANCY. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) is always single-minded in everything. It was by the merest accident that he selected the year 1896 for comparison. The hon. gentleman devotes his whole effort to show that there was complaint in 1895 or 1896. Has he been asleep that he does not know that these complaints had been made for years before and have been made for years since ? The charge was made by one of his own supporters, the hon. member for St. Lawrence Division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), from his place in the House that the whole service was in the most deplorable condition. Why did not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) date it from that time ? He could hardly have been ignorant of the complaints that were made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike). But, in compiling this table to show what has been done on the St. Lawrence route he, incidentally and quite accidentally, fell upon the year 1896. I do not mind giving the hon. gentleman my opinion that that is mere parish politics and looks all the worse when practised by the head of a great department. The hon. gentleman brought action against a newspaper for having stated more definitely, not than the facts warranted, probably, but than he was willing to have known, that he had established a sort of bureau in his own city through which his friends would secure places. It appears that it is a part of the outfit of the government to which he belongs. The Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) on one occasion when he was acting Minister of Public Works, advertised for applicants from one end of this country to the other——

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.. That is entirely without foundation.

Mr. CLANCY. I will take occasion to refresh the hon. gentleman's memory.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Do so, if you can.

Mr. CLANCY. I will do so with pleasure, and probably with not a little pain to the hon. gentleman. Evidently the hon. gentleman has forgotten. It is said that reckless people never take pains to remember what they have said. I would not say that the Postmaster General was reckless, but he was new in the business and anxious to distinguish himself. So, when the back of the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Mr. Tarte) was turned, he resolved to out do that hon. gentleman and learn every place that wanted a wharf or a dock. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries—

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) will not omit the proof. He was going to give the proof of his statment. Will he not make good his word ?

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman (Sir William Mulock) will allow me a little time, I will call the witnesses—including himself. Now, returning to this pamphlet, let me review some of its features. It purports to give a 'comparative statement of total expenditure for the fiscal years 1896 and 1903.' This includes items for ocean and river service, lighthouse and coast service, scientific institutions—was there any complaint about that? Marine hospitals, steamboat inspection—was there a controversy about that so keen that people were crying out for information about it for the year 1896 especially?—and civil government salaries.

Mr. INGRAM. What has all that got to do with the improvement of the St. Lawrence route?

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will tell us that. How much are the people of the old country concerned about civil government salaries? Were they thirsting for information with regard to steamboat inspection? Did they demand to be informed about our scientific institutions? Then we have a comparative statement of the expenditure for lighthouse and coast service for the years 1896 and 1903. The first item is for salaries and allowances. I am sure the people abroad were anxious about that. And so it goes through with the other items. It is, no doubt, a very complete campaign document. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on the efficiency of the work from that point of view. Let me read the italics on page 5, put there, no doubt, by direction of the hon. minister himself—for I will venture to say he took great care in the preparation of this pamphlet:

> Since the year 1896 one hundred and fifty-six towers and inclosed lighthouses have been built and fifty pole lights have been erected, making a total of two hundred and six new lights put in operation.

Why was that put in italics? I will sit down and await the hon. gentleman's explanation.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. To call the attention of the reader to the statement, I suppose.

Mr. CLANCY. The reader would not have taken notice of it, if it had not been put in italics, I suppose. Had they put in the name of the hon. gentleman himself, it would have been a more direct way of accomplishing his purpose. The public are not so dull as to require the italicizing of important statements by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Here is another statement in special type: Will the hon. gentleman say that the public were so much interested in this that he needed to call special attention to it?

> Lighthouses to be put in operation next spring and others for which tenders have been invited.

Was that given prominence so that people might come to the hon. gentleman and look for contracts? The hon. gentleman assents to that. I am glad he is so frank. Then there is a comparison of the number of lights in the Dominion of Canada for the years 1896 and 1903. I shall not trouble the committee to go more in detail through this interesting volume of thirty-two pages, including index, of campaign literature. I would advise the hon. gentleman, however, as a fitting frontispiece to put on the front of the cover his own photograph looking as wise as he now tries to look after having issued this splendid campaign sheet.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I shall carefully consider that advice.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. It seems strange that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) should have any doubt concerning the motives of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in choosing the year 1896 as the year with which comparisons are to be made in this pamphlet. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) looking after the interests of the Militia Department and Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) looking after his own department go back to 1896 for comparison, and prepare campaign documents to be circulated as public reports. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) had a reputation before he came here, and this is simply what we expected from him. A dozen of these pamphlets were sent to each member of the House, and every member was invited to send for as many as he pleased for distribution. But, owing to the nature of the pamphlet, I did not send out so many as I would have been glad to do otherwise. The fact that the comparisons are made with the year 1896 shows that it was intended to be a campaign document and so I did not care to send them out.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the minister why he requires in his department all these dictionaries that I find charged in the Auditor General's Report: Bescherelle French Dictionary, $20, Century Dictionary, $65.65, Webster's Dictionary, $8.95, total about $100 for dictionaries.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. A larger sum than that has been spent in the department for books. A certain amount is voted every year for the purchase of books.

Mr. TAYLOR. They have always been included in the amount for printing and stationery. I would like to know why he requires three dictionaries in his department.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. When I took office I found the library almost depleted, and as I thought I was entitled to have a few books to consult when necessary, whether in English or French, I purchased these books.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman placed a sum in the estimates for the purchase of a dictionary, no doubt the opposition would make no objection. But here we vote a certain amount of money and we don't know how it is expended. I find on the same page a charge for Larousse Petit Dictionnaire, $2.25 ; Lewes Acetylene, 3, $18.15. I presume that is in connection with acetylene gas for lighting lighthouses over the country, and favouring some gentlemen who have an interest in manufacturing acetylene products. Then I find 'Men of Canada,' $15. Why is this necessary for the hon. gentleman's library ? The vote of parliament is only for printing and stationery, but this is neither printing nor stationery. Why are these books necessary for running the Marine and Fisheries Department ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Because I wanted them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then here is another item that I would like the minister to explain. I find accounts for travelling expenses : Hon. J. R. F. Préfontaine, $437 ; Hon. J. Sutherland, $42.90. Then later on : cab-hire Hon. J. R. F. Préfontaine, $53.50 ; Hon. J. Sutherland, $8.50. I want to tell my hon. friend that when his friends were on this side of the House they condemned the government for paying the cab-hire, not alone of the junior ministers and of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but of the Prime Minister himself, the late lamented Sir John A. Macdonald. Because he spent a few dollars for cab-hire the opposition criticised the vote for half a day. Mr. Wilson, who is now in the Senate, opened the ball by saying :

Then there is an item here which perhaps the hon. First Minister will be able to explain, as the Auditor General's Report does not explain it sastisfactorily. We find charged here, travelling expenses of Sir John A. Macdonald, $364.59. Then comes cab-hire at Ottawa—Sir John A. Macdonald, $734.50 Sir John A. Macdonald, from May to June, $214.

Sir John A. Macdonald replied :

I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to wait until the Committee on Public Accounts sends for the vouchers, or gets an explanation why there are no vouchers. I certainly do not come here charged with explanations for vouchers for the employment of every cabman. All I can say about that is that I cannot afford to keep a horse, I am too old to walk, and as long as I hold my position, I think the hon. gentleman will have to submit to paying my cab fare.

Now the late Minister of Justice, the Hon. David Mills, had this to say about it :

I cannot say that I agree with the hon. gentleman that there should be no objection to cab-hire for the First Minister simply because he is the First Minister. That is wholly a new doctrine. I always supposed there was a sessional allowance granted to every member of this House, granted to the Prime Minister as well as to others, and he may use a portion of that sessional allowance to pay for his cab-hire precisely as he may use it for any other matter. If the House is of opinion that a different rule should be applied to the First Minister, the House ought to proceed regularly. There is no authority for the premier, any more than for any other member of this House, to come to the House in a cab and charge the cab-hire in the public accounts. He has no special position in that respect.

Mr. Mills is an authority for the doctrine that no cabinet minister has a right, any more than any private member of this House, to charge for cab-hire. This was the charge against Sir John A. Macdonald, and he was the only man of the government against whom Mr. Mills could bring a charge of making the country pay for his cab-hire. But look at the list now. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has in this account before us, for a portion of last year, a charge for cab-hire of $53.50, and for travelling expenses of $437. Why does not the same rule apply to him that Mr. Mills laid down for Sir John A. Macdonald? The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has his sessional indemnity, and he should put his hand in his own pocket and pay for his cab-hire. There is no law allowing him to charge these accounts to the country. Here is the highest authority stating that the Prime Minister, the late Sir John A. Macdonald, had no business to charge for cab-hire. In the 'Hansard' of 1889 you will find that the opposition spent hours criticising the late Sir John A. Macdonald with having misappropriated the funds of this country in charging for cab-hire. My hon. friend who has just stepped into the government cannot go down the street without calling a cab and sending the bill to the government. I certainly think that this ought to be put a stop to some way. If each of the cabinet ministers is going to have a bill of from $400 to $600 every year for cab-hire the government should introduce a bill authorizing them to do so legally because we have the statement of the late Mr. Mills, who was the Minister of Justice in this government, that it is contrary to law, that no cabinet minister has any more right to do this than any other member of the House. I would like the hon. gentleman to show me what authority he has for placing in the public accounts cab-hire to the amount of $53.50 for a portion of the year 1903-4 ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The same authority that existed in the time of Sir John Macdonald.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Mills says there is no authority for it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It appears that the hon. gentleman sustained the position taken by Sir John Macdonald.

Mr. TAYLOR. By the First Minister only. Some hon. gentlemen say there should be an exception in favour of the First Minister and so there should be. I will never by act or voice object to any charge made by the First Minister for cab-hire or for travelling expenses. With the exception of the hon. Minister of Customs every one of the ministers is guilty. This never was done by the late Conservative government as it is being done by this government notwithstanding the fact that the late Mr. Mills said it was contrary to law. I want the hon. gentleman to explain where he finds the authority, either by law or practice for any such charge being made except by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No doubt if it had been illegal the Auditor General would not have passed it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I submit that is an unsatisfactory explanation. I beg to move :

That the item be reduced by the sum of $53.50, being the cab-hire charged by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as shown in the Auditor General's Report of last year.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the vote is taken on this question I desire to say that there is a principle involved in this extending far beyond the amount that is named by my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who has just moved the reduction of the item. The principle is far reaching because what would apply to this department would apply to all the departments of government, and there is no doubt that this practice of charging up to the country items of personal expense by ministers which to my mind have no connection whatever with the department is a growing evil and is becoming a somewhat cumbersome matter to the country. I think it is time we had some understanding and that if the government desire to continue this practice which in bygone years they denounced as being wrong they ought to place some law on the statute book authorizing it and making it clear that they have the right to take this money out of the public treasury and apply it for their personal benefit. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has offered, to my mind, a very flimsy excuse indeed. He says that because it was allowed to the late Sir John Macdonald it ought to be allowed to all the ministers who have succeeded him. Sir John Macdonald said that he was old, that he could not afford to keep a horse, and that so long as the country required his services he thought they would be obliged to pay his cab-hire. I do not think the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will come down and make any such confession as that. He cannot say that he is too old to walk. I do not think that after the successful career he had in the municipal council of the city of Montreal and with the reputation he achieved, he will claim that he is too poor, and I think therefore that some better excuse should be offered than that which the hon. gentleman has offered for the charge that is here made. If you can apply it to cab-hire of course you can apply it to street car fare. We find that this is a growing item. More than that, you can apply it to the use of private cars, which, by the way, is becoming rather a serious charge. Although it is indirectly that the country pays for them there is no doubt that all these private cars, whether they go to Mexico, or wherever they go, are all paid for by the people of this country. It is done by exchange, an exchange which this country has to make good to the American roads when they desire it so that practically we are paying for all these junketing expeditions of the government whether on street cars, in cabs, or in private cars. I think it is time that some principle was laid down and that the people should know whether or not ministers have the right more than any other member of parliament to place their hands upon the public funds without the authority of law and appropriate them to their own personal benefit. I do not think it is a healthy state of affairs and it seems to me that it leads step by step along the line which eventually will bring about a very much more serious condition. I hope the hon. minister for his own sake will be able to offer some better justification for the taking of this money and applying it to his own private purposes than he has yet offered. I desire to say in reference to this pamphlet as it has been printed by the order of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the same courtesy should have been extended to every member of parliament and that it should have been sent to every member.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It has been.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not received a copy of it. I made careful inquiry in the post office and there was nothing there. I do not see why it should be given to one and not the other.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I persist in affirming that instructions were given when the pamphlet was issued in January, 1904, that copies should be sent to every member of parliament. I have no reason to doubt that the instructions were followed but I will inquire.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. minister send us some now ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. With pleasure.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like very much if the hon. minister would send me a copy.

Mr. LEFURGEY. In regard to this publication issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries I am sure that from the context from end to end we can call it nothing but a campaign sheet without the number on. It is simply a boast of what this government have done from 1895 to the present time. They take particular care that the comparison shall be between the years 1895 and 1903. They point things out just the same as they do in the campaign sheets which they issue and which are numbered 1, 2 and so forth, although they do not number this. There are a great many statistics in this pamphlet regarding the lighthouse service but I would like to point out to the hon. minister that we have a lighthouse down in Summerside which is a disgrace to any department or to any government. The foundation has been falling into decay for a number of years and at the present time it will hardly support the structure. It looks dingy. There have been a number of complaints sent to the department in regard to this lighthouse, or at least the press has been filled with pleas to the department to have this lighthouse attended to. On this occasion I would beg that the hon. minister will have his officers down on the island look into this matter and have the necessary repairs made.

I want the minister to tell me why it is that the fishing bounties have fallen off considerable since 1895 and 1896? I put a question on the order paper the other day, asking why the bounty was not paid to the lobster fishermen, and in the usual manner I was put off by being referred to the law on the question. That answer was neither a sufficient nor a fair answer, when I asked for the reason why the lobster fishermen did not share in the bounties the same as other fishermen. Let the minister now tell me why the policy is followed, by which the lobster fishermen are not included in the bounty. ?

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). From the Auditor General's Report of 1896 I find that the Hon. Geo. E. Foster was paid $120.75 for cab-hire. What is the use of saying that cab-hire was only paid to the Prime Minister of the Conservative government, when we find that the other ministers drew cab-hire just the same ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Your friends said it was wrong.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Never mind what my friends said. Speaking about campaign literature ; gentlemen opposite had better turn their attention to the kind of campaign literature they are circulating throughout the country. It reflects no credit upon themselves or on anybody else.

Mr. INGRAM. That is a question of judgment, and I cannot commend the hon. gentleman's judgment. I want to get from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries an explanation as to what extent his department has been enlarged by the recent changes.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I find that one year J. Thompson drew $251.25 and C. H. Tupper $119.25 for cab-hire. This shows that the other Conservative ministers drew cab-hire as well as Sir John Macdonald.

Mr. LEFURGEY.

Mr. INGRAM. When the Liberals were in opposition they condemned Conservatives for drawing cab-hire ; and if they are consistent, why do they themselves now draw large amounts for cab-hire ? Surely the hon. member for Victoria is not so dense that he cannot see the difference.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I am not so dense as the hon. gentleman thinks, but I have shown here that other ministers of the Conservative government, as well as the Prime Minister, drew cab-hire.

Mr. INGRAM. No person contended anything different.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) stated repeatedly that only Sir John Macdonald drew cab-hire, and not the other ministers.

Mr. SPROULE. What the member for Leeds said was that he would have no objection to the First Minister drawing cab-hire, but as the Liberals condemned it the other ministers should not draw cab-hire. The gravamen of the charge is that the highest authority in the Reform party, the Hon. David Mills, declared in this House that there was no legal authority for the First Minister or anybody else drawing money for cab-hire. The hon. member from Victoria (Mr. Ross) was a member of the Mackenzie cabinet with the Hon. David Mills, and he must know very well that if it was wrong then to draw cab-hire it is wrong now, because the law has not been changed since. The trouble with these gentlemen over there is that what they condemn in their opponents they justify when it is done by themselves.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The cab-hire drawn by the Minister of Marine was objected to, and the statement was made that only Sir John Macdonald drew cab-hire when the Conservatives were in power.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it right or wrong for the men now forming the cabinet to denounce this when they were in opposition and to practise it when they came to power? That is the point we are dealing with.

Mr. INGRAM. Let our conscientious friend from Victoria (Mr. Ross) answer that question.

Mr. HEYD. It strikes me that it is right always for a cabinet minister to engage a cab when it will facilitate public business.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it right for your friends to denounce it when they were in opposition and to do the same thing themselves when in power ?

Mr. HEYD. It is always right if it advances the public interest.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Rossî did not understand what I read from 'Hansard.' I will read some more of the debate in order to enlighten him :

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Judging from the way this account is made out, I should say this country, on a small scale at all events, is being humbugged by our Barnum minister—

That is the way he described the late lamented Sir John Macdonald.

—as much as the United States people are being humbugged by their Barnum. If the hon. the First Minister can be in two places at once, the people ought to know it. That this year there has been expended $728.15 for cab-hire for persons not named in the vouchers is a matter that requires as much explanation as this account. Therefore I cordially agree with the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) that this requires some explanation, and I can see from the happy mood in which the First Minister appears to be that he is just in the vein to explain it. I would be glad, for my own satisfaction and that of the people, if he would be kind enough to rise in his place and tell us how it is that he can by any possibility be riding in a cab at Ottawa while travelling in the car 'Jamaica' and making political speeches in Toronto, Welland and other places.

Then Sir John Macdonald replied and was followed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who last year, according to the Auditor General's Report, spent $300 for travelling expenses—I suppose to Hot Springs—and $496 for cab-hire ; and yet he was one of the parties who attacked the late Sir John Macdonald, then Prime Minister, for having employed a cab. Every member of this government except the Minister of Customs has a bill for cab-hire ; and some day we will perhaps divide the House on that matter. My hon. friend from Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Wm. Ross) certainly did not hear what I read as the opinion of the late Minister of Justice, the Hon. David Mills, who ought to be an authority for him and an example for every hon. gentleman on that side of the House to-day. If the Prime Minister of the Conservative government did spend some money for cab-hire, certainly this government, which is pure and just and upright, should not put their hands into the people's pockets and take money for cab-hire which the late Minister of Justice (Hon. David Mills) said should come out of their own pockets. Here is his opinion of it :

I cannot say I agree with the hon. gentleman that there should be no objection to cab-hire for the First Minister simply because he is the First Minister. That is wholly a new doctrine. I always supposed there was a sessional allowance granted to every member of this House, granted to the Prime Minister as well as to others, and he may use a portion of that sessional allowance to pay for his cab-hire precisely as he may use it for any other matter. If the House is of opinion that a different rule should be applied to the First Minister, the House ought to proceed regularly. There is no authority for the premier, any more than for any other member of this House, to come to the House in a cab and charge the cab-hire in the public accounts. He has no special position in that respect. My friend the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) is a member of this House and was at one time the Prime Minister. He had devolving upon him the important duties now devolving upon the First Minister. In consequnce of his assiduous application to those duties, he is scarcely able to get to his seat in this House, yet I do not find that the right hon. gentleman has made any provision to bring my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) here in a cab.

There is the opinion of the late Minister of Justice, the legal authority of the Liberal party of Canada, discussing the matter with reference only to the Prime Minister. No other minister was mentioned in the whole debate which then took place. It was an attack upon the Barnum of Canada, as they called the late-lamented Sir John A. Macdonald—that was the respect they paid to him—a man who did more to build up Canada and make it a nation than all those men put together who sit on that side of the House. These gentlemen were not too small to attack him and charge him with having mis-appropriated the public money, because he came to the House and went from the House at midnight in a cab. Poor old man, who died at a ripe old age, without a dollar in his pocket, after having governed this country for many years ! The poor old man said : 'I am too old to walk, and too poor to buy a horse'; and yet these gentlemen attacked him and charged him with having misappropriated the people's money. When these purists came into power, they said : 'We are going to do business on business principles and in an honest way' ; and yet every minister except the Minister of Customs charges his cab-hire to the people of this country. That is what I condemn. According to the Auditor General's Report, these hon. gentlemen spent in the year 1902-3 no less than $203,399.18 in travelling expenses, railways fares, cab-hire, tips and sundries—just for six departments. The ministers spent for travelling expenses $7,-477.84, for fares $475.92, for cab-hire $1,-061.10, and for sundries $45.60. The Labour Department spent for travelling expenses $3,891.55. The Justice Department spent for travelling expenses $4,658.42, and for cab-hire $116.33. The Marine and Fisheries Department spent for travelling expenses $8,473.85, and for cab-hire $58.60. The Department of Militia and Defence spent for travelling expenses $7,842.22, and for cab-hire $139.44. The Inland Revenue Department spent for travelling expenses $27.07, and for cab-hire $33.75. The Department of Indian Affairs spent for travelling expenses $827.71, for cab-hire $365.95, and for tips $39.90. The Department of Agriculture spent for travelling expenses $28,055.23.

Mr. FISHER. How many years does that cover—fifty ?

Mr. TAYLOR. It covers one year, according to the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FISHER. That is not correct. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will name a day when he is going into his estimates, I will give him the figures. I will give them to him now if he likes.

Mr. FISHER. Give them to me now—the travelling expenses of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not saying the minister. I am saying the department.

Mr. FISHER. Oh. That is another business.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman spent for travelling expenses in connection with his department $28,055.23 and for cab-hire $854.73, for tips $2, and for sundries—I do not know what they are—perhaps this was an for lemonade—$562.23. The Interior Department spent for travelling expenses $52,-811.49, for fares $473.95, for cab-hire $4,-097.05, and for sundries $99.27. The Public Works Department spent for travelling expenses $58,238.73, and for cab-hire $512.65. I have not worked out the details for the Department of Finance, Customs, Secretary of State, Railways and Canals, Privy Council, Printing and Stationery, Post Office, Mounted Police and Trade and Commerce ; but these seven departments which I have mentioned spent $203,399.18 of the people's money for travelling expenses in order that these gentlemen and their civil servants might go around the country ; and they spent in tips and sundries nearly $1,000—I suppose for lemonade and so forth. And yet, after reading what the late Hon. David Mills said, what authority have they for doing it ? There it is, nearly a quarter of a million of money. No wonder they want the revenue to flow in to keep up this state of affairs. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, though only a few months in office previous to the 1st of July, 1903, and though he is a young man and as able to walk as anybody, spent for cab-hire $58.60. That is the way the people's money is being wasted and then we are refused any information. The only reply we are given is that the other fellows did it and we are going to do it too.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not wish to take any credit not due to me. If there is no cab-hire charged against me, I suppose it is because my secretary paid it and included it in his travelling expenses. When I go on official business, I frequently hire a cab in order to keep my appointments ; and if cab-hire is not charged against me, it must be because it is charged in my private secretary's bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. We are talking of cab-hire here in Ottawa. Cab-hire out of Ottawa would be included in travelling expenses.

Mr. COCHRANE. I very well remember the late Sir John Macdonald being criticised for spending money in cab-hire, and his reply was that he was too old to walk and too poor to afford to keep a horse, and that as long as he remained in the position he had, he was afraid the country would have to pay his cab-hire ; but I am astonished that the hon. member from Victoria (Mr. Wm. Ross) an old Baldwin Reformer should plead that because the late government charged up cab-hire for the premier, the present government was justified in doing the same thing for the whole crowd. But as he and his party condenmed the late government, they are not justified in making the plea they do. Will the hon. gentleman tell me that when he appears before the great judge of us all, he will venture to plead that although he condemned certain things done by the late government, the present government are justified in doing the same thing because their predecessors set them the example. Is that the kind of reform doctrine we ought to expect from an old Baldwin Liberal ? You would think that these hon. gentlemen would be ashamed to do the same thing which they condemned in their predecessors, and not only that but spend hundreds of dollars more in the same way. Why, we have ministers now who cannot go down to a summer resort without a special car. We have a minister who, when he came to Ottawa, was well known not to be very rich, but where is he to-day ? He is living in a palatial residence in this city which cost him $20,000. He bought Corby's yacht, which was too expensive for Corby to run, and all the silver plate in it, and all that could not have cost less than $20,000 more. He cannot plead, as the late Sir John Macdonald did, that he is too old to walk and too poor to keep a horse, because he does keep a horse. I am not so penurious as to object to paying cab-hire of ministers, but what I object to is ministers getting into power under false pretenses and then doing exactly the same thing as their predecessors did, and pleading that as valid excuse I say they are doubly guilty.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I am afraid that the advice we are getting to-day was not very palatable to hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in office, because all this cab-hire and travelling expenses went on then as now.

Mr. COCHRANE. Not one-half as much.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Not only did the ministers then charge for cab-hire but in many cases their deputies were paid their cab-hire as well.

Mr. COCHRANE. And you said it was wrong.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I did not.

Mr. COCHRANE. But your party did and you are responsible.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I am only responsible for what I say myself and not for what my party do. I find that the travelling expenses of Sir John Thompson amounted to $1,486.67.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is not cab-hire.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Cab-hire at Ottawa $251.25

Mr. COCHRANE. The Minister of Trade and Commerce spent nearly $500.

Mr. FISHER. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about the Department of Agriculture. Well, I have just looked up the Auditor General's report and I find that that department was charged with cab-hire to the extent of $32. I take the hon. gentleman's statement that it was in Ottawa. I do not know, but I can say that on no occasion have I ever had cab-hire charged the government except when on government business, such as taking distinguished strangers out to the experimental farm.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a word about this celebrated pamphlet for which we are to pay. It is a reminder of 'Political pointers.' The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) laughs. He would not have regarded it in the same way had this been perpetrated by his political opponents when he was on this side of the House. It may be that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) has an ambition to fulfil the highest expectations of his leader the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as set out in this celebrated Order in Council which has been laid before us. As the doctrine laid down is a new one, and as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries seems to believe in it and tries to carry it out, it seems worth while to call attention to it. This Order in Council says :

> In the case of members of the cabinet, while all have an equal degree of responsibility in a constitutional sense, yet, in the practical working out of responsible government in a country of such vast extent as Canada, it is found necessary to attach a special responsibility to each minister for the public affairs of the provincial district with which he has close political connection.

I take it that the district with which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has such close political connection as to justify his getting out this pamphlet is the St. Lawrence route, and so he orders the preparation of this pamphlet by one of his subordinates and calls upon us to vote the money to pay for it.

> Mr. Fisher, while sharing with his colleagues that general responsibility already referred to, represents in a particular manner the eastern townships of the province of Quebec.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries represents in a particular manner the St. Lawrence route, I suppose, and it is, of course, proper in accordance with that principle, that he should get out some special report informing the world of what has been done in that locality under his charge. I presume he justifies this pamphlet on these lines. I wish to say a word also about the item mentioned by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor). That hon. gentleman takes exception to the expenditure of $90 for dictionaries for that department. As the ordinary dictionary costs about fifty cents, I suppose we may take this expenditure to mean that the department has bought 180 dictionaries. I would criticise this more severely were it not for the fact that some members of the cabinet cannot distinguish between a Scotchman and a 'foreigner.' I think dictionaries are needed by hon. gentlemen opposite in the interest of the country, and the more dictionaries they use the better. It may prevent the Minister of Marine and Fisheries falling into some such blunder, and the more he avoids such things the more it will be to his credit.

With regard to the item of travelling expenses, these expenses do not seem to end with travelling expenses. You have here cab-hire, tips, sundries, even payments for accident life insurance. We find the charge of $53 for tips for a single trip. These people are very liberal with what does not belong to them. We are told that Artemus Ward was willing to sacrifice all his wife's relations to the cause of the Union. These people seem to be quite ready to make themselves appear big men with the country's money. That reminds me of a story that is told about the great maritime province politican, Joseph Howe. One disagreeable night he reached a cozy hotel, where he found everything very comfortable. He found excellent stabling for his horse, and, while ordering a drink in the bar he complimented the landlady upon the way in which her hotel was managed. He threw down a five dollar gold piece. When she offered change, he refused to take it, but said, 'We will talk about that in the morning.' He was given a very nice supper. On this also he complimented the landlady, and, ordering another drink threw down another five dollar gold piece, again refusing to take change—saying that he was busy and did not want to trouble about that, that they would make it all right next day. The landlady was surprised and could not make out what kind of a man this was. The following morning he again complimented the landlady, telling her that he had had a splendid night's rest and a fine breakfast, and again threw down a five dollar gold piece, but still would not hear of receiving change. The landlady said, 'Who are you, any way ? I would like to know what kind of man you are.' 'Oh,' he said, 'We make our money easier that you do.' This does not cost me anything. I am the Honourable Joseph Howe and have access to the public treasury. Money does not cost me anything.' 'Well,' answered the landlady, 'I always knew that a Grit would steal, but I never knew before that he would give it away so liberally when he got it. Whether these gentlemen steal it or not, they seem to be quite willing to give it away liberally. Take the case of one subordinate officer, Mr. Frank Pedley, whom I have met many a time on the platform—a very genial, good natured soul. There is a charge from him of $233.04 for travelling expenses, including $75.25 for pullmans, and $35.25 for tips. Whether he has stolen it or not, he has become possessed of it in some way and he seems to be willing to give it away as easily as Joseph Howe. Now, I object to this because it sets an exceedingly bad example to the rising generation. It is the duty of the government to deal as economically with what belongs to the country as they would with their own funds. But, as long as the government regard it as proper to hand out public money in tips, travelling expenses, cab-hire, buying trunks for themselves, paying for accident insurance, and so on, we shall not have the economy exercised anywhere in the public service that we ought to have.

Mr. INGRAM. Hon. members on this side are not opposed to reasonable expenditure for cab-hire for the ministers. What we do object to is the statement by these hon. gentlemen before they came into power that, if given office they would abolish these things which they complained of as abuses before 1896. So far as I am concerned, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) for instance, has never been found fault with though he is carrying out a system that these hon. gentlemen condemned before 1896. He has been a long time in the service of the country, and has been unfortunate in the matter of health, and I, for one, would be sorry to object to any reasonable expenditure he may incur for cab-hire . The same would apply to the leader of the government and any other minister. If our party came into power, we would expect to spend reasonable sums in the same way, and I think the country should be willing to pay. But what we object to is that they are doing now that which they declared to be wrong and their only justification is that we, when in power did the same thing. I have a quotation in my hands of a speech made by a present minister of the Crown previous to 1896. Speaking to the electors in a certain part of the Dominion, he said :

You have the right to hold the politician to his pledge, just as much as you would the man of business.

The man who obtains goods from you under false pretenses is a cheat and swindler.

What should you call the men who obtain votes by means of pledges which they never intended to keep ?

I say again, if you are prepared to overlook these things then you have no right to ask for fidelity from any man who hereafter represents you.

Sir, it was the present Minister of Finance who said that. I know hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House do not deny that they have broken their pledges. They have no principles, they do not pretend to have any principles ; they are simply opportunists, and they take advantage of the public feeling in the country at the moment, regardless of whether it is in the interest of the country or not. They have violated every principle they claimed to hold up to the present moment, and for that reason I am justified in saying that they have no principle other than the principle of remaining in power. I remember distinctly in the matter of private cars when Conservative ministers were condemned for going from place to place in private cars. I am ready to say, as a member of the opposition, that I think a minister is justified in using a private car if it is in the interest of the country that he should do so in order to transact public business more expeditiously. If the Conservative party came into power to-morrow, I should be prepared to defend the government in a reasonable use of private cars. But as I said before, we are not now finding fault so much with the hon. gentlemen opposite for using private cars as we are for doing the same thing which they condemned the previous government for doing previous to 1896, and they are now afraid to stand up and admit that they were wrong then. Now with respect to the item we are discussing, I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to explain in what way his department has been enlarged, and what branch he has taken over from any other department.

Mr. LEFURGEY. A few moments ago, I put some questions to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to which I would like to get a reply, it was regarding the fishing bounty. I see in this campaign pamphlet—

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the minister declines to answer my question ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I cannot answer two questions at the same time. I will try to answer one after the other. The hon. gentleman has asked me why the amount paid for fishing bounties has diminished. Well, in the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for 1903, I find the following remarks made by the Commissioner of Fisheries :

During the year 1902 the fishermen of the maritime provinces received the sum of $159,853 as fisheries bounties on their respective catches of deep sea fish for that season. The owners and crews of 795 vessels received $71,079 of the above amount, while the balance, $88,774, was distributed amongst 20,229 boat fishermen. To cover these amounts, 12,723 claims were paid ; 91 were refused payment as being fraudulent. For the last season Nova Scotia received nearly double the amount of bounty distributed to all the other provinces, amounting to $100,455 ; Quebec received $36,125 ; New Brunswick, $14,-555, and Prince Edward Island, $8,716. Since its inception (1882) the sum of $3,315,966 has been distributed among the fishermen of the above-mentioned provinces to improve the development of their sea fisheries. The regulations governing the payment of such fishing bounties, as well as full particulars respecting their distribution, will be found in appendix number 2.

The same amount is always voted every year, but the amount distributed varies according to the catches. In 1901 the catches were the most numerous. As to the causes of the variations they depend on many circumstances. Sometimes the fishing season begins later and sometimes the weather is unusually stormy and various causes which cannot be controlled.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Would the minister tell me why this bounty is not given to the lobster fishing ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Because they are not included by the law. The fishing bounty is only paid to deep sea fishermen.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Would it not be well that the boat fishermen should participate in these bounties also ? The lobster fishermen are boat fishermen, and I cannot understand why they should not be paid also. I would invite the minister to bring this matter up in council and see if some relief cannot be given to these fishermen. I see no reason why they should be prevented from participating in these funds, while other boat fishermen throughout the maritime provinces do participate in them. The minister has shown a difference between the bounty paid in 1895 and that paid in 1896, saying that the catch was larger in one year. Well, I am aware of several cases where that principle has not been followed out. For instance, the lobster and oyster fisheries have been falling off simply because the service has not been sufficiently protected. I gave an instance the other day where the minister had departed from the Order in Council, refusing the grant of any new licenses and some new lobster canneries had got licenses in a place where the circumstances were absolutely at variance with the policy announced by the minister in that regard. Now, I find :

Of the many efforts made by the Dominion government to foster and promote the sea fisheries, the most recent, and in many respects, the most remarkable, is that of providing, under federal auspices, facilities for the storage and preservation of bait in refrigerators. The subject of cold storage for bait, and of fishery products generally, has for over twenty years engaged the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

He goes on to laud the policy of the present administration in regard to the bait grievance. Now about a month ago a newspaper was sent to me from a party down in Nova Scotia, giving some information about the bait freezers, and it would seem from this letter I find in the paper, that the bait freezers are not the unqualified success the minister would have us to understand. For the benefit of the minister, I will read this clipping, dated May 5, this year, and the committee also might like to hear it :

GOVERNMENT BAIT FREEZERS.

They are not the success which their promoters said they would be.

Although much has been said about what the Canadian government has been doing to enable fishing vessels to procure bait, scores of vessels are now in the harbour waiting for that article.

This was on May 5th of this year :

The Fisheries Department of the Canadian government has tackled the problem of a full and constant supply of bait in a manner at once inefficient and extravagant. Its actions in this connection have obviously been dictated by a desire to advance the interests of party rather than to promote the welfare of our fishermen. This is admitted, and regretted by all interested in the fisheries, irrespective of their political allegiance. Even Moses Nickerson, who was one of the first to advocate government encouragement to a cold storage system, has condemned the department's methods of establishing bait freezers on the coast.

As a number of fish merchants have for some years been operating bait freezers for their own purposes, the proper procedure would have been to hold out inducements to these men to extend their operations in this line, and to give a bonus not on the construction of freezers, but according to the amount of bait placed in them. This was the method advocated by practically all authorities on fishery matters.

The government, however, could not see its way to encouraging fish merchants to increase a legitimate line of business—probably because some of the more prominent men owning and operating bait freezers were not of the right political complexion. So it paid half the cost of twenty-four small bait freezers, which for very natural reasons have been of no practical benefit to the fishermen. The companies organized to take advantage of the government's bounty had no experience with cold storage plants and consequently some little error in construction or operation militated against their success. In one instance, a freezer was insulated with ordinary tar paper, and the bait and food fish placed therein became so impregnated with the odour of tar as to be completely spoiled, whereupon the officers of this particular company wrote to the Fisheries Department that they had lost $500 or so by the experiment, and that if the government did not make good their loss it would lose some valuable supporters in that constituency. A naive confession, doubtless, of the political creed of the 'Laurier and Préfontaine' Grits !

Not content with wasting $25,000 or more on the small freezers, the government has made arrangemnets to bonus the construction of a large freezer in Canso—to expend $30,000 or $40,000 to no purpose, except possibly to help its machine workers. The Canso Cold Storage Company, which will receive this government grant, proposes to supply the bank fleet with frozen bait. The prospectus of the company should be read by all fishing vessel owners and by all fishermen. With easy indifference to the rights of our fishermen, it shows how the franchise for $31,000, granted by the government to the Whitmans of Canso, to be exercised for the benefit of the bank fishermen, is to be converted into an instrument to promote the interests of a group of capitalists.

As matters stand at present, the hopes of the company, as foreshadowed by the prospectus, are not likely to dispose of 10,000 barrels of frozen squid to the bank fleet every season, and make a profit of $5 on every barrel. Our bank fishermen will buy squid direct from the catchers rather than from this company, because, while fresh and unfrozen squid will keep in their holds a week or more, bait taken out of cold storage decomposes in a few hours. The establishment of a large bait freezer at Canso cannot therefore, under present conditions, be of much benefit to our bank fishermen, though the promoters of this project will doubtless be well paid for their trouble by the government grant. In devising its latest cold storage scheme the department has ignored a factor necessary to success—that is the fitting of bank fishing vessels with cold storage plants. With a large supply of frozen bait at ports like Canso, fishing vessels provided with cold storage could utilize frozen bait effectively, and could carry on their operations with much less loss of time than now. These plants could be put in for $35 or $40 per vessel.

The cold storage plan is all right in principle ; and if worked out in a practical manner would no doubt be of great advantage to the fishermen. But the Department of Fisheries is anything but practical, and its efforts in this connection are only likely to increase the difficulties of the fishermen in procuring bait, owing to the fact that the large grant to the Canso Cold Storage Company will tend to enable that concern to acquire a monopoly of that commodity in the vicinity.

It is little wonder that Nova Scotia fish merchants are advocating the Scotch method of administering the fisheries ; that is, by a board of practical men, representing every branch of the fishing industry. In Scotland the board of fisheries is independent of politics, and is somewhat analogous to school boards in this province. The appointment of all officials under its control is determined by competitive examination, thus insuring the choice of the most experienced and best informed men. In Canada, where the only qualification for office under the department is a political pull, the majority of fishery officers can hardly distinguish one fish from another. As at present constituted, the Fishery Department is an easy mark for politicians, with theories and friends who need the public money in their business. Witness the work of Dr. Kendall. It was this politician who initiated the government bait cold storage scheme, and who, not content with wasting $25,000 in small freezers, fathered the scheme to put public money in the pockets of the Whitmans, of Canso. About three years ago Dr. Kendall, at the expense of the government, fitted up a Furness Line steamer with cold storage apparatus in order to test the possibility of shipping fresh lobsters to the United Kingdom. At the government's expense, Dr. Kendall sailed for England with a consignment of lobsters. At the end of three months, after taking a post graduate ccurse in London, the doctor returned to Canada, but though his excursion cost the government about $7,000, nobody seems to know whether or not it demonstrated anything of value to the lobster industry. A Halifax fish merchant informs me that he has repeatedly tried to procure a report of Dr. Kendall's experiment from the Fisheries Department, but without success.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Before the hon. gentleman lays that away, will he kindly give to the committee the name of the author of that document ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. This is a newspaper article taken from the Halifax 'Herald,' and it was sent up to me with the request that I should look into the matter.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Will the hon. gentleman say if the 'Herald' says so ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. This is headed 'Fishermen's Herald,' and it is taken from the Halifax 'Herald,' and as the Halifax 'Herald,' like all other good Conservative papers, is working in the interests of the fishermen and of other people in the maritime provinces, I have no doubt it does not publish matters that it is not cognizant of.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Will the hon. gentleman deny that this is the work of an anonymous correspondent ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will the hon. member for Cape Breton keep quiet until I am through, and then he can have his say ? Now, in the face of what the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has put into this pamphlet, I would respectfully submit that the article I have just read should be taken into the consideration of this House, and that an investigation should be made to ascertain whether this campaign pamphlet is right or whether the case as stated by the correspondent of the Halifax 'Herald' is right. There is no doubt that if the hon. minister cannot account in a better way for the money that is being expended in his department, he will be like the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that one of the cabinet ministers in the corridor last night asked : Well, how did the Minister of Agriculture get along ? The answer was : Oh, Well, he got leave to sit again. I am afraid that if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not give us a better explanation than he has he will have the same treatment meted out to him. He will have leave to sit again.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Mr. Chairman, will you permit me one word of explanation in regard to the subject matter before the committee? The article quoted by the hon gentleman is the work of an anonymous correspondent in the Halifax 'Herald.' I have some knowledge of the situation as regards the fisheries in my own constituency, and all I have to say to the hon. gentleman is that he will not get a reputable fisherman in Nova Scotia to vouch for the statements which he has quoted from an anonymous correspondent in the Halifax 'Herald.'

Mr. LEFURGEY. It does not make any difference in the world whether the correspondent is an anonymous one or not. If the hon. gentleman wants to turn up the article he can get the Halifax 'Herald' of May 5th and see it for himself, and I have no doubt that the Halifax 'Herald' will readily give the correspondent's name. But the main question is not whether this is an anonymous article. An article appearing in the public press in condemnatory terms of the work of the department on this line should certainly be called to the attention of this committee. The main question is whether this article is true or not. In the face of the campaign sheet issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and paid for by the people's money, claiming that the government are doing so much in the matter of cold storage for the deep-sea fishermen, it is interesting to read the statements made in this article published in the Halifax 'Herald.' The matter comes down to the question whether the article is true or not, and whether the hon. minister is not misrepresenting, as in the case of the numerous other campaign pamphlets that we find floating around the country.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he is prepared to say that any reputable fisherman in Nova Scotia is responsible for the article which he has quoted? It is insulting to the intelligence of this committee for the hon. gentleman to come here with an expression of opinion from a man who is both afraid and ashamed to give the people of this country his name.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I told you that the gentleman's name was appended to the article. If you want it you can have it, but you appear to be more anxious about the name than the truth of the statement that is made.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Give his name.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the statements are not true.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I say most emphatically they are not true.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the accusations brought against members of the government for their delinquencies, or rather for taking what does not belong to them according to their own version. What I wish to talk about principally is the condition of the St. Lawrence river, and for which the Minister of Marine is somewhat responsible. Although he has not been long in office he ought to know something about that river, for I believe he was raised at the head of navigation. It is his duty to see that that river of which we are all so proud should be made so as to be navigable without danger. He is aware that last Sunday morning an accident happened near Lake St. Peter by which a number of valuable lives were lost. I happened to be in Montreal last Sunday, and some of the officers on the Atlantic liners told me that they would not be surprised if many more accidents should take place. It was pointed out to me that nothing but pieces of white board scantlings stuck up in the river, were the guides for navigation. When I came up the river 17 years ago, we had green boughs along Lake St. Peter.

Mr. BENNETT. It was Palm Sunday.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Of course that was not under the present ministry, but I do hope that the St. Lawrence river will be put in such a position that vessels will not be subject to be wrecked. It would not have occurred and should not if proper lighthouses were in that river; so I am told. I may say that it would not cost as much to put electric lights all along down the sides of that river, as would the loss of one of these large steamers. The question discussed this afternoon is whether the members of the government have the right to charge their cab-hire. According to their own showing they have no right, and they have been in power for eight years and have not made a law which would give them that right. Don't let this session pass without making a law under which a man who is working in the interests of this country will not be compelled to walk from station to station, or even from his home if he is an elderly person, without having his cab-hire paid. But let us have it legally done. It is said:

> He that takes what isn't his'n
> If he's caught he goes to prison.

These people who take what isn't their own leave themselves open to the law, and the ministers should not be in that position. Let them make a law at once so that a cabinet minister in the discharge of his duty, or deputy minister either, shall be allowed cab-hire legally. But, when it comes to life insurance it seems to me that we poor —I was going to use a strong word—have to insure our own lives, and so should the members of the government. They should pay their own insurance out of their salaries and not expect the country to pay it for them. And as regads 'tips;' if they think that the poor people who pay the taxes feel warm hearted enough let them pay the 'tips' out of their own pockets. I don't think that the poor people who pay the taxes of Canada, should pay 'tips' for a man who is drawing $7,000 a year. I want this government to make a law now, so that when the independent party comes into power, and that won't be long, we will be able to pay the cab-hire legally. If the government does not make it a law legalizing this cab-hire, the responsibility for wrongful charges rests upon them.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I wish to state to the hon. gentleman that he has been greatly deceived by what has been told him in reference to the accident last Sunday. The facts were misrepresented to him. The St. Lawrence from Sorel to Montreal is the best lighted part of the channel; there are gas buoys on both sides of the channel, and the accident was entirely due to a mistake by one or the other of the pilots, and had nothing to do with the channel in any shape or way. If we had lights every ten feet it could not prevent an accident when one or the other of the pilots makes a serious if not a criminal blunder. This is not the time, nor the place to discuss this question, because this important investigation, although ordered, has scarcely begun, and will not be finished for some days, until the commissioner can get the witnesses before him, when the ss. 'Cape Breton' returns from Sydney. I can promise the House that there will be a thorough and complete investigation into this casualty, which I repeat is not due to the river channel, because at that point there is certainly over a mile and a half of channel with from 15 to 40 feet of water. I do not wish the statement to go abroad without being contradicted, that this part of the channel is not in proper condition.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I would be very sorry indeed to say anything that is not strictly correct.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not mean to say that the hon. gentleman would make the statement unless it were made to him, but I certainly do think that somebody misrepresented the facts. It is well known to every one that at that part of the channel the aids to navigation are perfect.

Mr. INGRAM. Who is responsible for the proper signal lights on a vessel?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The rule of the road regulates that. I do not want to prejudice the case in any way, but certainly a mistake has been made and the investigation will show who is responsible. The rules of the road were not carried out by some one of the officers.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister is quite right in saying that we should not prejudge the case, but it is stated that the accident occurred because of an insufficient signal light. Who is responsible for that?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The accident must have happened through an error of judgment on the part of one of the officers as to the distance between the two steamers and as to the speeed with which the 'Cape Breton' was going down. She had just lifted anchor and was steaming down. Probably one or other of the officers did not correctly calculate the swiftness of the current.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that one of the vessels gave the signal to pass by the left, and the other passed to the right, which of course meant a collision, and that one of the vessels blew the whistle a second time to indicate that it was determined to take the left side.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Of course, I will not discuss the matter at present, as it might prejudice the case of one party or the otner. It appears clear that one of the boats was within its rights.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries why the buoys have not been placed in the Napanee river this spring?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There has been some delay, but they are being placed now. There have been delays in many places this spring owing to the high water and the difficulty of reaching the points where the buoys are usually placed. That is the information I have from the department.

Mr. WILSON. I think there are other reasons. One man has been attending to this business for many years, and he only got $60 for doing it; and my information is that he has been informed that a vessel is to be sent up to place these buoys. If that is the case, the work cannot be done for double that amount of money. Besides, I think it desirable that the man who attends to them should live in the town of Napanee. I understand that there has been some difficulty with the minister as to the contract for keeping the buoys. I would like to know what the contract means—if it is not for placing them in the spring, looking after them during the summer and taking them out during the fall?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will look over the contract and see.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to have all the information in reference to this matter. I may say that the contract is dated in July, and I understand that the department expected that this man would put the buoys out this spring. He was instructed in April last year to place the buoys, and the contract would be sent up to him to be signed. I understand that the department expected him to place the buoys in the river this spring as part of the contract, which would be doing a year and a half's work for one year's pay. I would like to know how soon the minister will give me the information.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. To-morrow. I will send it to the hon. gentleman by mail.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The minister remarked that the portion of the river from Sorel to Montreal is the best lighted. How many gas buoys are in that distance on each side of the river, and how far are they apart ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will lay on the table of the House a chart, showing the position and the number of buoys, with all the explanations.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume that the minister is prepared to give some explanation to the House and the country in reference to the pilots and officers generally in travelling up and down the St. Lawrence. The cattle shipped by that route come largely from the province of Ontario, and the freight rates have been very largely increased ; and I presume the minister will be prepared, either now or at some later time, when I intend to bring the matter up more definitely, to explain what is the training and qualification of these pilots, and what system he intends to adopt so that they will know something about the business. They do not seem to know much about it now.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope the hon. gentleman will also give a report of the number of lighthouse-keepers on the St. Lawrence whom he has dismissed on one or two months' notice. Some of them have been doing service for fifteen or twenty years. I understand that the hon. gentleman, shortly after assuming office, went into an arrangement for using acetylene gas, that he has large works in Prescott for making the tanks for holding the gas, and a large steamer for delivering them at the points where the lighthouses are, and that this steamer is to move around and look after the lights in place of the men who have been faithful servants for many years, and who have been simply told that their services are dispensed with. I would not object to the change if it were going to effect economy ; but in my opinion it is not, but on the contrary, it will double the expense of every lighthouse on the St. Lawrence west of Montreal. There is the expense of a hundred men employed at Prescott building the tanks, the expense of purchasing carbide, which is made here in Ottawa, and in which one of the ministers, I understand, is a large stock-holder. I do not know whether another of the ministers is interested in the works at Prescott, which were formerly in Morrisburg, or not ; but the whole thing appears to me to be a big job, while the poor men who have been serving the country for years have been told to go on a month's or two months' notice, and without any retiring allowance except a couple of months added to their salaries. I put a question on the paper some time ago in reference to two men at Gananoque, and the minister replied that they had been fourteen years in the service, that their services had been dispensed with, and that it was not the intention of the government to give them any further remuneration than two or three months' salary. I think that is treating faithful servants unfairly. If it were going to save the country expense and give better lights, there might be some excuse for it ; but I do not think it will. I would like the hon. gentleman to bring down a full detailed statement, showing how many employees between Montreal and Toronto have been dispensed with, the number yet in the service, what moneys, if any, have been paid to them, if it is the expectation of the government to make any saving in the annual cost of keeping the lights, and if so, how much, from whom they are purchasing the carbide, and who are the shareholders in the companies that sell the government the carbide and other supplies.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will not undertake to give a list of the shareholders in private companies. All the other information I will be glad to furnish the hon. gentleman. I may say that the change from coal oil to acetylene gas was inaugurated by my predecessor on the recommendation of the officer in charge of this part of the department. Up to the present the change has worked very satisfactorily. We will be obliged to cease employing certain lighthouse keepers, but most of these lighthouse keepers complain that they are not paid enough. Most of them are applying every week and month for increases of salary, so that really I do not know that the case is one of very great hardship. There may be hardship in one or two cases, but I have not been made aware of any special case.

Mr. TAYLOR. What officer recommended the change from coal oil to acetylene ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Fraser, who is the commissioner of lights at present.

Mr. TAYLOR. When was he appointed ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About ten years ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. As commissioner of lights?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, he was in charge of the lights when I made the change.

Mr. TAYLOR. Surely the hon. gentleman has read in the newspapers of the numerous explosions and accidents all over the country from the use of acetylene gas. The hon. minister is taking a great risk in going to the expense of making changes without thoroughly testing the lights.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That has been done by the department and there has never been any accident.

Mr. TAYLOR. All over the country every month you read of explosions in churches—

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have nothing to do with churches.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think any one would ever accuse the hon. minister of having anything to do with churches. But we read of accidents in churches and school houses through the use of acetylene gas.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not the kind of gas we use.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked my hon. friend to give me the names of the parties who supplied the acetylene gas, and he said he would not give the names of private companies.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman asked me for a list of the shareholders and I said I could not give that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will he give the names of the companies that supply the carbide ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the contract price ? Then the people can draw their own conclusions as to whether a minister of the Crown is interested in one of the companies or not. I understand that a minister of the government is a member of the company which has the contract to supply the carbide for all these lighthouses.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not aware of it.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Coming back to the question of bounties, I understand that the money comes from the fishery award.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no such thing in the law. The law regarding bounties does not refer to the award. That question is being discussed with regard to a settlement between the provinces and the Dominion.

Mr. LEFURGEY. In looking up 'Hansard,' in the discussion on the appropriation of the interest from this fishery award, Sir Leonard Tilley said that the interest was being paid over in bounties to the fishermen.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not denying that, but there is nothing in the law that refers to the fishery award.

Mr. LEFURGEY. He said further that if this money were handed over to the provinces, the Dominion would be under no obligation to pay a bounty to the fishermen. I understand that the government is contemplating distributing the money to the provinces in regular proportion. The hon. minister shakes his head. Looking up the files of the Charlottetown papers, I find that the hon. Mr. Peters, First Minister, has stated that the matter was practically settled, that the legal claim of Prince Edward Island to a just proportion of this award was acknowledged by the authorities at Otttawa and that an arbitration would be held to fix the amount. From the reports in the newspaper one would understand that this government has practically decided to arbitrate the matter and apportion the money among the different provinces. In the event of that taking place, and if the government take the view which was held in 1882 by the gentlemen who were then administering the affairs of this country, namely, that the bounties are paid out of the interest accruing from the fishery award, our fishermen will receive no further bounty. Can the hon. minister tell us authoritatively what will be the position of the fishermen in regard to the bounty provided the amount of the award is divided among the provinces to pay for the debts which our provincial Liberal administrations have been running up during the past ten years ? In Prince Edward Island, there is a government debt of over a million dollars ; and if the money from the fishery award be handed over to the Liberal administration there to pay for the extravagant debts, they have been running up for the last ten years, where will our fishermen come in ?

Mr. HACKETT. The fishing bounty is a very important matter to the people of Prince Edward Island. I was a member of this House when this legislation was introduced to pay the fishermen a bounty, and a few days ago, on the 13th of June, I find the following question on the order paper ;

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. On what principle are bounties paid to fishermen in the maritime provinces ?

2. Why are not fishermen engaged in the lobster fishery allowed to participate in the bounty, as well as those employed in other branches of this industry ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The bounties are distributed in accordance with the statute passed in that behalf.

Perhaps the hon. minister will be able to place before the committee the statute on which that bounty is based.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think it is the statute of 1888. I will send for it.

Mr. HACKETT. While waiting for the statute, might I ask the hon. gentleman if there is a steamer employed in planting oysters in the maritime provinces, and is Mr. Kemp, who was formerly in the service of the government, still in the service of the government ? What amount of money did that service cost last year, and what kind of oysters are being propagated ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman will find in the Fisheries Report, on pages 258 to 262, answers to all the questions he has asked with reference to the culture of oysters.

Mr. HACKETT. I find that the production of oysters in 1895 was valued at $192,000, while in 1901 the production had fallen in value to $173,000—quite a large falling off. This is in the maritime provinces, and I take the figures from a pamphlet issued by the hon. gentleman. I want to know what this Mr. Kemp is doing, whether he is travelling around the shores of this country in a steamer at the expense of the public without giving any result.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman will find in the report of the Fisheries Department, page 105, all the information he asks concerning oyster culture and the reason of the falling off. The details are all given, province by province. There is also an appendix, No. 5, page 139, in which the hon. gentleman will find a statement by the inspector.

Mr. HACKETT. Would the hon. minister say what results have been obtained from oyster culture in the Murray river ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed they are giving the best results.

Mr. HACKETT. How many years since were these small oysters planted ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About three years ago.

Mr. HACKETT. Have there been any oysters exported yet ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not yet.

Mr. HACKETT. How long does the hon. minister intend to continue this planting before he thinks the people may derive some revenue from it ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We have a special inspector over that business, and we will be guided by him in this matter.

Mr. HACKETT. What results have come from the work at Shediac, New Brunswick ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The results have been very good there also.

Mr. HACKETT. In what way have the results been good ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Our inspector has sent reports upon the work, we have seen the oysters, and have received them.

Mr. HACKETT. I remember when, some years ago, the oysters were totally exterminated on the Shediac. Can the hon. gentleman say that oysters have increased on the Shediac river, and to what extent? This work was begun on the Shediac ten years ago, and we should have some good results by this time.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The results are good, as I have stated.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

WEST CANADIAN COLLIERIES, LIMITED.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 80) respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. OLIVER. There are some amendments which have been agreed to. The Bill, you will remember, Mr. Chairman, was left by the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Minister of Justice in regard to certain points that were raised. I understand that the Department of Justice has considered these points and that an agreement has been arrived at. I have not the amendments in hand, however, and I suppose the only course will be for the Bill to be referred back to the Committee on Private Bills.

Progress reported.

Mr. OLIVER moved that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

PATENTS OF SIEGFRIED GIRONCOLI.

House went into Committee on Bill (No. 126) respecting certain patents of Siegfried Gironcoli.—Mr. MacKinnon.

Mr. HAGGART. Were any amendments made in the Private Bills Committee ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. Those amendments can be explained by the promoter of the Bill.

An hon. MEMBER. They can be explained as we come to them.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think we ought to have an explanation as to the general scope of the Bill. So far as I know it has not been discussed. I do not think the House ought to consider the amendments until we have some reason given why the Bill is required at all. The Bill is not a usual one, and I think the hon. gentleman in charge of it should give some explanation.

Mr. MACKINNON. The object of the Bill is simply to revive a patent the term of which expired and which thus became void. The patent expired without the knowledge of the patentee. He lives at a distance—in Austria—and was for a time ill, so ill that he was not able to attend to his business. When he recovered his health, he found that the patent had expired.

Mr. HAGGART. How long is it since the patent lapsed ?

Mr. MACKINNON. Only a few months.

On section 1,

Mr. MACKINNON. The object of the amendment made to this section by the Private Bills Committee is simple. It is to limit the time within which the order provided for in this Bill may be granted. If the necessary steps are not taken in six months the order provided for is not to be granted.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are all rights acquired by other parties safeguarded ?

Mr. MACKINNON. Yes, that is provided for in the last clause.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

KINGSTON AND DOMINION CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 123) to incorporate the Kingston and Dominion Central Railway Company.—Mr. Harty.

On section 7,

Mr. HAGGART. This is an extraordinary direction for a railway to run, from Kingston to Newboro, thence to Westport and from Westport to the Georgian bay between Parry Sound and Midland. I think this Bill covers a charter at present held by the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.

Mr. SPROULE. It covers a portion of the same ground.

Mr. HARTY. The reason for running the line from Kingston to Newboro is that the line shall run through 17,000 odd acres of mineral land which the promoters possess in that territory.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this not cover the ground of the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company who have a charter for an extension of their line to Parry Sound ?

Mr. HARTY. I believe they have but there is a considerable mileage between the locations of the two railways.

Mr. SPROULE. It covers part of the ground near Newboro.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 129) respecting certain patents of Edwin R. Cahoone.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 130) respecting the Huron and Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Wm. Ross.

Mr. MACKINNON.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. At six o'clock the committee was considering item 16 and the amendment of Mr. Taylor thereto.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Mr. Chairman, shortly before the committee rose I was speaking about the bounty question and I asked the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) some questions relative to the payment of the bounty should arrangement be brought about for the distribution of the fishery award among the several provinces. The hon. gentleman seemed to be at some doubt as to whether the fishery bounty to the fishermen would lapse provided such an arrangement were come to and the provinces took charge of the money as apportioned to them by arbitration or otherwise. I asked a question on June 13th in regard to the fishing bounties as follows :

1. On what principle are bounties paid to fishermen in the maritime provinces ?
2. Why are not fishermen engaged in the lobster fishery allowed to participate in the bounty, as well as those employed in other branches of this industry ?

As I remarked before I got a very unsatisfactory answer from the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who said :

The bounties are distributed in accordance with the statute passed in that behalf.

This was not a very satisfactory answer for the right hon. First Minister to give to a question of that kind. At least he might have referred to the statute and stated where we could find the information. I find by turning up the statute passed on May 17, 1882, that the right hon. First Minister was wrong in saying that the bounties were distributed according to the statute. I have here 'An Act to authorize an annual grant for the development of the sea fisheries and the encouraging of the building of fishing vessels.'

The preamble reads as follows :

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, enacts as follows :

1. It shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to authorize the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, of an annual grant not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as an aid in the development of the sea fisheries of Canada, and the encouragement of the building and fitting out of improved fishing vessels, and the improvement of the condition of the fishermen ; such grant to be appropriated for the said purposes under orders to be made from time to time by the Governor in Council, and at such times and by such instalments in each year as he shall direct by such orders.

I have looked over the volume containing the Orders in Council for 1882 and the succeeding year and I can find no Orders in Council on this subject nor do I believe it is customary for the Department of Marine and Fisheries—

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to refer him to page 15 of the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for 1903 ? He will find the whole of the statistics concerning the payment of the fishery bounty and showing how the fishery bounty has been paid since 1882 to this day.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am referring to the manner in which the right hon. Prime Minister answered my question. He told me to refer to the statute.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman had looked at the report he would have seen how the bounty has been paid.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When I ask for information I am supposed to get proper information and proper courtesy from the other side of the House.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman is not supposed to read ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Well, I only want to be accorded fair treatment and when I ask a question in a proper manner I suppose that proper courtesy shall be shown me in answering that question. I find that there is no statute regulating the payment of this bounty. I can find no Order in Council in this book although the bounties were paid ; but the second paragraph of the Act says :

2. A statement shall be laid before both Houses of parliament within the first twenty days of next session, of the mode in which the said grant shall have been expended, together with copies of all Orders in Council relating to such grant and expenditure ; and during the same session and each session thereafter, a statement shall be laid before both houses of parliament, of the mode in which it is proposed to distribute the grant in the ensuing year, and the assent of parliament shall be obtained thereto.

Now, I do not think the government has complied with that law. Did the Department of Marine and Fisheries within twenty days of the opening of parliament lay on the table of the House a statement as to the mode in which next year's bounty was going to be distributed, as the law requres.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. How can I tell beforehand ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. You can make an estimate, the same as you do for the other services of your department and according to this statute you are obliged to do it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It appears in the departmental report which is laid before the House.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That report tells how last year's money was distributed, but it says nothing about the ensuing year, and you have not complied with the law. I asked the minister why the lobster fishermen did not participate in the bounty, and I got no satisfactory answer. There is nothing in this Act to prevent the lobster fishermen sharing in the bounty the same as other fishermen, and the government can pass an Order in Council at any time to allow them to participate. I strongly urge on behalf of the lobster fishermen of Prince Edward Island that they should get a share in the bounty. The lobster fisheries have not been so lucrative of late years as they formerly were, and those engaged in the industry are entitled to their share of this bounty. There is another question I want to ask the hon. minister. In the event of the $4,500,000 of the fishery award being given to the provinces, and when Prince Edward Island gets its share to be utilized probably in wiping off the debt of over three-quarters of a million dollars incurred by the extravagance of Liberal administrations, and especially by the present administration during the past ten years ; are the fishermen of the province to continue to receive the bounty ? I asked this question before, and I was told by the minister that this had nothing to do with the matter, but I find on page 1512 of 'Hansard' for 1882, that when Sir Leonard Tilley was introducing this Act, he stated :

It was also considered that the interest on the $4,500,000 awarded by the Fishery Commission should be distributed among the fishermen who, under its operation, had been compelled to give up the advantage of having access to the American market for their fish. We hope, within the next month or so, to be able to pass the Order in Council based upon this resolution, to an extent that will very likely be about the $150,000 asked for.

It was the declared intention of the government at that time, that the fishery bounty was to be granted from the interest accruing on that $4,500,000, and now, if that money is to be paid to the provinces, I would like to have an assurance from the government as to what will be the position of the fishermen with regard to the bounty.

Mr. MACKINNON. I wish to make a remark or two on the subject brought before the House by my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey). I hope his object is not to stir up the fishermen on the island, into believing that the bounty will be done away with. Of course the Minister of Marine does not know until the question is decided by the proper tribunal, whether the Dominion government will have to give this money to the provinces or be allowed to retain it. When that point is settled it will be plenty of time to decide whether the Dominion government shall continue to pay the bounty or not.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Not at all.

Mr. MACKINNON. The fishermen have the assurance of the premier of Prince Edward Island, that in the event of the money being given to the province, and if, the Dominion government does not continue to pay the bounty, then the provincial government will pay the same sum that is now received by the fishermen of the province. That amount will be paid at any rate, and the fishermen are quite satisfied on that score.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We will have to wait and see if they are.

Mr. MACKINNON. We will have to wait until the question is decided. This is a question in reference to which legal authorities have held different opinions ever since the fishery award was paid. The late Minister of Justice took strong ground, that the money belonged to the provinces, and Mr. Dickey, who was Minister of Justice in the Conservative government, also held the same view. The question is open to argument. After it is decided it will be time for the Dominion government to consider whether or not they will continue to pay the bounties to the fishermen. There is one suggestion which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) makes, and in reference to which I am in entire accord with him. I believe strongly that bounties should be paid to the lobster fishermen in certain cases. In the earlier days, the lobster fishermen did not receive bounties because the boats in which they fished were generally owned by the lobster packers, and they made a good deal of money out of the business. However, at the present day a great number of the lobster fishermen own their own boats, and as the lobster fishery is not so remunerative as formerly the bounty would help them a great deal. The suggestion of the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) is well worthy the consideration of the minister, and especially so when we find that the payments made to the fishermen of Prince Edward Island, as compared with those made to the fishermen of Nova Scotia, are very small indeed. It has been small for the last twenty or thirty years. I would like the minister to consider that aspect of the matter.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am not in accord with the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. MacKinnon), for I think we are entitled to know what position the fishermen of Prince Edward Island will be in if this distribution of the money should be made. Being somewhat familiar with the financial position of Prince Edward Island, and the obligations we are under already, I can readily see that if this money is paid over to the provincial government, it will be used to wipe out a matter of $1,000,000 which has already been run up and is increasing at the rate of from $25,000 to $50,000 a year; and if the fishermen in Prince Edward Island have to depend upon the Liberal administration to carry on the affairs of Prince Edward Island without a deficit, and to leave an amount over for the payment of the bounties which we want extended to the lobster fishermen, they will come out at the short end of the horn; and I consider that we have a right to a statement from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on this occasion as to the exact position this question is in before the government. I know that the representatives of the different provinces have been here on three or four occasions, and I have it on very good authority that an arbitration is to be held to decide the share to which each province is entitled. The hon. minister shakes his head. Would he be good enough, then, without my plying him with questions, to make a statement as to what stage this matter has reached?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no statement to be made, because nothing has been done yet.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. minister state positively that nothing has been done between the premiers of the different provinces?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There have been negotiations, but no conclusions have been arrrived at.

Mr. HACKETT. I have seen it stated in a Prince Edward Island newspaper that the premier of that province, Mr. Peters, on his return from Ottawa a few days ago, made the statement that the matter was to be submitted to the Privy Council for adjudication, and that in the event of the Privy Council deciding that the fishery award was the property of the provinces, an arbitration would be held to apportion it. Has the matter gone that far? What has been done in that respect?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Negotiations have been pending since 1899, I think, but no conclusion has been arrived at.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I may say to the hon. minister that the premier of Prince Edward Island, when he was up here the last time, told me that arrangements had been completed for the settlement of this question.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I suppose he knew.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will the hon. minister tell me, then, what position the bounty would be in, in the event of the distribution of this money to the provinces? Is the hon. minister prepared to state that the taking of this money out of the hands of the Dominion government would not annul the payment of the bounties to the fishermen?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not prepared, as I stated just now, to make any statement whatever until the matter is settled or agreed upon.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am glad the hon. minister has withdrawn from the position which he took before six o'clock. At that time he seemed to be quite sure that this bounty would be paid to the fishermen anyhow.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not state anything of the sort. He probably misunderstood my bad English. Another time, when I have to make a statement, I will make it in French, and I shall probably be understood.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understood the hon. minister in English very well.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a distant recollection of the discussions which took place over this fishing bounty several years ago. The question was whether the money would be divided among the different provinces according to what each was entitled to, or would be funded and the interest on it paid out to the fishermen from year to year. The contention was set up that if the money were divided, it would be disposed of just as the hon. member says it is intended to dispose of it in the future. It was decided, after long conferences, that it was better to retain it in one fund, and distribute the interest by way of bounty to the fishermen, from year to year, and I think a statute was passed carrying out that intention. Therefore, I take it that no change can be made until that Act is repealed, or until the courts decide that the money should be given to the provinces separately.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Speaking on behalf of the province of Nova Scotia, I may say that it is not desirous of making any change, but is quite satisfied with the system of bounty given to the fishermen at the present time. I am certainly in favour of the bounty being extended to the lobster fishermen, and I do not see any valid reason why that should not be done.

Mr. KAULBACH. I can endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Wm. Ross) as far as they have gone, but with regard to what my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said, while he has some knowledge of the subject, I regret that he has not that accurate and extended information we would desire.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not pretend to be accurate, because I was speaking from memory.

Mr. KAULBACH. The hon. gentleman was in the House representing the county he now represents at the time that legislation was passed, and I remember right well the then Minister of Finance, Sir Leonard Tilley, being strongly urged by myself and others to give this bounty to fishermen because they had become so numerous that their business was not sufficiently remunerative and in consequence were migrating to the United States. We urged that, in order to prevent this, they should be encouraged to prosecute the deep sea fishing and the government of that day acceded to our representations. It was also considered that the giving of a bounty would not only so encourage the prosecution of deep sea fishing, but also the industry of shipbuilding and in this way keep a large number of our mechanics at home as well. But while I endorse the views of my hon. friend from Victoria, I am of the opinion that the government should increase the bounty and give the lobster fishermen a share in it also. These fishermen (the deep seamen) are not getting the reward from their industry which they used to enjoy in the past, and the result has been that many of them have gone to the United States to seek for labour in other avocations. To counteract that tendency, I think the government should increase the bounty and include the lobster fishermen among those entitled to share in it. I understand that the amount of $4,500,000 was in the exchequer of this Dominion for some time before any action was taken to give our fishermen a portion of that money in the shape of interest. It would, I believe, be most unwise for this government to hand over that money to the provinces for the reason that in that case it would go into other channels and the fishermen would not have that security with regard to the payment of their bounty which they enjoy at present, whilst the capital sum is funded in the Dominion treasury. I would therefore ask the government to let the matter rest as it is. I was under the impression that it was settled in 1882 with the consent of the respective maritime provinces. I understood that the provinces agreed that this money should remain in the hands of the federal government and not paid over to the provinces, and only the interest on it paid out to the fishermen in the shape of a bounty. I think, now that the fishermen are increasing in numbers, that the amount of the bounty should be increased so that the apportionment meted out to each fisherman would be the same as in years gone by. During the past year the amount was somewhat less than in the previous year.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Not less to boatmen—a little more to boatmen.

Mr. KAULBACH. The apportionment was less to the fishermen as a whole than in the previous year. I would strongly urge the Minister of Marine to allow the matter to rest and not put it in the hands of parties who knew very little about the situation and the needs as respects the fishermen. Let this amount remain where it is and give the increased number of fishermen an increased amount from the exchequer, so that the payment to each man would be the same as in the past and in order that the lobster fishermen might also receive a share in the increased amount of bounty so granted.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is giving us another evidence, of which we have a good many, of the disposition of hon. gentlemen opposite to complain of our expenditures in a general way, and then to argue in favour of increased expenditure whenever we come to details. I am not blaming them on that ground, but I am merely pointing out that when every session they blame us for spending too much, they cannot be very serious. With regard to the lobster fishermen, I think I have stated already that I represent more lobsters in this House than perhaps any member in it. It is a great interest in my constituency, and I should be as anxious as any hon. gentleman to see that the benefits of the bounty are extended to lobster fishermen as well as others. But after all there must have been good reasons some twenty years ago why the grant was not extended to the lobster fishermen. It has never been extended to that branch of the fishing industry and the desirability of doing so was never raised.

Mr. SPROULE. It was then held that as the award arose out of our deep sea fisheries, it was the deep sea fishermen who should get the benefit.

Mr. FIELDING. At all events, we have had twenty-two years' experience of that system; and if the payment is to be extended to the lobster fishermen, the result will be that the amounts to the other fishermen must be reduced. If the expenditure was based, as I believe it was, upon the amount of the award, I fancy it would be difficult to make out a good case for increasing the amount. I am not saying 'No' to it at this time. I represent a fishing county, and, naturally, I share the desire of my hon. friend to do the best that is possible for our lobster fishing interest. Still I think it is fair to recognize the fact that the payment was based upon the amount of the fishery award, and represents the interest upon it; and, while we would have a good case to ask for a reapportionment of the interest, if that were required, we might not so easily be able to make out a case for an increase. I am not passing a judgment upon it now. I would like to see the lobster fishermen of my county, who are numerous, get the benefit, but I recognize the fact that our case would not be so strong now as if it had been taken up in this way twenty-two years ago. To make payments to the lobster fishermen and so reduce the amount to the others might easily cause discontent.

Mr. KAULBACH. I agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that this was originally given to the deep-sea fishermen. At the time a request was made that the lobster fishermen should receive a share of the bounty also, but that was objected to by those who considered that they had not shared in the sacrifices, to make up for which the award was given by the American government. I would like the Minister of Finance to understand that I do not complain of expenditure when money is applied in the right channel. He can always count upon my support in expenditures when wisely calculated to develop the resources of the Dominion and keep our own people at home in our own country. And the way to retain our own people is to provide that every man shall be able to receive a fair day's wage for a fair day's work. The only way that that can be done in giving a bounty to fishermen is by providing an increased amount in the estimates this year. I cannot see why the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and his colleagues, having the surplus of which they boast, should not be generous enough to meet the reasonable wishes of these hardy sons of toil who earn a livelihood at the risk of their lives on the deep sea, and that by very great exposure and arduous toil.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am pleased to hear the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) in his little talk on this subject. After his usual fashion, he qualified his remarks before he sat down. He tried to make out that if we gave the lobster fishermen the justice which he believed should be extended to them, we should be taking from the deep-sea fishermen. The statute of 1882 calls for $150,000, which may be expended under Order in Council passed from time to time. This statute does not prevent the government from authorizing, by Order in Council, the payment of money to lobster fishermen, for the matter is entirely in the hands of the government. The hon. Minister of Finance says that for twenty years nothing has been paid to the lobster fishermen. But is that a reason why the lobster fishermen, whose fishery has been decreasing, and who have been earning less money than they did at the time when the statute was passed, should not be now considered? Is it any reason why they should not have been considered at any time during the last eight years hon. gentlemen opposite have been in power? As to the plea of the Minister of Finance that if anything is paid to the lobster fishermen there will be less for the others and that dissatisfaction will follow, I find that in 1895-6 the fishing bounty paid out was $163,567, and in 1901-2 the amount was $159,942.

Mr. FIELDING. I think there was an amendment increasing the amount from $150,000 to $160,000. I know that we always speak of the sum as $160,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Then let us have another amendment, Mr. Chairman. In 1895-6 the amount paid was $3,567 over the amount provided for under the amendment of which the hon. minister speaks. As the Minister of Finance feels so strongly that the lobster fishermen should be accorded better treatment, I think he should be able to induce his colleagues to have another amendment and provide for the interest of the lobster fishermen.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that if he grants an increase in the bounty over the block sum of $160,000 per annum the government will receive it back indirectly in another way. There is no class of men in the Dominion who contribute more to the revenue in the way of duties than do the fishermen. When they are successful they live very well, and when they are unfortunate and have a shortage in their catch it is pretty difficult for them to get along at all. If the bounty to them is increased, they will contribute as much to the revenue in return, and so the government will not be a loser by the transaction. I urge again very strongly that the hon. gentleman should accede to the request and increase this amount beyond $160,000.

Mr. COPP. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) a question, if I may. Would he advocate an increase to the vessel owners as well as to the fishermen ?

Mr. KAULBACH. If the revenue will admit of it, I would certainly do so. It would be an encouragement to shipbuilding and to ship owning. I do not wish that to be interpreted, as some persons attempted to thrust it in my face some time ago when I made a proposition for an increase in this House that it was because I am a shipowner and wanted the benefits for myself. I can truthfully say that I would be willing to surrender every dollar of the bounty, so far as I myself am concerned as a shipowner, to benefit the fishermen, but I want to see that the fishermen particularly are cared for. And I say that the increase should be made in a block sum, and let the increase go to the lobster catchers. Then if the government wish to increase the bounty to the deep-sea fishermen beyond what it is at present, I shall be only too happy to see that done also.

Mr. KENDALL. The question of the development of our fisheries is one of very great importance.

By an addition to the bounty our fishermen would receive on the average perhaps not more than 50 cents or 75 cents each so this kind of aid does'nt help them much. But there are some 47,000 of our fishermen who, if they were provided with means to obtain a constant supply of bait, and with better methods of transporting their fresh fish to the markets of the west, would then receive substantial benefit. I do not know what the minister said this afternoon, but I am free to say that I think the government is dealing with this matter in a broad and comprehensive way. A few years ago I had the honour to recommend to the government a scheme to assist the shore fishermen of the maritime provinces by means of refrigerators, and that scheme has now come into force. I would point out the fact that our fishermen have endorsed that scheme to the extent that already some twenty-nine bait refrigerators have been established, and I understand there are applications for five or six more. I venture to predict that before four or five years we will have from 75 to 100 of these on the coast beyond the mouth of the St. Lawrence river. Still these small refrigerators are not sufficient entirely to meet the requirements of the fishermen. According to my idea, and I think it is shared by many others, we should have large mechanical refrigerators at several points in the fishing district, one say at Strait of Canso, another at Grand Manan and another at the Magdalen Islands. As a matter of fact if we had had large refrigerators on the coast the summer before last, we could have stored up thousands of tons of bait which would have saved us last year. I think the member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) will admit, more than a million and a half of dollars. Again I say that I think that if the government is going to do anything to meet the requirements of the fishermen it will not be by giving them small sums of $1 or 50 cents each in the shape of increased bounty. Efficient bait supplies and proper cold storage transportation facilities are the crying needs of the fishermen. While I am on my feet I would like to say that during the regime of the late Minister of Railways I found it impossible to impress the necessity of furnishing proper cold storage aids for transportation of fresh fish. I must now ask the present Minister of Railways and Canals, and I know I have the sympathy of the Minister of Marine in this matter, that proper refrigerator facilities be provided on the Intercolonial to meet the requirements of the great business that has already begun to develop. Eight or nine years ago the Intercolonial received $9,000 in freight rates for the transportation of fresh fish, last year it received $27,000 or $28,000, and I think I am well within the mark when I say that it is not at all unlikely that the trade in fresh fish between the east and the west will be developed to such an extent that the Intercolonial will receive not less than $100,000 yearly in freight.

Mr. KAULBACH. My hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) refers to refrigerators along the Atlantic coast. Last year I endeavoured to encourage the fishermen of my county to invest in refrigerators, and also to encourage a large one in Canso; but I could not inspire them with the idea that the refrigerator fitted up with a chemical process would be of any service to them. They complained that fish bait frozen for the banks would only remain fresh for a little while, and then become a spongy substance, with no nutritious properties, and the fish only would take that kind of bait when they could not get anythink else. Fishermen as a rule want fresh bait, and when that is not to be had they will then only take bait from a refrigerator.

I am glad my hon. friend has referred to refrigerators, because it gives me an opportunity of speaking of another method that can be employed for curing bait fishes that will be far in advance of the present chemical process. A gentleman named Eaton has given me a description of this as a method, which he calls his process. He had an interview with the hon. member for Cape Breton, and I think my hon. friend is possessed with the same idea as myself, that it is an improvement on the old method of bait freezers. Mr. Eaton claims that he can make an ice that is completely crystallized and in which there are no air globules at all. He says that air globules in the ice have a tendency to injure or destroy the article intended to be preserved. But there are no air globules at all in the ice he makes, and he claims that it will preserve the fish three times as long as ordinary ice. He also says that it can be furnished for a mere trifle of cost, two cents and a half a ton, and can be made far cheaper by his method than gathering natural formed ice near a refrigerator. He claims that by his process he can make pure ice for domestic use, and that by a current of electricity passing through it all microbes and impurities that are usually found in water are destroyed. The ice thus produced, he says, is perfectly pure, and will last for a long time. He says that the fish remains fresh and good only so long as it maintains its phospheric properties, and when that is exhausted nothing is left but the pulp, which is not edible either for man or fishes. The same with meat, he says his method will preserve meat for a long time, in fact as long as you might wish to keep it, if maintained at a certain temperature.

I would recommend that the government have an interview with Mr. Eaton in reference to his patent. He is establishing an ice freezer at Montreal another at Toronto and he intends to have one placed in Ottawa. I have recommended him to visit the maritime provinces. He is at the present time in communication with some parties at Halifax and it is to be hoped that they will grasp the idea as the people in Montreal and Toronto have already done, and that we may soon have an improved system of freezing which will be far in advance of anything that is now employed by the present government at Sydney and other places along the Nova Scotia shore. I certainly would urge that matter upon the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) who will understand the question sufficiently to see the advantage that would result if an improved system were employed instead of the one now at present under way at Sydney. I would say further that we should have an improved system of transportation which would enable the fishermen of the maritime provinces to get an advanced price for their fish, and that can be brought about by providing a system of cold storage in the cars of the Intercolonial Railway which would enable the fishermen to send their fish right to the Northwest Territories. They can then have all their fish sent summer or winter in refrigerating cars and they can also send boneless fish which, I am glad to say, is now being put up in my own county. There are two industries in my own county putting up boneless fish now in one, two, three and four pound packages which they are placing upon the market. You can take this fish and hold it up to the light and you will see no bones in it. It is almost transparent and it has not the offensive smell which fish very often have after lying for some little while. If that industry is carried on with proper encouragement and with a bait freezer such as I have spoken of, according to the system of Mr. Eaton, who is the patentee and who has the theoretical as well as the practical knowledge to carry it along, I believe we can make the fishing industry of the maritime provinces equal to that of any that can be found in the way of industries in any part of North America. I strongly urge again that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will make arrangements to have an interview with Mr. Eaton and gather from him all the ideas which he has on this subject and which he is quite sure that he will feel satisfied that this new method is in the interest of the fishermen. I would have brought a practical idea committed to paper that he gave me had I known that this subject of bait freezers would have come up this evening. I have left it in my room, but at a future time when this subject is up for discussion again I will submit it to the hon. minister or I can hand it to him at any moment.

Mr. HAGGART. There has been rather an important allusion made by my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) to a statement made by the premier of Prince Edward Island, and to a quotation or extract from a paper in Charlottetown as to an agreement being arrived at between the government and the different provinces providing for a different distribution from that which at present prevails of the amount awarded under the Washington treaty. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that no agreement had been arrived at up to the present moment for the purpose of submitting a case to the Supreme Coourt in order to get its opinion as to the liability of the different provinces.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are negotiations in progress but there is not final conclusion.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought the conclusion was so definite that a request would be made for a special meeting of the Supreme Court for the purpose of obtaining its opinion on this subject. Now that we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, perhaps the hon. minister would state the stage at which these negotiations have arrived and whether the information or current gossip in reference to the matter is correct or not. My hon. friend from East Prince also referred to the distribution of the bounties. I understood that it was statutory, that an Order in Council was to be made for the distribution of bounties from year to year and the principle adopted upon which the distribution was to be made. Has the hon. minister had the Order in Council prepared for the distribution of these bounties in accordance with the statute ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Certainly. It is passed every year.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It has to be placed on the table of the House within 20 days after the opening of the session.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is in the report.

Mr. FIELDING. It is on the table. It is in the minister's report.

Mr. HAGGART. The report is for last year. The Order in Council has to be made antecedent to the distribution.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly, that is correct.

Mr. HAGGART. The Order in Council which is in the report has reference to last year's distribution.

Mr. FIELDING. But at the time it was passed it had not reference to any past distribution but it had reference to the anticipated distribution. The Order in Council is passed before the distribution is made.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I understand the hon. Minister of Finance to state that the Order in Council which was published in the minister's report of last year is the Order in Council intended for the distribution which is to take place of these bounties which the hon. Minister of Marine and fisheries is asking a vote for in the present year.

Mr. FIELDING. Before we pay the bounty there is an Order in Council passed for the distribution every season. Whether or not the blue-book covers the order for the current year or past year is a point which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have to answer.

Mr. HAGGART. But, the point that my hon. friend from East Prince makes is that the Order in Council must be passed.

Mr. FIELDING. I can guarantee that it is always passed. It is passed every year before a dollar of the bounty is paid.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The statute says that the Order in Council shall be passed providing for the distribution of the bounty for the next ensuing year, and that it shall be placed upon the table of the House within twenty days after the opening of the session. Therefore, the Order in Council which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries referred to was for the distribution of last year's bounty. We are entitled in this House to have the Order in Council that shall be passed showing how this money is going to be distributed for the next year, and I would make one more plea to the hon. minister that the Order in Council this year shall include the lobster fishery.

Mr. FIELDING. It cannot do that because the Order in Council for this year is passed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. And therefore the money is being distributed on the basis of that.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is for last season.

Mr. FIELDING. No, for the current season's payments. Whether or not the Order in Council for the current season has been brought down I have no knowledge but if it has not been brought down, I agree with the hon. gentleman that it should be brought down. In every case the Order in Council is passed in anticipation of the payment and the money is being distributed now on the basis of that Order in Council. It could not be charged for the present season.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There will be another Order in Council passed at this sitting of the House for next year.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not passed at the sitting of the House.

Mr. LEFURGEY. During the sitting of the House ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Order in Council is passed after the claims are received so that we can base the payment on the claims. The amount to be distributed is $160,000 and the payment is based upon the claims that are received. Before the distribution is made the Order in Council is passed. That is done every year. There are two Orders in Council cited in the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries of 1903. There is one for 1902 and one for 1903 at pages 10 and 11. That is to show on what basis the payment in 1903 was made. The Order in Council was passed after the claims had been received determining in what way the distribution was to be made. That Order in Council is dated 6th February, 1903. The cheques are being distributed now, and an Order in Council was passed as to what basis the distribution was made this year. If that has not already been brought down, I will bring it down.

Mr. HACKETT. What about the negotiations ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Negotiations had been pending between this government and the representatives of the different provinces before I was a minister, but no decision had been arrived at. The discussion was as to whether there should be a reference to the Supreme Court to decide the points at issue from their legal aspect, or whether they should be decided on the basis of equity. There was a long discussion on that point, and up to the present it has not been decided whether or not a test case will be submitted to the Supreme Court. If there is a test case submitted, the question arises whether it will be on the legal points, or on points of equity, or whether it will go to arbitration. There is nothing decided.

Mr. HAGGART. Just negotiations.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Just preliminary negotiations. A new element has come into the discussion because British Columbia sent a delegate, and we are discussing on what basis we can enter into an arrangement for settlement.

Mr. HACKETT. The explanation of the minister is satisfactory so far as it goes ; but it clashes greatly with what was said by Premier Peters in Prince Edward Island. I have a statement here given to the 'Patriot' newspaper by Premier Peters on his return to the island from Ottawa a few days ago.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is a newspaper report.

Mr. HACKETT. It is from the 'Patriot,' the organ of the government in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I cannot control that.

Mr. HACKETT. Well, here is what it says, and you will see whether it is or not :

The fishery conference.

Premier Peters who returned last night from Ottawa, on being interviewed by 'The Patriot' concerning the results of the conference with the members of the Dominion government said that so far as the Halifax fishery award is concerned, it was decided on the suggestion of the Minister of Justice to refer the matter first to the Privy Council of England to determine whether the Dominion government in equity or good conscience should pay the provinces the share of the award. Should the question be decided by the Privy Council in favour of the provinces receiving the award, the question of the amount payable to each province by the Dominion will be decided by an independent arbitration, to be selected by the provinces and the Dominion. The above course was decided upon, owing to the fact that Nova Scotia could not be persuaded to join with the other provinces in holding an arbitration as at first intended. The matter is being referred to the Privy Council under a statute which authorizes the Dominion government to ask the opinion of the King in Council as to any constitutional or other matter by which the Dominion government will be bound. This question will, if possible, be submitted immediately to the Privy Council.

At the above conference there were present Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Hon. W. S. Fielding, Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick, Minister of Justice, and Deputy Minister Newcombe, Premier Peters, Hon. Benjamin Rogers, Hon. George W. Simpson, of Prince Edward Island ; Premier Tweedie and Attorney General Pugsley, of New Brunswick ; Mr. McCorkhill, treasurer of Quebec and representing that province ; Mr. A. B. Aylesworth and Mr. G. C. Gibbons, K.C., of Ontario, who has been retained by the Dominion government.

Mr. Peters appears to know a great deal more about this than does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Mr. Peter's statement is in direct contradiction to the statement of the minister and the minister's statement is in direct contradiction of what Mr. Peters said. Mr. Peters states absolutely that there was a conference, and that this was the decision arrived at and he states further :

Mr. A. B. Aylesworth and Mr. G. C. Gibbons, K.C., of Ontario, have been retained by the Dominion government.

Mr. CLANCY. Good jobs.

Mr. HACKETT. If Mr. Peters is correct these two eminent lawyers have been retained by the Dominion government, and yet the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows nothing about it. This is an extraordinary contradiction. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says he knows nothing about this.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I never said that I did not know anything about the negotiations. The hon. gentleman was out of the chamber, or he did not understand me. I said, there were negotiations, but there was no conclusion arrived at. That is what I said very clearly.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understand that the bounties which are being paid at present are for 1903 and not for 1904.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Well, of course.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Has the Order in Council for the payment of bounties for 1904 been passed ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We pass the Order in Council when we receive the claims.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Then the minister is not complying with the statute.

Mr. MACKINNON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct him. I have the statute here, and it says :

A statement shall be laid before both Houses of parliament of the mode in which it is proposed to distribute the grant in the ensuing year and the assent of parliament should be obtained thereto.

That can be done any time during the session. The point my hon. friends raised was as to this statement being laid before parliament within the first twenty days of the session. The hon. gentleman is wrong on that point. What the statute says with reference to the twenty days is :

A statement shall be laid before both Houses of parliament within the first twenty days of the next session, of the mode in which the said grant shall have been expended, together with all copies of all Orders in Council relating to such grant and expenditure.

That part of the section refers to what has been expended during the past year, and that is complied with by the presentation of the departmental report which was within the twenty days I presume. The statement as to the ensuing year can be laid before parliament if any hon. member asks for it at any time during the session, and not within twenty days of the opening.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I submit that that does not conflict in any way with my contention. The statute to which the hon. member for Queen's referred was passed, I believe, in 1886. The statute to which I referred was the first statute. It was passed in 1882, and required that the principle upon which the bounties were to be paid for the ensuing year was to be brought forward by Order in Council, and placed on the table within twenty days after the meeting of parliament. It was not the intention that the detailed statement should be placed before parliament, because that could not come until the number of the fishermen employed and the number of fish caught were known. At the present time we are entitled to call on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to place on the table a statement of the method by which he intends the bounties of 1904 to be distributed. This is the reason I am bringing up the plea at this time. I am glad that the Finance Minister supports me in the view that the lobster fishermen should receive a portion of the bounty, and, as the Order in Council has not yet been brought down, I trust that they will be included in the bounty for the present year.

Mr. FIELDING. As my hon. friend assumes that the statute which he has read is still in operation, I think it would be well to make some inquiry as to that. My impression is that there must have been some amendment to it, because my recollection is that the practice referred to in that statute has not been literally followed. I have not any recollection of any order being brought down regarding the method of distribution for the ensuing year. Before the discussion is over the minister will be able to ascertain whether there has been an amendment.

Mr. MACKINNON. I might bring to the notice of the House the fact that in 1891 an amendment was passed providing for the publication of the rules in the 'Gazette' :

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make such regulations as he deems necessary or expedient respecting the payment of the said grant and the manner in which applications for the same or any portion shall be made and established, and may require persons applying for the grant or any portion thereof to verify their claims or any statements made by any person in connection therewith, upon oath ; and any such regulation shall, after publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' have the force of law.

Mr. FIELDING. Does that repeal any legislation ?

Mr. MACKINNON. It does not repeal the Act of 1886, but supersedes it by making other provisions.

Mr. LANCASTER. The statute of 1886 does not amend the statute of 1882. It is a consolidation of the statute of 1882. It does not repeal sections 3 and 4 of the statute of 1882.

Mr. MACKINNON. It does not repeal those sections. Anybody in parliament can ask for the statement of the expenditure of the last year and get it, and can also ask for any Order in Council.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is all the contention we are making. We want to know the principle upon which the payment is to be made, and not the details at all.

Mr. FIELDING. It would certainly be very difficult to determine now the manner in which the bounty would be distributed in the next season, because it would be necessary to ascertain the number of fishermen, the number of boats, &c., before the mode of distribution could be determined upon. Of course, if the Act is there, it either ought to be complied with or repealed.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Suppose the minister and all his colleagues advocated the payment of the bounty to the lobster fishermen, would not that be a principle of which the House would be entitled to be informed. I am trusting that the Minister of Finance is going to do this, because he expressed himself so favourably to looking after the lobster fishermen, of whom he claims to have a majority in the maritime provinces. It seems to me that the lobster fishermen should get a portion of this money, and I would like to have an Order in Council brought down giving a bounty to these men.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend's zeal for the lobster fishermen reminds me of a story; and while it is dangerous to tell a story in parliament, the occasion is sometimes too tempting to be resisted. A man went to a country shop keeper and asked what the price of flour was. Six dollars a barrel was the reply. That is pretty high, said the customer. Well, that is my price, said the dealer. But I have been over at Jones' shop, said the other, and he says the price is five dollars. Why then did you not buy from Jones, asked the dealer? Because he says he is out of flour. Well, retorted the grocery man, when I am out of flour my price is five dollars too. Hon. gentlemen opposite had many years in which to deal with the lobster question, and they did not do it. I conclude therefore that there must have been very good reasons why they did not.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I have always noticed that the Minister of Finance will contrive to find some little quibble to get him out of a difficulty. He has not advanced any reason. On the contrary he has acknowledged that the lobster fishermen have not received anything for twenty years, and this is the first occasion the matter has been brought up in the House. But the hon. gentleman has been sitting on the front benches during the past eight years, during which time he has not seen fit to bring up the case of the lobster fishermen. But when it is brought up by the opposition, he hurriedly rises in his seat and says some relief should be given them. He will find that he will not be able to dispose of this question by telling a little story, and I trust he will take up the question of lobster fishing in all seriousness. The fact that we have done wrong in the past is no reason why the hon. minister should persist in the same course.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says this question was never brought up in parliament before. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who has been here for many years, has just told us that the matter was considered years ago, and it was found that the lobster fishermen were not so much concerned in the fishery award as the deep sea fishermen. The reason he gave is fairly open to argument, but the hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says this question was never discussed before.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am quite willing to correct my statement and say that it has not been brought up in this House during the past eight years, during which my hon. friend has been on that side.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries would do well to take into his serious consideration the case made out on behalf of the lobster fishermen, especially as he has the assurance that the payment of a bounty to these men will be supported by the opposition. It would be an addition of $100,000 or $150,000 annually to the amount paid at present, and I would ask that the minister would take the matter into his earnest consideration. When hon. members on this side propose an expenditure, they are apt to be charged with extravagance, but in the present instance that charge cannot lie, and I would ask the hon. minister to see whether he cannot come to the relief of these men.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I rise to endorse to some extent the remarks made by my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) but I think he is labouring under a misapprehension to some extent. He divides the fishermen into two classes—the lobster fishermen and the others, but as a rule the same people are engaged in both. If the amount is not to be increased, there will be no practical advantage in giving some of it to the lobster fishermen and some to the others, because in each case the same man would receive in both qualities. I presume there would be some difficulty in the way of increasing the amount. I am inclined to think that our friends from Ontario would oppose any proposition of that kind. I will be very pleased if our Ontario friends would support the government in proposing an additional sum of money to be distributed among the fishermen of the maritime provinces—say $100,000 or $150,000. But I would be very much surprised if they would. I have often heard them complain that there was too much money expended in the maritime provinces.

Mr. LANCASTER. Improperly expended.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I am glad to learn that they have discovered their mistake and are prepared to vote an additional amount for the fishermen, according to the statement of my hon. friend.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is the hon. gentleman put up by the ministers to dictate the policy of the government?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I am speaking for myself only.

Mr. SPROULE. If such a proposal were made, would it not be equivalent to an additional provincial subsidy to the maritime provinces ?

Mr J. J. HUGHES. Would my hon. friend support it if it were ?

Mr. SPROULE. The amount of the award was capitalized and the interest paid out to the fishermen ; and so long as they get that interest, they are getting all the proceeds. But if an additional amount were voted now, that would be practically an additional provincial subsidy.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. That is the proposition which the hon. member for East Prince suggests and which he says the opposition will support

Mr. LEFURGEY. I never suggested what the opposition would do. I was simply speaking as a private member and stating what I think should be done for the lobster fishermen. I would ask the hon. gentleman from King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) not to put words into my mouth which I did not utter.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman said that the suggestion came from the opposition, namely, to pay a bounty to lobster fishermen, but he now withdraws the statement. If the amount cannot be increased, there would be no use in dividing it because the same men are both lobster fishermen and deep sea fishermen. Say the government give four dollars, then one man would get two dollars as a deep sea fishermen and two dollars as a lobster fisherman. That is what the hon. member for East Prince proposes and he thought he was expounding something which would be of great advantage to the lobster fishermen.

Mr. INGRAM. Would you support him ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. If this parliament were prepared to increase the amount paid the fishermen in the way of bounties, I would support it. I understood from the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) that the opposition were going to support his suggestion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I thought as much. And so, the claims of the hon. gentleman and the great sympathy he has expressed for the lobster fishermen of Prince Edward Island fall entirely to the ground. I approve very much the suggestion of the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) that the best way to benefit the fishermen is to make provision, as far as is reasonable and practicable, to supply them with bait and facilitate the best methods of catching, curing and marketing the fish. I think it is along these lines that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is working. He is a very practical man and has shown a great interest in the fishing industry.

Mr. INGRAM. We have not heard of it very much.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. You may not have heard of it in Ontario, but we have heard of it.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has read the minister's (Mr. Préfontaine's) book ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Yes, I have seen his work, and I know what the fishermen think of him. And I am sure he will do anything and everything that is practicable to develop the fishing industry and promote the interest of those engaged in it. There is one suggestion I would make to the minister. I see that, under the regulation a fisherman must catch 2,500 pounds of fish, and fish for three months, to be eligible for the bounty, and that the time spent in fishing lobsters does not count. I would like to see that regulation changed.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is the crux of the situation. That is where the hon. gentleman's (Mr. J. J. Hughes') statements are wrong.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I know as much about this business as does my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey).

Mr. LEFURGEY. You have not shown it yet.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I hope my hon. friend will not continue these unseemly interruptions. They are not creditable to him and are entirely uncalled for. I do not often take up the time of the House, and I am making a statement that, I believe, contains matters that are worth listening to. I believe the regulations should be changed so that the time spent in lobster fishing may count in qualifying for the bounty. The lobster fishermen are the bona fide fishermen. A man might spend the necessary length of time to qualify for the bounty and still not be really engaged in the business. But, if he is a lobster fisherman, you may be pretty sure that he earns his living by fishing. The lobster fishermen have to catch their bait, and when not fishing for lobsters they engage in fishing for cod, mackerel and other fish. Just one more point. The fishermen will continue to receive their bounties. Hon. gentlemen opposite need not worry over that. The bounty has been paid for a good many years, and whatever the regulations may be, the payment will be continued.

Mr. INGRAM. It is pleasing to hear the hon. member for King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) speaking so highly of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The hon. gentleman has had favours bestowed upon him, and so he speaks with feeling. My hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) and others on this side have no motive except the welfare of the fishermen, but the hon. member for King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) may view it with a selfish light, having been benefited as a partner in the fishing business. My hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what conclusion had been arrived at with respect to these bounties, and the minister answered that no conclusion had been arrived at. What could my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) conclude but that there had been no move in any direction? But, as a matter of fact the Minister of Railways, the Finance Minister, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister had an interview with Mr. Peters of Prince Edward Island, and they decided to refer the matter to the Privy Council. My hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine) denies that. I understand that they also decided that, if the Privy Council decided in favour of the provinces, respecting the award, the amount payable to each province shall be decided by arbitration.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I stated that the negotiations were on that line, but that no conclusion had been reached. I have studied the question, because that was part of my duty as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But before this last interview took place I knew what points would be brought up and discussed. But no decision was arrived at.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. minister must not forget that his friend from King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) is quite satisfied as to what the department is going to do.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Because he assumes that we will do what is right.

Mr. INGRAM. And my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) is not in the secrets of the minister, and must content himself without even a fair answer to his question. Is that the way the hon. gentleman proposes to administer his department?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not understand it that way at all.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand from my hon. friend here that he made a statement which the minister disputed, otherwise he would not have been compelled to quote from the Prince Edward Island paper to substantiate the stand he took.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not dispute the statement made by the hon. gentleman. He may make any statement he pleases, I am not responsible for it. I only stated what the facts are according to my knowledge, and that is all.

Mr. INGRAM. How could the hon. gentleman state that there was no conclusion arrived at?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Because that is the fact.

Mr. INGRAM. He differs from my hon. friend. Does he mean to say that no court has come to a final conclusion?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I stated, and I repeat again, that negotiations took place, but no conclusion was arrived at with regard to the points upon which we would arbitrate or go before a court, that no conclusion was arrived at one way or the other.

Mr. INGRAM. Then this paper was incorrect when it said a decision had been come to to refer the matter to the Privy Council of England?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, that was not the statement.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it true that this matter is to be referred to the Privy Council in England?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have stated just now what is true, and nothing else.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the minister say that that paper is not correct when it says this matter is to be referred to the Privy Council in England?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have given an answer as plain as possible.

Mr. INGRAM. Then I say that unless the hon. gentleman contradicts the statement, we must take it as correct. The hon. gentleman in order to support his contention had to quote what the paper stated, but in the first instance the minister did not deny it, he rather affirmed it, I thought; but now, on second thought, he has denied the statement. Then we have Mr. Peters coming up to Ottawa and then going back to Prince Edward Island, for the purpose of making some political capital, and allowing himself to be interviewed, allowing statements to be made in the public press that are not correct. That is the position, and that is the position the minister evidently bears out in this discussion, that Mr. Peters, according to that interview, has gone back to his province and stated what is not true. If that is the position of affairs, it is first-class literature for the Conservative party in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LANCASTER. We cannot understand the facts about this matter unless we have a further statement from the hon. member for King's (Mr. Hughes), who seems to be acquainted with it, but will not tell the committee all he knows. He called on us members from Ontario to say what we thought about it. The first thing we say is that the law should be complied with, that if there is a statute it should be obeyed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Does the hon. gentleman state that the law has not been complied with?

Mr. LANCASTER. I am trying to keep myself right, and I want to see whether the member for King's will put himself right. Now, the minister says, in answer to the member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), as I understand him, that no conclusion whatever has been arrived at in regard to this matter. I accept that statement. Then no mode indicated by the statute can be suggested to this House at present. The member for King's wishes us to understand that he knows all about this matter, and he is indignant because we ask him to explain a little of what he knows, so that we may vote this money intelligently. When he makes that statement he is in direct conflict with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to whom he gave such high testimony for his ability and for the wonderful things he has been doing and who says no conclusion has yet been arrived at. He is supporting the minister because he has faith in his ability and fitness, and believes he will do everything right. That is a pure matter of faith. The member for King's has so much faith in the ability and propriety with which the minister will deal with this matter that he is prepared, without knowing anything about the way he will deal with it, to trust it entirely in his hands. Now, if the minister is correct in saying that no conclusion has been arrived at, then I think the member for King's ought either to ask the minister's permission to put upon the table his own scheme, which he knows all about, or else he ought to correct what he has said to the committee, and say that upon reflection he does not think he ought to ask the Ontario members to vote for an increased expenditure until the statute is complied with. Does the hon. member think that the members for Ontario, to whom he has appealed, ought to vote for an increased expenditure on a certain subject without inquiring how the minister is going to spend that money? I am prepared to vote for any reasonable expenditure when it can be shown that it will be used in the public interest, but I do not like to vote for an expenditure which is likely to be wasted, and unlikely to reach the beneficiaries for whom it is intended—that is the fishermen in this case. The hon. gentleman cannot shirk that question. He cannot ask this committee in all seriousness to say whether it will vote for or against an increase of the expenditure unless he gives it some reasonable ground upon which to exercise its judgment correctly, and those reasonable grounds would be: What mode, as indicated in the statute, is he going to adopt in the payment of the bounty, in order to expend this money so that it will do some good, and not be wasted politically and in other ways.

Mr. HACKETT. I do not wish to retard the passing of this item in the estimates there are one or two matters I desire to refer to. The hon. member for Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes) spoke all around the circle because he evidently desired to take a fling at hon. members from Ontario. I am an old member of this parliament. I have been off and on, a member of this parliament for the last quarter of a century, and I have found the members from Ontario as well as the members from the other provinces prepared to do justice to the little province of Prince Edward Island, the smallest province, but still the garden of the gulf. Therefore I say that I have always found the members from Ontario as well as from the other provinces willing to do justice to the province of Prince Edward Island and especially the members on this side of the House. The hon. member for King's talks all around the circle and he ends up by saying that if you pay an additional amount to the lobster fishermen you are paying to the same men; that is to say that if you are paying $2 to the lobster fishermen and $2 to the deep sea fishermen it all goes to the same men. He suggested to the hon. minister that he should so amend the regulations so as to allow the time spent in the lobster fishery to be included. That is what my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) is contending for. He contends that the time that the lobster fishermen, who after all is the fisherman of the country, spends in lobster fishing should be counted in the three months which it is necessary to devote to the fishery before he is entitled to the bounty.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. There are two qualifications—three months fishing and the taking of 2,500 pounds of deep sea fish. What I meant was that the time spent in fishing for lobsters should count as far as the time is concerned, but that the fishermen should be required to catch 2,500 pounds of deep sea fish. Is that what my hon. friend means?

Mr. HACKETT. My hon. friend has gone back on his proposition. He recommends that the lobster fishermen should receive a share of this bounty but when he finds that he is cornered he goes back around the circle. Perhaps I am the only man in this House who has had a large experience in reference to the bounty, because for eight or ten years I was the claims officer in Prince Edward Island and I had to go around amongst the fishermen to ascertain their claims in reference to the fishing bounty. I felt that a great grievance existed on the part of the lobster fisherman. He had the necessary quantity of fish. In the herring fishery he would take the full quantity of fish in perhaps two weeks and then he would fish in the lobster fishery for six weeks but when it came to taking the oath that he had fished in the deep sea fishery for the prescribed length of time he could not do it. My hon. friend from East Prince contends that the time spent in the lobster fishery should be included and that the quantity of fish caught in the herring, mackerel or cod fishery and other branches of the industry should also be included so as to make up the quantity of fish required under the regulations. That is all my hon. friend from East Prince is contending for and my hon. friend from King's will not object to that. It is only a reasonable proposition. It has been said in a way so very characteristic of the hon. Minister of Finance that for so many years this thing has escaped the attention of the government. Well, he has been eight years in office. He says that he represents more lobster fishermen than any other member of this parliament. Now that it has been brought to his notice we ask him to do something and we ask his colleague the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to come to the relief of the lobster fishermen by allowing him to participate in this bounty as well as those who are supposed to be entitled to it because they are engaged in other branches of the deep sea fishery.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think at the point at which this discussion has arrived, it is important to put the facts of the law right. Let us first take the statute of 1882, chapter 18 which reads as follows:

An Act to authorize an annual grant for the development of the sea fisheries and the encouraging of the building of fishing vessels.

2. A statement shall be laid before both Houses of parliament within the first twenty days of the next session, of the mode in which the said grant shall have been expended, together with copies of all Orders in Council relating to such grant and expenditure; and during the same session and each session thereafter, a statement shall be laid before both Houses of parliament, of the mode in which it is proposed to distribute the grant in the ensuing year, and the assent of parliament shall be obtained thereto.

I have stated and I persist in my statement that I have followed the law, probably not the law as it is laid down by chapter 18, but the law as it exists. In 1886 the law was consolidated and virtually the same disposition was made. Chapter 96 of the Revised Statutes of Canada reads as follows:

An Act to encourage the development of the Sea Fisheries and the building of Fishing Vessels.

3. During each session, a statement shall be laid before both Houses of parliament, of the mode in which it is proposed to distribute the grant in the ensuing year, and the assent of parliament shall be obtained thereto.

It is simply a consolidation of the statute of 1882. We have in 1891 an amendment, 54-55 Victoria, chapter 42, by which the first section of the statute which I have just read is repealed and replaced by another one and two clauses, 5 and 6, are added.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are these clauses?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They are as follows:

5. Every fishery officer who, by virtue of his appointment as such, is authorized by the Governor in Council, under authority of 'the Fisheries Act,' chapter 95 of the revised statutes, to exercise the powers of a justice of the peace, ex-officio, shall, for all the purposes of this Act and the regulations made under it, be ex-officio a justice of the peace within the district for which he is appointed to act as a fishery officer.

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make such regulations as he deems necessary or expedient respecting the payment of the said grant and the manner in which applications for the same or any portion thereof shall be made and established, and may require persons applying for the grant or any portion thereof to verify their claims or any statements made by any person in connection therewith, upon oath; and any such regulations shall, after publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' have the force of law.

Mr. COCHRANE. That does not repeal the law that we have been talking about.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Don't you be too impatient.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. gentleman stated that he was complying with the law when he has not complied with the law.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Be patient.

Mr. COCHRANE. We have a good deal of patience and we get very little for it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. 55-66 Victoria, chapter 18 passed in 1892 contains the following section.

1. Section three of an Act to encourage the development of the sea fisheries and the building of fishing vessels, chapter 96 of the revised statutes, is hereby repealed.

So that the obligation of depositing this Order in Council as regards the mode of distributing the bounties is wiped out and we are in the position of having applied the law as it exists. In the statutes of 1882, no mention at all is made of the Halifax award, but it was well understood that the $150,000, which was increased later to $160,000, was a kind of compensation for the fishermen whose rights had been infringed on. In the Washington Treaty of 1871, we find that there was no compensation contemplated to be paid for shell-fish, shad, salmon, and all fish taken in rivers and in the mouth of rivers. Under the treaty of 1818, the Americans were excluded from such fisheries, and therefore, it was not contemplated in the Halifax award, that any compensation would be paid by the United States for loss sustained by lobster fishermen, or fishermen who caught shad or salmon, or who fished in the rivers or mouths of rivers? It is therefore easy to understand that the question of paying a bounty to the lobster fishermen was not considered at the time. The question comes up now as to whether a bounty should be paid to lobster fishermen. It is my opinion that those interested in the lobster industry will agree with what the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) has stated. I am strongly inclined to believe, that the best way to aid lobster fishmen is to furnish them with greater facilities for securing bait, improved modes of preserving the fresh fish, and increased transportation facilities to enable them to put the lobsters fresh upon the market. I think this would have a more beneficial effect, not only on the individual fishermen, but on the industry generally, than would the payment of a paltry sum of one dollar or two dollars to a fisherman. At present we are trying to make the best regulations possible to save the lobster industry from that destruction which has attended it in other countries. It is only in Canada that we really have a lobster industry. The lobster fishery is depleted in the United States, and they are obliged now to buy their lobsters in Canada for their own market. I do not claim any particular credit to myself for the efforts which are being made in that department to improve the lobster fishery. When I entered the department eighteen months ago, I knew little about fisheries; I had to work hard to learn, and to take the advice of those who had experience and practical knowledge of all these questions. In the first place I took the advice given me by my officers, and then I had the views and suggestions of those engaged in the industry to guide me. I may say that the department is supposed to do everything possible to encourage not only the lobster fishermen individually, but the lobster industry in general, so that it may be preserved. Since 1899 we have not only provided bait freezers for ordinary fishermen, but we now intend to provide bait freezers for deep-sea fishermen. On the north coast of Prince Edward Island the cod fishery has been almost abandoned, and it is proposed to bring out Scotch fishermen to revive that industry. However, the first thing to be done is to provide bait freezers. Last year, the suggestion was made to us by some practical fishermen, that we should provide ponds for seed lobsters. This was a new idea, but we adopted it, and I am glad to say that there is reasonable hope to believe the experiment will be a success. Under the present law the fishermen are obliged to return seed lobsters to the water, but as we cannot have an inspector to every trap, we are fairly certain that notwithstanding the care we have exercised for several years past, seed lobsters have been destroyed. When you remember that a seed lobster contains about 10,000 eggs, you will see what a deterrent this must be to the increase of lobsters in our waters. On the suggestion of some practical fishermen, we leased a pond. and we set aside a certain amount of money to buy these seed lobsters from the fishermen at about the same price as they would obtain for them if they sold them in the ordinary way. The result was that we deposited in that pond last year over 50,000 seed lobsters, and the report of our inspector is to the effect that millions of small lobsters were put back into the sea, that at least as many young lobsters were put back as were caught in the whole season. In view of the success we have had, we intend to extend this system to other places where we think it is convenient and practicable to do it, and we hope to help in this way, not only the fishing industry, but directly and indirectly the lobster fishermen themselves.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am very much pleased with the statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Having listened carefully to the discussion on this question I was surprised that none of the hon. gentlemen who had spoken on the subject referred to the propagation of lobsters. That to my mind is the most important thing we can do for the lobster fisheries of the maritime provinces. It is not by paying the fishermen a small bounty that we can increase this industry. To my mind the question is whether we can preserve the industry at all. It has gone down considerably on the coasts of the maritime provinces during recent years. It is also a well-known fact that there was a large lobster industry on the coasts of the United States some years ago. Lobsters were caught on the coasts of New York and Massachusetts, and even as far south as Cape Hatteras. But they have practically disappeared from the coast of the United States except along a portion of the coast of the state of Maine. So that, as the minister has said, we have now practically the control of the lobster fisheries of the world, and it is of the utmost importance that we should see that everything possible is done to prevent them disappearing from our coasts as they have done from the coasts of Norway and the other northern countries of Europe, and from the coast of the United States. The efforts of the government should be directed to increasing the number of lobster hatcheries and pounds along the coast of Canada. The work that has been done in this direction on the coast of Pictou county is admitted to have been very successful. I have followed that question for some years past. I have visited the hatchery year after year, I think it is now about eleven years since it was established. For four or five years the fishermen were of opinion that it was a waste of money, and that the young lobsters which were put into the sea never came to anything; but as time passed on, and it was found that the fishermen on that coast were doing better than the fishermen on any other part of the coast of Nova Scotia, they began to change their opinions ; and now you will not find a fisherman or a lobster packer within thirty or forty miles of that hatchery who is not of opinion that it has done a great deal to increase the catch in that locality. If we could have lobster hatcheries established along the coasts of the other counties of Nova Scotia where lobsters are caught, they would do a great deal more for the fishermen than the paying of a bounty to them for destroying the lobsters. What we want to do is to preserve and propagate the lobster and that is the direction in which the government should expend money. It is well known that the lobsters have considerably diminished. The fishermen do not catch as many as they did some years ago. I am told that the individual fisherman does not catch half as many in a day as he did fifteen or twenty years ago ; but I am glad to say that he gets for the half that he does catch a better price than he got for the larger quantity he caught formerly. In that way the business has been kept up. I also agree with what my hon. friend from Cape Breton has said in regard to improved transportation. We all know that fish is a perishable commodity, and if we cannot place it in the market quickly, it becomes worthless. The importance of suitable transportation facilities has been illustrated by the great progress that has been made with the halibut industry on the western coast of Canada. That industry did not exist until a few years ago ; but, with the appliances supplied by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Dominion Express Company, it has been worked up, so that now western halibut can be placed on the markets of Boston and New York more quickly and more readily than our halibut caught in the eastern waters. I will read an extract from the 'Fishing Gazette' :

During the year 1903 there was shipped from Vancouver, B.C., by the Canadian Pacific Railroad 296 car loads of halibut of 24,000 pounds each. These large consignments come principally to New York and Boston, although some of it was landed in Chicago and other western centres. This amount will be undoubtedly exceeded this season. The splendid service given by the railroads, both in time and equipment of refrigerator cars, has been one of the strong factors helping to build up the business, so that to-day the halibut caught on the Pacific coast are not as old when they arrive in Boston or New York as fish caught on the halibut grounds of the east and landed at these points. This is owing to the great distance the vessels are obliged to go in the east and on account of the scarcity of the fish and the great length of time it takes to catch enough to make it a paying proposition to the vessel and crew.

That progress could not have been made in the halibut industry on the western coast of Canada if railway facilities had not been supplied. The fast train placed on the Intercolonial Railway a few years ago between Mulgrave and Montreal has done a great deal to build up the fishing industry on the eastern coast of Nova Scotia. Prior to that date a car of fish was sometimes left on a siding for days, so that when it arrived on the market it was worthless. But now, we can have fish shipped daily at Mulgrave with the knowledge that in fifty-one hours it will arrive in Montreal. We have on the Intercolonial what we never had before, a fast freight train, and it has done more to build up the fishing industry in the east than all the bounties paid by the government. Providing cold storage, giving better railway facilities and propogating the fish—these are the practical ways in which the government can benefit the fresh fish industry in the maritime provinces.

Mr. CLANCY. I have listened with some anxiety to the statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to-night. The province of Nova Scotia has been pressing for many years to have the fishery award handed over to the provinces.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Does my hon. friend say that the province of Nova Scotia was pressing for this ?

Mr. CLANCY. I understood that Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces wanted the whole sum handed over to them.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I do not think the hon. gentleman has any warrant at all for that statement.

Mr. CLANCY. Then I am entirely misled by the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because I understood it to involve that question.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the question ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The discussion came up on the question of what were the claims made by the different provinces to a share of the Halifax award. I did not mention the province of Nova Scotia at all, but the discussion was more regarding what had been said by Mr. Peters, the premier of Prince Edward Island, than anything else.

Mr. CLANCY. It is very astonishing that some gentlemen seem to be startled by an announcement of this kind. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Alex. Johnston) did not know that any one of the provinces had made a claim for any portion of the award.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I was not in the least startled, but only wanted to point out that the statement which the hon. gentleman made was inaccurate.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman then be good enough to enlighten us as to what the claims are that are being urged ?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. On behalf of Nova Scotia ?

Mr. CLANCY. On behalf of the maritime provinces generally.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I have already said that the assertion that the province of Nova Scotia was pressing the matter on the attention of the federal government is inaccurate.

Mr. CLANCY. All we can conclude is that the hon. gentleman does not seem to know anything about his own province. We are not surprised that he should resume his seat without being able to give some intelligible information.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Let me say emphatically that Nova Scotia has not asked the government to make any change in the regulations which have existed since the fishery bounties were given to the fishermen in Nova Scotia. That province is rather opposed to any change in the existing conditions and does not participate in the agitation from Prince Edward Island in any manner or form.

Mr. CLANCY. I am glad to learn that, as we were led to believe that all the provinces were urging for some participation in the award. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine if the government has consented to re-open the question.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I can only repeat what I have said. There may have been negotiations—that is to say the government could not refuse to hear what those gentlemen had to state—but no conclusion whatever either to open the question or not has been come to ?

Mr. BELL. From what the hon. minister has said I suppose there is no intention on the part of the department to make any change in the regulations as regards the bounties. He is disposed to abide by the present regulations and assist the lobster fishermen by providing a better supply of bait and greater conveniences for the assembling of the fish at the factories and, I suppose, continuing the lobster hatcheries which we have at present. I know that the subject is exceedingly difficult and complicated. On the south shore it is claimed that the reduction in the number of certain lobsters leads to a loss of sea vegetation and the consequent scarcity of other fish, so that the maintenance of the lobster industry is important to other fishing industries on the coast. There is one improvement which it would be very desirable to make, and that is to have some method by which the size of the lobsters on the Nova Scotia coast could be increased. In the western part of the province they catch fairly large fish, which are shipped to the United States alive and bring remunerative prices, but on our coast the large fish are becoming scarce and no trade could be done in shipping live lobsters from that part of the coast. The only thing to be done is to continue the hatcheries. While the fish have not yet increased in size, they are increasing in numbers. I would be rather inclined to see the government continue the present system than divert a portion of the bounty to the lobster fishermen. There is some irregularity about the payment of the bounty. In the county of Pictou, I am informed that some of those who have received a bounty in some years do not get it in other years. Their application is sometimes refused, and men who have had the bounty for a number of years find themselves left without it. I have several cases of this kind in mind, which I intend to bring more particularly to the attention of the department. But in the meantime I would be glad if the minister could give me any general explanation how it is that men who have received the bounty for years find themselves excluded for no apparent reason. They tell me that their practice is the same and they fish the same number of days, and yet no bounty cheques are sent.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If my hon. friend will give me particulars of the cases to which he refers I will gladly investigate. From information I have received from my officials I am led to believe that very few complaints have been made lately. Of course, where there are so many cases to be dealt with there must be some who express dissatisfaction.

Mr. BELL. How do these cases occur, is it through clerical oversight ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, I do not recall any cases of that kind. Sometimes there may be two parties claim. Sometimes the regulations are not fulfilled. All the cases are personally investigated. I repeat, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) has any special cases, it will be sufficient for him to leave them to the special officer in charge of this business, Mr. Kent, and that officer will try to do justice in the matter.

Mr. BELL. I intend to do that, but I thought there might be some general explanation of these cases given by the minister.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There were so few complaints they were not brought to my notice except in special instances.

Mr. KAULBACH. I would remind the minister that I brought to the notice of the department a case which seemed to be a very important one. The master of the vessel had omitted to take the license, and, having taken his departure from the port he requested that the managing owner should make the application and get the license. The request was made only through the clerk in the fishing office of the managing owner, and the managing owner in consequence, did not know of the omission until a month or so had elapsed from the time the vessel took her departure from port. I recommended that to the department—I do not know that I had an interview with the minister himself—but nevertheless the bounty was not paid, and, in consequence the whole crew were deprived of their portion of the bounty. I hope the minister will carefully reconsider this matter and grant these people the bounty to which, I think, they are fairly entitled. They did not ignore their duty of making application ; it was purely an omission. When such occurs accidently, I think the minister should treat it as an exceptional case and meet the request of the parties.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we have had a very good day's work, and a very fruitful one. We are not likely to make much further progress. If this item is passed we can rise. But, if hon. gentlemen wish to debate it further we can do so.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. Of course, Monday is a private members' day. But if the business standing on the order paper in the name of private members is exhausted what government business, if any, will be taken up ?

Mr. FIELDING. If the order of private members' business is exhausted we shall proceed with Supply, beginning at the point at which we have just left off, unless the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not here in time. But, in that case, the Postmaster General will take up his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 20, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 140) respecting the Alliance Bank of Canada.—Mr. Russell.

QUESTIONS.

IMMIGRATION—FRAUDULENT AGENTS.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

1. Is the government aware that certain individuals in Great Britain are engaged in making fraudulent representations to intending emigrants to Canada by holding themselves out as agents of the Canadian government, guaranteeing positions, and otherwise being guilty of fraud ?

2. If so, what action, if any, does the government intend to take for the suppression of these frauds and the punishment of the offenders ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The government is aware that certain individuals in Great Britain are engaged in making fraudulent representations to intending emigrants to Canada by guaranteeing positions and otherwise, but it is not aware that these individuals hold themselves out as agents of the Canadian government, excepting from general reports to the effect that in some cases these persons have represented themselves as agents of the government.

2. In order that the offices of these individuals may not be mistaken for government offices the department has made public announcements in Great Britain that the individuals in question are in no way connected with the government of Canada, and has instructed that notices be posted, especially in the London office, to this effect.

In addition to this, the attention of the imperial government has been drawn to these frauds with the view of suppressing them and punishing the offenders.

The following advertisement is also being inserted in leading newspapers of the United Kingdom :

> The government of the Dominion of Canada, having been informed that certain persons conducting labour agencies in London and elsewhere in the United Kingdom, have been promoting the emigration to Canada of mechanics and other skilled workmen, have been giving false information respecting labour conditions in Canada and have represented themselves as agents of or as having the sanction and endorsement of the Dominion government. Notice is hereby given that the Dominion government has no such agents in the United Kingdom, has not authorized, sanctioned or in any way given its approval to any agency in the United Kingdom for promoting the emigration to Canada of mechanics or other skilled labour. James A. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior of Canada.

The Department of the Interior is advised that this advertisement is appearing in the London 'Telegraph, the London 'Chronicle,' the London 'Mail,' London 'Express,' London 'Leader,' London 'Star,' London 'Sun,' London 'Echo' and the London 'Evening News' ; the Manchester 'Guardian' and the Manchester 'Evening News' ; the Birmingham 'Post' and the Birmingham 'Mail'; the Liverpool 'Post' and the Liverpool 'Echo' ; the Glasgow 'Herald' and the Glasgow 'Record' ; the Edinburgh 'Scotsman' and the Edinburgh 'Evening Despatch' ; the Newcastle 'Chronicle' and the Newcastle 'Evening Chronicle'; the Cardiff, South Wales, 'Echo' and the Cardiff 'Western Mail'; the Bristol 'Western Press' and the Bristol 'Evening News'; the Belfast 'Northern Whig' and the Belfast 'Evening Telegraph'; the Dublin 'Irish Times' and the Dublin 'Freeman's Journal.' The Press Association has also circulated the notice.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S BODY GUARD.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. What is the reason that Major William Hamilton Merritt has not been gazetted to the command of the Governor General's Body Guard of Canada?
2. Did Lieutenant-Colonel C. A. K. Dennison's period of command expire by effluxion of time in June, 1903?
3. Did he at the same time send in his resignation?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. Major W. H. Merritt has been gazetted to the command of the Governor General's Body Guard, from 11th June, 1903. See 'Gazette' of 27th May, 1904.
2. Yes.
3. No.

CHAMBLY CANAL—STONE CONTRACT.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Has the contract for the different kinds of stone required for the Chambly canal during the present year been granted?
2. If so, to whom, and what are the prices accorded for each quality?
3. Did the government receive more than one tender?
4. If so, what are the names of the tenderers and the amount of each tender?
5. Was the contract in question accorded to the lowest tenderer?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Rail-Ways and Canals):

1. A contract for crushed stone for the present year has been granted.
2. To J. E. Hébert, St. Johns, Quebec, at $2.45.
3. Yes.
4. J. E. Hébert, St. Johns, Quebec, at $2.45; N. Mailloux, St. Johns, Quebec, at $2.50.
5. Yes.

THE PREFERENTIAL TARIFF.

Mr. HANCE J. LOGAN moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the preferential tariff should only apply to importations through Canadian seaports.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion has been standing in my name on the order paper for some weeks, and I have been in hopes that the government might adopt the policy which is enunciated in it, but now that the budget has been brought down my hopes are disappointed in that regard. I cannot hope therefore to have the policy adopted during the present session; but, believing as I do that it is in the best interests of Canada that this policy should be adopted at another session of parliament, I crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments while I give my humble views as to why this policy should be adopted in Canada.

Some one may ask: Where is the demand for such legislation from any public body? There have been many resolutions passed by boards of trade and other bodies, and one I believe by a provincial legislature, asking that such legislation be enacted. I have in my hand a resolution passed unanimously by the Halifax Board of Trade as far back as February 25, 1901. That resolution was communicated by telegraph to the Hon. W. S. Fielding, as follows:

Resolved that this council cordially endorses the suggestion of a member of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which provides that the customs rebate of thirty-three and one third per cent on goods manufactured in Great Britain be allowed only when said goods are landed at Canadian ports, and pledges itself to use every means in its power to urge the adoption of the measure by the government.

In the month of August, 1901, a conference of the boards of trade of the maritime provinces, held at Chatham, N.B., passed the following resolution:

Resolved, that in the opinion of this board the preferential customs tariff as applied to imports from Great Britain should only apply to goods imported directly through Canadian ports.

At a conference of all the Canadian boards of trade, held at Toronto in June, 1902, this matter was very thoroughly discussed. A resolution favouring it was moved by a gentleman from St. John. After a considerable amount of discussion, the resolution was amended on motion of Mr. Munro, of Montreal, and the following resolution was passed unanimously:

In order to encourage the importation of British goods via Canadian ports, this conference desires that the preferential rebate on goods imported from Great Britain arriving by United States ports shall be limited to 25 per cent.

Many able arguments were made at that conference on behalf of the original resolution. If you will allow me, I will quote from a speech delivered by Mr. Gaskin, of Kingston. He said :

I was more than surprised when I heard that the Dominion government made a preferential tariff on goods coming from England and did not stipulate they should come through Canadian ports. I remember, a number of years ago, that Canadian boats were allowed to carry grain from Chicago and Milwaukee to Port Colborne. That grain went over the Welland road to Port Dalhousie ; it was taken by Canadian boat from Port Dalhousie and brought to Oswego. The Americans tried to stop that, and they have stopped everything since that was of benefit to our Canadian boats. I remember a number of years ago when I was captain of a steamer, just after the American war, I went into the port of Cleveland to report at the custom house, and they presented me with a bill of $140 or $150, and what do you suppose that was for ? For a war tax in the United States. That is the treatment we have been receiving from a Canadian standpoint, and I do certainly say the government made a great mistake in allowing that preferential tariff to apply to merchandise coming through the United States.

I will also quote from a speech delivered by Mr. George E. Drummond, who afterwards became, and now is, the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Mr. Drummond said :

It is a shame that we should permit our exports from Canada, from the west and from the centre of Canada, to go out via American ports if we can send them by Canadian ports. There is no question, as Mr. Gaskin said, that if you can fill these boats both ways that will mean cheaper freight rates for the men of the west, and that our railways will meet us in a generous spirit I am perfectly confident, if the volume of trade will permit of it. For that reason I propose to support this motion. My friend from Windsor has spoken of what the Americans might do. I tell you that when the Americans meet in such a conference as this, they do not care very much what Canadians are going to do. They believe in themselves. We in this country have never had confidence in ourselves ; our banks would not be laden down with $250,000,000 earning three per cent if our people had confidence enough to develop Canadian transportation and develop Canadian mines.

Mr. D. R. Wilkie, of Toronto, spoke as follows :

We have granted this privilege of preferential tariff in favour of British goods, and it was said at the time that we did this we would suffer for it, the Americans would retaliate. What have they done ? 'You are really getting on to our game, you are finding us out.'' I know leading protectionists of the United States, and they told me plainly, 'You do not know how to manage your own affairs, do not be afraid of us. Our whole policy is not dictated by a desire to injure Canada. We have our own business to look after, and you are only a small factor in the matter. We are not doing this to injure you, we are doing it to benefit ourselves.' Let us think the same way, let us benefit ourselves. As to the argument of Mr. Saunders, that he was forced to export his goods by way of Boston or New York, what does that mean? It means that owing to our allowing this preference on British goods coming through Boston and New York, instead of limiting it to goods that come only through Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal, he was forced to send his goods to Boston and New York. But force them to bring our goods through Canadian ports and you will have cheaper freight rates for Canadian produce from your own ports. I do not think we should give way in this matter. Retaliation is a barbarous word, and it is not followed out except we want to injure, and we are not going to injure the United States, and as long as we are going to benefit ourselves, we should consider ourselves.

I will not weary the House by reading any further from that report. Shipping is certainly one of the greatest industries of any country, and to encourage the shipping industry is to encourage the building up of the nation. To build up a nation it is important to make it a maritime nation ; and in order to do that, we should assist in building up maritime ports. In this country we are doing a great deal for the west. As a representative from the east, I am willing that we should spend large sums of money in developing the west as the future granary of the world ; but we should not forget that there is an east as well as a west. It may be said that we are selfish in asking this. I claim that we are not selfish. This is a broad national question, and the people of the west should be willing to assist us in bringing goods to the maritime ports and building up Canada as a whole.

Now, what are the objections to this proposition ? The first is that it would increase freight rates. At the present time the freight rates from Great Britain to Winnipeg are the same via St. John as they are via New York, Boston or Portland. I do not see any reason why they should be increased. It is said that if we gave the freight to Canadian lines, they would increase the freight rates. That is not saying much for their patriotism, but if they showed a disposition to do so, we could hold this over them as a lever, to see that they did not. I am sure that with the number of lines running between Canada and Great Britain, there would be sufficient competition to keep the freight rates down to a reasonable level. At the present time, one of the great difficulties of Canadian shipping lines is that they do not receive a return cargo. Last year we sent $131,000,000 worth of goods to Great Britain, and of that amount we sent over $41,000,000 through United States ports, while our ships were going from Canadian ports half laden to British ports. This is not Canadianism ; it is not a national spirit ; and if we can do anything to encourage a Canadian, national spirit in this country, we should do so, and do so at the earliest opportunity.

It is said that we have not facilities at Canadian ports. We shall never have those facilities unless we encourage Canadian ports to provide them ; and it is the duty of this government to assist them to provide facilities for shipping goods inwards or outwards. The argument has been used that we have not the facilities. I have here a letter from a member of the great pioneer steamship line of Canada, Mr. Andrew Allan. In a letter I had written to Mr. Allen I stated it was claimed that more rapid transit could be secured via New York than by the St. Lawrence route, and Mr. Allan in reply says :

I maintain that as far as our Liverpool steamers are concerned, we are now in a position to deliver traffic to Canadian houses as rapidly by our routes as can be done by any United States port.

Mr. Allan should be in a position to speak on this matter.

A further objection to this legislation which has been raised is that by it we may offend the United States, that the legislation is too drastic as against the United States. I do not admit that Mr. Speaker, and even if the legislation is drastic as against the United States it would be only adopting the United States policy. The historic policy of the United States has been along these lines. If Great Britain had adopted the policy adopted by the United States as far as coasting law is concerned, she would have paralysed the shipping industries of that country years ago. For the past one hundred years the United States has extended its navigation laws to all its outlying possessions. As early as 1817, under President Madison, Congress first provided that commerce between the territories and possessions of the United States should be regarded as coastwise and confined to vessels built in the United States, officered by the United States citizens and flying the United States flag. This policy has been continued from that time down to the present day. Whenever territories are annexed to the United States suitable legislation has extended this policy to embrace within the provisions of the coasting laws, trade with the newly acquired territories. In 1868 the navigation laws as to transportation of merchandise were extended to Alaska. In an Act approved of April 12, 1900, dealing with Porto Rico, it is provided in section 9 as follows :

That the commissioner of navigation shall make such regulations, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as he may deem expedient for the nationalization of all vessels owned by the inhabitants of Porto Rico on the eleventh day of April, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, and which continued to be so owned up to the date of such nationalization, and for the admission of the same to all the benefits of the coasting trade of the United States ; and the coasting trade between Porto Rico and the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts of the United States.

By an Act in reference to Hawaii approved April 30, 1900, it is provided :

That all vessels carrying Hawaiian registers on the twelfth day of August, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, and which were owned bona fide by citizens of the United States, or the citizens of Hawaii, together with the following named vessels claiming Hawaiian register——

Naming the vessels.

—shall be entitled to be registered as American vessels, with the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto, and the coasting trade between the islands aforesaid and any other portion of the United States, shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts.

They have extended their coasting laws half way across the Pacific and taken in the Hawaiian Islands. Later on they secured possession of the Philippine islands, at the antipodes, many many thousand miles away, and in spite of the fact that their tariff law is as stringent against the Philippine islands as against any other country except for a preference of 25 per cent, and in spite of the fact that they require the Philippine islanders to sell them hemp without the tax of $7.50 a ton, which is charged upon hemp sent to Canada, they have extended the coasting laws of the United States half way around the world to embrace the Philippines. Are we then to be told in Canada that we cannot adopt a policy to encourage Canadian ports and the shipment of Canadian goods by Canadian lines for fear of offending the United States of America ? Let me read the Act in reference to the Philippine islands, and I will ask members of the House to pay particular attention to section 2. It is Bill No. S 2259, United States Congress, and is as follows :

Be it enacted that on and after July 1st, 1905, no merchandise except supplies for army and navy shall be transported by sea under penalty of forfeiture thereof, between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine archipelago directly or via a foreign port or for any part of the voyage in any other vessel than a vessel of the United States.

On section 2.

That on and after July 1st, 1905, no foreign vessel shall transport passengers between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine archipelago either directly or by way of a foreign port under a penalty of $200 for each passenger so transported and landed,

In other words, if a Canadian vessel should carry any passengers or freight from a port in the United tSates, to the Philippine islands, one of the possessions of the United States, that freight would be liable to forfeiture, and the boat to a fine of $200 for each passenger carried.

By the Cuban customs regulations, 1901, it is provided: that coastwise trade can only be exercised by Cuban vessels or those of the United States, so far as it relates to the transportation of merchandise.

That, Sir, is the legislation of the United States of America. The United States of America have built themselves up largely because they believe in themselves, are proud of their country and dare to legislate for their country irrespective of what other countries think or do.

We have to a somewhat limited extent adopted this policy of giving a preference to Canadian seaports. In item 608 of the tariff tea and ground coffee imported direct from the place of production, and tea and ground coffee purchased in bond in the United Kingdom are admitted free, otherwise a duty of 10 per cent is charged upon them. In item 87 of the tariff, salt from the United Kingdom or any British possession is admitted free, otherwise there is a duty varying from 5 to 7½ cents per 100 pounds. In the treaty with France we provide that the goods must be transported direct from France to Canada and not by way of any other country. To that extent we have adopted this policy. It is legislation it seems to me, along the right lines, legislation along Canadian lines, to build up Canada, to build up Canadian seaports. We have gone a long distance towards giving a preference to the motherland; let us in giving a preference to the motherland, give a preference to the ports of the Dominion of Canada and let us while we say 'Canada for the Canadians' adopt the policy of 'Canadian seaports for Canadian imports.'

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance(. I am glad my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has to-day brought forward this motion of which he gave notice some time ago, not that I expect that it can be adopted immediately as part of the budget of this year,—and I do not suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) now expects that,—but I feel that it is a subject on which discussion may do much good. It is a subject on which there is need of education, not only outside of the House, but, possibly inside the House. I am aware that possibly, from some points of view, objections may be raised to the motion of my hon. friend. But, for my own part I am heartily in favour of it, and, if he decides to divide the House upon it, I shall have pleasure in giving my vote in support of the motion. For the purposes of the present budget and the present condition of affairs we cannot deal with it. But I hope there will be such an educational movement on the question that, at no distant day, we may adopt it as part of our practical legislation. If that can be done at no distant day no one will rejoice more than I shall.

I think that the reasons my hon. friend has given in support of his motion are strong, and I believe that the more the subject is discussed, the more likely we are to reach the conclusion that he has reached after so much consideration. So, while I do not say that his motion will receive the assent of the House, to take effect at once, it is a move in the right direction. Even if it is not received with unanimous approval, as I would desire to see it received, I trust that the time will soon come when we may accept it as part of a thoroughly national policy. But it is certainly a subject upon which discussion is desirable and education is necessary. I congratulate my hon. friend upon having given it the attention he has, and I repeat that, if it is necessary for his purpose to divide the House upon it, I will cordially vote in support of the motion.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is certainly cheering to see the Minister of Finance condemning himself and his government—for that is what his speech amounted to. He and his colleagues have had, and now have, power in their hands to carry out the spirit of this motion, and yet they have failed to do it. He admits the injustice done to Canada, and declares that he knows that wrong is done, but only says that if the House will give its sanction he does not know but that he will deal with it in the future. But, though they have had it in their power to do justice in Canada they have refrained from doing it. What their reason may be is not known to us—it is for those hon. gentlemen to explain. And it seems to me that the hon. member (Mr. Logan) who moved this motion is also worthy of censure. He has had this notice of motion on the paper for weeks. What would naturally be his object in putting it on the paper but to bring the attention of the government and of this House to the need of the change he proposes, with a view to having the government deal with it in connection with the tariff? Had it been brought forward in time, and a favourable expression of opinion from the House secured, the Finance Minister might fairly have been expected to take note of it and act upon it when he brought down his budget. But the hon. gentleman, though putting a notice upon the paper seems to have allowed the time to pass, and did not bring it forward until now after the budget speech has been delivered. And then the minister congratulates him on what he has done and declares that if the hon. gentleman presses his motion to a division he will vote for it. That is a wonderful admission on the part of the government, and a most amusing one. I am glad to notice that at last, though late, there are some members on that side who are not prevented from expressing their views on this question by fear of offending the United States. This everlasting cringing to the United States that we have had exemplified by members of the Reform Party during the whole time that I have been in this House, now twenty-six years, has been humiliating to every Canadian, and, if possible, more humiliating to representatives of Canada in this House. When any matter of a similar nature to this was brought before the House and it was recommended that we should take practical steps, what was generally the answer from the other side? These hon. gentlemen told us not to exasperate the Americans or the Americans would retaliate. For twenty years we were told that by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in regard to our proposal to prevent the Americans taking away our logs, but to compel them to manufacture them into lumber on this side. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) told us that the Americans would retaliate, that they would double the lumber duties, that they would prevent us from marketing our lumber—in fact that they would destroy us if we attempted to stand up for our own interest. And we have the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) declaring that the whole trend of the Conservative policy was to keep the Americans in a state of annoyance and so prevent us from securing a reciprocity treaty. And we were assured that the sunny ways of the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when brought to bear upon the obdurate hearts of the Americans, would cause them to see the selfishness of their ways and amend. And that right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) signalized his entrance into office by the declaration that, to soften the hearts of the Americans and secure a reciprocity treaty, he was willing to give away all our fishing privileges on the Atlantic. But there was a sudden and unexpected howl from the maritime provinces, and we have heard nothing more of the right hon. gentleman's proposal since then. But he did everything possible to please the Americans; the commission went into Washington to soften their hearts and bring them to a sense of their duty. But it was found to be labour in vain, like washing a nigger to make him white. At last we have come to the conclusion that it is better to look after ourselves. I often asked myself when we might hope the hon. gentlemen opposite would reach that conclusion, and they seem to have awakened to the truth at last. What are hon. gentlemen sent here for? Not to legislate for the United States, but to legislate for Canada.

I am glad that one member on that side has at last found courage to declare that he is in favour of looking after the interest of Canada in this matter. It would be amusing, if it were not humiliating, to hear the answer of the Minister of Finance. That hon. gentleman says he will vote for the motion. He will vote in favour of doing a thing that he could have done by legislation long ago. The people will understand that, and they will judge of the hon. gentleman's sincerity.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) who has just resumed his seat has always a way of his own in a debate of this kind. In his speech he did not refer to the advantage that would accrue to Canada from the adoption of the policy enunciated in this resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. I took it for granted that no member of parliament was so wanting in common sense that he would for a moment doubt the advantage of it.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I am glad that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is in favour of this resolution. The objections to it that he raises might be removed by passing a Bill only to take effect from a certain time. We have the Intercolonial to St. John, and also from Montreal to Halifax, and we have in prospect, at no distant day, that great railway that is going to run from ocean to ocean. And we expect that in the winter season the trade of China and Japan to Britain and other European ports will go over that line, and that the trade from Great Britain and the continent of Europe to Oriental countries will also pass over it. But that is a question that we may leave to the future. We can be in favour of building up our own ports, the ports of Quebec and Montreal in summer and of Halifax and St. John in winter; and I think we should all agree as one man to support this resolution, to take effect at some time that would not be detrimental to the present budget or its operation in any way. I am certainly in favour of this resolution, and I hope that some good will come out of it at no distant date.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). It appears to me that this matter is of too much importance to be relegated to any single private individual of the House. When you begin by law to say that nothing shall be imported into Canada from Great Britain except it comes through Canadian ports, it is too violent an interference with traffic to meet with my approval on so sudden a presentation of the case. I think the people who have their money invested in steamships and railways and who are prepared to bring goods and deliver them in Canada at the cheapest price, are entitled to some consideration, and so are the consumers of this country. If we by law force all dutiable goods from Great Britain to come by Canadian ships and through Canadian ports, it will unquestionably have the effect of increasing the value of those goods to the consumers. I say it is a matter of too much importance to be considered so hastily, and I assume that before a change of such magnitude is made it will be brought in by the government itself.

Mr. W. R. BROCK (Centre Toronto). I had hoped to get through with this session, Mr. Speaker, without your having to hear my voice, but we have had such an exhibition of insincerity on the part of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that I cannot keep silent any longer. When the Finance Minister was advocating the building of a railroad from the Northwest down to the sea-board he assured gentlemen on this side of the House that the patriotism of Canadians would lead them to send their goods to Canadian ports in preference to American ports. The present exhibition will confirm the opinion that there is no sincerity whatever in any of the motions brought up by gentlemen on that side of the House. I can tell the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Logan) that many merchants bring all their goods to this country through Canadian ports, and do not allow their goods to come through United States ports so far as they can help it. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) says the effect of this resolution will be to make goods dearer. All I can say is that I bring all the goods I can to this country through Canadian ports, and I manage to compete with other people pretty well.

Mr. HEYD. I did not say it made them dearer, but it would make them dearer if they were compelled by law to come through Canadian ports.

Mr. BROCK. I am sure the Finance Minister will give me credit for patriotism, not that I think it makes much difference, but because the Finance Minister has insisted that the farmers of the Northwest will be induced by patriotism to bill their grain to Canadian ports.

Mr. FIELDING. Where the rates are equal. That is not a very strong call on their patriotism.

Mr. BROCK. I think the hon. minister will require to hedge a good deal before he gets through. But I just wished to draw the attention of the House to this most remarkable exhibition. I think the country will see it and I know this House will see it—that there is no sincerity on the other side of the House. This notice has been long enough on the order paper to allow the Finance Minister to take note of it and to have made it a part of his budget speech; but it has been put off now so that the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) who certainly deserves a certain amount of credit for it, might get the credit of bringing it up himself. I would like to see him take hold of it with the same energy that he manifested with regard to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific to Moncton. In that case he forced the government at the point of the bayonet to fall in with his wishes; why should he not now be just as sincere in favour of Halifax and St. John as he was in favour of Moncton? Simply because he wanted, I suppose, to make a little political capital out of it. But if he is going to make political capital out of anything of that kind, there must be a little more sincerity than there is in this present motion.

Mr. JOHN W. DANIEL (St. John city). shortly after the opening of this session, I noticed that this resolution was placed upon the order paper, and I have been patiently waiting for the hon. member to move it, because I understood that no one else could bring in a motion on the same line until this one had been disposed of. I must say that I agree with the hon. gentleman who has moved it, and I regret that it has been kept back until after the budget speech was delivered. I understood from the remarks of the Finance Minister that in case this resolution was carried by a majority of the members of the House he was prepared to introduce legislation to carry it out. Am I mistaken in my understanding?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say that. I said it was a matter that needed to be discussed before any action was taken. I said if it was proposed to put the scheme into operation at once I could not support it, but I would support it if it were proposed to bring it into effect at an early date. I did not say anything with regard to legislation at this session.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the minister prepared now to say whether, in case this resolution is passed by a majority of this House, he will introduce legislation to give it effect?

Mr. FIELDING. We will consider that when it comes.

Mr. DANIEL. I congratulate the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) on the manner in which he has brought forward arguments in favour of this resolution. So far as the city I represent is concerned, I feel it would be a very great advantage indeed to the port of St. John if this resolution were adopted and carried into effect by legislation. During last year, the exports from the port of St. John, totalled $15,364,735, while the imports only amounted to $5,658,281. Some mention has been made of the rates at which freight is carried both by land and sea. I would like to state, Mr. Speaker, that a reduction of the rates over the ocean can only be effected by having full cargoes both ways. In the winter, steamers got out from St. John with full cargoes but they come back with very small cargoes. That trouble is gradually lessening, but at the same time the business is still too one-sided. In order to have a lower freight rate, which would at the same time be a paying rate, for steamers as well as for railways, there must be cargoes both ways. We have heard complaints from time to time that the Intercolonial has not been paying, and there have also been complaints that the Canadian Pacific Railway has not been doing a paying business from the port of St. John. If this resolution were carried into effect, there is no doubt in the world that the increase of business would be so great, both for the Intercolonial and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and their connections in the maritime provinces, that the era of deficits, at least so far as the Intercolonial is concerned, would be brought to a speedy close.

The hon. member for Cumberland has spoken of the views which Canadians generally should entertain in regard to building up of all the ports of Canada. We are all interested, apart from where we may happen to live, in this matter because the success of one part of Canada tends to increase the success of the whole. There is no doubt that the St. Lawrence ports of Montreal and Quebec are equally interested in the successful carrying out of this proposition with the ports on the Atlantic sea-board. Its advantages are not altogether confined to the ports of Halifax and St. John. There are other fine ports which, as business comes to them, will increase and the carrying out of this proposition will be a decided advantage to the sections of the country interested in these ports. I do not think there is any argument in regard to the possibility of offending the United States. As a matter of fact at the present time we are treating the United States in a far more friendly way than they are treating us. We are taking from them a much greater proportion of imports than we are exporting to the United States. We have kept our tariff low against the United States while their tariff is high against us. So that, without any further remarks, I hope that the hon. gentleman who has introduced this resolution will ask for a division of the House upon it so that we can see what the sentiment of hon. members of this House in connection with this very important matter is. Then, I hope if the reply is favourable that the hon. Minister of Finance, who has expressed himself so much in favour of this idea, will take steps to have the resolution crystallized into law.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). Mr. Speaker, before this debate comes to a close I just wish to say a word or two upon this subject. It seems to me that this is rather a drastic measure, because you are undertaking to say to the merchant how he shall ship his goods whether they be going outward or inward. The merchant has difficulties enough to contend with without having to surmount such a difficulty as that. When we have given a preference to goods coming from Great Britain I would not like to see that limited in any way whatever. Let me give an illustration of how this works on outward bound goods and it will apply equally well to goods coming into this country. In our section of the country we buy large quantities of pease and rye. We get just as large a quantity of these goods into our warehouses to ship before the close of navigation as we can. The moment navigation closes, down goes the price of grain two cents a bushel as a general thing. A few years ago when we were buying pease and rye the price dropped as usual at the close of navigation. Within a fortnight after the close of navigation arrangements were made so that we could ship our grain by rail to Boston and ship it from that port. We got a lower rate than we ever got before. The consequence was that we increased the price that we were paying to our farmers by two cents a bushel and we gave them the same price that they were getting before navigation closed. If a law had been passed obliging us to export our goods by Canadian ports the farmers would have lost two cents a bushel on every bushel of pease and rye that we purchased after the close of navigation. I wish to draw the attention of the House to this, and I also desire to point out, that this is a matter that will work both ways. It applies to exports and it implies to imports. I would like to consider this proposition very carefully before supporting it. I go for taking the shackles off trade and relieving trade just as far as you can from any of its difficulties because I believe that the freer we are in our intercourse, the better it will be for us. Something has been said about the way the United States treats us and the way we treat the United States. How did we treat the United States last year when they took the duty off coal ? Did we do the same thing ? We kept it on; they took it off. I have nothing further to say at the present time.

Mr. GEO. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, we find in the ranks of the government party that there is still one free trader. I doubt if there is another one.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Mr. Ross).

Mr. FOWLER. I question very much about that hon. gentleman. I think that his party fealty is too strong. But, we have one hon. gentleman who is a free trader.

He does not seem to realize just what this debate is about. He talks about the importation of pease and rye in connection with the preferential tariff. However, it is not a very unusual thing to find a Liberal member of parliament not knowing very much about the subject of the debate. I was very much surprised that the hon. minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) did not give us some reason he was so much in favour of this resolution which we are discussing and why he did not include this in his budget when he brought it down to this House. The hon. gentleman has expressed himself as very strongly in favour of this proposition, he is prepared to vote for it, but he gave us no reasons why he was not in favour of it when he brought down his budget proposals to this House? Why is it? What is the explanation of this sudden conversion? Has the light suddenly burst upon the hon. gentleman's mind? Has he only been converted since hearing the speech of the hon. member for Cumberland which was a very good speech although there was nothing in it in the way of inspiration? Is it only since he heard the speech of the hon. member for Cumberland that he has become so strongly in favour of the proposition contained in this resolution? It seems to me that if the hon. gentleman had not been trying to commit a patent fraud—I use the word not in its offensive sense—upon the country he would have given us some reason why he was compelled to forego the carrying out of the desire of his heart, some reason which prevented him from bringing in this proposal in his budget speech. Now, Sir, for my part I would like to hear some reasons given why this proposition should not be adopted by this parliament. I think the reasons given by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) and for South Renfrew (Mr. Wright) why this proposition should not be adopted were not such as to commend themselves to this House. This it seems to me would be a simple matter of justice to the ports of this country applying more particularly as it does to the Atlantic ports. If the necessary facilities are not to be found at these ports now for the proper handling of this trade the government which has so much money to spend, which has so many millions to fritter away in little works where they are of no use to the general public might spend some of these millions to provide the ports of Halifax, St. John, Montreal and Quebec with the necessary facilities for handling this trade, and if it does it will be doing more for the benefit of the country than by giving away this money to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. That is the view which I have taken of this question and I say that we in the maritime provinces who have made very great sacrifices for the benefit of Canada are entitled to some return and if the hon. Minister of Finance had at heart the welfare of the maritime province from which he comes he would do more than express his opinion as to this proposition; he would crystallize this resolution into such legislation as would bring about the end desired.

Mr. FOWLER.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) has failed this time, as he has failed at other times, to rightly appreciate the sense of the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the attitude of the government upon this question. I am not at all surprised at this and I do not think he himself is surprised; I am afraid it is a constitutional defect with him. He saw at once the shadow of the United States falling on the path of this question. That is not where the difficulty lies.

Mr. SPROULE. I was only referring to the argument of the hon. member (Mr. Logan) that we should not refrain from doing this for fear of the United States. That is an argument which should not be used in this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well we have tried sunny ways with the United States and we have failed, and we have adopted another method which has not been appreciated by gentlemen on the other side. The moment we found that our efforts for friendly trade relations with our neighbours did not materialize, and that our sunny ways had no effect on them, we thought we would try another policy, and we resolved among other things to build a transcontinental railway which would have the effect of increasing our trade to and from Great Britain over Canadian routes. Upon the general principle of this resolution there cannot be any difference of opinion. Even my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Wright) does not dissent from the proposition involved in the motion, and the argument which he adduced simply was, that until we had more accommodation for shipping in our ports we had to use Boston and other American ports. In my judgment at all events, the way to have better facilities and accommodation in our own harbours, is to turn as far as possible all our trade to these harbours. But there is another side to this question, and it is one which my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) does not appreciate. The hon. gentleman does not appreciate that this is a business government—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman does not appreciate that we look before we leap, and that we try to ascertain where we will land before we attempt to jump. There is no doubt whatever that at present the trade of Canada is every day running more and more into Canadian channels. The importations via the United States are less this year, and my information is that they are constantly decreasing all the time. The wholesale merchants bring almost all their importations to Canadian harbours, and according to the statistics of this year out of our total importation from Great Britain only a little over 30 per cent went to American ports. It was not so some few years ago. The day is not far distant, and my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) remembers it, when more than half of all the imports into Canada came by American ports We have been able through several successive years to change this, and to cause more imports and more exports to go and come through Canada. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) knows perfectly well that while at present most of the wholesale houses import through Canadian harbours, I understand that the retail business in Toronto, and Montreal, and London and Hamilton, is still largely done through United States ports. The retail houses wish to have their orders filled in a hurry; they cable for their goods and they give instructions to send them by the cheapest—not by the cheapest, but by the quickest route—so that they may have them at the earliest opportunity. This is a circumstance which we have to look into. I think it is possible even in that case to force trade into Canadian channels. By giving due notice to importers of all classes, that they will get the British preference if they send their importations by way of Canada, we should, I think, accomplish that. But, if without giving notice of the policy which the government intend to pursue on this question, we at once adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), there probably would be a greater deal of disturbance caused in certain lines of business. Far better is it that there should be no disturbance of that kind, and that such contemplated changes should be duly heralded so that all parties may take notice of it and act accordingly. Therefore, I think it is quite proper that this discussion should take place, and that all parties should understand that the government would be actuated and guided by it, as to what its future course should be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). This is not the first we have heard of this proposal. Did not my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) give notice of it last year, and if I remember correctly the year before. At all events the matter was before the House last year, and although the discussion upon it was imminent on many occasions, it has not been brought forward until now. The right hon. the Prime Minister has treated us to some rather unusual statements. His Minister of Finance told us at once that he was absolutely in favour of this motion, and the Prime Minister says the government will be in favour of it at some future time, because it is a business government and must make inquiry. But the Minister of Finance being in favour of it at once, he therefore cannot be a business minister. Possibly, however, the Minister of Finance is in favour of the motion and in favour of not acting upon it. Perhaps in that way his position can be reconciled with that of the right hon. gentleman. Although this question has been before the House for years and although it is now brought before the government by one of its most prominent supporters from the maritime provinces, it is remarkable there has not been an opportunity long before this to make the inquiry to which the right hon. gentleman refers. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is so impressed by the advantages of this motion, that he is ready to vote for it to-day, even if the House is divided, and even, I suppose if the Prime Minister votes against it. If the Finance Minister has been so much impressed with the advantages of this policy, it does seem a little remarkable that we have had the discussion postponed until this late date, and that the government have not yet made that inquiry which the Prime Minister says is necessary. One would think that a measure such as that proposed would not create any great disturbance of trade, and I certainly believe it would be very much in the interests of the maritime provinces. But I would be inclined to go a little further than my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan). I do not see any reason why we should restrict the enactment to goods entered under the preferential tariff. If the principle is good, and the Minister of Finance says it is, why should we not simply provide that goods imported through Canadian ports whether under the preferential tariff or otherwise, should have more favourable treatment, so far as our customs tariff is concerned than if they came through United States ports. That would be dealing with the matter from a general standpoint, and would not be restricting the operation of the proposal to a certain class of imports. If it is advisable to make this discrimination with regard to goods imported from Great Britain, why should we not make exactly the same discrimination in regard to goods imported from Germany, or from France, or from Belguim, or any other country? If the principle is good, and the Minister of Finance thinks it is, so far as British trade is concerned, why is it not equally good so far as trade from other countries beyond the sea is concerned? The same object is to be achieved, viz.: the building up of our Canadian ports by bringing importations to this country through them. I would think that the motion should not stop short of that point.

I submit further for the consideration of the government that if they really do intend to deal with this subject, and not simply to allow this motion to pass as a mere matter of form, the government would simply have one of two alternatives; either to carry out the declared will of parliament or to resign. It will only take about four words in the tariff Act to carry out what my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) suggests and it can be done in five minutes by any ordinary draughtsman. I do not understand that this is a matter upon which the government is not to have a policy ; I do not understand that this is a matter upon which the Finance Minister can vote one way and the Prime Minister another, and that the cabinet can leave the matter absolutely free to be dealt with, or not to be dealt with at all. If this House declares in favour of the resolution of my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) or if my suggestion is carried out, the tariff ought to be amended at once, and it can be done by the insertion of two sentences in the Customs Act. I do not think this is a subject with which we should play by way of passing a motion, which may mean something or mean nothing. If the words of the Finance Minister mean anything, they mean that the chief financial exponent of the government is in favour of a policy that can be put into force in the simplest possible way during the present session. That is the position in which the matter presents itself to my mind.

My right hon. friend the Prime Minister says that the government has tried sunny ways with the United States, and it has failed. There can be no doubt about that. I do not know that they have tried any other ways up to the present time, because I observe that during the present year, at first they declined to extend the terms of an Order in Council permitting United States vessels to do the coasting trade between British Columbia and the Yukon, but at a later date, on the 29th March, they repented and United States vessels continue to do that trade, as they have done it during the last four or five years. Of course, I realize that there may be certain difficulties that present themselves to the government in connection with that trade.

One of the difficulties which the Prime Minister referred to—the difficulty in the retail trade of Canada—which might present itself if this policy were carried out, would probably not present itself at all if the government had been able to carry out the project of a fast Atlantic service ; because one reason why such a difficulty would occur is the lack of expeditious and cheap transportation from the mother country to Canada of such articles as would be imported by retail merchants, not articles imported in great bulk such as are brought into this country by wholesale merchants. It is very much to be regretted that the right hon. gentleman's government could not have seen fit to avoid meddling with the contract which was made by the government which preceded it. If this government had seen fit to carry out the arrangements then made, it is pretty certain that the fast Atlantic service would have been an accomplished fact long before this, and no such difficulty as that suggested by the Prime Minister this afternoon would have confronted us at this time. I agree fully with what my hon. friend from Cumberland has said as to the necessity of building up our maritime ports. When he informs us that more than $40,000,000 worth of our products went last year through American ports. I think he has placed before the House a very significant object lesson.

Mr. LOGAN. Will my hon. friend pardon me for a moment ? I think I have been misunderstood. The goods subject to the preference which were brought from England into Canada through American ports last year, amounted to nearly $15,000,000. The goods sent from Canada to Great Britain last year amounted to $131,202,098, of which $41,174,715 went through United States ports.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is quite what I understood. I think that is a very significant object lession, and one which ought to make us doubly cautious, in carrying out any scheme of transportation in Canada, cautious that lest this be done in such a way as to maintain, or possibly increase, the ratio of the exportation of the products of Canada to Great Britain and to the continent of Europe by United States ports. I trust that this motion, if the government see fit to permit it to pass, will not be regarded as a mere idle form, but that the government will understand that the will of parliament has been expressed on this subject, and will proceed to carry out that will during the present session by making an amendment of a few words in the tariff.

Motion agreed to, on division.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When will the right hon. gentleman introduce the Bill ?

THE MONTREAL HARBOUR DEBT.

On the notice of motion—

For the production of the document mentioned by the honourable member for St. Mary's division, as reported in 'Hansard' for the present session, on page 2489, suggesting, among other things, that the Montreal harbour debt should be assumed by the federal government.—Mr. Kemp.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stand.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY. I have been informed that there was an understanding that this matter having come up in the form of a question, and the request having been made that the hon. member for East Toronto should move for an order of the House, he was promised that the papers would be brought down. This is of course the last day for moving for papers, and I hope the right hon. gentleman will assent to this motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would like to speak to the hon. member for East Toronto about it. I will give an opportunity to have his motion passed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for East Toronto mentioned the matter to me the other day, and I told him that it might possibly be a motion that would require to be discussed. He said he thought not, because he had asked the right hon. gentleman, and he had understood that there would be no objection to the adoption of the motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think there will be no objection, but I would like to see the hon. member for East Toronto first.

Motion allowed to stand.

OFFICIAL OR PRIVATE CARS.

Mr. TOLTON moved :

For a return showing —

How many official or private cars have been constructed, purchased or acquired for the government since the year 1896. For what purpose each such car is purchased. Whether any and which of the said cars are allotted to any and what members of the government, respectively ; or to any and what departments of the government, respectively. What sum has been expended or appropriated in constructing, purchasing, or acquiring the said official or private cars since 1896. What amount has been expended in maintaining, using and operating the said official or private cars since 1896, including interest on cost of construction or acquisition. Whether such cars are always used for official purposes ; if not, for what purposes, and for what other occasions the official or private cars of the government have been otherwise used during the past four years ? For what purposes and on what occasions the official or private cars of the government have been used since the first day of January, 1900. And by whom each such car was used on each such occasion ; and at what cost, and to what place each such car was despatched ; and how many miles it travelled on each such occasion. How many official or private cars are now in course of construction for the government ; and the cost of each of them. Whether since the first of January, 1900, the official or private cars owned by the country have been used by others than ministers or officials of the government. And if so, the occasions, by whom, at what cost, for what purposes, and under what rules and regulations ? Whether any of the official or private cars have been used by the ministers or officials of the government, or by any other persons, for unofficial or private purposes, since the first of January, 1900. If so, by whom, on whose authority, under what regulations or arrangement, on how many occasions, and at what cost to the country, each car has been so used?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suggest that the motion be amended by substituting the word '1880' for the words '1896 and 1900' wherever these words occur.

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For copies of all correspondence between any department of the government of Manitoba and any department of the government of the Dominion, relating to the selection or survey of 256,000 acres of land, earned by the former Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company, now the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and to which the government of the province of Manitoba is entitled.—Mr. Stewart.

For copies of all papers, documents, letters, correspondence, petitions and decisions of the Department of Railways and Canals in regard to the establishment and running of a passenger train on the Intercolonial between Campbellton and Causapscal, and between Campbellton and Ste. Flavie.—Mr. Casgrain.

For copies of (a) all reports, correspondence, statements, accounts and papers, relating to seizures of binder twine since the 1st of January, 1902, and to prosecutions in respect of the charges ; (b) the correspondence and papers between the several departments relating to all and every such seizure, and to the prosecution of the charges ; (c) all instructions given to any person or persons in relation to such seizures or prosecutions ; (d) the names, occupations and places of residence of all persons employed by or acting on behalf of the government in relation to each of such seizures, or to the prosecution of the charges ; (e) a statement of all expenses, charges or fees paid to or claimed by any person or persons, in connection with such seizures or prosecutions ; and the papers connected with such payments and claims.—Mr. Clancy.

For copies of all contracts for public works entered into by the government, which required the contractors to pay their workmen fair wages, in accordance with the fair-wage resolution agreed upon by parliament in the session of 1900 ; also the amounts of money covered by these contracts.—Mr. Ralph Smith.

For copies of all original monthly returns, reports, statements and other documents, received by or sent to the government, showing the money spent and the work performed on the breakwater at Port Morien, Cape Breton, up to the 31st of May, 1904 ; also all reports, returns, statements and documents, showing the names of the persons employed on the work in each month, and the number of days for which each man worked in each month during the aforesaid period.—Mr. Bell.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 75) to amend the Companies Act, 1902.—Mr. Cowan.

On the preamble.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). When this Bill was before the committee a day or two ago, I suggested instead of clause 1, in the present form, to substitute two other clauses which I then read. At that time it was suggested by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that these clauses might require some further consideration, and since that time I have received a memorandum which in his absence I may perhaps be permitted to read to the House. He suggested that the first clause as suggested seemed to be right, but the second clause which refers to Chapter 119 was wrong, he said that except as to companies formed before August 11, 1899, that section was repealed by 2 Ed. VII Chap. 15. He suggested that I should omit the words 'to prevent' in the amendment which I had proposed.

I have considered the objections made by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and I think that they are perfectly in order and that it would be proper to amend the Bill by substituting one section for the two now under consideration. My suggestion would be that instead of the two sections which I then proposed to substitute for the first section we should adopt the following :

To remove possible doubt it is hereby declared that the expression 'the construction and operation of railways or telegraph or telephones' in section 5 of the Companies Act, 1902, does not include acting as a contractor, in railway, telegraph or telephone construction, and 'the construction and working of railways' in section 3 of the Companies Act, chapter 119, revised statutes of Canada, does not include acting as a contractor in railway construction.

I think this meets the difficulty suggested by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker).

Mr. SPROULE. What is the significance of that change ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under the Companies Act of 1902 it is provided that incorporation by letters patent may be granted to any company for any of the purposes or objects to which the legislative authority of Canada is applicable, or rather extends, except the following :

Except the construction and working of railways or of telegraph or telephone lines or the business of banking, &c.

It appears that these words have been construed as applicable to companies incorporated for the purpose of constructing telephone and telegraph lines, for constructing railways, although they are simply contracting companies. It is in order to avoid that possible construction of the section in the present Act, that the present amendment is proposed, that is in order to give authority to incorporate by letters patent companies to construct railways, telegraph and telephone lines. That is the object of the present amending Bill as I understand it from my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Cowan) and if that be the case then I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. Some years ago we had a good deal of trouble arising through the operation of constructing companys formed for the purpose of building railways. It could hardly be said that the railway corporation formed itself into a construction company, but the same parties as were in the railway company, with one or two others, formed the construction company, and so manipulated the contracts as to secure the government bonuses and everything else possible for themselves. It did not turn out very creditably either to the parties or to the country. And I remember that a strong feeling was aroused against that method of operation. It seems to me that this proposed amendment will allow the formation of these constructing companies ; and, when we consider the possibility of that in connection with the new transcontinental railway, it seems all the greater reason why we should avoid this danger.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I may explain that my attention has not been drawn to any need for an amendment of the law as we have it. My only object was to try to give effect to what I understand to be the intention of the promoter of the Bill. But I have absolutely no interest in it, and have never been asked to introduce legislation of this kind—no representations have been made to the government, to my knowledge, in favour of such a change. I am quite willing that the matter should be postponed and dealt with hereafter if desired. If the hon. member who promotes the Bill is not sufficiently interested in it to be here when it comes up, I have no desire to press it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) wishes to press the matter. But I have heard a good deal of discussion on this subject before, and it seemed to me that this amendment was all the more worthy of attention because of the very important scheme for a transcontinental railway that is now before the country. I do not know whether this Bill is or is not intended to have any connection with that matter, but the circumstances might create suspicion that there was some other object in view than that which was given to the House.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I wish to make it clear that I have nothing whatever to do with the Bill, and that my interference is solely directed to trying to put the Bill in workable form. In order to prevent any doubt arising, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, so that the matter may be fully considered.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not see any possible objection to a company being formed to construct a railway, or a telephone, or a telegraph line. Surely these are things that a company could be properly formed for the purpose of doing.

Mr. SPROULE. In the cases to which I have referred, this state of things was shown: The railway company got a bonus from the government. then they formed a construction company, virtually of their own membership. They built the railway through contractors, but, though they got the bonuses, they did not pay the workmen and subcontractors in full.

Then when an effort was made to follow the matter, it was found that the money had been handed over to a company entirely outside of parliament, and one that we could not hold responsible, because, it was said, they were not the parties who were given the original charter as a railway company. So the parties in the construction company got the money, and those who did the work never were paid. Afterwards, I believe, parliament had to come to the rescue of some of the parties who had not been paid, and had to make provision for the payment of at least a portion of the debt. But the centre of the difficulty was the construction company, and it always seemed to me it was a very bad principle to allow the intervention of such companies. This amendment, being proposed at this particular time, naturally creates suspicion that what was done in past years will be repeated under this amendment.

Progress reported.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—AMENDMENT.

On the order being called:

House in committee on Bill (No. 2) to amend the Railway Act, 1903.—Mr. Lancaster.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER. This Bill has been before the Railway Committee. When it was referred to that committee there was an understanding between the Minister of Justice and myself that it would be reached again this session, if necessary, on a government day. Several hon. gentlemen on both sides have asked me, as this is to be the last private members' day, to facilitate the bringing forward of other orders that stand lower than this on the order paper. If the understanding between the Minister of Justice and myself still holds, and this matter can be dealt with later in the session, I shall be glad, as a matter of courtesy to these hon. gentlemen, to allow this matter to stand. If this Bill is gone into it will probably take up a good deal of time. I wish, so to speak, to appeal from the committee to the House—as the committee has reported recommending that the Bill be not passed—and that will take some time. But I am willing to postpone the consideration of this measure if it can be taken up on some government day.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) had better go on. We may not have an opportunity later in the session.

House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill was referred to the Railway Committee of the House, and they rejected it. My hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) comes here by way of appeal, and I think he should give reasons for his appeal.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have no objection, though, I am sorry to say, it will involve going into the matter pretty fully. The House has already heard me more than once on this subject. I say again, as I said before, that I do not think the Railway Committee are charged with the responsibility necessary to deal with a matter of this kind. I think that the members of the House—the whole 214 of them—are those who should deal with a question like this. It is not a matter of detail, not a matter requiring scientific investigation or the consideration of expert evidence. I presume that it was because, although not openly agreeing with me in this House, hon. gentlemen virtually accept the Bill, that there was a small attendance when the matter came up before the Railway Committee. Hon. gentlemen do not seem to pay the same attention to public measures sent to the Railway Committee that they do to private legislation, for the consideration of which the committee is specially formed and with which, under the rules of the House, it is called upon principally to deal.

Now this is a principle that I want to apply to the railways. I am simply calling upon the members of this House to decide on a question of protection of life at highway crossings where railways cross on rail level in a thickly populated district. Now if the Railway Committee in dealing with this matter had changed my amendment they would have been doing what they contended for, but under the plea of saying that my legislation was not called for, they reported to the House that the whole matter should be thrown out. For instance, the first part of my amendment is that the word 'or' should be changed to 'and.' Nobody in the Railway Committee contended that that was not necessary; yet through carelessness, as I am willing to suppose, they concluded to report against the whole amendment. The committee seemed to think that as the railways were bound to protect the crossings any way, if the commission ordered the protection that would be a sufficient protection. But the law as it stands does not require the railway to protect the crossings that have fences from the right of way up to the sides of the highway, but not affecting the highway at all. I tried to impress that upon the committee, but no attention was paid to my remarks. The gentlemen in the committee argued that because the Railway Commission had power to order protection to the highways my Bill was not necessary, because, if the Railway Commission ordered that protection, the railways would be bound to furnish it. Now the Act as it stands to-day does nothing of the kind. The Act requires railways only to fence or to protect. But the Supreme Court has decided that fencing means merely fencing the right of way up to the highway and stopping at the cattleguards, turning the fences in at right angles to the cattleguards and stopping there. That decision was made last November. True, the learned gentleman who was before the Railway Committee promised us that the case was going to the Privy Council, and that therefore it was not necessary to amend the law now. To begin with, that case does not come within the limits, because it is an Ontario case, and you have to have $4,000 in dispute in an Ontario case before you can take it to the Privy Council. I do not know whether it can possibly go there or not. But we must not assume that the Privy Council is going to overrule a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, nor can we assume that this House will override the Railway Committee, for instance. We presume, as the Minister of Justice indicates, that the decision of the Railway Committee is right, and he told me emphatically that the onus is on me to show wherein the Railway Committee is wrong. A statement that the case of McKay and the Grand Trunk is going to the Privy Council does not do us any good until we have evidence that the Privy Council has reversed the decision of the Supreme Court. Now it was argued in that case that the company had not properly fenced the railway because they had not properly protected the crossing, that fencing does not mean only up to the highway, or else the section was senseless, because it was dealing with the rate of speed and with the question of protection; and it was argued before the Supreme Court that it must have meant the kind of fencing as protecting, because the section was dealing with the rate of speed. But the Supreme Court has laid down that the fencing as described in the Act means nothing but a fence of the right of way as between adjoining proprietors. Now the present law requires that the railways must do that, or else they must protect, but they need not do both. But the Railway Committee paid no attention to that consideration, and I ask this House to pay some attention to it. My first amendment is that the word 'or' should be struck out and the word 'and' inserted. The effect would be to make the company provide both the fencing and the protection. The committee thought that a protection ordered by the Railway Committee in a special case was better protection than a general law, which I am contending for. But I am trying to impress upon this House that as the law stands to-day no matter what the Railway Commission may order you would not have any protection according to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. Now the Supreme Court has decided two things : They have decided that fencing means fencing the right of way and turning into the cattle guards. Every one knows that is not protection whatever to people on the sidewalk or on the highway. In the second place, the Supreme Court decided that protection is such as is ordered by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council now replaced by the Railway Commission. Now even if the contention were correct that it is sufficient to have an order from the Railway Commission, still, unless you grant the first part of my amendment, striking out the word 'or' and putting in the word 'and' you have no protection. The railway company will say : We are only bound to fence or to protect. We have fenced, and we were ordered to protect, but your statute limits the liability to fencing or protection. If we do one or the other we have done all that we are required to do. The statute only requires us to make an alternative for fencing, but not to do both. I do not think the members of this House should leave the law in its present uncertain state. The 214 members of this House are sent here to legislate in what they believe to be in the interests of the people, and they are better able to judge of that than any learned counsel who may be sent before the committee. It is not the duty of a railway lawyer to instruct the members of the House in their duty to their constituents. The contention of the counsel in the Railway Committee was that, if the commission ordered certain protection at a crossing that that was all that was required, and would be better than a general law. I say again that even if that contention were sound, still the first part of my amendment must be granted, or else the railway will not be liable for failing to afford sufficient protection.

I am satisfied that if we had read it more carefully last year when we were in committee for seven or eight weeks on this Bill, many of us pretty well tired of the Railway Bill, we would have understood the effect of it better than we did. I admit that those who were in the House taking part in the discussion upon the general consolidation of the railway law were tired and being urged by other hon. gentlemen in the House to hurry up and get through with it, we did not notice the difference between the word 'or' and 'and.' I would have contended for what I am contending for now had I noticed it. It was a mistake on the part of the House. I think it was a mistake on the part of the then Minister of Railways and Canals. His attention was not drawn to it and he may have read it as if 'or' meant 'and,' or he may have read it as if the word 'or' included both. The word 'or' ought to be stricken out and the word 'and' be put in. It would be more satisfactory perhaps if I should pause and not say anything about the other matter until we consider the point as to whether we should not have the other protection which is provided for in addition to the fencing.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Act as we now have it reads as follows :

227. No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the Board. The Board may limit such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.

The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) is that between the word 'fenced' and 'properly' in the third line the word 'and' should be substituted for the word 'or' which would make the section read in this way :

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced and properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act.

This protection is proposed in addition to the fencing provided for by section 199 of the Railway Act which section provides that :

199. The company shall erect and maintain upon the railway fences, gates and cattle guards, as follows :—

(a) Fences of a minimum height of four feet six inches on each side of the railway.

(b) Swing gates in such fences, of the minimum height aforesaid, with proper hinges and fastenings, at farm crossings.

Then paragraph 2 provides that :

Such fences, gates and cattle guards shall be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway.

My hon. friend proposes that in addition to these fences it would be necessary for the railway company to provide protection in the manner prescribed by the Act because he proposes that the speed shall not be greater than ten miles an hour :

Unless the track is fenced and properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act.

Let me draw the attention of the committee to sections 184, 186 and 187 which sections provide that no railway may cross a highway unless upon leave first having been obtained from the Railway Commission, which leave is made subject to such regulations as the Railway Commission shall see fit to adopt for the purpose of protection. Then, in respect to a railway which is already in existence upon application made by the town or village, under section 187, the board may order the railway company within a specified time to provide such protection as it thinks proper under the circumstances.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you make it necessary for the people to make an application ? Why not have the law so that the railway is bound to take proper precautions without coming to the Railway Commission ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The railway company is bound to observe the law just as all other corporations are ? Section 25 provides that the Railway Commission may make such provisions as it deems proper :

With respect to the rolling stock, apparatus, cattle guards, appliances, signals, methods, devices, structures and works, to be used upon the railway so as to provide means for the due protection of property, the employees of the company and the public.

So that on the whole the provision of the Railway Act is that no railway can cross a highway without permission having first been obtained from the Railway Commission and that permission to cross the highway is made subject to such regulations as the board deems advisable under the circumstances to properly protect the public using the highway. In addition to that if a crossing already exists upon written application to the board, the board will make such provision in respect to any such crossing as is necessary for the protection of the public and the board may go, under section 25, to any length it deems proper and make any regulation it deems necessary. The board has full jurisdiction and control over any railway crossing that is not now in existence as well as those which are already in existence. The board will exercise its judgment in respect to any such crossing in view of the existing facts at a particular place, but if you adopt my hon. friend's suggestion what is the result going to be ? You will require at each crossing a fence, you will require in addition to that the protection provided for by the commissioners under the statute and then you will require a watchman. You will require the protection that the Railway Commission may deem proper to give and then you will insist upon a watchman being added to that.

Mr. LANCASTER. I purposely evaded that question altogether until the question of 'or' and 'and' was settled. Unless we substitute the word 'and' for the word 'or' we will not get that protection that the hon. minister describes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not agree with my hon. friend. My hon. friend's argument is that if notwithstanding that the board orders protection to be placed at a crossing an accident happens because of non-compliance with that order no liability results. I cannot agree with that. If the board orders proper protection to be placed at a railway crossing, and the company does not comply with the order of the board and as a result an accident occurs, clearly the company is liable for the damages which may result.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would the hon. gentleman have any objection substituting the word 'and' for 'or'?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there any harm in it ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have had this up before. We have discussed it at some length in the House. The hon. gentleman is quite right to push the matter as strenuously as he pleases. I cannot do any more than state my views in the committee. The matter was discussed and discussed before the Railway Committee and now he is back here again. I have expressed my view and I cannot change my mind about that. The liability of the company is perfectly clear. McKay vs. the Grand Trunk Railway Company was not decided upon this statute. It was decided upon the previous statute. It was a case decided by a majority of the Supreme Court reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal of Ontario.

Mr. FOWLER. Apart from the words 'or' or 'and' I think there is a larger question as to whether the people of the village or town should be compelled to go before the Railway Commission to get an order compelling the railway company to do what the railway company should do and what there should be a statute to compel the railway company to do. It seems to me that the only objection that there could possibly be to this amendment is that the speed of ten miles an hour is too great. There is too great a danger to human lives occasioned by railway trains running through towns and villages or through districts which are thickly settled at ten miles an hour. In the town in which I live, in which there are 2,000 people and which the Intercolonial Railway runs through, there are neither gates nor watchmen. There is great danger to life, and people have been killed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This would not help my hon. friend.

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr. FOWLER. No, I am only giving this as an illustration. What is true of that town is true of other towns that are crossed by railways. I will take advantage of this occasion to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) to the fact that in the town of Sussex there is no protection. I have seen the English mail go through at the rate of sixty miles an hour.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The English mail ?

Mr. FOWLER. The train coming from Halifax ; rushing across the main streets of the town at a tremendous rate of speed. The thing is entirely wrong.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is always on Sunday when the people are at church and no one around the streets.

Mr. FOWLER. It is only a short time ago that in a neighbouring town two persons who were driving home from church were killed at a crossing. What applies to Sussex, applies to other towns. I fail to see why this provision should not be made statutory, so that it would not be necessary for these small towns and villages to go to the expense and trouble of appearing before the Railway Commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty from my standpoint is that under the law as declared by the Supreme Court of Canada, if a railway company has its tracks properly fenced along the lands of adjacent proprietors, the trains can run at any speed over highway level crossings. Perhaps an amendment like this would meet the difficulty, and I suggest it to the Minister of Justice :

> But unless the board otherwise orders, the speed at any rail level crossing of a highway in a city or town, or in a thickly peopled portion of an incorporated village, shall not exceed ten miles an hour.

Where there are level crossings there should be restriction on the speed of trains, but according to the decision of the Supreme Court there is practically no restriction. The Minister of Justice doubts as to the correctness of that decision, but until it is over-ruled by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or until its effect is taken away by legislation, it will remain the law of the land. There appears to be no limit at all to the speed at which trains may pass over a level highway crossing so long as the bell is rung, and so long as the lands of adjacent proprietors are properly fenced. The fencing of the lands does not help the situation at the crossings, and when a train is running twenty or thirty miles an hour, the ringing of the bell may not be sufficient protection. Some ten or twelve years ago, a very respected old gentleman, a prominent citizen of my province, whose hearing was somewhat impaired, was instantly killed at one of these crossings by a train running at a very excessive rate of speed. In countries which are more advanced than ours, level crossings are not permitted. It is most unusual to find them in Great Britain. In all my travels there I have only seen one or two, and then in the most remote parts of the country.

Mr. CLARKE. And they are protected by gates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are very common in the United States.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are. If we have to permit them here in Canada it does seem to me proper that there should be some restriction upon the speed at which trains shall run over these level crossings.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Representing, as I do, the locality in which one of these accidents occurred, I certainly believe that in justice to the residents there some arrangement should be made to place a watchman and gates at that crossing. I sincerely hope that the Railway Commissioners will take that matter into their serious consideration. The people who were killed in the accident referred to, were driving home from the fall fair; the train was going at a much faster rate than usual, and they were unable to get out of the way. The Ontario courts awarded damages and in the Supreme Court, while one judge upheld the decision of the lower courts, three judges were against it and it was reversed. These people have been put to a great deal of expenses in endeavouring to obtain justice, and in order to prevent such accidents in future, we should legislate here that there should be more protection at these crossings.

Mr. EMMERSON. The promoter of this Bill has perhaps unintentionally, but at all events very unfairly reflected upon the attitude of the committee. The committee gave this Bill fair consideration, and there was no disrespect shown to the Bill, or its promoter. The law now reads:

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act; or, unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board. The board may change such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.

If the law were amended as proposed, it would read:

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board. The board may change such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient; and wherever in any city, town or incorporated village any railway crosses on the highway at rail level, the said speed of ten miles an hour shall in no event be exceeded unless the railway company keeps a watchman at said crossing to warn all persons using the highway of approaching trains.

This matter was considered by the Railway Committee from the standpoint of the Railway Act of last session which has only been in operation for a year, and which made provision for protecting crossings throughout the country. For this parliament to pass an arbitrary enactment such as is proposed by this Bill would create a hardship and would involve no greater protection—

Mr. FOWLER. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court on the construction of the word 'fencing,' will the hon. gentleman say that the present law is effective?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will deal with that in a moment. I was saying that the railway company dealt with this Bill from the standpoint of the Railway Act of last session which made proper provision for restricting the speed of trains in towns and villages. Now he proposes an amendment which, if carried into effect, would mean that if there were a watchman there, no matter how thickly peopled or well settled it might be, a train could go through that town or city at an unlimited speed. The very case which has been cited arose out of an accident that occurred because of the negligence of a watchman. The presence of a watchman is not at all times a safeguard against accidents. There will be accidents although there are watchmen. It is so along the line of the Intercolonial Railway. We have patent semaphores and also watchmen at important crossings; yet accidents occur and people are injured and sometimes killed. But this abitrary enactment which does not provide for adequate safeguards in thickly-settled sections, is to my mind objectionable legislation. Moreover it requires a watchman at every crossing in every town and village in every section of the country. My hon. friend has referred to the town in which he lives. Take an illustration from another section in his vicinity. There is a railway running from Havelock in the county of King's, N.B., to Elgin in the county of Albert. It runs from one point to another in the morning, and returns in the evening. I do not know that it is ever guilty of speed exceeding ten miles an hour; but the Bill of my hon. friend would require that railway to have a watchman at every crossing in the villages through which it passes.

Mr. LANCASTER. If it exceeds ten miles an hour.

Mr. EMMERSON. It does sometimes exceed ten miles an hour. It cannot have a watchman on tap, for special occasions; but it must have a watchman at each crossing during the whole season.

Mr. FOWLER. I would remind my hon. friend that those villages are not incorporated, and therefore do not come under the Act.

Mr. EMMERSON. Some of them are. Take the town of Sackville, which is an incorporated town. The town from which my hon. friend comes has within the last few weeks, I believe, been raised to the dignity of an incorporated town. It would be absurd to say that all crossings are dangerous. It is within the knowledge of hon. gentlemen opposite that at many crossings, even in incorporated towns, there is no possible danger, while at other crossings in the same towns it would be necessary to have protections. Where the view is obscured it is very necessary that there should be protection sometimes even in addition to a watchman. It seems to me, therefore, that it woluld be entirely arbitrary to have a provision such as this, requiring that at all level crossings, within the limits of every incorporated town and village, watchmen should be placed.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would the hon. Minister of Railways agree to the Bill if I inserted in it the words 'thickly-peopled'? Let us see what we are fighting. I understand the hon. Minister to argue that if a place were thickly-peopled, or the buildings were constructed close to each other, so that the view would be obscured, it would be necessary to have this protection. I have drawn this provision on the assumption that the view is generally obstructed in an incorporated town or village. If the hon. Minister of Railways can find an odd crossing here or there where the view is not obstructed as much as at others, it does not follow, because of that unique and exceptional instance, that the railways should be allowed to go on killing people. The hon. gentleman is evidently not keeping pace with the times with regard to the number of accidents that happen. You can hardly take up a newspaper without reading an account of a man being killed at a railway crossing. Railway people may say that he was careless or was guilty of contributory negligence; but that statement does not prevent the accidents occurring. If the minister thinks my Bill too drastic, and is content to have it with the words 'thickly-peopled' inserted in it, I am willing to make that amendment. This parliament has solemnly declared that there should be some protection for people in the thickly-settled portions of cities, towns and villages. That Act has been in force since 1888, and last year parliament declared that there should be some special protection provided. If some such amendment as mine is not made, that whole section should be repealed, because it has no effect; it does not accomplish anything The hon. gentleman says, you can get protection by obtaining a special order from the Railway Commission. If that is so, there is no need of this section. Why do the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways not unite to strike out that whole section. What does it mean? It has always been proposed to provide some general protection to the people in the thickly-peopled portions of cities, towns and villages. I admit that I have gone a little farther by declaring that every crossing in a city, town or village is in a thickly-settled district. If I cannot get that much, let us at any rate do something to save some of these lives.

Let us put in the words 'thickly peopled' and then we will be consistent with the Act as it is now. The Act surely means something. It says that trains are not to exceed 10 miles an hour when passing through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or vilage. That has been the law since 1888, and last year it was unanimously re-enacted by this House. What does parliament intend by that? What evil are they trying to remedy, what danger are they trying to avert? Surely it is the danger of trains going at a fast rate over the level crossings described in the Act. The object of the section is surely that people who approach a crossing in a town or village shall have a right to expect that trains will not pass over it at a rate in excess of 10 miles an hour according to the legislation of last year, or 6 miles an hour according to the law as it was prior to that time. With this section in force people will of course conclude that a train has no right to run at that rate, unless there is some protection at the crossing, and seeing a train approaching at a more rapid rate they naturally conclude that there is a portection and so possibly drive on to death or injury and in doing so, I do not believe they are guilty of recklessness. I appeal to the Minister of Railways; he seems to be trying to do what I am, but he does not agree with my method. Let us see if I cannot agree with his. He suggests that we should put in 'where the view is obstructed watchmen' or something should be ordered if trains are going 50 miles an hour as they are going every day in my part of the country, some protection should certainly be provided. If the hon. minister had been in Grimsby a little over a year ago, he might have seen the public funeral of three young people, who while going home from church were killed at a level crossing by a train going at the rate of 50 miles an hour. The train does not stop between St. Catharines and Hamilton and I am sure if the minister had witnessed that funeral he would have thought that some law was necessary. Our object is not to make railways liable for damages for accidents that may occur but to prevent accidents happening. The railways will not make any effort to prevent accidents or to do anything but make money out of the people, and to make fast travel unless they are compelled to do so. The Minister of Railways seems to agree that where the view is obstructed watchmen would be necessary. Then what is the harm in saying that a watchman is necessary and why should we have to go through the form of multiplying the work of the Railway Commission and having an order issued in each specific case? We have a declaration in the law now, even if my amendment is thrown out, that trains are not to exceed 10 miles an hour in thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages. Surely if they do that some one should be responsible for any damage that may be caused by such excess, or liable to punishment for breach of that law. The minister thinks that where the view is obstructed and the place thickly peopled there should be a watchman. Let the Minister of Railways help me no matter if I am a member of the opposition. We are all Canadians and want to save Canadian lives. Let him help me to construct a statute according to my view. Let him put 'thickly peopled' and 'where the view is obstructed,' and leave it to a court to find the fact. Let him make such an amendment to the Railway Act and it will do more to make him popular as Minister of Railways than anything he has done. It must be remembered that all cities, towns and vilages are thickly peopled. Villages are not incorporated until they are thickly peopled.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does my hon. friend think he has omitted the words 'thickly peopled?'

Mr. LANCASTER. The words 'thickly peopled' are not in my amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Read it.

Mr. LANCASTER. The statute says:

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a rate exceeding ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected.

And so on. And I add:

And wherever in a city, town or incorporated village a railway crosses a highway at rail-level, the said speed of ten miles an hour shall in no event be exceeded, unless the railway company keeps a watchman at such crossing to warn all persons using the highway of approaching trains.

I drew the amendment and I thought I knew what was in it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I adhere to what I said; I have the Bill before me. Why do the words 'thickly peopled' in the first part of the section not apply to this?

Mr. LANCASTER. I said not five minutes ago that the words were in the original law but not in mine.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They are in the section you are amending.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend might be serious; some of us are serious. The Minister of Justice need not think that by quibbling he will knock me off my feet, because I have been in as much trouble as I am now, and have got out of it. I want to treat things seriously and I want them treated seriously. I stated that the words 'thickly peopled' were in the original law, and he objects, because I do not limit it by putting in the words 'thickly peopled portion' in my amendment? But this Bill provides that in cities, towns and villages, watchmen shall be provided at rail level crossings where the speed of ten miles an hour is exceeded. The Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways find fault with the exact construction of the sentences in this Bill, but they tacitly admit that the object is to avoid the destruction of life at these crossings, and that we do not want the rate of ten miles an hour to be exceeded without some one being liable. If the Minister of Justice thinks that because the railways will be bound to do one thing or the other that, therefore, they will be bound to do both, he cannot regard it as of any disadvantage to put in the word 'and' instead of the word 'or,' and then the language of the section will be what we both think it ought to be. If the Minister of Railways thinks that I am calling for watchmen to be stationed where they are not necessary, I am willing to insert the words 'thickly peopled portion of' before 'cities, towns or incorporated villages.' I am willing to accept what I can get, if I cannot get all I want. Let us save as many lives as we can. I am willing, if the Minister of Railways desires it, to insert 'where the view is obstructed.' Those are his words, and I suppose he used them advisedly. If he desires the Bill to be amended in this way, I suppose he thinks that the principle of the Bill will prevail. It is because the view is obstructed in all cities, towns and incorporated villages that this amendment is necessary. In every thickly peopled place the view is obstructed by buildings and the hearing is obstructed by the noises of the city, town or village. Let me tell the Minister of Justice that people who are injured at railway crossings, or the representatives of those who are killed do not wish to come down here to the Supreme Court to have an argument by eminent counsel as to the construction of the word 'or' and the word 'and,' in order to ascertain whether the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) was right when he said that 'or' meant or, or whether the Minister of Justice was right when he said that the word 'or' meant and.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not say so.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then, if it does not mean 'and,' we are not giving the protection that the Minister of Justice said we are giving. What is the use of having anything in the law with regard to the protection of crossings at rail level if the railway company can plead: It is true we have not protected the crossing as the law required, but we have fenced the right of way up to the highway and turned the fence into the cattle-guard, and the Supreme Court has decided that that is all that we have to do—we are bound to fence or to protect, bound to do one or the other—and, so long as we do either, we can kill as many people as we like at these crossings? The law provides that the railway shall run at a slower rate of speed at these crossings than elsewhere. But under the decision of the Supreme Court, in effect, that section does not mean anything; it does not accomplish anything. Because I think the Minister of Justice will agree that, according to his own argument, they are bound to fence, under certain sections, and they are bound to protect under certain other sections, if an order of the Railway Commission is given directing them to do so. What can be the meaning of this section if it is not that at these particular points, these level crossings, they are not to run as fast as at other places? Because it is at these points that the danger is, a danger to which all classes of the community is exposed; the farmer going to market, the labourer going to work, the child going to school, all classes going to or coming from church—for it was in returning from church one evening after dark that these people of whom I have spoken were killed at the crossing at Grimsby. Now, there is another point that I have not yet mentioned and that nobody else, so far as I know has said anything about. And, when I state it, some hon. members on the other side who are now laughing, as if this were all a joke, may think that there is something in it. Suppose that a farmer is accustomed to enter a city by a certain road on which there is a level crossing with a watchman to warn people of the approach of trains. Is it not the most reasonable thing in the world to believe even if he changes his route and crosses the railway at another street, he will, unthinkingly depend upon being warned if the train is approaching? And it is not reasonable that we should make some general rule upon which the people can depend, and not compel a man, when he approaches a level crossing in a city, town or village, to try to recall to his memory whether this is one of the crossings for which the railway commission has ordered protection, or whether it is one where the public cross entirely at their own risk? But that is what this statute will mean if you do not make some law that applies to all cities, towns and incorporated villages. Is there an hon. gentleman here who does not believe that it would be safer to guard every highway crossing in a city, town or village, so that people might know exactly what they have to rely upon? Of course, in the open country, there is not the same need, because, the place not being 'thickly populated,' there are no buildings to obstruct the view and no noises to interfere with one hearing approaching trains. Why should there be a watchman, for instance, at Depot street, in Grimsby, and no watchman at Elizabeth street a hundred yards away and at a point as thickly populated as the other if they were both on the level of the highway? Surely the simplest, most efficient way would have been to have one rule which would apply easily to all places under similar conditions. It is true, that watchmen will cost the railway company something. That was the whole contention of the counsel that appeared before the Railway Committee—that this amendment would cost them money. But they get the use of the highway for nothing, and it seems to me only reasonable that they should expect to pay some toll in order to provide means to prevent people from being killed who wish to use the highway.

While it is going to cost them money to do it, it will not cost people their lives. They say it will cost them $2.70 at each crossing during the twenty-four hours, and they multiply that by all the level crossings in the country, and say that it would cost them a million or a million and a half of money, and therefore we should not impose this costly legislation upon them. But in the same breath the counsel for the railways argued that there was no need of this law, because they were going to convert all their level crossings into overhead or underground crossings. Yet they did not seem to see that the moment they converted the level crossing into an underground or overhead crossing my law would not apply to them. That is the sort of argument you get from railway counsel arguing before the Railway Committee why a public Bill should not pass. They say: We are going to convert all our level crossings as fast as we can into crossings that are not on the level; and in the same breath they say it will cost them so much money to keep watchmen at each of these level crossings, and therefore we ought not to impose that burden upon them. Now, they cannot find fault with us if we accept their own statement. As soon as they convert their crossings they can take away their watchmen. In the older parts of the empire, around London, England, where I was born, you did not find a level crossing unless there was a watchman with a flag.

An hon. MEMBER. But you are a foreigner.

Mr. LANCASTER. I may be, in the premier's opinion, but as long as I am a member of this House of Commons I am going to speak in favour of the people who sent me here. In England these watchmen are either one-armed or one-legged, as a rule, because when a railway employee gets maimed the companies make him a watchman at a crossing—pension him in this way; and so he saves life while he is there, and makes a living, and at the same time the railways become popular with the people, because they do not kill them. Now, this parliament might teach the railways of this country something by adopting this legislation; we could teach them that although they are not bound at present, and would not necessarily be bound if this Act were passed, to employ men as watchman that they happen to have maimed, still if they choose to pension their men in that way they could well do it, and at the same time preserve the lives of the people crossing their railways and avoiding accidents for damages. Now, I want to impress upon the Minister of Railways what I said before I sit down. It may be that I am not advocating this measure in the best manner, it is possible that in my earnestness, and in my desire to accomplish what I think is right, I am not arguing my cause with the suavity possessed by the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Railways. This is not a party question, and I hope that the protection of the people's lives will never become a party question in this country; therefore, I ask the ministers and the House to consider a little further what I have said about this measure; to ask themselves whether, after having put in the words 'thickly peopled and where the view is obstructed,' they have done any harm by this legislation? As it now stands, the legislation is not practical. To say that a railway train must not exceed ten miles an hour in a certain place and yet to say at the same time that they are not liable if they do exceed that rate unless they have got an order from some authority to say that they shall not exceed it unless on certain conditions—that is round-about legislation, and it will give rise to losses and cause trouble. We have here in my amendment a clear declaration that in certain places that are thickly peopled, and where the view is obstructed, they are bound to have a watchman to warn the people of approaching trains, otherwise they cannot exceed ten miles an hour. Then there will be no question that if they want to run their trains faster than ten miles an hour they must employ watchmen.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is only one difficulty that I see with this amendment, and it is a serious one. Would the hon. member say what would be the proper protection required by the Act supposing we substituted 'and 'for 'or'?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. LANCASTER. I will answer the question after recess.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

,Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Speaker, when the committee rose at six o'clock my hon. friend the Minister of Justice asked me if I would tell him at eight o'clock what the effect of my amendment would be. As I understood him, he wanted me to say what protection would be the result of my amendment. My answer is that the effect of my amendment that at all these crossings on the rail level where trains exceed ten miles an hour within the limits of cities, towns and incorporated villages, there will be a watchman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What I wanted to know was if you substituted 'and' for 'or' what would 'properly protected' mean?

Mr. LANCASTER. Without any other amendment?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No other amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. The effect would be that the only protection that there would be at these crossings would be such protection as is ordered by the Railway Commission under some of those different sections which the hon. Minister of Justice referred to this afternoon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You would not be any further ahead.

Mr. LANCASTER. We would be this much farther ahead, that if we did go to the trouble to get an order from the Railway Commission it would have to be carried out, and if the railway company did not protect under that order and under the requirements with the words 'and' inserted in the section, they would be liable. If we do not have the word 'and' in the Act and we get an order from the Railway Commission the railway company would be in a position to say we are not bound both to fence and protect, because we are only bound to fence or protect. We have our fences up to the highway and turned into the cattle-guards, so that we are not liable under the circumstances. With my whole amendment there would be more protection, the railway company would be obliged to protect by a watchman at all those crossings on the rail level where their trains exceeded ten miles an hour within the limits of cities, towns and incorporated villages and in addition they would be obliged to furnish such other protection as in any special case an application was made to and an order granted by the Railway Commission. My law would not affect them at all unless they exceeded ten miles an hour. The Railway Commission have it in their power to keep their trains down in these places under ten miles an hour or else to put on a watchman if my amendment carries.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) was good enough to say that we all desired the same thing, that is to lessen the danger in respect to level railway crossings. I think we all have that object in view. It is only a difference as to the methods to be pursued. It seems to me that the proposed amendment of my hon. friend is objectionable from two or three standpoints. I have already explained briefly in what way, but I would give a farther reason, and it is that it would limit the discretion and power of the Railway Commission. If there is a dangerous crossing, whether it is within the limits of any city, incorporated town, or village, or whether it is through the country generally and it is brought to their notice they have the power to order in respect to that particular crossing the railway company to afford all the protection that may be necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. Can they not do so if my amendment is passed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Your amendment limits the discretion and power and it is inconsistent with the previous provision in the same section giving the board permission to allow an increase in the rate of speed. I have pointed out already that if this arbitrary enactment were to be acknowledged by this committee under such circumstances there would be no limitation to the speed of the train within the limits of any corporation if a watchman were provided. That would be inadequate. The mere fact of having a watchman would not be a protection to the public, and yet it would be a protection to the railway company. If they had a watchman they could put their trains through the bounds of the corporation at any speed they chose. I think that will be acknowledged by my hon. friend.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, no, not at all. That is not the result, in my opinion.

Mr. EMMERSON. According to his proposal it is made to apply whether a portion of the city, town or incorporated village is thickly peopled or not.

Mr. LANCASTER. Suppose we insert the words 'thickly peopled.' That would do away with that objection.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think that would carry it any further according to the argument of my hon. friend. There are many level crossings throughout Canada which do not require a watchman to protect them. Admittedly they do not require a watchman, but yet the enactment of my hon. friend would demand that there should be a watchman there. Under his amendment there would be the privilege of unlimited speed given to the railway companies, and I think the provisions of the Railway Act, as contained in section 25, afford all the protection that the public require in the case of dangerous crossings whether within the limits of incorporated towns, or villages, or cities, or whether outside of the bounds. The Railway Commission, under subsection (a) of section 25 of the Railway Act, have power to make orders and regulations :

> Limiting the rate of speed at which railway trains and locomotives may be run in any city, town or village, or in any class of cities, towns or villages described in any regulation ; and, if the board thinks fit, the rate of speed within certain described portions of any city, town or village, and allowing another rate of speed in other portions thereof.

It seems to me that this is the only sensible way to regulate these matters. You would have, by the proposed enactment, an arbitrary cast iron rule to apply to the whole country. It would be unfair to apply it to the whole country, it would be adding unnecesssary expense and especially in this country where we must recognize conditions and where we must have regard to sparsely settled communities. There are in this country incorporated villages where there are only 300 inhabitants. Will any one say that unless there is some crossing within the limits of that corporation which is dangerous there should necessarily be a watchman any more than there should be a watchman in some of the country districts which are not incorporated. But in that case if there were a dangerous crossing within the municipal limits you could apply to the Railway Commission, and you could have whatever regulation the judgment of the commission would deem it necessary to pass. The same is true in respect to any crossing throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. The Railway Commission is clothed with full powers to require whatever protection they may think necessary. It does seem to me unwise that within a few months after the Railway Commission has come into being, and without our having any experience of the working of the new railway Act, we should now proceed to make amendments. It is not desirable to interfere with the existing law unless cogent reasons are shown for such interference. If this amendment should pass we would take away from the Railway Commission the powers we have given it.

Mr. LANCASTER. No.

Mr. EMMERSON. Most decidedly you do.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Railway Commission have the right to regulate the speed, but what is the sense of section 227 as it now stands ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This amendment to the Act is objectionable for the reason that it restricts the power and discretion of the railway board, under which they can increase, or decrease, the rate of speed as they may deem expedient. If this clause is tacked on to the section it certainly limits the power of the railway board.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the Railway Commission power to limit the rate of speed to less than ten miles an hour ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Under the existing Act the Railway Commission has full power to order trains to run at less than ten miles an hour. It seems to me that my hon. friend has not shown good cause for his amendment. As it is now, and as I think it ought to be, each crossing must stand on its own merits and be considered individually ; from the use made of it; the population in the vicinity, and its danger generally. In legislating here we cannot know the conditions which prevail at the different crossings throughout Canada, and no cast iron rule can apply to all, because what may be desirable in one place might be very undesirable in another. We must recognize that the public interest demands that fast trains must be run If we are to keep pace with the times there must be fast express trains and we cannot have fast express trains unless under certain conditions they have the right to go at speed on rail level crossings. If in the exercise of that right there is danger to the public at any particular highway crossing then the Board of Railway Commissioners have the power to take it into consideration and provide a remedy. Accidents often do happen and we all deplore them, but very often these accidents are not due to trains running at speed. The fact that trains do run at speed is only one cause of accident, a cause we should guard against it is true, but still it is only one cause and we must not forget that these accidents are often due to other reasons.

While it is a disease for which a remedy should be applied, it is not the only disease. Therefore it seems to me that the commission can better have regard to all the causes than this parliament can have regard to only one cause, that is, the cause of speed. I mentioned incidentally that there are many crossings which are dangerous solely because of the view being obscured. It does not make much difference whether a train runs at a very great speed or at a lesser speed. There is a difference in degree, I admit, but the danger is there just the same, and you cannot remove that danger by merely providing against extreme speed. By application to the commission, and by placing all the facts before them, you can have a remedy applied which is to the point, which is suitable to that particular crossing, and which affords protection. I think my hon. friend places too much reliance upon a watchman. I know from my own experience that in too many cases that is not a protection against loss to life and limb. I prefer rather to leave the working out of this difficulty to the Railway Commission, as provided by the Act passed last year. I think this is too early a stage for us to attempt to pass any amendments to that Act. Its operation is the test, and if after its operation for a time, the remedy of the Railway Commission is found to be inadequate, it will be time for this parliament to provide other remedies. But at present it seems to me that no good cause has been shown why we should make this change, and remove from the commission the powers which we have given them in this regard ; because I hold that we would be removing from them, in degree at least, their powers, and would be limiting their right of action for good.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the hon. minister state to the committee any serious accident that has taken place at any crossing where a watchman was provided ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, a great many. The very case cited by my hon. friend—one of the cases before the courts of Ontario—was a case in which there was loss of life, I think, although there was a watchman. The fact of a watchman being there is no absolute safeguard. I grant that it is some measure of protection. But if the Bill became law, the mere fact that the railway company had provided a watchman would of itself be a rebuttal of any negligence on their part, and there would be no remedy against them. Moreover, it would enable the railway company, notwithstanding the provisions of section 227, to run its trains at any speed, whereas under the provisions of the section at present there is a limitation as to speed.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am sorry that the Minister of Railways has said that it is not necessary to consider the section of the Act I am proposing to amend. It is almost impossible to convince any hon. gentlemen who makes that statement that an amendment is right. I have never before heard it suggested that it was not necessary to consider the document you are proposing to amend. The hon. gentleman persists in referring to the provisions of the Act giving the Railway Commission power to regulate speed and other matters entirely outside of the section before the committee ; and I suppose it is almost hopeless to expect the section I am seeking to amend to be properly understood by the committee if there are many hon. gentlemen like the Minister of Railways who believes it is not necessary to consider that section. The hon. minister took very good care not to attempt to explain the section. He does not say, in answer to me, what the object of the section is ; but he says that no good could come of the amendment which I wish to make to that section.

Mr. EMMERSON. I say it would make it worse.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman ought to have been able to tell us what the object of the section as it stands is. That section in substance has been in the law since 1888. It provides that no train shall pass through a thickly-settled portion of any city, town or village at a speed greater than ten miles an hour—it used to be six miles. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council had power to make regulations with regard to railways crossings, and the hon. gentlemen will have the commission deal with that same matter as if this section did not exist at all. If the hon. gentleman's argument amounts to anything, it amounts to this, that because you can get a special provision from the Railway Commission, you do not need anything else. If that is the case, this section should be struck out of the statute altogether. I am inclined to believe that the Minister of Railways does not understand that section, or does not bother his head about it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Pardon me : I read the section.

Mr. LANCASTER. That section contains a declaration of this parliament that no train shall pass at a speed greater than ten miles an hour. We know that other parts of the Act provide that the Railway Commission can regulate the speed at any rate they deem expedient. The hon. gentleman says that if we pass this Bill, we override the powers of the Railway Commission. Now, I propose to show that in that the hon. minister is entirely wrong. As the section stands unamended, it is inconsistent, while my proposed amendment clears it up. As it stands, it is simply an invitation to have lawsuits. One lawyer will say that you must take the whole section and that reading it altogether the meaning is that the speed shall not exceed ten miles an hour, but the board may say that it shall not exceed twelve or fifteen miles. Another lawyer will say that the board can regulate the speed in any fashion and that seems to be the construction put upon it by the minister, that they can regulate it to five or six miles, notwithstanding the statute says it shall not exceed ten miles. My amendment removes all ambiguities and says that in no case shall the speed exceed ten miles unless they have a watchman.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman in his amendment says :

> And wherever in a city, town or incorporated village a railway crosses a highway at rail-level, the said speed of ten miles an hour shall in no event be exceeded, unless the railway company keeps a watchman at such crossing to warn all persons using the highway of approaching trains.

That might be in the suburbs of a town where there are no inhabitants. 'Wherever in a town, city, or village' ; there might be no necessity for it in the outskirts. The section as it now stands says that no train shall pass through any thickly peopled portion at high speed, but the proposed amendment would require a watchman at every crossing in the approaches to a city, even in districts where there might be no inhabitants, and yet the train would be required to slow up at each of these crossings.

Mr. LANCASTER. That was not the point I was discussing when the minister interrupted me. However, if he wishes to discuss that I will go back to it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I wish the hon. gentleman to discuss it and therefore I called his attention to it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before six o'clock I pointed out half a dozen times ; it was necessary to do so because the minister did not seem to understand, that if he wants to insert the words 'thickly peopled' in my amendment, I am willing to accept that. I have said that at least six times, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not again bring that up as a supposed answer to something I am discussing. I was saying that the power of the board for which he contends, is not interfered with in that section. By my section it is made clear that if they exceed ten miles an hour, they must at least have a watchman, and if they have a watchman, they can go as fast as they like if the board permits them to do so. There is not the least excuse for the argument that this limits the power or discretion of the commission. It does carry out what the section says in the beginning. In that is contained the declaration of the policy or the intention of the legislature of this country that as a rule the speed of trains in these thickly peopled portions is not to be more than ten miles an hour, where there is no protection in cities, towns and villages. When you come on with an amendment to legislate out the decision of the Supreme Court which has made this section nugatory, you are doing something in the interest of the whole country, not only by the protection of life, but also by making the law certain and clear. To say that it is interfering with the powers of the board to provide that the rate is not to exceed ten miles an hour, is unreasonable.

How can the minister contend that my amendment is inconsistent with the intention of the section and at the same time not move in amendment to strike out the whole of section 227 is what I cannot understand, because if his argument amounts to anything this section 227 does not accomplish anything and should not be in the statute. He does not pretend to say what it does accomplish, but claims that the law is sufficient without section 227 at all. The hon. gentleman says that this is an arbitrary enactment, and it would not be possible, if this section passed, to more closely limit the speed of any trains. If that argument was good, it must be based upon the idea that this enactment will repeal all the other sections giving power to the commission to regulate the speed of trains. As a matter of fact this section does not say a word about that, but it only provides that either the speed provided for must not be exceeded or else a watchman must be provided. I am not saying that the speed should be left at ten miles an hour, but I am only carrying into effect the law as it stands. The only object is to ask parliament to enact that this provision of the law shall mean something and be practical and effective. The hon. gentleman says there are a number of crossings that do not require watchmen. If he means that there are crossings in the thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages that they do not require watchmen I will not waste the time of the committee in answering him. I leave that to the judgment of members of this committee. I cannot suppose that that is just what the hon. gentleman meant. I assume that what he meant was that there are crossings which do not require watchmen, that they can be better protected in some other way than by watchmen. If so, he is assuming the very contrary of what the statute has required ever since 1888. But the hon. gentleman is careful not to say what protection is better than watchmen. He tells us that the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is not right, but I am going to ask the committee to assume that my suggestion is a good one when the hon. gentleman himself does not offer a better. Minister of Railways, though he be, he has no right to ask this committee to refuse to accept a proposed remedy when he himself has nothing else to propose. But, let me tell him why the watchman is the best way of providing protection.

Mr. EMMERSON. How about gates?

Mr. LANCASTER. If you have gates you must have some one there to watch them and to operate them.

Mr. EMMERSON. Why not automatic gates?

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand the minister to say that some one can be employed to operate them. The Railway Commission may order gates as well as watchmen. I shall not complain, because the public will be all the better protected. But if you have only the one means of protection, the watchman is the best. If you have gates and no one to operate them but the person who wishes to cross you have the gates raised by people who know nothing about the times when trains may be expected. But a watchman employed by the railway may be supposed to know when trains are to be expected—it is his business to know, and we must assume that men will do their duty. Then, a watchman is not inanimate, he is not a fixture. If he sees a person crossing he can call to him, if necessary he can follow him and make sure that his warning is heard. He can continue his warnings until he accomplishes his purpose, which is to prevent the impact of the swiftly moving train upon the human body.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) mean to say that there are no automatic gates that can be used without watchmen?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not say that; but the hon. gentleman will find that the railways would prefer to provide watchmen rather than these automatic gates, as being less expensive. This Bill will not apply to every crossing, because there are many of them in cities, towns and villages in which the railway runs either over or under the highway and in such cases they would not apply. Though the Minister of Railways has not ventured to make a suggestion himself I will complete what I was saying of the advantages of watchmen over other means of protection. The hon. minister told my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Bain) that there was a watchman at the crossings at which the McKay case arose. But, let me tell the hon. gentleman, the railway company had no watchman there. The village of Forest, knowing that this was a dangerous crossing provided a watchman for this particular day, which was fair day, and they knew that there was special danger of accident on that day. But this watchman knew nothing about the hours of trains. And I suppose that he felt that his responsibility was not very great, because he was not employed by the railway and the railway could not discipline him even if a dozen people were killed. The jury found that the train that killed Mrs. McKay and the children was going at an excessive rate of speed, and when Mr. McKay sued he was awarded damages. The rate of speed was twenty miles an hour, and the jury thought, as parliament has thought every since 1888, that that was an excessive rate of speed for the thickly peopled portion of a city, town or village. It was 14 miles an hour faster than the statute then said it should be, which was 6 miles an hour. The jury agreed with this parliament, which called it 6 miles an hour. There was no protection there by law. They had their tracks fenced, the fences turned into the highways, but that is no protection to the traveller. The Court of Appeal of Ontario sustained that judgment, and the Supreme Court judges by a majority declared the law to be of such a nature that it is necessary for the statute to be amended in this House. The Supreme Court expected the Minister of Railways to say: In view of that state of the law we must override that decision by an amendment. The judges stated that the fencing required by the Act was only to reach up to the highway, turning into the cattle-guards. It is all very well to say that people should be protected here, but it is no good to say that, unless some hon. gentlemen suggest a way of protection. To say that the Railway Commission in each case can make an order as they think necessary is no answer unless we are going to say that this section should not be in the statutes at all, that parliament should not make a declaration that the greatest speed should not exceed 10 miles an hour. Formerly it was 6 miles an hour, and Mr. Blair thought 6 miles an hour was a little too slow to make them run, but he did not strike out the section and left it at 10 miles. Now is this parliament going to allow a section to be declared nugatory by the Supreme Court without amending it, or without having the courage to strike out the whole section? I am bound to point out to the Minister of Railways that if he rejects my amendment and does not put in another to make this section practical, he is coolly insisting on a section remaining in the statute that the Supreme Court of Canada says is of no effect.

Now the Minister of Railways referred to section 25 of the Railway Act as to the power of the board. I cannot see why he made that reference. That is a general section giving power to the board to make regulations limiting the rate of speed, specifying the means of protection and so forth, stating in general terms what the powers of the Railway Commission should be in every matter. That section simply gives them jurisdiction in general terms over the speed of trains and these other matters, but it does not have any effect to make my amendment inconsistent. But that section 25 must be read in the light of section 227, and means that, subject to 227, which fixes the rate of speed in cities, towns and villages at 10 miles an hour, the board is to have jurisdiction in all other respects. I thought the minister was going to help the House to do something practical but he has not. Now again, I ask the minister what is the object of section 227? Here is a parliament solemnly declaring every year in a general law that no rate of speed should be exceeded, that a certain rate which was formerly 6 miles an hour and now 10, shall not be exceeded in those places; and yet, without repealing this section the minister would suggest that I add to it 'whenever the board does not allow that rate to be exceeded.' What would the section mean then? It would state in one place that no train shall go faster than 10 miles an hour at those places, but at the same time the board can allow it to go faster if it chooses. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that instead of the minister saying that I have made out no case, there is no excuse for him opposing this amendment. To say that we had better wait until we see what the Railway Commission will do, does not help us at all if the law is wrong. Why should we wait to see whether the Railway Commission will be able to accomplish something that on the face of it we cannot expect them to do? The Railway Commission is not going to regulate this rate of speed at 10 miles an hour. If you reject my amendment and refuse to say that this is the opinion of parliament, the Railway Commission at once, if they know what happens in this House to-night, will say: Parliament does not intend to force railway trains to run at so slow a rate as 10 miles an hour, even if the track is not protected. Take a case where the board would not make any order as to protection would not order a watchman or gates; at the same time, according to the Minister of Railways, they could allow a train to run in one village at 10 miles and in another at only 6 or 8 miles an hour. Now how is that going to work?

A man driving along gets accustomed, when he sees a train so far off, to judge how long it will take it to get to the crossing which he is approaching. To say that the rate of speed is not the cause of these accidents is, in my opinion, not correct. It is the cause of the accident. A man sees a train approaching him at a certain distance, and expecting that the train is moving at the rate of eight or ten miles an hour he knows he can get past it before it comes to the crossing, but if it is going five times as fast as that, or if it is going at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour, he is not prepared for such a speed, and when he attempts to cross the train strikes him, and he is either killed or injured. If so, it is the fault of this parliament and of this government. To make the law reasonable and fair to the people as well as to the railways, you should have a declaration in it—you have the declaration in it now, but it is so construed by the courts that it cannot be carreid out—that the railway companies must provide watchmen if their trains exceed a rate of ten miles an hour. If the train is going at a faster rate than ten miles an hour a man approaching the crossing is warned and protected by the watchmen. It has been said that the rate of speed does not affect the obstruction of the view, but if the view is obstructed the rate of speed makes a difference, because if the train is going at a rate of speed four or five times as fast as the man travelling along the road thought it was going he will not have time to get out of the way. I cannot understand why the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals does not adopt this amendment, and I submit that the majority of the committee, even if the hon. Minister of Railways does not support it, ought to vote for it so as to make the statute workable for the benefit of the people, because, as I have pointed out, the Supreme Court has decided that it is of no effect at all as it stands to-day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Knowing, as he does, the case which took place in Forest, whereby two or three people were killed, I want to ask the hon. Minister of Railways whether he would approve of having a watchman at that point or not ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not familiar with the circumstances of the case to which my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) refers. I can only say to him that the law as it now stands provides a remedy, and that if gates or a watchman are required the Railway Commission has full power to deal with the matter, and it is entirely foreign to the proposition of my hon. friend here to-night. The Railway Commission has jurisdiction over the matter. I have not.

Mr. BLAIN. I think my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) should get some consideration at the hands of the government in connection with this important question. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) has had brought to his attention the very serious accidents that have occurred in different parts of Canada during the last few years. I am not going to enter into a discussion of the old or new law, but I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the government at this session of parliament to make the law so plain that all important crossings in the different municipalities should have proper protection, whatever that protection may be. In the county I have the honour to represent there has been very general complaining in this respect for many years. At the last session of parliament this new Act was passed, but notwithstanding there are accidents taking place in different parts of Canada at railway crossings. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals seems to fear lest the Railway Commission's duties should be somewhat crippled, but, if I am correctly informed, since the Railway Commission has been appointed there have been some three hundred cases submitted for their consideration. They have only been in operation some few months, and I do not think the hon. minister need fear lest these gentlemen should run out of a job. I think that this Act should be made plain. At the last session of parliament the rate of speed at which trains were permitted to run through cities, towns and incorporated villages, where the crossings are unprotected, was increased from six to ten miles an hour. The case of McKay vs. the Grand Trunk Railway Company should be sufficient in itself to cause the government of this country to make such changes in the law as are necessary for the protection of the travelling public. This accident occurred in Forest, Ontario, where three persons were killed. An action was brought against the Grand Trunk Railway Company. It was proven in court that under the law the Grand Trunk Railway Company could not run their trains at a faster rate of speed than six miles an hour over this crossing ; yet the evidence adduced in court was that the Grand Trunk Railway Company were violating the law by running their train that day at the rate of twenty miles an hour in the village. That case was appealed from one court in Ontario to another, and the different courts in Ontario put the responsibility on the railway company and said that damages should go to the family, but when it came to the Supreme Court at Ottawa the judgment was set aside. With that condition of things existing in this country in connection with the railway law, I think it is the duty of the government to see to it at this session of parliament that the law is made so plain that where such an accident as this occurs there shall be some remedy against the railway company. In the town in which I live there are one or two dangerous crossings. There is a movement on foot in the different provinces of Canada to make better highways. While I am not prepared to say that at every crossing there should be a watchman or gates, I do think that on the important thoroughfares, and there are generally one or two in every town or village in Canada, the railway company should be compelled to provide watchmen and gates to protect the public. I think they should do that under the law, instead of giving discretion to the Railway Commission to say whether a watchman or gates should be provided or not. It should be taken out of the hands of the Railway Commission altogether. The law should be made plain that the railway companies should be compelled to put watchmen and gates at such crossings in order that the travelling public may have better protection. I do not think it is in the interests of the public or in the interests of the government that, in respect to any crossing where there is danger, all these regulations should be complied with which are provided for in the Act of last session, that plans should be prepared by the municipality, that profiles should be submitted, that evidence should be produced and that miles and miles of travel should be undertaken, in order to reach the Railway Commission. The Minister of Railways and the government know well that there are important crossings in this country where proper protection should be given. I believe that protection should be given and should be paid for out of the treasury of the different railway companies, and not by the people or parliament of Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand from the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) that since parliament passed the Railway Act, 1903, a decision has been given by the Supreme Court which practically nullifies what parliament intended. The decision of the Supreme Court was that if a railway company fenced its right of way up to the highway, the company was not liable no matter at what rate of speed the trains passed over the crossing. It certainly was not the intention of parliament to have level crossings left without some reasonable measure of protection. It is true that trains run at faster speed now than formerly, but that very acceleration of speed through crowded municipalities increases the danger. That being so, the railway companies who are responsible for the cause of that increased danger should assume the cost of giving reasonable protection at these level crossings. The minister has said, and there is some force in the contention, that the law provides for the settlement of these cases by the Railway Commission ; but the minister must know that there is a limit to the financial capacity of the municipalities, and it is a most unreasonable burden to impose upon them the obligation of coming before the commission whenever they have a complaint to make. There should be some specific provision in the law requiring the companies to give the necessary protection ; but should the companies deem such protection unnecessary then the onus of establishing that should be on the railway companies. I wish I had here the statement of Mr. Wainwright as to the obligations which were imposed upon his company in protecting level crossings, when on a recent occasion before the Railway Commission he opposed the granting of another level crossing in the municipality of St. Henry. Surely when parliament has permitted trains to run at an increased speed of ten miles an hour when it formerly was six, and in view of the decision of the Supreme Court, it is the duty of parliament to obligate the railway companies to give the necessary protection. The Minister of Railways has given no valid reason why the Bill of the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) should not become law. The Railway Commission will not deal with these matters unless its attention is drawn to them. It is unfair to compel the municipalities, the lives of whose citizens are in danger, to come before the Railway Commission with plans and profiles and testimony, in order to establish an obligation which primarily should rest upon the railway companies. It would be a sensible proposition to say that upon the request of a municipality it should be the duty of the Railway Commission to issue an order for gates and watchmen, and that the railway company should be compelled to appear before the commission to show cause why that order should not be complied with. If the decision of the Supreme Court interprets the law contrary to what parliament intended, then it is the duty of this parliament before prorogation to make some provision in the line of the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Lincoln.

Mr. EMMERSON. We have travelled far from the real point at issue in this case. The decision of the Supreme Court of Canada had reference to the question of the negligence of the railway company. Much stress is laid upon the question of fence protection, but in most of these municipalities there is not even an attempt made to fence along the line of railway. While hon. gentlemen have been drawing attention to that, let me draw their attention to the alternative words in the statute : ' or properly protected in the manner prescribed in this Act.' Thus the Railway Act, 1903, makes provision with respect to the protection that shall be afforded.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of the statement made by the hon. member for Lincoln as to the decision of the Supreme Court, how can the minister say that the Act makes any other provision than to refer the matter to the Railway Commission ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The decision referred to does not in any way affect the Act in that particular. The question was one of negligence as to whether the railway company had exercised proper care and diligence under the peculiar circumstances connected with an excursion. That does not in any way condemn the Railway Act of 1903, and more than that, the proposed amendment in no way touches the question that arose in that case. If we adopt that amendment we would afford no other protection than to say, that there should be a watchman in incorporated towns and villages, and that then the railway companies could run their trains at any speed they might choose. Under the existing law the protection required at each crossing would be decided on its merits ; the Railway Commission would hear the evidence and determine the form of protection that should be afforded. Therefore I say that the law as it stands to-day affords the most ample protection to the public. It is much more complete than any general provision which might be enacted in the form proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln. We have the best possible protection under the provisions of the Act empowering the Railway Commission to deal with each particular case as it arises.

Mr. CLARKE. I have listened very carefully to the argument of the hon. member for Lincoln, and it appears to me that what he is striving for is an amendment to the law to make provision that in the thickly settled parts of incorporated cities, towns and villages, trains shall not pass at a greater speed than ten miles an hour unless a watchman is provided. Surely it will not be argued that it would not be a substantial relief to the municipalities to have that amendment made ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The law now is that ' no train shall pass in or through any thickly-settled portion of any city, town or village at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act.' In cities, towns and incorporated villages there are no fences. Other sections of the Act—186, 187, 224 and 25—all contain provisions for protection.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not quite clear what the hon. gentleman's objection to the Bill is, other than that he is determined that there shall be no amendment. According to my short parliamentary experience, we usually first lay down the policy of the law. We have created a railway commission, and have laid down some general principles to govern that commission. It amounts to this, that the hon. Minister of Railways prefers the Railway Commission to legislate on this matter, whereas my hon. friend from Lincoln proposes that this House shall declare, by an Act of parliament, what its will is. I ask the hon. gentleman if that is not the substantial difference between himself and the hon. member for Lincoln.

Mr. EMMERSON. I simply say that what is ample protection at one crossing is very inadequate protection at another. Parliament at its last session delegated certain powers to the Railway Commission, very wisely I think, because that Commission can better judge, from the circumstances and the evidence in each particular case, as to the character of the protection to be afforded.

Mr. BLAIN. Did I understand the hon. minister to say that the provision in section 227 of the Act of 1903, with regard to fencing, in towns and villages, is not complied with ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I mean to say it does not apply in a general way, because not only do incorporated cities, towns and villages not fence, but they are very much opposed to any such thing.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned.

Mr. EMMERSON. How about Toronto, Hamilton and Brantford ?

Mr. BLAIN. I was directing my remarks more particularly to towns and villages. I think I am safe in saying that in every town and village in the province of Ontario the provisions of section 227 with regard to fencing are complied with.

Section negatived : Yeas 24, nays, 34.

PROHIBITION OF CIGARETTES.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 128), to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.—Mr. W. S. MacLaren.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill to explain the features in which this Bill differs from that introduced 12 months ago. I understood that the legislation of last year was to prohibit the sale of cigarettes to minors, but a great many members of the House who sympathize with the prohibition of the sale to minors do not sympathize with this Bill.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. There is practically no change between the Bill introduced last session and the present Bill. The defect in the Bill of last year upon which the Speaker rejected it, was that it should have originated in the Committee of the Whole House. The Bill, however, was the same as this, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

Mr. CLARKE. I was not aware that it was the same.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. LANCASTER. Word for word the same ?

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. That is my impression.

Mr. CLARKE. I had the honour of introducing a deputation of men engaged in the tobacco trade to the Minister of Justice last year. They laid their case before him respecting this or a similar Bill, if I remember correctly. These traders expressed their willingness that a law should be enacted prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to minors ; they do not keep their establishments open for the encouragement of the sale of cigarettes to minors, but they felt that the Bill of last year would be a great injustice to them. The Bill of last year did not give satisfaction to either party, and both were invited by the Minister of Justice to make representations to him, it being thought that by the time the succeeding session of parliament was called it might be possible to prepare a measure that would give reasonable satisfaction to both parties.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Bill to which my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) alludes, was a proposed amendment to the Criminal Code, but unfortunately this present Bill has been introduced on a resolution adopted by a large majority in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CLARKE. Was not the deputation last year in reference to a proposal to prohibit the sale to minors ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes ; under 18, I think it was.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. After the Bill was rejected by the Speaker, on account of an informality, the Minister of Justice proposed an amendment to the Criminal Code making it an offence under the code to sell cigarettes to persons under a certain age, and I think afterwards the minister said that this was not acceptable to those behind this Bill standing in my name, nor were the manufacturers of cigarettes pleased with it. Is that correct ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is correct.

Mr. EMMERSON. The evil caused by the use of cigarettes by minors is recognized throughout the country, and it is beyond doubt that there is a very general desire, both in parliament and out of parliament, to prevent the sale of cigarettes to growing boys. The present measure goes very far ; it prohibits the importation, manufacture or use of cigarettes by any one. I have been a smoker for quite a number of years and I would not feel it a great hardship to be deprived of cigarettes, but at the same time, I recognize the fact that there are very many others, good citizens, who indulge in the use of cigarettes, and, as they think, without any very great injury to themselves. With the permission of the committee, I would suggest a remedy to my hon. friend. I received a letter from a very good friend who is anxious to check the evil in question. This letter, I think, embodies a principle which would most effectually prevent the evil. My correspondant says :

If the smoke debate is not ended before this reaches you, would it do to suggest that a law be enacted whereby no cigarettes can be imported, manufactured or sold in the country as now, put up and sold in packages rolled and otherwise, but in lieu thereof, that cigarette tobacco in bulk may be imported and manufactured and that pure paper for rolling the same in may also be imported, manufactured and sold in the country. That is to say, the boy would have to buy the tobacco and the paper and roll his cigarette before he could smoke it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. He would soon get on to that.

It would be of considerably more trouble to him than now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. He would soon get on to that.

Mr. EMMERSON (reading) :

And the revenue officers could inspect the tobacco so sold and the paper to see that it was free from all impurities. This idea has two points to lessen the evil of cigarette smoking, and would be a law that could be effectually carried out. The dealer would not be in a hurry to wait upon a dirty-faced urchin and sell him two cents worth of tobacco and strip off the necessary paper, and tie it up with a string and give it to the boy. And perhaps the boy would spoil the paper and spill the tobacco in his attempts to roll it. The boy would get tired and so would the dealer. As it is now, the dealer can easily hand over a package or two of cigarettes for five cents. You make a law that would make them both tired and they will soon quit it.

That contains the kernel of a remedy that might well be applied. But, seriously speaking, while I recognize the evil, I do think that the Bill which is now being promoted by my hon. friend goes a very great length, and I, for one, would not feel like supporting it. I was not present at the time the resolution was before the committee. It is true that last session I favoured the resolution. But I did so under a misapprehension as to what it was proposed should follow that resolution.

Mr. COCHRANE. You have had a change of heart.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am always willing to admit a mistake, and I am true to my convictions so far as I can be. I would not give a silent vote on this subject. My reasons for voting against this Bill are that it has too wide a sweep and that the law, even if passed would, in my opinion, be entirely inoperative, because you cannot prevent the smoking of cigarettes by adults, nor would there be any general desire for such legislation.

Mr. WRIGHT. We will try it any way.

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume that it will be tried if the majority favour it. But I do not think it will be successfully tried, and I do not believe in playing at legislation. I do not believe that mere sentiment should rule. There are a good many people, very good people, who are in favour of this Bill. They are actuated by the highest motives, and we ought to respect them. But I think that they are mistaken as to what the law would accomplish. And, because I think the law would be inoperative, the passing of it would be simply beating the air, it would be simply an attempt to play upon sentiment. Therefore, I oppose the measure and wish to put myself on record as opposing it.

Mr. CLARKE. The resolution introduced last year was moved by the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) and seconded by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes). I would draw the attention of the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) to the debate of last year. So far as I can gather from a hasty perusal of the report, the object these hon. gentlemen desired to achieve was to restrict the sale of cigarettes in the case of minors.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To control it.

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, to control it. This Bill is more sweeping than the Bill of last year. It surely cannot be seriously contended by hon. members who support this Bill that they can pass legislation that will be effective in prohibiting the importation and sale of cigarette paper to adults who wish to roll their own cigarettes. I supported the Bill last year to restrict the sale of cigarettes in the case of minors and would be glad to support it this year. But the Bill now before us is altogether too sweeping, as I think hon. gentlemen who support it should see for themselves. Are they going to keep out cigarette tobacco and determine what may or may not be so classed ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And what will become of what is already in the country ?

Mr. CLARKE. Apart from that, it must surely be plain that adults who smoke cigarettes would procure the tobacco and the paper if necessary, and make their own cigarettes. There should be good reasons given before we are called upon to vote in favour of such a Bill.

Mr. HOLMES. I think the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is correct. so far as the legislation of last year is concerned, and the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) is wrong. I believe that the law introduced last year was to restrict the sale of cigarettes to minors and it was along that line that we worked. I will admit that this Bill goes further than that of last year. And, while I am prepared to support this Bill I must admit also that I agree with the members who are opposed to it that it is impracticable to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes so far as adults are concerned. But the object is to get legislation that will restrict the sale of cigarettes. I may say for the information of the House that I have been informed that in the city of St. Hyacinthe they procured provincial legislation similar in character to that which we have been trying to procure from this parliament. That legislation prohibits the sale of cigarettes to minors under certain restrictions. And I am told that the law is effective so far as St. Hyacinthe is concerned, and has practically stopped cigarette smoking there. I admit that this Bill goes further than originally intended, but I suppose it is introduced to meet the wishes of those who are agitating for legislation on this subject. My hope was that the ladies of the Women's Christian Temperance Union would have accepted the amendment to the Criminal Code suggested by the Minister of Justice last session. But, failing that, we are trying to secure legislation that will work out the results desired.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. It is not my desire to deceive anybody as to the legislation last year I was quite sincere in what I said about it, and notwithstanding what has been said, I still think I am right. Of course, I am open to conviction. When the resolution was passed last year, and the Bill based on it was rejected, the Minister of Justice offered to introduce an amendment to the Criminal Code making it an offence to sell cigarettes to minors under a certain age. But, what troubles me is why that should have been offered as a compromise if it was exactly what was provided by the Bill of the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike). And we are told that this proposal of an amendment to the Criminal Code was rejected by the members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the tobacco manufacturers. Unless I am given chapter and verse to prove the contrary, I stick to the opinion I started out with as to the effect of the resolution of last year.

Mr. CLARKE. The objection made by the dealers or retailers of cigarettes was that the person who purchased the cigarettes was not reached by the amendment. They were willing to accept the amendment if the person who, with themselves, violated the law, were required to share the punishment.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. But, if the hon. member for West Toronto ((Mr. Clarke) will allow me, what we were discussing was the nature of the Bill of last year. A good deal of emphasis was laid upon the point, by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) and others, that the Bill sought to be introduced last year was not a Bill for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes, but was a restrictive measure with regard to the sale of cigarettes to minors. I am still of the opinion that the legislation sought last year was identical with the Bill introduced this year.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am bound to say that I agree with the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. W. S. Maclaren). I do not think there is a doubt that the Bill of last year prohibited the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes. What I think has caused the confusion, that it was proposed in another measure to amend the Criminal Code so as to deal only with minors; but the Bill of the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren), for which I voted and am prepared to vote again this session, was one absolutely to prohibit the sale, importation and manufacture of cigarettes ; and it was on the other matter that the discussion arose mentioned by my hon. friend for Toronto (Mr. Clarke). The matter of dealing with the Criminal Code came in as a sort of result of the measure introduced by the member for Huntingdon. The measure of the hon. member for Huntingdon was exactly of the same nature as is before us now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As seconder of the resolution introduced last year, I desire to say that I understand the present Bill is of the same character as that introduced last year. The aim and intent of the Bill was to preserve the youth of the country from the harmful habit of using cigarettes. We had a law in Ontario to prohibit the sale of tobacco to minors, but it was practically useless, as it was not observed in any part of the province; therefore the Bill introduced last year, like the Bill introduced this year, was of a more drastic character and had for its purpose the prohibition of the the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to read a few extracts from the speeches made by the mover and seconder of the resolution which preceded the Bill that was introduced last year. These were the resolutions:

That the object of good government is to promote the general welfare of the people by a careful encouragement and protection of whatever makes for the public good; and by equally careful discouragement and suppression of whatever tends to the public disadvantage.

That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injury to young people, impairing health, arresting development, weakening intellectual power, and thus constituting a social and national evil.

The legislation licensing and restricting the sale of cigarettes has not proven sufficient to prevent these evils, which will continue while the public sale of the cause of the mischief is permitted to go on.

That this House is of the opinion, for the reasons hereinbefore set forth, that the right and most effectual legislative remedy for these evils is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

Now let me read some of the observations made by the gentlemen who moved and seconded the resolution.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. Were the gentlemen who voted last year voting on the resolution or on the speeches made?

Mr. CLARKE. They were voting for the purpose of restricting and regulating the sale of cigarettes to minors. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to read some of the statements made by the mover and seconder, I will try to establish what I said. The hon. gentleman who moved the resolution said this among other things:

I shall only lay before the House a few of the many facts that have come into my possession to show the baneful effect of cigarette smoking upon the boys of this country. I believe that if the injury that is being done were known, there would be a unanimous vote of this House in favour of this resolution or of some similar measure. I hope I shall have the majority of this House at my back, for there are very few men who are fathers of boys but have had more or less cause to know the bad effects of this cigarette habit upon boys.

There is no young man or boy but wishes to succeed in life. All want to get along; all want to better their position; success in life, in these days of strong competition, means honesty, temperance and economy. A boy or young man who has these, with good health, must succeed; while, if he lacks them, even moderate success will be impossible. I think, Sir, we are all agreed that the boy who is addicted to the cigarette habit cannot succeed in this country unless he has a very strong 'pull' somewhere, while the boy who is not addicted to that habit does not require any 'pull'—all he wants is the push, and he succeeds in getting to the front. I have with me certificates from the most eminent physicians throughout the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and all these documents go to prove that the cigarette habit, with the boys at least, is very, very injurious. I think there is no hon. member of this House who will say nay to that proposition. I would be the last man on the floor to attempt to interfere in any way with the rights of the subject. Once a boy has come to the age of maturity, he has a right to do as he pleases. All I wish to do is to introduce some measure that will protect the boys from this very bad habit of recent years—for, Mr. Speaker, it is only of recent years that it has taken such a hold on the country.

Then the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) who seconded the motion, spoke on the same line. He said:

The mover of the resolution stated clearly at the outset that the intention is to reach the young, so far as it is possible, to reach those who are of immature years, those who have not attained their full physical development, those upon whom the evil effects of cigarette smoking are perhaps more apparent than they are on people of more mature years. I contend that the use of cigarettes by children is injurious. We have not only to quote the opinions, as I will give them later on, of a number of medical authorities thereon, but I have taken the trouble to ask medical men myself since I have been in Ottawa and elsewhere as to the effect of cigarettes on children, and they assure me that their use is very detrimental indeed, detrimental both from the moral and physical standpoints, that it destroys the intellect and prevents the development of their physical nature.

I need not quote any more from these speeches because they are filled with similar arguments. The object hon. gentlemen were aiming at is one with which we all must sympathize, that is, to prevent the sale of cigarettes to the children. Those who are in the trade were willing to have an amendment made to the code provided that it punished those who bought cigarettes as well as those who sold them.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to an article published, on 15th of June, by the Montreal 'Gazette.' Without participating in that newspeaper's views on all questions, it must be admitted that it is one of the serious papers of the country. Here is what the 'Gazette' says. The title of the article is 'A Mischievous Measure':

The anti-cigarette Bill has passed its second reading in the House of Commons. There has been a disposition in parliament to treat the thing as a joke. It is very far from a joke, however, to interfere with a branch of trade and the liberty of men who choose to use tobacco to do so in whatever form they like. The Bill not only proposes to destroy a trade and to curtail the liberty of the subject, but if it is passed it will establish a precedent meddling and ill-informed people would advance as an argument for further invasions. Not a word that was said in parliament by the promoter of the Bill justified its passage. It has received no support outside of parliament to indicate that there is even a mistaken general sentiment in its favour. It is not creditable to parliament that it has been allowed to progress so far. It should be dealt with when next it comes up in a manner that will discourage all advocates of such meddlesome legislation, of which the country is getting far too much.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the writer of that article has perfectly defined the situation. This measure tends to destroy an important branch of business in this country. We have flourishing establishments that manufacture that article, and which thereby carry on a legitimate trade. Moreover, that trade has been in existence among us for a number of years. Capitalists have risked considerable means in it, and these merchants would find themselves, from day to day, ruined without they were indemnified for such outlay, for there is no provision against the loss that they would have to suffer.

But the second point, in which the writer of that article reasonably dwells, is that the projected law militates against individual liberty in decreeing the interdiction of the use of cigarettes. If that interdiction were confined to minors, that is to say to those who are not yet sufficiently formed to make use of cigarettes without being exposed to grave risks, perhaps less objection might be found to it. But, I think, the passing of a general law of this kind would constitute an encroachment on the liberty of the subject.

We are at liberty to use all things that providence has vouchsafed to give us. It is not because certain persons abuse thereof that all others should be deprived of using them. Why make the greater number suffer on account of the lack of forethought in the smaller number? Formerly such was the case, but in our modern days that doctrine is rejected. It is to lessen the freedom that the very Author of nature, in according us a free will, allows us to enjoy. The same argument applies in the case of intoxicating liquors. Should every person, all who make a proper use thereof be deprived of it, because there are people who make an abuse of such liquors? To smoke cigarettes cannot be considered an evil, and if our neighbour prefers not to smoke them, it is his own business; but it does not thence follow that he has a right to demand a law for the proscription of the use of cigarettes. We might just as well prescribe the diet that each one should follow at his evening meal, in the pretext that there are people who eat too much, and who thereby injure their health. In pretending that the use of cigarettes is hurtful to some and that, for such reason, it must be forbidden, we might adopt the same line of reasoning in regard to eating and drinking. By such a regulation fine results might be obtained, such as, for example, the amelioration of constitutions and the fortifying of the health of His Majesty's subjects; thus might a vigorous people be formed. But that would savour of the arbitrary. Arbitrary laws invite the public to violate them and no good can result from them.

This is the exact position that the federal parliament assumes, in passing a law that declares that people shall no longer have the right to smoke cigarettes. That is something outside our jurisdiction. Such a law might be violated because it is contrary to the natural rights of each citizen. We have no right to encroach upon individual liberty unless it be for the benefit of the community. What advantage is there for the community in the preventions of those who can smoke cigarettes from so doing? It is arbitrary. As well say that only a certain quantity of meat will be allowed us for eating. It is therefore a good advice that the 'Gazette's' correspondent gives, and it might equally be applied to prohibition. What shows that such laws are not observed, is the fact that everywhere prohibition has been adopted, it has been subsequently repealed. Every one knows that in certain states of the American Union, where intoxicating liquors are prohibited, the law is violated and that there are more disorders noticed than are found in other places where the sale of liquors is under control. Why is it so? Because such laws are antagonistic to individual liberty, and we may rely that whenever a law encroaches upon that liberty it is sure to be violated.

I, therefore, believe that the person who wrote that article in the 'Gazette,' gave the Canadians excellent advice, and I hope that parliament, after having heard the very wise observations of the members of this House and especially of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke)—now that we enter upon the merits of the question—I hope, I have said, that the majority will differ from that which adopted the principle of the Bill at its second reading.

I think that the House, after having reflected on the question, should not adopt a proposed law such as that presented by the hon. member for Huntingdon. It would be the creation of a bad precedent.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I am very pleased to find my hon. friend (Mr. Demers) and the 'Gazette' agreeing in something. The 'Gazette' is mistaken in the statement that there is no interest in this Bill taken outside of a very few. The 'Gazette' would not be as apt to know regarding such a matter as I would be myself. It is not my intention to discuss the matter at any greater length. The resolution proposed last year was adopted and carried two to one in this House. The Bill was introducel by myself, went through its second reading and was carried by a majority of 128 to 52. I am content to leave the matter before the House. I am prepared for a vote at any time.

Mr. HOLMES. I would like just to set myself right. My hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) was right in so far as the nature of the Bill was concerned. It was a general Bill restricting the importation of cigarettes but the whole trend of the discussion was along the lines indicated by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. MONK. I would like to say to my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) that I think he is right about the measure introduced last session.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have a copy of the Bill here.

Mr. MONK. I see that the resolution, after relating to the extent of the evil, contains this paragraph:

> That this House is of the opinion, for the reasons hereinbefore set forth, that the right and most effectual legislative remedy for these evils is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture, and sale of cigarettes.

It was very general. The House was not disposed to vote for such a sweeping measure and I think it is a pity that those interested did not accept the proposition made by the hon. Minister of Justice that the government was ready to amend the criminal code in such a way as to prohibit the sale of cigarettes to minors under the age of eighteen. I voted for this resolution introduced last year by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) and so did the hon. Minister of Justice. But, I was convinced after the discussion that we should limit the scope of this legislation. I think it is a great pity that the suggestion was not adopted particularly in view of the very lengthy discussion that took place last year. I am ready to vote for any measure which will prohibit the sale of cigarettes to minors, and I think an amendment to the Criminal Code would certainly to a very large extent attain the object which we all have in view. The measure is evidently too sweeping to have the approval of the House and under these circumstances I think it is a pity that the hon. member for Huntingdon has introduced it. I for one am not disposed to encourage it though I quite agree with and approve of the subject he has in view.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not claim to have a memory that will recall everything that takes place in this House ; in fact, I am very thankful I have not because there are many things said here perhaps that it is as well to forget. I have, however, a very distinct recollection in regard to the measure introduced last year by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike). It was, I believe, in the nature of a resolution which squarely set forth the fact that the object was to prohibit absolutely the importation, sale and manufacture of cigarettes. Now, that may be a very drastic measure. We have nothing to do now with the Bill introduced last year. We are dealing with the measure that has been brought before the House this year by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) and whatever the measure last year contained it will not have any special bearing upon the vote that we will be called upon to give to-night, as to whether we are prepared now to pass a Bill absolutely prohibiting the sale, manufacture and importation of cigarettes. It may seem a very drastic measure, but if I can gather anything at all from the sentiment of the country as shown by the many petitions presented to this House and also by the vote that has already been given by this House on the Bill which is now before us, on the occasion of the second reading, the sentiment of the whole country is that those who have arrived at a mature age are called upon to give up something that they might desire to practice in order to save the young generation from a habit which everybody admits is pernicious and injurious. That seems to be the meaning of the vote that was given a short time ago and that seems to be the sentiment of the country. I have no hesitation in saying, viewing it from that light, that I am prepared to support the clause of the Bill which is now before the committee and shall vote for it as well as the subsequent clauses if they are submitted to the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I am not caring very much whether this Bill is identical with the Bill introduced last year or not. I am under the impression that it is the identical Bill. But, we have not to do with what was introduced last session. What we have to do with now is what is before us to-night and as far as I am concerned I am anxious that the Bill now before the committee shall become law. Every one in my constituency with whom I have spoken is exceedingly anxious that this kind of legislation shall be passed. I am firmly of the opinion that this is the kind of legislation that the women of the Women's Christian Temperance Union are anxious to see passed through this House. One hon. gentleman tried to make it appear that the fact of this Bill being before the House was merely a joke. I can assure that hon. gentleman that if he had a son, if he had a young boy whose health was undermined, whose mind was being destroyed and whose physicians had told him that the continuous smoking of cigarettes was the cause, I do not think, if he were the father of a son of that kind, he would think this very much of a joke. On the contrary, he would think it something that this country should take seriously into consideration. In my own town the habit of cigarette smoking prevails to a tremendous extent. I do not know that there is a town in the country where the habit of cigarette smoking has made such tremendous strides within such a short space of time. In supporting this Bill I have the sympathy of the teachers, the preachers, and the leading people of my constituency who are anxious that this Bill should become law and therefore I shall be pleased to support it.

Mr. PARMELEE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one or two words upon this subject before the vote is taken. I regret very much that my hon. friend from Huntingdon has introduced a Bill which goes, in my opinion, altogether too far. It does not seem to me that there is any more reason for totally prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes than there would be for applying the same prohibition to the manufacture and use in all forms of tobacco. I presume that everybody practically admits that the use of cigarettes by growing boys is calculated to affect their nervous system and in some cases, if carried to excess, to undermine their constitution and ruin their health. Last year when this question was before the House, I was very much impressed by the dispassionate statement by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Roddick), who pointed out very clearly from medical testimony of the highest character that the use of cigarettes by young people was injurious. But, on the other hand he stated with equal emphasis that as far as the medical profession was concerned they did not consider the use of cigarettes or tobacco in any form in moderation to be injurious to the average man. For my part, I do not believe in the efficacy or in the utility of trying to make men good by Act of parliament. I believe that if boys are going to be trained in the way they should go you should not propose to come here and do it but that you should go into your own home to do it and if occasion needs, spank the boy instead of endeavouring to put upon the statute-book legislation which would be carried out more in the breach than in the observance. It does not inure to the dignity of this parliament or to the respect which the people ought to have for the law to enact legislation of that kind, and I think my hon. friend would have done far more good if he had limited himself to an effort to place on the statute-book an Act restricting the sale of cigarettes to young people. For my part I cannot perhaps set my face against all the testimony but I go about the country a good deal, I keep my eyes open and I fail to see such an enormous consumption of cigarettes as some hon. members in this House pretend to see and as some of the people who have petitioned us claim to exist. I have nothing but kind words to say of the good women who have taken it upon themselves to push this movement. I believe they have a perfect right to do it but I believe that their fears have been excited, that they perhaps have gone too far and that they exaggerate the extent of the evil, because in the rural parts of the province of Quebec the sale of cigarettes is almost unknown. I hardly think my hon. friend from Huntingdon is an authority on this question, for I believe he is a non-smoker himself, but I can tell him that you can go into any store in the American cities and buy ten little cigars for a dime, and they are not such bad cigars either.

Mr. CLARKE. What are they made of ?

Mr. PARMELEE. They are not too bad : I have smoked them myself. One of the arguments used as to why we should prohibit cigarettes is because they are so cheap that the small boy with five or ten cents in his pocket can go into a tobacco or drug store and buy a package, but suppose this law should be passed, and even suppose it should be enforced, then it is reasonable to assume that the ten cigars for a nickel will take the place of ten cigarettes for a dime. For my part, I would be strongly in favour of something like the amendment to the Criminal Code introduced by the Minister of Justice last year. I think that goes far enough, although I am afraid that there might be some difficulty in enforcing even such a provision. I understand that anti-cigarette legislation has been passed in a number of the states of the union, but I have never seen any proof advanced here or elsewhere that it has achieved the results hoped for by those who exerted themselves to have it placed upon the statute-book. I regret that any boy should use cigarettes even moderately ; indeed tobacco in any form should be used by young men only in great moderation, because in these days of keen competition it requires all the energy and all the nerve force our young men possess to enable them to win in the battle of life. Unlike a good many of my fellow-members, I have not to go back upon the vote which I gave last year. I believe that a large number of hon. gentlemen voted last year for this resolution believing it to be a joke, or at all events believing that it would never reach a serious stage in the deliberations of this parliament, and now they have to reconsider their votes.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I do not look upon this as a joke, nor have I from the start. I took no part in the debate last year, and I do not see why the women of the Women's Christian Temperance Union asked me to take charge of the Bill this year; but they did, and I at once consented. I did not know much about the matter at the time, but I have given it some thought since, and I can say that I am more in earnest about it now than I was at the start. I am thankful to the members who to-night have spoken so kindly in regard to these ladies who have charge of this matter, though I must say that in a former debate they were not so gently dealt with. There are 404 branches of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, having about 12,000 members. Last year some hon. gentlemen who spoke about these ladies suggested that they should start cooking schools. I want to know who it is that carry on the cooking schools throughout Canada at the present time. If the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Osler), who referred to the cooking schools last year, would look around him he would find that the ladies who were carrying on the cooking schools in the slums of Toronto are the ladies of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the Young Women's Christian Association.

Mr. CLARKE. And in the absence of my hon. friend (Mr. Osler), I may say that there is no more generous supporter of that movement in Canada than he is.

Mr. CLANCY. And probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclaren) might administer a rebuke to the Prime Minister, who repeated the same language.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I do not suppose the remark was intended to be offensive in either case. At all events, I know that these women who are advocating this Bill are acting in the best interest of the young people of Canada. I believe that there is a law in every province except Quebec prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to youths, but I do not think it has been found to be effective, and that being so, it was thought that it was necessary to have what is called the more drastic legislation incorporated in this Bill.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria). The argument is very stale, that you cannot make people better by Act of parliament. If that argument were carried into effect, then the greater part of our Criminal Code would not be in existence. We know that there is a generation of young people growing up at the present time, feeble in intellect, feeble in constitution, feeble in growth, and this altogether owing to the use and abuse of cigarettes. Those who oppose this legislation are people who use tobacco, and who probably use it to no good purpose. The best minds in this Dominion owe the member for Huntingdon a debt of gratitude for introducing this Bill, and he is supported by the best Christian people in the Dominion. Whether this Bill becomes law or not, its introduction affords proof that there is a party in this parliament who are anxious that this evil should be removed. I have great pleasure in supporting this Bill, and I would be delighted to see it become law. I can tell the House that if it does not become law this session the force of public opinion will cause it to be placed on the statute-book before long, and hon. gentlemen will find that their vote to-night will become a live question when they next appeal to the people.

Mr. KAULBACH. I believe in the principle of this Bill, but at the same time I am inclined to think that it is too broad in its scope, inasmuch as it would prohibit adults who are accustomed to the use of tobacco from smoking it in this form. I believe that every effort should be made to prevent our youths, those under the age of eighteen let us say, from using cigarettes. Should they not smoke until they attain that age, it is no more than likely that they may refrain from cigarette smoking ever afterwards. Even if this Bill should become law, there are various methods by which its provisions could be evaded. If the Bill went so far as to prohibit the use of tobacco in any form by young men under the age of eighteen years, or even under twenty-one years, I think it would be more beneficial. I read the other day the statement by a magistrate whose duty it was to try juvenile offenders for various forms of crime, and he claimed that out of 500 whom he tried 90 per cent of those convicted had been addicted to the use of cigarettes. In view of such strong evidence it behooves us to use every effort to prevent boys under the age of eighteen from using tobacco in any form. It is my opinion that a great deal can be done by clergymen and by those public spirited women, who have taken a great interest in this matter, and who are deserving of a great deal of credit for their efforts towards the protection of our young men. If they were to form an anti-smoking society amongst young men, and if the employers of labour joined with them in making a rule that they should not engage young men who used cigarettes or tobacco in any form, a great deal of practical good would be accomplished. I merely make this suggestion in the hope that the women, if they have not thought of if in the past, may consider it seriously, and adopt a method of that kind.

Section agreed to : Yeas, 50 ; nays, 27.

On section 2,

2. No cigarettes, cigarette papers or wrappers shall be imported into Canada or entered for consumption therein, and all cigarettes, cigarette papers or wrappers, or papers intended as such, shall be subject to seizure by any officer of customs or inland revenue ; and they, with the packages in which they are contained, shall be subject to be seized and forfeited to His Majesty, and shall be disposed of under regulations made by the Governor in Council.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that the people of this country are to be told, by formal Act of parliament, that children of any age may use tobacco in any form except in the form of cigarettes. That, I understand, is the effect of the legislation which we are now passing. I cannot concur in that.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the important objection to this provision is the impossibility of carrying it out.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We will create a race of hyprocrites.

Mr. SPROULE. The question is what are cigarette papers or cigarette wrappers. A great deal of the paper used for cigarette wrappers is merely paraffine paper which is used for putting up powders, and can be got in any drug store in the country. Ordinary cigarette paper is rice paper ; but where rice paper is used once, I venture to say that paraffine paper is used a dozen times, and it can be got at any drug store and can be put up by any one. So that it seems to me that it is impracticable to enforce this Act, because it is impossible to define what is cigarette paper. Half a dozen kinds can be used for the purpose.

Mr. CLARKE. If parliament is to protect the children of this country against the evil of smoking cigarettes, we should have an amendment made to the Criminal Code such as was attempted by the Minister of Justice last year. He failed in that attempt because neither party was satisfied. If the gentlemen who support this Bill would unite in asking the Minister of Justice to frame an amendment to the Criminal Code so as to punish not only those who sell cigarettes but those who purchase them for the use of minors, that would be a practical measure which I think would be effective. To prohibit the importation of cigarette paper and to allow the cigarette tobacco to be imported and sold seems to me to be a fatal defect in this Bill. We all agree that boys ought to be prohibited in some way from smoking cigarettes, and I think such an amendment to the Criminal Code would go far to put an end to this great evil. You must punish both the purchaser and the vendor if you want an effective measure. I would suggest that the gentlemen promoting the Bill will unite in asking the Minister of Justice to frame an amendment to the code which will carry out the object which these very estimable ladies have in view.

Mr. KAULBACH. I agree with the hon. member's suggestion that an amendment should be made in the Criminal Code to prohibit the sale of both cigarettes and cigarette tobacco to minors.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I have only to say that I am not the maker of the Bill. It was framed at the request of those promoting it, by a firm of solicitors in this city. After it was placed in my hands, I submitted it for my own satisfaction to another firm of solicitors in whom I had confidence, and they endorsed it. If the feeling of the House is that it should be amended in any way, we will argue the amendment ; but so far as the Bill is concerned, it is my intention to push it through to the end ; and after it is made law or defeated, if the Minister of Justice can then frame an amendment to the Criminal Code to suit both those promoting this Bill and those opposed to it, I will have no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I should then be asked to make something criminal which it would be impossible for any one to do if this legislation passes. It seems to me that we should be informed what is the object which those promoting this legislation have in view.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I understand that in every province except the province of Quebec, restrictive legislation was passed. It was found that that was not effective in reducing the use of cigarettes. I am not a lawyer, unfortunately ; I suppose that if I was I might be able to argue these law points with lawyers, learned in the law, but I am advised that this provincial legislation was not effective and that in fact some questions as to the constitutionality of the provincial Act arose after that judgment given on the Lord's Day Act. When those in favour of such legislation found this provincial legislation practically a dead letter and not enforced, they thought they would take a stronger measure and secure the prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale.

Mr FITZPATRICK. Then I understand the object is to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes ?

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How far are you going in that direction by this legislation, Mr. Chairman ? The tobacco can be introduced into the country and you are prohibiting the importation of cigarette paper or cigarette wrappers. Now what is cigarette paper or a cigarette wrapper? Is there anything in this Bill to define them? How are you going to reach the people who introduce the paper into this country from which cigarettes may be manufactured? You should supply a definition of these words so as to be able to proceed against any person who imports it. After all we are not here simply to enact legislation for the mere purpose of putting it on the statute-books. Let us see what we accomplish by what we do. I want to see how far by the aid of this Bill the object in view would be accomplished. It cannot be accomplished by the Bill in its present form and if it cannot be accomplished by the Bill in its present form why should we waste our time on it?

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Justice has said that the aim, no matter what the wording of the Bill of last year might be, was to provide legislation to protect the children of this country from the injurious effects of cigarette smoking. Let me quote again one or two sentences in support of what the Minister of Justice has said to show that. The mover of the Bill (Mr. Bickerdike) last year said:

> Once a boy has come to the age of maturity, he has a right to do as he pleases. All I wish to do is to introduce some measure that will protect the boys from this very bad habit of recent years.

That is the statement of the hon. gentleman who proposed the resolution last year. The hon. gentleman who seconded it was equally to the mark and equally clear. He said:

> We are not arguing from the standpoint of those of mature years, but from the standpoint of the bearing of this question on the youth of Canada.

There is a consensus of opinion, it cannot be questioned, that the excessive use of cigarettes is disastrous, physically, morally and mentally to children, and every one will sympathize with legislation that will mitigate that evil. I believe that can best be done by an amendment to the Criminal Code as suggested last year by the Minister of Justice. But the Minister of Justice pointed out afterwards that this legislation had not met with the approval either of those who desired to restrict the sale, or of those who were engaged in the manufacture and sale of cigarettes. It was pointed out by dealers that while they could be punished for selling to minors, those who came in to induce them to break the law escaped scot free.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is no argument.

Mr. CLARKE. It is a practical argument. It has been found in connection with the Ontario law that there are adults who are mean enough to purchase cigarettes for children and give them to children. It has been done again and again. It would not be fair under those circumstances to hold the dealer alone responsible. If the person who aids the child in purchasing the cigarettes was made amenable to law there would be a strong forward movement in the direction we desire, but this legislation will not accomplish its object, and that is the reason I oppose it. If we pass this legislation the tobacco will be rolled into cigarettes by some one, and the children will continue to use them.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I am not an expert on tobacco and I would like to ask if there is any difference between cigarette tobacco and ordinary cut tabacco?

Mr. CLARKE. It is much finer, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. A gentleman behind me says no.

Mr. CLARKE. I speak of course subject to correction; I am not a cigarette smoker; but I am satisfied that tobacco is specially made for cigarette use.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Whether it is or not you can use it.

Mr. CLARKE. It does not affect what I said, because if any kind of tobacco can be rolled into cigarettes, we are not accomplishing anything.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As I understand the injurious effect of cigarettes results from the paper used in their manufacture, not from the use of tobacco. We admit that tobacco is not noxious in itself. It is allowed in every form but we are here saying that cigarettes are not to be used because of the paper used in connection with their manufacture. What are we doing? That paper which is supposed to be deleterious when used for the purpose of manufacturing cigarettes, is not to be imported, but any other deleterious paper, even if it is absolutely noxious may be imported and may be used. What do we mean? What are we trying to get at? It seems to me we are not serious in this matter.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. Oh, yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are serious? Then, we are incapable because we are not accomplishing the object we have in view.

Mr. MACKINNON. I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. When the question of the liquor Bills came up before parliament and was referred to the Privy Council the question of jurisdiction was at issue. I would like to ask the minister whether the Dominion parliament can prohibit the sale of cigarettes. I understand the provincial parliaments have passed the prohibition laws, and I would like him to explain whether the prohibition of the sale of cigarettes comes within the jurisdiction of the provincial parliament or of the Dominion parliament.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think there is any question about that. I think there is no doubt about our power to pass this legislation.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Might I ask the member who has the Bill in charge (Mr. Maclaren) whether he has any information to the effect that any serious effort has ever been made to enforce the laws on this subject now in existence in Nova Scotia, and if so what is the nature of that information ?

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I have no information as regards Nova Scotia. I have as regards Ontario. They have tried to enforce it there but since this judgment on the Lord's Day Act there has been a good deal of feeling in regard to the question whether the legislation passed there was constitutional. There have been prosecutions in connection with the local Act but I cannot say how far they have gone or what success there has been.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. It seems to me that it has been made abundantly clear that for the present time this is not an effective measure, and will fail to bring about the results desired by those supporting it. For my own part I have no very strong convictions with regard to the manufacture, sale, and use of cigarettes ; am not a user of tobacco. But if I read this statute correctly I am satisfied that the passing of this Act is not going to prevent the boy of this country smoking cigarettes, and it is for this reason I think that this measure should not become law. If we are serious about this matter let us introduce legislation that will be effective. Those who are earnestly desirous of accomplishing reforms —I am myself desirous that they should be brought about—should introduce only measures that would be effective, not half effective in bringing about the results desired.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Might it not be better for the Minister of Justice to give us the aid of his judicial mind in making this Bill perfect and not be raising legal and technical objections against it ? The majority of this House is in favour of this Bill, and he admits that it is not perfect in its present form. Then let him, by his experience and his judicial mind, give us the assistance he can to make it perfect.

Mr. ALEXANDER JOHNSTON. With my hon. friend's permission, I would like to ask him a question. In his judgment, are the majority of this House opposed to the importation and manufacture of tobacco in any form ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Judging by the vote given here to-night, there is a decided opinion of the House in favour of the Bill, and I would desire to see the Bill made more perfect.

Mr. ALEXANDER JOHNSTON. But I am talking about tobacco generally ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I am like my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Alexander Johnston) and do not use tobacco in any form, and I believe that the world would be much better if nobody used it.

Mr. GALLIHER. I had not intended to speak on this Bill. but in view of the discussion that has taken place, I would like to say a few words. I am not a cigarette smoker, but I do enjoy tobacco through the medium of a pipe or cigar. I know how I should feel if legislation were being introduced, or attempted to be introduced, to deprive me of the pleasure I derive from smoking my pipe ; and those who prefer taking their tobacco in the form of a cigarrette, I think, have an equal right to object to our placing any restriction upon their liberty. I quite agree with the principle of applying the Act so far as concerns children under a certain age. But, for one, I do not think any person has the right to say that a man who is of age and capable of judging for himself shall not smoke cigarettes, any more than he has a right to say that a man shall not eat certain kinds of food. You might as well legislate in one way as in the other, for there are certain kinds of food that are harmful to certain constitutions, just as cigarettes are, and one can ruin his constitution by over-eating as well as over-smoking. I presume that the object of those who support the Bill is to stop the smoking of cigarettes in Canada. If I understand the King's English, this Bill, if passed, will have no such effect. By this Act we simply prohibit the sale of the cigarette, in its manufactured state, and also prohibit the importation of proper cigarettte paper. There is nothing here with regard to tobacco. You can bring in the cigarette tobacco and use any paper—

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Newspaper.

Mr. GALLIHER. As the hon. minister suggests, you can use newspaper, or you can use a brown paper that may answer the purpose instead of the regular cigarette paper.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You can poison all the children in the country with it.

Mr. GALLIHER. There is no question about it, the Bill will not have the effect that the promoters of it desire. As to what was said by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Wm. Ross) that the Minister of Justice should suggest amendments, I do not know that that is what the Minister of Justice is here for.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). He condemns the Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER. As I condemn the Bill, because it is a useless Bill. After all, the argument used in support of this Bill is that it will protect the children. Well, so far as that is concerned, I support such legislation, but I believe the best way to embody it is in the amendment to the Criminal Code which the Minister of Justice offered last session to bring in. But, as to making this applicable to grown men, I believe that object cannot be effected, and so I shall vote against the Bill.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have received several petitions from my county from that worthy organization that has been several times referred to, the Women's Christian Temperance Union. I may state here what I said in answer to the petitioners, to whom I gave my reasons why I would vote against this Bill. I sympathize with the object of these ladies, and my reasons for opposing this Bill is that if I helped to enact such a law, I should be helping to do the very contrary of what they really want. I go further than some of the opponents of the Bill and say that this will not prevent the use of cigarettes by young men, but it will develop the habit of smoking bad cigarettes by young children. As an opponent of the smoking of cigarettes by children, I will vote against the Bill, because I know by experience that when boys cannot get cigarrettes made with proper paper, they do not buy their tobacco in the form of a small cigar, as one hon. gentleman mentioned, but they buy the cigarette tobacco, and wrap it for themselves. As everybody knows the obnoxious effect of cigarettes is not produced by the tobacco, but by the paper, and so, in France, for example, where the manufacture of cigarettes as well of cigars is under the control of the government, they have very careful analyses made of the paper for cigarettes by chemists of the school of science. And the result is that, of all the cigarettes used the French and the Belgian are the least obnoxious. What is proposed here is not progressive legislation, but the most retrogressive legislation that well could be. I will vote against it because I am in sympathy with the movement started by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and which the hon. member for Huntingdon is in good faith supporting and which I believe will be defeated if this Bill should pass.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to the use of tobacco by children in any form. I am likewise opposed to an attempt being made to interfere with the liberty of individuals. If it is legal for a man to use tobacco in his pipe or in the form of a cigar, I see no reason why those who do use it in that form should say that a cigarette smoker should be prevented from using it in the form he prefers. That is the second objection. And the third objection is that this Bill defeats the very object the hon. gentlemen have in view. Instead of aiding the children, you would put in their hands cigarettes of inferior character, you will oblige them to use a cigarette which will be very much more deleterious in its effects than the cigarette now sold. If we are in earnest in this matter and if we are considering this Bill seriously, some answer should be given to these objections.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I understand the force of the remark made by the Minister of Justice. But what troubles me in connection with this matter is that before cigarettes were introduced in this present form there was not the same use of tobacco by people of tender years. They did not make cigarettes in those days, when they had just as much fine paper to do it with and just as much fine cut tobacco. When those cigarettes were brought in in this particular form, and put into a nice little box with a picture on it, then the use of cigarettes began. I think if you asked 100 boys of this country how they commenced to use tobacco you would find that 90 per cent of them, perhaps 99 per cent, would say that they commenced with the use of cigarettes. Now before these cigarettes came in they did not roll them up in this way. Probably now that people have got a taste for fancy cigarettes they will follow it up by making them out of all kinds of dirty paper. But to my mind, driving out cigarettes as made in the country at the present time, I am satisfied will diminish the use of tobacco by those of tender years, and that is why I am supporting this legislation.

Section 2 agreed to, yeas 39, nays 25.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is easy to be virtuous at the expense of your neighbour.

On section 3,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Surely we have reached the limit. Before sending people to jail for a year, I hope some one will tell us what is meant by cigarette paper. If it is to be a crime incurring a fine and imprisonment for a year to import cigarette paper, surely we ought to be told what is meant by the words 'cigarette paper.' The time has come when we ought to consider whether we are in earnest or not.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. (Translation). I believe that the one who ought to be punished is he who being addicted to the cigarette habit, would refrain from smoking cigarettes in the future, because he is afraid he is going to be fined. It is an axiom of natural law that nobody is bound to obey an unjust law. Therefore, instead of placing upon the statute-book such a penalty as is suggested, it should be enacted here that any one who, being addicted to the cigarette habit, abstains from smoking cigarettes, because he is afraid of breaking the law, shall be liable to be fined.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will some one please give us information to enable us to understand what is meant by cigarette paper. Is there any such legislation as this on any statute-book in the world ? Where is such legislation as this to be found ?

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I am not so familiar with the statutes as my hon. friend.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is all very fine, but the hon. gentleman ought to be familiar with what he is trying to do. Surely we are entitled to some information about it.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Customs will define that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is not the Minister of Customs. Any magistrate in the country may send a person to prison for a year, any country magistrate.

Mr. SPROULE. We merely declare what the law prohibits.

Mr. GUTHRIE. There ought to be some definition of a cigarette in this Bill. I am a habitual smoker of cigarettes, one of those sad examples of stunted growth. I think for the sake of public protection we ought to have cigarettes defined. I do not, as a rule, buy them, I make them with my own hands—I do not know whether I would be considered as a manufacturer or not. But unless there is some definition of what is a cigarette, I think the Bill is very misleading. A cigarette of the same size as the ordinary cigarette, is made with clear tobacco, the purest kind of tobacco and no paper at all is used in its manufacture. Now is the law to exclude such an article ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Let us consider this matter seriously. Take section 3 of this Bill—there is no definition of what a cigarette is in the Bill, there is no definition of what cigarette paper is in the Bill. Now who is to decide ? We might have on the bench a magistrate who is a perfect crank, opposed to smoking in any form. A person is charged with selling some paper which is termed cigarette paper—who decides that ? There is no definition in the Act itself. It is left to one man who, as I say, may be a crank on the subject, left to him to decide whether there is a contravention of the Act or not ; and in his hands is placed the power, on his own interpretation, of sending a man to prison for a year. I think we ought to consider what we are doing before we go any further. At all events, if we are going to pass this Bill, let some person who is fathering the Bill, or supporting it, propose some amendment to define what cigarettes and what cigarette papers are. Let us not put ourselves at the mercy of any man who may be sitting as a magistrate to say that the liberty of the subject may be taken away for a year because that magistrate considers that a certain brand of paper is cigarette paper.

Mr. LANCASTER. It seems to me that some hon. gentlemen are going very far in trying to frustrate the object of this legislation. An Act was passed here a little while ago applying to traders, and when I asked what the word 'trader' meant, I was told that a court and jury would define that. This Bill is to the same effect. We are making an act a criminal offence, and we are now told we ought to define what certain things are. Some hon. gentlemen are more particular now than they have been in respect to other matters. I am particularly anxious to pass this section as it stands. If we cannot accomplish the absolute prohibition of an evil that everybody wants to see destroyed, at least we can take a step in the direction of accomplishing it. If we can at any time accomplish it we ought to do so in the interest of this country. It will not do any harm to stop the importation of this material with that object in view and if people are going to be so afraid that they are going to punish for importing cigarette paper because of the want of a definition of it in this Bill the less will be the material imported out of which boys can make cigarettes.

Mr. GALLIHER. They can buy it at any store.

Mr. LANCASTER. This House has declared in favour of this measure.

Mr. GALLIHER. Not yet.

Mr. LANCASTER. It has declared in favour of the measure or we would not have been in committee on it. It has declared in favour of the resolution, it has declared in favour of a Bill founded thereon and it has gone into committee on the Bill. It has declared that cigarettes shall not be imported, manufactured, or offered for sale. If we are going to enforce the sections which have been declared passed by two votes in this House to-night, in order to be consistent we must adopt this section which declares that cigarette paper and wrappers shall not be imported. If we are going to be consistent, if we are going to back our own action, not only last session, but this session, and this night, we must pass this section in order to carry out the two previous sections.

Mr. GALLIHER. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), when we find him expressing opposition to any Bill, does not want to be cut off short. I suppose that we who do not think this section of the Bill should become law, although apparently it is the intention of the House that it shall, have a perfect right to have our views heard in the matter. I for my part reiterate what I said before. The hon. member for Lincoln says that people will not be so anxious to import this paper knowing that it may be considered to be cigarette paper and that they may be liable to the penalties of this Act. You can go into any drug store to-day and buy paper that answers the purpose of rolling and making cigarettes. You can go into almost any grocery store and get paper that will answer that same purpose, and you can go into a dry goods store and get tissue paper or such paper as will answer that purpose and yet a magistrate, because of his strong views on this subject, may interpret the sale of that paper simply because a boy or a man used it for making a cigarette, as a violation of the law and may imprison him at his own sweet will.

Mr. CLARKE. That law wants to be enforced once to secure its repeal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And against those who are supporting it.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I really think that we should be a little more serious, and that the people who are not here to speak for themselves are entitled to a little more consideration. The traders of the country are entitled to some consideration, and I submit that if this measure were to become law to-night there are thousands of traders throughout the country who to-morrow morning would be brought up and prosecuted. I submit that there should be a definition as to what is meant by cigarette papers. Do you mean by cigarette papers, papers out of which cigarettes can be made ? If you mean that there is not a stationer in the city of Ottawa, there is not a stationer throughout the country but who offers for sale paper which will be suitable for making cigarettes. There can be no question about that and it is a fact that most people will admit. Unless there is some definition I think it is the imperative duty of this House and of those who are supporting this measure to define the meaning of the words 'cigarette paper' and not submit to prosecution those who are engaged in trade throughout this country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I submit respectfully after all possible consideration and in all earnestness the question if it is consistent with our dignity to pass legislation in the hope that that legislation may subsequently be frustrated by the action of the Senate. I say that it is not consistent with the dignity of the House that we should take such course as that. I do not want to repeat that because I am not quite certain but that there are some members who are not present in the House to-night who are in the hope that if this legislation goes through this House it will never get through the Senate. Let us try to realize what this means. Take this clause here for instance ; for a second offence if a man happens to sell a cigarette after having been fined once, he goes to jail for a year without the option of a fine. Do we realize what that means ? For a second offence he goes to jail without the option of a fine. I do not know that there are any offences on the statute-book in connection with which such a penalty as that is enforced. Is it conceivable that we are going to father legislation imposing such a penalty as that ? In the next place do we realize what this means ? What is going to become of the investors of this country who have entered into the manufacture of cigarettes ? What is going to become of those who have their supplies of paper, tobacco and machinery on hand ? What this means is that we are going deliberately to expropriate the property of these people and in some cases practically ruin them and give them no compensation. They started their industry with the sanction of the law and here we are now without a moment's warning introducing legisltion which will destroy this industry. Do we know what that means ? Are we thinking what it means ? Are we in earnest in passing this legislation ? Surely we ought to reffect upon it. Surely we ought to consider it. It is not conceivable that this legislation is going through and that we are not going to provide some compensation for those whose industry will be affected by it.

Mr. CLARKE. There is another side to this question that ought to be considered. The object we are aiming at will never be obtained by this kind of legislation. We will make it impossible to get remedial legislation in the near future. This Bill may even pass the Senate—I do not know whether it will pass this House or not—but it has only to be enforced to be repealed. It is a pernicious Act which cannot be enforced. The people of this country will not stand for it when they understand what it means. I say that with the greatest possible respect, because every hon. member in this House has a right to vote as he sees fit, just as I have ; but if the aim of this Bill is to protect the children of this country, it will fail and make that protection much more difficult to provide in future. We have pointed out again and again that the large vote given for the legislation introduced last year was because of the distinct pledges of the mover and seconder of the resolution that their aim was to protect the children of this country from indulging in the use of cigarettes. We could all sympathize with a measure of that kind. Here we have a Bill which proposes to send a man to jail practically without even a fine—a cruel proposition emanating from such a source, an unchristian proposition, if I may apply the term ; and I repeat again, Mr. Chairman, that if the object is to provide legislation to mitigate the evils which undoubtedly follow from the too free use of cigarettes by minors in this country, this legislation will fail and be a barrier in the way of obtaining effective legislation from parliament. I say that with the greatest possible respect. I will not take up any more of the time of the committee, but I would not be doing my duty if I did not enter my protest against the passage of legislation of this kind.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. A blank is very often left in a Bill to be filled in with the length of time that a man has to serve who breaks the law, or the amount of fine that he has to pay. If anybody thinks the offence does not merit such a large fine or such a lengthy imprisonment, it is a matter which is in the hands of the committee. I have no particular feeling in regard to that matter. If it is thought advisable to lessen the term of imprisonment, it can be lessened.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What has the hon. gentleman got to say as to expropriation without compensation ? That is a new principle of legislation in this House. We are to expropriate the people engaged in this industry and we are not to give them any compensation ; that is a novel departure.

Mr. HOLMES. I am surprised to hear the Minister of Justice, who ordinarily displays great judgment on questions brought before the House, using such an argument. No man in this country goes into business without taking risks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. HOLMES. Yes. If the argument of the Minister of Justice is good, he should remember that you destroy the cigarette business to a limited extent if you make it apply to minors, and as a large proportion of the cigarettes are smoked by minors, then when you prevent minors smoking you destroy the cigarette industry to a large extent, and the Minister of Justice is willing to do that without compensation. I do not believe that this idea of compensation for vested rights will hold water. Parliament cannot be restricted as to the legislation it shall pass within its powers, and if parliament thinks it right and proper to pass such legislation in the public interests, it can do so without there being any just claim for compensation. This proposed legislation has been before the House for months, and if there were any serious intention of guarding the youth of Canada in this respect, we might have heard something about it before this. There is sufficient public opinion in this country to demand legislation of this kind, at all events so far as it is applicable to minors. I am free to concede that perhaps this Bill goes too far, but failing to get legislation to protect the minors we try to get all we can.

Mr. GALLIHER. The Minister of Justice introduced legislation last session amending the Criminal Code so as to protect the minors of Canada from cigarette smoking. Why was not that legislation supported then ? The hon. member (Mr. Holmes) says that failing to get that, he wants this general Act, but it is not the fact that he has failed to get legislation protecting minors. I for one would support such legislation as would also, I believe, the majority in this House.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why doesn't the Minister of Justice bring it in now ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I cannot answer for the Minister of Justice. Notwithstanding the opinion of the member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) the question of vested rights does enter into the question. It is true in one sense that any one engaging in a business takes risks, but it is not true in every sense, and I would like to know how my hon. friend (Mr. Holmes) would like it, if legislation were passed here preventing him from publishing his newspaper. When a man enters into business that is sanctioned by the laws of the country, he should not take the risk that parliament will wipe out that business without at least giving him compensation ; and it does not matter whether he is a newspaper publisher, a grocer, a whisky seller, or a tobacconist. If you commence to apply the principle of destroying vested rights in an established business without compensation, where are you going to draw the line ? I believe that this question has not been considered seriously enough by those supporting the Bill.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why don't you propose an amendment to make it right ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Some of you who are so anxious in support of this Bill; why don't you get up and move an amendment which will make this legislation effective ?

Mr. COCHRANE. You are a lawyer and you ought to know how to make the legislation workable. If you are sincere, why don't you propose an amendment and if it appeals to my judgment I will support it ? Why does not the hon. gentleman propose some amendment that will remedy the grievance, that he feels so deep down in his heart to-night ?

Mr. GALLIHER. There are questions involved in legislation of this kind which deserve the most careful consideration from this parliament, and in all candour I say that some of the hon. gentlemen who are supporting this Bill do not seem to have seriously considered what its effects will be.

Mr. GUTHRIE. There is considerably more in the question of compensation in connection with this Bill than some people seem to realize. My hon. friend from West Huron had probably in mind a prohibitory liquor law without compensation when he ventured his opinion to-night. The liquor business is carried on under a system of license, but the retail commerce in tobacco, and in dry goods and in all the other branches of trade is not licensed. People have been invited to invest their moneys in this legitimate enterprise ; it differs from a business which is licensed, inasmuch as in the latter case you invest your capital with your eyes open knowing that you are only specially privileged under that license which may be withdrawn at any time. There is a great deal of capital invested in cigarette manufacturing in this country ; there is the machinery, the tobacco bought, the contracts made for the future, and the employment of labour. I am not personally interested as to whether this Bill shall pass or not. I agree with other gentlemen that there should be an absolute prohibition of the use of all kinds of tobacco so far as minors are concerned, but even if this law were passed I could manufacture a cigarette myself without any breach of it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Every child in the country could do likewise.

Mr. GUTHRIE. No it is somewhat of an art. There are men who never smoke a cigarette and it is very easy for them to be virtuous at another man's expense. I will guarantee that the member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) has not, and I doubt if the member for Lincoln ever smoked one either. The Bill as it now stands is badly drawn, it is unworkable. It has been stated here that there is a special kind of tobacco called cigarette tobacco and while that may be, it is still a fact that you can make a very good quality of cigarette out of any ordinary pipe tobacco you buy.

If the hon. member for Huntingdon will include a provision that no pipe tobacco or plug tobacco is to be brought into the country, I venture to say that a great many members of this House will not vote for the Bill. They will allow themselves the indulgence of the vice from an old nicotinish pipe, carrying poison in it, but they will not allow another person who has come to years of maturity to smoke tobacco in the mildest form in which it is prepared. That statement is backed up by the London 'Lancet,' an eminent authority, and also by one of the hon. members for Montreal, who spoke in this House last session, and who said that for a man who had reached his full growth, it was the mildest and least injurious form in which tobacco could be used. If the hon. member for West Huron and the hon. member for Huntingdon are content that the Bill should be limited in its scope to persons under twenty-one years of age, I think we should all be agreed on the subject.

Mr. HOLMES. I am free to say that I think the proposal made by the Minister of Justice last year was under the circumstances, as good a proposal as the one we introduced, and I think that the ladies of the Women's Christian Temperance Union made a mistake in being unwilling to accept it. I want to say, to the credit of the Minister of Justice, that he was not to blame that it was not introduced ; but some one is to blame for the fact that we were not before given the information which we have obtained during this debate. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) referred to the remarks I made as to compensating those who made investments in the business. If, in publishing my paper, I make it a menace to society, the government will soon step in and say that I must stop publishing that paper. We pass restrictive legislation in many ways, such as changes in the revenue laws, without granting compensation to those who lose in consequence. At any rate, I think the discussion which we are having to-night will have a beneficial effect, if nothing more than that is accomplished.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. With reference to compensation, we must bear in mind that factories for the manufacture of cigarettes are licensed by the government ; therefore, the people carrying on that business have been authorized by the government to invest their money in the factory and machinery, and then by legislation of this sort we come along and wipe the whole thing away. What would be thought of legislation proposed in this House authorizing a railway company to take land without compensation? And where is the difference in principle between that sort of legislation and the legislation we are now proposing ?

Mr. COCHRANE. You license them to do a certain thing, and they pay a license. When you cease to license them, they have no more authority to manufacture.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend confounds two things which are very easily distinguished. I am dealing with a legitimate business. The government might take away a license from the manufacturer, but that would not prevent his machinery being valuable to him. If you license him to carry on a business, you enter into a tacit contract with him that you will give him the protection of the law in carrying on that business. Then you come along with this Bill and destroy his business. The case put by the hon. member for South Wellington was that of a stationer or druggist carrying on a business over which this parliament has no control. He has paper of a certain description and you declare that he must not sell it. He has bought it when the law said he had the right to buy it. You say he must stop selling it and must destroy it. If the paper is found in his possession, he is liable to a penalty. So long as this parliament is content to pass legislation of that sort, the responsibility must rest on those who want to be virtuous at their neighbours' expense. According to this legislation, a man may have his pipe or cigar, but the man who enjoys his cigarette is not to have it. Where is the justice in legislation of that sort ? A remark fell from the lips of one hon. gentleman on the other side of the House which showed what is being done. The hon. gentleman said that the ladies who want this legislation passed have not thought of the consequences of it. I am sure we are not old ladies, though we may be acting as such. After all, why should we allow ourselves to be stampeded into legislation of this sort, simply because a cry has been raised in the country which never was intended to be translated into legislation such as this? What the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the other ladies had in view was to prevent the sale of cigarettes, and tobacco as well, to minors. That is a laudable object and something which we can advocate. I will hold up both hands for that. I introduced a Bill last year to prevent the sale of cigarettes to persons under eighteen years of age, but the majority of this House were opposed to it, and those interested in the business were opposed to it also. If we mean to take over the parental authority exercised by parents over their children, if we have abundance of time for that, let us apply it as we ought to apply it. If I have spoken on this Bill more frequently than I usually do, it is because I honestly think this legislation reflects discredit on the House. Perhaps I am wrong in that, because the majority say so. But I think it is not to our credit to have legislation of this sort, the parallel of which is not to be found on any statute-book in the world.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that the Minister of Justice is perfectly satisfied to have restrictive legislation so far as the sale of cigarettes to minors is concerned. It has been pointed out that minors are the principal consumers of cigarettes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. That has been stated by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. W. S. Maclaren).

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FOWLER. I would think that the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. W. S. Maclaren) would know something about that. Whether that is the case or not, they are large consumers, or this would not be such a widespread evil. If you prevent minors using cigarettes, you will largely restrict the output of the factories, but you do not propose any compensation to them for that. If you can go to that extent you can go the whole extent and put these people out of business.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) said that the reason he was opposed to giving compensation to liquor dealers in the event of prohibition, was that they were dealing under a license. It is the same thing here, these people are dealing under a license.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I referred to the ordinary retail tobacconists of this or any other city.

Mr. FOWLER. The manufacturers are the people here.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am standing for individual liberty.

Mr. FOWLER. We all stand for individual liberty but not all for individual license. A great many people make the mistake of confounding liberty and license. I think the Bill should pass as it is. I see no difficulty in the way and I am satisfied to have it passed.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that the Minister of Justice has any right to assume that any member is supporting this Bill with the understanding or expectation that the Senate will throw it out. I have heard no such remarks in the House, and the minister has no right to suggest that any member will do other than his duty. The Minister of Justice points out defects in the Bill, but there is no man who should be more capable than he to offer amendments to the Bill that will perfect it. That is his duty, a duty that rests upon him more particularly as a member of the cabinet than upon any other member of this House. The cabinet is responsible for the legislation that passes this House whether it is of a private or public character. If it is defective it is the less to their credit. If it is good, it is the more to their credit. He says there are defects in this Bill in his judgment but he proposes no amendment to it.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. In answer to the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) I would say that he made a great mistake in saying that no indemnity should be given. This is a property. These people have invested their money in manufacturing cigarettes, and the manufacture is a property and we cannot deprive them of their property without compensation. Ownership is defined in the Civil Code which is in force, in Quebec, as follows :—

> Ownership is the right of enjoying and of disposing of things in the most absolute manner, provided that no use be made of them which is prohibited by law or by regulation.

Surely then the manufacture of cigarettes is an ownership, a property recognized by law. The manufacturer is not using it in a manner prohibited by law, or regulation. The money invested in that property is an ownership recognized by law.

Another paragraph in the code says :

> No one can be compelled to give up his property, except for public utility and in consideration of a just indemnity previously paid.

What are we doing here ? We are taking over the property of a man, what he owns, legitimate property for public utility and if we do so, we must give him the indemnity that should be given. That is the law of France, the law of England, the law of Canada, the natural law, and we are violating all these laws in order to deprive the citizens of this country of a natural right. I contend that this parliament has no right, nor has any parliament, the right to deprive me of a natural right. You have not the right to prevent me drinking what I like, or smoke what I like. All of these laws are abuses of power, and the duty of a man, if he is worthy of the name, is to violate them, when they come into force because they are against the liberty of men.

Mr. MACKINNON. The promoter of this Bill in drawing it has omitted a number of material provisions in connection with the enforcement of the measure, apart from its merits. We are all in accord that the children should be taught not to use cigarettes, that cigarettes are bad for minors, that the parents should teach the children and that the preachers should preach the ills that will follow the use of cigarettes by minors. Local regulations have been tried. It seems that the people promoting this Bill have become exasperated because in connection with all these things failure has resulted, and now they appeal to this parliament and I think it is right that we should do what we can to help them. In the particular clause under consideration the promoter has provided for the punishment of only two offences, for the sale of one cigarette and of another cigarette. There is a second offence but there is no provision for any subsequent offence. If the person escapes the consequences of two offences, then he can do as he likes. That should be amended. There is also no time limit within which a prosecution can be brought. It also provides only for a prosecution being brought and tried ; there is no provision for enforcing the orders of the magistrates under the Summary Convictions Act. The Bill refers also only to the Criminal Code of 1892, passed over 12 years ago. It should provide for the amendments since that time. I am suggesting these for the purpose of amendment, and I think the Bill requires many amendments to attain the object in view.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. If it is thought that the penalty in the third section is too drastic I will have no objection if any one offers an amendment, in fact I would be prepared to amend it myself because I think that the penalty is really very heavy. I propose, therefore, to amend clause 3 by striking out the words 'for the first offence' in the fourth line, and also by striking out all the words after 'months' in the fifth line and inserting instead thereof the words 'not less than one month.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The clause would then read :

Any person who, by himself or by another contravenes the provision of this Act in any manner shall incur a penalty not exceeding $100 and not less than $20, and, in default of payment shall be liable to imprisonment to a term not exceeding six months and not less than one month.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That means, that having purged the first offence, you can go on smoking as much as you like ? Is that it ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The words 'for first offence' are struck out.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I move for leave to withdraw my amendment.

Motion agreed to and amendment withdrawn.

Motion that section 3 stand part of the Bill agreed to—yeas 39, nays 36.

On section 4,

Mr. GALLIHER. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Committee divided—yeas 37, nays 37.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I vote 'nay.'

Motion, Mr. Galliher negatived.

Motion that section 4 stand as part of the Bill agreed to, yeas 41, nays 34.

Mr. GALLIHER. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BOURASSA. I think the mover of the Bill should accept the suggestion that in the meantime, before another session, he might consult with the representatives for example, of the Chinese of the Russian government, for I think those are about the only countries where similar legislation could be found. As the legal authorities on both sides of the House have been unable to tell us in what way this legislation could apply, how you could define the offence, and therefore how a judge could apply the penalty, I think surely the hon. members who are responsible for this legislation should get proper information from the only semi-civilized countries in the world where similar legislation has been adopted, before it is put in force in this so-called free country.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would like to say a few words before this motion is put. In the first place, this Bill is badly drafted. In the next place the effect of this Bill will be to make this House utterly ridiculous throughout the world. I presume the promoters of this Bill desire to prevent young men from smoking cigarettes, but at the same time, there is not one word in it to the effect that only young men will be prevented from smoking cigarettes. The result is that as the Bill stands at present the man who smokes one-fifteenth part of an ounce of tobacco will be sent to the common jail for one year, while the man who smokes one-eighth of an ounce of tobacco will be left free. Can we insert such an illogical clause on our statute-book ? As pointed out by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), it is utterly absurd, utterly ridiculous, to insert in our statute-book, this illogical discrimination between the man who smokes a little bit of tobacco and the man who smokes half a pound, the first one being sent to jail and the second one being left free. Under the circumstances I should vote against the Bill. It cannot be amended, it is altogether bad, it is anti-commercial, it is immoral. There is no proof that the smoking of tobacco is bad. Tobacco has been in use for centuries, and I have not been able to find, either in philosophy or ethics or medicine, that it is wrong to smoke tobacco. Why should we accept the word of the promoters of this Bill as the word of the gospel ? There is nothing in the gospel against tobacco. For my part I am not willing to take the word of the promoters of this Bill as gospel. Let me say to my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Holmes) that it has not been proved that tobacco is a poison. It is no worse to smoke tobacco than it is to use hundreds or thousands of other articles that are in common use in this country. Therefore I say that the aim of the Bill is bad, the Bill itself is bad because it does not discriminate between classes of persons who are to suffer through the application of the Bill. Then I say that the penalties imposed by the Bill are too heavy. For all these reasons I should vote against the adoption of the Bill, not only against this fifth clause, but I am opposed to all the other clauses which have already been adopted by the committee.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. I think those who are opposed to this Bill are going pretty far. They are assuming that all the wisdom in this House is confined to those who are opposed to this Bill, and that those who are supporting this legislation are a lot of incompetents, who really do not know what they are doing. I think it is assuming a little too much. I do not know but those who have voted for this legislation are quite equal in intelligence to those who have voted against it. I have nothing to be ashamed of in connection with this matter. I am in earnest, I think this is good legislation, and I suppose those who are supporting the Bill think it is good legislation. I think that hon. gentlemen go rather far when they try to put us down as a lot of people who don't know the gospel, and who don't know much anyway.

Motion (Mr. Galliher) negatived, yeas 36, nays 38.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think it is reasonable to postpone the operation of the Bill at least one year to allow those who have accumulated the stuff to get rid of it. I think the promoter of the Bill would agree with me that it should only come into operation in 1906.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In connection with this amendment, it might be proper for me to suggest that some consideration ought to be given to the question of excise duties which have already been paid on these articles which are to be destroyed. It would be proper for the Minister of Inland Revenue to be here before we finally dispose of this Bill. He might have something to say with regard to refunding duties to those who have paid them.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN. That is a departmental affair, I suppose, for the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. GUTHRIE moved :

That the clause be amended by inserting the word ' six ' in place of the word ' two.'

Section as amended, agreed to.

Preamble agreed to : Yeas, 41 ; nays, 32.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that we have reached a somewhat serious task. The House has been led to-night by the Minister of Justice, and the government have been defeated so often that we ought to have some statement from them as to whether they propose to resign or whether they are not willing to resign.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we ought to have some statement from them.

ADJOURNMENT — CERTIFICATES TO MASTERS AND MATES OF SHIPS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln). Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the next order on the order paper, which deals with a very important measure and which has stood at the request of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine). It is true that the last time it was up the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries said that he would probably introduce legislation this session of the same nature and he did state that at any rate he would give me an opportunity of having this matter dealt with because it is a very important matter to masters and mates on our inland waters as well as to the travelling public. If the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries renews that pledge now and says that the matter will be dealt with on government orders, I am content to allow the adjournment to take place, but seeing that since the last time this question was up in the House I have received a letter from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in which he takes back all he said about going to introduce a measure, saying that he cannot do it this session, I must have it distinctly understood that if we adjourn now this Bill shall be put upon the government orders and be dealt with in that way, because to-day is the last private members' day, and it will not be reached otherwise.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Speaker, I would have been disposed, if the matter had been reached to-day, to have had this Bill along with the Bill introduced by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act sent to a special committee in order to receive a report upon them. As regards the legislation the hon. gentleman is seeking for most of it can be provided for by regulation. I have ascertained that the other which cannot be provided for by regulation is not of so much importance that it cannot wait until next session when we intend to consolidate all the laws concerning this matter. That is the report I get from my officers and if the hon. gentleman is not ready to acquiesce in a submission of these measures to a committee after I have had a conference with him and my hon. friend from North Simcoe, of course his Bill will have to stand until next session.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do I understand the hon. minister to say now that he is not going to allow this matter if it stands to-night to come up again this session ? I had the pledge of the hon. gentleman the last time this matter was up that if I allowed this Bill to stand then, if it was not reached, it would be put on the order paper and dealt with. I suppose that pledge is still in force, but I want to confirm it. Now, I am prepared to allow it to stand to-night if the hon. minister puts it on the government orders so that we can discuss it. It ought to be discussed in the House. It is a public Bill which has not been discussed. If the hon. gentleman will not now do that, seeing that this is the last day upon which it can come up, I am going to spend the time to talk about it. I am going to let the people of the country understand what the Bill is that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries says is not of much importance. He wants us to understand that the Bill can very well stand until next session. I think it is a great pity at this hour of the night that I am obliged to do this, especially as it involves the going back on an agreement made with me by the hon. gentleman, and made at his own request. This Bill was introduced on the first day that Bills could be introduced in this House. This Bill was introduced and read the first time before the address in reply to the speech from the throne was debated. The first day after it was introduced it came up for a second reading and time after time ever since it has stood either at the request of the right hon. Prime Minister or of the hon. Minister of Justice in the absence of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but usually it stood at the request of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself, who was going to introduce legislation at this session to deal with this matter. The hon. gentleman has stated that it was not of much importance and he gives as his authority some of the officers of his department. The officers of his department did not know what they were talking about when they told him that. The Bill is entitled 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the certificates to masters and mates of ships,' and my amendment deals with the Act as regards inland waters. The Canadian Association of Masters and Mates has been troubled over this matter a great deal, the travelling public, that is those who travel on steamboats have been troubled a good deal about it. The Canadian Association of Masters and Mates finding that the matter was of such importance, and finding apparently that no move was going to be made by the government to remedy the evils of which they complain, met at Toronto last winter, on February 8th, 9th and 10th, and passed resolutions in regard to it. I am speaking from the book entirely when I say that this legislation is absolutely required. It is all very well for some officer in the hon. gentleman's department to tell him that it is not. He has not run steamboats on the lakes. He does not know one-quarter as much about it as the Masters and Mates Association of the Dominion of Canada do. This association would not have passed resolutions asking that the law be amended unless these amendments were necessary. I quote from the minutes of the meeting held in Toronto on February 8th last, this resolution :

> Captain Milligan moved, seconded by Captain Jordan, that the Dominion government be memorialized to amend the law so as to make the examination of masters and mates more rigid and to require that all recommendations of a master to a candidate for examination must be made on oath, or the candidate must produce a recommendation from the executive of a branch of this association.

That is the first amendment which my Bill deals with. It requires that the evidence under which a certificate may be issued shall be given under oath. At present part of the qualification of a candidate is that he must have served under a certain master on inland waters for a certain time, and obtain a certificate to this effect. The master, in a great many cases, does not like to refuse, although the candidate may not have compiled with the conditions, and so he gives the certificate, but if he had to swear to it he would not do so. There is no responsibility on the man who makes the statement ; he commits no criminal offence, but at the same time he deceives the department and the public.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry to have the debate go on under a misconception. We received information from the other side a full hour ago that it was desirable that we should adjourn, and in making the motion I thought I was giving effect to the sense of the House. I desire now to withdraw the motion for adjournment, to let my hon. friend speak to the Bill, and if the House will permit me.

Mr. LANCASTER. We perhaps might get along quicker if we went into committee. If the motion carries we can speak in committee.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have made the proposition that this and the other order should be referred to a special committee.

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot accept that. I am sick and tired of having it suggested to me that public Bills should go to special committees for the purpose of having them defeated and not considered on their merits. In these special committees they are dealt with in a cursory and careless way, and it simply means that the House shirks its responsibility. I will proceed with my argument now.

Mr. CLARKE. There is another very important Bill on the order paper that a great many members are interested in. May I ask the hon. gentleman who is leading the House if it would not be possible to make an arrangement by which we could have another opportunity of discussing these Bills ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Prime Minister intimated the other day that it might be found necessary to name another special day, but in his absence I would not care to make any agreement on the subject. It is quite possible that such an arrangement could be made, but I am not at liberty to make any arrangement in his absence.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then I will go on. As I have said, the first amendment is in regard to the evidence being under oath. The Minister of Marine says this might be made a matter of regulation, but this constant government by Order in Council is merely taking away the right of parliament, which is to make a law which every one is bound to carry out, and which cannot be altered from time to time. The second amendment is very important, and it deals with the nationality of masters and mates sailing Canadian ships. In the United States one must be an American citizen before he can be master or mate of any boat owned in the United States ; and, therefore, it is that in boats plying side by side in the same waters the American boat must have an American captain, whereas the captain of the Canadian boat need not be a British subject. This is unfair, and it should be remedied. An American citizen can come into Canada and get a boat, which otherwise would be commanded by a Canadian, but before a British subject can command an American boat he must become an American citizen. The Masters and Mates Association have dealt with this subject in the following resolution :

Moved by Captain Milligan, seconded by Captain Jordan, that this association memorialize the Dominion government to cancel all certificates of masters and mates held by persons who have gone, or may go, to the United States and obtain certificates to sail vessels, where such persons are required to swear allegiance to the United States in order to qualify them to obtain such American certificates.

That is the recommendation of the Canadian masters and mates with regard to that. It seems to me that I should only have to state this case to get the unanimous support of this House for this measure, except that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who seems to think it ought not to pass. The case is so obvious that it looks to me like an insult to the intelligence of this House to argue that a man who is not a British subject should be allowed to come into Canada and take away from masters and mates who choose to remain British subjects their occupation, and at the same time to say to Canadian masters and mates that they shall not have a similar privilege in the other country. The next amendment I wish to make is :

No person shall be entitled to present himself for examination for master until he has obtained a certificate of competency as mate, and has served as such for at least twelve months, and furnishes a statutory declaration of the master under whom he served of such service.

I wish to add that to the section which deals with that matter. That is recommended also by the same association which deals with it in this way :

Waiting the arrival of the St. Catharines delegates an informal discussion took place as to the administration of the law respecting certificates to masters and mates. Instances were given in which certificates of competency were granted to a number of persons who had served as pursers and in other like capacities, but who had no knowledge of seamanship whatever and never sailed a boat. No person should be granted a certificate as a mate unless he had served twenty-four months as wheelman and no one to be allowed to take masters' papers unless he has obtained a certificate of competency as mate and has served as such at least twenty-four months.

The next amendment I wish to make reads as follows :

No person shall be entitled to present himself for examination as mate until he has served as wheelman for the period of twenty-four months, and furnishes to the examiner a statutory declaration of the master under whom he served of such service.

These are the two sections which are dealt with in the resolution which I have just read. Now I come to a matter which it is a wonder to me has not been amended long ago. Nobody, however, noticed it. It is a matter which should only require to be stated in order to have this House correct it. It will hardly be believed by hon. members that the men who are examining candidates for masters' and mates' certificates do not require to be qualified themselves. Anybody can be appointed an examiner for masters and mates in inland waters. All up through these lakes, which are considered more dangerous than the Atlantic ocean, because the storms come up more quickly, and there is less sea room, men who should be most competent are allowed to pass examinations held by anybody whom the government appoint, and who need not know anything about the subject. It is just as if lawyers were to be examined by dry goods merchants or carpenters or blacksmiths, or any other men who do not know anything about law. Perhaps the hon minister will say that the government would not appoint a man who was not a competent lake master. But it is just as well for the government to have the law behind them, so as to enable them to resist successfully the importunities of persons who might want the appointment in return for some political service. The government should not appoint as an examiner any one who is not himself a competent lake navigator; and it is well for the government to be strengthened by the law on the subject. That matter is dealt with also by a resolution of the Canadian Association of Masters and Mates passed on February 8th of this year, at the city of Toronto. It seems that to-day a collector of customs is the examiner of masters and mates; and this motion is in these words:

Moved by Capt. Crawford, seconded by Capt. Gidley, that we petition the Dominion government to rescind the Order in Council which makes collectors of customs examiners of masters and mates, and the amendments to the law to provide for the statement of qualified examiners who shall be paid a stated salary instead of by fees as at present; the examiners to be appointed to be in all cases competent lake navigators.

Following out the recommendation of that resolution, I have this amendment in my Bill:

Section 4 of the Act respecting Certificates to masters and mates of ships is amended by adding after the word 'examiners' in the sixth line the words 'which shall be by salary, and not in any way affected by the number or results of the examinations,' and also by adding after the word 'effect' in the last line the words 'but no person shall be appointed an examiner in respect to masters and mates of ships trading on the inland waters or on coasting voyages unless he himself is a competent lake navigator and has a certificate to that effect.'

Under this nobody could be an examiner who was not a navigator. We have the additional almost ridiculous state of affairs, that the examiner is paid fees, and it is his interest to pass the man who seeks to be examined, and as a result he may drown people instead of carrying them safely. The Bill provides that the examiners shall be paid salaries. There are only two men in the province of Ontario to-day who would be examiners. One lives at St. Catharines, and the other I believe is generally found at Toronto. The Auditor General's Report show the fees they received last year. I am told by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that it is his intention to have these gentlemen salaried. I am simply carrying out his intention in this Act. Since this Act has been printed and before that time, the minister told me verbally and in a lettter that it is his intention to make these officers salaried officers, although they are not salaried at present. Then why should he oppose this amendment? It is in the interest of public policy that examiners should not be affected financially by the fact of those who come before them for qualification passing or not passing. That is the only way in which we can expect proper examinations and care in results.

The next amendment is that:

The section substituted for section 7 of the said Act by section 2 of chapter 41 of the statutes of 1891 is amended by adding after the word 'boats' in the fourteenth line the words 'such certificates to be conditioned to become void upon "the holder thereof renouncing his allegiance to the British Crown."'

That is auxiliary to the carrying out of what I have contended for in regard to British subjects. If a man gets a certificate and afterwards ceases to be a British subject, by going to the United States or any other foreign country and becoming a naturalized subject of such country, then his Canadian certificate as master or mate should be of no value.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Can we confer upon a foreigner the rights of a British subject in Canada?

Mr. LANCASTER. No doubt and we are saying that if they are not British subjects they cannot be masters and mates of British boats.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Therefore you cannot give them the quality necessary to be masters and mates.

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot see how we are saying they shall not be British subjects by that. We are saying that if they are not British subjects they are not fit to run Canadian boats. The American government says if they are not Americans they are not fit to run American boats.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If they are naturalized Canadians would not that be sufficient?

Mr. LANCASTER. If they are naturalized Canadians they would be British subjects in Canada, British subjects by naturalization.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is all we can do in Canada.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is no flag in Canada other than the British Flag. If they are naturalized Canadians they are only naturalized British subjects. There is no other citizen of a British country than a citizen of Great Britain and Ireland. There may be a Canadian but he is a British subject. If he is qualified to hold any position in Canada it is because he is a British subject. Surely the Minister of Justice does not contend that Canada can have citizens who are not subjects of Great Britain.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I contend as a most elementary legal principle that you cannot confer upon a foreigner the rights of a British subject. You can give him certain rights but not the rights of a British subject; that is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the British parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. We can certainly say who shall be masters and mates on our vessels.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, we can do that.

Mr. LANCASTER. If we say 'British subject' does not that include Canadian citizens. Is the Minister of Justice not a subject of Great Britain, am I not one, is my boy in St. Catharines, born in Grimsby, in the county of Lincoln, in the Dominion of Canada not a British subject? If I was going the length of saying what should make a man a British subject for the purposes of this Bill that would be different, but I am simply saying that no matter what constitutes a man a British subject, if he is one he is qualified to be a master or mate of a British vessel. The government of the United States will not allow a man who is a British subject and a Canadian citizen also to run a boat there, and we should protect our masters and mates and see that Americans are not allowed to come over here and take their situations. For illustration. If an American master should come over to St. Catharines and obtain command of a Canadian boat, putting a Canadian out of his place, and if that Canadian should go to Buffalo and try to get the place vacated by the other man he could not do so because he was not an American citizen. An American, however, could go from country to country in alternate years in this way, commanding first an American and then a Canadian boat, but as the Canadian is a British subject, he is limited to taking the boats he could get in Canada and if the other man was willing to take $10 a month less, and put him out of his position then the Canadian would not be able to get a boat in the United States. If you want to protect Canadian workingmen and the people of Canada you should see that their boats are run by Canadian citizens and British subjects. The statute that I propose to amend is chapter 42 of the statutes of 1894, section 4, which Act itself amended the Revised Statutes relating to the certificates of masters and mates. This section now reads:

> Examinations may be instituted in Canada for British subjects or persons domiciled in Canada for at least three years.

So, the word 'British subject' is used in the statute.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The question is whether we can make British subjects in Canada.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is meant by the word 'British subject' in this statute? It is strange, what new, technical objections are raised, now to statutes that have been left unquestioned for years. This statute was passed in 1894, and the Minister of Justice, if not actually Minister of Justice all the time, has been in power since 1896. Yet, he has not changed the section of this Act. For my part I am prepared to take chances on whether a British subject is a Canadian citizen or not, or whether a Canadian citizen can be anything but a British subject. The statute provides that examinations can be instituted for British subjects and those are the fellows I want. The Minister of Justice and I need not quarrel about what the word 'British subject' means. The statute provides that the examinations may be instituted for British subjects or for persons domiciled in Canada for at least three years. I want to strike out the words 'or for persons' in the second line. So, it would read:

> Examinations may be instituted in Canada for British subjects domiciled in Canada for at least three years.

So, the Minister of Justice must not blame me for using the words 'British subjects;' my amendment does not contain these words at all. I did not put those words in the statute and all I am doing is simply not taking them out of it—I can leave them where they have been ever since 1894. It seems to me that the amendment I propose is not only in the interest of navigation generally and of all who travel in steamboats in Canada. The section in full reads:

> Examinations may be instituted in Canada, for British subjects or for persons domiciled in Canada for at least three years who intend to become masters or mates of ships trading on the inland waters of Canada, or on the minor waters of Canada or on coasting voyages, or who wish to procure the certificates of competency or service hereinafter mentioned; and foreign subjects serving in ships registered in Canada, and trading on the inland waters of Canada, or on the minor waters of Canada, or on coasting voyages, shall be deemed to be domiciled in Canada while so serving.

So, under the present statute, while working here a foreign subject can get the benefit of the three years' residence, under my amendment, he cannot get the certificate unless he becomes a British subject. I am supported here by the resolution moved by Captain Milligan that I have already read. There was a further resolution :

Captain Gidley moved, seconded by Captain Dix, that a committee composed of Captains Milligan, McCoppen and Boyle, St. Catherines, be appointed, with Mr. Lancaster, M.P., for Lincoln, to revise the Act relating to masters and mates, prepare amendments to said Acts in the shape of a Bill on the line of the resolutions passed and suggestions made at this meeting, and that it be presented at the coming session of parliament.—Carried.

In response to that request I met that committee on several occasions, they being good enough to come to St. Catharines to see me. They requested me to put the matter into shape, and so I have put it in legal phraseology in this Bill. It was gone over carefully, and after it was printed it was gone over again just as carefully. I am authorized to say that the Bill I am advocating is in every particular exactly what the Canadian Association of Masters and Mates want. Now, in case any hon. gentleman should charge me with carelessness in not ascertaining the facts as to who can be a mate or a master in a United States vessel, I will refer to the revised statutes of the United States, sections 2165 and 2174. I need not trouble this House with the former, because it merely sets forth what a man has to do in order to become a citizen of the United States. But section 2174 provides as follows :

Every seaman being a foreigner who declares his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States in any competent court and shall have served three years on board of a merchant vessel of the United States subsequent to the date of such declaration, may on his application to any competent court and the production of his certificate of discharge and good conduct during that time, together with the certificate of his declaration of intention to become a citizen, be admitted a citizen of the United States ; and every seaman being a foreigner shall after his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States for the purpose of manning and serving on board any merchant vessel of the United States, anything to the contrary in any Act of congress notwithstanding, but such seaman shall for all purposes of protection as an American citizen be deemed such after the filing of his declaration of intention to become such citizen——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does that mean that they are to be citizens of the United States ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The time referred to is the time he has served on the vessel of the United States—three years—and on application and production of his certificate of discharge and good conduct——together with the certificate of his declaration of intention to become a citizen, be admitted a citizen of the United States.

He then becomes a citizen of the United States and can vote. He becomes a citizen of the United States by making a declaration of his intention and by serving three years on a United States vessel. But no British subject who is going to remain a British subject will go over there and declare his intention of foreswearing Great Britain and sailing in an American vessel for the purpose of doing it. Now, here is the statement of the United States local inspectors, dated March 12, 1904, and signed Frederick L. R. Pope and Joseph H. Schumocher. They are the United States local inspectors, and are attached to the Department of Labour and Commerce in the United States. They write this letter, addressed to Mr. W. D. Graham, secretary of the Canadian Association of Masters and Mates, St. Catharines Branch, No. 8, St. Catharines, Ontario :

In reply to your second question, an Act of congress approved May 28, 1896, provides that, after the 1st day of January, 1897, no person shall be qualified to hold a license as a commander or watch officer of a merchant vessel of the United States who is not a native born citizen or whose naturalization as a citizen shall not have been fully completed.

That is the present law of the United States. So that on all grounds it seems to me these amendments I propose ought to be adopted. I trust the House will see that no harm can be done and a good deal of good may be done to the travelling public by adopting these amendments.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As I stated just now, there is no necessity whatever for passing this Bill during this session. We have received no serious complaints yet in the department. The only difficulty about the Act is that it has been amended so many times that it needs consolidation, together with some slight amendments. I gave instructions to the chairman of the examiners to prepare a consolidation of the Bill, but unfortunately he was called away to some other business. He informed me in the beginning of May that he could not go on with the consolidation. Therefore, on the 3rd of May, I wrote the following letter to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), explaining to him that the effect of amendments he proposed could be carried out by regulations. I do not know why the hon. gentleman persists in pushing this Bill in face of the promises that have been made to him, and in face of the fact that most of his amendments are already provided for in the law now existing. For the information of the House I may read that letter, which covers the whole ground :

Ottawa, 3rd May, 1904.

Dear Mr. Lancaster,—In my letter to you of the 22nd March I notified you that the amendments you proposed to make to the Masters' and Mates' Act would be embodied in a new Act which is being prepared in my department, and considering there is nothing in your amendment which calls for urgent legislation I think you might rest satisfied with my pledge. Unfortunately, owing to a heavy pressure of work, the new Bill which I propose to introduce will not be ready in time for this session of parliament. You must understand that a Bill of this nature requires most careful consideration, and if I were to decide upon introducing it this session, before every clause has been duly thought out, the result would probably necessitate the passing of several amendments in the near future.

There are reasons why I am not disposed to allow your amendment, the principal one being that you wish to introduce a great deal of matter into the Act which belongs exclusively to the regulations.

In the first section of your amendment I take it that it is your desire to obtain a more definite guarantee of applicants' service than at present exists, by requiring that their testimonials should be sworn to. This is a question of proof of service, and as such belongs to the regulations to be decided upon by the Governor in Council. New regulations will be issued when my Bill has passed, and in this respect they provide a better arrangement than you propose, namely, the production of official discharges.

Referring to the second part of the first section of your amendment, your desire to exclude foreigners has also the effect of disqualifying British subjects other than those domiciled in this country, that is to say, officers and men serving on ships registered in Great Britain or any part of the British dominions except Canada would not be entitled to examination. Perhaps you are not aware that our foreign-going certificates are recognized by the Imperial Board of Trade and any British possession declared by order of Her Majesty in Council under the provisions of the Merchants Shipping (Colonial) Act of 1869, as equivalent to their own, but only on condition that we adopt the same regulations with regard to the examination of candidates. In my new Bill I provided that only British subjects are qualified for examination.

In subsection 2 of section 2 of your amendment you again deal with matter pertaining to the regulations and for which there is no place in the Act. Twelve months' compulsory service as mate with a mate's certificate which you desire, is provided for in the new regulations, but with this difference, that official discharges are required in place of a statutory declaration.

In subsection 3 of the same section you are again encroaching on the regulations by providing that certain service as wheelman will be necessary to entitle an applicant to a mates' examination. This grade of wheelsmen mentioned by you if allowed to pass would disquanify apprentices, seamen, mates, boatswains, pursers, pilots and masters, all of whom have every right to claim examination. The twenty-four months' service you desire is provided for in the new regulations.

In section 3 of your amendment you have again borrowed material from the regulations to place in the Act, which, in my opinion, is quite unnecessary and superfluous as tending to curtail the powers of the Governor in Council. No less than eight examiners are at present on salary and eventually I intend to put them on the same footing, that is to say, when the chief examiner assures me that the salaries can be earned. In the second part of this section you require that no person shall be appointed an examiner of coasting and inland waters' candidates unless he is himself a competent lake navigator and has a certficate to that effect. You do not appear to be aware of the fact that a lake navigator is incompetent to command a vessel in the coasting trade. My new Bill provides that not only shall the examiner hold a certificate but he is required to pass a satisfactory examination before two other examiners to show his competency to examine candidates.

Section 4 of your amendment requiring certificates to be so conditioned that they become void in the event of the holder renouncing his allegiance to the British Crown, is too unreasonable for me to countenance. A certificate once gained is the property of the holder and has been duly paid for, and like any other property he may own must belong to him unless he has committed some crime which renders its forfeiture necessary.

The same objection applies to section 5 of your amendment.

I made just now a proposition to the hon. gentleman to have this matter referred to a special committee of this House, along with another Bill; so I think it is quite unreasonable, under these circumstance, to pass this Bill, especially when there is no urgency for it.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Prefontaine) has in the closing words of his speech given the whole reason for sending this to a special committee. The hon. gentleman said that my hon. friend's Bill is quite unreasonable. What does he want to send it to a committee for? To shirk the responsibility that he would assume by refusing to take up this measure in this House, absolutely that is the reason. The hon. gentleman declares that a master or mate may not be a British subject and that if a master or mate ceases to be a British subject he may still retain the rights of a British subject and he is not willing to have the proposals of my hon. friend crystallized into the legislation of Canada. The hon. gentleman proposes to have one measure of justice meted out to Canadians who go to the other side and to have a different kind of treatment for those who come from the other side to this country. The hon. gentleman says there is no demand for this legislation. There is no demand because the hon. gentleman is not in the mood to take up such legislation. The hon. gentleman thinks it is sacrilege that he should pass any legislation in this House which interferes with the regulations of his department. I will venture to say that the letter read here to-night was prepared by his own deputies or officers. Everybody knows that the hon. gentleman does not know anything about it. I am not doing the hon. gentleman any injustice when I say that. We all recognize that he is new in his department. I am not reflecting in the slightest on the hon. gentleman in saying that he cannot master these things in a day, but it is perfectly apparent from the letter which the hon. gentleman has read that he has red tape in his department. The hon. gentleman is content with that system of red tape which grows up in the department here. Every man knows that the time comes when we have entirely changed conditions, outgrowing that state of things, and we therefore should make changes when it is necessary to do so. What was rather astonishing was the attitude of the hon. Minister of Justice. He says that we are now attempting to declare who shall be a British subject. That is a most extraordinary declaration as far as it bears upon the legislation of this House. For all the purposes for which a man may become a British subject in Canada provision is now made. In regard to the franchise, is there any question as to whether we can make a British subject or not? These are only some of the pretexts that hon. gentlemen will offer in opposition to such legislation as this. I think there is one plain, necessary rule that can be laid down in Canada, and that is, that a Canadian has a better right in this country than any alien has. If any man who has been a Canadian or who is a British born subject and who alienates his right by becoming a citizen of a foreign state, desires to come back to Canada and to exercise the rights to which he was born, he may become a British subject again by naturalization, which would place him in the same position as that which he occupied before. He should become a British subject before he should be permitted to exercise the right of a Canadian. Let us take the example of the country to the south of us. I am not finding fault with the system which prevails there. I think the people to the south of us are rather to be applauded for the decided preference which they have shown for their own people. If there is anything that solidifies and builds up a country, if there is anything that has a tendency to make people attached to their country, it is that they shall have that protection in their own country that citizens of other countries receive from their own state. I do not think that this is a Bill that requires any elaboration. My hon. friend from Lincoln who has introduced the Bill has stated in the most concise terms what he proposes. One of the things which he proposes, and it is not a matter to be settled by regulation, is that the examiners shall be qualified persons, that they shall be paid and that there shall be no inducement to pass candidates. That is not a matter of regulation and if it were one, if we are to judge at all even by inference from what the hon. minister has stated, it would be a very loose sort of regulation. It is not a matter of regulation as to whether a master or mate shall be a British subject. The hon. minister has declared in the most emphatic terms and he crystallized it in that letter which he has now embalmed on 'Hansard' that he does not think that the candidate ought to be a British subject. He says he would not consent to that. Does he propose to send this Bill to a committee to ask Canadians to stifle that proposal and to let him out of the responsibility of saying that masters and mates shall not be Canadians or British subjects? When I use the word 'Canadians' I mean Canadians in the broadest sense. I do not intend it to be confined to persons born in Canada. One might be a Canadian born in Canada and not a British subject. He may have been born in Canada and taken the oath of allegiance to a foreign state. If he does that he forfeits his rights. I do not for one moment believe that the hon. gentleman will take the responsibility of standing in the way of giving effect to so reasonable a Bill, and I do not believe he will have the support of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House if he does so.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the motion is carried there are two or three words that I should like to say about this Bill. If I understand this Bill correctly the experience and ability of the men who are to navigate our Canadian ships are in no way interfered with. Every precaution surrounds the procedure introduced into this Bill by my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), to secure that in future none but qualified mariners shall navigate our vessels. The necessary qualification for a person before he can pass an examination as master is that he shall have served twelve months as mate and that before he is qualified to pass as mate he shall have served twenty-four months as wheelsman, and he must produce a certificate from the master on the vessel on which he served as wheelsman to that effect. What the public are interested in is that the men who have charge of our Canadian ships shall be competent. My hon. friend relaxes no provision existing in the law now. He does not interfere with the qualifications of the men who are to navigate our Canadian vessels. They must be men of experience and ability. The other provision that he asks shall be incorporated in the law is that the men who navigate these ships shall be Canadians or British subjects. He has given abundant reasons why that amendment should be made in the law. If there were a dearth of skilled mariners there might be an objection taken to an amendment of that kind, but that objection has not been urged by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine), and it cannot be urged by any hon. gentleman who knows anything about navigation upon the lakes. There is only a limited number of vessels in Canada. There is an ample number of qualified men to navigate these vessels and my hon. friend asks that preference shall be given to Canadians. I think he is quite right in asking that that amendment shall be made. It is not fair to Canadian mariners that American citizens should come over here and qualify themselves by passing the Canadian examination to take charge of Canadian vessels, who, in after years, may go back to the other side and take command of American vessels.

The law as it exists places Canadians in a secondary position to American navigators. I cannot for the life of me see what solid objection can be advanced by the Minister of Marine to the passage of this Bill. If there were a dearth of qualified Canadian mariners to navigate our vessels on the great lakes that might be given as a reason, but that reason does not exist. Our navigators are not permitted to navigate American ships, and it is most unfair to American labour, that foreigners should be permitted to come over here when it suits them, and take the command of Canadian vessels at probably lower wages than our own people would want. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) is entitled to the thanks of the Canadian marine for his efforts to promote this measure; the responsibility for defeating it rests with the government and their supporters.

House divided on motion (Mr. Lancaster) for second reading of Bill.

ADJOURNMENT—DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONK. I would ask the government to complete the record of the Dundonald papers. At page 32 of the printed report there is a list of officers submitted, 6th of May, 1904, by Lieutenant Colonel Smart to Hon. Sydney Fisher; I would like to have the original paper connected with that letter. At page 32 of the same report, accompanying the letter of the Hon. Sydney Fisher, there is a memorandum and I would like to have the original of that memorandum. I also want the original of the letter referred to in the letter of the 19th of May, from Lieutenant Colonel Smart to the Hon. Mr. Fisher. I ask that the originals of these three documents be placed on the table of the House. At page 26, reference is made to letters of the 14th and 15th of May, 1904, from Lieutenant Colonel Whitley to the Hon. Mr. Fisher, and the inclosures—referred to in Mr. Fisher's letters of the 20th of May to Colonel Whitley—I would ask to have these letters brought down. There are also several other letters that are mentioned in that letter from Mr. Fisher. On page 26 of the report I find the following:

> I have written to our friends telling them that this has been done and urging them to take hold of their work energetically and loyally, and I am sure they will do so.

We have not the copies of these letters. In addition to that I would ask for the production of all letters from the Hon. Mr. Fisher to Mr. McNeil Miltimore and to all other persons relating to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, and to the appointment of any of the officers of that regiment. Also for all reports or returns to the Militia Department by Mr. McNeil Miltimore or any other persons in any way relating to the Dundonald Rifle Club at Sweetsburg, or to the ranges used by the club, or to the clubs services, proceedings or expenses. I have no doubt the government is anxious to complete that record. The documents I mentioned in the last place are not referred to in the return already brought down; but as they have reference to this matter I suppose they will be produced.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend want the originals or certain documents which he mentioned ? Are the copies on the table, and he wants the originals, or are they something which are not brought down ?

Mr. MONK. The copies are in the return, but I would like to have the originals. I do not think any of the documents I have asked for are private.

Mr. FIELDING. The attention of the ministers concerned will be called to the hon. gentleman's request, and if there are any papers belonging to the record which are not private, I am sure they will be brought down.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SPROULE. Since the minister refused to answer the question I put to him some time ago, as to whether in view of their various defeats to-night the government intended to resign, or whether like the Hon. G. W. Ross, they intend to hold on ; if they do hold on, they might tell us what business will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is expecting an early call from His Excellency, he will be disappointed. To-morrow we intend to invite the attention of the House to the consideration of the Bills on the order paper which chiefly concern the Minister of Marine. We will not take up the Militia Bill. If we have sufficient time we will go into supply with the estimates of the Marine Department.

Mr. SPROULE. The premier intimated that he might give some information to-night with respect to the Election Law Bill. Has the Finance Minister any information to give ?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot give an answer to that to-night.

Mr. CLARKE. There is on the order paper the second reading of the Bill to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act in the name of Mr. MacCarthy, and the second reading of the Bill respecting Union Labels. Will the government give the House an opportunity of discussing these measures.

Mr. FIELDING. An intimation has been given by the premier that an opportunity will be given to discuss one of these Bills, but whether the premier meant that a day would be given for Public Bills generally. I am not quite prepared to say. I would ask my hon. friend to renew that question, when the Prime Minister is in his seat.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.45 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 21, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW BRUNSWICK SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. ALEXANDER GIBSON moved :

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 19th report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for receiving petitions for private Bills be suspended in reference to the petition of the New Brunswick Southern Railway Company, presented this day, praying for an Act to declare their railway to be for the general advantage of Canada, and that the said petition be read and received forthwith.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to understand the reason why this particular measure demands a suspension of the rules of the House. I have not heard any reasons given thus far. The hon. gentleman who is making the motion will no doubt be able to inform the House.

Mr. GIBSON. The petition was handed to me by the Southern Railway Company of New Brunswick. The reason they come here is that the Hon. Mr. Blair, the chairman of the Railway Commission, told them that the legislation which they had obtained from the provincial legislature of New Brunswick was not sufficient, and that they should obtain legislation from the Dominion parliament. I only received the petition the day before yesterday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not been able to gather from the hon. gentleman's statement why the rules of the House should be suspended in favour of this petition. If he is not able to give any reason, perhaps he would give us an opportunity to examine the petition. The mere fact that somebody has written a letter to the railway company does not seem to afford a sufficient reason why the rules of the House should be suspended.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that the reason given by my hon. friend is this, that this legislation was passed by the legislature of New Brunswick, but that in order that it should have the effect intended, it is necessary for the company to have a Dominion charter. I understand that the company were informed only recently that their charter was insufficient for their purposes, and that they would have to obtain the necessary powers from this parliament. That is the only reason.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that is the reason, it is not set forth in the petition, and I do not understand on what principle this petition has received the favourable report of the committee to which it was referred.

The petition sets out that legislation is desired from this parliament for two purposes. One is to confirm two Acts of the legislature of the province of New Brunswick relating to the company, passed in 1901 and in 1902. Therefore, so far as they are concerned, there has been abundant opportunity to have this Bill introduced within the proper time. That portion of the petition affords not the slightest ground for a suspension of the rules of this House, if they mean anything. If they mean nothing, but if we can set them aside on the most trivial pretexts, as we have been doing during the last six weeks, let us abolish them altogether. If they do mean something, let us require, both in this House and in the committees of this House, some better reason than that stated in this petition. If the suspension of the rules of this House is to be a mere form, let us understand it at once. The second purpose stated in the petition is to construct a bridge over the St. Croix river, in the province of New Brunswick, at the terminus of the company's railway. The petition recites :

> That the company was incorporated under the said chapter 74 of the statutes of 1901 of New Brunswick, with power to acquire the Shore Line Railway, and the deed of transfer was confirmed by the said chapter 102 of the statutes of 1903.

That is all that there is in this petition, which I understand has been reported favourably by a committee of this House. What the committee found in that petition to report favourably upon I do not know. If the rules of the House are to be observed, I think this Bill ought not to be received under the facts set forth in the petition. I am not for one moment stating that this will not be desirable legislation. It may be legislation that I myself would support. All I am calling attention to is that we are deliberately, day after day, and week after week, violating the rules of this House on the flimsiest possible pretexts, and in this case without any pretext at all. All I am suggesting is that we should adopt some course that would be reasonable—either abolish the rules of the House or, if they require to be suspended, let that suspension be based on some reason that is worthy of the name.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that this is not the preliminary petition. This petition does not state the reasons for delay. The other petition probably would.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked if the petition sets forth the reason and I asked it because my hon. friend did not give any. Perhaps my right hon. friend knows what are the reasons.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I know nothing more than I have said, but I understood the reason simply was that the chairman of the Railway Commission had stated that their charter was insufficient and would have to be ratified by this parliament.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I have just had a few words from the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill, and I have learned from him that it was only within a week that they became informed of the construction placed upon their charter by the Railway Commission. There can be no question of taking the public by surprise because another legislature had granted certain powers, and it is now discovered that these powers are not sufficient and will have to emanate from this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not suggested that the company were taking the public by surprise, but what I say is that we have a rule requiring that these Bills shall come before parliament within a certain time, and for a very good reason. The reason is that if they are not brought before parliament within proper time, they may not receive the consideration they should. I would like this to stand until I observe whether or not the preliminary petition sets forth any sufficient reasons why we should set aside the rules.

Mr. GIBSON. I only received the petition on Friday after the House had voted and have taken the first occasion to present it.

Mr. EMMERSON. If there even was an occasion when the rule should be suspended it seems to me this is one. The company obtained legislation from the New Brunswick legislature. Then very recently they made application to the Railway Commission for power to construct a bridge in order to make connection at the Boundary river between Maine and New Brunswick with the Washington County Railway. They were told that their charter did not give them the right to make such an application and that it would be necessary for them to seek power from the Dominion parliament. They only learned this within the last week. It seems to me we ought not to enforce too rigidly our rules. Parliament is here for the purpose of serving the people, and here is a great public interest to be served.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the New Brunswick legislature had granted this company the right to build a bridge across the international boundary or river which separates Canada from the United States ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. But the legislature gave power to connect with the Washington County Railway at the boundary. Under that legislation, the company applied to the Railway Commission, under the impression that the powers granted them by the New Brunswick legislature were sufficient. The Railway Commission decided against that view.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And rightly too.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, very properly. Now they seek a remedy. They want to make the connection. It is in the public interest that connection should be made. Why should we hesitate to give the power ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Surely the hon. gentleman is not so obtuse as to understand that we are objecting to the legislation. I distinctly said that I might very probably support the legislation, but I object to suspend the rules of parliament without any reason being stated. Parliament is, of course, the servant of the people, but it has to be governed by certain rules, and these rules should not be suspended without some plausible reasons being given. My hon. friend the Postmaster General says that this was only discovered recently. Assuming that to be the case, it ought to have been stated by the hon. gentleman who makes the motion.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. So long as the House is informed of the reason, that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It had not been stated to the House when I made my objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, it was.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not hear it. When was this discovered ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend stated, when he introduced this petition, that this legislation was asked for because of the information given by the chairman of the Railway Commission that the powers vested in the company by the local legislature were inadequate.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. Minister of Railways says that the Railway Commission very properly gave its information that the company had not the power to do what it was seeking to do. Then there must have been gross negligence on the part of the company. The company should have known that it had not that power.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 141) for the relief of Eliza Robertson.—Mr. Holmes.

Bill (No. 142) respecting the Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'The Rio de Janeiro Tramway, Light and Power Company, Limited.'—Mr. Calvert.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON moved :

That, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 19th report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, the time for posting private Bills under rule 64 be reduced to three days.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. There may not be any objection to this, but it is a rather unusual motion. I do not suppose that the session is coming to an end so very suddenly that there may not be an opportunity to post Bills in the usual time. There might be reason to apply this proposed change to one Bill, but the motion is put in general form and would apply to all. In that case I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alexander Johnston) should give some reason for the motion.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. The matter came before the committee. It was pointed out that there were few Bills pending. It was thought desirable to expedite the business and so it was unanimously decided to present a motion to this effect. I merely present the decision unanimously reached by the committee.

Motion agreed to.

MERCHANT MARINE AND CANADIAN ENSIGN.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA. I would call the attention of the government, and especially of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) to an incident related in the Montreal newspapers. I refer particularly to 'Le Canada,' but I think the same facts are stated in the other newspapers of Saturday last. If the statement of the facts is accurate, it would appear that the captain of a merchantman from Nova Scotia, Captain Taylor, while calling at a port in the Argentine Republic, was ordered by the British Consul to haul down the flag, the red ensign bearing the coat of arms of Canada. On his coming to Canada he has made public the fact. I would like to know since when a Canadian merchantman is not entitled to fly the Canadian flag. I do not call upon the minister to give an answer now, but I would be glad if he would ascertain the facts. I may remind the House that a number of years ago—in the seventies, I think—an Order in Council was adopted by the British government, upon the recommendation of the Lords of the Admiralty, allowing all vessels registered in Canada, belonging to the Canadian fleet, to use the red ensign with the Canadian coat of arms. And this was subsequently ratified by an Order in Council in Canada. So, if the facts of the case to which I have called attention are accurately given, it would appear that this British consul has not only insulted the loyal colony of Canada, but he has violated a direct order of the King adopted in England and in Canada. I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see to it that justice is done in the matter.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I have had no official complaint or notification concerning the case referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa). I will make inquiries and, if it is necessary to apply any remedy, I will see to it that the remedy is applied.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) to allow this matter to rest for a day. I have some papers in my possession which will afford some information in this connection, and which I can bring to-morrow. It will be remembered that some time ago—I think it was in May, 1901—I brought the matter up in connection with a vessel named the 'Canada,' belonging to the port of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. I looked up some material then, but have not it at hand at this moment. If the hon. minister will let the matter rest until to-morrow I shall be able, I think, to give some information that will be valuable to the public generally, and to the mercantile marine in particular, so that all may know exactly the position in which the mercantile and marine stand in this connection as respects the flag.

CANADIAN FISHING REGULATIONS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) to a letter I have just received which reads as follows :—

The Inn,
Gananoque, Ontario, June 20, 1904.

Mr. George Taylor, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Taylor,—I am mailing you under separate cover, a notice I found posted in the Hubbard House, at Clayton, to-day. There was also one posted at the Walton, Windsor, the post office and Hungerford hardware store, and I understood from very good authority that they had been posted in all the hotels throughout the islands.

Undoubtedly, this means 'Permits or Licenses for Fishing in Canadian 'Inland waters,' instead of that he has said 'Permits or Licenses for Fishing in Canadian waters.' Personally I met a party of four New Yorkers who could not get across the river Saturday on account of trains being late, and on seeing this notice at the Hubbard House decided not to come to the Inn. I met them personally today, and guaranteed almost everything, but it was impossible to move them.

Is there not some way that we can have this notice changed so that it will not be misleading? It is certainly hard enough to do business in a Canadian resort, without having notices posted in all the hotels that are detrimental to our business.

If you will kindly advise me what course to pursue, using your name as authority, I will do so at my own expense; although I think Mr. Goodwin should call in his notices and print new ones, but at the same time, as the season is on us, if it is possible to allow me to print notices. I will do so.

Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience.

I am, yours very truly,
(Sgd.) W. L. DAY.

The motion referred to by Mr. Day in his letter is as follows :—

TO ANGLERS.

Permits or licenses for fishing in Canadian waters for 1904 can be procured from the undersigned at his office, Market Square, Kingston (one block from Folger's wharf). Office hours, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

W. H. GOODWIN,
Ontario fishery overseer.

Kingston, May, 1904.

This notice, it is evident, has been distributed all along the American frontier. It is taken by Americans to mean : You cannot drop a hook in Canadian waters unless you first go to Kingston and on one of the three special days in the week, between the hours of ten and four, attend a certain office and apply and pay for a license. Yet, it has been understood that the waters between Kingston and Ogdensburg were free to American anglers. And now Americans will not come over to our side, owing to the bungling with regard to fishing licenses between this government and the Ontario government. I will send the notice and the letter to the minister, so that he may see definitely what is complained of and may issue some statement that can be given to our American friends to assure them that they are safe in coming to the Canadian side to spend their money, and fish in the river St. Lawrence.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is clear to me that this notice was issued by the Ontario government, because we have no official of that name in our employ. I will communicate with the fishery commissioner of Ontario and see what I can do.

Mr. TAYLOR. That does not apply to Canadian inland waters.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Surely the hon. gentleman will not hold me responsible for the action of others. I have enough to be responsible for in my own department.

Mr. TAYLOR. But Mr. Bastedo and his officials are under certain rules and regulations, and in face of them they go to work and put out these notices and drive people from Canada.

STEAMSHIP LINE BETWEEN FRANCE AND CANADA.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would call the attention of the leader of the government to the fact that about a week ago I obtained an order from the House for the production of copies of all papers and documents in relation to the establishment of a line of steamers between France and Canada. I would like the hon. gentleman to have the papers brought down as soon as possible. They cannot be very voluminous. It is more than a week since the order was made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad my hon. friend has called my attention to it. In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) the return may have been delayed, but I will see about it.

THE FISHING BOUNTIES.

Mr. HACKETT. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) told me a few days ago that he would bring down the report of the commission that he had appointed to investigate into the frauds with regard to fishing bounties as well as all information on that subject. Will the hon. gentleman say when he will bring down the papers ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will lay on the table of the House the papers connected with this matter as soon as I take up my estimates again. I have got the papers before me.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). On Friday last I made a statement to the House with regard to the legislation which was still to be introduced. I stated that the government would perhaps bring in some amendments to the Election Law, that there was a question as to what would be the nature of the Bill, and I could not give much information on that occasion in the absence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I am informed by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that the legislation he will propose will be of a very light character. It will refer, first, to the Representation Act so far as it concerns the province of New Brunswick, and is intended to remove a doubt which I understand has been created from the imperfect drafting of the Act. As it stands at present, it is not quite clear how many members the province of New Brunswick is entitled to, whereas it is well known that it is entitled to only thirteen members. Then an amendment is necessitated with regard to clause 27 of the Dominion Elections Act which reads as follows :

27. The Governor General shall, except as hereinafter mentioned, fix the day for nomination of candidates at the election.

2. At every general election he shall fix one and the same day for the nomination of candidates in all the electoral districts, except in the electoral districts of Algoma, in the province of Ontario, of Gaspé and Chicoutimi and Saguenay, in the province of Quebec, and of Burrard and Yale and Cariboo, in the province of British Columbia.

These constituencies were carried by the Representation Act of last year, and other constituencies were subdivided, and some legislation is therefore required which will be in the spirit of this Act, and nothing else. That is all.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Mr. CLARKE. Will there be any legislation respecting the voters' lists in any of the provinces ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Then that has been dropped ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No ; it never was intended.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 37) to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) I have an amendment to propose to give the right of appeal to the Crown and not take it away from the subject. The question arises as to whether it would not be proper to let both parties have an equal right to appeal, subject to the limitation with respect to cost and securities. At present that right does not lie except in cases where the sum exceeds $500. I have come to the conclusion that as this amendment is an important one so far as the Crown is concerned, that it is important that we should have the right to appeal, I am willing, in order to meet the objections made by the leader of the opposition, to broaden the right of appeal so as to give it to both parties. I therefore move to amend clause 1 by striking out the words in the 10th line ' on behalf of the Crown.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does that mean that in any case, however small, the amount may be the subject of an appeal to the Supreme Court ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is what it means.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Surely that is going very far, it will subject private litigants to enormous cost. Now does that mean, for instance, that where a party has obtained an order for a commission to examine witnesses in another country, there shall lie an appeal on that order from the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This will not apply to my hon. friend's case.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am not speaking about a case in which I am interested. At the same time, it seems to me this is going very far, and it is against the spirit of our legislation, at all events, in the province of Quebec, where judgments, interlocutory in their nature, are not appealable except to certain specified cases. Let me put this case to my hon. friend ; here is a litigant who gets a decree for a commission to examine witnesses say in England, and the Crown wishes to appeal from this judgment or decree to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Everybody knows what it costs for such an appeal and I do not think it is fair or just that a litigant should be subjected to such a large amount of costs on a question which could be remedied by a final judgment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think the matter could be remedied by a final judgment. It is in the interest of the Crown as well as of the individual that we should have an opportunity of settling as far as possible the jurisprudence and practice of the Exchequer Court. Cases are constantly rising in which it is important in the public interest that the Crown should have the right to have a principle settled, as for instance, in a small case, but on which a large amount may ultimately depend. For example, there was recently a case near Cornwall, on the judgment in which 40 or 50 cases depended, and it is important in the interest of the litigants that the principles applicable should be finally settled by the Supreme Court, and I do not think it is fair to assume, no matter who the Minister of Justice may be. whether it be my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) or any person else, that the Crown would undertake to advise appeals in cases where they would not be required in the public interest. But there may be exceptional cases in which such an appeal ought to be taken. Speaking from my own experience recently, I do not think of a single case in which there was a possibility of such an appeal as my hon. friend now says might arise.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does my hon. friend think it would be well to limit the cases in which such an appeal could be taken to certain specified cases, as for instance cases which are enumerated in the code of civil procedure of Quebec. I do not know the practice in other provinces or whether in other provinces there lies an appeal to courts of appeal from any interlocutory or preparatory judgment in the lower court, but it seems to me it would be a hardship to litigants to have the law say that there would be an appeal from any interlocutory judgment rendered in a case. It might happen that in years to come the Minister of Justice might not be such a fair minded and judicial gentleman as the gentleman who occupies the position to-day and that under these circumstances probably litigants would not get such fair treatment as under other circumstances. I suggest that the law as laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure of the province of Quebec be followed in this instance.

Section as amended, agreed to, and Bill as amended reported.

On motion for the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is a matter of procedure. I think that if my hon. friend does not specify in the Act that this law shall not apply to pending cases it will apply to them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When the Bill was drafted and was presented to me by the deputy minister I brought the question to his attention as to whether it would be applicable to present cases. His answer was that it would not be applicable to pending cases. I am not quite sure that it is a mere question of procedure. I think it goes beyond that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that if it is not otherwise stated it would apply to pending cases, and be regarded as procedure. I know that in our courts they have gone pretty far in defining procedure.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to have the views of my hon. friends opposite on this question, and we might have it amended in the Senate. I attach great importance to the opinion of Mr. Newcombe. I have his expressed opinion on the subject, but if my hon. friends think that we ought not to have come to that conclusion, we can arrange for an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have an equally great regard for the opinion of Mr. Newcombe. I simply said, looking at it offhand, that I thought it would have that effect. We will look into the matter, and discuss it with the minister and then as he says, it can be amended in the Senate if necessary.

Bill read a third time, and passed.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill 39, to amend the Yukon Territory Act. He said: When this Bill was up before, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) put this question to me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has there not been some question in reference to the elected and the appointed members, and did not the Minister of Justice give some opinion as to what would be the proper course to pursue under such circumstances ?

Since the matter was up before I consulted the officers of the department, because occasionally these opinions are given without my knowledge when they refer to matters of routine. They tell me that no question has been submitted to the department such as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has suggested.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It did not occur to me that the Bill was coming up to-day but my information was derived from newspapers in the Yukon, where what purported to be a telegram from the Minister of Justice to the Commissioner of the Yukon was published. The question as I recollect it, arose in this way: It was proposed to submit to Council a resolution criticising some features of the administration of the Yukon for which the commissioner held that the government at Ottawa would be responsible. He ruled the motion out of order and at the request of some members of the council he sent a telegram to the Minister of Justice, or the government asking whether or not he was right in holding that opinion ; and what purported to be a telegram from the Minister of Justice, if I remember correctly, was published in this newspaper which had the effect of sustaining the opinion of the commissioner. It was simply with regard to that that I inquired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) attaches importance to the matter we will allow it to stand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think it should stand for that. If there is anything in it, I can bring the matter to the attention of the government on some of the estimates.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 101) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.—Mr. Préfontaine.

On section 1,

Mr. CLANCY. What is the scope of this section ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Under the existing law the boats described in the Bill are not subject to inspection, but when this Bill passes they will be examined and a certificate issued.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the inspection confined to boats that carry passengers for hire ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Even those which are not for hire may be examined by the steamboat inspector, if their owners make application.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there a fee charged ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The inspection fee for passenger steamers was abolished last year.

Mr. CLARKE. That is right.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The department may consider whether we will render that service for steamers not engaged in commercial pursuits, but which their owners want to have examined for their own satisfaction. It may be that a small fee would be charged.

Mr. CLARKE. It is not the intention to make it compulsory to have private launches and yachts examined.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is permissible.

Mr. OSLER. Did the minister say that the government has done away with the inspection fee on all boats ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Many boats are now running contrary to law, and I wish to know if there will be an early inspection made of these boats.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As soon as the law is passed the regulations will be made.

Mr. CLARKE. The Marine Engineers Association of Canada have made representations to the department asking for a more rigid examination as to the qualifications of engineers. Is it the intention to provide for a more rigid examination of the engineers who are to have charge of these boats ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We will try to comply with the demands of the Marine Association if we can.

Mr. CLARKE. Petitions have been sent to the minister and I think a Bill was introduced respecting the qualifications of marine engineers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Such a Bill was introduced by the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and I am awaiting his return in order to have an understanding with him. It has been agreed that the Bill should be referred to a special committee in order that we may look into the question thoroughly and consult the interested parties. There is a difference of opinion between the Marine Association and the Association of Marine Engineers, and by getting them together before a special committee we will try to reach an agreement.

Mr. CLARKE. That conference will be before the session is over so as to expedite the passage of Mr. McCarthy's Bill ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, that is understood.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman intend to make the same regulations for these small boats as for the larger passenger boats ? The hon. gentleman knows that some of these small boats very often perform a passenger service. If they were required to carry certified engineers and to comply with what is necessary in the case of the larger class of boats, it would be impossible to run those boats by reason of the heavy expense. I would ask the hon. gentleman, in making the regulation, to keep that in view.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In framing the regulation, circumstances will have to be taken into consideration, and it stands to reason that we could not exact from engineers or mates in charge of these small crafts, the same qualifications that we exact from engineers in charge of large steamers carrying a large number of passengers.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SHIPPING CASUALTIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved second reading of Bill (No. 102) to amend the Shipping Casualties Act, 1901.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman propose to explain this ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This Bill is rather important. If it passes, the Act respecting inquiries and investigations into shipping casualties, assented to on the 23rd of May, 1901, and giving authority to an officer appointed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to examine into the case of a boat or ship which is stranded, will authorize him to investigate the case of the pilot. By section 4 of the Shipping Casualties Act the minister may direct the principal officer of customs residing at or near the place where the shipping casualty occurred, to hold an investigation ; but that investigation at present applies only to mates and engineers ; it does not apply to pilots. Sometimes, in order to satisfy the shipping interest, it would be necessary at the same time to examine into the case of the pilot, and it is proposed by this Bill to give the commissioner that power. I should think there would be no objection to the Bill. The Shipping Casualties Act was passed at the instance of the shipping interest some years ago, and on the special recommendation of the shipping interest on the other side of the water ; and anything that is done to satisfy the shipping people and the insurance companies that we are taking every precaution to protect the shipping interest is I think in the proper direction. That is why this Bill is introduced. There are other features in the Bill. For instance, the old by-laws of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners provided that the pilot's license should be suspended if an accident occurred to any vessel while in charge of a pilot until the cause has been investigated by the commissioners. This was manifestly unfair, because the pilots may not necessarily have been to blame, and was repealed. New subsection 2 of section 4 provides that if the officer holding the formal inquiry finds the pilot guilty of any of the offences enumerated, such officer may suspend the pilot's license until the minister decides whether a formal investigation is necessary. It is provided in the new Bill that the pilot must be notified within three days that such formal investigation is to take place, otherwise his license could not be suspended. New section 27 provides that pilots may be dealt with under the Shipping Casualties Act in the same manner that masters, mates and engineers are, with the addition that pilots may be fined in lieu of suspension at the discretion of the court. This latter provision is extremely necessary, since, if a pilot has caused the stranding, damage, collision, &c., of or to any vessel, it is generally through insufficient knowledge of the channel, and, by suspending such pilot, he is rendered more incompetent than before, whereas if a fine is instituted equivalent to his loss through suspension, the pilot's means of living are not taken away, and he has every opportunity to make himself more proficient in the knowledge of his pilotage duties.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Did the hon. gentleman say by whom that document was prepared ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is a report from the chairman of the examiners specially charged with this part of the business in my department. New section 28 provides against a pilot being tried by the harbour commissioners, Montreal Pilotage Court or pilotage authority of any district, after the case has been taken up under the Shipping Casualties Act. That means that he will not be tried twice for the same offence.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me whether this Act is to precede the pilotage Act, in the sense that the tribunal which is created here will take the place of the pilotage authorities in any district for the trial of pilots ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In the case of a formal investigation, it would, because it says that if a formal investigation has taken place, and the case of the pilot has been tried, he cannot be tried a second time for the same offence.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Like my hon. friend opposite, I am somewhat interested in this Bill, and I think it means this, that in the case of a shipping casualty, an investigation may be ordered by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, in which case it is not held by the pilotage authorities, but by an authority appointed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In that case the investigating officer may inquire into the responsibility for the casualty of any person connected with the boat, except the pilot. He has no authority to interfere with the pilot. The object of the Bill is to extend the power of that investigating officer to every person connected with the vessel, including the pilot ; and where the pilot's conduct may be part of the investigation, it is provided that no investigation may afterwards be made by the pilotage authorities. That is the object of the last section. So that on the whole the only change is with respect to the authority that makes the investigation. Under the Pilotage Act the pilot would be subject to investigation by the pilotage authorities; but this investigation is held under the Shipping Casualties Act, and it seems perfectly fair that all persons responsible for the management of a vessel during the time the accident happened, should be subject to the same investigation.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Maintenance and repairs to government steamers, $250,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. minister explain what are the matters which have been transferred from the Public Works Department to the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). No part of this item applies to any of the services which will be transferred to the Department of Public Works. The Order in Council concerning the changes was laid on the table some time ago. I had a copy the last time we took up the estimates and can give it to the hon. gentleman after six o'clock, but I have not got it here now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How many government steamers are there?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is a dimunition of $27,000 from last year and it is thought that the amount asked for will be sufficient. The estimated expenditure for 1904-5 is as follows:

Steamer 'Quadra'	$31,000
'Lady Laurier'	30,000
'Aberdeen'	45,000
'Druid'	38,000
'Lansdowne'	30,000
'Stanley'	25,000
'Minto'	44,000
Miscellaneous	7,000

Of the amount of $278,628, the following was expended in repairs:

'Druid' engine	$ 3,602
"	4,800
'Druid,' repairs to hull	2,706
'Aberdeen' engine	7,114
" hull	908
'Lansdowne' engine	2,093
" hull	4,717
'Quadra' engine	1,299
" hull	943
'Stanley' engine	12,176
" hull	1,569
'Minto' engine	2,488
" hull	670
Total	$45,986

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How old is the 'Druid'?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think she was built three years ago.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I thought only a year ago, but $28,000 is a great deal to spend on repairs even if she is three years old.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The $28,000 are not for repairs. That is the whole estimated expenditure. I have just given the details of the repairs. The expenditure on the 'Druid' is as follows:

Wages	$8,000
Fuel	7,000
Provisions	4,000
Painting, &c	1,000
Engine and deck supplies	2,500
Uniforms	500
Engine and hull	4,000

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. gentleman explain the difference between the two items: Engine and deck supplies $2,500, and engine and hull repairs $4,000?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Engine and deck supplies, I am informed, consist of tools which may be necessary for working about the engine, oils and other similar supplies, while deck supplies include things which would be necessary for the deck, as for instance new cranes. Engine and hull repairs would include repairs to the engine itself, replacing tubes or other parts that are worn out or broken, and also any repairs that may be neccessary to the hull itself.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In the items which make up the total amount for engine and deck supplies what amount is allowed for oils?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This estimate is made upon the basis of what has been spent in former years. The amount is not always the same, and, so far as repairs are concerned as the boat grows older the amount required for repairs may be expected to be larger. For instance, the amount allowed for repairs to the 'Lady Laurier' is small, because she is a new vessel put in commission only last year.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman has not answered my question. The item of oil, I understand, is an important one, not only for this steamer, but for all the steamers. It seems to me that the minister should be able, from the documents he has before him, and with the able assistance I see around him, to tell me what quantity of oil was used last year on the 'Druid' and upon what he bases his estimate for the quantity of oil to be used this year? I would ask from whom the oil is purchased?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will send for the information, and, as soon as possible will furnish it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OSLER. Are purchases made by tender ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Here are seven ships, and, of course, the item of oil is an important one in the amount of money involved. It seems to me the hon. minister should have under his hand, now that his estimates are before the committee any items upon which he bases those estimates. He is asking us for an expenditure of $277,000. He should be able to tell the House how it comes he has reached the conclusion that that amount will be necessary. I have had some experience in passing estimates, and I was always able to tell, from the records before me, what had been spent the year before, in reasonable detail.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Were you ever asked ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, and I think by my hon. and learned friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick).

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentlemants wants a statement of the expenditure of last year, that, of course, appears in the public accounts. The amount spent on the 'Druid' was $40,850.29. This year we are asking only $28,000, which includes wages, fuel, provisions, engine and deck supplies, engine and hull repairs and so on. I have this information, but I cannot be expected to have under my tongue minute details of expenditure. I could not tell the hon. gentleman, for instance, how many pounds of nails were bought.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But I am asking information with regard to an item involving a large amount of money. What amount was spent for these seven steamers in the item of oil ? Surely the hon. gentleman could tell me that, approximately at least.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will furnish the information—I do not deny the hon. gentleman's right to have it. But I must send to the department for it. I cannot carry all these documents here every time the estimates are to be discussed. Otherwise I should have to spend more than $53 a year for cab-hire.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was only for a month or two while the hon. gentleman was in office that this amount of $53 for cab-hire was spent. And the hon. gentleman has been advised that it was spent illegally. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the supplies referred to were purchased by tender. Can he give us the form of notice used in calling for tenders ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE I will get that information also.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the item be adopted ?

Mr. CLANCY. We all know the desire of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to furnish information. As the chairman shows some anxiety to call the item carried, I would suggest that we might take up some other matter, of the facts concerning which the minister has some knowledge, and allow this to stand until the information required is in his possession.

Mr. CLARKE. While we are waiting for the information that has been promised, can the hon minister tell us where the 'Druid' was built ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. She was built by Fleming & Ferguson, Paisley, Scotland.

Mr. CLARKE. Is not the sum asked for repairs an unusually large one ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is a good deal less than last year. Last year the steamer cost for maintenance and repairs, and so forth, $40,854.97. This year we are asking for only $28,000, because not as many repairs are required. Last year some repairs were made to the steamer itself in order to give more accommodation.

Mr. HACKETT. The minister promised me on going into supply that he would give me information with regard to the commissioner he appointed to investigate frauds in the payment of bounties.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Matheson, inspector of fisheries, has been appointed for that purpose, and instructed to hold an investigation.

Mr. HACKETT. Now, with regard to the steamer 'Minto,' I find in the Auditor General's Report that a certain Mr. Rattenbury, of Charlottetown, has been paid a commission of 5 per cent on freights delivered at Charlottetown, though the government has an agent there to look after the business, not only with regard to the 'Minto,' but every other steamer owned by the government. I would ask the minister if Mr. Lord is not capable of looking after that business ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed that Mr. Rattenbury is engaged every winter as freight agent to look after the freight in the interest of the government. The department is accustomed to employ him.

Mr. HACKETT. But the boat does not go to Charlottetown in the winter.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It goes to Charlottetown after a certain date, and then I suppose freight has to be gathered and looked after, as is done by every other transportation company.

Mr. HACKETT. Is it the intention to place the 'Stanley' on the route between Summerside and Cape Traverse for the next season ? Last year she was taken off suddenly to Georgetown and Pictou, after having been only a few days on the route.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The 'Stanley' was taken off the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine when the season became too dangerous. There was so much ice that it would have been dangerous to leave the boat on that route. Instructions had been given to Captain Brown and Captain Farquharson to use their own judgment in the matter, to join forces and put the two steamers on the same route as soon as the ice formed between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and also between Pictou and Charlottetown. They were left to use their own judgment in the matter. Although this last winter was the most severe we have had for the last thirty or forty years, I think the ferry was kept in better shape than it ever was before. These two captains knew the route perfectly well, and when they saw there was danger they put on the two steamers between Georgetown and Pictou, and the result was that navigation was suspended only for seven or eight days, instead of for weeks and months as in former winters.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. gentleman depend entirely on the judgment of Captain Brown in this matter? The 'Stanley' was brought there last autumn for the purpose of keeping up communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Now, it appears that the minister is entirely dependent on the judgment of Captain Brown. I would ask the minister if he is not aware that Captain Brown, within the last year, collided with a ship near the coast of Nova Scotia, as a result of which the government had to pay a large amount of damages?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not aware that any such accident happened to Captain Brown. But the matter was not left to Captain Brown alone, it was left to him and to Captain Farquharson together, and they decided to put the two boats on the same route. I think the result shows that they did not misjudge the situation, because the communication has been better this last season than it was before.

Mr. HACKETT. I am remarking that the minister appears to be placing too much confidence on the judgment of Captain Brown. Did he not collide with a steamer, in consequence of which the government has been obliged to pay a large amount of damages?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In order to answer the hon. gentleman I would have to pick out all the details from the Auditor General's Report and the books of the department. I am informed by the officials of the department that there has never been any occasion to make a detailed statement of the expenditures for each boat.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this ship was purchased about three years ago. I should think my hon. friend, the High Admiral of the Canadian fleet, ought to be very well posted as to the time when his ships went into commission. We are asked this year for $28,000 for the 'Druid,' and of this $28,000, a considerable sum is down in the estimates for repairs. In the Auditor General's Report I see some items which lead me to believe that the ship was built in Scotland during the financial year 1903, and was only brought into Canada last year.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. She has had two full seasons, and is on her third season.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I see here an item.

Fleming & Ferguson, Ltd., Paisley: cost of altering position of boilers from 3 abreast, as specified, to 2 abreast and 1 placed ahead, $1,216.66; cost of making boilers suitable for 180 pounds pressure, instead of 160 pounds, as specified, at £75 per boiler, $1,095.

And then I see here:

Kœnig, Chas., board bill for crew for month of April: 12 men at $15, 16 at $12; disbursements for coaling, 78 hrs. at 25c.; board for crew for month of May, 12 men at $15, 17 men at $12.

McKiver, Wm. M. & Co., Greenock, lime juice and ginger beer.

I suppose this is for the trip outwards from Paisley, so I do not think the ship has been in commission very long. I would like an explanation of the item at page 181.

Beautey, H., Quebec; ginger ale, 12¼ doz., $12.63; cigars, 2 boxes at $3.50; paté de foie gras 2 boxes at $1.90; Schlitz, 1 brl., $15; soda water, 5-5-12 doz., $5.42; sundry groceries, $6.90; less 6-10-12 doz. empty bottles, $3.41.

Does my hon. friend feed his crew on pâté-de-foie-gras? What were these different items of groceries bought for? Is it the rule in the Department of Marine and Fisheries that the crew are given these luxuries? Of course, I do not begrudge it, but if it is the policy of my hon. friend to give his crew Schlitz and soda water, and to treat them to these luxuries, I would like to know it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. My hon. friend knows that we do not treat the crew with these luxuries. Some items of this kind will always be found. My hon. friend must know that the boats of the department are sometimes used by very high officials whom it is not necessary for me to mention here, and to whom respect is due, and when they are on board of these government vessels of course extra things must be bought. If the hon. gentlemen begrudge them we will have to see whether these gentlemen in the future will be called upon to pay their own fare, and their own provisions, &c.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not for a moment begrudge anything but I am glad to find it is not the policy of my hon. friend to feed his crew on pâté-de-foie-gras, and to give the Schlitz by the barrel. I suppose it is when the High Admiral visits the fleet the cigars are brought out.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. My hon. friend knows that I do not smoke, so the cigars do not affect me. I do not want to mention the name of the hon. gentleman for whom these delicacies were purchased. It is not a member of parliament, and not a minister who has used these things, and I think the investigation has gone far enough.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The investigation has not gone far enough, and the minister cannot by any covert threat of that kind prevent us from asking legitimate questions.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman informed the hon. member for Toronto that these supplies were purchased by tender. Now I find in the Auditor General's Report--

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Will my hon. friend permit me ? I want him to understand that the general supplies are bought by tender, but very frequently small things are purchased as occasion requires at market prices. But the greater part of the expenditure is incurred by asking prices from different people who are in the line.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find at page P—7, that Mr. E. D. Bélanger, Que., sold goods amounting to $926.22. I find for instance flannel suits 21 at $21 each. Then I find 9 uniforms at $23 each and 10 at $19 each, dickeys, 21 at 25 cents each, and vests and pants for officers, 2 each, $26, and white duck suits, 21 at $2. I want to ask the minister if these goods are purchased. I want to ask the minister what the dickeys are for ? Are they a fraud for a shirt as this government is for being economical ? What are the 21 dickeys needed for ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Does the hon. gentleman not know what a dickey is ? They are used for the uniform of the crew, as is customary. The dickey sits under the collar.

Mr. TAYLOR. And does the hon. gentleman furnish all the clothing for the crew on the 'Aberdeen ?'

Mr. PREFONTAINE. On every steamer.

Mr. TAYLOR. Were these 21 dickeys furnished by tender ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I cannot say if the 21 dickeys were bought by tender.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend said that all these supplies were purchased by tender. Now I would ask him if these goods were bought by tender. He will find the list on P—8, under M. W. Coleman. Among the items are 200 pounds rice at 5 cents a pound, soap, 4 boxes at $3 a box and split pease, 142 pounds at 5 cents a pound, white beans, 7½ bushels, at $2.60 a bushel. Did the hon. gentleman purchase these goods by tender ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. All the standard articles which are in general use are purchased by tender.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are these not standard articles ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I should think the beans were a standard article.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is $2.60 a fair price for white beans in Quebec ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It must be a fair and reasonable price and a low price.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will my hon. friend furnish the tenders and the names of the parties giving the lowest tenders for all the supplies ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. I gave them last year, and I will do the same this year.

Mr. TAYLOR. We did not get them last year. I find that Mr. J. B. M. Dion, of Quebec, furnished 100 pounds of beans at five cents a pound, and 50 pounds of evaporated apples at 15 cents a pound, that you could buy any where at ten cents a pound retail. Then a man in Halifax got $5.75 for a barrel of apples and he sold $146 of goods. Were all these goods purchased by tender and were the lowest tenders accepted? If this government administered the affairs of the country as they should, they would have these supplies of their own in a central store to furnish steamers at ports of call, instead of allowing their officers to buy these goods at retail prices. They should either have a warehouse or else allow the merchants of Quebec and Halifax and other places, tender to supply standard goods at standard prices. The Auditor General's Report shows that we are paying two and three prices for supplies of hardware, groceries and provisions. Instead of being an economical government, it is the most extravagant government there has been.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Was there a store or warehouse under the Conservative administration ? Was it not done in exactly the same way as it is now ? Tenders are asked for at different ports of call, and goods bought from those who specify the cheapest prices from the different traders.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Who are the grocers in Quebec who are asked to tender for such supplies ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Our own friends of course, and who have enough responsibility and respectability to be dealt with.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman need not get impatient because he is only at the threshold of his estimates. He tells us that prices were asked from a certain number of gentlemen in Quebec whom he calls 'our friends.' I want to know who are the grocers in Quebec to whom the government applied to supply this merchandise. The minister has his able officers beside him and he can answer that question.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Auditor General's Report gives a list of all those with whom we have been dealing, and were sent forms of tender and were obliged to deposit a cheque, and after the contract was awarded to the lowest tender the cheque was returned to the others.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The minister has not answered my question.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am sorry I cannot answer it better.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman knows he has not answered my question. The Auditor General's Report merely gives the names of persons who sold goods to the department, but what I asked for was the names of the grocers who were asked to tender.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will send for it and get it ; I cannot furnish it now.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the revenue from the 'Minto' and 'Stanley' last year.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. $18,500. From the 'Minto' $11,285.38 ; from the 'Stanley,' $4,-192.72 ; mail service, $608.75.

Mr. BLAIN. How much for freight and how much for passengers ?

Mr. HACKETT. I do not wish to delay the passing of this item, but I see here an item of $126.95 commission on freight at five per cent paid to Mr. Rattenbury, of Charlottetown. Is this a new departure ? You have a very efficient staff of officers at Charlottetown ; you have Mr. Lord who is a very able man and he has a clerk and a messenger, and they are quite able to attend to the business in Charlottetown without your paying commission to an outsider.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed that Mr. Rattenbury has been retained as freight agent since 1896.

Mr. HACKETT. That shows you how a Liberal comes in for a job.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Nearly time.

Mr. HACKETT. Mr. Rattenbury has an account of $2,262 against the government in connection with steamships, and I find here a charge against the 'Stanley' for 'whisky short.' Will the minister tell us how that whisky came to be short.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is easily explained. It was a box of whisky that was missing and had to be replaced.

Mr. HACKETT. How do you happen to charge up against the 'Minto' a box of whisky short on the 'Stanley' ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I suppose the box of whisky was taken on at Pictou for Charlottetown. It disappeared in transit, and had to be replaced. I do not know who was on board at the time.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman inquired into the habits of the men employed there ? He might be able to trace where the whisky went.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was at the opening of the session of parliament.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As we are dealing with expenditure, I would like to ask the hon. minister what is the cause of the increased expenditure from 1896 to 1903 of $877,860.28. I notice that in the year 1896 the expenditure of the Marine and Fisheries Department was $793,634.49, and in the year 1903 it was $1,671,494.77. I believe it is due to the House and the country that the hon. minister should give some explanation of this.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The explanation is clear from the blue-book. More steamers have been put in the service of both the Fisheries Department and the Marine Department ; the expenditure on aids to navigation is being increased year by year as the country develops ; and in the coming years it will have to be increased still further to satisfy the demands of the shipping interest and those interested in the fisheries. It is a well known fact that at the present time we cannot give to the shipping interests all they ask, in the way of permanent lights, improved fog alarms,, gas buoys, and other modern improvements. If the hon. gentleman looks at the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for 1903, he will see that from 1867 to the present date the expenditure has been increasing year by year on account of the development of the country.

Mr. CLANCY. What the hon. gentleman is quoting now, I suppose, forms part of the material that will in future years be considered part of the history of his administration—I mean his pamphlet. This pamphlet, to which we had occasion to refer the other evening, bears the signature of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and it is of very recent date—the 1st of February, 1904. The other evening the question came up why the hon. gentleman had selected the year 1896. This is the reason he gave on that occasion :

> It is after 1896 that the most important work was done. In 1894-5-6, there were great complaints against the St. Lawrence route and we had any amount of difficulty in dispelling the wrong impression that had been formed regarding it. We all know the efforts that were made by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and the shipping interests of Quebec and Montreal in 1896 to convince the government that it was a question of life or death for the St. Lawrence route that certain improvements should be made ; and it has been since that time that large sums were voted in order to improve the route and remove the bad impression which had been formed concerning it.

When the hon. gentleman made that explanation, he had not borne in mind what appears on page 16 of his pamphlet. It is by a stretch of great courtesy that we call this a pamphlet; on the previous occasion it was called a campaign sheet. Here is what it says, under the heading 'Investigation into Causes of Casualties in the St. Lawrence':

Owing to misrepresentations concerning this great waterway, to and from the sea, and ignorance of the causes which led to several casualties of ocean-going steamers, investigations have been held. The result shows that the casualties were not due to lack of effective aids to navigation, nor dangers existing in the river, but in nearly every instance, to some oversight or neglect on the part of those in charge for the time being. Several investigations have been held by the Imperial Board of Trade, and the confirmation of the above statement is found in the fact that several masters holding imperial certificates have been suspended.

The pilotage system of the past has been defective, and this question is now receiving attention with a view of introducing a more complete and effective system.

The other evening the hon. gentleman told us that it was because of complaints of a very serious character that large sums of money had to be spent; and he tells us in his own pamphlet, prepared in his own department, and dated no longer ago than the 1st of February of the present year, that this was practically all a fiction—that it was not due to the want of aid, but to misrepresentation of the facts. I would like the hon. gentleman to reconcile these two statements if he can. They have both gone out to the public.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think they agree perfectly.

Mr. CLANCY. The result shows that the casualties were not due to the lack of effective aids to navigation. The hon. gentleman declared the other night that the reason he selected 1896 to date the the improvements from, was because of the lack of effective aids to navigation, but he certainly has no ground on which to base any such argument.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In 1881 the expenditure in the Marine Department was $761,730.62. In 1896 it was $793,632.49, and in 1893 it reached $1,671,494.70, considerable over double. I would also draw attention to the fact that the cost of running the government steamers in Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia in 1888 amounted to $150,659.16. In 1896 it was only $145,315.29 and in 1903 it amounted to $363,813.97. I think the hon. minister should explain this.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is very easy to explain. In some years we buy boats and in others we do not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many boats were bought in 1903?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In that year we paid the balance due on the 'Lady Laurier.'

Mr. TAYLOR. That does not appear in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How many boats were bought this year?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. None.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What about this steamer 'Gauss' just come over?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That was not a regular expenditure of the department, but for a special expedition to Hudson Bay. It was a special expenditure for the general account of three departments.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What department?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Department of the Interior, the Mounted Police and the Marine Departments. It is a special vote which was granted last year for this expedition, and we had to provide for a relief boat to remain in Hudson Bay. That is why we bought the 'Gauss.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand that this expenditure is to be borne by the Department of the Interior, the Privy Council, which has the control of the Northwest Mounted Police, and the Marine Department?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. A special vote was asked and an amount of money was put at the disposal of the Marine Department to organize the expedition. The expedition is not for the benefit of the Marine Department particularly. We were only asked to carry out the preliminaries.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is the expedition under the direct supervision of the Marine Department?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Part of it is. The organization of the crew is, but not the whole of it. because a certain number of officials were furnished by the two other departments.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What price was paid for the 'Gauss'?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. $70,000. The price was $75,000 if the boat went seven knots an hour and $70,000 if it did not. It did not go the seven knots an hour, so we paid $70,000. It is a new boat which was built for the German government three years ago for an exploration and it cost $155,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Has the difficulty between the late owners and the government been settled? We read in the papers that the boat was held at the port of departure for the sum of $5,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not aware of the difficulty between the late owners and the government. I communicated with Mr. Bopp, the German consul at Montreal, and there was no difficulty.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Who chose the crew?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It was chosen by Captain Bernier himself and Captain Spain was authorized to examine the men with Captain Bernier before engaging them. Those who were found fit to go as sailors or officers were accepted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Had Captain Bernier a free hand?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I left him perfectly free to choose the best men, and for greater security Captain Spain was present at the choice.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand that there was a gunner who was sent over as one of the members of the crew. Had this boat any guns?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This man was not shipped as a gunner. The newspapers were evidently making fun. The name of the man was Laferrière.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What occupation did he follow before he became a master gunner?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not know

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is it true he was a reporter on one of the newspapers?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Would that disqualify him? If his physique was good and he fulfilled the conditions, I do not see where the disqualification would come in.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is no disqualification, but it is a little strange that a newspaper reporter should be taken aboard the steamer 'Gauss,' not only as a member of the crew, but as a master gunner. There were no guns on the ship. It was not said jestingly that this was why this man was taken aboard and paid by the government, but it was said in all truth and seriousness—he was taken on as a master gunner. There were no guns aboard, but even had there been, the man was absolutely unfit for the work he was appointed to do. He was there simply as a reporter for a certain newspaper in Montreal, but was shipped nominally as a master gunner in order that he might have a trip to Germany and back. If there is any truth in this I would like to know it. If the minister can deny it let him do so.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I read the report in the newspaper. It was all news to me, and I know nothing about it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is Captain Bernier still in the employ of the government?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, he is in charge of the ship.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Where?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is the crew that brought the ship across still with the ship?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, they have all been discharged except those that are absolutely necessary while the boat is being repaired.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I suppose this crew was sent over for the special purpose of bringing the 'Gauss' to Canada and not to take her to any special waters, as, for instance, to Hudson Bay?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is correct. And the whole crew was not sent from this side. There were only a few of the men, because we took some of the special officers, such as engineers from Germany.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How many were sent from this side?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Sixteen.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And how many were taken from the other side?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Six.

Mr. BENNETT. There seems to have been a great difference of opinion between the minister and Captain Bernier about the hiring of these men. I do not wish to misunderstand the minister. Do I understand him to say that these men were wholly and solely hired by Captain Bernier and that there was no interference with his choice?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If I were to say 'yes,' in answer to that it would not be right. The master of the ship is under control of the department that hires him. In this case Captain Bernier was offered a list of a certain number of men and was called upon to make his choice from that list. And he was assisted by Captain Spain in making his choice. If he wanted to refuse any of the men, he could say so, and that man would be passed by.

Mr. BENNETT. I find in the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' of 15th June, the following interview with Captain Bernier—

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have positive information from Captain Bernier over his own signature that he never gave any interview to any newspaper. Any interview that may be published as having come from him is made out of whole cloth.

Mr. BENNETT. This interview was published on June 15. It seems rather odd that Captain Bernier has not contradicted it publically in the press. Perhaps the minister has not seen it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Captain Bernier has had no time to contradict all that is said about him.

Mr. BENNETT. He has had a whole week. This interview is dated Quebec, and says :—

Capt. Bernier, who arrived here yesterday with his Arctic vessel, the 'Gauss,' after a thirty-six days' cruising, is far from satisfied with the personnel of his crew.

The ship does not seem over-speedy when she takes thirty-six days to cross the Atlantic.

He claims that with the exception of four men, including his first and second officers, the crew of twenty-four was foisted upon him by the Dominion government.

They were not of my choice, and, with the exception of a few good men, all land-lubbers or fresh water sailors who never went aloft in their lives or knew how to read a compass.

Some, no doubt, thought that because the 'Gauss' was a government vessel they were going on a pic-nic, but the moment we started from Bremerhaven I gave them to understand that I was master of the vessel. Nevertheless, they were unfit to work.

I stipulated with the government before leaving Canada that I required six men for each watch, but I found when we set sail that I could only have three ; the others were of no use. Consequently my officers and myself had to do double duty, and I was on the bridge the whole of every day until we came to anchor in the port of Quebec.

Among the crew as gunner was a young man named Laferrière, who I have since learned is connected with a Montreal French paper. I do not know why he was given to me because the 'Gauss' has no guns on board and in consequence was not in want of a gunner ; but I presume influence was responsible for his appointment. I also had a steward who was forced on me, though I objected to him and who had the furnishing of the meat to the crew.

With regard to the complaints made about the quality of the provisions, Captain Bernier said :

The provisions consisted of salt pork, hams, salt beef, sea-biscuit and flour. They wanted fresh bread, and you can judge for yourself what kind of sailors they were when they refused biscuits. I have sailed the ocean for thirty-five years as a master and in all my experience never heard of such a crew, and in future I will have the shipping of my own men or know the reason why.

Now, that interview was published on June 15, and it appears incredible that it should be wholly inaccurate in view of the fact that Captain Bernier has never denied it. Why, Captain Bernier has put Lord Dundonald completely in the shade. I am surprised that the minister allows his dignity to be offended by his subordinate in this fashion. Surely he is going to have Captain Bernier walk the carpet after this statement of his. I ask him again if any of the statements contained in the interview are correct ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have no statement except the one I have just referred to. I have, over the signature of Capt. Bernier a full denial of what has been put in the paper. And the report to me is perfectly satisfactory. I am not going to run to all the newspaper offices to tell them that Captain Bernier did not give an interview when I have his formal denial over his own signature. If I had the least doubt about the matter I would investigate. But I have no doubt. Captain Bernier knows his duty too well to have forgotten himself to the extent that has been mentioned. I believe that the report he has made to me is a faithful, a loyal and an honest report, and I have no other report to be guided by. If the newspapers take it upon themselves to make interviews, that is their own affair, I am not going to answer and I am not going to ask Captain Bernier to engage in correspondence. He is not a newspaper man. He has a fair education, but it is not his business to answer newspaper reports.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it would be only fair to Captain Bernier to have his report or letter go side by side with this interview. Will the minister lay it before the House ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The report of Captain Bernier I can place before the House if it is required. It is an official report, regularly filed. I will lay it before the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it a full denial of what is in the 'Mail and Empire' ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. He says he never gave an interview to any newspaper.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. minister first said it was a letter, and now he says it is a report. Which is it, a letter or a report ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We will not quarrel about the word, it is a report in the form of a letter if you like.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is not the question at all. When we brought this matter up my hon. friend said it was a letter. Now a letter is supposed to be a public document, especially where it concerns an interview in a paper where the man denies ever having given the interview. Now the hon. gentleman is asked to produce this letter, which could be produced immediately before this committee. He says that it is part of a report which he will lay upon the table of the House. I ask the hon. gentleman to produce this document. I call his attention also to this fact which he has just stated. He has just stated that Captain Bernier is not going to answer newspaper reports. But I may point out that when this interview was given in the 'Mail,' Captain Bernier was answering a report that had appeared in the papers, and was also answering reports which had been given to the newspapers by some of the crew who complained bitterly of the treatment they had received on board that ship. So it was he that was answering these reports in the newspapers. When my hon. friend says that he is not going to ask Captain Bernier to answer in his report, he is beside the book, because this was given in answer to a report in a newspaper. Has my hon. friend read the reports in the 'Mail and Empire?' Has he not seen these interviews which were given by some members of the crew?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the other reports given to the newspapers are as truthful as the one which was put into the mouth of Captain Bernier, I do not think we need spend much time over them.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That may be my hon. friend's opinion, it is not ours. This is an important subject, it has been engaging the attention of newspapers in the city of Quebec and the city of Montreal ever since the 'Gauss' arrived. Now I think it is due to Captain Bernier that whatever reproaches have been heaped upon him by the crew and other interested parties, should be cleared up, and got rid of. I know Captain Bernier well, and have known him for a long time. I formerly appointed him to a very important post, in which he gave the most complete satisfaction. From this post he was dismissed without any cause or reason whatever. The witnesses who were called against him testified that there never was such a good officer in the position he occupied as Captain Bernier. Now he has been accused publicly by these people, and amongst others, I believe, by this man Laferrière, of having brutally treated his crew, of having given them rations that could not be eaten, of having in other ways conducted himself not as a mariner, not as a master of a ship, but as a savage. I say it is in the interest of Captain Bernier, and it is only fair to him that these accusations should be cleared up, that these two accusations which have been brought against him should be disproved, and the proof should be given to this committee now in this discussion, so that the newspapers of the country which contained these reports may also contain the justification of Captain Bernier. This is the reason why I ask my hon. friend to produce this report, or his letter from Captain Bernier, so that we may get to the bottom of this matter which has attracted so much attention by the public ever since the 'Gauss arrived at Quebec.

Mr. HACKETT. What is the gross tonnage of the 'Gauss?'

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. 780 tons.

Mr. HACKETT. How is she propelled, by steam or by sail?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. By both.

Mr. HACKETT. What was her rate of speed across the Atlantic?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have not got the exact report yet, because Captain Spain has been away. Besides that, Captain Bernier was not in a hurry, and the weather was very bad during the passage.

Mr. HACKETT. Who was the officer who purchased the ship on behalf of the government?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The details of the purchase are all contained in the department here at Ottawa. Captain Bernier himself was acquainted with the ship and recommended her strongly. Before closing the bargain we had her examined in Bremerhaven by Captain Mooney, who was superintending the construction of the 'Canada' which was launched on the 14th of this month. He was commissioned to proceed to Bremerhaven and examine this boat thoroughly and make a report. It was he who informed us that the boat was not very fast and it was with that knowledge that we made a bargain with the Consul General at Montreal to be completed by Lord Strathcona in London directly with the German government.

Mr. HACKETT. Would the minister state what is the horse-power of the boat?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I could not tell that from memory. The vessel is not supposed to be altogether a steam vessel.

Mr. CLANCY. I understood the minister to state that Captain Bernier was presented with a list of persons from whom he was to choose his crew. Was the exact number of men on the list presented to the captain or was there a larger number?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. He was given a list of those who had made application for positions on the vessel. Some of them were chosen in Quebec and some in Montreal.

Mr. CLANCY. Were they all recommended?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Captain Spain was instructed not to engage any man unless he was approved by Captain Bernier.

Mr. CLANCY. Was Captain Bernier at liberty to reject any of the men?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. At perfect liberty.

Mr. CLANCY. Did he have instructions to that effect?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Captain Spain had instructions and I gave instructions personally to Captain Bernier.

Mr. CLANCY. That he might select whom he pleased ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That he might select whom he pleased provided they had passed the necessary examination to which they were subjected by Captain Spain.

Mr. CLANCY. Now we are getting new light. Capt. Bernier was instructed to select from those who were recommended to him. I am endeavouring to find out whether he was perfectly free to ignore the list that was sent to him by the hon. gentleman. I would like to have a statement from the hon. gentleman whether Capt. Bernier was confined to those persons who were recommended to him by the department, I care not how good, if he had a free hand. If he was presented with a list and told that he might select from that list whom he pleased, that is not giving him a free hand. That is tying his hands entirely. I would like an explicit statement whether a list was submitted to Capt. Bernier from which he might alone select or if he was given permission to select outside of that list.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have stated that twice already. A list of applicants was given to Capt. Spain and Capt Bernier and then there were a number of others who had applied to Capt Bernier directly and a certain number of students—I will call them students, although some of them were forty or fifty years of age—who frequented the naval school at Montreal, who were recommended to Capt. Bernier, by the director of the school at Montreal. Capt. Spain and Capt. Bernier went to Montreal and chose those whom they thought best qualified, but they were free to reject the whole list if they saw fit. They did the same thing at Quebec. The men with whom Capt. Bernier started were his own choice, and to me, the day he left for New York to take the steamer, he declared himself perfectly satisfied and made no complaint whatever. He makes no complaint at the present time and whatever the newspapers have published does not concern him because he has not thought proper to answer and it does not concern me at all. I have his report and am guided by that.

Mr. CLANCY. The explanation seems fair. The minister gave instructions to Capt. Spain.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Capt. Spain is responsible for the choice of the crew of any vessel under the department.

Mr. CLANCY. Were the instructions written ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE They might be, it was done in the department in the ordinary way. Some of the instructions were given verbally by myself.

Mr. HACKETT. We have at least the information that the 'Gauss' has been purchased in Germany and brought across the Atlantic and is now in Quebec. The result of her exploration we will know later. I would like to ask for information in regard to the 'Stanley.' I see an item here :

Baker, Ely & Co., Yarmouth, damage to wharf, caused by the 'Stanley' colliding with the 'Prince Edward,' tearing her away from her moorings, $66.

How did that occur, who was in charge and why should she collide with the 'Prince Edward' or tear away the wharf ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE I am informed it was a small matter, a mere accident, but I will furnish the details.

Mr. HACKETT. It may be small in the opinion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed it is a small item and I will give the information.

Mr. HACKETT. I myself have further information. The hon. gentleman may think that when he pays a captain $100 a month to take charge of a steamship and then in addition to that the captain causes damage to the amount of $2,000 it is a very small matter to the people of this country. I assert in the interests of the people of this country that any damage in this way by a captain should cause his dismissal from the service. Has an investigation been held in this matter ?

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HACKETT. Has the minister got the information as to the accident that happened at Yarmouth between the 'Stanley' and the 'Prince Edward'?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have received this statement from my officers : the 'Stanley' when going into Yarmouth harbour fouled the 'Prince Edward' which was lying at the wharf. The tide was running out very strongly and the channel being very narrow, the 'Stanley' lost steerage way and in consequence came in contact with the 'Prince Edward' and damaged her upper works. Mr. Stevens went to Yarmouth to assess the damages. The repairs were done by the Dominion Atlantic Company who own the 'Prince Edward,' and Mr. Stevens reported that the charges were reasonable. At Yarmouth the channel is so narrow, that with the strong current running the captain of the 'Stanley' had a great difficulty in preventing his ship grounding. This happened about a year ago last May.

Mr. HACKETT. What was the total amount paid on account of this damage.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About $1,500.

Mr. HACKETT. Is the captain of the 'Stanley' the man who is supposed to keep up communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose it is understood that if this item passes now it does not prevent general discussion again if it is necessary.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Examination of masters and mates, $7,000.

Mr. CLANCY. In view of the minister refusing assent to the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Lincoln, what is going to be the policy of the department with regard to the examination of masters and mates ? It was stated last evening that the examiners were not in all cases qualified, and had not passed the necessary examination themselves ; it was also said that the examiners were paid by fees which the hon. gentleman knows is hardly the proper way to remunerate such officers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As I stated last night, it is the intention to consolidate the laws concerning masters and mates, and also to amend the regulations as regards the examination and the status of the examiners. I have been in the department for only eighteen months, and I cannot be expected to do everything at once. I think no one will reproach me with not attending to my duty, because I am at my office every morning at nine or half past nine, and I am trying to do the best I can. If there are many things to be remedied I do not blame my predecessors in office whether they belong to my own party or not; I suppose they did their best. There is no doubt that the demands on the department at present are very great, and I am trying to do everything which I believe to be in the interests of the department and the country generally. Of course, I am open to the charge that I belong to a party which is not in sympathy with gentlemen opposite, but my department is a department into which party politics does not enter a very great deal.

Mr. CLANCY. Of course not.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. And party politics should not enter into my department a very great deal either, because it is a department which is charged with developing important interests in this country, and especially the national route of the St. Lawrence. Any suggestion which comes from any part of the country or from men of any shade of politics, will be considered by me and put into execution if I think it wise to do so, and if I have the means. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not remonstrate with the hon. gentleman because he is at his office from an early hour in the morning to a late hour at night, but I think I can find fault that his splendid professions are not carried into practice.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have done my best.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman's best is not very encouraging. I do not say that everything asked from the department should be granted, but certain things have been asked which appeal so strongly to common sense, that it puzzles one to know why the minister can waive them aside after his own light hearted fashion.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is my natural disposition ; I am born that way.

Mr. CLANCY. I have not the least fear that the hon. gentleman will over power us by his virtue. If the hon. gentleman were less amiable and more businesslike he would serve the country better than he does. He tells us that we must wait for him to take his office out of a state of chaos ; but he will have to afford some better reason why he did not this session consolidate the law relating to masters and mates. I believe the minister is capable of acting vigorously, if he wants to, and I hardly think he is too short a time in his office not to have opinions of his own.

I think, without having any personal knowledge of these matters, that the hon. gentleman must be advised very much by his staff. But to receive the advice of a very good staff and to be utterly without any policy of how the department should be carried on are two very different things. I should like to know what is to be done this year—whether it is the hon. gentleman's intention to compel those making applications for certificates to conform to some healthy rules, namely, that an affidavit should be made as to their service and who they were ; that examiners should be persons who are qualified by reason of having passed the examinations themselves ; and that no inducement should be held out to any one to open the spout and turn out a batch of certificates on commission or something else. The hon. gentleman says that he hopes for a better state of things at some time ; that is all the information I have received from him.

Mr. HACKETT. We are aware that the hon. minister is new to the department, but he has a very able staff. At the same time, we must look after the business of the country, and I think we might allow these items to pass without very much discussion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to produce that letter or report from Captain Bernier.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman is unreasonable. Does he imagine that I am going to walk to the department and look up papers, and bring documents here of which I have had no notice whatever ? I think it is a most unreasonable request to make of a minister and I do not intend to submit to it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think it is unreasonable at all. The hon. gentleman said it was a letter, and afterwards he called it a report ; and he said he would produce it. I do not mean that the hon. gentleman should walk to his department and get this document ; but it seems to me that he has plenty of means for getting it. This report must have been filed in his department not more than two or three days ago, so that it must be very easily obtained. Unless there is something in the report which my hon. friend does not want to show, or unless it contradicts what he said this afternoon, I cannot see any reason why he should refuse to produce it before the House. My hon. friend said this afternoon that he did not know that the papers in Quebec and Montreal had spoken about this thing.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I never said anything of the sort. I said I did not mind the reports of the newspapers. I did not say that I did not read or take cognizance of them. I said I did not care for the reports, garbled reports mostly, and interviews made up of whole cloth. They did not concern me in any shape or form, and I thought Captain Bernier had taken the same view of them. The hon. gentleman has no right to put in my mouth words which I did not use.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Perhaps my understanding is at fault ; but I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he had not seen what the papers said. I have in my hand 'La Presse' of the 14th of June, the day the 'Gauss' arrived in Quebec. This paper is full of reports from the different members of the crew. Here is a complaint signed by almost all the crew, with an affidavit about certain matters that happened while this ship was crossing from Germany. There is an interview with Captain Bernier, which I will read to the House :

(Translation.) He will defend himself before the competent authorities.

The following interview, by telephone, with Captain Bernier, who is in Quebec, explains the other side of the medal.

I am aware, said the captain, of the complaints made against me by my crew, but you do not expect that I will discuss them in public. I leave to those young people the responsibility for their strange course, which consists in having addressed collectively a complaint to the marine authorities, which is founded on deceptions, and in having submitted, at the same time, that complaint to the public. Such is a discourteous proceeding that will scarcely give them any sympathy.

All that I can tell you is that the vast majority of the young men who formed my crew, had never done any navigation, and that a large number of them had never seen the sea.

It was by dint of persistent requests and the setting up of claims more or less worthless that the greater portion of my crew obtained enrolment, while I was not given the liberty to make selections. For those young people it was a question of a pleasure excursion, of a delightful and free trip, that would enable them, on their return, to tell their parents, their friends and even those uninterested, imaginary stories of adventure

Once at work, they had to settle down. They had been engaged to work the vessel, to labour, and that obligation entirely disillusioned them.

They say that they belong to good families; it is quite possible, I do not dispute the fact; but, then, they could have remained at home and not have taken the places of good sailors, both experienced and disciplined, whom I might have selected, and who, certainly, on their return would not have complained—seeing that life on board the 'Gauss' would not have differed from any other voyage they might have made upon no matter what vessel.

The 'Gauss' is not a pleasure-boat, and the voyage from Germany to Canada is not a recreation trip.

Life on board a sailing vessel, even for sailors is rough, and I can understand that these young people of good family, accustomed to the sweets of the paternal home, experienced a great disappointment on finding themselves bound to do the painful work of sailors, when they had dreamed of a tourist crossing, sheltered by a tent, or rocking themselves, cigar in mouth, in the rocking-chairs of the captain's cabin, and sipping hot or cold drinks according to taste.

The complaints of those young men are possibly sincere, but they are evidently dictated by the vexation, the disillusion, and the disappointment of not being able to parade a pompous title, all the more glorious in the fact that it would make known the ease and importance they enjoyed on board.

I am not an atom inferior to those young people, and yet, even though my employment and my title should have dispensed me therefrom, had I on board assistants of experience and broken in to the work, instead of having those accustomed to the parlour, I performed each day the ordinary work of a sailor and never slept more than four hours per day.

I confine my remarks on the subject to this, reserving to myself the right to give a vigorous reply to the minister, as I believe that such a discussion interests him alone, at least until such time as he passes thereon. I and that from being the accused I may before the minister, the roles will be changed, and that from being the accused I may become the accuser, by my complaint of a plot formed against me, as the facts themselves establish.

Now my point is this : My hon. friend says that Captain Bernier has stated in a letter or report made to him that he never gave this interview. At first he said a letter, then he corrected that by saying a report. That may be true. It may happen that Captain Bernier, at the time he was speaking, did not know that he was being interviewed. From personal experience I can say that I have conversed with a reporter sometimes not knowing that he was a reporter and I was surprised to read next day in a paper almost exactly what I had said. I did not know that I was giving an interview, in fact I was not giving an interview, but my opinions were there all the same expressed in the newspaper. That is what may have happened to Captain Bernier. But in the 'Mail and Empire' he makes these statements, he says that he was obliged to take certain men that were not fit for the job for which they were engaged, that they were not sailors, that they had never seen the sea and did not know anything about navigation; and the consequence was that he and his chief officers were obliged to be on the bridge almost all the time, and were obliged to do the ordinary work of seamen on that ship. Now we want to know whether it is true that Captain Bernier was forced to take this crew with him as he repeats in this interview. It is published in the press, and remember it is alleged that this man Laferrière was taken on board as a master gunner when there were no guns on the ship at all. We have this fact, at all events, stated by Captain Bernier that he was forced to take these men who were not fit for the service for which they had been engaged. Now if my hon. friend has a report or a letter, while we are on this question, it seems to me the easiest thing in the world for him to produce it. That is the request I make, a perfectly reasonable and just request. Let him produce before this committee that letter, or that report. I do not ask him to read it all. There may be things in it that do not interest the public or interest this committee. But Captain Bernier has been accused by the crew before the whole community of the most inhuman treatment possible. He has been accused for instance, of having knowingly taken on board that ship provisions which were absolutely unfit for use, and the greater part of which had to be thrown overboard. He is accused in these reports, which are signed by the members of the crew of keeping these men on biscuits and butter almost the whole trip across. He is accused of ill treating his crew, and I say that it is only common justice to Captain Bernier, who is an employee of the government, who has been entrusted by the government with the command of this ship in taking it over from Germany to Canada, to let him state his case before the public so that he can vindicate himself from these grave and serious charges. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman should, I respectfully submit, defend his officer, his employee against these accusations. Now my hon. friend says that he is not obliged to walk over to his department and get this letter. But he has a lot of employees, and he could easily send one of them over for this letter. I say again that he ought to produce it now while the discussion is going on. If he does not produce it we shall conclude that there is something in the report which he does not want to lay before the committee, or something which contradicts the statement which he made to the House.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word upon this question. When the crew was engaged, I asked the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he would take on board of the 'Gauss,' a person whom I was ready to recommend. The answer was: telegraph to your man to come and meet Captain Bernier at Quebec, and if he is judged competent by Captain Bernier and Captain Spain, he will be engaged.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I must say for the information of the hon. member for Montmorency, that I have myself asked Joseph Couillard, of Montmagny, as second mate on board of the 'Gauss.' The minister told me to go and see Captain Bernier, and Captain Bernier told me that he was entrusted with the selection of the crew and that if Couillard was found competent he would take him on board.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand that the men whom the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) and the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) recommended to Captain Bernier, were refused.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. The man I recommended was accepted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Well, if Captain Bernier corroborates that statement, it justifies my hon. friend. But there is another feature to this matter to which I alluded just now. The accusation that these men brought against Captain Bernier in the public press has been published throughout the country in all the papers, and it is only fair to him that he should be cleared of the accusation brought against him. There is no reason in the world why my hon. friend should not produce that report. I say that after the promise he has given to the committee it is time he should produce it. It is no justification for him to say that he cannot walk over to his department and get it. This report was handed in within the last two or three days, it must be easily obtained.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Let me say in two words that what my hon. friend from Montmorency has read from 'La Presse' bears its own condemnation. How could Captain Bernier state what is mentioned in this interview? It would be the most stupid thing on the part of a master of a ship to say that he left Quebec to go to Germany and bring back a ship on his own responsibility, and that, like a fool, he accepted the men that were offered to him that he was ordered to take, and now, when complaints are made, to say that he was forced to do so. I say it is so ridiculous, it is so childish, that I am surprised that my hon. friend from Montmorency, who has had a good deal of political experience, should pay so much attention to a trifling matter of this kind. I stated before recess that Captain Bernier denied ever having given an interview to the newspapers. denied it over his own signature. Whether he did it by report, or letter, or telegram does not matter, the fact is he denied it.

The hon. gentleman would like me to take notice of what has been stated in the newspapers. As head of the department, I take no notice of these things, unless they are brought to my attention in an official way. These pretended complaints were made on the part of a few hot-headed fellows who did not know what they were about when they were engaged. These fellows have not dared, up to the present moment to lay their complaints before the department; they have not dared lay them before Capt. Bernier. But they have gone to the newspapers. What do I care about that? What difference does it make to the department. If these gentlemen had been sincere, if they had been serious, if they had not been playing a childish game, they would at least have taken the trouble to send me a copy of the paper in which they printed these pretended complaints. But I have nothing in the department about the matter. Under these circumstances, it seems to me childish to treat the question in this way and to try to make political capital out of it. If political capital is to be made out of it who is going to suffer? Capt. Bernier is going to suffer, because he has declared—and he cannot deny it—that he has been left free to choose his crew. If he misjudged the men he engaged, that is his own affair. If there are serious complaints against the conduct of any officer they will be treated seriously. But there is nothing of that kind in the department. I know that it has been stated in the newspapers that unwholesome meat was served in the ship. Well, as to that we have the report of two German members of the crew, officers—the engineer and the assistant engineer—who state that on one occasion by mere accident, some preserved beef was served that was not in proper condition. To whom was it served? It was served to the captain himself the officers and the crew. And, if these fellows, who were sea sick were particularly offended by this kind of meat, surely the captain is not to be held responsible for their feelings. The meat was bought, with other meat, from a responsible firm in Germany. It was meat that had been put up in Germany. And if it happened that some of this meat was not what it was thought to be, that is no more than might happen in any household. You may buy some meat that you think perfectly good, only to find, when it is on the table, that it is not fit to be eaten. Surely, the whole department is not to be held to blame for a thing of that kind. In a lumber camp, the same thing sometimes happens. Twenty-five barrels of beef may be provided, of which twenty-four are found to be of first-class quality, but the other one is wrong. Is that any reason why the boss of the shanty should be threatened with death, accused of attempting to poison his men and denounced as one who ought to be hanged? These things are too ridiculous. It is not a serious treatment of a public question to occupy the time of the committee with such nonsensical things.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am sorry I have excited the ire of my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine).

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not at all.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But I have attained my object to a certain extent. I have been wanting to get from my hon. friend the statement that he does not believe the accusations brought against Capt. Bernier by his crew in the press. I have sought for an hour to get from my hon. friend a vindication of the character of this man whose reputation, until now, has been of the very best. I have succeeded so far.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) will allow me—he was not in the House for a quarter of an hour or so when this question was first threshed out. What I have just stated, I stated then— that there was no official information in the department from the crew or from anybody else, and that I relied on what the captain had stated to me.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Préfontaine) is mistaken. I was here, and have been here during the whole of this discussion. I have not missed a single one of the eloquent words which my hon. friend has vouchsafed to utter to the committee. He started with the argument that it is perfectly ridiculous to say that Capt. Bernier should have stated anything of the kind as that he had been called upon to sail this ship with a crew that were unfit for the work for which they had been engaged. That is not the question. We have here two newspapers giving two interviews with Capt. Bernier at two different times, in which he states positively that a certain crew were foisted upon him, that he had to take them and that they were unfit for the job for which they were hired—that they were anything but seamen. On the other hand, the minister says he has a letter, or it may be a report, or, he says now that it may be a telegram, from Capt. Bernier, denying that he gave these interviews. At first he described it as a letter over Capt. Bernier's signature. This implies a short document which could easily be produced before the House. After that, under the fire of the questions to which he was subjected, he changed his base and said that it was a report. Why? Because a report would be a long document which it would be more difficult to bring before the House. He says now that it may be a telegram. We have a right to know what it is. We have had a suspension of the sitting of the committee for two hours and the hon. minister has had time to get this report, or letter or telegram—whichever it may be—and bring it before this committee. I state again that the reason that he does not produce it is that he is afraid that the statement contained in the letter will contradict what he has said in this committee. Is this going to be another suppression of a document? Is this document marked 'private' or 'confidential'? Is this a private document that will be brought down only if and when it helps the case of hon. gentlemen opposite? Are we to have the suppression of a document which is asked for and which should be here when the estimates of the department are under discussion, especially after my hon. friend has said that he will produce it? He knows very well that even if I put a notice of motion on the paper for the production of the document I should have no opportunity to move that motion this session, because yesterday was the last private members' day? My hon. friend will not produce the document which will probably contradict his statements in this committee; he will not produce the document which will probably be his condemnation. This is not a trifling matter, it is not a trivial matter; it is not a matter which this committee should not discuss. I say again that the attention of the people of the province of Quebec has been called to this matter and that ever since the 'Gauss' arrived the press has been full of these reports and accusations. This is a matter in which the press and the public in the province of Quebec are taking a deep interest. This is not a trifling matter. When an hon. gentleman tells the House that he has a letter or a telegram, he is bound to produce it. What does the hon. gentleman mean by my experience? Does he want me to talk about his? I think he had better leave the question of experience alone.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We are not discussing the item of the 'Gauss' at present. When that item comes before the House will be the proper time to produce all the documents in connection with it, and I invite the hon. gentleman then to be present. He will then see that none of the documents which will be filed by me will contradict anything I have said. But we are not discussing that item now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend is wrong again. We are discussing item 191, the first sub-item of which is maintenance and repairs of government steamers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That does not apply to the 'Gauss' at all. It is not mentioned.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is the 'Aberdeen,' or the 'Minto,' or the 'Lord Stanley' mentioned?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes; in explaining the item I said it related to them.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The 'Gauss' is a government steamer, and I have the right to know all about it on this item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Just before the hon. gentleman came in we passed the item.

Mr. INGRAM. On the understanding that it could be discussed again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have no objection to its being discussed, but when the point of order is raised I have to rule.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister must know that before the item passed I rose to speak, when he consented, in reply to my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), that the general discussion might take place on any of the sub-items.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There must be a misunderstanding somewhere. When the item of $250,000 came before the committee, I enumerated every steamer to which it applied, and the 'Gauss' was not mentioned at all. When the item concerning the 'Gauss' comes up all the documents will be produced, but I should not be asked now to produce any part of the documents. There is an investigation to be made by Captain Spain, and Captain Spain's report will be submitted. The proper time to submit every document will be when the item is submitted, and that can only be in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. I arise more particularly to vindicate our rights as an opposition. On this item of repairs to government steamers I claim that we have the right to discuss the 'Gauss' or any other steamer owned by the government. Last year on this same item we discussed the maintenance and repairs and sale of government steamers, which had gone out of the possession of the government. This may not be the most opportune time to discuss matters connected with the 'Gauss,' but we have the right to do it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Well, I do not think it is right to ask me to produce a part of the documents and bring down an incomplete return on an item that does not affect this particular steamer, the 'Gauss,' at all.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We are here discussing the repairs to government steamers, and are not to be silenced. There is a very easy way of settling this matter, and that is by moving that the committee rise. The hon. gentleman is in a corner and is trying to get out of it. I have had him in a corner before in other cases. He is simply raising the point of order so as to prevent discussion. He is bound to produce this letter and refuses to do so, probably either because it contradicts his statement or does not exist. I have made the charge and the country can judge between us.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Supposing there was no expenditure on the 'Stanley,' have we not the right to discuss anything relating to that vessel on this item ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have not said that you have not.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Does the hon. gentleman say that Captain Bernier was given a free hand in selecting his crew ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. At Owen Sound, where there are two government vessels, it was the custom up to 1896 to leave the selection of the crew to the captains. In 1896 the president of the Liberal Association practically dictated to the captains of these vessels the men they should employ, and what was the result ? Why, take the crew of the 'Petrel,' and if it landed at any town in Canada it was a pleasure to see that crew go ashore. There was uniformity in size and there was discipline.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I mean before 1896. To-day you have no unifomity in size, and if it was ever intended for a small navy it has deteriorated under the present system. The captains do not select the crews, but are dictated to, not by the minister or by any official of the department, but by the president of the Liberal Association in that riding.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to refer again to the sale of the steamer 'Bayfield,' which was discussed last year. On page P—164 of the Auditor General's Report will be found some very severe strictures by the Auditor General upon this transaction, by which this boat was sold for half her value to a friend, not a personal friend of the minister, but to a firm who are strong political friends and allies of hon. gentlemen opposite. The letter to which I refer is as follows :

Audit Office, Ottawa, June 10, 1903.

Sir,—I have received your letter of the 6th instant, inclosing a report of Wm. J. Stewart of your department, dated February 17, 1903, in which he values the steamer 'Bayfield' at $7,000. With that letter is inclosed also the offer of $3,250 by John Harrison & Sons Co. for the vessel, dated March 12, and on this letter is a note signed by Wm. J. Stewart recommending the acceptance of the offer. No explanation is furnished why Mr. Stewart valued the vessel at $7,000 on February 17 and recommended her sale in March for $3,250.

Was the vessel valued by any other officer or builder—the captain in charge, for instance ?

Was there any reason to fear that the country might have suffered by calling for tenders in this case.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

The Deputy Minister, Marine and Fisheries.

In the last few lines of this letter I think there is a certain amount of sarcasm—

Was there any reason to fear that the country might have suffered by calling for tenders in this case ?

Here is an official of the department in February stating that the vessel in his opinion is worth $7,000 and within a month, in the fulness of his heart and his great liberality, he hands her over to party friends for $3,250. No excuse as to the unseaworthiness of the vessel will serve, because her new owners have employed her on the Georgian bay waters in all kinds of weather towing logs, not only risking the vessel, but valuable rafts of logs behind her. Thus the vessel was in a seaworthy condition when she was sold, and the minister, without any authority or any right from parliament, or even from his colleagues in the cabinet, because there was no Order in Council, turned around and makes a present of the vessel to party friends for half its value.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Last year I gave all explanations in connection with this, and I have nothing to add to what I then stated, which can be read in 'Hansard.' I stand by the bargain of last year, which I think was the best that could be made under the circumstances. If the hon. gentleman wants to use it as campaign literature, as he said last year he did, he is welcome to it. I have read the Conservative papers since then, but I do not see that it was contained in any of the pamphlets since published. In order to put the thing as clearly as possible before the House, I shall read a letter which I have here from John Harrison & Sons Company, Limited, the present owners of the vessel, which bears out what I said last year. I said that the disposal of the boat at $3,250 was a good sale, because the boat was a charge to the department and could not be used satisfactorily for the work to be done ; the officers would not risk their lives on her on Georgian bay waters, and she had to be sold. We took offers, and the offer of John Harrison & Sons Company, Limited, was considered the best, and a reasonable offer.

Commander W. J. Stewart, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, an old employee of the department, appointed under the old government before 1896, a man not likely to be suspected of any leanings towards our party, took upon himself to make the recommendation. I myself knew nothing of the boat, and the other officers of the department here did not know anything of her value or of the opportunity of selling her. We relied entirely on the recommendation of Commander Stewart and on the opinion of other officers who have technical knowledge. The letter of Messrs. Harrison & Sons Company, Limited, is as follows :

Owen Sound, Ont., Canada,
March 25th, 1904.

Commander W. J. Stewart,
Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear sir,—With reference to the old steamer 'Bayfield,' now the 'Harrison,' which we purchased from the department about a year ago, owing to some unfair remarks made by some of the members last session, we feel it our duty to advise your department that as we expected at the time we purchased this boat, we now have to put in a new engine. Though the old engine is still as good as when we bought the boat, on account of it being weak at the main bearing and a high pressure engine that would consume a larger quantity of coal than could be paid for out of her earnings, we are unable to sell the old engine for more than scrap iron price and have already disposed of it for this purpose. We have not yet received the weights, but expect to realize about $100 out of the engine.

We have to put in a new engine, shaft and propellor this winter, as well as other necessary repairs and when we get through we will have a boat that is in her forty-second year.

However, we happen to have a lot of timber to move on the Georgian bay and hope to use her to advantage in our own work.

Thinking it possible there might be something further said regarding this during the present session, we wish you would be good enough to give the department these particulars.

Thanking you for your favour.

We remain, &c.,

'Sgd.) JOHN HARRISON & SONS Co., LTD.

These are the facts in a nut shell. I knew nothing of the boat myself, I acted entirely on the opinion of my officers especially that of Mr. Stewart who had used the boat on the Georgian bay for surveys, and who considered her unsafe. Mr. Stewart declared that neither his assistants nor himself would risk their lives in it, and that is borne out by the letter of the purchaser who said that they could not use the boat without renewing the engine, because she would consume more coal than she could earn.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister should have read to the House the letter written by the department asking the Harrison people to write that letter.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no such letter in the department. I did not know of the existence of the letter until just now and I am informed that it was addressed to Mr. Stewart voluntarily.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems odd that Mr. Harrison should go to the trouble of writing this letter. The defence of the minister now is that he acted exclusively on the opinion of Mr. Stewart.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not exclusively. I consulted Mr. McElhinney our technical nautical adviser and he concurred in the opinion of Mr. Stewart.

Mr. BENNETT. There is nothing in Mr. Stewart's letter saying that the boat was unsafe. He writes : To-day I think she is worth $7,000. Yet in the face of that report the minister deliberately makes her a present to one of his party friends for $3,250. I admit that they put a new engine in her, but this only goes to prove that the hull was sound. The minister has also a report from the captain that a party in Owen Sound was willing to give $5,000 for the boat.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Where is that offer ?

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Stewart's letter of the 9th of February says :

I telegraphed Captain McGregor and Mr. Nisbit, the engineer, for valuations. The former answered $7,000, that is as to her value. I could get $5,000 cash for her in Goderich.

That offer was on record in the department, and yet the minister spurns the $5,000 and sells her to party friends for $3,250. Last year the excuse of the minister was that the cost of advertising would amount to a couple of thousand dollars, but we had not those letters before us to show that he could get $5,000 for her in the town of Goderich.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Does the hon. gentleman know that when this offer was accepted the man backed out of it ?

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister produce the statement from the Harrisons that they backed out of that bargain for $5,000 ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They never made an offer of $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Certainly they did not, because they had the minister's assurance that he was going to make a present of it for $3,250.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is pure fabrication ; that is invention.

Mr. BENNETT. It is fabrication on the part of the minister who said that the Harrisons endeavoured to get out of that bargain.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I never said anything of the kind. I said with regard to the pretended offer of $5,000, that the parties did not come up to the scratch.

Mr. BENNETT. Who made the offer of $5,000 ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I don't know.

Mr. BENNETT. There was the report of Captain Stewart that a man in Goderich would pay $5,000 cash for her.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Instructions were given to Captain McGregor to close the bargain for $5,000, and the result was that the man did not come up with the money.

Mr. BENNETT. It is curious that all the documents the minister can get on record are those which implicate him, and that he did not send any of these exculpating documents to the Auditor General when that official wrote to him asking if he were afraid that at an open sale the boat would bring a higher price. The fact is that the minister in the fulness of his good nature—and I am willing to attribute to the minister a large fund of that quality when he is dealing with the public property and when at the same time he is endeavouring to ingratiate himself with his supporters; particularly in the province of Ontario—in the fulness of his good nature, notwithstanding that his officers valued the boat at $7,000, he sells her to the Harrison people, who are very important Liberals in the town of Owen Sound, for $3,250. I admire the good nature of the Minister of Marine, but it is unfortunate that he practices it at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada. I have another example of that in my own riding. A few weeks ago in the fulness of his heart, he made a party friend a present of $4,000 or $5,000 worth of timber for $100. The Minister of Marine wants to make a reputation for himself as a good fellow, at the public expense and particularly with his supporters in Ontario, and here he gives a large tract of valuable timber in the riding of East Simcoe for a paltry $100, which if it had been put on the open market would have sold at from $3,000 to $5,000. The minister must know that while he may defy public opinion by giving away that which is not his without open competition, so far as I am concerned I will discuss these matters.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a promise which he made to me on Friday last. We were discussing the placing of buoys in the Napanee river, and I asked him for the correspondence that had taken place between Mr. Mowers and those who represent him and the department. He promised to send me the information last Saturday by mail. I do not know whether he mailed it or not, but I know that it has not reached me.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not remember that the hon. gentleman asked for the correspondence. I remember that the question was brought up, and I said I would give the information, and I am ready with the information at the present moment. In 1903 the department made a contract with Mr. Blakely Mowers, of Napanee, to perform the buoy service on the Napanee river at $60 per annum. The contract was made for one year instead of three, because the department expected to take up this buoy service with the steamer 'Scout' some time during 1904. The contract of Mr. Mowers was dated 1st June, 1903, to terminate one year from the date of it. Mr. Mowers was paid $60 for the work of 1903. It was expected that he would place the buoys in the spring of 1904, and he was instructed to do so on the 10th May last, and informed that his contract did not terminate until 1st June, 1904. A letter was received from Mr. R. A. Leonard on the 7th May last, on behalf of Mr. Mowers and another from Mr. W. S. Herrington. Copies of the answers to these letters are attached. They show that Mr. Mowers was instructed to place the buoys, and also informed that the department would pay for placing them this spring in addition to what had been paid before. It has been found that the 'Scout' could not attend to the buoy service this year, but it was expected that Mr. Mowers would place the buoys in accordance with the terms of his contract and furnish his account for payment. On the 26th of May, Mr. Herrington stated that if the department would make clear that Mr. Mowers was to be paid for placing the buoys this spring, he would go on with the work. He was a second time assured, through Mr. Herrington who wrote his letters, that he would be paid for putting out the buoys. The department has no harbour master or other officer at Napanee to superintend the work. Tenders have been invited for placing the buoys for the next three years.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to know why the minister refused to give the contract to Mr. Mowers. He has done the work for over a dozen years, and done it satisfactorily, I believe. I have a letter in my possession from the department dated the 17th of April, 1903, which authorized him to go out last year and place the buoys. If I understand the matter correctly, the department wanted him to go out this spring and place the buoys as part of his contract, as it was dated in July. I think it was most unfair to expect him to do so. All he had to do was to place the buoys in the spring, see that they were kept in place during the season of navigation, and take them out in the fall, and his contract was complete. I would like to have the correspondence. The minister has only given me a summary of it. The statement he makes is very different from what I understand the facts to be.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no objection to giving the hon. gentleman a copy of all the correspondence.

Mr. WILSON. When shall I get it ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As soon as it can be copied.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. minister promised me before dinner a list of the grocers in Quebec who asked leave to tender for supplies.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman will get it within the next twenty-four hours.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Now is the time to have it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman does not suppose that I am going to send for all the books of the department and have them laid on the table of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not at all. The hon. minister does not need to go through all the books of the department to get the names of these grocers. There are not more than three or four of them. I never before saw a minister refuse such information when his estimates were up.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman has no right to say that I refused information when I tell him that it will be before the House in the next twenty-four hours.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What the hon. gentleman says amounts to a refusal, because he knows that within twenty-four hours we shall be probably off this item.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Whether we are off this item or not, the list will be on the table of the House to-morrow.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But I have some remarks to make, and I cannot make them until I have the names. Now is the time to have them. We cannot get information from this department, because the fact is that the hon. gentleman does not know anything about his department. We have got no information about any of the items brought before the committee, although we have tried to get it. We have used a corkscrew to get the information from the hon. gentleman, but the corkscrew does not work.

Mr. BENNETT. I am beginning to think that the reputation of the minister for good nature is so well known that people take advantage of it. I think that was the case with the Harrison firm of Owen Sound. I thought, after the disclosures that had been made, that the minister would have come here in a penitent frame of mind, and would have assured the House if any sales of timber or anything else were to be made in future, the wholesome rule of open tender would be followed. But the minister is hard-hearted. He is asking this committee to vote him large sums of money as a minister of the Crown. It is not only in reference to the moneys entrusted to him, but also in reference to any part of the public domain in his charge that we have a perfect right to discuss his actions ; and in that connection I propose to discuss the question of giving away a large quantity of very valuable timber on a lighthouse reserve on the Georgian bay. Among other islands on which lighthouses are situated is the Hope island, one of the group called the Christian Islands. This island has for a long time been regarded as a very rich timber reserve. Of course, it was under the Department of Indian Affairs, and a few years ago, on representations made by the Marine Department, the Indian Department gave a hundred acres of timber land on that island to the Marine Department. It was never expected that this was going to be exploited by party friends, but it was given with a view of affording cordwood for the lighthouse-keeper on that island. To the surprise of the Indians, who had given it up for nothing, and a number of Liberals in that part of the country who for years have cast longing eyes on that reserve, last winter a party friend made application to the hon. minister through a member of this House, and without any competition that one hundred acres of valuable timber was handed over to him for a pittance of $100. I am going to read the correspondence in connection with this matter.

First, let me state that it was no vile Tory who got this property. It will be fair to assume that it was a close personal ally of hon. gentlemen opposite, and that close personal ally was not my opponent in the last campaign and my prospective opponent in the next, but his son and business partner. Here was the timber on this 100 acres of land—certain parts of it referred to in the correspondence—sold without competition to the partners of the ex-Liberal candidate in that riding for the sum of $100. Had that timber been sold by public auction it would have brought considerably over $3,000 The correspondence started in 1903, and the following letter was written on the 19th of August :

House of Commons,
Ottawa, August 19th, 1903.

Dear Mr. Préfontaine,—A constituent of mine is desirous of purchasing the cedar and basswood timber on the lot owned by your department on Hope island in Georgian bay. Your department bought the tract to supply fuel for lighthouse and require only hardwood.

Col. Anderson, whom I saw to-day, informs me that it is the practice to sell the soft wood and that he recommends the sale provided I arrange price with you.

My correspondent tells me that cedar and basswood is sprinkling only and much of it blown down. It rots quickly thus. He offers $100 for the cedar and basswood, asking that he be allowed two or three years to remove it, at the same time not to damage your hardwood.

Duck island, Col. Anderson tells me, was so disposed of. My own acquaintance with the Hope island convinces me that the price is fair, as in the 100 acres. When the beech and maple is so thick there cannot be a great deal of cedar or basswood and hemlock.

Perhaps you would be good enough to intimate to me what further assurance, if any, is required, that I may write my friend, and to note for the meantime his formal application.

Very sincerely yours,

GEO. D. GRANT.

In the first place, my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) makes the statement that Mr. Chew is a constituent of his, but as a matter of fact he is not. He is a resident of East Simcoe and not of North Ontario. I admit that the hon. minister might have obtained the idea from that letter of handing over the property for the sum of $100, because the hon. member for North Ontario assures him that he knows Hope island and that the price is a fair one. This island is some thirty miles from Midland. I have been on it once, and I know it is heavily wooded. I do not know how many times the hon. gentleman was over that island or what knowledge he has of the value of timber, but even if, in the face of his personal assurance, the minister might have been somewhat misled, it was the duty of the minister to have put that timber up at public auction. I am going to give all the facts, because I grant that the minister did do something in the premises which perhaps may buttress the position he took afterwards. A letter was written by the department to the lighthouse keeper asking him to report on the value of the timber. Perhaps I had better read that letter :

Ottawa, 25th August, 1903.

Sir,—Mr. Grant, M.P., writes the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that a constituent of his is desirous of purchasing the cedar and basswood timber on the lot owned by this department on Hope island, the tract of land upon which the timber grows having been bought by the department to supply fuel for the lighthouse, but that hardwood is only required for that purpose. Mr. Grant further states that the practice has been to sell the soft wood, much of which is blown down as it rots quickly, and the purchaser is allowed two or three years to remove it, precautions being taken that he does not damage the hardwood.

I have to request you to report to the department as to the quantity of basswood and cedar you suppose is on the land in question, and to state what you consider would be a fair price therefor.

I want to call attention particularly to this fact, that when the deputy minister writes to the lighthouse keeper he only asks a report on the basswood and cedar, and makes no mention of any other kind of timber. This lighthouse keeper has his lighthouse some twenty miles away from the post office, and it has been suggested to me that intimation was given certain parties that the letter would be waiting the lighthouse keeper at the post office. Be that as it may, the letter did reach the lighthouse keeper, and I want the House to listen carefully to his report :

I think it is a wise idea to sell all the soft wood, because there is a good deal of it going to waste every year.

As to the quantity of basswood and cedar in feet, there is between fifty and sixty thousand feet to the best I can judge.

Is it not very likely that the interested parties took the letter out to the lighthouse keeper and suggested to him his report, because, although he was only asked to report on the cedar and basswood, he goes on to report on the hemlock and elm ? The fact is that Mr. Chew wanted to get, not only the cedar and the basswood, but the hemlock and elm, and persuaded the lighthouse keeper to give a favourable report. I tell the hon. minister now what he ought to know, because an official of his department has been out there of late. In order to get a favourable report from the lighthouse keeper, they gave him a contract for taking off the timber. Here you have this man acting in a double capacity. You find him acting as agent for the department and at the same time as contractor for the party applying to the department. Is the hon. minister aware that his lighthouse keeper was busy some months with three or four men taking off part of the timber ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I knew nothing about it.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. gentleman know now ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman's official must have known about it, because he was out there a few weeks ago. Here is the whole plan laid bare. First they endeavoured to get in touch with the lighthouse keeper so as to secure a favourable report. How did they do that ? They pointed out to him that he could put in his days taking off the timber, and that would not interfere with his attending to the lights at night. After the deal was carried out, the $100 were handed over to the department by the hon. member for North Ontario. Mr. Chew was then given the timber. Forthwith Mr. Chew put in a large complement of men. I am informed that there were some fifteen men there two and a half months, with three teams of horses, getting out timber during the past winter from that island.

I am informed that there were some fifteen men and three teams there for two months and a half. And I have information—and information that I believe to be correct—that not less than 150,000 feet of lumber were taken off the island. It is all right for the hon. gentleman to try to shelter himself behind the statement that this was fallen timber. But any one who knows anything of the nature of basswood knows that basswood that had fallen would be utterly useless, because it is a kind of timber that rots quickly. And any one who knows anything of the value of timber, knows that basswood in the form of boards is worth at least $30 a thousand feet. It is a desirable class of wood and hard to get. Well, the minister, on the report of the hon. member for North Ontario who pledges his word that, from his acquaintance with the island the timber is worth $100 and of the lighthouse keeper who says that it is worth $200 the hon. gentleman passes it over to the party's nominee in the riding for $100. I called his attention to it and I moved for the correspondence, and I am informed that he allowed the party to take the timber that, despite what the hon. gentleman has said, I am informed is worth over $1,000. Then, where is the minister with respect to the balance? These parties are allowed to take off the balance. And the Indians on the reserve are protesting most vigorously against this timber being handed over to the hon. minister's party friends. In his zeal to please his party friends he has done in this case what he did in the case of the 'Bayfield.' The hon. gentleman seems to take the position that, no matter what it costs the country, the party's friends must be provided for in order that the minister may get the reputation of being a good fellow, even at the public expense. The hon. gentleman must learn—at least we must endeavour to teach him—that the public domain and vessels owned by the Dominion are not his personal property; and, if they are to be sold, they must be sold in the honest, wholesome manner of public competition, so that the people may get a fair return for what they sell.

I had occasion to visit home a couple of weeks ago. Mr. Chew came to me and said: What are you doing about that timber? Why don't you let me take it away? I said: I have nothing to do with it; I am only making a protest against the department giving away the public property without competition. It is not proper and it is not fair. Instead of giving you this timber for $100, it should have been offered by public competition and let everybody have a chance at it. In the course of conversation Mr. Chew told me some further circumstances of the case. And when I said he was getting a big thing in having this timber sold to him for $100, he said he had to pay $50 more. I said: Why in the name of all that is good, had you to pay $50 more? He answered: I had to enter into communication with the brother of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) and had to pay him $50 for his services. So, what do we find the proposition to come to? A gentleman outside makes a representation to a member of the House, and the member of the House makes a personal representation to the minister. I do not know whether my hon. friend from North Ontario will say that he has been on the island and has a knowledge of the value of the timber, or that what he represented in the matter was based on his acquaintance with the locality and knowledge of the value of timber, but there is the statement of Mr. Chew, made before half a dozen people and quite openly, that he had to pay $50 to a gentleman on the outside to get the timber. Mr. Chew naturally asks why, if the department want to sell the timber to him for $100 he should not have it. If Mr. Chew or anybody else can get $3,000 or $4,000 worth of property for $100, that is not his fault. The fault lies with the department in allowing it to be done. This kind of thing will incite others to make raids on the treasury. True, it is not a big raid. It does not bear the same proportions as the Grand Trunk Pacific or the purchase of the Canada Eastern Railway. But it seems to be the policy of this government, in small matters as in great, and in every department, to have men on the outside who can use influence to bring about such results as we see here. The brother of the hon. member for North Ontario gets $50 out of the transaction. Mr. Chew gets $3,000 or $4,000 worth of timber, and the long-suffering country gets $100. I think it is only fair to this committee and to the country that some explanation of the matter should be given by the hon. gentleman who presides over the department.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The contract which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) holds in his hand speaks for itself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not see anything to laugh at. I say the contract speaks for itself. The timber on the island was sold for $100 on the representation that it was worth $100. Some people say it was worth more. Well, when it is cut down and transported and sawn into boards I suppose it is worth more. But I suppose also that the man who does all this work expects to get something for it.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will allow me, there is one matter that I forgot. I find—and I am confident that the minister will not deny it—that instead of restricting himself to the cutting of cedar and basswood, this gentleman has trespassed and cut other timber as well.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Well, is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) prepared to say that this party is relieved from paying for what he has cut ? If he says that, on what authority does he say it ? How can the department, here in Ottawa having made a bargain, infallibly prevent people at a distance from going beyond the terms of that bargain ? The contract as I said, speaks for itself. The man had a right to take a certain quantity of timber which was recommended to be sold as being of scarcely any value, the sale being to the advantage of the department. If the timber is said to be worth a good deal more, surely some proof of that should be offered. But it is said that other timber was cut by Mr. Chew. It was because information of that fact came to the department that an official was sent up to investigate. He found that more timber had been cut than was contracted for, and so a stumpage of $2 a thousand feet was charged Mr. Chew before he could take away the timber that was not included in his contract. Where, then, is the blame to the department ? It is said that $50 was paid to some gentleman outside. I do not know on what ground that allegation was made. But, in any case, in what way can it affect the department when the department have taken all the necessary precautions to secure the public interest ? If Mr. Chew has chosen to cut more timber than he had a right to cut under his contract, he will be called upon to pay for it—that is all.

Mr. BENNETT. On the 10th of May last I wrote to the minister a letter in the course of which I asked whether any officer of his department had been cutting under contract for Mr. Chew, and was still doing so. I do not know whether any of the logs have been removed or not. But, on the 10th of May he had an intimation that either the lighthouse keeper or some one else in his department—and it could hardly be any one else—had been doing the cutting for Mr. Chew. He had then an opportunity to find out whether the department had been overreached or not. He had had an opportunity to find out since. I do not know what this report is, but I am going to ask the minister if he has an official report of the quantity of timber that was cut and lying on the shore, and what was the quantity ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Of soft wood, about 1,500 sticks.

Mr. BENNETT. And in thousand feet, how much ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In thousand feet of lumber which Mr. Chew is being charged for and for which he has consented to pay, there is 140,000 feet, for which he pays a stumpage of $2 per thousand.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister admits a stumpage of 140,000 feet, in addition to basswood and cedar cut under contract.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. How could it be proven ? It is a fact that has come to my knowledge only lately. But I am investigating the whole matter, and if the lightkeeper has been at fault he will suffer for it. I could not look after things of that kind before they are all over. There is a lightkeeper on Wallace island, who is defended by hon. members opposite, and who pretends that he owns Wallace island and he has sold $300 worth of property off the island to Mr. Morris, of Ottawa, and has collected the money. And now, because we are installing an automatic light at that place, he complains of all sorts of things, says that he is being despoiled, and has been deprived of what belongs to him, whereas the property belongs really to the government. These things will happen, and if this lightkeeper is at fault he will be dealt with accordingly. But until the government loses a cent, it is no use making such an outcry about it. We have acted in good faith, and on the information furnished to the department.

Mr. BENNETT. I know nothing about the Morris case. But I do know this, that here the minister had a valuable lot of timber on that island for the sale of which he admits to-day he has made a contract, and made it without competition, which he should not have done, and that after the party goes in there and cuts without leave or license from the department 140,000 feet of timber the minister instead as he should have done, saying to these parties: You have broken faith with the department and I will not permit you to have anything to do with this timber,—turns round and gives it to him at a stumpage of $2 a thousand. I want to tell the minister that hemlock timber to-day is worth $14 to $16 a thousand.

Mr. TOBIN. Where does the hon. gentleman get that information ? Does he get it from any lumberman in the country ?

Mr. BENNETT. I do not know what came out of that bubble ; I never saw much come out of that bubble.

Mr. TOBIN. If the hon. gentleman gets the information that hemlock is worth $15 a thousand he gets it from some one who knows nothing about the business.

Mr. BENNETT. I have paid more than than for it myself last year. Now here is the opinion of the minister. He had no right at all to act on this assurance of the member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) as to the value of the timber. He knew that the member for North Ontario was not a practical lumberman. I do not know whether the minister had any conversation or not with that hon. gentleman, and whether the latter told him how many times he had been on that island in order to ascertain the value of the timber. But I do know that when this timber was there for sale the minister should have made himself acquainted with its value, and when he found that he had been overreached by these parties, when he had fair notice that grave suspicion existed, that his own lighthouse keeper had not made a proper report on the value, he should at once have escheated or taken over the whole timber and sold it to the highest bidder, instead of handling it over to these people at $2 a thousand. In that part of the country where the deal is known the minister's conduct is not thought highly of.

Mr. GRANT. I cannot allow the remarks of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) regarding myself to pass unchallenged. My whole connection with this matter is set forth in the correspondence brought down on motion of the hon. gentleman. It shows conclusively that I acted in the matter simply out of courtesy to the gentleman who is a constituent of the hon. member for East Simcoe. It is quite true, as has been pointed out, that in the first part of my letter I made a lapsus pennae when I used the ordinary term, which is customary in such a letter, in saying that he was a constituent of mine, and the hon. gentleman has seen fit to take exception to that remark. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chew is not a constituent of mine, but he has the distinguished honour of being a constituent of the hon. member for East Simcoe. He sent me an application in regard to Hope island, asking to purchase the soft wood on that island which is the property of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and I considered myself in duty bound to file that application with the department, as I shall always consider myself in duty bound, while I am a member of this House, to file the application of any gentleman, Reform or Conservative, in my part of the country, who wishes to do business with the department. I considered it an act of courtesy due to the applicant. Now the hon. member for East Simcoe has seen fit to go further in reference to my connection with this matter than my letter goes, and he says that I urged the sale of this timber upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. My letter will speak for itself on that subject. It is a portion of the return brought down, and a reference to that letter will show that I said that so far as my opinion went I thought $100 was a fair price for the soft wood, seeing that it was blown down.

Mr. AVERY. Had you gone over this land to see the timber before you made that report ?

Mr. GRANT. I wish to draw attention to the fact that the hon. member for East Simcoe has seen fit entirely to exclude from his speech the letter which I wrote on the 25th of August, in which I said that I believed, from the information given me, that the offer was a fair one, and furthermore I said : 'Of course, I cannot speak from personal knowledge, but I have reason to believe that the estimate is a fair one.' That was my statement, and by that statement I will stand. A number of persons told me, whose veracity I had no reason then to doubt, and that I have no reason now to doubt, that timber of the description mentioned was worth that sum of money, or thereabouts. The papers containing my application to the department show my whole and sole connection with the matter, as will be seen by the letters filed and brought down in the return. The hon. gentleman makes a reference to supposed conversations which he thinks must have taken place between the minister and myself. So far as my memory serves me, I think I am within the mark in saying that there was no conversation between the minister and myself regarding the matter. My connection with is is wholly disclosed in the correspondence, showing that I acted simply out of courtesy in passing on to the department the application of Mr. Chew. More than that, the hon. gentleman makes a comment upon the purchase price, if I did not mistake his remarks.

Mr. BENNETT. That is so endorsed on the original papers. There is a memorandum endorsed which says : 'Memo, $100 was paid in by Mr. Grant, M.P.'

Mr. GRANT. My recollection of the matter is that the letter received by me from Mr. Chew inclosed the sum of money mentioned in the letter, $100 which I forwarded on to the department. I simply did on that occasion as any other hon. gentleman in this House would do. I did not keep the money, as we have heard of some other hon. gentlemen doing on a previous occasion in this House. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the hon. gentleman's reference or insituation means.

I have only this to say and to say it most emphatically, that so far as this transaction is concerned, I acted simply as a matter of courtesy to a gentleman who lives in the same county as myself. I undertook nothing as to values, except to say that as far as I knew the island, and as far as I had been informed in reference to the timber on it, the price seemed to be a fair one. Now, as to the question of the hon. member for Addington (Mr. Avery) I have not traversed this island, I have passed it in the Georgian bay and have seen it, and from my observation and from the fact that it was bought for lighthouse supply purposes, for which hardwood only is required, I am convinced that it is not apt to be very heavily timbered with soft wood, particularly as there is only 100 acres in all involved. The hon. gentleman has not only not been fair, but has not disclosed all that the return brought down will disclose. As a matter of fact the lighthouse keeper to whom the question of values was referred, reports to the department that there are four kinds of soft wood on the island. He says :

I consider that the cedar, the basswood, the hemlock and the elm are worth about $200.

Now the department concluded to sell to Mr. Chew not all these four kinds of timber but simply all the cedar and basswood, just half the timber, and it requires little mathematical skill to prove that if the four kinds of timber are not worth more than $200 the cedar and the basswood are not worth a very large amount of money. I do not know whether or not some hemlock or wood other than that specified in the agreement has been cut by Mr. Chew. With that I am not concerned, for I am sure that if that has been done the minister will see that it is paid for at a fair market price. I desire to call attention to the fact that the conditions under which Manley Chew bought the timber from the Marine Department are extremely onerous. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) quoted from the agreement but did not quote the onerous conditions which must necessarily result in a considerable reduction in the value of the timber bought under these conditions. It is an agreement dated September 4, 1903, whereby Manley Chew agrees to purchase from the department, &c., &c.

The timber cut under this agreement shall consist of cedar and basswood only.

Which endorses my statement of a moment ago that the hemlock was not included in the agreement for sale, but was included in the estimate of the value made by Mr. Vallee. As I understand the purpose of the Marine Department in acquiring this and other lighthouse plots is to have hardwood available for lighthouses and lighthouse keepers. It is part of the policy of the department to part with the soft wood which is not necessary and which is a source of danger as it is apt to fall down and ignite. In most cases of course the lighthouses are remote from any habitation and it is very necessary that the greatest possible precaution be taken against fire. For that reason the department is frequently anxious to get rid of soft wood. More than that, as the agreement sets forth, they require the person taking the soft wood to carefully underbrush the places where he cuts the wood, and where roads are made, and to cord the wood taken from the roadways for the lighthouse keeper. I leave it to any practical lumberman if the appending of such onerous conditions as those in the contract will not considerably reduce the value of the timber taken under these circumstances. More than that the hon. gentleman has not stated that this timber is situated on an island which is, if I am not mistaken, some thirty or forty miles from the nearest available sawmill. I have been informed by Mr. Chew that as a matter of fact, owing to the expense involved in establishing a camp on the island and getting out the timber, he has not made a copper out of this transaction. I do not know how much timber Mr. Chew has taken from the 100 acres, and of course if he has taken timber not covered by the agreement he should pay the department and the country for it, and I have no doubt he will do so. That of course is a matter for the Minister of Marine. The question as to how much standing timber there is even on as small an area as 100 acres is always more or less open to speculation. I do not know how much Mr. Chew has taken out and it is not a matter of particular moment to me. I know however the estimate that the Department of Marine, acting on the advice of their officer living on the spot, placed upon it. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has seen fit to insinuate that the lighthouse keeper who made this report has been tampered with in some way. I understood him to say that the report should not be relied upon owing to the fact that the lighthouse keeper has been employed by Mr. Chew at a daily wage for cutting down some of this timber.

I do not know particularly what the character of the lighthouse keeper is ; but I understand that he has been there for some years and, so far as my information goes, he is not the sort of man who would be turned aside from doing his duty in the public service by the offer of a day's pay for a day's work. It is not creditable to the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) to make such insinuations in this House against a man in humble circumstances, a man who lives on a remote island, and who is in no way capable of defending himself against such attacks. I am here to say that so far as I know Charles Vallee is an honest man, and a man who could not be bribed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has seen fit to refer to a brother of mine, who is a practising solicitor in the town of Midland. I would not expect the hon. member for East Simcoe to rise to speak on any matter in this House without making some personal and, perhaps, offensive allusion to one of his fellow-members, no matter how remote the subject he is discussing may be from such a personal reference. The hon. gentleman has seen fit to say that when the sale of the timber on Hope island went through, as a coincidence, or as a complement, or, he almost said, as a condition of its going through, the sum of $50 was paid to the brother of the member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant). I do not know whether that money was paid to my brother or not; I do not know whether or not he got that money for his services, but I know he is a practising solicitor in the town of Midland, and if he is like some of the other solicitors practising in that town, I expect he will collect his fees. It is not so very long since we had it disclosed in this House that the hon. member for East Simcoe, in a transaction which occurred between him and this same Mr. Chew, or a relative of his, in relation to a dock site in Midland involving $400, tolled Mr. Chew to the extent of $30 or $40 for solicitor's fees. The record will show that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett), or his firm, benefited to that extent. As I understand it, my brother has been acting of late as Mr. Chew's solicitor. I do not know that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) quarrels with Mr. Frederick Grant because he is acting as solicitor for Mr. Chew, but I suppose Mr. Chew is at liberty to make any choice he wishes. If Mr. Chew employs the firm or Storey & Grant to send an application down here, to transact the necessary correspondence, to see to the conditions of the agreement, and to do all that is necessary for the closing up of this transaction with the Marine Department, I have nothing to do with that. Neither have I to do with the further fact that Mr. Chew paid that law firm their fees. Mr. Chew is free, I suppose, to deal with the firm of Storey & Grant in Midland, with which I have no connection in the world, and it may be that he was charged a fee for the legal business in connection with this transaction. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) did not find the generosity in his nature to state fully to the House the fact, which he knew very well, that Mr. Frederick Grant was a practising solicitor in Midland. The hon. gentleman knew very well that if Mr. Frederick Grant got $40 or $50, he got that as a fee for acting as a solicifor in the case. The hon. member tells us that Mr. George Chew himself told him that he paid the fee. But still the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) would leave the House under the impression that Mr. Frederick Grant was rewarded in some degree for procuring for Mr. Chew the purchase of this timber. As a matter of fact, I do not suppose that the Minister of Marine is at all acquainted with the firm of Storey & Grant practising in the town of Midland. At all events, they had a perfect right to collect their professional fees. We have the word of the hon. member (Mr. Bennett), which I am prepared to take, that Mr. Chew told him he paid a firm of lawyers in Midland $50 for attending to the business in connection with this matter. Well, that law firm has as much right to charge for their services as the hon. member's firm has to be paid for their services in connection with the transaction which was ventilated on the floor of this House within the last few weeks. But perhaps this whole matter, as between the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and Mr. Chew, is explicable by the fact that Mr. Chew is the prospective Liberal candidate in East Simcoe. No doubt the hon. member for East Simcoe takes this chance in the House, as he takes very many other chances, to discount in advance the gentleman who, it is rumoured, will be his opponent in the next election. As a matter of fact, I understand that Mr. George Chew has personally absolutely no interest in this matter, but that Mr. Manley Chew, who is a relative of Mr. George Chew, the Liberal candidate in East Simcoe, is the person concerned. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will not succeed in his tactics to discount Mr. Chew before the electorate of Simcoe. I know Mr. George Chew personally; with Mr. Manley Chew, so far as I am aware, I am not acquainted. Mr. George Chew is a man of honour, a man of sterling worth, a man who stands high in the business community of north central Ontario; and I can vouch for it, Mr. Chairman, that when Mr. George Chew gets an opportunity he will be able to settle to his own satisfaction the differences which occur between him and the hon. member for East Simcoe.

Mr. BENNETT. This is the old case of too much excuse. I am not complaining that the brother of the hon. member (Mr. Grant) got $50 from Mr. Chew; Mr. Chew is doing the complaining. He is the gentleman who made the complaint of having been tolled for $50. I do not care whether the hon. gentleman's brother got $100 or not, but I want to know what his brother did for the $50. His name does not appear in the correspondence at all. It is a fortunate thing for Mr. Chew that this gentleman did not write a letter, because if he charges $50 without writing a letter, he would charge $100 if he did write. Some person seems to have done the necessary work, and to have done it with very good results, too.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That was for examining the timber.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Grant) states his personal acquaintance with the island, and says that the result of his examination of it was that the timber was worth $200. I care not what the hon. gentleman says personal to myself. I have been in the House some twelve or thirteen years; I do not know whether I shall be in it any longer or not; but I can say that when I represented East Simcoe and had the patronage of that riding there were never any tolls of $50 taken out of the pockets of the people. Mr. Chew can cheerfully testify that while I had the patronage of that riding I did many favours for him in the Department of Public Works in reference to the dredging which he required at his mills, and in reference to timber limits in which he was concerned; but he never had a toll tapper tapping at his pocket for $50. That was unknown in those days. No wonder Mr. Chew bitterly complains that in view of the fact that he was the Liberal candidate in the riding, there is to be a go-between to extract from his pocket $50 before anything could be done. So far as discounting Mr. Chew is concerned, I have only to reiterate that Mr. Chew would be very foolish not to accept if any intermediary on behalf of this government should come to him and show him where he could get for $100 $3,000 to $4,000 worth of timber, even if it did cost him $50 for the till-tapper. That is the condition of it. My complaint is not with Mr. Chew or the hon. member for North Ontario.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Or his brother ?

Mr. BENNETT. Or his brother either ; he is welcome to the $50 or whatever he got. However that may be, I do complain that the hon. member (Mr. Grant) should have assured the department of his own knowledge of the value of the timber, when he never had been on the island, as he now frankly admits. He had no warrant to state that the timber was only worth $100, and that statement could only have been made with the one idea of deliberately misleading the minister. The inference can be drawn by hon. gentlemen as they please. But the man I am dealing with is this prodigal minister ; this gentleman who is so unsparing with the public domain ; who gives away a steamboat to one party friend and a timber limit to another party friend. I can tell the minister that when it was shown to him that his own official had been cutting the timber he ought to have intervened. No minister will contend that it is right to have this lighthouse keeper acting for the department on the one side and for the contractor on the other. I have nothing to say against Mr. Charles Vallee ; he is a hard working man ; but I will say that I have no doubt that when he was assured that he was to have the contract for cutting the timber, it had some effect on his opinion as to how his report on the value should be. Here is the fact—that while Mr. Vallee was only asked to report as to the cedar and the basswood, he went out of his way to report as to the hemlock and the elm. There was an evident desire on their part to possess themselves of all the timber on this island, while, by the contract, they were confined to the cedar and the basswood. The hon. member for North Ontario says, in his letter of the 13th :

> I assure you that great care will be exercised in taking off the soft wood so that no damage will be done to the hard.

Why did he not say that in taking off the cedar and the basswood no harm would be done ? There was a design from the first, and it is shown by the letter of the hon. member for North Ontario, to do, not what was contracted, but to take everything possible, and then to exert the party pull with a pliable minister. The minister would be laughed at around there if he said that he was selling hemlock at $2 a thousand, because it is worth on the stump $6 or $7.

Mr. TOBIN. Hemlock to be worth $2 a thousand stumpage must be situated very close to a sawmill. If I understand the hon. member for North Ontario, this was twenty miles from a sawmill. I say as a lumberman that hemlock twenty miles from a sawmill is not worth $2 a thousand, and if the Minister of Marine sold it at that price, he sold it for more than it was worth.

Mr. BENNETT. I am going, out of the fulness of my heart, to tell the hon. gentleman something. He does not know all about timber.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. He knows—

Mr. BENNETT. That is my friend who was brought up on cigarettes.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I know what I am talking about when I am talking about cigarettes.

Mr. BENNETT. I am going to talk with my timber friend from Richmond and Wolfe. My hon. friend does not know that in our part of the country we take the bark off hemlock trees, and the bark alone is worth $6 a cord. Now, the Minister of Marine knows that it was his duty to expose that lumber for sale and to get the proper price for it. Had those men not been Liberals but Conservatives, they would not have got a foot of that timber. It was a case of a design carefully laid from the beginning to possess themselves of all the timber, and they did so at a very cheap rate. There is not a Liberal in the neighbourhood who approves of the transaction. The minister was in fault in this, that when he learned that he had been overreached, that these men were trespassers, and had taken timber to which they were not entitled under their contract, he should have dealt with them with an iron hand. I congratulate the minister on the way in which he has handled this matter and the sale of the 'Bayfield,' and trust that he will do a little more of the same kind of business in the interest of the Conservative party, though not in the interest of the country.

Mr. GRANT. Again I cannot let the statement of the hon. member for East Simcoe pass without a remark from myself. He has not said so in so many words, but he has insinuated, that I myself acted to use a common term, as a till-tapper in approaching the department for Mr. Chew and made some profit. I am therefore under the necessity of stating that during the two years that I have been in Ottawa I have performed services at the various departments, both for Reformers and Conservatives in various parts of the country, and that up to this moment I have never asked, received, nor been promised one cent for my services.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Did the township of Eldon communicate with him as the Liberal member for North Ontario, and did he not charge them $35 for a little job that he had done for them long before he represented that constituency ?

Mr. GRANT. The hon. gentleman refers to an action that I was connected with before I was a member of this House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I deny that statement emphatically.

Mr. GRANT. The firm that I was connected with in Beaverton, Ontario, Roach & Grant, had to do with an action against the government for damages done by the construction of the Trent Valley Canal; and even if I myself had charged fees, which I did not, I fancy that a solicitor practising in a matter against the government would have every right to charge his clients fees. However, it did not happen in the case the hon. gentleman has referred to.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would not have cornered the hon. gentleman, only he was boasting that he had not done so.

Mr. GRANT. I fail to see how I have been cornered. Mr. Chairman, it is a little unpleasant to have to make a personal statement of this sort ; but the hon. member for East Simcoe spoke in a way to make it necessary for me to do so. I do not know what particular advantage a man gets for doing all sorts of work around the departments for people in all parts of the country ; but perhaps I have some of that good nature with which the hon. member for East Simcoe credits the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I may say this, too, that for many of the hon. gentleman's political friends in the east riding of Simcoe I have performed services at the departments and they have written me, apparently not writing to the hon. member for East Simcoe. As my time is fully taken up, I would be very much delighted if they would correspond in regard to such matters with their own member. However, I deem it my simple duty and an act of courtesy which I owe to my fellow citizens, to attend to such departmental matters for them, as may be necessary, and I have done so without expense to them, but with considerable trouble to myself.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a much more serious aspect to this question than has yet been discussed, from my point of view. Not only the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but the entire government, have been entrusted with the care of the property of the people of this country. To-night we have discussed two cases. One case is that of property which belonged to the people of this country in the shape of the steamer 'Bayfield' which the hon. gentleman made up his mind to dispose of. Did he proceed as an honest man should have done, dealing with property belonging to another—put it up for sale, and have it sold at a fair market value, either by tender or by public auction ? He gets reports from his officers. One report says that the vessel is worth $7,000 ; another says he can get $5,000 cash for her in Goderich ; and yet in the face of that the hon. gentleman hands it over to a political friend for $3,200. Is that the way the country and the people should deal with their property ? Here again we have another case of the timber on 100 acres of land, which formerly belonged to the Indians, but to which these wards of the government relinquished their claims, being sold for a song. The government wanted the timber for lighthouse purposes, but we find the hon. member for North Ontario stepping in and making application for a portion of it. Here is the hon. gentleman's letter :

House of Commons,
Ottawa, August 19th, 1903.

Dear Mr. Préfontaine,—A constituent of mine is desirous of purchasing the cedar and basswood timber on the lot owned by your department on Hope island in Georgian bay. Your department bought the tract to supply fuel for lighthouse and require only hardwood.

Col. Anderson whom I saw to-day informs me that it is the practice to sell the soft wood and that he recommends the sale provided I arrange price with you.

But if Colonel Anderson, an official of the department, thought it advisable to dispose of part of the wood, why was it not sold at auction ?

My correspondent tells me that the cedar and basswood is sprinkling only and much of it blown down. It rots quickly thus.

Does the hon. gentleman know anything about cedar ? If he does, he would not say that cedar is a timber which quickly rots. On the contrary it is a timber that will hardly ever rot either above or under ground.

He offers $100 for the cedar and basswood, asking that he be allowed two or three years to remove it, at the same time not to damage your hardwood.

Duck island, Col. Anderson tells me, was so disposed of. My own acquaintance with the Hope island convinces me that the price is fair——

The hon. member for Ontario says to the minister : I am acquainted with Hope island, I have been all over it, I know every inch of it. I know how much lumber is on it, and $100 is a fair price. The only inference to be drawn from this letter is that the hon. member knew what he was talking about when he said the price was a fair one. Does this not prove that there is a nigger on the fence somewhere ? But it was the duty of the minister, as trustee of the people, to call for tenders. But the hon. gentleman does not confine himself to basswood and cedar. He goes on to say :

—as in the 100 acres, when the beech and maple is so thick there cannot be a great deal of cedar or basswood and hemlock.

He is now asking for another kind of timber and the lighthouse keeper, who is not supposed to know anything about timber, who is not supposed to know how much timber there may be on 100 acres of land, is asked to report on its quality. Why, I paid myself this winter for a limit, from which all the hardwood had been taken, $1,500 for the elm and basswood standing. This government which owned 100 acres of valuable timber belonging to the people, should have called for tenders before disposing of it. Instead, however, they handed it to one of their political friends for the paltry sum of $100 and gave him two or three years to take it off. If for no other reason, the government should be condemned for this transaction and I have no doubt they will when the time comes.

Mr. AVERY. The point is this, that the Minister of Marine sold a lot of timber on the representations of a political friend who never saw it. He took $100 for what was worth thousands of dollars, and he did this without taking the pains to ascertain the value of what he was selling. We are told that the timber is not valuable and that it is costly to get out. Well, I venture to say there was not one rotten log of basswood cut on the island. The contractors would take no logs except green timber. Basswood is worth $25 per thousand feet. Then the cedar will stand for ages either on the ground or under and will not rot. That cedar timber is worth $15 per thousand feet. The minister tried to make out a case by saying that the wood was some thirty or forty miles away from the mill, but it was situated close to the water, so that you could put it in a boom and float it across to the mill much cheaper than you could haul it by land. I notice in last year's statements that this government has paid $18 a thousand feet for hemlock, yet they tell us now that the hemlock is of no value. I am selling hemlock from 18 to 24 feet at $15 a thousand feet. It is a shame for this government to barter away for a paltry sum of $100 what is worth thousands of dollars. The cedar and basswood are valuable timber and no doubt the logs taken out were all green. Basswood will not float when not green and is of no use in that condition after it is cut up. I believe that there are jobs going on this year on the River St. Lawrence, and I am credibly informed that this government are getting their lumber in the state of Michigan, if this is the case, then they are giving our timber away for a song and purchasing from the United States to the advantage of American labour, and this in the face of the fact that when we send lumber over there they make us pay a duty of $2 a thousand feet.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. What is the stumpage under the Ontario government regulations ?

Mr. AVERY. $2 a thousand feet as a rule.

Mr. TAYLOR. But they sold the limit without calling for tenders.

Mr. TOBIN. Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for North Ontario said that basswood would rot, he spoke of basswood which was blown down, and we are well aware that basswood after it has been blown down and laid on the ground one year, is useless for lumber. Cedar may lie years on the ground without damage; but as regards hemlock being worth $15 a thousand feet, the hon. gentleman knows that he can get at Midland, Ontario, any amount of hemlock at less than $15 a thousand feet. A few weeks ago the Grand Trunk advertised for a lot of hemlock in the Midland division. The firm with which I am connected tendered at the rate of $12 a thousand feet. The dimension of timber was eight by ten, ten by twelve, twelve by twelve. And we put in a price of $12 a thousand feet. But they had another offer I understood of $11.25 a thousand feet, f. o. b. cars. This timber, I understand, is twenty miles from any saw mill, and it has to be cut down and hauled. I venture to say that hemlock timber at $2 a thousand stumpage is charged all that it is worth. In no place in the province of Quebec, could you get $1 per thousand stumpage at a point twenty miles from a mill. When the hon. gentleman says that there are other hon. gentlemen on the other side who know about the value of timber and that the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin) knows nothing about it, I take issue with him at once. I do not pretend to know anything about professional matters, but when he says that basswood is worth $30 a thousand feet he has to refer to the hon. member for Addington (Mr. Avery), who tells him that it is worth $25 a thousand. And what percentage of basswood is worth even $25 a thousand.

Mr. AVERY. Basswood lumber, log run is worth $25 a thousand feet.

Mr. TOBIN. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) said $30.

Mr. AVERY. It is worth more than $30 if you cull it.

Mr. TOBIN. But it will not be contended that this timber would average over $25 a thousand. You have only 100 acres of land, twenty miles from a sawmill. If the hon. minister got $100 for the cut basswood and, for the hemlock and elm stumpage charged $2 a thousand, he got a very good price indeed.

Mr. INGRAM. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tobin) think of the prices that the department is paying ?

Mr. TOBIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) is aware that there are times in the year when, if you must have a certain class of timber you must pay the price. The hon. member for Addington (Mr. Avery) is aware that we sell timber at $25 sometimes; that at other times we can get only $10 for. But this is not such a case.

Mr. FOWLER. If the lumber expert of hon. gentlemen opposite had desired to be quite fair to the committee he would have told us—as the fact is—that timber situated as this timber is, on an island in a lake is more easily got to a mill than timber that is only two miles from a mill if you had to haul it over a logging road. And he knows, if he knows anything about timber, that 25 cents a thousand feet would be a large charge for transporting a raft of timber of 200 or 300 thousand feet to a mill twenty miles away on the shores of a lake.

Mr. TOBIN. Oh, oh !

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tobin) may laugh, but by so doing he betrays either his ignorance of the subject or else a continued effort to deceive the committee. Every practical lumberman, everyone who has had anything to do with the rafting of timber, knows that conveying timber by water is the very cheapest way. The value of this stumpage would depend entirely upon the situation of the timber. The stumpage would not be worth 25 cents a thousand if the lumber was situated very remote from a place where it could be floated to the mill. If you hauled it ten miles, it might cost so much as to reduce the stumpage to nothing. But, here is timber on an island in the lake, and close to water. Probably it would not have to be put upon a sleigh at all, but simply dragged to the water. In that case $2 or $2.50 a thousand would cut it and haul it to the water.

Mr. TOBIN. Of course, this timber is located just as the hon. gentleman described it ?

Mr. FOWLER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tobin) undertake to say that it is not ? If it is situated as I have said, it need not be put upon a sleigh——

Mr. TOBIN. And does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) say that it could be cut and put in the water for $2 a thousand ?

Mr. FOWLER. I say $2 a thousand.

Mr. TOBIN. Then, he is as much out of the way as my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. FOWLER. I want to tell my hon. friend that I have some acquaintance with the lumber business, that I am interested in lumbering operations quite as large as those in which he is interested. And I know whereof I speak when I say that timber situated as I have suggested can be put into the water at $2 or $2.50 a thousand feet. Of course, as I say, if you have to haul it four or five miles before it reaches the water it will cost very much more. It is the hauling by team that is the great expense.

Mr. TOBIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) a question ? Do I understand him to say that he can take a raft of logs and tow it across a lake at 25 cents a thousand feet ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Fifteen cents.

Mr. FOWLER. I said that the timber could be conveyed across the water twenty miles to a mill at 25 cents a thousand feet. If the distance were twenty miles, it could be towed in five or six hours.

Mr. TOBIN. I suppose that depends on the wind.

Mr. FOWLER. If there is a gale blowing against you, you could not get it out at all. My hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin) shows a desire to mislead the committee when he uses such an argument.

Mr. TOBIN. I have had experience.

Mr. FOWLER. You could not tow a raft at all against a gale of wind. But then you would not attempt it, but would wait until the wind went down. A tow of twenty miles with a raft of 300 thousand feet, which would not require a very big tug to handle, could be made in five or six hours ; and at 25 cents a thousand feet, you would get $75 for the five or six hours work of your tug. I would be glad to be in the tug business if I could get that much for every six hours that my tug worked.

While I am on this subject, I would like to say a word or two with respect to the conduct of the minister and of the department in this matter. We should have been surprised at the conduct of the minister if we had not had an experience with him last session and had never heard of the 'Bayfield' and the transaction in connection with the sale of that steamer. Sale ! I must withdraw that word ; it was not a sale, but a presentation. People have a superstition about a gift of an edged tool to a friend. So, when one gives a valuable pocket knife costing $5 or $6 to a friend, the friend gives back a copper cent to take away the harm. So, the hon. minister gave the 'Bayfield' as a present to his political friends and, to take away the harm they gave him a little sum of money a sum bearing about the same proportion to the value of the 'Bayfield' as the copper cent does to the five-dollar pocket knife. I say that we should have been surprised at this transaction if we had not had experience of the minister. Let us see how far his conduct is consistent with that of a man who wishes to do his duty to the department. An application was made by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant)—whom, it seems, does not confine his services to his own constituency but extends them all over his province—for a timber limit on Hope island. And did the minister do as a man would who wished to administer honestly, fairly and properly the department placed in his charge ?

Did he get some expert who knew something about lumber to go over this property and give an estimate of it ? Oh, no, that is not the course the minister pursued, because that would be the proper course, and it is inconsistent with the hon. gentleman's ideas of public duty to pursue the proper course. So the hon. gentleman takes the letter which he receives from the member for North Ontario, a gentleman who has certainly no expert knowledge of timber, the hon. gentleman who, on a pleasure excursion, sailed by this Oak island, and ventured on the strength of that passing acquaintance to give an estimate, an expert estimate, as to the value of the timber growing on that island; and he gives the minister to understand that he is thoroughly acquainted with that island, with the conditions and with the timber, and he thinks that $100 is a fair price for the timber to be sold on that application. On the strength of that opinion the minister makes a contract with Mr. Chew for the sale of this timber, which is worth thousands of dollars—basswood and cedar are both very valuable timber, and he has nothing but the opinion of my hon. friend from North Ontario, and an estimate which it seems he has received from the lighthouse keeper. Now this gentleman who may be a very good lighthouse keeper, estimates at $200, as I understand, the value of all the timber on that island, hardwood and softwood. But what do we find as a matter of fact ? We find that after he has taken off the cedar and the basswood, he has stolen—that is the word. that is the only word to use—what is the use of mincing words in connection with this matter ? Here is a man who makes a hard and fast business contract. a written contract with the department whereby he is to get two certain kinds of timber. basswood and cedar. With that written contract in his hands this man goes into the woods and cuts down hemlock to the extent of 140,000 feet. according to the statement of the minister. Now, Sir, if that is not stealing I do not know what stealing means. I say that 'stealing' is the only word you can use in connection with this matter. After this timber thief has stolen 140,000 feet of timber belonging to this country what punishment does the minister inflict upon him ? He charges him a very moderate stumpage; considering the circumstances, considering the situation of this timber, he charges this light fingered gentleman a very moderate stumpage for the timber which he has stolen from the public domain. Now what sort of a position does this minister occupy ? Is this a man who should be entrusted with the public affairs of this country ? Is this a man who has so slight a regard—the hon. minister laughs——

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. That shows, Mr. Chairman, how slight a regard the minister has for the duties that devolve upon him as the supposedly responsible head of a very important department. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman imposes on this man the slight tax of $2 per thousand as a punishment. And what does he do with the lighthouse keeper who made this wrong estimate, this lighthouse keeper who, as my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has pointed out, cuts this timber, participates in this fraud, stands up and uses the axe, helps his friend to steal 140,000 feet of timber from the public domain of this country ? He is a man apparently after the minister's own heart, he gets a promotion, no doubt, because he has assisted in defrauding the people of this country out of their rights in connection with this timber. Now this is the man who has induced the department, by the wrongful estimate which he gave, to fall into this error ; and I say, Mr. Chairman, that the minister, if he would even at this late hour recognize his duty, would at once dismiss this man.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. He is a good Tory. I will investigate the matter and see what to do.

Mr. FOWLER. If he had been a Tory he would have been dismissed long ago. If he had been a Tory he would never have got a chance to participate in this steal. It is only the friends of the hon. gentleman who get a chance to participate in these fat things. Now, Sir, I do think that the minister should have this matter thoroughly investigated and see that the department gets its rights, and if he does that, I am sure the country will be enriched by a considerable sum.

Rewards for saving life, including life-saving stations, $12,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are the life-saving stations ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. One at Grand Manan in New Brunswick, and one at Cape Tormentine.

Mr. FOWLER. Grand Manan is a large island and there are a good many harbours on it. I would like to know on what part of the island this life-saving station is situated.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will lay on the table to-morrow a plan of the island and show where the station is situated.

Investigations into wrecks, $4,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How was that expended last year ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The following investigation took place last year :

'Carrigan Head,' British, stranded six miles from Three Rivers, in April.

'Iberian,' British, stranded near Isle aux Raisins in June.

'Stord,' British, stranded at Ste. Anne des Monts in June, slightly damaged.

'Protector,' Norwegian, Saguenay river, total loss.

'Sardhana,' barque 1,119 tons, British, in July, Point des Monts badly damaged.

'Loughrig Holme,' British, Matane, damage slight.

'Bergenhus,' Norway, St. Charles river, slight damage.

'Monterey,' British, St. Pierre, total loss, two lives.

'Holmlea,' 'Manchester Trader,' 'Mount Royal, 'Lake Manitoba' and 'Topaze.'

Mr. FOWLER. While this is very interesting it is not quite the point I want to get at. We want to know how the $4,000 was spent and what officers are employed by the department.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The amount was expended in travelling expenses, fees of witnesses and the holding of the investigations generally. I may state that $4,000 has proved insufficient and I have a further sum of $2,000 in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. FOWLER. We must have fuller information than that. What officers were employed and what were their salaries ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Captain Salmon is the officer in charge. He holds the investigations in company with two assessors appointed from time to time by the department from the different localities where the investigations took place. If the hon. gentleman wants the details of the expenditure he will have to give me time to have the books of the department copied.

Mr. FOWLER. In any department the minister should come prepared with all the details in making up the estimates.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It may require the copying of a book of 100 pages.

Mr. FOWLER. The expenditure of $4,000 could not do that, if you spent it in 5 cent pieces.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In the report of the Auditor General for 1902 we have:

Wrecks reported at $2 each, ——

Mr. FOWLER. That is for 1902. We want it for 1903.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That has been given in the Auditor General and is not yet published.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister should have it here.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman shows that he knows very little how a department is run or even of how an office is run. If some one should come to him, if he is a lawyer of any practice, and ask him: How much do I owe you ? I have been doing business with you for a year, give me the details at once. He would give the details at once I suppose ?

Mr. FOWLER. When the minister asks for $4,000 he has a right to explain to this committee what he did with the money last year, where he expended it, in order that this committee may know whether it is right for him to have the $4,000 now or not. The minister has been here longer than I and has been a minister for a year and yet does not seem to know the ordinary practice in this House.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria). Louder.

Mr. FOWLER. I want my hon. friend to hear what I have to say. My excitable friend from Victoria generally butts in where he should not. He has worn the hair off his head, butting in.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria). I want to listen to what the man is saying.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has shown utter ignorance of parliamentary procedure, ignorance which might be excusable in an ordinary member, but which is very inexcusable in a responsible minister. It is the right and duty of the minister to give to the members of this committee the very information for which we are asking, extended up to the end of the last fiscal year and he starts to read to us the expenditure for 1902 instead of 1903.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is the only one published.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not a question of publication. If it were published I would not ask for the information, but the minister has the information in his department and yet the minister says we are not entitled to the information.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I never said anything of the kind. The man puts in my mouth words which I never uttered. He cannot keep to the truth at all.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know how much more emphatically the minister could say it than by coming here without that information. Why should he come here without the information if he thinks we are entitled to it. If he does not know the procedure he should ask some minister who has been through the mill before. Let him ask the Minister of Finance. The minister is not content with filling the position of his predecessors. He wants to grab everything in sight and to get the portfolio of public works, and I believe that of canals too, in addition to his own department. Joking aside, the minister should not ask that this item be passed until he gives us the information we have asked for.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Auditor General's Report shows that last year $1,364.45 was expended on this service. The minister now asks $4,000 and promises that he will ask $2,000 more in the supplementary estimates. The committee has a right to know the reason for this increase. The officers of the department do not make out these estimates on mere guess work. They furnish a detailed statement so that more than is required for the public service shall not be asked, and the minister should be in possesion of that detailed statement. We have tried to get explanations from the minister, but the only result is that he insults gentlemen on this side and gets into a passion. What a spectacle it is, and how proud his supporters must feel of this extraordinarily clever minister who has been taken into the cabinet as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with a large slice of the Public Works Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I submit to the Minister of Finance, if it is not the duty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give this information which to my knowledge every minister has given during the last twenty years.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have given a list of the investigations which have taken place and the detailed information has never been asked for before as I am informed by the officers of my department—you may laugh as you please. These officials had the confidence of gentlemen opposite for several years ; they have our confidence now and they are not to be laughed at.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The minister has no business saying that. We have not said a word against any of the officials that are on the floor of the House.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I referred to the officials of the department, and stated that they had informed me that this information was never asked for before, when somebody laughed. Some of these gentlemen have been employed in the department for thirty years, and they have given me the formal official information which is usually given in connection with this vote. They state that other information has never been asked for in connection with it. Practically what my hon. friends want is that I shall produce a copy of the ledger with reference to each investigation and I will do that if I get time.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You do not know anything about it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman says that I do not know what I am talking about.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I rise to a point of order. The minister is putting words into my mouth which I never used.

Mr. FIELDING. Even so, it is not a point of order, it is merely a correction.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman can show me from 'Hansard' ever since it has existed that this detailed information with regard to this particular item has been asked for, I stand corrected.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has not shown how one dollar has been expended out of this $4,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not refuse to give details, but I say that these details have never been asked for before. But nevertheless I will get the information and bring it down.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has not given one iota of information as to whether these fifteen investigations cost $20 or $200 a piece. We should have that information before this money is voted. The committee desires to be perfectly fair. The minister shakes his head.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not dispute it. It is the first time it has been asked.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister is entirely out in that statement. Every minister who comes down with his estimates has these details, and I do not see why there should be any exception in the case of the hon. gentleman. We have a right to a detailed statement showing what each investigation cost, how long it lasted, what officials were engaged in it, and what assessors acted in each case. It would take very little time to make up a statement of that sort.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Whatever time it will take, the information shall be given. You cannot find that a statement as regards this item has been asked, and the reason I have not got it now is that my officials inform me that it has never been given. But I say I will produce it. What else do hon. gentlemen want ?

Mr. OSLER. If it has not been done heretofore, it has been a great oversight. The idea of voting an item without a word as to how the money has been spent. The information should be here.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is like many other expenditures which are not given in detail.

Mr. OSLER. But surely the minister ought to have it if it is asked.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If I had expected that it would be asked for, and if I had been informed that it was the practice of the department, I would have had it.

Mr. OSLER. The item should stand until the information is down.

Mr. TAYLOR. We asked how much of the $4,000 has been spent last year.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have said twice that the total $4,000 has been spent.

Mr. TAYLOR. We want to know how it has been spent. The Auditor General's Report says that $1,367 was spent last year on investigations into wrecks. How was it spent ? I find the following items : Lucien Bance, clerk in department, travel in connection with investigations at Quebec, $75 ; W. C. Gordon, clerk in department, travelling expenses, $16.40 ; paid for typewriting, $15.75 ; O. G. V. Spain, travel and disbursements, transport, telephone messages, telegrams, witness fees and expenses, messenger boy and incidental expenses, making a total of $524.85 ; James Swanson, North Sydney, two days, $20 ; Miss Helen Holland, typewriting evidence, $5 ; assessors—R. S. Clift, 11 days, $110 ; expenses, $13.45 ; John Temple, 11 days, $110 ; expenses, $15.70 ; less advance by Mr. Gordon, $25. Now the hon. gentleman comes down and asks for $4,000, and we ask him for information, and he refuses to give us the information.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman should not say I refuse.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, he absolutely refused to state how he spent the money.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have stated that I spent more than $4,000 to hold fifteen investigations.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The question is this. We ask the hon. gentleman for an explanation why this amount is increased, and he says he cannot give the information, and he goes on to state that it is not the practice for any minister to give this information.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I deny it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When the hon. gentleman gets into a hole, he denies what he said before. I state that in every other department this is not simply a matter of chance or hazard. The deputy minister or those employed in preparing the estimates, when they go to the minister with them, have to explain every item that makes up the total sum, and if there is an increase, they will have to explain why that increase is made ; and when the minister comes to the House with his estimates, he should be prepared, if he knows what is going on in the department, to state how the money is spent and for what it is needed. For instance, I see in the 'Hansard' reports of last year that the then Minister of Inland Revenue, Mr. Bernier, had all the details at his fingers ends. He knew his business and what he was talking about. Then if we look to the discussions on the estimates of public works, we find the then minister, Mr. Tarte, was never at a loss to give the committee all the information required. Why cannot the hon. gentleman do the same ? Is it possible that he does not know what is going on in his department or can he have lost his memory ? He must have been told what the expenditures were and what the increases were for, but he will not vouchsafe to take us into his confidence.

Mr. FOWLER. I would suggest to the hon. minister that he should let this item stand until he can bring down the details. Let us go on with the next item.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There will be the same objections.

Mr. FOWLER. Are we to understand that the hon. minister is not provided with the details of the next item ? Let us then take up some item of which he has the details.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I know something about the extra costs last year, and I would suggest that as the hon. minister has frankly stated that if you will allow that item to pass, he will bring down the information asked for, you should accede to his request. The large increase over 1902 was made at the request of the Montreal Board of Trade and the marine underwriters.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why did not the minister say so ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. On account of the wrecks in the St. Lawrence, we felt that something had to be done to find out the cause, and appointed men to investigate it. My hon. friend knows some of the men who were appointed. One of them was appointed at my own request, Captain Clift, at $10 a day. No man of his experience would do the work for less money. These gentlemen have sat time and again in the city of Quebec and have gone down to the gulf to make inquiries, and the minister has promised to give us all the details.

Mr. OSLER. I think that the hon. member who has just taken his seat is entitled to our heartiest thanks. We have been three or four hours trying to get a little information from the minister, and here is a humble member on the back benches who has told us more in two minutes than the minister has been able to tell us in four or five hours. This shows either ignorance on the part of the minister or obstinacy, and the exhibition he has given us is not at all a creditable one, and if the minister had given us at half past eight the explanation that a private member has just given us, the item would have passed in five minutes and we would all have been satisfied. But, to have the minister absolutely refuse hour after hour, to give the slightest information was decidedly not according to what is customary—saying that he would give it to-morrow when we ought to have it to-day ; saying that he would lay documents on the table to-morrow but in the meantime the item would be passed; papers to be furnished only when discussion would be impossible. I think this is an exhibition unworthy of this House, and I hope we shall see no more such exhibitions from the minister or any one else when the estimates are under discussion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the committee will allow me, I would like to make a motion. I do not know whether it will be in order, and probably I shall be called down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I move that the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) be appointed Minister of Marine and Fisheries in place of the present occupant of the position.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Carried.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the remarks of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) are very much called for. The increase in this item from 1902, taken in connection with the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that he intends to come down with a supplementary estimate for $2,000, would lead one to suppose that the minister expects more wrecks during the coming season, and requires more money for their investigation. But the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) has told us that the object is to investigate the cause of these wrecks, so that the department may know what improvements should be made in the aids to navigation with a view to preventing such disasters in the future. But the minister refused all information, and so we had to wait until the hon. member for St. Lawrence spoke. I hope that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see the necessity of making reasonable explanations when they are asked for in the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Before the item passes, I wish to join with my hon. friends on this side in the praise offered to the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) for the full information he has given us, information that was denied by the minister (Mr. Préfontaine). At the same time, I think my hon. friends on this side have been scarcely fair to the minister. It is my desire to be fair to every member of the House, no matter how unfair that member may be to me. And, notwithstanding the fact that the minister has on several occasions to-night spoken in a somewhat testy manner toward myself, yet I wish to offer an explanation of his ignorance on the subject under discussion that, I think, will be satisfactory to the committee. The minister has been very busy of late. There is a gentleman by the name of Carbonneau who has been having some transactions with the government.

An hon. MEMBER. Is that the member of the House ?

Mr. FOWLER. No ; but a promoter, of somewhat unsavoury reputation. Mr. Carbonneau has had negotiations with the government, and these negotiations have been carried on through the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There was also the timber limit transaction on Hope island, the 'Bayfield' matter and others of that kind. The minister has been devoting his attention to these things, and matters of detail as to the mere working of his department have escaped his attention. But we are grateful to the understudy of the minister, the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal. We trust that, in the interest of harmony in this House, it will not be long before the coadjutor of the minister will become minister ; and then, no doubt, we shall be given full details on all subjects.

Expenses and inquiry into the subject of a naval militia and school of navigation, $7,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I think we have done a good day's work——

Mr. FIELDING. I think that, before we adjourn, we ought to do some business.

Mr. TAYLOR. We have already done some. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) must admit that the opposition have done no more than discharge their duty by trying to extract a gleam of information from the minister, even though the result has been to gain that information from the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal. By his experience the hon. minister, no doubt, will have learned his duty, to give reasonable explanations of expenditures of last year. We want the minister to understand that we must have a little information. I think that, now that all is harmony, now that the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal, has come to the rescue and has given the minister a lesson that, no doubt, he will profit by to the extent of not again attempting to bulldoze the committee, we might close our day's work. We were up late last night, and I think twelve o'clock is late enough for to-night.

Mr. GALLERY. I would like to ask the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) if, in his opinion, the hon. member for St. Lawrence division gave a detailed account ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Gallery) object ?

Mr. GALLERY. No, I only asked the question.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for St Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) gave the information in quite sufficient detail. He said that the board of trade had recommended a large expenditure for an investigation into the cause of wrecks, and we are ready to accept that.

Mr. GALLERY. What had that to do with the statement of the minister ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is there to be a scrap between the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Gallery) and the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) ? Or is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gallery) jealous ?

Mr. GALLERY. I am in no way jealous of the hon. member for St. Lawrence. But I thought it fair to say to hon. members, who have so greatly prolonged this debate, that, so far as I could make out, the hon member for St. Lawrence did not give a detailed account. He may have given an account that was accepted as satisfactory by hon. members opposite, but, so far as I could make out, that account was not given in any detail.

Mr. FOWLER. I am sorry if my suggestion that the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) might become a minister has aroused the jealousy of the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Gallery). I did not know that the hon. member for St. Anne was an aspirant for cabinet honours. I understood that it was a senatorship he was looking for, not a portfolio.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We voted last year $7,500 for this purpose mentioned in this estimate, of which only a certain amount has been expended in preparing diagrams and collecting information for the establishment of a marine school.

Mr. OSLER. Who has charge of this investigation ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Capt. Salmon.

Mr. FOWLER. If I am not mistaken the hon. gentleman told us the same thing last year. Why has nothing more been done ? What is holding the matter up ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About $1,800 has been spent in preparing these diagrams.

Mr. FOWLER. We were told last year that something was going to be done. I am particularly interested in this matter, because my part of the country is especially interested in the establishment of a naval school. This is a matter that should be pushed along more rapidly than the minister is pushing it.

Mr. DANIEL. If it is the policy of the government to establish a naval militia, I would like to know to what extent the minister has gone, to what extent he has succeeded in establishing a naval militia.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have just stated that nothing has been done except the preparation of the diagrams, books and so on to organize the department. This sum of $7,500 is a revote, with the exception of $1,800 which has been spent.

Mr. DANIEL. I cannot understand what the diagrams have to do with the naval militia.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Diagrams, books and charts have to be prepared to be distributed among the different schools.

Mr. FIELDING. The item includes schools of navigation.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Nothing has been done about a naval militia except to gather information. After we have inquired into the facts and formed some plan of the organization we propose to make, it will then be time to say what we intend to do. For the present we have not made up our minds one way or the other.

Mr. OSLER. Who is making this preliminary investigation ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Capt. Salmon. The first thing to do is to prepare for the organization of the schools, and that has been begun. As regards the naval militia, it is a big subject which will entail quite a large expenditure of money, perhaps $500,000 to begin with. Of course, before submitting any plans involving so large an expenditure, we have got to procure all the necessary information, and to do that will take some time.

Mr. INGRAM. At whose recommendation has this branch of the service been made ? At whose recommendation has this item of $7,500 for naval militia been put in the estimates ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The same item was put in last year, and preliminary work was begun. We expect to continue this year, and to come down next year with some plan for establishing the schools, and for the organization of a naval militia.

Mr. INGRAM. I am asking at whose recommendation was the item put in here ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This question has been discussed in the public press for the last two years, and strong representations have been made to the government on the subject. As it is a matter that pertains to the Marine and Fisheries Department, it has been left in my hands and the hands of my officers. Of course we have to go slow, because it will entail so large an expenditure.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend has not answered my question yet. At whose recommendation was this item put in, who is the official ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are two officials, Capt. Salmon and Capt. Spain.

Mr. INGRAM. Was it at their recommendation that this item was put in ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, it came from outside, from the Navy League.

Mr. INGRAM. Was this item put in by the recommendation of any official in the Marine Department, or is it purely on the initiative of the hon. gentleman himself ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No. There is in existence a public body called the Navy League, who have made representations to the government on this subject, and we thought proper to put a certain amount in the estimates to enable us to study the question, first, of naval schools, and then of a naval militia.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. gentleman said there was a discussion in the press. I suppose he referred to the proposition for a Canadian navy. Do I understand that the government have no policy with regard to that particular matter at the present time ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We have a policy, that is to say, we have adopted the principle as regards the organization. It is quite a new thing for this country, and we must study it with care before launching it. It is proposed, for instance, that the men employed on the government vessels should form the nucleus of this naval reserve, and that, instead of their being engaged for the season, they should be enrolled for two or three years. As regards the principle of the organization I think the government has entirely made up its mind.

Mr. KEMP. Then the minister admits that in a country of this size having such a great sea-board we should have a navy of some kind and not be dependent altogether on the navy of Great Britain. We have an immense commerce to protect and should not have to depend on Great Britain for its protection. It would of course require a large expenditure, but in my opinion the time has come when the government should spend some money on the nucleus of a Canadian navy. The government have been considering this for a number of years and the minister should be able to give us something more definite than he has given.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The item of $7,500 was first put in the estimates last year, and the hon. gentleman remembers how long the session lasted. This might require the despatch of some of my officers to England to get information as to organiation, &c., and that has not yet been done, but the first things to provide, I submit, are the schools, and I think that before the end of the session we will be in a position to announce that we propose to establish schools in the principal cities of the Dominion.

Mr. INGRAM. This is one of the subjects which the ministers discussed in England and this is putting in the thin edge of the wedge some time after they have come back. They do not seem to have any policy except putting in the thin edge of the wedge. $7,500 is a very thin end indeed, and it is put in to appease some of the gentlemen who have a strong feeling in this matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand the minister to say that the government adopt the principle of a naval militia for Canada ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. When this naval militia is established and grows to a considerable size will the hon. minister in addition to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Canals and a large share of the Department of Public Works also take over and command this naval militia ? Will that be the intention of the department?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not think the hon. gentleman need worry about that at present.

Some resolutions reported.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Might I ask the hon. the minister what business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will proceed with Supply, and the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or of the Postmaster General will be taken up.

Mr. TAYLOR. May we expect to have the government Bills, including one with reference to the voters' list, which we were promised on Monday would be brought down on Tuesday or Wednesday ?

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.02 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 22, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

EXPORTS TO SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

What is the value of the exports from Canada to British South Africa for each of the fiscal years of 1901-2 and 1902-3 of each of the following classes of products :—

(a.) Products of the farm ; (b) products of the sea ; (c) products of the forest, other than manufactured goods ; (d) manufactured goods, not being food stuffs ?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). For the fiscal year 1902 the amount of farm products exported to South Africa was $3,514,509 ; of products of the sea, $9,990 ; of the forest, $82,560 ; and of manufactured goods, $181,803.

During the fiscal year 1903 the exports to South Africa of agricultural products amounted to $1,264,684 ; of fisheries, $12,796 ; of the forest, $246,839 ; and of manufactured goods, $362,111. All these goods were of Canadian origin.

PAY OF MILITIA.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

1. Has the Department of Militia made the regulations referred to by the Minister of Militia when explaining the Militia Bill, whereby the force were to receive increased pay from year to year until a maximum sum mentioned was reached ?

2. Will the force now doing their annual drill get this increase for the present year ? And if so, when will it be given ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Yes ; and the regulations have been promulgated in the 'Gazette.'

2. (a) Yes ; (b) On completion of their annual drill.

ST. JOHN HARBOUR DREDGING.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. When will the dredge for use at the mouth of St. John harbour be ready for work ?

2. Is it the intention of the government to do any dredging at the mouth of the harbour of St. John this season ?

Hon. CHAS. HYMAN (acting Minister of Public Works) :

1. Dredge will be ready for opening of navigation in spring of 1905.

2. There is no dredge available at present which can do the required work.

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. When does the government expect the report of the transportation commission ?

2. If such report of a final nature is not expected this year, will there be an interim report ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I regret to say that I have no information to give my hon. friend.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GRANT asked :

1. Has the attention of the honourable the Postmaster General been drawn to the fact that large quantities of Conservative campaign literature have been sent free through the mails to the North Riding of Ontario ; the inclosure so stamped as to indicate that it is sent by a gentleman not a member of the House of Commons, the envelopes (evidently addressed and sent to Ottawa from outside) being franked or stamped with the name of a member of the House ?

2. Does the sending of this matter in such a way constitute a breach of the franking privilege ?

3. If so, what action will be taken to prevent the practice ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). To the first question the answer is yes. To the second, if any member of the House chooses to send mailable matter through the mails at the instance of any one else who is not a member, there is nothing in the law to prevent his doing so.

Mr. PATERSON.

MERCHANT MARINE AND CANADIAN ENSIGN.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH. Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, I desire, as I announced yesterday, to engage the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine, indeed the right hon. the leader of the government and his associates in the cabinet, to a report appearing in the Montreal 'Daily Star' of the 17th instant, by Ship-master John Taylor, of Nova Scotia, headed :

HAULED DOWN CANADIAN ARMS.

British Consul declares Canada has no flag.

I might here state, Mr. Speaker, that I intend concluding with a motion. The report reads as follows :

MADE SHIP FLY RED ENSIGN .

Threatened to fine Capt. Taylor £100 if he continued to use Canadian emblem.

Captain John Taylor, of the three-masted schooner 'M. J. Taylor,' is in this port at present. Captain Taylor has a grievance.

Captain Taylor hails from Nova Scotia. His ship is registered in Parrsboro, N.S., and has always flown what he considered the Canadian flag, the red ensign of the British merchant service, with the Canadian coat-of-arms in the lower right hand corner. Captain Taylor related the reason for his grievance to the 'Star' this morning, as follows :—

'I had been sailing around the different ports of South America all winter, and last January I sailed in the port of Rio Grande do Sul, in the Argentine republic, with cargo. We lay there for some time, and as there were a number of vessels in the harbour whose masters were friends of mine, our flag, the Canadian ensign, was flying at our peak most of the time.

'Some three or four days after its first appearance, I received a verbal warning from the British consul, Mr. Ray Stamford, that I was not flying the right flag. He ordered me to haul down that flag and run up the 'Red Ensign.' Well, I have knocked around pretty well, and in the last few years have been in a good many corners of the globe, and the Canadian flag was always good enough for other British consuls, so I thought it would do for Mr. Ray Stamford. I therefore took no notice of his warning.

'Then I did get it. I received a notice stating that I was liable to a fine of £100 if I continued to fly that flag. The notice bore the stamp of the consulate, and ordered me to appear at the consulate with my flag the following day.

'Well, you know the British consul is a man's only friend down there if he gets into trouble ; and I thought it better not to disobey. So I took the flag to him. He ordered me to cut out the Canadian coat-of-arms and fill the space with red bunting. I refused, and he had it done himself.

'This I consider quite unjustifiable. We Canadians were given the right to fly our flag in 1867. I have carried that flag at the mast head when lying in the midst of the British Mediterranean squadron at the Malta dock yards, at Cadiz, at Havre, and most of the Mediterranean British North and South American ports, and there has never been any exception taken to it until now.'

Captain Taylor is addressing a letter to the Board of Trade about this matter, and desires to know if the action of the consul was justifiable. He says that he is a loyal Britisher, but is also a loyal Canadian ; and he wants the right to fly what he maintains is the Canadian ensign.

I might here state that although this, to my mind, is an outrageous act on the part of the British consul, and wholly unauthorized and unprovoked, it is not the first time I had occasion to bring a subject of complaint of this nature to the notice of the government by way of seeking redress. It will be remembered by reference to 'Hansard' that on the 3rd day of May, 1901, I brought to the notice of the government the case of the ship 'Canada,' belonging to the port of Lunenburg, N.S., Captain Arch. Conrod, master, which was floating the Canadian ensign of which, I am pleased to say, we, as Canadians have cause to be proud, in the port of Bahia, Brazil, on the 1st of March, 1901, when the British consul boarded the ship, and peremptorily required of the master to haul his flag down, informing him that it was a gross violation, or infringement of rights, and failing to do so, he would impose a fine of £500 and hold the ship for the penalty until paid. The captain rather than find himself and owners in trouble complied with the request. Feeling naturally much exercised over an apparent insult of this sort, I made special request of the government at the time, that inquiry be made of the British government, as to whether the master of the 'Canada' was within his rights in floating the Canadian ensign in a foreign port, and if found that the captain was in error, then to arrange with the British Admiralty for authority, and thereby have the Canadian flag treated with the respect Canada is entitled to receive. However, subsequently having ascertained Canada was within her rights in floating her Canadian ensign, having obtained the authority from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty under power invested in them by the Imperial Merchants' Shipping (colours) Act of 1889, I inquired as to whether the authority had been officially communicated to the authorities in Canada, and found that it had. The royal warrant having issued under seal dated London, February 2, 1892, by the commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiralty of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, reads as follows :

Whereas we deem it expedient that Canadian registered vessels shall be permitted to wear the red ensign of His Majesty's fleet, with a Canadian coat-of-arms on the fly thereof.

We do therefore, by virtue of the power, and authority vested in us, hereby warrant, and authorize the red ensign of His Majesty's fleet, with the Canadian coat-of-arms in the fly to be used on board vessels registered in the Dominion.

Given under our hands, and the seal of the Office of the Admiralty this 2nd day of February, 1892.

(Signed) H. FAIRFAX.
FRED. G. D. BEDFORD.

By command of their Lordships.
(Signed) Evan MacGregor.

To this a circular letter was issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa, which reads as follows :—

In accordance with the permission granted by the above warrant, the following regulations have been adopted by the Canadian government :—

1. The area of the shield shall in no case exceed one-fourth the area of the Union Jack of the particular ensign.

2. The shield shall be placed centrally in that part of the fly which is beyond the Jack.

(Signed) WILLIAM SMITH,
Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, June 10, 1895.

I desire to state here, that my object in bringing this subject of the Canadian flag prominently before parliament at present, is to have the world understand that Canada has a flag, composed of the British ensign with the Canadian coat of arms in the red fly thereof, and has authority to fly it. My object also is to urge the government of Canada to communicate with the office of the Lord High Admiralty in London, through the Secretary of State for the colonies, asking that all British consuls throughout the world be advised of Canada's position as respects her flag, particularly the consuls of Bahia and Rio-Grande-do-sul Brazil, in order that the unnatural and outrageous treatment extended to Canadian shipmasters, sailing Canadian ships, when visiting the various ports, particularly those referred to, cannot ignore the Canadian flag in future, and that all Canadian shipmasters, and the merchant marine of Canada may be advised as well, by a public notice issued by the Department of Marine of Canada and published in the Canadian 'Gazette,' informing the public of Canada's right to float her Canadian ensign in every sea.

It is wonderful the great instinct of the human race, the great delight we possess in the flying of flags. There is a something innate in man causing him to be enthused by a significant emblem raised in the air, whether it has the insignia of office or descent, or as the symbol of race or nationality —our national flag—it matters not. The flag of old England and the empire of which we may be justly proud—the Union Jack—when floated or wherever exposed, has an inspiring effect, there being in it so much of sentiment and meaning for sober thought. In the words of the poet, so beautifully outlined :

The Union Jack.

It's only a small bit of bunting,
It's only an old coloured rag,
Yet thousands have died for its honour
And shed their best blood for the flag.

It flutters triumphant o'er ocean
As free as the wind and the waves,
And bondsmen from shackles unloosened
'Neath its shadows no longer are slaves.

We hoist it to show our devotion
To our King, to our country, and laws,
It's the outward and visible emblem
Of advancement, and liberty's cause.

You may say its an old bit of bunting,
You may call it an old coloured rag,
But freedom has made it majestic
And time has ennobled the flag.

Even the colours in the Union Jack, and you will remember the Union Jack forms part of the Canadian ensign, has its sentiment and significance, the red indicating courage, white the emblem of purity, and blue the emblem of truth, more strikingly given in the old loyal and familiar song: 'Three cheers for the Red, White and Blue,' or more sentimental and expressively rendered 'Three cheers for the brave, pure, and true.'

Let me say that lessons such as this, should be deeply impressed upon the minds of our Canadian children, particularly at school, so as to have them live lives worthy of the ideals of their national flag, and frame the character of our nation by its teaching.

With such natural emotions animating the hearts of our people, one can appreciate the fervid interest taken by each nation in its own national flag, and can realize and account for the associations which cluster about its folds, and are so ardently treasured in the inmost recesses of the human heart. With such feelings of affection for one's country's flag, picture to yourself the heart of that Consul in Rio-Grande-do-sul, destroying the Canadian flag by cutting the heart out of it—the Canadian coat of arms held by us so dearly and thereby mutilating the Canadian flag completely! I feel that no punishment, however severe, would be too great for the heartless act he (the Consul) has committed in the matter of the Canadian flag hoisted on the ship.' 'M. J. Taylor.' I sincerely hope this government will advise the imperial government to this end.

Kings in their turn display the banner of their kingdoms, over which they reign, and have sway, value them and float them proudly. Picture to yourself, Mr. Speaker, cutting the cross of St. George out of the flag of old England, or the cross of St. Andrew representing Scotland, or the cross of St. Patrick representing Ireland, or the fleur-de-lis from the flag of old France, or even interfering with one star, or one stripe of the star-spangled banner of the United States, would there not be a howl? Surely they would be heard from in the most emphatic tones. Then are we as Canadians to suffer the ignominy, nay, I must say the outrage of having the escutcheon or emblem of Canada constituting Canada's flag—cut out of the red fly of the ensign of old England floated on a British ship, commanded by a British master, in a foreign port, by a British consul not knowing his duty, and be silent? I say certainly not—I must therefore in conclusion, impress upon hon. gentlemen opposite the necessity of making public this matter, and obtaining redress in the manner I have advised.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Let me say to my hon. friend that the subject which he has brought to the attention of the House in such an interesting speech has been engaging our attention for the last two or three days. The hon. gentleman told us that he would have some information to bring before us, but I think there are some facts which have passed into oblivion, and as soon as we have collected the information we shall communicate with the imperial authorities upon this important subject.

Motion (Mr. Kaulbach) to adjourn negatived.

DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD—PRODUCTION OF CORRESPONDENCE.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, I wish to lay upon the table of the House a copy of the memorandum referred to in Col. Smart's letter dated Ottawa, May 19. This memorandum was mislaid at the time the letter was copied, and was inadvertently omitted. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), when asking for this in the House, also asked for the originals of certain other documents and papers, copies of which have been laid before the House. I would say that it is not the practice to lay the originals on the table of the House. But if the hon. gentleman gives any reason why this should be done I am prepared to do it. The hon. gentleman also asked for copies of letters of the 14th and 15th of May from Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley. One of these letters was marked by Lieutenant-Colonel Whitney 'Private' and the other 'strictly private' therefore I do not feel at liberty to lay them on the table, nor some other letters to which the hon. gentleman referred. These letters are of a personal and confidential character, addressed to me by constituents of mine, and I decline to lay them on the table.

Mr. F. D. MONK. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture has referred to the request which I made, and announces a principle which is new to me, when he says that the originals of documents of the importance of those I referred to the other day, should not be communicated to the House. I am not aware that that is the practice of the House. We have an absolute right to see the original of any document to which we have access. It is only for the sake of convenience that copies are made and laid on the table of the House, I think there can be no doubt about that. I am not aware that there is any practice to the contrary. Nor are we obliged, when desirous of seeing documents, to state for what reason we wish to see the originals. Our right to inspect original documents is absolute, and we are not obliged to state why we wish to see them. I would like your ruling upon that point Mr. Speaker. However, I do not think there is any doubt about it. Now, as to the documents marked 'private,' I stated the other day when I made my request to the House, that I considered that no document having reference to the organization of this Scottish regiment could be considered as a private document. The questions which have been raised by what is called the Dundonald affair are matters which concern the entire organization of the militia, and the hon. gentleman's conduct in regard to that organization has been called in question, and also his right to interfere in any way with the organization of a militia regiment. I do not think it is a valid defence to make to the House that wishes to become cognizant of all the circumstances connected with the organization of the regiment, to say that the document is marked 'private,' even 'strictly private.' No document concerning public affairs is a private document to the extent that communication of that document can be refused to the House. I think that is the rule. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister, if I mistake not, a few years ago read a letter which was addressed to him by Reverend Father Lecombe.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?—Perhaps I misunderstood him. Does he mean to say that if a gentleman writes a letter to a member of the government and marks it 'private and personal,' and therein refers to a matter of public importance, such, for instance, as the organization of the militia, that it becomes a public document and must be produced to the House upon demand ? Is that the hon. gentleman's position ?

Mr. MONK. I will tell the hon. gentleman what my position is. When the House, in the exercise of its rights, wishes to inquire into all the circumstances connected with the organization of a regiment, and calls for correspondence having reference to the organization of that regiment, it is no answer to the demand of the House to say : We will give you the correspondence which is not marked 'private' but any letter, although referring to the constitution of that regiment, which happens to be marked 'private' we will not give to you.

Mr. SIFTON. Nonsense.

Mr. MONK. That is my contention, otherwise it would be impossible for the House to inquire into all the circumstances connected with the organization of that regiment ; it would be possible, in other words, for any man communicating with the members of the government on that subject, by simply stamping his letter 'private,' to exclude it from the cognizance of the House, and that circumstance would really take it out of our jurisdiction. A letter which, if my memory serves me right —the matter can easily be verified, I am now speaking of what occurred several years ago—which was addressed by Father Lecombe to the right hon. the Prime Minister, was read by the right hon. gentleman in a discussion which took place in this House during the last preceeding parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is altogether mistaken.

Mr. MONK. My right hon. friend may correct me after I have finished. That letter was marked 'private' and the fact was brought to the attention of the right hon. gentleman by some member on this side of the House, and the right hon. gentleman stated on that occasion that it was a matter relating to the conduct of public affairs, and that no letter of that character could be considered as private. That is my recollection of the circumstance, I will verify it, but I think I am correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does the hon. gentleman refer to a letter of Father Lacombe on the school question ?

Mr. MONK. That is the reference.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That letter never was read by me in the House, and that letter was not marked 'private.' I will show it to my hon. friend any time if he wishes.

Mr. MONK. The fact may be as my right hon. friend states, I do not question his good faith, but my recollection is pretty distinct. At any rate I maintain that we cannot fully inquire into the circumstances of the organization of this regiment and, if I may be allowed to say so, into the charge of interference by the hon. Minister of Agriculture unless we can see these letters, which, although marked 'private,' concern the beginning and organization of this regiment. If these letters are refused us we will be at a disadvantage under which as members of this House we ought not to be placed.

Mr. FISHER. I would point out to my hon. friend that his argument as to the correspondence not being laid on the table of the House has only reference to where the order of the House has issued. In this case there has been no order of the House issued and that contention absolutely falls to the ground. At the same time I do not in any way act upon that argument.

Mr. MONK. Was there not an order for the production of the correspondence ?

Mr. FISHER. No, there was a request for the correspondence and that request was complied with, frankly, freely and promptly.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture must remember that the hon. Minister of Finance stated that the correspondence which I asked for would all be brought down unless there was something private. What I maintain is that there is nothing private in this connection.

Mr. FISHER. I am not speaking of the hon. gentleman's request of the night before last. I am speaking of the original request to have this correspondence laid on the table of the House, a request which was made by some hon. gentlemen of the opposition and which was frankly acceded to by myself and my colleagues, when the letters which are now before the House and which are contained in this printed document were brought down. But, independently altogether of that I may say in the first place to my hon. friend that when an order of the House issues it is an order for copies of the correspondence, and it is only when the request is made and some grounds shown for it that the originals are brought down. I can only suppose that my hon. friend wishes the originals of these letters because he thinks that the copies are not correct. If the copies are absolutely correct I cannot conceive of any particular purpose in bringing the originals down. I can only say to my hon. friend that I have in my hands the originals of the letters which he refers to. He refers to two memoranda. I only know of one and therefore I can only lay that one on the table, but in regard to the two letters of Colonel Smart and the memorandum that is referred to in the letter I will lay the originals on the table at the present moment in deference to the hon. gentleman's request although I think it is contrary to the usual practice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to say to the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that I propose to move a resolution in connection with the incident that has just been referred to and if it will be convenient for the government to enable us to do that by moving the House in Committee of Supply to-morrow afternoon I would like to know it. If it will not be convenient to have the discussion upon this subject, then I would like to know what day the government would suggest.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly we shall do so with pleasure ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

SHIPPING CASUALTIES ACT, 1901. AMENDMENT.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 102) to amend the Shipping Casualties Act, 1901.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that the change proposed by this Bill is something of the same nature as that which was proposed the other day by my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine) when he moved the second reading of Bill (No. 100) entitled 'An Act to amend the Pilotage Act' to this extent that instead of substituting the authority of the minister he now substitutes the tribunal which is created by the statute of 1901 entitled 'The Shipping Casualties Act.' The latter Act enacts that :

> The minister may direct the principal officer of customs residing at or near the place where such shipping casualty occurred, if it occurred on or near any of the inland waters of Canada or on or near the coasts of Canada—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would ask the House to keep better order. We cannot hear a word of what is being said.

Mr. CASGRAIN (reading)—

> —but if elsewhere, at or near the place where such witness as aforesaid arrives, or is found, or can be conveniently examined, or any officer of the government of Canada, whom the minister appoints, or any other person appointed by the minister, to make inquiry respecting such shipping casualty.

In virtue of the statute the person thus appointed or empowered to hold the investigation into the conduct of the master or mate of a ship is also empowered to impose fines and penalties on the master or mate who is found guilty of infractions of the law or of neglect of duty. By the amendment to this statute it is sought to enlarge the powers of this tribunal so composed, so that the tribunal may be also a tribunal for the trial of pilots. The Bill says, subsection 2 of section 2 :

> If, upon a preliminary inquiry, the officer holding it is of opinion that any loss, or damage, or the stranding of any ship, or any loss of life, has been caused by the wrongful act or default of the pilot in charge, or that such pilot has been guilty of any gross act of misconduct or drunkenness, the license of such pilot may be suspended by such officer until a formal investigation under this Act has been held and a further decision rendered upon the case.

Section 3 adds section 27 to the Act already existing and it enacts that if the pilot is found guilty by this tribunal his license may be cancelled, he may be suspended and he may be condemned to a fine.

In any sum not exceeding one-half of the net income he derives from his service as a pilot, based upon his earnings for the previous year.

Mr. Speaker, I really must ask you to maintain order. I do not see how it is that we should be obliged to speak at the top of our voices to be heard on the other side of the House. It is really very fatiguing.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must say that I have done my best to try and keep order, but it seems that the House has no respect whatever for the chair. The Speaker calls out 'order' three or four times in succession and nobody seems to pay the slightest attention to it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This vests this tribunal with large powers and it is taking away from the pilotage authority that is established, especially in the district of Quebec which tries pilots, the authority that it has now to try them. Of course the penalties to which pilots are subjected are very severe, and they are made more severe by this Bill because not only can they be suspended, but the sentence of the court may be to this extent, that a pilot can be put under a penalty not exceeding one half of the net income he derives from his services as a pilot based upon his earnings for the previous year. Therefore, if a pilot earns $1,000 in a year, he could be fined to the extent of $500. If we were sure that the person appointed by the minister would always be a fit and proper person, probably there could not be much exception taken to the Bill. But, under this law, the minister has vast power. He may appoint a principal officer of customs or any officer of the government of Canada, or any person, to make preliminary inquiries. I understand that heretofore Captain Spain or Captain Salmon with two nautical assessors have been appointed. I have not the least objection to these two gentlemen or to the assessors who have been appointed hitherto, but at the same time the minister takes power to appoint any officer of the government, and however competent an officer may be to discharge his ordinary duties, when it comes to trying a pilot for neglect of duty or negligence, it is a technical matter which these officials may not be competent to deal with. I would suggest that section 4 limit the minister's authority to the appointment of some person who would be qualified.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the meaning of the expression : 'any person not belonging to a ship ?' It seems a curious expression to use.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It means a person hired especially to act as pilot.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the expression taken from any other legislation ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Bill was drafted by my department, and submitted to the Department of Justice. It would not mean a pilot engaged by the year, for instance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The whole expression : 'any person not belonging to a ship who has the conduct thereof,' seems rather peculiar.

Mr. CASGRAIN. A number of ships trading between the gulf ports and Quebec and Montreal, have pilots who are hired by the year and who act as captains. Would they come under this law ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. This may not be a very happy expression, but I have seen it used in similar legislation. It means a pilot who is in charge of the navigation of the boat at the time, but who is not part of the personnel of the boat.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then, what about the men who pilot these ships from the gulf ports—thus dispensing with the employment of temporary pilots—but who are engaged by the year ? Being pilots they are employed as captains, and consequently the ship is not obliged to take a pilot.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Then they become masters.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman said that this Act did not apply to any person hired by the year, and therefore these men would not come under the operation of the law.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They would become masters in that case, and they are provided for in another section.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria). A pilot is a person who is engaged to navigate a ship for the time being, and who is not on the articles of the ship as the master and the other officers are. If he is engaged to navigate a ship for a whole year, then he is an officer of that ship, and is on the articles and this Act would not apply to him.

On section 2,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This would permit the government to appoint the inspector of insurance for example or a clerk in the Inland Revenue Department to investigate a shipping casualty, as I understand the effect of the section.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have retained the same definition as existed in the former Act passed in 1901, and that Act applied to masters, mates and engineers. If the parliament of Canada at the time they passed this Act had sufficient confidence in the Department of Marine to trust them and to believe that they would appoint a proper officer and if there has been no complaint since this Act was put in operation, not even from those against whom the Act operates, the masters, mates and engineers who are just as important as the pilots, I do not see why there should now be any complaint. But of course I would have no objection to any suggestion to improve the clause.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My only objection was that the clause in its present form, and in its former reading is very comprehensive. It does not limit the appointment to skilled persons in any way.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The original Act did not either.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know, and of course the original Act is open to the same criticism. However the responsibility will be always on the government to appoint the person. I suppose that is the only justification for the clause if it has any justification.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would suggest that this subsection be amended by adding the word 'skilled' before the word 'person' in the third line, so that the section would read, 'or any skilled person.'

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Define what you mean by 'skilled person.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. Skilled in this particular matter, skilled to make preliminary inquiries respecting such shipping casualties. The word 'skilled' is defined by the words coming after, skilled in such matters as the Bill relates to.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If a person other than a customs officer is appointed, would you exact that he be skilled, and who is to pass on his qualification? If this was adopted I am quite sure it would nullify the effect of the Act, because every time there would be a dispute about the skill of the man appointed. If you want to afford the shipping interest the necessary guarantee, you must trust some one, and it is not likely that the officers of the Department of Marine would appoint a man not able to carry on an investigation. If an investigation was not carried on properly the department would suffer because the shipping people would very quickly make a public complaint. There has been no complaint since 1901 when this Act went into operation. Capt. Salmon who is the head of the department as regards masters and mates has always taken care to have the best assesssors he could find to help him in the investigation and the investigations have proven very satisfactory every time.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How are the assessors apppointed, under the law?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Under the law, section 9 of the Act, and the section shows that every precaution is taken.

Bill reported.

Mr. PREFONTAINE moved the third reading of Bill.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Bill is certainly one which gives great powers to the minister and the tribunal he has created for the trial of pilots. It seems to me that neither in regard to the tribual nor the mode of trial are the proper safeguards provided for the protection of the pilots. However as this is a government measure, it would no doubt carry even if I moved its rejection. And I desire simply to put on record my protest.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—TRENT CANAL.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. H. A. WARD. Before we go into Lake Ontario. I mentioned yesterday to the attention of the House a matter in connection with the proposed completion of the Trent Valley canal between Rice Lake and Lake Ontario. I mentioned yesterday to the hon. Minister of Railways that I desired him to be present when I made my remarks, but as he is absent, I am perfectly willing to wait, should my right hon. friend the Prime Minister desire that I should not go on in his absence.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). If it would be equally convenient to my hon. friend, I would be glad if he would put off his remarks until another day.

Mr. WARD. I am perfectly willing.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Removal obstructions in navigable rivers, $1,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before we discuss this item, might I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has that letter or report or telegram from Captain Bernier to which he alluded yesterday?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I have looked up the record and I find that it is incomplete. I am waiting for a report from Captain Spain, who was sent specially to Quebec to investigate. There will be an item in the supplementaries, under which all the matters in connection with the 'Gauss' will come up, and the record will then be submitted to the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When we were discussing the 'Gauss' yesterday, the question of interviews came up given by Captain Bernier to the 'Mail and Empire' and 'La Presse' and my hon. friend said he had a letter from Captain Bernier which denied that he had given any interviews to the press. What I want to know is whether or not the hon. gentleman has any such letter and if so why does he not produce it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In my opinion this matter has no connection whatever with the item submitted to the House. It will come up on another item.

Mr. MONK. I merely wish to say that yesterday when we passed the item for maintenance and repairs to government steamers, it was understood that we would be at liberty to discuss any question in connection with that item on the following items. My hon. friend from Montmorency was called away to the telephone when we were discussing the question, and we only allowed the item to pass on that assurance being given us.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. On looking into the matter, I find that Captain Bernier's connection with the steamer 'Gauss' does not come up either under the item we have passed or any of the subsequent items in the main estimates. The minister tells us that it will come up under a special item in the supplementaries. It is therefore out of order to discuss it now.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the 'Gauss' a government steamer? If so we can discuss it under the item for maintenance and repairs of government steamers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I stated yesterday that no money was asked for the maintenance of the 'Gauss' and that this item had no connection whatever with that steamer. It would not be fair now to judge the question on the filing of part of the record. As soon as the record is complete and the item comes up in the supplementaries, I shall place all the papers before the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister pretend that we could not discuss the sale of the 'Bayfield' under this item?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The 'Bayfield' was a boat which was on the hydrographic survey, and that is another item altogether.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister, in reply to my hon. friend from Montmorency, referred to a certain document and he now refuses to lay that document before the House. It seems to me that he is bound to submit to the House any document to which he has made any reference.

Mr. MONK. I would call the attention of the minister to a matter which is of some importance in the county of Jacques Cartier, and with which he is as well acquainted as I am. He knows there is, behind the island of Montreal, a stream known as Back river or Rivière des Prairies, which passes in front of the parish of Ste. Geneviève. On one side is the parish of Ste. Geneviève, a populous parish. This is on the island of Montreal, and is frequented by a considerable number of people from the city of Montreal during the summer. Opposite is the parish of Ile Bizard, which island is nine miles long and a mile or two wide, and lying in the lake of Two Mountains. This would be a very important place for a summer resort if it were more easily accessible. These two parishes, lying thus face to face on the Back river, are about eight miles from Ste. Anne's and in the lake of Two Mountains. The lake of Two Mountains empties into Rivière des Prairies, which passes in front of the parish of Ste. Geneviève and Ile Bizard, about three miles from the lake. There would be uninterrupted navigation from the lake of Two Mountains down to these two parishes from Ste. Anne's, and consequently from Vaudreuil, Oka, Hudson, Como and, in fact, all the ports of the Ottawa river, but for a small obstruction just at the point where the lake of Two Mountains empties into the Back river. There is a small rapid—in fact it is called Little Rapid—and were it not for this there would be uninterrupted navigation between the lake and these two parishes. I have always been under the impression—and that impression is general among the people down there—that this obstruction could be removed at a comparative trifling cost. What I would like the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to do, if the cost is really trifling, is to have this work of removal of this obstruction done out of this vote. He might perhaps have the obstruction examined by one of the engineers of his department and, if the expense is not very great, and a channel of 15 or 20 feet could be had by doing a little work, the two parishes I have mentioned would be benefited, and, in an indirect way, so would the whole of the city of Montreal. Access could be had to these parishes to the lake at all times. As we have no railway communication at Ste. Geneviève or Ile Bizard, I think this modest request deserves the attention of the minister. I hope he will look into the matter and have the work done, if it is not found to be too expensive.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) any idea of what it would cost?

Mr. MONK. No; but I have often been told by people from the place, not experts, of course, but people having some local knowledge, that the shallow water, where it flows through the Little Rapids—it can scarcely be called a rapid—extends over a very short distance, and that a little blasting would remove the obstruction and allow free access to these two parishes from the lake—in fact, would make these river ports. My hon. friend understands, of course, that that is a matter of some importance.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have no objection to having the investigation made, and if the removal of the obstruction comes within the purview of this vote I will attend to it.

Tidal service, including salary of assistant clerk beyond salary of $400, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $22,500.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the steamer 'Gulnare,' which is used in this service, purchased, and what was the cost ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The steamer was bought a year ago last November at a cost of $26,000.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister was not very accurate in his estimates. I notice when this matter was up for discussion before, he said the salaries would amount to about $2,400 ; now they are over $6,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The pay-list of the officers and crew for the last year amounts to $6,513.73. That is what was expended.

Mr. BENNETT. Was this a second-hand boat or a new one ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The boat was built for the imperial government, and specially fitted up for this kind of work. She was leased by the imperial government and bought from the owners. She was built of steel, and is nine years old.

Mr. BENNETT. We had a case yesterday in which it was shown that a boat had to be disposed of on account of her age. It seems to be the policy of the minister to purchase these old second-hand boats from time to time. May I ask the minister when he is about to invest in a boat, what steps are taken ? Is a specification prepared of the kind of boat that is required, and are tenders invited as to what such a boat will cost ? Or does the minister simply go out and hear of some person having a boat and buy it at their own price ? What is the policy of the department in this respect ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In this case there is no fixed policy. In this case the department wanted a boat, and bought one in April, 1902, before I took charge of the department. This boat was offered to the department, and Mr. Douglas Stephen, inspector of government steamers, was asked to make a report on her, which report I now have before me. I may say that the boat cost originally $85,000, and it was bought for $36,000 on the recommendation of Dr. Dawson who was in charge of the service. It was the only ship available for this kind of work.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems to me that some person comes along, whenever they hear that the minister wishes to buy a boat, and offer it at their own price. Then some officer of the department comes in, and if he thinks it is right the boat is taken at that price. I do not think there is any other department that proceeds on those lines. If the department wants a boat there is a procedure laid down. Plans are prepared and tenders invited. If that is not always the case, it should be. But the minister, in disregard of business methods, looks around, makes up his mind that he must have a boat, and then and there if he sees one that suits him, he gives the vendor his own price. Was this the first price asked by the vendor, or did the minister succeed in beating him down ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The purchase was made, as I have said, before I took charge of the department. An explanation was given, I am informed, a year ago, and was considered satisfactory. The boat was built specially for the imperial government for the same kind of work that she is doing at the present time. She cost $85,000, and was bought for $36,000, after the owners had asked $42,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Then there must have been something radically wrong with the boat, if she cost only $85,000 six years before, and was sold for less than half that sum. What explanation can the minister give as to why the boat—I presume she was an iron bottom boat—was sacrificed at that figure ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. She was in perfect condition, and the reason we were able to buy her at such a low price was that the imperial government had no more use for her. She could not be used for any other purpose, because she was built specially for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. Are there any vessels being constructed now for his department ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. The 'Canada' is being constructed by Vickers, Maxim & Son. She is a cruiser, and was launched on the 14th of this month.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the prospective cost of that steamer ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I forgot to mention that another one is being constructed by the Polson Company, Toronto, a cruiser destined for the lakes to replace the 'Petrel,' which was not found fast enough to compete with the American boats.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the estimated cost of the two boats ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will be ready to give all the details regarding these two boats when the item comes up.

Mr. BENNETT. Approximately.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think the contract price of the one that is built by Vickers, Maxim & Son, was £38,000. The one being built by the Polson Company is $125,500. I will bring down the contracts, plans and all the papers when the item comes up.

Mr. BENNETT. In the case of the boat that is being built in the old country, were the plans prepared by the department; also were plans prepared for the boat that is being constructed by the Polson Company?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The plans were prepared in the department and submitted to experts and prices were asked on these plans.

Mr. BENNETT. When the hon. minister comes down again with some further estimates will he be good enough to give the tenders which were submitted for the two boats, first, for the one constructed in the old country, and second, for the one constructed by the Polsons? No one can find fault if, after the preparation of plans and specifications, these were openly advertised and tenders invited. In that case it would be a business proposition. But, on the other hand, if the department simply invited these gentlemen in the old country and the Polsons to construct boats and then to fix their own prices, it is a different proposition.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will have all the information.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the Polson boat to be built in the time limited?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. She is going to be delivered within a week.

Winter mail service, $8,500.

Mr. BLAIN. Give us some explanation of that?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This vote is for keeping up winter mail connection between Cape Tormentine, N.B., and Cape Traverse, P.E.I., across the Straits of Northumberland.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that the hon. minister spent only $6,211 on this service during 1902-3. Does he expect it to be more costly this year?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is an uncertain expenditure. It depends entirely on the difficulty that is experienced in crossing the strait.

Marine biological station, $3,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is a new experiment not inaugurated by me, but it is an expenditure which began in 1898 when an amount of $7,000 was placed in the estimates for a marine biological station, $5,000 for providing a floating station, and $2,000 for providing for the maintenance and support of such station and the payment of salaries. It was found that $2,000 a year was not sufficient to meet all the expenses in connection with the maintenance of the station and the salaries of the university professors who have the station in charge, and they called upon me, and I agreed to increase the amount to $3,000. That amount was voted in the supplementary estimates last year. Last year the station was located at Malpeque. I have not yet received the report of the professors in charge.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the station for?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. These scientific people make special researches into and studies of fish life. They are professors of the different universities at Toronto and elsewhere. It was at their request that this biological station was established in 1898 and it has been maintained since that time.

Mr. OSLER. Is that the station at which Professor Ramsay Wright was experimenting last year?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. OSLER. Has he sent in his report to the department?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. OSLER. I think it would be a very interesting report if it were sent in, and if the government are spending money in that direction, the result of the experiments should be given to us.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is proposed to issue it.

Mr. HACKETT. Might I ask who are the gentlemen in addition to Professor Prince who are connected with this biological station?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. All the professors from Toronto, McGill and Laval universities.

Mr. HACKETT. What is the object of having this biological station?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think I had better read from the report of last year, because it would be very difficult for me to explain clearly what is done at this station.

MARINE BIOLOGICAL STATION.

In last year's report it was pointed out that by a resolution of the board of management this scientific fisheries' station was to be moved from Canso to a suitable location on the shores of Richmond bay, adjacent to the famous Malpeque oyster beds. Unfortunately, after leaving Canso, on May 18th, and while the floating station was being towed up the Northumberland straits, a period of stormy weather began, and the station went aground not far from Pictou harbour. . . . . The information gained proved of the greatest value in carrying out three new methods of oyster breeding and fattening from which it is anticipated a most essential basis of facts will be secured with a view to the improvement of the valuable but deteriorated beds all along the coast of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Faunistic and embryological studies were also pursued by the staff, and a most successful season's work closed about the end of September. Further oyster work, and fisheries surveys of a highly valuable nature will be continued during the season of 1904.

The programme of work for the year was as usual prepared by the director (Professor Prince) ; but owing to the mishap referred to and the consequent delay, the whole of the field outlined could not be covered. It embraced :—

1. Faunistic work ; surface and bottom ;
2. Pelagic ova and young of Teleosteans ;
3. Extended studies on the life history of the oyster, its food, reproduction and local variations on the famous Malpeque and Curtain island oyster beds ;

(Richmond bay, being one of the most famous and extended places of oyster beds in the world, affords splendid facilities for this important field of fisheries investigation.)

4. Experiments in raising oysters by fascines, viviers, claires, &c.;
5. The occurrence of smelt in the local streams, the schools of young and food at different stages ;
6. Faunistic studies, especially fishes, a great variety of specimens available at some of the fishing stations along the shore.
7. A thorough study of the external features and internal anatomy of the sea trout of Prince Edward Island, and comparisons with specimens of brook trout from inland waters. This research is intended to decide an important controversial point in connection with the fisheries administration ;
8. Experiments on the behaviour of lobsters in traps, especially, with regard to the entrance and exit of small, undersized lobsters ;
9. A comparison of the schools of young clupeoids herring, alewives or gaspereaux, shad, &c.;
10. A study of the peculiar structures developed on tidal gauges, floats, material for which will be provided by Dr. Bell Dawson ;
11. Studies on the clam beds, soft and hard shelled ;
12. Inquiry into the depredations of dog-fish, and methods of coping with the serious plague of these fish.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Would the hon. gentleman give us a resume of what he has just read. In the first place we do not understand a word of what he has said except his reference to Malpeque oysters.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I thought I had it very clearly at the beginning and that it was only for the pleasure of having me read the list of subjects mentioned in the report that the request for further information was made of me. If I say a few words I am called down, and if I say too much I am called down. What I said was that these scientists are making a special study of fish life in its different phases. They are studying the oyster, the taking of which is becoming an important industry and they are also devoting their attention to other questions affecting fish life.

Mr. HACKETT. I understand the hon. minister to say that there is no report of last year's operations.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We have not received it yet.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is it private ?

Salaries and expenses of cattle inspection, $3,600.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this cattle inspection ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This vote is to pay the officers whom the department has charged specially to see that cattle are shipped in compliance with the regulations as to cattle space, food, &c. There are two in Montreal and one at St. John.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the hon. gentleman give us the salaries paid to these gentlemen ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Geo. H. Pope, formerly of Belleville, gets $1,000 ; and H. Delorme $1,000. They are the inspectors at Montreal. The expenses of the inspectors were $207.72. Thos. Buckley, the inspector at St. John, has a salary of $800. There was paid to Mr. Hunter, at Halifax, $67.15, and H. P. Walsh, Charlottetown, $500.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand that the cattle exported at these different ports are inspected by these gentlemen ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Do they make a report?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. It is published in the report of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. What salary is paid to O. G. V. Spain ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. $2,000 a year.

Mr. INGRAM. I see the government paid $100 for a fur-lined coat for this gentleman. Can he not provide his own clothing ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That amount has been refunded by Captain Spain. It was on a trip to Newfoundland and he thought he was authorized on account of the severity of the winter to make that expenditure. He refunded the amount when he was called on to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. The Auditor General's Report does not say that it was refunded.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed that the amount was refunded since that report.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is the coat ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I suppose he has got it himself ; he paid for it.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this officer still in the employ of the department ? Do you allow your officers to go around buying what they please ? Do I understand the minister to say that this man whom the government paid $100 for a furlined coat for, can charge his ordinary clothing to the country ? Is that the minister's view of what his duty to the public is ? It was only on account of the vigilance of that most excellent officer, the Auditor General, that attention was called to this, and the country saved this amount. And the Auditor General's services are to be dispensed with, because he can no longer put up with the way in which his decisions are overruled by this government. It seems to me that the Minister of Marine should give a pledge to this committee that this man Spain should be dismissed from the service ; a man who has such an idea of his duty as a public officer.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In justification of Captain Spain I am informed by my officials that he was authorized to buy this coat, on account of the extended trip he was taking ; and when it was discovered it was illegal, he kept the coat and refunded the money.

Mr. FOWLER. What officer authorized him to buy this coat, because he happened to be going to Newfoundland? The climate of Newfoundland is not so much different from the climate of Canada as to necessitate the government buying a coat for him, any more than if he were going to any other part of Canada.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed that it was during a severe winter when he was snowed in for eight or ten days, and he asked authorization from the minister, and the minister gave him the authority or some employee implied that he was authorized from the minister to buy a coat. He used the coat, and when the department was called upon to reimburse the amount as an illegal expenditure, he reimbursed it.

Mr. FOWLER. Where does that amount appear as being reimbursed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It will appear in the next Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FOWLER. Had this man no coat at all ? It seems rather strange that in Canada, a man occupying the position of Captain Spain would not be in possession of a furlined coat. Men who receive less salaries than he, have furlined coats. It is only a small matter I admit, but it is a straw which shows how the wind is blowing. It is a most outrageous thing. Who was minister when this authorization was given to Spain to buy a coat—I am reminded by one of my hon. friends that this $100 for the coat, is just the price the minister got for that timber limit which he sold to his friends. It took that $100 to supply a coat for an officer.

Mr. COCHRANE. One hundred dollars from the minister's point of view is no great matter, when they are frittering away millions. But it is a considerable amount in the eyes of the hard working farmers of this country. Here is a minister of the Crown who sells timber off 100 acres of land for just the amount of money that one of his officials is giving for a furlined coat. The principle underlying this transaction is what I object to.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was not principle; it was fur that was underlying it.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the government keep on at this rate taking taxes out of the people for such purposes, there will not be much fur left on the taxpayers. The right hon. the Prime Minister tells us that they are a business government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. That is a joke.

Mr. COCHRANE. A minister of the Crown should not joke in such a serious matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) sitting beside you is your joker.

Mr. COCHRANE. When the Prime Minister tells me that this is a business government he is not only deceiving me but he is deceiving the whole country. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Macdonald) if any business man would sell the timber on a 100 acres of land without asking for tenders.

An hon. MEMBER. On the recommendation of a member of parliament.

Mr. COCHRANE. I can see that he might be deceived by a member of parliament, but if he were a business man he would not be. I have no doubt of Mr. Spain's ability. Mr. Spain no doubt is a very worthy officer and I understand how Mr. Spain could be misled into this trouble, but do you think Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Spain would have refunded that money if it had not been for the Auditor General. I was very much grieved to hear that that gentleman is going to resign.

Mr. BENNETT. Do you mean the minister ?

Mr. COCHRANE. No. no ; I mean the Auditor General. There is no trouble about retaining the minister. He has got a good fat job and there is no trouble about his conscientious scruples forcing him to resign as long as he gets the salary he now gets. I see from the Auditor General's Report that he got an advance of $250 for travelling expenses.

Mr. CASGRAIN. He can buy a coat with that.

Mr. COCHRANE. He can explain what he did with it when I get through. I think I would retain office if I got the salary he does, and when we ask for explanations he does not know anything about the matters in question and simply reads the reports but reads them in such a way that no one can understand him. I certainly cannot understand him. This official spent $100 for a fur-lined coat. I wish the hon. gentleman who leads this government to stop writing for a few moments and in order that I may ask him if he thinks that this is a business transaction. In looking over the Auditor General's Report I find gentlemen travelling in the Northwest buying eider-down quilts at $25 and eider-down pillows at $8 or $10.

Mr. BENNETT. They had been on the straw before.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is all very well to laugh but it is a serious matter that the public of Canada has to pay for these things. I would like to know, if any hon. gentleman representing a rural constituency in this House should submit these questions to the electorate how many of the electors, men and women who work hard to pay the exorbitant taxation required for the support of this reckless administration, could state what an eider-down quilt is. Just fancy, eider-down quilts for gentlemen rolling around the Northwest country and three or four satchels for one gentleman and $3.50 for a leather pocket-book for one official. I ask the leader of the government if he thinks that is a business transaction.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADIAN CREDIT, INDEMNITY AND GUARANTY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 29) to incorporate the Canadian Credit, Indemnity and Guaranty Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. GUTHRIE moved to add the following words to clause 2 :

In case any of the provisional directors resign or decline to act at any time, their places may be filled by the remaining directors appointing another or others in their place, but it shall not be necessary for them to do so. The quorum shall consist of the majority of provisional directors from time to time in office and acting.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is rather an unusual clause to introduce at this stage. This Bill was considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee yesterday, and this seems to me a very important amendment to bring up after the Bill was considered by the committee. I think the promoters should ask to have the Bill sent back to the committee for further consideration and let the committee deal with it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. There was some discussion in the committee yesterday as to the number of provisional directors who should form a quorum. The difficulty is that there are eleven provisional directors and it requires six to form a quorum. They are all very prominent and busy men and it is questionable if six can be got together. This amendment only gives power to appoint new provisional directors in case any of those named decline to act or resign. If they do, the remaining directors can appoint others to fill their places, but a majority is still required to form a quorum. This does not affect the working out of the matter in any way, but still leaves a majority necessary before anything can be done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was pointed out in the committee that it was difficult to get a majority of the directors present and therefore it was desirable, if any should resign—which I suppose is intended by this Act—that a majority of those remaining should form a quorum. But the danger, I see is to whom are they to resign and how are they to resign. The amendment provides for their failing or refusing to act, but what evidence will we have of that ? The work done by the provisional board may be all upset by some irregularity or some difficulty in finally determining whether these directors have declined to act or to whom they are to resign. I would prefer that the number of provisional directors should be reduced instead of making this provision, as I see a good many difficulties in working it out.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think the resignation in writing to the other provisional directors would be a sufficient resignation on which to act.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems of little use to refer a Bill to a select committee, if action of this kind is to be taken immediately on the return of the Bill to the House. I do not think the point is well taken. I find that the names of the provincial directors include the following :

James Joseph Kenny, John Woodburn Langmuir, John Fitzallen Ellis, William Stone, Alexander Archibald Allan, Phineas Hophni Burton, Peleg Howland, William Kirkpatrick McNaught, and Robert Bryson Osborne, all of the city of Toronto, and John Roaf Barber, of Georgetown, in the county of Halton.

All these gentlemen are in Toronto, except Mr. Barber, who is in Georgetown, very near to Toronto, and who spends about as much time in Toronto as he does in Georgetown. Practically these provisional directors all live in one city. I do not see why there should be any difficulty in getting a majority of them together. Yesterday when the question was before the Banking and Commerce Committee we were firm on the point that a majority should constitute a quorum and I object to the change.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It still leaves it a majority. Some of these gentlemen, I understand, are not very anxious to act in the work of provisional directors.

Mr. HENDERSON. But surely they would be willing to meet in order to make the proceedings regular. I agree with the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) that there might be a difficulty if a notification by one provisional director to all the others were counted a sufficient withdrawal. But I approve of the Bill being referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I understand that there is to be a meeting early next week, and the Bill can be considered in the House again. There is no danger of it being lost through any delay of this kind.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I would not object to that if there was anything material in it. But, as we know, the duties of provisional directors are very slight—merely to meet and organize and get subscriptions. If any one of the board does not desire to do the work and resigns, addressing his resignation to the provisional directors of the company, surely that ought to overcome any irregularity. At all events, I suspect that the gentlemen who seek the amendment are the only ones who would involve themselves. I do not think there is much in the objection.

Mr. SPROULE. How many directors are there ?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Eleven.

Mr. SPROULE. But if you drop two, a majority would be five, and surely that number can be got to take part in the organization of the company.

Mr. GUTHRIE. At present we want six. But, if two drop, five would be enough. It is a minor matter, I think.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

Bill as amended reported and read the third time.

Mr. GUTHRIE moved that the Bill pass, and that the title be 'A Bill to incorporate the Canadian Credit Indemnity Company.'

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 97) respecting the Trans-Canada Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

Bill (No. 131) to incorporate the Farmers' Bank of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Dominion Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Bill (No. 121) respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Morrison.

Bill (No. 122) respecting the Ottawa Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Rosamond.

ALLIANCE BANK OF CANADA.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 140) respecting the Alliance Bank of Canada.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, before this Bill is read the second time, if the promoter of the Bill (Mr. Russell) is present I would like to have some explanation as to why the company have not proceeded to organize this bank before asking us to grant this extension of time. It seems to me that it is not a wise thing to keep these charters alive on the statute-book of the country unless some action is going to be taken by the promoters of these Bills. Last year we granted nine bank charters and I am not aware that more than one of these banks actually went into operation. It seems to me that it is quite unnecessary for us to proceed with the granting of bank charters year after year unless some action is to be taken. I do not think it is a wise thing to hold these charters over from year to year without taking some action, and I would have hoped that the promoter of the Bill would have been present to have given the House some reason why the purposes of the Bill had not been accomplished, why action had not been taken and the bank actually put into operation.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. The hon. member (Mr. Russell) who is in charge of this Bill, is out of the House just now. I have charge of it in his absence. When this matter came up before the House a few days ago, satisfactory explanations were given at the time as to the reason why the promoters had not gone forward with the organization of this bank during the year. This charter has not been held over from year to year. As hon. members will recollect, it was only towards the end of last session that this charter was granted and it was stated a few days ago by the hon. gentleman who is in charge of this Bill that there were some reasons why the promoters did not succeed in carrying forward the work of organization. The condition of the money market, it was represented, had prevented the gentlemen who are connected with this enterprise from carrying on the work of organization. They are men of means and I have no doubt whatever that if the House will consent to the Bill which is now before it, the work of organization will be carried forward speedily. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), when this matter was before the House, expressed his satisfaction with the reason which had compelled this company to delay organizing, and I am sure that my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) will not insist at the present time upon throwing any obstacles in the way of carrying this measure to completion.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I am assured that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, who resides in Halifax, the head office, I presume, of this intended bank, was satisfied, I would in no way desire to press any further objection, but I must say, as I understand that the Alliance Bank is simply an amalgamation of a number of other banks, that I fail to see wherein the condition of the money market could have any effect whatever in preventing the object of the promoters being carried out.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

THE RIO DE JANEIRO TRAMWAY, LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED.

Mr. W. S. CALVERT moved the second reading of Bill (No. 142) respecting the Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company, Limited, and to change its name to the Rio de Janeiro, Tramway, Light and Power Company, Limited.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON. This, I may say, is a somewhat extraordinary Bill. We are incorporating a company to do work in South America. I have no file of the Bill, and I am not aware whether it has been printed. It is not marked as having been printed. I think we ought to have some knowledge as to what the Bill is.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is marked as printed on my order paper.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not marked as printed on mine, and I presume mine must rule, because this is the notice that has been given to us. My hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) says it is not distributed. It is a rather remarkable Bill and it was introduced somewhat late in the session by special permission. I do not think there is any reason why it ought to be hurried through the House. I think we ought to have a little of this light which is supposed to be generated thrown on the question before we pass it so hurriedly. I do not think it will suffer if it is allowed to stand for a day or two.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, when I asked the permission of the House to present the petition for this Bill, I endeavoured to give an explanation and it was agreed to both by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I think there should be no objection to the Bill going to its second reading when a full explanation can be given before the committee. As I stated at that time, the Bill is for the purpose of organizing a company to do business in Brazil. It will not interfere in the slightest with any company or corporation in Canada. These people are all Canadians; the capital will be $25,000,000, and they propose to do business subject to the laws of Brazil. As they have entered into a contract which is to be commenced within the present year, I asked the House to permit of the petition being presented. The House agreed, and I would like my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) to allow this Bill to go to the committee so that we can get along as rapidly as possible. I think he will be perfectly satisfied when he knows the gentlemen who are connected with it. It is for the purpose of permitting Canadians to do business outside of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the stage at which to explain any principle in the Bill which may be considered objectionable. The reasons stated on the introduction of a petition are simply to satisfy the House that it might be permitted to be introduced at an unusually late date. I think perhaps there is a precedent for this in a Bill we passed some years ago, but it is rather strange that we should incorporate a company to do work in some other part of the world.

Mr. CALVERT. The Sao Paulo Company is in exactly the same position as this company will be when it gets this Bill passed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a second time.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Unforeseen expenses generally, $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How was this vote expended last year?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The expenditure for last year is $2,973.25 up to the present.

Mr. BLAIN. What were the principal items of expenditure?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The principal item was one of $1,469.80 in connection with the interruption of navigation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. The others are small items.

Salaries and allowances of lightkeepers, $238,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This year a number of new lights and stations have been erected but it is thought that the same amount that we took last year will be ample. This is the ordinary expenditure.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that the services of a great many of the light keepers above Montreal have been dispensed with. After fifteen or twenty years service the minister simply told these men to walk, giving them a few months notice. Is that fair treatment for men who have been in the service of the country for many years? Is it the intention to give them some compensation.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The following oil lights in the River St. Lawrence in the neighbourhood of Gananoque, were converted shortly after the opening of navigation this year into automatic acetylene lights, viz. : Burnt Island, Red Horse Rock, Spectacle Shoal, Jackstraw Shoal, Gananoque Narrows, Lindoe Island. The above named lights were formerly looked after by the following keepers. James A. Acton, Burnt Island; J. Lamdon, Red Horse Rock and Spectacle Shoal; Manly Cross, Jackstraw Shoal and Gananoque Narrows; John G. Wallace, Lindoe Island.

The salaries of the above named keepers were as follows: James Acton, $250; J. Lamdon, $300; Manly Cross $480; John G. Wallace, $250.

In addition to the salaries of the keepers the lights cost for maintenance, exclusive of repairs, about $40 per annum each.

The amount of carbide used since the lights are automatic averages about $60 per annum and the power of the light is very materially strengthened.

The salaries of the keepers amounted to $1,280.

The following is a comparative statement of the cost of the lights under the old arrangement and under the new.

Under Old System—

Maintainance 6 lights at $40 each	$ 240
Keepers salaries	1,280
	$1,520

Under Present System—

Maintainance 6 lights at $60 each	$360
Salary of caretaker, Manly Cross	550
Total	$910
Saving in cost per annum	$610

The carbide used for these lights is purchased from the Ottawa Carbide Company at the wholesale price of $65 per ton. This is the price paid by the wholesale dealers in carbide, including the Canadian Pacific Railway, which uses a very much larger quantity than the government.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the minister include in that comparative statement the cost of the steamer "Scout,' that is scouting around the lakes with a large crew on board ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The steamer would have to be maintained all the same to look after the buoy service.

Mr. TAYLOR. The lights were there for many years and we had no steamer to look after them ; nor did we have to maintain a factory and employ about 100 men up there at Prescott in connection with this carbide which is made here at Ottawa by a company in which some of the cabinet ministers are stockholders.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Well, what if they are ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I may say that this system of lighting with carbide was started simply for the purpose of purchasing carbide from a company in Ottawa, promoted by members of this government. My hon. friend has started a factory at Prescott, having purchased a property there without a vote of this House, that I know of. I never heard of a vote to purchase property there for that purpose, and I knew nothing of the project until I was in Prescott the other day and saw something like one hundred men working there on property purchased at large expense. We have not been asked to purchase the property or told that the government were going to start a factory to make tanks to hold acetylene gas. So far as I know this gas, I would not have it on any property I own. You can hardly read a paper, but you see accounts of explosions of this gas, yet the government, because some of its members are engaged in the manufacture of the carbide, purchase a property, start a factory and employ some one hundred men.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. What does the hon. gentleman mean ? What kind of a factory ?

Mr. TAYLOR. What is my hon. friend doing in Prescott in the Wiser distillery works ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Does he mean we are manufacturing carbide at Prescott ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, manufacturing iron tanks to hold the gas you make from carbide. Am I not correct ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Somewhat correct.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where did the minister get the authority to get that property and start this factory ? We have never heard of it in parliament, but there is the factory to-day running and manufacturing these things that might be made at the Kingston locomotive works or the Kingston boiler works. But my hon. friend has purchased a property there and has one hundred men employed, running a manufacturing industry, competing with other Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The explanation is very simple. $35,000 was voted last year to purchase the Prescott property. I know nothing personally of the property itself. I know that the property was considered good value at $40,000, but we managed to buy it at $26,000, or thereabouts, after the amount had been voted by parliament last year. It was considered to be in the interest of navigation and of aids to navigation to establish a station at that point. I am awfully sorry that we should be called down for having done a thing which is in the interests of navigation on the lakes. If we had thought that we would be reproached for it we would have put the money elsewhere, and then we would not have been accused of having done anything wrong towards the country. Another time I suppose we will consult the gentlemen who represent the district. We intend to put a station at Parry Sound, but if it is objected to of course we will put it somewhere else, and will have all the supplies necessary for the lights whether acetylene gas or any other gas, kept at a place where no objection will be raised. I am very sorry when we have established such a station at this point for the sake of improving aids to navigation on the upper lakes, and between Montreal and Kingston, that we should have been accused of having done something that is wrong. The whole question came before the House last year and was approved of. The explanations were all given at the time and we went on with the project just as we have been going on with the shipyard at Sorel. We do not find any kick about the shipyard at Sorel. Every one is satisfied in Quebec; they think it is right that it should be established there and worked there, and that it is doing good work. The fact of the matter is that we are being asked every day to have everything done at the yards there. Instead of giving out contracts for the building of ships and boats in private shipyards, we are asked to do it at Sorel where we have the men and facilities necessary to do the work in the interests of the country. If these gentlemen are not satisfied with the establishment of the station at Prescott, I am very sorry. We are not going to abolish the station which has got to work. It is useful and is going to be worked in the best interests of the province of Ontario in spite of the hon. gentlemen on the other side, who do not think this should be done.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the hon. gentleman to point to me in the estimates of last year or in the debates of last year, where $35,000 was voted and one word said about purchasing a property at Prescott to start an industry for manufacturing tanks to hold this gas. The first I heard of it was when I was in Prescott and saw the place. I do not represent the town of Prescott or that district, but I do say that this expenditure for lighting the River St. Lawrence under this system, including the cost and maintenance of the crew of the steamer 'Scout,' will be largely in excess of the cost of the other system. Under the old system I could stand at Gananoque, and see the three lights looming well, but under this system they are like little stars.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are people who cannot see the light. When it is so bright it blinds them. When you have a five candle power light, they can see it, but when it is a fifteen or twenty power light of course it puts them in the shade and they are nowhere.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do say and will maintain that the government had no right to dismiss the faithful and efficient servants who had been employed there for twenty years, and to throw them on the world giving them two or three months' notice. The government had no right to start this manufacturing industry at Prescott without asking parliament. I never heard in the debate, nor can it be pointed out in the records of last year that it was the intention of parliament to vote this money for the establishment of this factory. I want the minister to point it out. He made the statement that $35,000 was voted last year to purchase this property. Will he point out one word in the estimates or in the debates to show that?

Mr. BENNETT. Was it before the minister came into the department or since, that this purchase of land was made?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The purchase was made last year after the vote was taken by parliament. I have not the vote before me, but I will have it in a moment. A vote of $180,000 was asked, and this included, I think, the sum of $35,000 to establish a station at Prescott, including the purchase of a property there. The property instead of costing $35,000, has cost only $26,000. At the time we calculated it might cost us $35,000. The price asked was $40,000, so I do not think there is enough in this transaction to kill the government or even a very humble member of the government.

Mr. INGRAM. Was any explanation given to the House last year that $35,000 of this $180,000 was being voted for the purchase of that property?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have sent for the statute.

Mr. INGRAM. Under what head will we find that discussed last year?

Mr. BENNETT. Commencing at page P—47 of the Auditor General's Report there is a resume of the expenditure on lights above Montreal. Now the lights on the St. Lawrence are of course counted among those above Montreal and in looking through this I can find no reference to the purchase of this property. Perhaps the minister can tell us where it is.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. On page 31 of the Statutes of 1903. Lighthouse and coast survey.

Further amount for construction and aids to navigation, including the purchase and equipment of boats for sweeping channels . . . and the substitution of compressed gas for oil as illuminant for lighthouses, increasing the power of lights below Montreal and the establishment of a buoy depot for the upper lakes, $180,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely the minister does not call this the establishment of a buoy depot where they are manufacturing pipes?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They are not manufacturing any thing of the sort.

Mr. BENNETT. What is being manufactured at Prescott.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The are manufacturing gas. Some one the other side said so. They are full of it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Full of what.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Gas. What is being made there is everything that is necessary for keeping the lights in operation, repairing the appliances, filling the bouys, &c. That is the work done at this station which before was done, either in private establishments or at Montreal or elsewhere. Instead of that we thought, seeing the increase of necessities for better aids to navigation, that it was better that all these things should be under the control of the department. That is why the station was established. There is no gas manufactured there, there are no holders manufactured there except for repairs that may be necessary in connection with the working of the buoys.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand the acetylene gas is made in this way : There are certain iron receptacles made for the holding of this carbide.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They are not made there. At this depot they are doing everything necessary to maintain the lights and the buoys on the upper St. Lawrence.

Mr. BENNETT. In an acetylene gas plant there is an iron receptacle into which this carbide is introduced and the gas is produced by moisture and is then conveyed by pipes and becomes an illuminating power. We know that the carbide is not manufactured there. It is manufactured at two or three different places, at Ottawa and also at St. Catharines, I think the same company is interested in both concerns, and it is quite well known that the Minister of Public Works is a large stockholder in at least one concern. There is no harm in that but it is a well known fact that Hon. Mr. Sutherland is one of the promoters of that industry. The use of acetylene gas is quite popular in Ontario, although in some places it is not popular by reason of the explosions that occur in connection with it. Am I to understand from the minister that in all the lighthouses on the great lakes, the present system of lighting by oil is to be dispensed with and carbide introduced instead ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I could not say that off-hand. There are some lights where it is in the interest of the service that acetylene gas should be used, because it gives a much stronger light, and there are other places where the oil lamps will be kept. It is a technical question which comes within the province of the officer in charge of the lights. I may say that almost all of these changes have been asked for by the shipping interests. As regards the acetylene gas, I know nothing particularly as to who manufactures this carbide. I understand there are two companies, one in St. Catharines, controlled entirely by Mr. Willson, and I understand there is another in Ottawa; these two control the market. The factory in Ottawa is controlled by the Messrs, Bronson, of Ottawa, Mr. Cranneil and Mr. Willson and others. I deny that one of the members of the cabinet is a director of the company.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the Mr. Willson, who is interested in the one at St. Catharines, the same Mr. Willson woh is interested in the one at Ottawa ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. From information I have received, the company in St. Catharines is not able to furnish the quantity of carbide asked for. Then there remains this company in Ottawa which is selling all the carbide it can produce to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and other concerns, and the price we pay is the same as is paid by these companies, which buy a larger quantity than we do. The department has no interest whatever in favouring any one company or another. If another company would offer the carbide at a lower price, the department would buy from it.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand that some of these lighthouse keepers have been dispensed with altogether ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Then at the expiration of the time during which the machines are supposed to run, it will be necessary for a man to reload them ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No. We have a machine now which is loaded for six months or a year. All that is necessary is that it should be visited now and then to see whether the apparatus is in good order and condition.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, as there is no caretaker in the building, any one evil disposed could obtain entrance and put the whole arrangement out of gear. And if there should be a wreck, there is no lighthouse keeper to assist the stranded vessel. And if anything should go wrong with the machine, there is no one to set it right.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. These changes have been approved by the marine associations and shipping interests all over. I can produce many letters to show that these interests are very grateful to the department for having adopted this means of giving better aid to navigation. I do not claim credit for this new departure. I found the experiments going on, and after they proved satisfactory, I thought it my duty to continue the system.

Mr. OSLER. How does the hon. gentleman purchase the property at present? What has he paid for it and how did he arrive at a valuation?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The property was valued at $40,000. We did not disclose who wanted to purchase and the price came down to $35,000. We thought it could be bought cheaper and we employed an agent from the city of Ottawa. The politics of this man I do not know, but I am inclined to think he is a Conservative, and we thought that by employing him we could dispel the suspicion that the government wanted the property. We succeeded in getting the property at $26,500 instead of $35,000 and we paid about $500 commission.

Mr. OSLER. What arrangement has the minister made with the acetylene gas company for the supply of the carbide, and what period does it cover?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We buy the carbide at $65 a ton, which is the ordinary price paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. OSLER. How long does the agreement last?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no agreement. We buy at the market price.

Mr. OSLER. Then when you have all these arrangements made and are using the acetylene light over your whole system, these gentlemen put up the price.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Canadian Pacific Railway would be in the same position.

Mr. OSLER. I venture to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway does not go into any such bargain. When the Canadian Pacific Railway make a bargain, they see that they do not run the risk of being cornered at the end of the year. I do not think it is right for the minister to bring the Canadian Pacific Railway into this discussion. I am not here to defend the Canadian Pacific Railway or to represent that company, but I am here representing the people of Canada and the constituency for which I am elected; and when I ask the hon. minister for information, I have the right to get an answer which does not bring in the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not objecting to the use of the acetylene gas, because I believe it is a light that is going to stay and I hope it will prove much better than what was heretofore used. But what I say is that the government ought to take precautions against being cornered by the people who control the acetylene gas. The government ought to have some arrangement with these people of a permanent character.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. My department and the government can hardly be blamed if they have acted with as great care as that shown by the large private companies. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have fitted up cars at very great expense to burn acetylene gas, and fitted them up so that they will not burn anything else. And the company buy their carbide from the Ottawa Carbide Company at the same price that the government pay. I do not know what the arrangement of the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Carbide Company may be, but I know that we buy the carbide on the market. And if the company wants to charge us a higher price we can go elsewhere. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) is in a position to tell us what the nature of the contract made by the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Ottawa Carbide Company is, and, if he will do so, perhaps we may be able to make the same contract. At present, though we have made no contract, we are buying carbide at the same price as the Canadian Pacific Railway, $65 a ton. Though we have gone to some expense to provide the apparatus to use this gas, we have not spent as much as the Canadian Pacific Railway in fitting up their cars for the same purpose. So, I think I have a right to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) has no business to reproach the department for acting as we have done. And even if he tries to divide his responsibility as a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway in making the same kind of a contract that we have made, I think that the people generally will not consider that we have been guilty of a great crime.

Mr. OSLER. I do not seek to divide my responsibility as between the Canadian Pacific Railway and this House. My responsibility as a member of this House is here. I am not here to say whether the Canadian Pacific Railway has made a good or a bad bargain, but I am here to criticise the item under discussion. I say that if the government are going to large expense to change the system of lighting—to which, mind you, I do not object at all—they must keep in view the fact that the carbide, as I understand it, is controlled by one company.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It is manufactured all over the world.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is not even a patent on it.

Mr. OSLER. It is practically controlled by one company.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) says that it cannot be manufactured by anybody who chooses to take up that line of business?

Mr. OSLER. The Standard Oil Company give exactly the same answer as the minister has just given. They say there is no objection to anybody else going into the oil business—that there is no monopoly in the oil business.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is a great deal of difference. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) as a business man can defend his proposition that there is a similarity between the Standard Oil Company and the concerns that produce carbide. The Standard Oil Company have bought all the sources of supply, while the carbide industry is an open one in which any one can engage.

Mr. OSLER. I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) endorse so completely the statement I made in the House when the Minister of Finance brought in his Standard Oil legislation the other day. I stated, and the minister of Finance contradicted me, that the new oil duties were simply playing into the hands of the Standard Oil Company, because they had or would have control of the output. The Minister of Finance and others on that side said that I was talking nonsense. but now the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries tells us that the Standard Oil Company own all the oil in the world, and that there is no analogy between the production of carbide and the production of oil. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries goes further than I did. I said that the Standard Oil Company would ultimately control the supply, but the minister says that they do control it. I am confident that I state a fact when I say that the production of carbide is practically a monopoly. I have no accusation to make against any men who are interested in that manufacture. They have a perfect right to engage in it and to make all the money they can out of it. But the government, in making these expensive changes to adopt the new system of lighting should take into account the fact that the production of carbide is practically a monopoly.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. OSLER. Yes.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If there is a monopoly—though I do not admit it—and if the hon. gentleman has admitted that there is a monopoly in the oil industry——

Mr. OSLER. I did not admit it, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) stated it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. But that is the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Osler's) argument. He says that the tariff brought down will not benefit the people, because the Standard Oil Company controls the whole trade and will use these duties for its own purposes. It would appear, then, according to the hon. gentleman's argument that it is simply a question of whether we shall face the difficulty of a monopoly in oil or a monopoly in carbide.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a little mixed, or else I am very dense. I did not say that the Standard Oil Company now had a monopoly. but that it would acquire a monopoly in Canada as it had elsewhere. The minster himself stated absolutely that the Standard Oil Company had a monopoly.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) would allow me, I would like to ask him a question. He stated that the manufacture of carbide was a monopoly——

Mr. OSLER. I say that practically carbide is a monopoly.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman explain what he means by that ?

Mr. OSLER. Practically it is in the hands of a very few.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman know the nature of the monopoly of which he speaks ?

Mr. OSLER. It is of the same nature as the Standard Oil Company—the production is in the hands of a few companies.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Is the hon. gentleman quite sure of that ?

Mr. OSLER. I think so, yes.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I think the hon. gentleman is in error. I know nothing about the internal workings, and so may be in error myself. But I have heard the statement made, and I believe it to be correct, that the patentee of the process is a Mr. Willson of this city. I suppose he patented it in various parts of the world. He is not manufacturing I presume all over the world, but like other persons who have inventions, he sells territory, and probably either retains a royalty or gets something for the sale of the territory. That is a different thing from saying that he controls the market price at which it may be sold. Now the information is easily obtainable, I suppose that gentleman lives in this city, and we could ascertain by telephone whether he controls the selling price. If he does not control the selling price, then there is competition. If this carbide is manufactured throughout the world, then there is competition, and if it happened that manufacturers in Canada should seek to impose high prices upon the people of Canada, then this material could be brought in from other parts of the world where it is manufactured. Unless the hon. gentleman says that one man or one syndicate controls the output and regulates the price so that they can put it up or down, his theory of a monopoly amounts to nothing.

Mr. OSLER. I think the hon. gentleman quite understands a monopoly.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I want the hon. gentleman to explain his argument.

Mr. OSLER. I am speaking quite frankly, because I know nothing about the gentlemen interested in this carbide, and have no interest in it. But if a patent is sold for the manufacture of carbide in Canada, that patent carries with it, as in almost every other case, this right, that if it is manufactured in the United States they cannot come into Canada and sell it here. That is almost the invariable condition of a patent that is sold anywhere. If you sell a patent in Canada for the manufacture of an article and you sell the patent in England for the manufacture of the same article, the first and primary condition is that no goods manufactured in Canada can be sold in England under that patent.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman will see at once the absurdity of such a statement. He is an inventor, we will suppose, of this particular material, and has sold his patent to manufacture this material in Germany, we will say, and it is sold on the market in Germany. Now, is there any private agreement that one could make with a German manufacturer that would prevent the person who bought this material in Germany from importing it into Canada ?

Mr. OSLER. Certainly there is.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It is absurd to talk so.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. minister does not know the ordinary conditions of trade, and I will illustrate that in a moment.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman say that the goods manufactured in Germany cannot come in here ?

Mr. OSLER. If a man has a patent to manufacture goods in Canada and the same patent is sold in England, the condition of the patent is that the goods made in Canada cannot be sold in England, and the condition in the patent is that English goods shall not be sold in Canada, without any question. Now, let me show how close these trade arrangements are made. Let me give an illustration. If you go to an agent in London of French wines—I make this illustration, because it is something that happened to myself not long ago—you buy from the French house in London so many cases of claret, or whatever it may be, to be sold and sent to Canada at the price there. The house will simply say, when you tell them to send it to you in Canada : We cannot do it, we have an agent in Canada who has the sole control of the right of selling it there. I may buy it in London, true from the agent and ship it myself out here as an individual, but I cannot go into the market there and buy it through an agent to be sent to this country. That is an illustration in a small way, and a patent carries exactly the same conditions, only much more strictly. If a patent for acetylene gas or carbide is sold in Canada and the patent is also sold in England and English goods are sent into Canada, the transaction will be attacked almost at once, and there will be a dispute straight and square between the manufacturer in England and the manufacturer in Canada.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. That is a theory.

Mr. OSLER. That is the practice.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. We are not dealing in practice, we are dealing in carbides. Take this case. Assume that this patentee has sold his patent in other parts of the world—and I am sure that must be the case, because it is a useful article, and he would protect himself by getting this article patented. I think we may fairly assume that an article of this utility is being manufactured in all the civilized nations of the world, and the product of this patent is on the market. Suppose the hon. gentleman's theory is correct, and that the manufacturers in Canada should seek to put up the price. will he say what is to prevent the Canadian government, if they want to buy ten tons or any other quantity of this stuff, from going to the country where it is sold, say to Germany, and buying it there ? What is to prevent that, if it is for sale there ?

Mr. OSLER. I am not a lawyer, and am not familiar with the Patent Act in theory, but I am familiar with the practice, and I know that the Patent Act protects the manufacturer in every country where that patent is running.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman say there is anything in the patent laws of Canada that will prevent an article that is manufactured under a patent in some foreign country from being sold to a purchaser there and being taken into Canada ? Is there anything in our patent law to that effect ?

Mr. OSLER. If the article is manufactured in England under the patent law and is sent here, at once the manufacturer in England will be notified that he cannot send that article out here. That is always the case, and that practice is enforced as a matter of fact. I am not speaking of the law, but I am saying that, as a matter of fact, that is absolutely the case, the same as the copyright of a book. There is no question about it. If that were not so, what would be the use of selling the patent in England, or Germany, or France ? A patent in England means that the patentee in England who manufactures cannot have the Canadian market ; the patent in France means that the manufacturer in France can have nothing but the French market. However it may be in theory, in practice the patent in a country protects the manufacturer in that country. If that was not the case, what would be the use of our giving patents here to anybody ? It would not be worth while.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The patent might prevent buying and selling in this country, but this is not a question of importing. I think an article that is sold in Europe, although it may be patented in Canada, could be brought into Canada. If a man chose to buy it in Europe he could bring it into Canada. If he chose to buy an article in a foreign country that is also the subject of a patent in Canada, I do not think there is anything in the customs law that will prevent him bringing that article into Canada.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman is a lawyer and I am not. Let me put this question to him. This carbide is patenteed in England, it is manufactured in England under the English patent. Can I, as a consumer of carbide, import from England all the carbide I want straight from the manufacturer in England, in defiance of the Canadian patent ? Will the minister answer that question ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman was making the statement that there was a monopoly, and I was asking him if he could tell me what the patent law was.

Mr. OSLER. No, I do not know the patent law.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Then he is pretty much in the same position as myself. I would be very much surprised if when an article is manufactured in a foreign country and when a man has bought it and owns it, the patent law would prevent him from bringing it into this country. I could understand the patent law preventing a man from dealing in a patented article. I am merely theorizing the Act before him.

Mr. LAVELL. If the hon. Postmaster General were familiar with the Patent Act he would be aware that it forbids the use of any patented article in this country without the consent of the owner of the patent. If it were not so the patent would be practically useless.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to give the committee a little illustration of this matter. The General Electric Company in the United States manufacture electrical goods for which they have the patents in the United States, and for which they have the patents in this country also. They are manufactured here by the Canadian General Electric Company. The Canadian General Electric Company manufacture these goods here and nobody else has the right to manufacture them. I want, for instance, to buy a certain kind of electrical motor that is manufactured by the Canadian General Electric Company. I think they are charging me too much for it. I write to the General Electric Company in the United States and I ask them what they want for a ten horse power electric motor. They write back that they cannot sell one of these motors because they are made in Canada. All I have to do is to write over to my agent on the other side and tell him I want a ten horse power motor manufactured by the General Electric Company in the United States. He gets a price over there writes to me and I tell him to ship the motor at that price. I get the motor and we are doing it every day. The same thing applies to electric lamps and other electrical goods.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the same company ?

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly. We get the motor manufactured by the General Electric Company of the United States and we do so notwithstanding the fact that the article is patented and made by the Canadian General Electric Company.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose they patented that in Canada and the United States and sold the right to manufacture in the United States ; the hon. gentleman gets his agent to send him over one of these articles on which there is a patent here. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say he can bring that article in here ?

Mr. WRIGHT. I am speaking about goods patented here and patented there by the General Electric Company. If I want it I get my agent to get it for me.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have the Patent Act under my hand. and I will read section 37 :

> Every patent granted, under this Act, shall be subject and be expressed to be subject to the condition that such patent and all the rights and privileges thereby granted shall cease and determine, and that the patent shall be null and void at the end of two years from the date thereof, unless the patentee or his legal representatives, within that period, commence, and, after such commencement, continuously carry on in Canada the construction or manufacture of the invention patented, in such manner that any person desiring to use it may obtain it, or cause it to be made for him, at a reasonable price, at some manufactory or establishment for making or constructing it in Canada—and that such patent shall be void——

This particular section has been amended, but not in the essential parts as regards this discussion.

> —if, after the expiration of twelve months from the granting thereof, the patentee or his legal representatives——

That is the agent which my hon. friend (Mr. Wright) was speaking of.

> —or his assignees for the whole or in part of his interest in the patent imports or causes to be imported into Canada, the invention for which the patent is granted.

That is the law, so that in the case which my hon. friend has just spoken of the patent would be voided.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not care whether the patent is voided or not, I know we do it every day.

Mr. OSLER. I did not intend to get into any controversy with the hon. Postmaster General because he is a legal man and supposed to be familiar with the patent law, in theory, while I am only speaking of what I know from practice. The production of carbide is more or less of a monopoly. It is patented. The government have decided apparently to change the system of lighting the harbours and on their buoys. Now, do not for a moment think that I am objecting to that, because, as far as I know, acetylene gas has probably come to stay, and it is going to be a very advanced method of lighting as against what we have had. But, I say that before this government go into such an expenditure, before they make such a change, casting aside their old lighting apparatus and adopting a system of lighting which depends upon patents controlled by a small number of people, they ought to have an understanding with the manufacturers of this article that they shall have the right for a certain number of years, and a long number of years, to buy their product at a price not higher than that at which it is sold to anybody else in the market. I understand from the hon minister that no such arrangement has been made.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We do not intend to make such an arrangement.

Mr. OSLER. I do not wonder at that, I would not expect that the minister would intend to do it. The position we are adopting on this side of the House is that we have the right to criticise the transactions of the hon. minister. I think I am criticising the course of the hon. minister in regard to this matter quite fairly. I am not criticising the action which the hon. minister has taken in changing the system of lighting, because as far as I know, without knowing anything technical or scientific about the question, I understand that the lights are going to be better than the old lights that have been in use before. But, I say that the hon. minister, before he adopts that change, involving a large amount of money and committing the government practically for all time to come, or at all events until a new light is discovered, to the use of this material, the hon. minister should have an agreement with the men who have a monopoly of this material which is necessary to the government for a series of years providing that they will supply this material at as low a price as it is supplied to any person else.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. From the argument of the hon. gentleman I would draw the inference that he is interested in getting us to make a contract at $65 a ton with this company irrespective of whether the price may go down to $50 or $25 a ton within the next year or six months.

Mr. OSLER. I think the last statement I made was that I suggested that the government should at all events make a contract with the company that they should be supplied with this material at the lowest price at which it is supplied in future to other people.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. What do you want better than to buy it at the market price? If these gentlemen in Ottawa are not disposed to sell us carbide at a reasonable price, we can buy it elsewhere.

Mr. OSLER. You cannot buy it elsewhere. Nobody else makes it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Why not? It is manufactured elsewhere. The hon. gentleman will try to make this committee believe that the Ottawa Carbide Company are furnishing the whole of the carbide that is used in Canada. Will he contend that for a moment? He cannot contend that. The price at the present moment is $65 a ton. It is bought at that price by the government in small quantities, because the few changes that have been made do not require a very large supply. The Canadian Pacific Railway and all the large companies of Canada are buying at the same price. Why are we to be blamed? Is it because we do not make a contract for five or ten years at $65 a ton?

Mr. OSLER. No.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Is it because we do not make a contract with them that they will not charge us more? Do you think these people are fools?

Mr. OSLER. No.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Do you think they would sign any such contract? Of course the hon. gentleman wants to find fault, and I don't blame him; perhaps I would do the same thing if I were in his position. But let us find fault within the bounds of reason, and not in connection with such a matter as this where there is no room for fault finding. We are not bound to buy from that particular company.

Mr. CLANCY. What other companies are manufacturing this article?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Willson Carbide Company of St. Catharines, and the Ottawa Carbide Company.

Mr. TAYLOR. The same thing.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not quite; one is controlled entirely by Mr. Willson and the other is controlled by the Messrs Bronson.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, I know what I am talking about. There is a company authorized to start at Grand Falls; there is another that will be started at Shawinigan within a few months, and if there is any money in the business I suppose others will be organized. We are not paying an extreme price; the fact is that we are just as businesslike as the Canadian Pacific Railway people.

Mr. OSLER. I resent that assertion on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway would be bankrupt before the end of the year if they were not more businesslike than the minister.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They are paying the same price as we are, $65 a ton, and they are buying a thousand tons where we buy twenty-five tons.

Mr. LAVELL. Does the minister buy all his carbide at $65 a ton?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. LAVELL. How is it that the Auditor General reports that you pay $20 for 400 pounds? What is the explanation of that?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have no answer to give.

Mr. LAVELL. In other words you have given that much boodle.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Boodle is in the mouth of the one who speaks about it.

Mr. LAVELL. The Auditor General's Report distinctly says that you bought 400 pounds of carbide for $20, and notwithstanding that the minister may throw back abuse, I can tell him that I prefer the Auditor General's record to his. If the Auditor General is right, an explanation is required of the minister.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I have the Patent Act before me now. Clause 44 says:

> The government of Canada may at any time use any patent invention, paying to the patentee such sum as the commissioner reports to be reasonable compensation for the use thereof.

The definition of 'patent invention,' extends not only to the article itself but to the product of the article. It says:

> The expression 'invention' means any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter; or any new and useful improvement in any art, machine, manufacture or composition of matter.

It means not only the design but the product of the design, that if the owner of this patent had a monopoly, the government would have the right to ignore the patent and fix a reasonable price.

Mr. OSLER. I don't think there is any doubt about that. The government have the right to bring in anything free of duty, but that is not what we were talking about.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. You were talking about how the government could be cornered. If the owners of this patent should seek an unfair price from the government the government could get its supply elsewhere and the patent does not restrain the government.

Mr. OSLER. We do not suppose that the government would do an injustice to any patentee.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Nor would it do an injustice to the people of Canada.

Mr. OSLER. I do not think you can find one single case where a patent owner in one country would undersell the man who holds the same patent in another country.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman began his argument by saying that these people had a monopoly, and that they could compel the government to pay more than a reasonable price for the article. That contention could only hold if the Canadian patent prevented the government importing that article or if the patent were binding against the government. The patent law does not bind the government, and the monopoly argument falls to the ground.

Mr. OSLER. I didn't talk about the government. I talked about the general principle.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman talked about the supplying of carbide to the government.

Mr. OSLER. Quite right; but I didn't suppose the answer would be that the government would take that position.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. OSLER. You need not laugh. I was not familiar with the Patent Act, but my statements are absolutely correct; more correct than the minister who answered me, although he is a lawyer I think; I am in the judgment of the House on that point. I say further that if a patent owner in England were asked to sell to the Canadian government to the detriment of the man who owned the patent in Canada, the government would find that there existed a loyalty between the owners of patents in all countries which would prevent the request of the government being acceded to.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman says there is a monopoly, but the question is whether these lighthouses can be supplied with carbide without the government being compelled to pay an excessive price.

Mr. OSLER. Quite so.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Well, when the law says that the government may fix the price, how can the government be compelled to pay an excessive price ?

Mr. OSLER. If the government are going to fix the price, they at once interfere with trade. The government have the right, I admit, but I do not think that that is an element which can enter into an argument of this sort. The government have the right to repudiate their indebtedness to their bondholders——

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. How does the question of repudiation come in here ?

Mr. OSLER. I admit that the government could at once take away the duties and admit the carbide free or give a bonus to an English manufacturer to compete with the Canadian, but allowing all that, I say that if the patent is held in Canada, England, France and Germany, all these companies will stand loyally together and prevent the government from breaking down the Canadian patent by buying cheaper elsewhere.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is straining hard for an argument when he advances one of that kind. He talks about repudiation, but if it is expressly stated in the Patent Act that the patent does not bind the Crown, how can there be any repudiation ? Should the owner of the patent endeavour to exact an unfair price, surely there can be nothing dishonourable in the government taking advantage of one of the conditions on which the patent is issued in order to protect the Canadian people.

Mr. INGRAM. The argument, in the first instance, was that if a man held a Canadian patent, you could bring him to terms by importing into Canada the articles for which he holds a patent, but that can only be done under certain conditions. According to section 7 of the amended Act of last session if any holder of a patent who asks an unreasonable sum for the article he has patented, the government may grant a license to another party to manufacture the same article. If I want to buy an article and I can show that the holder of the patent is asking an unreasonable price, I can appeal to the department for a license to enable me to manufacture the article myself. Take the hon. gentleman's own department. A man takes out a patent for a mail bag and lock in Canada and the United States, so long as he sells at a reasonable figure, he is protected, and you cannot import these from the United States in violation of his patent.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Except as against the Crown.

Mr. INGRAM. Against any person so long as he does not charge an unreasonable price.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We have a lighthouse at Summerside harbour, and I would like to know if this acetylene light is to be used there. If so, I would suggest that the substructure of the lighthouse should be repaired before putting in these expensive lights. I called attention a few days ago to this. The department should see that the Summerside lighthouse is put in proper repair and also the breakwater. I noticed the other evening, when the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) was asking why the 'Stanley' was taken off the Summerside and Cape Tormentine route, the reply was that the quantity of ice there made it too dangerous to leave the boat on that route. I take issue with the hon. gentleman. Where the hon. minister got his information I do not know, but I can only tell him that the ice, when the 'Stanley' was taken away in December last, was no impediment whatever. The 'Stanley' left on a very fine day. It took five hours to cross, which was an unusually long time with the conditions of the weather and the ice conditions in the harbour. In the meantime, during the whole fine day, with no notice or warning to any of the merchants or shippers of Prince Edward Island, without a word to those shipping their goods from the mainland to Prince Edward Island via Cape Tormentine, the boat left Cape Tormentine in the afternoon for Georgetown. They did not even wire to the shippers at Summerside until after the boat had left. In the meantime, the shippers at Summerside were hauling their freight, grain and products of one kind and another down to Summerside wharf to be shipped. It was not only an insult to the commercial interests of Prince Edward Island, but it was a wholly uncalled for act on the part of the department and their agents and Captain Brown upon whom they were, apparently, depending to take the boat away from Summerside when we had absolutely fine weather and the ice conditions were favourable. Let me tell the committee something about the ice conditions. On the 28th December, 1903, there were six miles of ice, that had caught with the frost of practically the last night or two. In the heaviest part of it this ice was only two inches thick. We know the capacity of the 'Stanley.'

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) will allow me, we are not on the item of which he is speaking. I raise the question of order, Mr. Chairman, We are on gas at the present time, while the hon. gentleman is speaking about ice, I think he is out of order.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I gathered from the acrimonious discussion that has gone on that the whole field of the hon. gentleman's department was open for discussion.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not at all.

Mr. LEFURGEY. And we have even gone beyond the department and have been discussing the Patent Law.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That applied to gas.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Well, I am going to try to get the minister to light these steamers with acetylene. Perhaps it will help to break the ice. This is a matter of interest to the committee and to the minister's department. The discussion of the subject has been opened and I think nothing will be gained by trying to rule me out of order. For, this is a matter that will be discussed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I rise to a question of order. If we are here to stay all night, at least we should follow the rules.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I submit that I introduced this subject on the Summerside lighthouse, and I am now moving toward the Cape Tormentine light; and I want to get the track clear of ice. As I said, the steamer passing out from the Summerside lighthouse with only two inches of ice backed up some twenty odd times. She got out of the harbour very easily but took a much longer time than she usually takes. She got down off Cape Tormentine lighthouse in about five hours. As I said, the conditions were as favourable for the boat continuing this service as at any time during the year, and the department are certainly to blame for allowing her to be taken away. Now, I turn to the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and I find here a letter from the deputy minister on the island service. I must say I take issue with the explanations of the Deputy Minister. I think I know as much about the conditions there as the Deputy Minister does, and I submit that the report is, to a large extent not correct, but conveys a wrong impression as to the situation in regard to the winter service. The minister told us last session that he was going down to Prince Edward Island to look over the service, and he did go down.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I rise to a question of order. The item under discussion is 'salaries and allowances to lighthouse keepers,' and with this the question of the service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland has nothing to do. If we are going to stay all night we will stay all night, but we might as well follow the rules. If the hon. gentleman was not here last night to discuss the question when the item under which it would properly arise was before the committee, he can take some other opportunity to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I think the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) is wandering a little from the question before the chair. He is an old member of the House and knows the importance of carrying on the debate in an orderly way. The item before us is salaries and allowances of lighthouse keepers, and, under that item I think he can hardly discuss the question to which he has been referring.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Then, how was the discussion allowed to go on for two hours on acetylene gas and patents? The question I have to bring before the committee is of great importance to the people of my section—of more importance than the subject that the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) and some other gentlemen have been discussing for so long, a discussion with absolutely no point or purpose. Now, I have a point and purpose in this, and it is to show up the mismanagement—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campebll). I must call the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) to order. I think I can hardly allow this discussion. I must ask him to keep to the question under consideration.

Mr. HACKETT. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that you rule my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) out of order. I beg to move that the committee rise.

Mr. FIELDING. There will be no difficulty in finding ample opportunity to discussing the question to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) has referred. It is an important question, but it does not happen to be related to the subject before the chair. Hon. members on both sides are interested in seeing that we confine ourselves within a reasonable regard for the rules. This is not a party question at all. We can keep one another here many months if we depart from the rules and allow too wide a range of discussion. I would appeal to my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) not to insist upon a division upon the question, but to observe the ruling of the chair. Another opportunity will be afforded for discussing the question which has been referred to, the importance of which I recognize.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am well on with the discussion of the subject now, and I would like to finish what I have to say. I do not intend to occupy more than a few minutes, and I would like to finish and get an explanation from the minister.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Mr. Hackett moves that the committee rise.

Mr. FIELDING. I hope my hon. friend from Prince will accept the suggestion I offer. The motion is quite in order, of course, but I appeal to the hon. gentleman to assist us in conducting the business of the House and not to ask a division on such a question as he has raised. The hon. gentleman is an old member of the House and knows that if we do not confine ourselves reasonably to the items before the chair, we shall not be able to have a fair discussion of any question.

Mr. HACKETT. I am anxious to expedite the business of the House and get through the session. But I find an effort being made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to shut off my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) in the discussion of the subject he has brought before the committee. I would ask, in the interest of all concerned, that the hon. member for East Prince be allowed to make his statement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). On the very next item we take up 'Agencies, rents and contingencies' it would be perfectly in order for my hon. friend to make the remarks that he was addressing to the House; but on this particular item I do not think he can make them.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he withdraw his motion, because we will reach in a little while an item upon which he can make his remarks.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) Although I do not often take up the time of this committee, yet I cannot allow this item to pass without calling the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the grievances which are complained of by an important class of our people, and I am sure he will hasten to do justice to whom justice is due, as soon as he knows the facts which I am going to state. Last year I brought before the House a copy of the petition signed by the captains of the lightships at Red Island, White Island and Lower Traverse. They get but $2,400 a year for their services. I will read that petition to the committee as it contains the reasons why the application of these men for an increase of salary should be granted. Although I have but the English version with me, I hope I may succeed in reading it well enough to make myself understood :

Quebec, December 2, 1902.

To the Honourable Raymond Préfontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries.
Ottawa.

Honourable sir,—We, the undersigned, keepers of the floating lighthouses at l'Ile Rouge, Ile Blanche and Bas de la Traverse, most humbly request you to take into consideration the fact that we have been obliged to undergo, during the present season, heavy expenses for wages and food for the crews of the vessels under our control ; and that during a full month more than in former seasons.

We commenced, last spring, fifteen days earlier than usual, and this fall we closed fifteen days later. When our salaries were established, they were fixed for seven months of service, and we have always been paid for that lapse of time. This year, the requirements of navigation demanded an additional month of service. We are always ready to do all in our power to be of service to navigation, both early in the spring and late in the fall. To do so it is necessary to keep a complete crew, and a greater amount of provisions, which costs a large amount.

We, therefore, beg of you to allow us an additional month of salary, pro rata, in order to indemnify us for such expenditure and for the services that we rendered. We also desire to draw your attention to the fact that early in the springtime navigation work is cold and hard ; and in the fall it is not only cold and hard but also dangerous. Hoping that you will take our petition into favourable consideration, we have the honour to be your very humble servants.

CAPT. JOHN IRVING,
Keeper of Ile Rouge floating lighthouse.
CAPT. REGIS LEBLANC,
Keeper of Ile Blanche floating lighthouse.
CAPT. ESDRAS LEBEL,
Keeper of Bas de la Traverse floating lighthouse.

(Translation.) Mr. Chairman, the salaries are being increased everywhere on the ground that the cost of living is higher and these men are forced to work one month more without getting more pay. Out of the $2,400 which are granted, the captain must provide for a mate, an engineer, and pay the crew and board them. Just think of the amount remaining to the captain after all those expenses have been paid. I hope the hon. minister will be able to take from these $238,000 the amount required to comply with the request of these three gentlemen, since we want them to remain at work for a longer time in view of improving the navigation in the lower St. Lawrence.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) Of course, I will consider the request made by my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) if the facts stated by him are true, that is, if these gentlemen are obliged to work fifteen days longer in spring and fifteen days longer in fall, it appears to me that their petition for an increase is only fair and reasonable. Although this estimate does not amount to so large a sum as that of last year, yet I may assure my hon. friend that steps will be taken in order that justice be done to whom justice is due, and I think the men he has mentioned are entitled to that, if he has stated the facts correctly.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does this apply only to these three men mentioned by the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) ? I think the same principle should apply to all those who, under the new regulations, have to be in the lighthouses 15 days earlier in the spring and 15 days later in the fall.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) It goes without saying that the same principle must be applied everywhere. It is but reasonable that he who is bound to work for a longer time whether it be at Kamouraska or at Témiscouata, should get more pay. The principle is fair and resonable in every case. If you force an employee to work during a longer time than he was obliged to when he took service, I think it but fair that you should pay him more on account of those additional services.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think the hon. gentleman is perfectly right. But under the circumstances he should increase this vote of $238,000. He will never be able to pay the same salaries he is paying now, and he will never be able to increase the salaries, as he says he contemplates doing, unless he increases this vote.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) Before the supplementary estimates for next year are brought down I will have time to consider this question, and I say again that I will endeavour to do justice to whom justice is due.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) I was just going to ask the hon. minister if he could not have the necessary amount voted in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the minister to say that he had dispensed with several light keepers on adopting the new system. How many did he dispense with ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I read the statement about an hour ago and will read it again if the hon. gentleman desires. We dispensed with four.

Mr. INGRAM. So all the change the hon. gentleman has made amounts to dispensing with the services of four light keepers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. So far.

Mr. INGRAM. These are marvellous changes.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are other marvellous changes.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister stated that when this new system was introduced there would be a great saving in maintenance of the lights, he said there would be a saving of $10,500 a year. Does he expect that saving to take place in the near future ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I stated that the saving for the present would be $1,610 a year.

Mr. BLAIN. I will read what the hon. gentleman said last year when he was giving to the committee the reasons for changing the old system of lighting to the new system :

> The ten new ranges of gas lights will require no keepers, saving an annual charge of $3,000, and the proposed conversion of the lights from an oil to a gas basis will enable the keepers to be dispensed with as opportunity offers, at a saving of $7,000 per year, or a total saving in cost of maintenance of $10,500 per year.

What has the hon. gentleman to say to that ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Last year I spoke of the installation of the new lights according to a new system. Of course that cannot all be done in one year. We cannot get the apparatus as fast as we would like to make the change. Last year we could only make the change in respect to four lights. We could not go faster profitably, but some hon. gentlemen opposite think we have gone too fast. We think we have been acting in the best interests of the department. Of course there are other lights besides these four where the new system will be installed.

Mr. BLAIN. In what places are the lights now in operation ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. For the present we have only made these four changes, which are on the upper lakes.

Mr. BLAIN. There was a statement made some two or three years ago, perhaps not by the hon. gentleman, but by his predecessor that there would be some changes in respect to the insurance rates on the St. Lawrence route when this new system was installed. Can the hon. gentleman make a statement in regard to that matter ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think I gave some information in regard to this question at the beginning of the session when I stated that I had been informed by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that they had obtained for their boats a special reduction in the insurance rates. I am sorry that I cannot boast, and I think every business man in this country will share my regret, that we have not yet obtained a general reduction. It is a matter which takes a long time to settle but I think that everybody should join hands in trying to better the conditions of the St. Lawrence route. We have been trying to do that and I do not think that any fault can be found with what has been done, at least since I have been at the head of the department. I have put myself at the disposal of the shipping interests, and of the Boards of Trade of different places and I have tried to carry out their recommendations. It will take some time yet but when we have carried out all the improvements and alterations that are contemplated, if we do not obtain from the British insurance companies a reduction in rates, it will be time for us to make a move so as to force the insurance companies to recognize the sacrifices that have been made by the Canadian government in order to improve the route. I think that at the present moment I can boast of the fact that we have not been reproached by any Board of Trade or any shipping federation that we have not tried to do what was best to improve the route of the St. Lawrence. Any suggestion that hon. gentlemen are disposed to give the department will certainly be received with the greatest consideration and we will try to do the best under the circumstances.

Mr. OSLER. In reference to the remarks which the hon. minister has just made as to insurance rates, I quite agree with him that nothing can be done except on business principles. I am not sure that I can agree with him that all that can be done has been done because I think that the improvement of the St. Lawrence, the proper lighting and development of the route, is of far greater importance to Canada than any transcontinental railway or any other work that is contemplated or suggested, and I do not think that the government are devoting half enough of their energy to the development of that route. This is the one way of spending money that will receive the endorsement of every man in Canada. Going back to our discussion in regard to acetylene gas I would like to ask the hon. minister who is the officer in charge of the work of replacing the old lighting with the new lights and under what recommendation the hon. minister is acting.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The engineers and staff of the department.

Mr. OSLER. Who is the head man ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The chief engineer of the department is Col. Anderson, but since last winter I have thought proper to organize a special lighthouse board composed of a number of my officials with power to call in representatives of the marine interests. When a question which interests one section of the country is to be considered these outside gentlemen will be called in. At the same time I thought it proper to appoint a special officer as lighthouse commissioner, Mr. J. F. Fraser who was employed in the department before I took charge of it. This gentleman was acting under the supervision and control of the head of the department. He has certain special duties to perform while at the same time the chief engineer remains with certain duties to perform. We felt in doing so that we were serving the interests of navigation and transportation and that we were trying to satisfy the general public interest especially in navigation because representatives of these interests would have an opportunity to be heard before this board, to make their representations and to present arguments. This board was instituted about five months ago. As far as I can learn from people interested in navigation it has given entire satisfaction. Questions that have been pending as regards the establishment of lights at certain points and about which there have been differences of opinion have been decided, and decided favourably to the interests of navigation. I think in acting in that way we have done what is best in the interest of the country.

Mr. OSLER. Has the hon. gentleman a report from the gentleman he named, Col. Anderson, in reference to this change from the old method to the new ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not know what the gist of the hon. gentleman's question is.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. minister says that Col. Anderson is in charge of the work connected with this proposed change of lighting from the old system to the new and I want to know if he has a report from that officer.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no proposed change. The change was made four or five months ago and Col. Anderson is a member of the board. He has never refused to act on the board and I do not know that he has offered any objection to the decisions or deliberations of the board.

Mr. OSLER. That is not the question I asked. I asked whether there was a report from this gentleman to the department in any shape or form in connection with the change of lighting.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. None whatever.

Mr. OSLER. No report, confidential or otherwise ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. None whatever.

Mr. OSLER. May I ask the hon. minister who Mr. Fraser is, when he was appointed to the department and if he had been formerly in any shape or way connected with an acetylene gas company ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. M. J. F. Fraser was appointed in 1893. He is a graduate of the Royal Military College and he was employed in the department on the staff of the chief engineer. He was considered the most suitable person to occupy that position of lighthouse commissioner.

Mr. OSLER. He has been in the employ of the government ever since ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Since 1893.

Mr. HACKETT. Did you declare that item carried, Mr. Chairman, when I had a motion before the chair that the committee rise ?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I understood the hon. member had withdrawn the motion.

Mr. HACKETT. I did not withdraw. I am required to give a reason why this committee should rise, and my reason is that my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) was endeavouring to show that the terms of confederation with Prince Edward Island have not been carried out, and he was refused a hearing by the Minister of Marine and the Minister of Finance, and in justice to the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) I make this motion in order that he may be heard.

Mr. FIELDING. The statement that the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) was refused a hearing by the Minister of Finance is erroneous. All I suggested was that the hon. gentleman should wait until the question was properly before the House. I quite agree that the question is an important one, but even important questions have their proper place.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The hon. gentleman for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) has given the House just cause why this question should be discussed at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). On a motion that the committee rise, you can only discuss the question as to why the committee should rise, and it is not proper to discuss a question relating to transportation in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is just exactly what I am going to do. The chairman must know that the government has not carried out the terms of confederation with Prince Edward Island, and that is the question which I am discussing at present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I am quite sure that the hon. member wishes to facilitate the business of the House, and I would point out to him that on the very next item he can discuss this question.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The reason why the committee should rise is that the government are not carrying out the terms of confederation with Prince Edward Island. We are not satisfied with the efforts nor with the bona fides of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and we say that justice is not done to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I call the hon. gentleman to order. We are now considering the vote for salaries and allowances to lighthouse keepers.

Mr. HACKETT. The motion is that the committee shall rise——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I wish to speak on this question of order which has been raised by the Minister of Marine. If this kind of thing goes on any longer my hon. friend will not get very far in his estimates.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh ; bluff.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I say that on a motion that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, hon. members can not only discuss the question as to why the committee should rise, but they can go on with the discussion as on a motion to adjourn the House. I tell my hon. friends on the other side that they will not advance their business by trying to cry us down.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. What difference does it make anyway ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am speaking to the question, and so long as my hon. friends go on in that way the business of the House will not be advanced.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not justified in using the threat that such and such will take place.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am not using any threat, but I am asking you, as chairman, to maintain order ; and I say that those gentlemen who are trying to cry me down are not in order. It is your duty to ask them to keep order, and not to call me to order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon if I have done anything wrong. When an hon. member is interrupted, he himself has the right to complain, but as some hon. gentlemen like to be interrupted, if the Speaker interferes——

Mr. CASGRAIN. How is it you interfered and called me to order when no hon. member complained ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I want the hon. gentleman to understand that no hon. gentleman has the right to throw out the threat that such and such a thing will take place unless he has his way. That is a well known rule.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to speak on the point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) was giving reasons why the committee should rise, and he associated with those reasons the urgent demands of Prince Edward Island, and he can talk to the committee until to-morrow morning if he likes and be quite within the rules of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. SPROULE. So long as the hon. gentleman keeps within the rules of debate and the rules of the House, he can talk as long as he likes on that question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman please tell me what the point of order is ? It was raised before I came in.

Mr. SPROULE. The point of order, as I understand it, is as to what the hon. gentleman had a right to talk to on the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. FIELDING. Surely my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule), on a moment's reflection, will not take the ground he practically does—that on a motion that the committee rise an hon. member may talk on any subject under heaven.

Mr. SPROULE. I made no such statement, and I want to tell the hon. Minister of Finance that there is not a man with a spark of manhood in him would misrepresent me as he has done.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. He knows I made no such statement. I said he could talk on the subject before the House, the motion that was made before the House, and give any reasons that he desired to give to the House ; not that he could talk on any subject but talk on that one subject.

Mr. FIELDING. The point which we raise is that the hon. member in making the motion must confine himself to reasons connected with the subject under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I said.

Mr. FIELDING. No, he said the hon. member was quite at liberty to introduce other matters and give any reasons he pleased.

Mr. SPROULE. I deny it, and the minister has no right to state it.

Mr. FIELDING. Just at present I have the right to be on the floor ; my hon. friend has not.

Mr. SPROULE. He has not the right to misrepresent me.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman must withdraw that remark, that I misrepresented him ; that is not parliamentary.

Mr. SPROULE. I say deliberately, if you make that statement, you misrepresent me, and I repeat it.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want any words about it, but if my hon. friend wants to quarrel I demand that he withdraw these words.

Mr. SPROULE. I shall not.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Chairman, this hon. gentleman—I regret it because he and I have generally got on very well—I want to ask if he adheres to the statement that I deliberately misrepresented him.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say deliberately. I said he had not the right to misrepresent me.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman inserted the word deliberately.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, he did.

Mr. FIELDING. 'Hansard' will show the hon. gentleman used the word deliberately.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I said, 'I say deliberately that the hon. gentleman misrepresented me,' and I meant it.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not going to quarrel with my hon. friend on that but I have raised a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. An hon. member has not the right to say that another hon. member has deliberately misrepresented him.

Mr. SPROULE. If you were listening to me you must understand that I did not say that.

Mr. FIELDING. The point on which I want a ruling is whether an hon. member on making a motion to rise, should confine himself to reasons connected with the subject before the House, or whether he is at liberty to introduce new matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am reading now from Bourinot, page 523 :

> It is not regular to move an adjournment of the debate on a question or an adjournment of the sittings of the committee to a future time ; but certain motions may be made with the same effect. If it is proposed to defer the discussion of a Bill or resolution, the motion may be made—'That the chairman do report progress and ask leave to sit again' ; and if this motion (which is equivalent to a motion for the adjournment of the debate) be agreed to, the committee rises at once, and the chairman reports accordingly.

I call your attention to the statement which is made here in Bourinot that the motion that the Chairman of the committee report progress and ask the committee to sit again is equivalent to a motion for the adjournment of the debate. Now there is no ruling better known than that on a motion for the adjournment of a debate, the House is not at all limited to the question which is then being discussed by the House, because then there would be no cause to make a motion for the adjournment of the debate. When the motion that the committee rise, is made, I take it that you can then discuss what you could discuss on the motion that the debate be adjourned. The motion that the debate be adjourned is made in order that a member may bring in another subject than the subject which is being debated when the motion is made. My hon. friend says : 'For one reason or another I was not able to discuss the question which came up yesterday and which is not now before the House. However I move that the committee do rise now, and report progress and ask leave to sit again. For what reason ? In order that I may be able to discuss this question which was discussed yesterday ; not to discuss the particular question in debate when this motion was made.' If my hon. friend will say to the House that the reason for which he makes this motion is to discuss the most important question which he is about to discuss he will be perfectly in order. He has brought before the House an important question and the reason for which he asked that the committee rise, was because he wants to discuss that question. It seems to me that if you only give me one of your ears, Mr. Chairman, I will be able to convince you that the Finance Minister is not quite right and that Bourinot is against him on this point.

Mr. FIELDING. If Bourinot is against me, my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has neglected to point out the passage. He has quoted nothing against me. I accept my hon. friend's own statement that the hon. gentleman moves that the committee rise in order that he may have an opportunity of discussing a question which was properly before the committee yesterday. In that view members could constantly be taking up matters already dealt with, and my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) is too good a constitutional lawyer to believe anything of the sort.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood my hon. friend to advise him to withdraw the motion although it was perfectly in order.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite admit that the motion is in order, but I do not admit that another hon. gentleman had the right to make a speech on another subject in connection with the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not see that we are saving much time. The hon. member from Prince Edward Island said it would take him only about ten minutes to conclude and then we could proceed with the next item. Let him conclude and then let us proceed. I think it will be better in the interests of peace, harmony and good-will to allow the hon. gentleman to proceed and have his remarks all together.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. To have peace and harmony we had better follow the rules.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We must bear in mind one or two points in considering this matter. There are two motions which can be made while in committee terminating the sitting of the committee. One is that I do leave the chair. That is equivalent to the adjournment of the House. There is another motion which is that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. That is equivalent to the adjournment of the debate in the House. Now understanding these two points, let me read Bourinot :

> Nor is it in order under cover of a motion for adjournment—to put a question which the Speaker has declared irregular, or when there is a question before the House and a member moves the adjournment, he must confine himself to the question.

That is my decision.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What question ?

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The question before the House.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The question before the House, is the reason why I moved the committee rise.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is a question very frequently put when it is meant that the chairman leave the chair it is put in this way : that the committee rise. But that is not a proper form. If you stop at 'the committee rise' it is equivalent to the chairman leaving the chair. The other motion, which is equivalent to the adjournment of the debate in the House, is that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. That is an adjournment of the day's work. The motion that I leave the chair is equivalent to a motion of adjournment in the House.

Mr. HACKETT. Do I understand by your ruling that I am out of order ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question before the House is that I do leave the chair.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to have a few words to say on that matter. I was talking a few minutes ago about a very important matter, and as the House is in possession of some of the facts regarding the conduct of the service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, I would like to call the attention——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Would the hon. member be good enough to submit to the decision of the Chair or appeal against it ? The Chair has decided that he cannot discuss any other question but the one he raised at the particular time when he raised it.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Am I to understand that after the motion that the committee rise and the statement of the hon. member for West Prince that it rises for a particular purpose to discuss a very important matter we cannot discuss that matter ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You cannot introduce a new question.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I submit that this is not a new question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We will then talk on acetylene gas. I submit that the lighthouse in Summerside harbour should be supplied with this light and that the minister should instruct his deputy to pay more attention to the general repairs and conduct of the lighthouse service around Prince Edward Island. The largest portion of the traffic of Prince Edward Island comes in and goes out of the harbour at Summerside, and we trust that a winter mail service will be established at that point and carried on without the humbugging which characterized it during the past winter. I would like to impress upon the minister the necessity of having an arrangement concluded before next winter comes on, so that the boats will be in possession of every facility for the resumption of this service.

Motion negatived

Mr. WILSON. I brought up last week the question of buoying the Napanee river and was promised the information I asked for. I did not get it until after the House took recess at six o'clock, but I find that the fault is not with the contractor. When I was at home a few days ago, he pointed out to me the difficulty. He had a letter from the department dated the 17th of April, 1903, authorizing him to go on putting out the buoys in the season of 1903 and informing him that a contract would be sent for him to sign. He went on and did the work as instructed. On the 1st of July a contract was sent to him to be signed for a year, and he signed it believing that the department would do as it had done hitherto, and consider that when he put out the buoys in the spring and looked after them during the summer and took them in again in the fall, his years' work would be done. It appears however that the department want to hold him until the 1st of June of this year and instructed him to put out the buoys again this spring. He got a lawyer to write to the department but could not find out whether the department would pay him for the extra work of putting out the buoys this spring. He therefore refused to put them out and the department have called for tenders. It seems to me that the department is to blame. They had a servant who was faithfully discharging his duty and was not getting too much for the work he did and they should have continued him in that service.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The difficulty seems to me to be that the contractor is disappointed because we have not given him the job. He got a contract for one year and fulfilled it, and now he wants it for three years more. The department decided to call for tenders. What objection has this man to tendering again ?

Mr. WILSON. The difficulty is that the department want to hold him for a year from the time he signed the contract although he had done his year's work. Here is a letter written by Mr. Herrington to the department, dated May 23rd :

Dear Sir,—I handed your letter of the 19th instant to Mr. Mowers, and while your intention may be clear, yet your letter is capable of two constructions.

Mr. Mowers had earned one year's salary by putting out the buoys last year and taking them in again in the fall.

It is true that his contract was dated the 1st June, but it really should have been dated the 18th or 19th of April, as he did immediately upon the receipt of your letter of the 17th April, 1903, go to work and prepare and put out the buoys, whereas the contract in which this very work was done is dated the 1st June.

It is better to have a clear understanding in the beginning. He is prepared to go on and prepare the buoys and put them out this season, but he would require some assurance that he will receive pay for this year's work.

If the 'Scout' takes over his contract and takes them up next fall, what pay is he to receive for putting them out this spring, as his work of preparing and putting them out is fully five times as serious as the matter of taking them in ? Mr. Mowers is not at all disposed to cavil over the matter, but as it was a mistake that the contract was ever dated the 1st June instead of the 18th or 19th of April, you can readily see that it is of the first importance to him that you and he should understand one another.

We presume that you do not contend that the pay he has already received is to cover the work you are now asking him to do.

If you will make this clear in a telegram to Mr. Mowers or to myself the work will be proceeded with.

It does seem to me that that is a very plain statement. All the minister or his deputy needed to do was to write a letter or send a telegram saying that Mr. Mowers would be paid. They write a letter and say that he will be paid, but call attention to the fact that the contract was for a year and the year was not up. So, he said : I will not do the work because I do not believe they will pay me. And what is the result ? Up to this hour the river is not buoyed. Is that the way the public service is to be neglected ? And all because the hon. minister or his deputy would not write a letter saying that a man who did certain work would be paid for doing it. I think the minister ought to tell us the reason why he did not write such a letter.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have explained the matter already a couple of times. And further discussion seems to me a loss of time. Mr. Mowers had a contract for a year to put out the buoys, and this contract expired on 1st of June. According to our interpretation of the contract, it was his duty to put out the buoys this season. He refused to do so and wanted a contract for three years. We would not consent, but have now decided to call for tenders. We did call for tenders and they will be in in a few days. Mr. Mowers is free to tender like the others. Because we would not consent to give him a contract for three years —blame is sought to be attached to us for his neglect to carry out his contract.

Mr. WILSON. I wonder if the minister is more used to holding people up than to being held up. Here is the letter I referred to :

Ottawa, April 17th, 1903.

Sir,—I have to inform you that the department will enter into a contract with you for one year for maintaining the buoy service on the Napanee river for the sum of $60 per annum, the amount paid you formerly for this service.

I have to request you to forward the name of two sureties and a contract will be made out and sent you for signature. In the meantime you may have the buoys prepared and placed in position as soon as possible.

That is signed by the deputy minister. It does seem to me that when he put out the buoys in the spring, and took care of them in the summer and took them in in the fall he had honestly performed his contract.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman's friend is not satisfied, let him give it up or tender with the others.

Mr. WILSON. I am not dealing with this as a question in which one person is interested. It is a question of the public service and the rights of the people in that section. The river is not buoyed as it ought to be.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The water is higher than it ever was, and nobody is suffering.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to know if a vessel is not as likely to go aground in a narrow river when the water is high as when it is low. The water covers the marshes and shallows, and, unless the person in charge of the vessel knows the channel well I believe he is even more likely to run his boat aground when the water is high than when the water is low.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Have there been any accidents ?

Mr. WILSON. I do not know, but the minister is not to get credit if there have not been.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The reports from my department show that there is no danger at the present time.

Mr. WILSON. Then, why buoy the river if there is no danger ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It will be buoyed in good time.

Mr. INGRAM. Under a contract for one year has the contractor to put the buoys out twice and take them in once ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is the interpretation we put on this contract—having a contract expiring 1st of June he had to do the work twice.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, this is simply a misunderstanding with the holder of the contract.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is exactly what I say. There is a misunderstanding on a question of $60. Why should the hon. gentleman raise such a cry and spend so much of the time of the House discussing such a question when this man has the privilege of tendering again ?

Mr. INGRAM. There is a very serious side to this question. If a man puts out the buoys in the spring and takes them in at the close of navigation he would perform one year's service.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We do not read it that way.

Mr. INGRAM. Surely there can be no question about it. The minister is taking advantage of mere technicality in the contract. The man says he is willing to put out the buoys a second time if he is paid, and surely he is entitled to be paid for the work he does.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Why did he not put them out in the spring like an honest man ? He would then have been entitled to $30, according to the hon. gentleman. But he did not do it ; he wanted to hold us up.

Mr. INGRAM. No, he was willing to put out the buoys a second time if the department would pay him.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Where do you find that ?

Mr. INGRAM. In the statement of the deputy which I have here :

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 13th instant in which you state that Mr. Blakely Mowers expects to be paid for placing the buoys next spring.

That is the statement of the hon. gentleman's own department.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Go on. Read.

Mr. INGRAM (reading)——

It is not at all the intention of the department to ask Mr. Mowers to put out the buoys without paying him for them this year.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Go on. Read.

Mr. INGRAM (reading)——

He entered into a contract nearly a year ago and it will terminate in June.

'It will terminate in June.'

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Go on. Read.

Mr. INGRAM (reading)——

The department has placed on the St. Lawrence river the steamer 'Scout' and many changes have been made in the buoy service with the intention of performing the work with the department's steamer. It is expected to take over the work that is now under Mr. Mower's contract and have it done by the steamer 'Scout.'

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Go on.

Mr. INGRAM. That is the end. This gentleman, in fulfilment of his contract, put out the buoys and afterwards took them in.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. He has been paid.

Mr. INGRAM. He has done a season's work, has he not ? The department says his contract does not finish until 1st of June and he must put out the buoys a second time.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. But he did not put them out. What complaint does he make ?

Mr. INGRAM. Here he is told that the work was to be taken over and done by the steamer 'Scout.' Why not pay the man for putting out the buoys a second time ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Because he did not put them out a second time.

Mr. INGRAM. Because you refused to pay him.

Mr LANCASTER. This man seems to have met with bad treatment. The minister asks what complaint he makes. Does the minister think he is bound to do a year and a half's work for a year's pay ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. I listened carefully to the discussion, and I think I am right in saying that that is in effect what the department demanded. It seems that he put out the buoys and afterwards took them in and has been paid for a year's work. The department ought to be ashamed of trying to enforce this contract merely because it was dated on the 1st of June. I think this man was clearly entitled to be paid for his extra work, and the department ought to be ashamed, if it is possible for them to be ashamed of anything, for refusing to say they would pay him if he did it.

Mr. OSLER. The action of the minister in this matter I think deserves all the censure he is getting. But that is not the most important question. The minister apparently does not realize the fact that the government has undertaken the public duty of buoying this river. They have always done it at a certain date of the year, and the minister asks whether any accident has happened because that was not done. Suppose no buoys had been put on the St. Lawrence, and the government had saved $800 or $8,000 in consequence, and no accident had happened, would that be any excuse for the minister not having put in the buoys at the proper time ? The charge is serious enough for this individual, but much more serious for the minister himself, in having allowed the river to remain unbuoyed to this late date of the season, and the boats to run the risk of accident.

Mr. INGRAM. I thought this contract commenced the 1st of June. I had not read the correspondence then, but here is what I find in this correspondence between Mr. Herrington and the department.

> It is true that this contract was dated the 1st of June, but it really should have been dated the 18th or the 19th of April, as he did immediately upon the receipt of your letter of the 17th April, 1903, go to work and prepare and put out the buoys, whereas the contract in which this very work was done is dated the 1st of June.

This man started in April to put out these buoys and he took them in in the fall. He performed his work according to the true meaning and intent of that contract, even though it was dated the 1st of June. Yet what follows ? He says :

> It is better to have a clear understanding in the beginning. He is prepared to go and prepare the buoys and put them out this season, but he would require some assurance that he will receive the pay for this year's work.

Now is there anything unreasonable about that ? There is no hon. gentleman in this House but would have taken the same reasonable understanding of this matter, and on that understanding he would have put in the buoys. It is the smallest transaction that ever I heard of in this House ; for a minister, occupying the important position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to try and hedge in this miserable, contemptible manner in a little thing of this kind. Why, I am surprised at the hon. gentleman. This man acted in a business-like and reasonable way. The amount in question is a very small one, and that makes the transaction the more contemptible on the part of the minister. I never heard anything like it before, and if the hon. gentleman says that he is going to conduct his department in this way I am prepared to tell him that for a man of his size he has a mighty hard row to hoe.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. My size is just as big as the hon. gentleman's.

Mr. INGRAM. I can tell the minister that he cannot bluff us. We have read about the hon. gentleman, and I can tell him that if he is going to indulge in crooked transactions of this character he is guilty of undignified conduct, and there is no language by which we can characterize it in terms of sufficient contempt. Then the hon. gentleman says : Why, there has been no accident. Suppose accidents had occurred, he would have been responsible for them. Can it be that this hon. gentleman has such an exalted idea of his business ability that he can permit himself to resort to miserable, contemptible tactics of this kind. If that is the hon. gentleman's estimate of the proper way of conducting his department, I can assure him he will not succeed very well. Before I had read this correspondence I thought the hon. gentleman must have had some reason, some excuse for refusing to pay this man, but since I have read it I am bound to say that he has no excuse.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may tell the hon. gentleman at once that his contempt does not reach the ankle of my foot. All I have to say about this matter is this : Mr. Mowers got a contract for putting buoys in the Napanee river.

Mr. SPROULE. When did the year commence ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It commenced on June 1, 1903. I am ready to take the interpretation of the hon. gentleman of the meaning of that contract. He got a contract for putting out the buoys for one year. Am I right in understanding that the interpretation put upon the contract by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) is that it expired at the time the buoys were taken in? Is that the hon. gentleman's interpretation?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. He says it was for $60 a year. If it is $60 a year, and the year expired when the buoys were taken in in the fall, it follows that his contract expired in the fall. Now is that the interpretation of the contract made by the hon. gentleman?

Mr. WILSON. I will tell you when you get through.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Then I conclude that is the interpretation that he puts upon the contract. If the year, whenever it expired, meant $60 for the year, and meant putting in the buoys in the spring and taking them out in the fall he would be paid for one season's work, but he would have to continue the service until June 1, 1904, and be paid extra this spring. There is no use working up such contempt about so simple a matter. There is no use getting so excited about it. I am not at all excited over it. I do not cast personalities against any person in this House. I am perfectly free to do so, but I refrain because it would be undignified on my part. Now, suppose the contract meant what the hon. gentleman from Lennox pretends, that the buoys were to be put in in the spring and taken up in the fall. The man's contract was from 1st June, 1903, to 1st June, 1904, and whatever work was necessary within that time he should have done. He was paid $60 for last year's work, and would have been paid $30 more if he had placed the buoys in the spring before June of this year. When spring came it seems that there was a misunderstanding, I admit that. Mr. Herrington—I am not saying that he interfered with the department—wanted this gentleman to get a contract for three years. We said: No, we do not intend to give a contract for three years, we intend to have this service done in another manner. What did it mean? It meant that if Mr. Mowers had put back the buoys in the spring he would have been entitled to $30 for his actual work. The department never told him he would not be paid for his work. But, he was badly advised, and he said: No, I will not put them out unless I get a contract for three years. Mr. Mowers was an uneducated man, because he does not seem to know how to write, and he was advised by other parties not to do anything until he got his own way.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman read from the correspondence the statement that he wanted a three year's contract?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The correspondence is in the department, but this is the information I get from my officers. He refused point blank to put the buoys out in the spring, but wanted a contract for three years. I do not know anything about this small potato matter, as it has been called by some hon. members on the other side of the House, and if he wanted to secure this $30 extra it would have been very easy for him to have put out the buoys, but he did not do it. We do not owe him anything. He did not spend anything. Tenders have been asked for this work and he can tender if he thinks proper. The great argument, however, is that these buoys have not been put out and that there might be danger to navigation. I have to rely on my officers as regards that. My officers report to me that there is no hurry to put the buoys out because the water is so high that there can be no danger at the present moment. It is all very well to argue like my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) who is a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway that if you do not put buoys out in the St. Lawrence an accident may occur but in this case that argument cannot apply. We know perfectly well that in certain seasons of the year there can be scarcely any danger in leaving a small river without buoys. The fact of the matter is that not later than two days ago there were no buoys at all on Lake St. John which is an immense lake in the province of Quebec and we had to send an officer up there because the contractor had not put the buoys out. Things of this kind happen every day, but there was no danger there any more than there is in the Napanee river because the buoys are put out only to indicate shoal water. At the present moment the water is high enough and navigation can be carried on over the whole lake without any danger. There was no disposition on the part of the department to ill-use this contractor or take advantage of him in any way. If he had performed any work that he was not obliged to do under his contract he would have no reason to believe that the department would not have paid him.

Mr. WILSON. I am a little bit surprised at the statements made by the hon. minister, and that accounts to me for the answers that he gave because he desired that they should be interpreted either way. The deputy minister wrote:

> He entered into the contract nearly a year ago and it will terminate in June.

Notwithstanding that, the deputy minister had written him in April, 1903, urging him to go on and do the work and saying they would send the contract for him to sign. On the strength of that letter he got the buoys ready and put them in their places. Here is a copy of the receipt that Mr. Mowers signed for the pay for the work and the department at that time did consider that he had carried out his year's contract. Mr. Herrington told him that the letters that he was getting from the department were liable to be interpreted in two ways and Mr. Mowers wanted to get an understanding from the department as to the work which he was to do. In the face of that he failed to get any declaration from the department. The hon. minister does not seem to have much confidence in Mr. Herrington.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not know him.

Mr. WILSON. He is the leading Liberal in Lennox, a gentleman who goes out and stumps against me and we are just as good friends as the minister and I or a little better. Mr. Herrington is one of the strongest Liberals in that district and he is just as disagreeable on the stump as my hon. friend is in office. This gentleman has taken the pains to write for Mr. Mowers, and he himself puts this interpretation on the letters he gets. It would have been the easiest thing in the world for the hon. minister or for his deputy to direct that a telegram be sent to Mr. Herrington: Tell Mr. Mowers to do the work and we will pay him for it. I know of nothing in regard to a two or three years contract. As I can quite understand Mr. Mowers would prefer to have a contract for three years rather than for one year because sometimes the buoys get out of order and if he has to make a new one it would be better for him to have a three years' contract because the buoys last that long. In this case Mr. Mowers was prepared to go on and do the work if he had got an answer from the department.

Mr. INGRAM. It is perfectly plain that the hon. minister wanted to make us believe something which is not borne out by this correspondence. What was the object of the deputy minister in writing that Mr. Mowers' contract terminated on the first of June? He wrote asking about putting the buoys out in the spring. It is all very well for the hon. minister to talk about entering into personalities in connection with a matter of this kind. I have not said anything personal against the hon. minister himself but I am condemning this transaction, but if it is personal to call it contemptible I will repeat that. I have nothing against the hon. gentleman personally nor against any other minister of the Crown but it does not follow that because I have that regard for him I am to sit here and endorse a transaction of this character. The hon. gentleman cannot read that correspondence and come to any other conclusion than that which I have come to in regard to it. What was the object of writing in this way, if it were not to take advantage of this man? It requires no lawyer to interpret that; a layman can interpret the object of writing that letter.

Mr. WILSON.

Mr. ALCORN. It appears very plainly on the face of this correspondence, that the whole difficulty has arisen in the department, and that Mr. Mowers was perfectly justified in the position he took, that he should not do a year and a half's work for one year's pay. The letter of the 17th of April, 1903, makes that perfectly plain. The deputy minister writing to Mr. Mowers says:

> I have to inform you that the department will enter into a contract with you for one year.

That was not one year from June, 1903, because the letter is dated in April, and it is one year from that date.

> I have to inform you that the department will enter into a contract with you for one year for maintaining the buoy service on the Napanee river for the sum of $60 per annum, the amount paid formerly for the service.

If the department had, in pursuance of their evident intention, at the date on which they wrote that letter, sent the contract dated, April, 1903, none of the difficulty would have arisen. But the department having omitted to carry out what they evidently contemplated, has resulted in the river to this hour being unbuoyed, to the danger of craft navigating this narrow and tortuous stream. I know the river and it is quite incorrect to say that because the water is high this year, dangers to navigation do not exist. The dangers, as a matter of fact, are intensified because of that reason. The river has extensive marshes, particularly on one side, and it is more difficult for a vessel to keep in the channel when the water is high, because when the water is low the land marks would be more apparent. The government has therefore made the initial mistake departmentally, in not sending the contract in April when they stated they would and afterwards taking advantage of the contract forwarded in the month of June. The department is to blame for leaving the navigation dangerous by not buoying the river up to the present time.

Mr. HACKETT. Who is the contractor for placing the buoys at Alberton, Prince Edward Island?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I cannot state from memory. I will bring the information to-morrow.

Mr. HACKETT. Was the work given by tender, or by private arrangement?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed that my officials think it was continued from year to year.

Mr. HACKETT. Without advertisement?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am not sure, but that is the information I have.

Mr. HACKETT. Who has the contract for placing the buoys at Summerside ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will bring down the information later.

Mr. LAVELL. I do not think it would be too great flattery to the minister to say that in the course of the evening he has given us one or two small pieces of information. I asked him a question some hours ago which would help us to discover what value we could place on even the little information we got from him. The minister stated on several occasions that he always paid $65 a ton for the carbide, and in view of the question asked it was important that his answer should be correct. I called his attention to this fact that according to the Auditor General's Report he had paid at the rate of $100 per ton for carbide. It is important for the House to know how far we can trust to the accuracy of the Auditor General or to the accuracy of the minister's statements.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. What was the quantity ?

Mr. LAVELL. It was only 400 pounds, but what difference does that make ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. You can make the difference.

Mr. LAVELL. It may make very little difference to the minister whether his statement is true or whether it is not, but it does make a lot of difference to the country. Does the minister contend that because it is a small quantity he had to pay $100 a ton ? The minister apparently will not answer. It may be that since he became minister the cerebral end of his corporation occupies more cubic feet than formerly. I submit that a member of this House has the right to know how far the minister's statements can be relied upon. I know from experience that you can buy 400 pounds of carbide at the rate of $65 a ton, because I have repeatedly done it myself. Why should the minister pay more? Perhaps the minister's statement in this respect may throw a side light on the accuracy of his other statements, and if his other statements are not more correct than this, I would like to know why the minister should attempt to give any information to the House at all on this or any other matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has given no satisfactory reason why the buoys are not placed on the Napanee river. A lot of money was spent by the steamer 'Scout' last year in placing buoys between Montreal and Kingston. She placed a number of buoys opposite Gananoque among the Thousand Islands, on some very dangerous shoals but she failed to pick them up again and now they are scattered all over the river in places where there are no shoals. Is it the intention of the minister to have them replaced this summer or to have them floating around the river as at present ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The information of my officials is that these buoys were placed at the demand of the hon. gentleman, at his special request, with the understanding that they would not be picked up by our steamers.

Mr. TAYLOR. The arrangements were made altogether through Mr. Britton, and the department. The hon. gentleman has no right to refer to me in the matter.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is the information I get.

Mr. TAYLOR. If you get that information from your department your officers are not worthy of giving you information. The arrangement was made with Mr. Britton. I know all about it, and I know they were placed through Mr. Britton who had been a candidate for the Liberal party there several times and I presume has the confidence of the department and with whom I suppose the department consult. It was he who arranged for having these buoys placed there and he takes all the credit. The department left them there, the ice swept them about and they are floating all around now. The 'Scout' passes there every few days ; why does she not replace them.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The information of my officer is that Mr. Britton may have been present but that the hon. gentleman himself was present, and it was arranged that the buoys would be put out but would not be taken up in the fall by our steamers. I have no other statement to make.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are there now, government property, floating around the river. The late minister (Mr. Sutherland) went over the river, saw these dangerous shoals, agreed to put buoys there and did put them there. If there was any arrangement made with Mr. Britton or any one else, about taking them up I know nothing about it. The hon. member for Toronto some time ago, asked the minister on whose representations the change was made from oil to acetylene gas in lighthouses. Was that recommended by Mr. Anderson ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have said half a dozen times that the change was made in the regular course of business. I found that the policy of the department through the engineer was perfectly satisfactory. I did not inquire whether Mr. Alexander or Mr. Fraser or some one else had recommended it, but I found that it was the policy of the department to replace the oil lamps by acetylene gas wherever necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was there a report from the engineer ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I suppose so.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can your officers not inform you ? I am informed that your engineer reported against it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed that Colonel Anderson himself started the first experiments. I understand the latest improvements on the route were made under Mr. Fraser afterwards.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then it was Mr. Fraser who recommended it to the department ? Somebody must have made a report recommending the change. The opposition are prepared and willing to grant all the money required for the improvement of the lights. I would like to have the minister bring down the report from his chief engineer or the engineer whoever he was, who made the recommendation that the change should be made. These old and faithful lighthouse keepers after serving the government for many years have been turned out almost on a day's notice.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has come out that the public service in connection with this department has been neglected, and the minister has given a most remarkable excuse. He has said that no accident has occurred from this neglect. Is that a reasonable or fair excuse to give ? If the same principle is applied to the lower St. Lawrence and the outlet to the ocean, I do not know what the results may be in the future. The excuse is weak, puerile and altogether unbecoming and unworthy of a minister.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that the House is entitled to the information as to whose recommendation was received in reference to this change. There is an impression that while the lighting may be an improvement, there may be an increase in the price that would not warrant the change. We should know at least who recommended the change and whether it was recommended by a competent person.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The experiments were begun by the chief engineer, Col. Anderson, and by Mr. Noble. They were begun before I had charge of the department. The result of the experiments was that the department a couple of years ago decided to put the system in operation. Since then it has been perfected, better apparatus has been secured, and the new system has given every satisfaction. There is no written recommendation or report that I know of, but if the hon. gentleman wants to insinuate that Col Anderson, the chief engineer, was opposed to the change, he is mistaken. A year ago, when there was an excursion to the Montreal harbour, and when the most important men of Montreal interested in shipping were complimenting the department on the improvements made in the lighting, Col. Anderson endorsed everything that had been done.

Mr. SPROULE. I made no insinuation regarding Col. Anderson being either in favour or against the change, but I only asked whether there was not a report recommending it. The minister says that the experiment was begun before he had charge of the department, but the records of the department are at his disposal, and if there be any recommendation either one way or the other, he ought to be able to procure it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I would ask my hon. friend as a business man, what difference would it make, if the change be a good one, whether it was recommended by Peter, John or Tom. The result is perfectly satisfactory not only to the department but to every body interested in shipping, and I do not see what more any one else can want.

Mr. SPROULE. All I want to get at is whether the department undertook to change the lighting without having the report of some one recommending the change. I cannot imagine any business man changing a whole system of lighting without having had an inquiry made by some one competent to judge and obtaining the report of that person. Will the minister give us the assurance that he will endeavour to ascertain whether there is any such report or recommendation, and if so submit it to the House ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have no objection to inquiring, but my officials assure me that there is no such report. No doubt the experiment was tried after consultation with the officials of the department, but it does not necessarily follow that there should have been any writing. No doubt the officials said to the minister : Here is something new, will you allow us to look into it ? And the minister answered : All right; go on and make the experiment. And we have reports from day to day how it is going on. There is no need for papers or written reports. The minister may go himself and see how the experiment is made and what the results may be expected to be. When it reaches the point where the experiment is successful, the minister orders the installation of two, three, four or five of these lights to see how they will work in practice. If it is successful, it becomes the policy of the department. I have stated that it was the policy of the department to improve these aids to navigation on these lines. The hon. gentleman speaks of acetylene. That is only one firm. We use also Pintsch gas. Between Montreal and Sorel we have fifteen or twenty gas buoys using acetylene. The navigation between Montreal and Sorel has been greatly improved, for steamers can now enter the port of Montreal or depart and go as far as Sorel at night, a thing that had never been thought of before. I take the responsibility of it; there was no written report made to me about it. I inquired of my engineers whether it would be possible to carry out the representations that had been made to me by the board of trade, the shipping interest and the harbour commissioners. I inquired whether it would be possible to make night navigation safe between Montreal and Sorel, because the channel between those points was finished and was in perfect condition. They answered me that it would be possible, that it was a question of installing a number of gas buoys. I asked them to make the calculation and authorized the purchase of the necessary apparatus for the installation. And they carried out my instructions. If you ask me was this done on the advice of Mr. J. F. Fraser, or of Col. Anderson, or of Mr. B. H. Fraser, Col. Anderson's assistant, I would say that they all worked together for the interests of the department and of the country, taking up this question as any other question would be taken up by the officers of the department. That is what we are there for. There would be no reason for the department if we were to fold our hands and not seek to improve the navigation of the river. I do not know what the object of the hon. gentleman is in insisting that there should be a report. There may be some written communication on the subject either from Mr. Anderson, Mr. B. H. Fraser or Mr. J. F. Fraser. But what difference does it make? It does not affect the working of the new plant. If I have been ill-advised by my engineers I have to stand the consequences. But I have no fear, because up to the present moment, it has been successful. At present we are trying to equip the thirty-five miles of the route between Port St. Francis and Cap à la Roche in the same way as the portion between Montreal and Sorel. These improvements benefit not only the port of Montreal, but the whole country, because they will enable vessels to navigate Lake St. Peter at night as well as by day, thus saving a great deal of time. The effect must be to cheapen freights between Montreal, at the head of navigation, and the ports of Europe. Scores of masters and others interested in navigation have told us that already these improvements have been the means of saving thousands of dollars to shippers and those interested in transportation. Take the case of the upper St. Lawrence, and it is the same thing—improve the means of navigation and you cheapen freights. We are trying to do the best we can under the circumstances, and, unless these hon. gentlemen condemn the making of these improvements, I do not see why these difficulties are raised.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister is only wasting his own time and that of the committee in putting up a man of straw only to knock him down. I did not object to the improvements. They may be all right, so far as I know. He says that there were no written reports, but that there may have been verbal ones. I take it that he did not order these changes without consulting some one and without having some one advise him that this would be a wise expenditure. All I asked was that, if there were any written reports, the hon. minister should bring them down. The hon. gentleman spoke of the upper lakes, but when he came to speak of improvements made there he mentioned one at Gananoque. He does not seem to use the expression 'upper lakes' in the same way I have been accustomed to hear it used. We speak of the upper lakes as the waters from Georgian Bay upwards. Is any provision to be made for these waters?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not under this vote. But, under a supplementary vote we are asking enough money to provide a depot on Georgian Bay so as to provide the aids to navigation as fast as possible.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. minister speaks of a depot, does he mean a manufacturing establishment to turn out these gas buoys?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, we do not manufacture the gas buoys. We have been trying to get them in Canada. Since I have been at the head of the department I have approached all the manufacturers in Montreal and Toronto and tried to convince them of the advantage they would gain by manufacturing these buoys. They are made of steel plates welded together, and the manufacture of them is very costly. There is no plant for that purpose now in Canada, and we have been obliged to import them from Germany. They are not made in the United States either, for that country has to import them from Germany also. I understand that Mr. Polson has stated that if there was sufficient market for them, and if the department would purchase them in sufficient quantity, he would install the necessary machinery. The machinery for manufacturing these buoys, according to the information I have obtained from Mr. Polson as well as from the Laurie works in Montreal, would cost about $100,000. It stands to reason that the principal purchaser would be the government. The work that is done at Prescott consists in the preparation of the gas, the manufacture of lanterns and other apparatus required. The depot is there, also the headquarters of the buoy service between Montreal and Kingston. Formerly such an expensive plant was not required, because there were not so many buoys and lights and signals in use. The department is now in a better position to give the necessary service which is required. The matter is not new, it came before the House last year. We have discussed the question with business men interested in navigation between Montreal and the lakes.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to point out that when we have tried to get some statement from the hon. minister as to who recommended the acetylene gas he replied that he did not know if there were any written reports. Now it is not to be expected that every member of this House can read all the reports laid before us from time to time. If the hon. gentleman had applied to his deputy, he could have ascertained the page and he could have referred us to page 94 of his own report, appendix No. 5, which tells us that Mr. Fraser dealt extensively with acetylene gas lights. If the minister had given us this information promptly less time would have been taken up.

Mr. SPROULE. What do these tanks cost each, I mean one that runs six months or a year ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About $875. In answer to the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), I may say that the report of Mr. J. F. Fraser was dated on the 31st of December, 1903. But I do not know that Mr. Fraser had anything to do with it. Besides Mr. J. F. Fraser there is another Mr. Fraser, who is assistant to Col. Anderson himself. So it is not extraordinary that Mr. J. F. Fraser in his report as commissioner of lights should have treated this question. He should not be reproached for it, nor should the government.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister might have told us that we could find the report in appendix 5, page 19 of his report.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The question put by the hon. member was whether, before beginning the experiment of the acetylene system, there was a report. As I explained, that was before I took charge of the department. The report to which the hon. gentleman makes allusion is that of Mr. J. F. Fraser, and is dated 31st December, 1903. The experiments had been made previously to that, and it was therefore no longer an experiment.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no absolute recommendation in this report that these are the proper lights to adopt, it merely deals with the experiments that have been made. If the hon. gentleman wants to expedite business, let him tell us where we can get this information. We have not got time to go through all these blue-books. We expect the minister and his officers to point out to us where the information is to be found, because they are familiar with their own reports.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries was laid on the table of the House at the beginning of the session. Now does the hon. gentleman suppose that my officers, even those who prepared the reports and appendices, are in a position to tell me the precise page where I can find any particulars ?

Mr. INGRAM. Certainly.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is impossible, no man's brains are equal to the task. It is not reasonable to ask the officials to do this for the members. The report is laid before the House on purpose to inform the members of its contents, and if the members of the House are not intelligent enough to read the report and post themselves, they have no right to blame the minister or his officials because they are not ready to point out the precise page where you will find such and such a thing.

Mr. INGRAM. I will guarantee that the hon. gentlemen will not get any of his brother ministers in the cabinet to endorse him in that statement. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that the Auditor General's Report, that contains hundreds of pages, along with the hon. gentleman's own two departmental reports, also many others of great size, are such that the members of the House can master all the details contained in them ? We have not the time to peruse all the blue-books that are laid on the table of the House and attend to our other duties besides. It is simply impossible and I can tell my hon. friend that if I confined myself to the mastering of the details of these two blue-books since the opening of the session to now I could tell him the page in which to find this information. Here is the hon. minister and his officers handling this department from January to December, and yet they tell us they cannot point out in the appendix to these two blue-books where we can find this information ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Why did you not ask me ?

Mr. INGRAM. We have been asking you all along.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I must deny that. If you had asked me where you could find this information from my reports I would have given you an answer at once. But, when you ask me that question in regard to all the reports in my department it is a different thing. You want me to look in all the pigeon holes of my department for reports, imaginary and otherwise. If the hon. gentleman had asked where this subject was treated in the report of the department I would have looked it up and given him the information.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend from East Grey simply asked whether there were any reports, and the minister said he did not know whether there were any or not.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That was not the report asked for.

Mr. INGRAM. That was the report. The report asked for was in regard to these experiments which were carried out with the steamer 'Scout.'

Mr. SPROULE. It is about time that we adjourned if we intend to do another day's work to-morrow.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume the understanding is that the House will be moved into Supply after routine to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. To-day, yes ; that is correct.

Motion agreed to and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 23, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. A. GIBSON moved:

That, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 20th report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for presenting private Bills be suspended in reference to a Bill respecting the New Brunswick Southern Railway Company.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I take it that this is a recommendation by a single committee. I would draw your attention to the rule of the House which says that where a rule is asked to be suspended the petition on which the request is made must be sent to two committees of the House, the committee that passes upon the principle of the Bill as well as the Committee on Standing Orders. I notice that lately there has been a complete disregard of that rule, and the rule is sometimes suspended on the recommendation of the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To what rule does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) refer ?

Mr. HAGGART. I have forgotten the number.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that that is one of the rules that is more honoured in the breach than the observance.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, lately.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 143) respecting the New Brunswick Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Gibson.

QUESTIONS.

SALMON CAUGHT IN GILL-NETS.

Mr. EARLE asked :

1. Has any communication been received by the government, or any department thereof, from cannery men in British Columbia, requesting the export to the United States of salmon caught in gill-nets in Canadian waters be prohibited ?

2. If so, what action does the government propose to take on such application ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.

2. The question was considered at the time of the adoption of the British Columbia fishery regulations, dated 2nd May, 1904, and it was decided to confine the prohibition of such export to fish caught in trap-nets.

SEIZED SEALERS—PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to inquire of the government whether they have any information as to the probable date when the claims in respect to the sealing vessels seized by the Russian government will be paid. Some persons in my province who are interested in these claims have written me asking me to impress upon the government the extreme importance to them in several cases of the payment of these claims being expedited as much as possible. If the government have any information I would be glad if they would give it either to-day or on some future occasion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no doubt that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) or the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) will be able to give the information to-morrow.

DR. HAANEL'S REPORT.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Might I ask the government in what position is the report made by Dr. Haanel in respect to smelting ores by electricity ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). The full report of Dr. Haanel has not yet been completed and it will be some time before it is completed. The preliminary report can be had at any time.

SUPPLY—THE DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any one in the House or in the country will deny the importance of the incident to which I propose to direct attention this afternoon and with respect to which I propose to move a resolution in amendment to that which has been proposed by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I regret that I was not able to give to the House last evening the tenor of this resolution, but I have sent a copy of it to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at the earliest possible moment this morning, after it had been completed. The incident to which I refer touches vitally the question whether or not we are to have in Canada a non-partisan militia force, or whether we are to have in this country partisan politics introduced into the appointment of officers and the recommendations of men for commissions in that force. I would not suppose that there could be any two opinions on what should be the correct course. Up to the present time we have not heard a great deal of politics being introduced at least into this portion of the administration of the department. I do not remember in my own province ever hearing a man's political opinions discussed in connection with an appointment to a position in the militia. It would be extremely regrettable if partisan political considerations should be allowed to interpose between the General Officer Commanding and those officers who are subordinate to him. To permit, that is to permit interference by politicians with men who are engaged in the performance of their duty, and to interfere with an officer in the performance of his duty, in that regard is certain to result in the most disastrous effect upon the militia force of this country.

The incident with which we are especially concerned this afternoon, is that which relates to the organization of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, in the eastern townships of the province of Quebec. The circumstances connected with the case have been placed quite fully before the House and the country. I shall have to come to a consideration of the correspondence which has been brought down before I conclude my remarks, but let me say for the present that having read everything that has been published on the subject, having carefully examined the correspondence which has been brought down, having listened to the statements made in this House by the hon. the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) and the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) I cannot find one jot or tittle of evidence which indicates that Colonel Smart or Colonel Whitley, his brigadier, were influenced by any political considerations whatever, in the establishment of that regiment until the Minister of Agriculture imposed such considerations upon them. I think the evidence is absolutely conclusive that these gentlemen were simply endeavouring to find the best available men, to obtain qualified men when they could obtain qualified men and in the absence of men who were qualified, that their efforts were solely and absolutely directed to appointing the most efficient men in order that that regiment might be put on the most efficient possible basis. Mere motives of self-interest would lead these men to adopt that course. Why should Colonel Smart, a man responsible for that regiment, a man only desirous to put it on the best possible basis, seek to introduce political considerations? Colonel Smart is not a partisan; I do not know what his politics are, I do not know whether he has any pronounced legal opinions. Certainly he is not a Conservative partisan and I do not think he is a Liberal partisan. Colonel Whitley is, I understand, a Liberal in politics. I have never heard that he is a political partisan but I understand that his political sympathies are with the party in power. Therefore there is no possible reason to suppose that either one of these men would have been influenced by any political considerations, certainly not by any political considerations that would lend either one of them to favour the Conservative party in the making of appointments.

The question is whether or not partisan politics were introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) into the organization of that regiment. We have had upon that subject a statement in this House by the hon. gentleman himself, and also a statement by the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) and I propose to call attention in the first place to what the Minister of Agriculture himself has said upon the subject in order that I may in that way lead up to some consideration of the correspondence which has been brought down. The statement of the Minister of Agriculture is to be found in 'Hansard' at page 4581. I shall not read the whole of it, hon. gentlemen are familiar with it. It is to this effect:

> In regard to Lord Dundonald's general statement that I interfered with the organization of the corps, and with the names of the other proposed officers of the corps as well as Dr. Pickel's, let me say this: That the only grounds on which I made any suggestions in regard to the establishment of this corps were the immense importance of the appointment of leading officers with military qualifications, who knew the country and the people of the eastern townships, the district where the corps was to be established.

Now, if we were to stop there and take that statement of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) supported as it was by the hon. the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) we might only regard the interference of the Minister of Agriculture as meddlesome, and we need not regard it as absolutely vicious. He would be only meddling in that which other men were much better qualified to do. If his interference had stopped there and had been directed solely to that object, the criticism which I am about to make this afternoon would not have been so well deserved although I do not see any reason why the Minister of Agriculture should interpose his wonderful military knowledge, between the General Officer Commanding and those men who, under the General Officer, were charged with the duty of organizing this regiment. I would not suppose that, apart from political considerations, the Minister of Agriculture would feel himself qualified to over-ride the opinions of these gentlemen so far as military qualifications are concerned, because it is in regard to military qualifications that he is speaking in the portion of his remarks to which I have called attention.

Having thus called the Minister of Agriculture as a witness in his own behalf and having quoted that portion of the written statement which he made before this House, let us now see what he said further on the subject, after a memorandum from Lord Dundonald had been read, and let us see whether or not the statement which I have just read emanating from his own lips is supported by his own language on the very same day, in fact only a few minutes afterwards. On page 4605 he said this :

> I found this list of proposed names for the staff for the neighbourhood of Sweetsburg. First, Mr. John M. Gibson, a nephew of Senator Baker, and talked of as a possible Conservative candidate, in the constituency of Missisquoi to be third in command of that regiment.

If my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture was concerning himself alone with the military qualifications of the gentlemen who were proposed to be recommended for that regiment, why was it necessary for him to inquire or to state the political opinions or the relationship of this gentleman, to whom I have just referred. He proceeded then as follows :

> Dr. Pickel, one of the strongest Conservative workers of the neighbourhood, and a family connection of Senator Baker, to be major in command of the squadron which, though gazetted for Adamsville, was to be changed to Sweetsburg to suit his convenience.

Do we find any reference there to the military qualifications of this gentleman ? No, we find there simply a reference to his political opinions and to his relationship to this same Senator Baker who seems to be the bête noir of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and who has influenced unconsciously the hon. Minister of Agriculture in regard to this important matter by the mere fact of his having opposed him, as he had a perfect right to do, in his political campaigns in the eastern townships. But, surely we do not find in these words of the hon. Minister of Agriculture any question of the military qualifications of Dr. Pickel. The minister is interested merely in his political opinions and his relationship to this same Senator Baker. What is the next remark ? It is this :

> Mr. G. H. Baker, son of Senator Baker, to be senior captain of the said squadron.

No objection to the military qualifications of Captain Baker but merely a statement that he happens, unfortunately, to be related to Senator Baker—unfortunately according to the view of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, because if Captain Baker had not been the son of his father there would have been no objection to him by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture. Then, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture proceeds as follows :

> Mr. Thos. R. Pickel, son-in-law of Senator Baker, to be the junior captain of the said squadron.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture is unable to get Senator Baker out of his mind. Senator Baker looms up before him in connection with every one of these gentlemen, and it is not their military qualifications but their connection with Senator Baker which so thoroughly alarms him in connection with the appointments to his regiment. He proceeds :

> Then there were the names of two gentlemen, Messrs. Steacie and Reynolds, of Montreal, to be lieutenants. And down at the bottom of the list Mr. Thos. F. Cotton, a Liberal, son-in-law of the above-mentioned John M. Gibson, and grand nephew of Senator Baker.

It reminds one of a genealogical table.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) smiles I am speaking of the remarks of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. This hon. gentleman who first told us that he was considering merely the qualifications of these officers has not one word to say about their military qualifications in what I have read, but he concerns himself solely with their relationship to Senator Baker and with their political opinions. Yet he had the audacity to stand up in this House and say that his interference in the affairs of that regiment was concerned solely and absolutely with the military qualifications of the officers. He may be able to reconcile these statements. I am not able to reconcile them. I regard one statement as absolutely inconsistent with the other statement. But, I will go further and quote again from what the hon. gentleman said :

And down at the bottom of the list Mr. Thos. F. Cotton, a Liberal, son-in-law of the abovementioned John M. Gibson, and grand nephew of Senator Baker.

I am a little puzzled ; I do not know whether or not the fact that Mr. Cotton was a grand nephew of Senator Baker would outweigh the fact that he was a Liberal. There are two considerations. The hon. Minister of Agriculture must have been embarrassed. He was a grand nephew of Senator Baker on the one hand, but you must take into consideration the fact that on the other hand this gentleman was a Liberal in politics.

I told these gentlemen——

Mark this—— —that, putting aside any question of military qualifications, which I afterwards went into, such a list of officers for that squadron in that neighbourhood would be held to be an instance of political preferment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This hon. gentleman who said that he was absolutely concerned with the military qualifications of these gentlemen, says here that putting aside any question of military qualifications such a list of officers would be held to be an instance of political preferment, and he continues :

It would be impossible to remove from the minds of the people of the district of Bedford the impression that the colonel who made such recommendations and was responsible for the success of this regiment had deliberately undertaken to turn that squadron, if not the whole regiment, into a political Tory organization.

Now, I venture to say that if an inquiry is granted by this government, and if Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart are examined on oath they will be able to depose that the first man and the only man who brought any political question into the regiment was the hon gentleman who sits as Minister of Agriculture in this House. The hon. gentleman went on further :

And I said that, if such a recommendation as that were to go through and be known in the district of Bedford, nothing under heaven would remove the impression from the people of the county and of the country that the new regiment was to be conducted on the lines of the old regiments there, and that it would receive its baptism and would make its beginning as a Tory organization.

That is the way in which the hon. gentleman did not introduce political considerations into the organization of this regiment. That is the way in which he did not introduce them from first to last. Let us observe further what he said at page 4608 of ' Hansard ' :

I warned these gentlemen who, not knowing the country, not knowing the individuals, not knowing the relationship in connection with these people, I believed innocently, were led by local people into doing a thing which if it had been allowed to go through would have been a fatal blow to the efficiency and the success of this regiment. Sir, I plead guilty to that much interference in the matter on the ground of politics. And if that much of such interference is not in the interest of the regiment and of the country, and if men who apparently may have been—I do not say they were—carrying on these intrigues in regard to military appointments, these political intrigues to which Lord Dundonald refers, had been permitted to carry through their proposal, instead of being an interference on behalf of Liberals, of which I am accused, it would have been a deliberate interference and political intrigue on the part of Conservatives for the purpose of making this regiment what the old regiments there were, a Tory preserve and a Tory organization.

I quote this for the purpose of showing the animus with which the hon. Minister of Agriculture entered into the discussion of this matter with Colonel Smart and Colonel Whitley. The hon. gentleman does not make it very clear who were intriguing but I would gather from his remarks that he is accusing these two officers, Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart, of carrying on that intrigue. I do not know whether he means that or not. Let me, however, say that as he refers to a family compact and refers to Senator Baker I have assurance from the best authority—Senator Baker—and I believe Colonel Smart has given the same assurance, that these two gentlemen who are accused of intriguing together have never exchanged one single word throughout their lives and are not personally acquainted with each other. That is the intrigue which the hon. Minister of Agriculture says had been going on in the eastern townships. Two gentlemen not even acquainted with each other are supposed to be intriguing for the purpose of creating a so-called Tory organization. Well, let us see what is said further about this matter. Let us see now what is said in regard to his conduct in the Order in Council which seeks to justify it :

Mr. Fisher states that so far as his interference related in any way to politics, it was not to give the new regiment a political colour, but to guard against that very evil.

And this is the same minister, who in a written statement before parliament used these words which I will quote again in order that they may not be forgotten.

The only grounds on which I made any suggestion in regard to the establishment of this corps, were the immense importance of the appointment of leading officers with military qualifications.

In the minister's own speech delivered a few minutes afterwards, and in the very Order in Council which seeks to justify him, there is a confession of his interference on political grounds. I would not require more proof of the minister's political interference, but let me quote these words from the memorandum of Lord Dundonald which was read in this House by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). Lord Dundonald says.

Shortly after the promulgation of the order authorizing the organization of the regiment, I received an order from Sir Frederick Borden to Colonel Pinault, the Deputy Minister of Militia, desiring him to stop the organization.

We have never yet had any explanation in this House as to how the Minister of Militia was induced to issue that order, stopping the organization of the regiment. Although it is said these reasons were communicated to the General Officer Commanding, they have not been communicated to this House, and knowing what we do of the conduct of the hon. minister afterwards, we cannot fail to come to the conclusion that it was the indirect interposition of the Minister of Agriculture which induced the Minister of Militia to make that order, and that it was for these partisan purposes which are disclosed in the correspondence, that the order was issued stopping and delaying the organization of that regiment. Lord Dundonald continues.

No explanation or reason for this step was vouchsafed, but indirectly I learned that the Minister of Agriculture was responsible for the delay which thus occurred.

There has been no contradiction in this House, of that statement up to the present. But that is not the chief part of the indictment against the Minister of Agriculture, because we have the direct and hitherto uncontradicted statement of the officer commanding this regiment, and whose duty it was to organize the regiment, as to the part which the Minister of Agriculture took in this matter. Colonel Smart says in his letter to Lord Dundonald :

I submitted the name of Dr. F. H. Pickel, who is mayor of the town of Sweetsburg, and warden of the county of Missisquoi, to be major in command of 'E' Squadron. Dr. Pickel is a gentleman of means, can ride fairly well, and was quite willing to take the necessary time to qualify himself for the position of major. Mr. Fisher objected to him for no other reason than that he was a strong political opponent of his, and was quite determined to block the whole organization, unless Dr. Pickel's name was withdrawn.

And yet, this is the minister who, in his first statement at least to this House, declared that his interference was for no other reason than to secure the appointment of properly qualified officers. Colonel Smart continues :

This I refused to do, as I had invited Dr. Pickel to come into the regiment, and told Mr. Fisher that some one else would have to be responsible for the withdrawal of Dr. Pickel's name.

Then Colonel Smart proceeds to deal with the facts attending the voluntary withdrawal of Dr. Pickel's name, and he gives a great many instances of cases in which the Minister of Agriculture had interfered with him. For example he says :

Hon. Mr. Fisher also took exception to the name of Mr. T. R. Pickel, who is also very enthusiastic and would make a capital cavalry officer.

I had submitted Mr. Pickel's name, recommending that he be appointed captain in 'E' Squadron, but Mr. Fisher insisted that I substitute the name of Lieutenant R. Steacie, making him captain and Mr. Pickel first lieutenant. I pointed out to Mr. Fisher that Mr. Pickel, being a resident of the townships, was entitled to a senior rank in preference to Mr. Steacie, who lives in Montreal, and, moreover, as Mr. Steacie is a relative of mine, it would place me in a false position, and appear as though I was unduly advancing him at the expense of others. However, Mr. Fisher evidently had his mind made up on the matter and insisted on the change, to which I reluctantly agreed. I regret to say that this caused some dissatisfaction, and I would like at the first opportunity to transfer Mr. Steacie to another squadron and recommend Mr. Pickel for his captaincy.

And let us see what the Minister of Agriculture had to do with the case of Captain Converse, a gentleman who in the memorandum brought down only yesterday by the government, is described as the most capable cavalry officer in Canada. Colonel Smart says :

With regard to the adjutancy, Captain Converse, whom I selected for this position, has served in the militia for about (15) fifteen years, and for a long time served as sergeant-major in the Duke of York's Hussars. Mr. Fisher asked me to drop this gentleman and substitute Mr. Adams, of the 6th Hussars, a gentleman who is very deaf, and whom I consider physically unfit for the position.

But, you will observe throughout all, that the Minister of Agriculture is solely concerned with obtaining officers qualified for the position, and for that reason he wanted to put to one side Captain Converse who is described as the best cavalry officer in Canada, and to substitute for him Mr. Adams, a gentleman so deaf as to be incapable of acting, in the opinion of Colonel Smart. And, according to the statement of Colonel Smart, Captain Adams was so sure of the effect which political power in the hands of the minister could exercise, that he openly threatened Colonel Smart in the presence of Colonel Whitley with the exercise of his political influence. And, Sir, the political influence which Mr. Adams declared he could have exercised, has been very effectively exercised by the Minister of Agriculture. I venture to say, that if the government sees fit to grant an inquiry into that most important statement made by Colonel Smart as to the threats of Captain Adams, they will find that Colonel Smart is corroborated by Colonel Whitley, his brigadier. Colonel Smart says :

I absolutely declined to consider this at all, and Mr. Fisher waived his objections.

But he was not finished with Mr. Adams yet, as we shall see.

He then asked me to recommend Mr. Adams for major to command 'E' squadron, and this I flatly declined to do.

Mr. Fisher asked Colonel Smart to recommend Mr. Adams in place of Dr. Pickel whom Mr. Fisher had rejected, and yet this is the hon. gentleman who was concerned solely with assisting the Colonel who was to organize the regiment, in the selection of officers duly qualified for command. The Minister of Agriculture seems to have regarded his own judgment as absolutely superior to that of these experienced officers; he thought himself much more competent and more qualified to select officers, having regard to military qualifications, than were the experienced military men whom this country paid to discharge that duty.

Now, Sir, I shall consider for a moment what is the position of the General Officer Commanding, and what is the position of the Minister himself ? This regiment was about to be organized and the commanding officer had been chosen, whose duty was to select and report the names of his subordinate officers for recommendation by the General Officer Commanding. After the General Officer Commanding had recommended these names to the Minister of Militia, the Minister of Militia would of course have the responsibility of either approving of them or rejecting them. There is no question of that, under the system of government which we have in this country. Let us see what the statute says about the status of the Minister of Militia :

There shall be a Minister of Militia and Defence who shall be charged with and be responsible for the administration of militia affairs including all matters involving expenditure and of the fortifications, gun-boats ordnance, ammunition, arms, armouries, stores, munitions and habiliments of war belonging to Canada.

The duties of the General Officer Commanding are defined as follows :

There shall be appointed an officer who holds the rank of colonel or rank superior thereto in Her Majesty's regular army, who shall be charged, under the orders of Her Majesty, with the military command and discipline of the militia, and who, while he holds such appointment, shall have the rank of major general in the militia, and shall be paid at the rate of four thousand dollars per annum in full of all pay and allowances.

It is therefore to be observed that under the statute the General Officer Commanding is charged with the military command and discipline of the militia. Regulations have been made under the statute which further defines his status and his duties. They are as follows :

He is the principal adviser of the Minister of Militia and Defence on all military questions ; is charged with the general supervision of the military branch of the department; issues general orders, and holds periodical inspections of the militia.

He is charged with the distribution, quartering and localization of the militia ; with the preparation and maintenance of detailed plans for mobilization ; with the preparation of schemes for offensive and defensive operations ; and with the collection and compilation of military information.

And I direct the attention of the House to the next clause :

He recommends to the Minister of Militia and Defence fit and proper persons for appointment to commissions in the militia ; and proposes fit and proper officers for promotion, for staff and other military appointments and for military honours and rewards.

Therefore the General Officer Commanding had imposed upon him by statute not only the military command and discipline of the militia, but the duty of recommending to the Minister of Militia and Defence fit and proper persons for appointment to commissions in the militia.

Now, one question which we must consider in this discussion is whether or not, having regard to the terms of that statute, the General Officer Commanding, in making his recommendations, is to be interfered with by the Minister of Agriculture ; because he is certainly interfered with if the Minister of Agriculture interposes his partisan political influence between the General Officer Commanding and his subordinate officers. The General Officer Commanding has the duty of making these recommendations to the Minister of Militia and Defence, and the subordinate officers of the General Officer Commanding have the duty of reporting to him, for his recommendation, the names of those persons : and the question with which we are confronted to-day is whether any cabinet minister, having no duties in connection with the militia, is to interpose his partisan political influence between the reports of the subordinate officers and the recommendation which is to be made by the General Officer Commanding. The General Officer Commanding, as I contend, is entitled to have the reports of the subordinate officers, unhampered and unobstructed by political interference. That interference went so far in this case as absolutely to delay and stop the organization of the regiment, as I will show before I get through. Indeed, I need not say before I get through; because, unless the language of Colonel Smart is absolutely unjustified, he himself has proved by his letter to Lord Dundonald that that was the effect of the unwarranted interference of the Minister of Agriculture in that regard.

Before dealing with the correspondence which has been brought down, I want to say a word or two about documents which have not been brought down, but have been suppressed—I am not using that word in any offensive sense. There is a letter of the Minister of Militia to Colonel Whitley referred to on page 10 of the menorandum. The Minister of Militia says this:

> Towards the end of March last I wrote to Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley, expressing a desire to see him.

It would have been important, I think, to have had that letter brought down. I do not know whether it has been omitted by an oversight. I trust that it will be brought down before this discussion closes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may say that there was no objection at all to bringing it down. I would be glad to bring it down. It was marked private, and for that reason was not brought down. But I will ask Colonel Whitley for his consent, because I would prefer to have it brought down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, there are the letters of Colonel Whitley to the Minister of Agriculture of the 14th and 15th of May.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I would like to say to the hon. gentleman that Colonel Whitley requests that those letters should not be brought down. They were marked private by him, and he has requested that they be kept private.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has Colonel Whitley made that request by letter or orally?

Mr. FISHER. By telephone, to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I do not know why the letters of a brigadier in the militia to the Minister of Agriculture should be marked private. The Minister of Agriculture has some status in this matter or he has no status. I think he has no status. If he claims to have a status which justifies him in interfering with the affairs of this regiment, why is it that official communications respecting the organization of this regiment from an officer of Canada to the Minister of Agriculture should be marked private, and that this House should be deprived of them because either the Minister of Agriculture or Colonel Whitley thinks they should not be brought down? Why may we not have all communications in the Department of Militia or any other public department marked private? Why may we not have every report by a paid officer of this country marked private, and have ministers of the Crown refuse to have them brought down because they are marked private? Where are we to stop? Do not those letters relate to the organization of this regiment? Will my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture deny that? And yet these letters are to be withheld from parliament because Colonel Whitley, an officer paid by this country for his services, thinks they should not be brought down. I do not know whether any suggestion was made to Colonel Whitley on that point; I do not know whether any intimation was given to him. From what I have heard of that gallant gentleman, I would not believe that he would write letters which he was not willing to have placed before parliament and the country unless he was led into some specious intrigue by the Minister of Agriculture which he might not be willing to disclose. Apart from that, I do not know of any reason why letters of Colonel Whitley or letters of any other officer of the militia with regard to matters of this kind should not be laid before this House. There were inclosures in one of these letters of Colonel Whitley. They are referred to on page 26 of this memorandum. The Minister of Agriculture says this, in his letter dated May 20, 1904:

> I have read your letters and the inclosures, and want to assure you not only that I am very glad things have now been settled, but that I appreciate the efforts which you and Colonel Smart have made to make things satisfactory.

Are the inclosures confidential? Might I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture whether the inclosures were also confidential?

Mr. FISHER. They are sent back to Colonel Whitley at his request. They are not in my possession. I do not know anything about them beyond having looked them over.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Colonel Whitley is I believe, the brigadier of the eastern townships and a salaried officer of this government. If he has documents of that kind in his possession, they can be produced. The government can produce them, if they desire, but we cannot. Why were not these inclosures brought down? But that is not all. The Minister of Agriculture proceeds as follows:—

> I have written to our friends telling them that this has been done and urging them to take hold of their work energetically and loyally, and I am sure they will do so.

Why should not these letters to 'our friends' be produced? They would show to what extent the Minister of Agriculture was interfering in the affairs of the regiment.

I take it for granted he has written nothing of which he is ashamed. If he is not ashamed of them, why does he not bring these letters down ? If he was interfering in the organization of this regiment, he must have been doing so as a public man, as one having some official status ; and as he wrote to Colonel Whitley and in that letter referred to inclosures, and as his own letter has been brought down, why should not the documents mentioned in that letter be also brought down ? How it is that these documents are any more private or privileged than the letter itself ? That letter could just as well be regarded as private as the documents referred to in it. Yet we have not one of these various documents to which I have referred. For some reason that I cannot very well appreciate, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture thinks they should not be produced.

As I have said already, the interference of my hon. friend in this matter evidently began early in March and was exercised up to the 20th of May, when he said he was acting as Minister of Militia. I do not know in what way he was really acting as Minister of Militia and Defence after all, but certainly up to the 19th of May he was not acting in that capacity. Yet his friends have been representing to the public that his only interference in the affairs of this regiment was when he was acting Minister of Militia and Defence in the absence of the hon. member for Kings, Nova Scotia (Sir Frederick Borden). That is the impression which his friends are seeking to convey throughout the country. But the interference of the Minister of Agriculture began as far back as the month of March and continued without intermission, as the correspondence and the evidence show, until the 19th of May, when he undertook, at the request of the Deputy Minister of Militia, to sign a certain recommendation in council. Let us see what authority he had to act. At page 24 of the return we have that authority which is contained in letter No. 5 on that page. That letter is as follows :—

Ottawa, May 19, 1904.

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Fisher,—Will you kindly sign the inclosed for the minister and if possible have it passed to-day.

Very faithfully yours,
L. F. PINAULT.

That is the only authority which my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture had, and that is the only occasion on which he undertook to act officially for the Minister of Militia and Defence. If power can be given by any minister through his deputy, to another minister to act for him, if in that informal way one minister can vest in another all the powers conferred upon him by statute, I am very much surprised. But when we come a little further on, we find the mode in which the hon. minister did purport to act. He purported to act in this way :—

Ottawa, May 19th, 1904.

To His Excellency
The Governor General in Council.

The undersigned has the honour to recommend for your Excellency's approval, the attached draft general order, containing appointments and promotions, 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, the same having been recommended by the General Officer Commanding.

Respectfully submitted,
SYDNEY FISHER
for F. W. Borden,
Minister of Militia and Defence.

The Minister of Agriculture does not purport to be the acting Minister of Militia and Defence, but simply purports to sign his name for F. W. Borden, who is the Minister of Militia and Defence. I would not understand that, under any authority contained in that letter signed by Colonel Pinault, the Minister of Agriculture could have taken upon himself the functions of Minister of Militia. I should think that any authority of that kind would have to be conferred in some more formal way.

Before dealing with the correspondence, let me say further that my hon. friend takes great credit to himself for not having objected to all the Conservatives who were named by Colonel Smart and for having recommended some Conservatives. Well, as I understand the facts, Major Gibson was recommended, in the first instance, by Colonel Roy long before the Minister of Agriculture began his interference. I understand also that Captain G. H. Baker was transferred from the 6th Hussars, which he had originally entered, at the instance and request of Col. Amyrauld, formerly law partner of the late Mr. Duffy, provincial treasurer. So far as these gentlemen are concerned, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture had nothing to do with their appointment or recommendation. They were recommended by Colonels Roy and Amyrauld long before he began his interference. I understand also that Mr. Russell and Mr. T. R. Pickel were recommended by Colonel Roy and selected by him in conjunction with Colonel Smart. I have that information and I believe it to be accurate. The government have opportunities for discovering the truth. And Captain Converse, to whom the Minister of Agriculture objected, is described in the memo. brought down—described by Colonel Whitley, I think—as the best cavalry officer in Canada.

Before coming to the correspondence as to the net result of the efforts of Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart to organize this regiment, which has been described by the Minister of Agriculture as a Tory organization—or rather he has said that the efforts of Colonels Smart and Whitley would have converted it into a Tory organization—let me say that some investigation into the facts in that regard has been made by a gentleman connected with the Toronto 'News,' an independent journal, certainly not unfriendly to this administration, and the matter has been summed up in that journal, after what was evidently very careful research. Referring to Colonel Smart, the correspondent says this :

He is associated with no party organization. In his old corps politics constituted a forbidden subject, and his only idea was to ignore politics in forming his new corps. As a nucleus for the 13th he was given two squadrons of the 6th. One of the squadrons is commanded by a Liberal, the other by a Conservative. He had to find three more squadron leaders. Of the three men he selected, two are Liberals and the third, Dr. Pickel, is a Conservative. Thus, if noses are to be counted politically a majority of the five squadron leaders would be Liberal. A number of his officers, by the way, came from the old 79th Shefford and Brome Highlanders.

Further on in discussing this incident, the same journal said :

Of the eight senior combatant officers, we find the second in command and three squadron leaders Liberals, the third in command and two squadron leaders Conservatives, the commanding officer an independent. One of the Conservative officers only got his post after it had been declined by a strong Liberal. The brigadier, under whose immediate supervision the organization work was carried on, is a Liberal.

Perhaps the political complexion of the officers can best be set forth by a table :

	Liberal.	Conservative.	Independent or Unknown.
Staff	2	5	1
'A' squadron ..	4	4	..
'B' squadron ..	3	1	..
'C' squadron ..	3	2	..
'D' squadron ..	2	1	2
'E' squadron ..	1	3	1
Total	15	16	4

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That first squadron should be three Liberals and one Conservative, not four.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I am taking it just as it is given. Therefore, there is a total of 15 Liberal officers, 16 Conservatives, and 4 independent or unknown. And that is practically as it was proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel Smart in the first instance, as I understand ; and surely my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture and those gentlemen who so vociferously cheered his remarks will not pretend for a moment in this House that any such organization of a regiment as that can be regarded as a Tory organization. I do not think it would make any difference if all the officers were Liberals, or if they were all Conservatives, provided they were the best men for the positions. I do not believe that Lieutenant-Colonel Smart had it in his mind to inquire or did inquire—until forced to do so by the Minister of Agriculture—whether any men he selected were Liberals or Conservatives in politics. Further than that, I may say once more that, while the Minister of Agriculture, in his zeal was anxious to impose Mr. Adams as adjutant of this corps, he was not less urgent in support of three gentlemen named Miltimore, two of whom had no military experience The Minister of Agriculture was shocked at the idea of two Pickels, but rejoiced at three Miltimores. It just happened curiously enough that the two Pickels were Conservatives while the three Miltimores were Liberals. And yet, we are told, he had not the slightest idea of introducing politics when he interfered with the affairs of this regiment. Further than that, I am informed, and I believe that the information is correct, that Mr. T. R. Pickel tried to induce a Mr. Matthew Ruiter an ardent Liberal and mayor of Cowansville to take his place. And Mr. Ruiter, though he did not take that place, has given his most loyal support to the squadron.

Now, I must refer at a little length to the correspondence brought down and I must refer to it in order of date. In February, 1904, the General Officer Commanding gave the usual orders to organize the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons. On the 19th November, Lieutenant-Colonel Smart was gazetted chief in command. Shortly afterwards, the General Officer Commanding was, for some reason not explained, ordered by the Minister of Militia to stop the organization. The Minister of Militia says :

Towards the end of March last, I wrote to Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley, expressing a desire to see him. Having learned afterwards that he was in England, I requested the general to suspend the work of organization until Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley's return, having previously explained the reasons to the military secretary for the information of the general.

We do not know what the reasons are. Perhaps we may hear before this discussion is concluded. On the 11th April a formal order was issued in these words :

Ottawa, April 11th, 1904.

The General Officer Commanding.

With reference to the establishment of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, will you be so kind as to suspend the organization of this regiment until further orders.

L. F. PINAULT, Colonel,
Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

That was followed by this :

Ottawa, April 29th, 1904.

To the General Officer Commanding.

On the 11th instant a minute was sent you requesting that the organization of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons be suspended until further orders.

It has been brought to the minister's attention that the organization of this corps is being proceeded with, and he desires that the District Officer Commanding be at once notified to suspend the work until further orders.

L. F. PINAULT, Colonel,
Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

I think the Minister of Militia and Defence owes it to himself, to rise in this debate and explain to the House, in the first place, why it was he saw fit in April to stop the organization of this regiment which he himself had directed in February, and why, in the next place he supplemented that direction by the imperative command contained in the order of April 29th which I have just read. That command says, 'It has been brought to the minister's attention that the organization of this corps is being proceeded with.' Who brought it to the attention of the Minister of Militia ? Was it, by any chance, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture ? And was there any question of introducing politics in it ? Let us see what took place afterwards and perhaps we can form a judgment with regard to that. On 3rd May, the order which I have just read was followed by a direction from the Military Secretary to the District Officer Commanding which is as follows :

Ottawa, May 3, 1904.

From the Military Secretary, to the District Officer Commanding Military District No. 6, St. Johns, P.Q.

It is directed that the organization of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons is suspended for the present. Notification to that effect should, at once, be sent to the lieutenant-colonel commanding.

HENRY SMITH, Lieut.-Col.,
Military Secretary.

At this stage, it might be well for us to consider the effect which this delay had. In order that we may estimate the results of this delay, directed by the Minister of Militia, let us look at Lieutenant-Colonel Smart's letter to the officer commanding the brigade dated 1st June which is to be found at page 40 of the correspondence. It is addressed to the officer commanding the Eastern Townships Cavalry Brigade. In the course of the letter Lieutenant-Colonel Smart says :

When I took command of the regiment, I was prepared to have the organization fully completed in time for the brigade camp this month, and have laid my plans accordingly, sparing neither time nor expense to accomplish it, but owing to the unfortunate delays to which I have been subjected, which were entirely beyond my control, I now find it impossible for me to realize my expectations.

That is the result, according to the official report of Lieutenant-Colonel Smart to his immediately superior officer. To the same effect is the letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Smart to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). The Minister of Agriculture had interfered to such an extent that Lieutenant-Colonel Smart seems to have thought it necessary that he should report to him as well as to the officer immediately above him, and on the 1st of June notifies Mr. Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, that he is unable to take the regiment into camp in its present unorganized state. This letter was sent to the Minister of Agriculture, for his information as it is said, and the Minister of Agriculture in replying on 3rd June said :

I have always thought that it was impossible for you to organize a new squadron in time for that camp.

Lieutenant-Colonel Smart was of opinion that he could get the regiment organized in time to take it in to camp, but the Minister of Agriculture with that superior knowledge of military affairs which has characterized him throughout, tells the commanding officer that he has always known from the first that it would be impossible for him to organize any squadron in time. Then he goes on to say :

I will recommend this to Sir Frederick Borden and hope that everything will be satisfactorily arranged for you to have a September camp. During the summer I have no doubt I shall be able to find some other young men who will take positions so as to better fill up your regiment.

That shows to what extent the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) was willing to commit the charge of his department to his gallant—I suppose I should say gallant —to his hon. and gallant colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). Now, the organization having been suspended negotiations proceeded with my hon. and gallant friend the Minister of Agriculture. And the Minister of Militia stated, in his memorandum read in this House :

Early, in May, Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley brought Lieutenant Colonel Smart to Ottawa to see me. . . . . Both expressed a strong desire to have the general order put through quickly so that the regiment might go to camp.

The question was whether or not the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Militia could be induced to permit the organization to proceed. There was an interview that morning with the Minister of Militia, but the real interview, the important event, took place in the afternoon, between Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley and Lieutenant-Colonel Smart on the one hand and the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture on the other hand. There is a reference to that in the correspondence. I refer to the letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Smart to Mr. Fisher of 9th May. And that letter shows the extent to which the Minister of Agriculture interfered in the affairs of this regiment. It is as follows :

Montreal, May 9, 1904.

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Fisher,—Agreeable to your request at our interview last Friday, I now inclose herein memo. showing establishment of my regiment, also a list of all staff officers, with the exception of the veterinary surgeon, and all the various squadron officers recommended to date.

Now, is that not a curious letter to come from Colonel Charles A. Smart, engaged in the organization of this regiment, not to the Minister of Militia, but to the Minister of Agriculture? He incloses to the Minister of Agriculture who has nothing whatever to do with the militia, a memorandum showing the establishment of his regiment and all the various squadron officers recommended to date. He goes on:

I am showing the headquarters of 'B' Squadron as Knowlton, instead of Mansonville, as per arrangement made with you.

That is per arrangement, not made with the Minister of Militia, or with the General Officer Commanding, or under the direction of his superior officer, but 'as per arrangement made with you,' the Minister of Agriculture. And then, knowing that the Minister of Agriculture ought to have nothing to do with it, Colonel Smart adds:

And I am writing officially to-day through the proper channel asking that the change be made.

Then he proceeds as follows:

As you desired, I am not asking for the transfer of 'E' Squadron headquarters from Adamsville to Sweetsburg, meantime, but will wait until I hear further—— —from the General Officer Commanding, or the brigadier under him? No.

—until I hear further from you.

He can do nothing until he hears from the Minister of Agriculture. He continues:

With reference to the position of the veterinary surgeon, I would be pleased if you would recommend a good veterinary surgeon for this position. Dr. Irwin, of Waterloo, applied to me personally for this position, and I would have been pleased to recommend him as Mr. Parmelee spoke very highly of him, but unfortunately he is veterinary-surgeon in the Granby Field Battery, and Major Seale of that corps objected to having Dr. Irwin transferred, so I had to drop the matter. The only available veterinary-surgeon I know of is Dr. Dyer, of Sutton.

Then what follows?

Would he be acceptable to you? I would be glad to hear from you as early as possible about this matter to enable me to complete my staff.

Then there is a list of officers inclosed. The officer commanding is, of course, Colonel Smart. The officers recommended to date are:

Second in command, Major D. M. Stewart, Montreal.
Third in command, Mr. John G. Gibson, R.M.C., Cowansville.
Adjutant, Capt. W. B. Converse, Montreal.
Paymaster, Lt. M. F. Goddard, South Stukley.
Quartermaster, Lt. M. C. Martin, Waterloo.
Medical officer, Sur. Mjr. Macdonald, Sutton.
Medical officer, Sur. Lt. S. H. Martin, Waterloo.
Vet. Surgeon, still vacant.

Until the Minister of Agriculture can recommend a proper officer. Then he goes on to give a list of the squadron officers:

'A' Squadron.

Major, Major B. B. Morrill, Stanstead.
Captain, Captain Lincoln, Stanstead.
Captain, Captain Curtis, Stanstead.
Lieutenant, Lieut. G. W. Pomeray, Stanstead.
Lieutenant, Lieut. Cowans, Stanstead.
Lieutenant, Mr. H. B. Wheeler, Stanstead.

'B' Squadron.

Major, Major Guy Carr, Compton.
Captain, to be filled.
Captain, to be filled.
1st Lieutenant, Mr. J. M. Miltimore, Compton.

'C' Squadron.

Major, Capt. N. R. Moffat, West Ely.
Captain, Dr. Vaillancourt, Waterloo.
Captain, five lieutenants, Capt. Moffat has not yet submitted names for these.

'D' Squadron.

Major, Lt. E. J. Holland, V.C., Montreal.
Captain, Mr. W. H. Russell, Stanbridge East.
Captain, Mr. G. B. Bullard, Stanbridge East.
1st Lieutenant, Mr. C. W. McLean, Montreal.
1st Lieutenant, Mr. H. G. Sewell, Montreal.
1st Lieutenant, Mr. W. P. Miltimore, Sweetsburg.

'E' Squadron.

Major, Dr. F. H. Pickel, Sweetsburg.
Captain, Lt. E. H. Baker, Sweetsburg.
Captain, Mr. Thos. R. Pickel Sweetsburg.
1st Lieut., Lt. R. Steacie, Montreal.
1st Lieut., Mr. H. W. Reynolds, Montreal.
1st Lieut., Mr. Thos. F. Cotton, Sweetsburg.

Now, what happened next? Let us trace the steps one by one in order that we may appreciate what follows. First, we had the organization of this regiment ordered in February. We had it stopped early in March. We had a direction issued to stop the organization on April 11th. We had that direction renewed on April 29th. We had that direction communicated to the General Officer Commanding on May 3rd, and we had Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart summoned to Ottawa to meet the Minister of Agriculture on May 6th. Then we had the correspondence, in which Colonel Smart is forced humbly to ask for the recommendations and the permission of the Minister of Agriculture; and then, on May 12th, after all these negotiations had gone on, the Minister of Militia was graciously pleased with the consent of the Minister of Agriculture to order that the organization might proceed. The Minister of Agriculture had been accomplishing his work of interference, matters were being arranged satisfactory, as one of the letters to which I shall refer expressed it, and so the organization of this regiment having been stopped for two months, it was now allowed to proceed, the Minister of Agriculture having had arrangements made to satisfy him, or at least having so fixed matters that no officers could be recommended by Colonel Smart to the General Officer Commanding unless the Minister of Agriculture was pleased to concur in the recommendation. On May 13th there is a letter, which is also found in this memorandum, from the Minister of Agriculture to Colonel Smart. That is a very interesting letter. It is in reply to the one which I have just read, and is as follows :

Ottawa, May 13, 1904.

Dear Colonel Smart,—I beg to acknowledge yours of the 9th instant and the list of officers therein contained.

The gallant gentleman looked over this list of officers, and we will see what his opinion is in regard to them :

I am very glad to look over this, and in a general way am quite satisfied with what you have done. There are, however, one or two suggestions which I beg to make.

In the first place, I note that although in 'D' Squadron you have changed Mr. Russell and Lieutenant Holland, making the latter major and the former captain, you have still kept Dr. Pickel as major of 'E' Squadron. I thought it was thoroughly understood with us that this should not be, and that for the same reason that Holland was made major of 'D' Squadron, some officer of experience should be made major of 'E' Squadron.

I note also—what was not developed in our conversation—that in addition to Dr. Pickel and Lieutenant Baker, Mr. Thomas Pickel seems to have been offered a junior captaincy, and that two lieutenants of that squadron are suggested from Montreal, both apparently in the list to be senior to Mr. Cotton.

I am going out to the county to-morrow and expect to see a number of the men who are interested in the regiment at Cowansville to-morrow or Sunday——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sunday !

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To-morrow or Sunday,' yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sunday ; oh, oh.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (reading)— —and will be able in the beginning of the week to write you more fully.

I think the interview was really held on Saturday night. If I remember correctly, the Minister of Agriculture made some reference to it when it was mentioned in the House, and denied that any such interview had been held at that time. If I remember his remarks, he denied that there was any such interview.

Mr. FISHER. No, no.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend did not deny that ?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) read a newspaper report of such an interview, which I stated was a tissue of misrepresentations.

Mr. HAGGART. He said further than that, that no such interview occurred.

Mr. FISHER. No, I did not. Refer to the 'Hansard' and you will see.

Mr. HAGGART. If you will look up the debates you will find it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I gathered from the remarks of the hon. minister at the time that no such interview had taken place.

Mr. FISHER. I made no such statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was an interview with the hon. gentleman's party friends ?

Mr. FISHER. There was an interview with some gentlemen interested in this regiment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I shall proceed with the letter. The hon. minister deals with the matter very fully in this case, and some of his remarks are very suggestive. He goes on :

I note also that a certain Captain Converse is suggested as adjutant.

Mr. FISHER. While the matter is up, I may say that I have looked up the 'Hansard,' revised, page 4646. I simply said :

I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, that that statement is a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end.

That is all the denial I made.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the page ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Page 4646.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (reading)—

I note also that a certain Captain Converse is suggested as adjutant. I think it would be very much better to name Mr. Adams as adjutant of this regiment, transferring him from the Montreal regiment. I have not consulted him, nor do I know whether he wishes it or would consent to it, but I think it would be extremely desirable that Colonel Whitley or you should offer Mr. Adams the adjutancy of this regiment. He is from the county, is known out there to take an interest in military matters and will be able to contribute very much to the raising of the regiment and to its organization. I accept fully that his deafness precludes him from being one of the staff ; but if it does not preclude him from being adjutant of the regiment in Montreal, it cannot preclude him from being adjutant of this regiment.

The hon. gentleman is absolutely interested in the efficiency of this regiment. In a memorandum which was brought down yesterday Captain Converse is described in the handwriting of Colonel Whitley, if I am not mistaken, as the most efficient cavalry officer in the county, and when Colonel Smart desired to appoint Captain Converse to the adjutancy of that regiment, having the best qualifications, Captain Converse being, I suppose a Conservative, the hon. Minister of Agriculture desired to put him to one side and appoint to that position a gentleman whom the colonel absolutely refused to accept because his deafness precluded him from filling that position. Now, the next paragraph is also significant and it indicates to us very clearly the status which the the hon. Minister of Agriculture regarded himself as possessing :

I accept freely——

Mark you——

—I accept freely Major Stewart's appointment as second in command, and Mr. Gibson as third in command,——

How very fortunate for these gentlemen it was that the hon. Minister of Agriculture had no objection to them.

—also Surgeon Major Macdonald as senior medical officer, he being no doubt the senior medical militiaman in the district. I have been told since I saw you that he does not care to enter a cavalry regiment. If this is so, I will be glad to search for another medical officer, but I trust that Surgeon-Major Macdonald will accept, if only for a short time.

Surgeon-Lieutenant Martin also is quite acceptable.

Matters are going smoothly for Colonel Smart. The hon. Minister of Agriculture was graciously pleased to be satisfied with several of these nominations.

In regard to the appointment of Lieutenant Goddard as paymaster and Lieutenant Martin as quartermaster, I would say that Lieutenant Goddard acted as quartermaster at the last camp for the 79th, and that he has asked Mr. Parmelee and myself to be appointed quartermaster in this new regiment.

He does not make his application to the colonel commanding ; he simply goes to the Minister of Agriculture and desires the appointment.

Under these circumstances I must ask you——

I must ask you——

—to change Lieutenants Goddard and Martin, and make Lieutenant Goddard quartermaster and Lieutenant Martin paymaster.

He has, to use a Scotch expression, a very good conceit of himself when he informs the lieutenant-colonel commanding this regiment that although that gentleman has named certain officers to certain positions he, the Minister of Agriculture, must ask Lieutenant-Colonel Smart to change Lieutenants Goddard and Martin and make Lieutenant Godard quartermaster and Lieutenant Martin paymaster. Then he continues as follows :

I have just had a letter from Mr. Clifton Miltimore, whose name did not come up in our discussion the other day.

And let it be remembered that this is the third Miltimore that appears upon the scene.

He tells me he has had camp experience as a member of the 6th Hussars, and that he would like to have a captaincy in one of the squadrons, either 'B' or 'E.'

There is no possible reason why half a dozen Miltimores should not be in that regiment, even if every one of them was the strongest Liberal in Canada, provided they were the best men that could be found for those positions, and on the other hand there is not the slightest reason why a dozen men of the name of Pickel should not be in the regiment if they were the best men for the positions, although they might happen to be Conservatives. The person who, under the law, has to determine that is not the hon. Minister of Agriculture, but Colonel Smart. Smart.

I think——

Continues the hon. Minister of Agriculture——

—if he has been with the 6th Hussars, you must know him. He is ready to equip and qualify at once, and is keen to take part in the establishment of the regiment. I hope to see him while out in the county this week.

I will be able after my visit to the county to speak more positively as to the changes of 'E' squadron from Mansonville to Knowlton. I still think, however, that this is desirable.

The colonel is not to regulate the headquarters of the regiment. That comes within the purview of the Department of Agriculture. Then he continues as follows :

I will also be able to find out in regard to the transfer of 'E' squadron from Adamsville to Cowansville or Sweetsburg.

The way he is to find that out is to go to the country, consult his political friends and ascertain whether or not it will be politically expedient to transfer it from Adamsville to Cowansville or Sweetsburg. That is the only way in which I can interpret his letter. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would be able to put upon it some interpretation more favourable to his own action in this matter. There is no reason why many of these changes should not have been made, perhaps. I will not enter into that question. What I am criticising is the action of the hon. Minister of Agriculture in seeing fit to impose his petty political authority upon these officers and to hamper their action in making their recommendations to the General Officer Commanding. The General Officer Commanding ought to know that he has the advice of the officer commanding the regiment, not the dictation of the hon. Minister of Agriculture or any other politician. These successive stages in the recommendations are deemed necessary. If finally the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence sees fit to exercise his political control he can do so by refusing to accept the recommendation of the General Officer Commanding, but he would do so on his responsibility as a minister. But the General Officer Commanding, under conditions such as these has not got the recommendations of his subordinate officer. These recommendations, so far as they are altered at the instance of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, are the recommendations of the Hon. Sydney Fisher and not the recommendations of Colonel Smart, the officer commanding. Lord Dundonald in receiving these recommendations would be deceived or misled. He would suppose that in these proposals he had received the deliberate opinion and advice of a competent and experienced commanding officer making his recommendations in the course of his military duty; but he had only the partisan political opinion of the hon. Minister of Agriculture expressed to him through the medium of the officer commanding the regiment.

Now, let us return once more to the 14th May. On that date a general list of appointments to the militia, cavalry, artillery and infantry was prepared, including the proposed appointments to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons. This list included the name of Dr. Pickel. The list was submitted to the General Officer Commanding and approved and signed by him on the 18th May. The list was then delivered on the 18th May to the Department of Militia, and was on that day laid before the hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) by his deputy, Colonel Pinault. On the 18th May the hon. Minister of Militia approved the list submitted with the exception of the part relating to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons. The whole of the appointments to the 13th the hon. minister 'desired to hold over for further consideration.' And as the hon. minister intended to leave Ottawa on the 19th for about a week, he did not wish to delay the appointments to other regiments. He, therefore, cancelled the part as to the 13th instead of returning the whole list to Lord Dundonald for that purpose. He then appended to this list his recommendation to His Excellency and signed it, and that recommendation was subsequently approved in Council on the 31st of May.

On the 19th of May, the deputy minister advised Lord Dundonald of the action of the minister on the 18th, as above stated. That was by letter, which is to be found at page 17 of the memorandum, and which letter is as follows:

Ottawa, May 19th, 1904.

Dear Lord Dundonald,—Late last evening I placed before the minister the 'Gazette' dated 18th instant, for approval and submission to Council. With the exception of the part relating to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons which the minister desired held over for further consideration, it was approved and as the minister intended to leave the city this morning for a week or so, rather than delay the submission of the remainder of the 'Gazette,' he cancelled and initialled the appointments to the 13th instead of returning the draft to you for that purpose.

Very faithfully yours,
L. F. PINAULT.

It will be observed that in this letter there is no suggestion at all that the appointments to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons are to be dealt with before the minister returns. I challenge any hon. gentleman in this House to read the terms of that letter, and to conclude that the Minister of Militia had it then in his mind that the appointments to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons were to be dealt with in his absence. It is true that the Minister of Militia in his statement to the House uses the following language, to be found at page 10 of the memorandum:

Finding that I would be obliged to be absent from Ottawa from the 18th to the 26th of May, I instructed my deputy to take the general order containing the proposed list of appointments as soon as completed to my colleague the Minister of Agriculture, to be by him submitted to Council, in view of the urgency of the case. I telegraphed to Lieutenant Col. Whitley to meet me at Montreal, on my way from Ottawa to Nova Scotia, which he did. He then repeated his previous request as to the necessity for putting the appointments through immediately.

There is some suggestion in that statement of the minister, that there was an intention on his part to have this matter dealt with during his absence, but in the letter written at the time by his deputy under instructions from himself, there is not the slightest suggestion of that character.

What happened then? It appears that Colonel Smart came to Ottawa on the 19th of May. There is a very peculiar letter on page 34 of the memorandum to which I direct attention. It was from Colonel Smart to the Minister of Agriculture and is as follows:

The Russell, Ottawa, 1 p.m.,
May 19th, 1904.

Dear Mr. Fisher,—As arranged with you this morning, a new list of recommendations has been made out and is now in the hands of the Deputy Minister of Militia, and I trust you will see that it goes through Council to-day.

Let it be especially observed that so far as this list is concerned, no authority whatever appears to be given to the Minister of Agriculture by the letter from Colonel Pinault to him. The letter continues:

The recommendation re Dr. Pickel is included, to be dealt with by you.

The papers re quartermaster, paymaster and Mr. C. Miltimore will go to Council later, the recommendations being in the hands of District Commanding Officer No. 6, in the case of the two former, and the latter I handed personally to the adjutant general.

I return herein memo you gave me this a.m. as you may require it.

Will meet you at 3 p.m. at the House as agreed.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) CHAS. A. SMART,
Lieut.-Col.

Now, we have no very definite or precise information as to what took place at the interview between Colonel Smart and the Minister of Agriculture. It is perfectly evident, however, that Colonel Smart finding that he could not get his regiment organized unless he conformed absolutely to the demands of the Minister of Agriculture, came to Ottawa in despair after consultation with the brigadier, for the purpose of acceding in every respect to the demands of the Minister of Agriculture, and in that way to get his officers gazetted. Let us observe what the letter implies :

A new list of recommendations has been made out.

That means that Colonel Smart had made out a new list of recommendations to the General Officer Commanding ; the former list of recommendations having been cancelled by the Minister of Militia in order that the appointments to the other regiments might not be delayed :

The recommendation re Dr. Pickel is included to be dealt with by you.

That is to say, Colonel Smart insists that he will not withdraw the name of Dr. Pickel ; that the recommendation re Dr. Pickel is to go to the General Officer Commanding ; that name is to be included in his recommendation. And so the recommendation of Dr. Pickel is to be dealt with by the Minister of Agriculture in the absence of the Minister of Militia. That is the whole position so far as disclosed by that letter. What otherwise is the meaning of the expression:

The recommendation re Dr. Pickel is included to be dealt with by you.

And, on the original memorandum which has been brought down, there are certain words in pencil which confirm that conclusion. This, which I hold in my hand is the list of officers handed by Colonel Smart to the Minister of Agriculture, and which was before them when they had this interview on the 19th. We find :

Major, Dr. F. H. Pickel.

The words Dr. F. H. Pickel are erased in pencil, and over it are the words in pencil :

Major, Guy Carr.

And opposite the name 'Pickel,' these words in pencil :

Minister to fix this.

He fixed it by erasing the name of Dr. Pickel, after that name had been recommended by Colonel Smart and had been included by the General Officer Commanding in the list of recommendations to the Minister of Militia. There cannot be any doubt about that, although there has been an apparent attempt to cover up this transaction, as I will show further on. But let me in this connection refer to certain remarks of the Minister of Agriculture in his address to this House on a former occasion. I will read this to him, and I will ask him whether or not he still adheres to that language. I am reading from the revised 'Hansard' page 4610 :

Lord Dundonald goes on to say a number of things to which I shall not allude with regard to Mayor Pickel, &c., as I have already dealt with them. He, however, then goes on to show clearly by a letter to Colonel Pinault, that he was perfectly well aware of the fact that I had been requested by my colleague to sign this particular recommendation. He knew perfectly well that that list of officers was to be gazetted with the understanding that that name should be stricken out.

Does the Minister of Agriculture say that Lord Dundonald was apprised of that fact in any way ?

Mr. FISHER. When he made his speech in Montreal he knew it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is that ?

Mr. FISHER. When he made his speech in Montreal he knew it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not talking about when he made his speech in Montreal.

Mr. FISHER. That was what I was talking about.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not what the Minister of Agriculture was talking about when he made this statement :

He knew perfectly well that that list of officers was to be gazetted with the understanding that that name should be stricken out.

That does not apply to anything that Lord Dundonald said in Montreal. It is a statement by the Minister of Agriculture to this House, that when Lord Dundonald made this recommendation he knew that the name of Dr. Pickel was to be stricken out of it by the Minister of Agriculture, or by the Minister of Militia. If it means anything, it means that, and I venture to say that the Minister of Agriculture will not be able to substantiate in this House or anywhere else this statement made by him on the floor of parliament.

Mr. FISHER. May I interrupt the hon. gentleman for a moment ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. FISHER. The context shows clearly that I was speaking of Lord Dundonald's speech in Montreal. I say:

Lord Dundonald goes on to say a number of things to which I shall not allude, with regard to Mayor Pickel, &c. He, however, goes on to show clearly by a letter of Colonel Pinault that he was perfectly well aware of the fact that I had been requested by my colleague to sign this particular recommendation.

I was speaking of Lord Dundonald's speech and of nothing else, as the context shows clearly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend cannot distort that language into anything other than I have stated. He was talking about one thing, and one thing only: he was talking about Lord Dundonald's knowledge of what had been arranged at the time that gazette was put in. Even a child could understand that, and the Minister of Agriculture cannot twist the language into any other meaning. Talking about his speech in Montreal!—He was not talking about his speech in Montreal. He was stating, as distinctly as could be, that the General Officer Commanding had certain knowledge when that gazette went in. 'He knew,' says the Minister of Agriculture, 'perfectly well that that list of officers was to be gazetted, with the understanding that that name should be stricken out.' Does not that relate to Lord Dundonald's knowledge at a time anterior to that gazette going in? Otherwise, why does he use the expression, 'he knew that that list of officers was to be gazetted?'

It is beyond doubt—and we have it here distinctly in the admission of the Minister of Agriculture—that it was arranged by the Minister of Agriculture at that interview that that name was to be stricken out, and the General Officer Commanding, through the machinations of the Minister of Agriculture, was placed in this position. The subordinate officer, Colonel Smart, acting under his direction in the organization of this regiment, was, by direction of the Minister of Agriculture, to send in a recommendation to the General Officer Commanding, with an understanding between that subordinate officer and the Minister of Agriculture that one name, that of Dr. Pickel, was to be stricken out. The list went to the Department of Militia, the Minister of Militia left Ottawa for a time, and the Minister of Agriculture appears upon the scene. Lord Dundonald, who was perfectly capable of scratching this name out himself, if there was any understanding on his part that it was to be scratched out, sent in the list including this name; and then the Minister of Agriculture, on the same 19th day of May, 1904, wrote on the memorandum with reference to the name of Dr. Pickel:

Not approved. Sydney Fisher, for F. W. Borden.

The Minister of Agriculture on the same 19th of May sent the following memorandum to His Excellency the Governor General in Council:

Ottawa, May 19, 1904.

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council:

The undersigned has the honour to recommend for Your Excellency's approval, the attached draft general order, containing appointments and promotions, 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, the same having been recommended by the General Officer Commanding.

Respectfully submitted.

SYDNEY FISHER,
for F. W. BORDEN,
Minister of Militia and Defence.

Now, as I understand the facts, Dr. Pickel's name had been stricken out by the Minister of Agriculture before that letter was written and before that list was sent in. If I am in error in that, the Minister of Agriculture will correct me.

Mr. FISHER. The recommendation was signed and the name struck out at the same time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is, the recommendation went forward in this letter of the 19th of May with Dr. Pickel's name struck out?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I would be inclined to criticise a little the concluding words of that letter, which are these: 'the same having been recommended by the General Officer Commanding.'

I want to refer once more to the letter of Colonel Smart of the 19th of May to the Minister of Agriculture. In the beginning of that letter Colonel Smart says:

As arranged with you this morning, a new list of recommendations has been made out and is now in the hands of the Deputy Minister of Militia, and I trust you will see it goes through Council to-day.

So the expectation of all parties was that that list would go through Council on the 19th of May; the Minister of Agriculture struck out the name of Dr. Pickel on the 19th of May; he wrote the letter to the Governor General in Council on the 19th of May; and it had been arranged, as appeared by Colonel Smart's letter, that the list should go through Council that day. The Minister of Agriculture and his friends throughout the country have taken great comfort from the fact that a communication was sent by Colonel Smart on the 19th of May. That communication, which is to be found on page 35, says:

Montreal, May 19, 1904.

Dear Mr. Fisher,—Immediately on my return this evening I met Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley and discussed fully with him all matters in connection with our interview of to-day. Colonel Whitley was pleased to learn that everything was arranged satisfactorily, and at his request I telephoned to Sweetsburg with a view of getting from Dr. Pickel his final answer as to whether or not it was his intention to remain in the squadron, because, as I stated to you to-day, he had intimated to me his lukewarmness in the matter. I now have his final decision, which is that he gives up all connection with the squadron. In accordance, therefore, with Dr. Pickel's request, I can now, as Commanding Officer of the regiment, request you to kindly make the change in the 'Gazette' by leaving Dr. Pickel's name out.

I sincerely hope that this will meet with your approval and in view of the short time between now and date of camp, you will kindly see that all the recommendations pass Council to-morrow.

I now have his final decision, which is that he gives up all connection with the squadron. In accordance, therefore, with Dr. Pickel's request, I can now, as Commanding Officer of the regiment, request you to kindly make the change in the 'Gazette' by leaving Dr. Pickel's name out.

I sincerely hope that this will meet with your approval and in view of the short time between now and date of camp, you will kindly see that all the recommendations pass Council to-morrow.

On the folowing day, and on the same page of the memo., there is this letter from the Minister of Agriculture to Colonel Smart :—

Ottawa, May 20th, 1904.

Dear Colonel Smart,—I have yours of the 19th instant just now, and note what you say.

I have signed the 'Gazette' that was sent me by the Militia Department, but which did not reach my eye until this morning. I have stricken out Dr. Pickel's name, and will see that the other goes through this afternoon in Council. I would ask you as soon as possible to send in the other recommendations that you have, and I will try and hurry up the matter of Mr. Briggs and Mr. Benham, whom I have suggested as lieutenants in the Knowlton Squadron.

What I have to observe is this. There seems to me a very extraordinary discrepancy between the actual facts and what is stated in his letter of the minister. It was obviously arranged on the 19th of May that Dr. Pickel's name should be struck out, whether he withdrew or not. It was so arranged because the list was to go to council without his name, and the minister has intimated himself, in his statement just now, that he did on the 19th of May, strike out Dr. Pickel's name and send a recommendation to council that his name should be struck out. But some arrangement also had apparently been made with Colonel Smart to induce Dr. Pickel to withdraw. And so the Minister of Agriculture—although he had signed the 'Gazette' on the 19th of May, as far as the evidence shows—writes on the 20th to Colonel Smart: 'I have signed the 'Gazette' that was sent me by the Militia Department, but which did not reach my eye until this morning.' What I would like to understand is how the Minister of Agriculture could have signed that 'Gazette' and written the letter he did on the 19th of May, if the 'Gazette' did not reach his eye until the morning of the 20th of May. Was this letter of the 20th of May written for any special purpose ? Was it to be used afterwards for the purpose of showing that Dr. Pickel's name was only struck out because under pressure he had withdrawn ? Was there any desire or intention to conceal the fact that before his consent to withdraw had been obtained, his name had been struck off the list and that list had been sent to the Governor General in Council ? Then the minister goes on :

I have stricken out Dr. Pickel's name, and will see that the other goes through this afternoon in Council.

What was the arrangement on the 19th of May ? Did the Minister of Agriculture agree to accept Dr. Pickel ? Evidently he did not. Was it arranged then that Dr. Pickel's name was to be struck out ? Obviously it was and that arrangement was carried out. Under these circumstances, it does not seem to me that Colonel Smart's letter from Montreal on the 19th of May and the minister's letter of the following day afford very much defence for the action which the minister took on that occasion, nor do they in any way justify the interference of which he was guilty.

I have had to refer to this correspondence somewhat at length and there is much more of it to which I might very properly refer in view of the importance of the occasion. I can only say that it demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt the gross interference of the Minister of Agriculture in the organization of this regiment. There cannot be any doubt about it. There are the minister's letters, and even if we had not the report of Colonel Smart to which I have referred—his report to Lord Dundonald—we would be obliged to come to the conclusion that the organization of that regiment was hindered and delayed and the appointments influenced by party considerations imposed by the Minister of Agriculture.

I do not intend to refer this afternoon at any length to the part which Lord Dundonald took in this matter. We know that he has had a very distinguished career as a soldier. We know that he came to Canada with an honourable record, and I think we can all say that he leaves Canada with just as honourable a record. He found it necessary to take strong measures and he took them without shrinking from the consequences. He has been devoted, since he came to Canada, to the interests of our militia, he has spared no effort to promote its efficiency, but in everything he attempted to do he has been hampered, impeded, thwarted and obstructed by the very authorities to whom he was entitled to look for support, until finally, finding his usefulness gone—as the Auditor General has felt his disappear—he sought to arouse public opinion in order that better conditions might prevail in Canada. He can afford, I think, to treat with disdain, the jibes and sneers which now emanate from those who, during the past two years, have been willing to accord to him that meed of praise which his distinguished services demand, but who now make him the mark for their petty attacks. He goes with the regret and the respect of the militia of Canada, the men who best know him, and the respect of those men means something to Lord Dundonald, because he knew them in South Africa, he appreciates the record which they made there of gallantry and devotion in the cause of the empire. He can appreciate that tribute of respect because the militia of Canada have at all times, whenever they have been put to the test, been found worthy of the trust which the country reposes in them. From the time when, under a gallant Canadian from the province of Quebec, 300 Canadian militiamen repulsed the American invasion at Chateauguay, down to the war in South Africa, those men have never been found wanting, and I say it is a tribute to his merits which Lord Dundonald, I believe, will not soon forget, that when he leaves Canada—whatever opinion may be entertained by men who desire to impose upon him party considerations—he will leave it at least with the respect of the militia of Canada and with the respect of all men who sincerely desire the welfare of the militia of this country. I beg to move thereof :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor :—

The selection and appointment of officers in the militia should be made without regard to party political considerations which if permitted to exercise an influence will prove disastrous to the efficiency of the force.

That while the Minister of Militia is charged with and responsible for the administration of militia affairs the General Officer Commanding is by law charged under the orders of His Majesty with the military command and discipline of the militia and with the duty of recommending to the Minister of Militia fit and proper persons for appointment to commissions therein.

That the conduct of the Honourable Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, in interfering with the commanding officer of the Thirteenth Scottish Light Dragoons while that officer was engaged in the duty of selecting his subordinate officers for the approval of and for recommendation by the General Officer Commanding ; and the action of that minister in interposing party political influence between the General Officer Commanding and his officers and in requiring recommendations and appointments to be made or disallowed from party considerations, deserves and should receive the censure of this House.

The House regrets that this unwarrantable interference has been approved by the government, and that it not only has unduly delayed the organization of the regiment, but has culminated in depriving the militia of Canada of an experienced and distinguished commanding officer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Mr. Speaker, in view of the resolution which has been moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in view, more especially, of the tone of many of the remarks he has addressed to the House, I believe it to be not only my duty but my right to take it upon myself to make a reply. I am glad of the opportunity of exercising that right, because I believe in what I have done in regard to this matter I have not only been exercising the right of a citizen of Canada, the right of a member of parliament, the right of a Minister of the Crown, but that I have been performing a duty which has been laid upon me as a public man on behalf of the militia of Canada. Valuing that right, impressed by that duty, I come to the consideration of the question with a clear conscience ; and I only ask that this House and the country shall judge me upon the merits of the case and upon the defence which I make to the accusation.

A few minutes ago the leader of the opposition read extracts from certain letters, attributing to those extracts certain meanings which he said were the only meanings he could read into the words. I venture to say that another meaning is easily to be found in them, a meaning more in consonance with the dignity of this House, and more in consonance with the dignity of the leader of a great party than the disingenuous quibbling indulged in by the leader of the opposition which was more worthy of a pettifogging lawyer than of the leader of a great party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope the House will maintain order.

Mr. FISHER. Sir, I will go into some of these details before I sit down, I will deal with some of the remarks which were made by the hon. leader of the opposition with regard to these letters ; and I will show what, I think, will appeal to any person who studies the correspondence with unprejudiced mind, that the interpretation put upon the letters by the leader of the opposition is not the fair or true one.

I wish, however, first of all, to say a word or two in regard to the resolution which the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) has placed before the House. To the first clause of that resolution. I do not think that anybody, least of all myself, can take exception. It is an expression of words of the spirit in which I have dealt with the whole matter of this regiment in the eastern townships—'That the selection and appointment of officers in the militia should be made without regard to political consideration, which, if permitted to exercise an influence will prove disastrous to the efficiency of the force.' Sir, I take straight, square issue with the leader of the opposition and his political friends on this question. I maintain that, in the action I have taken and in the spirit with which I have acted I have opposed the interference of political considerations in militia appointments. I maintain, Sir, that the protest which I made was a protest against the political complexion of a certain squadron of this regiment, and that, had I not made that protest, I should have been worthy of such censure as the hon. gentleman expresses in this resolution. But, having made that protest, I claim that I deserve the thanks of gentlemen who profess to be influenced by these sentiments in regard to the militia ; instead of censuring me, they ought to have thanked me and supported me in my action.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the correspondence which has been laid on the table. I wish, very briefly to refer to the first item in that correspondence which is a copy of of the report of the sub-committee of council, having had under consideration certain recent public utterances of the right honourable the Earl of Dundonald, the conclusion of which was to dispense with the services of that officer as General Officer Commanding the militia of Canada. I would like to say, Sir, as a matter personal to myself—and I think that the House and the country will justify me in taking up a few moments of time in dealing with the personal question—I was not a member of that sub-committee of council and its work was done and its recommendation made during my absence from Ottawa. As a member of the council I had nothing whatever to do with the form of that report, or with the drawing up of it, or the wording of it. I want to say this simply because I feel very much gratified indeed at the terms of that report and the way in which my personal conduct was endorsed and sustained by my colleagues in the government. I will read, if I may, just one clause of that report which, I think, embodies the whole question as between the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) who has introduced this resolution and the government which that resolution condemns :

> In the case of members of the cabinet, while all have an equal degree of responsibility in a constitutional sense, yet in the practical working out of responsible government in a country of such vast extent as Canada, it is found necessary to attach a special responsibility to each minister for the public affairs of the province or district with which he has close political connection and with which his colleagues may not be so well acquainted.
> Mr. Fisher, while sharing with his colleagues that general responsibility already referred to, represents in a particular manner the eastern townships of the province of Quebec. If, when it was proposed to form a new regiment in that district, he interested himself in the work and sought to make the organization effective, he was not merely exercising a right : he was discharging a duty both to the people of the district and to his colleagues in the cabinet, who would expect him to inform himself of all the facts and advise them before approval by the cabinet of the proposed arrangement.

Now Sir, I maintain that while I had nothing to do with the wording of that clause, it contains not only the proper constitutional interpretation of the duties of a Minister of the Crown in the government of Canada, but also a plain common sense statement of the necessities of government in this country, and that in that statement lies the complete and absolute justification of the work which I have done in regard to the constitution, equipment and enlistment of this regiment. Sir, I will make a very short recapitulation of what had occurred. When this matter was first brought to my attention I noted the appointment of a Montreal gentleman to be colonel of that regiment. I was afraid that people outside the district from which the regiment was to be recruited might not know the condition and the circumstances of the district, might not know the people in the district, might not be able to deal with the matters in the district as well as those who were in the district born and bred and acquainted with the people. I believed that in the militia organization of this country local knowledge in the raising of a regiment is especially necessary. In an old established militia organization it would not matter much if men from outside were introduced into that organization but when it comes to recruiting a new regiment, the establishment of an entirely new organization in a community, I ventured to think and think still that it was better that men with local knowledge should have the management of that organization. I leave myself in the judgment of the House and of the country on that point. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) wanted to know why it was that the Minister of Militia suspended the work of the organization of the regiment. I would say to him that I made representations to my colleague that it was inadvisable that all the leading officers in that regiment should be appointed from without the district. I pointed out the dangers to which I have just alluded and I believe that it was on that ground that my colleague gave the order suspending the organization of the regiment. I will say further that it was not until some time after that I received letters from the eastern townships pointing out a certain political complexion in the squadron that was afterwards so much discussed. I again spoke to my colleague and again pointed out that there was not only danger of people from outside doing things not in accordance with local conditions and needs, but also danger of political strife being raised in regard to the organization of this regiment.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have these letters to which the minister has referred been brought down ?

Mr. FISHER. All the papers have been brought down that are not of a confidential nature, and no more papers that I have anything to do with can be brought down because they are of a confidential nature. Just at this point I may interrupt my argument to speak of this matter of confidential letters. I leave myself in the judgment of the House and of the country, but is it not perfectly proper and right that men who are interested in certain public matters should be allowed to write to their representative, and express views to that representative, in regard to public affairs which are of a confidential nature and which it would be highly improper to publish to the community at large? Sir, if it is contended that this can not be done, I venture to think that members of the government and members of the parliament, will be seriously hampered in the exercise of their public duties. If we are are not to receive communications which the writers can consider confidential, we cannot receive the best information in regard to public affairs. Sir, it would interfere with the efficiency of every member in this House if all correspondence that comes from his constituents to him as their representative, were to be open to the public and be laid before the public on the inconsiderate demand of anybody and everybody in this House. I venture to lay that down as a principle on which I am prepared to stand or fall.

When the hon. gentleman interrupted me I was saying that when these representations were made to me I then only and only then, and for the first time then, began to look upon this matter as in any sense political. I received a clipping from a newspaper out there which made some remarks as to the political complexion of the new organization, and I received letters which indicated that a certain squadron of that organization had a political complexion. I did speak to my colleague the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) on that point and it was in consequence of that that he brought me into contact with the two military officers, Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart. When I met these officers and found out exactly what they were recommending I was, as I stated on a former occasion, astounded to find the list of officers that was proposed for certain squadrons. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has read some of my remarks to-day, and taking out a sentence here and there he has endeavoured to attribute a false representation, a mistaken representation of the whole of those remarks. I shall go back, if I may, and allude to some of those remarks. I am quoting from the unrevised 'Hansard,' page 4762. I said:

> I took no exception to this. But I found a recommendation in regard to the neighbourhood of Sweetsburg, which, I confess, surprised me, and to which I did take exception. I must premise my explanation in regard to this matter by saying that Senator Baker, of Sweetsburg, is the acknowledged and active leader of the Conservatives of that district. I found this list of proposed names for the staff for the neighbourhood of Sweetsburg. First, Mr. John M. Gibson, a nephew of Senator Baker, and talked of as a possible Conservative candidate in the constituency of Missisquoi, to be third in command of that regiment. Dr. Pickel, one of the strongest Conservative workers of the neighbourhood and a family connection of Senator Baker, to be major in command of the squadron which, though gazetted for Adamsville, was to be changed to Sweetsburg to suit his convenience. Mr. G. H. Baker, son of Senator Baker, to be senior captain of the said squadron. Mr. Thomas R. Pickel, son-in-law of Senator Baker, to be the junior captain of the said squadron. Then there were the names of two gentlemen, Messrs. Steacie and Reynolds, of Montreal, to be lieutenants. And down at the bottom of the list Mr. Thomas F. Cotton, a Liberal, son-in-law of the above-mentioned John M. Gibson, and grand nephew of Senator Baker.

The 'Hansard' says 'son-in-law,' He is a nephew, not a son-in-law of Mr. Gibson and a grand nephew of Senator Baker. The leader of the opposition undertook to say that I was dealing with that from a purely political standpoint. He read that passage and said that there was nothing about qualification there, and he tried to make this House believe that I was dealing with the matter purely from a political standpoint, without any regard to the question of qualification. But if the hon. gentleman had read the very next sentence he would have seen that I did deal with it. With a disingenuousness which I did not expect from a man in his position in this country, the leader of the opposition suppressed the following sentence, and it is this:

> I told these gentlemen that, putting aside any question of military qualifications, which I afterwards went into——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I read that very thing which he says I did not read.

Mr. FISHER. I accept the hon. gentleman's correction, but if he did read it he read it after turning around to his followers and impressing upon them, as he wants to impress upon the people of this country, that I was dealing with this matter purely from a political standpoint, and that military qualifications had nothing whatever to do with my recommendation. He says he read it, and I accept his statement, but if he did read it he did not read it in connection with that; he read it afterwards at a time when it did not appear to have any connection at all with that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I read it immediately after.

Mr. FISHER. I went on further to say this, and I am going to repeat it here and now, and I say that it is not only a justification of what I did in this matter, but it makes imperative the course which, had I not pursued it, I would have been open to the severest condemnation and censure in regard to this regiment.

—such a list of officers for that squadron in that neighbourhood would be held to be an instance of political preferment, and that it would be impossible to remove from the minds of the people of the district of Bedford the impression that the colonel who made such recommendations and was responsible for the success of this regiment had deliberately undertaken to turn that squadron, if not the whole regiment, into a political Tory organization.

The position which I took then, and which I take to-day, is this : Colonel Smart was a stranger going into the district of Bedford to organize this regiment. He appears to have got into the hands of certain people out there. He told me himself that he had no political intentions. I fully accept that statement. I believe Colonel Smart, in making the statement that he had no political intentions, made a statement which was absolutely accurate and truthful. But I pointed out to him, as I point out to this House and the country, that if he had the strongest political intentions of making that squadron a political Tory organization he could not have chosen a set of names that would have more perfectly fitted his purpose. Sir, the very danger that I had foreseen when I protested to my colleague the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence that all the senior officers of this regiment should not be taken from Montreal came rapidly about. Colonel Smart, through an error or an inadvertency, he tells me, and I accept his statement, had deliberately done the thing which would have stamped him as a political agent, and which would have stamped the regiment as a political organization. I felt that it was my duty, as well as my right, to protest against such an action, such an occurrence and such a result.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are very solicitous against political interference. They do not condemn me at all, Sir, because I asked that Mr. Russell, a well-known Liberal, should be removed from the place of major of another squadron and that he should be replaced by a well-known Conservative, who had had military experience when Mr. Russell had none. They do not condemn me for that—oh, no ; because there I was asking that a Liberal should be put down and a Conservative raised above him. They do not object at all to my recommendation that Captain Guy Carr, a well-known Compton Conservative, should take the place of Doctor Pickel, because I knew that Captain Carr was an experienced military officer and that Doctor Pickel had never had any connection with the militia at all. They do not condemn me at all or take exception to that 'political recommendation'—oh, no ; because it was the recommendation of a Conservative, and therefore it is all right. Some years ago I read a witty saying from an eminent French writer who was discussing the question of capital punishment. An appeal had been made to him and others to do away with the death penalty. In discussing the question, he put the whole argument pithily and well in this way :

Que messieurs les assassins commencent.

For the benefit of the hon. leader of the opposition and others, I may say that it means :

Let the murderers commence in doing away with death.

I think I might apply that now to the question of political interference, and say : Let the Conservatives commence, and perhaps it would be well for the militia of the country. In that connection, I have one or two other things to say which I will say as briefly as possible about the list, &c. The hon. gentleman who has spoken alluded to Colonel Smart's letter to me and mine in recommending this list of officers, and he said that he doubted the truth of that recommendation, and said that it was not the recommendation of the General Officer's whole list. What I was recommending was the list recommended by the General Officer in Command. I recommended it in the usual form of the Department of Militia, and signed it for my colleague the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence. If the name of one officer was struck out, it did not militate in any way whatever against the recommendation of the rest of them by Lord Dundonald. Lord Dundonald made the recommendations, I signed them and sent forward his recommendations. I struck one name out, and I will deal with that a little later on ; but in this regard the hon. gentleman's criticism was rather disingenuous. The hon. gentleman talks about two Pickels and three Miltimores, and he refers also to Mr. Russell. The hon. gentleman says that I recommended Mr. Russell, who had no military experience. As I have just pointed out, I recommended his being reduced to a lower rank. I did do that because he had no military experience, and I recommended the appointment of an experienced military officer to take precedence of him in the squadron. The Conservatives say that was all right. I will have something to say a little later on perhaps in regard to the general question of the recommendations of the General Officer Commanding. I said a few moments ago that the hon. gentleman said Colonel Smart's action was non-political. I acquit Colonel Smart, but, as I said a few moments ago, I cannot refrain from saying again that although Colonel Smart's intentions were not political, his actions were intensely political—intensely political in the sense that they would have that effect upon the community. If there is one thing more important than another, it is that any regiment organized in the eastern townships should be efficient, that the officers chosen should be all men eminently qualified for the positions to which they are appointed, and that no political considerations should enter into the organization of the regiment. When I found, not Colonel Smart's, not Colonel Whitley's, not Lord Dundonald's, but no doubt the political intrigues of local politicians there, who had got the ear of Colonel Smart, making the regiment a political organization, I did protest, and to that extent only have I interfered on political grounds.

Mr. MONK. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to tell us who are these political gentlemen who have obtained the ear of Colonel Smart?

Mr. FISHER. Well, apparently they were the Baker family.

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend tell us if he has any evidence of that?

Mr. FISHER. I have no evidence except the list submitted and I think that evidence is enough. The hon. leader of the opposition has dwelt at some length upon the question of Mr. Adams and Captain Converse, and he has read my letter to Colonel Smart. That letter put the whole case in a nut-shell. Mr. Adams is a young man of eastern township birth who has been living for a number of years in Montreal, who has taken an active part in the militia organization there, and who has been an officer of the 6th Hussars for a number of years. This fall, at the military tournament in Montreal, Captain Adams took the first prize in equitation; a rather necessary qualification in a cavalry officer. Mr. Adams was a lieutenant in the 6th Hussars and—I do not remember the exact date but it was some time in the fall or early last winter—Colonel Whitley, his brigadier recommended Mr. Adams as adjutant of the 6th Hussars. Now, all I had the temerity to do was to suggest, that if Mr. Adams was competent physically and in a military sense to be the adjutant of the 6th Hussars on the recommendation of the brigadier, he was also competent to be adjutant of the 13th Dragoons. I therefore, wrote to Colonel Smart to suggest that as Mr. Adams was an eastern township man, where he knew the people, where he had been born and brought up, where he was a popular young man, who could lead a great many recruits into the ranks; he should be given a commission in this regiment, rather than to take absolute strangers to the district; men who knew nothing of the people, men who knew nothing about local conditions or the geography of the country. I did have the temerity to suggest that. I suggested it not as a military expert, not as a man familiar with military matters, not as a man who undertook to decide upon Mr. Adam's military qualifications, but as a man of some little common sense. As a man who does know the district of Bedford, and who does know the local conditions, I believe that such a man as Mr. Adams would not only be an ornament to the corps, but would be of great use to the organization of the corps in that district. The leader of the opposition read the statement by Colonel Smart in his letter to Lord Dundonald—not any statement Lord Dundonald made to me in regard to Mr. Adams—that Mr. Adams was physically unfit for the position, and yet his own brigadier within four months before that, had recommended Mr. Adams to be adjutant, the very same position in the 6th Hussars. In suggesting the name of Mr. Adams under the circumstances, was I interfering politically? No. I was interfering simply in a common sense way in the organization of the new regiment. I grant fully, and no man is more prepared to admit it than I am that on purely military qualifications the military experts at the command of the government ought to rule. But when it comes to matters connected with the affairs of this country; when it comes to matters involving local knowledge of local conditions, and knowledge of the people of Canada, I venture to think that the public men of Canada know more than any expert military or otherwise. The leader of the opposition has said that Captain Converse is a Conservative. I do not know whether he is or whether he is not. I have only this to say: that my colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wrote to me asking me to recommend Captain Converse for the position as adjutant of that regiment. It does not look as if he were a Conservative, unless the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is so favourable to the Conservatives that he should recommend one. Anyway, I do not know whether Mr. Converse is a Conservative or not.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It shows that there was no politics in it.

Mr. FISHER. As my colleague the Minister of Militia says, it shows that there are no politics in our recommendations.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, before you left the chair at six o'clock, I had touched upon some remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition in regard to his interpretation of certain things which appeared in the letters which passed between myself and Colonel Smart. There was one matter, however, which the hon. gentleman alluded to which I did not take up. and upon which I would now like to say a word or two. The hon. gentleman quoted from remarks of mine which were made in this House on a former occasion, from which he wished to draw the conclusion that I had said that the General Officer Commanding knew certain things at a time when he did not know those things. I want to say to the hon. gentleman, and I request him to accept the statement, that his interpretation of what I said then, whatever the language may bear, was not the one I had in my mind. I venture to think my words as reported in 'Hansard' do not bear the interpretation which the hon. gentleman put upon them. But still I will leave the matter of the interpretation of the single sentence to one side, and will say, and say positively and distinctly, that when I spoke on that occasion I meant to say that the General Officer Commanding, at the time he made his speech in Montreal at the military banquet in question, knew what I then alluded to. These are the words, and that is my interpretation of them, at page 4610 of the unrevised 'Hansard :'

Lord Dundonald goes on to say a number of things to which I shall not allude with regard to Mayor Pickel, &c., as I have already dealt with them. He, however, then goes on to show clearly by a letter to Colonel Pinault——

That is evidently a misprint, because I am not aware that there was any letter to Colonel Pinault to be shown, but there was one from Colonel Pinault——

—that he was perfectly well aware of the fact that I had been requested by my colleague to sign this particular recommendation. He knew perfectly well that that list of officers was to be gazetted with the understanding that that name should be stricken out. And yet his words at the banquet of Montreal, I submit to any unprejudiced person, would lead the public to believe that I, the Minister of Agriculture, had taken a recommendation of my colleague the Minister of Militia and had changed it on my own responsibility.

Now, Sir, that was not the case. The whole recommendation was signed by me acting for my colleague the Minister of Militia. The striking out of that name was done by me, having been discussed between Colonels Whitley and Smart. the Minister of Militia and myself, and was done by me after the receipt of a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Smart requesting me to do it—requesting me to do it because he had communicated with Dr. Pickel and that gentleman had given his final answer in regard to this appointment, and that final answer was that Dr. Pickel did not wish to go into the 'Gazette.' Then, and then only, I struck out the name, signed the recommendation and sent it forward to Council to be embodied in an Order in Council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are the dates wrong —the dates of the 19th ?

Mr. FISHER. I will come to that in a moment or two. My statement in the House on the former occasion, I contend, shows clearly that that was what I meant. But in case anybody chooses to interpret it differently, I want to say now again that that was what I meant, namely, that Lord Dundonald, when he made that speech in Montreal, having received a letter that morning from Colonel Smart, knew that Colonel Smart had communicated with me and had asked for the striking out of Dr. Pickel's name. Therefore my contention that Lord Dundonald knew perfectly well the circumstances under which that name was striken out by me at the time he made this attack upon me, is completely and absolutely true. Sir, I am not going to enter into that question. Lord Dundonald's speech and Lord Dundonald's actions are matters for which he can answer. I make no accusation, I make no reflection. I leave that, Sir, for the country and the public and the empire to decide. But in regard to this matter, and the statements and implications of that gentleman and the statements and implications of the hon. leader of the opposition, I wish to make the absolute facts absolutely clear.

My hon. friend opposite, a few minutes ago, and before, undertook to say that it was somewhat difficult to reconcile the sequence of events in regard to these letters. The hon. gentleman made an insinuation that possibly the letter of mine of the 20th was written afterwards for the purpose of putting another complexion on events. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman would demean himself by making such an insinuation. I had supposed the hon. gentleman understood the decencies of debate as well as the decencies of treatment between gentlemen so as not to make such a statement as that. But, Sir, I must deal with the circumstances according to what he has said, and I will proceed to do so.

On the morning of the 19th of May, Colonel Smart came to my office saying that he had come up to secure the passage of the gazette. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia was away from Ottawa. He came to me, pointed out his recommendations, and asked me to see that they were put through. I said to him, in effect : 'If you will go to the Militia Department and see that the military branch makes the recommendations, I will act for my colleague the Minister of Militia, because we have talked this matter over. I know what was in his mind, and his intention, I know what was the agreement made between you and him, and in his absence, for the purpose of favouring what you want, of doing what you want, I will sign the recommendation and put it through Council.' Colonel Smart then left me. In his letter of the same date, dated the Russell House, 1 p.m.. Ottawa, May 19, he says :

As arranged with you this morning, a new list of recommendations has been made out and is now in the hands of the Deputy Minister of Militia, and I trust you will see it goes through Council to-day.

The recommendation re Dr. Pickel is included, to be dealt with by you.

Then he goes on and alludes to some other matters in connection with the regiment. The recommendation from the Deputy Minister of Militia did not come to me until the next morning, the 20th. The letter of recommendation was inclosed in a letter from Colonel Pinault to me. It was dated the 19th, but coming through the mail it did not reach my office until the morning of the 20th. Colonel Smart appears to have gone back to Montreal on the evening of the 19th. His letter says that he will meet me at the House. I do not know whether he met me at the House or not; I do not remember that he did. But he went back to Montreal that evening, as is evidenced by a further letter from Colonel Smart written from Montreal on the evening of that same day on which he had seen me at Ottawa, and on which he had addressed to me the letter from the Russell House, dated 1 p.m. He left on the afternoon train, and addressed to me this letter from Montreal on the evening of the 19th:

Dear Mr. Fisher,—Immediately on my return this evening I met Lieutenant-Colonel Whitley and discussed fully with him all matters in connection with our interview of to-day. Colonel Whitley was pleased to learn that everything was arranged satisfactorily, and at his request I telephoned to Sweetsburg with a view of getting from Dr. Pickel his final answer as to whether or not it was his intention to remain in the squadron, because, as I stated to you to-day, he had intimated to me his lukewarmness in the matter. I now have his final decision, which is that he gives up all connection with the squadron. In accordance therefore with Dr. Pickel's request, I can now, as commanding officer of the regiment, request you to kindly make the change in the 'Gazette' by leaving Dr. Pickel's name out.

I do not see any difficulty about the sequence of events which the hon. gentleman finds it so difficult to understand. It seems to me to be perfectly clear, and had the hon. gentleman read this correspondence with attention, had he noted all the facts and not tried to take out something here and there on which he could hang an argument, he would have been able to see the sequence of events just as clearly as I am now demonstrating them. Colonel Smart went on to say:

I sincerely hope that this will meet with your approval, and in view of the short time between now and date of camp, you will kindly see that all the recommendations pass Council to-morrow.

Thanking you for your kind consideration and assistance, believe me,

Yours very sincerely,

CHAS. A. SMART,

Lt.-Col. commanding 13th S. L. Dragoons.

Mr. FISHER.

At the bottom of that letter was the following written in the handwriting of Colonel Whitley:

In view of above I certainly recommend that Lieutenant-Colonel Smart's suggestion be followed.

FRED. WHITLEY,

Lt.-Col. commanding 'E' Cav. Brigade.

Montreal, May 19, 1904.

Here, Sir, is a request from the commanding officer of this regiment, on whose recommendation the general had included Dr. Pickel's name in that list, to strike the name out, because Dr. Pickel had intimated to him that he did not want to have it in. And we have the endorsation of the brigadier, Colonel Whitley, to Lieutenant-Colonel Smart's request. On the receipt of the letter, I took up the recommendation which had been sent me by Colonel Pinault, the Deputy Minister of Militia, and which was lying on my desk, and struck out the name of Dr. Pickel, and signed opposite 'Sydney Fisher for F. W. Borden.' I signed at the bottom my name 'Sydney Fisher for F. W. Borden, Minister of Militia and Defence,' and I sent that recommendation to Council, where it was embodied in the Order in Council passed and signed by His Excellency within a few days. To corroborate what I have just said, I must mention that on the same day, I wrote the letter addressed to Colonel Whitley:

Ottawa, May 20th, 1904.

Dear Colonel Whitley,—I have not had an opportunity to reply to your letters of the 14th and 15th May earlier, but yesterday I had an interview with Colonel Smart, at which I think all arrangements were satisfactorily made to push along the establishment of the 13th Hussars.

This letter was written on the 20th of May, and it was on the 19th I had the interview with Colonel Smart.

I have read your letters and the inclosures, and want to assure you not only that I am very glad things have now been settled, but that I appreciate the efforts which you and Colonel Smart have made to make things satisfactory. I have written to our friends telling them this has been done and urging them to take hold of the work energetically and loyally, and I am sure they will do so. I think you will appreciate that I have not asked nearly as much as impetuous friends in the county expected, but I think that what I have asked has been entirely reasonable, and that some of these things at any rate were absolutely necessary to remove the impression which had been created by the unfortunate earlier recommendations.

My hon. friend is very keen at drawing conclusions. Well, I think he might draw the conclusion from this letter that I had found things done which would be detrimental to the interests of the regiment and was glad to have been able to improve matters. I went on to say:

I have just signed, on behalf of Sir Frederick Borden, the gazette, and expect to put it through this afternoon.

I here stated that I had just signed the 'Gazette.' I did sign it on the 20th, and I stated that on the 19th I had had an interview with Colonel Smart. What difficulty can there be in following the sequence of events? I do not see that the sequence is in any way involved or militates in any shape or form against the statement of facts I have made. I think I have dealt pretty thoroughly with all the matters the hon. gentleman has brought up regarding my political interference.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman what it is which is referred to in Colonel Smart's letter of the 19th of May, to be found on page 34, when he used this expression :

The recommendation re Dr. Pickel is included, to be dealt with by you.

Also the pencil note in the memorandum which was returned by Colonel Smart to the Minister of Agriculture : 'The minister is to fix this,' that was opposite Dr. Pickel's name.

Mr. FISHER. The explanation is very simple. I have already said that an interview which took place between Colonels Whitley and Smart and the Minister of Militia and myself, at the instance of my colleague, with regard to the affairs of the regiment, we have before us the list of officers which I have already characterized and need not characterize again. In that list was Dr. Pickel's name. In it were also the names of Captain Baker, Mr. T. R. Pickel, Mr. Cotton and Mr. J. F. Gibson. I found in that list a political complexion which I informed Colonels Whitley and Smart would damn the regiment as a Tory organization. More than that I venture to say that that list had a family complexion which would damn it equally in the eyes of the Conservatives, not only as a political organization but as a family compact. When Colonel Smart told me that he had no political intention, I said to him: I accept your statement Colonel Smart. I suppose you have no political intention, but if you had desired to do something which would stamp that regiment as a Tory organization, you could not have selected a list of officers which would more completely have that effect. Colonel Smart then said to me : What can be done ? I replied : Here are some gentlemen who are qualified. Mr. J. F. Gibson is a graduate of the military school at Kingston. His name will be unobjectionable to anybody in the townships, whether Liberal or Conservative. Dr. Pickel's name is the next, but that name would not appeal in the way of military qualifications to anybody. You are asking that Dr. Pickel should be made major of the squadron. You want to give him an important military position in the regiment, one requiring military experience; one in which he would be entrusted with the lives of a large number of men, one in which he would be obliged to handle those men, not only on the parade grounds, but, should the occasion arise, on the field of battle. Dr. Pickel was a man who had never taken an interest in military matters, who had never held an appointment in the militia. On what ground then could his appointment as major of a squadron in that regiment be justified ? I pointed to his name and said : There is one you can strike out on the ground that he has no qualification, and if it be struck out, the defects of the list will be minimized. The striking out of that name will lessen its political appearance, and the people will not be so disposed to condemn the regiment as a political organization. Dr. Pickel's name was struck out because he was to be appointed to a responsible position, which called for a man of military experience, and he had none, and because the whole list was so political in its appearance something had to be done to remove that evidence of political interference. Colonel Whitley and Colonel Smart seem to acknowledge the force of what I said. But, Colonel Smart said that as he had urged Dr. Pickel to take that position as he had asked him to go into the regiment, he did not feel like asking him not to send in his name. Then it was suggested and I do not know from whom the suggestion came—but I think it was my hon. colleague who suggested it—that when such a name as that came before the Minister of Militia, the Minister of Militia would not hesitate to strike it out, because the recommendations of the general are subject to be changed by the minister. When the recommendations of the general are asked to be put into effect they can only be put into effect by the approval of the minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was referring to an interview of the 19th May ; but I think the hon. gentleman is referring to one of the 8th ?

Mr. FISHER. I was describing events that led up to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. 'The recommendation re Dr. Pickel is included, to be dealt with by you.' Does that mean that it was to be struck out by the hon. gentleman if he desired to do so ?

Mr. FISHER. It refers to an arrangement by which Dr. Pickel's name was to be struck out in the first place by the Minister of Militia. That morning, the minister being absent, Lieutenant Colonel Smart came to my office and asked me to go with him and put the order through which my colleague had arranged to do, as evidenced by Colonel Pinault's letter. And I, acting for the Minister of Militia, carried out the intention of the Minister of Militia as expressed to Lieutenant Colonel Smart and to Lieutenant Colonel Whitley.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman one more question ?

Mr. FISHER. As many as you like.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wish to interrupt without the hon. gentleman's consent.

Mr. FISHER. You have my free and frank consent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was the Minister of Militia present at the interview of 19th of May ?

Mr. FISHER. No, he was out of town. And it was in consequence of his being out of town that I had to act for him so as to get the gazette through, at the request of Lieutenant Colonel Whitley and Lieutenant Colonel Smart.

Now, I think I have explained that reference and have made clear the sequence of events. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has any other questions to ask me I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) has answered them most satisfactorily.

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear. For once, we agree. There are some other points in this resolution concerning which I wish to say a few words. There is one thing in it which is remarkable. We have already had a debate in this House on this question. In that debate Lord Dundonald's name came prominently forward. And, in that debate, hon. gentlemen opposite dwelt a good deal on Lord Dundonald's name and on his position as General Officer Commanding. But, on this resolution it comes in only as an allusion at the end. Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only supppose that hon. gentlemen opposite, having slept over the question, having considered what they had said, having considered the whole bearing of this question, have changed their minds. They have come to the conclusion that they will attack me personally, and, through me, the government of which I have the honour to be a member. They are discussing this resolution chiefly—almost altogether—in relation to the question of political interference. I think I have dealt with that in my own particular case. At any rate, I am ready to leave my case on that point as it stands. I know, however, two things. In the first place, by the order dispensing with Lord Dundonald's services, my colleagues did me the honour of espousing my cause, declaring that they agree with what I did, and saying that, so far as political interference was concerned, I was not guilty of the charge laid at my door. In the second place, in this motion the hon. gentleman alludes to the fact that what I had done was approved by the government. We, therefore, take square issue with hon. gentlemen opposite on behalf of the government and of the party which that government represents, on this question of political interference. I stated this afternoon to what extent I would plead guilty. I stated this afternoon what I believed to be the essence of the question before the country, and that essence is embodied in the Order in Council dispensing with the services of Lord Dundonald. I will not read the paragraph again ; but I may point out and repeat here that the extent of political interference to which I plead guilty is simply this—that when I found political interference and preferment being introduced into this regiment I protested against it. To that extent, and only to that extent, did I bring politics into the matter. I have already proven clearly that, in the discussions which arose as to the qualifications of the officers, I advocated the appointment of Conservatives over Liberals, that when I did suggest that a certain officer was not qualified from a military point of view and could not be justifiably appointed as major of that squadron, the only name I suggested as an alternative was that of as pronounced a Conservative as himself. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about my recommending certain gentlemen of the name of Miltimore. These gentlemen were appointed to subordinate positions ; one, who had had experience in camp was recommended and ratified by Lieutenant Colonel Smart as captain ; and the others as junior lieutenants. I have the word of the General Officer Commanding and other military authorities that, when a new regiment is to be organized some men not qualified by military experience must necessarily be given positions in that regiment. But my whole contention was that where men of no military experience were put in as officers, they should take subordinate positions, and that the men who were given responsible positions should have military experience. I did not care whether they were Liberals or Conservatives. I recommended and suggested the appointment of Conservatives who had military experience.

Sir, the hon. leader of the opposition, (Mr. R. L. Borden) said this afternoon, that, as Minister of Agriculture and a civilian I was endangering the efficiency of the militia of this country. I found the recommendation of the General Officer Commanding, I found the recommendation of Lieutenant Colonel Smart, in favour of a man, who had no military qualification, for a responsible position, and I asked that he should not be placed in that position. Who, I ask you, Sir, has the interest of the militia at heart? Is it the General Officer Commanding who recommends such a man? Is it the colonel of the regiment, another military expert who recommends such a man? Or is it I, a civilian, who urge that a man given a position of command in the militia shall be one of some military experience? Sir, I leave my conduct in the hands of the House and, with the history of that case as I have given it, I believe I shall be backed up not only by Liberals, but by Conservatives, by all who have at heart the interests of the militia of Canada.

The last paragraph of this resolution says:

> The House regrets that this unwarrantable interference, approved by the government, not only unduly delayed the organization of the regiment but has culminated in depriving the militia of Canada of an experienced and distinguished commanding officer.

The whole tenor of the document, and of the remarks of my hon. friends on the other side, shows clearly and distinctly that they have thrown Lord Dundonald overboard, but I did not suppose they would go to the extent of throwing over entirely and wholly Lord Dundonald's final statement as issued in the 'News' of last Saturday. They say that my conduct has culminated in depriving the militia of Canada of an experienced and distinguished officer. What does Lord Dundonald himself say? In his statement, taken from the Ottawa 'Citizen' of Monday, June 20,—and I believe this is a reprint of the statement which appeared in the Toronto 'News' which was revised and authorized by Lord Dundonald—he says:

> In my efforts I was constantly hampered by interference with that particular part of my work. This interference began very soon after my arrival. It has continued incessantly ever since. Mr. Fisher's interest in the affairs of the Thirteenth Scottish Light Dragoons was simply the final incident in a long list of various phases of obstruction.

I am not the guilty one; I am only the last straw that broke the camel's back. All I can say is that if my political interference is a fair example of the political interference about which Lord Dundonald complains in this extract he has very little to complain of, very little to complain of. I presume from the text of the whole statement that this was an aggravated case, that it was a case so aggravated that the general could no longer contain himself. I supposed when he made the speech in Montreal, and the report first came out, that it was a temporary outburst, but I find from Lord Dundonald's own statement in the letter which he addressed to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that he went there with the deliberate purpose and intent of setting the heather on fire.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He has succeeded.

Mr. FISHER. He has succeeded?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. He has succeeded. That is all right, we will see what the results of the conflagration are.

Mr. MACPHERSON. A tempest in a pickle pot.

Mr. FISHER. I want to point out that if this is the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite their contention and their conclusion has been entirely disproved out of the mouth of Lord Dundonald himself, and that therefore, on the evidence of the General Officer Commanding, this resolution ought to fall to the ground.

There are one or two things in this statement which I shall not discuss at length, but about which I must say a word or two. Under the heading of 'Wanted a verdict' we have:

> A course offering many attractions was to resign and issue a public statement giving my reasons. So far as I personally was concerned it would have been by far the easier and more pleasant course. The objection was that by so doing I would give neither the government nor the people of Canada any real opportunity to pass judgment upon the matters brought to their attention.

That of course is a matter of judgment and Lord Dundonald's judgment in regard to his course must be accepted. I must say myself, viewing it from the outside, that the judgment does not appeal to me.

An hon. MEMBER. A pity.

Mr. FISHER. And it appears to me that if Lord Dundonald had desired to draw the attention of the people of Canada successfully and effectually to anything concerning the militia, he would have done so more successfully and have put himself less in the wrong had he done so in the proper constitutional method and not violated everything connected with the constitutional government of this country. The course which in this article Lord Dundonald rejects would have been a proper and dignified course for an officer of the government. Lord Dundonald would have been quite justified if he felt his position as an officer of the government was not consistent with the actions of the government to have addressed a letter of resignation in whatever terms he chose to the minister in whose department he was, to the government of which he was an officer and that course would have been a right and proper course under the constitutional government of this country, and by adopting it he would not, as he has done in this case, have set at defiance every rule of constitutional government.

Mr. SPROULE. The letter of resignation might have been treated as confidential.

Mr. FISHER. Sir, the hon. gentleman knows quite well that the insinuation he is making could not have any foundation. The hon. gentleman could have moved that the papers connected with the resignation of Lord Dundonald should be brought down, and they would have been brought before the country in a proper constitutional way while by the course pursued the whole has been done in a way which if this gentleman has such a strong position as his friends think and he thinks, he certainly endangers and injures that position because he has set at defiance all the rules of constitutional government in this country and has left himself open to the most serious reflections and the most serious condemnations.

I shall not go at any length into the question of the propriety of an officer of the government discussing the actions of that government but I will point out this, that there have been instances of a similar character in the old country and here. There have been expressions of opinion in regard to the propriety of the General Officer Commanding the militia being independent of the government of the country and independent of the Minister of Militia. Various authorities have been cited on this point. I am not going into it at any length but I shall point out the fact that I have here under my hand the authority of an eminent militiaman and military critic in this country. In the course of a correspondence this gentleman inquires :

> For my information and guidance might I have the authority quoted which permits the General Officer Commanding, an officer directly under the Minister of Militia, to receive and transmit as General Officer Commanding, commands from His Excellency.

Then in another case the same gentleman says :

> May I respectfully request you will be so good as to quote to me the authority which permits the General Officer Commanding to receive and transmit any commands from His Excellency, without its being an Order in Council, and then only by order of the Minister of Militia.

And then again he asks for any authority which allows an acknowledgment from the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies to him to be forwarded through the General Officer Commanding without the order of the Minister of Militia.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who wrote that ?

Mr. FISHER. An eminent military authority in Canada who signs himself 'Sam. Hughes.'

There are one or two other matters in regard to this subject in connection with which Lord Dundonald refers to me. The District Officer Commanding in the course of this memo. says :

> The only possible way to get the new corps officered was to get local support and trust the opinion of the Commanding Officer entrusted with the duty of raising the regiment.

The hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) this afternoon dwelt a good deal on my advice in regard to the officering of this regiment. He dwelt on the fact that I had interfered because I had dared to suggest to Colonel Smart certain officers with certain qualifications.

The General Officer Commanding says that he ought to have this advice from the commanding officer. I do not deny for a moment that when it comes to a question of military qualifications it is the duty of the commanding officer, the military expert, to know about them, but when you come to raise and organize a new regiment in this country, or in any other country, as long as there is nothing that interferes with military qualifications there are other considerations to be taken into account in the successful organization of the regiment. There are considerations to be taken into account, in regard to which the people of the neighbourhood, even though they be civilians, little as they are to be considered in these matters, may find that they can give advice, in regard to which civilians who know the country, know the genius of the people, know the local conditions and circumstances, may be able to give advice which will be valuable to even a military expert—not advice on military affairs, not advice as to military qualifications. We have to take the word of the military expert for that. When Colonel Smart told me Captain Adams was physically disqualified to be the commander of the squadron, I said : That ends the matter. When I was told that it was military etiquette that the commanding officer of the regiment should have the absolute choice of his own adjutant, and although I had suggested Captain Adams' name in place of Captain Converse, when I was told that it was a subject for the colonel alone to deal with, I said that if it was a matter of military etiquette I had not a word to say, notwithstanding the fact that Captain Adams was adjutant of the 6th Hussars, and that, as an eastern townships man, he would be well qualified to be adjutant of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, seeing that he had been recommended by Colonel Whitley to be adjutant of the 6th Hussars a few months before. But these are military matters. I do not presume to set up my opinion against that of the military expert in military matters, but when it comes to matters which are social, and which are local in their character, I do venture to think, in my presumption, that I know more about the eastern townships than Lord Dundonald or Colonel Smart. When I first undertook to say anything about this regiment, it was just on that point that I spoke of. The men who come from Montreal to command the regiment in the eastern townships, not knowing the people, not knowing the local conditions, not knowing the various conditions that go to make it a success, having made a mistake, I advised them, hoping to be able to remove some of the difficulties which confronted them in their ignorance, and that is the whole force and front of my offending in the matter. Again, I am not to set up my own opinion, but there is another opinion which I bow to as being that of a military expert. There was trouble a few years ago in regard to another General Officer Commanding, and these pregnant words were used in regard to that gentleman. The writer of these remarks was apparently interviewing His Excellency :

Re my remarks to His Excellency—what I there stated I repeat. I was somewhat taken aback at the cavalier manner in which he 'pooh-poohed' my suggestions re soldiers as colonists and re Canadians becoming British soldiers. He seemed troubled with what I frankly confess to be, in my opinion, your complaint of knowing it all and of not wishing to hear facts.

I suppose then he ought to have heard the facts.

What I said to him of you was that it was just possible you might make a mistake in selecting the officer to command a Canadian contingent.

These were the remarks made by this eminent military critic about the General Commanding the Canadian militia.

You might not be possessed of all the facts.

And, therefore, of course, this gentleman undertook to advise His Excellency.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What is the name of that gentleman ?

Mr. FISHER. That letter is signed 'Sam. Hughes. The General Officer Commanding, in this document, says that I was a witness against myself. He proceeds :

That Mr. Fisher's motives were political, he himself admitted in his second speech in the House of Commons on June 10. This admission, I may observe, was singularly at variance with his earlier speech on the same day. In that speech, which was a prepared statement, he distinctly stated that his objections to Dr. Pickel were of a military nature, and that his interference was not due to political motives.

The hon. leader of the opposition stated this afternoon, as he did on the former occasion, that my speech on that day was at variance with my statement. I venture to say that anybody who examines the two records will say that it was in no shape or way at variance with the statement. I stated that I had made no objection to any officer on political grounds alone. I did so in regard to Doctor Pickel because he had no military experience, and I did so because I found it necessary to remove the Tory political complexion of that particular squadron.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FISHER. Hon. gentlemen nod their heads. That is political interference, they say. They and their friends are to be allowed to intrigue, are to be allowed to put their friends into the militia, are to be allowed to give their friends promotion in the militia and are to be allowed, as in the old days, to make the militia of Canada a Tory preserve. And, Mr. Speaker, with that going on right under our noses, no Liberal who has at heart the interest of the militia is to be allowed to protest.

Mr. ROSAMOND. No Tory need apply.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Gibson applied, and I endorsed him. Captain Baker applied, and I endorsed him. I recommended Captain Carr to take the place of Doctor Pickel, and I recommended Captain Holland to be put over Mr. Russell, the one a Conservative and the other a Liberal. I said that Surgeon-Major Macdonald, one of the most active politicians against me in my county, should, because he had been connected with the militia for years back, be offered the senior medical place in the regiment. I was told that he did not wish to go into a cavalry regiment. I said in one of the letters, which you can read, that I would be sorry if he declined and that I hoped that even for a short time he would take the position, because he was a military officer who had had experience. Yet the hon. gentleman says : 'No Tory need apply.' I venture to say that I have proved that Tories can apply and be endorsed by me if they have the military qualifications which justify their appointment. The same spirit which that hon. gentleman illustrates to-night, the same spirit which for years kept the Liberals of this country out of the militia of Canada and would not allow them to have a place in the militia continues to-day. They want to continue, in face of the fact that throughout this country there are hundreds of Liberals who want to go into the militia to serve their king and country, the intrigues of the old Conservative party, but I want to tell this House and to tell the people of Canada that as long as there is a Liberal government in power, as long as the Liberals hold a majority in this country, they will not be allowed to continue those intrigues. I take issue with hon. gentlemen opposite directly and straightly on that point. The Liberal government say that politics shall not be introduced into the militia. If they want to continue the militia as a Tory preserve I tell them that the Liberal government will say to them that they shall not do it by their intrigues and machinations.

That is the whole extent of any political interference in the militia which the Liberal party or the Liberal government would countenance or allow. The general goes on to say : That there was a peculiar coincidence in the fact that I was acting Minister of Militia. Well, there was a coincidence, but I do not think it was peculiar. My colleague, the Minister of Militia, and myself had been discussing this question ; we had been discussing the list of officers which was to be submitted ; and notwithstanding the insinuation, notwithstanding the evil opinion these people, thinking evilly, have in regard to myself, it was the most natural thing in the world that when my colleague, the Minister of Militia, went away for a day, he should ask me to sign the recommendations instead of going to one of his other colleagues who knew nothing about it. The rest of the government at that time knew nothing about it ; the rest of the government had not been concerned in it. The Minister of Militia, and I, as representing the townships—I who knew the local circumstances and conditions—had been consulting in regard to this matter. I had been giving suggestions with the view of making the regiment a success and making it effective, and it was natural, the most natural thing in the world that my colleague should ask me. It was a coincidence if you like, but I cannot acknowledge that it was peculiar. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I need speak much longer ; I have spoken at much greater length than I intended ; I have been forced to do this, but I take issue straight and square on this resolution. It is a resolution condemning me and through me the government who have endorsed my action. I venture to think, Sir, that no political interference has been proven. On the contrary, my action, which has been endorsed by the government, was with a view of preventing all political interference. I venture to think that the statement that Lord Dundonald, by consequence of this incident has been lost to the militia of Canada, is not true ; and I have proven that it is not true ; out of the mouth of the late General Officer Commanding. If hon. gentlemen opposite wish to take that question up further, they can do so. I am surprised I must confess, that in this document and in this resolution they seem to have completely changed their minds since the former debate when Lord Dundonald was in the mouth of every one of them ; when Lord Dundonald's record and Lord Dundonald's actions were in the mouth of every one of them ; while to-day there is none among them so poor as to do him honour.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I am very glad to be able to say a few brief words in defence of Lord Dundonald. I have listened to the Minister of Agriculture, and it is only by a violent stretch of the imagination that I have not been able to see in him the Minister of Militia. I am accustomed to hear the Minister of Agriculture entertain us about cold storage, the breeding of cattle, experimental farms, and the fattening of chickens, in the mildest possible fashion. But to-day, put a sword in his hand, and a military cap on his head and hear the swash-buckler, cutting language which he used, and all illusion concerning his agricultural pursuits is dispelled. He called my hon. friend the leader of the opposition a pettifogging lawyer. That is an opprobious epithet ; it is not used by gentlemen practising my profession, and the people of Canada no matter what their party allegiance, will be surprised to know that the Minister of Agriculture has applied such language to the distinguished leader of the Conservative party, who so calmly and so judiciously and with such a high sense of honour, placed before the House the facts of this very peculiar case. The Minister of Agriculture stated that he thought he could not let this motion go to the House, without making some observation. Well, I should think not. If the Minister of Agriculture had heard what every one else has heard during the past few days ; if he had heard that he placed himself and his party and his government in a very unnecessary mess, and that he is condemned generally for his foolish intermeddling, he would have no hesitation in believing that it was necessary for him to give some explanation to this parliament. Let us look at the facts calmly. Two years ago the government summoned to Canada a man of brilliant career ; a man having a proud record ; a brave man, a competent man. They gave this military expert the position of General Officer Commanding commanding our militia ; a position which he has since filled with perfect satisfaction to the Canadian militia, and to the whole people of Canada. To show what was the opinion entertained by the Minister of Militia of Lord Dundonald, I quote these words used a few months ago by the hon. gentleman (Sir Frederick Borden). He said :

> We might congratulate ourselves in this country on having at the head of the military side of the Militia Department a gentleman who understood the importance of all he (Sir Frederick) had said. He was not only a great warrior, as he had proved in a dozen battles, but he was a man of sound sense and judgment, who was here for the purpose not of self-aggrandisement, not of playing to the gallery and having his name and praises sounded on every possible opportunity, but of developing the material he found into one of the best fighting forces on the earth.

And the Minister of Militia could have added what he knows, and what every one knows ; that Lord Dundonald, whose record in the past has been so pure, so noble, so worthy of admiration, has not been in this country a mere dilettante, but has been without doubt, the best military commander we ever had. And what has happened ? A short time ago the General Officer Commanding after having discharged his military duties in Montreal, met his brother officers at dinner. It was not a public dinner tendered to him ; I insist upon that feature because it is important in appreciating the conduct of Lord Dundonald. It was a dinner given to him by those officers who assisted him in the great work upon which he has been engaged for two years. At that dinner Lord Dundonald stated that in the carrying out of the mission which had been entrusted to him, his work was constantly hampered by political interference, and by meddlers who had no right and no justification for their conduct. And, Sir, he gave as an instance the fact, that the Minister of Agriculture without semblance of right had stricken from a list of officers presented by him in virtue of his duty, the name of an officer whom he had recommended for a position in this new regiment. Then what followed is a further proof of the harshness and arbitrariness of this government which has been manifested upon more than one occasion.

An organ of my right hon. friend in the city of Montreal stated in its issue of this morning that Mr. Monk would be watched, and it would be seen whether in this instance he was supporting Lord Dundonald. I am supoprting him, Mr. Speaker, as I have supported many less important men than Lord Dundonald, who have been sacrificed under the same principle of arbitrariness and tyranny which has characterized the government since 1896. This is no isolated case, Sir. Public employees in the county of Jacques Cartier, after the elections of 1896, fell like leaves in Vallumbrosa, and they fell not only there but elsewhere, and we took their defence when it was just and right to do so. And why should we not do so on this occasion if this man has been treated unjustly? In cases without number in my own county an inquiry was held conformably to the principles of British justice. Those who were about to be sacrificed were given an opportunity of being heard. But there has been no such element in this case; for what do we find? The General Officer Commanding, this man of whose record in military matters there is nothing but good to be said, was summoned to state whether what he had declared at that banquet was correctly reported or not. He was offered no opportunity to explain; he was not censured; he was asked simply to declare whether this was true or not; and upon his declaration that he had spoken substantially as reported in the papers, an Order in Council was passed. He was not treated with that courtesy which, as I am informed, military men of his rank are treated in every civilized country in the world. No messenger was sent, to communicate to him the declaration of the government. While he was in another city performing the military duty assigned to him, a telegraph boy brought him a yellow message informing him that the country had dispensed with his services.

Now, Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself, I regret this incident; but what is the cause of it? Has there arisen any great controversy between this distinguished man and the militia of our young country which he had under his command? None whatever. He was giving general satisfaction. Speaking at any rate for my own province, there has been no complaint. The relations have been most cordial. He is recognized in the province of Quebec as having been probably the most sympathetic, the most earnest, the most capable commander we have had in this country. Has he had any serious difficulty with the only man in this country who is his superior—nobody disputes that—the head of his department? None whatever in this instance. Has he had any serious difficulty with the government as a whole? He does not appear to have had. But the cause, the substance, the root of this whole difficulty is in the interference of the Minister of Agriculture. There is no other cause, There is no other man who takes cognizance of this record, who takes the trouble to study the facts, who does not say that if the Minister of Agriculture had not interfered in this affair, nothing would have prevented this able general from carrying to completion a work, Sir, which, whatever may be our opinions as to the necessity of increasing or diminishing the militia, is a necessary work in this country if we are to hold up our heads as a nation.

Now, Sir, will you allow me—because I am not a military man myself, and there are very competent men in militia matters on this side of the House, and perhaps on the other side—will you allow me to draw your attention for one moment to the position occupied in this country by the General Officer Commanding? I believe that is of some importance; because if the conditions under which we live are not satisfactory, we may alter them. If the institutions which we have do not please us, we may possibly find something to improve upon them. But in appreciating the conduct of Lord Dundonald, and in coming to a sound judgment upon the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture upon this occasion, it is necessary for us to have these facts before our minds. The General Officer Commanding in this country occupies a special position. It is impossible to read the law relating to that officer, it is impossible to know our constitutional traditions, without admitting that fact. It is sufficient to refer to the statute organizing the Militia Department to see that the position of the General Officer Commanding is not that of any other man in the service of this country. In the first place, the command of the militia forces in this country, just as in England, is vested in the head of the executive. There is no doubt in regard to that. We have wrested from the Crown a great many rights and privileges. We have an absolute control of most of the things that appertain to the public service; but in this country, as in the old country, we have with the consent of the people, left certain prerogatives to the Crown. Amongst these is the prerogative of mercy, the prerogative of being the fountain of honour, the prerogative of initiating all financial measures, the prerogative of concluding treaties, and the prerogative of the command of the troops. I mention this fact, because I deem it important in appreciating the conduct of this whole affair. It is true, that we have long ago abandoned the old traditions of the Mutiny Act. It is not necessary for us to legislate every year in respect of the army or the militia because with the growth of our political institutions we have maintained the command which we can exercise to-day —a control over the armed force to which we could not pretend in former days—and we have to resort to what I would call intricacies in parliamentary procedure. But the fact remains nevertheless that the control of the army, the control of the militia, is under the head of the executive, under the Crown; and our action upon the militia can only be exercised by parliament through legislation and through the voting of supplies. To a certain extent, Sir, this explains how parliament has dealt with the functions of the Minister of Militia and the functions of the General Officer Commanding. After having declared that the command of the force is in the hands of His Majesty or the Governor General, as his representative, the statute defines the duties of the Minister of Militia. That minister is charged with and is responsible for the administration of the militia affairs, including all matters involving expenditure.

> The Minister of Militia and Defence shall have the initiative in all militia affairs involving the expenditure of money.
> The Governor in Council shall, from time to time, make such orders as are necessary respecting the duties to be performed by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

And when we come to the duties of the chief officer commanding, this is how parliament has defined them:

> There shall be appointed an officer who holds the rank of colonel or rank superior thereto in Her Majesty's regular army, who shall be charged, under the orders of Her Majesty, with the military command and discipline of the militia, and who, while he holds such appointment, shall have the rank of major general in the militia, and shall be paid at the rate of four thousand dollars per annum in full of all pay and allowances.

This is repeated in the regulations and assignment of duties to the General Officer Commanding. In the regulations, which have for us the force of an Act of parliament, the General Officer Commanding is the sole person who is entitled to present to the Minister of Militia the list of those who are entitled to commissions and of those who are entitled to be promoted. If we bear these facts in mind, we will find in the Order in Council, under which the dismissal of the General Officer Commanding has taken place, an exposition of a totally different doctrine. That doctrine which has been defined by parliament, that doctrine which has been declared to be the will of parliament, which assigns certain specific duties to the Minister of Militia, which assigns certain duties to the General Officer Commanding, which circumscribes with care and defines within strict limits the duties assigned to the Minister of Agriculture—that doctrine which has the sanction of parliament and which has defined the administrative functions of this government, is absolutely contradicted by the Order in Council, of which I will read a paragraph. This is what the Order in Council says:

> In the case of members of the cabinet, while all have an equal degree of responsibility in a constitutional sense, yet in the practical working out of responsible government in a country of such vast extent as Canada, it is found necessary to attach a special responsibility to each minister for the public affairs of the province or district with which he has close political connection, and with which his colleagues may not be so well acquainted. Mr. Fisher, while sharing with his colleagues that general responsibility already referred to, represents in a particular manner the eastern townships of the province of Quebec. If, when it was proposed to form a new regiment in that district, he interested himself in the work and sought to make the organization effective, he was not merely exercising a right: he was discharging a duty both to the people of the district and to his colleagues in the cabinet, who would expect him to inform himself of all the facts and advise them before approval by the cabinet of the proposed arrangement.

That definition of the duties and administrative functions of the ministers is in direct contradiction, not only of our constitutional traditions, but of the express enactment and desire of parliament. Let me point out for a moment the view which I take of the interference of the Minister of Agriculture in this matter, and let us see what were the powers of the Minister of Agriculture before the 18th of May, when the Minister of Militia found that he had to leave Ottawa for a few days. Will it be pretended seriously that the Minister of Agriculture had before the 18th of May any more power to interfere with the organization of this new regiment in the eastern townships than any other man interested in public affairs throughout the country? If it were proposed to organize a regiment in the county of Jacques Cartier, could I, as one knowing the local conditions probably better than most people, be qualified to interfere with the work of those regularly charged by statute and regulations with the organization of that regiment? Would I have the right to meddle with that organization and interfere with the nomination of the officers and men, duly and regularly proposed by those to whom the law had given that task? Had the Minister of Agriculture any more right than any other citizen to do what we find he did long before the Minister of Militia left Ottawa and long before the final arrangements were made for the confirmation of the list to which reference has been made in this matter? I say he had not, and I say more. We have had here three distinct defences from the Minister of Agriculture. So convinced was that gentleman that it was impossible for him to justify the interference on his part, which has produced such regrettable results, that he has three times shifted his ground of defence. On one occasion he pretended that he had merely acted in the capacity of errand bearer for the Minister of Militia. His role had been merely the ministerial one of bringing the list to Council. Later on he shifted his ground and urged that, as minister for the district, he had a right to interfere and pronounce on the efficiency, from a military point of view, of the gentlemen selected to be the officers in this new regiment. Then in the last resort he pretended that he had the right to interfere and make sure that in the organization of that regiment both political parties would be represented in their proper proportions. Let me point out what were the powers conferred upon my hon. friend by the Minister of Militia when he left the city of Ottawa. To ascertain what these were we need only refer to the record and to the explanation given by the Minister of Militia himself. It has been urged that at the moment, when the facts referred to in this case took place, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture was in reality the acting Minister of Militia. But, Sir, there can be no such thing as an acting Minister of Militia, or an acting minister of any department, unless authority has been duly conferred upon him in the proper way. I fail to see how, when a minister goes away from Ottawa for a few hours, or even a few days, he can, by his mere request, make one of his colleagues the acting minister for his department. He cannot do so. The minister in charge of a department is constituted under the great seal of Canada with certain regular formalities, and he cannot be replaced, even temporarily, unless certain formalities are gone through, and unless the cabinet has sanctioned the change. But there never was any pretense of conferring that authority on the Minister of Agriculture. What does the Minister of Militia say?

Finding that I will be obliged to be absent from Ottawa from the 18th to the 26th of May, I instructed my deputy to take the general order containing the proposed list of appointments as soon as completed, to my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to be by him submitted to Council, in view of the urgency of the case.

In other words, if the Minister of Agriculture had been brought into this affair at that moment and for the purpose specified by the Minister of Militia, the only role assigned him was a purely ministerial one—to take the list, as submitted to the Minister of Militia by the officer commanding, to Council, and have it approved as it then was and not otherwise. But, long before that, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture had forcibly introduced himself into this organization. He had long before that, and when the question of the formation of the regiment had been mooted, taken charge of the whole affair. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has quoted in detail from the record. It is not necessary that I should go over the same ground. But I say that there is no fair-minded, impartial man who will take cognizance of the correspondence and of the documents contained in this return, who will not at once arrive at the conclusion that, without having initiated in any way the idea of this regiment, the moment that idea was being carried into execution, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture interfered like a busybody and did not cease interfering until the event that we regret so much to-day had happened and he had deprived us of the services of the General Officer Commanding by his injudicious meddling. You will find that long before the 18th of May—in February and March—the Minister of Agriculture had already endeavoured to obtain control of this new organization. We do not find him going to the General Officer Commanding. He had the General Officer Commanding right here at hand. True, he made appointments with him which he did not keep. But he never in any way laid before the General Officer Commanding these observations which he laid before——

Mr. FISHER. I would like to correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) I never made any appointment with Lord Dundonald which I did not keep.

Mr. MONK. In this as in so many other instances, I regret to say, we have to choose between the utterances of Lord Dundonald himself and what is said by my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is bound to accept my statement in this House.

Mr. MONK. Did the hon. gentleman tell us to-day that he ever had any serious conference with the Minister of Militia himself? If he did, I must confess we would be inclined to doubt his word, because it is sufficient to read the letters of my hon.

friend long before the 18th of May and up to the 7th of June to see that he speaks only in his own name. He says, 'I am undertaking to write letters in order to enlist officers'; 'I will endeavour to make sure you will be able to go to camp this year,' and so on. Taking the documents before us he seems to have left entirely aside the General Officer Commanding, and also the head of the department and the employees of the department. He placed himself in communication with Lieutenant Colonel Whitley and Lieutenant Colonel Smart. It is with them, and with them exclusively, that he endeavoured to organize that regiment in the way he thought it should be organized, balancing between the political parties. That is what my hon. friend did and I question whether, as a matter of fact, he did not by his actions, endeavour to seduce these officers from the performance of their duties. It was with the General Officer Commanding they had to deal, not with the Minister of Agriculture. They had to deal with the General Officer Commanding and the Minister of Militia, and nobody else. And it is impossible, I say, to take cognizance of this correspondence and not arrive at the conclusion that, by the tolerance of the Minister of Militia, if in no other way, it was the Minister of Agriculture who took charge of the entire formation of this regiment, acting with Lieutenant Colonel Smart and Lieutenant Colonel Whitley, and that he violated not only the text of the law and of the regulations, but the spirit of the law and of our military organization, by addressing himself to these two officers charged with the organization of the regiment locally and endeavouring to interfere in order to prevent the nomination of certain officers and secure the appointment of others. My hon. friend, I stated a moment ago did not act as Acting Minister of Militia. The instructions he had from the Minister of Militia was to take that list to Council and have it approved. That was his duty, and I venture to assert and no one in this House will contradict me, that the only place where the Minister of Agriculture might have urged what reasons he had to urge against the appointment of certain men and in favour of the appointment of others was at the Council Board itself. As Minister of Agriculture he had no authority, as an individual member of the government he had no right, to interfere in any way. Under our constitutional system he could have been heard at the Council Board and there have urged what views he saw fit to urge—but no where else. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture has accused the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) of violating the decencies of debate in respect of his action with that specific list. Well, I am disposed to violate them to the same extent, because I interpret his dealing with the list exactly the same way as does my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. That list was printed on the 19th of May. At that moment it stood approved by the General Officer Commanding. And, on the 19th of May, according to the record which we have before us, it was brought to Council by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, and on the 19th of May, my hon. friend, without having any information whatever that Mr. Pickel had abandoned his right to his command as major, did erase his name from the list. And according to the record it was on the 19th of May that the erasure took place and the list was passed through Council. Yet, it was only on the 20th of May that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture had before him the letter of Lieutenant Colonel Smart in which that gentleman revealed, for the first time, to the Minister of Agriculture, that he had telephoned out to Sweetsburg and had obtained from Dr. Pickel himself his willingness to resign all right to his commission. That is the way I understood it. So that at the moment when this action was taken, at the moment when my hon. friend erased Mr. Pickel's name from that list, at the moment when it passed through Council there had not yet been brought to the Minister of Agriculture the knowledge that in view of the pressure which had been brought to bear upon him Mr. Pickel had abandoned his design of forming a part of the regiment.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is stating absolutely the contrary of what I proved within the last half hour.

Mr. MONK. That is not the way in which I understand it, and that is not the way in which the record speaks. But, Sir, I do not wish to incur the reproach of my hon. friend of being a pettifogging lawyer. It is not necessary in my estimation to go fully into these details although they are important, but, Sir, to show that the plea set up in this instance that Mr. Pickel had abandoned all right is not well founded, I may say that it was only when the act was completely accomplished that the fact was brought to the minister's knowledge.

Mr. FISHER. I have stated twice that I had Colonel Smart's letter in my hand, and had read it before I signed the document.

Mr. MONK. Then my hon. friend signed the document on May 20.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. MONK. It bears the date of the 19th.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend ignores what I said. It bore the date of the 19th when it was sent to me by Colonel Pinault from the department. It reached my office on the morning of the 20th and was then signed by me.

Mr. MONK. It is dated at the top and the bottom and listed the 19th. These documents are laid before us, and it is not pettifogging for us to invoke the dates which they bear, but it is not necessary to do so. My hon. friend has not in a manly and courageous way contradicted the important statement contained in Col. Smart's letter to Lord Dundonald. What does he say? He says that from the very inception the Minister of Agriculture interfered with the organization of this regiment. Is it true or is it not that the Minister of Agriculture said that this regiment would not be organized if Mr. Pickel was going to form part of it? That is the important point, because his objection to Mr. Pickel we all know was not his want of military qualification; it was his relationship to Senator Baker. Senator Baker is like a red rag to one of my hon. friend's bulls. Anybody who is related to Senator Baker seems to be for my hon. friend an objectionable man to form part of the militia of this country. What seems to me to be of supreme importance is that there is not by the Minister of Agriculture any categorical contradiction of the statements contained in Col. Smart's letter to Lord Dundonald. We are finally reduced to this that the proposition laid down by my friend the Minister of Agriculture and applauded incessantly by hon. gentlemen opposite is a proposition, which as far as I am concerned, I unreservedly condemn. It is contrary to the best interests of this country, and it is contrary to the interests of the militia that when a regiment is in process of organization political men, having no right under the statute or under the regulations, should interfere with the object avowed here by the Minister of Agriculture to give about an equal balance of both political parties in the construction of that regiment. If we accept that proposition, we may as well abandon every idea of having an effective militia in this country. If we accept that proposition it is perfectly ridiculous for us to spend over $3,000,000 per year on the militia. This government since it has been in power has spent over $10,000,000 on the militia, and this year we are spending $3,000,000. Then it is ridiculous to bring over from the old country a competent man, a man qualified to organize our militia, having no political tendencies himself, desirous only of one thing, to place our militia on a proper military footing, I say that this becomes ridiculous and absurd. If we accept the principle that politics are to have any portion, however small, in the organization of the militia we are laying the foundation of incalculable evil. If it is open to the Minister of Agriculture, why is it not open to every other member of the cabinet, and why is it not open to every member of this House to interfere with the military organization of a regiment, and the military organization of the country? If you admit that principle I say that the money we are spending on the reorganization of the force and in the improvement of our militia system is money absolutely wasted. There are changes proposed in our militia Bill. It is possible that we may improve it, but as long as the law is as it is and as long as we bring here from the old country a military man to command our militia, I say that military man ought to have carte blanche in his work. He is under this government that is not controvertable. There is no question about that. I have seen particularly in the newspapers of my province, some what I should call absurd issues, raised as to the right of the Canadian people to control their own militia organization. That question is not in issue in this case, that for my own part, I feel sincere regret at the extremely harsh and cruel treatment adopted by this government towards Lord Dundonald. It may be a logical consequence of the words which he uttered in Montreal that he has given this government the right to dispose with his services, but I say that in the eyes of the people of this country, if this government found that he had done wrong in that instance, it would have been far more dignified, far more honourable, far more just, to have communicated in plain language its opinion as to Lord Dundonald's conduct to that gentleman without in that abrupt way removing him from the theatre of what I would call his most beneficial actions since some time. I am perfectly sure that when the people of this country come to form a calm and judicial judgment upon the act of this government they will arrive at the conclusion unquestionably that he has been harshly treated and that in view of the role, the very ignominous role played in this whole transaction by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, the recourse to dismissal was a cruel and revengeful course which will be condemned by the people of this country.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) saw fit to begin his oration by what I should think the hon. gentleman would have considered a most unworthy sneer at my hon. friend who sits on my left, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) by referring to his chickens and certain matters connected with the department over which he so ably presides. I want to tell my hon. friend that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture occupies too important a place in the affections and regard of the people of this country to merit any sneers from him or from anybody else in regard to the duties which he discharges. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture does not need a champion in me. My hon. friend has made a statement here coolly, calmly and ably today which, I am sure, will carry conviction to the people of this country as it has carried conviction to every independent man in this House who has listened to him.

I will refer to a few points to which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has alluded.

The hon. gentleman began by declaring himself to be a champion of that much injured nobleman, Lord Dundonald. He wished it to be distinctly understood that he was here, at least as one friend, to stand by the Earl of Dundonald, but beyond that announcement with a good deal of sound and fury we heard scarcely any word in reference to Lord Dundonald. He was leading up, I supposed, to prove that Lord Dundonald's course was absolutely constitutional; but he had not gone far before he changed his mind, and he ended his speech by admitting, if words mean anything, that the course pursued by Lord Dundonald could not be defended, though at the same time claiming that our treatment of him was somewhat harsh. So it is understood that there is no question in this House as to the fact that the act committed by Lord Dundonald was absolutely indefensible and in violation of every rule which controls an officer of the government; and that it was such as could not be overlooked by the government of this country. The hon. gentleman declared himself to be the champion of Lord Dundonald although he forgot to perform the task which he had undertaken. It occurred to me that there might be a bond of sympathy between the two gentlemen. The hon. gentleman has been suffering recently. He had his head cut off not very long ago and he can more fully sympathize with the Earl now in trouble and difficulty. It was chivalrous indeed for the hon. gentleman to come forward at this moment, feeling as he does the deepest sympathy, and being desirous of making known the fact that he realized his own position and is ready to sympathize with another who is similarly situated. But the difference is that the hon. gentleman was disciplined by his own friends voluntarily, and of course he will hardly confess that he deserved it, as he is bound to admit that his friend whom he is championing did deserve what he got.

Let me refer for a few moments to the observations which my hon. friend has made in reference to this case. He says at the outset that the dinner which Lord Dundonald attended was not a public dinner, that he was in the city of Montreal attending to his duties, that he was invited to dine with some friends and that it was at a private dinner that all this occurred. How is it that at this private dinner Lord Dundonald had a newspaper reporter present, paid to be there, and that every word that was said was taken down by that newspaper reporter, although next morning an attempt was made, and successfully made, to prevent the publication of these notes in the Montreal 'Gazette.'

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman say that the General Officer Commanding had a newspaper reporter there paid to report his speech ?

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am so informed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have no personal knowledge. At any rate we have this curious fact that the only version of what was stated at the dinner, which Lord Dundonald admits to be authentic, was the version which was reported by that reporter. But, Sir, he told us that Lord Dundonald was in Montreal attending to his duties. We have read the correspondence which has been laid on the table of the House, and we have heard the statement which Lord Dundonald had read to this House by a prominent member of the opposition, and from that we have learned that Lord Dundonald went to Montreal for what purpose ? To see Colonel Smart and to ask Colonel Smart to write a letter—a letter which is published in Lord Dundonald's statement—and he went to Montreal to bring together some of his subordinate officers in order that he might hunt up evidence to found a charge against my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture and against this government. When he came to make that charge and to make that speech, how fair was he, how honourable was he when by his own admission he knew that my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture, was acting for me at the council board, when he knew that my hon. friend had in his hands at the time he erased the name of Pickel from the 'Gazette,' a letter from Colonel Smart—when he knew all these things he made his speech at that dinner, which speech was taken down by his reporter, and he carefully avoided giving his hearers to understand the truth in reference to these facts ?

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman say that Lord Dundonald knew of the erasure before it went to Council ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I said that at the time Lord Dundonald made his speech in Montreal he knew that my hon. colleague had in his hands a letter from Colonel Smart not only authorizing, but asking, my hon. friend to make that erasure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence not understand from the hon. Minister of Agriculture this evening, as I understand from him, that before that letter had been received it had been arranged between him and Colonel Smart that the name should be struck out ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know that that has any bearing upon the point. What I say is that when Lord Dundonald made the statement at that banquet, finding fault with the Minister of Agriculture, charging him with altering a document improperly, he knew that the Minister of Agriculture was acting for me, and he knew that the Minister of Agriculture had the authority of the officer commanding the regiment to strike out that name.

My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has referred to as cruel, the manner in which Lord Dundonald has been treated ; and he says that this cruel treatment was because Lord Dundonald was notified of his dismissal by a cold every-day telegram. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) what other means was in the hands of the government or myself by which to inform Lord Dundonald——

Mr. MONK. As I have stated, when an officer of that rank is dismissed, a member of the headquarters staff is sent by special letter to bring him the message.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Seeing that Lord Dundonald was attending to the camp, where he had gone against my advice——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I can lay that letter on the table of the House if it is desired.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask a question ? Did the minister advise Lord Dundonald not to go to the London camp ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hold on—before the Order in Council was passed dismissing him ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Then you prejudged the case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No ; my mind was made up.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TISDALE. Will my hon. friend allow me——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TISDALE. If you have any objection, I do not wish to interrupt. It was not quite plain whether the minister said he did not understand that it was the custom of the War Office to send a special messenger on such occasions.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, it is a mere matter of three or four hours' journey for the War Office to send a messenger to any of the principal commands in the British Isles, but here it was a matter of a great many hundred miles, and it seemed to me the greatest possible act of kindness to let Lord Dundonald know at the earliest possible moment what had taken place, in order that he might not be in an awkward or unpleasant position. To prevent his getting into that position, after consulting the Prime Minister, and as soon as I heard that Lord Dundonald intended to go to the camp, I sent a polite note to him telling him that I had heard that he proposed going to the camp, and suggesting the propriety—these were the words I used—suggesting the propriety of his postponing his visit to that camp. I got an answer from him at eleven o'clock that night practically to this effect : That if I had said 'you must not go,' he would not have gone, but because I did not say so, he proposed to go ; and he went. Therefore, it was necessary to send him a telegram, and if there was any great cruelty in that, I only wish to say that it was not intended. Our motives were absolutely the opposite of any unkindness or cruelty.

Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has said that Lord Dundonald had no quarrel with me, and that it was only the Minister of Agriculture with whom he had the quarrel.

Mr. MONK. I beg my hon. friend's pardon ; I did not say that. I said the Minister of Agriculture had not laid the grievance before you, or before the General Officer Commanding ; he seemed to have himself dealt with Colonel Smart.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I took the words of my hon. friend down : that Lord Dundonald worked harmoniously with me, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) did me the honour to read a speech of mine in proof of that. He read that speech to show that the official course of events was absolutely calm and without a ripple on its surface, except for this difficulty with the Minister of Agriculture. Well, surely my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) understands that when an officer of the government makes an attack such as Lord Dundonald made upon my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture ; a most unfair attack, as I have shown ; a most misleading attack, as I have shown ; and when that officer attacks the whole government at the same time ; surely my hon. friend does not expect that the Minister of Militia, at the head of the department in which this official is an officer, is not to be affected by what the General Officer Commanding said under such circumstances.

I will show later on exactly the attitude of that gentleman towards this government and towards myself, although I am quite prepared to admit that I misunderstood him. I made the speech which the hon. gentleman has quoted to-night. That speech may not do much credit to my head, or to my discernment, or to my brains, but I think it will be admitted that it does some credit to my heart, and that it proves, at any rate, that, so far as I was concerned, I was willing to do my very best to get along comfortably and satisfactorily with Lord Dundonald. I also was speaking to a meeting of officers at a dinner in Montreal, at which all the guests were, I believe, officers. But, instead of following the tactics of Lord Dundonald, by which he endeavoured to prejudice these officers against those in authority, I took advantage of the occasion to endeavour to assist the General Officer Commanding.

My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) ventured the statement at the outset that the General Officer Commanding in Canada occupied a special position. He undertook to elaborate that argument, but I did not observe that he arrived at any conclusion. I followed him very closely, because I thought I was going to learn some new constitutional doctrine. I thought I was going to hear announced again, as used to be claimed many years ago, that because the officer who commands the militia of this country, under the laws of this country, must be, under the present law, an imperial officer, that therefore, by virtue of that fact, the General Officer Commanding possessed some special power with reference to the Canadian militia. I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) did not go to that extent, and so we are all agreed once more that there is no constitutional question at issue. If it were necessary to prove that there is no constitutional question at issue it could be easily done.

I have here under my hand quotations from speeches of some of the great men who have occupied the position of Secretary of State for War in England. I will not detain the House with them now; but both the Right Hon. Hugh C. Childers and Lord Cardwell, who occupied that positiion with great honour and distinction, have laid down most distinctly, and to-day there is no question about it, the proposition that the minister has absolute control of every officer, including the Commander in Chief, in the War Office. You could not carry on government otherwise. It would be an absurdity. If the General Officer Commanding is to have these extraordinary powers, why should not a deputy minister have them? Carry that idea out to its legitimate conclusion, and you would have not government, but chaos in the affairs of the country. So it is not worth while to waste time discussing it.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the hon. gentleman had better discuss it fully, for later on I may deal with it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will read two of the authorities. First, I will read an extract from a speech of the Right Hon. Hugh C. Childers, delivered in 1882. It is to be found in a book entitled 'Life of Right Hon. H. C. Childers,' second volume, at page 56:

> It has been suggested that of late years successive Secretaries of State for War have, in the government of the army, been encroaching on the functions of others. The army, these critics say, is the army of the Crown; we, Secretaries of State forsooth, want to make it the army of the House of Commons. The Crown, they say, governs the army through the Commander in Chief. The Secretary of State is a mere financial officer, who has gradually intruded on the province of the Crown by means of the power of the purse.
> Now, gentlemen, I am bound to tell you that all this is a mere delusion. These writers ought to reflect that to no one can the wrongful attribution of power be more distasteful than the sovereign herself. The Queen, gentlemen, as she is the most just and wise, so is she the most constitutional of sovereigns. The Queen is the undoubted head of the army; she is also the head of the navy, and of every branch of the public service. As such she can do no wrong. But she does no wrong for the express reason that all her acts are the acts of her responsible ministers. The doctrine of personal government which you have seen so undisguisedly claimed in Prussia within the last few days is absolutely unknown to our constitution.
> This is not a matter of custom or unwritten law. The functions of the Secretary of State for War, as 'administering the royal authority and prerogative in respect of the army,' are laid down with great precision by the Order of the Queen in Council of June, 1870. Under him there are three great departments, the heads of which are equally responsible to him; the Commander in Chief for the Military Department, the Surveyor General for the Ordnance and Supply Department, the Financial Secretary for the Finance Department. No act of discipline can be exercised, no appointment or promotion can be made, no troops can be moved, no payments can be made, without the approval, expressed or implied, of the Secretary of State. To say that the Secretary of State has no controlling power in such matters, when he is responsible to parliament for any improper exercise of the Queen's prerogative in regard to them is manifestly absurd. On this subject I have never known any misapprehension within the walls of the War Office or in Parliament. . . .

I will also read an extract from a book entitled 'Lord Cardwell at the War Office,' by Sir Robert Biddulph, at page 239:

> Thus was the question of the royal prerogative with regard to the command of the army placed on a constitutional basis. 'The General Commanding-in-Chief was formally declared to be a subordinate of the Minister of War'; and that minister was declared to be the channel through whom the Sovereign's commands were to be conveyed to the army.
>
> All military work hitherto done at the War Office was transferred to the Horse Guards, both offices being made one, so that correspondence between the two offices should cease; it being clearly understood that no question should arise to prevent the Secretary of State from sending for any officer or any clerk in any military office, if he wished to examine him on a question of doubt.
> Under the British constitution, the Secretary of State is necessarily a member of parliament, and must usually be a civilian, and therefore without that sort of knowledge that pertains to a life spent in the military service. This is an unavoidable result of our parliamentary system, and as it could not be changed, it was necessary to make the best arrangement for working it. To this end, it appeared to Lord Cardwell that the Secretary of State should surround himself with the best officers in the army as the heads of the various departments, so that after freely consulting them he could form a sound judgment and come to a clear conclusion upon the great questions submitted for his decision.

The hon. gentleman has said a great deal about my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture not having any power to act as Minister of Militia. Well, in answer to that, I would ask him whether the act which my hon. friend did is valid or invalid. If it is valid, I presume he had the power.

My hon. friend has also said that no minister outside of the Minister of Militia, no politician—no political man, to use his own words—has any right to advise or to use any influence in connection with the organization of a corps of militia. Well, it seems to me that no more absurd proposition could be put forward. If we were dealing with a regular army, I could understand that. But we are dealing with a militia force, with a citizen army, not a regular army. We have no regular army. We must look to the people of this country to build up our militia, and we must look to the influential men. We want the co-operation and assistance of the influential men throughout Canada to assist us in building up the militia; and can you find an influential man in Canada—I was going to say a man worth his salt—who has not some political views or ideas? I think it would be very difficut to find one; and the practice in this country, in organizing new corps, has been to go at once to the most influential man in the county and enlist his influence.

In the organization of the militia in 1868, in which I took part, I remember very well that the man who was selected in my own county to organize the regiment, of which I became a member afterwards and which exists to this day in that county, was a member of parliament. And in every county of Nova Scotia some prominent man was selected to organize the militia in that county immediately after confederation. The same course, I presume, was followed in every other part of the Dominion. Of necessity such a course had to be followed. Are we to be told, then, that because my hon. friend happens to be a member for one of the eastern township counties and a member of the cabinet living in the eastern townships and consequently specially charged with looking after the welfare of that section of country, he is therefore to be excluded from taking any part in the organization of an important militia corps in that community? I should say that that was a very good reason why his co-operation and assistance should be in such an important work. At any rate, such is the course which had always hitherto been followed; and right here let me point out the difference between ordinary promotions and ordinary appointments in the regular course and the establishment and organization of a corps which had heretofore no existence. Why, hon. gentlemen opposite seem to have lost their heads over this matter. The General Officer Commanding ought to have known better. Had he reflected, he would have known that in Great Britain, whenever a volunteer corps is to be organized, whenever a corps of yeomanry is to be established, the lord-lieutenant of the county is the man in whose hands the law has placed the giving of these official positions.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And who is the lord-lieutenant? He is an appointee of the government of the day.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I wish merely to add that, so far from receding, so far from refusing to accept full responsibility, I wish it to be considered that I have accepted to the fullest extent responsibility for everything my hon. colleague has done. The only thing that I regret is that I happened to be away from Ottawa in the city of Boston for five or six weeks at the beginning of this year, during which period the organization of this corps was taken up. Had I been here, I woud have spoken to my hon. friend and very likely the unfortunate difficulties which have occurred might not have taken place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Another fact worth noting is this. The General Officer Commanding, instead of pursuing the usual course,—a course which I never knew to have been departed from previously,—instead of going to the District Officer Commanding in the district in which this corps was to be organized, saw fit to go outside of the district altogether and call to his assistance gentlemen who were not citizens of that particular district. I am not objecting to the officers he chose as his advisers, but I do say that he ought to have placed the organization of this corps chiefly under the control and management of the District Officer Commanding in the district in which it was to be organized. Why he departed from this sound rule I do not know. Why this stickler for propriety and etiquette, who has suffered so much during his two years residence in Ottawa from the lack of regard for etiquette, should have chosen to depart from this good, sound rule and thus administer an unjustifiable and unmerited snub to the District Officer Commanding in that district, I am at a loss to know. He did, however, depart from that rule. The District Officer Commanding in that district happens to be a worthy French Canadian, and I am not aware whether that fact had anything to do with the general's taking the course he did or not. I certainly hope it had not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are we to understand that Colonel Roy, who is the District Officer Commanding in the division, had no part in the organization of that regiment ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Nothing, except——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have data to the contrary.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know that the hon. gentleman is very well versed in these matters, but I can tell him that Colonel Roy was simply made use of as a means of registering or passing papers from Colonel Smart and Colonel Whitley to the General and back again. That was all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask whether the hon. minister will inquire of Colonel Roy whether or not he took any part in the organization of this regiment. I have heard that he did, and I think that my hon. friend, if he makes inquiry, may perhaps find correspondence to show that he did. I think it is as well we should be under no misapprehension about it, particularly as the minister has suggested—for some reason I cannot comprehend—that Colonel Roy was overlooked in some way because he is a French Canadian. I do not know that Lord Dundonald was worthy of that reflection on his character.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We will investigate as to his worth as we go on. The concluding part of my hon. friend's remarks and the only part in which he seemed to pay very much attention to the general, whose cause he has offered to champion, consisted of the statement that he thought such an eminent soldier, when he was brought out to this country to take charge of our militia affairs, should have been given carte blanche to do as he liked. Well, I do not believe that my hon. friend's leader would approve of that theory, I do not know. But he might find himself getting into somewhat deep water if he were to follow such a liberal course as that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since the broader question has inevitably come under review, it will be expected that I should devote some attention to the pronunciamento or address which the late General Officer Commanding has seen fit to issue to the people of Canada. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has referred to some of the interesting portions of this address, this appeal from the government to the people of Canada.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, if the minister would permit me—I do not wish to raise the point of order, though I must say I do not think that the point he is now discussing is relevant. It has nothing to do with the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture. But my point in the matter is this—that the Minister of Militia will have, at a very early day, ample opportunity in this House, and on a similar motion to this, to discuss the document to which he refers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think that if there were no other reasons, the House would agree with me that the nature of the document to which I refer, its references to myself, would be a sufficient justification for me to take advantage of the very earliest opportunity to discuss it. We will take advantage of the other opportunities also when they arise. Now, Sir, I observe that the concluding words of the resolution we are now discussing are as follows :

> The House regrets that this unwarrantable interference approved by the government not only has unduly delayed the organization of the regiment, but has culminated in depriving the militia of Canada of an experienced and distinguished commanding officer.

Well, now, as my hon. colleague (Mr. Fisher) has pointed out, this statement, this address to the people of Canada, states otherwise. This address to the people of Canada contains statements which the people of Canada no doubt, will read with surprise, after having read the speech in Montreal and after having read the letter to me, in answer to the inquiry I made in reference to that speech, in which the ex-Commanding Officer declared that he had no notes on that occasion with reference to the question which we have been discussing here tonight. And also they must have been surprised when they learned of the tremendous effort that was made to suppress and prevent the publication of the report of that speech at Montreal. But I suppose they are bound to believe the statement which this gentleman makes in the calm of his own office, and, evidently after very careful consideration and deliberation. In this statement he tells us that the speech at Montreal was no sudden ebulition, but that he had gone down there with the greatest deliberation and with the intention of precipitating the crisis which he had been carefully watching for an opportunity to precipitate for months, if not for years. And one cannot help trying to understand the mental, not to say the moral, make-up of the man who, while having this in mind, goes every day to his office, meets his chief day after day ; proffers him the hand of friendship—or professes to—writes him polite notes ; professes to be engaged in full sympathy with him ; and occasionally even indulges in paying him a compliment;—I say it is difficult to understand the mental and moral make-up of the man who could do that and carry it on, not for days, nor for weeks, but, confessedly, for months. And what is the object which the gentleman states as the justification for this course ?

Oh, his object was to save not exactly his country, but this benighted country of Canada. He was to be the saviour of this country. And one can imagine the stress under which this high-minded nobleman, day after day felt impelled to go to his work, acting this double part, even though he did it because of the great benefit which he was going to confer upon this country of his temporary adoption. I do not think we need to go much further in order, I will not say to understand, but to wonder at, the condition of mind in which such a man must have been. And we cannot go very far in that line of reflection and investigation without being satisfied that the people of Canada, at any rate, do not want public servants of that kind.

He begins this extraordinary document in these words :

> Considering it desirable that I should lay before the people of Canada a statement of my position with reference to the difficulty between myself and the government of Canada.

'Myself.' 'Myself and the government of Canada.' In that phrase you have the explanation of the whole difficulty. A more highly concentrated exhibition of egotism and self-assertion than is to be found in these words, cannot, I believe, be found in the English language. 'Myself.' Who is this gentleman who speaks of himself first and the government of Canada afterwards ? Why, Mr. Speaker, it is almost necessary to have the Order in Council before one to enable one to believe—in view of the words I have just read—that this gentleman was appointed by Order in Council of the very same government, approved by His Excellency the Governor General, to an official position under the Minister of Militia in July, 1902. But the gentleman is going to take charge of things in this country ! Well, let me say this Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has one thing to learn before he can become dictator. Before he governs Canada he must learn to govern himself. The hon. gentleman is precipitating in this country, or trying to—I do not think it can last very long—the kind of conflict of which history tells us, conflicts which were of frequent occurrence about two centuries ago, when there was a constant struggle for supremacy between the military and the civil side of society. Happily that question was settled in all Anglo-Saxon countries, settled in the mother country one hundred years ago. I do not think we need fear that a campaign of that kind will proceed very far in this country.

The manifesto makes several references to myself which I think I should deal with now, at the very earliest opportunity which has presented itself. He has said that he did not seek to impose his policy, but simply wished to take control—because he used the word 'control,' of the technical administration of the department. Well, I do not know what he calls policy, but I should suppose that any development of the militia in this country which involves a large expenditure of money would be considered to be a question of policy ; with those questions the government felt under obligation to deal, and in dealing with those questions, I am bound to say I have had the greatest difficulty in the world in keeping this officer anywhere within bounds, as I shall attempt to prove as I proceed.

He has divided his attack upon the administration into two parts. On the one hand he charges interference ; on the other hand he charges indifference, two things which do not logically come together. But the late General Officer Commanding is not always logical any more than he is always considerate of the absolute, literal truth of the statements he makes. He says that he was subjected to interference. Interference, forsooth. Interference by whom ? Interference by the regularly constituted authorities of the people of this country, interference by the government of the country, the representatives of the people, the people who were paying him for the services which he was supposed to be giving. Well, let us see in what respects he attempts to make good these charges. As one of the reasons why he wished to 'let daylight' into the proceedings of the Militia Department, &c., he refers to the fact that a new militia law was about to be introduced. These are the words he used :

> I realized moreover that the new Militia Bill would soon be discussed in parliament and that it was my duty to give a warning of certain dangers before it was too late.

Not to his minister, not to the government —because, if he could not get my ear, he might have gone to the Prime Minister—but he must make an appeal to the people, because, forsooth, in my wisdom I saw fit to introduce into this House a much needed Militia Bill and was about to put it through. What was the matter with the General Officer Commanding ? He saw in that Bill and learned from my statements in this House that I approved of a new system which has been adopted in England, by which the services of the Commander in Chief are dispensed with, and he took alarm, and was determined, without making an effort to convince me that I was wrong in my proposal, to appeal over my head and beyond the government, to the people, in order to prevent me from carrying the Militia Bill through this House.

The first charge which he makes is that Part II of his annual report was suppressed, that is, his report of 1902. He says :

> One extremely serious case of interference was the suppression of the important parts of my first annual report on the militia. After studying the situation with great care, I came to certain conclusions, and thought out certain plans. For convenience of reference I divided my report for the year 1902 into two halves. Part I. was a simple diary of events. Part II. contained my description of the condition of the militia, and an outline of a comprehensive scheme for reorganizing the force upon lines suitable to the country. This part was fully intended by me for publication. It contained nothing that could be described as a military secret. It covered matter such as is constantly made public in Great Britain and the United States. In my judgment it was information as to the actual condition and possibilities of the militia which it was desirable for the people of Canada to know.

This part of the report Sir Frederick Borden suppressed against my protest.

Mark these words 'against my protest.'

In the House of Commons at various times he described this part of the report as 'private.'

Mark that word 'private.'

'Confidential' and 'secret.' It was neither private,— Mark that.

'Confidential' nor 'secret.' When the minister made these statements he had been explicitly informed by me that I desired its publication. He went so far on one occasion as to compare the report to the secret report on Canadian defence.

With that report my report had no analogy.

That is so far as the first report is concerned. What are the facts? The facts I will endeavour as briefly as possible to place before the House. It will be remembered that last year a question was put upon the order paper by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) and answered by me. I have the reference from 'Hansard' here. I will not read them but the question was substantially this: It has been stated in the English and Canadian papers that a report had been written by the General Officer Commanding which had not been printed, and I was asked whether it was my intention to print it. I gave as the reason why it had not been printed, that I considered the document to be confidential and I proposed to treat it in that way. Later on my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) brought the matter up in the House and asked some question and I replied to him in the same sense. I stated that I would be very glad to submit the report to a committee of the House, composed of the hon. leader of the opposition and any hon. gentleman whom he might name, together with some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who might be interested in the matter. I took the ground, which I am sure would have been taken in England under similar circumstances, that this was a report not then, at any rate, proper to be published and I gave my reasons. Lord Dundonald states that he urged the publication, that he protested against the refusal of its publication and that it was not marked by him 'private.' I do not know that it would matter very much, although, as a matter of fact, I will be able to show that it was marked 'private.' But, that does not matter because I am the judge, I think, as the responsible minister to the people of this country, whether a report should be published or not or when it should be published.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not apply to the railway company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) say?

Mr. LENNOX. It does not apply to the railway company.

Mr. HEYD. He would be sure to say something foolish.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) means. I have here the correspondence which passed between Lord Dundonald and myself in reference to this report.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman did not bring that report down to parliament last session. Has anything been stated to the public or has anything been stated outside of this parliament in connection with that document other than what the hon. gentleman stated last year during the session?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not by me, but I think that by the General Officer Commanding a good deal has been stated.

Mr. INGRAM. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. What I wish to know is: Was there any statement to the effect that a very expensive scheme had been laid down by the major general and was that authorized by the hon. gentleman to be stated publicly outside of this parliament or inside of this parliament?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I said nothing about an expensive scheme that I am aware of.

Mr. INGRAM. And the hon. gentleman did not authorize his department to do so?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A statement was made in the newspapers and by some extraordinary and mysterious method reports of what is going on in the Militia Department have frequently been published in England and before they were published in this country.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that how the 'Globe' got it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know. It was not stated by me or with my authority. But, here is the fact; this letter is the covering letter of this report. It is a letter from Lord Dundonald to me. I have secured from Lord Dundonald consent to publish this letter. I could not do it until I had secured that consent because it was marked 'private.' It is as follows:

Creichton Lodge.
Ottawa, Jan. 29, 1903.

'Private.'

Dear Sir Frederick,—I am sending you with this my report for the year 1902. I only received the last of the sub-reports to me last Saturday—there has been, as you are aware, a great deal of work involved, first in becoming acquainted with a system, then in discovering its weaknesses, then in suggesting remedies for improvement. I hope that the recommendations I make will commend themselves to you. I think they will, as from our conversations I believe we agree on many essential points. I don't think the country can obtain a cheaper or more efficient system for money expended than the one outlined, if only you can see your way to get it adopted and the proper funds voted.

I am still confined to the house but hope to get out to-morrow and shall look forward to seeing you Monday at latest if convenient to you.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) DUNDONALD.

This is the covering letter of the report under consideration marked 'private.' On the 31st of January, two days later I wrote the following letter marked 'private' also:

Ottawa, 31st Jan., 1904.

Dear Lord Dundonald,—I have carefully read your very interesting and able report. I don't know whether you intend Part II to form part of the annual report of the Minister of Militia and Defence for this year (i.e. 1902), but I am afraid it would not do to put forward a scheme which has not yet been considered as a whole, even by the minister, and of which the other members of the cabinet have as yet had absolutely no opportunity of knowing anything. Besides, there is the very grave question of propriety of giving such a scheme to the world; at any rate, in such detail. Furthermore, you are aware that a scheme was recommended by the Defence Committee of 1898, approved by the War Office and adopted by the Canadian government. I think it will be necessary to carefully compare your proposals with those of the committee.

Then there is the financial question. It is absolutely necessary that I should have a carefully prepared estimate of the cost involved in your proposals before they can be considered by the government. Will you kindly furnish this at your earliest convenience?

It seems to me that your Report II should be considered as a confidential paper for the information of the minister and of the cabinet, and I trust you will see the force of this and of the other reasons I have given against publication, at any rate at this time.

I shall be glad to see you on Tuesday next if convenient for you, when we can perhaps settle upon what should be published as part of the annual report.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

On the 11th of February I received this note:

Dear Sir Frederick,—Yes, I will let you have the report with slight amendments as suggested almost at once. Will you let me have the part you have, and I will let you have the whole back in a few hours?

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) DUNDONALD.

I sent the report at once. On the 21st of February I still was without the report and I wrote this letter:

Dear Lord Dundonald,—I would like to again call attention to my letter of the 31st ultimo dealing with your annual report. After very careful consideration of the matter since that letter was written, I am more than ever convinced of the correctness of the views therein expressed.

It is quite outside the province of an annual departmental report to propound a scheme or policy of defence, and therefore I must ask you to be good enough to omit Part II (so called) from your report, and to amend Part I accordingly.

I shall be quite ready, however, to approve of the insertion in your annual report of a clause stating that you have prepared for my information a scheme which you think would (to use the words of the heading to Part II.) 'conduce to the greater efficiency of the militia as a fighting force.'

May I ask, therefore, that the annual report be amended as above suggested, and placed in my hands to-day, so that it may go to the printer.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

On the 28th of February I received this note:

Dear Sir Frederick—I return the report divided as you wish. There was a difficulty in getting the work done Saturday, owing to the day being a half holiday.

Very truly,
(Sgd.) DUNDONALD.

P.S.—I go to Kingston at 11 a.m. to visit the Royal Military College, &c.

Here is another letter of mine:

February 23rd, 1903.

Dear Lord Dundonald,—Thanks for your letter of this date and the amended annual report.

I have been obliged to make a few unimportant changes, which cannot be delayed for your return from Kingston.

Yours very truly
(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

That ended the incident, so far as the report was concerned; but on the 3rd of March I wrote the following letter:

Major General,
The Earl of Dundonald,
Ottawa.

My dear Lord Dundonald,—Will you be good enough to have the financial statement, showing approximate expense involved in your plan of reorganizaion of the militia, completed and sent in to me as soon as possible. I wish to discuss this and other matters pertaining to them with my colleagues and cannot do so without the memorandum showing the cost.

Instead of making the statement simply to show the additions, I would be glad if you would show the whole expenditure on capital and income account, respectively, under your proposals.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

Now, that is the record. Does that record bear out the statement which this right hon. gentleman has seen fit to make in this address of his to the people of Canada ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Who says 'yes' ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the first place, he says that I suppressed the report. Well, I think I can now be relieved from a charge of that kind. He says that it was in no sense private. Well, it was marked 'private.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The report ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The letter covering the report.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the gist of your letter to the General Officer Commanding that such a report could not be well given to the public, because it was not considered by the cabinet, and, even though it were considered, it would not be wise to give it ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He sent me his report under cover of a private letter. He says that he protested. If he protested I never received his protest. Now, I think, for a gentleman to make such an unwarranted statement as that to the public of Canada, charging me with the suppression of public documents, with misusing a document and misleading this House and the country, is rather a serious matter, and one which is perhaps the most serious and grave offence which he has committed.

Mr. MONK. May I ask my hon. friend if we will have that report ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will come to that before I get through.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Toronto 'Globe' has it already.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have heard a good deal about coincidences, and we have some coincidences in this connection. A persistent demand for this report has come from gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, and there have been references to it in the English papers, which, I say, did not come from me, or from any officer in my department, so far as I know —unless it came from the General Officer Commanding himself.

Mr. KEMP. That is not fair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. It is fair.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Just here I may be permitted to record a complaint against certain of the newspapers in this country for their treatment of me in this matter. I am not in the habit of making complaints of this kind ; in fact, I am bound to say that I never have had very much reason to ; but it seems to me somewhat unfair—not to characterize it in a stronger way—and it seems a coincidence also, that the newspaper which first published the authorized edition of this manifesto has referred to me in its editorial column in these words, speaking of Lord Dundonald's statement :

That means that Sir Frederick Borden lied—lied from his seat in the House, lied in an official statement to the House.

From the Toronto 'News,' June 20th ; J. S. Willison, managing director. I had expected different treatment from that source ; from any source. I did not suppose that any newspaper edited outside of Billingsgate could indulge in language of that kind. And this is a paper which assumes a high moral tone in this country ; a paper which was started to show the every-day people of Canada, who did not know anything about their work—such as my hon. friend of the 'World,' for instance—how to run a newspaper. This is the man who is posing as being too good to edit the Toronto 'Globe' any longer. He got out of that ; he was to be translated to a higher sphere. The 'Globe' never published such a contemptible reference to any man on any side of politics in this country, I am happy to say. If it had no regard for me, if it had no regard for itself, if it had no regard for the amenities and decencies of life, it should have some regard and some respect for the position which, for the time being, I have the honour to hold in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the next charge is that I refused to publish Lord Dundonald's second report of the year 1903. I have his letter with reference to that. He wrote the report and sent it to me with the following letter—this time the letter was not marked 'private' :

To Hon. Sir Frederick Borden.

Ottawa, 1st March, 1904.

Dear Sir Frederick Borden,—Herewith I inclose my report for the year 1903. You will observe on page 23 of the report that I make reference to the necessity for reports from the heads of certain important branches. These branches having to do with the supply of material and with the requirements of mobilization, the reports from them should, in my opinion, be published with the report of the General Officer Commanding.

Those that I now inclose—from the quartermaster-general and the director-general of engineer services—appear in my opinion, to be more in the nature of memoranda on matters of a minor nature than reports on the important subjects with which those officers are appointed to deal, and, perhaps, you would kindly use your discretion as to whether they should go into the blue-book or not. Next year I hope the reports from these officers will be of such a nature that they will be read with interest and be above adverse criticism.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) DUNDONALD.

Well, Sir, I read this report, and I found that like its predecessor it contained things which I could not publish. I sent for Lord Dundonald, and I spent a good deal of time with the report, reading over every word of it, and marking in pencil the parts to which I objected. I did not object to the report so much as I objected to the publication of certain portions, and I wished him to amend it, and he, as I supposed, agreed to do so. Some of the objections which I made to it were that it referred to documents which had not been brought down to parliament, which there was no intention to bring down. I informed him that the moment that report was laid on the table of the House, the members of the House would have the right to ask for the documents ; and, as we did not wish to bring the documents down, I did not wish those references put in the report. I pointed out to him several instances in which he had put in his report references to matters which had been before me—matters of detail, matters of routine in the department, matters of very trivial consequence, and matters of principle in which I had differed with him, and to which I had refused to give my consent. I asked him if he proposed to appeal from me to parliament and the people of the country. He agreed to make changes ; he agreed to omit the portions of the report to which I objected. He took it away with him, and, after keeping it nearly three weeks, sent it back. I returned it to him with this letter, by a messenger :

Ottawa, 28th March, 1904.

Dear Lord Dundonald,—Referring to your letter of the 1st instant, I will send you to-day a copy of your report as I propose to have it printed in my annual report. I have omitted certain things and have made a few slight verbal changes which do not in any way alter the meaning. As I have explained to you very fully the reasons for the omissions I am making, I need not go into that matter in this letter.

With reference to the reports from heads of important branches, which you think should be fuller, I am inclined to agree with you, and would feel disposed to print as large a portion of them as possible, and I think the reports should be prepared with that contingency in view.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

This amended report, which he says was cut and carved, as if he knew nothing about it, was sent to him by a messenger on the 28th of March, and delivered to him. In due course the report went to the printer, and on the 21st of April I received this letter from Lord Dundonald :

Ottawa, April 21st, 1904.

Dear Sir Frederick Borden,—I have just received the printer's proof of my report for 1903 as revised by you for publication and have returned it. While acquiescing in the changes you have made because you so insist, I wish to point out that my true report is the one originally sent in and that the unpublished portion of it is consequently with you as my opinion for the betterment of the force.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) DUNDONALD.

There was not anything clandestine or secret about that. I insisted upon my right as the head of the department to say what should appear in my report, and I carried it out ; and I am in the judgment of parliament under the rules of constitutional government, whether I was right or not. Lord Dundonald talks about what is done in England. Who ever heard of a Secretary of State for War being placed in the humiliating position of having a report from his Commander in Chief or some subordinate placed before parliament and before the people, he sitting dumb in his seat, without being the first to announce to parliament and the country, as it is his duty to do, the policy of the government with reference to military matters ? It is absurd, it is monstrous, and nothing could prove more clearly the absolute want of knowledge of that gentleman of the first principle of responsible government. Well, Sir, the 'interference' still went on. The next instance of it was with reference to this celebrated ordnance corps, which has been so beautifully illustrated in a cartoon in one of the daily papers. What does he say about that ? He says :

A more recent instance occurred in connection with the organization of the ordnance corps. The establishment of this corps was fixed at a colonel, a second in command—with the rank of lieutenant-colonel—and three lieutenant-colonels. This was a larger establishment than I would have recommended had I been unhampered ; but Sir Frederick Borden was anxious to have a number of senior and highly-paid posts, and the scheme which he desired was carried out.

Soon after this I went to the Northwest.——

Of course, I would not have dared to do this if he had been here——

—As soon as I had left Ottawa the Minister of Militia ordered the adjutant-general to prepare an order increasing the number of lieutenant-colonels to five, thus giving seven officers of the rank of lieutenant-colonel and upwards to a corps of about 100 men. In this connection it must be remembered that the most elementary requirements of militia were neglected for want of money.

Now, let us see about this. First, by way of parenthesis, let me refer to a corps d'élite, a corps in the organization of which the ex-General Officer Commanding has taken very great pride, and I believe it will be a valuable corps. It is a corps known as the Corps of Guides. It is composed of 407 of whom—will you believe it ?—his own particular and special child—169 are officers and 302 non-commissioned officers and men ; whereas in my poor, wretched attempt at a corps, called the ordnance corps, numbering 106, there are only 20 officers and 86 men. In the former one-third of the corps are officers ; in my wretched imitation only one-fifth are officers. But that is only by the way. Now, I want to refer to this ordnance corps. We are told that it was devised and originated by me for the purpose of making some fat places for some favourites ; and the insinuation is made that by promoting two men from the rank of major to the rank of lieutenant-colonel I was consequently increasing their pay.

No more misleading—I do not wish to say maliciously misleading—statement was ever put forward by any man. What are the facts ? They are these. The ordnance corps was divided into districts. The districts were divided into first, second and third-class. The pay, no matter what be the rank, was according to the class of the district. There were seven first-class districts. The pay of these officers was to be $1,600 a year. There was a certain number of second-class districts, the pay in which was to be $1,200 a year ; and a certain number of third-class, in which the pay was to be $1,000. To say, therefore, that the promotion of these two men from the rank of major to that of lieutenant-colonel was for the purpose of giving them additional pay, is a statement absolutely without foundation. But it is my corps, forsooth. What is it? The ordnance corps is simply a branch of the militia which has existed ever since we have had a militia—the stores branch. I explained the change to the House fully a year ago, and let me tell you that in this old stores branch of the militia, before it was organized into the ordnance corps, there were not seven but eleven lieutenant-colonels. I have here the report of the officer formerly at the head of the stores, and now at the head of the ordnance branch, and I think, especially in view of the small sized accusations which are being made against me, that it is of sufficient importance to read. This paper, and mind you, it was penned in June, 1903—a year ago —is entitled 'Memo. for the Minister.'

Having reference to the organization of an Ordnance Stores Corps to be formed, as far as possible from the officers and other employees of the existing military store staff of the department.

It is proposed to classify the different stations as first, second and third-class, according to relative importance as to work and responsibility ; thus Toronto, Kingston, Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec will be rated as first-class ; London, St. John, N.B., and Halifax as second-class; and Victoria, Winnipeg and Charlottetown as third-class stations.

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

It is also proposed that the pay of the officers at the several stations shall correspond with their duties and responsibilities. Thus it will be station and not the rank in the militia which will govern the amount of pay.

It is suggested that the officers of the first-class stations should rank as lieutenant-colonels, those of the second-class as majors and those of the third-class as captains in the militia.

It should be understood that the duties of the officers, whilst they necessarily command the men at their respective stations are almost wholly administrative.

Mr. HAGGART. Did it increase the expenditure any ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very trifling. As to the rate of pay :

Comparing the proposed pay of the ordnance officers with that of the members of the civil service, it will be seen that that of the first-class ordnance officer is that of a first-class clerk of two year's standing, that of a second-class ordnance officer not equal to the maximum second-class clerk, and that of the third-class ordnance officer is the same as that of the third-class clerk. According to the present arrangements, the command of the corps will not entail any additional expense.

That is the statement of Colonel Macdonald who is at the head of the stores. I have here, but will not trouble you with the reading of it, the report to the council. I have here a document which shows the changes that were made after the senior officer of the ordnance corps had sent in his report to the General Officer Commanding. It transpired that the general thought seven lieutenant-colonels too many, although there had been eleven before, and for some reason or another he reduced the lieutenant-colonels of the two most important stations in Canada, Quebec and Ottawa, from lieutenant-colonels to majors. I have in my hand the report of the director general of ordnance. The director general of ordnance, under the English regulations and ours, reports to me direct as well as to the general. He is under the supervision of the general but under the control of the minister.I had not observed that in that report there was a change made, but my attention was called to the fact that two of the officers had been reduced. The change did not involve any reduction in their pay, for they got the same as before, but they were reduced from lieutenant-colonels to majors. As soon as I learnt that, I wrote this letter to Lord Aylmer, who was acting in the absence of Lord Dundonald :

November 24th, 1903.

Dear Lord Aylmer,—I am sorry to find that there is a discrimination among the officers of the Ordnance Corps, holding the five senior positions in the first-class districts, and that three of them are lieutenant-colonels and two of them majors. Had I known this earlier I am sure I would have persuaded the General to treat them all alike, and I am writing you now to ask you to send at once to Council the recommendation for the necessary correction. I will take the full responsibility and will write Lord Dundonald about the matter. I saw Lieutenant-Colonel Boulanger, in Quebec, who happens, owing to the date of his commission, to be either at the bottom of the list or next to it. He has been in command of a battery, has served, as you know, in South Africa, and in China, with distinction, and for that service holds the South African and Chinese medals, and was given the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He also has control of the stores in the largest and most important stores depot in the Dominion. Moreover, he happens to be a French Canadian and the only one among the five first-class appointments. Now, whatever may be done later on, when new and younger blood is introduced, I think no distinction should be made in the first-class appointments at the outset, and therefore I ask you to be good enough to have the order amended and sent in to me for approval at once, so that it may go before Council.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

Colonel Lord Aylmer,
Adjutant General,
Militia and Defence.

So much, then, for the ordnance corps. So much for the base use I am alleged to have made of my position as minister of the Crown to create fat places for my friends. But it will be observed that not one cent more goes to these officers as lieutenant colonels than would have gone to them as majors. But you will observe, Sir, that in this letter I say :

I will take full responsibility and will write Lord Dundonald about the matter.

As soon as Lord Dundonald returned, I asked Lord Aylmer to hand him this letter, and I am informed by Lord Aylmer, to whom I went a day or two ago for the letter, that it is in Lord Dundonald's possession to-day. With regard to the pay, just one word more. In the English service the director general of ordnance receives annually $10,227. In Canada he receives $3,200. In England the assistant director general receives $3,896. In Canada he gets $2,400. In England a first-class ordnance officer gets $3,666 and in Canada $1,600. These are the two highly paid officials for whom I was seeking a job. In England a second-class ordnance officer gets $2,626 and in Canada $1,400. In England a third-class ordnance officer gets $2,277 and in Canada $1,000.

Now, Sir, with regard to over-officering of this corps of 100 men with 20 officers and 7 lieutenant-colonels—what are the facts ? This corps is never brought together. It is not homogeneous. It is purely an administrative corps, scattered from Prince Edward Island on the one hand to British Columbia on the other. And these officers of higher rank control the stores in the chief stores districts in the Dominion—most responsible positions—those of the second rank have charge of the stores in the second class districts, and those in the third rank have charge of the stores in the third class districts.

This manifesto goes on to say that there was a certain Colonel Gregory whose case was a very bad one. And here again I would like to call your attention to the disingenuous character of this manifesto issued to the people of Canada :

The case of Colonel Gregory of the 2nd Dragoons has been placed before the public. The excellent work done by him during his term shows itself in the fine state to which he has brought his regiment. I was anxious, for the sake of the regiment, for reasons into which I need not go, to extend his command for another year.

Anybody reading that would infer that this proposed extension was the first extension. Anybody reading that will be surprised when I tell him that Colonel Gregory has just ended a year's extension of his command. No one would infer that from the wording of the manifesto. And therefore, I say it is disingenuous, and, I am afraid, intentionally misleading. What about this Gregory case ? Under the provisions of the Militia Regulations we have a rule by which, after five years' service, the term of command ends automatically. That is one of the reforms that have been introduced into the militia in my time—at least enforced in my time. Under the old regime, a man became lieutenant-colonel, and there he stayed. And so we had venerable gentlemen in the service—lots of them—fine men in their day, who had been in command of the same corps for thirty or thirty-five years, and who had no idea of retiring. Well, for fear that this sudden change, this limitation of command might sometimes work injuriously, a regulation was framed to the effect that, for reasons to be given by the District Officer Commanding, the time of an officer might be extended for three years. That power is very seldom used. In my humble opinion it should never be used if that can be avoided. But where you have a case where the second in command is not qualified to take the position, then it becomes proper to exercise the power. It so happened in this case. The second in command was Dr. Ferguson, the son of a gentleman whom we all knew, at one time a Conservative member of parliament and afterwards senator. Through some physical defect—disease of the throat, I believe,—Dr. Ferguson had been unable to attend the camp and unable to qualify ; in fact he could not speak above a whisper. It was hoped that he might recover, and so the recommendation was sent in for the extension. That recommendation was for an extension for two years. When it came before me, I said : Why not—and this is my rule—extend for one year ? And, if at the end of that year there is no officer fit to take command, it is an easy matter to extend it for another year. The extension was given for one year. And before the year was ended a capable officer, Major Glasgow, had qualified and had been promoted to the position of second in command; and, on the 12th of July——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A good day.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.—On the 12th of July, Major Glasgow will become commanding officer of the regiment. Where is the political interference in this case? Where is the wrong in it? It seems to me that I was acting in the best interest of the corps and especially in the best interests of the officers below Major Glasgow who are looking for promotion, who are anxiously, and properly, looking for promotion, as a reward for their faithful service. I am not ashamed of what I did in this case. I have done it over and over again, and I propose to do it over and over again, in the interest of the young and rising officers in the militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister (Sir Frederick Borden) has yet to make the statement that Major Glasgow was properly qualified for command.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I make that statement deliberately. He is officially qualified.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He is not so reported.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot help that. The papers can be produced, if necessary, and they will show that Colonel Otter and Colonel Lessard have both recommended and approved, and he has actually received the authority by Order in Council.

I had noted several points here which are scarcely worth taking up the time of the House with, except one. Over and over again, it has been stated by Lord Dundonald and his friends that he had not been invited by me to make any statement with regard to what happened in Montreal; and this is put forward as an excuse for sending a communication to a member of the opposition, to be read in the House, thus passing by the minister. Well, I do not know what Lord Dundonald expected from me. He received my letter in which I called his attention to the report in the newspapers of what took place in Montreal. Surely that opened the door to the hon. gentleman to make to me any explanation he saw fit. He knew that I was seized of the fact that something had occurred at that banquet in Montreal; he knew that I thought it demanded explanation. Surely there was his opportunity. What did he expect me to do? Did he suppose that I would ask him to write a manifesto, for instance? Did he expect that I would prescribe to him the particular method. Why, I knew it would be a reflection upon the capacity of a man who has shown himself to be possessed of such enormous resources to indicate such a thing to him. He is a gentleman of patrician rank, a member of the House of Lords; a man of great experience in matters of etiquette. And for me, a humble Canadian, a plebian, an ordinary, every day colonial to presume.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Why, Sir, it would have been arrant presumption on my part, but I gave him the opportunity and I gave it to him at the very earliest moment that I had cognizance of what had occurred. It is not my fault that he did not take advantage of it in a constitutional manner.

Now we come to the next stage, the indifference. He says:

> This government has shown crass indifference and want of sympathy with the militia of this country.

And he arraigns me on that account. Well, Sir, it may be that to increase the annual expenditure on the militia by some one and a half or two million dollars is a proof of crass indifference to the well-being of the militia, but I do not believe that the people will take that view. I have a list of the improvements which we have made. I shall read it, but shall not enlarge upon it although it is a theme upon which I could say a good deal. Our indifference to the welfare and the interest of the militia was shown first and perhaps in the most marked manner, by the adoption, without fail, of the principle of having annual drill for the whole militia of this country, and we have had annual drill of the militia every year since I have had the honour to preside over the Militia Department.

We have limited, as I said a moment ago, the term of commanding officers, thereby giving young men—some of whom got to be old men up to 60 years of age, under the old regime, as first lieutenants—some hope that some day they will get a reward for the work they have done.

We enforced the order with regard to age. Formerly we had lieutenant-colonels up to 65 and 70 years of age, but we have enforced the rules strictly, not only as to lieutenant-colonels, but as to majors, as to captains, and as to lieutenants, within the last six or seven years.

We have established a reserve list of officers, a most important improvement.

We have established cadet corps and cadet battalions, thereby enlisting the sympathies of the youth of the country and preparing them early in their career to do their duty later on, should it be necessary, in the defence of their country.

We have appointed a defence commission which sat here for many weeks and which went very carefully into the question of defence, and propounded a scheme which has been adopted by the experts of the war office, and by the people of this country, but for which I am bound to say two General Officers Commanding have had very little regard. One illustration of the unworkable character of the present system of General Officer Commanding, I think is worthy of note. The commission to which I have just referred, the defence committee, fixed upon a certain place for the establishment of a battery of guns for the defence of a certain place. I do not wish to mention the place, because that is secret and should not be mentioned. General Hutton came shortly afterwards. He, of course, had access to the secret report. He looked it over and said: Oh, that is not the right place at all, it should go here. So he fixed upon a place. General O'Grady Haly did not trouble himself very much with that. I think he was quite satisfied that the defence committee knew its business, but the recent acquisition, the gentleman of whose services we have recently deprived ourselves, looked into it, and he discovered a third place. Is it any wonder if the poor, perplexed Minister of Militia, having three different sets of advisers is somewhat in doubt and inclined to hesitate before plunging the country into the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. That battery has not been located yet.

A general service medal was secured by this government as a reward for the work done by the men who defended this country against the Fenian invasion.
