JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Seventh Report of Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—Mr. Hogarth.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SELECTIVE APPLICATION OF CONSUMER CREDIT CURBS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of his announcement of his intention to introduce legislation to impose curbs or restrictions on the granting of consumer credit. Has the minister considered any degree of selectivity in the application of these credit curbs so as to avoid their application to products manufactured in Canada, or products generally that are suffering from a depressed market in Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course this would depend on the terms which would be established for the purchase of various products, and I would think that in the case of automobiles, for example, the terms of credit would be such that they would not affect the sale of automobiles seriously in this country.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. In addition to the terms upon which credit would be restricted, would the minister consider exempting, for example, products such as industrial rubber goods from the scope of these curbs in view of the depressed market that exists in Canada? I ask this question in view of the closing of Dunlop, and the announced cutbacks, lay-offs or at least temporary shutdown in the Goodyear plant?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think that these are largely the result of the softening in the automobile market and, as I indicated, special considerations would be provided in the case of automobiles.

Mr. Stanfield: One final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister consider it is really necessary in the interests of controlling inflation to curb further the sale of products for which the market is already depressed in this country?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I covered that point exactly, a minute ago.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—ACTION DURING PRESENT SESSION TO MEET EMERGENCY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister and I put it to him because it involves more than one department. In view of the fact that old age pensioners have recently had their hopes raised that something might be done for them either by a pension increase or by relief from taxation, and in view of the fact that nothing has yet been done, will the government consider some emergency measure to come to the aid of these people before many thousands of them are starved out of existence?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Valade: Let's talk about the just society.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, if the Prime Minister is not going to answer that one. Will there be any action on behalf of old age pensioners at this session of Parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said repeatedly that this problem would be dealt with as part of our over-all review of social security. If expectations have been raised in the manner the hon. member says, it has not been done by this government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question might be directed to the Minister of Finance. Senator Croll, who of course is very close to the government, said it was expected that action would be taken to assist the old age pensioners having regard to the terrible position in which many of them find themselves as a result of the high cost of living. Will the minister say whether action will be taken or are the old age pensioners to be left in a state of suspended animation without hope?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member is repeating essentially the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Speaker. With great respect, we cannot get an answer from the Prime Minister so I thought that possibly the Minister of Finance, who is usually very voluble outside the House, would be able to give an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Is it still the belief of the Minister of Finance that a pensioner can live on less than $30 a week?

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Marquette.

NATURAL RESOURCES

WILDLIFE—INCREASED PAYMENTS UNDER DOLLARS FOR WETLANDS PROGRAM

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In conjunction with the acreage reduction program for western farmers, is his department, through the Canadian Wildlife Service, actively promoting and continuing the dollars for wetlands program?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the policy of the Canadian Wildlife Service and as regards the question brought up by the hon. member, I will be pleased to inquire and give him a reply. The same policy must still be in force.

[English]

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This is a worthy program to protect our wildlife. Because of the serious shortage of cash for western farmers, would the minister consider increasing and making more realistic payments under this program?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to consider the hon. member's excellent suggestion.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPANSION OF U.S. ABM SYSTEM—COMMUNICATION WITH PRESIDENT OR GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of his indications in the House a week or two ago of disquiet about the United States government's decision to expand the anti-ballistic missile system, has the Prime Minister since that date had any communication with the President of the United States or representatives of the United States government on the subject and, if so, would he make a statement to the House about it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

NON-PUBLICATION OF REPORT ON TELEVISION PROGRAM CONTENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Did the Dunton-Gagnon Commission tell him why the report prepared by sociologists Monique Mousseau and Line Ross, on the contents of English and French TV programs, has not yet been published?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that. I shall inquire thereupon and see if there is an answer to that. I did not know that such a study had been conducted.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The Prime Minister does not seem to be aware of anything, since yesterday, for—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

NATIONAL PARKS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR SECOND PARK

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns specifically his department's announcement regarding a second national park in Prince Edward Island, something which is most welcome, and also the announcement that the federal government and the province will acquire the land on a shared-cost basis. Is the minister in a position to indicate the proportion which the dominion government will assume?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this project has not been definitely announced. My Parliamentary Secretary met with the premier of Prince Edward Island this week, and they made considerable progress with this plan to establish a second national park in Prince Edward Island. No agreement has been drawn up yet and federal government payments will come under the policy established in British Columbia whereby we pay 50 per cent of the purchase price of land situated along the coast.

[English]

Mr. Macquarrie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if he has any idea when these discussions will end and the progressive development of the park begin?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I understand that my Parliamentary Secretary and the premier of Prince Edward Island have agreed to start drafting an agreement and should meet again within a month.

[English]

BONNE BAY, NFLD.—PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House if any progress has been made in the discussions between the government of Newfoundland and the government of Canada with respect to the acquisition of land for the Bonne Bay park in western Newfoundland?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The situation is the same, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

AIR CANADA

SWITCHING OF AIR BUS ORDER FROM LOCKHEED TO ANOTHER MANUFACTURER

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport may I direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the order by Air Canada for 12 air buses from Lockheed and in view of that company having indicated that it cannot continue unless it receives substantial financial assistance from the United States government to the extent of $641 million, has Air Canada considered switching its order to another manufacturer?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will seek information from the department and try to give the hon. member an answer.

Mr. Ritchie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Parliamentary Secretary also inquire as to the status of Lockheed's agreement to maintain Air Canada facilities at Winnipeg on which its air bus order was based?

TRADE

GRAIN—SUGGESTED PERMANENT FOREIGN SALES MISSIONS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement by the Secretary General of the Canada Grains Council that we should have permanent foreign selling missions to promote Canadian grains if Canada is to retain her markets and gain new markets, can the minister tell the House whether the government is actually considering the establishment of such foreign marketing missions?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the Canada Grains Council was set up it was envisaged that it would look into this matter and make recommendations and, indeed, become involved in this kind of activity.

Mr. Skoberg: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give a direct answer to my question? Is the government considering the setting up of such missions throughout the world?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have not received a direct communication from the Secretary General of the council. All I know today is what I have read in the press about the paper he presented to a conference in Winnipeg.

GRAIN

WHEAT—TERM OF APPLICATION OF NEW QUOTA SYSTEM

Mr. A. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the announcement of the new quota system, regardless of whether or not there will be a dollar incentive next year will the new quota arrangement be in effect the following year so that farmers can work out their own salvation to some extent?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult at this point in time to make a definite decision on that, although there have been some discussions. What the quota will be based on for 1971-72 will to a large extent depend on the success of the wheat inventory reduction program being offered to western farmers this year.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the uncertainty about whether quotas under the acreage reduction program will take into account the whole of last year's summerfallow, could this be made part of the over-all plan for this year's quota?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to answer that kind of question because the preamble, if you can call it that, is not accurate. Part of the summerfallow for 1969 has been considered and taken into account for this year's quota.

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the Minister of Agriculture in all sincerity whether his department and the department responsible for the Wheat Board intend to follow through with the same type of quota system next year in view of the fact that many of the farmers may increase their wheat acreage this year in the hope that they may recapture some of the wheat acreage quota lost this year by delivery to the Wheat Board on next year's quota?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my understanding that the hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement on motions. Perhaps the minister would reply in those terms.

Mr. Olson: No. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to make a statement today but I would refer to a reply I gave to a similar question some time ago. The changes which may be necessary for the 1971-72 crop year are very much dependent on what happens in 1970. While there may be uncertainty related to weather and farmers' planting intentions, one thing which is not uncertain is that we have about 500 million bushels more wheat than we should have in the inventory.

TRADE

WHEAT—POTENTIAL SALE TO BRAZIL

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In the absence of the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board, I want to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister or the appropriate department been informed of a potential sale of wheat to Brazil, as stated by Mr. Dever, the Secretary General of the Canada Grains Council? If so, can he inform the House what immediate action is being taken to exploit this sales opportunity?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): A long time ago, Mr. Speaker. The negotiations have been going on for quite a while. We must consider it to be great news each time somebody discovers that there is a possibility of a sale somewhere in the world. I think the Wheat Board and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce also have good sources of information.

TEXTILES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since he seems prepared to answer questions this morning, I should like to know if, after the speech delivered last evening by the Minister of Finance, who did not provide any assistance or protection measures for the textile industry which is presently threatened and plagued by rather severe unemployment, he can tell the House what he intends to do to protect this industry, particularly in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: The minister may answer briefly but if he wants to make a lengthy statement, he should make it on motions. However, he may give a short answer to the important question of the hon. member.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that I hope to make a statement on that subject in the near future. If the hon. member has some fabulous, original and new ideas to offer, I shall be happy to hear them.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question in reply to the minister's invitation.

Among favourable suggestions, would the minister be willing to make a statement today or next week on the measures he intends to take, after which we shall be able to make good and useful proposals?

Mr. Pepin: Why not before?

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—DIFFICULTIES IN ESTABLISHING PRICES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

The chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. McNamara, has stated to the committee on agriculture that constitutional obstacles prevented the federal government from establishing minimum and maximum prices for feed grain raised in a province. Can the Minister of Agriculture tell the House whether studies have been made, in order to overcome those obstacles?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REVERSION TO CULTIVATED ACREAGE QUOTA SYSTEM IN 1972

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I would like an indication from the minister as to whether in 1972 we will be reverting to the same type of quota system on the cultivated acreage basis that we had previously?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure the question is in order at this time. The hon. member is referring to policy affecting 1972. Because of this I wonder whether the question is in order. If the minister, who is an expert in these matters, feels there is some urgency, he might reply.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I agree with Your Honour's interpretation. There is some dependence on what happens in 1970 as to what the program will be for the ensuing years.

BARLEY—VOLUME OF SHIPMENTS TO MALTSTERS

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a supplementary question which normally I would direct to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the Wheat Board, but because of the importance to the barley producers of the west, I will direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the loss of identity in barley shipped to maltsters unless it is shipped in carload lots, will the minister give serious consideration to maintaining over-delivery of barley to the maltsters in order that this large market for domestic barley will not be lost to our producers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): There is no question of this market being lost to our producers. The most equitable technique is used to ensure that the maltsters receive the quality of barley that they require. This is a matter for consideration. Certainly no restrictions will be placed in the way of them obtaining the supplies that they require.

RESEARCH

SUGGESTED GRANT TO CANADIAN PEACE RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister about a matter in which I understand he demonstrated some interest as a private citizen before he assumed office. Does the government have under active or current consideration the question of granting some financial support to the Canadian Peace Research Institute, let us say, of the order of a quarter of one per cent of what we provide for the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that although the question is an important one it is one which ought to be placed on the Order Paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INDIANS AND MÉTIS—APPOINTMENT OF PAROLE SUPERVISORS OF SAME ANCESTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Solicitor General. Having regard to the growing role of the National Parole Board and the importance of this service in the rehabilitation of Canadians of Indian ancestry, would the hon. gentleman consider appointing supervisory personnel from the Indian and Métis groups so that supervision might be carried out within the communities of those concerned?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Some 40 members of that community are now receiving training under a scheme worked out in conjunction with the Indian Affairs Branch with a view to their employment in the correctional field as supervisors or otherwise. So there will be people of that ancestry working with parolees of similar ancestry.

Mr. Dinsdale: Could provision be made for members of the Métis community to receive the same opportunity for training?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday last we held a meeting with the Manitoba representatives of the Indian and the Métis people and I gave an undertaking that we would examine the possibility of setting up a similar training scheme for Métis. So the supervision of parolees from that segment of society would be undertaken by people of the same ancestry.

OIL

CANADIAN POLICY AND NORTH AMERICAN SECURITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question suggested by statements attributed to United States officials following the President's statement earlier in the week. Has the government of the United States, or spokesmen on its behalf, indicated directly to the government of Canada that in the view of the United States government our Canadian oil policy constitutes a threat to the security of North America?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In our conversations earlier in the year the question of security did come up. I believe the term "security" as it is used with respect to oil supply means security of supply. I do not think the reference is to national security in terms of defence. Certainly United States policy over the years has been based on the concept of security of supply from domestic sources. We have maintained—and I think this is so—that the Canadian position is different, that our policy cannot be identical to theirs because of the different circumstances that prevail in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. Has anybody on behalf of the United States government suggested to the government of Canada that we ought to reduce our imports of oil into Canada in order to foster a secure supply of oil in North America?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, different views have been stated from time to time by different officials in the course of discussions. There are, of course, two views on the question of our importation of oil. One is directed toward security of supply, which might be diminished in the event that offshore oil, by reason of circumstances prevailing in other countries, could not be obtained. The other view concerns making our markets available to Venezuelan oil, as does the United States. I think this is in accord with the view taken by the United States as well as ourselves in regard to our foreign policy toward Latin America.

Mr. Stanfield: One further supplementary question. Would the minister specifically answer the question whether the United States has made representations to Canada to the effect that we ought to reduce our imports, and thus our reliance upon imports, of oil from outside the country?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that representation has ever been made. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that our discussions with the United States since last March, when the President and the Prime Minister originally took the initiative in the matter of energy discussions, have been sporadic and on a broad plane. No firm positions have been taken by the United States or by Canada; and no position such as suggested by the hon. gentleman has been taken.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister undertake to make a full statement on motions next week outlining the state of the negotiations between Canada and the United States on energy policy?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think I have stated the state of the negotiations. They are sporadic and are continuing. I do not think the President's declaration of this week will speed up those negotiations or propel them in any way. When there is anything specific to announce, or when arrangements have been made or a position has been taken by the Canadian government, this will be announced in this House or in whatever public manner is proper.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister could advise the House if any officials of the United States administration or any cabinet minister has indicated directly to the government of Canada that the national oil policy that has been in force in Canada over these past several years has constituted a direct threat to the security of oil supplies to North America?

Mr. Greene: No, Mr. Speaker, that position has never been taken, although the question of security of supplies has certainly been a matter of discussion from time to time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that we should pass on to another subject at this moment. There are a large number of members still waiting for an opportunity to ask other questions.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a most important subject, as I think Your Honour realizes, and there are some fundamental questions with regard to which I think the government can furnish information to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is suggesting that this is the most important subject. Yesterday it was another subject that was the most important and on which hon. members wanted to ask questions for the whole question period. The Chair has to make an adjudication. I feel embarrassed when I see some hon. members who are anxious to ask questions and who are very patient from day to day. Sometimes they do lose their patience and I cannot blame them entirely. I am sure that in a moment we will have time to return to the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN QUEBEC—TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER ESKIMOS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development say whether or not representations have been received by him from Eskimos in northern Quebec, in particular from the Eskimo Council of Sugluk, the Eskimo Community Council of Great Whale River and several others, taking the strongest possible objection to having jurisdiction over any of their rights taken away or removed by the federal government? At the same time, will the minister say what happened to the meeting that he said would take place between officials of the government of Canada and the government of Quebec in connection with these people?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, indeed, I have received representations from some New Quebec groups recently. I am preparing to reply to them and to establish the government policy concerning New Quebec. As regards the officials of the federal and provincial governments, they are still in the northern areas. They have visited most localities and should submit their report to the responsible authorities immediately upon their return.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. A number of requests have been made that these people be heard, and they are asking to be heard instead of being pushed around. Will the minister give the assurance that these Canadians will not be denied the rights of other Canadians and placed in the position of being chattels as a result of the action of the federal government?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I object to the very colourful words used by the right hon. member. I have myself visited the New Quebec territories last Summer, and I have since despatched officials of my department—they are accompanied by provincial officials—to consult with the Eskimos. No decision has been reached as yet. That means that we are having consultations with the Eskimos and, in that respect, I must say to the right hon. member that I have been the first Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to meet with the Eskimos of New Quebec, whereas during the administration of the right hon. gentleman, nobody bothered to go and meet them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suppose the right hon. gentleman has a further supplementary, and I will recognize him in a moment. Again I ask all hon. members to co-operate with the Chair so that we can get on as quickly as possible with as many questions as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that affects Canadians as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hon. members on the government side laugh. The minister said that he was the first to visit the Eskimos. They say that he was the first not to listen to them. I would ask the minister this question: If a private member like myself wanted to go to this area, would he have the co-operation of officials of the Canadian government and the minister's department so that this matter could be looked into and justice done?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will always be pleased to invite the right hon. member to come with me. I fact I did invite him to come to meet the Indians of his own constituency, but he could not accept my invitation.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. gentleman offered me was a trip to Prince Albert. I am talking about those areas in northern Quebec where these people are being neglected by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Broadview.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but time is running out.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has indicated that he is the first Canadian minister to visit the area of new Quebec. I would wish to inform him that I visited Great Whale River—

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has no records at all in his department.

Mr. Dinsdale: —as early as 1961 to ensure—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dinsdale: —that the Eskimos there have the very basic rights of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member does not have a question of privilege.

HOUSING

DECLINE IN STARTS—MEETING WITH BUILDING CONTRACTORS AND INVESTMENT COMPANIES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the most important subject this week, and that is why my question is directed to the minister without housing in charge of portfolios.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gilbert: I apologize for that Freudian slip, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious decline in housing starts for the first two months of this year, I should like to ask the minister whether he is intending to call the building contractors and investment companies together to discuss ways and means to solve this serious problem?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, my reply to the hon. member who would like to be the minister without housing in charge of portfolios would be that this is the same question he asked the other day. I am consulting regularly with all those who are involved and concerned with this matter, and that is essentially what I said to him in response to this question the other day.

POWER

MINAS BASIN—PUBLICATION OF STUDY

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and whatnot; I forget the third title for the moment.

An hon. Member: Hot air.

Mr. McCleave: Could the hon. minister advise when the feasibility study on Bay of Fundy power might be made public?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Very soon, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR REHABILITATING HOMES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. In the plans to make $200 million available for housing for low income groups, will consideration be given to making part of this sum available for the acquisition or perhaps rehabilitation of existing housing for lower income groups?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are seriously considering such a use of these funds which are in fact capital funds. We are looking at that kind of proposition.

SUSPENSION OF CMHC LOANS IN LARGER CITIES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. Can he tell the House whether CMHC has cut off housing loans in cities of over 10,000 population and, if so, why?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in my statement on the capital budget I indicated that the Section 40 allocation of $110 million would be reserved primarily for remote areas, small communities and new resource towns. In so far as the Section 40 allocation of $110 million is concerned, it is going to those kind of areas. But all the other funds of the CMHC capital budget are available including the $200 million reserve fund and we are working out approaches to the larger urban centres.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIAMEY—COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TO EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

We heard, last night, that Quebec would take part in the Niamey conference. Would the Prime Minister advise the House if, according to conditions that led to acceptance by Quebec, this province will have a special place at this conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if Quebec wants to feel that it occupies a special place but, as far as I know, all the provinces will hold a special place among the Canadian delegation, in the sense that every province will be able to display its own flag along with the Canadian flag, etc. I think there is a real effort being made to reconcile both parties. The result is a gratifying one for all participating provinces as well as for the federal government.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House whether, when it is time to vote, Canada will abstain from voting on cultural matters and will let the province of Quebec do it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, nothing was said about this during the discussions between the federal and the provincial governments. Such a formula would surely not be acceptable.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Considering that, at Niamey, Quebec will be signing the treaty for the creation of the Agence francophone, does this entitle that province to some privilege? Shall all provinces have the same right?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation alone will be signing the agreement. Obviously, in addition to the chairman of the delegation, there will be the representatives of the different provinces, but it is the Canadian delegation that will sign and not the provincial delegates.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF DENISON MINES LIMITED BY U.S. INTERESTS—LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his emergency announcement on March 2 that steps would be taken to prevent the sale to a foreign owner of what turned out to be Denison Mines, could the Prime Minister say whether legislation on this matter will be introduced before Easter or whether parliament will be told within that time what steps are being taken?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly not before Easter will there be legislation, Mr. Speaker, but it is possible that before Easter government policy in this respect will be announced; if not before Easter, then shortly after.

AGRICULTURE

BARBER COMMISSION REPORT ON FARM MACHINERY PRICES—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Some time ago I questioned the minister on whether he would indicate in a statement on motions what action the government intends to take in respect of the Barber commission report on the price of farm machinery and his answer was soon, he hoped. Could he indicate whether he will make this statement before the House recesses for Easter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a complete report on what we have done because a number of the discussions we have had are still in that stage. I would hope that before we recess I can make a statement on motions advising the House on the steps that have been taken and the progress that has been made to date.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—CONSIDERATION FOR FARMERS WHO MADE REDUCTIONS LAST YEAR

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. What consideration is being given to helping those farmers who voluntarily made a drastic reduction in their wheat acreage last year?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there are provisions in the regulations, and some of that detail has been announced, to take into account substantial reductions that took place between 1968 and 1969.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARTICIPATION IN UNITED NATIONS BIRTH CONTROL PROGRAM

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and, like the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it has to do with government policy but on a different subject. How long a gestation period is necessary for the government to make up its mind and deliver a clear and constructive statement on government policy in relation to family planning and our contribution to the United Nations in this field?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Nine months, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, in order that we may determine whether this nine months is going to result in an abortion, a miscarriage or a stillborn statement, when did the nine months commence?

Mr. Trudeau: The state has no room in the bedrooms of the nation.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just a few seconds left and I wonder whether we might try to get a few more questions asked.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN QUEBEC—TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER ESKIMOS—ACTIONS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Is he aware that some federal civil servants have urged the Eskimos in northern Quebec to protest against the Quebec administration in order to keep their positions?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that federal civil servants have intervened in any way whatever in this matter. They are trying to co-operate as much as possible with the Eskimos in New Quebec. Besides, I do not think that there is anything to gain by fanning the debate right now while both provincial and federal officers are there consulting the Eskimos.

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wonder whether he would take the first opportunity to define exactly what he means by the new Quebec, in view of the eager territorial greed of certain people in various parts of Canada who refuse to recognize certain historical factors?

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—LETTERS OF PROTEST

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): My question is for the Minister of Finance. In the flush of his great budget of last night, can the minister now state the number of letters on the white paper that he has received and answered and whether he has any evidence of Liberal members who are disdainfully throwing these letters in the waste-basket unanswered?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I am sure that a Liberal member would never do that, unlike the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed the following bills to which the concurrence of this House is desired: Bill S-21, an act to amend the Criminal Code, and Bill S-22, an act to incorporate National Farmers Union.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PAROLE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONSECUTIVE AND CONCURRENT SENTENCES, EFFECT OF FORFEITURE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General) moved that Bill S-19, to amend the Parole Act as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on March 11, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time, by leave now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. McIlraith moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I intend to take part in the debate, but is the minister not going to explain some of the mysteries of this bill for the benefit of those who did not sit on the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs?

Mr. McIlraith: The bill is designed to redraft two sections of the present act to put them into language that will mean what they were thought to mean when they were enacted by Parliament and what they were thought to mean by the administration administering the Act. They involve no change in principle in any way and no matter of substance. They are purely technical. In one of them, the change becomes necessary by reason of an interpretation put on one of the clauses by a court, and the other amendment was made necessary as a result of a question that was raised—and this matter did not go to court—as to what the existing language meant. The matter was dealt with in the committee; it is purely technical and no change in substance is involved.

• (12 noon)

Mr. McCleave: I think the minister put it very fairly when he said that these are, in fact, technical changes designed to overcome some of the problems that were encountered when the former measures were interpreted. Indeed, so technical was the language of the bill, and so difficult the study thereof, that even the best minds in the House of Commons frequently found themselves in great difficulty. I refer of course to the members of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. However, we did our best with it and passed it after a good study. Sometimes bills are passed unanimously in committee, sometimes they are passed on division. This one, we felt, was passed in confusion. None the less, as the minister noted, it makes two important technical corrections to what we thought was the intention in the existing legislation. But I think it should be added that these changes have not taken away any rights for which people have fought and which they obtained in the courts. These changes conversely, will be of benefit to the people who are now undergoing penitentiary sentences. In other words, we are not depriving anybody of a specific right. We are clarifying the technical language, to preserve the rights that we thought they enjoyed already.

It might be of interest to note that there is a retroactive provision in the bill, since the section shall be deemed to have come into force on the 26th day of August of last year. The reason for it is that was the date of the proclamation of the parole sections of the omnibus Criminal Code with which we dealt during an earlier session of this Parliament. Part of the difficulties for which this bill is the remedy arose because of some imprecise drafting which did not fit the intentions of the administration and, to be fair, of all members of the House, in relation to the very important matter of parole.

Perhaps I could be allowed to make two very quick points in concluding my brief remarks. The first is that the study of this bill gives us all an opportunity to pay respect to one of the great public servants of Canada. I refer to Mr. George Street, the chairman of the National Parole Board. I am very pleased that Mr. Street's tenure of office has been extended by this government. He was appointed by the administration headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He is truly an outstanding Canadian, and perhaps part of the ease with which we finally stumbled out of the technical jungle in which we found ourselves was because we knew that Mr. Street was prepared to light a torch and lead the way for us. We on this side of the House, and I am sure on the other side as well, have great faith in that gentleman.

The other point I would like to make very briefly deals with the fact that when we have technical bills such as this, which really are measures designed to bring about what we originally intended to bring about, the procedure should be short and simple. I can think, for example, of my own bill relating to some sections of the divorce act with which difficulties have been experienced in the court. I hope we can devise a law reform procedure whereby such bills as this one, and the one I am sponsoring, can get rather quick study without opening up the subjects they deal with the widespread discussions that go on and on for days and days. In other words when we need technical remedies we have to find a way of achieving them rather quickly, otherwise minor and technical reforms in the law have to wait for an unjustified period of time. Fortunately, this criticism does not apply to this case and I say on behalf of my colleagues that we support the measure.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): The last time this bill came to the House many members from all parties referred to it as a housekeeping bill, which is a proper reference, but then they proceeded to point out to the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) the many gaps that exist in the present Parole Act. I can recall the remarks that I made directing his attention to the report of the Canadian Committee on Corrections, commonly called the Ouimet Commission, which set forth a few chapters on parole and indicated where changes could be made to make the parole system in Canada more effective. The Solicitor General's reply, after the debate had taken place, was that many of the recommendations had been implemented and others were being considered. I hope that in the very near future he will bring forth a bill of substance rather than a technical bill to correct a mistake that was made a short time ago. I have faith and confidence in the Solicitor General, who is attempting to make his last mark on Parliament possibly before he goes to the other place or accepts a full pension. He has made an impression. I hope he will consolidate his position by bringing forth a bill incorporating all the recommendations made by the Ouimet Commission.

I now wish to deal with the question of volunteers and parole. I have not heard Mr. Street nor the Solicitor General give information on the part that volunteers can play in parole. To date, parole has been administered by professionals in the minister's department, and by professional social workers. But with the expansion taking place in the parole system, for which we give credit to the Solicitor General and the chairman of the parole board, I think we are missing an important aspect in respect to the use of volunteers.

Recently I read an article in the magazine Federal Probation, December issue, outlining the efforts being made by the State of Florida in the parole field. That state has provided roughly $150,000 to set up a volunteer parole program, manned by businessmen, tradesmen, salesmen, college professors, teachers, ministers, college students, housewives, retirees, attorneys and blue collar workers. In fact, the state has passed enabling legislation setting up a department of community services.

We have a slight parallel in Canada with the Big Brother and Big Sister movements. Credit should be given to them for the active roles they fulfil. In addition, we have many other organizations that attempt to raise money by running bingoes, whist drives and so forth, to help with community services. I would ask that Kiwanians, Optimists and members of Lions Clubs, direct their attention to undertaking volunteer work in the probation and parole services. This volunteer work has been quite successful in Florida, embracing all the people I have mentioned.

As we know, they have a particular problem in the United States with regard to Negroes, and they are specializing in that field also. We, in Canada, may have a particular problem with regard to the Indians and the Metis, and it may be that we could get specialists to work in that field. In fact, I was pleased to hear the minister say today that some Indians have been trained to take care of parole and probation problems experienced by young native Canadians.

The underlying principle with regard to the volunteer parole service has been the one-for-one basis. In other words, after a volunteer has been proven to be worthy of taking up the job he is assigned a person who has been placed on probation or parole, and he works with that one individual. He may provide the father complex that a young offender might have missed in his youth. He establishes a rapport between himself and the young parolee. He gives the parolee encouragement, inspiration, direction and guidance. This service has had remarkable results in Florida, and in cities throughout the United States.

There is much the same analogy with regard to Alcoholics Anonymous, where persons who have been previously addicted to alcoholism and who have been cured apply their time, talent and services to helping other people who are suffering from alcoholism. In Florida, young parolees who have been rehabilitated, and reformed themselves now act as volunteers in the parole service, using the experience they gained when in custody or in penitentiaries. Such volunteers have had a remarkable impact on young offenders granted parole.

I hope that the Solicitor General, who basically is a man of concern and of compassion, will take up this idea, and introduce a bill establishing such a community department, so that young parolees and offenders placed on probation can have the assistance of volunteers. We are missing a golden opportunity to use the services of Kiwanians, Optimists and members of Lions Clubs, a great part of whose time is really wasted in a money collecting performance, whereas we would be getting the full value of their service if they applied themselves to taking an active part in probation and parole. I hope that the Solicitor General will bring forth legislation which will translate that idea into effective action in the near future.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

STANDARDS COUNCIL OF CANADA

ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS AND POWERS, ORGANIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed from Thursday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-163 to provide for the establishment of a Standards Council of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lundrigan (p. 4726).

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I recently pointed out the importance of considering without delay the way in which to change our system of weights and measures. The scientific or mathematical demonstration of the importance of the metric system is so conclusive by itself that it is not necessary to take it up again.

The process to be followed effects obviously the very subject matter of the bill on standardization. We wish this change would be carried out as soon as possible with as few drawbacks as possible so that Canada may have the same system as most countries in the world. Of course, our decision is closely tied to that of our neighbours to the South, the United States. Nevertheless, we could already bring about this change in a number of fields without adversely affecting our industrial and commercial relations with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we therefore wholly agree with the principle that it is necessary to establish standards systems.

In closing I would like to repeat that it would perhaps be advisable to consider the possibility of coming to an understanding with an association existing already, and see if it would not be possible for the government, particularly in this austerity period, to effect savings by accepting a kind of mixed association with a view to protecting the interests of all Canadians.

If Bill C-163 is passed without amendment, the folding up of the Canadian Standards Association will necessarily follow.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): It is not true and I said so four times yesterday.

Mr. Matte: I do not understand how we can have two standards systems.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it is not true. There are already seven or eight.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, the minister gives me the impression that, after his discussions or negotiations with the Canadian Standards Association, he has lost his perennial smile. Does he want to illustrate that, when you cannot come to terms with the government, you have to pay the piper? This looks like his attitude. In any case, in a field such as this, we must encourage change while safeguarding the taxpayers' interests. If we realize that that organization will cost quite a lot of money and that its services are more or less interesting, we will have to wonder whether we did not go astray from the outset. The purpose of my remarks is simply to prevent such things from happening.

It is worth repeating once more what I said yesterday about the representation within that agency, which I believe must take into account the provinces to a great extent, and in particular the province of Quebec.

I believe the minister should answer the questions we are raising and attempt to find amendments or to support those that we may be submitting.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who is the sponsor of this bill, yesterday ably put before the House the need for it, the need for the standards council of Canada and the great things that the council working in close collaboration with those in the private sector, can accomplish in promoting voluntary standards. I do not want to repeat what he said yesterday in support of the council, but I should like to add some brief comments from my particular point of view as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

In our department we receive month in and month out thousands and thousands of consumer complaints. An analysis of these shows that many can be traced to the lack of satisfactory voluntary standards prevailing for many commonly used consumer products. On the other hand, if we look at industry, purchasing agents for years have been able to specify precise standards for a wide range of industrial commodities. If these standards are not met in filling orders in the industrial sector the goods are turned back. The ordinary consumer has no such advantage. When he goes to the marketplace he has to rely on information provided by the manufacturer or salesman without reference to any proper or meaningful standards. Often, the only information the consumer has is contained in advertising puffery, the main purpose of which is to extol the virtues of a particular product.

To cite an example, there is the confusing description of automobile tires. There are literally dozens of different kinds of tires in different price ranges available to the consumer. They are described by such phrases as "top of the line", or "super" or "No. 1" and are given incomprehensive ply ratings and other characteristics. The upshot is that the ordinary car owner, who is not an expert in tires, does not know what he is buying and, unless he is an expert, does not know whether he is getting a good or bad deal. I could give many examples of products on the market where the consumers' action in the marketplace could be greatly enhanced by improved voluntary standards.

Another instance is the difficulty consumers have in sorting out the sizes which are described in terms of "large", "small", "family", "economy", and "giant", words which have become meaningless. The nomenclature used in the grading of gasoline is a tribute to the ingenuity of the advertising profession but does little to inform the consumer of the octane content of the gasoline or its quality. Many household items, such as automobile batteries, plastic bags and floor polishers are described as "heavy duty" although the significance of this term is obscure to the ordinary consumer and obscure to me. The attribution of specious quality differentials has been a boon to the copywriters but the consumer has become numbed by the excesses of the advertisers. I think as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said, the standards council in promoting in the private sector the adoption and promotion of voluntary standardization, can enhance the consumer interest a great deal.

I have great difficulty understanding the role of the official opposition in this. We need these standards now. It is unfortunate that consumers did not have them years ago, yet the official opposition says not only should they not have them now, they should be put off for at least six months—in fact they should not have them at all, a most incomprehensible stand for the official opposition. Indeed, I find the official opposition incomprehensible all the time. Last night they were saying the welfare of the poor people of Canada could be solved by—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not mind an hon. member of the House, the ordinary backbencher, misinterpreting the position of the opposition, but when we get the minister deliberately misrepresenting the position taken by the opposition which yesterday did agree with the need for co-operation, fostering, promotion and support but that the bill in question went too far, then I think the government should be brought to order and forced to present the facts of the situation.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, to a Conservative any movement at all is too much—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) on the same question of privilege.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of privilege, may I suggest to the hon. member who raised it that he should not be surprised if the minister finds certain things incomprehensible.

Mr. Nowlan: He is incomprehensible.

Mr. Basford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the consumers of Canada will find incomprehensible the official opposition's desire to kill this bill and put it off for six months.

Mr. Dinsdale: The people of Canada are not taken in easily.

Mr. Basford: I hope the remarks coming from the opposition side of the House indicate my remarks are hitting the point. May I continue, after having been so rudely interrupted?

As I said, consumer standards, apart from food and drug standards have, in my view, suffered neglect in Canada, and this is a serious deficiency. There is an increasing pressure to fill this gap from informed consumers, from the Consumers Association of Canada and from the Consumers Council which I appointed. Some progress has been made in limited fields such as garment sizing and care labelling of textiles, but there is an enormous job still remaining to be done. Despite the very considerable accomplishments of the Canadian Standards Association, the Canadian Government Specifications Board and a number of other standards-making bodies —all of them have been doing exceedingly good work—there is an urgent need for a truly representative and truly national body to promote and co-ordinate development by standard-setting agencies which will benefit the ordinary people, the ordinary consumers of this country.

I believe that the proposed standards council of Canada will have an essential role in achieving this aim. It will represent the whole spectrum of agencies concerned with and interested in standards in Canada. It is quite natural that such a body as the standards council of Canada should have heavy representation from industry because of the highly technical nature of many of the issues in the field of standards. However, I can forecast confidentally that consumers will have, and must have, an important voice in the work of the council. There will clearly be participation by my department, by the Consumers Association of Canada and by the ten provinces which will have a real interest in promoting the consumer interest.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the standards council of Canada will give priority attention to the problem of product safety. There is ample evidence that an unwarranted number of Canadians are being killed and maimed every year in accidents involving seemingly innocent household products. Products that are inadequately designed, insufficiently labelled or easily subject to misuse cause both untold suffering and great economic loss. This morning I announced new regulations under the Hazardous Products Act which would deal with the labelling of a wide range of consumer chemical products. In 1967, the last year for which figures are available for this country, there were over 15,000 cases of children under four years of age being poisoned from household products. We announced this morning appropriate regulations governing the labelling of these products so that, hopefully, we can develop voluntarily some proper lids for these products and cut down on these kinds of poisonings.

The economic cost to this country as a result of such injuries and poisonings in terms of providing hospital and medical services and in terms of losses suffered by those who are employed is enormous. Anything we can do to develop greater product safety and eliminate accidents arising from faulty products will be of great economic benefit to Canada, altogether apart from any humanitarian considerations with regard to personal suffering and injury. We need to improve our statistics on household accidents, but enough clear evidence exists to show conclusively that more rigorous safety standards for consumer goods would contribute greatly to the public good. In the United States, the National Commission on Product Safety has been examining over 2,000 commonly used consumer products. Its report to be published later this year will bring to light, I am quite sure, inadequacies of design and of performance in many products sold widely in the United States and Canada and will highlight the need for better consumer product standards and regulations. I hope that the Standards Council, working with the private agencies, can promote and develop great numbers of voluntary standards that will govern products and product safety.

Mr. Lundrigan: Will the minister permit a question, Mr. Speaker? The minister indicated in his earlier remarks that the provinces and existing councils and organizations supported the government's move to become involved in the matter of standardization. Can the minister indicate whether there has been any critical response from existing organizations and provinces? Are they wondering whether the provisions of this legislation are along lines that were discussed when the legislation was originally proposed?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think that question should be and will be dealt with in detail when my colleague speaks in winding up the debate. I wish to make two points that my colleague referred to yesterday. There has been extensive consultation with private agencies and provinces, and I think there is a wide measure of support for this legislation. I am making these remarks in my capacity as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I can inform the hon. member that there is wide support throughout the country for this legislation on the part of consumers who want to see this sort of agency established. I should think that considering the impassioned speeches the hon. member for Newfoundland has made on behalf of the poor people of his province, he would be in favour of this type of legislation.

Mr. Lundrigan: Why does the minister not tell the whole story instead of playing games?

Mr. Dinsdale: That is too much to hope.

Mr. Basford: The Hazardous Products Act passed by this House last session provides the framework for the most comprehensive consumer product safety programs in the world, and provides the legislative tool which can be used to back up some of our safety standards. Once satisfactory standards have been developed by the council in co-ordination with private standards-setting agencies, there will be no excuse for allowing dangerous or substandard consumer products on the market. In some special areas, it is possible for the federal government to develop product safety standards, but in most other areas it is essential to rely on the special knowledge and technical competence of industry, safety organizations and the medical profession; and the council will provide an excellent vehicle to bring together this knowledge, this expertise and this competence. It is hard to overestimate the need for an agency such as the standards council to sponsor a consistent and broad gauged plan which will lead to the elimination of many of the booby traps in Canadian homes. Consumers will look to the council to exercise leadership and to co-ordinate the development of voluntary standards in this area.

I want to dwell briefly on another responsibility of the proposed standards council of Canada, its role in relation to converting to the metric system. There has been, so far as I can judge, widespread support expressed for the very excellent and forward looking statement that was issued by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on the question of metrication just before Christmas. This statement makes it clear that the metric die is cast, even though the timing of conversion is indefinite and a great many very complex problems remain to be resolved. A great deal of attention has been paid to the implications of converting to the metric system for industry and commerce, but I would also like to note that any general adoption of the metric system in Canada has profound implications and advantages for consumers.

The cornerstone of a market system is that the consumer has full, complete and factual information so that he can properly judge the product he is buying and make an intelligent comparison of it with other like products. The metric system would greatly enhance the consumer interest in proper information, product and package comparability. The existence of a standards agency, with balanced representation from all sectors of the economy, will be vital if we are to deal satisfactorily with the abandonment of our traditional measures of pounds, quarts, inches and gallons and the adoption of a far more logical and consistent system of weights and measures. The conversion process, as the experience of Britain makes clear, is not a simple one, and I believe that the standards council of Canada will have a major contribution to make in easing problems of conversion which inevitably must be made. Hopefully, this can be achieved in the future with a minimum amount of difficulty and problems. We are creating an agency which, I think, can ease our way to conversion.

Finally, I want to say a word about international standardization. While it is obvious that the development of standards is of crucial importance to international trade in industrial machinery, building materials and so forth, there is increasing concern being shown over international standards for consumer goods. The International Organization for Standardization and the International Electrotechnical Commission have recently established a joint body to deal with consumer standards. The ISO has an active technical committee on consumer questions. Recently, the OECD established a committee on consumer policy. In addition, a number of ad hoc international committees have been convened to deal with special problems. Many of these committees are dealing with issues which are important to Canadian industry and to the Canadian consuming public. I feel that it is important that Canada's participation in these international standards associations be as strong as possible and that we assure that all international developments are kept under careful scrutiny. From the point of view of prestige and continuity, I believe that it is absolutely necessary for Canada to be represented by an agency created by the Parliament of Canada, which will reflect all the interests involved in any discussions or negotiations on the international standards scene.

There has been some hesitation about this bill, Mr. Speaker. Noting the advantage to Canadian consumers of greatly improved systems of voluntary standardization, I find it very difficult to understand why that hesitation exists. I can only conclude that such hesitation stems from a misunderstanding of the intent and purpose of the standards council which will have great benefit, not only to Canadian industry, commerce and trade, but also to the ordinary Canadian consumer.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, the minister has gone to considerable length to put on the record the allegation that the official opposition is not concerned with standards in Canada or with protecting the consumer. I say to the minister if his external brilliance is any indication of his comprehension of the facts, it is an absolute misrepresentation. What we say is the Canadian Standards Association is already set up. This association is doing a good job and we do not believe it is necessary for the government to be sticking its nose into every part of society today. We have the new Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as well as several other agencies, including the Food and Drug Directorate. These departments would only have to give assistance to the voluntary agency which is already established. We could proceed from there with standards in other areas.

In my opinion, Bill C-163 is just another duplication. It is an unnecessary government exercise. Many attempts have been made by this government to introduce through the back door what can be termed as seemingly innocuous legislation, but this bill is certainly a strong candidate for first prize. The government is asking us to accept the need for a federal corporation to foster and promote the voluntary standardization of weights and measures, quality and performance of goods, and industrial and commercial methods and practices.

The Canadian Standards Association has been functioning for 50 years. It has a very good reputation. There have been few complaints registered against this association. The CSA operates independently of industry, government and supplier to establish standards for consumer items manufactured and sold in Canada. It works with other standards groups throughout the world to establish and maintain standards for consumer goods in the markets of international commerce.

Mr. Pepin: Will the hon. member accept a question? If it is true that the CSA is so perfect, why do some of the officials of that organization keep referring to the major changes that are taking place in the organization and to the tremendous new programs that they have in mind for the future?

Mr. Downey: I do not think there is anything wrong with referring to programs for the future. The government talks about the future all the time. It should not criticize a voluntary association that looks to the future in the same way. I cannot see any legitimacy in that argument.

Throughout the 50 years of its existence, the CSA has built up a reputation for excellence that places Canada high in the opinion of other countries. The best testimony of this is the fact that many countries accept Canada's standards as their own. The CSA trade mark is accepted without question by countries with which Canada trades in consumer goods.

Even in the face of this evidence, Mr. Speaker, I would not suggest that the present CSA methods of operation should not be examined. It is possible that an independent study of the entire CSA operation should be undertaken to determine whether the CSA is, in fact, adequate to present needs. It may well be that the CSA is not competent in some areas to manage the changeover to the new international system of units known as the metric system.

All these probabilities I will concede. If the reorganization of existing standards were proposed I would not hesitate to support such a move. But I cannot assent to the complete reorganization of the present arrangements or to the assumption that once a government agency is created a much better job will be done. Look at the operation of other government undertakings, the Post Office, for example. I learned the other day that 140 years ago mail sent by the California Express from Missouri to the west coast arrived in eight days. The other day a man told me it had taken ten days for a letter sent from Ottawa to reach Vancouver. How can the minister expect us to have much faith in the type of reorganization he is proposing? Consider the operations of the Wheat Board. It turns out, we learned yesterday, that the board was paying four cents a ton commission on the shipment of Canadian grain in certain circumstances, and someone pointed out that a salesman can make almost as much selling a dozen cases of dogfood as he can by shipping large quantities of Canadian wheat. How can any faith be placed in any new organization which the government may set up when this is the kind of performance we have learned to expect from those which already exist?

The government is proposing to set up a new federal body to operate alongside the CSA. There is no indication whatever that it will receive the co-operation from all concerned which is now available on a voluntary basis. The preamble to the present bill states that a government agency to be known as the standards council of Canada will foster and promote the voluntary acceptance of standards in Canada and also serve as the Canadian representative at meetings of standards groups of foreign countries. All this, the CSA has been doing for 15 years. In paragraph 4 (b) of clause 2 the bill gives the Council power to accredit other organizations which are concerned about the establishment of standards. This is the thin end of the wedge, the first indication that Bill C-163 is not as innocuous as the minister pretends it is. Paragraph (g) of the same clause gives the minister's council the power to establish its own trademark as the new Canadian standards trade mark. Already the government is saying that the old Canadian standards mark is not good enough—that the new council will have its own mark. Yet the minister went to great lengths yesterday to tell us that everything would be done voluntarily.

Further, the bill authorizes the new agency to accept and spend moneys appropriated by Parliament, to acquire and hold real property, to alienate that property at pleasure, and to do such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects and exercise of the powers of the council. The bill also prescribes the number of people who shall be members of the board. The council is to consist of an executive council made up of a president and some 57 members. Clause 14 gives the council authority to appoint such other officers and employees as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work. In other words, this is yet another case of an empire being built.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Downey: We have already seen what has happened in the case of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I am not arguing that some of these things ought not to be done, but there seems to be no end to the new empires which are being built with the approval of this government. I maintain that when we read this bill the picture we get is not that of a harmless body of conscientious citizens looking over the shoulders of the Canadian Standards Association. This proposal has all the earmarks of a complete take-over, and the instruments to accomplish it are well spelled out in this legislation.

The minister was at great pains to explain that this could all be done through co-operation. Yet the bill spells out all that is necessary for a complete take-over and the eradication of the facilities which now exist. If this is the intention of the government—and having studied this measure I cannot believe that any hon. member could take a different view—why does the minister not tell us in clear terms that the administration is getting into the standards business and that everyone else is getting out? However he may have tried to disguise the intention, it is clear to anyone who has taken the trouble to read this document clause by clause. We are confronted, here, not only with machinery for a take-over, but with an example of duplicity.

Aside from the fact that the services which the Canadian Standards Association have been providing for so long will, from now on, be hampered by bureaucracy, there is the question of cost, something which should always be considered. The only reason put forward by the government for contemplating the establishment of a standards council in the first place was that the CSA had asked for funds from the government to defray part of its costs.

The fact is, the CSA has been self-supporting since its inception. I know the minister can answer by saying that the charges have in fact been paid by industry and passed on. But nothing will convince me that less money will be needed, or that these services can be provided at lower cost to the public if the government takes over the standards council. The request to which I referred a few moments ago was a request for a grant to cover membership dues in the international organization for standardization, of which the Canadian association is a member. The fee amounts to $50,000 a year, I believe compared with the CSA operating budget of some $4,500,000 a year.

Another reason advanced by the government, after the fact, is that other western nations have government-operated standards organizations. If we examine other examples of government-operated standards agencies, the only one similar to the one proposed is in South Africa. France has been put forward as an example, but I believe in their case the government only elected one of their members to the board, the president; the actual work of the board was carried on within a voluntary structure, as is the case with the CSA. Britain, Germany and Sweden have organizations similar to what the minister would establish here, and are something akin to the present functions of the CSA.

This is a time when the government is telling the Canadian people to follow its example and spend wisely. I suggest that the measure before us today does not comply with that theory. It is not calculated to accomplish any goal except that of adding to the load of the taxpayers, with questionable benefits to consumers. I suggest the government could work through our present organizations with some direction from the department.

I have found a clause on the last page of the bill, almost the last clause. I suggest it should really have been one of the first clauses and that the bill should have been built around it. Clause 18 provides:

> The Council shall be deemed to be a charitable organization in Canada as described in paragraph (e) of subsection 35(1) of section 62 of the Income Tax Act—

That is a rather exciting observation to find buried in the bill. This council is going to be called a charitable organization—one other charity, I suppose, that is to be supported by the taxpayers of Canada. It is also of interest to note that the bill has still to pass the House, and I would think there were sufficient members in the House of good judgment not to hasten its passage unduly. The government has already appropriated money for the council in the estimates. Probably it thought that the bill might slide through before the estimates were published, I do not know. I think we should all consider the bill most carefully. I and a lot of my colleagues share the view that we should not be duplicating a service that can be better performed by an existing organization, one that is self-sustaining.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask your permission to call it one o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: There is still five minutes remaining.

Mr. Speaker: There must be unanimous consent, of course, and the minister seems to be resisting the suggestion. It appears his resistance has been shattered. We will call it one o'clock and the House will resume at two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I guess I am the man for whom the bell tolls. Anyway, I am delighted with the opportunity of saying a few words this afternoon on Bill C-163 to establish a standards council of Canada. I am delighted also to see the genial minister in his seat, smiling as usual through storm and stress. I have a first question which I think might be indicative of what I am going to say later. My question is, why voluntary standards? We propose voluntary standards in this particular field, yet we do not have voluntary standards when we judge criminal behaviour. However, of the things that have gone on as a result of our lack of standards in this country verge on that kind of behaviour.

The slogan, "let the buyer beware", in my view is a sordid phrase, I think it is much more appropriate to an age much earlier than our own and out of place in this complex society. Perhaps it was reasonable in a more simple society in which the products were simple. You went to someone you knew to make your purchases and there was craftsmanship rather than factoryship at work. Certainly, in the earlier days there were not the vast number of synthetic products in terms of plastics, synthetic textiles and that sort of thing. The various chemical additives have by their very nature, placed these products in a position where the average member of the public is unable to make a decision based on his own particular knowledge or the feel of a particular piece of cloth. He has no idea really what he is buying, nor does he know very much about the sizing of it, its shrinking, lasting qualities or methods of cleaning.

I think it is self-evident that we need standards. I believe, too, that the consumers not only in this country but in the United States as well have been rooked for years because of the phrase, let the buyer beware. I think this is an aspect of our society that has had tacit approval for far too long. It is time for the government to take a much more active role to see that reasonable standards, not only of safety as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs mentioned this morning but also of quality, be available in a readily accessible and meaningful form to the people who are the purchasers of our country.

I think perhaps the fact that the Consumer Reports, a United States magazine, has such a wide sale in Canada is an indication of distrust of the standards we now have; the kind of packaging and labelling standards for North America products. I do not believe that particular magazine, which is supported by subscribers, would enjoy such wide support from the general public if people felt confident that they could depend upon the quality or the labelling of the products they purchased.

This organization which publishes Consumer Reports, as I mentioned earlier, is an independent organization not financed by manufacturers or by consumers, except in the sense that they buy the magazine. It consults and conducts tests, and I have used its information many times while contemplating the purchase of some item that was going to be fairly costly. I think perhaps many members of this House realize that this particular group not only tests various products but also rates them and puts them in a rank order so that people have an opportunity to make an intelligent decision on their purchases rather than depending upon the often spurious advertising for them. I think the standards council of Canada might consider, after it develops somewhat its activities, the same type of practices as those engaged in by the Consumer Report magazine and the group that sponsors it. We need to set up independent testing laboratories and not be influenced by the conflict of interest of the various manufacturers. They are more interested in pushing their products than they are in ensuring that the products are always of like quality or always safe.

The other thing the Council might do, and this is where the word "voluntary" comes under question, is to rate these various products. If there are, for example, 15 manufacturers of electric ranges—there are probably only three—the Council should do independent testing and rate them so that people will know they are getting value for their money, or at least will be able to buy what they desire with information available to them. So, those two points, testing and rating, should be considered by the new council. What happens when you do not have this? What happens is what has been happening, not only in manufacturing industries but also in service industries that is that people who do not have the expertise are constantly being defrauded. The well known case is the one of the automobile service garages in Montreal. This business has come in for a great deal of criticism by a group of people who know the field and make their investigations of repair charges available to the general public.

So the question, then, is not really about the need for standards but whether this bill will really accomplish the provision of standards useful to the Canadian public. I note that under section 116, subsection 33D of the Criminal Code amendments of last year, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) has broad powers to control advertising. He mentioned just before lunch, the matter of protecting the consumer, but he has broad powers now under this section which reads as follows:

> Everyone who publishes or causes to be published an advertisement containing a statement that purports to be a statement of fact but that is untrue, deceptive or misleading or is intentionally so worded or arranged that it is deceptive or misleading, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years, if the advertisement is published.

I do not know whether or not there have been any charges laid under this section, but I wonder if it would apply to any of the campaign literature of the Liberal party. This might be an interesting question. But people demand standards on which they can depend, there is no doubt about it.

Last weekend, which I spent in my constituency, I was visited by a number of people including an old gentleman who came to see me about the problem of standards. He was complaining about, of all things, dress sizes for older women. Presumably he was considering purchasing one for his wife, but he did not tell me that.

Mr. Winch: You should say "over 21".

Mr. Rose: This was an elderly gentleman and he was concerned because he felt the dress sizes were not only not available in enough variety and quantity, but even the sizing was something on which he and his wife could not depend.

Mr. Pepin: What does age have to do with size?

Mr. Winch: There is no such person as an elderly woman.

Mr. Rose: Perhaps age does not have anything to do with size but it certainly has to do with style and style sometimes has to do with size. But the minister is engaging in some kind of by-play here. Since he is a good humoured man, I will humour him. If he would like to carry this debate further, I would be delighted.

Another thing about which the old gentleman complained was the fact that he could not depend on decent labelling of canned and frozen products. He said that often when he opened a can he got a shock because the contents were watery and of poor quality. But I hasten to add that I think the record of the Canadian canning industry shows that the standards we have in Canada for canned goods are superior to those in other countries. For some 30 years now the labelling of fancy, choice and standard quality has given the Canadian consumers some guidance in their purchases that they would not have if they were making similar purchases while on a trip in the United States. So, I think we have had pretty good standards established in certain areas of our economy. But that does not mean that with the multiplicity of products on the market today we do not need more expertise in dealing with standards of quality and safety.

Some of the members here, and also probably the minister, want us to put on this bill our unreserved "Good Housekeeping" seal of approval. I know that some others would like us to throw this bill out entirely and leave things as they are. These are the two particular positions.

Mr. Dinsdale: There is also the good, middle of the road position.

Mr. Rose: The suggestion is that the truth lies somewhere between the two extremes. I hate to quote this man but his name is Jimmy Hoffa. He once said: "The truth ain't halfway between nothing, the truth is the truth".

Mr. Murphy: Ask Cardinal Léger.

Mr. Rose: Please, sir, do not take your backbench frustrations out on me. I have similar frustrations.

An hon. Member: Obviously.

Mr. Rose: I think there is a giant lobby at work for the Canadian Standards Association because they feel that the government is going to stamp all over their turf or, in other words, move in on their private preserve. I have no concern about that group of people other than to thank them for what good things they have done in the past. I think it would be ridiculous to suggest that the government has no role in this field. I believe strongly that it has. I think the cynical might well ask: "Why is the CSA so concerned about this?" I think this is a worthwhile question. Are they concerned for standards, as they say they are? If they are, and if there is going to be an improvement in standards, they should be all for it.

Mr. Dinsdale: They are suspicious of the government.

Mr. Rose: They may be, that is a suspicion shared by many people, but it does not make them unique.

Mr. Pepin: You should not say "the CSA"; you should say "some officers of the CSA".

Mr. Rose: Presumably one member wrote the letter, not some members. Anyway, I do not really know what the CSA represents unless they represent the same kind of thing that the standards council of Canada profess to represent but without government control or responsibility. But I would be interested to know whether or not they are acting as a front for certain manufacturers. If they are doing that, then I have no sympathy for their aims or objectives. I think we have a right to ask these questions and the CSA has a responsibility, if they are going to continue to exist, to answer them.

Our government has been noticeably reticent about introducing legislation with teeth in it. We do not really have any adequate truth in advertising or truth in packaging legislation. I am not certain that it has ever been really in force. I believe that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs prefers to work in the dark. They like to conduct their little tests and they like to have their results kept out of the public glare. Their reports seem to be secret. We have a great deal of difficulty getting any information about them, and their decisions are seldom made public.

It is great to have beautiful legislation, if Bill C-163 may be described as beautiful legislation, but what is the point of having this legislation on the statute books? Thanks to the efforts of people like Senator Hart there is a great deal of legislation with respect to this subject on the statute books in the United States, but Ralph Nader, the sleuth for the consumers, has pointed out forcefully that it is not being enforced. The U.S. agency responsible for the enforcement of the legislation is grossly, under-staffed and perhaps also, too influenced by certain manufacturers. Anyway, it has not been able to deal effectively with the industrial lobbies of those who feel their standards are the right standards, even though their standards are not necessarily in the interests of the public. It is not enough to have this sort of thing as window dressing or tokenism. If we are not going to use the legislation, then debate becomes an exercise in futility. It is important that we use this kind of legislation, and that we work to make it more effective. I have suggested some areas in which we could do that.

The standards council of Canada trademark will bear official sanction, and if it does not do it explicitly at least it will imply that the government is responsible for the standards represented by the stamp. This is a much better situation than that in which the CSA stamp prevailed, whereby its seal of approval represented semi-governmental sanction—at least, its seal was often passed off as representing this.

When this new council is established it should concern itself not only with standards of quality and safety, but it should also concern itself with the encouragement of new techniques, new products, and new industrial processes. The housing task force headed by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) indicated that the Canadian building code was full of archaic standards and did not take into account new techniques in that industry, which is probably the highest cost industry in the country. If better standards can be achieved through the use of new materials and new techniques, the old standards should not be perpetuated. This new council should encourage all possible innovation. One can envisage a situation in which a group of manufacturers have invested in certain plant and equipment, and the granting of the council's seal of approval to new techniques and new materials could make their equipment old-fashioned. They would have a vested interest in seeing that the old standards were maintained. I hope the new council will take matters such as this into consideration.

I would like to re-assure Conservative members of the House about the action of governments when moving into areas that once were in the private sector. Charity, once a private matter, has now become social welfare. Medical insurance has become medicare and hospitalization. Savings have become the Canada Pension Plan. When a job is not being done well privately, when people are not being protected by private interests, then the government has to move in, and should move in.

Mr. Dinsdale: More Big Brother.

Mr. Rose: Hardly anyone on my right, including the hon. member from Manitoba in the front row—

Mr. Dinsdale: Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Rose: Excuse me; hardly anyone on my right, including the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, would stand up and suggest that we abandon the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Dinsdale: We are talking about the CSA.

Mr. Rose: This is a similar thing. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I support the concept of this bill. I hope it is not tokenism or window dressing. There are some suspicions to that effect, but I hope they are inaccurate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has given us during this debate a clear and concise technical report. Later on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) told us how the Canadian people would like to see these standards established.

If I may, I should like to go back a little in order to give the background of the subject, which will be useful since some members have said that we were trying to establish standards in a brand new field and that therefore, we did not know where we were going.

In order to do that, at the international and domestic level, we have to go back to the year 1700 B.C. At that time, the king of Babylon had been immortalized as a statue holding in his hand a measure 10½ inches long. Therefore, we are not really breaking ground in this field and all researchers agree that it is the oldest existing specimen of a linear measure.

Therefore, measuring would have existed long before writing. The Roman people, in compliance with the wishes of Alexander the Great, established and used a measuring system which spread all over Europe. However, it is only at the beginning of the industrial revolution, namely at the start of this century, that countries started to establish national standards in co-operation with manufacturers.

Essentially, standards are a means available to the consumer to indicate precisely his needs to the manufacturer, which requires of course the co-operation of several and various interested groups.

In that field, Great Britain established a national agency in 1901; Canada, Germany and the Netherlands in 1917; the United States in 1918 and Sweden, in 1920. Since then, several other countries also established standards councils.

There are now 55 countries with different agencies at the national level, almost all of them belonging to international organizations, namely the I.S.O. and the Electro-Technical Commission (IEC). In most of those countries, those agencies are totally or partially subsidized by the government.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must establish at the international level, standards acceptable not only to member countries, but also other countries that have no national commissions or agencies but nevertheless take part in international trade.

Since the last war, the countries using the standards established by both above-mentioned associations have doubled. Therefore we should not be surprised at the spectacular increase in regulations these last few years.

The IEC was created in St. Louis, in the United States, in 1904 and now has its headquarters in Geneva. Canada has been a member of that organization since 1908.

The ISO was established in 1946 in London. Canada has been a member since then. It has succeeded the National Standards Federation, established in 1926, that had to discontinue its activities on account of the 1939-45 war.

Technical committees, especially from the ISO, combine national standards and establish international standards concerning a great variety of products such as paper, copper, pipes, boilers, agricultural machinery, etc. On account of Canada's importance in the export field, Canadian standards in the technical field are accepted with great respect in foreign countries.

The participation to ISO and to IEC is of great benefit. Therefore, our country must be ready to participate still more actively in the technological development of developing countries.

In Canada, standardization has developed considerably at the industrial and governmental levels because, as I said before, we are on exporting and we understand the need for international standards.

There are two parallel agencies in Canada. In fact, the Canadian Standards Association deals with the private sector. I would like to emphasize this point. Moreover, as I said before, there is a government agency which deals with the public sector and with industry. These two structures operate in the same manner thanks to committees that were created according to needs and where government and industry are represented.

However, it is difficult to eliminate the duplication of research and consequently the task becomes very difficult. Once it is established, the Standards Council of Canada will become responsible since it will represent Canada within the ISO and the IEC for the preparation of international and national standards.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has received, I think, many publications concerning the establishment of standards for the sizing of garments. Indeed, the government was asked to establish in this field a Canadian standard and to give other instructions concerning consumer products. Therefore, this question becomes an urgent priority.

The control of standards in the private sector has been in force since 1917 as was mentioned. In the public sector, it has been in existence since 1934.

Therefore, it was decided to establish the Standards Council of Canada after studying the situation that prevailed in the United States, in Great Britain and in France as we have closed links with these countries.

In the United States, the ASTM, The American Society for Testing Materials, and the SAE, the Society of Automotive Engineers, control about 65 per cent of American standards.

There are, however, in that country several hundred other associations that are active in various sectors. That is the source of many problems at the present time. They would appear to be interested in watching closely the debate on the bill now before the House, Bill C-163.

Mr. Simpson, assistant secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, in February 1970, and I quote:

• (2:30 p.m.)

[English]

The lack of a strong (US) standards institute is the reason European officials have thus far refused to allow this country to join an agreement certifying that electronic components can be traded across national boundaries.

This is one of the reasons why they follow our activities very closely.

Various countries have been mentioned. In this regard, I should like to point out that in England, the B.S.I., that is the British Standards Institution, a national organization, is responsible for standardization. The English government finances that project in a proportion of 50 per cent.

The department responsible for this in England is the Department of Technology. The adoption of the metric system, which has been discussed by two or three members, will depend on the decision of the Standards Council of Canada.

In France, the Association française de normalisation—AFNOR—through committees, controls most standards, with already number in excess of 5,000.

In his remarks, the member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) wondered why we should not do as other major countries and leave to a private organization the responsibility for standards.

I should like to refer again to the few countries I have mentioned, particularly Great Britain.

[English]

Like the proposed standards council of Canada, BSI is an independent body government by an executive board on which government departments are officially represented; is incorporated under royal charter, which authorizes it to establish its own by-laws; receives substantial financial assistance from the British government—about 50 per cent of its income—

Mr. Dinsdale: Just like the CSA.

Mr. Trudel: It represents Great Britain in international voluntary standardization activities; administers the national certification mark, BSI's "Kite" mark, and is responsible for directing the technical aspects of Great Britain's conversion to the metric system.

Another country that I would like to look at, Mr. Speaker, where you will find such similarities is France, to which I have previously referred. Like the proposed standards council of Canada, AFNOR is an independent non-profit organization in which producers, users and government are represented. It co-ordinates the work of standardization bureaus, of which there are 34, represents France in international voluntary standardization activities; administers the national certification mark; and submits an annual report, including financial statements to the French government.

In the United States, and I have referred to the United States before, like the proposed standards council of Canada, ANSI is an independent non-profit federation of technical, professional and trade organizations. It acts as a national co-ordinating institution for voluntary standardization in the United States; serves as a national clearing house for information of United States and foreign standards; does not engage in the preparation of standards; does not operate testing or inspection laboratories; represents the United States in international voluntary standardization activities, for example, ISO and IEC, and approves national or USA standards.

Despite the anxiety felt by the member for Gander-Twillingate and the member for Battle River (Mr. Downey), I believe that the situation in those three big countries is similar to the one described by the minister and that there would not be any conflict of interests.

In England, France, Japan and even Sweden, the controlling structures are therefore much more closely related to government. Those countries do not experience the duality in private and public sectors as it exists in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore wholly support the creation of the Standards Council of Canada, which will be responsible for co-ordinating the policy of Canadian standards and ensuring the participation of Canada to the establishment of international standards.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill relating to a field that is quite narrow but exceedingly complex, I think, for the average Canadian and even for us members, I must say we are being asked to give our consent to changes in the long standing methods by which Canada has instituted standards in various fields that are so necessary to modern living. To name only a few products for which standards are necessary, there are building products such as cement, tiles, gypsum products, washers and threads, oil and gas furnaces, transformers, the automobile, safety ferrous metals, non-ferrous metals, timber products, wood preservation, welding, etc. Indeed, there are a whole host of materials that are used in daily work for which standards are necessary.

Up until now, this work has been carried on by the Canadian Standards Association which is a non-profit, non-governmental association to provide a national standardization body for Canada. This organization receives requests for standardization, investigates their desirability and arranges for the formation of committees with both the makers and users, scientific and technical societies, inspection authorities and government departments, to determine standards that will be acceptable to all concerned. These must meet with the approval of many provincial bodies who state what standards shall be used.

The Canadian Standards Association has provided leadership to benefit the consumer and also the manufacturer. In general, CSA seems to have been very successful in doing its part in promoting good, reasonable standards for Canada. CSA has at the present time over 650 standards committees with over 4,000 representatives of consumer technical organizations, federal and provincial governments and industry. Now, as well as these services, the CSA provides certification or approval services through its laboratories and agents in Canada and abroad. All in all, the CSA seems to have made itself a most useful means of effecting Canadian standardization that has been adequate for our needs.

Now, what is the government proposing in bill C-163 which will provide for the establishment of a standards council of Canada. Although the minister in his introduction of the bill continuously referred to the furtherance of voluntary standardization, the bill seems to go much further than would appear necessary to effect this. Either the government has decided at this time to move in on the Canadian Standards Association and assume their duties or it has deliberately made the powers of the bill so broad that it will at some time in the future be able to assume all the voluntary functions of the Canadian Standards Association without the necessity of bothering to ask Parliament for the necessary authority.

Perhaps this would be a good time to look at countries faced with similar problems. In the United States, which has an economy much more complex than our own, there was introduced into the House of Representatives a bill for a "co-ordinating and clearing house agency" which dealt with the subject of standardization. The bill was not proceeded with and the United States counterpart of CSA, known as the American National Standards Institute, or ANSI, was devised to deal with problems of standardization. It seems particularly significant that CSA was used as a model for the United States body. Now, the minister is introducing legislation which in effect says that the existing CSA is not adequate or cannot be improved and that, therefore, we must have a government controlling body over the whole of the voluntary standards field.

In a report last year which confirmed that ANSI, which was modelled after the CSA, was working reasonably well, the president of ANSI stated that five years previously there had been a need for a more effective organization to use improved procedures for the voluntary co-ordination and promulgation of standards that would be recognized as United States standards, both nationally and in international standardization activities. Five years later ANSI is reasonably satisfied with its progress. Continuing his report, the president of ANSI said:

> Of at least equal importance to the primary findings was the Panel's conclusion that 'the development of standards should be left to the several private organizations already active in the field.' It also stated that: 'the voluntary nature of the development, promulgation, and use of 'USA Standards' is emphasized by the Panel in rejecting any suggestions of compulsion that would be in conflict with the principles of free enterprise.
> By and large these recommendations have been accepted and implemented through recognition that the technical competence required for the development of standards resides in the 160 technical societies, trade associations, labor and consumer organizations confederated in the American National Standards Institute.

The president of ANSI further stated:

> These facts also illustrate rather dramatically the problem that government agencies would face in recruiting the numbers, variety, and levels of specialized competence required to staff necessary standardization activities of the United States, if prime responsibility for this work should ever become a function of government. The extent and nature of cooperation between the government and private sector is the correct topic of debate. The question is not where the source of authority should reside—in government or the private sector—but rather how best can competence be organized and made most effective.

The minister raised a number of points illustrating the need for this legislation. He mentioned the need for representation for all concerned, meaning that some sectors of the community may not be adequately represented. I would be the first to admit that, especially in such an immense, widely varied and technical field, it might be difficult to find people conversant with all aspects of a problem. But I doubt if the government will be able to do better than the CSA has done. This organization, through its procedure for establishing committees of producers, consumers, government authorities and scientific and technical people, has ensured that a reasonably broad representation of interest is assembled in its standards-writing and review comments. The CSA is also planning to establish a consumer advisory council to the CSA's board of directors. There does not seem to be all that need for the setting up of a separate group to provide these services; indeed, it would seem that if the government did this it would end up with the same people.

Mr. Pepin: That is a contradiction, surely. Why did they have to wait for the government to intervene? Why were such bodies, such programs, not established before?

Mr. Ritchie: The minister also stated that the confidence of the public was necessary and seemed to imply this was lacking at the present time. So far as I can make out, there is no evidence that such public distrust exists. There does not seem to be any march on Ottawa with regard to these matters. The CSA employs over 300 technical and administrative personnel at its various laboratories across Canada and financial support comes mainly from the many services provided in the fields of product certification. So far, the federal government participation has been very limited in this field and I would think that the government should support these programs rather than taking them over completely. The CSA also has access to technical experts and facilities in Canada and, through its large membership of scientists and practising and consulting engineers, to the facilities of large companies throughout the world and government departments with technical staffs.

The minister mentioned the matter of impartiality. I am sure that Mr. Speaker is aware of the problem of impartiality, which is a matter that he has to face almost every minute of the day. It is largely a matter of judgment, or whose ox is being gored. All boards and committees are open to the charge of partiality, and a government appointed board is no exception. Indeed, food and drug administration officials, of whose problems I have some knowledge, are usually accused of not doing anything. I am inclined at times to agree that it is better for them to do nothing than run the risk of getting into trouble. So, they are accused of partiality, especially on the licensing of new drugs.

The minister said that the standards council will cover a much wider area in the country and in the international field than is covered at present. I doubt whether the country-wide coverage is not at present adequate; I will certainly want him to substantiate this matter in committee when the time comes.

Mr. Pepin: Of course.

Mr. Ritchie: In the international field, Canadian industry participates in ISA work and CSA is at present very active in ISD projects. I will, therefore, follow with interest what the minister will propose in committee.

The Canada standards council we are told will make us aware of international trade strategy. Well, government does not always seem to have all the answers in this field. The grading of western grain is under the rigid control of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and for the first time in 20 years this matter is to be revised extensively. For many years wheat should have been considered and sold on a protein basis. It is generally considered we are five years or so behind our competitors in the grading of our wheat. Similar long standing deficiencies occur in connection with other grains. There have been repeated calls by all segments of agriculture and business, ranging from farm organizations to grain companies, for changes in grading regulations. Where were the alert watchdogs of the government who should have signalled long ago that changes were needed in our grain standards. They must have been asleep.

These are only a few of the matters that the minister and his officials will be required to answer in committee. The minister has protested at length that his interest is wholly in voluntary control and the furtherance of standardization. Indeed, the minister doth in many ways protest too much, making him suspect. It was stated in a briefing by the Director of the Office of Science and Technology, that, "It is not proposed that the Council engage directly in standards formulation, testing or certification activities which will continue to be carried out by existing standards organizations". Yet the powers of the council, under the provisions of subclauses 4(2)(c), (d), (e) and (g) will be formidable. Clause 4(2) provides in part as follows:

> (c) establish and circulate criteria and procedures relating to the voluntary preparation, approval, acceptance and designation of standards in Canada in those fields;
> (d) accredit, in accordance with criteria and procedures established by the Council, organizations engaged in standards formulation, testing and certification in those fields, and maintain a register of such organizations and of their standards marks;
> (e) review new standards and revisions of existing standards in those fields formulated by organizations accredited by the Council and approve those standards as national standards where appropriate, and maintain an index of approved standards;—
> (g) establish and register under the Trade Marks Act its own standards marks in those fields and, subject to that Act, authorize and regulate their use;—

• (2:50 p.m.)

These four subparagraphs suggest a series of steps that lead of necessity to a new standards review and writing agency. Having established criteria, organizations, in the first instance, are accredited and registered. However, the standards of these accredited organizations are reviewed and approved as national standards. These steps require a technical staff, a technical staff which will inevitably become the secretariat for standards-writing committees. This is the way standards are written. For the government to include such powers shows the intention to use them, otherwise why include them? It must imply an entry into a field previously handled by an independent body.

In closing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the powers the bill grants the council that will be formed go far beyond what the minister has suggested would be its functions.

I cannot get over the impression that this government likes change merely for the sake of change. In this bill it seems to pay lip service to the voluntary standardization, but leaves the way open for complete government control. The best assurance of a good product is that the maker wishes to sell and market an adequate and safe product. Even in the field of drug safety, with elaborate rules and laws and penalties, the Food and Drug Directorate admit they would have an impossible task if the vast majority of drug manufacturers did not strive assiduously and conscientiously to turn out a good product.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I always listen with interest to the arguments advanced by the opposition. I am sympathetic to many of them. Yesterday I listened with particular interest to my good friend, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). He comes from a good province. Yesterday, he demonstrated beyond all possible doubt that there is no herring shortage in that province—at least red herring! I have never seen in this House more tattered regiments of arguments paraded than were presented yesterday afternoon. What it amounts to is that we are going to be dragged, kicking and struggling, into any kind of reform in this field which has been crying for reform for many years.

The hon. member spoke of the tried and true. He said there is something about experience and longevity which should be respected, indeed enshrined. Sin is old and sickness is old. No one would advance the criterion of age alone in order to advance arguments in favour of these evils. What we must do, without being partisan about it, is place this proposal under the microscope of this House and attempt to make some dispassionate judgments. Some of the arguments advanced by the hon. members for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), Battle River (Mr. Downey) and Gander-Twillingate are representative of a tunnel vision.

At the outset, I want to deal this afternoon with some of the international aspects of the measure before us. I also want to touch on some of the concern expressed by members of the opposition. Many of us appreciate the assurances given by the minister when he ably presented this measure yesterday afternoon. Members are aware that at least some members of the Canadian Standards Association, and I use the designation "some members" advisedly, are fearful of the measure we have before us. This is a long respected and established body. I would be unfair if I did not acknowledge the tremendous value which the CSA has been to the lumber industry in the province of British Columbia. This association has done a grand job. It has enabled the lumber products of my province to become competitive in the markets of North America and the markets of the world. What we really want to see in Canada is the same kind of excellence demonstrated by the CSA in, for example, the area of lumber, extended throughout British Columbia, the other provinces in Canada and, indeed, the entire Dominion in as many industrial and economic fields as possible.

It has been suggested if the bill is enacted that a federal government corporation will be given the power to supersede the Canadian Standards Association as the national agency for voluntary standardization in Canada. I do not believe that. Hopefully, this bill will reach the committee stage. I do not think hon. members will support this spurious proposal for a six months hoist advanced by the fearful member from Newfoundland. When the bill is before the committee, further assurances can be obtained from the minister and examined in greater detail.

I want to see the CSA carry on its useful and beneficial activities in this and other areas. The assurances given by the minister indicate that some of the fears which have been expressed are unfounded. The Council is designed to foster, promote and co-ordinate voluntary standardization activities in Canada. It is not intended that the Council should engage in standards formulation, and this has to be emphasized because the point has not even registered with the opposition, testing or certification activities, which would continue to be carried out by standards organizations such as the CSA. I, for one, want to see the CSA carry on its good activities inspired and assisted by government. Nor will the council duplicate other activities of such organizations. This is brought out very clearly in several sections of the bill. For example, Clause 4(1) reads:

> The objects of the Council are to foster and promote in Canada the voluntary standardization—

Section 4(2) states that the Council, in carrying out its objects, may:

> (a) promote co-operation among organizations concerned with voluntary standardization in Canada in those fields to co-ordinate standardization activities and develop common standards and codes;
> (b) promote co-operation between organizations concerned with voluntary standardization in Canada in those fields and departments and agencies of government;

Yet it is suggested there is something sinister about this provision. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate said, "I smell a rat". I suggest he was smelling a red herring in his own back yard.

In addition, reference is made to organizations engaged in standards formulation, testing and certification and to the Council's relationships with such organizations in several other paragraphs of section 4(2), namely paragraphs (d), (e), (f), (i) and (j). I am not going to go into all the details. Members have this bill in front of them. From this it is quite clear that the council is not intended to supersede and replace existing standards organizations, but rather to assist such organizations to play a larger and more effective role in formulating and promoting the use of standards in Canada.

The CSA can play an integral and expanding role in standards formulation in this country. I speak with enthusiasm about the contributions this organization has made. Some people say this council will be controlled by the civil service. It is intended that the council should provide a national focus for voluntary standardization embracing all Canadian interests. Members of the council will be drawn from all regions of the country and all sectors of the economy. It would not be appropriate to limit the groups from which membership would be drawn as, for example, has been done in the case of the Science Council of Canada Act, which sets up a specialized organization.

Section 12(1) of the bill provides for an executive committee consisting of the president, the vice-president and seven other members, of whom six shall be selected by the council and one shall be designated by the Governor-in-Council. The standards council will be responsible for selecting six of the nine members of the executive committee. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the CSA will be invited to join and be given a role in this executive. I am sure the majority of hon. members in this House would support such an idea. This is not an attempt to end the existence of the CSA.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate put forward the other day the radical reform proposal of the Conservative Party. The most imaginative proposal he had to make was that we should hoist this bill for six months which would, of course, constitute its death sentence. Beyond that, they want to maintain the status quo. It was suggested there should be more time for discussion. Mr. Speaker, there have been four years of discussion with no limit imposed on the nature of the representation made by the organizations involved, including the CSA. No item was declared non-negotiable. The question might well be asked: What could be done in six months which was not accomplished in four years? The legislation is the product of consultation and detailed discussion. If it is imperfect, let it go to the committee as soon as possible, where improvements may be made. The proposal of the official opposition as enunciated by three of its representatives is an arid, sterile, and unproductive answer to a long-term need.

Mr. Lundrigan: Why are you so worried about our position?

Mr. Perrault: I hope the hon. member will extend to me the same courtesy as I extended to him the other day, and hear me out. Some officers of the CSA say the CSA is doing the job now. This assertion was advanced as a valid argument by the hon. member who has just walked out of the chamber. The bill, he told us, was an example of needless duplication. Yet despite the fact that it was granted letters patent in 1914, the CSA has not taken any real interest in at least 35 major areas during the 50 years of its operation. I will read some of them from the list I have here: petroleum products, aircraft materials and components, automotive vehicles and products, chemicals, hospital equipment, shipbuilding, mining equipment, building codes and practices, electronics, nuclear energy and agricultural food products. For one reason or another, perhaps for lack of resources, the CSA has not moved into these areas.

The standards council will be established to encourage the CSA to do so, and to take action in these and other areas. It will make use of existing organizations which are concerned with standardization. There is no intention that the council would, or should duplicate the functions of others.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am back. I had to answer an urgent telephone call outside the chamber.

Mr. Perrault: I hope it was from an irate constituent protesting the speech you made yesterday in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Perrault: Then we are told that the CSA is the definitive organization operating in Canada. But is it, in fact, the only organization concerned with this work? The Canadian Government Specifications Board is also setting standards in this country. The CSA has produced roughly 900 standards since its inception. The CGSB has produced some 1,500. So it is not totally correct to say that the CSA speaks on behalf of all standards-writing organizations in this country. The standards council will exercise an overseeing role, one of promotion and co-ordination. The CSA would remain as an active standards-writing organization and would be called upon frequently to work in co-operation with it. This has been greeted with disbelief by members of the opposition but the position is, nevertheless, as the minister has stated.

The assertion has been made that under the terms of the bill before us the new organization would replace the CSA as the Canadian representative to international standards-setting bodies such as the International Standards Organization. This is also asserted by officers of the CSA. But as lately as 1968 the CSA recognized that the establishment of a standards council would necessitate its withdrawal from the field of international representation, and the association acquiesced in the move. These facts were not brought out in the speeches made by opposition members. Then some officers of the CSA claim that the CSA represents a broad range of interests already and that the SCC is not needed. In fact, Canada has never had a standards-writing body with a fully representative policy-making board. A number of areas are not covered by the CSA, the CGSB or industry standards-writing associations.

One of the most astounding arguments advanced, particularly by hon. members on the opposition side who come from Newfoundland, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, concerns the representation on the board of the CSA. It appears they want the status quo to continue.

An hon. Member: We do not.

Mr. Perrault: Under this bill the SCC would include one member from each of the provinces, six federal public servants and up to 41 representatives of trade associations and consumer groups. What about the composition of the CSA? One significant fact emerges. The three speakers from the opposition side who took part come from provinces which are not represented at all on the present board of directors of the CSA. There is not one board member from Manitoba, Newfoundland or Saskatchewan. However, there are 12 from Ontario establishing standards which are supposedly to be subscribed to by industries in the three provinces I have mentioned; there are five from Quebec and one from Alberta. How does Alberta like that? Twelve members from Ontario, and one from Alberta. There is one from British Columbia and one from New Brunswick.

There are no major industrial sectors represented on the present board. There are two federal civil servants on the board. I suppose this will alarm the hon. member from Newfoundland; it will lead him to think that the board is under federal control in some way.

[Mr. Perrault.]

Mr. Lundrigan: Nothing alarms me, coming from Newfoundland.

Mr. Perrault: Here are Members of Parliament, supposedly speaking with the interest of their provinces at heart, fighting to maintain a situation which does not give them any kind of representation at all upon a board whose decisions affect them. They may say otherwise, but I believe western Canada and the Maritimes deserve better representation on the standards-making body than they are getting on the present CSA board.

While the CSA has done excellent work in some areas, the board of directors has lacked balanced representation. Surely, it should be representative of all groups having a major interest in standards, including consumer, producer, trade and government groups; it should be impartial, with no group predominating; it should possess the confidence of the public at large; it should have a wide scope of activity and be concerned with all sectors in all parts of the country, and it should be aware of the country's international strategy.

What is this international strategy? We are in the midst of a tough trade war. We know that Canada lives by trade. In a world which is decreasing, as it were, in size, not only in the sphere of communication but also in the sphere of economics, there must be the strongest possible Canadian government representation within the international standards organizations. Two organizations are responsible for most international standards, apart from those which regulate food and drugs and which are usually covered by domestic legislation. They are the Organization for Standardization and the International Electrotechnical Commission.

The IEC is the older of the two bodies, having been established in St. Louis, U.S.A., in 1904. Its headquarters are now located in Geneva. It has carried out most useful work throughout the years since then, but only in the field of electrical standards. Canada has been a participating member country for many years. The ISO was established in 1946, but it then represented a reconstruction of a body first established in 1926 and known as the International Federation of National Standardizing Associations which disappeared during the strife of the Second World War. Canada was represented at the founding meeting in London, England of ISO. The field of activity of ISO covers all technical standards, with the exception of those handled by IEC.

These examples illustrate how ISO work affects major Canadian export industries. First, in the fall of 1955 it was discovered, almost by accident, that a draft ISO recommendation for unalloyed aluminum ingots was to be considered at a meeting scheduled to be held in Paris little more than one week later. This particular draft contained a detailed provision for major and trace elements that, by failing to recognize some important characteristics, would have effectively obscured the high quality available in Canadian aluminum and reduced its competitive position; and as we all know, aluminum is one of Canada's most important exports.

Arrangements were quickly made for two senior technical representatives to attend the meeting in France as fully accredited Canadian representatives. The Canadian viewpoint was presented, the draft was amended and the resulting recommendation is now in use throughout the world with no detriment to Canadian aluminum.

Second, at a meeting in 1961 the ISO committee on hewn, sawn and planed timber developed draft recommendations using metric units only, despite the fact that 58 per cent of the world's timber is sawn to inch dimensions. Fortunately, Canada joined the ISO committee in 1962 and was represented at the 1963 meeting held in Moscow. Thanks to the excellent spirit of informed compromise prevailing at the meeting, and the co-operation of the chairman, both systems of measurement are now included in the ISO recommendations. This is of great importance to the lumber-producing areas of Canada. I am citing these examples to indicate the importance of international standards to Canada as a trading nation.

One of the principal challenges lies in the field to international trade. The progressive reduction of tariffs in recent years, culminating in the Kennedy round which liberalized trade on some $40 billion worth of products, underscores the need for increased attention to international standards. While there are, of course, many barriers to the free flow of goods, few are more formidable than imcompatible national standards.

When international standards exclude Canadian-made products, the loss of sales by Canadian manufacturers is a problem for the entire economy. For example, the standards for television sets in Europe are different from those in North America; they call for a different principle of scanning lines on screens. Television sets described by these standards are not inherently better or worse than Canadian-made sets—they are just different. But the barrier to the sale of our television sets is as real as if the sets themselves had been excluded.

The way that we will promote more manufacturing industry in Canada is to achieve economy of scale by producing more goods that can be sold in greater quantities. Lack of international standards is an impairment of our ability to sell abroad and jeopardizes opportunities for Canadians to secure employment.

Standards and the benefits derived from them are so often taken for granted that their importance is frequently not appreciated until problems stemming from lack of standardization are encountered. The traveller abroad finds that an electrical appliance designed to operate on 100 volts at 60 cycles does not operate on 220 volts at 50 cycles. Members of parliamentary delegations know what a problem this presents. The purchaser of an imported article discovers that the metric sizes do not mesh with feet and inches.

Canada, whose position in the export market will depend increasingly upon its ability to market manufactured goods, cannot afford to ignore international collaboration in the setting of standards that can limit or enhance its trade prospects. In such participation there are fundamental guidelines, and the first basic is that international standards should not be formulated which for any reason through oversight or lack of initiative fail to take account of Canadian practices and thus limit sales potential where Canada has, or may have, a significant production or export capacity.

Second, the aim should be, where we are leading suppliers or where North American technology is pre-eminent, to have Canadian standards become the basis of the international standards, or to have them accepted as equal or superior to such standards. Third, where conflicts exist between North American and other standards, Canada should work for the establishment of a compromise international standard which can be incorporated into Canadian practices with a minimum of adjustment.

Finally, Canada should engage in international standards co-operation in certain areas of activity which may not be identifiable with the immediate Canadian interest. In particular, Canada should be prepared to assist in standards work of interest to developing countries. This is an area where we could really do great work, because we are in an unique position to work with these developing countries. They like us and we co-operate with them in so many other fields.

These countries, as they progressively establish national standards, are likely to accept those which have international acceptance. In the years ahead when development barriers have been overcome and new nations are able to finance much higher levels of imports, a selling country will be at a disadvantage if it has not participated in the standards established for the needs of those nations.

What we have here is a concern expressed by the government of Canada which is asking us to gird our loins against the international competitive battles that are to come, both internationally as well as on the domestic scene. To limit our standards setting to one organization with insufficient resources, commendable though that organization might be and despite the great work it has done in the past, I think would be limiting our vision with respect to the future of trade in the world.

Time does not permit me to discuss the importance of establishing standards in our own domestic industry; one of the speakers will, I am sure, be pleased to deal with this question. By way of concluding, Mr. Speaker, we have heard the argument advanced that in view of CSA's major reorganization and the expansion of its operation it is now capable of performing many functions assigned to the council. It is said, "We have been around for 50 years, but we suddenly had a great soul-searching and believe we can now do better". This is commendable, because within the framework of this organization this reappraisal of function can still continue and standards-setting can proceed.

Yet it is a fair question to ask of those entering this claim: Why has this reorganization taken so long? Does it require the prospect of government action to inspire reorganization? What guarantee or assurance exists that the CSA or any other standards-setting organization in Canada, in two or three years time when a new set of executive members have come on the scene, will not alter its policy and gravitate once again to more limited goals? Surely it is impossible for the government to introduce a bill each time standards associations in Canada require a push, and then withdraw the proposal when the associations take some action. Surely what Canada requires is a standards association that has a permanent base with firm, immediate and long-range objectives; a council which, in effect, will cast a wide umbrella over standards-writing in Canada. We need a representative council, an impartial council, a prestigious council.

The whole question of voluntary standards is of great importance to Canada. The extent to which we achieve a national posture in the field of standards will play a significant role in determining the level of economic activity in this country. Therefore, it is essential to have a national and impartial organization, not to write standards but to foster, promote and co-ordinate standardization activities and to bring together all interests with a view to providing an effective partnership between industry, consumer and government. This is the basic reason for establishing a standards council of Canada.

It is the view of many of us that the Canadian Standards Association has a major contribution to make to the work of the standards council—yes, and to other standards-writing organizations as well. This will enable the CSA and other organizations like it to play a larger and more effective role in formulating and promoting standards in Canada.

I urge the support of the members of the House for this bill. Let us get it to committee, produce as sound legislation as possible, and get on with the job.

Mr. Lundrigan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) on a point of order.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion which might be acceptable to the House? In view of the fact that each member may speak for only 20 minutes, and that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) obviously did not finish the notes that were prepared for him by the departmental official and quite obviously major points have not yet been made because his time was not extended, I wonder whether the House would consent to giving the hon. member maybe 45 or 50 minutes more, in the hope that during that time he could get his point across.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the subject that we are discussing this afternoon is one that has been of growing concern to Canadians over the past number of years. This concern has been demonstrated by the number of members who have so far taken part in the discussion, and particularly by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) who spoke so apologetically just a few minutes ago.

Perhaps before I launch into my own observations I might answer the question the hon. member has propounded. He wanted to know why it is that the Canadian Standards Association of Canada has become more active in recent years in reorganizing its own activities in accepting greater responsibility in this matter. I think this is the result of general and growing public concern in the area of standardization. The very fact that this Parliament has set up a Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs reflects the same area of interest—and that initiative was supported on all sides of the House. I am sure the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who is piloting this bill through the House will agree with that observation.

When the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was established, it was anticipated that any responsibility for establishing Canadian standard would come under the umbrella—I use that word advisedly—of that department. In fact, the organizational chart distributed in 1968 indicated that the standards branch would be the responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). That minister demonstrated his interest in the subject by taking part in the debate earlier today. He observed that a good many of the complaints coming from consumers had to do with the question of standardization of Canadian products and, of course, the broader problem of standardization of products coming in from international markets. I suggest that this is not quite the situation which I as a Member of Parliament have experienced, and I am sure others on all sides of the House will support this contention.

The main complaint that I have received from concerned consumers has to do, not so much with the question of standardization as with the matter of the increasing cost of products in Canada; in other words, the problem of the accelerating cost of living that the government has been wrestling with, with a notable lack of success, for the past two years or so. I suggest to my hon. friend the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is not in the House, that this is an area of responsibility in which he has failed disastrously.

The minister talks about the manufacturers and the industrialists of Canada engaging in a process of public relations and puffery in order to confuse the people of Canada in respect of standardization of quality. I should like to suggest that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has indulged in the same sort of puffery and public relations in respect of price controls. Indeed, when the department was established, the Canadian Business magazine featured a photo of the minister on the front page of its August, 1969 edition and the title of the article, as a result of this photographic presentation, was "Basford's Bureaucracy for Consumers". Let me suggest to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that the great concern of Canadians is not primarily the matter of standards and quality; it is in respect of the rising cost of living which has experienced no beneficial effect from the operations of the new department since it came into operation some two years ago.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour spoke in very kindly terms about the operations of the Canadian Standards Association in respect of the lumber industry in the province of British Columbia. He was on both sides of the question, however, because at one point he was condemning the operations of the CSA and at another moment he was complimenting that organization with faint praise. On the subject of red herrings, he was trying to indicate that the position of the official opposition was to oppose unconditionally the legislation that is before the House this afternoon.

Let me point out that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) merely moved a motion to the effect that this bill not be proceeded with at the moment but that further consideration be given to its subject matter. I noticed that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was rather in sympathy with that proposition in his opening remarks.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, no.

Mr. Dinsdale: As I recall his words—I have re-read them for confirmation because I would not want to misquote the hon. gentleman's words or his position—he indicated that the information he was giving to the House was newly acquired and he would like to transmit that newly acquired information to other members of the House.

Mr. Pepin: Perhaps I could explain why I made that remark, Mr. Speaker. I have always believed that showing humility yourself helps other people to do likewise.

Mr. Lundrigan: Why don't you talk to the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault)?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, one of the beatitudes is "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." I fail to see that there has been much meekness manifested by this government in the two years it has been in office. I think one of the reasons the CSA has expressed its anxiety in letters to each member of the House—no doubt it has also been in touch with the minister—is that the bill before us goes much further than was indicated in conversations with the government over the past four years. They are concerned about the growing tendency of the government to resort to excessive powers in order to achieve whatever results it is attempting to achieve in the body politic. It is the old, emergency powers complex that used to beset the Liberal Party when it had been in office ad infinitum and ad nauseam until the year 1957, which attitude finally resulted in the downfall of that administration.

In the question that the minister raised a moment ago he indicated the reason he had used the phrase "newly acquired information" was that he wanted to indicate an attitude of humility, hoping that the same mood and attitude would be transmitted to other members of the House. But there is another aspect of this question that goes far beyond the interpretation that the minister has placed on his reference in this regard. He made that statement before the debate had even begun. Actually, when he was professing to be adopting a posture of humility he was assuming a posture of arrogance because he said his information was newly acquired and he, from his superior position of knowledge on the matter, was going to enlighten we who were less well informed, the ignoramuses of the House of Commons.

It also indicated that he was not going to listen to any of the recommendations that might be forthcoming during the debate and which might add to the store of knowledge that he has newly acquired in connection with his responsibility for piloting this legislation through the House. I want to make it abundantly clear that members of the official opposition are not against the idea of a co-ordinating council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: In fact, we strongly support the idea of a co-ordinating council. Whether or not it should be under the auspices of the government or of a voluntary association such as the CSA is a matter to be determined. I understand from the minister's presentation and the comments of other members in this debate that the CSA has been carrying out negotiations and having conversations with the government over the past few years, as a result of which it was under the impression that the function of the council which will be set up under the terms of Bill C-163 would be limited to a co-ordinating function.

The reason they are expressing concern now is that under the terms of the bill as was pointed out so eloquently by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) as well as other spokesmen for the official opposition, the powers of the council go far beyond the co-ordinating function which was originally conceived as being its role and the government-supported and established agency will move gradually into the whole area of standardization.

In view of the enthusiastic support of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour for at least the function of the CSA in establishing standards for the lumber industry, I expected he would be profoundly concerned and anxious about the government's unwarranted and excessive intrusion into this area of responsibility, one that was not originally indicated in the discussions that were held with the CSA.

The minister made another interesting observation which I am sure is in line with his reference to newly acquired knowledge and which suggested that he was open to advice and to serious second, sober thoughts: he suggested in the concluding part of his speech, the third from the last paragraph, something which I think is very pertinent to our discussions. It is to be found on page 4720 of Hansard and reads as follows:

> The government could have turned over its funds to an existing institution and said, "You do the job". However, it was believed that no agency existed which was national enough in scope and representative of enough interested parties, not only at the standards writing level but also, and, mainly, at the policy-making level. No such organization exists at the present time. This is why we are, hopefully—

If I may make an aside, hope springs eternal in the human breast.

—creating one now.

I think this is a very excellent observation on the part of the minister. It is one that might well be considered if he accepts the amendment that has been moved by the official opposition, because it comes at the end of his speech where it seems apparent that even during the course of his presentation to the House he was having serious second thoughts about the government's excessive initiative in this regard.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain what I meant. The word "hopefully" is in relation to the amendment that was moved by the opposition that there should be a six months' hoist. I was hopeful that the opposition would reconsider the amendment and accept to discuss the bill in committee, leading to the creating of the council. But my hopes do not seem about to be realized, if I understand the hon. member well.

Mr. Dinsdale: I take it from the minister's observation that he has some more newly acquired information and is considering the notion that perhaps a more effective and efficient system of co-ordination and dealing with the growing complexities of standardization on a national basis would be for existing bodies such as the CSA to handle it. The CSA, as I understand it, has done a creditable job.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour said that those of us from Manitoba and from some of the western regions of Canada are not speaking in the best interests of the areas we represent. Surely he is aware that we have in the city of Winnipeg a testing laboratory sponsored by the CSA. I think this is a very important function in the whole process of standardization.

Beyond that, the CSA has been operating on a budget of $4.5 million, which is a considerable sum of money. We have heard the expression, "what's a million?" In light of the astronomical public expenditures being made, the sum I mentioned might not be as significant as it used to be; but $4.5 million is still a substantial sum of money. Only 1 per cent of the amount that has been expended by a voluntary association in improving the standard of Canadian products has been provided by the government of Canada. Here is perhaps another answer to the question that was asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, namely, why has not the CSA been more active in this field?

I would say it has been as active as the funds available to it have allowed. Had the government been more generous, it could have been more active, particularly in light of the aroused concern of the people of Canada. I would hope the minister was quite serious and sincere when he posed, as a possible alternative, the public sector—the government—reinforcing existing institutions—

Mr. Pepin: He never did that.

Mr. Dinsdale: —rather than competing directly to the extent indicated by this legislation, with the inevitable result that the government will eventually supersede entirely the activities of the CSA in this field. This is what the CSA fears.

Mr. Pepin: It is not the CSA that fears that. Did you try to find out who it was in the CSA?

Mr. Dinsdale: The bill provides for a staff. Obviously, the standards council of Canada would be raiding the employees of the CSA, because there is no private body in this country which can stand up against the economic and financial powers of the government when it moves into an area of responsibility with such excessive, almost emergency powers such as those proposed in the bill before us. This is the protest we are making. We are not against a co-ordinating council. What we are opposing in this connection, as we oppose in connection with so many activities and initiatives of the government of Canada, is that it is assuming powers that are more than necessary, even in this Parliament, in order to exert its will upon the people of Canada. This is the fundamental point we are making. This is the reason for the growing concern about and suspicion of the government of Canada. I repeat again that I trust the minister is sincere when he is considering alternatives to this bill.

There is not much more I need to say on the subject at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I merely wanted to clarify some of the misinterpretations that had been placed on the position of the official opposition. We recognize the necessity for standardization of products, both in the domestic market and in the international market, just as we recognize—if

. may quote the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour—the outstanding job that the CSA has done in this regard with limited public support, on a voluntary basis. We further recognize, Mr. Speaker, that other countries that were listed by the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), France, Sweden, Britain and the United States, prefer the voluntary approach to their standardization programs.

Mr. Pepin: He said almost exactly the opposite.

Mr. Dinsdale: How is the government going to proceed if it cannot get the voluntary co-operation of the manufacturers concerned? Take another example, Mr. Speaker. Through the proposals in the white paper, the government is moving into the private sector. I say to members of the government, you will put these people out of business and you will not leave any room for voluntary action and initiative by the people of Canada. This is why we ask the minister, in the amendment that we have moved, that he give further consideration to this matter so that he might add to his stock of newly acquired knowledge of the subject.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a good many fears and misgivings have been expressed about this bill from the opposition side of the House. I believe that our fears in this party are not the same kind as those expressed by the two or three members who preceded me. I always enjoy hearing the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) speak, but when he does I am reminded of the late Jan Masaryk who said that excitement is no program; and I keep saying to myself, eloquence also is no program. But he is a very nice person and soon settles down in his speeches to being a very "non-partisan" Liberal, with a big "L", so that we do enjoy hearing him. My fears are not those of the members of the Progressive Conservative Party. We in the NDP are not alarmed about the public authority moving into a given situation. As a matter of fact, in many situations today the public authority should be moving in because private business or private enterprise is not doing the job.

In the present case we are entitled to ask why the government is moving in, and what it will do when it does move in. If the existing Standards Association had been doing something different from what the government proposes to do, we might not be so concerned; but for the life of me I cannot see that the government is proposing anything very different from what the CSA is already doing. The CSA has been operating on a purely voluntary basis, and the government makes it very clear that this bill intends to do nothing except on a purely voluntary basis and that mandatory standards are out.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who is in the chamber now, said as recorded at page 4715 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, there are two types of standards— There are also mandatory standards—
> I underline that Bill C-163 is concerned exclusively with voluntary standards.

Mr. Pepin: What is wrong with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce being interested in voluntary standards and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) being interested in mandatory standards?

Mrs. MacInnis: That is an excellent question, but the trouble is that it is too convenient for the government to be schizophrenic like that. To the consumer half of the public they give the impression that they are going to put in standards that will protect the public, and to the corporate half they say, "This is just going to be purely voluntary."

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. MacInnis: No, please don't get up again; I have only ten minutes. A schizophrenic image is being presented. I knew of the danger of this image when the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was established. I knew that sometimes the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs himself would be schizophrenic. It is bad enough when we find the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce talking about a voluntary basis, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs talking about a mandatory basis. That is serious enough because it confuses people.

But when the same minister begins talking both ways, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does at times, he has me worried, because people today are not able to stand the strain of seeing a cabinet minister himself show serious schizophrenic symptoms. They do not expect that type of thing, and it throws many of them for a loop. That is my objection and the objection of my party to this legislation. We are afraid that the government is moving in, not to provide standards for the Canadian people but so it will be perfectly sure that equal and impartial standards are not provided for the Canadian people. The government intends to leave the question of standards up to so-called free enterprise, which is neither free nor enterprising. It proposes to leave this question mainly up to monopoly enterprise: if other people want to come along, O.K; and if they don't, that is O.K. too.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I know the minister is exasperated. I would be, if I were sitting where he is. One is found out sooner or later, and here we are finding a little sin, or to change the image, a little skeleton in the cupboard.

• (3:50 p.m.)

When the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) was speaking today, the illustration that he used for the good of standards and how they are working beautifully in his department was not a voluntary one at all. He took the Hazardous Products Act, but under that act things are not left to voluntary restraint; it sets out clearly and plainly substances that are dangerous to people and prohibits them. People move against this mandatory legislation at their peril because penalties for endangering the public are set out in the act.

We find the schizophrenic minister with another piece of legislation, which is part way through now, making that legislation mandatory because there is enough public pressure to make it mandatory but refusing to put another piece of legislation in because he wants it to be voluntary and that does not fit.

I suggest we are at a stage of development as an industrial nation where we cannot leave important standards on a voluntary basis. Consumers are demanding to know what they are getting in the way of sizes in children's clothing, the quality of fibres and standards for the different things they use around the home. We had car safety up for discussion yesterday. Consumers are getting to the point where they do not like things left to the good will, or lack of it, of manufacturers individually or collectively. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that voluntary standards mean unprotected consumers. Until we make the umbrella of standards cover everyone, we will have no adequate protection for the consumer.

As I say, I am still going to try to effect a divorce for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and get him in two pieces so that his right hand will not need to try and conceal what his left is doing, or vice versa. I want to see him protecting the consumers. The corporations do not need protection; they are able to look after themselves only too well. I want to know a lot more about why this legislation is being introduced. If the organization already existing has been doing a good job—and the minister waxed very lyrical about what a good job it had been doing—it has been on a voluntary basis. Now they come along with a government agency on a voluntary basis to supplant it.

The only reason I can think of for this measure is to make sure that standards will be left on a voluntary basis. This theme is running through the rest of the government's legislation. I refer to the water act. Over and over again I am reminded that there will not be, if this government follows its present intention, any national standards for clean water. Why not? Because manufacturers in one area want to keep the water so that they can, for a fee, continue dumping effluent into it.

The answer for the government is to get voluntary standards because mandatory ones would make it impossible for sectional interests to continue carrying on the way they are. That kind of philosophy leads the government into a rather unenviable position. It puts them in the position of "big brotherism", always watching very carefully the scene: they are always considering, measuring, white papering and task forcing. But what they are really doing is making very sure that the status quo will be maintained, and that the strong will be able to keep their position of entrenched strength with just enough restraint of a voluntary nature urged upon them so that the consumers can continue to breathe, even if the air is polluted and the water filthy to the point where they do not even like to wash their dishes in it.

Speaking from the standpoint of the consumer, I say we should get rid of this nonsense of believing that any favoured section of the community needs special protection today. The consumers are all of us, and until we make standards safe and uniform to cover us all, they will not be standards at all.

My colleagues have already dealt adequately and thoroughly with this matter, but after listening to the minister this morning—not the minister who is here but the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is probably out dividing himself between consumers and corporations and not letting his right hand know what his left hand is doing—when he spoke about the Utopia that would be created under this bill, I was reminded of my childhood and a meeting of Labour Party supporters that took place in Winnipeg. One old fellow came to this meeting and painted pictures of Utopia and how everybody would be living in gingerbread houses, with water flowing from the mountains and 1,600 more kinds of birds than we have now twittering on all kinds of fruit trees, and the skies filled with signs and he would be rising up in his glory to contemplate the whole scene. I thought of that Utopia this morning when the minister was holding forth on the beauties of this legislation and its possibilities.

In this Garden of Eden that the minister portrayed there was one perfectly good serpent: that was the idea of voluntary standards, voluntary controls, voluntary restraints —all those voluntary things. Things are to be voluntary only for the big folk; the little ones are restrained by law. How much voluntary restraint have the little ones got in the matter of consumer credit, after last night's budget? Voluntary restraint is frozen injustice. This is what I am afraid of as a result of this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. As it is four o'clock, the House will now proceed with private members' business as listed in today's order paper, that is to say, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

PROVISION FOR NOTICE AND PAYMENT TO EMPLOYEES WHEN LAID OFF

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that Bill C-43 amending the Canada Labour (Standards) Code be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, we may have come out of the Garden of Eden but there are still a few serpents around that we should do our best to slay. Indeed, we now have before us a bill that relates to another set of standards.

I should like to remind the House that during this session we have broken with tradition a bit in that three of four or maybe even five or six private members' bills and resolutions have received concurrence during the private members' hour. In some cases that has meant simply the referral of a bill to an appropriate committee so that it could be studied further. I hope that this new tradition might continue this afternoon. Accordingly, with that fervent hope I shall present this bill in the most reasonable way I can. That is easy to do because it seeks to enact into legislation a principle with which we all agree.

The proposal of Bill C-43 is that the Canada Labour (Standards) Code be amended. That code is the legislation which lays down standards regarding minimum wages, hours of work, general holidays, vacations with pay and so on. But there are a few gaps in that legislation and this bill seeks to fill one of those gaps.

This bill proposes that within the area of employment that comes under federal labour jurisdiction there be a requirement that any employer who wishes to discharge or lay off an employee, provided the employee has been with that employer for three months or more, shall give two weeks' notice to the employee. The employee, of course, can be given two weeks' full pay in lieu of that notice, but the bill spells out that nothing less than that shall be given to such employee.

I point out immediately that the bill has in it a clause which shows how to work out full pay for two weeks. It also makes it clear that if the person who has received notice were to work overtime during that two weeks, he would be entitled to more than the two weeks normal pay. It also has in it a very important provision saying that nothing in this bill shall affect any greater rights set out in a collective agreement. One or two other points are covered in the bill, but in the main I have indicated what it seeks to do. It seeks to establish as a principle in federal labour legislation that provided an employee has been for three months with the same employer, that employee shall not be summarily discharged but shall be given at least two weeks' notice or two weeks' full pay in lieu of that notice.

When I stand here and present this bill to the House I do not feel like shouting from the house tops that it is the most wonderful bill I have ever drafted. As a matter of fact, I think it asks for far too little. I think for a person to be given only two weeks' notice or two weeks' pay before being turned out into the cold of unemployment is really not enough, and I would not be at all unhappy if hon. members of other parties or members of my own party were to say that the bill should be amended to provide for three or four weeks' pay in such cases. But I have learned around here that you have to ask for a minimum in order to get something started. I hope the House generally will see this bill as introducing a principle that ought to be written into our federal labour legislation.

Every time a bill dealing with either of the labour codes comes before us—and it might deal with the standards code or the safety code—we have to make it clear that the federal labour law does not affect all the working people of Canada; it affects only those who come under federal labour jurisdiction as set out in the British North America Act. The main groups, of course, are those who work on our railways, on steamships, in banking, communications and a few occupations like that. The list is rather long, but even when you take all those covered by the list you find that you are speaking about only 10 per cent of the working force of Canada. The other 90 per cent of our workers are covered under provincial labour laws.

Nevertheless, it has been a fact of history in Canada that the federal government is able to give a lead, and what we write into federal labour law not only protects those who come under it but sets the pattern which in due course one province after another finds it expedient to follow. In this way, over the years, we have managed to build up a labour law which is not too much at variance as among the various provinces or between the provinces and the federal government. I should say that it is not always the federal government that gives the lead. In some instances provinces may give the lead, and I suppose this is good in a federal state like ours. It is good that patterns are set both ways.

We have been made aware in recent days of a number of instances of plants closing down and of sections of the labour force losing their jobs immediately. I will not quarrel at this moment with the answer the government makes when it says that some of these matters we have complained about come under provincial jurisdiction. The point I am trying to make is that even though many of these instances fall under provincial jurisdiction, surely it is a good idea to provide that under federal labour law workers cannot be discharged with almost no notice and without any pay for any period of time.

It is also a fact that most of the employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction, particularly railway workers, airline workers and groups like that, are rather well organized. They have this kind of protection. But there are still many who are under federal labour jurisdiction who do not have this protection. Because we do not have the principle enunciated in this bill written into laws which govern at the federal level, I submit there is a significant gap in the labour laws of this country.

As I say, I cannot imagine any member of this House not agreeing with the principle of the bill. I can imagine some questions about its details. The most significant criticism would be one that people like me would levy—that it does not go far enough. But surely in principle it is good. It is good that we in Parliament should say that so far as we can enact by legislation, nobody shall lose his job without being given either two weeks notice or two weeks pay in lieu thereof. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope the House, after discussing the bill during this hour, will decide it is a good idea to give it second reading so that it can be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for further study.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what Garden of Eden the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was referring to in his opening remarks. However, I commend the hon. member for bringing to the attention of the House, through the medium of this bill, a situation which merits the attention of every hon. member. His proposal is in the form of an amendment to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and if adopted it would mean that employees would be compensated in cases of discharge or lay-off and employers would be forced to give employees due notice when their services were no longer required because of the closing of business, industry or for any other cause.

I do not hesitate to agree with the need for legislation to bring about a uniform policy governing every employer of labour in every part of Canada. I agree with the hon. member that the principle of this bill is good, the purpose of which, as I have already said, is to provide compensation for workers losing their jobs through no fault of their own. In this age of automation it oftens happens that a particular job is eliminated by machinery or by the closing of an industry, or it can cause loss of seniority or other rights and privileges due to employees by virtue of length of service.

A few years ago I supported in this House a similar measure for the benefit of railwaymen who had lost their jobs as a result of changes brought about by the abandonment of branch lines or automation. The purpose was to have the railways pay the railwaymen being rehabilitated with new skills, the expense of moving to a new job, pension compensation for early retirement—if that was considered the better plan—or such other compensation deemed best for the re-establishment of discharged employees.

Public benefits through unemployment insurance to qualified workers seeking employment were also intended to help the displaced worker through the period in which he might be unemployed. In recent years, through collective bargaining, the concept of severance pay and the availability of unemployment insurance have been merged in a variety of ways. Workers who are laid off with or without the expectation that the lay-off will be permanent are also realizing, in cash or in vested rights and fringe benefits, what they stand to lose, together with compensation for wages lost. Traditional severance pay plans provide a money payment in a lump sum or instalments to workers whose employment has been terminated.

I recall that during the period when I was mayor of the city of Fort William our city-owned telephone service was changed over from manual to the present dial system. At that time we had approximately 70 telephone operators on the payroll, and with the installation of the dial system some 60 operators lost their jobs. The city council decided to give each of them severance remuneration, the amount of which was settled according to the months and years of employment of each individual. With a complete severance of the employment relationship, as in the case of the Fort William telephone girls, payments are such that only permanent separation is applicable. These awards are variously referred to as severance pay, termination pay, dismissal allowance, separation benefit, and lay-off allowance where lay-off implies permanent lay-off. Under such plans the payment of benefits is not contingent on the worker remaining unemployed.

The primary purpose of supplemental unemployment benefit plans is to provide weekly allowances to workers on lay-offs to supplement unemployment compensation. Usually the lay-off is not considered permanent, that is, both employer and worker expect the worker to be recalled on the job. Unlike traditional severance pay plans, supplemental unemployment benefits are paid only if the worker is unemployed.

The publication "Labour Standards in Canada" of December, 1967, reports that four provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and Quebec, have legislation requiring an employer to give notice of termination of employment. The legislation is contained in part 3 of the Employment Standards Act of Manitoba, in the Minimum Wage Acts of Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia and in the Civil Code of Quebec.

As the hon. member who introduced this bill knows, in Manitoba an employer or employee in any work or occupation except farming must give notice of termination of employment, and unless a person is paid less frequently than once a month the period of notice required is one regular paid period. If employees are paid less often than once a month, reasonable notice must be given. But notice of termination is not required if an employee is hired for a fixed period.

In Saskatchewan an employer is forbidden to discharge, unless for just cause other than shortage of work, or lay off an employee for three months or more without giving him at least one week's written notice. An employee who has been given written notice is entitled, in respect of the period of notice, to his actual earnings in a week.

In Nova Scotia, as in Saskatchewan, an employer is required to give an employee with three months' continuous service or more, at least one week's written notice of termination of employment or lay-off. The provisions in these two provinces are the same so far as the employer's obligation is concerned. The Nova Scotia act also requires an employee with three months' service or more to give his employer at least one week's notice of his intention to terminate his employment.

In Quebec the Civil Code requires a domestic servant, journeyman or labourer engaged by the week, month or year to give one week's notice of termination of employment if hired by the week, two weeks' notice if hired by the month, and a month's notice if hired by the year. The employer must give similar notice where an employee's services are no longer required. In lieu of notice the employer may pay the employee the wages he would have earned during the notice period.

At the forty-seventh session of the International Labour Organization held at Geneva on June 26, 1963, certain recommendations were made concerning termination of employment. Some of these recommendations are as follows:

Termination of employment should not take place unless there is a valid reason for such termination connected with the capacity or conduct of the worker or based on the operational requirements of the undertaking, establishment or service.

A worker who feels that his employment has been unjustifiably terminated should be entitled unless the matter has been satisfactorily determined through such procedures within the undertaking, establishment or service, as may exist or be established consistent with this recommendation, to appeal, within a reasonable time, against that termination with the assistance, where the worker so requests, of a person representing him to a body established under a collective agreement or to a neutral body such as a court, an arbitrator, an arbitration committee or a similar body.

Subparagraph (1) should not be construed as implying that the neutral body should be empowered to intervene in the determination of the size of the work force of the undertaking, establishment or service.

A worker whose employment is to be terminated should be entitled to a reasonable period of notice or compensation in lieu thereof.

Some form of income protection should be provided for workers whose employment has been terminated; such protection may include unemployment insurance or other forms of social security, or severance allowance or other types of separation benefits paid for by the employer, or a combination of benefits depending upon national laws or regulations, collective agreements and the personnel policy of the employer.

• (4:20 p.m.)

These recommendations concerning termination of employment are from the General Conference of the International Labour Organization in Geneva. As to the recommendation about methods of implementation, it was agreed it might be made through national laws, regulations, collective agreements, work rules arbitration awards, court decisions or in such other manner consistent with national practice as might be appropriate under national conditions.

Should the whole burden in these cases fall on the employer? That is a question which might well be taken up by a parliamentary committee for study and recommendation. Industries such as the Dunlop plant in Toronto, where it was recently reported that layoffs would occur, have certain obligations to their employees; such obligations are bound to arise whenever the position of employees is affected by the installation of labour-saving installations.

According to a news item in today's issue of the Globe and Mail, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Canada Limited, Toronto, is to shut down along with plants at Valleyfield and Saint Hyacinthe in the province of Quebec. Announcements of this kind are bound to raise questions of considerable importance in this era of industrial change. Workers in the transportation industry, no less than workers in factories, are affected by them.

The threatened run-through by Canadian National at Nakeena in northwestern Ontario is an example. If carried out, it would impose real hardship on families living in this community. It would be a case of sacrificing the welfare of a small community on the cross of efficiency. I express the hope that it will not be necessary for the railways to take this drastic step.

Down through the years delegation after delegation has appeared before ministers and heads of departments to protest the curtailment of railway services, including express and telegraph service, and to discuss other matters of great concern to the men and women employed in our once great railway system. Sometimes their pleas have been directed to situations in other industries; I have in mind the occasion when the Canada Car plant in my constituency was about to close down due to lack of orders. Invariably these delegations were well received and a sympathetic hearing was given to their anguished pleas that consideration should be extended to workers on the verge of being displaced.

The bill before us today will not put an end to the displacement of workers because of shutdowns, automation or other causes, but at least it will offer some assistance at a time when help is most needed.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in the debate on the motion for second reading and referral to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration of Bill C-43 which would incorporate into the Canada Labour Code a regulation compelling the employer to pay two weeks' salary to a laid-off employee.

I should like to tell the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that I support the principle of his bill. I am glad to see him taking part in the debate. In a democratic system, it is normal that a man who is laid off due to an improvement aimed at greater efficiency, to cost shaving or to automation receive a payment.

I have a few things to say about labour relations in our country. There are two aspects to the question which should not be mistaken.

Labour groups, formed to protect the rights of workers, sometimes negotiate agreements with employers in the name of employees. But there is another category of workers in Canada who do not belong to unions and who represent 55 or 60 per cent of the Canadian labour force, although those figures may not be exact.

The rights of unionized workers are protected to some extent. The law recognizes their right to strike. It establishes a certain procedure for the approval of collective agreements when the two parties are at odds. The worker who belongs to an union can also make sure that the latter has made some investigations concerning his type of work, in order that the industry where he is working will not simply become obsolete and go out of business.

I will now discuss a quite important aspect. It is perhaps the most important in most cases. It often happens that on account of the attitude of the employer or the union, we are led to believe that money or wages is the most important consideration.

All those who bargain with employees know very well that the financial aspects of a collective agreement, at a given time, have less importance. Labour conditions would come first. Among them are many small practical considerations. I mean hours of work and retraining.

I am also referring to the problems of human relations that can arise between the foreman and the men and the way to settle them. Collective agreements specify recognized means to settle grievances or other similar difficulties.

There are also the provisions concerning leisure. In Canada, apparently, we are not yet smart enough to realize that we need more spare time, and this at all levels of our society, including workers, members of Parliament, executives, etc.

Canadians do not seem to have yet recognized the importance of leisure time. In fact, it is most important not to work 60 or 70 hours per week and to devote one hour or two per day to recreation. This time can be devoted to reading, or to any other physical activity. One can also devote his spare time to an intellectual activity.

In negotiating new collective agreements this particular aspect is beginning to be considered. Indeed, it is believed that the worker must stop work two hours a day in order to relax his mind or devote himself to physical exercise. Therefore, he is in top shape and works twice as fast and much more carefully. He feels more at ease. Furthermore, this is very good for his health. In Canada, some unions are concerned about that.

Mr. Speaker, I am mainly concerned about those workers who do not benefit from the provisions of collective agreements. Some of those people are even to be found in the employ of large companies, in forestry for example, where employees are not members of any union. Sometimes, when three lumberjacks use the same power-saw, the foreman says: I can no longer keep more than one worker. So, the other two must leave. They must then give up their job, because they do not have the $200 that are necessary for the purchase of a power-saw.

What is more serious, is that the employer tells the Unemployment Insurance Commission that the worker has given up his job voluntarily. That is obviously an extreme case, but it may happen. In fact, in my district especially, if often happens that unfair advantage is taken of some people by large companies. The principle of the bill submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre appears to be wise, because the object of the proposal is to prevent exploitation of the worker.

Also, a good many workers are not in the employ of large companies and it could be argued that they allow inefficient undertakings to carry on their activities. Such businesses should not exist since the employers do not do enough for their employees and do not make available to them a useful apprenticeship. In short, the employee is the loser because after 10 or 15 years, the business goes bankrupt. The owner always succeeds in coming off without too much harm but it is always the employee who pays the piper.

I agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just said, as what he is proposing only amounts to an absolute minimum. As I said, I approve the principle of the bill before us. Provincial governments should also adopt similar legislation and all employers should be completed to include such provisions in collective agreements. If an employee works for a company or an individual for five or six years, the employer should be concerned about his security and give him severance pay when he is laid off to enable him to support himself for three weeks or a month—

An hon. Member: Two weeks.

Mr. Breau: —the hon. member says he should be able to support himself for two weeks. I feel it would be justified to extend this period to three weeks or a month in some cases.

I am pleased that this bill is now under consideration. I support the motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is not often that I can support him, although I always hold his opinions in high respect. However, we do not share the same political views. In any case, I am glad to back him up. I know he is striving to improve the workers' lot, to get them better protection by society. The challenge our society will be facing in the 70's and even in the 80's will be to enact legislation that will better serve the workers' interests. Besides, that problem should urgently be solved.

The hon. member knows that things will not necessarily change through legislation. Canadians, and more particularly the employers, must recognize the principle to the effect that employees are not machines to be be paid $40 or $100 per week. They must no longer be told to go when the work is done.

I think that in the years to come, the challenge for our society, in Canada as well as in the United States, will be to find, by means of legislation or otherwise, how to protect the interests of unorganized workers.

When we speak of collective agreements, a lot of people think that it is a threat to economy, but I do not agree. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) said recently that strikes were the price to pay for democracy. It may be an over-simple manner to visualize things but the philosophy under this approach is not for all that devoid of any sense. Many civil servants are against the right to strike, but under a democratic system, it must be recognized that the worker has to protect his interests, his rights and his privileges, which is getting more and more urgent.

Today, we are in an era of automation and I could quote as an example the case of a company that would settle in a small town that I know, but because its technology is not developed, could ruin the life of all those people not only financially but socially as well. This phenomenon exists in certain parts of Canada. In my riding there are some small towns that a single company could turn into ghost towns.

However, when employees become well organized and see to it that the company that hires them is going into research in order to progress through automation, that company will not be able to state one fine day that it can no longer operate.

I therefore say again to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I agree with the principle of the bill. I trust that some time in the future the provinces will adopt a similar bill, that it might no longer be necessary to adopt laws such as this one, because what I have just dealt with will have become a working condition recognized throughout the country by all employers.

[English]

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for introducing this bill. I know that in so doing he has drawn attention to a situation in Canada which must leave many of us very unhappy. Probably most of us thought that this matter was already taken care of by various regulations, or perhaps even just by custom throughout the country; but obviously it is not properly taken care of.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) has pointed out that only four provinces in Canada have regulations in the provincial jurisdiction covering this question. In other provinces of Canada and elsewhere it seems to be the custom that an employee is given notice according to the length of his normal pay period; that is to say, if he is employed by the week, it is assumed that he is entitled to a week's notice. If he is paid on the basis of every two weeks, twice a month, or monthly, he is entitled to notice for the length of his pay period.

We must all recognize that this indefinite situation leaves a great deal to be desired, and it leaves both the employer and the employee wondering what is the fact today. In many instances it must leave the employee the victim of an unscrupulous employer who takes advantage of a situation, which may not be written into law, to dismiss an employee without the kind of notice to which he is entitled. I think we have come a long way from the kind of situation in the past when employees were treated as chattels and could be dismissed on a moment's notice or at the whim of an employer. We now treat employees with some deference and respect for the responsibilities they have. I commend the bill the hon. member has introduced today.

I understand that the Department of Labor is now considering legislation, or a regulation of this kind. I think it is important, now that the bill has been introduced, that we look at the inferences in it and consider what is being done in other jurisdictions, in order that these thoughts may be of use to us in developing similar legislation and regulations in Canada. I believe there are some things in the bill that need improving. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre himself said, there are in the bill some things that could be improved. I notice the absence of enforcement regulations in the bill—enforcement on the part of the employer and the employee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does he not realize that this matter would be covered, because the bill would be an amendment to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and there are already enforcement provisions in the code?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I appreciate that clarification. The hon. member has much more experience in these things and has been in this House many more years than I have. I appreciate his clarification on that point because I have experienced situations of this kind. Sometimes the fault is not that of the employer: quite often the fault is the employee's because he decides suddenly to leave the employer. The hon. member mentions this matter in section 34H. I am glad to see it is there, because the situation I have mentioned could work a hardship.

Lack of responsibility sometimes by employees could be a distinct detriment to a business that needs the services of a skilled employee and suddenly finds it does not have that service available. Responsibility has to be shown by the employee as well as the employer. I appreciate that this provision is in the bill, and I hope that when this idea is propelled further, regulations will be put into effect which will make this measure enforceable.

I was very surprised to discover that there are only four provinces in Canada which have regulations of this kind. As the hon. member for Fort William pointed out, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and Quebec have such regulations. The regulations for giving notice do not apply if a general custom or practice which is contrary to the terms of the act prevails in an industry. These are some of the provisions that exist when different conditions as to notice are established by collective agreement. If employment is terminated during an employee's first two weeks on a job, notice is not required unless the employer and the employee have agreed in writing that the requirements of the act shall apply. An employer is permitted to establish a practice whereby employment may be terminated with a shorter period of notice than that provided for in the act or in provincial acts, and the practice is considered to have been established one month after he has posted notice of these things.

It seems to me that regulations of this kind leave a great many loopholes that need to be filled. These matters have to be spelled out in a better way. It is true that complaints can be placed before provincial ministers, say within a 90-day period, and procedures are laid down under some provincial regulations for so doing. In Saskatchewan an employer is forbidden to discharge, unless for just cause other than a shortage of work, or lay off an employee who has been in his service continuously for three months or more, without giving him at least one week's written notice. A lay-off is defined as a temporary dispensation of an employee's service for a period of more than six consecutive days.

In Nova Scotia, as in Saskatchewan, an employer is required to give an employee with three months' continuous service or more at least one week's notice of termination of employment or lay-off. The provisions in these two provinces are similar so far as employee's obligations are concerned. The Nova Scotia act requires an employee with three months' service or more to give his employer at least one week's notice of his intention to terminate his employment. Those are some of the provincial regulations we must consider, together with international thinking on this subject. We gain much of our information about labour relations and much of our direction, initiative and inspiration from the International Labour Organization. They have studied this matter and have come up with recommendations, specifically as a result of a meeting that was held in 1963. I should like to discuss some of these points because I think they are valuable and can be of guidance to us in considering this matter.

It is suggested in the International Labour Organization agreement that the effect of their recommendations can be brought in through national laws, collective agreements, regulations, work rules, arbitration awards, court decisions or in such other manner consistent with national practice as may be appropriate under national conditions. I shall refer to some of the things they feel we in Canada and those in other parts of the world should be doing. Let me refer to the question of a reasonable period of notice. Section 7 of the agreement says:

A worker whose employment is to be terminated should be entitled to a reasonable period of notice or compensation in lieu thereof.

During the period of notice the worker should, as far as practicable, be entitled to a reasonable amount of time off without loss in pay in order to seek other employment.

Such a provision might well be included in a bill of this kind. If an employee knows he will have to find other employment, it seems fair that he should be allowed a reasonable period in which to seek a new position. He should have the opportunity to go for an interview or fill in an application for employment. The next paragraph of section 7 states:

The worker whose employment has been terminated should be entitled to receive, on request, at the time of the termination, a certificate from the employer specifying the dates of his engagement and the termination and the type or types of work on which he was employed.

This is another very useful provision. It suggests that nothing unfavourable to the worker should be inserted in the certificate. There is in the suggested regulations a point about an employee's misconduct. I think this point should be looked at because it does bear on the question.

In case of dismissal or serious misconduct, a period of notice or compensation in lieu thereof need not be required, and the severence allowance or other types of separation benefits paid for by the employer, where applicable, may be withheld.

It makes suggestions regarding misconduct because these are questions employers will ask, and I think they are entitled to ask them because the government must act on this matter for both labour and management. I think we stand between the two. The agreement reads in part:

Dismissal for serious misconduct should take place only in cases where the employer cannot in good faith be expected to take any other course.

An employer should be deemed to have waived his right to dismiss for serious misconduct if such action has not been taken within a reasonable time after he has become aware of serious misconduct.

A worker should be deemed to have waived his right to appeal against dismissal for serious misconduct if he has not appealed within a reasonable time after he has been notified of the dismissal.

Before a decision to dismiss a worker for serious misconduct becomes finally effective, the worker should be given an opportunity to state his case promptly, with the assistance where appropriate of a person representing him.

Those are all very valuable recommendations which should be included in a properly drafted bill when the time comes. Some exceptions are noted in the ILO recommendations. I think they are of interest to us today. They are:

workers engaged for a specified period of time or a specified task in cases in which, owing to the nature of the work to be effected, the employment relationship cannot be of indeterminate duration.

We could all readily cite examples where that might be the situation. Certainly, if a man is hired for snow removal—perhaps not in Ottawa but in some other parts of the country—his work is of a temporary nature and perhaps is not entitled to such consideration. I see that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) takes exception to my comments about the weather in Ottawa. Another member from the Vancouver area suggests that in Vancouver the man would be completely unemployed. The following are the other exceptions:

workers serving a period of probation determined in advance and of reasonable duration;

You can hire a man for a specified period which might be more than three months but which would be a specific period of time. The next exception is as follows:

workers engaged on a casual basis for a short period; and public servants engaged in the administration of the State to the extent only that constitutional provisions preclude the application to them of one or more provisions of this recommendation.

Those are some of the very excellent recommendations put out by the International Labour Organization in 1963. I think they are worth a great deal of attention by the government when a bill of this kind is drawn up by the committee.

Mr. Winch: Will it get to committee?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I hope it will. As I mentioned earlier, I understand the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is considering regulations of this kind, so whether or not this bill goes forward I am sure the matter will receive favourable consideration. We can all be glad this is the case, because I am sure there is agreement on all sides of the House that legislation of this kind should become part of the legal structure in Canada. It is a shock to us to find that only four provinces have similar provisions in their legislation and that the federal government does not have them in its federal labour code. This bill is long overdue, and I heartily support it. I hope it goes forward, and I commend the hon. member for having introduced it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we are now studying Bill C-43 entitled "An act to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (Notice and payment to employees in case of discharge or lay-off)."

This is not the first time, Mr. Speaker, that such a bill comes before the House; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) introduced this bill in the House of Commons on another occasion, during another session of another parliament. Both sides of the house support the idea.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

[Translation]

An hon. Member: In French!

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): In French only!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In French? We are all bilingual now, aren't we?

[English]

In view of the fact that all the speakers today, and now the hon. member, have expressed themselves in favour of the principle of this bill, I wonder if we could have the bill sent to the committee so it could be considered further en Anglais et en Français.

Mr. Deachman: I hesitate for only one reason, that is, the government is now studying the matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We know also that we are not dealing with a relatively simple subject which we can pass in the House of Commons in the form of a private member's bill. We need only look at the clauses involving such subjects as notice, payment to employees, computation of wages, savings, notice of intention to terminate, and so on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In both French and English it is now five o'clock. The House will adjourn until Monday at 2 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (for Mr. Tolmie) moved that the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Friday, March 13, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—COST OF LIVING INCREASE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the accelerated rate of increase of the consumer price index—the cost of living—during February, which raised the general level of prices in Canada 5 per cent above the level of a year ago, and particularly, the refusal of the government to apply sanctions against those who raise prices by more than the government's guideline, thus enabling sellers to continue to raise prices by whatever amount they desire, and making impossible the control of inflation.

I therefore move the following motion under Standing Order 43:

That this House, comprising the elected representatives of all the people of Canada, consider and recommend a more effective method of controlling and keeping within reasonable bounds the accelerating increase in the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 unanimous consent is required. Is there such unanimity in the House at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put at this time.

YOUTH

CANADIAN WELFARE COUNCIL REPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask, under Standing Order 43, for unanimous consent of the House to put forward a motion which I think will be greeted with approval by all hon. members. Recently the Canadian Youth Council made public a report on youth policy which I feel should receive the immediate attention of all members of this House. Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), I wish to move the following motion:

That the report on youth, published by the Canadian Welfare Council on Friday, March 6, 1970, be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, for consideration and report.

I may say that I gave the minister notice of my proposed motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Again I must remind hon. members that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not the unanimity required under the Standing Order; therefore the motion cannot be put at this time.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION, PROVISIONS RESPECTING GRADING, LICENCES, ELEVATORS, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-196, respecting grain.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Questions

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF REVIEW OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER ACT

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

March 13, 1970—The President of the Privy Council: That in relation to S. 22 of the Representation Commissioner Act, Statutes of Canada, 1963, C. 40, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to review the provisions of the Representation Commissioner Act and recommend to the House any amendments, alterations or modifications thereto that to the said Committee shall appear to be necessary or desirable.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INCENTIVE GRANTS APPROVED

Question No. 631—Mr. Skoreyko:

1. How many (a) primary incentive grants (b) secondary incentive grants, have been approved to date by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and on what basis, under the terms of the old Area Development Incentives Act or under other legislation?

2. Under (a) and (b) above, what is the name, the proposed location and the type of industry or other commercial enterprise to which grants were extended and what was the amount involved in each case and in total?

3. How many applications for incentive grants have been rejected by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, to date, and what were the types of business enterprise and place of proposed location involved in such unsuccessful applications?

4. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion any plans to extend or alter the boundaries of the area currently designated as eligible for incentive grants?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1, 2 and 3. The Area Development Incentives Act did not provide for primary and secondary development incentives. Details of operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act are tabled monthly.

4. Not at this time.

[Mr. Olson.]

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING POTASH

Question No. 682—Mr. Burton:

1. Did consultations take place between the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada concerning trade and prices of potash shipped from Saskatchewan to the United States and, if so, on what dates?

2. Where did the consultations take place and who represented each government at such consultations?

3. Who requested the consultations in each case?

4. What representations were made by the Government of Saskatchewan at each of these consultations, and what was the view of the Government of Canada regarding such representations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Yes, a number of consultations were held with the Saskatchewan authorities.

2. In addition to meetings in both Ottawa and Regina, consultations were conducted by telephone on a number of occasions. These consultations were conducted at both the ministerial and official levels.

3. Both Saskatchewan and federal authorities initiated individual consultations.

4. The consultations form part of the continuing interchange of information between the federal and Saskatchewan authorities on potash problems. As these exchanges are continuing, it is felt that the precise views and opinions expressed should remain confidential.

COST OF LIVING INCREASE IN PRIVATE PENSION PLANS

Question No. 1,030—Mr. Robinson:

1. Will the federal government consider legislation whereby private pension plans will be escalated in accordance with the Consumer Price Index instead of remaining constant as at present?

2. Will the federal government consider subsidies to fund the increase in private pension plans if necessary?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. No.

*NATIONAL PRESS CLUB LEASE

Question No. 1,041—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Has the Department of Public Works leased space in the government-owned building located at 150 Wellington Street, Ottawa, to the National Press Club and, if so, what are the terms and conditions of such lease?

2. Was the lease noted above made under the authority of any regulation or other instrument and, if so, was such regulation submitted for approval as required by Section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights?

3. Does the Department of Public Works rent or lease space in any government-owned building to any other organization that excludes any persons from membership by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex (see Section 1 of the Canadian Bill of Rights) and, if so, in what buildings and to what organizations?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): The answer to the first part is yes, we did lease to the National Press Club the entire second floor comprising 3,890 square feet for five years from June 1, 1967 to April 30, 1972, for $600 a month. The National Press Club also pays for taxes, electricity, cleaning, toilet room supplies, garbage removal, and for office partitions and counters.

The answer to the second part is the lease was made under the authority of section 39 of the Public Works Act and Order-in-Council 1967-53/174 which authorizes the Minister of Public Works to:

—execute on behalf of the Crown leases of lands and buildings under the administration and control of the Department of Public Works and not immediately required for public purposes, where such leases do not exceed a term of five years, the rental in each case to be determined by the Minister of Public Works.

We are advised by our legal section that an Order-in-Council is not a regulation and therefore does not have to be approved by the Minister of Justice as referred to in section 3 of the Bill of Rights.

The answer to part three is probably so, for example, the Boy Scouts.

REPLACEMENT FOR INDUSTRIAL CONCILIATION BOARDS

Question No. 1,064—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government advise what will replace the conciliation boards that are recommended for abolition in the report of the Woods Task Force on Industrial Relations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intention of the Government with respect to the policy issue posed by this question will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,069—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who are the members of the Prices and Incomes Commission?

2. When were they appointed and for what period?

3. What is the annual salary of each member?

4. Were some members in the employ of the federal government before appointment to the Prices and Incomes Commission and, if so (a) who were they (b) what position did they hold prior to their appointment (c) what salaries did they receive?

5. Of those members not in the employ of the federal government before appointment to the Prices and Incomes Commission (a) what position did they hold prior to their appointment (b) what salaries did they receive while holding this position?

6. Have the members of the Prices and Incomes Commission divested themselves of all financial interests in business?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. J. H. Young, Chairman; P. Gérin-Lajoie, Vice-Chairman; G. E. Freeman, Commissioner; G. V. Haythorne, Commissioner.

2. The members of the Prices and Incomes Commission were appointed by Order-in-Council P.C. 1969-1249 of June 19, 1969, and their terms of appointment expire on December 31, 1971.

3. J. H. Young is receiving remuneration within the range of a DM 3 ($37,000-$40,000). P. Gérin-Lajoie is receiving remuneration within the range of a DM 3 ($37,000-$40,000). G. E. Freeman is receiving remuneration within the range of a DM 1 ($28,000-$33,000). G. V. Haythorne is receiving remuneration within the range of a DM 1 ($28,000-$33,000).

4. (a) George V. Haythorne. (b) Special Adviser to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. (c) Salary—DM 1 ($28,000-$33,000).

5. (a) J. H. Young, Dean of Arts, University of British Columbia; P. Gérin-Lajoie, Member of the Quebec National Assembly; G. E. Freeman, Chief of Research, Bank of Canada. (b) The salaries of persons prior to their joining the Public Service are not within the official knowledge of the Federal Government.

6. Information on the private financial holdings of public servants is not within the official knowledge of the Federal Government.

Questions

DANGEROUS SEXUAL OFFENDERS IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,083—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the total number of persons in Canadian penitentiaries that have been convicted and sentenced under the Dangerous Sexual Offenders Sections of the Criminal Code?

2. (a) How many of those so sentenced have received paroles (b) how many have violated their paroles (c) how many have been re-convicted while on parole and was the offence the same?

3. What is the average stay before parole is considered?

4. What programs are made available to these persons while they are incarcerated?

5. Has the medical profession been consulted as to treatment being given and, if so (a) haw many have received such treatment (b) how many failed to make progress (c) have any persons been denied such treatment if such treatment was recommended?

6. Has the government taken any steps in this direction?

7. Have the inmates choice in case they wish to seek out such treatment and, if so, what provisions have been made?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. Sixty four as of February 24, 1970.

2. (a) Twenty one. (b) Eleven, Breach of terms and conditions of parole. (c) One, No, offence of common assault.

3. Cases are considered as soon as possible after admission, in any event within six months thereof, and the parole review date is fixed. Average stay before release to parole has been eight years, five months and 17 days.

4. Programs of education, vocational and trades training, social education, citizen participation, religion and recreational training.

5. Yes. (a), (b), and (c). Statistics are not available as to the numbers who have received treatment nor of any who may have failed to make progress. No persons are known to have been denied treatment recommended.

6. Yes.

7. Yes—inmates may avail themselves of the psychiatric facilities available in our major institutions and more specific therapy is at times available.

CULTURAL EXCHANGES BETWEEN CANADA AND BELGIUM

Question No. 1,093—Mr. Asselin:

1. Has the Department of External Affairs budgeted for a program of cultural exchanges between Canada and Belgium and, if so (a) in what amount (b) what are the details of such budget?

2. What amount is the Belgian Government allocating to this program?

[Translation]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Cultural exchanges with Belgium come within the program of cultural relations with Francophone countries. The program budget for Belgium this year is approximately $80,000 and is composed of $50,000 for academic exchanges, $25,000 for exhibitions and other activities of a cultural nature and $5,000 for other cultural exchanges (book presentations and visits).

2. The exact figures and statistics which represent Belgian's contribution to the agreement could only be given by the Belgian authorities themselves.

[English]

ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL COMMISSIONS AND TASK FORCES 1950-70

Question No. 1,112—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many federal commission and/or task forces have been established in Canada during each year 1950 to 1970?

2. What was the responsibility of each?

3. What is the cost of each to date?

4. What is the additional anticipated cost of those in progress at the present time?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1, 2, 3 and 4. See answers to questions 2,685, tabled October 22, 1969, 397, tabled February 9, 1970 and 383, tabled March 11, 1970.

AGRICULTURE—RETIREMENT AND REHABILITATION PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,141—Mr. Southam:

1. In the government's program to assist those who wish to retire from the agricultural industry with dignity, what steps, if any, are being taken to meet this objective?

2. What particular department or agency is charged with this responsibility?

3. For those farmers wishing to rehabilitate or stay behind in the agricultural industry, what action is being taken to assist these people to develop the kind of farm units and managerial skills to earn a good life for themselves and their families?

4. What particular department or agency is charged with the responsibility to meet this objective?

5. When will this program, in each case, get under way?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. There is no program in effect at the present time with the objective as outlined. The Main Estimates for the fiscal year 1970-71, tabled on February 11, 1970, include, under the Department of Agriculture, an item of $10,000,000 for agricultural adjustment. Any programs that may be established under this Vote will be announced in the usual manner.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. The government has a wide range of programs to assist farmers to develop economic units, such as the Farm Credit Act, the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, an agricultural research program, etc.

4. Answered by No. 1.

5. Answered by No. 1.

RECOGNITION OF TRADE UNIONS AS LEGAL ENTITIES

Question No. 1,144—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider, in the public interest, the advisability of amending the present legislation so that trade unions will be recognized as legal entities in the same manner as individuals and corporations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intention of the Government with respect to the policy issue posed by this question will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

PROVISIONS FOR THE USE OF INJUNCTIONS IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Robinson:

Questions

RIGHT TO CROSS PICKET LINES

Question No. 1,297—Mr. Robinson:

Is it the federal government's intention to allow unionists the right to cross picket lines other than those of the union to which they belong?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intention of the Government with respect to the policy issue posed by this question will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

LABOUR DISPUTES—MEDIATION REQUIREMENTS

Question No. 1,299—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider the advisability of giving the Minister of Labour the necessary power or discretion to satisfy the mediation requirements of a labour dispute where the parties with the aid of a conciliation officer fail to achieve settlement?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intention of the Government with respect to the policy issue posed by this question will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

EXPRESSION OF EMPLOYEES' WISHES BY SECRET BALLOT

Question No. 1,300—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider, in the public interest, the advisability of providing legislation whereby employees may have the opportunity to express their wishes freely in the democratic process of a secret ballot where all matters of policy, personnel, certification and strike votes are concerned and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intention of the Government with respect to the policy issue posed by this question will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

REMOVAL OF LABOUR DISPUTES FROM JURISDICTION OF COURTS

Question No. 1,324—Mr. Robinson:

Is it the intention of the federal government to remove labour disputes from the jurisdiction of the courts, a basic civil right and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intention of the Government with respect to the policy issue posed by this question will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

QUALITY OF TELEGRAPH SERVICE

Question No. 1,344—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Is the government currently making a study of the quality of telegraph service in Canada and, if so (a) what departments are conducting such study (b) what is the nature and purpose of such study?

2. Since the merger of CN-CP telecommunications (a) how many offices have been closed (b) how many employees have been released (c) how many complaints regarding service have been received?

3. In the Atlantic Provinces, how many telegraph offices remain open after 6 p.m.?

4. What are the hours of service in the telegraph offices at Charlottetown, Saint John and Moncton?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1. Yes. (a) The Department of Communications with the cooperation of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. (b) The study is intended to survey the public telegraph message service with regard to the impact of new technology and of competing public telecommunications systems. It will also be concerned with the needs and interests of users of the system and with the views and policies of the operating companies.

2. (a) 34 C.N. Offices and 43 C.P. Offices; (b) 38 employees released by C.N.R., 9 employees released by C.P.R. (c) 24 complaints.

3. Four offices remain open after 6:00 p.m.

4. Charlottetown: 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. daily except Sundays and holidays. Saint John: 8:00 a.m. to midnight Monday to Friday. 8:30 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays. Moncton: 24 hours daily.

COMPULSORY CONTRIBUTIONS BY EMPLOYEES TO POLITICAL PARTIES

Question No. 1,345—Mr. Robinson:

1. Will the federal government consider, in the public interest, that employees should not be obliged either directly or indirectly to contribute financially toward a political party and, if not, for what reason?

2 Will the federal government consider, in the public interest, that union checkoffs for political parties should be abolished, and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intentions of the Government with respect to the policy issues posed by these questions will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

REGISTRATION OF DAIRY PRODUCERS

Question No. 1,372—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. How many dairy producers were registered with the Canadian Dairy Commission for production years 1966-67, 1967-68, 1968-69 and 1969-70?

2. What reduction in the number of producers registered has there been during the 1969-70 production year?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The number of producers registered with the Canadian Dairy Commission for subsidy since the Commission started operations on April 1, 1967, are as follows: 1967-68, 168,466; 1968-69, 109,799; 1969-70, 98,346.

2. The only reduction since April 1, 1969 in the number of producers registered for subsidy has been as a result of quota reallocations. Such reallocations, which would result in the cancellation of the quotas of the previous quota holder, total 5,441 to February 20. The number of quotas cancelled would be less than that since in some cases the reallocated quota was divided among two or more persons.

ROLE OF CONCILIATION OFFICERS IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Question No. 1,382—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider, in the public interest, the advisability of amending legislation so that conciliation officers could remain seized of a dispute with the express approval of one party to the dispute only and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The intention of the Government with respect to the policy issue posed by this question will be made known when a bill to revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is introduced. An intention to introduce such a bill was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

OECD MEETING—WITHHOLDING FROM DISCUSSIONS OF "SENSITIVE" ITEMS

Question No. 1,383—Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary):

What are the so-called "sensitive" items that Canada is withholding from discussions at the May 21 meeting of OECD representatives?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian provisional offer of tariff preferences for imports of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods from developing countries, along with the offers of other prospective donors, is still being discussed internationally both in the OECD and the UNCTAD. The latter organization is scheduled to begin its detailed examination of the various preference proposals of the developed countries at the end of this month.

While these discussions are in progress it is difficult to predict precisely what items will ultimately be excluded from the Canadian preference scheme. We have indicated, however, that we will not grant tariff preferences on product for which we have negotiated or are asking for a quantitive restraint on exports to Canada from any country. The exclusion of these products is of course consistent with the generally accepted view that the donor countries should not be expected to extend tariff preferences on products which are being imported into their markets in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten market disruption or serious injury to domestic producers.

QUEBEC PUBLICATIONS LIABLE TO SALES TAX

What is the name and who is the editor of each Quebec publication, daily newspaper or weekly newspaper which is (a) liable for the 12 per cent tax (b) not liable for the 12 per cent sales tax?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): All magazines and literary papers unbound regularly issued at stated intervals not less frequently than four times yearly, and all newspapers are exempt from the 12 per cent sales tax.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Because of the exempt status of such publications, it has not been considered necessary to keep on file the names of the publications and their editors.

LAND DEVELOPMENT DIRECT GRANTS, MANITOBA INTERLAKE AREA

Question No. 1,418—Mr. Simpson:

1. What was the amount of direct grants to farmers as indicated at page 30 of the 1968-69 Annual Report of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with respect to land development in the Interlake Area of Manitoba?

2. What was the total cost of implementing the land development program?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. $120,000.

2. $136,060.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT STUDIES

Question No. 584—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Since January 1, 1968 have studies (research or otherwise) been undertaken by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and, if so, what are the names, addresses and occupations of each person working in a consultant capacity from outside the public service on each such study?

2. Which of the studies are completed, and of those not completed, when is the expected completion date?

Return tabled.

RESEARCH, CMHC

Question No. 626—Mr. Comeau:

1. In 1968-69 and 1969-70, what were the estimated sums spent on research in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and what was the purpose of each research project?

2. How much money was actually expended according to Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures?

Return tabled.

AILMENTS CAUSED BY NOISE

Question No. 797—Mr. Mather:

1. Is consideration being given to stepping up efforts to combat ailments caused by excessive noise in industry and traffic?

2. What is being done at present in this field at the federal level?

Return tabled.

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES FOR HEALTH SCIENCES TEACHING FACILITIES

Question No. 1,132—Mr. Orlikow:

In each of the last ten years, what have been the federal expenditures on the planning, building and equipping of health sciences teaching facilities from each of the following (a) hospital construction grants (b) national health grants (c) general public health grants (d) National Research Council (e) Medical Research Council (f) Health Resources Fund (g) others?

Return tabled.

STORAGE OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Question No. 1,237—Mr. Korchinski:

1. To whom has the Canadian Dairy Commission paid money in the past two years for shortage of agricultural products?

2. What amounts were paid in each case and in what provinces were the firms located?

3. Have any of the storage companies had the responsibility of promoting sales of the stored products?

4. Which companies are directly involved in the processing, storage and selling of agricultural products?

5. What is the cost of storage of each agricultural product, per month, in each location?

Return tabled.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask when question No. 221 in my name, which was placed on the Order Paper on October 23, will be answered. It is neither a difficult nor lengthy question. It simply asks how many deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers there were in the employ of the government at certain periods and what their salaries were. It is asked because some civil servants wonder whether deputy ministers and their assistants are showing as much restraint in salary demands as they are. They wish this question to be answered.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I shall make inquiries and see whether this question can be answered on Wednesday next.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not like to rise again, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to refer to the fact that on February 18 the following starred question, No. 1,265, was asked:

How many letters, telegrams and/or other communications criticizing or condemning the white paper in whole or in part have been received by the Minister of Finance since the 1st of January, 1970?

This government has no trouble with big numbers when it comes to expenditures, and I see no reason why this further egregious example of contempt of Parliament should be tolerated. The government does not want to produce this information. If a starred question means anything, it means that an answer must be given within two or three days, which is the normal period. Under the circumstances, having brought this up before, I appeal to Your Honour as the custodian of the rights of Parliament to see that these rights are not contemptuously disregarded by the government of this country.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance the right hon. member's kindly interest in his career.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—UNEMPLOYMENT AS A CONTROL

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question I wish to direct to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Finance expressing the view of the government when he said yesterday on a CBC public affairs program that unemployment higher than that of 1969 may be necessary if we are really going to beat inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): He certainly was not expressing policy, Mr. Speaker. He may have been trying to read a crystal ball.

Mr. Hees: As I asked the Prime Minister if the minister was expressing the view of the government, I take it from the Prime Minister's answer that he was. I wish to ask a supplementary question. As unemployment has already reached 6.1 per cent of the work force, how much higher does the government intend to let unemployment rise before it takes steps to change this very serious trend?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we hope it will not rise as high as when the hon. member was a minister.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, another supplementary question. So far I have just had the smart-alec answers which the Prime Minister specializes in and which show that he cares not one whit about unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary, he should ask it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the answer necessitated those few words of mine. Since the Prices and Incomes Commission has made it very clear in the past several months that it is completely unable to persuade the leaders of organized labour to give the co-operation which is so necessary to the success of the anti-inflation program, has the Prime Minister now decided to take the action which he suggested on January 23 he would consider taking, namely, holding a private meeting with the leaders of organized labour to try to persuade them of the necessity of making their contribution in this regard?

Mr. Trudeau: Let me reply first, Mr. Speaker, to the way in which the question was phrased. I do not agree that the Prices and Incomes Commission has not succeeded in persuading these people; the operation is not yet over. As to the second part of the question, I shall be having a meeting with the representatives of the main trade unions in Canada shortly—I believe it will be a week from today. They will be coming to Ottawa to present their views to the cabinet on this subject.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, the Prime Minister knows that this meeting is one which is held in routine fashion every year, and that this subject will not be discussed.

Mr. Trudeau: On the contrary, we shall be discussing it.

Mr. Hees: It is a routine matter. You know and so does the Minister of Labour.

INFLATION—ACTION TO CONTROL COST OF LIVING INCREASES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the figures just released concerning the cost of living index which, for the month of February this year, indicate that the cost of living has risen 5 per cent compared with February of last year. In view of the disastrous consequences this has for Canadians generally and for those in the low and fixed income groups particularly, will the Prime Minister tell us what action the government proposes to take to deal with this sharp increase in the cost of living, one which seems to indicate that a slowing down in the rate of these increases is not taking place as the Minister of Finance anticipated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance dealt with this very question in his budget presentation. I understand that during the next several days we shall be discussing this particular matter, and I hope the opposition will show in what ways they think the situation can be improved.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You certainly need help.

An hon. Member: Wait until you see our amendment.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that the government's policies of restraint have apparently not slowed down the rate of increase in the cost of living, does the government intend to introduce new and different measures or does it intend to continue using methods which so far have been demonstrably lacking in success?

Mr. Trudeau: That is a rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker. The subject was dealt with by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech only two days ago. The hon. Member should have been around.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the Prime Minister trying to be smart provided he is accurate. I was here. I was in my place—

Mr. Trudeau: But perhaps not here in mind.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I see the Prime Minister tapping his head. Well, I am not where the Prime Minister is tapping. There is a vacancy there, but I do not intend to try to occupy it.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—INCREASE TO OFFSET RISE IN COST OF LIVING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the latest rise in the cost of living and its effect on old age pensioners, will the government reconsider its timing in connection with whatever it intends to do about the old age pension? I ask this question in the hope that something might be done at this session of parliament.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I have indicated many times to the hon. member, the old age pension, along with all income maintenance programs, will be dealt with in the white paper embodying the government's position.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Bearing in mind previous answers to the effect that this white paper may not be brought down until toward the end of the present session, would the government reconsider the timing so that the white paper might be presented earlier and something might be done during this session to increase the amount of the old age pension?

Mr. Munro: It is our hope that the white paper will be brought down before the end of this session.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the Secretary of State has a surplus of some $35 million in his budget, can he persuade his colleague to give some of that money toward increasing old age pensions?

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications.

Since the meeting held during the weekend concerning the postal dispute paralyzing the Montreal area, can the minister tell the House how the matter stands?

Hon. Eric Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I will report to the members of the cabinet later today and I think that a statement will be made tomorrow.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—CANADA GRAIN BILL—DECISION OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the Canada Grain Act may suggest various areas where high protein grains may be grown and will also suggest other areas where feed grains may be grown, does the minister intend to proceed with the legislation prior to any decision that the agricultural committee may be asked to make on the entire feed grain question?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to say that. The bill was introduced in the House and given first reading today. I would hope that we would get on with the second reading and discussion in the standing committee very soon. I see no conflict in connection with these two matters being considered concurrently.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the minister is himself not clear as to what direction the bill will take, would he be prepared to recommend to the agricultural committee that a further study be made if the bill that he has introduced is found to conflict with the decision of the agricultural committee?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could predict that in advance. I would be very interested in the recommendations of the committee with respect to these matters.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary or related question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the urgent need for a co-ordinated agricultural policy, particularly in the areas of production and marketing, can the minister advise the House when the long overdue report of the agricultural task force will be released?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as soon as it is printed. I have stated that to the House, I think, three times.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the act regarding grain, has the government anything useful and constructive to offer as to how to sell grain?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TORONTO—CLOSING OF DUNLOP PLANT—CO-OPERATION WITH PROVINCE IN FINDING ALTERNATIVE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but it might be addressed to the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has the Ontario government been in communication with the minister or any of his colleagues with a view to calling a meeting to explore the possibility of finding some alternative to the shutdown of the Dunlop plant which is threatening the jobs of some 600 people?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have, as the hon. member knows, had a meeting with the union officials at the Dunlop plant. The members of the union expressed considerable disquiet at the lack of information in regard to the economics behind the closing of the plant, and indicated that perhaps a working committee or task force might be set up to examine with them the justification for the plant closure. I have wired the minister of industry and the Minister of Labour in Toronto, bringing this point to their attention and suggesting that, if they wish to take action along these lines, from the federal point of view we would be happy to co-operate.

[Later:]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the original question directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration with regard to the closing of the Dunlop plant. Can he assure the House, either through a statement on motions or by other means, with regard to the possible effects of the closing of the Dunlop plant, particularly as it affects the textile industry and Cosmo-Imperial Mills in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that thousands of students at the various universities of Canada are unable to find employment this spring, is he prepared to accept the suggestion that members of the manpower offices visit the universities to try to place these students in jobs for the summer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, We follow every good suggestion and will consider what further we can do on university campuses where we do not have at the present full-time manpower counsellors.

[Later:]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question about jobs for summer students. Will the minister take steps to ensure that his officials do not provide jobs for students, important as they are, that could otherwise go to unemployed workers with families during the summer months?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation to the minister and he has to assume it will be taken into account.

[Later:]

OPERATION RETRIEVAL—DISCONTINUANCE OF VISITS BY OFFICIALS TO U.S. CAMPUSES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary and related question on this whole business of student employment. I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he and his departmental officials have given any consideration to changing the dates when officers of Operation Retrieval are visiting various United States campuses since their visits are often delayed beyond the point where their services can be made available to graduates of United States universities who are in fact Canadian citizens?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have discontinued our field visits to the United States universities.

POSITION OF FAIREY AVIATION EMPLOYEES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the Minister indicate whether or not he or his departmental officials have any information about the future of Fairey Aviation and its employees, particularly in light of the suggestion that there seems to be a lot of misinformation filtering back to the employees at Fairey about a takeover by Bell?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice and try to give the most up-to-date information to my hon. friend tomorrow or later in the week.

AGRICULTURE

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS—INCREASED BANK INTEREST RATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he will take action in connection with something that has become very general throughout the prairie provinces, namely, that when payment becomes due on loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the banks are now insisting, not on the 5 per cent rate provided under the loan but on 8½, 9½, and even higher interest rates. They are insisting that people who have borrowed money pay additional interest. This is unjust and unfair, and I ask the minister to get in touch with the banks in order to remove from the shoulders and backs of western farmers this additional interest because they are unable to pay instalments due because they are not able to sell their wheat.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to discuss this further with the Minister of Finance who is responsible for the administration of the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Minister of Agriculture responsible for agriculture lend his own support to action of this kind?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, in my discussions with the Minister of Finance my interest as the Minister of Agriculture will be very apparent.

DAIRYING—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW POLICY

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Can he indicate today when exactly he will announce the dairy policy for the next production year?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, but it will be before the end of this month.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona but I believe the hon. member for Lotbinière has a supplementary question.

[Translation]

Did the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Considering the increasing concern of dairy producers in Quebec and eastern Canada and the promise by the minister that he would announce this policy well ahead of the new dairy year, could he tell us when he will announce this policy before—

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is merely repeating his first question.

[English]

NATURAL RESOURCES

UNITED STATES SPACE CAMERA SURVEY OF NORTH AMERICA—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION TO CANADA

Mr. Hu Harries (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. What steps has the Canadian government taken to participate in the program launched by the United States government through the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to survey by space camera the resources of North America and, more particularly, how is Canada to receive the important resource information about Canada that will inevitably flow from this survey?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question posed by the hon. member is an interesting one. I am wondering whether it is not the type of question which could, with profit, be considered at the time of adjournment.

[Later:]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has Canada received any notification or information from the government of the United States or has Canada made any request for information concerning the intention of the United States government to launch satellites that will cover large portions of Canada and their own country and through the use of infra-red cameras and so forth will make an inventory of mineral deposits in each of our countries, and will we be involved in this scheme?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this is a question that normally would be placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a number of members of the House spent several days in the United States last week. The hon. member for Edmonton-

Strathcona was ruled out of order when he asked a question on this matter, and I thought that by wording the question differently and directing it to a different minister you would allow it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona was not ruled out of order. I would suggest to the hon. member that this is the type of question that might be considered at the time of adjournment. In fact, both questions might be considered at that time.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General who is so reticent today but so garrulous yesterday at his press conference. It has to do with the postal situation in Montreal which on March 5 he described as normal. Can the minister advise what steps, other than the embargo on parcel post into and out of Montreal and the threat of armed guards, he has in mind to solve this chaotic situation?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member has given me the opportunity of rectifying a statement. The phrase "armed guards" is not in my vocabulary and never has been. In answer to a question to that effect I said in French:

[Translation]

The required security services must be provided.

[English]

I am told by my colleagues who were there that at the end of the press conference the question was shouted or was posed, when I was leaving, "Would you employ armed guards?" I did not hear that part of it and I simply said we will do whatever is necessary, which the government will do. I expect, as I said earlier to the hon. member for Lotbinière, to raise certain proposals before my colleagues later today.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I observe that perhaps making statements in the House is not such a dangerous idea after all. Could the minister advise whether he gave any consideration, instead of paying compensatory goodbye bonuses to the men, to trying to do something to guarantee them job security?

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Kierans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I made it quite clear that the earlier promise I had made that I would accept the responsibility for finding employment for all of those with more than five years service was still valid, even though it was a great deal more difficult because the unions had refused to co-operate, and that by various means I would still undertake to make that guarantee. However, it still does require the co-operation of the unions so that the various seniority lists of the department and of the unions themselves jibe.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he now believes the situation is sufficiently serious in Montreal to ask the Minister of Labour to intervene?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SIDE EFFECTS OF ORAL CONTRACEPTIVES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he say whether he has received yet the report from the seven top medical experts who recently spent a week under the auspices of the Food and Drug Directorate studying the side effects of oral contraceptives used in Canada?

Hon. John Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not received their formal report. I have been brought up to date on the nature of their discussions.

Mrs. MacInnis: May I ask the minister whether this report will be made available to the public and, if so, when?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, if that is a suggestion I will take it under consideration.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF ST. GEORGE'S BAY TO DRAGGERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Will he advise whether the minister has received representations from the fishermen in the St. George's Bay area of Newfoundland asking for assistance to close the bay to some 64 draggers interfering with inshore fishing which will tend to destroy the lobster fishery there, and has any action been taken?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, to date the Minister of Fisheries has received no word from the chamber of commerce or the fishermen's organizations, but we understand from news reports that such representation is being presented. Our officials advise that the lobster grounds are almost entirely within the three-mile limit and most of the draggers that are in the area are in the eight to ten-mile limit. The department's large patrol vessel, Cape Friel, is maintaining a continuous patrol in this area and we are trying to watch the fishing as closely as we can. We will keep the hon. member and the people in that area informed.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST THAT STANDING COMMITTEE MEET

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker I have a question for the Government House Leader. He was good enough to offer very graciously to act as my advocate in trying to arrange a meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Development so that we would have an opportunity to examine the estimates. My question to the Government House Leader is: Has he had any success in this advocacy? Since that time the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has made a very important statement and I understand that the committee will not be meeting this week and it looks as though we will not have the opportunity to examine the minister's statement or the estimates before the Easter recess. I wonder whether the Government House Leader is as generous today as he was last Monday?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, my advocacy continues.

An hon. Member: But not your generosity.

Mr. McGrath: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister arrange for the committee to meet before the Easter recess so that members of the House will have an opportunity to examine the important statement made in the House by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on March 11 and also other items of interest to be found under the departmental estimates?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be reluctant to issue instructions to any committee but will be glad to bring to the attention of the chairman of the committee the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister set about the task of convening the Committee on Procedure and Organization and have referred to it the question of some means by which a committee can be called without awaiting the permission of the House Leader?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to have misunderstood this as he has misunderstood other things. I do not arrange when committees meet.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, according to the roster the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is supposed to be in the House today. I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion will be in the House tomorrow so that hon. members will have an opportunity to question him on the statement he made last Wednesday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did not hear the question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure I can take it into consideration from the record.

Mr. McGrath: I would have no difficulty repeating the question. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that we will have an opportunity to question the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion tomorrow on the very important statement he made in the House on March 11? He is supposed to be here today under the Prime Minister's roster system. Perhaps the Prime Minister could take some disciplinary action against the minister.

YOUTH

CANADIAN WELFARE COUNCIL REPORT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the report on youth policy published by the Canadian Welfare Council, is it the intention of the minister to make a statement on motions regarding this matter before the Easter recess?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, but I think this is an appropriate subject matter to direct later to my colleague the Secretary of State.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nystrom: Will the minister undertake to have this report referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Munro: Again, I think that youth policy in the form in which we are investigating the matter at the federal level falls within the responsibility of my colleague the Secretary of State. I would suggest the hon. member direct the question to him at a later time.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether there is a minister of the Crown in the House today to answer for the Secretary of State who is away on government business. There is supposed to be someone on duty in his place. If there is, would he take as notice the matter of a progress report to the House on the status of the report of the task force on the whole question of youth and its participation in the government process?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to ask the Secretary of State to report to the hon. member on his return.

POLLUTION

ANTI-POLLUTION DISPLAYS AT COMMUNITY FAIRS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister planning an anti-pollution educational-type display for community fairs during this summer in view of the widespread interest in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this kind of question, which is general in nature, should be placed on the Order Paper. If there is urgency, the matter could be considered at the time of adjournment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATE OF DEPARTMENTAL MORALE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. Was the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressing the view of the government when he suggested in a television interview that the Prime Minister might be responsible in part for the low morale in his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Munro.]

[Later:]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister tell us if he is developing any plans to reverse the serious morale problem he spoke of on television on Saturday as having a serious effect on the work of his department, according to the minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): One of the things I said was that I hoped all present in the House will not indulge in unfair criticism of diplomats.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising out of the answer. I listened to the minister on Saturday with great interest as he got himself into difficulty. In view of his admission that the morale of his department has fallen, would he say what action is being taken in order to raise morale?

AGRICULTURE

ABOLITION OF SALES TAX ON MARGARINE

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Does he intend to implement the recommendation made to the federal government by the Canadian Consumers Council to the effect that the 12-cent sales tax on margarine be abolished?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have had many representations regarding that.

FINANCE

DISCUSSION OF TAX PROPOSALS BY CABINET

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the important statement made yesterday by the hon. member for Trinity concerning the government's tax proposals, have these proposals yet been discussed in detail by the cabinet?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MANPOWER

PROGRAM TO ASSIST FARMERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On February 24 I asked the minister whether, in view of the fact that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) has announced a two-year holiday without pay for farmers, his department has planned a crash program for these people who will necessarily come on the labour market or whether they are to get a sabbatical from his department also. At that time the minister replied that he would like to take the question as notice. Now that he has had three weeks, would he answer that question?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his patience. If he is referring to the acreage program announced by the Minister without Portfolio, no such crash program is being prepared by my department.

POST OFFICE

DISTRIBUTION TO EMPLOYEES OF LETTER CONCERNING WAGES AND WORKING CONDITIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications. Did the minister approve circulation of a letter which went out from his department to all postal employees concerning the offer made by the department in respect of the wages and working conditions which are being negotiated at the same time with the postal unions concerned?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Yes. We believe the employees of the Post Office should be fully informed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he has received complaints that such conduct on the part of the department is an unfair labour practice and one which can only prejudice the meaningful discussions going on between the department and the employees?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, we see nothing unfair in providing the employees of the Post Office with full and fair information on the facts.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—TERMS OF NEW BRUNSWICK'S ENTRY INTO PLAN

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of some haziness concerning New Brunswick's entry into medicare, may I ask whether the minister will confirm that the federal government's contribution will be exactly 70 per cent and advise whether there will be any other special arrangements for that province?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Calculations have been going on for some time to determine the precise percentage. It is certainly well over 50 per cent but whether it is precisely 70 per cent I cannot advise the hon. member at this time. I might be able to do so later.

Mr. Bell: Does the minister know of any other special arrangements that were made with New Brunswick about medicare?

Mr. Munro: No. New Brunswick is treated no differently under the Medical Care Act than any other province.

POLLUTION

CHEDABUCTO BAY—PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the very extraordinary circumstances surrounding the events following the sinking of the Arrow in Chedabucto Bay, has the cabinet now decided on or given full consideration to the matter of compensation for those who have been affected?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid I cannot add anything to what the Minister of Transport has been saying on this matter, Mr. Speaker.

PROHIBITION OF OIL DRILLING ON CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the government decided on a new policy regarding offshore drilling on Canada's continental shelf in light of the experience of the disastrous spill off the coast of Florida, and is the government prepared to prohibit offshore drilling on Canada's continental shelf because of the very serious pollution threat?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member is asking the government, the Prime Minister, or the responsible minister to make a general statement of policy. I do not think the question in those terms could be accepted.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask a different question, a related question. The original question not having been accepted for procedural reasons, the hon. member could ask a different one.

SECOND VOYAGE OF "MANHATTAN"—CHANGE OF PLANS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the oil slick around Alaska, has any thought been given to a change in the plans with reference to the Manhattan again going through the Northwest Passage, whether with or without the permission of the Canadian government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can report no new development on that subject.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the Prime Minister be prepared to discuss this with the American government, in view of the fact that they themselves consider the oil slick in the Alaska area to be a serious situation?

PHOSPHATE DETERGENTS—DISCONTINUANCE OF RADIO AND TELEVISION ADVERTISING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio from York-Scarborough. In view of the fact that most Canadians agree with the government that we should not continue to use detergents with high phosphate content, would the minister take up with the CBC and the CRTC the possibility of discontinuing radio and television commercials that urge Canadians to use these detergents?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): I shall be glad to bring this matter to the attention of both the CRTC and the CBC, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INTERVIEWS BY REPORTER IN TRINIDAD

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Secretary of State with, I am sure, the approval of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the acting minister ask CBC television whether its reporter now visiting in Trinidad could seek interviews with people other than terrorists, troublemakers and other forms of trash?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will convey that message, and I am sure that in the tradition of journalistic objectivity the CBC will want to do that.

AUDITOR GENERAL

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE EFFICIENCY AND INCREASE SALARIES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of discussions and questions directed to him last fall by the Leader of the Opposition and myself. Is it the intention of the government to introduce a measure to increase the capacity and efficiency of the Auditor General and his staff to deal with the many misdemeanours in government spending, and will a new statute bring his salary into line with that of deputy ministers in other departments?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on the list of bills for the third part of this session there is a bill to amend the Financial Administration Act if, of course, the House can get on with that bill before the end of the session.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not the intention of the government to introduce a special statute dealing with the office of the Auditor General, as was proposed and partially accepted by the government last fall?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, disclosure of the contents of any bill dealing with the Financial Administration Act, which of course sets up the office of the Auditor General, would have to wait until the bill is given first reading.

AUDITING OF CROWN CORPORATION BOOKS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Privy Council.

Could he tell the House whether he intends to include in the legislative proposal a provision to the effect that the Auditor General would be empowered to audit the books of all Crown corporations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, one must wait for the introduction of the legislative proposal to know what its provisions are going to be.

SPORTS

APPEARANCE OF HOCKEY CANADA REPRESENTATIVES BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the minister is about to make a major policy statement on Canadian sport I would like to ask whether he has reached any decision regarding a request I made some months ago to have Hockey Canada representatives appear before the appropriate standing committee?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not come to any decision with respect to that matter. It is hoped the sports policy will be made known to the House very soon.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Lisgar.

MANITOBA CENTENNIAL

ASSISTANCE FOR BASEBALL TOURNAMENTS

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, last Monday I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who unfortunately was not in the chamber, whether he would continue the practice of paying the fares of the visiting teams to the final games of the Canadian amateur baseball championships. Would he give that his consideration?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): If I am accurate I believe the answer is in the affirmative, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on Thursday evening, and having spent some 25 minutes in comment upon his budget I find, on reviewing the remarks I made at that time, they were more accurate than I could have dreamed. I wish, first, to briefly recapitulate my remarks on the nature of the budget.

First of all, I think we will agree that the intensity of inflation today is due in large measure to the failure of the federal government and the provinces to settle priorities for the main government spending programs, particularly in the fields of health, education and social welfare. Second, we would agree that the government's monetary and fiscal measures have not had any noticeable effect on inflation up to the present time. This is evidenced by the present level of interest rates and continually rising prices. Today, we have a clear indication of a further rise in prices, and the monetary and fiscal measures which were supposed to be so effective have failed to make any impression whatsoever on what we consider to be the main yardstick of inflation.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I think it is also agreed that the monetary and fiscal measures of the government are causing an economic slowdown, and this is evidenced by rising unemployment. So, we have this strange paradox that we are in a highly inflationary period, with interest rates at an all time high, and we are building up more and more unemployment.

The third point I made was with respect to control of government expenditures. In his budget speech, and again on television, the minister laboured to emphasize that he and his colleagues have got their expenditure programs under control. Frankly, that is more apparent than real. After all, Mr. Speaker, the estimates for 1969-70 showed an increase in federal government expenditures of $1 billion—$1,000 million dollars—and the estimates tabled the other day for 1970-71, without taking into account any supplementary estimates which may be filed, already provide for a further increase of $900 million. If that is having our programs under control, then I wonder what it would be like if they were not under control? After all, the mammoth cut-backs announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last summer for certain departments, and particularly the personnel of those departments, are frankly non-existent. When you increase spending programs by $800 million or $900 million in your main estimates, with anywhere up to a quarter million dollars coming in on your supplementary estimates, then there is no question but that the government has not got the spending programs under control.

I wonder whether we will get further indications from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) or anybody else representing the government that certain open-ended programs such as medicare, post-secondary education, hospital insurance and the Canada Assistance Plan will be blamed. Those programs were blamed by the President of the Treasury Board the last time he made his confession that the government's figures were wildly in error.

The next item I referred to was the consumer credit controls which will have the most effect on the consumer durables, with the highest incidence in Ontario and Quebec. This is a strange method of fighting present day inflation, by reverting to the means used at the time of the Korean conflict in 1950-52 when inflation was of a different sort. We know that at that time there were too few goods and services chased by far too much money but today the dollars are not chasing too few goods because, in some lines, there are distressingly high inventories. I will admit there is a fair amount of money in certain sectors but in others, for instance in western agriculture and among the lower income groups there is not that much money. Yet what we are to be asked is to encourage more unemployment and have more economic slack because those results would flow from consumer credit controls.

Then, there is the failure to fight high unemployment in the textile industry by not implementing the recommendations of the Tariff Board which were in the minister's hands in ample time for decision and action in the budget.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

The next item is the failure to provide relief against inflation for persons on low income and for old age pensioners by granting them an increment to the general income supplement. This, in itself, need not make such heavy inroads on the revenue of the government because some form of tax credit could be granted, as spoken of by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for persons with low incomes, that is those with any other form of revenue than old age pension.

I did say that we agreed with the minister's proposal with regard to water and air pollution control but that is about the only part of the budget we approve.

On the basis of my remarks the other night, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That all the words after "House" be deleted and there be added the following:

Regrets that the budgetary proposals of the government fail to provide any tax relief for persons of low income, fail to recommend any increase in the guaranteed income supplement to the old age security pension, and those which impose consumer credit controls will not only fail to curb inflation but will contribute materially to increasing unemployment.

Mr. Woolliams: What do you think of that, Ben?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the question of consumer credit controls. The minister has indicated that he wishes to consult with credit granting institutions of one kind or another and then bring in his regulations in six or eight weeks. This is an odd way of doing this because, in the interval, there could be such a splurge of buying in certain lines that an artificial shortage could be created and you would have a continuing pressure on the commodities in question. In other lines, there could be an exhaustion of the demand for many months to come because of a tendency to buy ahead of time. Therefore, you would have a complete and utter slack in those particular industries or areas which provided services.

We do not know what kind of controls we are going to get and depending on the nature of these controls there may be all sorts of evasions. In the weekend press we read suggestions for getting around some types of consumer credit control. When we look at the auto industry, which is a basic industry, we know it certainly will be the bellwether as to the level of prosperity in the country. At the weekend the president of Ford of Canada indicated that sales across Canada were down

20 to 25 per cent as a whole for that company, and I am sure that they are in the same position as all the other motor companies. We have seen that motor car sales have varied from a decrease of 16 per cent to perhaps a bit more than 30 per cent since January 1. Why would the minister want to impose consumer credit controls on that industry which is already suffering a one-third decrease in volume. This is quite incomprehensible. It is also incomprehensible that the down payment should be limited to 20 per cent and that the maximum repayment period should be 30 months.

In this morning's Gazette there is an item cited by John Meyer, which shows that in the Montreal area the average down payment for automobiles is 25 per cent, which is more than will be required under the controls. It also states that the maximum average repayment period is 29 months. This is less than is proposed by the government but still there is inflation, there is no doubt about that. It is incomprehensible that in an industry which is already suffering from a decline in sales, the minister would introduce consumer credit controls in order to control inflation. His terms of repayment and the amount of the down payment are actually lower than those prevailing in the industry. Does he think that under his proposals there is going to be any greater control? Hardly. In arriving at these figures of 20 per cent down with a maximum of 30 months repayment period, I should like to know if the government has tested the situation in the Toronto-Hamilton area, for instance, or Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver or Halifax to see if these figures are not actually less than the conditions prevailing in the market. If so, the whole exercise would be completely an exercise in futility with no results whatsoever and this is what I wanted to know.

Another point with regard to consumer credit controls is this: they strike at purchasers from all income levels. The automobile dealer or furniture store dealer selling consumer wares will not ask the potential purchaser, "Are you earning $6,000 or $9,000 a year, or $15,000?" I suppose the requirement for a down payment would then depend on what the customer is earning. Yet is it not true that an across the board requirement for a 20 per cent or more than 20 per cent down payment will affect the man earning $6,000 a year far more than the man earning $15,000 or $20,000? Therefore, who is hit again by this requirement? It is the man in the moderate and low income group who must carry the burden of the restriction. After all, the man earning over $12,000 a year, if you want to take that figure, has the necessary cash or credit reserves, and he can obtain the additional cash quite easily to cover the increased down payment requirement. But the poor fellow earning $5,000 or $6,000 a year cannot do that. He again will be the one who will say, "I shall have to put off buying that car until next year." On the other hand, the fellow with the greater income could not care less; he has to dig down a bit deeper. He has the cash and he makes the purchase. So, it is the poor little man with the lower income who again will feel the punch of this consumer credit restriction.

I was disappointed that the budget speech did not immediately refer to the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The minister had high hopes with regard to the report. The committee had been charged by this House to inquire into the question of high interest rates and related problems of inflation. The report is tabled but no reference made to it at all. I think the minister should have referred to it in his speech, because it contains certain recommendations which are useful. I do not agree with all of them; after all it is a majority report and some recommendations I should hesitate to accept. For the edification of hon. members I think we ought to look at that report which contains some citations from various reports of the Economic Council of Canada. These reinforce the point I made the other night that inflation is not something that suddenly cropped up during the past year, although if you look at the frenzied actions of this government you might think it had suddenly discovered inflation under its pillow. After all, serious inflation has been with us now for the past five or six years. Has this government done anything about it? No. It is only in the last year or so that it seems to have paid more than lip service to fighting inflation. May I transgress on the patience of the House and read extensively from that report, because I hope that more attention than has been paid to it in the past will now be paid to it. I am reading from Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 14 of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. At page 6 is found the following:

Your Committee has conducted its investigation of interest rates in the context of the economy of 1969: an economy struggling with an inflation which has already produced dangerous social effects, distorted national goals and weakened Canada economically. Inflation distorts the normal working of the market place rendering the price mechanism defective; it is destroying the Canadian market for long term obligations preventing governments from raising social capital for housing and other objectives; if our inflation exceeds that of our most effective trading partners, bearing in mind that two dollars of every five dollars of goods which Canadians produce are sold abroad, it will cause our foreign markets to shrink and imports to have additional advantages on the domestic market, (deprive Canadian producers of the benefit of production on a large scale with the low costs that result) and will cause unemployment; worst of all, the impact of inflation on the real incomes of Canadians is discriminatory and works most unfairly against individuals who live on fixed incomes, generally the weakest members of our society.

This has been echoed and re-echoed so often that I think the minister ought to have made some reference to the report. I continue reading from it:

Today's inflation has tended to institutionalize itself as a persistent and would-be permanent guest in our system, through, among other factors, the wide-spread development of an inflationary psychology.

In reviewing the evidence of the Economic Council of Canada we note that the Chairman of the Council told the Committee on October 6, 1969:

And the report quotes what the chairman of the council told the committee as follows:

'You will recall that in 1966 we were approaching the crest of a construction boom...

Thus back in 1966 the long-term economic advisory body established by this government's predecessor was issuing warnings. The Economic Council also warned as follows:

—'the emergence of a number of general underlying factors which have created an environment less favourable to the maintenance of a good record of price and cost stability than was the case in the earlier years of the current economic expansion since 1960'.

The committee's report continued as follows:

The Council's Fourth Annual Review in 1967 was prepared at a time of some moderation of growth in the economy. But this Review emphasized that 'an early resumption of stronger general demand expansion from the present situation would clearly lead to an earlier reappearance of significant price and cost pressures that took place over the great expansion in 1961-66'. On the basis of its appraisal of the basic economic situation at that time, the Council went on to elaborate;

'We believe that underlying conditions are favourable to continuing strong demand growth and that following the recent shorter-term adjustments which have been evident in various parts of the economy, great care will be required to avoid the emergence of excessive general demand pressures.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

The committee noted, as did the Economic Council of Canada and other witnesses appearing before the committee, that there was a good deal of inflationary pressure in Canada as a result of conditions prevailing in the United States. The committee commented on this in its report. In its evidence of October 6, 1969, the Economic Council of Canada stated as follows:

The Council also notes that the overheating of the U.S. economy has contributed to a much more marked 'inflationary psychology' in both the United States and Canada. In the words of the Sixth Annual Review—'Expectations of continuing substantial price increases are currently being taken increasingly into account in the markets for some goods and services (for example, in such fields as construction and land purchases), as well as in the markets for labour and capital. In these circumstances, resistance to price and cost increases tends to be reduced.' This has complicated the difficulties of restoring reasonable price and cost stability in Canada.

It noted further that:

In approaching the policy setting appropriate to achieving good performance in the economy the Council has based its approach on an essential premise since the First Annual Review. This is the premise that it will be very difficult indeed to achieve high standards of performance in relation to our basic and social goals under conditions in which there is poor performance in the world economy—and in particular, in the U.S. economy. We have made it clear that the Canadian economy cannot be effectively insulated from major price movements abroad. The scope for unilateral action within Canada to contain inflation is limited.

Further evidence is attached to appendix A of the report. There are two tables attached to appendix A of which I have copies. I hope the House will give permission to including these in the record. They show a comparison between Canada and the United States in so far as the changes in the gross national product price index as well as central government interest rates, money market interest rates and consumer and price changes for about ten countries including Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Sweden and others. They are very instructive tables.

I wish to quote from the appendix because the tables only become relevant if the reference to appendix A is made. This is an extract from the brief of the Economic Council of Canada presented to the committee on October 6, 1969. I am quoting far more than I had intended, Mr. Speaker, but it is necessary in order to transpose into this debate the conclusions and basic evidence of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. After all, this budget was produced as an anti-inflationary budget. It has done very little. Therefore, I want to relate the government's approach to the situation as seen by the committee, and the recommendations the committee made with regard to that particular situation.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? I wonder if the hon. member would object to having the whole report of the committee attached as an appendix to today's Hansard? I would be very much in favour of this.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is subject to the desire of the House, Mr. Speaker. I make certain reservations with regard to some of the proposals of the committee. If it will shorten the proceedings, perhaps the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs could be made an appendix. However, the report is 27 pages in length. This is a great deal and I hesitate to agree with what the minister has suggested. I would prefer to make the citations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we should try to clarify this point immediately. My understanding is the minister has suggested a certain document be appended to today's Hansard. There is some difficulty in doing this. The alternative is that certain tables be printed as part of the hon. member's speech. That, of course, is breaking with practice and tradition. As hon. members know, the only way members can have statistics included in their speeches is by reading them so that they will appear on the record.

An hon. Member: Or by consent.

Mr. Speaker: It is a practice which has been extended to cabinet ministers as part of formal statements, but not to members in the course of a debate. However, if there is unanimous consent that the tables to which the hon. member refers be included as part of the hon. member's speech, of course this will be done.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that, rather than having the report quoted extensively, it would be simpler for the House to have the whole report of the committee attached to Hansard. If Your Honour wishes to revert to motions to make it perfectly legal, I would request that it be attached to Hansard.

Mr. Baldwin: I would like to vary that, Mr. Speaker, and suggest that we revert to the minister's speech and the minister can attach it. He put in everything but the kitchen sink and he can put that in, too.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to put the kitchen sink in as well. The hon. member was referring to the report so extensively that I was trying to do the opposition a favour by suggesting that the whole of the report be attached to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair should get a direction from the House on the point to which I have just alluded. Hon. members realize the main difficulty about including long tables as part of an hon. member's speech is that if this became the normal practice in our debates, there could no longer be an assurance that Hansard would be published from day to day and delivered to hon. members at the usual time. I believe this is one of the practical difficulties. If there is unanimous agreement, it will be understood that the table referred to by the hon. member will be printed in Hansard as part of the hon. member's speech.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I was simply suggesting that the report be attached as an appendix to Hansard and the hon. member could quote from the report what he wished, provided the whole report was attached as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The only alternative is for the hon. member for Edmonton West to read whatever he wants included in Hansard, even if it takes a little more time of the House.

Mr. Richard: I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I am the only one in the first row on the government side to support the hon. member. I support him entirely.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The tables to which I refer are official tables. They are printed on one page with an additional dozen lines on the second page. It is no great exercise. I wish to quote from appendix A:

"With unemployment in the range of 4 to 5 per cent of the labour force through 1968 and early 1969, the Council argues that it is difficult to maintain that such inflation is merely a reflection of recent general excessive demand pressures—and that this situation is quite different from that of 1966 when a sudden surge of demand emerged and drove the unemployment rate rapidly down to less than 3½ per cent. In this context, the Council notes important differences between the experiences of Canada and the United States, in 1965-66, Canada has significantly more price increase than the United States, but lower rates of unemployment and generally stronger demand pressures. In 1968-69, these positions are reversed: Canada has had slightly less general price increase than the United States, but considerably higher unemployment, and it is the United States which has recently had such stronger demand pressures. These facts are set out briefly in Table I.

I have copies of table I in both English and French, Mr. Speaker. Table I is approximately 12 lines. These tables are from the report of the Economic Council of Canada and therefore are as official as they could possibly be. They are not tables of my own conception. I, therefore, ask leave of the House that they be incorporated in my speech.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is there is no agreement to allow the hon. member—

Mr. Benson: I stated the situation. I am quite willing to have the whole report attached as an appendix to Hansard. It would save the hon. member the time of reading the statistics.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Will it be attached or should I read it?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will now have to read it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It reads:

TABLE I

Percentage change in gross national product price index 1965 to first half 1969.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo rises on a point of order.

Mr. Saltsman: I want it clearly understood that the House unanimously agreed to permit the hon. member for Edmonton West to insert that table in the record as part of his speech. The only exception has been the Minister of Finance who has been insisting that the entire document be inserted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have already gone through the point. The hon. member for Edmonton West has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I continue:

Year	Canada	United States
1965	3.5	1.9
1966	4.6	2.7
1967	3.4	3.2
1969 (First Half)	3.7*	4.5

*On the basis of the unrevised National Accounts; quarterly figures on the revised basis have not yet been published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I continue reading from the brief of the Economic Council:

In terms of the GNP price index—the broadest index of price increases taking place in the whole economy—it might be noted that the highest rate of price increase in Canada occurred in 1966.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, this is based on the first half of 1969. Now that the figures have been published we can see that the highest-ever increase took place in the latter half of 1969, showing an increase of between 4.5 and 4.75 points by the end of the year. We also know why the index rose so sharply in 1966. This was the year in which some of those rather fantastic wage settlements were agreed to in certain key sectors of the economy.

From the table it will be seen that the GNP price index increased 4.6 per cent in 1966. For the first half of 1969, as against the first half of 1968, the rate is 3.7. In the United States the highest rate of such increase occurred in 1969. In the United States there has been a steadier build-up toward higher rates of price increase.

Appendix B is a table entitled "International Interest Rates and Consumer Prices". It is one page in length and I would ask the leave of the House to include it at this point in the record. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that apart from a few more references to certain points which were raised in the committee's report I do not intend to read any more.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Mr. Benson: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have noticed that he does not have the leave of the House to proceed as he proposes and I suggest that again he would be required to read the table.

Mr. Benson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not really want to stress the point—the only thing I was trying to say was that if the hon. member wishes to quote extensively from the report of a committee of this House, the government is willing, as I have indicated, to have the whole of the report attached as an appendix to Hansard. I still believe this is the reasonable way of doing it. However, if the hon. member wishes to take certain pages out and have them inserted in Hansard on his own responsibility, that is fine as far as the government is concerned.

Mr. Baldwin: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I draw it to your attention that the minister made a speech a few days ago, selectively placing on the record items which happened to appeal to him and to the government but which did not show the true picture.

Mr. Benson: May I say in that regard—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. minister. I regret that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) should be placed in his present position but the Chair has no alternative but to repeat its suggestion as to the way in which this should be handled.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is the first time I have found that it was necessary to secure unanimous consent before a document could be placed on the record. General consensus has always been sufficient. In any event, I will read it.

First of all, the table considers bonds and yields under the heading "Central government". Figures are given for 1963—no month is specified—and for May, 1969. Then, there is a column under the second heading, "Yields", showing the percentage change. This comparison is also made in respect of the money market over the same period. Interest rates and percentage changes are set out. The same procedure is followed under a third heading "Consumer Price". Here, the comparison is made between the period from 1963—no month given—to May, 1969, and the position at the second quarter of 1969.

With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, I must say it has never been the practice of this House to require unanimous consent to inserting a document in these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: I have thought about the matter. This is not the first time the question has been raised as to whether tables or figures can be put on the record. The rule has long been established—and I am assured of this by the advisers whom I have consulted in this regard—that this is a privilege which is reserved, perhaps, for ministers making statements, and that hon. members taking part in a debate cannot have tables of statistics or figures appended to Hansard or included in their speeches as read unless the House, being master of its own rules, agrees unanimously. This is the practice which has been followed, rightly or wrongly. As I said, I am sorry the hon. member is placed in this position, because we are losing time in this way. But I am afraid there is no alternative before the hon. member but to go through the ordeal of reading these figures and tables.

Mr. Benson: As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House would be prepared to give unanimous consent, with the caveat I mentioned earlier. I would much prefer to see the whole of the document printed. The hon. member does not appear to want this. Anyway, you have unanimous consent.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Very well. Just to clarify the source of this information, may I say that these figures come from the International Monetary Fund—the international financial statistics for August, 1969. Their paternity is impeccable.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that the paternity of the figures having been established there is now agreement that they should be printed as part of the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There are two other points I should like to make. In the report, there is the same note of caution sounded. I refer now to the testimony introduced by the Governor of the Bank of Canada I refer hon. members to page 10 of the report. There is also a section on incomes, productivity and prices on the same page which I would commend to hon. members. This is part of a recommendation, and I shall quote from it very briefly.

> We were particularly interested in the view that labour and management in certain key industries referred to by Galbraith as the "industrial heartland" agreed to wage settlements perhaps at times no greater than their own productivity increases but greater than the average productivity increase for the economy. Such a practice would have the effect of encouraging other less productive industries to follow the wage pattern of the pace-setting industries. When such wage settlements are accompanied by corresponding price increases there is an inflationary cost-push. We recommend that a study in depth be undertaken of the influence of wages and prices in key industries on the Canadian economy. Similarly, the importance of the service industries, employing about 50 per cent of the labour force, seems little understood as a factor in inflation. We think more research is needed.

In the light of this recommendation and many others along similar lines, I would have expected some indication from the government that it would direct the attention of the Economic Council to this question. How does one measure productivity in actual fact, particularly in the service industries? It is very simple to determine productivity levels in industries which produce goods, and to ascertain whether increased productivity is, or is not, the equivalent of wage increases. One can determine the effect of changes in levels of wages and productivity. We have had considerable experience in doing this. But with regard to the service industries we encounter obvious difficulties. For instance, my hon. friend from Calgary North might increase his fees as a lawyer, or my hon. friend from Orillia might increase his medical fees. But how can we tell whether there has been a corresponding increase in productivity? Of course, I am pulling the leg of my hon. friend from Calgary. But how can we tell whether an increase is justifiable?

For example, how can productivity in the field of education be measured? There have certainly been great increases in salaries in the educational field. Has there been a corresponding increase in productivity? It is an entirely unknown subject, but the impact of changes of this kind on the Canadian economy is immense. It is noteworthy that in the eyes of the Economic Council more than 50 per cent of those gainfully employed in Canada are engaged in the service industries. We are, therefore, talking about inflation at a time when we lack knowledge of the subject. I would have thought that the government could take this particular point and ask the Economic Council to direct its attention to it. Alternatively, the government itself could have taken steps through its own research facilities to see whether something could be done to determine what is true productivity in certain service industries.

There are many other recommendations to which I should have liked to refer, as I say, but I feel that I have transgressed on the patience of the House. Again, I refer to the motion that I have put, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque, (Mr. MacLean), and I urge its acceptance by the House.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the first impulse I had on reading the minister's budget was to shrug my shoulders. This is a characteristic stance of the government: rather than produce answers it would prefer to shrug its shoulders. The budget was so empty that it hardly seemed worth the effort to comment upon it. However, by saying nothing, this budget says a good deal, and a good deal that is unsatisfactory.

One wonders what to call a budget-maker who is not satisfied with creating half a million unemployed but indeed seeks to augment that figure, and to do so in the name of the nation. What kind of budget is it that has to increase unemployment in Canada to achieve the objectives of the minister's policies?

What does one call a government that produces such a budget? I think we would be justified in calling it callous, indifferent—

Mr. Orlikow: Heartless.

Mr. Saltsman: Yes, heartless. We would be justified in using many other names, but I think that the government ought to be called stupid. I say that because the budget tells a nation which has 20 per cent of its population living in absolute poverty, and many more at some undefined level of poverty, that the government has no intention of helping the poor, of helping the old age pensioners. The budget indicates that the government has no intention of living up to is advance billing that it would create a just society. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is telling the country that the way to help the poor is to create unemployment. I should like him to explain that philosophy to me. Better still, let the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) explain to me how we can fight poverty by throwing people out of work. It is a philosophy I just do not understand.

The housing crisis in Canada is worsening year by year. Housing starts this year are way down. Some houses are just being completed, but the projection is that housing starts this year will be down compared with last year, and the inevitable result will be that rents will rise to even higher levels than they are at the present time. In face of this situation, the budget, in effect, tells the nation: "Don't worry about housing. The government will make a little money available in the public sector, but there is nothing or very little for housing in general in Canada".

We are living in an environment that is being polluted. People who are examining the problem are warning us that our society, our civilization, our very lives are in danger if we do not do something to stop pollution. Yet this budget continues to grant 50 per cent write-offs to industry, for anti-pollution devices, perpetuating the practice of the past. This has been found an inadequate measure because it does not really deal with the problem or with the urgency of the situation. There is so little in this budget that the government had to grasp at these meagre, minor items in order to show that some matters at least have been given thought. But thinking is not enough; we have to do something about our problems. This budget gives no indication of any conception of the task ahead of us.

Our urban municipalities are in desperate need. As far as they are concerned, the budget says, in effect: "Tough luck; the government has other priorities". There is no recognition in the budget of those problems that face urban society, a society in which the majority of the people in Canada live. Are we going to wait until our cities are destroyed before the government takes action? Can we not learn anything from looking at the situation of cities in North America, where some are already virtually destroyed and the cost of recovery is almost beyond comprehension? Although time is on our side in Canada, it will not continue to be with budgets of this kind.

While the government takes pride—or so it says—in increasing its expenditure on regional development, it cuts its own throat and sabotages its own efforts by maintaining a high level of unemployment, creating particular problems in disadvantaged regions of Canada. The government might just as well throw money down the drain. We do not begrudge the money spent on regional development; in fact, we think more should be spent. But the only way to make this expenditure effective is to have full employment. If you allow the economy to drag its feet at a time when you are pouring money into regional development, at best all you are doing is preventing the situation from getting worse. Certainly, you are not improving it.

How does one justify bringing in this kind of budget? I can say with a great deal of sadness that I never thought I would see a government in Canada bring in a budget proposal which, in the words of the budget, offered an invitation to union busting in Canada. Never before have I seen a budget that used such language, language which indicates that Canada is going to have labour strikes. It is as though the government wanted strikes to take place, as though the government is telling employers in this country to encourage strikes. This is something which is particularly incomprehensible. One of the members of the press gallery asked me why I was of this view. He said he realized there were indications of this in the words used by the minister, but he asked me why I would say the minister was inviting people to start strikes. I replied that he had only to take a look at the minister's behaviour when he did not want a strike to take place. We have seen the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) rise in his place in this House when he was concerned about a strike that was in the offing, and at no time did he acknowledge the possibility that the situation could not be worked out without resort being had to that ultimate weapon, the strike. I suggest that if you want to solve labour troubles you would not use the kind of language used by the minister in his budget statement.

The budget also indicates the government is going to fight inflation by controlling consumer credit. Some people are saying that these controls will not work; others say that they will hurt the poor. Frankly, I do not think they will work, and I do not know why the minister made these proposals. The evidence is that if it looks as though they are going to work, then the merchants will find ways around them and make sure they do not work. If they work at all it will be the poor who will suffer, those who are least able to bear a cut in consumer credit. I am not going to spend very much time on this item, beyond pointing out the foolishness of such a proposal. I suggest it has no real value apart from scaring everybody out of their wits that the minister is going to take some action.

If we look at this budget in an over-all way we should not be surprised if the poor, the disadvantaged and the idealists of our society are not grateful to our Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). It is one thing to call for sacrifices in our society, even unemployment, if some case can be made for it, and if people understand that the sacrifices are leading to something worthwhile. This nation has never been remiss in carrying a burden if it was necessary in the interests of the nation. This unemployment is absolutely unnecessary. This is a worthless device and cannot possibly achieve the objective the Minister of Finance is trying to achieve through it. The Minister of Finance is asking us to suffer without cause, and no one is going to support that kind of situation.

Shortly before the budget address, an esteemed gentleman of the other place indicated that there was going to be an increase in supplementary pensioners to old age pensioners, and most of us thought this was the real news. We thought that this gentleman had got this information. This made a lot of sense, particularly since we had a greater budgetary surplus than the minister anticipated. We felt it would cost the government a relatively small part of that surplus to increase these pensions. It was a major disappointment to find that even this one thing which the government could have done for some of the people of this country was not being done. There was no question of the government not having the money, because the money was there. In view of the minister's straightforward determination to fight inflation, regardless of what it costs the people of this country and regardless of the possibility of success, no action was taken to increase old age pensions.

If there had not been enough surplus to take care of this increase in old age pensions, veterans pensions and housing in Canada we might understand, but there is a great deal in our economy that this government is throwing away. I presume if somebody went around burning money on our streets or actually throwing it away people would think he was mad and lock him up. When the minister does the same thing they do not lock him up because when he does it he is protected by his office. Why do I say this, Mr. Speaker? It is not easy to calculate the cost of unemployment. I do not think anyone has made any definitive study of what unemployment costs, but there are some indications of its dimensions. In the year 1967 a study was conducted by the economic council which indicated that the level of unemployment at that time, a little over 4 per cent or somewhat less than it is today, resulted in a 5 per cent loss in our gross national product and a loss of 10 per cent of anticipated government revenues.

What does 5 per cent of our gross national product mean to us today? The unemployment figure is higher and presumably the amount would be greater, but let us stay at the lower figure. We are talking about kicking away or burning up $4 billion in potential production in goods and services which this nation might produce under a better policy.

An hon. Member: Under a perfect policy, you mean.

Mr. Saltsman: Not just under a perfect policy; I am still considering 3 per cent unemployment, and I am prepared to accept that as a maximum. I am not talking about wiping out unemployment completely, although I think that could be done. I am not going to suggest that. I want to stay with the minimum average so no one can accuse me of exaggerating these figures. These are absolute minimum figures. We have lost $4 billion of our gross national product in goods and services that the people of this nation need desperately.

What does this 10 per cent loss of government revenues represent? We are talking about over $1 billion that we are throwing away. We have not got the money to fight pollution, to help the old age pensioner, to build houses and to help cities, but we can throw revenue away without any thought. The problem is not that there is a shortage of revenue, the problem is a result of the government being wasteful and stupid in its policies. If it pursues them, we will never have any resources with which to build a better society. It is incredulous that this should be done in this modern age. If the minister of any European country were to set out to create this level of unemployment he would be run out of town on a rail, smoking his pipe and all. It is just unbelievable that the government of Canada would do this to the people of the nation.

When people ask me why we have so much unemployment in this country, I say we have it because the government wants it. These people do not really believe me when I say that we have unemployment because the government wants it and has decided to have it. They say, would my government do that to me and I have to say, yes. I suggest that the government has adopted this course, but I do not know whether one could really call it "his government" when it acts in this way. This government has created this problem intentionally and deliberately.

I do not want to suggest that the 1967 study by the Economic Council is the only one. There was a study done by David Slater under the title "Economic Policy and Economic Research in Canada since 1960" published in the Queen's Quarterly in the spring of 1967. It talked about the five year period in Canada between 1958 and 1962. It suggested that because of the high unemployment which resulted from government policies the nation lost $15 billion in production. So, in some ways, we are not dealing with a new phenomenon or new stupidity. We are dealing with an ongoing policy.

I, for one, cannot listen with any degree of civility to people on the other side of the House who tell me we cannot afford things. They always ask where we are going to get the money. That is always their cry. Where are we going to get the money for old age pensions and where is the money going to come from for housing? Those hon. members always use this as a quick taunt. It is obvious where the money is going to come from. Immediately following a cutback of waste, there would be money for these things.

An hon. Member: Is that the way the socialists do it in England?

Mr. Saltsman: I am getting a little tired of you people trying to answer these questions of ours in that way. You try to argue that it is better to create unemployment, and you try to argue away these figures regarding the amount of money we are losing. I do not care what name you call my policy, my suggestions or the suggestions of my party, you should—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to direct his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Saltsman: Yes. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest to the hon. member that he would be much better off if he were to listen to some of the arguments. He might then learn something instead of behaving like an automatic puppet with a sort of a built-in gramophone which says "socialist" every time he hears the truth.

When we are talking about the present level of unemployment, we are talking of something like 500,000 people unemployed. This does not tell the whole story, just as the figures I quoted do not indicate the full losses taking place in our society. When there are half a million people on the unemployment rolls, there are many people on short time who do not appear as unemployed. Many people who withdraw from the labour force do not appear as a statistic. Not only is there the matter of the cost of unemployment but also the extent of unemployment. These are some of the things about which we must be concerned. I talked briefly about the direct cost in lost production unemployment occasions. That is not the only cost, because when people are thrown out of work they cannot be allowed to starve. Unemployment costs go up and welfare costs go up. I know these costs are difficult to calculate but I appeal to the common sense of people who, without a calculation, can see the devastating effect unemployment has on society. The use of unemployment as a weapon for any reason is so outmoded and criminal that I am always shocked when this government resorts to it.

It is not the working man alone who suffers in these circumstances. He is not the only victim of this cure. Everybody suffers. The businessman suffers just as well as the working man. Let us make no bones about that. If the working man does not have an income he is not spending money and buying things. Many people are dependent on the ability of the working man to spend money. I once made a speech to a chamber of commerce in which I suggested to those gentlemen that in their own self-interest they should join the New Democratic Party. As one might well imagine, they were not all convinced by my argument. However, my point is that since the New Democratic Party advocates policies which are good for the ordinary people of this country it is also good for business.

An hon. Member: In your opinion.

Mr. Saltsman: In my opinion. That is why I am here. Everyone suffers. The government suffers because the revenue does not come in and people suffer because tax rates have to be higher. I have no objection to taxes that provide goods and services for people or taxes that are necessary for transferring income from those who can afford it to those who need it.

I have no objection to this sort of thing, but I do object to seeing taxes levied in this country when the effect of them is being destroyed by the ineptitude of the government. Taxes which are higher than they need be can create unemployment which destroys much of the tax base and makes everyone pay far more than they need pay. As a result, we have a lower standard of living for everyone. This type of policy produces a lower standard of living for everyone and the country does not grow the way it should. There is great uneasiness among the people because they vaguely sense that the country is not meeting expectations. The members of the government cannot be completely mad. Presumably they have some kind of argument they can use in an attempt to justify what they are doing. There must be some kind of reasoning behind the incredible waste of people and resources. I do not like to think that the Minister of Finance likes to see people suffer. I think he is a pretty decent and human man, despite his other failings. So what is it that brings a government to create problems of this type? What would bring the government to say it has to cure inflation even if it means everybody's back must be broken in order to do it?

No one will argue that inflation is not a problem. It is a problem and one with which we must deal. But we argue that the whole problem should be placed in perspective. Let us take a view which makes some sense rather than the sort of myopic view that exists on the other side of the House. They seem to put on blinders so that they cannot see anything other than the writing inside the blinders which says "inflation, inflation". In my view, the real problem is not inflation, it is the government's refusal to adapt to inflation. This is the crux of the entire problem. Today people are more concerned about unemployment, about their future prospects, and about a recession into which they feel we are in danger of sliding, than they are about the rise in prices. A few months ago I would not have said that because an hysteria had been created in our country about inflation. One just could not talk about it. Everyone was concerned about prices. Now, they are beginning to see what happens when the government brings in the kind of Draconian measures it has. They say that inflation is not the only evil in the world. It is a problem but it is not the only problem.

It is pretty hard to convince the person who is being thrown out of work that this is good for his soul and is good for the economy. He does not understand that. It is small wonder he does not understand it, because it does not make any sense. I shall not quote all the references I have lest the minister suggest I include the entire book, the entire journal or whatever it might be.

An hon. Member: He has gone with the wind.

Mr. Saltsman: Yes. The minister has gone with the wind. Let us not be too hard on the minister because I notice he is coming back. He might learn something from this speech.

An hon. Member: You are an optimist.

Mr. Saltsman: I am always an optimist. We in this party are always optimists. We always hope that perhaps we can persuade others to see the light. Much of inflation is imported. We know that a good deal of the inflation we have arises from the fact that the United States economy has been suffering from a very high rate of inflation. Much of it arises from structural changes. One need only to look at the composition of the labour force to see what I mean by structural changes. Just as people moved from agriculture into goods producing industries, now people are moving from the goods producing industries into the service sector of our economy. Nearly 60 per cent of our labour force is in the services sector. Agricultural productivity increased enormously. The people improved their productivity at an enormous rate until it worked to their own disadvantage.

The same is true in respect of the goods producing sector involving people who manufacture cars, washing machines and so on. There has been an advance in those areas, but when we come to the service sector, where most of our people are, the productivity increase is not as great. Even if we were able to keep farm prices constant and were able to keep industrial prices in the goods producing sector constant, there would still be a push from the service sector as it tries to keep up with the rate increases in the goods producing sector.

This is not a short-term matter. I might point out that I will be introducing an amendment shortly that will deal with some of these questions. So, we are faced with a long-term structural change in our society which in essence is inflationary because as the people in the service sector seek to keep up with the people in the goods producing sector the push increases. We will have to accept price increases in that sector if there is going to be any justice in the distribution of incomes in our society. We cannot talk that away, and it will be there for a long time to come.

Having said these things, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that we do have some measure of control, and we should of course use every measure that is open to us, provided it is effective. I am not saying that we should fatalistically accept inflation. I am simply saying that we should accept realistically that portion of inflation about which we cannot do anything, and then go to work on that element of inflation over which we do have some control.

If we are going to do that, we will have to go beyond the sort of vague, voluntary restraints of the Prices and Incomes Commission. Even the people who talk about voluntary restraints know they are not going to work. These people are groping, and I wish them luck. I hope that out of their gropings does come something, but let us not kid ourselves. Voluntary restraints at a time such as this, and with the kind of problems facing us—the long run inflationary factors facing us—are not the answer.

The minister goes on to suggest, and he also does this in newspaper articles, that we are in terrible danger of pricing ourselves out of world markets. This is one of the minister's holy cows. If he cannot scare the heck out of people by saying "inflation", in that special tone he uses, then he says we are pricing ourselves out of world markets. Those are magic words and they are supposed to get everybody off and running. They are supposed to make people say, "The minister knows what he is doing. We had better listen to him."

What evidence is there that we are pricing ourselves out of world markets? Copper? We have increased the price of copper over and over again, and we can sell all the copper we can produce at astronomically high prices. In fact, the price of copper is determined internationally, and we are having a heck of a time trying to get other countries to agree to hold down the price in Canada. Copper is not being priced out of international markets, and the price of copper bears very little relationship to the wages being paid to our copper miners. Nickel? I do not see any danger there of pricing ourselves out of international markets. Our problem is that we do not have enough nickel to export. Coal? Gas? Oil? The reason we are not selling oil in the United States is not because we priced ourselves out of that market. We are still producing oil at one-third less cost than the Americans. It is because they pushed us out of their market.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Because we are too competitive.

Mr. Saltsman: Because we are too competitive. So, where is this evidence that we are pricing ourselves out of world markets? Automobiles? We are not pricing ourselves out of the automobile markets.

Mr. Whicher: Shirts.

Mr. Saltsman: Oh, you found one. You found shirts. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has found an item. He has found shirts. Are the wages in the shirt industry inflationary? Can you tell me wages in the shirt industry are so high that we are pricing ourselves out of the international markets?

Mr. Whicher: They are higher than in Japan.

Mr. Saltsman: So, do you want our wage rates to go down to the level of the Japanese? Do you want us to increase unemployment until that happens?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate again to interrupt this interesting dialogue between the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), but I would appreciate it if the hon. member for Waterloo would direct his comments to the Chair.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bruce has a tendency to stir things up this way, and I welcome his interruptions because they show the vacuity of his thoughts. Now, if we look down the list of our industries we see that we are having some difficulty selling heavy machinery, not only internationally but on our own markets. It is not because this industry is not competitive. It is because the government has allowed foreign heavy machinery to enter our markets, machinery that is subsidized by foreign countries. This gives that machinery an unfair advantage. The situation has nothing to do with the productivity or wage levels of our industry, but it has a great deal to do with the policies of the government, which allow foreign subsidized machinery imports to cut the throats of Canadian manufacturers. This is one of the things that should be examined.

Steel? Are we not competitive in steel? We are one of the most efficient steelmakers in the world. Canadian steelmakers are the best in the world, without exception, and the people who work in that industry can be justly proud of the contribution they are making to the national economy. Where is this pricing out? Sure, in shirts and underwear, but there is no way we can compete in those areas in normal circumstances. So, let us not throw in some of these little dodges that do not really deal with the main argument.

We have problems in productivity, but let us look at the real causes. They are not wage increases. They are U.S. branch plants that kill productivity in this country by the way they market goods, by the way they destroy efficiency, contrary to what is often said by the government about how effective American investment is in Canada. Very often this American investment is disruptive and destructive of any efficiency, with a few exceptions.

We have a fixed exchange rate that throttles our ability to pursue an independent policy. Even bankers now agree that our exchange rate should be a floating rate, and although I hesitate to put myself in a position of agreeing with bankers, this is one thing upon which we can both agree. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House on things such as these, Mr. Speaker, and with the indulgence of the House I would now like to deal with other matters.

We in this party say that the first thing that has to be done in this country is to get rid of unemployment. Unemployment is unacceptable as a policy. We must then move in the direction of controlling inflation in a realistic way. We propose that we really start the war on poverty, and that we start doing something about pollution. We propose that we increase what we are doing for old age pensioners and veterans, and that we do this by tax cuts, by getting more money into the hands of the people who need it. I am not hung up on what kind of formula we use to do this, as long as we do it. If we pursue intelligent policies it is possible to have tax cuts for many Canadians today.

We need policies that will use our resources in a much better way. We should recognize that these things are not going to be done easily, that we are going to need a real incomes policy instead of this business of hoping that by creating unemployment you will indirectly affect some of the pressure points in our society. That is not good enough. It is too unfair. It is a form of cowardice, a refusal to face up to the issue.

If there are sectors that are exerting these pressures then we should deal with them directly—that is the only fair way—instead of applying the lash to everyone, those who need it and those who do not. I suggest nobody needs it. We have to have an incomes policy that will contain inflation. This will help get the economy of the country moving. We live in a country that is rich in resources, that has great potential. We can create a great society, not only for ourselves but for other people in the world. The waste and abuse of those resources is something that will be hard to justify, not only to our own people but to the many people throughout the world who need our help. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the following subamendment, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and, more specifically, this House regrets that the proposals do not exempt from income tax single persons earning less than $2,000 and married persons earning less than $4,000 per year."

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, for days we had been waiting for the budget speech by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), and we finally heard it last Thursday.

To my mind, the budget speech is a colossal joke, a hoax, as stated by financial analyst John Myers in today's Montreal Gazette.

Two items stand out in this budget: first, a threat of consumer credit restrictions and, second, a delay in implementing the recommendations of two Tariff Board reports, one on live turkeys, the other on polythene.

For two weeks, people in Quebec have been talking of Bourassa's pants. Starting today, I think we should talk of Benson's turkeys as the budget tabled last Thursday is a real turkey.

The Canadian people have been served cold turkey, because this budget does not propose any progressive action to help consumers and small wage-earners. No action is contemplated to bring down prices. Nothing has been provided to assist eastern farmers, to reduce interest rates, to curb inflation, to cut down taxes, to alleviate the burden of big families by giving them allowances, to help the old who have to go through all kinds of hardships, in view of the small pensions they receive now, while consumer prices keep on going up. In addition, nothing has been announced with a view to reducing expenditures in the national defence field.

The budget includes no measure to finance public capital in Canada through advances by the Bank of Canada; no measure authorizing provinces to borrow at a nominal cost from the Bank of Canada in order to finance public capital; no measure to wrench Canadians free from the strangle-hold of high finance which now controls credit, usurpating powers of sovereign governments and imposing its will upon every one of the country's ministers of Finance; no measure to prevent continuing take-over of the Canadian economy by foreigners. The litany could go on for hours and hours, Mr. Speaker, without discovering anything constructive in the budget speech made last Thursday night by the Minister of Finance because it contains only pious wishes.

We have to tighten our belts, said he! We must reduce expenses and fight price increase and, in a national effort, reduce the price increase rate. It is a pious wish, but the Minister of Finance did not tell us how to reduce the price increase rate. Why do prices increase? It is because costs increase. To reduce prices, one must therefore reduce production costs. Well, what makes up the production costs? Firstly, the workers' wages. What steps has the Minister of Finance proposed to reduce them? The budget speech does not say anything about that.

Secondly, business profits also play a part in production costs and in prices. What action has the minister recommended in order to reduce corporate profits? None! What steps does he then intend to take so as to reduce the profits of companies which have already decreased last year? He did not say.

The cost of money is also a factor in price increases. The interest on bank loans, to which producers must resort at the various stages of production, is one of the main causes of the upsurge of prices and it is an important factor in connection with the cost of goods and services. What measures has the Minister of Finance announced in order to have the cost of bank loans curtailed? He did not say so. His budget speech did not contain anything.

The Minister of Finance said Thursday night, and I quote:

> There are some recent glimmerings of evidence that the rate of increase of prices is no longer rising.

Yet, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics announced Friday night that the cost of living index had gone up by 0.5 per cent during January. At that rate, the annual increase would be of 6 per cent, while last year was 4.6 per cent.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The least we can say, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister of Finance failed again in his estimates. He is a very bad prophet. In his speech, he also said and I quote:

> Personal saving has declined during the year.

"Personal saving has declined". What does that mean? That the consumer, in order to buy goods and services needs more and more money due to rising costs. He is less and less able to put money aside. Now, it is with savings that houses are built, that common and preferred shares are bought to ensure business expansion. Thanks to personal saving new businesses are started and employment is created.

The Minister of Finance has pointed out that personal savings have decreased. It is therefore not good news!

The Minister of Finance has also stated and I quote:

> In our foreign transactions, we had in 1969 a rather substantial increase in the deficit on our transactions on goods and services... Wheat sales were substantially lower.

The Minister of Finances did not have to remind us of it because the government has just decided to pay subsidies totalling some $100 million to western wheat producers to let their lands lie fallow.

The provinces which are compelled to borrow on foreign markets in New York, London, Germany, Switzerland and elsewhere must have been surprised when the Minister of Finance stated and I quote:

> The Canada Pension fund has been a lifesaver in meeting the needs of provinces, municipalities, school boards and other public authorities during a difficult period.

Why then must provinces and municipalities get loans from foreign countries? Is it because money is scarce in Canada or that the conditions imposed by the Canada Pension fund and other lenders are harder to meet than those imposed by foreigners? This does not make sense. Everybody knows that money and credit are available and that bank loans can be obtained. It is known that dollars, francs and pounds sterling in circulation are the fabrication of banks, which used pen and ink, and at a ridiculous cost of production, but whose price is fantastic: an annual interest of 10 per cent or more. But if the Canadian banker is as capable of creating credit as his German or Swiss counterpart, he is also capable of producing millions in bank credit from his ink bottle. Why must the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities ask foreign bankers to do something that could be done by Canadian bankers? Why do foreign bankers lend money to Canadian provinces and municipalities? They do because they are convinced that Canada, its provinces and its municipalities are able to refund their loans at maturity and to pay the interests when due, because they have real and considerable assets as well as immense and enviable natural resources.

They know that Canadian industry and Canadian workers can produce true wealth, the basis of any financial credit. However, if bankers in other parts of the world know that, Canadian bankers should know it as well. If foreign bankers are in a position to lend money to the Canadian people, because they have faith in their productive capacity, Canadian bankers, for their part, should have the same faith and provide the credits requested by them.

> Employment will continue to rise, but more slowly than in 1969, and I anticipate some increase in unemployment.

For most Canadians, as they rely solely on their work to earn an income allowing them to provide for their families, this is a very sad omen. Besides being a false prophet, the Minister of Finance is also a prophet of doom and gloom. He informs the Canadian people that unemployment will increase in 1970, and this, without any apparent worry, but rather serenely, almost triumphantly. He believes that unemployment will force workers to accept lower salaries and longer working hours.

This is simply being cynical at the expense of the vast majority of workers, in order to please the true power holders who control the economy and the politics of our country. There is the financiers' government hidden behind this visible government. It is high finance which obliges the Minister of Finance to lay off workers and which instructs the government to curtail consumer spending. It is high finance which instructs the government not to lower taxes and rates. Everything is conceived and controlled by high finance to which all governments bow.

Finally, the minister suggested to us that we were slowly drifting towards socialism, towards state capitalism, perhaps dictatorship. But, since the state is under the control of high finance, soon we will find ourselves under a financial dictatorship which will not be concealed any more as is the case now, but which will show truly what it is: the master of our lives and our destiny.

Last year, the government had legislation passed in order to lower the net income of insurance companies by imposing a higher tax on their profits. However, it is public knowledge that insurance companies are one of the most important reservoirs of capital where house builders get their money. Therefore, by a deliberate move, the government has shut off that supply of housing capital so necessary to Canada.

The housing demand is increasing all the time. More and more houses are needed. What does the government do? What does the Minister of Finance suggest to provide Canadians who want to build a house with the necessary capital? Loans granted by the state.

The state is substituting itself for private capital suppliers. From now on, it is the state that will lend capital to people wishing to build a house. Almost total government interference exists in the housing field, which is a private one, if there is still a private field left.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) so justly points out, the state has no business in the bedrooms of the nation. It should have no business either in the housing field. It interferes with it nowadays because it has forced private lenders to give up that field.

The government forced them to do so because it had a reason for doing so. Indeed, the idea is to make the state the most important owner in Canada. Canadians must now rely on the state to house themselves.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a socialist and marxist measure, that we reject. Canadians, most of whom are still in their right senses, reject it also.

As to the measures advocated by the Minister of Finance, in order to restrict consumer credit, they tend to regulate conditions of credit granted to consumers by various lending institutions. The minister concluded his account on that question with the following word, and I quote:

I would expect the government to be in a position to introduce the legislation in about six or eight weeks.

The Minister of Finance having admitted this, the financial reporter in the Montreal Gazette said that statement was nothing but a monumental bluff. Indeed, one could read this in the March 16, 1970 issue, and I quote:

[English]

Credit controls: bluff now but action if really needed.

Mr. Benson could still take direct action if he felt his bluff wasn't succeeding. There is nothing to prevent him from bringing in a draft legislation, effective of that date, with the details to be settled later. If he does, though, he'll have to make the controls more restrictive than so far indicated if they're to have the effect he wants. As matters now stand, the controls aren't as restrictive, in some instances, as existing practice.

It's one thing to risk a strike when inventories are high and goods still being moved. Quite another with inventories down to manageable levels and the steam taken out of what consumer demand there may be. With inflation being sustained by the push of rising costs, rather than the pull of rising demand, the object of the exercise has to be to contain the largest single contributor to the former, excessive wage increases.

Not every one is prepared to give Mr. Benson the credit for what could be a monumental bluff. It's thought to be too subtle in concept for the man who produced—the White Paper with its uncompromising blacks and whites.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, what should be done? What steps should the government take to deal with the deplorable economic and social situation in which we now live? Calling elections, replacing the federal government by a Progressive Conservative government, would make no difference. The Progressive Conservatives admit themselves that they have no solution. Besides, they have proved their incapacity to face the problems of inflation or increased prices. They have nothing new to propose.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is what the spokesman of the official opposition said in the House Thursday night, as reported at pages 4750 and 4751 of Hansard for March 12. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said this, and I quote:

The monetary and fiscal measures used so far by the government have brought us to the present point, growing unemployment but no real effect on prices and interest rates. As a matter of fact, it is rather ironic—

And one member intervened, saying:

What would you do?

[Mr. Rondeau.]

And the hon. member for Edmonton West replied:

What would you do? It is the government that has caused this.

That was the reply of the spokesman for the official opposition. It is someone else's fault. They have no solution, no remedy to suggest, save to pay: Be patient, tighten your belts, put up with your fate since you have elected the Liberals. Elect us, as soon as possible, but we still do not have any new solution.

Before bringing my remarks to a close, Mr. Speaker, let me put forward Créditiste solutions. First of all, we suggest that the control and the issue of credit in Canada be removed from private banks which now have the power to finance the wealth of Canada, to create money and lend it to the government, instead of earning it.

First of all, the federal government should, through the Bank of Canada, control the money circulating in the country and do so by depriving the banks of a power which is not theirs but that of the people of Canada and of the government which is in turn responsible to the people.

We would like the Bank of Canada, a monetary body, to enable finance to reflect the Canadian reality and the Canadian wealth. The Bank of Canada ought to finance capital and public works at the administrative rate of $\frac{1}{4}$ or $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

The Bank of Canada should enable the provinces to finance bridges, highways, aqueducts, sidewalks, sewers, schools, gymnasiums, and so on. But no, our federal government is tied down to the task of serving the interests of big business thus compelling our public institutions, such as provincial governments, municipalities and schoolboards, to grovel before the big business tycoons and to pay interest rates up to 12, 14 and 15 per cent as such is now the case. Canadian citizens are now, by way of taxation, paying three times the price of every bridge, road, school, gymnasium, sidewalk, aqueduct, or sewer network which is built in the country.

It is high time, Mr. Speaker, to stop laughing at the Ralliement créditiste, for it is the only group in the House that has ever had the guts to put their fingers on the sore spot of finance. Why is it so? Because they do not owe their seats to election funds and to the finance companies that pay into them.

If the Bank of Canada were allowed to supply public capital at a nominal rate of interest, prosperity would come to Canada. Banks should be permitted to borrow from the Bank of Canada so that they can in turn advance money to producers, as savings are at a low ebb just now due to the immense popularity of federal and provincial government bonds as well as school board and municipal bonds.

For instance, when private enterprise requires capital to expand and to increase production at a more reasonable cost, it has to borrow on the financial market. Why? Because the federal government does not authorize the public sector to put savings at the disposal of the private sector.

We know that some municipalities and school boards of the province of Quebec have now to borrow at a rate of 14 per cent. Provincial governments should unite and ask the federal government to change its financial system, because it no longer meets the provinces' needs. It is no longer in step with production which is not lacking for the time being.

In Canada, in 1969, production amounted to $79 billion, whereas an amount of $50 billion was paid out in wages and dividends of all kinds. How is it possible, with a purchasing power worth $50 billion, to use up production worth $79 billion? It is like trying to square the circle.

The Canadian people is left with the alternative of borrowing on their future, of mortgaging their future earnings and wages.

In 1960, our gross national product stood at $30 billion and in 1969 at $78 billion, which means that it has more than doubled during that period.

On the other hand, the national debt which amounted in 1960 to $20 billion increased at the end of 1969 to $39.9 billion. Production has doubled in 10 years, but so did the national debt.

The more the Canadians work, the more they develop the country and the more they go into debt. More and more, we are mortgaging our future, the future earnings, in order to live today, because according to the present system, the Canadian people are told: Buy today yesterday's production with tomorrow's money. Why? Because the purchasing power, the economic system, the financial power do not correspond to the production power. The Créditistes want to make the purchasing power equal to the production power.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): In connection with this budget there are certain aspects upon which I should like to congratulate the government, and others upon which I will reserve judgment.

I should like to congratulate the government on the fact this is the first time in 13 years, I believe, when there have been no tax increases. I should also like to congratulate the government on the fact that this is the first time since 1956 that the government has balanced its budget and shown a surplus. This indicates good economic management. Third, I should like to congratulate the government on its attempt to hold the line in government spending and achieve greater efficiency in the public service.

The chief critic for the Conservative party declared that government spending was out of control. This is not the case. The figures show that expenditure which is purely under the control of the federal government increased by only 3.8 per cent last year, less than the total increase in the gross national product. It is true that the cost of programs which are shared with the provinces increased at a faster rate but, as we know, the federal government does not have full control over those programs. However, attempts are now being made to negotiate a system by which expenditures of this type can be better controlled.

I should further like to congratulate the government upon the priorities established in its spending programs. Looking at the estimates we can see the directions in which the government places its highest values. Provision is made for an increase of $52 million in the estimates of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion; there is an increase of $34 million in the sum available for programs for Indians and Eskimos; an increase of $21 million in the estimates for programs affecting manpower retraining; an increase of $12 million in provision for industrial incentives and development; the shift of $200 million into public housing, and an increase of $15 million in programs for external aid.

Examining these estimates we see that the emphasis has been placed on programs to relieve poverty both at home and abroad. Finally, I believe the government should be congratulated upon the initiative it took in producing incentives for the control of both water and air pollution. I should like to refer at this point to an article written by Mr. I. H. Asper. I do not often refer to his comments on tax and budgetary matters because I do not always agree with them, but what he had to say in his column on March 13 was significant. I say it was significant because most of the time Mr. Asper criticizes the government. I should like to quote from his column as it appeared in the Montreal Star.

> Budget night, 1970, produced no tax surprises but, in spite of that, the budget speech must be regarded as a most significant economic document. Its importance stems as much from what it implies as from what is says specifically.
> It is now more than six months since Prime Minister Trudeau warned the public that unless it voluntarily restrained its inflationary demands on the economy, the government would act. Anyone who failed to take that and his subsequent warnings seriously, will realize after last night's budget speech that the government means business.

Later, he writes:

> Mr. Benson has established several precedents with the third budget address he's delivered since assuming the finance portfolio. He becomes the first finance minister to have produced a balanced budget, indeed a large surplus, in thirteen years. As well, he now proposes to repeat that remarkable feat for 1970-71, indicating a budget surplus for next year in the order of $250 million.
> Still breaking records, he introduced the first budget since 1913 in which there were no tax rate adjustments. And of more current interest, he becomes the first minister to introduce consumer credit controls in peace time.

This comes from a man who usually criticizes the budgetary and tax policy of this government. On this occasion, he has a good word to say for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

I began by saying there were certain matters upon which I would reserve judgment. These have to do with inflation. I am not an economics expert. I suppose most of us in this House lack an expert knowledge in this field. We are guided by the initiatives which experts are suggesting around the world. In Canada, we find that the present government is taking many steps to control inflation. The Prices and Incomes Commission has been established. Initiative has been taken in the fields of fiscal policy, monetary policy and credit control. Despite this, we see that prices continue to increase.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have stated that if these measures did not work, and if the private sector did not co-operate with the public sector, it might be necessary to use other means of controlling inflation. I reserve judgment on this question because I am not an expert. I hope these measures are successful. I know we are doing as well in Canada as others are doing outside our borders, because the rate of inflation in Canada last year was slower than in many other countries in Europe, Latin America and elsewhere. The situation in the United States, for example, was worse.

The charge that the government has deliberately sought to create unemployment is ridiculous. No government wishes to cause unemployment. As a matter of fact, what this government is doing will prevent unemployment in the long run, that is to say it will lessen the possibility of unemployment on a far greater scale than exists at the present time. We find ourselves in an inflationary situation and limited in what we can do about it. Other countries of the world who are trying to tackle inflation are doing what we in Canada are doing. Some of the measures taken unfortunately cause temporary unemployment. But the choice, as the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have often said, is not between a cure for inflation now with no unemployment and long-term curtailment of inflation; the choice is between measures to control inflation with some unemployment now and massive unemployment in the future if these measures are not taken.

The critic from the New Democratic party stated that this approach was a false one, and he called the government stupid. As a matter of fact, he spent much of his time calling the Minister of Finance names. I fail to understand his approach. He almost seemed to suggest in his address that we can continue to increase the price of copper, wood products and many other things and not worry about world markets; that we have a monopoly of these resources and no matter what the price we will sell them abroad.

I would suggest that if we were to rely on this type of approach we would soon find ourselves in an extremely dangerous situation, with massive unemployment as a result of the loss of our markets abroad. In addition, we would be unable to compete against foreign products in Canada unless we raised high tariffs against them. Nobody wants to create unemployment. If we had been able to curtail inflation in past years, we would not have any unemployment. But the fact is that inflation is here and we have to take measures to combat it.

Unfortunately, a byproduct of such measures is a shifting that causes temporary unemployment. The government is taking measures to attempt to counteract this unemployment. The government is devoting greatly increased expenditure to regional economic expansion, to manpower retraining, to industrial incentives and other things. Although the anti-inflation measures may have the effect of bringing about certain unemployment in some parts of Canada, the government is still spending a great deal of money in other areas of the country in order to retrain workers who can be redirected into other employment and thus enable us to expand the economy in parts of Canada where it is slow.

Although the representatives of the three opposition parties were very critical of the government in this area, they really did not put forward any solutions. It is the same old thing: it is very easy to knock down and to criticize, but we find no Solomons on the other side of the House who have the solutions.

Mr. Comeau: You weren't listening.

Mr. Allmand: Yes, I was, and I took some notes. As a matter of fact, I do not see too many people from the opposition parties in the House at this moment. The member who gave the speech and was so critical of the government left as soon as he had finished.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege; the hon. member has no right to make that statement. I was called out for a telephone call and an interview, and when I left the House there were far more members on this side of the House than on the other side. Personal criticism will not get the hon. member anywhere, particularly when it is false.

Mr. Lundrigan: There are only 11 members on your side now; even the minister is not here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce has the floor.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for Edmonton West; I was not referring to him but to the critic from the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You mentioned me.

Mr. Allmand: I did not, but perhaps my hon. friend misunderstood. I referred to the member from the NDP who had criticized the government, and I said he was not here at the present time. In any event, I did not hear any solutions to these problems put forward from the opposite side of the House. These hon. members were very quick to criticize and to call the minister stupid and other names, but this type of remark will not be accepted by the Canadian people. The Canadian people have more sense than to do that.

The critic for the New Democratic Party suggested that the income tax exemption should be increased to $2,000 for a single person and to $4,000 for people who are married. He also suggested there should be tax cuts. At the same time, he suggested that old age pensions should be increased, as should other government programs. The Canadian people realize this cannot be done. They have a little more insight than the hon. member appreciates. They know you cannot reduce tax revenue, increase tax exemptions, have tax cuts and at the same time spend more money. You cannot, that is, unless you are prepared to continue to go further and further into the hole year by year, at the same time feeding the fires of inflation.

The same thing can be said about the amendment moved by the Conservative party. Their amendment criticized the fact there was no relief granted in the budget to people on lower incomes and those in receipt of old age security. On the other hand, their spokesman did not suggest any way to make up the money that would be lost by increasing these particular exemptions.

Mr. Comeau: Why not use the surplus?

Mr. Allmand: Well, I should like to hear some figures in this regard. It is easy to suggest increasing exemptions for those in receipt of old age security and on low incomes; but I did not hear the hon. member put forward any figures as to cost. Will the cost of these exemptions correspond with the surplus for which the government has budgeted? At the same time, can they be coordinated with other measures that are being put forward to fight inflation?

Since this is a debate on economic policy, I want to refer to economic conditions in the area of Montreal that I represent. There are many economic problems in Montreal and Quebec as a whole that are very distinct from other places in Canada. At the present time, investment in Montreal is down to a greater extent than it is in Ontario and in the west, and unemployment is higher.

Many opinions have been expressed as to the causes of this, and fairly general agreement has been reached on some of them. First of all, there is the present political instability, an instability that has existed for four or five years now. Second, we have had a great deal of lawlessness and violence in Montreal during the last three or four years. Third, there has been a disproportionate amount of labour unrest.

The first two causes—political instability and the amount of violence in Montreal—might diminish to a great extent if we could settle some of the political problems that will be tackled in the approaching provincial election to be held on April 29. It is my hope that Quebec can elect a strong majority government which will give high priority to economic problems and will enable us to forget for a while some of the nationalistic issues which have been put forward as solutions for a long time now.

Mr. Nystrom: We can hope!

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member is from Saskatchewan and I do not know if he is aware of the political situation in Quebec, but for too long have some of the political parties in Quebec been putting forward nationalistic solutions to Quebec's economic problems. I think we in Quebec will have to take the bull by the horns and try to strengthen the economic base and put a high priority on employment, technological change, and so forth, so as to make Quebec economically strong.

I also mentioned labour unrest, and Montreal seems to have been particularly plagued in this respect. We have had several strikes in essential services which have been extremely harmful to the public as a whole and also to the working class of Montreal. When policemen, firemen, hospital workers, teachers and postal workers go on strike, they not only risk the safety of the general public but also the safety of themselves and their families. They also harm the general image of their society and make it more difficult to attract investment and jobs.

Last year the Woods task force on labour relations tabled its report in the House of Commons. It was tabled approximately one year ago and it suggested several ways by which we might deal with harmful strikes and other shortcomings in collective bargaining procedures. Of particular importance in that report were the following measures. Dean Woods and his associates suggested measures to, first of all, protect the public against the abuses of unionism and, second, measures to protect the workers—the members of the union—against the executive or administration of unions and, third, measures to protect the unions themselves. I think all three areas are important if we are going to have a sound economy and a stable labour movement.

I should like to refer to some of the recommendations in that task force report because I thought it was an excellent report. To begin with, that report suggested that the Canadian Labour Relations Board be given greater discretion in determining the original bargaining unit, and changes in established bargaining units. It also suggested changes in union certification requirements and in successor rights provisions. If we had specific successor rights provisions in our law now, perhaps we would not be having some of the problems we do have in Montreal with the postal disputes. There, we have a classic case of problems which arise from succession rights of unions, where one bargaining unit is going to be replaced by five bargaining units, or five companies replacing one company.

Then, the task force had recommendations for the protection of the union members. It suggests union member protection from unreasonable initiation fees, dues and assessments; a "Bill of Rights" and independent judiciary for union members; regulation of conduct of ratification and strike votes; widened union accountability to employers, members and others, and regulation of union political expenditures.

Then there is a very good recommendation that there be a public interest disputes commission to assist in handling potential emergency disputes, and in particular to protect the interests of the public. Many people have felt that more should be done in this area. I do not know whether the public interest disputes commission would be the best way of protecting the public, but it is certain that in some labour disputes the public suffers more than either the employer or the employees and something should be done to protect them.

Another very good recommendation is that we have six months advance notice of industrial conversion causing permanent displacement. We have had several instances of that in Montreal. There was the Vickers case and there is a case now in Toronto—I forget the name of the company—where the workers in a tire factory are being laid off without sufficient notice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Dunlop.

Mr. Allmand: Yes, the Dunlop case. There have been two or three of these cases, and this is another provision that could be brought into our labour relations law. I understand that the government is working on the recommendations of the Woods task force report and that a new Labour Relations Act is being prepared. I think this is good and proper, Mr. Speaker, but I hope the government will take up some of the points to which I have referred and that we will see the legislation in this House very soon.

When I ask for new and better labour legislation, I do not presume that legislation alone will solve all our labour problems. When men go on strike or when they resort to violence we should understand that there are probably causes behind this behaviour which are not easily seen. We cannot always presume this action is based on labour greed or a quest for power by labour unions. We cannot make that presumption, as some people in this country have. When men resort to violence or illegal strikes, it is because in many cases they are afraid they are going to lose the jobs they have had for a long time or that they have a basic feeling of insecurity. They have seen other men who have worked for five, ten, 15 or 20 years on the job and then put out of work with hardly any notice and no compensation.

When men with families are faced with situations like these, they sometimes do not act as reasonable men. Sometimes they wildcat and sometimes cause violence. It is for this reason that in amending our labour legislation we have to try to put forward solutions which will not only deal with the symptoms but also with the causes. Of course, in dealing with these causes some of the action by the government will have to be in the area of social policy. I will deal with that in a few minutes.

I think one of the other reasons, and I referred to those, that we are having some economic difficulty in Quebec is the result of some of the excessive nationalism. When the Prime Minister put forward his charter on human rights a few years ago and suggested that it be included in the constitution, I supported that proposal with great enthusiasm because I felt this sort of thing was necessary to Canada. We have seen during over 100 years that the provinces, municipalities, school boards and even the federal government cannot be relied on to protect civic rights or basic minority rights. I think it is essential that we have such a charter of human rights in our constitution, not just for sociological purposes or human rights purposes, but also for economic purposes, and that is why I mentioned it during the debate on the budget.

Some hon. members today, and in their speeches outside the House, have asked why the budget did not deal with welfare measures, and other social programs. The budget is not a Speech from the Throne and it is not supposed to be a comprehensive legislative measure. The budget is supposed to deal with certain economic conditions. It reports on last year's economic record and looks forward to next year's economic legislation. It is not supposed to be a comprehensive legislative program.

Mr. Comeau: Oh, that is what it is.

Mr. Allmand: That is what it is, and I am surprised that members in the opposition should think otherwise. If you look at the budgets for the years when the Conservative party was in government you will see that they thought it was the same thing. They never pretended that it was a comprehensive legislative program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will he be sending a copy of this speech to Senator Croll?

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member refers to Senator Croll. Senator Croll was probably speculating on the budget. I was speculating on the budget. We were all speculating on the budget.

An hon. Member: Does he not know that these things are not dealt with in the budget?

Mr. Allmand: Sometimes they are and sometimes they are not. Some members in the opposition are putting forward the idea that the budget should deal in a comprehensive way with social welfare programs. That is not so. The government has already announced that it will bring forward a white paper on social policy this year, and it will deal with social welfare measures in a comprehensive way. I think this is proper. We have had enough stop-gap programs and ad hoc welfare measures with hon. members using these welfare measures as political footballs. I think once and for all we should have a concentrated and co-ordinated welfare program. That is what we expect in the white paper on social policy that will be brought forward during this session.

It is my hope that in bringing forward this white paper on social policy there will be increased pensions for the older people. I have said in this House many times that I felt the cost of living provisions should not be limited to 2 per cent but should follow the cost of living. Those of us who get increases in our wages and have some power over the economy in the sense we have unions or associations that can force our wages up, should be prepared to pay for old age pensioners and give them the full increase in the cost of living when there is one.

I also hope we will move from universal programs to selective programs. I know this is a controversial point but I feel if there is to be a greater impact on poverty, and a greater use of our money in social and welfare areas, we will have to give more to those who really need it and stop giving to people who do not need it. I do not believe this means it will be necessary to have a means test. I think we can do it in the same way we now administer the guaranteed income supplement, by a sort of negative tax system involving simply the filing of a return which can be based on one's reportable income.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is the same thing under another name.

Mr. Allmand: No, it is not the same thing. Under the means test system an administrator would be sent to a person's house. He would evaluate everything the person owned; he would look at the bank book and would check on all the person's property. The means test took account of the full value of the property. Many means tests are still based on this, but the guaranteed income supplement is not administered in that way.

There is a choice to be made. If we are to continue with a universal welfare program we will not be able to help many people who require help and therefore may have to make a sacrifice in some areas in order to help these people. I recommend to the minister who is drafting the white paper that we move into a selective welfare program. I do not think this need involve a means test. I would hope that the white paper on social policy would deal with youth and some of the terrible problems which confront youth today. We have a pension and guaranteed income supplement provisions for our older people, but many of our young people today are dropping out of high school because some of the courses do not suit their needs. Some are even dropping out of college. They do not qualify for the manpower program and do not have families on which to rely or do not wish to rely on their families. There is no adequate program for these people. Some of them live under terrible conditions. I think that if we have a comprehensive policy in respect of family allowances and pensions, we must also have something for the people over 18 years of age who have not yet become established.

It is sad to see how some of these young drop-outs and other people who have not yet been able to find themselves are living in our large cities. Some of them live in hovels; some of them have taken to the use of drugs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—External Affairs—Viet Nam war—sale of weapons to United States; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Agriculture—Investigation of removal of serial plates from imported tractors; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—Pollution—Availability to Committee of provincial briefs on control.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ramble on for 15 or 20 minutes and hopefully in that 15 or 20 minutes place on the record two or three feelings I have as a young Canadian who is very concerned about the direction of our country and the future of the young people living in Canada as well as about present generations. I listened to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and found it difficult to realize he comes from one of the poor provinces of Canada. Perhaps in the last few months a great economic revolution has taken place in that province and things have really improved to the point where he can now stand in his place and feed us the kind of staid, old, political garbage we would expect from an older, staid, retired politician and not from a relatively young Canadian.

I believe that earlier the hon. member alluded to the fact there were not a great many members in the House. I wish to draw attention to a fact. The fact is that at the present moment I am taking part in a debate and will be speaking to a House in which there is only one minister present. None of the big guns are present. None of the people who have designed the present policies which are being imposed upon the Canadian nation are present. None of the people are present who should hear what members have to say, including the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is not here. I am sure he will not waste his time tomorrow reading my speech and yet he does not even come to hear me. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is not present. The second minister of the great Trudeau trio, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) is not present and neither is his sidekick the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) is not present. I am trying to point out that these are the people who make the decisions and not one is in the House to hear hon. members present their observations.

Apparently I must have touched a very sore spot because some members who seldom rise from their places are a little roiled. Even the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) is a little annoyed that I made the observation I did. I should like to see the minister, as a good maritimer, stand in his place and take issue with the Benson budget.

The major reason I stand in my place today to speak on the budget is the fact that I think the whole effort of the government reflects a great deal of insensitivity to the average Canadian. I feel, for example, that the Minister of Finance, perhaps not on his own but through prodding by some of the heartless members of the government, is either deliberately directing Canada along a suicidal road to economic disaster or is not aware of the direction in which the country is being led because of a political game. I mention a political game because some people say the government is playing a game of calculated politicking in which they will put on the brakes after starving many Canadians economically for two years. For two years, they will starve the people economically as a deliberate political move and in the last year of their tenure they will give some form of benefit in order to ensure their re-election.

I feel very seriously we are headed in the direction of man-made depression. We have had a depression before. I shall allude to the two hon. members from Calgary because I understand they are very familiar with the depression years and could tell me in great detail why the depression took place. They know the economic and other circumstances over which we had no control. I am not sure that is the situation at the moment. I feel that if I could get the Minister of Finance to read my speech tomorrow he would agree with me that my province is paying a very much higher price for the anti-inflationary policies of the government than perhaps any other province in Canada. We are literally bleeding to death as a result of the policies of this present government.

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we are getting government by illusion—and the Canadian people are becoming pretty disillusioned with this government by illusion. Let me point out to hon. members, those who want to listen, some of the kinds of images that are being created, some of the impressions and illusions being created in order to justify the policies of the government. For example, the Minister of Finance indicates that our major problem is inflation and that we have to continue to fight inflation using as our main tool the creation of unemployment. He says we must do this if we are not to have a recession. But I believe that somewhere in his budget speech he indicated that we have not affected the inflationary situation. We have not put the brakes on, and we have not slowed down the increase in the cost of living. He did not have to tell us this because it has been proven by the facts.

Then in his speech he turned around and argued that if we had not done this we would have had more inflation, with a greater tendency toward a recession. So the minister admits that we have not licked inflation, but nevertheless he says we have to continue on the road he has mapped out, because if we do not, then no one can imagine the consequences. Members of the government are trying to create a scapegoat, a dragon that really does not exist. They are trying to convince the Canadian people that beating inflation has to be the major objective of the government.

Let me mention another illusion which is being created by the government. I only wish the Minister of Finance were in the chamber to answer my next observation. The government indicates that our policy has to be anti-inflationary. Why does it? What is the major reason for that? In a well calculated television program yesterday, the Minister of Finance said:

> —If you are really going to help the people on fixed incomes, the people who are not organized in labour, the ordinary people in the country, the way you have to help them is through controlling inflation.

In other words, he says that if you are really going to help the small, poor, seasonally employed, average Canadian, the fellow on a fixed or low income, you have to do this by fighting inflation. We have to put on the brakes and slow down things. But the minister did not tell the full story. He did not say that when you do that, what you are doing with the man on a small fixed income is putting him out of a job altogether. An hon. member opposite shakes his head. The hon. member is not listening, or he is not very smart, not very bright. I am sure the hon. member does not want to say he is not able to see what I am saying. He will not face the facts.

The government is saying to the nation, "We are setting up this kind of battle; we are getting our troops mobilized in order to help the little man." Mr. Speaker, the way they are helping the little man is putting him out of work. Right now he is paying too much for his whistle, paying too much for his goods. The Minister of Veterans Affairs is the only minister in the House at the moment. I would like him to repeat this question to the Minister of Finance: Isn't it better to pay a little higher price for your produce than to have no income at all? The alternative is not to give the average Canadian any income, but this is the choice the minister is making. Yet he still tries to tell the average Canadian, "This whole battle we are now waging is being fought on behalf of you, the average Canadian." This is so false as to be completely untrue. It is totally false.

I say to hon. members opposite, don't come down to my province and tell the 20 per cent of the people who are unemployed there that the Minister of Finance is breaking his heart trying to solve their problems. Don't tell the people of the Atlantic provinces, who are now suffering 12 per cent unemployment, that this is the reason for the great effort on the part of the Minister of Finance. And don't try to tell the 6 per cent of Canadians at large who are presently unemployed that this is the basic objective of the anti-inflationary policy. Let us just look at this again for a moment, Mr. Speaker. The people in Canada for whom the anti-inflationary policy is designed are being put out of work. That is the way they are being helped.

The people in the $10,000, $12,000, $15,000 and $20,000 a year bracket, the professional people, the trained people, the people in the highly industrialized areas of Canada, are not affected by this policy. The seasonally unemployed are affected by it, the untrained people, the average small farmer. As a matter of fact, the average small farmer will have lots of time next year to sit down, bite his finger nails and watch the Canadian-produced television programs provided by the Secretary of State.

We must think of these people. We have the fishermen to consider; we have the people who have been forced out of work by automation. Forced redundancy I call it. Just look at what the Department of Transport did in my own town of Gander. They laid off four people with 25 years' service each and told them to go to Manpower. They could just as well have told them to go to hell.

An hon. Member: Is there any difference?

Mr. Lundrigan: I cannot tell you the constituency of the hon. member who sits across the way. Lots of Grits sit around there on the backbenches coaching each other from their seats. I would be very interested to hear what they have to say in debate; and if they need somebody to give them a hand, I will write some of their speeches for them.

Now I am going to take issue with the third illusion, which really burns me as an eastern

Canadian. In that television program yesterday the Minister of Finance was asked what would be the effect of his anti-inflationary policy on the slow growth areas of the country. He said that we should not worry about this. I am paraphrasing his answer. He said that we have all the answers to that one because we have everything set up. He said:

> I certainly hope that the steps we are taking will mean that the unemployment won't be concentrated as it has been in the past in certain areas of Canada.

A little later on when asked a similar question, he said:

> We certainly are concerned. We've put into retraining programs, for example, tremendous amounts of money in order to help the people in the Maritimes—

All the way through his budget speech he referred to the great regional development program. Mr. Speaker, let me just set the record straight because the minister has deliberately misled central Canada. He has not misled us, because we are aware of the facts of the situation with our 20 per cent unemployment; but he has misled central Canada and western Canada into believing that the government right now has all kinds of money floating into the Maritime region. Hopefully, he means the Atlantic region including Newfoundland, the region suffering most because of the slowdown in the economy.

This kind of statement the minister is making is totally untrue. First of all, we had the establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It took a year for the government to set it up, and now it has come forward with the industrial incentives act. That piece of legislation, since the department was created, has turned over $200,000 into my province, which is just about enough to build a good bin in which to store some of the surplus western wheat.

Now, the day before the minister introduced his budget, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion announced, "We are going to put $200 million into the economy of Canada in slow growth areas." There will be $200 million to solve the regional disparity problems of Canada. That statement was made the day before the budget in order to justify the Minister of Finance getting up in this House and going to great lengths to try to convince Canadians they should not worry about the slow growth areas because the government has special programs for those areas. This is totally contrary to the facts.

Let me place on the record a couple of illustrations to point out to the House the reason why I say the minister is not stating the facts when he makes this kind of statement, when he is feeding the House this kind of political garbage in order to try to justify his own inadequacies and the inadequacies of this government. For example, the proposed fisheries budget has been cut by 15 per cent. This is the budget which affects eastern and western Canada to the greatest extent, the two extreme areas of the country. Last year approximately 50 per cent of the wardens of the rivers of the east coast of Canada were scheduled for lay-off, and they were the people who supervised the great salmon runs.

Again under fisheries, another illustration of the way the budget amd the fiscal and monetary policies are applying equally to all of Canada will be appreciated especially by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). It is the kind of thing I have seen so often since I came here. For the past 70 or 80 years $3,000 has been allocated to an annual fish fair at Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. This year the minister has tried to justify the elimination of this grant on the basis of the restrictions on our economy. We have had cut-backs to the point where pollution has been allowed to destroy resources in one part of Newfoundland on the basis that fiscal policies could not justify expenditures in this area. In the area of protection of our resources and the pillaging of our fisheries by foreign fleets, the minister says that we cannot get protection, we cannot get boats and planes because the money is not available.

I wish the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) were here so that he could justify the way he is literally slaughtering the fishermen of all the provinces of Atlantic Canada. I could name, if I had the time, places like Musgrave Harbour, Fogo, Twillingate, Green Bay and Badgers Quay—all beautiful fishing areas—and a dozen places where they have great fishing resources and practically every individual depends on fish. Ever since the beginning of Confederation federal governments have been rather generous in the allocation of funds to provide fishing facilities. But this year the minister says, "You have the new fish marketing act now and the facilities are justified; but we are sorry, our budget will not permit it and we are not going to give you the facilities you need even though they are justified."

In my own town the Department of Transport laid off four people each with 25 years of service. These men had fought overseas with the armed forces and had then come back and joined the department. First they worked for the provincial government and then it merged with the federal government, fortunately or unfortunately, but after 20 years of work with the Department of Transport these men were laid off. They were told to go and see the Manpower office which might be able to find work for them up around the coast somewhere. Again, I have received a copy of some of the proposals made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) for putting the airport aspects of the department under a Crown corporation. One of the reasons he came through with this idea was to indicate that he feels that airports should pay as they go.

We have one of the greatest air terminals in Canada, the azimuthal centre of aviation in the western world, you might say. It is recognized internationally for its facilities and its location, and in some ways it is the aviation centre of the western world. Here we have landing fees four times as high as those in Bangor, Maine, and the minister threatens to increase them. I have written him in detail showing that if the government were less greedy about landing fees and more interested in promoting international aviation in Newfoundland, a lot of the economic ills in the whole east-central part of my riding could be solved. I guess I am just wasting words in mentioning this matter because there is not much interest in it.

I could mention parks, but the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) may want to develop the matter of lack of government initiative in this regard. I could mention the Post Office. We are losing 200 post offices, though we are saving a few because apparently it is cheaper to keep them open than to close them. The cutback in service is so bad now in my province, in the whole federal area, that we are wondering whether the terms of our agreement in 1949 really permitted the federal government to back out of its contract. I wonder if we have any contract, any constitutional arrangement with this government of Canada, or if it is acting unilaterally with little or no regard for parts of Canada such as my province.

Referring to the Manpower Department, somewhere in the budget speech the Minister of Finance said that a lot of money is being spent on retraining and a lot is going into the Manpower Department in order to help people overcome their inabilities or incapabilities as workers. In some Manpower offices in Atlantic Canada there is a restriction on the number of phone calls officers may make. If they have to phone a fellow who lives 30 miles out of town to tell him about a job, sometimes they have second thoughts about it because of their budget. Mr. Speaker, I have talked about several illusions and now I would like to refer to something else that is bothering me. In his presentation of the budget—if you want to call it that—at page 4741 of Hansard of March 12, the Minister said that the request to the chartered banks to have special regard for borrowers in the less prosperous areas of the country is another way in which the government is helping the disadvantaged areas of Canada. He said to Canadian people across the nation, to the people in the galleries and the press that we have special programs to set up to help people in the disadvantaged areas. What a lot of nonsense! I suppose if I were to say that the minister was lying through his teeth I would be ruled out of order.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't think so; not under these conditions.

Mr. Lundrigan: I suppose if I were to tell the truth and make that statement I would be ruled out of order, so I will refrain from making it. This Benson statement, is a nasty thing to present to the people of Canada. Last year, under the Small Business Loans Act we received three loans in the province of Newfoundland while 841 went to the other provinces. Yet the minister tells everybody that the government has special monetary policies to help ease the credit situation in Atlantic Canada. What a lot of nonsense, Mr. Speaker!

An hon. Member: How many applications were there?

Mr. Lundrigan: The hon. member asks how many applications there were. Well, two or three days ago a young Newfoundland promoter came to my office and indicated that he went to the bank to negotiate a loan but the bank refused him a loan under the Small Business Loans Act and offered him a demand loan, the sort which they can recall any time. Every single day members in this House get letters from fishermen who cannot get loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act because the government has not issued any instructions to the chartered banks to ease credit.

The minister speaks about the special arrangements being made for the province of Newfoundland and the east coast of Canada, but actually the same policies apply right across the nation; they apply to every nook and cranny of Atlantic Canada to just the same extent as they apply to Ontario. The minister no doubt says to the people of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta, "You will have to excuse us and accept our policies, because we are doing everything we can to meet the needs of the people on the east coast." What utter nonsense to tell our people that, when 20 per cent of our population down east is unemployed.

Let us consider for a moment the white paper on taxation. One of its major points relates to the rate at which corporate profits are to be taxed. As a result of that provision, protection enjoyed by small businesses and enterprises is to be lifted. Mr. Speaker, that will kill our businesses in Atlantic Canada. All our businesses are small. We do not have the large corporate clusters they have in Ontario or the industrial complexes of other parts of Canada. Our businesses are small, and they will be ruined. We have many mines in our area. The mining industry is one of our great resource industries. And what will the Minister of Finance do to the mining industry of Canada? He will abolish the so-called three-year tax holiday and mining entrepreneurs undertaking exploration will pay taxes in the same way all other industries pay them.

The mortality rate of investments in exploration ventures is tremendous. The minister will reduce the incentive to nil, because mining entrepreneurs will have little reason to undertake exploration. Let us look at the construction industry. We have a little construction industry in our area. The minister may say that only the industry in Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia is being hit with the two-year depreciation provision and that that provision does not apply to other provinces. That is true. However, the fact of the matter is that capital cost allowances restrictions apply to the same extent in my province as they do in Ontario. The provisions respecting capital gains will apply to our province just as to all other provinces. The provision regarding taxes on private homes is the same. Frankly, I think the Minister of Finance is talking a lot of political garbage because he is feeding the people of Canada with information which, I submit, is not factually accurate.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Minister of Finance telling the people of Canada everything the government is doing for the people in my province. The result is that those who were not quite poverty stricken are now completely poverty stricken. How can I explain to the people in the town where I grew up what the minister means? The town has 2,200 people and they are the most industrious in Canada. It used to be that when you could not get work in Newfoundland you went to Toronto. But the people no longer do that; there is no work in Toronto. Then the minister tells us what great policies this government has. If I had as much red blood in my veins as I should have, I would be across the House after him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. gentleman to tell him his time has expired.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I, with the consent of the House, continue for a moment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce read his speech in which he touched on the opposition's point of view. At any rate, he read his speech and suggested to the House that the government has no alternative except to follow its present course. I see he is rising on a point of order—no doubt to say he did not read the speech.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that I did not read my speech. Perhaps if the hon. member read a speech now and then we should hear something a bit more constructive.

Mr. Lundrigan: The difference between us, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. member speaks with his lips but I speak from deeper down.

Mr. Richard: Really, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. member who is very excited is the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard), someone I have not seen in the House before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) has the floor.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I say in conclusion a word about inflation. Canada is not the most highly industrialized nation in the nation; actually, we in Atlantic Canada are living in a relatively underindustrialized part of the world. I suppose what the government is doing is correct, if you look at the matter in a bookish sort of way. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should never have entered politics but remained an academic: he could have stayed in some library and written books. There may be theoretical justification for his policies, but what are the facts? We are a young country, a developing country. We have great resources which need to be developed. We need incentives to permit every Canadian entrepreneur, every Canadian with a bit of backbone, to develop our resources and our industries. Certainly this is not the time to put on the brakes. I am afraid that our muscle may turn to fat if the government continues with its present policies.

Mr. Richard: Not at all.

Mr. Lundrigan: I suspect the hon. member will wish to speak after supper, Mr. Speaker. I shall be here to listen to him.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark and Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, as all hon. members know, in this budget debate we have freedom to cover the vast range of human concern with which a government of a vigorous nation must concern itself in a technological and complicated age. As always, we must recognize that within this House, as well as within our society generally, the old adage applies: A lot of today's frustration is caused by a surplus of simple answers coupled with a tremendous shortage of simple problems. Of this fact I am well aware.

There are no slick solutions to society's ills and no glib analysis within it. Those who assume that we can revert to a sort of primeval simplicity are still clinging to a rear-view mirror view of the world. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has pointed out in an excellent manner the basic concern that must face all hon. members who deal seriously with the budget issue; that is, if we want to spend more we have to tax more. We cannot simply demand more advantages from government without facing the situation of more taxation, or vice versa. I will not make any more reference to that aspect of the matter because it has already been dealt with by other hon. members. The hon. member seated directly in front of me did that capably earlier this afternoon.

It is inevitable in any society that the majority of the populace, if given a choice, will prefer to cling to that which is familiar, the familiar laws and traditions, even if they know them to be unjust, rather than risk the new because the new is always the unknown. Marshall McLuhan has reminded us that we are always one step behind in our view of the world because we are benumbed by any new technology.

Because of today's terrific speed-up of information, we have a chance to apprehend and to predict. Certainly the most exciting aspect of all is to influence the environmental forces controlling us and thus, in a certain sense, win back control of our own destinies. I should not use the term "win back" because I firmly believe if we look through the pages of human endeavour as far as history is concerned, we see that man has never controlled his own destiny: there have always been forces and factors beyond our control. But we do have technological levers and tools now at our disposal which give us a great potential to direct our own future.

I wish to spend some time referring to a few of the frustrations and issues which face a backbencher such as myself and perhaps also backbenchers on the other side of the House; indeed, some of them may apply to this country as a whole. First, I want to put on the record that in my opinion Members of Parliament from all parties work far harder, have more responsibilities and more opportunities for creative participation in policy than is generally believed, understood or known to the Canadian public. Second, there is in Canada a kind of a schizophrenic attitude toward elected members. On the one hand, the public seems to assume that Members of Parliament are a useless, self-seeking, lazy lot; on the other hand, we are confronted with the attitude of: Why don't you do more. Why don't you lobby, research and plan more? Why don't you participate more in the constituency, read more letters and representations, be better informed and prevent old errors from being perpetuated, stop favouritism, help us, defend motherhood and fight evil, etc.? All of these are important. I am sure all hon. members agree with this.

It is at this precise point that the stark irony comes into the situation. To pursue all of the opportunities and responsibilities that come to all members of this very distinguished chamber, we are granted the great machinery or equipment of one small cubbyhole for an office, a telephone and one secretary. We are then told by our constituents: Go to it fellows; you need to change the world.

In my own case I have upward of 60,000 constituents spread over more than 2,000 square miles. As hon. members know, there are approximately 17 major standing committees where, if time and research permitted, an hon. member could make a real and genuine contribution. To this we must add the numerous caucus study committees where a backbench Member of Parliament can have a real input in policy.

We are desperately limited in the information services that are available to communicate with our constituencies. It is difficult for a member to find time and indeed secretarial help to send sufficient information and to write an adequate number of letters to constituents. More limited still are the duplicating equipment facilities which must be used for providing information to constituents. We are not provided with proper equipment for this challenging and creative job. As far as communicating with the public is concerned, we are to all intents and purposes at the mercy of newspapers, in rural areas weeklies and in other areas dailies, and other media.

It is necessary for the newspapers to make a profit: they are running a business. These newspapers are governed by editors who are not even here. They are not elected and are therefore not responsible to the people in the same sense that we are. They cannot possibly adequately assess what is going on here unless we are to assume that remoteness from familiarity with the facts makes for objectivity. These are some of the frustrations I experience as a Member of Parliament.

Some hon. members know my professional background was as an agriculturist and, latterly, as a clergyman. The facilities in so far as equipment and space for secretarial staff that were available to me as a clergyman were far superior to those which are available to me as a Member of the House of Commons. I am sure hon. members who came from distinguished law offices and other professions had the benefit of even better facilities. If we are going to complain that there are inadequacies in the system, there falls upon our shoulders immediately the necessity of suggesting some solutions.

I would therefore, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, suggest ways in which this situation could be improved. It seems to me that every Member of Parliament requires at least the following personal staff if participatory democracy is to continue to flourish in Canada. First, each of us needs a top-notch secretary—most of us have one already—plus a pool upon which to draw as necessary. And there is a sense in which this, too, is already available. Second, each of us needs a full-time constituency worker to follow up in more careful detail the requests which come from individuals and groups in our constituencies. Third, each of us needs a top-flight research worker to prepare background information in order that members can make knowledgeable and useful contributions to debates in this House and to the work of the committees. I want to identify myself, first of all, with this need. Perhaps my speeches and contributions demonstrate this need.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McBride: I am willing to recognize this. It is up to hon. members opposite to judge their own speeches themselves. If we are to take seriously the mood I have found around the House of Commons to the effect that major decisions ought to be made by those who are responsible to the people, namely, by those who hold seats in this chamber, we must be willing to make this research assistance available to all hon. members. I should like to know—and this is a rhetorical question—how one can make an informed decision in the complete absence of research staff.

In the House committees we are faced with 17 areas of major concern. Few of us can ever expect to attend all these committee meetings. I myself belong to three committees of the House at the moment and I have reached the conclusion that an hon. member can only do a really useful job on one committee. This means that when I go to my constituency and meet with people who have a wide variety of concerns, I find myself abysmally ill-informed about at least 14 of those major fields of interest with which the House is dealing. I suggest to hon. members opposite that some of them may be equally ill-informed.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question, if he would permit me to do so.

Mr. McBride: I would be pleased, after I am finished. I do not want to sacrifice my time; the hon. member will appreciate this.

Mr. Yewchuk: Does that mean I have to listen to your whole speech?

Mr. McBride: Yes. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to understand how the myth has grown up that backbenchers have no opportunity to put forward their views. The sad truth, and I use that adjective purposely, is that these opportunities have become so numerous that the House and its committees are constantly subjected to views which demonstrate only one thing, namely, that most members have not had the time or the opportunity to place themselves in command of the relevant facts before offering their contributions to posterity via the Hansard record. Again, I do not hesitate to identify myself as one of the offenders here, because I hardly ever go to a committee meeting confident that I have done sufficient homework before I attend, or before I speak in the House. I suppose this occasion is no exception.

On December 15 of the present session—and here I turn to another subject—I was privileged to place a motion before this House for debate. The report of the debate appears at page 1981 and following pages of Hansard. The motion read as follows:

> That in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of including the counties of Renfrew and Lanark as a suitable and necessary extension of that portion of northeastern Ontario which is now a designated area under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act.

As the House knows, last Wednesday this motion, together with other efforts put forth by my hon. friend from Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins) and myself, bore fruit. Renfrew, Arnprior and Pembroke were declared special areas under the legislation establishing the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. For the purposes of this legislation, a special area is one in which special action is needed to promote economic expansion and social adjustment because employment opportunities are exceptionally inadequate either within the area itself or within the larger region of which the area forms a part.

[Mr. McBride.]

Renfrew county is the largest county in Ontario. It has a significant potential in two directions especially—forest-based industries and tourism. It was primarily to enable the development of the forest-based industries that these locations were declared special areas. The benefits in growth and employment which will now accrue to the whole county will be limited only by the extent to which local, county and municipal representatives together with present and prospective industries take advantage of the opportunities which have now come to our region as a result of a lot of people working hard over a long period of time. The over-all development plans which the county of Renfrew had developed over the past few years played no small part in assisting in this decision.

So last week was a big week in Renfrew county, and even the most entrenched anti-French bigot is forced today to have second thoughts before continuing to decry the fact that this country has among its leaders men like our aggressive and capable Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McBride: Hon. members will immediately recognize that my motion of December 15 referred to "Lanark and Renfrew". So while I may be hero for a day in the Renfrew portion of my constituency, quite the reverse would naturally follow in Lanark. In Lanark county I am in the unhappy position of being like a parent who has two children, both of whom need new shoes, and who is able only to afford new shoes for one. The result is that one child is happy and the other is not. I suppose this is the inevitable problem of both a parent and a politician. To win half the case, or to get one pair of shoes only, is only half the battle and the needs of the child who remains shoeless must now receive all the more attention.

I turn now to another subject—Canada's participation in international population control programs. Most hon. members are aware, I suppose, that the Canadian Development Agency has begun talks with the International Planned Parenthood Federation, with officials of the United Nations organization which is concerned with control of population and with the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, as well as with the World Bank and other organizations which support programs of this type. Also, the CIDA has enlisted the services of Dr. G.

F. Brown as special adviser in public health and population. Dr. Brown, as again many members of the House will know, is known internationally for his work in family planning programs.

There has been some discussion in this chamber, and considerable discussion outside the chamber during the last week or so, in connection with the Canadian contribution to the United Nations Fund for Population Activities. The agency has very recently been reorganized, and only now is the United Nations Fund for Population Activities in a position to accept an expanded role and the increased contributions to its work that will come.

Hon. members of the House might be interested to know that to date there are very few countries that have made contributions to the fund. Among those that have not yet contributed are Great Britain, Japan, the Scandinavian countries and, as most of us are aware, Canada. I know that this matter is under consideration but as a member of this chamber I would urge in the strongest possible terms that this government on behalf of Canada co-operate with and participate in the program of this United Nations agency. It is of significance to note that the government is about to bring down a statement on foreign policy in this House, and in this connection I would urge upon the government that this co-operation form an integral part of that over-all statement.

Finally, turning to a fourth and very brief aspect of the remarks that I want to put before the House in this budget debate, it seems to me that some of the mail that members have been receiving—I cannot speak for others but I can speak for myself—on such issues as the government's proposals for tax reform suggest some things that really are not true. I am referring to the fact that I frequently hear it said that there are certain corporations—corporations that declare that they are small in size but which perhaps more accurately should be described as medium-sized or even large corporations—which insist that they are the legs upon which Canada has moved forward. For example, it is said that there are the institutions that have made this country what it is.

Last evening it was my privilege to be in the town of Carleton Place to participate in a forum on some of the social needs of our nation. Those present saw a film that had been produced by the National Film Board on the subject of poverty. As we all know, one person in five in this country lives in poverty. My participation last evening in this forum made it very easy for me to get up and say that here we had classically demonstrated the paradox of our time. Many of us have entered politics, working at the endeavours that we now pursue, precisely because we were unhappy with the kind of Canada that exists. We think that things ought to be changed, that we ought not to live in a nation where one in five are poor. I suggest that those who want to take credit for building the nation should also recognize that they have to take credit for building it all—the bad as well as the good. They must at least be sufficiently open-minded to admit that there are areas that can and must be improved.

One of the things that has inspired in me the most cynicism since I have been a member of the House of Commons is the recognition that there is an incredible lack of vision among some Canadians. When it comes to doing such a puny, minor thing as attempting to move the tax burden so that it is more adequately based on ability to pay, taking a slight piece of the load off the shoulders of people of low income and placing it—obviously—on the shoulders of those of higher income, the failure of many people in various parts of Canada to support this move, one that I think ought to be supported by all people of vision, is nothing short of appalling.

Those of us who believe there is a basic need in this country for legislation that will more fairly reflect the concerns of an enlightened people in an enlightened age also believe that such issues as the white paper are open to discussion. But we are not in agreement with the kind of hysterical reaction from some sources by people who label this attempt to shift the burden of our laws as somehow extremist. Sometimes we are called fascists, sometimes we are called communists. We are even accused of trying to sell out the state, and all kinds of weird and wonderful things. I for one want the record to indicate that it is high time we in Canada showed a little more concern for those who cannot protect themselves.

The reason I became a member of the Liberal Party is that I am convinced that in a technological age you cannot have true and small "c" conservatism because it is an anachronism that cannot work. In today's society you cannot adopt the philosophy of every man for himself and the devil take the hind-most. Some kind of adjudication must be made. There must be a referee, because all men are not equal. Each man is not able to care for himself.

It also seems to me that in a society such as ours you cannot expect a corporation or some other institution to pick up this particular ball; it must be done by the government. It remains a case of how best and how most creatively and usefully government can perform its responsibility of redistributing in a very real sense national income so that all Canadians have a share in the wealth that is Canada.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member now permit the question I wanted to ask him? I was interested in the list of things that he needed as a member in order that he is as well served here as he was when a minister. Would he care to add to the list a small pulpit that he could place on his desk when he speaks?

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I recall that, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) brought down his budget in this House last June, he prefaced his speech with the sage observation that the budget was not calculated to increase his popularity. Needless to say, his prediction has been borne out in full measure. No doubt the minister was thinking about the occasion when he omitted that little gem of redundancy from his speech last Thursday. However, I would suggest that the net result has been the same.

If I might say so, the type of approach exemplified by this so-called budget should cause government members some concern in respect to their negative public image, as well as some concern over past and present failures in the field of human relations. In fact, the failure of the government to present legislation that is people-oriented and to comprehend that they are dealing with human beings is causing all of us a great deal of concern. This concern is beginning to spread across the country at large and does not just involve members on this side of the House.

If I may return to the budget, I find that the most difficult task with which I am faced is how to make a serious assault on a frivolous target. For some time I have been faced with a difficult choice: Is this a frivolous document, or is it a facetious document?

It turned out to be an easy choice after all. Since frivolity requires a lesser degree of expertise than facetiousness, this must be a frivolous document. Nowhere in this budget can I find an indication that the government is reform-minded to the slightest degree. Nowhere in this budget can I find even a slight indication that this government plans to institute the spending reforms in its own house that it is trying to impose on all other segments of the Canadian economy. I do find, however, a very strong indication that the Minister of Finance is perpetuating that old formula perfected in the United States by Franklin Roosevelt, of tax and spend, tax and spend.

Where are the solutions to the real problems facing this country? Where are the indications or even subtle innuendoes that this government plans to really come to grips with inflation, unemployment, urban blight, the wheat glut and the scores of other problems that are robbing Canadians of the full life? Are they buried deep in the budget, out of sight? Are they in some kind of mysterious code? If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, then I suggest this document should be written again in clear and concise language.

The truth is that there are no answers, there are no real indications that the answers ever will be forthcoming, at least not in this document. We are one of the world's great wheat producing countries. Wheat is a staple in the diet of a large portion of the world's population. In short, there are markets for wheat in the world. I should qualify that statement. There are markets for United States wheat, there are markets for French wheat, there are markets for Australian wheat and there are also markets for Argentinian wheat, but there do not seem to be any markets this government can come up with for Canadian wheat.

What has this government done about getting Canada back into the mainstream of world wheat markets? The most recent effort they have made in that direction you would not believe, but let me relate it anyway. Our government decided that first of all we had several hundred millions of bushels of wheat stored in all available storage space and on the ground, and that we could not find a buyer. So the government decided that our farmers should stop growing wheat. I should add that the government did do one other thing about the wheat problem. They are prosecuting a few desperate farmers for daring to trade a few bushels of wheat for some meat and potatoes and other necessary supplies.

[Mr. McBride.]

How long will it take the government to interpret the true situation and take corrective action in respect of our wheat and grain problems? The Canadian Wheat Board appears to be powerless to act on the problem. Their terms of reference were drawn in another era. Our grading system belongs to another era. I should say it was indeed welcome news to hear that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) had decided to take a short step toward correcting the wheat problem by introducing to the Grain Act amendments which are so long overdue.

The policy of this government appears to amount to sending out monthly cheques to the grain storage houses. This policy of storage in favour of selling has some serious and disturbing overtones. Can you imagine a Canadian industrial policy based on our agricultural policy? Can you picture warehouses throughout the country filling up year after year with automobiles, or warehouses bulging at the seams with flashlight batteries, stoves, refrigerators, radio and television sets? Do not think that this analogy is too far-fetched. We produce consumer goods to sell, so storage is no real problem.

An hon. Member: Cut back on production.

Mr. MacInnis: Why don't you cut back on the production of your tongue for a while?

Mr. Schumacher: I would suggest that the fact remains that our agricultural industry exists to sell these products, not to store them. If we have a critical problem of storage in this area, we have a serious problem that begs an answer. Some hon. members might feel that we have talked long enough about wheat and that we should get on with other things. I agree with that up to a point, but until we solve the problem and until we are able to get back our rightful share of world markets for agricultural products we have an obligation to keep talking, and we have an obligation to lay the governments consummate ineptitude out in the open and let the Canadian people pass judgment.

This budget appears to be designed to accomplish two objectives, both of which are suspect and both of which contain hidden and sinister portents of disaster. The first purpose was loudly proclaimed by the finance minister as a master-plan whereby the government and all other segments of the economy would cut back drastically on spending; that is, the government would cut back on expenditures and the private sector would cut back on buying. This, he admitted, would slow up the economic growth of the country and after a while, presto—no more inflation. Everyone would be suddenly healthier. The minister appeared to be surprised when he was told that the Canadian economy was already in a state of decline. After these last few years of Liberal rule, surely the last thing we should have to do now is artificially depress the Canadian economy.

There was no mention of housing in the budget, so presumably after a period of time there will suddenly be houses. There was no mention of poverty, so obviously everybody will be suddenly richer. There was no mention of wheat sales in this document, so we are left to conjure up visions of foreign buyers beating a path to our shores. These are beautiful visions, and I find it difficult to pull myself away from the intent of this document and back to the mundane world of reality. The realities, though, are quite different from this government's fantasies and pipe dreams. The reality of honest government is quite different from the tactic of bulldozing ill-conceived legislation through this House with completely misguided power.

The second hidden danger in the budget became immediately apparent when the finance minister proudly proclaimed that there were no new taxes or tariffs in this document. Even those guileless souls who dwell in the nether world of Liberal economic philosophy would not tumble to this little gambit. Why would those fearless plunderers on the other side of this House fail to take advantage of this golden opportunity to thrust their hands deeper into the pockets of the Canadian taxpayer, this flowing, bottomless well from whence all riches flow? Why should the Liberal tax grabbers spare the uncomplaining hordes of plundered and harried Canadian taxpayers? I suggest this is because there is a bigger haul in the offing; there is a bigger pot at the end of a brighter and gaudier rainbow. The lavish fiscal policies of this government should not be supported by a token gesture, by a mere several hundred million dollars. They are even now reeling under the public outcry over the scope of that iniquitous tax white paper, and this budget is calculated to smooth the ruffled feathers.

It is calculated to deceive the unsuspecting victim into believing that he has been reprieved that that great federal tax axe is not going to fall. What a change of pace it would have been, what a refreshing breath of sanity, if the government had announced that instead of the sham of offering "X" number of dollars to the farmers not to grow wheat it would use that money to subsidize the Canadian wheat market. What a stroke of genius it would have been had the government chosen to do the obvious.

Under the proposed system, called LIFT—which I believe translates into Lower Inventory for Tomorrow—we will end up with the same wheat we now have in abundance, plus the reduced new crop that will be harvested in the next season. Those acres not under cultivation will be in serious danger from the elements. I should not have to remind even the members of this House from eastern Canada of the effects of the last dust bowl tragedy that befell the Prairie provinces some years ago.

How much better it would have been had the government announced that it would overhaul the Canadian Wheat Board, revise its operating procedures, update its terms of reference and bring the grading system in line with other world wheat selling countries. Other wheat producing countries have changed their wheat marketing techniques and procedures to stay in the market. What good reason can the government give for failing to read the clear signs that other countries read and heed? If we are to be kept out of world markets because we will not change, what will it take to make us change? What will it take to make us wake up?

Some of the philosophical implications implicit in this budget, Mr. Speaker, are cause for alarm, and I suspect that they are indicative of panic. We are told that to solve the great economic problem of inflation it is necessary to add appreciably to the already serious problem of unemployment. Are we to extend this philosophy into other areas? If some sections of the country are depressed, should we depress the richer provinces until they are down to the level of the less fortunate? Should we cure ignorance by closing all schools in the country until all citizens are equally ignorant?

A close examination of any recent government legislation will prove that this is a dangerously valid analogy. It is beyond the grasp of a reasonable mind why the government, in the face of the critical, humanistic problems gripping our country today, should attempt to create still another federal agency and should provide still another drain on a strained economy, instead of facing up to its mandate.

We do not need a new agency to promote and foster the use of standards; we have a perfectly good standards agency already. Is this yet another smokescreen being thrown up by the government to take the public mind off the inanities in this budget, or to take some of the pressure off the campaign to ram the confiscatory tax reform legislation through this House? It seems strange to me, and I daresay to most members on both sides of this House, that one of the richest countries in the world cannot get along without repressive and suppressive economic policies.

It is a sad but true fact that this budget will be our economic guideline over the next few months. We will have to prop it up wherever possible and try to make it do. But I must go on record, Mr. Speaker, as being unalterably opposed to applying negative measures to solve positive problems. If the minister is expecting any bouquets for this latest budget, he can be assured that he will get them in abundance from this side of the House, but I must warn him that I sincerely hope he has a fondness for ragweed.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be able to complete my remarks in a very short time. I shall touch briefly on four aspects of policy; the budget as it has been presented to us, the associated austerity program, the white paper in so far as it relates to the matter before the House, and the present level of taxation in Canada.

Unfortunately, the minister is not here tonight. I believe he is in the counting house counting out his money. However, perhaps the most suitable thing I could do would be to quote for the minister the words of Franklin Pierce Adams who said, "Count that day when, turning on its axis, this earth imposes no additional taxes". At least this budget has the merit of being a considerable change from the pattern of Canadian governments from the days of the government of Louis St. Laurent. These previous governments consistently overspent. If there is one saying that could be applied to the many Liberal governments preceding this one, it would be one of Josh Billings whose advice was, "Live within your income even if you have to borrow money to do it".

Because the white paper is under discussion we realize that this budget is an interim measure. I do not think any of us were really surprised that it did not contain many changes. Speaking within that context, however, I congratulate this government without reservation for having the courage to impose austerity on Canada and for having the courage to be unpopular, because we cannot amend the Canadian economy and we cannot curb inflation by following the policies of the past decade or 13 years of overspending.

Some government had to have the courage to tell the people that we can spend only what we take in and that preferably for some time we should spend less. I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) for reducing the public debt for the first time since 1957. I also congratulate him for bringing in a budget which contains no Ways and Means motion, the first of its kind in this nation since 1913.

I have spoken of what I consider to be the necessity in this country to curb spending and to curb taxes. I think it might be wise for hon. members of this House to consider who is curbing taxes and who is curbing spending, and what levels of government are not doing so. I have a few figures I should like to quote to the House from the report of the Tax Structure Committee of the Federal-Provincial Conference of Prime Ministers and Premiers on February 16 and 17, last month.

In 1952 the total tax take of Canada federally, provincially and municipally divided roughly into these percentages: 18 years ago in 1952 the federal revenue was 73 per cent, the provincial revenue was 15 per cent and the municipal revenue was 12 per cent. Then by 1956 there had been a considerable change; the federal share of the tax take was down to 69 per cent, the provincial revenue had increased to 18 per cent and the municipal revenue had increased by 1 per cent to 13 per cent. Then we come to the year 1960; the federal share was down to 62 per cent, the provincial share was up to 21 per cent and the municipal share was up to 16 per cent. For the year 1964 the relative figures are 57 per cent, 28 per cent and 15 per cent. In 1968 the federal share was 52 per cent, the provincial share was up to 33 per cent and the municipal share was 15 per cent.

This paper, Mr. Speaker, was projected to 1971, and we find here again the federal government taking only 52 per cent of the tax revenue of Canada, the provinces continuing to increase their take to 35 per cent and the municipal groups, whom I think many members will agree are badly in need of more finances, down again to 13 per cent. Who is curbing spending in Canada and who is curbing taxation? Is it the federal government, whose share of the tax take has dropped from 73 per cent to 52 per cent, or the provincial governments whose share has risen from 15 per cent to 35 per cent?

These figures can be expressed in another way, as a percentage of the GNP in terms of taxation. These, of course, show the same thing in different figures—a steady decline in the federal government's rate of spending compared with the total national product. In the early 1950s Ottawa was responsible for spending 17 per cent of the GNP, in 1958 16 per cent, in 1962 15 per cent, in 1967 14 per cent, and the forecast for next year is 13 per cent of the gross national product.

I bring this before the House, Mr. Speaker, because some of our friends in the provincial legislatures enjoy nothing better than to have Ottawa as a whipping-boy. I think members of this government and other members of the House should remind the provincial authorities and the people who live in the provinces that if they want to curb spending and taxation, "don't look automatically to Ottawa; look right in your own backyard and see who is overspending." I do not want to go further on that matter at this time, Mr. Speaker, but to return—

Mr. Nowlan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. St. Pierre: Yes.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am always very interested in listening to the hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) and I appreciate his point, but I question the adjective "overspending" that he uses, and the difference between that and increased spending. The hon. member makes a lot of sensible contributions to debate in this chamber. From his figures that I have jotted down, would he not agree that the increase in the percentage of the spending by the provinces also reflects the increase in the obligations of the provinces in this period from 1952 to 1971? Does he not agree it may not be overspending, but is obviously an increase in spending because of their increasing responsibilities?

Mr. St. Pierre: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's remarks, but it is overspending when the provinces go into debt, as most of them have at present. There are exceptions, but most of the provinces are going into debt.

Some hon. members have said that we are having a non-debate on a non-budget, and admittedly this budget is a holding operation while the white paper on tax reform remains in the field of public discussion. I am neither going to defend nor attack the white paper. I do not think this is the time for that, but at this time I feel I have to mention some of the criticism which I am receiving of the white paper, largely from the business community of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the white paper deserves good criticism, and it deserves a lot of criticism. It deserves intelligent criticism, and I am happy to say that in my office I am receiving some. But I would be less than honest if I did not say that I am alarmed by some of the emotional rant which is being issued by businessmen and business organizations, whom I would have expected could have provided much more sober judgment and a much more sound, fundamental, common sense examination of what that white paper represents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Pierre: I suppose, Mr. Speaker, if I were among those given a choice of whether business was best left in the hands of private individuals or run by government, my impulse—as always—would be toward the private individual, and I hope it will remain there. But frankly, from the calibre of some of the submissions that come to me from supposedly responsible business organizations I am beginning to think that if I have a choice of trusting the economy of Canada to them, or trusting it to the government, I will perhaps have to lean toward the government.

Mr. Flemming: That is a great surprise.

Mr. St. Pierre: You would not be surprised if you saw some of the mail I am getting. To quote the late famous Bob Edwards of the Calgary Eye Opener, "Never criticize a man for his grammar or a woman for her morals." But I am still shocked when a businessman, heading a responsible organization, has so little grasp of grammar that literally I cannot understand what he is trying to tell me, and when I write to him and ask for an enlargement or clarification of what he is saying, he is still not capable of clarifying it.

In fact, I think many of them are running poor businesses, and I think possibly the white paper is providing them with an excuse to their stockholders as to why they are about to go broke. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had in the course of this—

Mr. McCleave: Do you think they should?

[Mr. St. Pierre.]

Mr. St. Pierre: Yes, I think the inefficient should go. I am in favour of the inefficient people going broke, and of efficient people doing good business.

We have had the usual contribution tonight from our friends in the NDP, which is that there are not really any problems in Canada that cannot be solved by taxing people less and spending more. Frankly, I cannot be bothered examining these suggestions too deeply, except of course they are popular words. And if words were meat and potatoes, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that party would by now have provided enough to feed the world and we would all be fat. But unfortunately the facts of life remain before us and they are not going to be removed by the words of the New Democrats whose answer to everything seems to be: spend more and tax less.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to move to my final point. This concerns the general level of taxation in Canada. Many of the critics of the white paper, who I think are either being less than discerning or less than honest, insist that the white paper is a method of increasing taxation in Canada. The fact is that the white paper is concerned with the fair distribution of the load of taxation in Canada. That is its central purpose: it needs no other purpose. As to the total taxation load, this can be adjusted upward or downward even if the white paper is accepted in its entirety, which is highly unlikely, or whether the white paper is accepted in an amended form; or it can be done, as it is always done presently, under the taxation system as it exists now.

The level of taxation is not really a function of the white paper debate, but it is the general level of taxation on which I wish to speak for a few minutes. I think there is a real, legitimate concern, common to all members of the House as to what general level of taxation is supportable in this country before the initiative of individuals is stifled.

There are any number of people who are writing to hon. members telling them they know where it is, it is in the white paper, or else they claim it is not. Indeed, some of them who write leave me with the impression that the introduction of the graduated income tax in 1917 was the end of individual initiative in Canada. The facts do not appear to bear this out. But there is a point—I do not claim to know where it is; I do not know who the wise man could be who does know—beyond which taxation cannot rise.

Mr. Alkenbrack: We have already reached that point.

Mr. St. Pierre: Another hon. member says we have now reached that point—another wise man! I wish I had his omniscience. I am a simple man and I do not have answers to everything. I have the questions to which I seek answers.

The late Northcotte Parkinson claimed that the effective level of taxation was 10 per cent. He went further: it was his view that the ordinary citizen did not care if it was taken from him by the government he elected or by a bunch of bearded men who held the mountain pass. It was all the same to him; the 10 per cent was what he was willing to part with, whether to the robber for the government or to one of the freelance men of the woods.

We have long passed Mr. Parkinson's level. The taxation take of the three levels of government in Canada is now in the region of 35 or 36 per cent. We are told that in the United States it is far lower and that our young people will rush down to that happy land of health, wealth and high living as soon as any of the proposals of the white paper are introduced. However, the facts do not bear out that assertion. In 1969, 30 per cent of the American gross national product was going into the hands of various levels of government in taxes. In the last quarter of the last year the percentage of the American gross national product passing through the hands of the various levels of government reached, by odd coincidence, 35 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, can we indefinitely support taxation at 35, 36, 37 or up to 40 per cent? Where is the ceiling? We do not know, but I say we must always remain conscious of the fact that there is a ceiling. To me, every taxation can be likened to a cumulative poison—we are pretty sick before we find out we have had too much of it. We do not have the opportunity of rapidly comprehending the danger. It is not like stepping in front of a speeding truck where, if you make an error in judgment, the impact and punishment is immediate; it is more comparable to the ingestion of mercury poisoning in your food.

The taxpayer is not going to give the government clear notification of when he has had enough. He is not going to say, "Thirty-five per cent of my money you can take, but at 35.5 per cent I will stop paying." There will develop here a vague, persuasive discontent; it will be a sickness. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that unlike some hon. members who join in these debates I am unable to put a figure on it any more than the taxpayer can, but I hope that the government and this House will remember that there are limits to what the taxpayer will part with. I thank hon. members for their courteous attention.

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, this budget proposes to curb inflation. It may succeed in this to a degree, and it may not. What concerns me today is the tendency to disregard the problems of the non-urban sector of our economy which is in no way responsible for inflation. This area has, rather, been the victim of inflation. I do not want to leave the impression that I do not think urban areas have problems too, and very serious ones; I just want to deal with the area of the economy caught in the price squeeze.

One example of this unfairness, Mr. Speaker, is the closing of so many small post offices across the country. In many cases this may be justified. Many small offices close to a larger centre are no longer necessary. Their revenue has been dropping steadily and in some cases the villages surrounding them have all but disappeared. There are many cases, however, of rural post offices the revenue from which, though small, is increasing.

They serve not only as a post office but an important part of community life, possibly the only meeting place for neighbours. Most of these have been open for many years, and their removal has a serious effect, not only on the business with which they are usually associated but on their convenience to the patrons. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the saving of a few dollars in a department where money should not be the only criterion is not justified. The service to the community should have first consideration. To point out the chaos in that department I would refer to the headline in the Globe and Mail today stating "Postal Chaos in Montreal—Armed Guards to Move Mail if Necessary, Kierans Warns". This gives us a pretty fair idea of what is happening in the Post Office today.

Is it any wonder that there is concern and unrest in the rural areas of Canada? In the grain growing areas of the west, people are wondering what happened to the election promises of this government when the then agriculture minister promised to sell 4½ million bushels of wheat annually for the next three years. That was in 1968. Now we have a tremendous surplus of wheat and coarse grains built up in the Wheat Board designated area.

The recent announcement by the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) concerning the drastic reduction in wheat acreage is not well accepted by grain growers. They are aware, however, that at last the government has recognized their plight. For those who feel that this $100 million is a huge sum to pour into the western economy, it should be noted that it will have little effect on the many who practice mixed farming and are already diversified.

Other factors may determine its usefulness in the basically wheat growing areas. It may well be that only a small portion of the designated $100 million will be paid out. It is felt that under the so-called Lang-Olson formula, as little as $30 million or $40 million will go into the western economy. Grain farmers are worried about many aspects of this plan; for example, the land they have rented and agreed to farm in a good husbandlike order, also the problem of erosion involved in two or more years of consecutive summer-fallowing.

Then we have the involved problems of the dairy industry, an industry affecting the local economy as well as the national economy of the country. It must be obvious by now to anyone concerned with the dairy industry that the government's recent dairy policies have failed to accomplish their intentions. It is all very well to say that the dairy industry should not be subsidized but should stand on its own feet. It would like to do that, Mr. Speaker. If dairymen were not producing a perishable product at a fixed price, often below the cost of production, they would not need a subsidy. They are operating in an economy wherein Canadian industry is subsidized by protective tariffs.

One fact of life that recent dairy policies have not taken into account is that in Canada we have large areas of deficit dairy production and other areas where production approximately equals demand. A dairy policy that does not take this into account fails to be realistic and discriminates against large areas of Canada. This was pointed out in submissions by a number of Canadian provinces, and cannot be ignored. The government would have us believe that the $10 million reduction in the allotment for dairy subsidy is part of the new austerity program. Rather, it is a continuation of a planned policy of reducing the dairy subsidy, begun in 1967. It is my understanding that it is proposed to use the $10 million to finance the moving of the farmers off the farm.

There is talk now of increasing the holdback on overquota milk, applying to both shippers of milk for manufacturing and fluid consumption. In the case of fluid producers there will be a straight decrease in price for that portion of a fluid shipper's milk that goes into the manufacturing market. This will be nothing less than a disaster for those whose fluid quota is a small percentage of their total production, and this applies to many top dairymen who ship to smaller points. They do not receive a subsidy in the first place, yet in the face of ever-increasing costs, they will be charged a holdback of 52 cents per 100 pounds of milk. Even more has been suggested, which will put these dairymen out of business.

Let us look for a moment at the advice the government gives to farmers. The advice is designed to solve their problems, and it is pretty ridiculous. To the dairymen the government says, "Expand your units, become more efficient, or in other words produce more." It also tells them, "Cut back on your production or we will make it so tough for you that you will be glad to get out of the business." How much sense does that make? To the farmers it says, "Expand your units; make them more viable. Grow more, but produce less. Diversify, but do not produce too much of anything because that product may become a drag on the market." What should the farmers grow? There is no answer. Perhaps they should grow flowers. This is the advice they are given in a world where many people are near starvation.

What are the government's plans for those who have already been forced off the land and the thousands more who will be? They are evidently to be moved from the land they love, out of the clean air and into the polluted air and congested environment of the cities. If history repeats itself, as it has a habit of doing, and we have another depression the government's advice will be, "Go back to the farm." It should not be surprised if the reply is, "What farm?" It is high time, Mr. Speaker, that we had some long-term planning in the whole field of agriculture. The productivity of our relatively small percentage of arable land in Canada should be considered a blessing, not a curse.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) last Thursday was an astounding document. Really, I have some difficulty understanding how the Minister of Finance could work up enough nerve to deliver such a budget speech. He made the point of suggesting that not since 1913 has there been a budget which has not been accompanied by any Ways and Means resolutions introducing tax or tariff changes. The fact is, of course, that the minister did not need to do this because he had already piloted through the House his tax and tariff increases for 1970.

But, more importantly, I suggest that not since 1913 have we had such a pitiful excuse for a budget. This budget reflects the fact that the Liberal government is paralyzed by its own contradictions and contradictory positions. The budget really is an amazing compilation of contradictions. The Minister of Finance as much as admitted that the government's anti-inflation policies have failed to work up to the present time. Just listen to this statement contained in the budget speech:

> There are some recent glimmerings of evidence that the rate of increase of prices is no longer rising.

What a statement that is, Mr. Speaker! It would seem that what the Minister of Finance is trying to say is that the rate of increase in the rate of price increases is no longer going up. Well, the glimmer promptly went out of the minister's financial vision. The Minister of Finance was not even left with a gleam or a flicker in his eye.

An hon. Member: There is no "love life" left.

Mr. Burton: A colleague on my left has just said that there is no "love life" left. I do not think there will be much love for the Minister of Finance as a result of the word that went out last Friday that the consumer index had gone up by another half point and that it is now 5 per cent above the level of last year.

Hon. members will recall that in the budget address the Minister of Finance made a point of suggesting that on a national accounts basis the price increase factor for the past year was of the order of 4.2 per cent, and that the consumer price index had gone up by 4.6 per cent. The minister was saved by one day. If he had delivered his budget address just one day later, the word would have been out that the consumer price index had gone up to 5 per cent over last year's level. The only thing the minister could offer was the pious hope that the policies that did not work in 1969 would work better in 1970. The minister blandly made this statement in his address:

> —I anticipate some increase in unemployment.

That indicates that the minister decided to stand pat in terms of his economic policy, with the exception of the consumer credit controls which he introduced and which will have the effect of tightening the economic screws in Canada still further. This is the price Canadians will have to pay for a set of policies which are not working, even if one were to accept them on a basis that a trade-off between unemployment and deflation is acceptable. I do not accept that sort of proposition. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is morally wrong on the part of the government to tolerate and accept a higher level of unemployment as a price which Canadians have to pay for the government's so-called anti-inflation or deflationary policies.

Last fall the Minister of Finance appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and in answer to a question I posed said that he did not believe in the trade-off theory. The fact is that he has now put this trade-off theory into practice; he has put it into effect. He reminds me of an old-time buccaneer who simply said, "Damn the consequences; full sail ahead", or the captain of more recent years who said, "Damn the torpedos; full steam ahead." The Minister of Finance now says, "Damn the people; let them founder." It seems to me the Minister of Finance has lost all credibility. This loss in credibility cannot be summed up better than by the one sentence contained in his budget address of last Thursday, as follows:

> We just cannot tell how soon or how far the slowing of growth in demand and in production will bring about a slowing down in price increases.

I do not understand how a Minister of Finance could have the nerve to make such a statement to the House of Commons, a statement which is a damning indictment of his economic policies, and not tender his resignation from his portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Burton: It seems to me that this statement is proof that the Minister of Finance is a babe lost in the woods. Possibly he knows where he wants to go but has no idea of how to get there. On the one hand we have the prediction that the inflationary trends will continue in 1970, but on the other hand there is no help for pensioners or other victims of inflation. There is no help for these people and no consideration for them in the budget.

Another contradiction in the budget is the attitude of the Minister of Finance to business, and corporate business in particular, in contrast to his attitude toward consumers. This budget imposes no new or greater restraints on business. The deferred capital allowances are continued, although no supporting information was offered or provided to show that they are working at the present time. Actually, there is information to the contrary, to the effect that they are not working. All that is happening is that builders and developers are including these deferred allowances in their total cost picture.

Furthermore, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce at the year-end said that capital spending of major corporations in 1970 would be 14 per cent above that of 1969. This shows that the deferred depreciation allowances are just not working. It also shows the lack of response on the part of business corporations to the government's pleading for restraint. Much of the investment to be carried out in 1970 is in non-productive facilities, investment that will not result in greater productivity in Canada in 1970 or in future years. Business has been left basically untouched by this budget. On the other hand, the government is nailing the consumer.

I think one could question the effectiveness of the measures that were proposed, even on the basis that one accepted them. I think more fundamentally, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and the government are tackling the wrong guy in the present situation. What they are trying to do is further restrict the people who are already feeling the pinch in our present economic situation. These new regulations will pose no problems for the people who have ample financial or economic resources, but to the extent these regulations and controls are effective they could slow down the economy even further than is now the case.

Why not control the financial institutions, their profits and interest rates? It seems that we are still following the bankrupt policies of the Prices and Incomes Commission instead of developing a comprehensive incomes policy. The minister should be aware that such a policy has the endorsement of this party. If he is not, I now draw his attention to it. This was clearly set forth in a report which was submitted on behalf of the New Democratic Members of Parliament by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and myself as members of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We called for the introduction of a comprehensive incomes policy as the only way out of the present situation. I wish to quote briefly from that report and the proposition that was put forward:

> To achieve the objective of an equitable distribution of income and of an equitable distribution of the economic burden of rising prices, we propose a comprehensive incomes policy.
> It is essential that what we mean by an incomes policy be well understood. To be meaningful, it must be comprehensive, it must include all forms of income. In addition to wages and salaries (the salaries of Members of Parliament included) all forms of non-wage and non-salary income—including profits, rents, interest, professional fees and unincorporated business income must be subject to the policy.
> The comprehensive incomes policy must include the provision of a guaranteed annual income, to avoid injustice and hardship. It must be flexible enough to take account of: (1) the plight of low-paid workers (2) disparities within industries and classes of employees (3) increases in the cost of living and (4) other factors causing disadvantage to groups or regions.
> It will take time to develop a comprehensive incomes policy fully. Constitutional, economic and geographic factors make it more difficult to apply such a policy in Canada than in some countries. We will have to learn lessons through experience. But the objective and the need are clear. The best way to get there is to start now.

That is the end of the quotation which I submit for the consideration of all members of this House. A further failing of this budget which poses another contradiction is that nothing is being done, and nothing is proposed, to slow down the rate of take-over of the Canadian economy by foreign interests or the dependence of the economy on foreign developments and events. I will deal with this point further on another occasion. It is generally agreed, and it is quite clear, that some of the events to which Canada is subject take place in foreign countries and are in fact beyond our effective control.

In summary, I suggest that the government has demonstrated its incapacity to manage the economy in the interest of Canadians. I wish to give a short and brief analysis of some of my reasons for coming to this conclusion. The first point is that the government does not recognize changes that have taken place in the Canadian economy. The fact is that our economy is no longer governed by market forces, the laws of supply and demand as we have known them. They cannot do the job now or in the future.

We are living in an economy which is featured by administered prices for the most part. Corporate power, including international and multinational corporate power, controls much of our economy and in fact will be an important influence in the future. One example of the fact that we must realize Canada is living in a new economic situation is exemplified by current developments. At the present time we have a rate of unemployment that based on actual figures is over 6 per cent. We have a rate of price increase in the area of 5 per cent.

These things are contradictory in terms of economic laws as we have known them up to the present time. This indicates the need for new approaches and policies to deal with the situation. This is pointed out by the Bank of Nova Scotia in its most recent "Monthly Review" where it is noted:

> Indeed the current adjustment, like the 9-year expansion that preceded it, has turned out to be so extended that several of the traditional cyclical reactions—in areas such as inventory movements and capital spending plans—have failed to show up at all.

My second reason for reaching the conclusion I did about the government and its management of public affairs is that it is featured by insensitivity. I think this is demonstrated in terms of the government's attitude and policies toward pensioners and other low-income people. The government is willing to risk a recession for the sake of carrying on its present policies which are not working. I plead with the government to take another look at its policies. The First National City Bank of New York, in the United States, points out in a recent study:

> Indeed, a moderate shift in policy taken too soon may prove less inflationary in the long run than a massive shift in policy taken too late.

The third reason for my thinking the policies of the government are unacceptable is that it places a lower priority on public goods as compared with private goods. I feel that all our expenditures and allocations of resources must be subject to close scrutiny and to various criteria which are established. I think these criteria should be established for both public goods and private goods. This government has failed to act with respect to the private sector of the economy.

The fourth point is that I feel this government has demonstrated a lack of courage in tackling our economic problems by its wishy-washy approach to the prices situation. It has failed, and is unwilling to tackle the corporate power and the interests which have control over the Canadian economy at the present time. I say this, not simply in terms of criticism but to show that there is an alternative, another way in which we might direct our economic policy. This was pointed out in a report submitted on behalf of the New Democratic Party members to which I made reference a few minutes ago, in which we called for a comprehensive incomes policy, controls over capital spending, help for pensioners and other victims of inflation and for changes in our monetary policy including a system of flexible exchange rates.

I wish to deal briefly with some of the problems presently facing my own province of Saskatchewan. I shall discuss these in terms of the government's policies and approach in dealing with the problems of regional disparities. This government has placed a great deal of emphasis on its policies concerning regional development. The Minister of Finance has cited regional development policies as being one area of counteraction to the adverse effects of national economic policies. Really, I wish he would get off this kick or, if he will not, I wish the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) would kick him where it will do some good. Regional development policies are designed to deal with long-range problems on a long-term basis, and it does them a disservice if the minister persists in making a point of this type.

The province of Saskatchewan is a good example of a region of Canada which is faced with difficulties at this time. This is not to overlook the situation in other parts of Canada, but I have a special concern for my own province because of the rapid deterioration there in the past year or two. For example, the population has declined from 962,000 in October, 1968, to 948,000 on January 1, 1970, 15 months later. Personal income per capita in Saskatchewan in 1968 was $300 below the national average—$400 below the national average if farm inventory changes are excluded. In 1968, on either basis, personal income in Saskatchewan was lower than in all other provinces except the four Atlantic provinces. It was, in fact, lower than personal income in Quebec where it is acknowledged that considerable economic hardship does exist.

The figures for 1969 and 1970 will, I am sure, show the situation to be even worse when they are revealed. I do not like to talk about my own province in this way. Indeed, it hurts me to do so. I recognize it could leave false impressions. I believe Saskatchewan has great potential for development. The province has made an outstanding contribution to Canadian society both economically and socially, particularly under the leadership of my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) when he was Premier of Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Burton: During that period the province had an outstanding record in terms of agricultural production, mineral production and social institutions as expressed in both co-operative and public programs. Today we are facing serious difficulties in the agricultural industry and in the potash industry, the latter brought about in large part by the lack of planning within that industry in recent years. The oil industry has reached a plateau, and mineral production has declined. Unemployment has increased. It is reliably forecast that unemployment in the urban centres this winter will reach 10 per cent.

For this reason I welcomed the announcement last week that several areas in Saskatchewan are to be included among the special areas established by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. This will certainly give a psychological boost to the province. Regina and Saskatoon have been included in addition to an area in the Meadow Lake district. It remains to be seen to what extent this new program will be used. Until last week nothing had been done in those areas of Saskatchewan which had been declared eligible under the regional incentives legislation. There are many parts of Saskatchewan which are deserving of further assistance. I stand by my original contention that the entire province should be declared a designated area under the Regional Development Incentives Act. It seems to me that in Saskatchewan at the present time we are handicapped by the worst combination which could be encountered, that is, a Liberal government in Ottawa and a Liberal government in Regina.

In Ottawa we have a Liberal government which has demonstrated, for the most part, little concern for the province. In Regina we have a Liberal government which is desperately trying to pick a fight with Ottawa as its only means of survival in the next election: they know they cannot survive on the basis of their record. This is illustrated by a little squabble which took place last week. It seems there is to be a new distillery built in Weyburn. We are very happy about this. But the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) from Saskatchewan and the Premier of the province could not help getting into a squable about who should make the announcement. The Premier was to make the announcement on Friday morning, but I gather the Minister without Portfolio felt he should get there first so he made the announcement on Thursday evening, beating the Premier to the post. This is an indication of the petty squabbling which is going on between the Liberals in Regina and those in Ottawa. The people of Saskatchewan are suffering as a consequence.

Further programs are needed to improve farm income, in addition to a generous public works program in the province and an energetic continuation of regional development plans. The people of Saskatchewan are greatly concerned about what is happening in agriculture at the present time. Agriculture is one of the worst of the trouble spots in the economy and the attitude of the government has been one of reacting to a crisis. There have been many examples of this over the past year and a half. The most recent was the announcement of the wheat acreage reduction program called LIFT—Lower Inventory For Tomorrow. Many farmers in western Canada would like to give it a different sort of lift. This is not an income plan, Mr. Speaker. It is an incentive plan to persuade farmers not to produce in 1970. It represents a complete turnabout as compared with the policy put forward a few years ago when farmers were urged to grow all they could. Now the farmers have to pay the shot for following the government's policy.

This program has certain basic shortcomings. First, it is poor psychology. It does not wear well with farmers to ask them not to produce. For this reason the policy will be ignored by many farmers in western Canada simply because it is not realistically related to their situation. Second, there are basic inequities in the program, the most obvious of which relate to the situation of farmers who made a considerable adjustment last year and who are now penalized as a consequence. Third, the plan fails to take into account the social and economic consequences.

I don't believe this program was subjected to a cost-benefit analysis before it was announced. If any minister disagrees with this statement, I challenge him to table whatever studies were prepared in the development of this program. I contend there are serious potential environmental problems associated with the program. Suppose we encounter a dry year with low rainfall; we could find ourselves in a serious situation. Crop scientists have already warned farmers about this possibility and have expressed concern. Fifth, there are no income alternatives presented to farmers and, sixth, the plan does not take into account the situation of small farmers and mixed farmers.

The program is an example of the trouble we get into when policies are made by a minister or ministers who may be intelligent or capable but who lack an understanding of, or a feeling for the agricultural industry and rural people. The frustration of farmers was expressed no better than in an advertisement which appeared during the last several days in the Regina Leader-Post. This advertisement, which was placed in the "Farms for Sale" column, reads as follows:

• (9:40 p.m.)

Opportunity for Premier, M.L.A. or Dept. of Welfare.

Will trade one section of good land, free of debt, value $60,000. Payments to be $4,970 annually for life and non-taxable. Same as city family of 7 on Welfare. If this offer is not taken before land grows to weeds to qualify for $6 per acre payment, will add $35 to annual payments for ulcer diet allowance. This bargain available until next increase in welfare allowances.

It seems to me this advertisement expresses the frustration that many people feel toward the government's new program. I suggest that the Liberal government has been responsible for the most colossal combination of bungling, mismanagement and lack of understanding in its dealings with agriculture that has ever been witnessed in Canada.

Today the survival of the industry is at stake. Basic adjustments have to be made. We want to know where the government stands in connection with agriculture, and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is also asking this question. Recently they sent a letter to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board in which they said:

The report of the agricultural task force (which incidentally urgently needs to be released to the public so that debate on its contents may begin) should provide a good starting point for a dialogue on the basic principles—

And so on. This suggests that the report of the task force is now in the hands of the government or is available to the government but has not been released. I suggest this is a matter that should be placed immediately before the people of Canada. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture then went on to ask some basic questions of concern to the agricultural industry and all farmers of Canada, questions that should also concern the government.

Furthermore, the fact is that there are things that can be done. Reference has already been made in this House to the study recently published by the Economic Council of Canada entitled "Future Market Outlets for Canadian Wheat and Other Grains" written by Dr. Hudson, formerly with the federal Department of Agriculture. I shall conclude very shortly, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Hudson points out:

A survey of the competitive position of Canadian wheat in selected markets suggests that the principal causes of Canada's declining market share are: lack of consistent quality as measured by uniformity of protein content within and between shipments of wheat designated as the same grade; insufficient flexibility in pricing to meet market competition; inadequate market development effort; increased self-sufficiency in importing countries; and unfair competition resulting from the use of export subsidies and the manner in which government-assisted export programs are carried out by competing exporters.

Then Dr. Hudson goes on—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Burton: I can conclude in two minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, might I say to the last speaker that I am very sorry he was not given the opportunity to finish his speech, which in my opinion was well prepared, although I cannot agree with what he said. I listened with great indulgence to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), the official spokesman on financial matters for the New Democratic Party, when he spoke this afternoon, as I did to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. Both of these members are on the Finance Committee, of which I have the privilege of being a member, and I have learned to listen to what they say. While I do not always agree with them, I have nevertheless found that generally speaking their speeches are well prepared and their thoughts are equally well prepared.

To get down to brass tacks, having paid these flowery compliments to the hon. members in question, I should like to ask the hon. member who has just spoken this question. He condemned the Canadian government, the Liberal Party and our way of life in Canada, as did the hon. member for Waterloo. Would the hon. member go to this office and look at a map of the world? Having looked all over the map, I would ask him whether, having in his mind's eye travelled all over the world, he has not discovered, as have many thousands of Canadians, that Canada is the best country in the world; that although it is very nice to take trips all over the world, it is even nicer to come back to this country in which we are proud to live.

Having listened to the members of the New Democratic Party, I got the impression that this was a terrible country in which to live; that everybody was poor or everybody was rich; that nobody had the satisfaction of living what might be described as the full life, of living a happy life in this great country of ours.

In spite of the Liberal government that my friend has criticized during the last few minutes, and in spite of the fact that since 1867, when we first became a nation, everything here has not been heavenly, we still have a great country. Perhaps one of the reasons for this is that the New Democratic Party has never formed the government. I wonder whether it is true that one of the reasons we do have a great country, one in which we are all happy to live, is that in the majority of cases a Liberal government has run the country—and run it, in my opinion, most effectively.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: Don't overdo it, now.

Mr. Whicher: I can remember what happened in 1935. Some of my hon. friends were not here then, but there are Conservatives who were in the House in 1935. I remember travelling across Bruce county, which I have the privilege of representing in this House, on numerous occasions and hearing constituents of mine—Conservatives—saying, "Mr. Whicher, we will never vote Conservative again as long as we live, because we remember what happened in 1935".

[Mr. Whicher.]

Mr. Whicher: I am only telling the House what was told me by good Conservative constituents, friends of hon. gentlemen to my left.

I want to devote a few minutes to what has been said by others who have preceded me. First of all, I go back to what the financial critic for the New Democratic Party said. In my opinion, he was most unfair in his criticism this afternoon of the Liberal government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). I do not contend that there is some reason why a member of the New Democratic Party should not be unfair, but I do say that the hon. member was not realistic in his approach to a subject that is of most importance to the people of Canada.

For example, the hon. member spoke of regional development and said this was good, that the government to the right of Mr. Speaker was doing an excellent job. Then he said that it was not good so long as we did not have full employment. I am sure there is no one in the government or on the Liberal benches who does not wish there were full employment in Canada today. Everybody wants full employment. But what happens if we price ourselves completely out of world markets? I realize that our friends in the New Democratic Party do not agree that we might in the future price ourselves out of world markets, but what would happen if we did? Then we would really have unemployment. The choice is not between inflation and unemployment. The government by its actions is showing it is against inflation and that it hopes to be able to do something about the problem.

The government is also against unemployment, but the brutal fact is that it must make a choice, not about unemployment today but unemployment five years from now. What about unemployment two years from now? Is it not better to have 5 per cent of the people unemployed today, cruel though it may be, than to have 10 per cent of our people unemployed two or three years from now? This is the struggle and these are the questions that are going through the mind of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) as he works on this problem which is very serious to him and indeed to all the people of Canada. It is all very easy to be on the left of Mr. Speaker, as indeed I am, and to be somewhat critical of the government. But when you sit in high places and you are the Minister of Finance responsible for raising $12 billion or $13 billion, and at the same time you must look after the spending of $12 billion or $13 billion, it is a more difficult job than criticizing all the time.

My friend the hon. member for Waterloo asks what is the cost of unemployment in Canada. May I be the first to tell him that it costs a great deal of money. I agree with my friend when he suggested that perhaps it costs in the neighbourhood of $4 billion per year. This is a situation we should all strive to rectify. No one wants unemployment and no one wants inflation. But inflation is not just a problem in Canada: it is not just a problem facing the government which sits opposite; it is a problem of all Canadians and, indeed, all the world. There is as much inflation in the United States as there is here. We are bound to have more inflation in a country that is going ahead faster than any other, for example Japan. There is now inflation in Germany, the other country that lost the war.

We are a small country in population, with approximately 21 million people. The Minister of Finance is the man who has to come up with the answers and I appreciate the difficulty he faces. He is faced with unemployment which costs a great deal, and it will cost a great deal more if we do not attack the inflationary situation which exists not only in this country but indeed in the whole world.

The hon. member for Waterloo suggested that the government has caused unemployment. I deny that completely. The government has not caused unemployment. What the government is attempting to do is solve the inflationary situation. In my opinion it is one of the greatest forms of robbery we could have in this country. Some time ago I referred to the devaluation situation. Supposing a fellow retired ten years ago with $50,000 in bonds, perhaps a farmer from Quebec or Ontario, or with $100,000 if he happened to own a profitable wheat farm in Saskatchewan, and supposing he put his money on deposit with the Royal Bank of Canada or in Canadian government bonds: today that money would be worth only about half what is was worth ten years ago. Inflation is a tremendous robber. This is a problem not only in Canada but throughout the world, and it must be beaten because neither Canada nor the world can afford it. While we are interested in the world situation, we are primarily interested in this Canada of ours.

For this reason the government, through the Minister of Finance, has created what is known as tight money in an attempt to combat the inflation bug. By creating tight money, some unemployment has resulted. It is not just our friends to the left who are interested in people: every one of us who sees people losing jobs, whether we be Liberals on the right of Mr. Speaker, Liberals in the rump, members of the NDP, Conservatives or Creditistes, we are all interested in our friends and neighbours and we want them to have the ability to make a living.

I should like to see how our friends to the left would operate in a situation such as this. This government was elected on June 25, 1968. Often when I listen to hon. members speak I get the idea that they feel their party was elected to govern this country. There is only one reason they sit to the left of Mr. Speaker and the government sits to the right—they lost the election; this country expressed its confidence in this government and it is this government which is making the decisions. In my opinion it has done a good job.

The hon. member for Waterloo suggested that the biggest problem was not inflation but a lack on the part of the government to adapt. He suggested there was no indication that we would ever price ourselves out of world markets. This afternoon he suggested that we could raise the price of copper by 25 cents a pound. We have a great deal of this product, the world wants it and we can sell it. We can also sell a great deal of our nickel which increased in price by 25 per cent.

My hon. friend asked us to name some products in respect of which we might price ourselves out of world markets. In what I thought was a very nice way, I mentioned shirts. He answered very well and said we could never compete with what I am sure he meant—he will correct me if I am wrong—the world textile market. I ask him to get in touch with our textile friends across Canada, some of whom are in his areas, and find out whether they are willing to close up shop and go home to bed rather than compete with world textile industries.

Of course we can compete as long as union wages are maintained, as long as our productivity is high, as long as our machinery is 100 per cent efficient and as long as we can produce quality comparable to that of United States industry and industry in the rest of the world. My hon. friend also referred to Stelco as one of the greatest steel producing companies in the world. This is a company of high efficiency. No one could agree more than I that Stelco is one of the best steel companies in Canada. What is the situation in respect of Japanese steel?

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—VIET NAM WAR—SALE OF WEAPONS TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on March 2 I posed the following question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp):

In view of the fact that Canada sold approximately $300 million worth of weapons and defence materials to the United States in 1969, is the Canadian government now considering putting an end to this complicity in the Viet Nam war by stopping these sales?

I asked this question for a number of reasons. I would preface my remarks by saying that Canada is by far the largest foreign supplier of military equipment to the United States. Let me use a couple of very simple statistics to show what I mean. In 1964 we sold about $161 million worth of war and military equipment to the United States; in 1969 we sold them approximately $300 million worth of defence and military equipment. In 1964, six years ago, there were approximately 23,000 United States troops in Viet Nam; in 1969 there were over 500,000 United States troops in Viet Nam, and over half a million United States troops are fighting in Viet Nam today.

As we know, the defence-sharing agreement is one whereby specific military equipment is contracted for by the Pentagon. We know that much of this equipment which goes to the United States is used directly in the war in Viet Nam: this has been stated by people in the Pentagon. Any of this equipment which does not go directly to Viet Nam finds its way into the United States military pot. This means that indirectly that we have equipment there, because the United States can use more of its equipment in Viet Nam, so it really does not make much difference.

[Mr. Whicher.]

I should like to see Canada out of this type of involvement. Whether or not we are in favour of the war in Viet Nam, we are involved whether we like it or not because we are supplying military equipment and military goods to the United States. Viet Nam has perhaps done more than anything else to divide the generations in America. If we look around in the United States, and even in Canada today, we can see that it has divided societies, communities and families.

I maintain that the United States presence in Viet Nam is politically and morally wrong. In being involved in a war in Viet Nam the United States is leaving one of the deepest scars on the conscience of humanity. It is an aggressive war. It is being fought by a foreign power against a people who for decades have been fighting powers such as China, France and now the United States.

Let us for a moment look at Canada's role in the Viet Nam war. I think it is very inconsistent in respect of our stand in other wars which are going on now or which have gone on in the last few years. We did not supply arms to either side in India or Pakistan. We are not supplying arms to either Israel or the Arab states. We did not supply arms to either Nigeria or Biafra regardless of our activity or inactivity in that situation. In all these situations we maintained a degree of military neutrality. We are not doing that in the case of Viet Nam because we are supplying approximately $300 million worth of arms to the United States this year and supplied more, as a matter of fact, during the last two years.

Ending the war in Viet Nam is something we alone cannot do—we all realize that—but we can make a contribution to that end. One way to do it is by cutting off our supply of arms to the United States. This would contribute to ending the killing and misery which is going on in Viet Nam today. It would also help the United States get out of this war in Asia because, as I have said, it not only is dividing the people but is placing the United States in the position of being a giant powder keg which is ready to explode at any time.

The United States involvement in Viet Nam has many other detrimental effects. It is draining the United States economy of money which could be spent on housing, on combating poverty and in cleaning up the cities of that country. These things, too, contribute to the very explosive situation in the United States. It is also in the interest of Canada that the war end as soon as possible, because whether we like it or not the Viet Nam war is contributing to everything from inflation to social unrest in this country. No matter what we think of it or how we like it, this is the way it is. We must try to stop that war as soon as possible.

I do not think any Canadians like to think they are a part of the killing and misery which is going on in a far away rice paddy at this very moment. Finally, if we do stop the sale of armaments to the United States, or through the United Nations put pressure on all sides to stop the fighting, we will indeed strengthen the international community. How many more Viet Nams or Nigeria-Biafras will it take before the world will suddenly blow up? How many more situations like this can we tolerate before that final spark, and before there is a major nuclear confrontation with which we would have to contend? For these reasons, in brief, I was asking and am asking the government to stop our sale of arms to the United States.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is suggesting that because the United States is engaged in a war in Viet Nam of which he disapproves, Canada should end its long-standing defence production arrangement with the United States.

Mr. Barnett: He is not the only one.

Mr. Sharp: There are others who disapprove, too. But what he is suggesting is that because he and many Canadians disagree with the war in Viet Nam, this country should end its long-standing defence arrangements with the United States. In the first place, the great bulk of United States procurement in Canada under these arrangements does not consist of weapons but electronic equipment, transport aircraft and various components and materials.

In the second place, Canadian-made equipment goes into the general inventory of the United States armed forces and may be used by those forces anywhere in that country or overseas. As an ally of the United States in North America and in NATO, I think it is entirely appropriate that we should have such defence production-sharing arrangements. It is therefore quite misleading on the part of the hon. member to suggest that Canadian weapons are being supplied to the United States for use in Viet Nam. Some of them may be used there but the defence production arrangement, as he himself has mentioned in his remarks, predates any involvement by the United States in Viet Nam and would go on as and when we all hope the war in Viet Nam is over.

We have a two-way arrangement with the United States under which we purchase considerable quantities of modern defence equipment for the Canadian armed forces, and we seek to balance this by sales to U.S. agencies. There have been times when the balance has been more in favour of Canada and other times when it has been more in favour of the United States. It has varied from time to time. At the moment I guess it is more favourable to us.

The government is not contemplating the ending of this defence production-sharing agreement with the United States. To do so would be a reversal of the whole co-operative defence relationship and would be costly as well to Canadian industry and to Canadian workers, to no good purpose.

Mr. Nystrom: Why has it doubled in the last five years?

Mr. Sharp: This is a reversal of the previous arrangement, of a situation when we used to purchase much more from the United States than we sold them. This was one of the reasons we entered into the defence production arrangement. As I say, to end that arrangement would be to reverse the sort of co-operative arrangements we have had with the United States over a long period of years and which I hope will continue after the Viet Nam war is over. The step he is suggesting would in no conceivable way contribute to a peaceful solution in Viet Nam, which the government desires just as much as the hon. member.

AGRICULTURE—INVESTIGATION OF REMOVAL OF SERIAL PLATES FROM IMPORTED TRACTORS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister to whom I referred this question is probably looking into it at this time, so rather than leaving it to clutter-up the adjournment debate list of questions I would ask that it be transferred back to the question period.

POLLUTION—AVAILABILITY TO COMMITTEE OF PROVINCIAL BRIEFS ON CONTROL

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on March 10 I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) the following question:

Did the provincial governments submit briefs on the subject of pollution control to the federal government during the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa on February 16 and 17? If so, why has the minister not made these briefs available to the national resources committee which is currently dealing with the Canada Water Act?

The minister gave no reply to the question, and because it is of vital importance to the national resources committee, which is now studying the new legislation, I asked that it be raised at this time. During our committee meeting on February 3, the minister indicated that points of discussions between the federal government and the provinces would not be passed on to the committee. Two weeks later the Federal-Provincial Conference took place in Ottawa.

The provinces submitted briefs to the federal government on their views and approach to the pollution problems facing Canada. I feel these briefs should be passed on to the National Resources Committee for study and action. It is the only sensible way of acquainting the committee members with the problems facing us under the new Canada Water Act. To date, this information has not been given to the committee despite the assurance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 18 that the provincial briefs had been made public.

How can the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on National Resources do an adequate job of amending legislation which is currently before it, when the information on problems which we are facing provincially is not made available to the members for study? This is an odd way of making sensible legislation. I trust this attitude on the part of the minister will not continue and that all the material available will be released to the committee. We all want to make the new act workable and we must have the necessary background material to do this.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose two questions to the minister: Will copies of the briefs be made available to all members of the committee and, if so, when?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) is not available tonight, nor is his Parliamentary Secretary, the hon. member, my fellow British Columbian, will have to be content with second best. However, I shall let him down as lightly as possible. I have secured a copy of the remarks which my colleague would have made had he been here, and in order to avoid error I shall read them very carefully.

Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated in this House on Wednesday, February 18, in answer to a question similar to the one posed tonight by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), he or no member of his government has authority over a committee of this House.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has not made the briefs of the provinces on pollution control available to the committee because, as the Prime Minister stated on that earlier occasion, whatever provincial briefs were made public are available through the federal-provincial secretariat if it is the wish of the committee to examine the opinions raised. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources does not have authority over what papers and opinions are brought before any committee of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal-Provincial Conference held last February 16-17 was a private, in-camera event, the deliberations of which were for the most part not released to the public. Though both levels of government agreed to the confidentiality of the conference, some provincial delegations chose to release certain of their opinions on some of the matters which the conference discussed. If the hon. member and the National Resources Committee wish to examine those provincial briefs which were released, as the Prime Minister stated in his answer to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) on February 18, the initiative rests with the member and the committee upon which he sits, and not with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or any other member of the government.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 17, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

TABLING OF FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table today, in accordance with section 32 of the Anti-dumping Act, copies in the two official languages of the first annual report of the anti-dumping tribunal. The report summarizes the tribunal's findings regarding the impact of dumped goods on Canadian production in three inquiries conducted in 1969.

Mr. Baldwin: I think the minister ought to read it all out loud.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DESIGNATION OF SPECIAL AREAS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, first may I be permitted to remind the House that today is the 17th of March, the feast of St. Patrick.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That being so, perhaps the House will be disposed to demonstrate to this son of Ireland that charity which Irishmen the world over are noted for. With the unanimous consent of the House I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. The urgent and pressing necessity for this motion is explained by the following circumstances. I shall be brief, as Irishmen usually are on St. Patrick's Day.

On March 11 the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion announced in the House the areas that, effective April 1, 1970, will be designated as special areas. These initial designations will be effective to the 30th of June, 1972. Agreements are to be signed with the provinces effective on April 1. The immediate projects under these agreements will involve commitments of $200 million and are to be started within the next few months. The precise boundaries of the special areas are to be specified in the agreements.

Sir, the only opportunity allowed for debate in this House so far has been the short replies allowed to spokesmen for the opposition parties when this statement was made. The minister, according to the roster system, was improperly absent from the House yesterday. The Standing Committee on Regional Development will not sit, it now appears, before the Easter adjournment. This important matter, therefore, cannot be considered in committee before April 1. Accordingly, since Your Honour has ruled that Standing Order 5 is obsolete and that a member does not have to attend the service of this House, with the resultant corollary that we have no assurance the minister will be available for the budget debate or, indeed, before April 1 or at all, I wish to move the following motion which is seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That the statement of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion of March 11th on areas designated as special areas be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; that the committee report back to the House thereon on or before Wednesday, 25th March; and that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion be ordered to appear before the committee during its sittings on the said statement.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see that the President of the Privy Council wishes to address the House on the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East. I must first ask whether there is unanimous consent on the part of the House so that the hon. member's motion can be put.

• (2:10 p.m.)

I do not want to engage in a debate with the hon. member for St. John's East, but he referred to the fact that the Chair has ruled that Standing Order 5 is obsolete. To my recollection no such ruling was ever made. I think there was some doubt expressed with regard to part of Standing Order 5 which states:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Every member is bound to attend the service of the House, unless leave of absence has been given him by the House.

My suggestion on a previous ruling was that perhaps the practice of obtaining leave of absence from the House appeared to have been abandoned. There are a number of members from both sides of the House who for good reason are not here today and who, of course, have not obtained leave from the House. It was in this way the ruling was made. In any event, to return to the motion proposed by the hon. member under Standing Order 43, the motion cannot be put unless there is unanimous agreement. I have to ask whether there is such unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member has heard, there is not unanimity. I regret that the motion cannot be put.

Mr. McGrath: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, with all the humility of my Irish heart, perhaps Your Honour will allow me to withdraw that part of my remarks with which Your Honour does not agree.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimity, the motion cannot be put.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-197, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO WHITE PAPER

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Can he inform the House when it may definitely expect to receive the white paper on foreign policy? Also, will he give an indication as to its format and the areas of concern it may be expected to cover?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I think the Prime Minister will be present later in the question period, Mr. Speaker. Possibly the hon. member could wait and repeat his question at that time.

WATER RESOURCES

DIVERSION FROM CANADA TO UNITED STATES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since I see him sporting a green tie in honour of St. Patrick's Day, I hope this will result in a very happy reply. May I also be permitted to remind the minister and all sons of Erin that St. Patrick was a Scotsman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He was sent to Christianize Ireland, that is the only thing the Scots ever undertook in which they failed completely.

In view of an article by Mr. Lewis G. Smith which has been printed in the Congressional Record, placed there by Congressman Frank Moss of Utah, recommending the diversion of the Liard river system in northwestern British Columbia, the Yukon and Northwest Territories, I should like to ask the minister whether any studies have been made or are being made by the Canadian government, either on its own or in conjunction with private interests in Canada or the United States, in regard to diversion of water from Canada to the United States?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to find that my hon. friend is as badly informed about saints as he is about energy policy. With respect to his question, I saw the article and its highly speculative opinion, to which, of course, the individual concerned is perfectly entitled. There are no studies being carried on by the government of Canada in respect of the feasibility or otherwise of diversion for the purpose of exporting water to the United States.

ENERGY

CONTINENTAL POLICY—COMMODITIES INCLUDED IN DISCUSSIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. May I ask him what particular energy commodities are being discussed in the talks that are going on between the government of Canada and the government of the United States in working out a continental energy policy?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the first place the discussions which will take place will not be concerned with a continental energy policy, whatever that may mean, but will be concerned with the question of marketing Canadian energy commodities and United States energy commodities on a bilateral basis. Discussions in regard to long-term arrangements have not in any particular sense commenced. There have been general discussions held since the presidential and prime ministerial initiative of last March. Most of the discussions of recent time were about the short-term question, which was settled by the unilateral decision of the President last week.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether uranium and hydroelectric power are within the ambit of the discussions that are going on?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, when we sit down to discuss the long-term arrangements in particular, I would envisage that the first meeting would, in the normal fashion, determine the agenda and the matters to be discussed. This agenda has not yet been decided. Certainly it could well be that uranium and hydroelectric power will be within the terms of that reference, but that has not yet been decided.

OIL—U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS—EXPORT OF CANADIAN WATER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Having listened to the general answers given by the minister, we should like some particulars. May I ask the minister whether the United States, in the negotiations that the minister has mentioned often in regard to the export of crude petroleum, has asked for or demanded export of Canadian water in return for any increase in the crude petroleum quotas which have been cut back and have so severely affected western Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker. At no time in any discussions that I or any of my officials have had with the United States has that country made an enlarged market for Canadian oil in the United States contingent upon the export of Canadian water, or even suggested such a possibility.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put a further supplementary question to the minister. In view of the statement of the Prime Minister that the Canadian government is prepared to export water in any energy arrangement or negotiations with the United States, can the minister now explain the answer which he has just given?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is obviously debate, and I should not think the question is acceptable in those terms. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

Mr. Paproski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Prime Minister, but I would like to pass until he comes into the House.

ERIN GO BRAGH

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): As I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, as an Irishman I would like to pay my respects to Irishmen, if I may, and dedicate these words to those people who would like to be Irish:

The Lord above made Irishmen for laughter,
Oh yes, and laughter sure is mighty swell,
The Lord above made Irishmen for laughter
But, with a little bit of luck,
With a little bit of luck,
A donnybrook would do as well.

The Irish wit was made for making merry,
To spread the life of joy in me and you,
The Irish wit was made for making merry
But, with a little bit of luck,
With a little bit of luck,
A shillelagh has its purpose too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is pressing his luck.

GRAIN

OATS AND BARLEY—FINAL PAYMENT ON 1968-69 POOLS

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the 1968-69 oat and barley pools have been closed for some time, would the minister indicate to the House when he will be in a position to announce the final payments to be made to the producers out of the surplus in the accounts?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that the indications earlier were that these pools would in fact be in a deficit position, and that has in fact proven to be the case.

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the Minister without Portfolio. Is he indicating by his answer to me that in fact there will be no final payments in respect of these two grains?

Mr. Lang: In respect of oats and barley, that is right, Mr. Speaker.

FINAL PAYMENT ON DURUM WHEAT

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Will he inform the House when the farmers can expect their final cheques in respect of the production of Durum wheat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we are very conscious of the obvious desire on the part of these producers to have them at as early a date as possible. There is some difficulty in closing the Durum part of the pool without closing the whole wheat pool. We are looking into that problem to see whether they can be physically separated in terms of closing. It may be some time before it is possible to close the wheat pool as a whole.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, when the minister makes an announcement about final payments will he also issue a press release stating that this money is the farmer's own money and does not come from the federal treasury?

WHEAT—"LIFT" PROGRAM REGULATIONS—APPEAL BOARD

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister without Portfolio. Can he indicate when the regulations will be issued in respect of the program entitled "Lift", and can he also indicate when the appeal board will be announced together with its terms of reference?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a precise date for this at the present time.

[Mr. Muir (Lisgar).]

HISTORIC SITES

ARTHABASKA—ACQUISITION OF RESIDENCE OF SIR WILFRID LAURIER

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Has the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada taken any decision with regard to the recognition as a national historic site of the house in which Sir Wilfrid Laurier lived in Arthabaska, which is located in my riding?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will allow me to suggest that questions of this type are normally placed on the order paper. If there is real urgency, the question could be debated at the time of adjournment, and I undertake to see that it be considered as soon as possible.

Mr. Fortin: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—POLICY REGARDING GRANTS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

As he must announce soon the government dairy policy, will he stop discriminating against farmers from eastern Canada by re-establishing the $10 million grants he cut from his estimates—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will admit that this question is out of order in those terms.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, let me put it another way.

Could the Minister of Agriculture say whether, when he formulates the new dairy policy, he will think of the farms of eastern Canada and grant them the $10 million they have been asking for for a long time?

Mr. Speaker: I think that the question has already been put in this way; however, the minister might perhaps answer it, considering the importance of the matter raised.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, an announcement respecting the details of the dairy policy for the 1970-71 dairy year will be made next week, I hope, but certainly before the end of this month.

GRAIN

WHEAT—MAXIMUM DELIVERY QUOTA PER SUMMERFALLOW ACRE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, might I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. Does the government intend to have an absolute maximum delivery quota of eight bushels per summerfallow acre regardless of the participation of farmers in the scheme or disappearance of wheat out of storage stocks held by the Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in the statement announcing the program to the House it was indicated that the eight-bushel quota was based on an assumption that the eligible acres for delivery of wheat would total 53 million, and should the eligible acres fall as short as 47 million there could be a non-bushel quota.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. On the basis of the fact that the minister has indicated there was an assumption about the quota and in the event that the deliveries do not reach the eight-bushel quota and we do not reach the 250 million bushel delivery figure, will last year's summerfallow be taken into account in full in order to add a further quota?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter seems a bit complicated. It would seem to me that the question as asked has hypothetical overtones. I wonder whether the hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Korchinski: I would be quite prepared to do so, Mr. Speaker. I can quite understand why Your Honour is confused over the whole thing because there are no regulations at the moment. Because of the fact that there is an assumption on the part of the minister that there will be a certain acreage quota reached, will last year's summerfallow be taken into account in whole rather than the 25 per cent that he presently takes into account in granting some people extra quotas under the system he has announced?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. There is no contemplation of changing the degree of participation of last year's summerfallow for quota purposes. On the other hypothetical part of the question I am perfectly satisfied our hypothetical answers to date are adequate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POLLUTION

PHOSPHATE DETERGENTS—ASSISTANCE OF INDUSTRY TECHNICAL STAFF IN RESEARCH

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the offer from the soap industry to lend their technical staff to the minister's department to assist in developing pollution control measures, will the minister say whether the offer of such assistance has been accepted?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned to date the offer is no soap. We have our own officials and experts and I think they are quite adequate.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, in view of the urgency of this matter to the people of the nation, would the minister say whether he would consider joint research being undertaken by the department and the soap industry which has a say in this situation?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, our officials have attended at the laboratories of the soap industry. We have seen what they are doing. Our own people are working very hard in respect of the research that is necessary, and I am quite convinced on the detergent question that the industry, faced with the need of intensifying their research to come up with phosphorous-free detergents, will be able to do the job in their usual effective way.

PHOSPHATE DETERGENTS—RESEARCH ON FORMULA N

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether or not formula N discovered by Professor Phillip Jones of the University of Toronto is being subjected to research by the department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. MacInnis: Would you please tell me, Mr. Speaker, why that is not a legitimate question?

Mr. Speaker: I might say that the question puzzles me no end. I have some doubts whether it is a matter of urgency. The hon. member seems to think it is, and in view of the fact that we are celebrating her particular day I am sure the minister will be anxious to answer at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We will attribute this answer to St. Patrick, and any shortcomings there may be in it will be his responsibility.

Formula N is, I understand, a patent formula, and my instructions are that to date the professor has been rather reluctant to provide his formula for public research until his patent rights are established.

SECOND VOYAGE OF "MANHATTAN"—LIST OF REQUIREMENTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister, on motions tomorrow or the next time he is in the House or in answer to my question now, make a statement concerning the Manhattan with regard to the regulations, the amount of the bond, the date of sailing, and other pertinent information?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I would be very glad to do so. In fact, had I not missed the call for motions I would have given the House a partial list of the requirements today. I will be glad to table it in the House, if there is agreement.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister has indicated that he would have made a statement on motions if he had not missed the call. I think he has requested that Your Honour ask for unanimous consent to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure the minister is asking for that. Even at this moment he seems to have some doubt. But certainly if the minister wants the House to revert to motions, it is up to the House to decide. Is that the minister's request?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker. What I did—I guess it is the effects of all the joy and so on emanating from the other side on St. Patrick's day that have caused the confusion—was to ask permission to table the first set of requirements for the Manhattan. It is not a statement, but I will be glad to make this list available.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: We are always being disappointed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the minister agree to having the list appended to Hansard?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Jamieson: I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For list of requirements, see appendix.]

FISHERIES

CANADA-U.S. DRAFT AGREEMENT ON FISHING PRIVILEGES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. What is the current status of the draft agreement with the United States about reciprocal fishing rights in each other's fishing zones?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The matter is going to come up before cabinet later this week.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I had a question for the Postmaster General who is on the roster for today but not in the House. Perhaps the acting minister might answer it. Could he advise whether anything is being done to resolve the dispute which has been dragging on in Montreal since February 3 in connection with the delivery of parcels and mail?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I will be glad to take the question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Charlevoix on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Since the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications should be here this afternoon according to the roster system, I should like to know if the government house leader would not make a special effort to summon him to the House to answer the members' questions concerning the postal dispute in Montreal, which has been deteriorating in the last couple of days. I would ask the Government House Leader to see to it that at the end of this sitting, at least, the Postmaster General comes to the House today as he is expected to according to the roster system.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether the Postmaster General has resigned his post or has he been asked for his resignation by the cabinet, which is the rumour going around the Press Gallery.

Mr. Greene: What are you doing hanging around there? It is no place for a young fellow like you.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PHASING OUT OF MEAFORD TANK RANGE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey Simcoe): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention of the government to phase out the Meaford tank range?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure this question should be asked at this time. Perhaps the hon. member might consider giving notice that he wishes to have it considered at the time of adjournment.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EASTERN NOVA SCOTIA—LAY-OFF OF MAINTENANCE OF WAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has he received a reply as yet from the Canadian Transport Commission regarding the investigation into the matter of the safety factor in connection with the lay-off of CNR maintenance of way employees?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, I fear I have not, but I will jog some memories on it and see whether I can get it for the hon. member in the next week or two.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF CANADIAN AIR SPACE BY U.S. AIR FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he is in a position to make a statement in respect of the use of the airways and air space of Canada by the United States Strategic Air Force, or a portion of it, in connection with exercises?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): It was not my intention to make a statement. We have put out a press release today. This is the normal operation which flows from the understanding with the United States authorities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that understanding under the provisions of NORAD or outside of the purview of NORAD?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I believe it is within the general agreement pertaining to NORAD.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. In view of the Canadian authorization to the United States permitting Strategic Air Command to carry out low level training flights over Saskatchewan and Alberta, will the government consider advising the U.S. authorities that Canadian observers must be placed on board each flight and stationed at each of the ground installations in order to ensure that these planes carry no armaments and follow strictly the flight plans that have been filed with Canadian authorities?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I believe we have very good procedures that have been followed in the past and are being followed now. The Canadian authorities, of course, have complete information regarding the flight plans and proper altitudes. Everything is regulated, and I do not see any reason for departing from previous arrangements which have proved satisfactory.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Did the Canadian government, prior to granting approval for Strategic Air Command training flights over Saskatchewan and Alberta, obtain assurances that personnel under training would not be used in the Viet Nam hostilities?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What nonsense!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO WHITE PAPER

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Prime Minister who has just come into the House. I can tell him that during his absence we were dealing with one of the lesser luminaries; we were discussing St. Patrick. Can the Prime Minister tell the House when it may definitely expect to receive the white paper on foreign policy, and will he give an indication as to its format and the areas of concern it may be expected to cover?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I may say, with regard to the areas of concern, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated on previous occasions that the white paper would be quite general in nature and that it would cover various aspects of Canada's foreign relations. With regard to the timing I can only repeat what he has said. He would like the white paper made public before the end of the session.

REPORTED CHARGE OF NON-INVOLVEMENT IN WORLD AFFAIRS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of a recent statement in a review of international affairs by Professor Peyton Lyon that Canada is taking "giant steps in the direction of continental isolationism and that cutbacks in the commitments of NATO and budget cuts in the department would indicate Canada is hellbent on a policy of non-involvement in world affairs"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Baldwin: I recognize that the preamble to my question was lengthy. Will the Prime Minister say if there is any substance to this charge, and will these allegations be dealt with in the white paper.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that the question as asked is in order.

Mr. Baldwin: May I put another supplementary question and try to come in the side door.

Mr. Trudeau: Take your time.

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you. Be my guest. In the light of recent experience of Canadian legislators in Washington when it was found that virtually all American Congressmen were amazed to hear of Canadian claims to Arctic waters and there was no knowledge that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had even advanced any claim in this regard, does the Prime Minister not feel that he must learn to speak out loudly and clearly on such issues and that our voice must not be muted?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is entitled to make only one speech in asking a question. The hon. member for Greenwood.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

CYPRUS—SPECIAL MEASURES BY UNITED NATIONS FORCES BECAUSE OF INCREASED TENSION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and I apologize for not giving him notice of it. Have recent events, including the attempted assassination of Archbishop Makarios and the murder of the former minister of the interior and defence and the consequent tension in Cyprus, necessitated any special measures or precautions on the part of the United Nations forces in the island, including our own troops?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Not specifically, Mr. Speaker, although we have been following the situation that has developed over the past few weeks very closely. No doubt if there were a change of emphasis on the part of the United Nations, Canada naturally would respond to whatever request was made. There is no indication at present that the situation warrants an increase in the number of troops we have there.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

As the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications said yesterday that a report on the present postal dispute would be submitted to the cabinet, is the Prime Minister in a position today to tell the House whether the cabinet has made some decision about this dispute?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the cabinet has often made decisions. It has studied the question many times. The Postmaster General and Minister of Communications has been doing his best for several months to implement the policy adopted by the government. The situation is a difficult one. The cabinet meets often to discuss measures to be adopted.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I would ask more precisely the Prime Minister to tell us whether, at the last cabinet meeting, any decision has been made and, if so, if it tends to maintain the present government policy in connection with—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows he is not allowed to ask any question relating to cabinet decisions.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

I would like to know if the Prime Minister himself or the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications will make soon, perhaps tomorrow, a statement on the steps that the government intends to take to correct the abnormal postal situation in Montreal?

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say if this will call for a statement from the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications or from myself. I know that the government directly or indirectly keeps in close touch with the matter and that it acts in the best manner possible under the circumstances to bring back peace and harmony in Montreal. This does not necessarily call for a statement at this time. I do not say there will not be one, but none is anticipated at present.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether his government intends to take any extraordinary decisions to straighten out the situation prevailing in Montreal, which has become worse these past few days, especially since this morning?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I really do not know what is meant by extraordinary decisions. I think most of our decisions have been extraordinary.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In view of the importance of that subject, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether the government intends to get the Canadian armed forces involved in the present conflict?

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly not, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRANSAIR SERVICE, TORONTO-SAULT STE. MARIE—REDUCTION OF AIR CANADA FLIGHTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of recent evidence that Air Canada is planning to cut back its service to Sault Ste. Marie as a result of the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to allow TransAir to operate a daily service between Sault Ste. Marie and Toronto, would the minister give instructions to the CTC that they enforce their earlier assurance that there will be no diminution of Air Canada flights and, failing that, would he ask the CTC to review its basic decision?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, my authority to instruct the CTC is quite limited but I would be glad to pass along his representations. My information is that the whole question is subject to review within the first year of operation of the new plan in any event.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate to the House at what point the government will reply to the request from the government of Ontario and from other interested and affected individuals and bodies as to its general policy, particularly in relation to these supplementary services?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, so far as I personally am aware, any representations from the government of Ontario have been made to the Canadian Transport Commission and will be dealt with through the normal procedures of that commission. I merely offer the perhaps gratuitous information that my understanding is that the CTC has indicated the new service will be kept under review and a full-scale hearing will be held within the first year of operations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Western Nova.

Mr. Comeau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder if I might have one further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, in view of the principle involved—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might have a supplementary but we have reached the point where I have to caution hon. members that we are running out of time.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister whether he would find an opportunity to make an early statement to the House as to government policy with regard to permitting regional air carriers to enter into direct competition where Air Canada has indicated that they do not want to withdraw their services?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the premise on which that question is posed is not, in my judgment, correct in that I do not know that Air Canada has said that it does not want to withdraw service. However, I will be very glad to explain the regional air policy on a statement on motions, or it is conceivable that within a short time I will be before the committee with the estimates of the Department of Transport and we could deal with it then, or in fact the CTC will be there as well.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Western Nova.

TEXTILES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he been in contact with the provincial authorities in those areas where textile industries are affected, and when can we expect the long-awaited statement on the policy of the government with relation to the future of the textile industry in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I believe my officials have been in touch with officials of all provinces but I made promises to some provincial ministers. I do not know which province the hon. member has in mind. I said I would see them before announcing the policy.

[Later:]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

If I remember well, the minister stated on March 20, 1969, that the report of a study on the textile industry would be tabled in the House before the end of the year. Now, the findings of that study have not yet been published. Could the minister tell us when we will obtain that report?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the study was completed in December last. Since then we have had consultations with the representatives of the industry, the unions and the provinces concerned. We are now drawing up that policy and we hope to be in a position to announce it in the near future.

[Later:]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the present stagnation of the textile industry—there are factories in my riding and some people from the management complained to me that almost every week they must lay off employees—could the minister tell the House whether measures have been taken or will be taken soon in order to help this industry through strict import control?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question many times. If the hon. member would like to co-operate with the hon. members for Sainte-Marie and Saint-Hyacinthe (Messrs. Valade and Ricard), I would be very happy to hear their advice before the policy is announced, not only after.

CLOSING OF DUNLOP PLANT—EFFECT ON YARMOUTH TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration related to the question I asked him yesterday. Has he any information today on the status of the Dunlop plant, particularly as it affects Cosmo-Imperial Mills in Yarmouth?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I explained yesterday that I have been in touch with the two Ontario ministers indicating to them the nature of the conversations I had with the union representatives and suggesting we would be ready to co-operate with any working committee or task body established to investigate the economies of closure or future prospects of the plant. That is with respect to the general situation. I am still awaiting information on the specific matter he raised and as soon as I receive it I will be glad to give it to him.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement over the weekend that a slight increase in unemployment might be necessary to combat inflation, may I ask the minister if he is considering resigning from Parliament and joining the unemployed so that he might make his maximum contribution in the battle against inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I do not think the minister should be allowed to answer.

NATIONAL PARKS

POINTE FORILLON—AGREEMENT RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Considering the importance that several members attach to the development of Forillon Park and the statement made yesterday by Quebec's Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, could the minister tell the House whether the development of this famous Forillon Park is a sure thing?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Just as the hon. member did, Mr. Speaker, I have read the statement by Quebec's Intergovernmental Affairs Minister. I am glad to see that he does not object to the Canadian government enforcing its legislation the same way in Quebec as elsewhere.

1976 OLYMPIC GAMES—ASSISTANCE TO VANCOUVER AND MONTREAL IN BIDS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman inform the House what role the federal government is playing in assisting both Vancouver and Montreal in their bids for the 1976 winter and summer Olympic games, respectively? In giving his reply could the Prime Minister give us some idea of the financial arrangements the government has made with these cities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather complicated and lengthy question to answer. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is dealing with this matter. I myself have had some exchange of correspondence with both Vancouver and Montreal. I am sure there will be no objection in due course to tabling this correspondence, if the other parties agree. I am sure also that when a decision has been taken one way or another the minister will have no objection to stating the role the federal government intends to play. But until a decision is taken on the Olympics I do not think it is useful to make any further statements.

Mr. Baldwin: The government need not issue a white paper on this.

HOUSING

AVAILABILITY OF MORTGAGE MONEY—DISCUSSIONS WITH LENDING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister in charge of housing. In view of the statement by representatives of the Ontario Association of Real Estate Boards yesterday in Ottawa that there will be a substantial drop in investment moneys that banks and trust companies will lend on mortgages, is it the minister's intention to call these institutions to Ottawa to discuss this matter?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question the other day but I will try again. No, there is no intention to call them to Ottawa in the present circumstances although we are in contact with each of the organizations to which the hon. member has referred on an almost constant basis.

Mr. Gilbert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since there is $10 billion invested in pension funds, only 10 to 12 per cent of which is allocated to housing, what steps has the minister taken to divert more of these moneys to housing purposes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this question is of very wide import and ought to be answered by way of a general statement on motions.

TRANSPORT

RECOMMENDATIONS BY FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE ON ATLANTIC TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Inasmuch as the minister has had in his hands now for some months the recommendations of the four Atlantic premiers on transport policy for the Atlantic area and as the CNR announced only recently still further increases in transportation costs, can the minister indicate when we may expect some action on those recommendations?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to answer the first part of the question about my having the report from the Atlantic premiers, what the hon. member said is quite true. As a result of the report and in consultation with the premiers a federal-provincial committee was established with representatives from the four Atlantic provinces on it. It has now held four meetings, the most recent being the ones, I believe, of March 7 and 8. I was advised by them on Monday that they hope to give these recommendations to me within the next few weeks.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF ST. GEORGE'S BAY TO DRAGGERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of representations from a number of interested organizations indicating that foreign vessels are dragging within the three-mile limit in St. George's Bay, an operation which is tending to destroy the inshore lobster fishery, will the minister indicate what action is being taken in line with the recommendation of the chamber of commerce there that the area from Cape Anguille to Cape St. George be closed to foreign vessels?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we have one of our larger fisheries protection vessels in the area. It is making sure that these foreign draggers will not encroach on our three-mile limit within which the lobster fishery is carried on.

EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT OF ANTI-INFLATION POLICIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement on television over the weekend that unemployment will be higher in 1970 than it was in 1969, can the minister assure the House that high unemployment areas such as the Maritimes, Eastern Quebec and the Prairies will not suffer from even higher unemployment in 1970 as a result of the government's anti-inflation policies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is of very wide import. It is of a very general nature and is not the type which ought to be asked or answered at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, it seems that the minister is quite prepared to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 5051) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman (page 5065).

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. members of the NDP sought to minimize the dangers of inflation by saying that really inflation poses no dangers at all and that there is no danger of our pricing ourselves out of world markets. The financial critic of the NDP said copper prices had increased substantially, yet we still sell copper; nickel prices have increased, as indeed have the prices of all other raw materials, by a considerable percentage, yet we have no trouble in selling these commodities on the markets of the world. I most respectfully point out to the NDP through you, Mr. Speaker, that there is indeed a great danger, we shall price ourselves out of world markets if the terrible curse known as inflation is not stopped very shortly.

I ask my hon. friends to the left, is there not a danger of pricing ourselves out of the market for heavier machinery? Look at the Japanese steel that is invading our markets, even though we have some of the world's finest steel workers in Hamilton and other Canadian centres. Look at the competition in the automobile market. These Volkswagens we see running around come from Germany and our people are buying them because they are cheaper than other cars. Clearly, we are pricing ourselves out of the world automobile market. That is why inflation must be stopped and that is why I agree with the government's policy relating to tight money. As a result of those policies there may be some unemployment in the country; bad though that may be for those who are unemployed, it would be even worse for the country if unemployment were to grow. If prices are allowed to go even higher and if inflation is not checked, unemployment will become greater. We shall not be able to sell our goods and services on the markets of the world or even in this country, because so many cheaper foreign imports will enter Canada. Also, we shall not be able to export.

Members of the opposition suggest the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has not done a good job in his budget because pensions for veterans and old people have not been increased. I think all members of the House wish pensions to be increased. We all know old age pensioners receive too little money. Most of us would like to double their pensions. But can any member of the opposition tell us where we are to get the money with which to increase these pensions? To be fair and reasonable, opposition members should suggest where the money is to come from.

An hon. Member: From the $250 million surplus.

Mr. Whicher: Someone on my left said something about a surplus. I believe the members of the NDP suggest that exemptions from personal income tax should be $2,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I think any representative of any Canadian constituency wishes that could come about.

An hon. Member: Then, vote for it.

Mr. Whicher: In the white paper the government has introduced, it is suggested that there be exemptions of $1,400-$1,500 for single people, if you take into account charitable donations, and up to $2,900 for married people. These deductions will cost the government approximately $1 billion. The Minister of Finance tells the people of Canada in the white paper proposals where he expects to get this money. Whether or not, we agree with these proposals, they are in the white paper. The minister proposes to obtain the money by increasing taxes for the middle income group and by imposing a capital gains tax. My hon. friends to the left have suggested there should be a $2,000 exemption for single people and a $4,000 exemption for married people. I ask them in all sincerity where they think the government is going to get the $1½ billion that this would cost the government in tax revenues. The government cannot continually print money.

There has been a lot of talk about the surplus we have this year. I do not say it boastfully, but this is the first surplus we have had for a long time. As a citizen of Canada, I am sick and tired of continual deficits. I ask hon. members to look at the amount of debt in Canada today. Of the amount required to run the country this year, 14.1 per cent will go towards paying the interest on the debt, but nothing off the principal. This amount is equal to that spent by the Department of National Defence. It is a large amount of money. Therefore, I am glad we have a $350 million surplus. If hon. members calculate this amount at 8 per cent, they will see that approximately $28 million in interest will be saved this year.

Mr. Broadbent: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Whicher: I will when I have finished. I have not got too much time. I point out that the Minister of Finance will have an additional $28 million to spend next year which he otherwise would not have had. I think it is irresponsible when people try to make headlines in the papers across Canada or receive publicity on television by saying that they want a $2,000 exemption for single people and $4,000 for married people. Everybody wants that. My question is, why do they stop at $2,000? Why not make it $3,000 and $6,000? Figures are easy to throw around when you have no responsibility for governing the country, and no hope of ever governing the country in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I consider this to be irresponsible criticism by my friends to my left. I respectfully ask them to tell us where we are going to get the money in order to allow these deductons.

In my opinion, the financial critic of the Conservative party did an excellent job yesterday. His main theme was that the federal expenditures were not under control. He pointed out that this year we would be spending approximately $900 million more than we did last year, even though the present government has said they are attempting to cut expenditures. If the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had wanted to be fair, he would have said that the great majority of that amount is for fixed expenditures over which this government has no control whatsoever. We, in this country, are in a bind, Mr. Speaker, and we have to do something about it. The most important word in Canada today for politicians, whether at the federal, provincial, county or municipal level, is the word, no. For too long governments have said, yes, yes, yes to every request the people have made. Now, we have these huge expenditures which, to a large extent, are uncontrollable. I refer to the national debt and programs such as medicare and hospitalization. I agree that these programs are necessary, but they have to be paid for. This is one reason government expenditures are going to be $900 million higher in the year ahead.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance and the present government are attempting to control expenditures in this country. Since the time of Confederation, not just in Canada but in all the western world, the number of civil servants has increased by approximately 5 per cent every year. A government which will say we are not going to have additional civil servants to run this country deserves a medal. When the government decreases the number of civil servants by 10 per cent, they should receive two or three medals. This is what this government has done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: In my opinion, the government has achieved this objective in a dignified way. The government has had many problems to tackle. Removing the Bonaventure from operation was no easy task after millions of dollars were spent on it, not by this government but by a former government.

An hon. Member: A former Liberal government.

Mr. Whicher: A former Liberal government is right. I am not proud of the fact that this money was spent on it, but I am proud of the fact that this government has had the guts to say we cannot afford it and has put it in drydock or done something with it. The government finally has had the initiative and the courage to say no. There are other matters also.

At one time I agreed with those people who were opposed to the government's decision to withdraw half of our troops from NATO. Personally, I thought the government was wrong. I felt we had an obligation to help our friends in NATO. However, I say to hon. members that those troops have been there since 1945. How long do you want to keep them there? Should they remain until the year 2,000? They have to be brought back some time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member who has the floor should be allowed to make his remarks.

Mr. Whicher: I don't mind the interruptions.

Mr. Horner: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Whicher: I would be glad to, particularly from my hon. friend, but I do not have time.

Mr. Horner: My question will be brief.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has only three minutes left.

Mr. Horner: And that's too long.

Mr. Whicher: As I pointed out, whether we agree with the withdrawal of the NATO troops from Europe or not, it is a retrenchment as far as expenses are concerned. The members of the opposition say the government should not do this. They say, keep on spending money, the sky is the limit; you can go to the Bank of Canada and print bond after bond. Then, they condemn us for raising taxes all the time. They cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to cut down taxes, we have to cut down expenditures and this, within reason, is what the present government is attempting to do. I think they deserve credit for that.

Hon. members to my left know that I do not always support what the government does, but I think the Minister of Finance and the government are making a genuine effort to control expenditures in a most difficult period. I agree with the financial critic of the Conservative party that in spite of the fact we have cut back, maybe not as much as we should, inflation is still a terrible curse to this country.

Mr. Horner: Who started it?

Mr. Whicher: It may have been us, but it is still a curse, regardless of who started it.

With all respect to the Minister of Finance, controls are needed to combat inflation. We must have wage and profit controls in the same way as we did during the last war because, in my opinion, financially we are in a greater crisis now than at that time.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired, but I understand that the hon. member for Crowfoot would like to ask him a question. This can be done only with unanimous agreement of the House, since the hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is one "no". The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that there were not more ministers in the House to hear the speech of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). It is difficult to understand why, when we are debating a matter affecting the lifeblood of this nation, there are in the House at this time only four ministers of the Crown.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is indicative of something that I intend to deal with a little later on, namely the contempt that is shown Parliament by this government. In an apparent endeavour to emasculate the institution, when members speak on a matter as important as the budget, ministers are not present in the House.

The hon. member who has just concluded spent a great deal of time preparing his speech. He has had long experience in the legislature, and whether I agree with his viewpoint or not, he has a viewpoint to express. I deeply resent the attitude of the government members in not being present to listen to the remarks that he had to make.

I am not going to deal at any length with the budget because it does not exist. It is a model of fatuity which reminds me of a certain medical remedy, the placebo; a medicine that is given to humour rather than to cure disease.

With great respect to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), whose virtuosity is notable, I could give no better description of this budget than to use the words of Abraham Lincoln when, in 1858, he described a budget by saying it, "was as thin as the homeopathic soup that was made by boiling the shadow of a pigeon that had starved to death."

It is of interest to note that nothing is said now of the just society? Have you noticed that, Mr. Speaker? That was the slogan, but the other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said the time has now come to use that expression no more. The reason is obvious and apparent. A new slogan, which has not yet been developed as far as I know, is needed at this time.

Hon. members will be interested to know that in the book written by the Prime Minister and another entitled "Two Innocents in Red China", in describing how the communists operated he said:

> The government never ceases to contrive new activities to keep hands and minds occupied. Long before one slogan has lost its force, another is invented—

Invented—that is a good word.

> —to whip up popular enthusiasm. In this way the communist party always has ready some new triumph to astound the people.

The just society: let us sum it up. It has given Canada the highest disregard for parliament in the lifetime of this nation. The just society has given Canada the highest spending, the highest taxes, the highest cost of living, the highest accumulation of unsold wheat, the highest neglect of the prairie provinces, the highest lack of consideration for veterans and their dependants and the aged. No one can deny that.

Today the government speaks of a budget surplus. Yet, what is being done to meet the situation of the old age pensioner in this country who today is no longer receiving charitable assistance but who has paid for that which he receives? I speak as one who has not accepted the old age pension.

I should like to refer to some figures that appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail, and I want to get through this portion of my remarks as quickly as I can. With regard to the 4 per cent tax on taxable income to a maximum to $240 per person per annum, the amount that the minister expects to raise in 1970-71 is $1.17 billion. Other sources of funds for old age security will be $600 million from a portion of the federal sales tax, and $230 million from a 3 per cent levy on corporation income tax.

As a result, this year $1.905 billion will be paid to the elderly. What about the $95 million of the old people's money which is part and parcel of the $250 million surplus?

Why is this amount not used to help 785,000 of the weakest among us, that elderly group that requires supplementary assistance to survive? If this amount were used it would mean an increase of $10 per month immediately. I ask the minister when he speaks to give some hope to these people who today find themselves hedged in by the legislative enactment of this parliament with only a 2 per cent additional allowance year by year as the cost of living rises today at a rate that fluctuates between 4 and 6 per cent. Their situation is serious.

It is difficult to get this government to realize how bad the situation is in western Canada. Business failures in Saskatchewan are double what they were last year. What action is the government taking in this regard? The hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) makes periodic peregrinations into western Canada and leads the people to believe that something effective is going to be done. But nothing is being done. I should like him to rise in this House and engage in some of the fiction that he places before the western farmers.

The western farmers have before them their earnings for the last two years. These they cannot touch. It is as if they were entirely burglar-proof. They can look at their earnings but they cannot touch them. Is it any wonder there is an aroused feeling, having been told by the members of this government in the 1968 election campaign: "If you produce the wheat, we'll sell it"? The government has done nothing effective. The government has taken the attitude of the Prime Minister who when in Winnipeg, with that customary sway of the right arm and turn of the head, said: "Do you expect me to sell wheat?" As a result of this attitude on the part of the government the farmers are in a desperate position.

I am not at this moment going to discuss the Wheat Board except to say it was set up by a Conservative government and deprived of its power on two occasions by successive Liberal governments. I think the time has come to add additional members to the Wheat Board. There should be a representative of the governments of each of the three western provinces to assure that extra effort and to impress upon the board the necessity for action. Secondly, I point out what I did yesterday, I would like to see the Minister of Finance get in touch with the banks who are today exacting the last pound of flesh they can get in respect of loans made under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the rate of interest thereunder being 5 per cent. When the due date arrives and the farmers cannot pay because there are no wheat sales, they are being asked—coerced, I should say—to sign renewal notes at 9 per cent, 9½ per cent and even more. It is difficult to understand why, when the great and powerful interests do this, this government seems prone to take no action to preserve western farmers and agriculture in general.

I am not going into the question of international affairs today. But, I must say that, go where you will, in all parts of the world, and you will find that Canada today occupies the lowest position in international prestige that she has in our lifetime.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yesterday I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) about those monumental words he uttered on T.V. the other day that morale is low in his department. Is there any wonder? I asked then whether he had a suggestion as to what might be done in order to improve it, and he smiled. I might suggest that his resignation would have that effect, Sir.

In so far as the white paper is concerned my opinion is that it is the greatest hoax of our history. What the government of Canada has done is place this white paper before the people to get them aroused. The number of letters and other communications that have been received by the minister is so great that it has taken him a whole month not to answer the question which I placed on the order paper on February 18. Surely, with the large staffs that Ministers have today as a result of the multiplication in numbers of the intelligentsia that permeate into every part of the various departments, they would be able to secure somebody who could count. There are so many of the intelligentsia, and I refer to them that way because that is what they call themselves—intellectuals—in the Prime Minister's office there is the suggestion that they are going to get a badge with "PET" on it so they will be able to identify one another.

The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) did not deal with the white paper. I would like to have heard from him how the small businessmen in Bruce are reacting to what is going to happen to them. During my term of office the portion of the profits that was subject to the lowest rate of corporation income tax was raised from $20,000 to $35,000. Under the white paper proposals, profits over $20,000 will be subject to the higher rate than the minimum. I do not know how many people have written to the minister, but even his own members are disturbed. One of them wrote his constituents on the subject, saying he had gone all over the constituency and could only find one person who was in favour of the white paper. He is going to turn that letter over to the minister to be framed for posterity. If the minister would only announce the withdrawal of the white paper now he would do more for Canada, for Canadian morale and for the future of this country than anything else he could do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Today I wonder what the objective of the white paper is. I have read what the Prime Minister said in London on January 13, 1969 when he gave his view and his testimony to Canadian university students in the United Kingdom. One of the questions was this:

> What society would you choose to make Canada? Socialist or capitalist?

Well, he had only graduated recently from the socialist party, so I can understand he had some difficulty in disassociating himself completely. This was his answer:

> Labour party socialist—

This is the Prime Minister of Canada answering that question, which society he would choose and he refers to the Labour party socialist. He went on to say:

> —or Cuban socialism or Chinese socialism—socialism from each according to his means.

And then the questioner said:

> From each according to his ability, to each according to his need. Would you support that?

The Prime Minister said:

> Yes, in theory, but not entirely in practice.

Then, he went on to say it cannot be done today. He said:

> —I think in history there have been some small communities who have done that, and I support this and admire it. I do not think it is workable under present circumstances.
> There is still a lot of hate and violence and injustice and inequity and racial discrimination which we shall have to overcome before ever reaching such a state. But if you ask me if it is an ideal, a beacon, something which the world should have, yes I think it is.

Analyze those words, consider the effects of the white paper, and then come to your own conclusion.

I am sure the Minister of Finance has never read this, but it should be required and compulsory reading.

Mr. Benson: You have never read the white paper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have you read it? Oh, the minister has read it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I certainly do not want to interrupt the right hon. gentleman, but I must remind him, and he does not have to be reminded, of course, that he should address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, when I see the attractive countenance of the minister over there, with that suavity that he possesses, it is hard to resist referring especially to him. I should not have put it that way. I should have put the question through you to the minister; do you have this view and have you come to this conclusion?

The Prime Minister then said:

> I do not think it will ever reach it, and I do not think it should use violent means to reach it, because all this is a question of psychology in lay terms, but if we were only saints we would have this society, but we ain't.

Is that not an amazing series of statements —unbelievable. Read the Toronto Star of that date I mentioned in order to get the gospel according to St. Peter.

I have been here in Parliament a long while, and there is nothing greater that any of us could obtain than to be regarded by fellow members as a child of Parliament, of this institution. It has been said that Parliament was made for man, not man for Parliament. In government, however, only with government by discussion can there be government by reason. It has often been said how efficient a dictatorship is and how Hitler was able to do this and Mussolini do that; but while they were doing it freedom was lost. Parliament consists of the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons. The Prime Minister is a political leader and not the head of state. I may not agree with the Prime Minister's policies, but as one who knows something of the position, I respect him both personally and in the position which he holds. I have refrained from saying what I am about to say because I have waited month after month to ascertain what is actually happening here, and what objective the Prime Minister has in flouting Parliament as he does. What is the objective? I thought first the reason was that experience usually is required to hold the position of Prime Minister. The normal number of years in Parliament of men who become Prime Minister of Canada, I think is something like 17 years, and just a little higher in the United Kingdom.

For months I have felt that the image of this institution was being forced down and down. Tell me, sir, where this Prime Minister of Canada once spoke of this institution and what it means. An institution cannot be built unless the person who is Prime Minister upholds it at all times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I supported some of the rule changes, but not all. Those that were effective I believed in, and others I opposed. Two years ago I sounded a warning that if we accepted these rules we would actually destroy this institution. But members drank from the poisoned chalice that the government brought before them; they accepted it. On February 28, 1968 the Prime Minister said that the government, as long as it is the government, has the choice of deciding the manner in which it wishes to govern. Sir, no Prime Minister can exercise the right to determine the manner of governing without destroying this institution. These expressions, "participatory democracy", "just society" —does the House know who used them first? Mao; these are Mao's words.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall not mention any member, but some members have spoken out against the policy of being mere pawns who shall speak and not be heard. In 1956, this Parliament was over-run roughshod. In 1968, the Conservative Party accepted the large number of changes in the rules. It fought rule 16A, and finally 16A was withdrawn and the government obtained the other rule changes. Some thought I was wrong when I opposed many of these changes. As soon as the government was able to secure 16A what did the Prime Minister do? He made the statement that the trap was set and the opposition fell into it. That is not the way to treat Parliament. Then, a few months later, by action of closure, whatever rights remained to private members were virtually ended by the vote of members across the way who joined in applying a halter to the head of Parliament. Sir, it is contempt of Parliament to act in this way. Parliament is not show business. I am amazed at the answers given to questions by members of this government. I admire the capacity to answer questions in both languages which the Prime Minister possesses, but how does he treat the members of this House? He snaps his fingers. Parliament deserves better than that.

Parliament has the right not to be given flippant and unworthy answers. Today, the Speaker of this House is tied by the rules. The question period has become ineffective and innocuous. Nothing controversial may be said by members sitting opposite the government—nothing argumentative. The new rules have paralysed this House. I shall not read from the British Hansard but, in summary, questions in the British House are placed on the order paper in writing and then supplementary questions begin. That is when the government is required to answer. Today, this government hides behind the rules, gives answers, and then when faced with a challenging question that question is out of order because, apparently, we have established rules which have the effect of rendering this institution innocuous. Is it any wonder there are few members present? I want to make clear that they did not leave after I started to speak today; they left before. I think of a Liberal leader in the United Kingdom. I shall not name him. They called him the "chamber-maid". Every time he got up he emptied the chamber. The Minister of Finance knows to whom I refer. The members are absent.

When this institution becomes a place in which there is no difference of opinion it will die. I am forced into the opinion that what is happening is that while the government gives to Parliament a kiss of approval it is a Judas kiss because it is placing this Parliament in a position where across the nation people say, "What do you do there"; "What is it". This is the institution that represents the freedom of you and me, sir, and every Canadian. It is being pushed down and down while at the same time the Prime Minister makes statements such as this statement he made on February 4:

> I might add that as far as I am concerned it is true that I am going to establish a presidential system and this is why I always address you as Monsieur le Président and not Monsieur l'Orateur.

The question period is totally ineffective. When the members of the government answer questions which they think they answered in error, they run outside and correct those answers on T.V. A revision is made even before the revised Hansard is published. We do not want this institution to be a cemetery operated by its own inmates. That is what is coming about.

What about the roster system? Look down the list. The roster system has no place in parliament, but the Prime Minister said we were going to have it. There are more ministers in the Cabinet today than in all history, and fewer cabinet ministers in the House of Commons than in all history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are more ministers than ever now surrounded by more armies of assistants. Why do we sit in Parliament today? We sit to vote supply and nothing else because we have been supplanted by a group of self described intellectuals. I can almost describe them in the words of H. G. Wells as being of the Wellsian intellectual Samurai.

Wherever one goes in the world today, people will ask you about the government of Canada. They ask: "Have you a hippie government there?" I have always defended it because I do not know the characteristics of hippies. Sir, I had hoped that I would not have to speak out on this situation but I am impelled to do so by what is happening daily to this institution. The first intimation that this Parliament was going to be pushed out of existence occurred in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan).

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the right hon. gentleman continues I should bring to his attention that, according to the rules, his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous agreement of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This was a frightful example of the way in which Parliament should not be treated. The hon. member asked on February 2, whether civil servants may make declarations on policy. I was here at the time and heard the Prime Minister answer, yes. There was no equivocation at all about the answer. Prime ministers cannot equivocate by saying yes, when they mean no. To do so is to destroy the whole basis of the relationship among Members of Parliament in the House. As reported in the Globe and Mail of February 3, 1970, the Prime Minister said that when heckling in Parliament gets heavy, he does not bother responding properly to questions. He said: "When the House starts running amok—I'll say yes to anything".

One begins to wonder whether, when "yes" is the answer, it means no. This kind of thing is contempt of the House of Commons. It was a flippant answer, but it was not flippant at the time it was given. I can imagine what would happen in the Mother of Parliaments if the prime minister were to say he fooled with Parliament. The Prime Minister said: "I said yes but I meant no", and the next day he wanted to change it to no. Richard Jackson said, in writing about the incident, that the Prime Minister had stated he wanted to substitute the teasing answer of yes for a more serious no. Is this Parliament or is this a seminar at a university? This is Parliament, sir. The Prime Minister is playing around with Parliament. What are the answers? Not since I read "Alice in Wonderland" as a boy have I ever heard anything like that answer. He said in effect that he said yes because he would say yes no matter what, when he meant no.

Sir, I would like to quote from that book:

> The Hatter opened his eyes very wide on hearing this; but all he said was "Why is a raven like a writing-desk?"
> "Come, we shall have some fun now!" thought Alice. "I am glad they've begun asking riddles—I believe I can guess that," she added aloud.
> "Do you mean that you think you can find out the answer to it," said the March Hare.
> "Exactly so," said Alice.
> "Then you should say what you meant," the March Hare went on.
> "I do," Alice hastily replied; "at least—at least I mean what I say—that's the same thing, you know."

Can you imagine, Alice in Wonderland and Parliament in Blunderland. That is what is happening here.

The passage from the book goes on as follows:

> "Not the same thing a bit!" said the Hatter. "Why, you might just as well say that 'I see what I eat' is the same thing as 'I eat what I see'!"

There is another portion in the book that I have to quote to you, sir. It goes like this:

> How doth the little crocodile
> Improve his shining tail,
> And pour the waters of the Nile
> On every golden scale!
> How cheerfully he seems to grin,
> How neatly spreads his claws,
> And welcomes little fishes in,
> With gently smiling jaws!

I could go on and give further quotations to indicate the kind of frivolous answers that we have received which demonstrate this attitude to Parliament.

On February 13 I asked the Prime Minister a serious question about the subject of sovereignty in the north. We asserted sovereignty during my administration, but the present government of Canada played this sophisticated juristic game of saying, to begin with, that we are not sure whether we have it. Did you ever know a litigant to go into court and say: "I do not know whether I have any rights, but here I am and I want them". This is the frivolous attitude to Parliament. I said on that day:

> Mr. Speaker, there is nothing hypothetical about the subject of Canadian sovereignty in the north. My question to the Prime Minister is simply this: Will the government of Canada insist that there shall be no such voyage without the permission of the Canadian government?

The Prime Minister answered to that:

> Mr. Speaker, we might insist that my grandmother should wear wheels,—

Of all the answers! Then he said:

> —but it is still hypothetical.

Mr. Woolliams: She might not have to have them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Unless members in all parts of the House stand up for their rights, this institution will not much longer be the custodian of freedom. Every day the roster boys of the cabinet do not roster. Numbers of them are missing. Listen to this answer as reported at page 3078 of Hansard in answer to the following question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) put by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Howard):

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence but in his absence I shall direct it to the minister answering for him today.

He went on to ask the question, to which the Prime Minister replied:

> I regret to inform the hon. member that on Mondays nobody answers for the Department of National Defence.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Where are we going? I have a pile of these examples on my desk, Mr. Speaker, but I am running short of time. I will have the opportunity later in a future debate to complete the picture of the degradation of this chamber. It cannot be laughed off, and that is what is happening. I used to watch the Prime Minister with the admiration I still have for him personally, but he does not understand Parliament. There is the trouble. Now, I am beginning to see that it is very difficult to follow him in these devious ways. While pretending to support Parliament, he contributes to its destruction. Have you ever tried to follow in a paper chase? The fox drops the paper here and there in order to delude. We have that in this institution, in the flippancy of this place. What do you think of the members, the Liberal members? I think some of them might want to identify as belonging to that classical group known as "the bums". Imagine speaking of his fellow members as bums. And then the opposition, well, we should not be here.

An hon. Member: Nobodies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are allowed to look, we are allowed to watch, we are allowed to see. We get it without coloured glasses, too, though that is not always thought possible.

What did he say of the members of the opposition? "I think we should encourage members of the opposition to leave; every time they do the IQ of this House rises considerably." Is that the way to look at a nation —Oh, he has the support of some of them over there.

Mr. Woolliams: The former mayor of Toronto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They laugh because that is the only way they get promotion, on the basis of the number of laughs—on the decibel meter.

Mr. Thompson: Phil, come on over and join us.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I have to do this afternoon is place before this House the danger to this institution. I have many more examples that can be given. Every member of this House is part of this institution. Every one is the inheritor of its freedom. Freedom has gone a long way in the field of human rights in the last six months by the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Drybones vs. the Queen. This House now has greater responsibilities than ever before to not pass legislation containing sections, paragraphs or even lines constituting a denial of the fundamental freedoms provided for in the Bill of Rights.

All of us are creatures of this institution. It requires the dedication that was spoken of by Sir John Eliot who sat in the House of Commons under Charles I. Of him it was said he loved his country, England, with a passionate enthusiasm which Pericles felt for Athens and he trusted the House of Commons as no one else.

Sir, you sit in the Chair that was referred to by the late Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King in 1921 in these words:

> The constituent elements of Parliament here represented do right in regarding the present moment as one of historic significance.

That is when the Chair was delivered.

> There are under British parliamentary institutions two symbols of authority—the Crown, which speaks of the sovereignty of loyalty, the speaker's Chair, which speaks of the sovereignty of the people. That, under the aegis of the British flag, those two sovereignties have blended into one is a tribute not less to the character and devotion to duty of the occupants of the British throne than to the genius of the British peoples in the art and science of government.

Tomorrow, in the other place, there is a conference to honour the former leaders of that place. Among them will be the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen who, on the same occasion said:

> This chair will embody for us British traditions, it will remind us from day to day, through the stern trials of the future, of British wisdom and British patience. In Canada we are not all of one race; a large part are of French descent. But I shall echo and anticipate the words of those who in the ceremony of this afternoon will especially represent French Canadians, just so far as to say that they as well as we of Anglo-Saxon blood are attached to the free institutions that we inherit from old England, that they believe as firmly as we in the essential rightness and fitness of the form of government that she developed and that now is ours.

Sir, I did not want to say what I have said. I have sat here, I have listened, I have watched, I have felt. I have been deeply concerned and am now about what is happening to this institution, for if it goes, freedom goes. That is the reason I spoke as I did today, from the heart.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this budget proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) last Thursday is not something new devised by the government. It is a continuation of the government's announced intention to institute a program of government restraint, government austerity. This program calls on the public sector of the economy to make all the sacrifices while it permits the private sector to go on its free and untrammelled way to make all the profits it can.

This proposal, Mr. Speaker, is one which the minister himself has admitted will mean sacrifices on the part of the Canadian people. The minister said, and I quote:

> I anticipate some increase in unemployment. There will also be difficult wage negotiations. Some of these negotiations may issue in strikes—perhaps prolonged strikes—before settlements are reached.

My colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) was not exaggerating yesterday when he said that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was urging employers to handcuff their employees, was urging employers to create situations by refusal to negotiate in good faith, to create tension and to have strikes. The minister knew what he was talking about, because unemployment is rising. The minister, of course, was not alone in talking tough. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in a press conference in December of last year said:

> If people think we're going to lose our nerve, they should think again. We're not.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, it does not take much courage for the government to handcuff employees. It is not the cabinet ministers who are going to be unemployed or suffer as a result of inflation; it is the ordinary people, those who are least able to take the increased cost of living. It is those who will be unemployed who will suffer as a result of the kind of programs this government is proposing. The minister admitted himself that the program of restraint was failing to a large extent when he said in his budget speech:

> There has been no slowing down in the rate of increase of prices and wages and other incomes. Costs continue to push prices up. Slower real growth has not yet reduced inflation.

There is no evidence and no belief by anybody except members of the government and a few of their tame so-called experts that this will happen. A commentator as sympathetic to the government as Anthony Westell, in discussing the minister's budget speech, reported in the Toronto Star of March 13, under a heading which I think is very apt, "Policies Will Cut Buying Power of Old and Poor", that the Minister of Finance said:

> I'm not proposing any legislation on taxes or tariffs.

Mr. Westell comments:

> But that's not the whole truth. His policies will in fact cut the purchasing power of the old, the unemployed and the other elements in the community too weak to defend their living standards.

• (4:00 p.m.)

For these unfortunate people—a million or more Canadians—Benson's figures and forecasts mean exactly the same as a tax increase.

Later he says:

But the number of unemployed will increase by up to 80,000 from the present 500,000. For these people and their families the budget forecast means a cut from a living wage to inadequate insurance.

In other words, Mr. Westell agrees with my suggestion that those who will suffer most under the proposed budget are those who can least afford to suffer. About half a million people are currently unemployed. The figures for January, 1970, show unemployment at 485,000 people, as compared with 468,000 in January, 1969. The unemployment rate for male workers in January, 1970, was at 7 per cent. Figures relating to young people show that the unemployment rate for those between the ages of 14 and 19 is 14.4 per cent. For those between 20 and 24 years old the unemployment rate is 8.1 per cent. These figures are disastrous. I find it amazing that a government headed by a Prime Minister, who comes from Quebec should embark on policies which are nothing but a bonus to the aspirations of Mr. René Levesque and his parti Quebecois. These people want an independent and separate Quebec.

The Prime Minister said that, if necessary, he is prepared to see unemployment in Canada reach a rate of 6 per cent in order to check the danger of inflation. What the Prime Minister obviously has not faced is that a 6 per cent level of unemployment for Canada as a whole means an unemployment rate of 8 per cent in Quebec, a rate which could increase to 9 or 10 per cent. All signals show that unemployment will become worse. Last year private investment in Quebec rose an estimated 3.5 per cent over the 1968 level, while capital investment in Ontario rose by more than 23 per cent. This means that unemployment, already serious in Quebec, will become even more serious. The young people of Quebec, those coming out of Quebec universities and technical schools, will not accept that rate of unemployment. What the government is doing is this: it is deliberately fostering unemployment, in order, supposedly, to hold in check galloping inflation. By increasing unemployment in Quebec, it is inviting the people of Quebec to express their resentment against federalism by voting for that party in Quebec which believes in a separate Quebec. These policies stem from the Prime Minister who was elected to foster Canadian unity. During the last election campaign the Prime Minister said that there is but one Canada. Now, his policies will destroy one Canada.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

We can see what is happening. Housing starts for January, 1970, as compared with January, 1969, are down by at least 25 per cent. If adjusted on an annual basis the housing starts for this January indicate that 158,000 homes will be built this year, whereas last year we built over 200,000 homes. This building slowdown means unemployment. We already see that there is less work. Automobile plants are closing for a week at a time. That can only mean a reduction in the purchases of steel, nickel and copper, and further unemployment or short time work in those resource industries.

The budget proposed by the Minister of Finance indicates the determination of the government, led by a Prime Minister who compaigned in the last federal election on the slogan of a "Just Society", to continue its policy of restraints in the government sector of the economy while, as I said earlier, not calling for any restraint on the part of the private sector of the economy. These policies have done nothing to stop or slow down the rate of increase in our cost of living. Figures released a few days ago show that living costs increased in one month by half a point. The increase in the cost of living last year was about 5 per cent. This increase, one of the largest in many years, has of course been felt most acutely by those on fixed incomes, the pensioners, the recipients of veterans allowances, mothers allowances and blind persons pensions, all of whom have had to bear with the 5 per cent increase in the cost of living. Old age pensions have been increased by just 2 per cent. All this has been happening at a time when the accounts of the Minister of Finance show a surplus of several hundred million dollars. The minister's name ought to be Scrooge.

I want for a few moments to deal with what I consider a deliberate, unscrupulous and unprincipled campaign that has been carried on by the government, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance with the active co-operation of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission. The government and all these people have called for wage restraints. They have blamed the working people and labour unions of this country for supposedly refusing to co-operate in the program of wage restraints which, it is argued, is crucial in stopping our current inflationary spiral. What the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and those high officials I have mentioned have not told the Canadian people is that salaries in the private sector and for the top civil servants, which include those people I have mentioned, have gone up substantially more in terms of percentages than the wages of the working people in Canada; that the incomes of self employed groups such as doctors, lawyers, engineers and architects have gone up very much more than the wages of workers, and that the profits of essential and key industries in Canada have gone up by astronomical amounts.

Let me illustrate the point. The Governor of the Bank of Canada, who has made a number of speeches about the need for restraint, was until recently receiving a salary of $50,000 a year. Within the last year, I think, that salary has been raised to $75,000 a year. I presume, although the bank has kept very quiet about this, that the governor's pension entitlement will be increased correspondingly. There is not much restraint in that kind of salary increase. I do not say he is not worth the money; yet it shows little sense for a man who has received that kind of increase to lecture people receiving $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000 a year about the need for restraint.

The Deputy Minister of Finance was making $27,000 a year in 1966. He is now being paid $40,000 a year. That represents an increase of over 30 per cent in the last three years. I do not think any worker in Canada has been able to negotiate that kind of wage increase. Yet the Deputy Minister adds his voice to those calling for restraint. The Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission is paid a salary of $40,000 a year, probably twice as much as he was paid when he was a dean at the University of British Columbia. I am not suggesting it is too much money, but I am suggesting that workers cannot be expected to take seriously lectures about restraint from people who do not show restraint themselves.

About ten days ago, the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission made a speech in Saskatoon. I have not got the report in front of me, but I am sure I can paraphrase it accurately. He said that the whole policy of restraint would fail unless workers and their unions co-operate in the program. The same day his speech was reported in the Globe and Mail, a report prepared by H. V. Chapman and Associates Limited appeared in the financial section of that newspaper outlining what was happening to the salaries of executives. The article can be summarized as follows:

H. V. Chapman and Associates Ltd. reports the percentage of executives who earned more than $20,000 in salaries and bonuses rose by 9 percentage points to 40 per cent in 1969 from 31 per cent in 1968. The percentage rose by 8 points in 1966, 1967 and 1968 together.

The average increase in total remuneration was within a range of 10.1 per cent to 10.6 per cent, compared with 8 per cent in 1968, 7.9 per cent in 1967, 8.8 per cent in 1966 and 8.2 per cent in 1965.

That is what is happening to the salaries of executives in this country. Not a word has been said about this by the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance, all of whom are quick to lecture other people about what they should be doing. The unions representing civil servants believe with good reason that, although the government has not publicly announced this policy, it has set guidelines of 5 per cent as the maximum increases which civil servants will be permitted to get from the government as a result of negotiations. That is substantially less than the top level civil servants have received. I suggest that if the Minister of Finance really believed in the just society the Prime Minister spoke about during the election campaign, he would apply the same justice to all civil servants and not just those close to the Prime Minister, cabinet ministers and other top level civil servants. The increases in salaries at the executive level do not just apply to those I mentioned.

The increases in profits by the large companies in Canada are astronomical. Similarly, the increases in their prices are astronomical. Last year we had a good deal of discussion about the price of copper. Some weeks ago the government was gleeful because they supposedly convinced the copper companies in Canada that they should reduce by several cents the proposed increase which they announced in the price of copper. What the government does not tell the people of Canada, and tries to hide, is the fact that in the 13 months, January 1, 1969 to February 1, 1970, the price of copper rose from 45 cents a pound to 59 cents a pound, an increase of over 30 per cent, even after the government put some slight restraints on the copper companies. Is it any wonder the workers in the copper industry think they are entitled to increases? The price of nickel rose by 25½ per cent or 26 per cent in the year 1969. No wonder the workers in that industry expect to receive higher wages.

Not only have costs risen, but profits have also risen. I wish to give just one example. I will refer to Noranda Mines Limited because they were first to announce increases in copper prices. In 1967, Noranda Mines had net earnings of $96,871,000. In 1968 these earnings increased by more than 20 per cent to $118,240,000. Net income after taxes for Noranda Mines in 1967 was $45½ million. In 1968, this increased to $52½ million. This story could be duplicated by checking the records and looking at the profits of International Nickel, Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting, Stelco, Dofasco or Algoma Steel. They are all in the same boat. So much for the policy of restraint which is being proposed by the government and the equity of that policy.

If the Minister of Finance really believes in a policy of restraint, he should begin by putting the restraint on those who can best afford it, the people who over the years have earned the largest incomes. The restraint should not be on the working people, the pensioners and those on welfare. These unfair policies are exemplified in this budget. I say to the minister that his budget and policy of restraint will not succeed in the purposes for which supposedly they have been designed. There are few economists who will agree with the government, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission and with the policies of the government as exemplified in this budget.

Professor Weldon, Chairman of Economics at McGill University, stated very clearly and correctly that the overriding reason for the inflation which we face in Canada is the runaway inflation in the United States. It is no secret that when the United States coughs, Canada gets pneumonia. To expect or hope to deal with inflation in Canada, and to restrain or stop price increases, when inflation is running rampant in the United States is nonsense.

The government's program will produce a slow-down in economic activity in Canada. There will not only be a slight increase in unemployment, Mr. Speaker, but the beginning of a recession which will cost the people of this country a tremendous amount of money. It will create a situation where great sacrifices will have to be made by those people who can least afford it. It will result in decreased production. What I am saying has been said much better and by much more reputable sources than I. It was said in the last report of the Economic Council of Canada. Possibly because the Economic Council of Canada has been honest, has taken its independence seriously and has called the shots as it saw them, it is having difficulty in getting government approval to hire the kind and numbers of staff which it needs. Meanwhile, others such as the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) in charge of housing and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) can get all the staff they need.

Let me read for the information of the Minister of Finance a couple of sentences from the sixth annual report published by the Economic Council in September, 1969. Note how correct they were in the light of what has happened since then.

> Until some easing of price and cost increases takes place in the United States, Canadian policies to deal with domestic price and cost problems will be handicapped. Further fiscal and monetary restraint could conceivably simply result in higher rates of unemployment and economic slack with no more than marginal effects on current rates of increases in prices and costs. Moreover, tighter restraint in Canada this year is likely to have its main impact on the economy next year. And if excess demand pressures in the United States are brought under control by the latter part of 1969, the principal result of stringent demand policy restraints in Canada this year might well be seriously mistimed to push the economy into a poor economic performance.

The Minister of Finance ought to have listened to the Economic Council rather than to the Governor of the Bank of Canada or to his own deputy minister. What the Council predicted in September 1969 is happening in 1970.

In the few moments which are left to me, I want to return to the subject of the government's policy of restraint. Reports that the government has the active support of the business community need to be taken with a good deal of scepticism. The agreements made by the business community in those meetings with the Prices and Incomes Commission in February were full of loopholes. Price increases are continuing at an accelerating rate, profits are substantial; bank profits were never higher than they are today. It is not true, as has been reported, that all the provinces were in agreement with the government's policies. The submissions made by those governments disclose a great deal of apprehension and disquiet. The provincial governments realise that they cannot hold the line; they realize that the services which they provide—schools, hospitals, roads, welfare and part of medical care—cannot be cut back and that the cost to the municipalities of providing essential services in an increasingly urban society will continue to spiral. They realize that municipal taxes in 1970 will increase as they have done in every year since the end of the war, and that in the absence of a reallocation of funds they will continue to be in a most difficult situation.

Let me quote from the submission made by the government of Manitoba to the conference of finance ministers held on February 16, 1970. Manitoba was faced by the insistence of the federal government that it co-operate in an attempt to persuade workers to accept a policy of restraint. If the latter cannot be persuaded, I suppose the next step will be to impose wage restraint, if not a wage freeze, upon the working people of this country. This is what the government of Manitoba said, and I commend this to the minister as a policy which he ought to have considered in the budget we are discussing:

> Controls must be fair in their application. If wage and income controls are necessary, then controls on excessive profits are equally required. If the worker is to be restricted in his earnings, then profits must be equally restricted. If individual Canadians are to be denied wage or salary increases above certain levels, it is only plain justice—and common sense—that profits above given levels should be denied, by special taxation if necessary.

Compare that statement with the invitation extended to employers by the minister in his budget speech to be tough in negotiations with labour, an invitation which can mean only restriction—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am afraid his time has expired.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): As a rule, however good a minister of finance may be, however well he may be able to keep expenditures and revenues in balance, he can never expect praise from the opposition, not even in the unlikely event of his announcing substantial tax reductions. The budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) presented to the nation on Thursday is the first in 20 years which did not contain any major proposals for income tax changes, and the first in 57 years without changes in tariffs, in spite of requests, some for increases and some for reductions. It is clearly an anti-inflationary budget, designed to curb the rise of consumer costs and to protect those on pensions and others living on fixed incomes. It offers a better approach to the future for the great majority of Canadians.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) could find nothing better to say than that is was "a cold-blooded effort", while the official Conservative spokesman, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) practically rested his case after describing the proposals as "cold turkey", whatever that is supposed to convey.

The budget contains measures to control the terms of consumer credit in order to reduce inflationary pressure resulting from over-spending. It provides authority to regulate the extension of credit to consumers by banks, finance companies, loan companies and other lenders. But it would not apply to credit in respect of small purchases, nor would the restrictions apply to loans for business purposes, including farming, or for loans for construction or to buy a house. Student loans for education would also be exempt.

An important feature announced by the minister was that the existing write-off of expenditures on water pollution control facilities will be extended to December 31, 1973. The cost of these efforts to control pollution will be written-off at a maximum rate of 50 per cent. These provisions will also apply to measures to curb air pollution, presumably by controlling fumes from automobiles and aircraft. The dangers from pollution have gripped the imagination of men everywhere. It is not only a national problem but one of international concern. Every level of government and our neighbours to the south must co-operate with both money and ideas in a total effort to control the menace which knows no boundaries.

Not all savings and restrictions are good. The government's drive to fight inflation by cutbacks in some departments is to be commended as an example to other levels of government of controlling excessive expenditures where savings will not impair essential services to the people. But the cutting of personnel in that section of the department of immigration which has to do with actual contact with prospective immigrants abroad, and the reduction of publicity to attract immigrants from Britain and Europe, do not merit commendation. In my view, this economy can only produce doubtful benefits to a country that is still an empty land when one considers the drop in the number of immigrants admitted to Canada during the past 15 months.

If the government wishes to correct the impression that its immigration policy is a cold and hot water tap turned on and off according to the direction of manpower winds, it has to revert to its more realistic policy of two years ago. I cannot help but feel that our present policy in immigration is one of timidity and inadequacy. We seem to have forgotten that the main goal of an immigration policy is to promote immigration to Canada of as many persons of good character as possible and to keep out the trouble makers. A modest figure would be 250,000 a year, but certainly not less than one per cent of our total population, irrespective of religion or ethnic origin. We should also assist to the maximum degree the reunion of families, with particular consideration being given to applicants sponsored by relatives and friends.

I have a high regard for our present minister of immigration, but I am not impressed by statements to the effect that the reason for the decline in the number of immigrants from Europe is solely the improved economic conditions in western Europe. The present points system is not working in the best interest of Canada. It is too restrictive in its application to unskilled workers. There is still a great demand for them in the fields of mining and agriculture, and in the construction industry. There are some people who are opposed to large scale immigration on the ground that the job market cannot sustain any major increases; but these same people have failed to back up their conviction with any documented facts to prove their contention.

It has been estimated that 30,000 new business ventures have been started in Canada by immigrants during the past 20 years, involving some $400 million in working capital and creating thousands of jobs, to say nothing of the valuable contribution these businesses have made to the sum total of Canada's development. Fortunately for Canada, we have a Prime Minister who thinks of Canadians as individuals, as people, not in terms of their ethnic origin; a Prime Minister who is concerned with the problem of cementing Canadian unity.

I doubt whether any previous Prime Minister has been faced with the kind of difficulties that have confronted our present one, and I should add that no Prime Minister has been better prepared to deal with the problem of unity. He is equipped with the courage to admit injustices and has shown the determination to do something to correct them. I hope he will also do something about a much needed improvement in the processing and admission of immigrants to Canada, for I submit that among the forces contributing to expansion in our economy is rapid increase in population.

In 1963 when, as Parliamentary Secretary to the then Minister of Public Works, I had the privilege of visiting the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, I was greatly impressed by the visible potential for development there if only we had more people. Upon my return I submitted a report to my minister which included a suggestion for assisting immigrants willing to settle north of the 60th parallel and remain there for at least five years. Everybody thought it was a good idea, but nothing was done about it. I now wonder whether the time is opportune to encourage and promote immigration to that vast land of 1,400,000 square miles, where less than 40,000 people now live, including all the Eskimos, Indians and whites. There is a good deal more I could say about this subject, but there are a few other questions I wish to deal with on this occasion.

In his budget speech the minister dealt extensively with proposed restraints to create conditions favourable to force inflation out of the economy. He also made a brief reference to the fact that some municipalities and provinces have borrowed from United States lenders on long terms to enable them to provide needed capital for community projects, which shows that we are still in need of foreign capital for the orderly development of cities and towns across the land. We also need to expand our exports, and in this field our best customer is none other than "Uncle Sam".

Almost all of us here in this House, and almost all Canadians everywhere, must be concerned, as I am, at the anti-Americanism which is so much in evidence these days. It is like some peculiar kind of pollution poisoning relations with our neighbours. And it is strictly a one-way pollution, blowing from north to south across the border. I have never been able to detect any anti-Canadianism in the United States, where Canadians find only friends and goodwill wherever they go.

The anti-American pollution emitted in this country comes from a few extremists who seem eager to go to any excess in knocking the United States or anything American. They usually protest, of course, that their purpose is pure and patriotic. We are all familiar with their tactics—the dire warnings that the United States is ruining us, the United States is dominating us, we have no control over our affairs, our culture is being hurt.

Sometimes these people who cry about the effect of American influence on our economy and culture do prove, perhaps unwittingly, that there is a distinctive brand of Canadian humour. This fact was illustrated in this chamber on March 9 by the financial critic for the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). The United States, he said, not American companies or American investors, but the United States, has come in and virtually destroyed our economy with their branch plants. It is impossible to take a statement like that in anything but a humorous sense. He said, as recorded at page 4543 of Hansard:

> They have wrecked our economy with their branch plants.

Well, if the hon. member for Waterloo's constituents have any American branch plants which they want to give up, I would like to have these plants move to my constituency. I do not know of any place in Canada which does not want American capital to create jobs, to develop resources and increase prosperity.

The steep Rock Iron Mines in Atikokan, 135 miles west of the city of Thunder Bay, would still be a lake instead of a mine which has produced millions of dollars for Canada, employing hundreds of Canadians, had it not been for risk capital coming in from the United States. There are similar situations across the land, from Labrador to Vancouver Island, and from the industries of southern Ontario to the Arctic shores.

Let no one say that United States branch plants are not under our control. They are in Canada, and are as much subject to Canadian law as any plants owned 100 per cent by Canadians. Any studies or surveys ever made have shown branch plants, and their managements, to be at least as good Canadian citizens as Canadian owned plants, in wage levels, in exports, in participation in community activities, and in every other type of comparison.

The principle of the application of United States laws to Canadian or other foreign branches of U.S. corporations, as in trading with Communist China or Cuba, is a legitimate subject for discussion. Its effect, however, can be exaggerated. So far as it has ever been shown, Canada has never lost five cents in exports as the result of the United States ban on such trade. We never lost any flour sales to Cuba, and there has never been any order from Communist China for trucks or cars made in Canada, or for farm machinery or fertilizer or anything else which a branch plant turned down, for the simple reason that the orders never existed. All such examples have been mythical.

An invisible benefit of the U.S. stake in investments in Canada is the influence which this gives us in Washington. What better lobby could Canada have in Washington for Canadian economic interests than the oil companies, the automobile industry, and other giant United States industries which have put their money into production in this country? When some of us are worrying about the United States market for Canadian oil, it is satisfying to know that these are U.S. companies which are on our side.

The situation was pointed up at a conference at Dartmouth College, in Hanover, N.H., in 1967, by Professor David A. Baldwin. He said:

> The United States has, in effect, placed hostages on Canadian soil. With regard to many issues the most potent lobby in Washington on behalf of Canada is likely to be those American companies operating branch plants in Canada, which are charged with being a menace to Canadian power.

Let us have more U.S. investments in Canada, under Canadian control, to help develop our economy and to expand employment for Canadians. Anti-American pollution can only be harmful to our economic climate. Especially, let us have less thoughtless talk about shutting off the sale of metals and other materials to the United States in an effort, promoted by questionable organizations, to exert pressure on U.S. policy in Vietnam.

A demonstration against the war in Vietnam was staged on Parliament Hill last February 28, and was addressed by the leader of the New Democratic Party, for whom I have great respect. But he was quoted as saying he supported the embargo on nickel, was not sure about copper and had not thought about stopping the sale of iron ore, oil or other commodities to the United States.

In my constituency, the International Nickel Company is spending $90 million in the development of a nickel mine, and the building of a new town to give accommodation to the hundreds of workers expected to be employed shortly. The same company has a construction program of $250 million in Canada this year. If the suggestions of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) for shutting off shipments of nickel, copper and other materials to the U.S. were to be implemented by legislation, thousands upon thousands of mineworkers would be walking the streets looking for work.

It can be imagined what Americans might think about trusting their Canadian sources of nickel, copper, iron or oil to any political party leader with such views, who might turn the pipelines on or off as he agreed or disagreed with United States policy. United States capital and know-how did much to make this country what it is, and the need for more capital will continue in the foreseeable future, as is the case for the need for more people. I do not believe we can afford the luxury of narrow economic nationalism unless we are prepared to accept a much lower standard of living.

There is a need for Canadians to understand that the United States and Canada have thrived in partnership, and the United States, in my estimation, has never sought to use its economic stake in Canada to impinge upon Canadian prerogatives. Friendly association and co-operation is, in my view, the way to continued prosperity and growth for Canada, as evidenced by the fact that in 1969 Canada's exports to the United States were 15 per cent higher than the previous year. As an example, we cannot expect to sit indefinitely on the world's largest reserve of fresh water without sharing it with our neighbours, for cash, once we establish that our requirements will not be impaired.

In addressing a northern development conference, Professor Laycock said that opponents of water export are shortsighted, apparently not realizing how much water there is available and how little Canada can use. If Canada were to export 10 per cent of its supply at an average price of $40 per acre foot, the sales value of this one commodity would run into billions of dollars. What an exciting prospect. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already indicated that he would be willing to consider selling some water resources if studies show they are surplus to Canadian needs. Speaking to a group of Carleton University students he said, referring to all our resources, that if they could not be used domestically why not sell them for good hard cash? No Canadian with any sense of responsibility could disagree with that. In return for the sale of resources for which we have no immediate use we would get funds with which to develop the country and, as a result, the life of the Minister of Finance would be a happy one indeed.

My constituency, which is part of the great new city of Thunder Bay, has an economic stake in the St. Lawrence Seaway system. It is the third largest shipping port in Canada, and any increase in tolls will undoubtedly damage the economy of the area. In 1966, the greatest wheat export year to date, 63 per cent of Canadian grain was shipped through the port of Thunder Bay. Since we have heard that the next toll revision for the entire seaway system is due in 1971 and that hearings will be held later this year, the community is alarmed at the prospect of seeing higher toll charges being imposed for the seaway and the Welland Canal.

Dr. Pierre Camu, President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, speaking at the official opening of the expansion of the Lakehead Keefer Terminal, stated that there was no cheaper form of moving bulk cargoes than water transportation. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that here is an opportunity to set a good example to the country by opposing any increases in seaway tolls. If imposed, they would have the sure effect of increasing the cost of hydro bills because Ontario Hydro would have to pay $3½ million more for coal which, of course, would naturally result in higher power costs and could add as much as $1 per ton to the price of steel. I am expressing the hope that those concerned with this grave responsibility will give this important matter deep consideration before any decision is made.

The challenge which inflation poses to our national well-being remains serious. However, the Minister of Finance has with this budget set in motion remedies which, if complied with, will give us reason for confidence in the 1970s that the good years of the past decade, years of gains in living standards, are not necessarily now to be followed by a less happy period.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, in rising at this time to make my small contribution to the budget debate I am reminded that this is March 17, St. Patrick's day, a great day for the people of Irish ancestry. It seems to me, because of the ineffectual and mediocre nature of the budget, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in this Trudeau government is praying for a St. Patrick who would banish and expel all the serpentine troubles that are coiling and twisting around this government. These troubles will be the downfall of "Trudeaucracy". Most of the government's troubles are either of their own making or their own neglect.

What can I say about the budget? What can anyone say about it? It is barely worth a comment because it signifies nothing and does nothing for the Canadian people. Therefore, I believe we can call it a "ho-hum do-nothing" budget. It might have been part of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) and the Finance Minister's strategy to bring nothing forward at this time because in this same calendar year the Minister of Finance will attempt to perpetrate his notorious white paper upon the Canadian people. So, for the time being the Finance Minister says he is not proposing any legislation on taxes or tariffs.

Much as I should like to discuss the white paper during this budget debate, I shall not do so to any extent. I have other complaints of a vital and economic nature which I wish to make during the limited time I have the floor of the House. The Minister of Finance has said in his white paper that he will relieve many Canadians of the burden of paying income tax. That has merit. Why did he not begin to do that in this budget? I mentioned that he said he is not proposing any legislation in respect of tariffs. He said that possibly legislation will be needed by the autumn. Does he mean white paper legislation? The legislation in respect of his white paper proposals, if implemented, will mean the end of Canada as an influential, solvent, vigorous, manufacturing, land-owning and trading nation.

This Trudeau government, and the one before it under the Right Hon. Lester Pearson, have been creators of a man-made depression. The new Liberal concept of legislation, which now is a marriage made by that party with Marxist socialism, is sadly lacking. It lacks what it takes to govern a country like Canada. Here, we recall the strange anachronism of the Liberals in opposition in the winter of 1963 insistently clamouring about unemployment, at a time when there were 265,000 unemployed in Canada. I now refer to figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for the week ending January 1970. These figures show that today, with the Liberals in power, there are over 485,000 unemployed, over 60,000 of whom are in Toronto. The Prime Minister, with a shrug of the shoulders and a gesture of his hand, says it is a calculated expectation and strategic fact of Liberal policy. There will be more unemployment. There will be unemployed Canadian farmers and bankrupt ones as well as a result of this government's former and present lack of policy and policy practices.

In the west during the past couple of years the Prime Minister has been saying, "Why should I be held responsible for selling your wheat". He did not hold himself responsible, nor did he sell any wheat. So, he now says, "I will give you money out of the public treasury to not grow any wheat and I will pay you at the rate of $6 an acre for those areas that you summerfallow and take out of production. It is quite a few years since I have worked on the farm in Richmond Township, Lennox County but the economics of farm operation still hold true. With the mechanized methods of today, one cannot summerfallow the wheatlands of the west nor the arable lands of any part of Canada for $6 an acre. I do not think that amount would pay for the gasoline or for the depreciation and the interest payments on the expensive machinery.

However, enough of that, Mr. Speaker. We will leave the government wallowing like a wrecked and stranded tanker in the gulf of political bankruptcy and confusion. There are some things I want to say to the government regardinv their policies which affect the province of Ontario and my constituency of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington in particular. First of all, there are strong indications that this government is not looking after public works. The case in point is the construction of the Bath-Millhaven prison complex in my riding. For some time back we have heard that all is not well in relation to certain construction details of this prison and that there has been a lack of proper inspection by the Department of Public Works. I have in my hands a written complaint made to me by private individuals who doubt the soundness of the construction job being done by the general contractors, Argo Construction Limited and their various subcontractors. Here are some of the alleged discrepancies and divergencies from specifications. It reads as follows:

Building L. Footings are poured on top of granular fill not on bedrock according to specifications and drawings. The 2" mud slab is ½" to ¾" thick, instead of 2" thick.

The 4" crawl space floor is 2" thick instead of 4" thick, which was authorized in the specification and drawings.

Buildings D, C and G. The south 40' of all these buildings bears the same construction defects as Building L.

Building F is the same. In all cases gravel has been used instead of going to bedrock.

Building S. The west half of the building crawl space has no reinforcing steel and this is contrary to specifications. The thickness of the concrete in all cases is not the thickness in the specifications and in all cases this occurs in crawl spaces where it cannot be seen unless investigated.

Kitchen Building. The east half of the crawl space floor is 50 per cent under the specifications both for mud slab and for the floor.

Guard Tower. The anchors that were supposed to go 5' into the bedrock were cut off with a torch. The concrete for this 40' high structure is poured on fill and not bedrock. The complete tunnel area is still visible sitting on top of stone fill instead of bedrock.

The above conditions, when considered present over millions of square feet of construction, would result in the savings of hundreds of thousands of dollars on the part of the contractor. J. L. Richards and Associates are the consultants. One B. Hilliard is reported to be the resident engineer who controls all the inspection and is paid by the government. Argo Construction is the general contractor for the Bath-Millhaven prison complex.

I put this complaint on the record and hereby call upon the government to investigate it to the fullest with the object of correcting these alleged discrepancies. I have already placed on the Order Paper a private members notice of motion No. 393 calling for the tabling of copies of an inspector's report by the Minister of Public Works. Under the circumstances, I think that this should bring the government around to tabling and making that report public. The Bath-Millhaven prison complex will cost over $20 million and surely the Canadian people deserve value for their construction dollar in this case.

Another case where the government is not looking after business is the trade conditions arising from the wholesale adoption of the Kennedy round of tariffs under GATT. We find various Canadian industries reeling under the fierce international competition from low wage countries like Japan, Korea, Singapore and Hong Kong. This applies especially to the synthetic fibres industry in my area. Members of the House have seen what happened at Cornwall, the unemployment and hardship created there due to the invasion of Canadian markets by synthetic fibres coming from these low wage countries, and the total lack of interest in this problem by the Government.

I have received protests from the largest terylene plant in Canada, namely, Millhaven Fibres, situated in my riding and employing over 1,000 people. They are feeling the effects of this unfair competition. I have here a letter from Mr. Peter Humphreyes, resident manager of that plant, received today. I wish to quote parts of it as follows:

On October of 1968 the textile industry, both companies and unions, appeared before Prime Minister Trudeau and members of the cabinet to outline the major problems that imports from low cost countries were creating in the textile industry. They were assured that this problem would be dealt with soon.

Instead, a major re-examination of the stituation surrounding the textile and clothing industries was decided on and the re-examination was to be completed by the end of 1969. The conclusions of this study have not as yet been revealed.

The major problems created by this repeated increase in imports is reflected in the fact that 20 per cent of all textiles and clothing in Canada now come from the low cost countries. Approximately 45 per cent of all textiles and clothing are imported into Canada so that the Canadian manufacturers are now supplying only 55 per cent of the Canadian market as compared to 70 per cent two years ago.

The increase in imports is not only having a disruptive effect on the textile industry in Canada, it is also having a disruptive effect of the livelihood of the 83,000 people who were in the textile and clothing industry in Canada.

Please note the phrase "who were in the textile and clothing industry in Canada". Many are still in it, but some are no longer there because of unemployment caused by foreign competition.

The letter continues:

We urge your consideration of an important industry which would be adversely affected in the future as far as continued operation is concerned. Consideration should also be given to the fact that this industry would be hard put to justify further capital expenditure to expand the economic climate of Canada without assurance that they would not be subjected to further increases in imports especially from the low cost countries.

Every member of the House will agree that in these cases, as well as in other industries in Canada, our industry must continue to have a certain amount of protection. This government joined the Kennedy round and GATT and thought they had done something big, but they walked away and left the door wide open. Our worst competition in synthetic fibres is coming from Korea. Their materials are being dumped on the Canadian market. I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin): What do we dump in Korea? We do not enjoy any privileges there. I doubt if our exports to Korea amount to even one million dollars a year. I call upon the government to take greater control of the situation and limit the dumping of these foreign synthetic fibres in this country in order that our own people can still hold their jobs and make a living here, which is their rightful heritage.

My last complaint for today pertains to the vicious escalation of tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway and the Welland Canal, aided and abetted by the policies of the present and preceding Liberal governments. It is coincidental that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) brought up the same subject. This was not prearranged and it shows the importance of this matter to Canadians. The escalation of tolls in the St. Lawrence Seaway is a bad thing, and this includes tolls exacted on the Welland Canal. We built the St. Lawrence Seaway in the last decade—that is the fifth decade of the century—at what is now a fairly nominal cost to Canadians of less than $340 million. What a bargain Canada got there! There should be no tolls on this waterway, and this is not the first time I have stood in this House and said so. I pointed this out four years ago, and yet there have been two increases in tolls since then.

The St. Lawrence Seaway system, including the Welland Canal, is at present the only stretch of commercially navigable water in North America which is subject to user charges in any form. Tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway are no good for the economy of the heartland of Canada, namely, northern and southern Ontario. Not only do they increase the cost of all products manufactured by our industries, but seaway tolls are now beginning to increase the cost of our electric power, much of which is generated by thermal plants.

On August 20th, 1963, I began to advocate a hydro generating plant in the riding that I represented at that time, namely, Prince Edward Lennox. I am now proud and pleased to see the beginning of the realization of that plant which will be built in South Fredericksburgh township in the county of Lennox, south of Napanee and west of Bath in the riding that I now represent, Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. We are now informed that this plant will be oil-fired and the oil will be supplied by marine transportation to the plant on the Bay of Quinte on the north shore of Lake Ontario. Neither the Ontario Hydro nor the manufacturing industries which will be using the power from this plant can afford to pay tolls on the oil and/or other fuels that the plant may use.

I have here a letter from Mr. Saul Laskin, the mayor of Thunder Bay, which I wish to put on the record as I think it is of vital interest to all Canadians. Mr. Laskin says:

> Many people throughout Ontario believe that tolls on the international St. Lawrence Seaway and the all-Canadian Welland Ship Canal are matters of concern only to communities contiguous to those facilities.
> But in a speech delivered before the Marine Club of Toronto on January 16, 1970, George E. Gathercole, LL.D., Chairman, Ontario Hydro, made it plain that such tolls should be of real concern to every user of electricity in this province—domestic, commercial or industrial.
> As reported in the Globe and Mail on January 17, 1970, Dr. Gathercole in his statement made the following statements:
> He expressed concern over the level of tolls levied on traffic in the Welland Canal and the St. Lawrence Seaway. The charge to coal shipped through the Welland Canal in 1969 was about $200,000.
> While the figure is not high in relation to Hydro's total volume of merchandising, the Welland tolls are one of many pressures pushing the cost of electricity higher.
> Mr. Gathercole referred to a statement in the report of the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association that indicated that increased tolls suggested by the federal Department of Transport could cost Hydro an additional $25 million for coal.
> We would certainly oppose such an increase most strenuously and it should be clearly understood that additional tolls can only be met from one source—by the people of Ontario who use electricity.

I say, Mr. Speaker, including the people of Canada in general.

I thank Mayor Laskin of Thunder Bay for his letter and his support in the cause of the free passage of the commerce of our country on our great inland channel of contact with the whole world, the St. Lawrence Seaway. I and millions of Canadians look forward to the day when it will be free of tolls to legitimate shipping, as it ought to be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith).

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the budget debate, only one representative of the Ralliement créditiste has had the opportunity to speak and I think that it would be time—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am paying very close attention to the distribution of speakers. I think if the hon. member will consult the list he will see that he will probably be next and that this is a fair distribution of speakers. The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith).

Mr. G. A. Percy Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the several members who have taken part in the budget debate for their excellent contributions. I was especially impressed by the remarks of the second last speaker, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) and his remarks concerning friendship with our neighbours to the south. Mr. Speaker, you will not find much anti-American feeling in the maritimes, from where I come. Perhaps the reason is that there are more relatives of Maritimers in the New England states than there are Maritimers left in this country. I intend to be relatively brief and I think the hon. member who rose will have plenty of time to speak before the adjournment because I expect that my few remarks will not take more than 15 or 20 minutes.

In rising to speak in the budget debate, I would like to indicate my support of most of the budgetary measures proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on Thursday last. I think all Canadians agree that fiscal restraint must still be exercised if inflation is to be brought under control and kept under control. A balanced budget was, therefore, expected and desired. Actually, the forecast is for a considerable surplus.

The surplus of the current year, as well as the forecast surplus, indicates to me good financial management by this government. The hardships that inflation inflicts on persons with fixed incomes is well known, and I need not elaborate on that. The serious effects of inflation on international trade is also well known. We must maintain our costs and prices at a level which will keep our exports competitive in foreign trade, a factor which is extremely important to the economy of this country as one of the large trading nations of the world.

One speaker yesterday, I believe the financial critic for the NDP, indicated that we are competitive in world markets regardless of restraint on costs or by labour. However, he cited such natural resource commodities as copper, steel or nickel. In nickel, for example, Canada has had almost a monopoly in the past. Recent and apparently major finds in Australia may change this situation considerably. As soon as the prices of our products rise too high, a substitute will be found or, as in the case of nickel, other countries or companies in other countries, simply increase the intensity of their search so that they will inevitably make a discovery.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

The restraint on government spending in the past year is to be commended. It is an example to industry and to the country as a whole. I believe the figures will show that the rate of increase in government spending was 3.8 per cent or less than the increase in the gross national product. This figure, of course, excludes the cost of joint programs with the provinces.

It is, however, unnecessary for me to cite the serious consequences of inflation. The effects are well known to all members of the House and by all Canadians. The proposals this budget contains were expected. As one newspaper put it, the condition of the patient, meaning the economy of Canada, was unchanged. In other words, inflation is not yet under control. No increases in taxation were expected in the budget and none were forthcoming. It is the next budget, or at least the main one for 1971-72 that will be awaited with great interest, and I might add, with considerable concern.

We in Atlantic Canada, Mr. Speaker, and in my riding of Northumberland-Miramichi have often complained that the government of Canada, in placing controls on the economy, has been unable to do so except on a national basis. In the Maritimes, where unemployment is chronically high—about 10 per cent in this season of the year—we suffer from these controls and restraints, while not contributing to the problem of inflation. As a measure to offset this, this government set up the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I am pleased to note that substantial funds are provided in the present budget for this department.

Approximately $200 million is budgeted for the 1970-71 fiscal year. This department was promised during the last election campaign. We, in my riding, had great expectations of some swift action. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the economic ills of the Maritimes which have prevailed for so long cannot be cured overnight. In the past, perhaps, moneys have been spent there that might have sparked industrial growth but sufficient planning had not been done and in some cases the money turned out to be largely wasted. So, I realize that research and planning in depth is required. However, almost two years have now passed and, at least in my riding, no results are yet apparent. We are told that studies and planning are going on.

I am concerned about who in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is doing the planning and what advice are they seeking and receiving. Are they seeking the advice of those who have wrestled with these problems for many years. I can say personally that no one has asked my advice nor, I think, the advice of any other member of Parliament. Perhaps our advice would be useless, but there is a chance that we might have something useful to contribute.

Any person who has held public office in New Brunswick has been greatly involved in trying to attract industry, because this is and has been our major problem for many years. Many Members of Parliament have been involved in the total economic problems of their province, town or riding for many years and know, or should know, something about the problems there. I do not discount the possibility of a fresh look with, possibly, new solutions being apparent to an outsider, if I may use the term, because as I say I have not been advised as to who was making studies, studies that are of intense interest to members. I do not know if these persons are students, college graduates or, in fact, if any have ever been in the Maritimes before. There are many maritime members whose advice might have been of some value. We have, for example, a member of this House who was Premier of New Brunswick for many years; another member is a former Attorney General of New Brunswick.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Hear, hear.

Mr. Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): Speaking personally, I was involved in the economic problems of my area as mayor of Newcastle, as President of the Board of Trade and as a businessman, for many years. We wrestled with the problem of how to attract industry. But we were always working without funds. Now that funds are available for this purpose through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion we, as members, so far as I know, were not consulted in any way or asked for any advice.

I am sorry to be somewhat critical of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) because he is not in the House today. On March 11 of this year, the minister announced the establishment of 22 special areas in eight provinces. Two of these are in New Brunswick, the areas of Saint John and Moncton. No one could quarrel with the need for special incentives in all or any part of New Brunswick. It was a disappointment to me, however, that none of the smaller centres which are most in need of help were designated. We had been led to believe that, in addition to the larger centres, there would be certain secondary growth centres designated as special areas. In fact, of the eight centres in Newfoundland-Labrador, six are to be in smaller communities. The others are at St. John's and Cornerbrook. My riding of Northumberland-Miramichi contains some of the lowest income and most economically depressed communities to be found anywhere in Canada. The designation of the towns of Newcastle and Chatham as a special area might well have attracted industry which would provide employment for members of the communities I have mentioned, and such a centre would, unlike Saint John and Moncton, be within a travelling distance for workers in the most depressed areas.

As mentioned by the minister in his statement of March 11, the special areas may receive assistance in providing an infrastructure of services which would be attractive to industry. The most important of these services in most cases will be transportation facilities. It was with pleasure that I read the announcement that the sum of $10 million is to be provided to start reconstruction of Highway No. 11 in eastern and northern New Brunswick which crosses my constituency. Another highway that should have high priority on any infrastructure of roads in New Brunswick is the one cutting across the central part of the province from Newcastle to Plaster Rock. This highway, now partly completed, if made an all weather road would open up the large central area of the province to which access has been very limited. It would connect the great potato farming counties of Madawaska and Victoria to the ports of the Miramichi.

However, the main transportation problem in my constituency, and one that we have been fighting to overcome for decades, is the lack of adequate water transportation. Our products are chiefly those from the pulpmills, sawmills and mines, and they are generally shipped to European markets, although some go to South American countries and the U.S.A. These industries suffer, as does our whole economy, from the refusal of the Department of Public Works to dredge an adequate channel to accommodate the larger ships that are mostly in use today. The ports of Newcastle and Chatham are situated about 40 miles inland from the sea. The channel of the Miramichi River is adequate, but there are one or two sand bars in the bay which prevent the entry of any but relatively small ships.

On many occasions over the years we have approached the Department of Public Works about this problem. I recall coming to Ottawa about ten years ago with a delegation to petition the then Minister of Public Works for improvements to the channel. Many delegations have since made the same request. The answer has always been in the negative. The negative reply has always been, "You show us the additional shipping and we will dredge your channel." Our argument has always been, "You provide the channel and we are sure the additional shipping will follow." In fact, we are now in grave danger even of losing the shipping we have enjoyed for several years. This is due to the trend towards the use of larger vessels.

I was perhaps able to accept this type of negative thinking from the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport. Now, the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion is expected to take a positive view in providing attractions to industry in the underdeveloped areas. It is supposed, in addition to financial incentives, to provide the facilities that industry would require.

Hoping for this positive approach to what I claim is our major problem in Northumberland-Miramichi, another delegation from my constituency came to Ottawa almost as soon as this new department was organized. To date we have received the same old, negative reply. If the minister—I wish he were here today—is serious about providing a new approach, about providing an infrastructure of services, chiefly transportation, in the most depressed areas, I call on him in the strongest possible terms to take another look at this most pressing transportation deficiency in the only major port in eastern New Brunswick, that is, the dredging of the bottlenecks in the port of Miramichi—to a minimum depth of 26 feet.

To return to the budget, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that in its attempts to combat inflation the government has realized that spending pressures have not been equally distributed across the country. The minister is to be congratulated for recommending the adoption of a measure that provides for higher depreciation allowances on costs of commercial construction in regions of higher unemployment. He is also to be congratulated on his announcement concerning air and water pollution. The accelerated depreciation provision on devices, structures or equipment to reduce or prevent pollution is to be extended for a further three years: this is a welcome announcement. As the member for the constituency which embraces the greatest Atlantic salmon river in the world, namely, the Miramichi River, this was a most welcome inclusion in the budget. It remains to be seen, and watched with great care, that anti-pollution laws are strictly enforced.

[Mr. Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi).]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for being so obliging as to recognize us in this far end of the House. I may say with all due respect that you are absolutely right in giving us the floor at this time.

I would first like to express my views on the budget speech in order to clarify certain points which, to my mind, are not clear enough and which too often cause useless discussions between the Ottawa government and some provincial administrations, particularly that of Quebec.

The main instance is the famous discussion on the $200 million that Quebec would like to recover while Ottawa intends to keep this income from the so-called social development tax of 2 per cent to use as it pleases, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has himself stated in the House.

Mr. Speaker, we must go back to 1939 to get a more comprehensive view of this matter. The then Premier, Hon. Adélard Godbout, had lent our taxation rights to Ottawa for the duration of the war, in view of the urgency of the situation. The war ended in 1945, and Maurice Duplessis, in his rather political statements, said that, for the sake of provincial autonomy, only certain taxation rights needed to be handed back to the provinces. Since the matter was profitable from a political standpoint, he did not demand that all the rights, transferred temporarily to Ottawa by Hon. Adélard Godbout, be returned too early to Quebec, so that he might thus cling to power.

Now, the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Jean-Jacques Bertrand, trained in the school of Hon. Maurice Duplessis who was defending that so-called autonomy, wishes to continue to beg for money that he claims is his own.

I feel there should be a round-table meeting in order to determine once and for all the tax jurisdictions of the federal and provincial governments. In the province of Quebec, the Créditistes have been improving the political awareness of Quebecers and in the last twelve years they have been successful in restoring the province's image through television programs. Soon, men of integrity will be elected to govern the province; their hands will not have been tied by electoral funds and they will have no financial curbs. They will proudly tell the whole population of Canada: Here is what we want to do. Let us stop our federal-provincial wranglings which, more often than not, are related to fiscal problems. What I have in mind, for instance, are the famous $200 million.

Here is, in my view, what should prevail in respect of this so-called social development tax. It seems to me that the central government should have frozen the $200 million until the Quebec government is in a position to accept hospital insurance. I suggest this course would have been more logical and the two governments would not have behaved like school children or immature adults. Canadians who are aware of this political verbiage say to themselves that we have not reached political maturity. French Canadians watch quietly this cock-fight that does not settle anything.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with existing problems in Canada, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has made a statement on a television program. Here is what has been said about it in a newspaper article entitled: "Mr. Benson agrees that an increase in unemployment is almost unavoidable", and I quote:

> Perhaps it will be necessary to have an unemployment rate slightly higher than what it was in 1969 "if we want to check inflation", said Mr. Benson on television Sunday night.

Upon hearing statements like the one made by the minister, I become convinced that the problems will not be solved. In fact, to increase the unemployment rate is certainly not a step in the right direction. The time has come for all Canadians to work together in order to prevent such hardship amidst affluence.

In another article we read that 43 per cent of urban families are living in want.

Mr. Speaker, if the economic situation of 43 per cent of Canadian families is either one of want or one of hardship, I wonder why governments, federal and provincial, do not try to find a solution and do not stop dipping into the taxpayers' pockets. It should be decided whether it is the federal or the provincial government which should raise taxes. After all, the only problem with regard to the $200 million is to determine who has the right to collect them. Should taxes be levied by the federal or the provincial government? The first is too greedy; it imposes taxes and keeps all the money for itself. Hence all this ineffectual talk in Canada.

I maintain that the present government is not offering any positive solution. No problem is solved and instead of seeking complicated solutions it would have been better to put the Bank of Canada at the service of Canadians. Instead they have to pay taxes.

The saturation point has been reached long ago in Canada. Both in Ottawa and in Quebec no other solution was found than that of taxes and surtaxes.

In 1970, Canadians are not falling into steps. They are seeking another solution. Besides, we will be able to find that out on April 29. In Quebec we will see that the political education we have been spreading for 35 years now throughout the province will bear fruit. The surprise will be the miracle of the year. Overtaxed as we are, we do not accept any longer this financial system. Presently, without the permission of the capitalists who control the economy, even at the world level, and without leave from their servile officials in Ottawa, we cannot even breathe.

Therefore, we are against these taxes because, in my opinion, they are nothing but theft. They are theft, indeed, when they fall on taxpayers who have not enough money to buy the necessities of life, while goods are in abundance in this country. Taxes are theft when there are unsold products, when people are doomed to unemployment, when there is untapped productive power and especially when we note that it is impossible to sell products due to the lack of purchasing power.

In our day and age, taxes are a theft because they destroy the purchasing power, lead to an accumulation of products and deprive the population as much as inflation does. In my opinion, taxes should only exist to eliminate the excess of money in circulation when there are not enough products. When there is a lack of money, we do not need taxes but a redistribution of the purchasing power through the granting of a dividend or a compensated discount which would bring down prices to the real production cost.

I think there should be a different way of financing public investments, by the allocation of new credits according to the real needs and producing capacity of the country.

That is why the government's attitude is unacceptable. Indeed, even the Canadian Manufacturers Association maintain that Canadians will pay more for public services, since the government will draw an additional $500 million during the next five years out of the taxpayers' pockets.

The problem is thus to determine who will tax.

"It is patent theft", said the former president of the Canadian association of electrical appliances manufacturers, Mr. Ramsay.

"It is stupidity", said the president of the Montreal and Canadian Stock Exchanges, Mr. Charles Neapole. According to Mr. Neapole, the small Canadian companies will be the most affected by the proposed reforms as a result of the white paper and the new sources of taxation now proposed. As the matter stands, some companies like the Bombardier Co. of Quebec and other excellent Canadian companies will be affected, while others like General Motors which is controlled by American interests will benefit from the reforms suggested by the federal government.

For instance, in La Guadeloupe, in the Frontenac riding, where a snowmobile company was sold to an American corporation and overnight 300 workers were laid off. Attempts were made with the assistance of the union to find the owners of the industry and it was learned finally that they had fled abroad in a quiet hotel in Miami whose name was not known.

In the face of such shameless exploitation on the part of capitalists whom, in my opinion, take over our Canadian economy, it is time that the Bank of Canada be made to assist the Canadian people, so as to eliminate this economic system which interferes with our freedom and which binds us, although with golden chains.

Furthermore, we have been told that soon capital gains will be taxed. Let us not kid ourselves. We know fully well that it will be the consumers who will foot the bill. Prices will rise, which in turn will push upward the inflationary pressure. To operate and survive, a business must include in the price of the items it markets all its costs; otherwise, it faces bankruptcy. If one cost is not included in the price, the business loses money and eventually goes bankrupt.

It is impossible to tax effectively a capitalist producer, because his existence as a producer depends on his capacity or his ability to have the consumer pay all the expenses generated by his business production.

Businesses will tend to inflate their prices according to additional taxes which the government will levy on them. It is impossible to believe that an unfair system will be improved with measures which will make it even more unfair.

With regard to capital gains on real estate, I submit that when we decide to appraise wealth in Canada, the home owner will be tempted to assess his property at the highest figure possible so as to protect himself or to minimize capital gains which could be obtained when selling his property later on.

However, if he puts a high price on his home, the chances are that the municipal appraisers will, in turn, step in and levy a higher land tax. There is thus no way of escaping from the recurring circle of problems.

On the other hand, if the home owner's appraisal is in keeping with the value set by the municipal appraisers, he will have to pay more taxes on capital gains than the profit he will make when he actually parts with his house.

In my opinion that is one of the ill effects of the white paper proposals. Mr. Fraser Robertson, in an editorial published in the November 12 issue of the Globe and Mail, notes the seeming disregard of the government for small businesses, because the white paper proposals result in discouraging small investors, in jeopardizing small businesses while favouring only the big monopolies.

According to this journalist, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when bringing forward his proposals under the name of tax reform, obviously agrees with the view of the Economic Council of Canada to the effect that what Canada needs is to develop a few powerful monopolies likely to become the responsibility of other cabinet members. He knows complete disregard for small businesses.

Mr. Robertson adds that the disregard shown by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) for small business, more particularly the family-type businesses, reflects the arrogance peculiar to our times and our government.

Recalling that big businesses like General Motors and Massey-Ferguson had a modest start before becoming powerful monopolies, Mr. Robertson remarks that even in this era, big businesses are dependent on smaller businesses able to supply raw materials. He recalls that General Electric, for instance, has to rely on more than 10,000 small suppliers.

Finally, without pondering on the Canadian situation for too long, I shall limit myself to a few examples showing that it is rather desperate. At the present time, there are in Canada two million children living in poverty; 350,000 women and 1 million children are on welfare. One urban family out of five earns less than $3,000 per year; the same goes for 160,000 rural families.

For these reasons, we Créditistes propose a minimum taxable income of $4,000 for married people, with a $1,000 deduction per child and a $2,000 deduction for single people. Moreover, the government should enact immediately a compensated discount so as to lower the cost of living and empower the Bank of Canada to make interest-free loans to municipalities, schools boards or for the establishment of any public service.

Moreover, so as to respect self-government and promote good understanding in Canada, each province should be granted, as was required by Alberta as soon as in 1935, the right to establish a branch of the Bank of Canada, so as to enable the provinces to finance, without interest, every public endeavour, thus promoting Canada's development while making financially feasible what is physically possible.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to make a few modest remarks on the budget speech given last week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

Through this budget, the government proposes various measures, various economic and financial programs to the House, in order to allow the members to put forth what criticism they see fit, provided it is objective, and serious, and that they ensure efficiency and dynamism in the administration of Canada.

The facts must be faced but, to my mind, it is a bad thing for criticism to be pessimistic only, and of such nature as to discourage the public. Occasionaly, it might be indicated for some of us to point out the weaknesses in a budget speech or in government programs. But, I do not approve of attempts being made to discourage the people by suggestions devoid of objectivity, useless suggestions that cannot help the Minister of Finance and the government to do even more efficiently the job they have done so well in the last few years.

What it amounts to is that we are asked to approve the government's general fiscal policy. We are not told to consider this policy as the most perfect one, as all members feel that any human organization is bound to have certain weaknesses, particularly when it comes to government policy and more especially as we work on what I might call human material.

And when we operate in this way it is difficult to use mathematical formulae entirely as they might be appropriate today but would probably have to be changed tomorrow due to the unpredictable evolution of all human activity.

The members of the opposition moved an amendment to criticize the government for failing to provide any tax relief for the poor and for taking measures to reduce consumer credit, which measures are likely to increase the difficulties facing Canadians and to increase the level of unemployment.

It must be acknowledged that these measures could be prejudicial to our workers for some time, but their purpose is to avoid a greater harm. In fact, it happens that the patient feels some pain when his doctor has to treat him for some disease. Another opposition party has also pointed out that the government should have considered the tax to be paid by single people whose annual income is under $2,000 and by married people whose annual income is under $4,000. In my opinion, the minister has already partly answered this question because it seems that after all these discussions we have had in these last few weeks about the white paper, which is not the statement of a final policy but a list of proposals, the small wage earners in Canada—as can be seen from the white paper—will be protected and that the strongest among the Canadian citizens, because noblesse oblige, will continue to hold the first place.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I intend to use the few minutes that I have left to comment on the budget speech and to make some general observations as well as others concerning my riding in particular and the province of Quebec in general. I shall deal with those subjects within the framework of Canadian policy.

While listening to the comments of a few opposition members, I wondered whether some of them did not see in the budget speech some sort of speech from the throne.

In my opinion a budget is a kind of retrospective of the economic situation of the year just ended as well as an account of expenditure with regard to revenue so as to ascertain if the country is doing well or not. In the light of these facts, estimates are made for the year just beginning.

However, a speech from the throne cannot be compared with the introduction of a budget. In the speech from the throne legislative proposals are set forth. This seems simple but I think it is important to say it again so as to better identify the subject under consideration, to respect more our mandate, to fully avail ourselves of the rights and privileges given us by the people in order to safeguard the democratic freedom with the greatest respect and chiefly never to give the impression to the Canadian people that we are not getting anywhere and that the government aims only at bringing forward its policy as if it were the only remedy to economic problems.

It is always possible to find some weak spots in it and here is the proof of it. The government sets out its policy so that it should be commented upon. I bring that up again in order that the democratic image of our country should be a subject of pride for all the people of Canada. It is important that all the opposition members—they can be at times somewhat noisy since they take advantage of their rights—do not give the impression that they criticize the government policy only for the sake of saying that everything it does is not good and—which is more serious—forgetting meanwhile to make suggestions.

All those who heard the Minister of Finance last week, have read the newspapers and discussed the highlights of the budget. The Canadian people generally and the hon. members in particular have them present in their mind. They deal with economic and financial conditions, with the needs of the government with regard to the development of Canada, so that we may co-operate for the welfare of Canadians.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

Our sources of tax revenue, the allotment of public funds for next year, the federal statements of receipts and expenditures concerning public accounts and restrictions on consumer credit will soon, be the object of legislation, as indicated by the minister. Then all hon. members will be in a position to discuss the new policy on consumer credit as well as its effects, the various proposals concerning special accounts and loans, in the light of some precedents set in Canada and finally the problem which I consider as the most complex, that of differed amortization, and amortization of expenses incurred to fight pollution.

I would like to go over the most important aspects of the budget brought down last week, which gives all members of Parliament and all Canadians, of any political party, every reason to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the government.

It is advisable and necessary to point out that taxes have not been raised for the first time in many years. The speaker who preceded me this afternoon, the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont) discussed at length the bad effects of taxes in Canada, and he said that the government could govern without taxing. As he has been repeating for many years, he explained by what legerdemain he could replace taxes. But to my knowledge, there are very few countries, I should perhaps say there are none, that have used the legerdemain advocated by the hon. member for Frontenac.

A few days ago, the leader of his party, to whom I always listen with the utmost interest, was discussing provincial politics with a CJBR Station announcer in Rimouski and praising the merits of his party. To the people of my region he gave as a case in point the economic accomplishments of the two Social Credit governments in Canada, those of British Columbia and Alberta. To my knowledge, these two governments which are, if not the two most dynamic, at least the wealthiest, have not applied the policies of the Créditiste party. As a matter of fact, they are still using the coins and bills printed by the Royal Canadian Mint here in Ottawa close to Parliament Hill.

Why are those two provinces among the wealthiest, if not the wealthiest in Canada? I believe it is because British Columbia has a much milder climate than Quebec, which certainly affects the dynamic and efficient development of natural resources.

And Alberta, a pre-eminently agricultural province, has been developing for some years rich oil fields that may contribute to its prosperity.

For the first time, the budget does not provide for any tax increase. Maybe the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont) would have been happy if there had been. For the first time also in many years, the budget shows a surplus, which is a sign of a sound financial administration and we should all be happy about it. The government has succeeded in attaining this object which was one of the priorities in its program during the election campagn of 1968.

For the first time again in years, the net amount of the national debt has been reduced. This is another point that we should take into account. In addition, we should keep in mind the efforts made by the government to maintain public expenditures within certain limits and to increase efficiency of public services, as well as in the administration through use of modern techniques, in the best interests of Canadians.

For years, opposition members have been claiming that the government establishes no priorities, as would be essential, whereas the government does have priorities. Since the beginning of the session, the government has been stressing priorities for expenditures, as can be ascertained by merely reading the budget speech made by the Minister of Finance.

In my opinion, highest priority goes to regional economic expansion, with a credits increase of $52 million. Next comes the program on behalf of Indians and Eskimos, with a credits increase of $34 million. In third place comes the retraining of manpower on which a credits increase of $24 million will be affected. Those who are afraid of unemployment can always take advantage of the manpower retraining program, so as to earn a decent living in a new trade.

We should not forget either the industrial and development incentives for which an increase of $12 million is provided. The government's appropriations for low-cost housing will amount to about $200 million. The government will provide an extra $15 million to help the have-not countries. The budget speech constantly emphasizes the war on poverty, first of all in Canada, and then in other countries.

And a last priority which has made the headlines in the newspapers and been the main topic of speeches given by politicians at all levels of government for some time is the fight against water and air pollution.

Some months ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) warned the Canadian people that if they failed to resort voluntarily to anti-inflationary means, the government, for its part, would take the necessary action.

Today, following the speech of the Minister of Finance, we realize that the government was serious, consistent and showing much intellectual honesty.

That is why we can proudly state—and again I say it—that the Minister of Finance, following such warnings, was the first in years to bring down not only a balanced budget but also one that showed a surplus. He clearly states that he intends to achieve the same thing in 1970-71. This is the reason why he managed to obtain a $250 million surplus.

No wonder that I am proud to be a member of the Liberal party. All Liberal members are proud to support the government and, on occasion, to offer it some suggestions. The Liberal back-benchers are sometimes blamed for not expressing very often their views here in the House. We do however sometimes express them. While the opposition members may be more vocal than we are, we do sometimes happen to be a silent opposition. I am proud, on behalf of my electors, to belong to this kind of opposition for the Liberal members take advantage of every available means to provide the government with constructive suggestions. Far from wanting to destroy things or to dishearten people, our purpose is to bring encouragement and help.

There are regional problems and other relevant questions we would like the Minister of Finance to give special consideration to, following the enforcement of the budget policy. They deal with the protection the poor are entitled to get and with the ways and means of helping them.

Furthermore, we should consider helping those who are commonly called the middle-class citizens. If we consider the white paper proposals, it appears that if the tax policy were to be applied as it is set out in the white paper, 750,000 Canadians who, at the present time, pay taxes, would no longer pay them. Furthermore, three million Canadians would pay a lot less taxes. This is the proof at any rate that the Minister of Finance and the government, when preparing the white paper, did think of the poor.

In my opinion, the minister should also provide for certain measures which would tend to lighten the tax burden of middle-class citizens.

Among those who make between $9,000 and $25,000, we have the owners of small businesses, professional people, the experts Canadians go to for help. It would impose hardships on those citizens to have to pay tax on income they have not yet collected, when they already have a difficult time paying income tax on what they have already received.

The minister could give special attention to the fight against poverty, tax deductions and consumer credit.

With regard to the social policy—and here I am thinking of the amendment to the Progressive Conservative party and the sub-amendment of the New Democratic Party—we were told in the Speech from the Throne that a white paper on the basic policy of the government would be introduced. To date the government has proven its sincerity by supplying us with those white papers ahead of time. I think that this white paper will soon be introduced and all the members will then have the opportunity to discuss the means that should be taken to improve the lot of the old, the widows and the sick.

Before concluding my remarks, I should like to say a few words on some regional problems. It has often been said that in our area, in eastern Quebec, the lower St. Lawrence area and the Gaspé Peninsula, we had been chosen as a pilot area. I have already said I was afraid regional development programs devised for those areas, under federal-provincial agreements, would use us as guinea pigs.

Following the developments of these last months, I wonder whether an agreement between Quebec and the federal government is really being prepared. I believe that in our area we will not even have the opportunity of being used as guinea pigs, as the proposed development will probably not be carried out. In fact, I wonder whether, on account of political reasons—rightly or wrongly—this scheme will not be implemented on a Quebec scale only, with the danger that we will remain a marginal area.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, there are many people in Canada who disagree with the government's contention that inflation is the No. 1 problem facing our country today. I subscribe to the view that the No. 1 problem in our country today is not inflation but regional disparity and its consequences. Yet the government continues to propagate the myth that inflation is our No. 1 problem and it continues to implement a program the effect of which is to increase unemployment in this country.

The unemployment figure has now reached critical proportions in many areas of the country. But the government goes on its merry way. Unemployment in the Atlantic provinces is already in excess of 10 per cent. Our national unemployment figure has exceeded 6 per cent. In my own province of Newfoundland there are many who believe, and I am one of those, that unemployment has exceeded 20 per cent. In spite of this, the government continues on its merry way, blind to the consequences of programs that it pursues which will drive unemployment rates still higher.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said before, and it bears repetition, that inflation may be a serious problem. No doubt it is. I certainly have no doubt that it is a serious problem in the "have" provinces of this country. There is no doubt that inflation is a grave problem in Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. But I think it is fair to say that for those of us in the rest of the country, when these provinces call the inflationary tune the rest of the country is forced to pay the piper.

On the eve of the budget which is now being debated in this House the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) made a statement in which he outlined the government's program to deal with the very serious problems of regional disparity. The program was contained in the minister's statement made in the House on March 11. The only opportunity for members of this House, the representatives of the people, to comment on this new policy was in a brief statement in reply that a representative of each of the opposition parties was permitted to make under our rules after the minister had made his statement.

The House is being denied the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to examine this program. Indeed, I can say that the House has been denied an opportunity since the beginning of this session to examine the programs of the government designed to cope with the very serious problems of regional disparity. The problem was referred to just a few days ago by a very prominent economist from the University of Montreal. It was reported in the Globe and Mail of March 7, and paraphrasing his speech they said:

> Canada has a highly developed set of federal and provincial legislation designed to reduce the income gap between the various regions of the country. Planners in other advanced countries regard the Canadian machinery with admiration and envy.
> The only problem is that it doesn't work.

In spite of statements made by experts in the country about the seriousness of regional economic problems, the House is denied an opportunity to examine what the government is doing and its policies to cope with these problems. Mr. Speaker, coming from one of the most regionally disadvantaged provinces of the country I can say that with feeling. We have tried, unsuccessfully, to get the government to tell us the details of what its plans or programs are. The only way we have an opportunity to do this is by debate in the House, the House reverting to Committee of the Whole, or in the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

In his statement the minister announced that the new program would cost more than $200 million and that this money would be committed to aiding the 22 special areas, as the minister referred to them, across the country including three of the four Atlantic provinces, eastern Quebec, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta, before June 30, 1972. According to the minister's statement, press reports and the pronouncements of politicians in the various provinces, the program is to come into effect on April 1, and we are told that two of the provinces—Newfoundland and New Brunswick—will be signing agreements with the federal government before April 1, 1970.

The program has two major aspects, as I see it. First, it is designed to provide federal aid to provincial and municipal governments, to community infrastructures—that is a beautiful $64,000 word which covers a multitude of sins —in certain areas of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Second, the program is designed to provide federal incentives to private enterprise (a) for developing resource-based industry in the northern Prairies and parts of Ontario and Quebec, and (b) for providing alternative employment for those affected by the decline in the potash and wheat industries in Regina and Saskatoon.

Now we are told that the $200 million mentioned by the minister is to be devoted entirely to the first aspect of the program, that which deals with aid to provincial and municipal governments for community services—the so-called infrastructure. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we do not know whether this is to be in the form of loans, grants or both. We have no way of knowing, and we certainly have no way of finding out in this House from the elusive Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who shows nothing but contempt for this House when he is here by refusing to answer questions.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it is worth while to note that there is only one minister present in the House tonight and less than a baker's dozen of his colleagues. I would suggest this is indicative of two things: (a) the arrogance of this government, and (b) the contempt it holds for those of us who are trying to represent the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Shameful.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his budget speech, which hon. gentlemen opposite have tried so desperately to defend, referred to the allocation of this money. I quote from page 4744 of Hansard:

> —about $50 million more for loans for regional economic expansion, on which all of us place high priority.

This is supposed to be the government's approach to this problem upon which they place such high priority. The Minister of Finance in his budget talks about $50 million. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in his statement to the House talked about $200 million to be spread over the next two years.

There are a number of questions to which we demand answers. For example, are these funds for the incentive part of the new program? We have no way of knowing, and as of this moment we do not know. We know that the $50 million figure differs substantially from the increase of $37 million in loans shown in the departmental estimates.

Again, this is a matter of detail and we want the opportunity to question the Minister of Economic Regional Expansion, the Deputy Minister and senior officials about this matter. It would seem, if we can judge from the tip of the iceberg that is protruding, that this is a major policy announcement. Obviously, the program is committing major sums of money and clearly this House is entitled to discuss it fully.

Mr. Olson: That is what hon. members are supposed to do during this debate, Mr. Speaker. During the budget debate hon. members may discuss more or less what they like.

Mr. McGrath: We have been denied an opportunity to discuss this matter.

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. McGrath: We have been denied the opportunity to discuss the details of the program. If my hon. friend on the government side of the House, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and his colleague will restrain themselves, I will explain why I say that.

Mr. Lind: Speak up, then.

An hon. Member: Where is the minister? How can he reply?

Mr. McGrath: We have been continually frustrated in our attempts to find out exactly what this government is doing in all areas and in the area of regional economic expansion especially.

Mr. Baldwin: We are being ruled by the secret society.

Mr. McGrath: This is the government of the big secret. We have asked repeatedly, by various procedural means open to us, that a meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Development be convened in order that it might deal with the estimates. Of course, the Minister of Agriculture can say that the estimates have already been referred to the committee. Everyone in the House knows that, just as everyone knows the estimates need not be referred back to the House until May 31.

Some may say the matter is not urgent. I submit the urgency has been increased by the announcement of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a few days ago that the program is to take effect on April 1, at which time the House will be adjourned for the Easter recess. It has come to our attention that the committee will not meet this week. A meeting of the subcommittee on agenda and procedure has been announced for Thursday, but obviously the full committee will not meet this week. Early next week the House is to adjourn for the Easter recess. We have been frustrated in our attempts to find out who is responsible for calling this committee together. It is a well-known custom of this House that committees meet to consider estimates at the convenience of the minister.

Mr. Olson: With all respect, that is not correct.

Mr. McGrath: With all respect, that is correct, and the minister knows it. It is a custom of this House. Consequently, it is logical to assume that this committee has not been convened, (a) because the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion does not wish his estimates to be examined, and (b) because the minister obviously has something to hide.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The government controls the machinery.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister was in the barber's shop all afternoon.

Mr. McGrath: If the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion wants to come to the House and deny these allegations, I am sure hon. members on this side will give him unanimous consent to be heard; that is, assuming he can take time out from his sorties into Quebec.

Mr. Lind: You never had it so good.

Mr. McGrath: Since the session began last fall the Standing Committee on Regional Development has met once, despite the repeated attempts of the members of that committee to convene the entire committee if for no other purpose than to elect the chairman and vice-chairman.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. McGrath: We have had one meeting. That meeting was called to deal with a relatively minor amendment to the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act.

Mr. Olson: There was a chairman at that meeting.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, we know the government does not wish its program to be examined before it becomes effective on April 1.

Mr. Pringle: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question now, or later?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my time is limited; otherwise I should be only too glad to entertain a question from the honourable and distinguished member from British Columbia who has played such an important but frustrated role on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, who has seen some of his recommendations ignored by the government and, indeed, sent back to the committee because they were not acceptable to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pringle: Hurray! Up the Bullet!

Mr. McGrath: I admire the hon. member's tenacity. Most hon. members have become so frustrated that they find it difficult even to attend meetings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in which my hon. friend has played such an important role.

We believe that if this House under its new rules is to function properly and effectively, committees must meet frequently and there must be, as my colleague for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has said, new machinery to make certain they meet—because it is obvious that the present system does not work.

Mr. Olson: We think it does.

Mr. McGrath: There must be new machinery whereby we are able to see that committees meet frequently to discuss estimates and major statements of policy before those policy statements are implemented. The Government House Leader ought to have the courtesy to be here tonight. The Minister of Agriculture displays that courtesy.

Mr. Nesbitt: He is the only one.

Mr. McGrath: That minister and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion flippantly and sarcastically reply to our questions by saying, "The estimates have already been referred to the committee."

An hon. Member: Come off it, now.

Mr. McGrath: I ask my friend from British Columbia who interrupts me: What mechanism is there to make certain the committee is called together, and the minister is called before the committee at its convenience and not at his?

An hon. Member: That is a good question.

Mr. Baldwin: We have the rule of the autocrats.

Mr. McGrath: Why is this committee experiencing so much difficulty in getting down to work? What is the problem? What is the reason behind this? Is it to provide time for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to go into Quebec and talk as he has been in the past few days and interfere in that province's politics? Is that the reason? One can only assume that this committee has not met because someone on the government side of the House has given instructions for it not to meet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: If the committees of Parliament are to be effective, and indeed if Parliament itself is to be effective, we must have as our right the opportunity to scrutinize government policy in committees. This right becomes all the more important when a minister makes policy statements which are vague—such as the one made on March 11—nebulous and beyond the realm of understanding. We must not be content to sit here frustrated in our attempts to exercise our rights as Members of Parliament to ask for explanations as to what the policy is all about. This matter is all the more urgent, Mr. Speaker, because the program announced a few days ago is to take effect when Parliament is in recess. When we return, it will be a fact. There will not be much point in getting details of it then, because it will be too late.

It took Ireland 900 years to gain her independence. If I could, I would reiterate for that long that the government and this House must provide a new mechanism: it must devise a new means if Parliament is to mean anything and not be the farce that this government is making it. Committees must be able to work effectively and efficiently and be free from the sometimes sinister hand of the government.

Mr. Baldwin: The best way to do that is to have a new government.

Mr. Olson: You tried that, and lost.

Mr. McGrath: If the government continues like this, the people of Canada will provide that mechanism. Before I resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) which reads as follows:

> —and, more specifically, this House regrets that the proposals do not exempt from income tax single persons earning less than $2,000 and married persons earning less than $4,000 per year.

We in this party believe that the subamendment means only that single persons earning less than $4,000 a year should be exempt from income tax. We do not feel it means that the basic tax exemption for all taxpayers should be raised to $2,000 and $4,000 respectively. We therefore believe the subamendment is consistent with the amendment moved by my friend the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). Consequently, we in the official opposition have no hesitation in supporting the subamendment.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the budget that we now have before us in the most clear and unequivocal fashion reveals the moral and intellectual bankruptcy of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The solution which that party presents to the people of Canada to the problems which our country faces is that we must in some paltry fashion tighten up consumer credit. If one reads the budget carefully, it will be seen that even in this nefarious enterprise only a half-hearted attempt has been made. Any serious economist would suggest that the recommendations in the budget to deal with consumption are not really effective. If the government wanted to put teeth into it, they could do what was done in this country in the early 1950's. Even operating under the assumption therefore that the economic problems of this country should be approached by reducing consumption, if we look at what the great old party on the government side of the House has proposed, we find a vacuous approach.

The budget is one more step in this government's neurotic two-year preoccupation with inflation which has not resulted in stable prices but in thousands of jobless persons throughout the country. The very important point that needs to be, and is recognized by anyone with a two-year university level of education in economics is that in a modern economy a government does have a choice. In fact, it has two choices. The economy can be geared so that society will be fully employed or, as I said a minute ago, there can be a neurotic preoccupation with price stability.

In the history of this country we have had governments which have consistently made the second choice. It is not necessary to rely on my partisan judgment for this: anyone can look at an economist's textbook on the history of economic practice in this country to make that discovery. I wish to quote from a source which at one time was very dear to the government. I am referring to Mr. John Deutsch, the former head of the Economic Council of Canada. I shall read what Mr. Deutsch had to say about the deliberate attempts by governments of this country to manage the economy based on the assumption that what is needed most is price stability as opposed to full employment. In an article written in 1968, Mr. Deutsch, in comparing Canadian and American governments with their western European counterparts, pointed out that European governments > —have been highly sensitive to unemployment, and they have used monetary and fiscal policies very actively to keep the unemployment rates at low levels.

The result of this, he observed—and this is a deliberate policy on the part of western European countries—is as follows:

> Over the past ten years ... they have generally succeeded in keeping the unemployment rate within a range of 1 to 2½ per cent of the labour force.

He noted that in Sweden, in particular, unemployment in the past decade has rarely exceeded 1½ per cent. During the same period unemployment in this country averaged about 5 per cent. I emphasize that this is a matter of deliberate government policy. Governments in this country have incessantly, foolishly and criminally opted for price stability over a fully employed economy. The increasingly evident result is unemployed Canadians. Canadians living in the Maritimes, Quebec, and now more and more in Ontario, the Prairie provinces and British Columbia are becoming unemployed. The recent figures are: the Atlantic provinces, 10 per cent; Quebec, 8 per cent; Ontario, 4.2 per cent; the Prairies, 4.6 per cent; British Columbia, 7.3 per cent.

The atmosphere of unemployment is a disastrous one for people to grow up in, yet the most recent figures indicate that unemployment is now spreading to Ontario, the Prairies and British Columbia. This is a direct consequence of the policies this government has pursued for the past two years. The results are very evident in a constituency like my own where until the last couple of months we enjoyed full employment. Now, employment is beginning to decline. Automobile sales are declining. As an interesting sidelight, I might point out that imports of European automobiles have increased significantly during the last few months. Perhaps the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission should get in touch with those who run the automotive industry and find out why they do not lower their prices.

One of the government's objectives is to bring about a reduction in prices, but anyone with an elementary knowledge of present-day economics knows that the big corporations are in a position to set their own prices; they are able to wait for decades, if necessary, before responding to the kind of fiscal and monetary policies which the government is operating. They dominate markets rather than respond to them.

Why is the government's deflationary program not working? It is obvious that it is not working, and I wish the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had taken the advice of even some of his own economic advisers on this question. It is not working because current inflation is not caused by excessive demands on the economy. It is foolish to compare what is happening in the economy today with what happened in the fifties. In the early fifties there was, indeed, an excessive demand upon the economy; we were catching up in the production of consumer goods after the big lag during the second world war. The Korean war cut into the production of consumer goods. The labour force was fully employed, and too many dollars were chasing too few goods.

Today the situation is entirely different. There are plenty of goods waiting to be purchased, automobiles and manufactured products of all kinds. But they are not being bought. If hon. members will read what is contained in the sixth annual report of the Economic Council of Canada they will find that this is spelled out in detail.

My point is this. Though it is difficult to quantify these things, it is probable that 90 per cent of the inflation in this country is due to the inflation in the United States where it is the product of excessive demand. United States involvement in the war in Viet Nam has meant the diversion of a high percentage of its productive resources into military enterprises, leaving a gap in civilian production. In that country there are, indeed, too many dollars chasing too few goods. The United States is suffering from inflation, and we have inherited it in this country. I suppose the most practical early approach, the most realistic counsel to give this government would be to advise the United States to get out of the war in Southeast Asia. This would be the quickest approach to dealing with inflation in Canada. The result of the government's callous and outdated approach to a modern economy is bound to be even higher levels of unemployment, even more men, women and children suffering in a way which is altogether unacceptable.

One of the excuses put forward by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is that if we did not take action to deal with inflation, Canadian exports would suffer. Once again, this is hogwash. Export figures for last month are up by 16 per cent as compared with a year ago; we have no problem in the export field. Besides, 70 per cent of our trade is with the United States, and the United States, as I pointed out a minute ago, is suffering from a higher rate of inflation than ours—theirs is running at about 6 per cent and ours is running at about 4.5 per cent. So we can expect to continue to trade with the United States in terms of the prices of our potential exports as long as inflation there is running ahead of our own.

What are we to conclude from the government's brilliant economic performance so far? The only conclusion I can reach is that they do not know what they are doing. They are following the old-fashioned conservative method of governing the economy, but even the application of this method is faulty because they have incorrectly diagnosed the present situation. This is the view of the Economic Council of Canada, as I pointed out a few moments ago.

What should be the economic objective of the federal government in this country? In my view it should be the same as that of every civilized country in western Europe: there should be a consistent, determined and intelligent approach to creating an economy in which there is full employment. Never, to my knowledge, has a government of this country presented us with a white paper on full employment, for example; it has always been on the subject of price stability, or something equivalent.

We in this party do not hold the view that inflation is something about which one should not be concerned. Of course, there is some concern. But we think in terms of priorities. The human priority, full employment, should come first. We must then be intellectually honest and admit that if there is to be full employment there must also be some measure of inflation. But let our primary aim be full employment, and then let measures be introduced to deal with the situation of those who will be affected by the inevitable inflationary pressures accompanying it.

Once again, there are no great mysteries about what ought to be done in this area. First, we should take measures to protect those on pensions, whether government or private. We need laws, applicable to private concerns as well as to government institutions, which will ensure pensions to people who have worked all their lives, based on income during the best ten years of their employment. They should contain escalation clauses which would correspond to the real increases in inflation, not to some arbitrary percentage level which is inevitably set lower than the actual rate. We need to protect people in receipt of pensions if we are to acknowledge that inflation will be with us in a full-employment economy.

The amendment we have put before the House would make some minimal move to provide relief for these people by raising tax exemptions from $1,000 to $2,000 for a single person and from $2,000 to $4,000 for a married couple. This would provide some real assistance to people confronted with inflation. Instead of providing this relief, the government has produced a nice white paper, in connection with which it is going to indulge in all kinds of extravagant propaganda for two years. It will then come along as the great beneficent father of the country and perhaps make a move in the direction which I have suggested.

I would ask the government why it does not make this move now. If, as the Economic Council of Canada has pointed out, these people are living in poverty, and I am tempted to say one hell of a lot of the rest of us are well off in this country, why not make a concession at this point instead of waiting another two years? We do not need to wait!

Another measure which would have to be taken to protect the people in an inflating economy relates to the barbarous trade union laws in this country. Something like a mere 40 per cent of our working force is unionized, a horrible shame in comparison with other industrial societies. For example, in Sweden some 90 per cent of the working force are members of trade unions: lawyers, doctors and other professions are proud to associate themselves with the labour movement and to be members of a union. This is something that we in this country must encourage. We must get virtually all our working people into a strong bargaining position so that they will be able to cope with price increases.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

A third measure that could be taken is to unpeg the Canadian dollar. Because of our pegged dollar, whenever the United States economy is affected by inflation ours has to respond by making sure that our interest rates are just a little higher. In short, our economy has to respond to whatever the economy of the United States does. Therefore, one of the steps which would give us a little higher degree of independence would be to unpeg our dollar and conduct a vigorous, imaginative program to develop industries which are not directly dependent upon U.S. trade but would produce economic ties with other countries. These are four measures that a government of this country primarily concerned with full employment could take to protect those who experience difficult times as a result of the inevitable inflation that goes with full employment.

The final point I should like to make is that this budget fails entirely to encourage the development of the public sector of the economy. One of the most important methods of simultaneously protecting people against inflation and equalizing life opportunities for people in Canada is the provision of public or community goods and services. If we build public swimming pools, parks and universities, average and poor Canadians benefit as much as the rich. If we remove pollution from our water and air, preserve and build attractive cities, expand our hospitals, increase our medical research facilities and build at public expense more houses, on this economy we will have a substructure that will enable people to have real, human benefits at their disposal whether or not the economy is an inflated one.

This is extremely important. The more we rely upon market conditions to ensure production and distribution of goods and services, the more we put people in a very dependent position in terms of dealing with inflation. We must move much further in the direction of providing public goods and services so that people in society are not put in the position of having to compete in the marketplace for these goods and services. As a result, they would not suffer when confronted periodically with inflationary pressures.

I have made four or five suggestions about what could and should be done in this country of ours in a period of full employment when people are subjected to inflationary pressure. May I repeat that the government of this country has been an utter disaster from the point of view of economics.

It has been a complete and utter disaster when you consider that on a per capita basis we have one of the richest societies in the world. The government is still relying upon the most outmoded kind of thinking, and upon what should be the most outmoded moral position, in managing our society.

This budget should not be seen simply as a stand pat document which should more or less be accepted as one other document put out by a banal government. The budget should be seen and talked about for what it is—as the most current symbol of a government that does not know what it is doing and has no interest in changing the power structure of our economy, something that is necessary in order for Canadians to move toward a more civilized kind of existence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto).

Mr. Macquarrie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) on a point of order.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, since the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) was not present today on his roster-assigned duty, and was not present at two committee meetings at which he was to be the star witness, may I ask whether he would like to make a statement on the emerging catastrophic situation in Montreal? I am sure the House would give unanimous consent to revert to motions for the purpose of his making a statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. According to my knowledge of the rules, this is not a point of order. The hon. member for York East.

Mr. Macquarrie: Then may I ask why Your Honour called "Order" before you ascertained whether there was unanimous consent of the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for York East.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) on another point of order.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) raised a point of order and asked whether the House would consent to revert to motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Macquarrie: Please! Let him finish.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Aiken: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka on a point of order.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, all I was trying to say was that that question ought at least to be put to the House.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. There is no unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather disrupting occurrence, because I thought I was going to have the pleasure of speaking to my friends here in camera, unreported by the press, and I could put the government over a barrel.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Otto: Something is happening. I dare say it has something to do with an announcement to be made.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you the new Postmaster General?

Mr. Otto: No, I am not the new Postmaster General and I cannot seem to get the message across. I very much regret—

An hon. Member: What is your colour tonight?

Mr. Otto: I very much regret I have to speak when other members are anticipating something of great portent. I was trying to make amends over a period of a year and a half during which I have been accused by members opposite of somehow deserting them, as if I were a member of their party. The fact is I am a Liberal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That does not excuse you.

Mr. Otto: Being a Liberal does not at any time prevent me from speaking out if I disagree, as I intend to tonight, with government policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto: I shall limit myself to the question of inflation and the so-called measures that have been taken by the government to control inflation. I fully realize that this problem is very serious and has to be faced. Like the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), I say this is a problem that cannot be disregarded and that the measures which have been taken up to this time have been absolutely useless.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto: My good friend and colleague the Whip said recently I had apparently returned to normal. I should like to assure him that I have always been normal. Whenever reform measures are brought before the House which form part of Liberal philosophy, I support them. I supported the Criminal Code amendments and I now support the white paper which I think is a good social document. This is not the issue at stake. The issue at stake is that we as Canadians are bound to face inflation every five or six years. We are told it is about time to get down to physical flagellation in order to control inflation.

All these flagellists, including the minister, Mr. Rasminsky and all the experts, tell us we have sinned. What have we done, that we as Canadian people constantly deserve to be told that every five or six years we must restrict our economic enterprise and confine ourselves to lesser production? We are told not to grow crops and we are told not to do other things. This is not a country for negative thinking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto: Negative thinking does not work. It may have worked 15 or 20 years ago but it does not work today. Let us consider some of the recommendations made by authorities as high up as Dr. Young, Mr. Rasminsky and others. They say we must tighten money and we must restrict credit because this will have a beneficial effect on enterprise by making industry produce less. If these gentlemen were out in the commercial world they would realize that a restriction or a lessening of sales by any corporate enterprise is equivalent to automatic suicide because it results in a decrease in employment and production. There is only one result of decrease in sales, and that is bankruptcy.

These people still think businessmen should restrict themselves, confine their sales and produce less. This cannot be done. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had been out in the commercial world as I am from week to week, he would know this is not possible.

Mr. Fairweather: He would be getting $40 a week.

Mr. Otto: What is the consequence of this attitude? The banks, of course, have tightened up. They have said to the businessmen that they cannot have money because the banks are short. The businessmen know they must produce and increase sales, so they go to the friendly IAC—the Industrial Acceptance Corporation. That outfit says that this is a new and strange creature. They offer to help out businessmen by giving them money to purchase brand new equipment and machinery. They offer to factor their inventories at a charge of only 2 per cent per month. That is quite decent: if you calculate it for a year, it is only 22 per cent.

Then the manufacturers ask how they will dispose of their products. The finance company says not to worry because they will get customers. They in turn go to others and ask how they would like to buy these goods with money they will lend at only 18 per cent. I have in mind the entrepreneurs and the consumers, but the giants who get the profits are the finance companies. This all occurs because the minister says to the banks and finance companies that we must tighten up because we do not have the money.

I was a member of the Banking and Finance Committee when this situation occurred. This was the craziest snow job ever sold us as Members of Parliament. We were told we had to compete in the money market and that we must have a free interest rate in order to obtain investments in mortgages. How nice—the banks were going to invest all their money in mortgages in order that we might finance business enterprises and their inventories. We said fine, go ahead and finance these companies in that way. Before we knew it, there were Chargex cards and Scotia Plan cards flying all over the place. We then found that was where the money at 38 per cent interest was going.

These banks which were originally vested with the right—almost a monopolistic right—in Canada to look after this service, we found to be derelict in this duty. There are two answers to the situation, and this does not involve instructing banks to restrict lending. If we are to give banks the monopolistic privilege of providing this money, which we have done, we must see that the interest rate is controlled, or insist that the money is placed where it is needed rather than where it can make the most profit. I have no objection to this, but the only other alternative is to throw banking wide open and get away from the branch banking system. Perhaps we should adopt the United States system of competitive banking. I have no objection to that, but in one way or another something has to be done.

The inflation illness which we suffer cannot be blamed on the working man or labour unions. It is due by and large to the fact that control of financing is left with the banks under a monopolistic system. Unemployment has been referred to time and time again. We must consider the consequences of unemployment today. The use of unemployment today, either directly or indirectly, as a tool to curb inflation cannot be tolerated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto: Unemployment today has a much more serious consequence than it had 20 years ago. Unemployment today can no longer fit into protected groups. Today we belong to trade unions, and if one is a carpenter and is fired or laid off, his dignity is lost because he can do carpentry and nothing else. He loses his status and his earnings. This is a tragedy because the man who suffers from unemployment requires years to recover. He will never again be as productive as he might have been. The minister should carefully review his definition of unemployment in relation to how serious this situation can be.

• (9:30 p.m.)

To say we may require 7 per cent or 8 per cent unemployment is just absolutely unbelievable. It is said that we are taking more out of the economy than we are putting into it. I believe that is true. That is the reason for inflation. We are taking out more than we are putting in. The answer is not to take out less; it is to put in more. Labour has no objection to this. Canadian labour today is about ninth in the world in productive capacity, after Italy and France. I believe it has a rating of 2 according to CNTU reports and DBS.

But what do we do with labour? First we say we do not really recognize unions; we say that a union is a quasi legal thing. Then we say you are still allowed to stop production and use the stoppage of work as a tool to negotiate, as if the negotiation was between labour and management. The fact is there is no management-labour dispute. Management will always pass on the cost. The dispute is labour-consumer or labour-labour. That is the conflict today.

It is about time this government put its mind to work and developed a system by which these disputes will be solved without a work stoppage. The consequence of a work stoppage is long-lasting. First, there is the lack of production. Heaven knows, we are short in production. Every year we lose out in respect of production because of work stoppages. When this happens, labour has to dip into its savings; it is no better off. Production suffers.

The most serious consequence is that if the labour dispute is settled over a long period, there is resentment; management and labour no longer see eye to eye; they are enemies instead of friends. There cannot be good production when there is that type of feeling. If this were 1930 I would say that there is no other method by which to solve a labour-management dispute, but this is 1970 and there are many ways in which it can be done. There is even the very simple method of abolishing unions and saying what firms shall be unionized. If there is no contract, the profits made during the period in which there is no contract could be turned over to the government. Management would have nothing to worry about because at least it would not have to close its factories or dig into its reserves. Labour would still be earning, we would still be producing and people would receive the benefit of this.

There might be thousands of other ways, but we should apply our minds to the essential question that so long as wages and prices increase at a more rapid rate than our gross national product, we will have inflation and it does not matter which economic philosophy is used. The budget indicated some controls over consumer loans. I grant that if any segment of our fiscal or economic policy has a great influence on inflation, it is the creation of money because, indeed, consumer financing is the creation of money. Whether we think of it in direct or indirect terms, that is what it is. If you tell a man that he can buy goods and pay for them from his future earnings, you hypothecate his productivity and that is the creation of money. This has a great bearing on inflation. But to say that he must provide 20 per cent of the price and set a time limit for payment is of no consequence.

The finance companies promote the lending and borrowing of money. Your friendly HFC will lend you all the money you need in order to get out of debt. You do not have to pay interest on the debt but you do have to pay. They promote this. They are not worried too much. If a man cannot pay, they obtain a garnishee on his wages. The original law of bills of exchange and court procedures had to do with commercial borrowing, bills and bankruptcy; it had to do with people in business. They were in the commercial world and they were the ones who had to suffer the consequences of non-payment. It was never meant, and should not have been meant to be the tool of the finance companies to use to collect debts which they themselves promoted.

The solution is not in provincial hands; it is right here. All that we, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government have to do is simply amend the Bills of Exchange Act and the Bankruptcy Act and say to the finance companies that if they promote the lending of money, they must collect it by promotion and be careful where they put it. They should make sure that the man is a good risk and not lend to him merely because he is a good fellow and then have recourse to garnishee proceedings. That might have some effect.

Let me in the few minutes remaining review some of the points I have made. Over a number of years we have had to tolerate less production from time to time so we might surmount the problem of inflation, but the problem has not been surmounted. We are now in the position of applying the same old remedy in the same old way even though it does not work. The essence of reform is to have a proper appreciation of the situation in order to find out what are the circumstances, and then apply measures and not just say we have measures which we are going to apply such as telling farmers not to grow crops and manufacturers not to produce. In essence, that is the reason for inflation.

[Mr. Otto.]

In conclusion, as I say, I can imagine that some of these remedies would apply to many other countries. However, the statement that we import 90 per cent of our inflation from the United States does not stand up. If the United States is indeed involved in an expensive war, it obviously also can afford to be involved in lunar trips and expensive mineral exploration. A country which is hamstrung in respect of productivity could not afford to do this.

There is absolutely no need for Canada to be too seriously affected by United States inflation. I believe it is our own doing. It is up to our government to take a positive approach. It must say, first, that it will help business become more productive and will make money available to it at reasonable interest rates in order that business can improve its plant, it facilities and its production.

We should invite expertise in management and at the senior executive level from the United States or elsewhere so that Canadians can be trained to do a better job. The government should also come to a definite decision and policy in respect of labour. It is very nice to have our minister go from place to place in order to settle strikes, or to be there when they are settled—but that is not policy. We must have a policy in respect of what we want to do with labour and how we can make it more productive. We must remember at all times that the issue now is not that we should take less out of the economy, but that we should put more into it. We should enjoy the standard of living, with our productive capacity, to which we were entitled and not a standard of living dictated by restriction.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: To the Senate!

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, in the couple of minutes that remain before the vote takes place I want to say that I agree in part with what was said by the previous speaker. One of the great problems facing this country at present is inflation.

My contention is that one of the greatest contributions to inflation at present is the high tax burden that Canadians are bearing. During the last 18 years the total tax burden on Canadians has risen from just over $6 billion to approximately $26 billion—a fourfold increase in a matter of 18 years. The most serious factor in this tax load and the greatest single increase in the various forms of taxation has been hidden taxes. The result is that there is a tax factor in everything that Canadians buy.

There is now a sales tax at the federal level in most provinces, and some municipalities have a hidden sales tax in the price of everything that the Canadian consumer buys. The result is that there is an erosion in the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar to the extent that it is becoming more and more difficult for the average Canadian to bear his tax burden.

It is true that there are some Canadians who have a vested interest in inflation. Those who have real estate property of considerable value are in the position to ensure that the property increases in value. If they were fortunate enough to borrow money in the past to purchase that property, they can pay back the debt from the appreciation on the real estate property. More important still, the government itself has a vested interest in inflation. I am convinced that they can never be completely convincing in their fight against inflation while this is the case, because as the years go by and inflation increases, the real value of tax exemptions which are set in constant dollars depreciates.

The result is that the tax load on Canadians automatically goes up without the government having to refer to Parliament to increase tax rates. In the last few years the government has been in a very satisfactory position so far as receipts are concerned and this government and its immediate predecessor—which was composed of the same people, shuffled about a bit—have been responsible since 1963 for what people have called the drunken sailor period of expenditures of the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: We are now paying for this expenditure. The government has made commitments over the years. I see that it is a quarter to ten, Mr. Speaker, but I will continue my speech until the subamendment is eventually disposed of. The government, as I have shown, having a vested interest in continuing inflation, is not a convincing body to attack the problem of inflation which is now making life economically difficult for the vast majority of Canadians.

As has been pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), inflation falls heaviest in those areas of Canada where the economy is far from buoyant and where unemployment figures are high.

Mr. Speaker, I see you have noticed that it is a quarter to ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions, so that I can make a statement.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister is seeking the unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of reverting to Motions.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we and other distinguished people, have been waiting most anxiously for this particular moment, but there is one difficulty. Under the Standing Order the bells will ring for 15 minutes, following which there will be a vote, at the completion of which there will be no opportunity for members of the opposition to comment on the Prime Minister's statement.

If it is understood that any unanimous consent which is given includes the right of hon. members representing opposition parties to make their response to what the Prime Minister has to say, this will be fine. We think that if the Standing Order is to be suspended, it should be suspended to the extent that will permit this to be done.

Mr. Speaker: I would have thought that this is the basis upon which a return to Motions would be agreed to by hon. members. I suggest that as part of the agreement which is now being suggested, the bells should still ring for 15 minutes whenever we reach the point at which a vote is to be taken under the provisions of section 6 of Standing Order 69. I understand that subject to this agreement there is unanimous agreement that we revert to Motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER OF INQUIRY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the House of a decision that has been taken in an attempt to solve the postal dispute that exists presently in Montreal.

[English]

The essence of it is a recommendation of the Privy Council which has been adopted today and which I would be prepared to table in the House. I might read the operative paragraph of it, which would permit any of the opposition spokesmen to contribute to this very difficult problem in a constructive way.

An hon. Member: We will decide how we are going to contribute.

An hon. Member: Read the statement.

Mr. Trudeau: The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister—that is me—

An hon. Member: So far.

An hon. Member: Was there ever any doubt?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: —advise that H. Carl Goldenberg, Esq., of Montreal, Quebec, be appointed a Commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire into the contracts that have been entered into—

Mr. Fairweather: My God; the mail will never get through now.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau:

—for the vehicular delivery of mail in Montreal with effect from April 1st, 1970, and the status and rights of all employees presently involved in vehicular mail deliveries, including their collective rights, to report thereon and to recommend such measures in that regard as he considers equitable and desirable for the restoration of normal and effective service in Montreal.

[English]

An hon. Member: Kierans resigns.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say—

An hon. Member: Did we sit up all night to hear that?

Mr. Macquarrie: —what other hon. members have said in this House before, that this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has reached the ultimate in contempt for this Parliament. I received this innocuous statement one and a quarter minutes ago. I am supposed to respond to it with all the seriousness of an elected representative of this Parliament, and I say to him that this is contempt for this Parliament.

Mr. Trudeau: Explain.

Mr. Macquarrie: It may be clever among certain circles, but in the long run it will not do much for him as a one-time apostle of participatory democracy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There should be order in the House.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): How can you have it with a man like that over there?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we should try, anyway. The hon. member for Hillsborough has the floor, and I suggest his remarks should be directed to the statement made on Motions by the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Macquarrie: I had thought, Mr. Speaker, as a fairly substantial grammarian, that when I said "to him" I was in fact addressing you in the first person and him in the third person. I would not have thought, sir, of addressing any remark in this Parliament to anyone other than yourself.

I should like to say that the Prime Minister, who was expected to speak earlier today, has shown his usual contempt for this institution. I would say, further, that the document which he has presented shows his lack of compassion for the problem bothering many many people. I would say to him, further, that if he regards this—is there someone who would like the floor, Mr. Speaker?

An hon. Member: Just ignore him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member would direct his eyes to the Chair, I would suggest that he continue his statement. I wanted to suggest a moment ago that the hon. member's statement, under the Standing Order, should be directed to the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Macquarrie: I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that it would be much easier for me to direct my statement to his statement had I seen it prior to the last minute and a half. I would say, sir, that the courtesy of this House surely would suggest, if not require, that spokesmen for opposition parties be apprised of documents of this kind before the last minute.

I would say to the right hon. Prime Minister that if he, in the face of a situation in Montreal which is crippling the mail service of this whole country and which is denying the people of Canada's largest city mail service week after week, can satisfy himself with such an innocuous document as he has designed to deliver to us tonight, his doctrine of participatory democracy has been left by the board long, long since.

I should like to know, sir, on this difficult day and yesterday when all these trials were upon us, why the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans)—who, surely to God, should have responsibility for these matters—has been silent. He did not present himself today to the Transport and Communications Committee at 9.30 and at 3.30. He did not present himself to this House today when he should have been available for questioning. I wonder why these people were not available for questions. I wonder how long the people of Canada should wait for mail service to be available for the people of Montreal and for the hundreds and thousands of Canadians whose mail service is dependent upon transit through Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, one of the distinguished and most literal members of the press gallery some days ago described the member for Hillsborough as being a Biblical character. Perhaps I am. Perhaps my appearance does that—

Mr. Drury: Jeremiah.

Mr. Macquarrie: —or perhaps I have the capacity for forecasting ills which others will not admit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: But I say to the Prime Minister, who with his usual calculated insouciance comes in here at the last moment, and to the Postmaster General, who with his studied and careful arrogance moves in at a later stage, that the people of Canada are wondering when their parcels—

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. I have to remind the hon. members that we are on Motions. The statement has been made, and I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member that the Standing Order requires that the comments be brief. I hope he will comply. I say very seriously that perhaps the hon. members might like to give some thought to bringing his comments to a close.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I have been in this Parliament for 13 years and it has not been my practice to detract from the statements of other members by jeering or interference. I would say, sir, with all respect—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that they should give the Chair an opportunity to hear the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Macquarrie: I was going to say, sir, that in the years I have been here I have never found it necessary to interject from a seated position against any observation made by any hon. member. I would say that in the face of a grave national emergency—the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) smiles here; he is a great smiler.

Mr. Nesbitt: He smirks.

Mr. Macquarrie: My friend says he smirks. When the people of Canada find it impossible to get their mail through the great distributing centre of Montreal, I say it is not a laughing matter. I would say, sir, that the measures which the Postmaster General threatened, then withdrew, indicate something less than a very appropriate or well-ordered minister of government. I would say, further, that when this government finds itself incapable of rendering to the people of Canada one of the most essential services, namely the delivery of mail to all the people of Canada, it should not be the object of smart aleck remarks by the Prime Minister and shrugs and smiles by the President of the Treasury Board.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the situation which has developed in Montreal is a national disaster.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am just wondering whether we are not going beyond the limits of the dignity of the House by permitting hon. members to attend who are not properly attired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Montreal Postal Dispute

Mr. Speaker: I realize it is St. Patrick's Day but I cannot accept the hon. member's dress.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the situation in Montreal with regard to the delivery of mail has developed into a national disaster. In Canada's largest city, a city containing 10 per cent of our population, for weeks parcel delivery has been at a virtual standstill. Although this disastrous situation has existed for several weeks, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) waited until 9.50 tonight before making the statement alluded to by my hon. friend for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). We had no opportunity to consider it until it was made. The statement says nothing. Why is there a crisis in Montreal? There is a crisis because the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) has ignored the advice of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), the advice of members of the opposition and the advice of the arbitrator appointed to look into the dispute between the Post Office and its employees. The fact that there is that dispute ought to have warned the government that the Post Office today and for some years past had lacked personnel who understand the simple fundamentals of labour-management relations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: What is the dispute about? Very simply, it hinges around men who have worked anywhere from five years to 20 years delivering mail who feel that as a result of the decision of the Postmaster General to award, not one contract but five different contracts they will lose the jobs they have held for many years. Most of these men are too old to find new jobs. That, of course, is not something which would concern the Prime Minister. He has never had to worry about a job; neither has his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). This is something that concerns others, Mr. Speaker, and what has happened has resulted from the Postmaster General's lack of understanding and his lack of compassion for those who will lose their jobs.

What does the Prime Minister propose in his statement? In this serious situation he proposes that Mr. Carl Goldenberg be appointed a commissioner to inquire into the problem. Mr. Goldenberg is an expert and has brought to a successful conclusion a number of important tasks of a similar nature to which he has been assigned in years gone by. We all hope he will be as successful in settling this dispute as amicably and quickly as he has settled others in the past, and we wish him well. I submit that if the Prime Minister were concerned about settling the dispute between the Post Office Department and its employees justly and fairly, instead of appointing Mr. Goldenberg as arbitrator he would have asked for and received the resignation of the Postmaster General.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, we see, in the light of the present situation, that the postal service is badly organized.

However, the government has taken action to meet a difficult situation. I think that was the right thing to do under the circumsances and it would be untimely to be critical of the postal service. We should rather wait for the investigator's findings.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 5051) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman (page 5065).

Mr. Speaker: It being after 9.45 o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 60(6), to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put the question on the subamendment now before the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said subamendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the subamendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Saltsman) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the subamendment lost.

At 10.35 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

16 March 1970.

REQUIREMENTS FOR ICEBREAKING TANKER "MANHATTAN" FOR PROPOSED VOYAGE PROCEEDING INTO THE PARRY CHANNEL IN APRIL 1970

1. The ship to be drydocked for full condition survey by a steamship inspector; or, in lieu thereof, a detailed report to be produced of such a survey made since the ship was last in ice by a surveyor of Lloyd's Register of Shipping or of the American Bureau of Shipping, showing the hull, propellers and rudders to be in satisfactory condition and the ship to be still in class.

HULL:

2. Ship to be in possession of valid Safety of Life at Sea and Load Line Convention Certificates.

3. Hull of ship to be subdivided to give a one-compartment standard of subdivision.

4. Hull to be reinforced for operation in ice and be fitted with an icebreaking bow and ice belt.

5. Rudders to be strengthened and protected with ice horns for operation in ice.

6. Still water bending stress in hull not to exceed four tons per square inch for all conditions of operation.

7. Stress level of hull when breaking ice not to exceed the vessel's design stress.

8. Quantity of fuel oil carried to be restricted to the bunkers required for the voyage of the ship and the supporting icebreaker.

9. Where cargo tanks are used for the carriage of bunker fuel, only center-line tanks remote from the ship's side to be used.

MACHINERY:

10. The ship to have sufficient propulsion power to operate in heavy ice conditions which shall in any case not be less than recommended by the latest published rules of Lloyd's Register of Shipping or the American Bureau of Shipping for a vessel of its size classed for operation in ice. The astern power to be at least 35 per cent of the ahead power and be capable of being applied continuously for at least 20 minutes without overheating of the astern turbine.

11. At least two boilers to be available for propulsion which are to be well secured to the ship's structure and provided with collision chocks of adequate strength to prevent movement of the boilers when the ship is brought to a stop from full power by ice. The steam pipes between the boilers and machinery to be supported in such a way that heavy shock and vibration may be absorbed without damage to the piping or machinery.

12. Main machinery and essential auxiliary machinery to comply with the highest requirements of the latest published rules of Lloyd's Register of Shipping or the American Bureau of Shipping and shall be properly secured to withstand shock when navigating in heavy ice.

13. Means to be provided for disconnecting either of the rudders in the event that one becomes damaged or inoperable and at least two independent sources of power to be available for the steering gear.

14. The sea intakes and condenser inlets to be provided with steam or air lines, or other adequate means for removing any ice that may collect therein.

15. A marked gate valve shall be fitted to the deck above each tank in which oil is carried. This valve to be in an accessible place so that a hose or pipe may be readily connected, and to have a diameter of at least six inches and may be fitted with a readily removable blank flange.

NAVIGATION EQUIPMENT AND PERSONNEL:

16. A complete set of up-to-date charts to be provided including charts of the largest scale available for the intended area of operation together with up-to-date pilot books, tide tables, lists of lights and sound signals, radio aids to marine navigation and similar nautical publications and associated ancillary equipment.

17. The ship to be equipped with a gyro compass installation consisting of main and emergency gyros with steering repeaters at all steering positions and bearing repeaters suitably located and equipped, both gyros being suitable for high latitude operation and provided with spares and maintenance and operating manuals.

18. A marine radar installation to be provided consisting of at least two radars which meet performance standards of the Safety of Life at Sea Convention 1960 and are suitable for operating under severe weather conditions. Short range high definition capability and long range navigational capability of 45 miles or more to be provided. Spares and maintenance and operating manuals to be provided with each radar set.

19. An echo sounder installation to be provided consisting of two echo sounders each having shallow and deep sounding capability. Both sets to be provided with spares and maintenance and operating manuals.

20. One Loran AC receiver to be provided with associated lattice charts or rate tables together with spares and maintenance and operating manuals.

21. Rudder, engine revolution and rate-of-turn indicators to be provided at the conning position.

22. In addition to the normal radio communications facilities meeting international requirements and standards, VHF bridge to bridge radio telephone capability in the maritime mobile band to be provided.

23. Auto pilot equipment, if used under difficult navigation conditions, to be capable of immediate manual override and a crew member assigned to steering duties to be at the steering position.

24. An officer experienced in navigating in ice to be on board; and the crew to include personnel competent to maintain the navigation aids and equipment.

FINANCE

AMALGAMATION AGREEMENT BETWEEN PROVINCIAL BANK OF CANADA AND LA BANQUE POPULAIRE

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that I have approved the making of an amalgamation agreement between the Provincial Bank of Canada and La Banque Populaire for submission to their shareholders as provided by sections 100, 101 and 102 of the Bank Act. Details of the agreement will be sent to the shareholders of both these banks in the near future. In giving my approval to the making of this agreement, I have satisfied myself that the public interest will be served in this amalgamation.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE ABANDONMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in the following case of urgent and pressing necessity.

Under the National Transportation Act the Canadian National Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway systems continue their applications to the Canadian Transport Commission for orders to discontinue or reduce passenger train service, in the case of the Canadian National, one-fifth of its passenger service and in the case of the Canadian Pacific, all of its passenger trains. The most recent in this series of which I have notice is an application by the CNR to discontinue passenger service on the Toronto-Palmerston, Palmerston-Owen Sound, Palmerston-Southampton, Stratford-Kincardine, Stratford-Goderich and Guelph-Toronto commuter services, and by the CPR from Toronto to Owen Sound.

The commission has undertaken general and specific research studies to enable it to implement the national transportation policy, and the commission has informed this House that these studies are not yet completed. It is therefore premature of the commission to grant orders to discontinue or reduce passenger train services on the basis of local ad hoc studies without informed references to the national transportation policy.

The commission should delay its discontinuance orders for the maximum one-year period allowable under section 314(7) of the Railway Act until such time as its relevant research studies now under way are completed. This delay would also permit the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to consider the propriety of the manner in which the commission is implementing the national transportation policy.

Therefore, if the House gives unanimous consent, I intend to move that whenever hereafter the Canadian Transport Commission determines that the operation of an uneconomic passenger train service or part thereof should be discontinued, this House is of the opinion the Commission should by order fix a discontinuance date one year from the date of the order; and that the whole question of passenger train service should be re-examined before the Committee on Transport and Communications in order that all affected bodies such as labour and municipal and provincial governments may have an opportunity to present their views on this very important national problem.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. It cannot be put to the House unless there is unanimous agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put at this time.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS

CHANGE OF NAME

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-198 entitled "An Act to change the name of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965, to the Canadian Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1965".

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING ACT

ELIGIBILITY OF WOMEN FOR ALLOWANCES ON BASIS OF WORK IN HOME

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-199, to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to provide that any woman who has been engaged in the domestic services of her home shall under certain conditions be deemed to have been a member of the labour force and shall be eligible for acceptance under the Act on the same basis as a man, thus making it possible for her to secure living allowance while training and in this way providing additional womanpower services for Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that Your Honour had passed on from motions so quickly, and there is an important matter to which I want to direct the attention of the House.

This morning the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion issued an important press release concerning a major re-organization of his department. In our view, the minister might at least have taken advantage of the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), unacceptable though that procedure would have been, to bring this press release officially to the attention of the House. This was an important statement concerning reorganization of the department and the minister's action this morning demonstrates once again the contempt in which he and the government hold Parliament. Surely the House is entitled to receive this information by way of a statement or at least to be informed of it under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) rather than having to learn of it through the back door in the form of secondhand information from the press.

I hope the minister will at least have the good grace to follow the example set by the Minister of Transport a few days ago in similar circumstances and immediately arrange for a meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Development in order that hon. members may have an opportunity to ask questions and examine in detail this major statement of policy which the hon. gentleman did not have the courtesy to make in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

CRIMINAL CODE

THEFT—INDICTABLE OFFENCE—CHANGE IN VALUE OF PROPERTY STOLEN

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North) moved the first reading of Bill S-21 (from the Senate), to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

POSITIONS AND SALARY, J. WATSON MACNAUGHT

Question No. 183—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What was the annual salary of J. Watson MacNaught, former Chairman of the Dominion Coal Board?

2. When did Mr. MacNaught resign as Chairman of the Dominion Coal Board?

3. When was Mr. MacNaught appointed as Special Advisor to the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

4. What is Mr. MacNaught's present annual salary?

5. What are Mr. MacNaught's responsibilities and specific functions as special advisor?

6. Was there a public service competition for this position, and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Salary range $19,000 to $23,500 a year.

2. Mr. MacNaught's appointment as Chairman of the Dominion Coal Board was terminated on July 17, 1969.

3. His appointment to Energy, Mines and Resources took effect on July 18, 1969.

4. The salary now being paid to the Hon. J. Watson MacNaught is the same as that paid to him as Chairman of the Dominion Coal Board. This salary is within the range from $19,000 to $23,500 a year.

5. Mr. MacNaught is adviser to the Deputy Minister on coal during the transition period immediately following changes in the organizational structure of Dominion Coal Board. In this capacity, he has been asked to review, in detail, federal government involvement with the coal industry, past and present, with a view to developing an effective federal course of action for the future.

6. No. This was an appointment to the exempt staff rather than a public service appointment. It was desired to utilize immediately the special knowledge and understanding of coal problems and of the Board's role which Mr. MacNaught gained as Chairman. He is being paid from the Departmental administrative budget.

RESEARCH, DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Question No. 614—Mr. Comeau:

1. In 1968-69 and 1969-70, what were the estimated sums spent on research in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and what was the purpose of each research project?

2. How much money was actually expended according to Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Expenditures made by the Department in fiscal year 1968-69 and estimates of the Department for fiscal year 1969-70 for research and development in engineering and natural sciences only are as follows:

Questions

	1968-69 Expenditures[1]	1969-70 Estimates[2]
	$ thousands
(1) Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act (IRDIA) General incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada.	19,592	34,400
(2) Program for the advancement of Industrial Technology (PAIT) To advance the technological capability of Canadian manufacturing industry by supporting selected civil (non defence) development projects.	4,304	11,000
(3) Defence Industry Productivity Program (DIP) To develop and sustain the technological capability of Canadian defence industry for the purpose of defence export sales or civil export sales arising from that capability by supporting selected development programs.	21,225	24,000
(4) Industrial Research Institutes Grants to universities to assist in establishing and maintaining industrial research institutes.	146	450

[1] Figures provided by the Comptrollers Branch.

[2] Figures published in Main Estimates for 1969-70.

In addition, the following sums were provided in the estimates for the National Design Council Scholarships and Grants program. These provisions were for design study, design promotion and design research. 1968-69, $220,000; 1969-70, $127,000.

Expenditures for the fiscal years were as follows: 1968-69, $137,247; 1969-70, $114,588 (To January 15, 1970).

In so far as the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is concerned: 2. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics does not have actual expenditures on research for 1968-69 and 1969-70. A survey requesting information on actual expenditures for 1968-69 and estimates for 1969-70 on research in the natural and engineering sciences is in process.

MUD RIVER, ONTARIO—INVESTIGATION INTO ICE CONDITIONS

Question No. 817—Mr. Peters:

1. Did the RCMP receive any correspondence from a Canadian citizen in Northern Ontario regarding a request made to him by the United States Army Corps of Engineers to report on local ice conditions in the Mud River area and, if so (a) did the RCMP undertake an investigation into the above area (b) what are the results of the investigation?

2. Is it common practice for the United States Army to approach a Canadian citizen directly for information instead of going through the Canadian Government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes; (a) No. The matter was referred to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; (b) In a statement made in the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on February 24, 1970 the background to the requests made to Canadian citizens by the Corps of Engineers to report physical data on ice and weather conditions in the Canadian part of the Great Lakes Basin was explained. It was stated that in informal working level discussions about three years ago, the United States Army Corps of Engineers had sought assistance from scientific officers of the Meteorological Branch of the Department of Transport in carrying out a survey designed to provide information for research on the effects of ice formation and ice decay on navigation in the Great Lakes. It was believed that the information to be obtained would be valuable to Canada, and it was suggested that Canadian observers living around the Lakes might be hired to gather data. It was also indicated that the Corps of Engineers requested Ontario Provincial Police assistance in obtaining names of observers and that these observers were contracted on a personal basis by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. It was noted that the Corps' data collection program on the Canadian portion of the lakes ended in November, 1969 and that the Corps now has no Canadian observers under contract.

It also should be noted that all the information from the activity has been made available to the International Great Lakes Study Group, an informal body consisting of representatives of the governments and universities in Canada and the United States. One result of the Corps' investigation has been the publication by the Corps of a Great Lakes Ice Atlas which was presented to the 11th Meeting of the Pan-American Consultation on Cartography.

2. No.

DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—RETENTION OF CONSULTANTS

Question No. 897—Mr. Coates:

1. How many consultants not associated with the Public Service of Canada have been retained by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion since its establishment?

2. What are the names of the firms or individuals retained, what was the reason in each instance for retaining the service and what was the cost in each instance where a firm was involved and what was the fee and expense where an individual or individuals were involved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. 39.

LANGUAGE TRAINING SCHOOLS

Question No. 951—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. How much did the Canadian Government spend on the Language Training Schools for the years 1965-66-67-68-69?

2. How many students took part in these courses?

3. How many were civil servants and how many were Members of Parliament?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The amounts spent on language training in schools operated by the Public Service Commission in each fiscal year were: 1965-66, $753,000; 1966-67, $2,101,417; 1967-68, $3,939,497; 1968-69, $4,142,976.

Amounts spent by the Department of Public Works: 1965-66, $77,768; 1966-67, $111,668; 1967-68, $656,795; 1968-69, $2,007,813.

2. The number of students enrolled in Public Service Commission schools in each academic year was: 1965-66, 2,793; 1966-67, 3,188; 1967-68, 5,642; 1968-69, 4,525.

N.B. There were a number of students, in each academic year since 1966-67, who were enrolled in a previous year's course.

3. The records of the Public Service Commission indicate that 25 Members of Parliament were enrolled in its schools during the period 1965-69. With very few exceptions, the balance of the student population was made up of public servants, including officials of Crown Corporations, members of the Armed Forces and R.C.M.P., and officials of other Canadian Government institutions and agencies.

GUIDELINES RESPECTING NATIONAL PARK RESIDENTS

Question No. 1,036—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Are the guidelines established with respect to permanent residents in areas being taken over for the purpose of establishment of our National Parks and, if so, what are they?

2. Are the guidelines established with respect to summer residents in areas being taken over for the purpose of establishment of our National Parks and, if so, what are they?

3. Is a policy of extending life occupancy to existing owners of private homes being followed and, if not (a) for what reason (b) what is the policy with respect to permanent residents, and to owners of summer residences?

4. Is the creation of "enclaves" within Park Boundaries permitted for such purposes as preserving long established and thriving fishing communities and (a) if so, is this possible under present policies covering zoning (b) if not, for what reason?

5. What policies are presently in effect with respect to churches, cemeteries, schools and other non-private institutions?

6. What policies are presently in effect with respect to small private industry such as boat yards for the construction of inshore fishing boats?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1 and 2. The National Parks Policy tabled in the House of Commons in 1964 provides that the province should obtain the land for proposed parks and turn it over to the Federal Government free from all encumbrances. In the event that permanent or summer residences exist, therefore, the province acquires these before the park is established.

3. (a) No, but exceptions in extraordinary circumstances have been made. Life occupancy provides a special privilege for the persons concerned and must be strictly controlled. (b) Permanent residents are not normally permitted in National Parks. However, size and other special factors are considered in reaching a decision if, for example, a person is required to serve the National Park or Park services. In acquiring lands for National Parks, the policy, in effect for some years, is not to grant life occupancy privileges with respect to summer residences. All existing private summer homes will be acquired in time.

4. Under present policy, enclaves are not permitted within park boundaries. Commercial operations which have no connection with a national park have no purpose in a national park. Such a resource harvest is in conflict with park uses. In larger parks visitor service centres must be provided. In some cases, subject to appropriate zoning agreements, these can function as enclaves.

5. When a national park is created, the province usually acquires public institutions as a matter of equity. The people who used these facilities have moved and the funds provided permit them to re-establish elsewhere. Cemeteries, of course, are a special category.

6. Present policy states that private industry for purposes not directly related to national parks (i.e. boat yards for the construction of inshore fishing boats) will not be permitted within park boundaries.

AUTOMOBILE SAFETY—EXPERIMENTAL VEHICLE

Question No. 1,114—Mr. Mather:

1. Is consideration being given to constructing a prototype safety automobile to reduce crash dangers?

2. Is consideration being given to co-operating with the United States' Department of Transport in the latter's safe-car construction project?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. No.

MANAGEMENT OF OTTAWA STATION

Question No. 1,124—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Does the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company manage the Ottawa Station and, if so (a) who are the members of the company's executive (b) in what year was the company established?

2. If the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company does not manage the Ottawa Station, who is responsible for its management?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advise as follows: 1.

There is no such company as the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company.

2. The Ottawa Station is administered by Canadian National Railways under a "Joint Facility" agreement between Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway, entered into October 4, 1967.

SOCIAL WORK TRAINING GRANTS

Question No. 1,130—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money has been allocated under the welfare training grants to help pay for the education of people desiring to improve their qualifications in the field of social work?

2. How many people are now at recognized professional schools under the provisions of these grants?

3. What are the amounts of the bursaries provided?

4. Has any money been allocated for research projects in the field of social service?

5. Have any plans been developed for research into appropriate use of sub-professional staff in the field of social welfare?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. During the fiscal year 1969-70, a total of $261,700 has been expended in direct support programs and programs shared with the provinces toward education in the field of social work.

2. 148.

3. Bursaries shared with the provinces, approximately $2,000 each*; Direct support scholarships, $2,500 each; Direct support fellowships, $4,000 each.

*Amounts determined by the provinces.

4. During the fiscal year 1969-70, an amount of $500,000 has been allocated for research in the field of social welfare. An amount of $300,000 was available during the current fiscal year for research and demonstration activity in the welfare aspects of mental retardation.

5. The Children's Aid Society of Vancouver is conducting a research study in the use of non-professional personnel and, in particular, case aides. Other research or demonstration activities in this general field are in a developmental stage.

CYCLAMATE BAN—COST TO FOOD AND BEVERAGE INDUSTRIES

Question No. 1,143—Mr. Southam:

1. Based on the government's decision last fall to bar cyclamates in Canada following the U.S.A. action, has a study been made to assess the cost of this order on the food and beverage industry in Canada?

2. Has any consideration been given to some form of compensation for losses incurred in these industries as a result of this decision?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No study has been made to assess the losses suffered by the food and beverage industries in Canada following removal of cyclamates from food products.

2. No consideration has been given for the compensation of losses incurred by these industries in view of the fact that the cyclamates were removed from foods to protect the health of Canadians.

AIR CANADA SHAREHOLDING IN AIR JAMAICA

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Godin:

1. Does Air Canada hold shares in Air Jamaica, and, if so, what is their total value?

2. Has Air Canada transferred any planes to Air Jamaica, and, if so, (a) how many (b) what model (c) at what price?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Air Canada holds shares in Air Jamaica and their total value is $8,408,000.

2. (a) One; (b) Douglas Model DC-8-61; (c) The actual price is not a matter Air Canada feels free to disclose without the consent of Air Jamaica.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION —EXPROPRIATION PROCEDURES

Question No. 1,188—Mr. Fortin:

1. What is the status of the expropriation procedures undertaken by Cape Breton Development Corporation on March 30, 1968?

2. For what reason has the expropriation not been settled to date?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1 and 2. The actual expropriation procedures have been completed but the determination of the compensation payable as a result of the expropriation has not yet been made, pending approval of appraisal data recently concluded.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What number of High School and University students were registered with Canada Manpower Offices for summer employment in the months of May, June, July and August for the years 1967, 1968 and 1969?

2. Of this number, how many were placed for employment and how many was the Department unable to place for employment in each of the above months for each of the above years?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned: 1. As stated in my answer to Question No. 631 on December 9, 1968, (Hansard p. 3647) statistics on the number of students registered with Canada Manpower Centres for summer employment for the years 1967 and 1968 were not compiled separately. As far as 1969 is concerned, the number of High School Students registered with Canada Manpower Centres is as follows: May, 34,462; June, 53,415; July, 43,891; August, 19,046.

Statistics for University Students have not been compiled separately. They are a part of the statistics on Post-Secondary Students which include, apart from universities, community colleges and technical institutions. The number of these Post-Secondary Students registered with Canada Manpower Centres for the year 1969 is as follows: May, 21,813; June, 11,919; July, 11,388; August, 4,003.

2. Again, as stated in my answer to Question No. 631, (Hansard p. 3647 December 9, 1968) statistics for 1967 and 1968 are not available. During the summer of 1969, statistics on the number of referrals and placements have been kept separately. The number of students the department was unable to place for employment cannot be determined completely, the reason being that a large number of students do not report to Canada Manpower Centres results of referrals. However, confirmed placements which have been reported to us during the months of May, June, July and August 1969, are as follows:

	High School Students	Post-Secondary Students
May	1,447	12,389
June	8,643	10,637
July	16,293	6,179
August	9,422	4,567

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—EMPLOYMENT ON CONTRACT BASIS

Question No. 1,199—Mr. Orlikow:

1. (a) How many individuals have been employed on a contract basis by the Department of Manpower and Immigration since the Department was established (b) what is the name and qualification of each person who has been employed under each individual contract since the Department was established (c) what has been the daily, weekly, monthly or annual salary for each person working under a contract for the Department (d) how much per diem did the Department of Manpower and Immigration pay for those individuals under contract while (i) in travel status (ii) at headquarters?

2. How many individuals are now working under contract for the Department of Manpower and Immigration and to what specific branch or branches in the Department are they assigned?

3. Could the work performed by individuals under contract be performed by the regular staff of the Department?

4. Are individuals employed under contract by the Department of Manpower and Immigration being hired through (a) Public Service Commission (b) Department of Manpower and Immigration?

5. What desirable qualifications are required for those positions and what are the criteria used in making the selection in each case?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) Twelve.

(b) Name	Qualification	(c) Annual Salary
Bissonnette, E.	Professional Consultant	$13,000
Bollen, J.	Training Specialist	19,000
Brooker, W. M. A.	Training Consultant	15,000

Fletcher, A.	Senior Technical Writer	14,500
Freisen, P. A.	Senior Technical Writer	16,800
McLean, C. (Miss)	Professional Consultant	15,000
Nault, C. (Mrs.)	Professional Consultant	10,000
Stevens, W. R.	Regional Training Manager	18,000
Thibodeau, G. H.	Regional Training Manager	18,000
Whitney, R. C.	Regional Training Manager	18,000
Zeitoun, L.	Professional Consultant	15,000

(d) (i) $22,187.62; (ii) Nil.

3. No.

4. (a) No; (b) Yes.

5. There were no desirable qualifications specified for these positions. The criterion used in making the selection in each case includes the following essential qualifications: a Bachelor's Degree in education, psychology, social work or business administration; five or more years experience in the field of staff training and development at a senior level; and the ability to manage, communicate and maintain effective interpersonal relations.

AIR CANADA—ADVERTISING EXPENSES

Question No. 1,219—Mr. Skoberg:

1. How much did Air Canada spend in the past fiscal year advertising Florida (a) on television (b) in the printed media?

2. How much did Air Canada spend in the past fiscal year advertising places in Canada (a) on television (b) in the printed media?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) and (b) $329,618.

2. (a) and (b) $3,179,101.

LEGAL OPINION, PHOSPHATE DETERGENT BAN

Question No. 1,244—Mrs. MacInnis:

Did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or his departmental officials request a legal opinion from the Justice Department regarding the ability of the Government of Canada to enforce a ban on phosphates and laundry detergents and, if so, what opinion was offered by the Department of Justice?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Any communication between the Department of Justice, and the Minister is, in the normal manner, privileged communication.

*FINANCE—CRITICISM OF WHITE PAPER

Question No. 1,265—Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many letters, telegrams and/or other communications criticizing or condemning the White Paper in whole or in part have been received by the Minister of Finance since the 1st of January, 1970?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker it is not possible to answer this question in a completely accurate way because of the problems of classification. Many letters state their general approval of the white paper but offer suggestions for changing one or more proposals. Some letters comment only on features of the tax system not dealt with in the white paper proposals. Coupons and form letters submitted as part of an organized campaign against particular proposals have not been enumerated. However, during the period January 1, 1970 to February 18 some 5,300 communications were received, of which approximately 3,000 would have been critical of the white paper, in whole or in part.

AIR CANADA—EMPLOYMENT OF STEWARDESSES

Question No. 1,268—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many stewardesses are employed by Air Canada?

2. How many of these stewardesses are based in (a) Halifax (b) Montreal (c) Toronto (d) Winnipeg (e) Calgary (f) Edmonton (g) Vancouver?

3. How many stewardesses are bilingual in English and French and, of these, how many have (a) English (b) French, as their mother tongue?

4. Is bilingualism in English and French a prerequisite for employment with Air Canada as a stewardess and, if so, when was this policy initiated?

5. (a) What happens to non-bilingual applicants for the position of stewardess (b) how many applicants have been turned down on language grounds during the past two years?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. 1,393. In addition, number of pursers employed, 211.

2.	Stewardesses	Pursers
(a)	nil	nil
(b)	640	108
(c)	493	81
(d)	136	nil
(e)	nil	nil
(f)	nil	nil
(g)	124	22

3. Number of bilingual (English-French) stewardesses, 762; (a) Number of flight attendants (stewardesses and pursers) not having French as mother tongue (English, German, Scandinavian, Spanish, etc.) 1,148; (b) Number of flight attendants (stewardesses and pursers) having French as mother tongue, 456. (All figures are as of January 31, 1970).

4. Bilingualism is not a prerequisite for employment by Air Canada as a stewardess, but the Company has an increasing requirement for both bilingual and multilingual flight attendants to satisfy its commercial objectives in serving passengers who speak both official languages of Canada and in serving passengers from other countries on the Air Canada international route structure. Because of this, Air Canada has, over the years, been increasing the proportion of multilingual and bilingual flight attendants. Of the four bases maintained for flight attendants, the Montreal base has for some years carried with it a requirement for total bilingual capability and, more recently, it has been the company objective to increase the proportion of bilingual staff available at the other three bases—Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver—in relation to the need existing at these points.

5. The qualifications for flight attendants are stringent, and for some time it has been the policy of the Company, if other qualifications are met, to give additional preferential ratings for bilingual capacity for the reasons indicated above. This has not meant exclusion of unilingual English-speaking applicants, but rather a strengthening of the rate of bilingual and multilingual intake. The Company has been fortunate in receiving applications from persons having bilingual capability from all parts of the country, so that its recruiting can be carried on on a wide national basis.

QUEBEC—CROP INSURANCE ACT

Question No. 1,286—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. On what date was the Crop Insurance Act implemented in Quebec?

2. Is it a joint plan and, if so (a) who are the partners (b) what percentage is each responsible for financially?

3. What percentage must each of the partners pay (a) for the administration of the said Act (b) for the compensation paid to the insured?

4. Since the implementation of the said Act, by year (a) how many Quebec farmers have joined this crop insurance plan (b) how many Quebec farmers have submitted claims and for what amounts (c) how many Quebec farmers have been compensated and in what amounts (d) what was the total amount invested by each of the partners (e) what were the total premium receipts?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The Crop Insurance Act has not been implemented in Quebec since the program established in that province does not meet all the conditions of the Act. Canada has shared costs on the authority of a Vote Title of the Quebec crop insurance program to assist the province in developing the program so that they may come under the Crop Insurance Act as soon as possible.

2. and 3. The crop insurance scheme operates with contributions from farmers and the two governments. Quebec administers the program with advice from farmers and from the Government of Canada. Administrative expenses are shared equally by the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada.

Farmers pay 50 per cent of insurance premiums levied, the government of Quebec pays 25 per cent and the Government of Canada pays 25 per cent.

The Government of Quebec is responsible for any monies required to pay indemnities that are in excess of all premiums collected.

4. (a) In 1968-69, 19,177 farmers purchased insurance; In 1969-70, 16,400 farmers purchased insurance. (b) The Quebec Crop Insurance Board has not reported the exact number of farmers who submitted claims. It is estimated approximately one-half of the farmers insured submitted claims. (c) The Quebec Crop Insurance Board has not reported the exact number of farmers paid for losses in 1968-69. The Board reports approximately $4,850,000 paid to farmers who bought insurance in 1968. Claims for the insurance year 1969-70 are now in the process of being paid therefore the number of farmers paid and the amount of payments have not been reported by the Quebec Crop Insurance Board.

(d) and (e)	1968-69	1969-70 (9 months)
Premium Receipts
Farmers	$1,062,592	$1,078,790
Quebec	531,296	539,395
Canada	531,296	539,395
	$2,125,184	$2,157,580
Administration
Quebec	$ 668,704	$ 433,338
Canada	668,704	433,338
	$1,337,408	$ 866,676

ATHABASCA CONSTITUENCY—PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. What new structures, and at what cost in each case, have been built by the Department of Public Works in the constituency of Athabasca within the past fiscal year?

Questions

2. What structures, and at what cost in each case, are contemplated for construction during the present fiscal year, within the constituency of Athabasca?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2.

Fiscal Year	Location	Structure	Cost
1968-69	Fort McMurray	Floating Wharf	$ 2,803.
	Kinuso	Post Office	Build-to-Lease basis
	Plamondon	Post Office	Build-to-Lease basis
1969-70	La Crete	Post Office	41,923.
	Nampa	Post Office	31,700.

LEVEL CROSSING TRAFFIC TIE-UPS

Question No. 1,313—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many complaints have been received by the Board of Transport Commissioners from each province in each of the past ten years in respect to train stoppages at level crossings which bring about traffic tie-ups?

2. Did the Board of Transport Commissioners investigate these complaints and, if the complaint was verified, what action did the Board of Transport Commissioners take?

3. Were any of the complaints followed by prosecutions in the Courts and, if so, (a) on what dates (b) at what locations (c) by whom were the prosecutions carried out (d) what were the results of the prosecutions?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advise as follows: 1. No statistical records of this type are maintained.

2. The Railway Transport Committee investigates any complaints received and undertakes remedial action with the railway concerned.

3. No statistical records of this type are maintained.

MANPOWER POLICY—CHANGE TO ASSIST POOR CANADIANS

Question No. 1,359—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider changing the Manpower Policy so that a large number of "poor" Canadians, who are able and anxious to work but are unemployed, under-employed or seasonally employed and lack the prerequisite education and job skills for secure employment, will be assisted?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Federal manpower programs are having a direct anti-poverty effect by facilitating the placement of workers in employment, providing training and vocational rehabilitation, information about job opportunities, and financial help for workers to explore these opportunities and relocate if necessary.

A basic function of the Department of Manpower and Immigration is to bring together workers and jobs. Canada Manpower Counsellors are making about 700,000 placements in employment annually. A great many of the persons placed are poor, or would have sunk below poverty levels had jobs not been found for them.

The Canada Manpower Training Program significantly helps poor workers. The proportion of the poor among those who apply for and receive Occupational Training for Adults training is more than twice as high as among the population at large. In 1968-69, for instance over $100,000,000 were spent on training poor people that year. It is expected that some $120,000,000 will be spent on the poor this year.

Training is also directed toward the relatively uneducated. Based on 1968-69 figures roughly 16.5 per cent of all O.T.A. trainees referred for full-time training have eight or less years of education in public institutions or in apprenticeship.

The program not only enhances the employability and earning power of its graduates but also directly attacks seasonal employment to which the poor are particularly vulnerable. This year roughly four times as many trainees are taking courses during the seasonally slack period January to March as took courses last June, July and August peak employment period.

The program's expenditures have been deliberately directed toward those geographic regions with the highest incidence of need as indicated by their unemployment and poverty rates. This factor is illustrated by the following table:

Region	O.T.A. Expenditures Per Labour Force Member 1968-69	Unemployment Rates 1968	Poverty Incidence* 1961
Atlantic	41.07	7.3	47.7
Quebec	29.59	6.5	30.8
Ontario	21.52	3.5	23.0
Prairie	19.62	3.0	31.2
Pacific	11.36	5.9	26.9
Canada	24.04	4.8	29.1

*Family heads and unattached individuals.

A survey of the 1968-69 O.T.A. trainees taken three months after they graduated showed that where only about 40 per cent had jobs when they entered training (and many of these were on the point of losing them) close to 80 per cent were employed after training. The earning power of the average graduate also rose by close to 20 per cent as a result of training.

The Canada Manpower Mobility program helps workers who are unemployed or underemployed and for whom there are no suitable jobs available locally. Many of these workers, particularly with large families are poor. The program says their complete cost of moving and provides an additional resettlement allowance based on family size which may exceed $1,000, and a housing allowance that will be $1,500 if the worker has to sell his old house and buy another in the new area. Expenditures in exploratory and relocation grants will rise from $4.2 million in fiscal 1968-69 to close to $6 million this current fiscal year.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration participates with the provinces in the administration of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act. The goals of this legislation have broadened from the rehabilitation of the physically and mentally disabled to include the socially and psychologically disadvantaged. As a result, the federal share of a rapidly expanding expenditure has grown from some $1 million in 1966-67 to an estimated $5.3 million this year.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration provides strong support to the continuing initiatives in regional expansion. The Department of Manpower and Immigration is investing heavily in existing FRED programs, as shown by the following figures:

Interlake, $18.9 m., 10-year plan commencing April 1, 1967; Mactaquac, $2.3 m., 10-year plan commencing April 22, 1966; Northeast N.B., $25.4 m., 10-year plan commencing September 1966; Lower St. Lawrence, $92.0 m., 5-year plan commencing April 1, 1968; P.E.I., $6.5 m., 15-year plan commencing April 1, 1969.

By co-operating and integrating federal employment, trading, and mobility programs with Regional Economic Expansion programs that stimulate industrial expansion and social capital, Manpower measures obviously are going a long way towards easing the plight of the poor and ensuring a regionally more equitable division of income and employment opportunities throughout Canada.

BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE FERRY SERVICE—ADDITIONAL SHIPS

Question No. 1,368—Mr. MacLean:

1. What completion date was specified in the contracts for the construction of the two additional ships for the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service?

2. Is it expected that these ships will be completed on schedule?

3. Does the design of these ships include sleeping accommodation for crews and, if not, what would be (a) the estimated additional delay of completion (b) the estimated additional cost required to provide such sleeping accommodation for the crews of these ships?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. 15 April, 1971 and 1 May, 1971.

2. Yes.

3. Present design of the ships does not include sleeping accommodation for crews and such accommodation could not be incorporated without completely redesigning the ships. (a) Estimated delay 18/24 months. (b) Estimated additional cost $3.3 m.

(This answer has been prepared in co-operation with the Department of Supply and Services.)

MANPOWER RE-EDUCATION AND RETRAINING

Question No. 1,397—Mr. Chappell:

How much money has the federal government expended during each of the past two years for Manpower re-education and retraining (a) by institutional or school class instructions (b) by incentive to industry?

Questions

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration):

	1968-69	1969-70[1]
(a)	185,500,000	231,676,000
(b)	4,467,000	9,768,000

TAX EXEMPTION FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO CANADIAN COUNCIL FOR FAIR TAXATION

Question No. 1,425—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Canadian Council for Fair Taxation applied for an exemption from income taxes for contributions made to that organization as a charitable or educational organization?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): No.

NATIONAL REVENUE—INCOMES UNDER $3,000

Question No. 1,446—Mr. Chappell:

In 1967, how many taxpayers reported incomes under $3,000 and what percentage of this group were (a) students or housewives doing part-time work (b) seasonal employees?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1,665,920. No information is available concerning (a) and (b).

MANPOWER RETRAINING AND INSTRUCTION, MANICOUAGAN

Question No. 1,456—Mr. Blouin:

During the present fiscal year what amount was spent by the Department of Manpower and Immigration on re-training and general instruction courses for adults in the constituency of Manicouagan?

[Translation]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It is estimated that the Department of Manpower and Immigration, in fiscal year 1969-70, will spend approximately $4,073,244 on adult training in the constituency of Manicouagan, broken down as follows: Training Allowances, $2,669,307; Purchase of Training, $1,403,937.

HOURLY WAGE RATES, CANADIAN FORCES BASE, VALCARTIER

Question No. 1,458—Mr. Godin:

Is the government contemplating revision of the hourly wage rates currently paid to casual employees at the Canadian Forces Base, Valcartier and, if so, is it intended to increase these rates to make them comparable to those paid locally to workers in the same category?

[Mr. Chappell.]

Mr. David W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): No. Under the regime of collective bargaining which was introduced in the Public Service by the Public Service Staff Relations Act the government is paying the rates which were negotiated between the Treasury Board and the Bargaining Agent representing the members of the General Labour and Trades Group in the Quebec area. These same rates apply also to the casual employees at Valcartier. The collective agreement governing the terms and conditions of employment for this Group expired on 30 September, 1968, but continues in force by agreement of the two parties until a new contract is signed. The parties to the agreement are now in the process of bargaining a new collective agreement which will be effective 1 October, 1968. The government will pay any rate revisions, which may be agreed to, retroactively to that date.

*AGRICULTURE—VOLUME OF GRASS SEEDS

Question No. 1,459—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What is the volume and value of each of the several varieties of grass seeds in storage in Canada which will be suitable for seeding this Spring by prairie farmers?

2. What steps are being taken by the government to obtain necessary supplies of the various varieties of grass seed for said farmers?

3. From what countries has the government made arrangements to secure imports of such needed varieties of grass seed?

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is as follows: 1. There are statistics on the volume of grass seeds held by the main seed processing firms in Canada as at January 31, 1970. They are given on page 2 of the DBS daily bulletin for Thursday, March 5, 1970. We have no figures on the value of such seeds.

2. Government officers met with representatives from the Canadian Association of Seed Dealers in order to examine the importance of the western program and the condition of seed supplies. It has been estimated that they will be adequate to provide the necessary grass seeds for the acreage eligible for payments under the program for reducing wheat stocks.

3. None.

PENSION OF RETIRED CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION EMPLOYEE

Question No. 1,505—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. Has the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion received a letter from Mr. Pius Hennessey, Secretary of the Sydney Mines Pensioners Union, on behalf of Mr. Alfred Pendergast, a former employee of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, protesting the treatment of this gentleman in regard to the pre-retirement pension?

2. Has a complete investigation of this workman's case been undertaken by the Minister and, if so (a) what did this investigation consist of (b) what was the nature of the reply provided Mr. Hennessey (c) what consideration has been or will be given to Mr. Pendergast regarding pre-retirement compensation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, on March 9.

2. The Cape Breton Development Corporation, which is a Crown corporation, has been asked for a full report, and any appropriate resulting action will be communicated to Mr. Pendergast and others concerned.

COMPANIES AFFECTED BY BANNING OF CYCLAMATES

Question No. 1,506—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many companies were affected by the decision to ban cyclamates?

2. What was the total loss to companies with stocks containing cyclamates?

3. Has any compensation been paid to these companies?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Not available.

2. Not available.

3. No.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Question No. 221—Mr. Orlikow:

FOOD PRODUCTS FRAUD

Question No. 500—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. For the fiscal years 1966-67, 1967-68 and that part of 1968-69 which still come under the responsibility of the Food and Drug Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare, what firms or companies were charged with economic fraud in food and food products?

2. For that part of the fiscal year 1968-69 and the fiscal year 1969-70 up to November 14, 1969, what firms or companies have been charged with economic fraud in food and food products by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Return tabled.

MARITIME PROVINCES—EMPLOYEES RETIRING, REDUNDANT OR TRANSFERRED

Question No. 808—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Since August 1, 1969, how many employees of the Government of Canada in Prince Edward Island have (a) retired (b) been sent redundancy notices (c) transferred to other departments or locations?

2. How many from each of the Provinces of Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia?

3. For what reason or reasons were these diminutions in personnel carried out?

4. For the same period, how many prevailing wage rate employees were released from duty with departments of the Government of Canada in Prince Edward Island?

Return tabled.

THEFTS FROM POST OFFICE

Question No. 815—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What was the total number of thefts from the Canadian Post Office since June 25, 1968?

2. Where and when did these thefts occur?

3. What is the estimated value of items stolen?

4. What amount of compensation has been paid to Post Office patrons?

5. What claims for compensation are still outstanding?

6. Is consideration being given to providing greater security to the transportation of mail?

Return tabled.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—CLASSIFICATION OF FAMILIES

Question No. 1,164—Mr. Laprise:

What is the classification of families according to number of children based on family allowances paid in March of each year 1944-1949 and 1959-1969?

Return tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, even after one notes that questions 183 and 231 have been answered today, there are still 18 questions on the Order Paper that have been there since the first day of this session, nearly five months ago. It strikes me that all but one of them could be answered without too much trouble. I wonder whether we could expect the first day's questions to be cleared up very soon?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Some of the questions, No. 167 and following, require the investigation of the ownership, in whole or in part, of something like 800 corporations. Under the circumstances, I think it must be expected that there will be some delay in getting all the information.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, for the fifth time I would ask the House Leader when I can expect an answer to question 516, dated November 20. I am rapidly getting the impression that the government does not want to answer it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong. As an Easter gift we expect to be able to answer this question next week.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I have had question No. 328 on the Order Paper since October 30, 1969. It is not a difficult question to answer. All I am asking is that the government inform the House which cabinet ministers have offices in their constituencies that are being maintained at public expense. There is no reason for this question not having been answered.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, I will make the necessary inquiries and try to have the question answered as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 346 for production of papers is acceptable to the government, under the usual conditions for confidential papers and subject to approval by the governmental authorities concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 346 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN CORRESPONDENCE, NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 346—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Province of Newfoundland in relationship to a Regional Development Plan for Newfoundland.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 53, 54, 83, 232, 293, 299, 313 and 345?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

"MANHATTAN" PROJECT—DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND HUMBLE OIL COMPANY

Motion No. 53—Mr. Thomson:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Department of External Affairs and the Humble Oil Company and its partners in relation to the Manhattan project.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been no correspondence between the Department of External Affairs and the Humble Oil Company and its partners in relation to the Manhattan project. I therefore request that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why has there not been?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That reveals the story exactly.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No action again.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

"MANHATTAN" PROJECT—DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND U.S. GOVERNMENT

Motion No. 54—Mr. Thomson:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence between the Department of External Affairs and the United States Government in relation to the Manhattan project.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in this case there is correspondence. It is part of the confidential communications between governments and therefore I suggest should not be made public. In these circumstances I wonder whether the hon. member would withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

NCS FOUNDATION AND TRUST GENERAL DU CANADA

Motion No. 83—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the NCS Foundation and Trust General du Canada regarding its incorporation under the Canada Corporations Act.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable on the understanding that the production of the documents requested will be limited to copies of correspondence dealing with the actual process of incorporation of the NCS Foundation and its dissolution.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, that is not acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House—

Mr. Saltsman: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not acceptable. That would not be acceptable and would not provide adequate information.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE INFORMATION PROGRAM

Motion No. 232—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by W. R. Wright on departmental information programs undertaken for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wishes to inform the hon. member that the document referred to in this motion was commissioned as an internal study for departmental working purposes only. This study is confidential and therefore I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I think we should have some of these internal studies made public and I call for a vote.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CORRESPONDENCE, STUDIES AND REPORTS RESPECTING PHARMACEUTICALS

Motion No. 293—Mr. Roberts:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between members of the public and the Government of Canada and its departments and agents relating to (a) costs, prices and safety of pharmaceuticals; sales tax, tariffs and dumping duties applied to pharmaceuticals; and policy concerning pharmaceutical patents and trade marks (b) studies and reports of these subjects by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Royal Commission on Health Services and the House of Commons Special Committee on Drug Costs and Prices (c) Bill C-190, An Act to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act, in the Second Session, Twenty-Seventh Parliament (d) Bill C-102, An Act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act, and the Food and Drugs Act, in the First Session, Twenty-Eighth Parliament.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the correspondence called for in this motion was submitted to the government in the belief that it would not be published. Making it public now would inhibit written submissions to the government by private persons in future. I hope that the hon. member would consent to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question!

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

REPORTS AND SUBMISSIONS RESPECTING ANTI-COMBINES LEGISLATION

Motion No. 299—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all reports or submissions received by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs since January 1, 1969, regarding changes in Canada's anti-combines legislation.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable subject to the originators of such reports and submissions giving their prior consent.

Mr. Saltsman: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 299 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD USER CHARGES

Motion No. 313—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report on the decision of the National Film Board to impose film charges on local school boards, libraries, etc., as mentioned by the Secretary of State and reported in Hansard of December 17, 1969 at page 2,094.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in view of the government's decision to cancel the new rental charges for films, I understand that the hon. member wishes to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN STUDIES, NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 345—Mr. Marshall:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all studies made in preparation of a Regional Development Plan for the Province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the current preparation of a development plan is being done by federal and provincial officials without commissioned studies. In view of this, I wonder whether the hon. member would be willing to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Marshall: With deep regret, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that it be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

EXTRADITION OF HAROLD C. BANKS

Motion No. 290—Mr. Hees:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all papers, letters and other documents passed between the Governments of Canada and the United States from the 14th, May 1969, to the date of the return hereto relating to the extradition of Harold C. Banks.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on December 4 I placed on the Order Paper a request for production of correspondence between this government and the United States government dealing with the extradition of Hal Banks. This material should be readily available. I am sure the United States government would be agreeable to making it available to the government unless the government is trying to cover something up. I request that this material be produced immediately.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we would be quite happy if Your Honour wishes to call the question on this right away.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish the Chair to put the question?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hees) which was negatived on the following division:

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Later:]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to notice of motion No. 290. I raise this matter so that there will be no misunderstanding. The reason for not producing the documents asked for is the traditional one that it is not customary to reveal inter-governmental exchanges of this nature.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it permissible for anyone to rise and reflect on a vote that has already been taken?

An hon. Member: No, it is not.

Mr. Sharp: I am not reflecting.

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is well taken. Of course the Chair has no way of knowing what point will be raised when an hon. member rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister just tries to get away with it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Alleged Inadequacy of Answer to Question

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—ADEQUACY OF ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 1,265

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the purported answer to question No. 1265 which asked how many letters, telegrams and/or other communications criticizing or condemning the white paper in whole or in part have been received by the Minister of Finance since January 1, 1970. I asked a similar question of the Prime Minister and the answer quite properly applied up to the date the reply was filed in Parliament. However, the purported answer given this afternoon is a masterpiece of selective non-information and misinformation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am restricting my words so that there is no misunderstanding. The answer states in part:

> Coupons and form letters submitted as part of an organized campaign against particular proposals have not been enumerated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the widespread applause from the Liberal party indicates it is particeps criminis to what has taken place.

Mr. Hees: This is Information Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask that this question be put back on the Order Paper and that it be given consideration. This House cannot be treated with contempt. As a matter of fact, even though the government may not wish to divulge the information I am told that its officials have received 60,000 communications of condemnation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, whoever told the right hon. gentleman that is grossly misinformed.

Mr. Hees: Give us the figures, then.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Give us the figures.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Give us the figures so that we may know the facts.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Coates: How does the minister know the officials are misinformed?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman will ask his question today and ask for the total number of such objections which have been received up until today, I will be pleased to give the information to him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that answer in no way meets the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: The right hon. gentleman is confused with facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question included the words "or other communications", and I submit no government has the right to select that portion of any information that it believes will be beneficial to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman obviously not only wants to write the questions; he wishes to write the answers too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to write the answer; I want the right answer.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I will go further; I will send the coupons over to my right hon. friend so that he can send them back to his friends.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the coupons. The minister can use them for whatever purpose he has in mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: The minister just cannot think of a smart reply.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. Earlier this afternoon, when the House was provided with an answer to question No. 1265 a Liberal member on my right indicated that his office had received a greater number of objections than the answer indicated.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—REFERENCE TO COURT FOR RULING ON VALIDITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister which arises from a prediction made by a notable legal authority in the other place that the coercive features of the new wheat acreage reduction program can be challenged in the courts as being beyond the scope of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Is it the intention of the government to refer this matter immediately to the Supreme Court for a decision in order to clarify the status of this government proposal so that the farmers of western Canada in particular will know where they stand?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not made aware of this information until this moment. I will look at it. If it merits study, I will study it. In the meantime I suggest that farmers should not renounce their hopes in this regard.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to take it from the Prime Minister's answer that the government has not considered this legal question?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member cannot take that meaning. If we were to consider a question we obviously would consider its legal implications, but we cannot consider in advance hypothetical opinions which have come from an as yet unknown source.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Were the minister and his legal advisers requested to give an opinion as to legality of the procedures proposed in dealing with the reduction of wheat acreage?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding we were consulted, yes.

Mr. Forrestall: There we see the right hand not knowing what the left is doing.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR TRANSPORT

ROUTES GRANTED TO TRANSAIR—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF DECISION—PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to grant rights to certain air routes to TransAir while at the same time refusing to allow public hearings. Since many Canadians are disturbed about granting these rights to a company, the leading two principals of which were formerly associated with the chairman of the commission, one as his executive assistant and the other as a leading bagman for the Liberal party—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please ask the question?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I ask the minister if he would be prepared to delay the implementation of this decision until public hearings can be held at which those interested parties who have asked to be heard can be given an opportunity to place their case before the commission?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): In so far as the preamble is concerned, I think I can ignore it. In terms of the substance of the question, I do not believe that the Minister of Transport has the authority to delay the decision in the manner that has been requested by the hon. member. I will be glad to look into it to see whether that is the case. I am reasonably certain I have no such authority.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact the minister claims to have no authority and in view of the fact that this is a quasi-judicial board and it is not only important that justice be done but that it appear to be done, I ask the minister if he would be prepared to have a judicial investigation to assure the Canadian people there was neither favouritism nor patronage in the granting of these routes without a public hearing?

Mr. Jamieson: I can only say that I will take the question as notice. The commission is a duly constituted authority. As far as I know and on the evidence that I have seen, they have performed in precisely the proper manner. There was nothing omitted from the procedures they were required to do. I will take the question as notice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the minister's statement that they did not omit to do anything which they should have done, I ask the minister why public hearings were refused, despite the fact that a number of persons, including the government of Ontario, requested hearings and were informed they would be allowed to intervene and would be heard?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I think that question should more properly be directed to the CTC. I understand there are no requirements in cases such as this to hold public hearings. The only information that I have obtained, in seeking to get answers for hon. members who asked questions earlier, is that notices of the applications were published in the areas concerned and that the matter has been public knowledge for better than a year. In view of the decision, the CTC felt they had discharged their obligations in this regard. With Your Honour's indulgence, I might also refer to the fact the judgment in the case requires that within the first year of operation of any new service, a public hearing be held to determine whether it is working out satisfactorily.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I wonder if I might ask the minister a supplementary question. What is important is the ability of people to travel efficiently from one point to another. Therefore I ask the minister whether he can give any assurance that Air Canada will not reduce its services? After all, that is what is important.

Mr. Jamieson: As much as hon. members like to think otherwise, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport does not set the schedules for Air Canada. They are entirely free to do that within their own framework. As I do on all such occasions, I can only undertake to pass the statement on to Air Canada.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In view of the fact that the CTC did not hold public hearings with regard to this application, will the minister give consideration to reviewing the legislation to see whether an amendment is required which would instruct the CTC to hold public hearings when representations are made?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. In fact, the act is under some review at the present time.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

POLICY RESPECTING RECOGNITION OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO CERTAIN PROGRAMS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

In view of the fact that the federal government has officially announced through one of its ministers that no money whatsoever will be paid to Quebec for regional development without a prior agreement between the two governments tending to determine the source of the funds, can the Prime Minister inform the House if this is an official policy and, if so, if he intends making an early statement in the House to that effect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without going into the details of the matter, I may say that on the whole the answer to the first part of the question is yes, but I must add that this policy does not apply only to Quebec and the federal government intends to apply it to all the provinces. We are firmly decided to make sure that the taxpayers of all provinces will know what part of their federal taxes is effectively spent in their province for projects in which the federal taxpayer is taking part through the payment of taxes.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since the official policy, which has just been stated by the Prime Minister, implies agreements between the federal and provincial governments, can he tell us whether he expects that intergovernmental meetings will be held to determine whether the provincial governments accept that policy and are ready to co-operate with the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course, it will be a contract agreement, to be negotiated between the federal government and the governments of the provinces concerned. There will be consultation to the extent that the contract will be submitted to them, but once again I tell the House that we will not yield on that principle, because we feel it is one of justice and democracy.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a last supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Following the statement made recently in Quebec by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, has the Quebec government made a protest to the federal government on that matter?

Mr. Trudeau: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, no such protest has been made and, if I understand his signal correctly, I do not think that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has received any.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question to the Prime Minister?

Have any provinces other than Quebec entered into agreements in the past with the federal government providing for the installation of signs showing the contribution of the federal government to certain joint programs?

Mr. Trudeau: In the past, Mr. Speaker, several provinces have shown enough honesty and decency to acknowledge the share paid by the federal government. Others however have not. We intend to make our contribution known in future.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Will he follow the same pattern to deal with the question of the $200 million which have been collected in the province of Quebec through the so-called social development tax of 2 per cent?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we should be very happy if, when medicare becomes operative, taxpayers were told that half the cost of it is paid by the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: This series of supplementary questions should not turn into a lengthy discussion. I shall give the floor to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe who wants to ask a supplementary question as well as to the hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in connection with the answer he gave that no agreements have been signed as yet with the other provinces. Does the importance that the Prime Minister seems to give to such publicity depend on the coming provincial elections so as to help—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

TARIFF TREATMENT ACCORDED TO MICHELIN RUBBER COMPANY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Would the hon. gentleman take the first opportunity on motions to explain to the House why it is that at a time of considerable lay-offs in the Canadian automotive tire industry his department has granted to the Michelin Rubber Company of France the right to bring into Canada duty-free during the next few years an unlimited quantity of automobile and truck tires for sale in competition with Canadian products, thereby greatly worsening the employment situation in an industry already hard hit?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I should like to take the question as notice so that I may make sure of the details. However, the decision with respect to Michelin establishing a plant in one of the less-developed areas of Canada was one we felt should be supported at that particular time as part of the effort to attract industry into such areas. But I will look further into the particular advantages which were given.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is it part of the government's policy to fight inflation by increasing unemployment in Canada and transferring jobs to Frenchmen in France?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR TRANSPORT

IMPOSITION OF SURCHARGE BY SPANISH GOVERNMENT ON CANADIAN FLIGHTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Some three weeks ago I asked the hon. gentleman a question about the action of the Spanish government in imposing surcharges on flight bookings through Wardair Limited. Is the minister now in a position to give an answer?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The answer is rather lengthy. I can say briefly that there is actually no bilateral arrangement between Canada and Spain. Operations are on the basis of what is known as an authorization and it is because of this, since only one airline is involved, that a second airline was refused permission to enter since it did not meet requirements.

Consequently, reciprocal action was apparently taken by the Spanish government. I would be glad to send the hon. member the full story, which I have here before me, if he wishes.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FUTURE OF FAIREY OF CANADA PLANT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since only ten or 11 days are left before Fairey Aviation is to be closed down, may I ask whether or not Bell is any nearer reaching an arrangement with Fairey of Canada to take over that plant?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Unfortunately, I cannot give any information today.

Mr. Forrestall: May I ask the minister whether he will find some opportunity before the Easter break to make a brief statement as to the status of this plant and the remaining four or five hundred employees?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): While negotiations are going on it is very difficult to make a public statement.

HIGHWAYS

EFFECT ON SAFETY OF TRUCK OPERATION ON SUNDAYS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I have a question which I should like to address to the Minister of Transport; I raised it last week and notice was taken of it at the time. Bearing in mind the application by a trucking company to the Canadian Transport Commission for authorization of unrestricted trucking operations on Sundays, and the adverse effect such trucking, if permitted, would have on traffic safety in Canada, would the minister look into this matter and make a report?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Having been raised as a very pious Presbyterian, I will be glad not only to make representations but to support those of the hon. member.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED RECOGNITION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Would the minister tell the House what progress has been accomplished in the negotiations concerning the recognition of Red China and, should this take place, whether Nationalist China will persist in its attitude towards Canada?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are continuing; there have been meetings in the last few weeks and I expect there will be others held soon. We shall be recognizing one government of China, and since both the Peking and the Taiwan regimes purport to be governments of China our recognition of Peking would naturally exclude that of the government now in Taiwan.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): In view of the advent of the Chinese new year, called the year of the dog, during which the Chinese, fearing omens of bad luck, are extremely reluctant to enter into commitments unless the stars in the zodiac are propitious, does the minister believe progress will be made on this issue?

Mr. Sharp: I am sorry, but I am not an astrologer.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister tell us what the situation will be in connection with the trade which has been built up between Canada and the Republic of China in Taiwan, bearing in mind the fact that communist China operates through state trading corporations? What arrangements are being made to preserve the right of Taiwan to continue this trade with Canada, or is that trade to be sacrificed?

Mr. Sharp: I do not want to become involved in a technical answer to that question. Perhaps I might remind the right hon. gentleman that when he was in office—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just answer the question.

Mr. Sharp: —when we entered into a trade agreement with China many years ago, notwithstanding the fact the mainland was separated from Taiwan, the mainland continued to get most-favoured-nation treatment. In other words, we have always considered China to be one. The question as to the treatment of Taiwan if we succeed in achieving diplomatic relations with Peking is one which I think would have to be looked at in the light of that general principle.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In connection with that general principle, is the minister not in a position to advise us whether the millions of dollars of trade we now conduct with Taiwan will be lost unless it is channelled through communist state corporations?

Mr. Sharp: I do not think there will be any interruption in trade between Canada and Taiwan.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Can the minister assure the House that Canada will press for the seating of mainland China in the United Nations and for the representation of that country on the Security Council?

Mr. Sharp: I have made it clear, both publicly and to the representatives of the People's Republic of China, that if we do succeed in establishing diplomatic relations between that régime and Canada we would then support their membership in the United Nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A quid pro quo.

Mr. Sharp: There seems to be some misunderstanding of the position. China is already a member of the United Nations and of the Security Council. The only question is: who speaks for China?

An hon. Member: Do you speak for China?

[Later:]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When does the government expect to be permitted to stop fawning at the feet of Red China and be allowed by that country to recognize it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

TORONTO—CLOSING OF DUNLOP PLANT—SUGGESTED TAKEOVER BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. On March 12, the hon. gentleman told my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that he was looking into a proposal under which the government, either alone or in conjunction with the province of Ontario, would take over and operate the Dunlop plant in Toronto, at least until such time as a feasibility study had been undertaken. I should now like to ask whether a decision has been made and, if so, what has been decided?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No decision has been made, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brewin: Has the minister communicated with the government of Ontario concerning this proposal and what result, if any, followed such communication?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There is continuing communication between my department and the government of Ontario. I can ask for the information, ascertain the situation, and maybe make a report to the House.

[Later:]

CLOSING OF DUNLOP PLANT—EFFECT ON YARMOUTH TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for South Western Nova has a supplementary to a previous question.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether he can tell the House if he has studied the impact of the closing of the Dunlop plant on other plants, and again I refer to the Cosmo-Imperial textile plant in Yarmouth?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire, as I said a few minutes ago, and report to the House what is happening.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—EFFECT OF SYNTHETIC FIBRE IMPORTS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which arises from his brief remarks in his budget address last week. Will the government take appropriate steps to abate the current importation into Canada of terylene and other synthetic fibres and textiles from low wage countries that are unfairly taking over a large share of our domestic market, thus causing much unemployment in our country?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the question now posed by the hon. member was asked yesterday by another hon. member, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, I believe.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

ACTION ON RAILWAY FREIGHT RATE INCREASES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he proposes to take any measures to prevent, defer or postpone the increase in transportation rates in the maritime provinces projected for early April, particularly since I understand an increase took place last autumn?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my answer in this case is somewhat the same as that with reference to the CTC, that it is within the railways' own competence to set rates. However, as I advised the House while I believe the Leader of the Opposition was out of the chamber, this is a matter that has been referred to the Prices and Incomes Commission who are investigating the justification for these rate increases.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister make certain that these increases are deferred long enough to allow the appropriate committee of the House to look into their effect? I ask this question knowing the unremitting war that the government is conducting against regional disparity; and I am sure that the Minister of Transport would not want to join with the Minister of Finance in offsetting whatever good work is being done by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to fight regional disparity.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, there may be a question in there somewhere, but I have not been able to find it.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport could advise whether the Canadian Transport Commission has consented to a further freight rate increase that is contemplated for the Atlantic region some time later this year, making three increases within one 12-month period? Could the minister also give an indication whether or not this whole matter could be deferred until he and perhaps officials of the CTC appear before the transportation committee?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously forgets—I am sure it is not a matter of ignorance—that the CTC does not in fact concur in rate setting or set rates for the railways. They are free, in the first instance, to set their own rates. There are certain appeal procedures, but beyond that there is very little that the government can do other than what we have already done, which is to refer the whole question, as I advised the Leader of the Opposition, to the Prices and Incomes Commission.

EFFECT OF RAILWAY FREIGHT RATE INCREASES ON REGIONAL EXPANSION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is there any communication or relationship between his department and the Department of Transport and/or the CTC with regard to how these freight rate increases might adversely affect attempts to promote regional expansion in many areas in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we are informed as are all other departments, and we try to determine what the effects will be.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree that the minister should not get his information from the newspapers, but I should like to ask him whether there is any branch in his department that has under active consideration the impact that the increased cost of transportation across Canada will have and how that might adversely affect attempts being made by the minister's department to upgrade conditions in some areas of Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Mr. Speaker, officials of the department have been asked to study the impact of the decisions taken by the different government agencies.

[English]

FINANCE

COLLAPSE OF COMMONWEALTH TRUST COMPANIES—LEGISLATION TO PROTECT DEPOSITORS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Does the federal government plan to take any action over the alleged fraudulent practices and ultimate collapse of the Commonwealth Trust group of companies in British Columbia?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I should like to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has kindly agreed to take the question as notice, might I be permitted to put my supplementary question which he can also take as notice. I should like to ask the minister whether he would consider future legislation that would protect Canadian depositors who invest in companies similar to this one?

FISHERIES

TYPE OF APPOINTMENT AS CHAIRMAN OF SALTFISH CORPORATION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of requests coming into the minister's office from fishermen and locals of the Newfoundland-Labrador Federation of Fishermen, as well as executive members, pleading that the minister not appoint a politician to head the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, can the minister assure the House and the people that an appointment of that type will not be made?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we are going to make the best possible appointment, and I would hate to exclude politicians from this category.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

POLICY RESPECTING RECOGNITION OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO CERTAIN PROGRAMS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

With reference to the questions asked earlier about the possibility of grants not being paid to the Quebec government for schools or joint programs, would the Prime Minister tell us if, when the time comes to pick a name for a school whose construction has been subsidized by the federal government, Quebec refuses to discuss—

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the question as put is hypothetical.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask an important question to clarify the situation.

Would the Prime Minister tell us if there is a Federal law containing some provisions whereby provinces would be compelled to disclose the Federal government's contribution to shared programs, or, whether he is considering an amendment to the law?

Mr. Speaker: Since the first part of the question invites the Prime Minister, or a minister, to express a legal opinion, I do not believe that the question is receivable.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am not asking the Prime Minister's opinion, I am asking if, under a federal law provinces are compelled to take such action?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the remark I addressed to the hon. member is clear. An hon. member may not ask a minister if a law applies to a certain situation. That is why I suggest that the question as asked is not receivable.

Mr. Asselin: I would like to reword it, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the new policy he announced at the beginning of the sitting will apply to all shared-cost programs, such as hospitalization insurance and medicare or only to the building of technical schools?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the present stage we are discussing primarily a project in which the two levels of government would share the financing. We are not now discussing the contracts I mentioned earlier today which do not apply to all fields in which the federal government participates. There are far too many for us to start identifying them all. They would be buildings, constructions where, effectively, federal participation should be acknowledged. I refer to the building of roads, buildings, etc. with federal funds.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Hon. Jean Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Have you any objection?

Mr. Asselin: No, I am not against that, but the point is to clear up the matter and to find out whether—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is obvious that a debate is beginning—

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I wish I could ask my question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. The exchange of views between the minister and the hon. member could well take place after the question period. I think now the hon. member is rising to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

When he made his statement in Quebec about this policy, did he mean that this policy would apply only to technical schools, because he was talking then about technical schools?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the talk was not about technical schools at all but about agreements.

TRANSPORT

SECOND VOYAGE OF "MANHATTAN"—COMPLIANCE WITH REGULATIONS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport in connection with the regulations which were filed yesterday as an appendix to Hansard. Has the Humble Oil Company been categorically advised that the Manhattan will not be allowed to come into Canadian Arctic waters until she has complied with these regulations?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the preamble I gave to the explanation yesterday is the same. We have said that in terms of any assistance we would give the ship these regulations would have to be complied with.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister or the government, to the minister's knowledge, advised the Humble Oil Company and/or the United States government that the Manhattan will not be allowed into Canadian Arctic waters until she has complied with these regulations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the present time there is no law which would require the Manhattan to obey anything of this kind. We are intending to bring legislation forward within the next few days. Until then, I think the Minister of Transport is doing what is perfectly appropriate under the circumstances, that is, denying help to the tanker until it complies with the requirements. Until there is an act on the statute books which lays down stipulations, that is the best we can do. I hope we will have the support of hon. members in respect of the legislation we intend to bring forward.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. While we understand the government is trying to establish the principle that the operator of a ship involved in a pollution mishap will pay the cleanup cost, will the minister assure the House that as far as the Manhattan is concerned our demands in respect of this principle are not negotiable?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the intent of that question and I wonder whether the hon. member would like to rephrase it in view of my stupidity?

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps to make the question clearer, Mr. Speaker, I should put it this way. Since we understand that the government is trying to establish the principle that the operator of a ship involved in a pollution mishap pays the cleanup cost—I think that is perfectly plain—may we receive an assurance from the minister that as far as the Manhattan is concerned this principle will be non-negotiable?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member means that we want to ensure and confirm this principle, I can give him that assurance. There are, as I have explained in the House on numerous occasions in the past, difficulties in establishing liability in the absence of international law. We are trying to get the very best arrangement we can from the Humble Oil Company in this regard.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is the minister implying, then, that these waters of the Northwest Passage do not come under the control of Canada?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED DISCUSSION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST BILL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the right hon. Prime Minister or the Government House Leader. I notice that it has already been passed from the front row to the second row, even before I ask my question.

Mr. Trudeau: To the president.

An hon. Member: Try the back row, you might get an answer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In any event, it was not mailed. Has a decision yet been made regarding a question I asked a couple of weeks ago about the possibility of a discussion at this session of Parliament on the conflict of interest problem, either on the initiative of the government or by making use of my bill No. C-188?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken as yet.

PRESERVATION OF HOME OF HUGH JOHN MACDONALD

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the hon. gentleman been apprised of the impending demolition in Winnipeg of the former home of Hugh John Macdonald, the son of Sir John A. Macdonald, a Father of Confederation? In view of its historic importance, would he consider referring this matter to the National Historic Sites and Monuments Board, with a view to having this home recognized as a national historic site?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to ask the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada to consider the problem and report as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

DEFENCE OF CTC RAILWAY COSTING FORMULA

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, and the importance of this question is directly related to the motion presented to the House earlier this afternoon by my colleague, the hon. member for Wellington-Grey, concerning railway applications for rail line abandonments. Can the minister indicate whether the CTC costing formula is being defended by the government before the Supreme Court of Canada, where it is presently being challenged by the CPR?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I seem to recall having answered that before in the affirmative, Mr. Speaker. If I did not, I want to assure the hon. member that this is being done, yes.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, could the minister assure the House that there will be no rail line abandonment applications accepted, received or dealt with until this formula has finally been dealt with by the Supreme Court?

Mr. Jamieson: I would have to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker, in order to determine whether there is any prohibition against going ahead with hearings while this action is pending. I will be glad to look into it for the hon. member.

SPECIAL AREAS—AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It relates to the minister's announcement in the House on March 11 concerning special areas to be set up across Canada. Is he in a position to say how many federal governments have concluded agreements with the federal government in this respect and, if any, which provincial governments have done so?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, all provincial governments have been consulted and we have agreed substantially on the areas that have been designated.

Mr. Simpson: I wonder whether the minister could say which governments have concluded agreements with the federal government?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There are no formal agreements on this. They have been consulted. We designate the areas. This is what we did after consultation with the provinces.

SIGNING OF AGREEMENTS WITH NEW BRUNSWICK AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that two agreements are to be signed before April 1 with the provinces of New Brunswick and Newfoundland? On what day will these agreements be signed, and is the minister prepared to meet with the Standing Committee on Regional Development before the Easter recess to discuss these agreements with the committee?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am confident that these two agreements will be signed before April 1. Since I am not sure, it would be difficult for me to accept the proposal, because I do not know whether they have been signed.

[English]

DESIGNATION OF SPECIAL AREAS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether, when he said there had been substantial agreement on the part of the provinces about these special areas, he meant simply that these areas should be designated or meant to indicate that there had been complete agreement between the federal government and the provinces that other areas should not be designated?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): There has never been any agreement, Mr. Speaker, concerning areas which should not be designated. I believe that those agreements will remain in force up to June 1972. It is possible that other areas will be designated. It has never been agreed that an area should not be designated.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege. Rather than bring up the same question of privilege again, I thought I could probably ask a question during the regular question period. However, as I indicated, this is the same question of privilege I brought up before and on which I did ask for a ruling from the Chair. At that time, the question of privilege was apparently accepted.

In view of the fact that this afternoon a considerable number of ministers were in the House for the vote, and that since the vote five or six ministers who, according to the roster system, should be in attendance today have been absent, I ask for a definite ruling from the Chair in respect of the roster system which I feel is a violation of the rights and privileges of members of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. MacInnis: I suggest that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My recollection is that this point was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre some weeks ago and that the Chair made a ruling at the time which I believe still stands. Unfortunately, I am not sure when the ruling was made. If it will be of assistance to the hon. member, I will identify the time and relay this information to him.

Mr. MacInnis: On a further question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister, regardless of what he thinks of his roster system, should consider the fact that if his ministers can come in the House to vote they should remain for the question period. In addition, he should realize that his roster system has been violated by his own cabinet ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE MINISTRY

MAKING OF ANNOUNCEMENTS OUTSIDE HOUSE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to raise a point of order in relation to the same matter I raised earlier today. I was hoping I would catch Your Honour's eye during the question period. This is a matter which concerns the rights of members of the House. I will direct a simple question to the Prime Minister which requires a simple yes or no answer. I see the Prime Minister is half-way out of the House. Perhaps he will come in the rest of the way and answer the question. Is it government policy to make announcements outside the House regarding the reorganization of government departments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be back tomorrow.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, following the previous point of order on which there was some discussion, I should like to ask Your Honour at what stage is the consideration of Standing Order 5, and is this matter being actively pursued?

Mr. Speaker: I would find it very difficult to reply to the hon. member's question. I do not consider it is the Chair's duty to review the rules. When questions of privilege and points of order are raised in the House, which I think are of importance and should be considered by the House Committee on Rules, I take the liberty of bringing these points to the attention of the committee when it sits. If there is a suggestion that Standing Order 5 should be considered by the committee, I will be pleased to bring this to the attention of the chairman of the committee whenever the committee is called together and sits.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order and perhaps in relation to the same subject, I should indicate that several times during the session I have suggested that the House could make a general order referring to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization the rules, practices and procedures of the House so that a further discussion of these matters could be undertaken. If there is any general disposition to accept an order of that kind, perhaps we could make it right now.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed? I am not sure what is before the House. Is it a motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker. I made the suggestion that perhaps if the House would like to deal with this at an early date we could make it a motion herewith.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Bell: It is agreed, Mr. Speaker, provided such consideration includes the question of the specific attendance of ministers in the House so they will not be able to "scram" out of the House and not fail the representatives of the people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there is no agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. Comeau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask you if someone other than a minister or a parliamentary secretary may answer Inquiries of the Ministry, since this role—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question put by the hon. member is hypothetical. Would he resume his seat?

Of course, the Standing Orders and the practice in the House do not allow hon. members to ask a question in that way to the Chair.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, since there is no agreement on this matter I have no alternative but to invoke the provisions of Standing Order 5 and ask Your Honour that the Prime Minister be directed to return to the House to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this matter can be raised by way of a question of privilege. The hon. member must realize that Standing Order 5 does not apply specifically to ministers; it applies to all members. If we acted on the suggestion of the hon. member for St. John's East, members might ask that other individual members be called back into the House. Perhaps this would not be such a bad idea. However, I would think the question or the motion or proposal could not be put under the provisions of Standing Order 5 at this time.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, in respect of Standing Order 5 could it not be implied that, since every member is bound to attend, the Prime Minister himself is violating that rule by predetermining the absence of Ministers through the setting up of a roster system which gives them the privilege to stay out of the House? In other words, by establishing his roster system he is violating rule 5.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 17, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 5051).

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the budget presented last week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

The task of commenting the budget speech is not too demanding, because the budget did not contain many new proposals, except that it did not provide for any new tax, and was based on the prevailing inflationary situation.

In my opinion, unemployment should have the priority over inflation, because inflation is only an opportunity for the government to reduce its expenses on all accounts, with the frequent result of a renewed outbreak of unemployment which is felt in Quebec as well as in the other provinces.

The important point which the minister wanted especially to emphasize is the budget surplus with which it seems possible to justify everything. In the name of a just society, I wonder how it is possible, through surpluses alone which can only be prejudicial to a good many people, to bring the Canadian people to have confidence again in Parliament and how it is possible to govern the country with objectiveness.

There are surpluses in almost every field.

I wonder how one can boast that there will be surpluses when Quebec is deprived of $200 million from a so-called special tax taken from Quebec taxpayers' pockets. Furthermore, other provinces which did not avail themselves of this medical insurance scheme are not mentioned.

I am always somewhat surprised at the fact that few members, especially among those from Quebec, save put forward their arguments in the House. Instead by their silence, they condoned that hold-up perpetrated by Ottawa against Quebec a few weeks ago.

It is certainly easy for the Minister of Finance to bring down a surplus budget when such measures are involved. And he will keep on bragging proudly about a possible surplus.

It could also be said that the Post Office and Communications Department is looking for such surpluses. Apparently, according to this government's policy, the profitable operation of that department is the main objective, and no thought is given to the public service it is meant to offer.

More and more, it seems, the Minister and the goverment are facing increasing difficulties in this regard. Indeed, they are always striving for profitable operation at the expense of the people.

Worthwhile initiatives on the part of hon. members in general and Quebec members in particular are becoming scarce, while very difficult problems are cropping up right in the city of Montreal, and that is detrimental to the Canadian people as a whole.

In any case, let us suppose that such surpluses will occur. Why did someone not think of distributing such surpluses as a refund on the interest paid by people wishing to build a house? It is planned to promote long term and short term construction.

[Mr. La Salle.]

It has been proven that it is impossible for people earning $10,000 or less to get a loan because they will be unable to repay it due to the present rates of interest.

It seems that the government is definitely going to keep the surpluses, more often than not, to the detriment of the provinces. It is nevertheless surprising that no thought has been given to handing this refund over to these Canadians wage earners who would then be able to buy a house and become assets in the community, thus giving a boost to short term construction.

It is a joke. As a matter of fact, loans are made easier for building purposes but at interest rates which have gone up steadily in the last three or five years.

The only responsible way in which a so-called responsible government, speaking in the name of a just society, can make it possible for its citizens to purchase a house, in view of high interest rates, is to prepare as soon as possible a bill calling for reimbursement of a part of this interest to people in the middle salary range.

We would thus be acting in a responsible way. The government and Parliament would be offering the people a responsible, human policy in order to revitalize construction, which affects a large number of Canadian workers.

I should now like to express my concern about dairy producers.

An emergency debate was held recently. Several members took pride in siding with the dairy farmers, a class of people that deserves protection and encouragement. In fact, we only requested that a very small part of the surplus forecast by the government, that is the $10 million worth of subsidies that dairy farmers are to be deprived of this year, be still granted to them. This government's behaviour leaves them wondering, I believe, for, during this austerity period, it seems fair to hurt that class of producers who badly need the subsidies refused to them.

On the other hand, much to the surprise of many members, a minister announced subsidies of approximately $140 million to western wheat producers. I have no hesitation at all to support that measure, considering the difficulties facing them.

However, how can one accept without saying a word that there is no provision in the budget for granting again to dairy farmers at least that share of the $10 million that is absolutely necessary to the successful operation of the Quebec dairy industry?

What is more astonishing is the complete silence of a good number of the members concerned, while this $10 million cutback in subsidies will affect about 50 per cent of the Quebec dairy farmers. In fact, they are likely to lose $4,375,000, an amount equivalent to a sizeable part of the country's dairy production.

I am led by this silence to try to wake up those members who should make themselves heard and make the Minister of Finance understand the serious consequences of this cutback for Quebec dairy farmers.

Of course the minister cannot be informed of all the problems facing Quebec producers, but in view of the fact that Quebec is strongly represented within the government, I still hope that some day the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will be forced to change his mind about the dairy producers in Quebec and in the rest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, no mention is made in the budget speech of another very serious matter which has been brought up in the House quite often recently. I mean the textile industry.

I have before me some documents indicating that in October 1968 companies and unions met with the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of his cabinet in order to set forth the serious problem faced by the Canadian textile industry. Mention was made of an increasing penetration of imported items, which is detrimental to workers and businesses in that industry.

At that time they were assured of a quick solution to their problem. Instead of that, later on, the government decided to undertake a complete investigation of the textile and clothing industries. We are already at the end of March and we are still waiting for the result of that inquiry.

The main problem has to do with imports, it seems. In fact, 20 per cent of all textile products and clothing come from low-cost countries. Those products represent 42 per cent of the total imports. That affects 200,000 workers; here is the breakdown: 110,000 in the clothing industry and 83,000 in the textile industry, a total of 25 per cent of all Quebec workers.

We control only 55 per cent of the market, as against 70 per cent 20 years ago. No other country allows such heavy imports. In the United States, the industry contributes 90 per cent of the production and the government sets very stern import quotas. I will now say a few words on the Pinatel Piece Dye Works Ltd., a textile plant in my constituency.

That company suffers from being 40 per cent below its normal quota of workers; I am referring to the 1952-1970 period. Considering the working hours from 1952 to 1970 in terms of unpaid salaries, we get the figure of $500,000 per year. We can easily imagine the economic effect this has on an area such as mine. The volume of production went down by about 20 per cent and in order to get the present volume, 50 per cent of the production has to be on a marginal basis. How many other jobs could be created, if we had a good textile products policy?

As for Consolidated Textile, it has no relationship with the previous firm. Nevertheless those two companies would surely not be opposed to the government following an intelligent policy. Until September 1969, that company operated six days a week. Since then, the work week was reduced to five days, and at the end of the year the company closed down for two weeks. In 1970, unless something happens quickly, we will have to recognize that those companies will be forced to operate only four days a week.

It seems to me that tariffs managed to maintain within acceptable limits the imports from most of the industrialized countries. However, those tariffs are in no way related to the imports coming from countries were production costs are low. Quotas are the only device which has been efficient in this regard, and even of that, they are far from perfect. The only quotas in use at the present time are those exporters accept voluntarily as a means of autorestriction.

Consequently, they come too late and are too high, in view of the methods used. It is absolutely impossible for industry to plan its investments and maintain a steady employment level.

We want to know with regard to that policy, what role Canada will be expected to play. We are not asking for a guaranteed market, but only a decent limit be set for the growth of imports from those countries where production costs are low, through an efficient control of the main imports, at least until some other western countries have revised their severe restrictions.

The government has not seemed very eager to solve those problems rapidly. In June 1969, the Canadian government proved more generous than any other country in the world; we reduced the rate of imports in one sweep, instead of waiting for five years. We adopted it immediately, more preoccupied by the textile industry than by wheat producers. We did so to control inflation. The textile industry made investments of one billion dollars in the last ten years. That alone explains why it managed to survive. Otherwise, those companies would no longer exist.

Canada should apply to the quota system the same policy as that prevailing in the United States. The embargo system is not good because goods are kept in storage and eventually cleared once the embargo has been raised.

Let me give you an example of what, I think, is really an unfortunate situation: last year, the Canadian government had agreed to buy from Korea 200,000 yards of material. Following a possible mistake, Korea delivered to Canada more than a million yards of the aforesaid material and now the Canadian industries are hampered by this surplus.

I have made these remarks hoping Parliament would consider the difficult circumstances of our textile industries. It is most interesting to watch the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) trying to vindicate himself and offering subsidies for new jobs and new industries in Canada. We should do well, nevertheless, to give a closer look to the problem and to bring about practical and specific reforms to put back on its feet the textile industry, which used to be a very profitable one. It is likely to recover if the present government provides the necessary amendments and remedies.

In brief, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has sometimes asked for suggestions and there is certainly one worthwhile suggestion and that is to curtail our imports. That, in my opinion, is the best remedy of all.

I deplore the fact that the budget provides that certain amounts which apparently were to be allocated for urban renewal in Quebec have not been earmarked for that purpose, which creates difficulties in that province, whereas in the course of discussions with the federal government there was a possibility of obtaining subsidies of about $94 million.

It seems that, because there has been a change of minister during the year, these subsidies will be reduced to about $50 million. The government members who represent Quebec City and Montreal did not see fit to discuss the matter in the House. But the people of those cities are greatly worried about their representatives who should be urging the minister to reconsider and to allow the continuation in Montreal and Quebec City of urban renewal projects which are needed and which had been approved by the minister then in charge of housing.

Here again, Ottawa will say: It is Quebec which is at fault. For various political reasons, it is Quebec which is to blame.

The province of Quebec is not perfect, that is sure! But I do not think that the Quebec government is so bent on refusing the grants required for the carrying out of provincial projects.

During this debate, the government and more especially members from Quebec should be urged to try to enter into a dialogue with the provinces, since we all want the same thing. We are all striving towards the common good, but we should abstain from political manoeuvring.

Now, the necessary link between the Quebec government and Ottawa has not yet been found. Yet, God knows that promises were made that it would be found quickly, thanks to a majority government and a large representation from Quebec. But, nothing has yet been done in this regard, although that would be so important, both socially and economically.

We are trying together for the benefit of all to achieve unity in the country. I wonder if it would not be better to endeavour first of all to establish harmony which is so necessary. We are facing various problems which have prevented understanding between the ethnical groups and between the federal and provincial governments.

We will keep on talking about equality and independence while refusing Quebec very important projects.

This very afternoon, I was disappointed to see that a little war was fought to decide whether or not Quebec would welcome in the co-operation of the federal government in the choice of names for schools and whether the latter would be allowed to hoist the Canadian flag. This quarrel is going on with much publicity. But I wonder whether this is not an attempt to provoke the members from Quebec. And they have been properly warned against fighting the election at the expense of Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, I dare hope that in caucus, it will be possible to talk seriously and objectively in order to agree on a name for a school, even if it means losing a grant.

As a matter of fact, I am wondering how it is possible to deal with this subject, when we know that education comes exclusively under provincial jurisdiction. Does the Government intend to draft a bill which would tie down Quebec in connection with education. I do not believe that things have gone that far.

The minister surely did not think very much before saying that Quebec would not get one damn penny from the federal government if it refused to give some kind of publicity. I suggest this government has enough members to do this kind of publicity, to tell the Quebec people about the federal financial contributions to various projects. For my part, I never fail to say, in my riding, what contribution is the federal government making to various projects. It is up to me to do it. I think that all members should say to their constituents that the Quebec government does not give enough publicity to the federal contributions to various projects. I do not believe that it is up to the provincial government to do so. It is the provincial government's duty to carry out these projects and to obtain the largest possible subsidies from the federal government. As for us, it is our duty, as representatives from Quebec here, to support the Quebec government, in the interest of young people who need education, with regard to the carrying out of such projects, which benefit Quebec in particular and Canada in general.

It is therefore to be hoped that these idle discussions become meaningful ones. I also express the hope that federal and provincial representatives may some day hold joint discussions and establish joint goals based on fundamental principles, in the best interests of Canada in general, Quebec in particular, and parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I took this opportunity to express my views. I think it will be at last possible for Canada to go ahead thanks to the contribution of strong provinces, run by governments that will have their say in discussions leading to shared-cost programs.

It is unthinkable that the government should continue to run Canada without consulting the provinces. Provinces have now a right to be heard. The federal government must hold important discussions with the provinces, and it will be hand in hand that the provincial and federal governments will build up something good to the advantage of the whole Canadian society. Only then will we be able to get closer and closer to the just society which I desire as much as the Prime Minister. All hon. members, I think, are for it.

How are we going to build it if at the start we refuse to the provinces the justice they are entitled to? I am not speaking of Quebec only, but of all the other provinces as well.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the budget tabled next year will propose solutions to some of the problems I have brought up so that our Canada will be more prosperous and a better place in which to live.

[English]

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, it seems appropriate, in view of the latitude permitted in the budget debate, to turn away for a time from our usual perspective on our legislative work and look at that work from the point of view of the country. What is the public's perspective of what is happening in Ottawa and of the direction the government is taking? What does the public think is happening in Ottawa and, perhaps more interestingly, how does the public's view of what is happening, which of course is a political reality, compare with the facts? It seems that we have had data with which to work. We do our homework; hon. members spend time with their constituents and gather their views. Lately, we have been bombarded with briefs, opinions and representations. But a dialogue, even though well intentioned on both sides, can rapidly become a confrontation, with opposed parties being polarized and stating maximum positions: absolutely for and absolutely against certain questions.

In these circumstances, every question can become an attack and every answer or explanation a defence. When this happens, analyzing public opinion becomes harder. We must go behind the public attack, so to speak, and try to determine what people are really objecting to, how far they are "with it" and what are the terms of their continued support. Consider, for example, the White Paper on Tax Reform. I have received many letters about it—

Mr. Orlikow: And how many coupons?

Mr. Kaplan: — and heard many discussions. I am convinced that changes are required and am also satisfied that there will be changes. Many wise suggestions for improvement have been made and I, for one, will be seeking opportunities during the work of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to marshall support for these views. Nevertheless, underlying the criticism or accompanying it, are some hostile themes which represent extremely widespread opinions which ought to have some exposure and comment. I should like to expose some of these themes now in the fresh air of this chamber and look at them.

To many Canadians the White Paper on Tax Reform contains the final evidence they require to establish that this government is socialistic, communistic or totalitarian. May I read a sentence from a letter I have received that runs in this vein. The writer says, "The purpose of the document on top of the Estate Tax Act is to set up a completely Socialistic state. Socialism cannot survive without totalitarianism and totalitarianism based on socialism is communism."

Not only are people saying that, but some people allege the government is dedicated to the eradication of capital in the private sector; that the government believes it can invest capital more wisely and profitably than the private sector and that there is a movement towards levelling all people, that is, putting them all into the same economic position by ignoring the role of incentives and disregarding the value of the individual's productivity. Ottawa is viewed as being intent on expanding itself, increasing taxes and its share of the gross national product for the purpose of building up a vast bureaucracy which will soon constitute the whole of the labour force. People see the public service as a monster gorging itself on the private sector. These are some of the underlying feelings of people in Canada about what is happening in Ottawa, and these are the things I should like to look at for a moment.

Do the facts in Ottawa justify these suspicions, Mr. Speaker? I submit to you that these underlying suspicions are unjustified and when you look at the facts you will find them different from what is feared. When I looked at the statistics, the problem was settled for me. The fact is that the federal government is not growing. It is declining in size relative to the economy. For example, the federal government has spent on goods and services, that is for the public service and all the work it does including all goods it consumes, produces and distributes, a percentage of the gross national product which has declined steadily since the end of the Korean war. In 1953, that percentage was 9.6 per cent of the gross national product; by 1968 that percentage had declined to 5.3 per cent. In other words, far from taking more from the economy, the federal government now takes less.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the government is constantly complaining about not having control over all its expenditures. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke about this during the question period today. I am referring to expenditures which are based on shared-cost programs shared with the provinces, such as the old winter works program, grants to universities and medicare. These involve funds which the federal government raises in taxes and which are spent by the provinces. It is argued at federal provincial conferences that, ideally, these programs should be reviewed to see which government can control them better and that that government should be given the responsibility for these programs—that is, given the responsibility both to raise the money and to spend it.

When Ottawa complains about having to contribute to these programs over which it has no control, Ottawa is accused of having created them. It is felt these programs have built up the public sector at other levels and contributed in an indirect way to the growth of the government monster. Even though I agree with the principle that it is not efficient to have taxation at one level of government and the spending of the moneys raised at another level, the relationship I referred to a moment ago still applies, even if all the shared-cost programs are considered as coming under federal spending. That is to say, total federal spending, including money which Ottawa raises and hands over to other levels of government to spend, has steadily declined in terms of a percentage of the gross national product, the decline being from 16.8 per cent in 1953 to 13.6 per cent in 1968. These figures come from the independent research of the Canadian Tax Foundation and appear in "The National Finances for 1969-70".

There are other ways to measure the size of the government. Consider the size of the public service as a measure. People talk about Parkinson's Law and empire building. They conclude that the federal public service is burgeoning with the object of gradually taking over the whole of the labour force. The facts are the opposite. The number of federal government employees has declined since 1955, both as a percentage of the total Canadian labour force from 3.4 per cent in 1955 to 3 per cent in 1969 and as a percentage of the Canadian population. There is one exception to this rule of steady decline in the size of the public service. During the years of the Conservative government, under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), 1958 to 1962, the curve showed an increase. This increase began to decline after the Liberal party was returned to power.

The figures which I have are from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I am informed that these figures have never been requested before in precisely this form. As I have these figures here, I wonder if I might have the consent of hon. members to include the figures from 1952 to 1969 in the text of my remarks this afternoon?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I must point out to the hon. member that it is not the practice to append lists of figures to a speech.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would not ask it if these figures could be obtained by anyone by any other means. As these figures have not been produced in this form before, I think it might be useful for hon. members to have them. I wonder if the consent of the House might be given?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Possibly the hon. member could read the figures into the record.

Mr. Kaplan: I will come back to them if I have time.

Mr. Bell: We are quite generous on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, provided they are not very lengthy, in spite of the fact the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) would not extend the same courtesy to us. We are still good sports. The hon. member can place these figures on the record.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not want to do anything which would interfere with the speech of the hon. member for Don Mills, (Mr. Kaplan). However, this issue was raised several days ago when the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) wanted to put some figures on the record. Mr. Speaker ruled this could not be done. If we are going to have a policy, we ought to have the policy decided upon by the Speaker after proper consideration and not make decisions because some members are not paying attention.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to press the point. If all members do not consent, there is not much point in arguing.

In any event, I have only the figures up to March 31, 1969 and therefore they do not reflect the implementation of the reduction in staff announced in August, 1969 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In the Prime Minister's speech of August 13, he referred to a series of planned staff reduction measures and concluded "taken together, these reductions add up to 25,000 jobs—a 10 per cent decrease from the 1968 authorized size of the public service". When the results of this program are reflected in the statistics I referred to, the curve of decline in the size of the Federal Public Service will be even more steep.

Another measure of the government scale of operations is reflected in what it borrows. Everybody complains about the volume of federal spending and the size of the national debt. Here, this government is turning the tide of past trends. This will be the first year in over ten years in which the national debt is reduced in absolute amount. There has been borrowing this year, there has been debt repaid this year and, on balance, the national debt has been reduced. It has declined for the first time in over ten years. Let us hope this is not the last year in which the national debt declines.

The conclusions that I draw from these facts are that if taxation reflected only federal spending, taxes would be decreasing. Yet we have the constant complaint from the public indicating a feeling that the federal government is moving in the opposite direction. When a situation exists where the facts are precisely opposed to what the public thinks, some explanation is in order. I think two factors are involved in this public misconception.

First, there is the enormous growth of municipal and provincial expenditures which have increased very sharply since 1952, even if the shared-cost programs with which the federal government has burdened them are excluded. The public understanding of the different activities of the different governments is not as clear as it could be. I do not mean to suggest that municipal and provincial programs are indefensible—far from it. What I am insisting, however, is that the federal government is not contributing to this growth and that the government cannot be charged with socialism or empire building of this kind.

There is one area that deserves special attention. The constitutional development of this country has led to much duplication of services. This duplication did not matter at the time when total taxes were lower, but today the taxpayers should be complaining more than they are about this duplication. Why do we have 11 departments of agriculture, health, national resources and trade development complete with foreign services?

Do we want and can we afford the distinction of being the only country in the world with four national pavilions at Expo 70 in Japan? Much of the criticism of the government is misdirected, but perhaps at federal-provincial conferences the government should be doing more and striking a more urgent tone about this duplication. While the spending admittedly is done by different governments, the money all comes from the same pockets, from the same economy.

A second factor which gives rise to the misconception about the growth of the federal government and government spending, is undeniably the fact that the influence of the federal government is becoming more pervasive in today's life. Many Canadians have a very limited concept of what the role of the government should be, I wish to read another sentence from the letter to which I referred earlier. It reads:

> You were not given a mandate by the Canadian people to restructure our economic and social life.

In other words, we were not given a mandate to change society. This concept has very respectable origins. George Washington and Thomas Jefferson had the same idea. They thought the business of the government was to provide services to the people: sell stamps and run the post office protect the merchant marine and the coastline; print money; build public works; provide for a system of justice and serve society with the assumption that society was a static and stable community with a clear idea of what it wanted from the government. Serve society, but don't change it.

The White Paper on Tax Reform has brought this dimension of criticism to a head. If the word of the government is accepted, this tax measure is not designed to raise taxes but to redistribute the burden, shift the wealth and to change society. What business, people ask, does a government have to change the very society which chose it? What is the government doing, interfering with contracts and limiting the freedom of commerce?

The difficulty about the traditional and limited view of the functions of the government is that it depends on assumptions which were true when first accepted but which are false today. Society in the past was stable.

The economy was in equilibrium. There seemed to be a natural order in human relations. Today, the forces which used to keep order in society have largely disappeared. Women have been emancipated, youth is in revolt, the poor are in revolt, cities are in revolt, the forces of family authority, religion, the class structure, the master-servant relationship are all gone or are becoming steadily weaker. It is clear that order in the past depended upon the suppression of vast segments of society. It was easy to maintain order in a community in which 90 per cent of the people did not seek to improve their situations. Today, segments which were suppressed in the past are insisting upon the recognition of their claims.

What is happening in our cities is an interesting example. People say conditions in the cities have never been worse than they are today. In fact, of course, they have been a great deal worse. Imagine living in 19th Century London, for instance, in a community of more than a million people, crowded together more densely per acre than city dwellers are today, without sewers, without fresh water flowing into their homes, without public transportation, with animals kept in everybody's front and back yards to serve as beasts of burden, without electricity. Imagine the pollution which must have resulted from cooking on fires made with peat, coal and wood. Life in the 19th Century was a great deal worse from this point of view than life in any world metropolis today. Yet, people say conditions have never been worse. The difference is that today no segment of society is prepared to put up with conditions of this sort.

A century or so ago people did not care if their wives and servants were choking in the smoke of the kitchens. The less privileged in society had no means of expressing their views to the government or of bringing about a more equitable social order. The master and servant relationship was strictly imposed. The superiority of the male sex was insisted upon. Domination of the young was taken for granted. Nevertheless, these forces, though they brought stability, did so on the basis of serious injustice. It was law and order without justice, if you like—an attitude which cannot be accepted today.

The traditional structures having disappeared, government participation in assuring early recognition of the claims of underprivileged groups is required if this recognition is not forthcoming, if the liberated forces are not recognized, those same forces will wreck our society. Obviously, the government cannot sit back and allow this to happen. This is one of the reasons government must take upon itself a larger role in the society of the 'seventies.

In the economy, similar changes are taking place. When I studied economics just a few years ago at the University of Toronto, our analyses were based on a concept called equilibrium. We would analyse a condition of equilibrium and then, depending on circumstances, we would review certain movements which caused disequilibrium—increases in cost, decline in demand, increase in the money supply and so on. This concept of equilibrium came to us unchanged from the 19th Century, from the works of Adam Smith in 1867. Today it is recognized that there is no such thing as equilibrium in actual fact. Old economic ideas have to be discarded. Natural forces do not preserve competition, they do not maintain the marketplace, they do not assure power to bargain, they do not provide adequate liquidity either domestically or internationally. Neither will natural forces maintain a strong Canadian presence in the Canadian economy. The need for constant government intervention and participation is so obvious in a modern economy that we have reached a point at which the absence of government presence from a problem area can itself be regarded as an expression of national policy.

When the critics label government presence in the economy as socialism or as a movement towards a state economy, they are missing the point. So far, the policies of the Liberal government have been largely designed to create an artificial state of equilibrium. As Peter F. Drucker of the Harvard Business School has observed, the modern economic equilibrium which we try to create is, at best, something like a bicycle which can only balance while it is moving. This so-called government interference is really an operation designed to preserve free enterprise and protect economic opportunity, not to replace them. This, at any rate, is the position I take and it is the position of the Liberal party as I understand it. So this is another area in which the function of government is misunderstood and labelled socialism.

We can only hope that as the country becomes more involved in the process of government—and it ought to become more involved—the Canadian people will consider government decisions not in the context of what was done in the past, but in the light of the alternatives available, recognizing that the lessons of the past are not entirely relevant. It is a matter of choosing among alternative courses of conduct, those which will assure the maintenance of the values in which Canadians believe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I have a few minutes left, I will accept your suggestion and read the table into the record. The table is headed: Federal Government Employees, and Canada Total Employees. The figures given are from March 31, 1952 to December, 1969. I shall read four figures, the first being the year, the second being the absolute number of federal employees, the third being the total number of persons employed in Canada and the fourth being the percentage of federal employees to the total number. For 1952, 131,-646 of 5,169,000, being 2.5 per cent. For 1953, 163,192 of 5,235,000, being 3.1 per cent. For 1954—

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This question was raised the other day and I thought it had finally been resolved along the lines that an hon. member could file a table as long as he could identify its origin. This procedure would certainly make a lot more sense than having to read all those figures. The House is the master of its own rules. Your Honour has correctly pointed out that this is not the practice, but the hon. member who thought that he did have an objection is not in the House at the moment. I should like to ask the hon. member a question before his time runs out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member is right, but the problem has been resolved by the hon. member in his own way.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, may I press you to reconsider and to permit me to file them?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: I recognize your feelings in the matter, Mr. Speaker, and I am very grateful to you for inviting the House to permit me this latitude.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I want the hon. member to file them, but before his time runs out I want to ask him a question. I was interested in his speech, in which at the outset he said changes were necessary and that he was confident there would be changes to the white paper. I want to ask him what changes he contemplates to the white paper, and what his position will be if those changes are not made.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a fair question. I am a member of the finance committee, and as such I feel I have some responsibility to hear the submissions which will be made to us before coming to any final conclusions. Howevever, I have taken the trouble to express my views at great length in material that I have been making available to my constituents. It is not a question that I should like to answer on one foot, so to speak, but I do not want to avoid the question. I wonder whether the hon. member would be satisfied if I sent him the material I have circulated on this question?

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to familiarize myself with it.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I, too, welcome the presentation of a budget, if for no other reason than that it enables me to have the opportunity to debate the economic state of our nation. A budget such as the one announced could hardly serve any purpose other than to give us an opportunity to debate. I feel that its total effect will be nil. Certainly, it gave no sense of reassurance, and it revealed nothing.

Last Thursday as I journeyed to and from the chamber and saw the batteries of cameras return to the hallowed halls outside, and as I looked once again and saw the CBC cameras under the glowing lights, it reminded me of the tense moments just before curtain time for a great production. This time I should like to call the production "The great Budget of 1970".

The budget day was a suspense filled duplication of that great day of the white paper on tax reforms, an occasion when for the first time I and other MP's were given the unprecedented thrill of being locked in the railway committee room where we waited with bated breath for the performance, which I would call "I am curious, tax reforms". Instead of bringing in this package of empty endeavour, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) could simply have made a brief statement. In fact, the budget could have been described with two simple words—"nothing new". However, rather than do this the minister chose to re-embark upon a dialogue which is beginning to sound more and more like the theme of the old movie, "For Whom the Bell Tolls".

In his opening remarks, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) referred to the performance of the minister as "cold turkey". I think it would better be described as a bit of old ham. Historically, the year 1970 will become known as the year of the revival of Robin Hood, but a Robin Hood in reverse. This will be a new type of Robin Hood, one that takes from the poor and gives to the rich. On this occasion the Robin Hood of finance and the sheriff of Parliament Hill do not have the masses with them. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians are not going to put up with tax reform under the guise of fighting inflation.

Far be it from me to oppose the presentation of a budget; but I do say that in failing to include measures to combat unemployment, which is reaching crisis proportions in certain regions—and these not short of urban-industrial content—the budget takes on a disturbing confrontation with many people in Canada. I refer in particular to what might be described as the country's self-inflicted unemployment, or instant unemployment as a result of austerity.

I find this situation to be a sad commentary on a government which, already famous for its inability to create an adequate number of new jobs, is now doing away with old ones. This government is trying to fight inflation by adopting a method that might be compared to the "pill". The government is trying to introduce prevention, but is forgetting the side effects, effects that can only be described as alarming and which in many respects are leading to economic infertility.

For these and other reasons, it is difficult for me to understand the attitude of this government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his usual aggressive manner, said in a recent speech:

> We will not be bullied or blackmailed by hysterical charges or threats from opponents of the government's white paper on tax reform.

What an example of psychology in reverse! I should like to know who is doing the bullying around here. Who is being hysterical and who is making the threats? For example, who did the bullying when our NATO commitments were cut back, seriously affecting our prestige in the alliance? Who did the bullying when the strength of the Canadian forces was decreased to some 82,000 troops, which is but a political token of a military force? This force, as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) or the chief of the general staff will admit, is fast reaching a state of ineffectiveness for performing the role we are supposed to play in our national defence effort.

If we knew what was in the hearts and minds of our military leaders instead of having to listen to what they are told to say, then we would know just what our capabilities are. Some of our great military leaders, who in the last two years have retired in disgust, must find it difficult to accept the argument that one of the top priorities for our forces is the national development.

A few nights ago the minister of external affairs, during the television program "Encounter", said that Canada would be the battleground between the United States and any foreign force that directed missiles at the United States. Yet, as Canadians we are led to believe that this government is being sincere in reducing our defence spending by cutting down on the strength of the forces. All we are really doing is wasting that which is left of our budget and making our forces ineffective.

The maintenance of an effective military force is a necessary evil in these troubled times. As much as none of us wants war, if our country is worth preserving we must ensure that we will be prepared at any moment to deter attack and to share in a worth-while contribution to maintain peace in foreign lands. Let us not be hypocritical by wasting our defence spending on a mere token group of people in military uniforms. Some people in Canada oppose defence spending. If I may be permitted I should like to refer to an article that appears in today's Globe and Mail and refers to a Nazi officer who has been charged with 15,314 counts of murder. Let the people of Canada not forget this.

How can we keep talking about restraint in spending and at the same time set up a new department called Information Canada, to which over $7 million has been allocated in the 1970-71 budget? This is a prime example of duplication of effort and expense. Let me just look at the objectives of this body for a moment. Its objectives are to explain the many aspects of federal government policies and programs to Canadians, and to provide information that will assist the government to assess what Canadians think about federal policies and programs. I say that this is absolute hypocrisy. I am sure that the white paper on tax reform got the message across to Canadians; and I am also sure that the Minister of Finance must be able to assess the thinking of Canadians, and to do so at no charge.

What are Members of Parliament for, Mr. Speaker, if it is not to bring to the attention of their constituents the policies of the government? Perhaps this new organization emphasizes the lack of faith that the Prime Minister has in Members of Parliament. I repeat that this expenditure is an utter waste of the taxpayers' money and is nothing short of hypocrisy. I can think of a lot of better places to spend $7 million at a time of spending restraint.

When are we going to start taking some positive action toward helping the poor? Why are we having more committees to study poverty? I pointed out in November, 1968, in my maiden speech, that the Economic Council of Canada did all the work in respect of the poor. They carried out 32 staff studies, and had five conferences. They presented seven papers and nine or ten other reports. Here we are spending months and months on another study. I suggest the homework is done in respect of the 5 million poverty stricken Canadians. The examinations have been written and we all passed with honours, so why do we keep procrastinating?

When are we going to do something about putting some action where our supposed expert minds are? This is not bullying or threatening, Mr. Speaker, this is a plea to the humanitarian feelings of this government. When the Senate committee has completed its report, are we going to have another white paper or is Information Canada going to send out questionnaires to the poverty-stricken asking them again if they are poor? The Economic Council of Canada came to the great decision two or three years ago, after all the studies I mentioned, that poverty was real in Canada. What are we going to prove when the Senate committee has finished its work? Mark my words, Mr. Speaker, that committee will come to the same conclusion and there will be a startling announcement that poverty is still real in Canada and we have to do something about it.

Unfortunately, we are faced with a crisis on our continent as a result of the evils of pollution, that is the pollution of our environment. I must give credit to the minister responsible for taking some positive steps to combat this evil. Let me ask about the pollution of the 5 million poverty-stricken Canadians who are under-nourished. What about the pollution of the bodies of the poverty-stricken who are living in unsanitary conditions and are subject to sickness and lack of medical care? This is not a new problem; this type of pollution has been with us for many years. Why have we not taken some positive action? Why do we procrastinate and hide the real reason? The poor be damned; let us fight inflation regardless of who it hurts.

Can anyone in this House of Commons say, conscientiously or with any sense of humanity, that we have any higher priority than dealing with poverty in Canada? Instead of sending $7 million worth of messages telling the people of the great policies of this government, let us give them $7 million worth of assistance. Let us concentrate the many millions of dollars we spend on other things to ensure that under-nourished children will have a decent opportunity to grow up and become contributing Canadians. There is an old military expression which teaches that an attacking army can only advance as fast as its slowest element. We should learn this principle. We should stop now, look over our shoulders and strengthen the weak to help them catch up.

What did we accomplish by our race to prosperity? We have attained richness by following a path to affluence through modern technology, which is running away with us, and we have polluted everything around us, in the process. Now, we are going to have to make huge expenditures to provide a cure. As a result, our state of prosperity is really false and we are being devoured by greed and selfishness. In the same vein, Mr. Speaker, I ask when we are going to look behind us and do something really worthwhile for those regions which need an injection of funds to inspire true development? When the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) announced that he was designating special areas for an infusion of funds, why did he make chalk of one area and cheese of another?

I thank the minister with all my heart for mentioning certain areas in Newfoundland, especially those in my own district of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe with names that have never been mentioned in this House, such as Stephenville, St. George's, Port au Port, Hawkes Bay, Port Saunders, Port aux Choix. These places have been designated as special areas for development funds. However, there are other areas which he did not mention and which have been neglected for many years. The people there are also Canadians and deserve equal opportunity. These are the words of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

I note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his whiz kids are on a northern kick. They are going to the north now. The Prime Minister keeps going north with his band of highly paid experts, but I should like him to know that the north stretches a long way across Canada. There is a northern Newfoundland which he evidently forgets about and does not visit. There is no one who agrees more than I that we must develop the vast riches of the north but let us remember all the north of Canada. I doubt very much if there are any great oil deposits in the part of the north I am thinking about, and I doubt if we will ever have any winter games there, but I can tell you that there are Newfoundland Canadians there. At least they thought they were Canadians, but they are still trying to find out about this great Canada of ours they heard or read about after Confederation. Will they ever get the opportunity, after 20 years of disillusionment and promises, to know that they are also part of this great democracy and that they will be able to become involved in this opportunity of empty words?

They never got a chance to utter those magic words "just society" which held such high hopes but turned out to be nothing more than an electioneering gimmick that became distasteful to even utter. What have we accomplished in the province of Newfoundland since Confederation? We top the list in everything that counts. We have the highest cost of living in Canada, the lowest wages, the highest unemployment rate—some 20 per cent—and we are closing in on the first billion dollar debt of the ten provinces. What price glory, Mr. Speaker?

We have one of the great potentials of any province in respect of our God made resources. We have the fish in the sea, vast timberlands and unmatched beauty. What do we develop, or I should say try to develop? We develop shoe factories, rubber factories and candy factories. We have just about obliterated our fishing industry over the years, to the point where I doubt that even the minister of fisheries, who has done such a commendable job, can save it.

We have given away most of our areas through rights to explore for minerals and oil. This denies any clear thinking planner the opportunity to develop our park potential. Why we have not heard about gold and diamonds I will never know. It might be surprising to western members to know that Newfoundland has areas of rich farm land which has been allowed to deteriorate through a lack of care and planning. We have lost an important means of communication in our Newfoundland passenger service, to the inconvenience of many hundreds of our people, through a callous and determined attempt to eventually remove the CNR from Newfoundland. The rail express and freight service is following the same trend in Newfoundland and the CNR is deliberately, at this moment, gradually, but completely and progressively, downgrading the maintenance of our tracks and services. It is closing down railway stations. We will very soon again hear the tale of woe from the president of the CNR that this service has not paid and Newfoundland will once again, through out and out treachery, pay without a whimper because of those who should be concerned but who will do nothing.

One of the most acute problems in Newfoundland today, apart from all the shortcomings of our province which I have mentioned, is the serious lack of housing. This is a situation which is not only serious but is desperate. Here again, even though the measures taken by the minister responsible are commendable, the situation is not being helped. The $200 million allocated for low cost housing in parts of the Atlantic region, especially in isolated parts of Newfoundland, does not do us one bit of good because where land is available it is not serviced so it cannot qualify under CMHC. Where the land is serviced, the people who need the homes are in the lowest salary brackets or are unemployed and could not qualify for a loan. So, I say to the minister, and I have discussed this with him, we must take another hard look at the situation. I hope he will save some of the $200 million for those people who are living in housing conditions which in some cases can only be termed as unbelievable.

The next 25 years will be critical for the economy of this country. We must, in our planning, consider not only the necessary dollars, factories, skilled workers or natural resources, to run our country but we must consider the people. I plead with this government not to forget these hard facts in the coming years.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in the past 12 or 13 years I have listened with a great deal of interest to a number of budgets, probably 20 in number. This is the first occasion on which I have asked myself why the government bothered bringing down a budget at all. It is not absolutely necessary. This budget did not do very much. For this reason one might wonder why it was presented at all. The attendance during the debate has been such that many members must be asking themselves the same question. The attendance this afternoon has been as low as 14.

An hon. Member: Nine.

Mr. Peters: Maybe it went down to nine.

An hon. Member: When you were not here.

Mr. Peters: I have been here or very close by. The interest in the budget is very limited. The budget debate is one of the classic debates in this House, but it would seem to me that this budget debate will not bring forth very much interest because the budget itself did not contain much of interest.

I think part of the difficulty stems from the fact that we have had the white paper and many Canadians are concerned about it. I presume that there are more people concerned about it than there are people who are in favour of the propositions contained in it. Many people had thought the government would have increased personal exemption in respect of income tax. Some people believed this was already in effect. It is surprising how many people make such an assumption from what they read in the newspapers. Most people who make inquiries about the white paper do not make them really on the basis of the white paper proposals but rather on the basis of an impression they have. I would be interested in knowing the motivation of many people who have sent me clippings. I should be interested in knowing whether or not they have really read the proposals contained in the white paper. I do not know whether they are really concerned about the proposals of the white paper or are concerned about what is being said in the newspapers concerning what is contained in the white paper.

This raises another problem. One of my colleagues told me today that two persons who have been members of the press gallery for some time have been appointed executive assistants to the government. The executive assistants whom I have known over the years were good newspapermen. I congratulate the ministers who appointed them. When we realize that the best people are hired for these positions and then look at the press gallery, we sometimes wonder what the public receives in the way of information. While many people have read the white paper, most people depend on what the newspapers say about it. So, it is really the people in the press gallery who are interpreting the white paper and the people are reacting to this interpretation rather than to the facts. There are another 10 persons or so whom the government could hire as executive assistants from among the members of the press gallery and that would be the end of that. If anyone doubts this, I suggest that they take a look at some of the people who have been hired by the government departments.

I always thought that a newspaperman received a fairly good salary. Perhaps he receives more as an executive assistant. It is certainly a smoother job with no deadlines, and perhaps one can become an expert in this field more easily than in the newspaper field. This raises in my mind the question of how the people are to really know what is happening in Parliament. As an example, I might refer to the question period. The questions presented by members of the press to Members of Parliament are pretty poor questions. The executive secretaries to the ministers already have the answer before the question is asked because of their previous experience. I think this is a reflection on all of us and perhaps we should find another way to obtain questions.

The fact that there was nothing in the budget, and the fact that very little has been said in the newspapers and other media about the budget, does not mean the budget will have no effect on the public. In my opinion it will have a detrimental effect. There is no relief for Canada's poor. A number of people have pointed this out. We have decided in Canada that the poor should become poorer and the people on higher incomes should become more affluent.

I should like to see the government undertake a study to determine how much tax the old age pensioner pays. Anyone who maintains a house will know there are considerable hidden taxes which he must pay. He must buy paint or material to repair a step or a floor, and so on, and he pays a tax on this. Every time he buys something he pays a hidden tax. It is surprising to me that the tax the old age pensioner pays is the same as the tax paid by the very affluent person. Of course, one can only drink and smoke so much and one can only buy so much for his daily needs, and the amount is almost identical in the case of those who have and those who have not. The poor person percentage-wise pays a very much higher tax than the more affluent person in the middle class. What protection is there for those in this class? It is interesting that the old age pensioner and those on fixed incomes pay the same tax on clothing as anyone else pays. Perhaps it is not possible to arrange things otherwise.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is taking a free ride for a two-year period. He announced in the white paper that the personal exemption will be increased to $1,400. This is not to become effective now but rather in 1972. It would seem to me that such a concession would affect many people between the age of 60 and 70. As we know there is an additional exemption for people over age 70. But nothing has been done for many people who depend on the old age pension. There is no indication that anything is to be done for those on veterans pensions. The committee which has been investigating this matter has been faced with the whole matter of the Pension Act and the proposals made by the Woods Commission. The government should be implementing increases in the war veterans' allowance and in war veterans' pensions. The government has indicated it is not capable of controlling the rising cost of living and is attempting to apply the brakes. From my point of view, and from the point of view of many Canadians, this obviously is a myth because the government is not putting on the brakes. The Minister of Finance has stated that he has not been able to apply the brakes on salaries or wages. But he has been able to apply them to the old age pension. The cost of living goes up 4 or 5 per cent and the old age pension goes up 2 per cent.

I mentioned the press a moment ago. It is interesting to note the lack of conclusions reached by some of the columnists. I should like to refer to some of the things they said about the budget. I have here an article written by Anthony Westell in the Toronto Star of March 13. This is what he said about the Minister of Finance and the budget:

> But he offers nothing to the thousands of Canadians who pay taxes into his coffers despite the fact that their earnings are below the poverty line.
> Benson can't be blamed for rising prices; there are no new economics as yet to show him how to master the new inflation. He is probably right when he says he will be satisfied to cut the rate of price increase this year to about 3 per cent.
> But Benson can and should be blamed for not helping the Canadians on fixed incomes who are the victims of the inflation.
> Consider, for example, the effective tax on the 800,000 Canadians who draw basic old age pension and a guaranteed supplement because they lack private means.
> Their income rose from $109.20 a month last year to $111.41 this year—the maximum 2 per cent increase permitted by the law—which is $2.21 a month.
> Now Benson tells them the purchasing power of their new pension will fall at least 3 per cent or $3.43 a month.
> So the inflation tax on pensioners is around $1.20 a month. Benson does not impose it, but he lets it happen.
> All in the public interest of battling prices, he assures us.
> It's bad enough that we have to combat rising prices by deliberately wasting economic resources —by putting some men out of work so that others will fear for their jobs and reduce wage demands, and by slowing down the factories to persuade businessmen to cut costs.
> This economic squeeze will cost us billions in lost production this year because the economy won't grow as fast as it could.
> For every $4.80 in real growth last year, there will be growth of only $3 this year, says Benson, adding that he can't put a total to the sum yet.

Farther on he says:

> In fact, it is difficult to escape the impression that in this budget, Benson is really marking time, waiting to see which way the U.S. and Canadian economy will move in the next few months. And that the threat to control credit is mainly a gesture to show that he is still serious about fighting inflation if he has to—a psychological ploy to conceal the fact that there is nothing much in the budget.
> Nothing much except the refusal to extend a helping hand to those most in need.
> Benson is, of course, proposing to make a massive transfer from middle income to lower income groups in his tax reform next year. But that is 12 lean months away, and it is strange that he should have refused a temporary transfer this year from his surplus.
> Perhaps it is not too late. Many Liberals had anticipated at least a pension boost in the budget, and will be bitterly—and politically—disappointed.
> They should use their new freedom and muscle as participating backbenchers to persuade Benson to change his mind about the budget, as he is willing to do about tax reform.

So, the author of the article states the problem fairly clearly but comes to no conclusion except to say that perhaps some backbenchers in the Liberal party will take a stand. He does not recommend that they take a stand but says that perhaps they will do so because they have new muscle as backbenchers. If they have it, I fail to see that muscle exercised in the House, although I see a lot of it in the various committee meetings which I attend. It is interesting to note that when the committee recommendations come to the House, those members sit on their hands rather than stand up to be counted on the side for which they previously spoke.

We are living in difficult times. There is no doubt that inflation has been and is a problem. It is also a fact that nothing much has been done to curb it. It may well be true that we are so closely tied to the United States' economy that we cannot do anything about inflation. I think this raises a major problem which should be faced in the budget statement by the Minister of Finance, if he is worth his salt.

I would like to quote again the same writer, this time on another matter on which he is more specific and on which he comes to a conclusion, but again his stand is not too definite. I suggest to him that working as he does for the Toronto Star he should find it very easy to take a stand in between elections—although his article may not appear at election time—because he will find much support from small "l" liberals who read the Toronto Star and share its views. He refers to a rift which has appeared among some Liberal backbenchers concerning the Canadian economy, and speaks about the Canada Development Corporation. This is what he says:

> The development corporation was first conceived by former finance minister Walter Gordon as part of his 1963 package of policies to counter the steady take-over of Canadian business and resources by U.S. capital. It was supposed to mobilise Canadian capital as an alternative to the growing foreign investment.

I should like to say that that statement is not correct. The Canada Development Corporation was an idea that was developed at the New Democratic Party convention in 1961. Many of the people who participated in the development of the New Democratic Party later became executive officers of the Liberal party. Some of them are now members of this House, and several of them are members of the cabinet. At that time many members of the elite in the province of Quebec supported the idea of the development of the New Democratic Party and were also interested in the development of the Canada Development Corporation, an idea which was later picked up by others and interpreted in a number of ways. There is still great division among Liberal party members regarding the Canada Development Corporation. The article goes on to say:

> As president of the Montreal Stock Exchange in 1963, Eric Kierans played a leading part in destroying Gordon's program. Today he is communications minister and believes it would be a great mistake for the corporation to sell shares to the public or to become owner or controller of any Canadian business.

Let me say that he is not too damn good with one of the businesses we already have in Montreal, and if he does not smarten up he is going to be out of that business as well. The article goes on:

> Kierans suggests that the corporation should use government funds to buy secured bonds in Canadian enterprises needing capital. The private owners would put up the risk capital, control the company and take the profits.
> But should the government tax Canadians, including corporations, to raise money for the corporation to lend to other Canadians for business purposes, with no degree of control or share in the profits?
> In the era of giant corporations, drawing on vast financial and managerial resources and operating across national borders, some Liberal thinkers see the corporation as Canada's best chance to compete with U.S. companies. They would like to see the government provide the framework and the initial finance to mobilize money and talent to give Canada a chance in the big league of world business.

• (5:20 p.m.)

> This would mean direct state intervention in business, and would not be acceptable to more conservative Liberals who still put their faith in free enterprise.

Then, there is a heading, "A Radical Version Appears." I should tell him it predates the last radical version.

> The New Democratic Party, meanwhile, has appropriated the corporation idea, and written a radical version into its own program. It would require all financial institutions and corporations to put part of their resources into Canada Development Corporation bonds, and the development corporation would be an agent of government, directing investment, expanding public ownership, aiding regional development, organizing mergers of small business into large, efficient units, and providing scientific, technological and managerial expertise to private industry.
> As the Liberal party often responds to pressure from the Left by taking over some of the N.D.P.'s ideas, it is reasonable that some Liberals will associate themselves with this concept of the Canada Development Corporation.
> When Gordon first proposed his corporation seven years ago, it was considered dangerously radical and was bitterly attacked by private business interests. Today, the Gordon blueprint looks mild in comparison with some alternatives.

The government will have to go ahead in many fields. This afternoon we heard some criticism of and some support expressed for regional development. There has been considerable criticism of the recent announcement concerning designated areas. I am not too clear what designation will mean for the new areas encompassed by it, but it certainly means one thing to the members who represent those areas.

I was interested to hear their statements on this matter. I was interested to read the minister's statement on his proposals, as reported in the press, and I am interested in the reaction shown by some of the provincial governments concerning this new designation. I will be interested in seeing how it develops. But,

Mr. Speaker, having lived in and represented a designated area for a number of years, it seems to me that the mere fact of designation is in itself no answer. Expertise will be required. Capital will be required, and scientific planning to provide initiative for industry. The latter is lacking today. I may be wrong, Mr. Speaker, but to my knowledge the original development program cannot claim responsibility for establishing one new industry. Certainly, it assisted many industries, but it did not initiate any. The strength of the program will be discovered by going back to the original proposals, picking out slow growth areas and creating vibrant municipalities in them.

According to the minister's recent proposals, if a municipality wants to up-grade its industrial potential the federal government will lend the necessary money to the provincial government for the development of the municipality's services, in order to encourage industrial development. This will go down well in those provinces which have already decided on this course of action. But there are a surprising number of areas in Ontario in which the provincial government has gone it alone, and it is surprising that the province has shown great reluctance to co-operate with the federal government in developing other areas. Much expert advice will be required.

There is one particular problem in my area which may soon reach crisis proportions, and the federal government is not being the least bit fair about it. The federal government has not really made any public declaration of whether it is going to close gold mines in Canada this year. I am not sure of the role which gold is playing in the Canadian economy at the present time. Neither are many economists sure of that role. But we know that gold is an export commodity. Last year it made us about $7½ million, discounting the subsidy paid on it. Further, we hold gold in our own country. Gold still plays a role because there are certain purchases which must be paid for in gold. But as you know, Mr. Speaker, the gold mining industry has been supported for many years by the provisions of the EGMA, which now support about 30 mines at an annual cost of about $14 million.

In this connection it is interesting to note that mining communities are divided into three categories. First, there is the community in which gold mining may be the sole economic base. If gold mining is closed down, then obviously the community closes down too. In many cases this may mean that 500, 600 or 1,000 families will be left on welfare because there is absolutely no other type of industry available for that community. If the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) were to rise in his place and say that the EGMA. would be discontinued, and that the government had designated this first category of mining community as areas requiring special assistance and was ready to start moving industry into them, then all would be well and good. People in those communities would express considerable support for the transfer from the gold mining industry to secondary industry. But such a transfer simply cannot be made by the manpower program retraining gold miners, because most of these people are over the age of 47 or 48 years.

Many of these people do not speak much English. Their educational standard is very low, and they cannot be retrained. Their educational standard cannot be raised to that of Grade 10. Many of them have not attended Canadian schools. Their familiarity with our written language is very limited. They have been employed in this one type of industry all their lives, and their ability for retraining is limited.

Then, there is another class of community where the impact will be very heavy. It is the area in which gold mining is partly responsible for upholding the economy, and here I speak of places like Timmins and Kirkland Lake where there are other types of industry but not sufficient to support the communities if gold mining is closed down. Here the retraining problem is exactly the same. These people cannot be employed in different types of mining. They are too old to be retrained. I am sure other mining firms would not accept them because they have spent their lives in silica mines, in hard rock mining, and other companies would fear the necessity of providing silica pensions for them in later years.

The last category of community is the most recent on the scene, and it is difficult to forecast the impact on it. Here I speak of mines such as McIntyre, the Ross Mines, and others. I am speaking of mines in northern Quebec and in the upper Kirkland Lake area. They are gold mines, and during their underground development substantial bodies of copper were discovered. They have both a gold operation and a copper operation run in conjunction with each other. I believe that in many cases their gold operation is supporting a very uneconomic copper operation.

But if the price of copper continues to rise their copper operations will prosper, and there will be no difficulty. However, I am fearful that in certain cases if EGMA is discontinued their copper operations will also come to a stop. I think that the Minister of Finance should have made a reference to this matter in his budget. The EGMA, which is renewed every three years, is destined to be retired at the end of this year unless reprieved. Numerous task forces have been looking at this whole problem, including one interdepartmental task force, and another task force within the Department of Mines, Energy and Resources. The municipalities, mining communities and mining companies are all afraid that this will mean the end of gold mining in Canada. I think the minister had an obligation to refer to the matter in the budget so that an opportunity could have been afforded to those concerned to act before the deadline arises. The workers in the maritime coal mines, in the Dunlop Company and in other enterprises, have made pleas for assistance in the hope that action can be taken on their behalf by municipalities and Canadian citizens.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this budget debate because I believe in the age old theory that a nation's possibilities are always far larger than its problems. The day we lose sight of this in this House or country it will be a bad one for this nation and its people. I think it is good that we should rise in this House, complain about our problems and tell the people in this House and the country about those problems. It is also good for us to tell the people of this country that some good things are being done. The story should not be one sided. I think the news media has a great responsibility in balancing both sides of the story.

Mr. Peters: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hopkins: May I quote a sentence from the writings of Alfred North Whitehead, who said:

> The love of humanity as such is mitigated by violent dislike of the next-door neighbour.

Sometimes in this chamber we seem to fight in our debates, occasionally, with members across the floor. Sometimes the people may think that we dislike our neighbours in the House very much. Those impressions are not always true. Let it be said that there is a reasonably good rapport among hon. members on all sides of this House. In the last four years, many items of legislation have been brought before the House and, on looking back, it is sometimes difficult to say whether one has achieved anything. It ought to be remembered that much is accomplished here in committee meetings, through consultations with ministers, and through discussions with other hon. members of this House.

One of the good things that happened last summer was the announcement by the Department of National Defence that the old H hut, the only H hut still left at CFB, Petawawa, was to be torn down. The hut was the military hospital. If any member of the armed forces was not depressed when he entered the hut he certainly was when he left it. The new hospital is in the process of being built and will be ready soon. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) is to be congratulated for putting this project through.

Another thing I have been fighting for in the House and outside it, throughout my riding and on the news media is the regional development of the Upper Ottawa Valley. My colleague for Lanark and Renfrew (Mr. McBride) teamed with me in the House and sponsored a resolution asking for something to be done. By utilizing such tactics hon. members can hammer away with their demands for their areas. They illuminate the problems of their constituents. A similar procedure is used by hon. members from all parts of the country, from the Maritimes, the Prairies, and by those representing fishermen and farmers. There is absolutely nothing wrong with such procedures. I say that once you start a fight you should continue it.

On December 15, 1969, in speaking on the resolution sponsored by the hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew, I said in part as reported at page 1986 of Hansard:

> I can say in all sincerity that as long as I am a member of this House representing an Ottawa Valley constituency, come what may I shall be fighting the battle for designation and improvement plans for this area.

I want to say on behalf of the people of the Upper Ottawa Valley, and my colleague for Lanark and Renfrew will go along with me, that we appreciate the action taken by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) in including our area in the 22 special areas of this country that have been listed. The designation is very important to us because, as you know sir, we have experienced some tragedy. There have been fires in the area. We have not benefitted in the general industrial expansion of the 1960's. We have unemployment. Recently the forestry industry in our area was attacked, but the attack was more emotional than realistic. We believe that the recreational and forest lands of this country can be put to multiple uses; they can be used for tourism and for industry as well as for other economic purposes, such as recreation. We think we can all live together very well.

This country is governed under the British parliamentary system of government. We can fight as much as we want within the confines of our parties, but not on the floor of the House. Because a man has fought with his party is no reason for him to feel disloyal to his party. So far as I am concerned, I have fought this battle of designation and regional development for four years, but had no intention of leaving the party. I ran on the Liberal ticket; I am a Liberal and I will remain a Liberal.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Hopkins: I am grateful to the Liberal party because it is the only party which has done anything to foster the development of the Upper Ottawa Valley.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member is contradicting himself.

Mr. Hopkins: May I answer that comment, Mr. Speaker. The Tory administration which was in power between 1957 and 1963 was defeated because it did not do very much. If the present government is ever defeated, it will be because it is trying to do too much for the country.

Mr. McGrath: Now that, Mr. Speaker, is really illogical.

Mr. Hopkins: One matter must be brought to the attention of the legislators in this House. I am speaking of the serious shortage of medical doctors in the rural areas of Canada. We are reaching a stage today where in many rural areas of Canada there is no longer a practising doctor. People must travel miles to see one. We must give serious attention to putting more money into medical schools. We should take a good look at the high standards demanded by the medical profession. Adequate facilities must be built in our universities to permit more students to enter the medical schools, and to provide medical services for the Canadian people. In my area there is a shortage of doctors.

There has been talk about regional development under the old Area Development Agency Program which ended last December. Even with assistance from the federal government under the ADA program 95 per cent of new industries started during those years went into the major urban areas of Canada. Only 5 per cent were in the smaller towns and communities. This present program must be emphasized because Canada cannot afford to have massive urban areas such as New York City or Chicago which are faced with pollution problems, social problems, transportation problems and all the other factors that go with massive urbanization.

There are vast opportunities in Canada. We in this House have the responsibility of diversifying the economy and trying to spread industry throughout the country. We must assist the rural areas to develop. Employment must be provided in the small communities. Assistance should be given to reorganize the farm communities so that the young people may get into the farming business. In this way the great flow of young people could be diverted from the urban communities. This would assist one of the major problems, that of housing.

I wish to deal briefly with the housing problems of the Canadian Armed Forces. On April 1, 1969, a statement was made that there would be a blanket increase of $15 per month in the rent for married quarters on DND property. At the end of this month I understand there is to be another across-the-board increase of $15 a month. I am a great admirer of the present Minister of National Defence. He has done a great deal to assist the armed forces, including maintaining their morale. I hope whoever is holding the purse-strings will reconsider this matter and give some assistance to this minister and to the armed forces.

I wish to put forward what I feel is a constructive recommendation. I would like to see a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence visit military establishments across Canada to see the type of married quarters that are available. I am sure they would realize that across-the-board rental increases are unfair because some dwellings are very good, others are certainly only average to say the least. If we are to be fair to the members of the Canadian armed forces living in these houses, we must assess rent on the quality of the dwelling.

We like to talk about finances, Mr. Speaker, when it is favourable to us. We hate to talk about finances when the situation is not favourable, but these are the facts of life which we must face. From listening to speeches in this House and on television, I have almost come to believe that it is sinful to pay your bills and have a surplus. Is it wrong for a country to be in a healthy financial situation? We have a national debt! We have bills which cannot avoid being paid! We have made commitments for which we must provide funds! I wish to remind the main critics of this budget that it is better to have a surplus in 1970 than to repeat what happened when Her Majesty's Opposition was in power. There was approximately $990 million in the unemployment insurance fund at that time. During their administration they not only depleted that amount, but additional funds had to be added. I do not consider that to be responsible financing. Canadians are proud people. They like to pay their bills. There is no sense trying to be good boys today and then being in a serious financial state tomorrow. It is a hard fact to face, but responsible people must face it.

When watching a television program a few weeks ago of a massive meeting in Toronto, chaired by John Hull, head of Public Relations Services Limited, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan)—who was successful in defeating a very eminent Canadian in the last federal election,—was asked the blanket question, are you or are you not in favour of the white paper? I think that is the most ridiculous question which could be asked of any individual on any platform with regard to a document covering as much ground as does the white paper. There are many parts of the white paper which are good; there are others which in my opinion could stand improvement. But let us get this straight: it is, after all, a white paper, not legislation, and the present government is, to my knowledge, the only government which has had the intestinal fortitude to put out a white paper on financial and taxation matters for discussion by the general public. This is an innovation in Canadian politics. I do not mind all the mail I am getting on the subject. I am getting lots of mail, and I intend to answer it. Let it not be forgotten that the document is intended for discussion by the people; it is not a fait accompli.

I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is not in the House now but he was here today. I do not intend to attack him in his absence from Ottawa in the same way as hon. members opposite attacked my leader when he was absent from the House in the North a short while ago. The Leader of the Opposition has been travelling across the country complaining about the white paper. That is his privilege. He is saying that if some parts of it are implemented he will repeal the legislation should he get into power. Thus, he is building up his image as a responsible financier. I am not saying he is not a responsible financier, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to remind the Canadian public that at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, there is a monument in the shape of a heavy water plant; it has been built since 1963 when the hon. gentleman was premier of Nova Scotia. To date, $110 million has been sunk into that plant by Nova Scotia and it was supposed to have started production a few years ago. So far, however, it has not produced a single thing. Now, we are told that a further $30 million or $40 million will be required to repair this plant and put it into shape. This will bring the total up to about $140 million. I hope the time is not far distant when this plant will begin to produce, because we are in a serious situation in this country as far as supplies of heavy water are concerned. My own constituency is affected as far as Atomic Energy of Canada is concerned.

My point is this: the Leader of the Opposition is going around the country trying to convince the Canadian people that he is an expert on taxation and other financial matters. Let him at the same time explain, particularly to 760,000 good people in Nova Scotia, why he spent $110 million of their tax money on a project which to date has not produced even one pound of heavy water for this country. Is this evidence of solid financial sense?

An hon. Member: What about the Bonaventure?

Mr. Hopkins: We could go into many things. If the hon. member wishes me to quote something I will be happy to do so. This is an item taken from the Charlottetown Guardian of June 28, 1969. It is headed: "Glace Bay Heavy Water Plant requires $30 Million Face Lift". It reads:

> A report on the Deuterium of Canada Limited heavy water plant at Glace Bay, N.S. says the plant will need substantial modification before it can be brought into production, Premier G. I. Smith of Nova Scotia stated Friday.

The report goes on to deal in detail with the items I have mentioned.

I always like to see prominent members of the opposition coming into my constituency and speaking at annual meetings of opposition parties. I have a rather interesting document here. This quotation is taken from an item which appeared in that eminent paper, the Pembroke Observer of January 29 of this year. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) was the guest speaker at the annual meeting of the Renfrew North Progressive Conservative Association. I will give him credit for this—I understand he told his audience that the present sitting member was not such a bad fellow. But then he went on to say:

> Both Len Hopkins (Renfrew North) and Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew) spoke on a private members' bill complaining that eastern Ontario had been overlooked, but they might as well have been talking to a stone wall. The government doesn't listen to members on its own side of the House, let alone to opposition.

I wonder what the hon. member thinks today, six weeks later, now that the very area in which he was speaking is receiving special area status.

My colleague in the provincial legislature has also been taking me to task. It is great fun when you are under fire and the other guy is on top. You have to take advantage of the situation when you can, because you know the day will come when you will get the same treatment. The hon. member for the provincial riding of Renfrew North stated at the same meeting:

> I suggest to Mr. Hopkins that when the province decided to have an equalization of opportunity plan we didn't go to the federal government to ask it to set up plans for us.

What Mr. Hamilton did not say was that, according to the Canadian constitution, the economic development of this country is basically the responsibility of the provinces. I disagree with this constitutional element. Mr. Hamilton should not be putting the blame on the federal government when his own government should have been doing more for the economic development of the province.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I base my reason for obtaining an unanimous consent on the fact that during February unemployment in Canada increased from 6.1 per cent to 6.5 per cent of the work force, the culmination of a steady rise during the past several months.

What is particularly alarming is the government's refusal to take positive action to increase employment, and specifically to take steps which would enable:

1. A greatly expanded drive to increase exports, and thus create more jobs.

2. The introduction of tax incentives to increase productivity so that our products will be more competitive, sell more readily, and create more jobs.

3. The Bank of Canada to give the lead in lowering interest rates, so that lower costs will lower prices, increase sales, and increase jobs.

I therefore ask leave to move the following motion under Standing Order 43:

That this House, comprising the elected representatives of all the people of Canada, consider and recommend a more effective method of increasing exports, productivity and sales, and thereby increase employment in this country.

I might add that since a number of important questions are involved in the motion which is to be considered by the House today, in the event of my being given unanimous consent to put forward this motion Your Honour might consider having it debated tomorrow, because the motion is of such importance that it deserves a full day to itself.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members know, of course, that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings cannot be put to the House at this time unless there is unanimous consent. I must inquire whether there is such unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Some hon. members agree but others express disagreement, and because of this the motion cannot be put.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—ALLEGED ABDICATION OF RESPONSIBILITY BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the failure of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings to get unanimous agreement to proceed with his motion, I should like to ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the abdication of responsibility by the government toward the unemployed and those who will soon face unemployment by its failure to implement policies to reverse the staggering increase in national unemployment and the critical increases in certain regions of this country as revealed in statistics released today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has filed the notice required under Standing Order 26. Since receiving this notice I have given the hon. member's proposal very serious consideration.

It is hardly necessary to remind the House that under the terms of section 5 of Standing Order 26 the Chair is required to have regard to the probability of the matter in question being brought before the House within a reasonable time; in other words, that there be an opportunity for debate within a reasonable time.

I do not think it is possible for me to overlook the fact that we are currently engaged in a budget debate. The wide-ranging discussion which characterizes this debate normally provides an opportunity for discussion by hon. members of problems which are of national concern. Indeed, many of the speeches delivered in the course of the debate which started on Monday of this week have dealt with the continuing problem of unemployment. This continuing debate will, of course, provide the opportunity for debate contemplated by section 5 of Standing Order 26. In the circumstances I would not think the Chair could justifiably put the hon. member's motion to the House at this time.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—INTERPRETATION PLACED ON CERTAIN WORDS BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of an observation made last night by the Minister of Finance on a national television network, an interpretation that was false in every particular.

Yesterday I asked for the production of certain figures, as I had over and over again. These figures involved criticisms of the government's white paper on tax reform. The minister wanted to send over to me what he said were coupons. In reply to that observation—and these were my words—I said that I wanted the numbers, and that there should be no specialized count by the government of what it wished to produce in answer to my question. The minister proceeded to interpret my views in a way that indicated—and I am not going to place it on Hansard—the level at which most of his thinking is done.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COPE WITH INCREASED UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the latest unemployment figures now indicate a rate exceeding 6 per cent for the nation and as high as 11 per cent for the Atlantic provinces, which I believe are the highest over-all figures in some six years, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether his government is now considering some selective measures to expand employment, as is now being done in the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member should know that we have many types of measures to expand employment and to release from the over-all anti-inflationary fight of the government those areas where unemployment is high. The federal government is putting hundreds of millions of dollars through the regional economic expansion programs in precisely those areas which have to be helped.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is pretty clear that the effects of the negative policies of the government in those areas are far exceeding any benefit from any positive policies. With regard to the country as a whole, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention to pursue a policy of increasing unemployment, particularly in view of these figures and in view of the prediction made by the Minister of Finance in his budget that unemployment would increase, by proceeding with the proposed restrictions on consumer credit?

Mr. Trudeau: Is it the intention of the hon. member to stop beating his wife?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Look, he is joking and smirking.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Why don't you at least try to act like a Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would now agree that it is the policy of his government to deliberately create unemployment in the course of fighting inflation?

Mr. Trudeau: What does the hon. member think?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the construction industry probably has a greater economic multiplier effect than any other industry in the country, is the government giving any consideration to reintroducing the hospital construction grants and vocational training school construction grants and extending the housing program in order to reduce the very serious level of unemployment which has now reached well over half a million?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, some days ago the minister responsible for housing indicated that the budget for housing would be considerably expanded.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that unemployment has now reached 6½ per cent and the cost of living in February had gone up 5 per cent over last year, I should like to ask how much higher the cost of living has to go and how much more unemployment must we have before the government will recognize that its program is not working and reverse it?

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As unemployment has continued to rise at an accelerated rate despite the government's program which the Prime Minister has mentioned, are he and the government now willing to consider the constructive propositions and proposals put forward by the opposition for increasing employment through constructive measures?

An hon. Member: What are they?

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—USE OF WORKERS FROM OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the figures that have just been stated regarding unemployment, could he advise the House whether it is still his intention, as in other years, to import and bring into Canada people from offshore countries such as Jamaica, France and Belgium, particularly in view of the difficulties that students are having in finding employment this summer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we propose to continue bringing in a relatively small number of labourers from the Caribbean. We do this because the Canadian labour market is not capable of providing for this need at the particular time. I do not regard this movement as one that is taking jobs away from available Canadians. If I did have that view I would not support the program.

Mr. Hales: I have a supplementary question. Would the minister give the unemployed people in Canada the opportunity to fill these jobs?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, there is a very heavy seasonal demand for labourers in agriculture, especially in Ontario. Every effort will be made this summer, as has been done in the past, to recruit Canadian employees where they are available for these job openings. My hon. friend can be assured of that.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. Does he not now consider—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Hees: I will be back.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—SPEEDIER PROCESSING OF INSURANCE CLAIMS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Would the minister increase his already good efforts to try to persuade the Unemployment Insurance Commission to expedite even more the handling of unemployment insurance claims which is a very serious problem in the industrial areas.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the Oshawa area we have already taken steps in anticipation of the predicted lay-offs due to the model changes. We will do everything possible to reduce the 2 per cent of claims that are not processed as expeditiously as all of us, including the Minister of Labour, would like to see them processed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—TRAINING AND RETRAINING OF YOUNG PEOPLE—PAYMENT OF ALLOWANCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of the questions on unemployment. In view of the fact that by far the largest group of the unemployed are very young people between the ages of 14 and 19, would the minister inform the House how soon we may expect the changes in the law and regulations affecting training and retraining and the payment of allowances to those persons obtaining retraining so as to remove the three-year waiting period for allowances and the other obstacles to the training and retraining of young people?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall not enter into a dispute about the statistics of my hon. friend, although I draw a slightly different interpretation from the unemployment figures than he does. I would say, however, in respect of his question that, as he knows, it is a most fundamental question relating to the distribution of available funds among the work force capable of taking training. At present consultations and research are being carried on with the provinces. We expect advice from the National Advisory Council on Manpower and Immigration. If any change is indicated, we do not feel it would be wise to make a fundamental change until we have had the best possible advice from these two sources. In other words, I do not expect a decision at an early date.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that, if my memory serves me right, some weeks ago the minister indicated that changes in the rules along this line were being contemplated, does the minister's answer now mean that such changes are not being contemplated but that he is waiting for some advice from somebody?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. I should like to check that recollection of my hon. friend. We have under very active consideration changing another rule with regard to the manpower training program, namely, the length of time during which a person may take training, and we have made some other changes. But with regard to this very basic change, no decision will be taken at an early date and not until we have the most complete information we can obtain.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a question. I am sure he must be disappointed that the figures in respect of employment in the Atlantic provinces are lower than they were a year ago. Does he feel that this is due to any failure on his part or rather that it is due to the arrogant and brutal policies pursued by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for St. John's East.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—SUGGESTED EMERGENCY PROGRAM FOR QUEBEC AND ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that the program announced by the minister last week will not take effect in time to meet the current crisis, is the minister prepared to implement a program such as the winter works program to cope with the seriously high rate of unemployment in the province of Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces, which forecasts indicate will be even higher for the month of March?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, even if we were considering something like the winter works program it could not be implemented overnight. As a matter of fact, I believe we can achieve, through our special areas program, at least as much as could be done with the winter works program, and as quickly, and I see no point in seeking another formula at present.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—ADVANCING OF PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. About three weeks ago I asked the minister whether, in view of the fact that housing starts in Saskatchewan have dropped from 420 a year ago to 18 this year, advances have been made in the public works program—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether this is a supplementary question. Perhaps the hon. member might continue, but if the question is not a supplementary the Chair would normally give the floor to the hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Korchinski: If Your Honour will allow me to follow through with the question you will realize that it is very much a supplementary as it is related directly to the unemployment problem. Has the minister a report to make to the House indicating what projects have been advanced, as he indicated would be done, so that the unemployment problem may be solved? Could he also indicate at this time whether, in view of the fact that many people have moved from Saskatchewan to places like Toronto and Edmonton, such cities will fall into a special category?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is perhaps too long, but now that he has asked it the minister might wish to reply briefly. However, I do not think he should make a general statement at this time.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is quite prepared to answer.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated to the minister that he should reply but I have invited him not to make a statement at this time.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): We are putting together a number of projects from a number of departments within the government, some of the work being anticipatory. We expect to make an announcement very shortly with regard to work that we can do in Saskatchewan.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Given the government's monetary and fiscal policies, is the Prime Minister happy with the current rate of unemployment or is he disappointed that it has not risen further?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think a question seeking to ascertain the degree of the Prime Minister's happiness or disappointment can be accepted at this time.

An hon. Member: This is his day to sulk.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Does he not consider that unemployment has reached such sufficient degree of seriousness that he should treat it with something better than sly smiles and wisecracks, the way he does in this House every day as if he cared nothing for the unemployed people of this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the unemployment statistics released today and the trouble which will be faced by students in finding summer employment, can the minister assure the House he will be making a statement on motions before the Easter recess regarding student and youth unemployment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I cannot give an assurance that I will make a statement but I can assure the House we will be getting jobs for students this summer and hope to do as well as last summer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I notice there are five or six hon. members who are seeking to ask further supplementary questions. I would like to suggest that we might give a few other hon. members an opportunity to ask their questions, following which we will return to this very important and urgent problem. I think that in fairness we should now recognize the hon. member for Shefford.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE—STEPS TAKEN BY INQUIRY COMMISSIONER

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, as the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications is not in the House, I shall direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Since the appointment of the commissioner of inquiry to solve the postal dispute in Montreal, does the Prime Minister believe that the action taken by this investigator will lead to an early settlement of this dispute?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I hope so, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation in connection with the program of wheat inventory reduction, or is the government intending to limit its authority to the rather meagre and sparse details of the vote appearing in the Supplementary Estimates?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the inventory reduction program there will be a number of regulations, both in connection with the item in the estimates referred to by the hon. member and also in connection with the Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Baldwin: I was really referring to legislation. Possibly the minister might refer to that, Mr. Speaker, but I have a supplementary question as well. In view of the very serious allegations which have been made in the other place by a distinguished Saskatchewan fellow citizen of the minister, is it the intention of the minister to make a statement on motions outlining his views as to the legality of the procedure which is being adopted, and in making this statement will he indicate whether he consulted with the other former law professors, who are colleagues in the House, at the time the program was being arranged?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, of course in connection with any program such as this legal opinions are taken in advance. I do not have any intention of making any statement on motions to rebut what may, for all I know, have been a fairly offhand opinion.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS AND REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister without Portfolio. In view of the fact that western farmers must make their decisions now on spring seeding plans, can the minister inform the House if regulations implementing the government's wheat acreage reduction plan will be issued prior to Easter, and will these regulations be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture in view of concern about their constitutional validity and the degree of effectiveness of the program?

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am not yet sure about the exact time for release of the regulations or the adopting of them. Of course we are trying to bring them forward as soon as possible, and we are very much aware of the importance of having them available as early as we can.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—REPLACEMENT BY ACREAGE PAYMENT

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister without Portfolio. In view of the fact that the DBS farm questionnaire shows that the farmers intend planting 18 million acres of wheat this spring, and thus the apparent failure of the government's wheat acreage reduction program, would the minister consider advising the government to drop the program in favour of an acreage payment in proportion to farm size, in order to make a more equitable distribution of the funds available?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has drawn what might be described as a fairly important erroneous conclusion from the DBS estimate. That estimate was based on the conclusions of farmers largely made before the program itself was announced. The DBS figures, however, did show that a very large amount of acreage was apt to move out of wheat into other crops, and the need to hold this acreage out of production rather than allow it to flood other areas of the market has emphasized the importance of the governments' program.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the DBS figures indicate that the farmers have already decided to reduce wheat acreage by 26 per cent, on top of the 15 per cent reduction last year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member is entering the field of debate with the minister. If he has a supplementary question, perhaps it could be asked now.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was just getting to my question. Would the minister also give consideration to maintaining the present delivery quota system, instead of using the Wheat Board to coerce the farmers into following an unworkable plan of using summerfallow as a basis of wheat delivery?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member for Regina East had a supplementary question.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—FURTHER ACTION TO STABILIZE FARM INCOME

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a considerable portion of the increase in unemployment announced today took place on the Prairies and is due to agricultural conditions, is the government presently considering any further plans to stabilize farm income in addition to the plan announced by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang)?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—AMENDMENT OF CASH ADVANCES LEGISLATION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that farmers must soon decide on their crop planting plans for this year, does the minister intend to introduce legislation to amend the cash advances legislation, which will have to be changed if farmers are going to follow the plan announced by the minister?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the cash advance legislation as it exists will continue to apply, and the eligibility of farmers for cash advances will therefore continue to be based on the wording of that legislation. The cash advance system itself will be continued.

Mr. Korchinski: As a supplementary question, for clarification—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will have to go on to another subject in a moment, but the hon. member for Mackenzie may have a supplementary and then I will recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Korchinski: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the wording of the cash advance legislation relates to the total cultivated acreage rather than summerfallow acreage or other specified acreage, does the minister not feel that that legislation should be amended at this time so that farmers will know whether they qualify for cash advances or not?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in fact the cash advance legislation refers to acreage in such a way that it will be possible to operate the legislation in connection with the program, with the delivery opportunities based on the acres specified for that purpose in the permit book.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—COVER CROPS—QUOTA SYSTEM FACTORS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister without Portfolio whether the regulations for the wheat acreage reduction program will allow farmers to put in cover crops rather than summerfallow? Further, will the minister advise whether under the new quota system consideration will be given to farmers who reduced their wheat acreage last year, and to farmers who have no wheat carry-over?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to include provision for cover crops within the regulations, allowing a farmer to put in a cover crop after July 15, a cover crop of any type provided he does not harvest it, and still count the land as summerfallow, or to put in a cover crop of oats early in the year provided that crop is turned down or cut prior to July 15.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT REGARDING POSSIBLE ACTION BY QUEBEC

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion uttered government policy last night, when he went outside his own field and stated that so far as a certain provincial government is concerned that, unless it has an over-all majority, any action by it that is not acceptable to the federal government will be subject to veto, and if the provincial government carries out its threat to act, having taken office and having the support of most of the members in the legislature, there would even be armed intervention on the part of the federal government?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without conceding that this reflects anything that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion might have said, I might say in reply to part of the question of the right hon. member that this certainly is not a statement of goverment policy. This government has no policy regarding separatism, except that it will not happen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister say that this outrageous doctrine the minister uttered, which actually violates our constitution, will not be carried into effect? This new form of veto announced by the minister, which would change the constitution, is something I have not heard before, and I thank the Prime Minister for saying that the minister was talking through his hat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SPECIAL AREAS—AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion as to how many provincial governments have concluded agreements with the federal government in relation to the special areas program, and the minister replied that "there are no formal agreements on this." In view of his statement on March 11 that the first of these agreements will be signed with Newfoundland and New Brunswick very shortly, I would like to ask him how many provincial governments have now signed agreements with the federal government on this program?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer is exactly the same as yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

ASSISTANCE TO GLACE BAY HEAVY WATER PLANT

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. In view of reports that heavy water will be rationed among Canadian atomic energy plants, will the minister say if the government is now prepared to grant assistance to the government of Nova Scotia to finish the Glace Bay heavy water plant?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, discussions are continuing with the province of Nova Scotia in this regard but there is nothing to announce at the present time.

Mr. Thomson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister been able to find out if we can get heavy water from other sources for our atomic energy plants?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think we have been able to acquire some heavy water from other sources to help carry us over the short period, we hope, when we will have a shortfall of heavy water.

SHIPBUILDING

COMPLETION OF ROBERTSON INQUIRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Further to questions that have been asked from time to time about the Robertson inquiry into shipbuilding, can the minister now say when this government, industry-based investigation will be completed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I shall inquire, Mr. Speaker, and answer this question next time.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister replies will he go as far as he possibly can to indicate the disposition of this report and what the government intends to do, because of the very heavy lay-offs in what little is left of the shipbuilding industry in Canada and the fact that the men are leaving this industry and are leaving the country?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a suggestion to the minister which he has to assume will be taken under consideration.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—RELATIONSHIP TO ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious condition of unemployment, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. Perhaps he does not hear me, but I will ask my question any way.

Could the Minister tell us whether he is in favour of increased unemployment as a means to help the Minister of Finance check inflation?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that the question is acceptable in those terms.

HARBOURS

COME-BY-CHANCE—PROVISION OF DOCKING FACILITIES FOR OIL REFINERY OPERATIONS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister say whether a decision has been made on the application from the Newfoundland government for a substantial loan to provide docking facilities at Come-By-Chance?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say when a decision will be made on that application?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Shortly, Mr. Speaker.

POLLUTION

DETERGENTS—LEGISLATION TO LIMIT USE OF PHOSPHATES

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has any decision yet been made concerning legislation to limit the use of phosphates in detergents in Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the manner in which we will legislate to achieve this end which I have announced has not yet been determined, whether it will be a separate bill or an amendment to the Canada water bill, but we hope to have a decision on this question very shortly.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister make an announcement concerning this matter so that the committee on resources will not be involved in an exercise in futility, if an amendment is not to be made to the Canada Water Act?

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

CONVENING OF COMMITTEE—SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would address my question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Government House Leader. Would the minister make arrangements to convene the Committee on Procedure and Organization just as soon as possible? With your permission, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to explain the matter briefly to the minister because the estimates are before most of the committees for discussion and some uniformity is required as to the procedure. Attempts have been made in some committees, and I speak from personal knowledge, to prevent opposition members making any statements whatsoever in the discussion of estimates.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that the Procedure and Organization Committee held its organizational meeting yesterday and apparently discussed its plans for the balance of the session. I would remind the hon. member that I suggested yesterday to the House that it should make a general reference of the question of procedures to the committee so that it could carry on with this study but that his colleagues refused.

OIL

STRAIT OF GEORGIA—ISSUANCE OF DRILLING PERMITS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): My question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker, and I hope we can get a definitive answer to a question raised this morning in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Have permits for oil drilling in Georgia Strait been issued by the federal government or, to his knowledge, has the government of the province of British Columbia taken any action in this connection?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, they certainly have not been issued by the federal government or my department, which would be responsible. To the best of my knowledge there have been no provincial permits issued, although I could not speak authoritatively on this subject.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIAMEY CONFERENCE—FOUNDING OF FRENCH-SPEAKING CULTURAL AGENCY

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Since conflicting accounts are reaching us from Niamey and since the Prime Minister is certainly informed by the representative of the Canadian government, could he tell the House whether information he has received allows him to guarantee that a cultural agency will be formed at the end of the conference in Niamey?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Obviously, I cannot give this guarantee, Mr. Speaker. The issue depends on the discussions that are going on over there. Canada's position is quite simple. I hope hon. members of the opposition will support it and will agree that only Canada, a sovereign state, can participate as a member in international conferences.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the House whether it is true that Canada has categorically turned down the French proposal, which would mean that she would not participate in the cultural agency that would be established?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if I can answer this question without knowing exactly which French proposal is being referred to. Several have been made. Indeed, amendments and subamendments have been proposed. We would have to know which one the hon. member has in mind.

CRIMINAL CODE

APPROVED BREATHALYZER CONTAINER

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will his quest for an approved container under the breathalyzer section of the Criminal Code soon be over?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): We are still looking, Mr. Speaker.

TORONTO—CLOSING OF DUNLOP PLANT—CO-OPERATION WITH PROVINCE IN FINDING ALTERNATIVE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the discussion that the minister had last Thursday with officials of the trade union from Dunlop Tire and his subsequent telegram to the Dunlop Company on Friday morning requesting company officials to enter into discussion with provincial and federal counterparts to determine whether the plant should remain open, I wonder if the minister has received an answer to that telegram and, if not, what further steps is he planning to take?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The telegram which I sent, Mr. Speaker, was directed to the Minister of Trade and Development and the Minister of Labour of the government of Ontario indicating to them the representations I had received from the union officials and offering the co-operation of federal officials if, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, they decided a feasibility study or a study of the economics of the plant was justified at this point. To date, I have not received a reply.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In his discussions with the provincial ministers is the minister making the suggestion or raising the question of the desirability of having legislation at either the provincial or federal level which would make it compulsory for companies to show economic justification to employees for the closing down of a firm?

Mr. MacEachen: My communications did not cover that point, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SPECIAL AREAS—DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister assure the House that the old pork barrel system will not be used in designating funds—

An hon. Member: Newfoundland.

Mr. McGrath: We know all about it in Newfoundland; we have a Liberal government there.

An hon. Member: Good point.

Mr. McGrath: Can the minister assure the House that the old pork barrel system will not be used in designating funds under the minister's special areas program—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member realizes that a question cannot be asked in those terms. Perhaps it might be rephrased.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, it was an extreme provocation, Your Honour must admit. According to the announcement made by the Premier of Newfoundland, as found in the current issue of Maclean's magazine, $14 million of the $20 million designated for Newfoundland under the special areas program is to be spent in the riding of the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I want to get an assurance from the minister, Mr. Speaker, that moneys spent under this program will not be spent under the old barrel system of political patronage.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry but the question, even as rephrased, cannot be put. I am sure the hon. member realizes that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister wishes to rise on a point of order.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I only want to tell the hon. member that 75 per cent of the special areas are represented by Progressive Conservative members.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. The hon. member for York South.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: Does that mean they are not considered?

Mr. Speaker: May we have order? Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I have ruled there is no point of order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for York South. The Leader of the Opposition is seeking the floor. He will be recognized after the hon. member's question has been asked.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS AND CAMBODIA—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES RESPECTING DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): If I may change the subject, Mr. Speaker, I will direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the very dangerous developments in Laos and Cambodia, is the government considering making representations to the United States government to avoid making Laos and Cambodia into another Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate under these circumstances that Canada should support any international efforts in this direction. This we are prepared to do.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government asked its representative in the area on the International Control Commission, who I understand would now be our person at Saigon, to keep careful watch over developments and to advise the government as to steps that may be taken to avoid a further escalation of the war in Indo-China?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is exactly in this kind of endeavour that we have been frustrated. If we had been allowed to operate as the International Control Commission was intended, it would have been possible to report violation of the ceasefire long since. We have been prevented largely because we cannot get the co-operation of the other members of the commission and partly because we have not been allowed access into the areas controlled by the Pathet Lao, for example.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

ARCTIC WATERS—RECOGNITION BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the recent United States announcement that 60 per cent of the coastguard budget will be used to build a fleet of icebreakers, has the minister been able to ascertain from the United States government whether this means they do not recognize our sovereignty over Arctic waters?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: May I be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to ask the President of the Privy Council what interesting propositions he has to place before the House between tomorrow and April 6, both inclusive?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can indicate with regard to tomorrow that we will be proceeding with the report stage of the bill with respect to supplementary pension benefits, government order 81. The business for next Monday and Wednesday will be announced, depending on progress on that particular matter. As already indicated, Tuesday will be the final allotted day of the period.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the minister consider using his considerable influence, about which he is so modest, with his colleagues on the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to use the estimates of the House which are before that committee as a means of securing a full and adequate discussion of those procedures of this House which have been the subject of discussion and need some examination?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the more orderly way of proceeding, particularly in relation to a committee dealing with the Standing Orders, would be by way of a general reference from the House of the kind I suggested yesterday and which I hope the hon. member might be prepared to accept.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the Government House Leader consider discussing with his fellow House Leaders the terms of reference of such a motion?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could draw the hon. member's attention to the suggestion I made yesterday. I will be glad to have his comments on the terms of reference set out there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, anything like that ought to be put before us in writing.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is already before the House in writing, Mr. Speaker. I should point out to the hon. member that Hansard is printed these days.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 18, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 5051).

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, there is one particular subject I want to strongly emphasize in this budget debate. Parliament, and indeed all Canadians, should take note of the attack being made today on a very important segment of the Canadian science community.

At Rolphton, Ontario, there is a nuclear power demonstration plant which was built by General Electric for Ontario Hydro. Advice on this project was received from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Some very damaging remarks are being made today in certain parts of Canada with regard to nuclear power stations and these are reflecting on our science community. Canadians should be proud of the achievements of the people in our Canadian science community, particularly in the nuclear field. I refer to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The professionals of Atomic Energy have contributed greatly to the installation of nuclear power stations which will produce hydro power in Canada. They have schools to train their technical people.

The science community of Canada has come a long way. What concerns me is that if this propaganda and these attacks continue against the technical and professional people of Atomic Energy and other segments of our science community, it is going to hurt our image abroad. These attacks are undeserving and should not be directed toward this responsible group. From time to time during the last five years this plant at Rolphton has in fact been producing electric power for the town of Deep River.

I now wish to deal with the subject of housing. I wish to congratulate the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) in charge of housing for the provisions he has made for the people in the low income brackets of this country, namely those earning less than $8,000 a year, who qualify for CMHC loans. Those people in Canada wishing to purchase a home are told to obtain a mortgage under the National Housing Act from their bank or an approved lender of their choice, and that CMHC will be pleased to consider it for insurance upon submission to it by the lender. I have received representations from people in my area. I am sure other hon. members have also received these representations. The lending institutions are not providing funds for those people in the salary bracket over $8,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I have to inform the hon. member that his time has expired, unless there is unanimous agreement that he may continue.

There is no such agreement.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some comments on the course of this debate, some observations upon the minister's budget.

I should like to begin by dealing with the impression the minister tried so hard to give that there were no tax increases in the budget. This is a false impression, because when inflation takes place and money incomes increase, it means that many Canadians will not only be paying higher taxes, but paying a higher rate of tax—having got into another tax bracket—notwithstanding the fact that in real terms their incomes may even have declined. Others will find that the value of the exemptions has been still further eroded. Again, Canadians who in the past have been considered not sufficiently well-to-do to pay income taxes, will find themselves paying tax as a result of inflation, as a result of an increase in their cash incomes, though they may well have suffered a reduction in terms of real income.

It is nonsense for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to pretend there is no increase in the rate of tax projected for the next fiscal year. It is nonsense in the light of the fact that for the next fiscal year he has predicted an unpredictable increase in the cost of living—an unpredicted decrease in the value of the dollar. The minister may have made no change in the former rates of tax, many Canadians will find themselves subjected to increased rates of taxation, even though they may have enjoyed no increase whatsoever in their real incomes. This might be called: How to raise income tax rates without even trying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister did not forecast the degree of inflation expected to take place in 1970. He hopes it will be less than in 1969 when it was something over 4½ per cent. The figures we have seen so far this year indicate a substantial increase in the cost of living during the current year. When the minister presented his budget in the spring of 1969 I believe he forecast a rate of price increase of about 3½ per cent. Of course, he turned out to be very wide of the mark.

There is a long tradition of bad estimating, bad prediction, on the part of this government. About the time I entered this House I recall the former Minister of Finance, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) predicting in the budget for 1968-69 that the increase in government expenditure would be held to 4½ per cent. In fact, the increase turned out to be more than twice that amount. Then, during the financial crisis of February and March, 1968, which some people will remember, we were given a firm assurance by the present Minister of Finance, at that time President of the Treasury Board, expressed in the following terms as reported in Hansard of February 13, 1968:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to guarantee to the House that after the supplementary estimates are introduced during the year, and the year has ended, with the normal lapses which always occur, we will hit our $10.3 billion ceiling and will balance the budget this year.

Later, following the election campaign, in October of 1968, the minister said, after some introductory words which I do not need to quote, "This will leave a substantial deficit of $730 million." He was referring to the same year. It may be that following the tradition of his predecessor the hon. gentleman proved himself a sufficiently bad forecaster to be appointed minister of finance.

This year, after such a record, the minister is not making any predictions about the amount of the increase in the cost of living. He seems to have given up predicting. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, there are a good many of us who would like to see him give up being a minister. Let me say this: it is nonsense for the minister to try to pretend there is no increase in the rate of personal income tax in Canada this year. In fact, there will be a substantial increase, the amount depending upon the degree of inflation which takes place.

All this follows substantial increases in recent years—substantial but sneaky increases in taxation in 1967, 1968 and 1969. Of course, in the budget presented in the spring of 1968 a surtax of 3 per cent was imposed on both personal and corporate incomes. Last year, in the fall budget of 1968, the minister imposed an additional 2 per cent social development tax, limited to a total maximum—

Mr. Benson: No.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in 1968 a surtax of 3 per cent was placed upon personal and corporate incomes. In 1969, the minister added a further 2 per cent social development tax. All this was in addition to the substantial increases in personal income tax brought about by continual and serious inflation. So, there have been severe increases in rates of taxation in addition to equally severe increases which have been brought about by inflation. I say these things in order to provide a little background to the budget which the minister has presented.

While he was preparing that budget the Minister of Finance knew perfectly well that the ordinary Canadian taxpayer has been getting a double whammy for the last two or three years. He has been subjected to explicit and overt increases in taxation and he has also been subjected to increases in the rates of taxation, as a consequence of inflation. The minister also knows perfectly well that the value of any exemptions has been substantially eroded. The real value of the $1,000 and $2,000 exemptions, for example, has been very, very substantially eroded as a result of the policies of this government.

With this background of experience and with the outlook that the minister was projecting, one that included a further increase in prices, a further increase in the cost of living and further increases in real taxation, I say that a very reasonable thing for the minister to do would have been to give some tax relief to those on low incomes.

I had suggested that the minister should provide in his budget for tax rebates to those who are below the poverty line as defined by the Economic Council of Canada. I am advised that to provide relief simply to them, that to take those taxpayers off the tax rolls, would cost some $85 million a year. I am not talking at the moment about changing exemptions or about what would be involved in changing exemptions; I am simply talking about providing a tax rebate or a tax credit for those who are below the poverty line. I am suggesting that the minister should have proposed this as an interim measure pending the adoption of some more far-reaching tax reform.

If the minister were not prepared to go that far, then he should at least have been prepared to go some of the distance. He should have been prepared to do something that would give some relief to the taxpayers at the lower end of the scale. But far from doing this, the budget that the minister has presented, in the context that he has projected—the context of higher prices—really envisages not relief for the low income earners or receivers but higher rates of taxation than those that existed in the past.

Then, there is the situation of the aged, which is well known. The adjustments provided are limited to approximately 2 per cent per annum of the basic pension of $75 a month. We all know that the cost of living has risen substantially more than this 2 per cent of $75 in each of the last several years, and there is no need to elaborate on this point. Here again, the budget of the Minister of Finance increases the burden placed on many of these people. But above all, the government has absolutely refused to make any change that would permit the GIS to be adjusted, at least in accordance with the cost of living rate.

A few weeks ago, in response to a question, the minister of health stated he had told the provinces that if they were prepared to supplement the old age security payments of the government of Canada, then the government of Canada would bear 50 per cent of this cost under the Canada Assistance Act. Any member of this government ought to know what chance there would be of this being done in the less well-to-do provinces, particularly in those provinces that are struggling to join the federal government's medicare program. This is a very unfair proposal, a proposal that I would say could hardly be put forward seriously, and one which was obviously beyond the reach of a good many provinces to accept. So much for the just society.

I suppose the minister justifies all this as being necessary in the fight against inflation. I suppose the minister will say that there is no group in society that has more to gain as a result of the government's bringing inflation under control; that there is no group in society that has more to gain by seeing inflation is limited; that there is no group hurt more by inflation. It is true that there is probably no group in society that is being hurt more by inflation. There is probably no group in society less able to protect itself against the rigours of inflation.

I would ask the Minister of Finance and the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp), why it is necessary in this country of ours, of which we are so proud, to ask these older people to bear such a disproportionate burden, such a disproportionate share of the real, actual cost of fighting inflation in this country. I say there is no justification for this burden. This government, like the laissez-faire Liberals of the 19th century who objected to factory legislation that was designed to limit hours and conditions of work in the factories on the ground that this interfered with the workings of the unseen hand, these so-called middle 20th century Liberals, also object to doing something to take a little of the load off the backs of the elderly people on the ground that do to do so would interfere with the government's fight against inflation. What poppycock, Mr. Speaker!

I say that it is not necessary for the aged to suffer. I do not think the older people, or any of the rest of us, have to accept the "guff" that it is necessary for the elderly to suffer in the best interests of the country. This situation is not good enough. I should like to hear the Minister of Finance explain why it is necessary for these older people to bear this burden; why it is necessary for them to bear the brunt of this in the interests of fighting inflation. I hope that the minister will explain this not only to my satisfaction but to the satisfaction of the people of this country.

I have something harsh to say now, Mr. Speaker, but there are times when harsh things should be said. I do not want to direct my comments solely to the Minister of Finance; they have to be directed to, and accepted by, the whole government. I say this government is tramping on the faces of the poor and helpless of this country today. Look at what they are doing. Look at what they have done. How has the government fought inflation, apart from the ineffectual action they have taken, judging from the 1969 figures and the latest 1970 figures? What methods have they employed?

Traditionally they have fought inflation by raising taxes, particularly income tax. This, of course, has encouraged Canadians who pay these higher taxes to push for higher salaries or wages in the hope of being able to offset these higher income taxes that they have had to pay. Income taxes have been put up not over a period of just one year or two years, but each year that we have had inflation.

What is the other method that the government has been using to fight inflation? They are great people for putting some slack in the economy. The former Minister of Finance, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), said in the fall of 1967 that this government was prepared to put some slack in the economy if this were necessary to fight inflation. Since then, this has become almost a fetish with the government. It has become virtually a theme with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said a while back that he was prepared to accept an unemployment rate of 6 per cent. That is exactly what he has got today, the highest rate in six years. I heard the Prime Minister say it is unfair to accuse this government of deliberately creating unemployment to fight inflation. What is unfair about it? What could be a more exact description of what the government is doing? If one follows a policy of slowing down the economy, it is inevitable that this will create unemployment, and one must accept the consequences of one's actions and intentions. This is certainly a deliberate intention.

We now come to the budget of the Minister of Finance. Is it not fair to say that the main thrust of his budget was to create more unemployment? I read the darn thing and I listened to him. I was trying to figure out why he presented such a budget at all. The only reason I could ascertain was that he was trying to convince the country he was going to create more unemployment and explain how he was going to do it. Otherwise he should have just filed some tables and let it go at that. He has done this although there is no excessive demand. I do not think there is anybody, including the Minister of Finance, who really argues that inflation in Canada is the result of excessive demand. The Economic Council of Canada pointed this out last summer, and that council received a severe attack from the Minister of Finance for making that statement. I think since then the Minister of Finance has pretty well had to agree that inflation is, in fact, not the result of excessive demand. I do not believe the Minister really pretends that it is.

The white paper—not the infamous white paper on taxation—of 1968 on the subject of inflation pointed out that the methods which had been pursued by the former Minister of Finance, and up to that point by the present Minister of Finance, were not satisfactory. That white paper recommended the appointment of a prices and incomes commission to advise the government as to how to fight inflation. Many times since that commission was established the government has pretended that the commission is really responsible for leading the fight against inflation in Canada. This has been the pretense and the refuge of the government practically every time anyone has asked the government a question.

The Prices and Incomes Commission, particularly the chairman, has been very concerned about the amount of unemployment that would be created, and the length of time it would take to bring inflation under control, if the country simply followed the methods that were being pursued by the Minister of Finance to avoid this situation. It was to avoid the creation of unnecessary unemployment that Dr. Young recommended an attempt to effect an agreement on the voluntary restraint program. It was precisely for that reason he made this recommendation, and he made that very clear. I suggest that Dr. Young's point of view has obviously never been accepted by the Minister of Finance. This kind of guideline of restraint approach was rejected by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) in 1967 when he was the Minister of Finance. It has been pooh-poohed a number of times by the Minister of Finance in the intervening years.

The Minister of Finance buried the program or pronounced the funeral oration last fall when he said it would fail, even before the Prices and Incomes Commission had launched it. As I understand it, the purpose of this measure proposed by the Prices and Incomes Commission was to avoid the creation of further unemployment in the fight against inflation. This commission has gone to a lot of trouble and Canadians in business, as well as labour leaders, have also gone to a lot of trouble to try to formulate an approach and program to avoid the deliberate creation of more unemployment. It is very clear that the Minister of Finance is making the efforts of the Prices and Incomes Commission abortive, while at the same time saying that his program is supporting the recommendations of that commission.

It is obvious that the department and the Minister of Finance on the one hand, and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Prices and Incomes Commission on the other hand are pursuing different objectives. I assume that however little faith the Minister of Finance may have in the efforts of the Prices and Incomes Commission, Dr. Young and his colleagues have the support of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is pretty clear that there would be a serious split in the ranks of the government on this issue if they really understood what is going on and if they were not so preoccupied with some of the antics of the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Today we see alarming figures in relation to unemployment in the country. We know that in the United States, which has also been wrestling with the problem of inflation and is concerned about mounting unemployment, the authorities are starting to make moves designed to offset rising unemployment. Rather than making plans to inject more slack in the economy, the responsible authorities in the United States are considering something else.

I thought it was perfectly natural this afternoon, in light of these figures, to ask the Prime Minister a perfectly polite and reasonable question as to whether the Government of Canada was considering alternate measures under similar circumstances. What did I get for my pains? The right hon. Prime Minister's answer, which I hope does not reflect his attitude toward this problem—

An hon. Member: It does.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the budget of the Minister of Finance and his announced intention to create more unemployment, certainly the attitude expressed by the Prime Minister here this afternoon is anything but cheerful news for the thousands and thousands of poor Canadians who are going to be unemployed because of the policies of this government.

An hon. Member: He will be eating some of that white paper.

Mr. Hees: They have a good job until the next election.

Mr. Stanfield: Let us consider the poor Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). I am beginning to feel sorry for him. He is not here but he has been busy, he says, fighting regional economic disparity while his colleague the Minister of Finance and others have been busy increasing regional economic disparity.

The Minister of Finance may refer to his efforts to avoid this kind of problem by selective measures regarding government buildings in some areas of rapid growth. Some areas and cities, for example, Sault Ste. Marie, do not regard themselves as contributing to inflation. In any event, I do not think there is any evidence that the approach by this minister has been at all effective, and it is probably only his stubbornness that accounts for him continuing it for another year. In any event, there can be no doubt about this. The minister's policy of being selective in respect of the economy and his belief in the necessity for increasing unemployment, have surely been effective in the areas of slow growth. These policies have surely been effective in those areas, as these figures we have seen today testify. These are the areas which are most in need of encouragement and they are the areas where the economy is most sensitive to discouragement.

I say that anything positive that has been done by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in these areas of slow growth has been not only overshadowed but exceeded by this inconclusive program of the Minister of Finance. It is not merely that the unemployment figures on the Prairies are higher than they were a year ago, but that the actual figures for employment are lower. It is not merely that the unemployment figures in the Atlantic provinces are higher than they were a year ago, but that the actual employment figure is down. This indicates very clearly and very statistically that the Minister of Finance has been more effective in creating unemployment in those areas than the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has been in creating employment in those areas.

Here again, we have an example of two ministers working at cross-purposes to one another. I did not realize that the Minister of Finance was such a hard guy to get along with. I knew he fought with us, but I did not know he fought with everybody else in the government. Here he is pushing a policy which is at loggerheads with the policy of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) and at the same time is making it impossible for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to discharge his responsibility. The result is that, instead of reducing economic disparity the two ministers together have somehow succeeded in increasing economic disparity in Canada. Now, the Minister of Finance is not proposing just to allow this particular process to continue to increase economic disparity at the present rate; he is not satisfied to go along with more of the same. He wants to increase the pressure on the economy of the country.

Not only is the minister apparently not considering what the United States has been considering for a long time, not only is he not considering simply leaving things the way they are and letting the Prices and Incomes Commission try to work things out in the existing context for the time being, but rather he has to create more unemployment. Surely with the figures we have in respect of unemployment, not just in the areas of slow growth but across the country, it would have been reasonable for the Minister of Finance to at least have held his hand and said we will wait for a while and see what Dr. Young can do. Yet, the government is deliberately tightening the screws further, is deliberately putting more slack in the economy as well as deliberately creating more unemployment. Surely, this is sadistic. I think actually the white paper itself would be sufficient to slow down the economy if Canadians and others really believed it would be adopted or if it were bulled through and adopted.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance say they are tough. They say they will stand up to pressure. I say not only are they tough but they are stubborn and cold-hearted. I do not want to pick particularly on the Minister of Finance. I say the government is cruel to extract more income taxes from the poor at this time. I say that the government is cruel in treating the aged in this way when they are in need of relief at this time. I say the government is cruel in creating more unemployment at this time.

The government is pursuing a course in respect of the poor, particularly the aged, and the unemployed which would be unthinkable under any other democratic government in the world today. That is the state we have reached. Surely, this is not a just society. It is certainly a slack society in a sense. Surely, at least in the light of the information we now have, the minister will stand up in the House and tell us he does not intend to tighten the screws further. Surely, in the light of these figures, he will not tell us he intends to pursue the program to restrict consumer credit.

I think the minister ought to tell us what he is going to do to relieve unemployment, particularly in the areas of slow growth. I think he should tell us what he proposes to do with regard to the aged and not just fob it off by referring to something that will happen some time in the future. Surely, in a democracy when people are in difficulty it is important that the government show that it has a little concern, a little soul. This is important for our country. I plead with the Minister of Finance to reverse himself. I plead with him to consider the plight in which these people are and to consider the plight in which the country is.

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, the budget speech emphasizes the need to hold back expenditures at all levels to help combat inflation. I wish to take this opportunity to talk about a proposal which, if implemented quickly, would result in a saving or a deferral in spending of up to half a billion dollars. A new waterfront authority for Toronto is needed now so that we do not have to remain stalled in the past but reorganize and move into the future. An immediate restructuring of the Toronto Harbour Commission is essential and would lead to a substantial reduction in federal spending.

We have heard a great deal about the need for two-level or three-level governmental consultation and co-operation but little has been accomplished so far. Here and now, in Toronto, we have an excellent opportunity for four-level participation. In January, 1968, the Toronto Harbour Commission came up with a new and bold concept for the harbour and the central waterfront of Toronto. Seldom does a proposal contain opportunities to do so much for a city at so little cost and with so little risk, but it is bogged down by the same old jurisdictional conflict that plagues us so often when we seek solutions to our problems.

This is too important a project to be allowed to smother in confusion. We must take this opportunity to have a pilot project in inter-governmental co-operation and prove it can be done. It is easy to ask why they do not get together and co-operate. That criticism is easy to make and applies equally to international as well as domestic differences. We must find an answer which is acceptable to all. My colleagues the members for York North, Etobicoke and York West have all called for greater co-operation among the various levels of government. The hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) has suggested a new authority in respect of all airports in the Toronto area. In this case, I shall propose a solution which contains the machinery to encourage and perhaps force co-operation and bring about results.

The bill I introduced on March 6 respecting the port of Toronto would, if passed, overcome the silly political manouvering referred to in the Toronto Star editorial today, force the four levels of government to pull together as a unified force, overcome the existing jurisdictional snarl and, above all, assist in the quick implementation of the bold concept which is the Toronto waterfront plan. The plan provides for the rebuilding of the harbour and the construction of a new inter-city airport and a harbour city. Bill C-195 proposes that representatives of the province of Ontario and of metropolitan Toronto be added to the commission so that elected representatives of the four levels of government, along with a respresentative of the Board of Trade, would sit as members on a new Metropolitan Toronto Harbour Commission. The Toronto harbour affects these four levels of government—in truth it affects all Canadians—but at present only the city of Toronto and Ottawa are represented on the commission.

While all agree a restructured authority is necessary to move ahead, it should not be as complex as the one suggested last week by Ontario premier John Robarts. He called for the establishment of a committee with representatives from the province, the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian National Exhibition, Metropolitan Toronto, the city and the Toronto Harbour Commission. This would substantially bypass the federal government, and I endorse the Toronto Globe and Mail editorial of March 17 which warned that with a complexity of this order nothing would ever be accomplished.

I expect that very few of us appreciate the impressive and varied achievements of the Toronto Harbour Commission. It has been a proven success, but there are impelling reasons to update its structure so that it may provide a larger harbour and airport in keeping with the final quarter of the 20th century.

I should like to review the history briefly. A natural harbour was created centuries ago by a sand drift from the Scarborough Bluffs. In 1834, Toronto was incorporated and set up a department to administer the harbour under a harbourmaster. Development was hampered because the railways owned much of the waterfront. In 1852, a major storm caused a break through the sand and created what later became the eastern gap or the ship entrance. The western gap was commenced in 1907. The city recognized the need to develop the harbour, and the federal government considered it wise to do so in the national interest.

In 1911, the Toronto Harbour Commissioner's Act was passed which set up a commission to provide for administration and a conceptual waterfront development plan. On the application of Toronto city, the federal government passed the necessary legislation for their joint venture. The federal authority turned over to the commission the harbour, and all of its ownership including much of the harbour bottom, and the city gave up its docks and water lots. Since then the federal government and the city have been locked together as an economic and transportation unit.

The harbour boundaries were recognized in the act to be the east and west limits of Toronto extended into the lake as far as one mile south of Gibraltar Point, where the lighthouse is located on the island. The federal government contributed by building the western entrance, the ship channel and turning basin between the harbour and Leslie Street, the breakwater along Sunnyside Beach and, for some years, by dredging the eastern channel and harbour. The city supported the commission with substantial cash payments and guarantees for borrowing.

With this help the commissioners built Lake Shore Road, then Fleet Street, Sunnyside Park, part of the islands, a large industrial area in the vicinity of Ashbridges Bay between Cherry and Leslie Streets, the Island airport, at city cost, and later, in preparation for the Seaway, three new terminals. Since 1912 the commission has reclaimed about 1,700 acres of land on which the city now receives approximately $8 million annually in taxes. Many will be surprised to learn that in 1939 the Harbour Commission, as agent for the city, built Malton airport with Toronto and federal financing. All of this was accomplished by a five man group of commissioners, three of whom are appointed by Toronto city council, one by the federal government and the other by the federal government upon the recommendation of the Board of Trade.

In 1958, Toronto gave up the ownership of Malton airport to the Department of Transport in return for a 4,000 foot runway and an interest free loan to build a new hangar at the Island airport. In the last few years there has not been any significant spending by the federal government on the Toronto waterfront. Since the commission constructed the new eastern headland, dredging of the eastern gap has not been necessary. The commission has operated the port from fees and rental income and has, in addition, since 1963 carried the Island airport which has been operated at a loss for many years.

Although the Island airport is extremely busy with substantially more take-offs and landings than Malton has, the operation continues at a loss because of poor access from land and absence of modern landing equipment. It is more than apparent that the land is too valuable for such limited use and for a flying school.

In summary, the Island airport is obsolete. The city requires the land and part of the harbour shore to the north for a giant housing complex. The eastern gap is not deep enough for merchant ship traffic and must be replaced. An outer harbour must be built to meet today's demands and the inner harbour which is now out of date requires rebuilding in part and a transfer of other facilities to the outer harbour.

As I mentioned earlier, the commission in 1968 came up with a most imaginative but realistic plan for the development of the whole central waterfront. It deserves a place in Toronto's future. By an inexpensive method they propose to create these improvements by sucking sand from the shallow waters of the new outer harbour and by combining this dredged material with fill from construction sites to add over 1,000 acres to the waterfront. This new land would add to the Canadian National Exhibition ground, increase the recreation area of the islands, and help provide the site for harbour city to house about 75,000 people. It would make possible the modernization of the inner harbour, and would create a new outer harbour which would provide about 400 acres of dockage and give Toronto a new airport in keeping with today's demands.

These plans, as worked out between the commission and the technical and advisory representatives of the planning departments of the city and the province, have won the acceptance and praise of all who have seen them. Because of the excellence of the engineering, the acre cost is low and the whole scheme seems economically sound. The sand to be dredged from the outer harbour would help create land for the new harbour city, provide access to the new city and the recreation islands, and create the eastern perimeter of the new outer harbour and a new airport.

The eastern headland for the new outer harbour is now between two and three miles in length and is being built at a fraction of the cost of standard construction, partly through the utilization of fill but mainly because of new design which traps the sand and creates gentle beaches or slopes to protect the new land. This new eastern harbour boundary fulfills a double purpose in that not only does it trap the sand and create beaches but helps to protect and stabilize the shores of the island. The commission has now reached the point where it cannot implement its plans or even see where it is going until the Department of Transport decides to dredge the new eastern entrance and approve the proposed new airport.

In December, 1968, the then minister of transport abandoned the plan for major enlargement at Malton, and since then the department has been trying to find a good site for a second large airport. The decision about the harbour airport need not wait until that decision is made because it would be the city airport and complementary to other airport service.

Originally, the commissioners proposed an airport at the south west side of Toronto Island at Gibraltar Point. There were objections that the flight pattern was too close to the air approaches to Malton. As a result the commission now proposes that the airport be located on the east side of the new outer harbour at the east end of Toronto. They suggest a runway of 7,500 feet with an approach parallel to the shoreline, but over the water, and almost a mile off shore so as not to interfere with housing, and shorter runways for smaller, short take-off planes. I think it is most important for us to recognize that although the Island Airport has substantially more plane movements than Malton has, there have not been any complaints with respect to noise or pollution. Even the small jets using this airport have not caused any complaints. Surely, this is because the planes are smaller, and take-offs and landings are over water.

The suitability of such a location has already been demonstrated. Fear of large planes has caused objection, but certainly it is practical if it is limited to aircraft which will not exceed a noise level compatible with residential use a mile away. The travel time to Malton Airport, now almost as long as a flight to Ottawa or Montreal, will not shorten in the near future, but can only get longer. It is inconceivable that advantage should not be taken of this location, and without delay, for an intercity airport. Because it is a short-range airport, freight would remain with the trucking lines and the Malton Airport.

[Mr. Chappell.]

Toronto, or more properly Ontario, will require a second major airport but if the lakeport is developed now, the second major port could be delayed. After all, we are talking of perhaps a half billion dollars. A little delay would give us an opportunity to develop a rapid transit system which would make it feasible to locate it further out and as part of an over-all regional or provincial development, and on land not required for Metro expansion. A large new airport should not just be located because the land happens to be available.

Consideration must be given to planned regional or provincial development including housing, services and highways, and perhaps also one or more satellite cities along a new rapid transit route which would be generated by the airport itself. The harbour airport would be relatively inexpensive. Four hundred and fifty acres instead of thousands of acres would be sufficient, and could be assembled from reclaiming sand and the utilization of fill at an estimated cost of not more than $25 million. A regular land-based airport would cost many times as much.

It would service the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal passengers who make up perhaps 40 per cent of the Malton traffic. It would be flying transit or Go-Air. The majority of passengers travel less than 450 miles, with most around 250 miles. This would cover Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal and perhaps later Toronto-New York. It would relieve the traffic at Malton and thus allow that airport to become a transcontinental and intercontinental airport, which would satisfy demands for several years, at a tremendous saving to the federal government. It would relieve multiplication of flights at Malton where the planes take off and land over densely populated areas, and thus prevent the impairment of the quality of housing.

If we count the economy of time for the public, and the efficiency of the business people travelling the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal triangle, billions of dollars would be saved. The travelling time from a downtown hotel would be perhaps seven minutes. By use of computers at various locations in the city, all tied to a master computer, people could board airport buses at these locations and step from the buses with their baggage directly to the plane. By checking in at city locations and taking a bus or rapid transit to the plane, we could use existing on-shore facilities and thus avoid the customary delays found at an airport, and the cost of substantial off-shore building. It is too late to introduce this innovation at Malton, but there is no reason why it could not work for the new airport in the lake.

The U.S. Federal Aviation Report and other similar studies seem to verify that if deemed adviseable in future, a floating runway which would be further out in the lake could be tied to the first runway. This would only happen if technological improvements in noise and pollution control made it reasonable. Needless to say, such an airport would be of tremendous advantage to the Toronto business community and add to the desirability of Toronto as a convention centre. Cleveland has already demonstrated the advantages of a second downtown airport.

The whole development would provide Toronto with a new assessment of perhaps $2 billion. All of this is being held up by the jungle of jurisdiction. Although by the 1911 act the Commission became the owner of much of the harbour bottom, the federal-provincial agreement in 1960 muddied the waters to the extent that it is difficult now to say who owns the water lots to the west of the western channel, which is about south of Bathurst Street.

The plan was some years in conception and development but this will appear like a glimpse of time before we move to achievement unless the nightmare of jurisdictional conflict is solved. The Ontario government has commenced construction of Ontario Place on some of the land where the ownership is not clear, and has recently announced an intention to build Harbour City. Ownership or claims to ownership of the land upon which Harbour City is to be built lie with five authorities, the province of Ontario, the city of Toronto, Metropolitan Toronto, the federal government and the Toronto Harbour Commission. Right now the commission cannot go ahead with Harbour City until the federal government agrees to dredge a new eastern channel, and it cannot proceed with the land fill operations for the outer harbour and the new airport until the airport is approved.

The Department of Transport has a special group looking for a second major airport site and another group studying over-all aviation needs, but there does not seem to be sufficient attention to this problem, namely, the development of the Toronto waterfront. In comparing federal expenditure on the Toronto waterfront during the last five years with its expenditure in Montreal and Halifax we see that Toronto has received very little.

Recently the press reported an outcry against the possibility of planes flying over the eastern beaches, but I noted in a press clipping of December 16, 1969, that the De Havilland Company demonstrated that their new inter-city plane creates very little noise and pollution compared with present jets. I understand it is completely feasible to use the smaller and quieter 48 seat planes which will be ready by 1972.

The Harbour Commission has authority to expropriate and could perhaps proceed on its own, but on the other hand its record has always been one of co-operation and consideration for the needs of the community as a whole. In any event, however, it would still have to be financed by and be responsible to the four levels of government, and finally to the people. Again, according to the press, the major parties have been exchanging views, but will they reach a solution, and that soon enough, unless there is some definite and obvious approach?

In 1911, on the petition of the City of Toronto, the federal government legislated a joint venture between them which has worked amazingly well for almost 60 years. The Toronto Harbour Commission was the pattern for other commission ports. Now, it can be up-dated as a pattern for tri-level governmental endeavours. Metro Toronto and Ontario are, of course, equally interested.

The solution can be found in the three simple amendments to the Harbour Commissioners Act, contained in the bill which I introduced on March 6. In short they are:

1. The name of the act could be changed to the Metropolitan Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act or the Metropolitan Toronto Water Front Act.

2. Instead of the appointment of five commissioners, three by Toronto, one by the federal government and one on the recommendation of the Board of Trade, section 7 of the act could be amended to provide that one be appointed by the federal government, who should be an elected federal member from Metropolitan Toronto, one by the provincial government who should be an elected representative to the legislative assembly from Metropolitan Toronto, one of its elected members by Toronto Council, one of its elected members by Metropolitan Council, and one upon the recommendation of the Board of Trade.

3. Section 5 of the act could be amended to provide that the boundaries would be from the east and west limits of Metropolitan

Toronto. They could be extended later further to the west and to the east if deemed advisable. Needless to say, although the new commission would have full responsibility for the development, land created for parks or Harbour City would be turned over to Metro and Toronto. I just cannot imagine the Toronto Harbour Commission, or the province through its appointee, trying to take over and operate such a large part of the city.

I can understand some fear on the part of each government involved that they might be creating a monster they could not control but, on the other hand, all would be from Ontario and metropolitan Toronto and they would represent the city, the province and the country as a whole. They would be able to maintain constant liaison between the four levels of government and their technical and planning departments and the business community. They would hear the briefs, and have the power to act, but they would not be able to be unrealistic in that they would still require financing to some extent from the four levels of government and would still be answerable to the electorate. For those who are concerned about a blending of the costs or income of the various divisions of activity the authority, under its by-laws, could divide its jurisdiction into port administration and development.

Finally, I suggest that Toronto once again petition the federal government to have the federal act updated to meet present requirements. The first real step was the act of God which opened the eastern gap; the second was the petition from Toronto which produced the Toronto Harbour Commission Act in 1911. We cannot wait for another act of God, but Toronto could petition again for a change in the act. This single authority would relieve the fears recently expressed by metro chairman, Ab Campbell and Toronto Mayor William Dennison and I am sure gain their full support. I ask that the government adopt Bill C-195 as a government bill and have it referred to committee so that witnesses from the various levels of government concerned may be heard and, finally, the necessary legislation passed.

In conclusion, the purpose for this regional authority being so structured is to bring together in a practical co-ordinated way all the forces of government which operate in a geographic area known as the port of Toronto and to do so with a minimum of bureaucratic redundancy and financial outlay—only all the people would gain.

[Mr. Chappell.]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I sought to introduce a motion under Standing Order 26 to ask the House to consider the staggering unemployment figures released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics today. His Honour decided that the debate should not be allowed on the ground that the House is now discussing the budget and that this gave ample scope for discussing unemployment or any other question. I was perfectly aware, of course, that the budget debate was in progress. My purpose in introducing the motion under Standing Order 26 was in the hope that we could get the government to answer specific questions with respect to the unemployment situation and to outline what steps it intends to take to deal with it.

We have been debating this budget since last Monday and there have been no statements from any ministers of the Crown, except the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who introduced the budget. We have not heard from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) as to what his department is going to do about unemployment nor from the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) as to what changes are to be made in his program to deal with increased unemployment. We have heard nothing at all from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), whose responsibility it is to deal with the underdeveloped areas of this country, areas where the figures show that not only has unemployment increased but the number of employed persons has declined. This means that not only have we failed to provide jobs for those entering the labour market, but we have not been able to keep in employment those who were employed a year ago.

Surely, the House and the country is entitled to some statement from these ministers but they have taken no part in the debate, they are not here—even the Minister of Finance is not here. The only minister present is the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who was a former minister of finance. Like Frankenstein, he created the monster that he now sits and watches with misgivings lest it destroy those who created it.

The government cannot just sit and ignore this problem, Mr. Speaker. I think we have the right to insist that before this debate finishes we get a statement from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The government cannot continue to shrug its shoulders and present an attitude of callous indifference to the appalling situation which obtains in Canada today.

The figures just released are something to touch the conscience of every member of this House. We now know the unemployment figure for February, 1970 represents 6½ per cent of our labour force, that is 526,000 persons, up from 473,000 for February, 1969. When you get unemployment well over half a million, the highest unemployment we have had in Canada since 1963, and I think it is safe to say the highest unemployment figure of any industrial country in the world—

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not know of any other industrial nation in the world that has an unemployment figure even closely approaching 6½ per cent. When we get an unemployment figure of that magnitude we are talking about an economic recession. The tragedy is, Mr. Speaker, that this is a government induced recession. There have been times in the past when recessions have crept up on governments and taken them by surprise. There have been recessions which governments could claim were brought about by world conditions beyond the government's control. But here is a recession which the government has deliberately manipulated and precipitated. Last December, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the government was prepared, if necessary, to have 6 per cent unemployment—

Mr. Orlikow: He has got it now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —in order to carry out its anti-inflationary program. As my colleague, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said only a few weeks ago in this House, in all probability it would be more than 6 per cent—it would be 6½ per cent. Unfortunately, his prophecy was only too true and that is exactly the figure we have reached.

The Minister of Finance makes no bones about the fact that unemployment is one of the techniques by which the government hopes to stop inflation. In his budget speech he said that he anticipated some increase in unemployment. Then, he made this statement, which ought to be enshrined on his monument. He said:

> We just cannot tell how soon or how far the slowing of growth in demand and in production will bring about a slowing down in price increases.

I say to the Minister of Finance, who I notice has just come in—

An hon. Member: Now, he has just gone out.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In my opinion, this is the most callous statement ever made by a minister of finance. In essence, he says, "I don't know how much longer we will have to tighten the screws, how many more people we will have to throw on the scrap heap, how many more we will have to throw out of jobs or how much more economic slowdown we will have to perpetuate in order to stop price increases."

• (4:10 p.m.)

The Minister of Finance ought to enter this debate and tell the House how much unemployment he thinks it will be necessary to have before he will be satisfied and how long it will take before he comes to the conclusion that economic slowdown and unemployment are not going to stop price increases. If the government is going to persist in this policy, it must tell the House during this debate what it proposes to do about these unemployed people. Is the government prepared to create some employment by massive programs of construction of hospitals and vocational training schools? Both of these programs expire at the end of this month. The government could reintroduce them. The government could set up a housing program.

When I asked the Prime Minister earlier this afternoon about programs to help put the unemployed to work, he said there is extra money in the budget for housing. The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that not only is there not enough money, but that money alone is not the answer. Houses cannot be built unless interest rates decrease and unless funds are available.

Housing starts are falling off. That is because the average young people, unless they have an income in excess of $9,000, have no hope of ever building a house or ever paying for it. Until the government is prepared to present a program with lower interest rates and will make investment funds available, it is not going to get the kind of construction program that will put the unemployed people back to work.

What does the government propose? It does not propose to do anything except to sit on its dignity. I think it is time we took a moment to look at what these unemployment figures mean. First, let us see what they mean by provinces. I said a little while ago that the unemployment figure was 6½ per cent in Canada. In British Columbia it is 6.7 per cent. On the Prairies unemployment has risen from 3.9 per cent a year ago to 5.3 per cent in February of this year. This is the very area where crop conditions and the inability to sell the farmers' wheat has already caused economic dislocation. Unemployment in this area is at its highest peak in years. The figure in Ontario has risen from 3.9 per cent to 4.5 per cent.

In the province of Quebec the figure has risen from 8.4 per cent to 8.7 per cent. The Prime Minister talks a great deal about combating separatism. I, personally, think that the unemployment figures are much higher than the figures announced today. The fact that 8.7 per cent of the work force in the province of Quebec is unemployed will do more to destroy national unity and to bring about disintegration of Confederation than any other single thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The most dangerous thing that can happen in a nation is when any group of people gets to the point where they say, "We have nothing to lose". When a man is walking the streets, out of a job and with no prospect of getting a job, he will listen to any demagogue and any false proposition. If we want to promote national unity and hold this country together as a viable sovereign power, we have to see to it that the people in the less favoured areas of Canada have jobs and an equal opportunity to enjoy a good life.

In the Atlantic provinces in the month of February the unemployment figure was 11 per cent. Two weeks ago I was in Newfoundland where the figure is 13 per cent. I was told that in certain areas of Newfoundland the figure is 20 per cent. How can a spirit of national unity be maintained when certain parts of Canada feel that they are the Cinderellas of Confederation? They are a long way from Ottawa. They wait for some expression of the government's concern. The only expression they have had from the government is the shrugging shoulders of the Prime Minister and the assurance from the Minister of Finance that he will keep on turning the screws until price increases stop.

If this unemployment figure is looked at by age groups, it is more alarming. In the group of young people from 14 to 19 years of age, 13½ per cent of them are out of work. In the group of young people 20 to 24 years of age, the figure is 8.9 per cent; almost 9 per cent. Almost one in ten of these young people are unemployed. These young people have their lives ahead of them. They are the ones who will be responsible for the future of this country. When these young people are unable to find employment, we are storing up a great deal of trouble for ourselves. Of the more elderly people aged 55 to 64, 6.2 per cent of that group is unemployed. Unless these people get back to work, they will be unemployable. Not many of them in that age bracket will be able to get a new job. These people are likely to finish out their days on welfare.

It is interesting to note that the length of time that people are unemployed is increasing steadily. I refer to a question answered on March 4 this year, page 4364 of Hansard, which shows that the length of time that a person is unemployed has been increasing in the years 1967, 1968 and 1969.

This House should concern itself with the price that we are paying for the government's default. We should look at unemployment in terms of what it is costing this country. What is it costing this country in terms of lost production? The Economic Council of Canada, in one of its early reviews, said that every time we reduce unemployment by one percentage point, we increase the wealth production in Canada by $2 billion and that roughly one-third of that amount would find its way into the treasuries of the various governments of Canada.

The Economic Council of Canada said we should be able to keep unemployment at least at 3 per cent. If we could reduce unemployment to that figure of 3 per cent, we would increase the wealth production of this country anywhere between $6 billion and $7 billion a year, of which over $2 billion a year would find its way into the treasuries of the respective governments of Canada.

I listened the other day to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) accusing the members of the New Democratic Party of always wanting new programs. He kept saying, where will you get the money? Mr. Speaker, this is where we will get the money. We can get the money by using idle men and idle resources to create new wealth. We are throwing away $6 billion of $7 billion a year in wealth potential because this government has no program, no plan and no vision.

Unemployment is costing us money in terms of government expenditures. When you have 526,000 people unemployed it is costing the people of Canada money for unemployment insurance. For those who have used up their unemployment insurance benefits, there is welfare which is paid jointly by the federal and provincial governments. There is the cost of providing for those who have not been able to pay premiums for medicare and health insurance, the cost of providing them with health services. All this means a drain on the treasuries of this country.

But the real cost of unemployment has to be measured in heartaches; it has to be measured in terms of human misery, the frustration and the insecurity which it brings not only to the unemployed themselves, but to their families. What does it mean to families whose incomes are reduced, who may not be able to make the monthly payments on their homes, who may not be able to provide their children with advanced education? What does it mean in terms of frustration, insecurity, lack of dignity? How can these things be measured? Do they mean nothing to the government? I sometimes wonder whether any members of this cabinet ever in their lives walked the streets of one of the cities of Canada looking for a job. I doubt it. I doubt whether they know or understand how an unemployed person feels. I am sure that if they did they would concern themselves much more actively about this problem than they have done to date.

What does the government intend to do about this matter? There are many things it could do. I notice that in the United States, where unemployment has reached a figure of 4.3 per cent, a figure which the President of that country thinks is much too high, they are releasing additional funds for public housing, not only to provide homes but also to provide jobs. Does the government here intend to follow a similar course? When we stop and realise that in Canada we need at least two million homes and that we have all the material with which to build them within our own borders, we are bound to ask ourselves what has gone wrong. Mr. Speaker, if someone from Mars were to come here and find that we needed two million homes for our people, and that we had all the lumber and bricks, all the plumbing fixtures and electrical fixtures needed to construct those homes, that we had more than half a million people idle, but that we did not possess the initiative to bring those factors together, he would come to the conclusion we were mentally deficient.

The government has done nothing about unemployment. The Prime Minister answered us today by saying they were putting money into the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It is true they are putting some money into that program, but the program is being nullified by the hostile economic climate in which it operates. How does one induce new industry into the underdeveloped areas of Canada to start new projects if at the same time interest rates are raised, government programs are cut back and consumer credit restrictions are imposed? The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is trying to help the undeveloped areas of Canada pull themselves up by their boot strings. At the same time, the Minister of Finance is cutting the boot strings, so they slide back to where they were, or even lower.

All this restraint, both fiscal and monetary, which the government has imposed has been carried on, according to the government, in order to stop the cost of living rising further. I would consider it a very high price to pay for stopping the rise in the cost of living, Mr. Speaker. But it has not stopped the rise in the cost of living. In fact, in February, if one compares the figures with those of the previous February, it rose by more than the average for the whole of last year.

The Minister of Finance, in his budget statement, said himself there had been no slowing down in the rate of increase of prices, wages and other income. So not only have we imposed upon the most defenceless group of people in Canada, the unemployed, the burden of fighting inflation, but we have not even begun to win the battle. The reason we have not begun to win the battle is, in my view, that the government has wrongly diagnosed the illness from which the body politic is suffering. The government has mistaken the symptoms for the disease. It continues to follow the false assumption that this country is suffering from too much money chasing too few goods when, according to the Economic Council of Canada, 20 per cent of our population live below the poverty level and another 20 per cent just above it. It is not a question of too much money as far as a very large part of the Canadian population is concerned. This country is suffering from a maldistribution of income, and the budget does nothing to alleviate that situation.

As a matter of fact, it does the opposite. It continues to levy income tax on single persons earning more than $1,000 a year, or on married persons earning more than $2,000 a year, in spite of the fact that the level of those exemptions was decided upon in 1949 and that since then the cost of living has risen by 65 per cent. Imagine a government which recognizes that old age pensioners who need it should be granted an income supplement, and which then proceeds to make them pay income tax upon what they received. This is why we in the New Democratic Party moved an amendment to raise the exemptions so that no person would pay income tax if he earned less than $2,000 a year being single, and $4,000 if married. The government refused to accept it. There is no relief at all offered in this budget to those in low income groups. No attempt has been made to redistribute income, or, to lift the burden from the shoulders of pensioners or veterans.

A second factor which in our opinion is causing the cost of living to rise is the failure to properly allocate our resources. Rising unemployment accentuates the problem, because manpower is one of our most important resources and more than half a million people possess resources which are not being utilized.

The third cause of rising prices is that two thirds or better of our price structure is not responsive to market forces or influenced by the law of supply and demand, but is an administered price structure. The government has never dared tackle that part of the economy which is dominated by monopolies and quasi-monopolies that set their own prices, generate their own capital, and control a very large part of the market.

The unemployment situation today has not come about by accident. It is not something that has sneaked up on us. It is something that this government has deliberately fomented and perpetrated. I say it is nothing short of criminal for any government to create unemployment as a deliberate policy and then refuse to do anything about it. A government that is unable to provide jobs for its people is worthy of censure. But a government that deliberately creates unemployment and then is unable to meet the problems created by that unemployment is unfit to govern a country. I say that this government has a responsibility within the next few days either to present to Parliament a program that will provide jobs for the unemployed people of this country, or to resign.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the course of the proceedings on the motion of censure I introduced in the House on February 19 last, the attitude and the statements of certain Liberal members from the Province of Quebec amazed me.

At that time, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) upbraided me for having talked on poverty at some length. I admit that I did and I think it was my duty to do so. First, I must say that the problem does exist. Second, the question must be broached if we want to ascertain the causes, as it is not by deliberately ignoring a problem that we will make it disappear automatically. I do not think that having talked honestly about poverty could have aroused passions or been tantamount to demagoguery.

A far as the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) is concerned, he said that I was intellectually dishonest. I say to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that my intellectual honesty in the House cannot be questioned. When I deal with our farmers' problems, I am simply doing my duty. I never said that all farmers were beggars, but I must say I am tired of seeing that farm people always have to beg for their rights to be recognized and respected. As a matter of fact, this is one of the reasons why 25,000 producers of manufacturing milk have requested, through a petition I laid before the House on February 18, that an emergency debate be held on the milk situation. The purpose of that request was for those producers to obtain justice, and I think it behooved us to do what we did then.

Even though, on that occasion, the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) said that this debate was nothing but idle talk, I still believe in our parliamentary system. In my opinion, Parliament is the very place where representatives must discuss great problems such as the dairy industry in Canada. If the hon. member really thinks that it is useless for the House to discuss problems regarding the Canadian people, I wonder how he can justify his presence in this House. I have confidence in this institution and in its discussions and that is why I am taking part in the debate today.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks about the problem of agriculture. I want also to submit to the government some suggestions that I would have liked to make on the occasion of the debate I just mentioned.

Estimates for the year 1970-71 reduce by $10 million the subsidies for price support of manufacturing milk, and this reduction especially affects the eastern farmers, those from Quebec in particular. And I would like incidentally to congratulate the Canadian Dairy Commission as well as its officials who, while doing their utmost to manage efficiently the funds voted to them by Parliament, must necessarily distribute the grants according to quotas and allotments provided in the estimates passed by Parliament after a recommendation by the cabinet, of course.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) states that there is a surplus of dairy products and that it is to curb production that grants to manufacturing milk producers are being reduced. In my opinion, farm workers are really the only ones to be penalized for their efficiency.

Yet, there is a surplus of workers on the labour market, since the unemployed number over 400,000. And, as far as I know, salaries have not decreased for that reason. I am very happy that there is some legislation to protect the workers in the other sectors of the economy.

There is also a surplus of professional people. How many of them are unemployed? Yet, their fees are certainly not decreasing. If farmers are not given some protection against market variations, I wonder what we shall come to.

Since 1967-68, the number of industrial milk producers registered with the Canadian Dairy Commission has decreased by 70,000. What has become of them? Did they all manage to get a job in other industries or did they simply become welfare recipients?

I do not believe that it would be a good thing for Canada to carry on in this way. I think it would even be better to spend $1,000 to $1,500 per farm per year to assist these small industrial milk producers so that they could be proud of making a personal effort rather than pay them $2,500 in welfare benefits so that they can live miserably, deprived of any personal initiative.

Farms do not sell any more. They are abandoned most of the time by settlers or farmers who have improved them for the past 20 or 30 years. I know that in different parts of Quebec, some farmers cannot even give them away, when they had hoped to sell them towards the later part of their life in order to live decently.

Our country would still be better served by people concerned with helping themselves to a better life than by people obliged to stay idle. In my opinion, Canada cannot continue in this way. It is not economical.

Governments invite farmers to increase their production but when the effort has been made, they are penalized. This is the result of planning. The great planning experts seem to want to make a living the easy way. If that is their wish, they are fully successful.

The gap between the cost and the price paid by the consumer for a food product is wider than ever. Out of every dollar spent by the consumer, the portion of the farmer has decreased in every field of production. We must, therefore, come to the conclusion that the more the farm product is processed, the smaller the farmer's share.

Milk producers are not the ones to be held responsible for inflation. It is not with an average income as low as $2,000 per year that milk producers can buy anything at any price. On the contrary, they are the victims of inflation and the austerity measures of the government are a serious threat to their income.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) asks the people to produce more in order to flight inflation. That is what milk producers have been doing and the government is penalizing them for having complied.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few suggestions that could help us solve this tricky problem. I know the Minister of Agriculture knows some of those solutions and will influence his colleagues in the cabinet so as to bring the government to legislate as a true servant of the people, and not as a servant of high finance and economic dictatorship.

As regards the growth of purchasing power, I should like to congratulate the previous speaker for having dealt with this problem very intelligently and realistically. Indeed, he spoke about the lack of purchasing power among those who are really in need. I agree with all his remarks to that effect.

If sound common sense had its way, the purchasing power in families where the father is generally the only one to derive an income from his work would follow this rule: Equal work, equal pay. In a just society, one should add: everyone to his needs.

That is why I suggest family allowances should be increased according to the cost of living. That would be a means of increasing the purchasing power according to needs. Then, more dairy products would surely be used. To pay allowances, instead of taking the money out of the pockets of the consumer by levying new taxes, the government should authorize the Bank of Canada to issue new credits, based on that production. The Bank of Canada should be authorized to loan free of interest the funds required by the Canadian Dairy Commission; this would spare dairy producers having to pay tribute money to credit controllers, chartered banks and finance companies.

The Canadian contribution to foreign aid in the form of dairy products must not be paid by the dairy producers alone. It is said that generally speaking, two thirds of the world population are underfed. Our surpluses could perhaps be used to help those people. Industrialized countries spend an average of $12 billion a year for the development of underdeveloped countries. On the other hand, those same countries spend almost $175 billion on national defence. The poor countries are growing poorer, and the rich ones richer.

Thirdly, by guaranteeing a better price to the producers of manufacturing milk the government would contribute indirectly towards paying the cost of a vast publicity program to encourage the Canadian consumer to purchase more dairy products in Canada.

Everyone knows how efficient publicity is. Thanks to it, a mixture of water, sugar and a bit of coloring—known as soft drinks—is sold for something like $30 per 100 pounds to the Canadian public while that same public, for lack of publicity, is loath to pay the producers of manufacturing milk $4 per 100 pounds.

Soft drinks sell at 75 cents a quart, whereas manufacturing milk sells at 10 cents a quart. In addition, the government might also distribute part of the over-production of manufacturing or fluid milk in schools, which would permit an easier disposal. They wonder whether it would be possible.

Figures speak for themselves. An experiment was conducted in the United States along that line, and an economist of the C.F.U. before the standing committee on agriculture stated the following, and I quote:

About 5 billion pounds of milk are consumed in the United States through food aid programs.

That program amounted to about $650 million and Congress increased it to $1.5 billion; and recently, the President of the United States had it increased to $2 billion for next year.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

The American people are not stupid, after all. If it were not sound, I believe they would put an end to such a program.

The unfavourable remarks about the program implemented by the United States concern its inadequacy. That is the reason why the estimates for that purpose have been more than doubled.

We should seriously consider giving such a program a trial in Canada before stating it is impossible to achieve this goal to everybody's satisfaction. It would involve extra expenses, but they might be otherwise counter balanced, for instance, by keeping on the job a great number of workers now threatened with unemployment in industries connected with the dairy industry. Such workers would pay taxes to the government instead of being on social welfare. Therefore, I believe this would be a very good investment.

Finally, since the government, through its dairy policy, discourages a great number of dairy farmers, and not only the smaller ones, but also those producing over 200,000 pounds of milk annually and whose quota is not set in proportion to that production, and also since part of the milk produced will be sold below cost because of the export tax which is about 52 cents per hundred weight, as a result, the Department of Welfare will have to cope with an almost equal number of new customers. Where are we heading to?

If our surpluses of dairy products cannot help the underdeveloped countries, there might be another answer. They might, for instance, welcome machinery and equipment. In that case, we should set up as soon as possible an industrial development program in the fields which are most affected by lay offs of farm workers so that they may start working in some other field.

We should set up a program as efficient as that which aims at reducing considerably the number of farmers.

Lastly, and in the best interests of the country as well as for our own sake, we should improve the conditions of the farm industry by ensuring, in every sector of farm production, prices which will bring dairy producers an income at least equal to that of the people working in other sectors of our economy.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It remains a fact that agriculture does not concern farmers only, but many other people who earn their living in related industries.

Consequently, producers are not the only ones to benefit from the money spent on subsidies to the dairy industry; consumers do too. I ask the government as soon as possible to revise its decision on the dairy policy and to increase the subsidies in order to guarantee dairy producers a better income, considering the higher production costs. The government should follow the suggestions offered in the numerous briefs submitted both to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and to the minister himself. Let there be swift action in order to prevent many dairy producers from going bankrupt.

During 1963 and 1964, the last years for which figures are available, the approximate average grant paid to the dairy industry under farm programs amounted to $28 per capita in the United States and $16 in the United Kingdom, while in Canada it only amounted to $11. We have therefore not overdone it in that field.

Since more than 50 per cent of Canada's dairy production is concentrated in Quebec, it is obvious that this province will be most affected by the reduced grant for dairy production. I do not really believe that the government wishes to hurt Quebec or to punish it, but just the same, it is that province which is the most penalized and which suffers the most from the dairy policy.

This attitude does not help to establish an atmosphere of trust and understanding in Canada. I think that at the present time it is more important to solve our economic problems and be fair to all the regions of the country than to lose some valuable time speaking of the constitution. If, with the best constitution that it is possible to have, part of our population is starving, will we be happier? Is that prosperity?

Mr. Speaker, our people are not less intelligent than others. In reading newspapers and analysing the situation, they have learned that the central government is preparing—as a matter of fact, it is all over and the decision is almost final, unless they listen a little to us—to reduce by $10 million the funds earmarked for subsidies to industrial milk production, while at the same time they are granting farmers in another part of the country over $100 million to get them to reduce their acreage. Well, some people are ready to exploit every such occasion to play the East against the West and the French Canadians against the English Canadians and they will take advantage of the situation, and this will have an adverse effect on the country as a whole.

I therefore feel that because of all this we should stop to think before deciding whether really we should fight inflation at the expense of good-will between the eastern provinces, particularly Quebec, and the others.

On behalf of the 25,000 people who signed the petition I had the honour to table in the House, I ask the Minister of Agriculture to convince his colleagues of the cabinet that so many people cannot possibly all be wrong, that the responsible people who run farm organizations cannot all be wrong, and only the minister be right. If we really want an active democracy, we must at all costs take into consideration the recommendations of intermediary agencies such as the C.F.Y., the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Dairy Farmers and the Federation of Industrial Milk Producers of the Province of Quebec.

I assure the minister that he can depend on the full co-operation of our group in order to bring farm income up to that in the other sectors of the economy; that is something in which he sincerely believed in the past. As for us, it does not matter whether the political merit goes to the government or the opposition. Our opinion is that we must act quickly to release the "price-cost" vise which is now choking even the better off farmers.

Perhaps I will be told that it is easy for the opposition to criticize. I am convinced I have offered constructive criticism and also that I have made realistic suggestions. From the three roles: that of the opposition, that of the government or that of the industrial milk producers, I am convinced that the milk producers' role is the most difficult one.

During the February 19 debate on the dairy industry, I purposely avoided speaking about the report from the Standing Committee on Agriculture because my opinion was that this report should be examined by the House shortly. But since this report has not been studied as yet, I would call to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture a recommendation I have made before the committee. In fact, as reported at page 12 of issue No. 10 of the Minutes of Proceedings of the committee, my proposal went as follows:

> The Committee recommends that the budget of the Canadian Dairy Commission be increased so as to guarantee to underquota producers registered at the Canadian Dairy Commission who have not exceeded their quota an income for 100 pounds of milk equal to that of 1969-70 increased by a sufficient amount to compensate for the annual increase of 5% to the cost index of goods and services.

Mr. Speaker, I do admit that my proposal was rejected by the committee but only because of the interpretation given to the Standing Orders of the House, which will have to be amended to ensure greater flexibility and efficiency in the committees.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to say quite frankly, having worked a few months on the committees, what I think of their efficiency, so that we may find ways and means to improve them and so that Parliament might benefit therefrom.

Mr. Speaker, the government has greatly publicized the important part entrusted to the standing committees of the House. There was a time when I myself sincerely believed that hon. members would accomplish something worthwhile with this tool. But frankly I must admit that I am very disappointed at the lack of consideration given by the government to committee reports.

I am on the Committee on Agriculture which has a membership of 30. This committee has been authorized by the House to travel across the country to study farm problems on site.

The committee took two trips in 1969: one out west, the other in the east, but the report has not yet been tabled in the House. However, we visited a great number of regions, met hundreds of farmers and received numerous and interesting briefs which have not been of much use so far, so it seems.

This has brought me to ask myself certain questions. I am dumbfounded by the awful lack of logic I have witnessed in certain fields across the country.

In Newfoundland they had undertaken a fantastic project: the setting up of grazing-ground in a place where the Creator did not even want a single shrub to grow. It was intended to promote cattle breeding whereas at the same time in other parts of Canada entire farms are being deserted. There are thousands of such cases in Quebec and even in Ontario. And the government is prepared to give more than a $100 million to the farmers in western Canada to get them to put thousands of acres of very fertile land in fallow. Don't you think that we are living in an upside down world?

That is not all. In 1968, under a cost sharing program, ARDA spent several million dollars in the Bellechasse, Lévis and Lotbinière ridings in the province of Quebec for drainage purposes. Governments boast about reclaiming 80,000 acres of land to bring them into cultivation; on the other hand, every possible attempt is made to turn into productive land areas which are unsuited for cultivation; furthermore, production is impeded in those already under cultivation. This is what happens in Canada in 1969-70, which is utterly ridiculous.

Soon the government will announce a new dairy policy for 1970-71 without first allowing the House to study the report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture which was tabled February 17 last. Mr. Speaker, the committee held several meetings, heard many interesting and capable witnesses, received very responsible briefs containing very sound proposals, with a view to finding a solution to the problem. In my opinion, all that amounted to nothing. That is why I have doubts about the usefulness of committees. Is their only purpose to send their members on trips?

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to deal with another subject of concern to my constituency, the textile industry. This week, I was supposed to meet with the manager of a plant which has developed to some extent and employs a great number of workers, but is going through a very serious crisis at present.

The textile industry is in a bad way. Indeed, a large number of workers feel insecure as a result of seasonal and chronic unemployment and low salaries. It is imperative that steps be taken to enable those mills to produce under human conditions, and to survive in the best interests of the area concerned and the country as a whole.

There was no mention made of that problem in the budget speech; that concerns and disappoints me. In answer to a question I put to him earlier this week, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) asked the opposition to make suggestions.

If he takes our suggestions into account in the same way as the Minister of Agriculture seems to take into account the briefs and recommendations of farm organizations concerning the dairy industry, I wonder whether he is serious when making such a request.

Unemployment increases from week to week, and the government seems happy about it. If, in order to fight inflation, more people have to be unhappy, I am against it. I represent a constituency located in a designated area, a special region, where the government must help industrial development in order to create more jobs. Now, not later than yesterday, 80 workers were laid off in one single plant in Montmagny. The situation is becoming alarming, Mr. Speaker. What are we waiting for in order to protect our essential industries?

Mr. Speaker, I have listened to and read the speeches of the government members, and they seem happy with the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). They say, with a sigh of relief: Fortunately, the government did not announce any new tax or any tax increase.

They forget, however, the temporary 3 per cent income tax levied by the government and still in force this year, which means that it is going to be permanent. This is for the government a new and not too embarrassing method of levying taxes. So much the worse for the taxpayer who will have to pay the bill.

A temporary 2 per cent income tax was also levied last year. It has been carried over in this year's budget and will therefore become permanent. It is called the social development tax. Still, during the last fiscal year, it has yielded the tidy sum of $447 million to the government.

The purpose of the government in levying this social development tax was to establish the just society promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and described in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the first session of the 28th parliament.

Through that 2 per cent tax, the people pay cash for social development they do not get, and they will have to pay a second time when the government decides to have them benefit from it, perhaps then by way of a C.O.D. That is a modern way for the government to increase its revenue in an underhand manner without suffering the unpopularity linked with new taxes. It is furthermore a marvelous opportunity to start an argument between the government of the province of Quebec and that of Ottawa—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Without the unanimous consent of the House, the hon. member cannot continue his remarks.

Is it the pleasure of the House to have the hon. member for Bellechasse continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we are trying to push through some extra speakers. I think the hon. member should be permitted to finish his speech with a sentence or two.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Very well. The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the House for such understanding and I shall not impose upon its good will.

I was saying that the social development tax has created an argument between the governments in Ottawa and Quebec, which in turn made people forget the real issue—economic security and utmost freedom for one and all. While the old-school politicians are bickering on this subject, the financiers continue to exploit everybody. But these manœuvres are drawing to a close because, more than ever, people are aware of what is going on and want to know the real problems so as to better assess them.

In ending my remarks, I should like to say a word about the $200 million which have been much in the news and on which the Quebec administration wants to put its hands. Officials of the Quebec government have stated that they would not conduct their election campaign on the back of the government of Ottawa with this matter of the $200 million.

And, as soon as they had made that promise, their speeches on radio and television were all on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, one thing is certain, namely that I, as a member from Quebec, agree that this money, which has been collected through the 2 per cent social development tax, should be used for the people of Quebec. I wonder, however, whether it would not really be preferable to abolish this tax until appropriate agreements have been signed for the benefit of the whole population, and not make use of those $200 million to create a surplus in the federal treasury. Since it is possible, through mere formulas, to dip into the taxpayers' pockets, could not the same means be used to reimburse them.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have great esteem for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and for the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) and usually I listen to them attentively as I did this afternoon. But I must honestly admit they disappointed me by putting me in a position where I could see the emptiness of their interventions, when they said only that there was unemployment—everybody knows that, of course—that the economy is going through difficult times—we are all aware of that also—and that the government is doing nothing. I would have expected really constructive criticism and that instead of blaming the government they would have made useful suggestions.

I was listening earlier to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who made quite a vigorous speech. I agree with a good many of his views but not with all. For instance, when he repeats constantly that the Bank of Canada could solve our problems, he may be right to a certain extent but that institution is certainly not a gold mine; it cannot cure all our ills.

However, I do not want to dwell on that too long. Instead, I wish to take him to task, he who denied earlier indulging in demagogy or electioneering, claiming that he was doing rather something constructive, for having suggested that the $100 million in subsidies that the government will grant to western farmers would be somewhat unfair, at the expense of the rest of Canada. I think that was a mean remark. However, I appreciate the intellectual honesty of the hon. member for Bellechasse—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Bellechasse rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt my colleague from Trois-Rivières, but if my remarks have been interpreted as a reproach to the government about western farmers, it is very unfortunate. I never thought so. I said that it could be interpreted by our own people or exploited by others who are seeking to spread discord as likely to create dissension and give rise to prejudice. I want to make myself clear on that matter.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for Bellechasse for his explanation, but I add that if he had wanted to show absolute intellectual honesty, he would have told the population why the government has granted a $100 million subsidy to western farmers who, this year, will face an unusual problem which does not occur every year.

In extraordinary and disastrous situations such as this one, any government must take unusual measures. Then it must be explained to the Canadian people, especially those in Quebec—where there are so many demagogues who take advantage of such things and misrepresent them totally and unrealistically—that the ten provinces are interdependent and that if some of them, for example, are deprived of a decent standard of living, all the others must suffer for it.

Besides, that is why was established the equalization system under which the province of Quebec will be receiving this year $350 million, and more next year. Those are the things which must be stated when one wants to be honest. I do not suggest that the member for Bellechasse did it intentionally. It is probably because, as he was running out of time, he knew he could not say everything he wanted to say. I feel that those facts must be told.

[English]

I think, personally, I would be remiss if at the beginning of my remarks I did not convey to the government the gratitude of my fellow constituents, and especially of the three municipal councils that represent the three municipalities which form my riding, for having decided to designate our region, and also for having decided that our region would be specially designated. That is another thing that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) could have mentioned since his own riding was designated, and specially designated. He could have added a word of thanks to the federal government, even if it is what we call justice distributive in French. It is a fact that the government has made a decision which probably represents the difference between poverty continuing for years and years and the achievement of a certain measure of prosperity, increasing little by little in succeeding years.

[Translation]

As far as the metropolitan area of Trois-Rivières is concerned, it is in a rather strategic position since it constitutes the core of the province of Quebec. It has resources and an economic and industrial potential that are rather important.

For various reasons that I could not enumerate this afternoon, we have experienced during a few years some kind of stagnation. Now, the government has agreed to designate our area and even make it a "special area". This augurs well for a future of real prosperity. When reading the newspapers from my area, one finds how pleased are some organizations, such as the Chambers of Commerce, including the Junior Chamber of Commerce, labour organizations and industrialists' and businessmen's associations, to see that the government has made this gesture. They are ready to do everything possible to take fullest advantage of the benefits made available by the government.

I therefore thank the government for I am convinced that I speak for all the taxpayers, for all my fellow-citizens in my area who are happy with the situation.

The hon. member for Bellechasse has said earlier that the federal government was not doing anything to help the farmers. Even if the federal government does not hand out all the grants to dairy producers—and I will not embark on that topic where I would be at a loss, since there is no farming in my riding—it has suggested alternatives for some rural areas in the province of Quebec. If the Quebec government would accept one or other of those solutions, the province would become highly prosperous, especially in the field of farming which is now stagnating.

For instance, when the federal government offers to develop a national park in the Gaspé peninsula or in the St. Maurice valley, they should rejoice, as a few million dollars investment could draw from tourists $15, $20 or $25 million a year, which would benefit people of these rural and surrounding areas. All people living along roads travelled by tourists would enjoy an increased annual income.

The member for Bellechasse is right when he contends that the present problem is an economic one. We must put an end to our barren quarrels on all aspects of the constitutional reform, as most of the time these are empty words spoken by lawyers striving for influence.

It is important to ensure to all Canadians their three meals a day. It is for this reason that the government is taking concrete measures such as the designation of special areas in order to erase regional disparities, to assist municipalities and to create conditions that will promote the setting up of new industries or the development of existing ones.

That is why the federal government is prepared to create national parks in Quebec, why it has implemented a retraining program designed to give a minimum of academic background to those who lack it, to provide those whose skills have become obsolete with new ones, to teach skills now in great demand to those who have none at all. Those are concrete measures for the elimination of unemployment. The people do not want charity. I commend the government's decision to review its social legislation in order that, as soon as possible, all Canadians may have a minimum guaranteed income allowing them to live decently.

The hon. member knows the government is concerned with doing all these things. He will have become aware that government policy aims at the goals so well spelled out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he said, in his own colourful style: If my neighbour is hungry and I give him a fish, there is no doubt that I have helped him but if I also give him a fishing-rod, he will be able to help himself.

This, in a way, is characteristic of this government's policy. To suggest that the present government is not doing anything to solve the present situation, is not true. Indeed, we should not forget that a cold wind of inflation is blowing on the whole world, including countries which were more prosperous at one time than Canada.

I am thinking, for instance, of England whose government has a philosophy that is very close to that of the NDP, of England that has a great deal of trouble trying to maintain some kind of stability. In fact, from time to time the workers protest. France which is a very prosperous country has succeeded due to a certain economic uncertainty, in overthrowing a giant named de Gaulle.

I might also mention Italy which is unable to form a government at the present time.

In Canada, we have succeeded at least in maintaining some sort of stability and in preventing the worst. It is true that there is unemployment in this country. However, if the government had not taken with our help the steps we know, the situation would be far more disastrous.

The opposition co-operated with the government about the implementation of social measures in Canada. In fact, the federal government spends billions of dollars throughout this country, all the year around, in order to maintain some economic stability. Were it not for this initiative and taking into account the crisis that prevails everywhere in the world, the situation would be very much worse.

I do not think it is correct to say that 6.7 per cent of our workers are unemployed compared to 5 per cent last year. We must ask ourselves if the international situation is not a little bit responsible for that. If no steps had been taken, would things be better or worse?

It is obvious that the government has failed up to now to eliminate unemployment. It is certain also that it will not succeed without the co-operation of provinces, manufacturers and labour unions. But at least it took steps to prevent the situation from becoming worse and even to improve it in several fields.

For my part, I am sure that I speak for all my fellow-citizens when I thank the government for its efforts in order to reduce unemployment. As a positive suggestion, one could perhaps ask the government to organize, if possible, summer camps for university students who want to work. Two birds could perhaps be killed with one stone. These students would first of all be given the opportunity to earn some money with which to pay their tuition fees. In this way, instead of loafing through the summer, they could work for the municipal, provincial or federal governments, helping to develop our natural resources, such as our forests and our lakes, and also to reduce air and water pollution.

The youth of today would like to see such an organization being set up. I recall that there was at one time in the United States an organization known as the Civil Conservation Corps, which was devoted to keep university students busy in summer camps. If I remember well, that was at the end of the economic recession of 1930-39. Outstanding results were achieved by that organization.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague the hon. member for Bellechasse for having mentioned the chaos in the textile industry, and I agree with his remarks. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) as well as their experts are looking after that problem. Indeed, I had the opportunity to meet them on many occasions, and I would like to repeat what the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) has already said, and confirm what the hon. member for Bellechasse has just said. I therefore wish to remind our government that the situation is urgent.

There is in my constituency a textile industry which has 2,100 employees. When I meet the management, they tell me how much they are concerned about the present conditions and they suggest some solutions which seem satisfactory to me. I would therefore ask the government to consider as positively as possible this urgent problem which is in danger of increasing unemployment.

Some companies, because they did not retrain their employees or did not modernize their equipment on time, are condemned to disappear. We have to resign ourselves to that fact. But there are others, and I am thinking of Wabasso Cotton in my constituency which has always had the latest equipment and the best working conditions. It deserves, on account of its efforts, some consideration from the government for itself and its employees.

It seems there are some 85,000 workers in the textile industry in Ontario and Quebec, a substantial figure. I will read part of a communication from the Canadian Institute of Textiles which I have here:

> —the Canadian industry of yarns and cottons invested an estimated $10.9 million as capital or maintenance expenditures in 1968. The amount was $21.7 million in 1967 and, according to estimates by investors it will be $11.2 million in 1969.

Therefore, the textile industry made efforts to modernize its equipment and to give new training to its workers in order to meet the competition of countries where wages are 15 to 25 times lower than in Canada.

In spite of all these improvements, the textile industry is in deep trouble. Statistics show that in 1965, woven cotton and synthetic fibres produced by Canadian mills accounted for merely 57 per cent of the Canadian consumer market. The rest came from abroad. In 1969, this figure had declined to 52.5 per cent. According to the leaders of the textile industry, this is an alarming rate of decrease, and they suggest, after conducting studies on what is done elsewhere, that Canada is probably the only country which does not enforce quotas high enough to protect its industry. In their opinion, at least 65 to 70 per cent of the Canadian textile production should be absorbed by the Canadian market. In Japan, there are laws, they say, requiring those who import textile products to secure special permits from the government which grants them only if it is deemed essential to the development of the Japanese industry.

The problem is not that simple, Mr. Speaker, for we have to consider international trade and maintain a trade balance in this field. Japan buys more goods from Canada than we buy from that country, but it is inconsistent to let our textile industry deteriorate and its domestic market decline, when we are spending millions of dollars to try to boost the economy and set up new industries. It would be wise to maintain our existing industries. I therefore ask the government to take steps in order to increase the quota of Canadian consumption supplied with Canadian production. It is now roughly 55 per cent, including all products available. It should be increased to 65 or 70 per cent.

When it is intended to establish quotas, the industry should be advised a few years beforehand, so that it will know where it stands, and will be able to plan their investment budgets and have some idea of the kind of market it can count on. We would render it a tremendous service. In fact, we would prevent it at least from dying; it is a vigorous and open-minded industry, which managed to retrain its workers and modernize its equipment in good time. The others, of course, are still living under that basic law, that is, the survival of the fittest. Some people will always have to give up, as some farmers have. Indeed, while some farmers continue to prosper others are going bankrupt, because they are unable to manage with the means at their disposal.

I have another request to make to the government. At a time when my area, that of Trois-Rivières, located in the heart of the province of Quebec, is on the threshold of a considerable industrial revival, having been designated as a special zone, when the federal government is prepared to give us also a national park, and when we are awaiting the decisions of a Quebec minister who is looking for periods and commas, when we need millions of dollars to get jobs for our people, I wish to call the attention of the government to the fact that Air Canada intends to curtail its daily service to Trois-Rivières.

In the name of the municipal councils, Chambers of Commerce and businessmen at home, I wish to oppose Air Canada's decision very strongly, because we have built an up-to-date 6,000-ft. runway specially for Air Canada. The city has erected an air terminal that numbers among the most beautiful in Canada, whose design is probably the most modern yet. The government has spent considerable amounts of money to install an electronic control tower system designed to guide the landing of big aircrafts.

Many sacrifices have been made for Air Canada. That corporation is not justified, just because its operations are showing a deficit, to cancel its daily flights, and that for the following reasons: first, the federal government as well as the Trois-Rivières municipality have invested huge amounts of money so that Air Canada would come into that area. Furthermore, the profits of the corporation must not be computed simply on the basis of the tickets sold in Trois-Rivières. Finally, Air Canada certainly brings a large number of people from the metropolitan area of Trois-Rivières, which has a population of 350,000 to 400,000, to go to Montreal by air rather than by car when they go on holidays for one, two or three weeks.

These are profits accumulated by Air Canada but which are not taken into consideration in its computation to see whether the Trois-Rivières air terminal is economical or not, while they should be included because otherwise people will travel by Air France, Eastern Airlines or CP Air. People are under no obligation to travel by Air Canada but the fact that this corporation is there induces them to use its services.

I admit that when I started to travel along distances by air I used Air France planes with much pleasure but today when my friends and I travel by air, we go by Air Canada.

Air Canada has incurred obligations on account of government investments. It gets something out of the advertising made in foreign air terminals as it is a company which is to a certain extent financed by the federal government. Therefore, it should help designated areas to prosper by maintaining its service there.

I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), as well as the whole cabinet, to use their influence in order that the Trois-Rivières area may keep its airport and so that Air Canada will maintain its daily service there. Moreover, schedules should be drawn up so as to make air travel even more attractive to business men, for instance, who wish to make connections with flights to northwestern Quebec or to other countries.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much of the time of my colleagues but I would have had things to say about the famous $200 million. Quite a fuss is made about the whole thing in the province of Quebec and it is used as a means of stirring up the province against the federal government. Such utter irresponsibility.

This is not only irresponsibility but criminal dishonesty in many cases because those $200 million were distributed to the citizens of the province of Quebec. That amount was not given as a lump sum to the government so that it would use it as it thought best. It was distributed to all the Quebec citizens, under the form of pensions or welfare measures of all kinds, the cost of which goes up every year. One will recall that that was precisely the objective of that social development tax. If we have no medicare in the province of Quebec at the present time, it is not the fault of the federal government which is ready to pay half of it. It is the fault of the Quebec government, it could have implemented it last July. Indeed, the government intends to levy a premium in order to implement it. It will therefore not cost the provincial treasury very much. The taxpayers in Quebec will pay the share Quebec should pay.

It is therefore unfair to accuse the federal government without explanation, of fiscal violation, or even of theft. That is irresponsibility! That is criminal demagoguery, when arguments are used that only serve to stir the ill-informed, the naïve souls in Quebec, against the central government which tries to maintain reasonable prosperity in all the provinces.

The province of Quebec is the first to benefit, thanks to equalization payments, and also to the direct or indirect contribution of the Department of National Defence which spends hundreds of millions of dollars in Montreal. If Quebec were to separate, it would no longer benefit from that financial contribution, nor from the subsidies to hospitals, to CEGEPs, and all the other things it accepts without a word.

I cannot deal with everyone of those points for I see my time is almost up. I thank my honourable colleagues for their patience and I conclude by saying again that my own electors are most grateful to the government for having given us the advantage of those special measures, thanks to designated areas and "special areas."

In addition, my electors express their deep gratitude to the federal government for having thought of having a national park in the St. Maurice Valley.

I also ask the government to protect the textile industry, which is a very important one in my area, and to consider that problem as urgent as that of the farmers out west.

Now, I should like to speak with every precaution, because I should not like to show the weakness I have reproached to others.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Although I am in favour of the $100 million that will be spent out west, I say the textile industry in Ontario and in Quebec need help.

As for Air Canada, I trust the members of the government will be firm enough to see to it that it does not disappear from the area, at least not before we have alternative service as convenient as the one we already have.

I forgot to say that another service has been added to that of Air Canada which is financed by the federal government, namely a meteorological service which is useful to us in many fields and which we may not be able to keep if Air Canada leaves us.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my first reaction to this budget was that the government had missed the boat, if indeed it had any intention of ever trying to catch the boat in the first place. After listening for three days of debate on the budget, I realize that the government has not just missed one boat, but several boats. They have missed so many boats that I am inclined to wonder if they are going in the same direction as the rest of us. I wonder if the government is even remotely interested in going in the same direction that the Canadian people wanted to go. It is obvious that the government is going to continue to go its own way regardless of whether the Canadian people benefit from the exercise.

One thing that comes through loud and clear in this budget is that the government has decided that prosperity is too good for the average person in Canada. In this land of plenty, this land of lush forests, untold mineral resources, great challenge and unlimited opportunity, the Canadian people are given a choice between a demagog or nothing. Even as we debate this budget the government has brought in new legislation which it says will solve the problems of our agricultural industry. It is another smoke-screen. Anyone who takes the trouble to read the bill will see that this is more clear evidence of a demagog under the guise of helping the farmer find markets more readily for his produce. The bill contains provisions for the eventual takeover by the government of the means of production and absolute control over where and how the producer will market his produce.

Today's headlines state that there are 526,000 people unemployed in Canada. While unemployed workmen in the hundreds of thousands and elderly people on fixed incomes cry out for some small measure of understanding from this government, and while veterans of wars that Canada fought in order that we may choose our own way of life and government ask for more assistance, this government chooses a path that leads still more people to the poorhouse.

While we debate this budget the government is busy thinking up new departments and agencies that it might establish. When we press for answers as to why we need these agencies or departments, we are accused of obstructionism. The only justification for these new agencies that we can find is that the government needs to provide new havens for party hacks and followers.

It seems strange to me, Mr. Speaker, and it must seem strange to some government backbenchers, that we can provide funds for hippies and agitators to do their thing, people who would not take up arms against an invader if he was about to cross the Rideau, yet we cannot find the funds with which to alleviate the suffering of men who went to foreign lands to keep the demagogs away from our shores.

Here was a perfect opportunity for the government to do something for these people, and something must be done. Remedial action for the plight of these veterans, many of whom are destitute, is long overdue. Why could not the government have done something in this budget to solve problems such as those facing the elderly and the veterans, instead of acclaiming proudly that all we are capable of creating at this time is more unemployment, more suffering.

Who is this government to tell us that prosperity is too good for the Canadian people? Who is this government to tell us that there is not enough wealth in this country to provide even the minimum requirements of its people? With a majority in the House, with the largest cabinet in the history of our government, with the largest budget since Confederation, this government cannot solve the simple problems basic to human survival and human dignity.

The obvious inability of the government to cope with social and economic issues in a manner which would benefit the Canadian individual was illustrated graphically last year by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) during the debates on Standing Order 75C. The hon. member said that the government could not boast about how much legislation they had passed while at the same time complaining about opposition obstructionism. We still hear both overt and covert complaints from the government benches that we on this side of the House are obstructing important legislation. I throw down the glove to the government. I challenge them to bring in one piece of important legislation, so that we can all get down to the business of passing laws through this House which will provide something for the Canadian citizen instead of incessantly taking something away from him.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be accused of labouring the obvious. I do not want to keep repeating what my colleagues and I have been saying ever since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took control of the destinies and the pocketbooks of the Canadian people. But if we keep repeating it often enough there is a chance, if only a slight one, that the government will come to realize that there are too many poor people in a country which can provide more than we need. The government might come to realize that the men who sacrificed their health and their promise of a productive life by fighting in our wars are more important to us than draft dodgers and deserters from other countries.

The legislation which the government claims is being obstructed is designed to allow this government to take over every segment of the Canadian economy and all the means of Canadian production. Is this the way of parliamentary democracy? If it is, then someone has written a new book on the subject. Judging from his past writings in the field of political science, I would suggest that the author of this new version of parliamentary democracy sits across the chamber surrounded by the largest and most obedient staff of ministers in the history of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the Prime Minister would like me to tell my unemployed constituents about the failure of the government to come to grips with the problems of the country. I wonder what the Prime Minister would like me to say to elderly people on fixed incomes when they ask how much longer they must wait for a little help. What shall I tell the veterans in my constituency when they ask me if anyone remembers them?

There is another area of great concern which would bear examination. I am thinking of this government's expertise in reorganizing departments and agencies. Take the Post Office as an example. This is a real gem. For almost a hundred years we had a Post Office which delivered letters and parcels. When I was growing up, the postman was a respected member of the community who seemed to be above partisan politics and organized violence. The village post office was often the centre of social activity in the small communities across the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, we find that one of the defeated candidates for the leadership of the Liberal party has reorganized the Post Office. While he was in the process of making a shambles of the Post Office system he made such profound observations as "The practice of sending letters from one person to another person is becoming outmoded. Such things belong to a bygone era." Well, Mr. Speaker, he has proven that point beyond doubt. Mailing a letter in Canada from one person to another, and getting it delivered, does indeed belong to a bygone era.

The minister also closed many of the village and town post offices across the country—as a matter of fact he has closed some 1,200 of them—and told us this saves the Post Office some $2 million a year. We learn, however, that the Company of Young Canadians is getting almost $2 million a year to spend doing their thing. I wonder which is more important. We could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, calling attention to such examples of government efficiency as the recent reorganization of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, but in the face of the power-mad group sitting across the chamber any observations we make regarding the inefficiency of the government amount only to painful reminiscence.

This budget is just another straw piled on the back of the Canadian individual, the Canadian voter. Over the next two years we can expect to see more of the same, and the people are already getting tired of excuses in place of answers. We on this side of the House will continue strenuously to oppose the trend to government takeover of Canadian institutions and the suppression of individual freedom. It is not unlikely that two years from now those same voters will decide to cancel the present government's mandate and restore the concept of parliamentary democracy to this country.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this budget reminds me of a story I heard about a man who was undergoing an examination after applying for life insurance. The doctor asked him the usual routine questions before inquiring, "Have you ever had a serious accident?" The man replied that he had not. The doctor then asked him to undress for a physical examination, and in the course of it he was astonished to find a very long scar running down the man's side. "What happened?" he asked. "I was gored by a bull", the man replied. "I thought you said you had never had a serious accident", said the doctor. "I didn't", the patient replied, "The bull did it on purpose."

[Mr. Scott.]

This is exactly how it is with the budget now before us. At first sight, people are apt to believe that it could not have been done on purpose, that it was an accident. Large groups of citizens have been waiting and waiting for it with high hopes. They have been told over and over again that the government was reviewing the position of the various social security measures, that a review was in progress. They have been bombarding us with letters asking when this review would be completed. Surely, they thought, when the budget comes down it will contain measures to help us until the review is completed and long-term decisions are made.

People were stunned to hear the minister make the budget speech he did. Here are some of the points the hon. gentleman made. I myself was startled to hear them expressed in one short passage of the budget presentation. All this happened in 1969: (1) the rate of economic growth declined, (2) unemployment increased, (3) housing starts were fewer, (4) interest rates rose, (5) consumer debt rose, (6) wheat sales declined, (7) the cost of living climbed steadily and (8) the problems of the cities grew apace.

The startling thing is that the minister forecast that all this would continue into 1970 and he did not limit the period of its continuance. The minister himself forecast that all these ills would continue to get worse in the period ahead. He knew what he was talking about, because the policies of the government have made certain that this state of affairs will continue in the way it has for the last two years. The budget is the result of a complete lack of leadership over the last two years on the part of the government; and the people of Canada who need help have been looking in vain to the government to give this leadership.

What does this kind of budget mean? What will we be faced with as a result of the budget? Put briefly—others of my colleagues have dealt with this question at greater length—it means that this government is leaving the private sector of the economy free to continue to expand and to make larger profits regardless of the value to the public of that expansion. At the same time, government services such as health and welfare, assistance to education, pollution control and many other very necessary and essential services of value to the public are going to be restricted. That is what the policies contained in the budget are designed to do.

In the second place, this budget will bring on increased unemployment. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said this was so in his budget speech and the most recent unemployment figures confirm it right up to the hilt. I do not know whether even the minister is prepared for the rapidity with which unemployment is increasing and is likely to increase. Here is the proof that unemployment is not an accident; that the minister's policies are designed for that purpose. I should like to refer to a clipping from the Globe and Mail that deals with some remarks made by the Minister of Finance outside the House. In addition to other unpleasant and unusal habits, the government has developed the habit of making its most important policy statements outside the House to the media without giving the members of the House the benefit of hearing them within these walls. Speaking to the Canadian Press on March 16, the Minister of Finance is reported to have said:

> Unemployment slightly higher than that of 1969 may be necessary "if we are really going to beat inflation"—
> His comment was made on a public affairs television program taped for broadcast yesterday.
> "I certainly hope the steps we are taking will mean that unemployment won't be concentrated as it has been in the past in certain areas of Canada," Mr. Benson said.
> "We are certainly taking all the steps we can to help areas in eastern Canada and eastern Quebec where unemployment is high."

The things the government has been doing to help—and I put the word "help" in quotes —are the very things that are causing unemployment and will continue to cause unemployment to increase in this country. I say this because the policies contained in the budget will mean increased unemployment. They will mean more lay-offs, just as there have been increasing lay-offs in the public service. They will mean lay-offs in private industry, too. This past week unemployed rubber workers in one of the big plants near Toronto visited Ottawa. People are being laid off in industry after industry, yet the government feels there is no responsibility on its shoulders do to do anything concrete or worth while to correct the situation. This is why unemployment is mounting.

In the third place, these policies mean that the cost of living will continue to go up and up and up. It was up 5 per cent last year. I have already told the House what this means in terms of facts and figures, cold statistics, but what does it mean to the lives of men and women across the country? I wish at some time in this House we could have a day when members were permitted to say nothing except to read the kind of letters they receive. I know other members get them; I get them all the time. I should just like to read two of these letters this afternoon. Both are from Vancouver. I should like to read an extract from the first one, dated March 12, from a veteran of the second world war. He says in part:

> On February 14th last, Mr. Les Benjamin and Mr. John Diefenbaker tried very hard to get Mr. Dubé, Minister for Veterans Affairs, to give some sort—any sort—of answer as when—if ever—the government is likely to implement at least a small part of the Woods report as far as needy ex-servicemen are concerned but met with complete and utter evasion!
> How cynical can some politicians get? How cynically disillusioned must any and every war veteran be! What faith in any politician's statements and promises can we place in them?? What sort of faith and belief in our governments can we pass on to our children and our grandchildren???

I have a much briefer letter from another veteran who resides in my riding. I received it the other day. He said: "As my member, you have a duty to get down to the House again and demand from the government to know when they are going to table the Woods report". He seems to feel that tabling the Woods report will be a step toward bringing about an increase in the pensions of veterans and their families.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Getting it implemented.

Mrs. MacInnis: Getting it implemented would. We have been receiving dozens and dozens of letters from people who are desperate. These are people who are the salt of the earth. They have devoted their lives to this country and they want to dedicate their children to this country, but all in vain. If it is in order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to leave the reading of the second letter until after the dinner adjournment, as I see it is now six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I understand the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) seeks leave to revert to motions for the purpose of making a statement. Does the minister have the consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

URANIUM INDUSTRY—REGULATIONS LIMITING FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like, pursuant to the Prime Minister's statement of March 2, to inform the House of the government's position with regard to ownership in the Canadian uranium industry. That position rests upon the special importance of this industry in relation to the national interest, as reflected, for example, in the Atomic Energy Control Act and in a number of statements of general policy of which the most recent was made in the House on June 19 of last year. In light of that special importance, the ownership and control of enterprises in Canada engaged in the extraction and processing of this vital mineral are matters of important concern to the national interest and to Canadians generally. For this reason we propose to limit, by regulation, the extent of ownership of uranium-producing enterprises in Canada by non-residents of Canada.

The regulations will apply to any uranium property or plant in Canada which the Atomic Energy Control Board may determine to be producing, or to have the capability of producing, a specified quantity of uranium oxide per annum. They will require that by a specified date following such a determination by the board the property or plant be owned legally and beneficially by a company incorporated in Canada.

The regulations will limit foreign ownership both in the aggregate and on the part of any individual or group of foreign investors. They will distinguish between existing properties of demonstrated productive capacity and those developed in future on the basis of exploration. Specifically, the regulations will set a limit of 33 per cent upon the aggregate foreign ownership of any uranium property of established productive capacity, and a limit of 10 per cent on the ownership of such a property which may be held by any one foreign investor or group of associated investors.

It is not our intention to limit the ownership of enterprises engaging in exploration, but when such exploration leads to the discovery of a commercially exploitable uranium ore body, the foreign ownership of the company bringing it into production will be limited to 33 per cent. In this case of a new mine, however, the regulations will allow the permissible 33 per cent of ownership to be held by the single foreign investor or group of associated investors which held it through the exploration and development phase.

With regard to existing mines, our regulations will be effective as from the date of the Prime Minister's statement on March 2, but will not be retroactive in the sense of requiring foreign interests then holding more of the ownership than the prescribed limits to divest themselves of those surplus holdings. However, any transaction which would bring either individual or aggregate foreign holdings above their prescribed limits, or if they are already above them would increase the amounts by which the limits are exceeded, will be precluded. Present foreign owners will be permitted to retain their existing holdings, but if they reduce them by sale to Canadians with a consequent reduction in the percentage of ownership in foreign hands, that reduced level of ownership will become the new permissible ceiling down to the prescribed limits of 10 per cent and 33 per cent.

Furthermore, we shall require, in the case of foreign holdings by an individual or group of associated investors amounting to 50 per cent of total ownership or higher, that while such holdings may be retained by their present owners, any transfer of them must be to Canadians only, down to the 33 per cent aggregate foreign ownership limit. Where individual holdings by foreign interests are now below 50 per cent, however, their transfer to other foreign investors will be permitted.

• (8:10 p.m.)

A further point concerns foreign enterprises now engaged in uranium exploration which have not yet established the presence of commercially productive uranium deposits. Such enterprises will be given a certain period of time within which to establish the commercially productive capacity of their properties in order to qualify for the exemption from the ceilings which will be available to present foreign owners of existing mines; otherwise they will be regarded as new mines. Finally, the government may wish to bring forward special conditions applicable to enterprises in which one or more foreign governments may have a substantial interest.

In this statement I have sought to inform the House as promptly and as fully as possible of the criteria which the government will apply in this matter. The preparation of detailed regulations reflecting these criteria, in the course of which there will be consultation with interested parties, will go forward with all possible speed and we shall make the results known as soon as possible.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is another occasion on which one is supposed to make an instant comment about something upon which the minister, hopefully, has reflected for some time. Let me just say for this evening that it has not yet really been made clear why the government should announce a particular policy with regard to uranium.

I think the House and the country are entitled to a more adequate explanation than has been given so that the question can be adequately judged in respect of why special regulations are required concerning uranium as distinct from other natural resources because, rightly or wrongly, it is generally assumed the government has other methods by which to ensure the regulation of uranium mining in Canada. Whatever differences of opinion there may be concerning whether there should be restrictions in respect of foreign ownership of resources in Canada, I do not think the government has yet made clear why special measures are taken with regard to uranium. The only explanation that has been available to any of us is that a transaction has taken place which provoked, or at least induced the government to interfere in a transfer that was proposed.

I think the government ought to give the country a more adequate explanation concerning the step that is being taken, not with regard to the control of uranium mines but with regard to the control of the companies mining uranium as distinct from the control of companies mining other minerals in Canada. Second, I thought the minister would have given some explanation tonight concerning why 33 per cent is the magic figure to be used in limiting the extent of foreign ownership of a company mining uranium in Canada. It is not obvious to me, for example, why 33 per cent should be the limit when generally speaking, as a matter of arithmetic, something over 50 per cent represents actual control and there may well be circumstances in which something less than 33 per cent could actually provide working control.

We all know there are large corporations in North America and in the world in which less than 33 per cent control of the shares actually gives working control for all practical purposes. So I would think that in the very near future the minister ought to give a more adequate explanation concerning why 33 per cent is the magic figure. On the one hand, it might be high enough to permit the defeat of the purpose the government has in mind; in other words, it might be high enough to permit people from outside the country obtaining practical control over a company. On the other hand, it may be restrictive in respect of enabling a Canadian corporation which has a 51 per cent interest obtaining sufficient equity participation to make possible the opening of a mine even though it does not involve control. The 33 per cent might be unnecessarily restrictive.

As of tonight there does not seem to be very much sense in this particular figure being chosen. These are about the only instantaneous remarks I should like to make, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I too am somewhat uncertain why the minister chose to make this statement in the rather cryptic way it was made today. The whole issue of the government's concern about uranium leaves more questions unanswered than answered. I do not wish to argue about this. To begin with, however, I am sure there is a good reason for the government's move in this case. I am pleased that some action is being taken in this regard. I am somewhat unhappy that the government has not been more frank with us on this issue, because as all of us know the government now has control over the export of uranium to an extent that it does not have over other industries. In many ways a better case could have been made for Canadian ownership of other industries rather than uranium.

I hope that if unanimous consent could be obtained for him to do so, the minister would fill in some of the details tonight since he has raised the question tonight. There are many questions in everyone's mind concerning why he has taken this extraordinary step. The only reason that comes to mind is that this measure would be a way to escape the extra-territorial conditions which might be imposed upon our industry if United States investors who would be subject to United States law came in at a time when the government might have in mind exporting uranium to a country of which the United States might disapprove. This is the only reason I can see for such a measure.

There does not seem to be any sense in it on the ground that the government does not have any control: the government obviously has control. I do not know what type of approach should be taken in this regard, but I should like the minister to be given an opportunity to answer tonight some of the questions which arise out of his statement, because it does not deal adequately with the problem.

I am disappointed that the minister did not see fit to provide us with a copy of his statement in advance. The members of the press gallery have copies of his statement, but Members of Parliament do not. This is a most serious matter and one in which the opposition is vitally concerned. We think the minister ought to take this House into his confidence and say something further. Although this probably is an unusual procedure, I believe it to be necessary. I think he should indicate the reason the government feels it should take such an extraordinary step. I hope there will be unanimous consent of the House to the minister being granted the right tonight to explain the situation.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I was greatly astonished to hear this unexpected though important statement.

As the previous speakers, I was shocked that copies of this statement had been released to the press while opposition members were forgotten as usual. Tomorrow we will be able to read the minister's statement not in Hansard, since we will only receive it after the first sitting, but in the newspapers.

However, it would have been preferable to discuss briefly this government decision. I gather that the minister wanted to make this statement after the closing of the stock exchanges, so as to prevent speculation. But he might have trusted the opposition members and given them a copy of it.

The proposed measure designed to regulate uranium mines or production under foreign control does not seem to me to be a step in the right direction.

However, I was led to believe that the minister had left several doors open by allowing foreign interests to circumvent whatever regulations the minister or government wishes to apply.

I think we will have the opportunity of studying and analyzing that decision more thoroughly. We should therefore have the possibility of discussing this matter more fully with the minister in the very near future, perhaps before the House adjourns for the Easter recess.

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether you would ask the House for unanimous consent to allow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) to elaborate on the statement.

Mr. Baldwin: We would be perfectly willing to agree to that, Mr. Speaker. I suggest, however, that we are now engaged in a debate and that this would be the proper forum for the minister to speak. If the minister wants to reply, that is fine. I would be willing to allow him the time which normally would be allotted to another member of his party, if he wants to speak. However, far be it from me to urge a minister of the Crown to speak.

An hon. Member: No reaction.

Another hon. Member: He is speechless.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am prepared to recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) if the hon. lady wishes to speak now.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 5051).

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned at six o'clock I was about to read from a letter dated February 12 which I received from Vancouver. I want to read the letter because it is typical of so many that I have received from people on old age pension, from families of veterans, from people on low incomes with large families, and generally from people in difficult circumstances. The letter reads as follows:

> I'm now 75 years of age and have to live on the supplementary pension of between $110 to $111. The landlord or caretaker has been putting the rent up and up for a tiny room,—and now it's a case of having a place to sleep but almost nothing to eat!
> Have fought a heart condition and other ailments on my own for a long time—
>
> Over 50 years ago I came from Scotland—then returned to stay in London during the last world war. My wages or salary when I worked were poor—so try as I did I couldn't save but very, very little. I heard that we'd be getting more money—up to $150.

She is referring here to the budget.

> If this were so, I could manage very well indeed —but if it isn't, I thought I'd write the proper people in Scotland and see if it would be cheaper to spend the remaining years of my life there—
> I am not a businesswoman and the sight of a form fills me with terror! And how I detest having to write and ask for more—too many already do this—

This is the letter of a self-respecting person who has spent many of her years in Canada and who now is hesitant to ask for what is her right if the government were doing the proper thing, that is, seeing to it that her old age is spent comfortably. But the answer of the government to this is a deaf ear.

A few days after this letter was written my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked the government for the one hundredth time whether they would consider some emergency measure to aid the pensioners before many thousands of them are starved out of existence. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sat silent and made no attempt to answer the question. Then my colleague asked if there would be any action on behalf of old age pensioners during this parliamentary session. He received the reply we have received so many times, that this matter would be dealt with as part of the over-all review of the social security program. This is what we get all the time.

There is nothing whatsoever in sight for the people in this country whose incomes have shrunk progressively as the cost of living has gone up, and the people in whose homes there is fear because of increasing unemployment and what it means to their young people and more especially to the breadwinner. What is the answer of the government? Again I should like to quote from the Globe and Mail of March 16, where the Minister of Finance is reported as having said the following quite clearly:

> This is a period when we need to sit tight for a few months and see what the results of actions we have taken will be.

It is extremely callous and cruel of this government to invite old ladies such as the one whom I quoted, and veterans such as the one who wrote to me, to sit tight for a few months and wait to see what happens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: This is a sit tight budget, in the words of the minister himself. It is a budget that dooms to despair the dispossessed people of this country and encourages the process of despoiling them. Meanwhile, to take their minds off their misery the government has devised something else, that is, to continue with the shining farce of a Prime Minister like a glowing star in the firmament who can be watched by people who try to identify with him. It is an exciting spectacle, the government hopes, and one that will be durable.

It is exciting to see a Prime Minister who can divide his Christmas holiday between scuba diving in the West Indies and skiing in the Alps, and to hell with the people. It is exciting to watch a Prime Minister who can keep up all these indubitably important athletic events and show his great prowess leaping with both feet off the ground to astound the Eskimos and Indians and all other people wherever he goes, a Prime Minister who can spend his time girl-watching in the House of Commons gallery, mixing with the stars both human and not so human, and taking the place of the Queen, the flag and whatever other symbols you like.

It would be funny if it were not so tragic. But it is not amusing when you consider that this is the government's substitute for real action. I notice the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is amused. He is convinced that the government has managed to pull the wool tightly over the eyes of the people so they will never be able to see that this shining image is a substitute for bread, butter, security, health care, jobs, training for jobs and all the other things that the people need.

I am here to tell the President of the Privy Council that I do not think the people are going to believe this forever. The mask is slipping already and people are able to see the hollowness and emptiness behind this government's policies. If it were not for patronage, the government would never make it stick; and if it were not for the publicity and propaganda that goes on, they would never make it stick either.

But after a while people will discover that bread and circuses are no substitute for the kind of life we ought to be able to have in Canada, with our modern technology and knowledge and with really genuine leadership policies. I know the government thinks that this is a very bright way of carrying on, that this is a really clever policy, but as for the just society—forget it! The Prime Minister himself said the other day that he was not using the term now, that it had become a cliché. I think the real reason he is not using the term is that he—he is undoubtedly an intelligent person—cannot even pretend to himself that he is heading at all in the direction of the just society. I think he knows only too well that what he is heading for could well be called a great many other things, but by any intelligent person it could not be named the just society.

Another of the government's ideas is: For goodness sake, don't let anyone take Parliament seriously. Members of the government are building up the age-old idea which went so well in France for a while under Louis XIV, the splendid Monarch of the Sun, that "l'État, c'est moi". That served him well for a while, but eventually the people decided they wanted no more of that. I say that contempt for Parliament and contempt for the people go together, and that we have had too much of both.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to use the rest of my time to say what should be done in a constructive way, because although we have been emphasizing the ills of the government, the things the government is not doing, we also want to say what we think should be done by any government concerned with the well-being of people at this time. First of all, in this budget debate we tried very hard to have an amendment accepted that would exempt from income tax single persons earning less than $2,000 a year, and married people living on less than $4,000 a year. That is a pretty rough and ready determination of income tax exemption, but this is what we tried to do. We were crushed in that attempt by the overwhelming majority of government supporters whose hearts bleed for the people except when it is time to do something for them in a practical way. Well, that is out for now.

The second thing we tried to do in this Parliament was to get interim increases for those people who are below the poverty line and for those people on government pensions, old age pensions, veterans pensions and others, pending the result of the government's review of the social security programs. You see, Mr. Speaker, while all this wonderful efficiency is going on and the government is building up terribly intricate machinery to look into all these things, the cost of living is steadily climbing and what people have to live on is steadily shrinking. So in all justice, if it were heading for the just society the government would be giving interim increases to keep these people abreast of rises in the cost of living until such time as a proper social security program was developed. But there again, the government will not do that.

In the third place, Mr. Speaker, we have said that the budget should have forecast a guaranteed income in the near future. Very shortly after this session began I asked about a guaranteed income and the Prime Minister replied that the government was not satisfied that this was a realistic step. I would like to ask, realistic for whom? It may not be realistic for the government. Why in the world should members of the government bother about a guaranteed income? They have one until the next election. I would not care to say how long that guarantee will last when the next election is called, unless in the meantime they mend their ways considerably. But for people on low income, a guaranteed income is the first step to making it possible for them to maintain even the standard of living that they have.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I admit that a guaranteed income is not the whole answer. People say that some of us in the New Democratic Party regard it as a panacea to cope with all the troubles of people on low income. We do not. Until we get what President Nixon says he is after, until we get people off relief and welfare rolls and on to payrolls, we will not really progress too far. But with a guaranteed income we will have made it possible for people to exist. When every welfare and social work agency in the country worth its salt is telling the government in no uncertain terms that a guaranteed income is a must, when even the Deputy Minister of the Department of National Health and Welfare in testimony before the Senate Committee on Poverty says that a guaranteed income is a must, surely the government ought to know whether a guaranteed income is a realistic step. I say members of the government do know, but they are not prepared to trim their priorities in other directions to make it possible.

We say that a guaranteed income is a must, and along with it there ought to be a guarantee that a person is able to keep it. When small increases are made to pensions, the first thing that happens—just as outlined in the letter from which I read—is that the landlord takes the raise in pension as fast as the poor people get it. Therefore, in addition to a guaranteed income there must be a guarantee that a person is able to keep it; there must be legislation which will prevent the landlord, the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker and the government itself from taking it away. The present government has a very bad habit: when it gives a small raise in pensions—which it has done once or twice—it is in effect robbing Peter to pay Peter. It may give a little bit in pensions, but it will take that little bit away from the veterans allowance. That is not the way to do things. The government knows better than that.

Sometimes people think that the government could not be so hardhearted and that it makes these mistakes unintentionally. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, they are not mistakes. These things are done on purpose. They are done because the government does not care one fig for the low-income people. It regards them as surplus, as fit for the scrap pile and that is about all.

Another measure we want to see enacted would provide for guaranteed jobs and training for jobs. Yesterday I introduced an amending bill which, if adopted, would make it possible for married women, or single women if they are providing domestic service at home, to qualify for manpower retraining and the allowances that go with it. I see the minister shaking his head—I hope in agreement with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Benjamin: He talks a good fight.

Mrs. MacInnis: I know he talks a good fight, but I would like to see him come through with action. That is always the way with the government. They talk all the way; they don't act. It is always jam tomorrow but never jam today. I say it is time we got the jam today for the people who need it. Sure, there is jam for Members of Parliament, for Senators and people in highly-placed jobs, for highly-placed civil servants and the coteries surrounding the various ministers, and over $100,000 for the Prime Minister's own staff. There is money for that kind of thing, but there is no money for the people who need it. Any civilization which begins at the top, giving rises in income to people who have a fair degree of income and security, has no right to call itself a civilization.

Mr. Benjamin: Off with their heads!

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes, off with their heads! We have not even emerged from the jungle and we have no right to call ourselves a civilization.

Mr. McCleave: Nobody is doing that.

Mrs. MacInnis: Some people call it a civilization, but it seems to me that is an exaggeration; I think that is the best word to describe it. As a fifth step we want to see the implementation of a fair tax system, a system of taxation based strictly on ability to pay. I know that with respect to the white paper on reform of taxation we will probably end up with the Minister of Finance backing down a great deal under pressure. I will make a bet right now that he will back down in those areas of the white paper which concern people who already have big dividends and big incomes, because they are people able to mount big and powerful lobbies. We should go back to the principle that people should be taxed according to their ability to pay, no matter from where they get their income.

In the last place I would mention—this is No. 6—a guaranteed industry which goes with a guaranteed income. We cannot have one without the other. Guaranteed industry means stopping all this business of trying to seduce private industry to come in here, there and everywhere and start up enterprises thanks to government handouts and incentives, and then the government thinking it has done its job. What the government will have to learn, and the other public authorities, federal, provincial and municipal, is that where private industry cannot provide goods or services because a venture is not profitable, the government, the public authority, will have to step in and do it.

I shall conclude my remarks in a moment, Mr. Speaker. These are the things we should be doing. These things should be in the budget. But on the contrary, this budget means a do-nothing drift for the country; it means disappointment and disillusionment for the great majority of people, and deepening despair for thousands who can see no way out. We in this party have no choice but to oppose to the best of our ability this retreat from even the idea of a just society.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) who dealt with problems very similar to those I will discuss tonight. He spoke of the textile industry, and of Air Canada, as did also several other members.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate through the courtesy of my colleagues, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). The relative importance of the loss of industrial capacity as a result of changing defence policy as has been evidenced in Nova Scotia, particularly in Dartmouth, coupled with the fact that only one of us could speak, has persuaded them to let me have this place, and I thank them and their constituents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: Had they spoken, I am sure they would have made observations with respect to defence matters, transportation, probably the Post Office and other important matters. Mr. Speaker, many developments have occurred recently which really make one wonder whether these are the results of a sensible policy of the government, whether politics are involved, or what is going on. I refer to recent policies of various departments which are widening, not narrowing, the gap between various regions of Canada. I will enumerate them later. The budget, which is the most recent of these announcements, certainly adds to this.

It is very clear that the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who was told to do so by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), will create further unemployment. What concerns me is that once again the government hits at the low-income groups; once again they hit the poorer people; once again they hit the least literate and the uneducated people; once again the Prime Minister hits at the rural people; once again the pensioners are getting a beating; once again the Prime Minister considers his just society just for the rich; once again the young people are forced to migrate to the cities, but now only to find that the prospects for prosperity and richness are not so rosy there either. This time our young and vigorous rural people go to the cities to become welfare recipients.

There is no problem with the rich, the well-to-do, the highly skilled and educated. However, it is interesting to note that even university graduates are facing difficulties. I could supply the House with specific examples, but will refrain from doing so. It is true that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been established. It is also true that it has helped many industries in various parts of Canada, and I thank the minister for what he has done. I would also add that we might be worse off had his department not made money available. I should say that the efforts of the minister and his department are being undermined by the efforts of his colleagues. They do not give a darn about unemployment, Mr. Speaker; they do not give a darn about rural Canada. They have been told to cut back by the Prime Minister.

Let me illustrate by giving specific cases. We have the case of the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans). Mr. Speaker, I do not know what to say about him. He certainly has no concern for the people and no concern for postal services. Somebody remarked the other day that so-and-so had been the worst Postmaster General until this one came along. I am wondering what would have happened if this fellow had been elected Prime Minister. I will not elaborate on that at present, though I have done so before.

Then we come to the Department of National Defence. This month Fairey Aviation is scheduled to be closed. Fortunately, I understand that negotiations are going on and the Dartmouth people might end up in a better position than previously as far as employment is concerned. Fairey Aviation is not a defence base, but the company is entirely dependent upon defence expenditures for survival. It employed over 400 people. The de-escalation of these expenditures is responsible for the situation in which this establishment now finds itself.

In another not unrelated area, I feel I should make some observations about the cutbacks in civilian employment within the Department of National Defence, again accentuated by the policy of the government. In this connection I am happy to have the minister's assurances that lay-offs that will have to take place as a result of the freeze of the defence budget will almost entirely be through natural attrition. However, it must be noted that if we bear our share of the forecast 10 per cent reduction by 1973, it will mean that the economy will have to get along on pensions as opposed to the working incomes of approximately 400 to 500 men in Nova Scotia. Some of this will be in my riding at Cornwallis. My warning is, "Don't turn the economy into a pension economy."

In order that hon. members may better understand the enormous impact on our economy that could result from the loss of industries dependent upon such activities, let me say that on the basis of the last completed survey, which I understand was in 1960, 44.7 per cent of household income in Nova Scotia resulted directly from federal expenditures, and 43.5 per cent of employment was directly attributable to federal expenditure. Any tampering with such a dependent economy has an obvious and immediate adverse effect. Now, where is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion? Where is the co-ordination between departments, if they are allowed to proceed in this way to create unemployment? Where is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which is supposed to be the custodian of this type of activity?

Let us look at another area, transportation. To talk about an area I know best, the Maritimes, recently there have been two freight rate increases on the railways, and I understand another one is scheduled. We cannot begin to talk about reducing the economic gap without including transportation, Mr. Speaker. It is the key for Maritime exports to the rest of Canada. In addition to that I would include the harnessing of the Fundy tides. I believe there is a great future in that development.

On the subject of transportation, I cannot understand why we do not have some planning. Possibly there is too much planning and not enough action. Where are the fast trains and other forms of modern transportation? What is being done to encourage people not to drive their cars in the cities every day? What is being done about the problem of pollution? Why cannot there be improvements over what we have had in the past?

The government of Nova Scotia has acted to improve ferry service between Nova Scotia and New England. The new ferry service will be instituted this June. Normally the terminal facilities are provided by the Department of Transport, but the federal government has said they will not provide any more money to Nova Scotia for this type of project. Therefore, it was necessary for the government of Nova Scotia to obtain a loan. We are glad this is being done by that government even though these facilities are normally provided by the Department of Transport.

Why is the responsible department not protecting the rights of these designated areas? Why are there not improved transportation and tourist facilities? The transportation of goods must be improved. There is great potential in the tourst industry in Nova Scotia and it should be encouraged in every way possible. The ferry service to which I have made reference is one way in which the Department of Transport could have assisted. While on the subject of transportation, I wish to make a brief reference to Air Canada. I listened with interest when the hon. member for Trois-Rivières spoke about discontinuing air services in the city of Trois Rivières. Is Air Canada going to be allowed to discontinue services at a time when business is increasing? This question is of particular interest to my constituents.

I am glad to see the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) here. The primary resource of the Atlantic area is fishing. However, the concern of this government is basically to reduce the number of fishermen. This is being done on both the east and west coasts. The government has allowed our resources to be depleted. Every day there is discussion on our resources being depleted but nothing is done about it. This matter has not been brought to the attention of the United Nations or the international conference. This question should be studied under the international law of the sea. Rather than protect our rights, this government is allowing foreign fishermen to deplete our fishing resources. They have imposed licences and are limiting the number of fishermen. This could cause a blackmarket. However, I do not wish to deal with that subject this evening. It is a shame to see the way the government is pussyfooting around these matters.

The main problem with the Atlantic economy and the fishing industry is that the government fails to realize the potential in that industry. The rest of Canada has not been made aware of the potential of that industry and the money that could be derived from it. Every day the subject of wheat is discussed because the western wheat farmers have been able to create national concern. However, this has not been done in the fishing industry. With the correct policies something could be done about the potential of the Atlantic area. Why is the responsible department not protecting the rights of this industry?

I now wish to deal with a matter of particular concern to my constituency. I refer to the textile mill in Yarmouth which employs 500 people, the largest employer in my constituency. One would not think the closing of a plant in Toronto would affect a little town like Yarmouth, but 18 per cent of the production of the textile mill in Yarmouth was for the Dunlop industrial division in Toronto. In terms of employment, this affects 18 per cent of the employees of that mill. When this fact is coupled with the bleak picture in the Canadian textile industry, the results are astounding. There has been much talk about the textile industry in the past couple of years. I wish to quote from an article which appeared in yesterday's edition of the Chronicle-Herald. This article was written following an interview with the president of Cosmos Imperial Mills. It states:

> Cosmos Imperial Mills of Yarmouth will close unless the federal government acts immediately on a policy restricting textile imports from foreign countries, said company president E. D. James yesterday.
> He said in a telephone interview from Hamilton that 500 employees in Yarmouth would be out of work soon because the company could not continue operating at a loss.

I wish to emphasize the following paragraph:

> He said 50 per cent of the textile industry in Canada had been taken over by foreign imports. "In United States they complain because the government allows 12 per cent," he said.
> The European Economic Community restricted textile imports to only nine per cent of the total.
> "I don't advocate we stop imports but let's have a reasonable limit in view of all other countries of the world," he said.
> And the same import restrictions should apply to the electrical and rubber industries, he said.
> There were many men in Ottawa who thought that buying at the lowest price was always the best policy, he said. "But if no one makes money here, who can buy?"

I want to emphasize the words, "But if no one makes money here, who can buy?". If Canadians do not make money here, who will buy the textiles, rubber and electronic products that are imported? The article continues:

> He said the recently announced closing of Dunlop industrial division, Toronto, was a serious setback —for Cosmos operations in Yarmouth.
> Each year Cosmos sold between $750,000 and $1,000,000 worth of industrial hosing and belting to the Dunlop company.
> Unless some way could be found to bring imports of fully manufactured goods from low wage countries into proper balance, the Dunlop closing would be symptomatic of things to come in other industries, he said.

For seven years the textile industry has been asking for a government policy, yet every time the minister is questioned about it he smiles and says "Soon." Why can there not be a quota the same as other countries have?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: Why does Canada have to take a back seat in the fishing industry? Why do we have to take a back seat with regard to wheat? It should not be necessary to pay the farmers to stop growing wheat: this is ridiculous. Why do we have to take a back seat with regard to oil, textiles, electronic products and many other products?

An hon. Member: Somebody else has charge of the steering wheel.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Comeau: The hon. member says, "Somebody else has charge of the steering wheel". This makes sense. The economy of the country is not particularly good, as the budget speech has demonstrated, yet the attitude of the government seems to be completely negative. They laugh it off. The ministers concerned are not even here. They take a back seat in external affairs.

On the subject of textiles, again, let us consider the Mexican deal. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) raised the question the other day because he is concerned about paper products. The Mexicans were exporting more textiles to this country than they were allowed, so the government decided to impose a surcharge. The Mexicans, in turn, placed restrictions on the import of paper products. So the decision was reversed; the Canadian government changed its mind and allowed the textile imports to continue.

The textile industry has been seeking a policy statement from the government for several years, without result. Each year the situation is allowed to get worse. One of these days the textile industry will have to be told either to go ahead or to close up. I wish the government would make this decision now so that we would know what to do. If it decides the factories will have to close their doors, the Canadian people will determine what attitude to take. Let me point out that these textile mills are located for the most part in designated areas. There are many in the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) has raised this matter frequently in this House. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is supposed to be the watchdog of the economy as far as these areas are concerned. Why has it not advised the other departments what to do? Why has it not co-ordinated their activities? It is true the department has made money available to industry, but its beneficial activities are offset by those of other departments.

There is one other matter on which I should like to speak briefly. It concerns control over foreign ownership about which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) had something to say earlier. Though I agree with some of the things the hon. gentleman said about the need to limit the entry of foreign capital, I certainly hope he and his friends do not go overboard in this direction. For those who come from Toronto, where there is plenty of industry established, it is easy to say: We do not want foreign capital here to provide employment. But anyone who comes from a province like Nova Scotia, for example, takes a more cautious view. In that province between 70 and 75 industries have been brought in by an aggressive government, and foreign capital made this possible. When one realizes that in November, in Nova Scotia, the unemployment rate was less than that of the country as a whole, it becomes apparent that the introduction of foreign capital has produced good results in some parts of the country. So I warn the hon. gentleman not to go overboard in this direction.

I will end by saying this: You can take the boy from the country, but you cannot take the country from the boy. Let us not force everyone to live in urban centres where people are faced with housing problems, transportation problems, pollution and high costs. It has been estimated that between 103,000 and 106,000 people left the Atlantic provinces between 1961 and 1966. What bothers me most is the age of the people who are leaving; it is the age group 20-24 which is making up most of the emigration figure. The government should not wait until the people have left before it acts. The time to act is not after the people have gone to the cities. Let us attempt to prevent some of this movement to the towns; let us try to plan our cities; let us try to plan a total Canada. We are a growing country and, surely, every part has some potential.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I can only express profound regret that the spokesmen for the official opposition, who allegedly possess definitive answers to all the problems which afflict Canada, were so sadly unable to apply those solutions during the disastrous period when they governed Canada in late 1950s and early 1960s.

The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke the other day, telling us how we should cure inflation and how we should reduce unemployment in Canada. In light of the right hon. gentleman's record as Prime Minister, that is something like an arsonist speaking on the subject of fire prevention.

An hon. Member: Oh, you are funny.

Mr. Mackasey: He is factual.

Mr. Perrault: I think the factual information which I hope to present will be illuminating. Tonight there is jubilation on the part of the official opposition about what they say are disastrous unemployment figures. What were the figures for the years when the right hon. gentleman's government held office? In 1958 the percentage of unemployment was running at 10.1. What is it in Canada tonight? About 4.7. Here are the figures for the other years: 1959, 9.4 per cent; 1960, 9.6; 1961, 11.3; 1962, 9.1. In 1963, things changed because the Liberals came into power. Unemployment began to go down and the problem was beaten by the beginning of 1963, as it will be beaten again by this government. Let us have no lecture from the official opposition, remembering its monumental ineptitude when given the opportunity to reduce unemployment in Canada or to battle inflation.

The former Prime Minister from Prince Albert was not even accurate in his quotation about the just society. When was the term "just society" first used? The right hon. gentleman said it was first uttered by Mao, and his Tory friends said, "Isn't that awful? Communism!" Mr. Speaker, the term "just society" was first employed by the Chartists of England in May, 1838, and the expression which the right hon. gentleman condemned was spoken out in support of equal electoral areas, vote by ballot, annual Parliaments, payment of Members of Parliament and universal suffrage. It was not Mao who thought of it; it was part of the great British parliamentary process. The right hon. gentleman should know his history better. Thanks to Liberal governments in this country, the ideals set forth by the Chartists have come into being in Canada. Let us not distort history.

The right hon. gentleman said, in effect, "If you will just let us have power again, everything will be all right." That is what he said in January, 1959, on the floor of the House of Commons. On the subject of unemployment, he said, "I mention these things just to keep the record straight rather than have it befogged by extravagant statements made in extravagant language." Well, we have heard some extravagant language from the opposition in the past few days, but this is what the right hon. gentleman said, as reported at page 62 of Hansard for January 19, 1959:

I realize the situation and the seriousness of it. I realize the need of action being taken and I have pointed out the action that has been taken.

Action was taken all right; there was unemployment of 11.3 per cent.

It is one of those positions in which we find ourselves.

The government found itself in many positions in those days.

In the event that we place money into the stream and expand credit, there is an inflationary trend.

[Mr. Perrault.]

He did not possess that economic perspicacity the other night. He went on:

If we do not, we allow those who are unemployed to suffer. There is one of the major problems that economists have not been able to answer today, the unusual position with which we are faced.

Let the official opposition take the right hon. gentleman's words in 1959 to heart. The right hon. gentleman said that the situation required action on the part of all parties to solve the problem. The position is different now, is it not? There has been an unrelieved attack on the government at a time when there should be at least some degree of interparty unity in order to battle the problem that is facing this country.

Mr. Ricard: You should have been here in 1960.

Mr. Perrault: We have inflation in Canada, and it is small comfort to the victims of this inflation to be reminded that most of the world is confronted with precisely the same challenge as that facing Canadians. The latest available data shows inflation increases for various countries. The Canadian position has been set out and described as absolutely disastrous. One member of the official opposition said the other day that Canada stands humiliated in every part of the world, which is just irresponsible overstatement. Canada's reputation is as high or higher than it has ever been.

Mr. Hales: Not in the United States.

Mr. Perrault: I challenge that statement. The following are the figures for the percentage of inflation per year in other countries; France, 6¼ per cent; Japan, 6 per cent; United States, 5¾ per cent. With regard to the United Kingdom, we had a lecture in economics from our friends at the other end of the chamber today about how Socialism has all the answers to inflation and unemployment. In the U.K. the percentage is higher than ours, at 5¼ per cent. So we are not alone. This fact should not make us complacent. Indeed, it should inspire us to do better. Others are convinced that some form of fiscal or financial magic by the Canadian government can solve these problems overnight. Every night following budget night people turn on their television sets and listen to a recent graduate from one of the universities of Canada giving a definitive analysis of the budget. These people have all the answers.

I suggest that they do a little more research into some of the figures they use, because between 1968 and 1969 federal expenditures rose from $6.09 billion to $12.058 billion. Provincial-municipal expenditures rose during the same period from $4.317 billion to $13.734 billion. Between 1958 and 1968 there was an increase in federal government outlays of 98 per cent. Over the same period of time, expenditures by provincial governments and municipalities increased by 218 per cent. As a result, the share of total expenditures accounted for by the federal government in 1958, which was 58.6 per cent, declined sharply to a 1968 level of 46.7 per cent of total expenditures. This is said to be a spendthrift federal government with an insatiable greed for taxation moneys. The fact of the matter is that during recent years the federal government has done everything possible to channel much of this money back into the provinces, so much so that the percentage of total expenditures is dropping.

It should be noted as well that there is a large increase in federal expenditures under the heading "Transfers to other levels of government". Between 1958 and 1968, these expenditures increased from $663 million to $2.4 billion, an increase of nearly four times. So that the image of a federal government with an insatiable greed for new taxes is false. In fact, there has been almost a 12 per cent decrease in the federal share of total expenditures in a ten-year period.

I should like to mention two matters of concern to the people of my province, and I think to many other people in Canada. British Columbia takes second place to no province in Canada in the contribution which her sons and daughters have made to the armed forces. Many of them live in my constituency and I would be remiss in my responsibility as a member if I failed to bring once again their plight and the problems of veterans in all parts of Canada to the attention of this House.

The Woods report contained 148 separate and distinct recommendations. It is 1,500 pages in length. It is an important document which has been given serious study by members of the Veterans Affairs Committee, meeting on 30 or 40 occasions. Having heard from veterans organizations in all parts of Canada, having held public meetings and cross-examined many witnesses, the committee is about to report. It is my understanding that hearings will terminate next Tuesday, and then the committee's report will be written. I hope the report can be brought to the House before the end of April at the very latest. When the report is tabled, I would urge the government immediately to draft appropriate legislation to enact into law needed reforms.

Some areas are of special, critical importance. We must as a first priority give attention to the plight of the multiple and severely disabled. The entire review procedure needs strengthening and improving. There must be major reform in this area. After two wars that exacted such an awesome and terrible toll of Canadians, the veterans and their survivors were told that a grateful nation would always remember. Those words will be but a hollow and cruel mockery unless we as members are prepared to enact the reforms which our veterans have required for so many years.

Together with other members I am disappointed that we have in this budget no increased funds for our senior citizens. In recent months I have engaged in frequent conversations with senior citizens and have made price checks in retail stores both in Ottawa and in my own constituency of Burnaby-Seymour. It is a grim experience to talk with these senior citizens who are attempting to obtain the necessities of life out of meagre incomes which are being eroded by inflation. These are the people who built this country. They earned a dollar when it bought a dollar's worth of goods. Today they are the tragic and prime victims of an inflation which extends no special compassion or concession to them. I regret that they were not included in the minister's budget message and I hope they will not be forgotten for long. I hope that within a short period of time we will provide them with more assistance.

Surely in light of the inflation that has taken place in recent years, we should first of all upgrade senior citizen allowances to decent, liveable levels, and then attach these pensions to a special senior citizen cost of living index which will accurately reflect any changes which may occur in the living costs of the older people in our economy.

There are some features of the budget which are very commendable and have not been touched on by some speakers. The government proposals to extend by three years the existing fast write-off for water pollution control facilities, and to make similar depreciation rates available for facilities for reducing air pollution are good proposals. The fact that the line is being held on taxes is also good. The restraint on commercial construction that was introduced on June 3, 1969, and the two-year deferral of capital cost allowances on new commercial buildings will be continued. I would caution the government to watch centres like greater Vancouver, for example, where the boom is not all that superheated. If there should be any slowdown there, I hope the government will move quickly during the next few weeks to make sure that the situation does not deteriorate in that and other areas across Canada.

Today we were given two lectures—what I am about to say now is the gist of my message this evening—one delivered by the former Premier of the province of Nova Scotia, now leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I am sure all of us were grateful that he had time to come back from his across-Canada white paper chase to address his remarks to us.

Mr. Baldwin: This is beginning to hurt you now, isn't it?

Mr. Perrault: The leader of that party had no solutions, no answers, no constructive proposals to assist the nation at this time. It was all unrelieved doom, doom and disaster. Those who waited for one single word of hope were disappointed. The Leader of the Official Opposition has become, without doubt, Canada's number one itinerant crepe-draper, when in fact he has a responsibility to suggest alternatives to government policy.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Modern opposition requires something more than the concept held out 100 years ago, that is, to oppose, oppose and oppose. The opposition must propose alternatives. But, really, what could one expect from a leader who produced some of Canada's highest unemployment figures when he was Premier of Nova Scotia? This is what the figures were when he was building his career as leader of the government of Nova Scotia: in 1958 the unemployment figure was 11.2 per cent, in 1959 it was 11.1 per cent, in 1960, it was 10.6 per cent, in 1961 it was 12.1 per cent, and in 1962 it was 10.6 per cent.

This is the man who is lecturing us on the subject of how to control inflation and create jobs. The financial critic of the official opposition and his leader have condemned the budget surplus as being something evil and unnecessary, yet for the last 13 years the hon. gentleman from Nova Scotia and his successor have made a virtue of budgets which have been consistently in the black, through the assistance of the federal government. What is today a vice on the part of the federal government has for years been a mark of virtue when practiced by the provincial Tory government.

The Conservative leader has suddenly emerged from his cocoon as the zealous apostle of tax reform in Canada. He is now claiming to be the dashing white major in the campaign against the white paper, and he says he is for what he terms sensible tax reforms. While the heavy air of Ottawa may have altered his perspective, while the Premier of Nova Scotia the hon. gentleman made no move to rescind or even to reform what is regarded as one of the most unfair and most iniquitous taxes known on this side of the Atlantic, the disreputable Nova Scotia poll tax which enables municipalities in the province to impose a poll tax on persons who earn so much a year—in most municipalities the amount is $1,000, as my friend knows—but who do not pay property taxes.

During the hon. gentleman's tenure in Nova Scotia, as recently as two years ago this great tax reformer allowed Nova Scotians to be thrown into the jails of that province for poll tax arrears. Now he is the man who asks Canadians to have faith in his ability to lead them into the sunny uplands of a new and more equitable system of taxation. I think most Canadians are going to say, "No thank you." This is the man who condemns the budget and accuses this government of committing sins of ommission and commission in respect of the management of Canadian affairs. This is the gentleman who has issued a sacred call to Canadians to throw the white paper into outer darkness, despite the fact that the residents of his own province would benefit perhaps more than those of any other province from the white paper reforms.

I think the leader of that great, historical party is being unreasonable in his criticisms of this budget, and I think he and his followers know they are being unreasonable. Surely this is the time when political advantage should give way to a reasonable and responsible effort to determine and to implement those proposals which are best for Canada at a time like this.

We heard from another leader this afternoon, a person I respect as I do the Leader of the Official Opposition because both in their own way have made a significant contribution to Canadian political life. The NDP leader described the unemployment rate as appalling and staggering. It is unsatisfactory, without doubt—we all feel that way.

I ask that leader whether in his view it is really responsible to use figures which have not been adjusted seasonally to overstate his position. He said there is an unemployment rate of 6½ per cent. The seasonally corrected rate is just over 4 per cent. Both figures are infinitely lower than the figure in his own province of Saskatchewan when he left that province in tatters in 1961. During the period of CCF government in Saskatchewan there was a mass exodus from that province, so much so that Saskatchewan lost seats after the last redistribution. If the CCF was able to evolve a precise and definitive answer to the problem of unemployment during its tenure of office, why did the people leave, why the drop in population? There were no entry restrictions and passports were not required; indeed, people were invited to come into the province.

In 1961, with the problem of unemployment, a serious factor in Saskatchewan, the national leader of the NDP in this House, then the Premier of Saskatchewan—I have a copy of his speech—could not bring himself to refer directly to the problem of unemployment in his province. There was not one word about the loss of jobs and opportunities, and not one word about the heartbreak to which he referred this afternoon; the heartbreak, he said, of the unemployed about which he spoke so passionately that some of us were actually moved when listening to him. The organization which officially supported the CCF in Saskatchewan had unkind words to say about this Premier, now the national leader of the NDP. This is what they said in 1961:

> So far the government of Saskatchewan has neither obtained the action from the federal government needed to increase unemployment let alone to create full employment, nor has it in the alternative requested the necessary legal authority with a view to creating badly needed jobs.

Their official report went on to say that Saskatchewan needed 10,000 new jobs annually to take care of the increasing labour force; however, only 4,000 new jobs were being provided. The result of not meeting this need for new jobs was migration out of the province at a rate of about 8,000 per year and additions to the number of unemployed. This must go down as one of the most scathing indictments ever levelled by a federation of labour. This was the report of the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour to the cabinet in 1961. It must be one of the worst indictments ever levelled by a labour organization in Canada.

Tonight we have been told that the NDP, the Socialist party, is heartbroken about unemployment. We need only review the record to find out exactly the extent of their compassion when they were given an opportunity to do something about it. Time and again we are reminded by this Socialist party that the Socialist party in Britain is the great, spiritual home of the NDP in this country. Do they want the Labour solution used in Britain? They have been coy during this entire debate about what they would do to fight inflation. Are they suggesting that we adopt the Labour, Socialist wage controls used in Britain? Do they believe the restrictions which that government attempted to place on the trade unions represented a proper move? Are they suggesting the kind of restrictions introduced by Barbara Castle? Is that the NDP solution? We want to know explicitly what their program is and how much it is going to cost.

I have before me a transcript of an NDP convention at which one of the NDP delegates stood up and said, "It is all right for our party to make all these promises, but how do we pay for them?" Do you know what happened to him? He was hooted down. Even in the report it says he was hooted down. One of the marks of a party which is able to govern is its sense of responsibility. That was not demonstrated this afternoon by the party to my far left. No one likes or wants unemployment. In the context of a free society the government of Canada is determined to meet and beat the problem of inflation instead of inviting an infinitely worse situation later for a longer period of time.

Today's policy challenges a free society to accept the responsibilities of freedom. It is a policy which asks for co-operation and restraint; a policy which says to management, "Restrict your profits," a policy which says to consumer, "Buy prudently and well," a policy which says to government, "Design your spending programs for the real needs of the people," a policy which says to the organized labour movement, "Do not set your wage goals beyond productivity, because if you do the fires of inflation will be fed and indeed your gains will be illusory." How is the doctrine of restraint really being preached by the leaders of the two major opposition parties in this House? Have they gone for the short yardage of immediate political advantage?

This is the time for the leaders of those parties and their followers to demonstrate that they are capable of governing, yet all of us have been disappointed with their shrill, narrow criticisms. Has one word of warning been delivered by the Leader of the Official Opposition to his friends on Bay Street and the business community, urging co-operation in this way? Has one word of caution or restraint been breathed by the NDP leader to the great trade union movement to show restraint? It was done by Harold Wilson in Britain, but it has yet to be done by the NDP in Canada.

What has been the opposition's attitude? One spokesman summed it up by saying, "It's not our responsibility to offer solutions; you're the government". It is their responsibility as well as ours, because inflation and unemployment afflict people of all parties. It is everyone's task to make sure that the battle is won. It is the responsibility of other levels of government to be more than carping, negative critics spending profligately on one hand and then accusing the federal government of irresponsibility. If the battle for more jobs and price stability is to be won, it will be won because enough Canadians of all parties believe Canada to be important enough for restraint to be shown and sacrifices to be made.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to follow the hon. member from British Columbia who was sent into compulsory retirement by that province. We have another non-budget by a non-minister on behalf of a non-government. Actually, the budget has no effect whatsoever on direct revenues or expenditures. How can you call it a budget when it continues the identical tariff and tax situation already in effect? The only changes relate to consumer credit and similar non-budgetary matters which could have been achieved through a simple Order in Council. As a matter of fact, similar changes were brought into effect under a former Liberal government in 1946 by a simple radio announcement. So anaemic is the budget in fiscal terms that it leads to the conclusion that the minister simply bowed to the pressure for a financial statement, and when he made the statement he had nothing to say.

The budget does answer some questions. It shows the patent insincerity of the government's demands for spending curbs. The government is spending $13 billion while it tells industry and labour to retrench. The budget clearly shows that the federal government is the major contributor to inflationary pressure. There is no other single agency in the nation which has such enormous spending power and directs it into so many non-productive channels. By far the major part of federal spending is directly inflationary. Private industry spends in order to produce. The government is the most gigantic consumer in the nation.

The budget also answers the question about the government's sincerity on the question of tax reform. At the very moment when the government has produced a series of tax reform proposals in a white paper which has been in the public domain for some months, a budget appears in which not one single proposal of the white paper is embodied. This leads to the conclusion that the governement has repudiated its white paper tax reform proposals. It is a fact that the budget represents a rejection by the government of the government's white paper on taxation.

Under the circumstances, it is difficult to see how the government can stand behind the budget and the white paper. It must disown either the budget or the white paper. None of the suggested reforms are given recognizition in the budget, and one can only suggest the white paper is no longer to be taken seriously. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) saw this difficulty and suggested there would perhaps be another budget in the fall. This stands to reason, since he can hardly say he produced a budget in the spring; he simply reissued last year's budget with a new cover. As the budget was coming out, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported a new increase in consumer prices. Obviously the government is not winning the war against inflation any more than it is winning the war against poverty.

All along the line this government's refusal to dissociate itself from academic abstractions and get down to the realities of Canada's problems has placed this country in the posture of a non-nation. While talking about the dangers of inflation the government calmly handed out a further $2 million to the Company of Young Canadians, an organization which countenanced revolutionary, subversive and violent activities among its membership. So far as we know, the same people are still running this Trojan Horse organization. The only conclusion one can draw is that somebody "up there" wants the Company of Young Canadians very badly. No matter what the Company of Young Canadians does, it is apparently beyond criticism. Undoubtedly it has a function above and beyond that laid down in the terms of reference. What is the reason for the mysterious immunity which this completely useless organization enjoys? Why is it too hot to control? Why is it a sacred cow?

More and more policies laid down at Ottawa are reducing this country to the status of a non-nation. The Americans kindly take us aside and tell us which parts of the Canadian north they intend to take over. They produce reports saying Canadians want to sell water to the United States. Nothing could be further from the truth. Not one responsible Canadian has gone on record in favour of selling one drop of water to the United States. The solution in respect of the Canadian Arctic is simple. The Canadian Arctic is Canadian. The sooner this government so informs the people of the United States, the better. The Canadian Arctic is as much Canadian territory whether it be land, ice or water, as New York harbour is United States territory.

The United States has as much claim to Canadian territorial waters in the Arctic as it has to territorial waters in the Soviet Arctic, and I do not see them advancing that argument. There must be a reason. Somebody had better point out to the United States authorities in Washington—apparently this government cannot do it—that United States territory stops at the Canadian border and does not leap-frog the Canadian nation and come down again in the Arctic islands. A Canadian presence must be established in the Arctic and it must take the form of an immediate doubling of the number of Canadian military bases in the Arctic. That should not be hard; there are only two there now.

This government sat in total numbness, doing absolutely nothing while the United States turned off the tap on Canadian oil imports in the United States. Oil is one of the biggest stakes in the game of international power politics. Oil explains the presence of Soviet Russia in the Middle East. Russia is not in the least attracted by the justice of the Arab cause; it is attracted by Arab oil. Oil and natural gas explain the interest of the United States in the Canadian Arctic. There is no other reason. At the same time as they are asking our help to go into the Arctic, the Americans are shutting out Canadian oil. Even this government should be able to put two and two together and come up with a convincing argument for a new United States oil policy. The United States is up to the old game of trying to get the golden egg with one hand and strangle the goose with the other.

I shall not go into a detailed discussion of this budget because it all went into Hansard when the minister brought down last year's budget. Anyone who wants to know the reaction to this budget has only to get Hansard and read what was said when the last budget came down. There is no change. It is the same budget. The only change is that the situation is a little worse all around; that is all. We have more inflation, more poverty, less national development and more wasteful expenditure. Apart from those few points, the situation is unchanged.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance two questions. In view of the strong argument in the white paper for raising exemptions, why did he not take the opportunity in this budget to raise exemptions? I also ask, in view of the large surplus he is predicting why did he not see fit to pass on tax relief to Canadians in the form of a tax reduction for the income tax payer? People in this country are entitled to tax relief. When one considers that Canadians are at this moment overtaxed, overcharged and underserved, one might ask what right the minister has to keep a surplus for himself. Surely it could have been passed on in the form of tax relief, at least to those in the lower income brackets.

The time has come for a reduction of federal expenditures and income tax relief to the overtaxed Canadian taxpayer. The western farmer, whose income has been reduced by 23 per cent in the past 18 months, due largely to the incompetence of this government and its lack of policy, is entitled to tax relief. One of the most disturbing things about the government is its apparent obliviousness to anything that is not neatly laid down in a task force report or government white paper. Let me say to the government that the world is not made up of task forces and white papers. It is a real world, with real problems, and the government is strikingly oblivious to these problems.

We have daily reports from the United States, particularly the New York area, of a tragically high death rate among children because of the use of narcotics. Two years ago from the same area we had similar reports about the high incidence of marijuana usage. There is no question in the mind of any intelligent person that the use of one type of narcotic predisposes psychologically and physiologically the use of other narcotics. Narcotics users, particularly among the young, are not likely to be too particular about the type of narcotic when they are in search of the euphoria which narcotics provide. Yet this government has declined to announce policy to deal with what is rapidly becoming the most serious menace with which our society has to contend. We are an open society and we are therefore susceptible to the winds of change, the currents of social evolution and revolution sweeping the world. We are particularly susceptible to the reverberations of change taking place in our neighbour to the south.

The United States today is a society under attack. It is under attack from within. Its institutions, its authority, its freedom and its laws are being systematically undermined and destroyed by those whose mission is not the reform of society, not the overturning of society alone but the destruction of America itself. I do not think that is an exaggeration, because those who believe these things have put themselves on record as wanting America destroyed. We in Canada cannot escape these problems, but so far as this government is concerned they might as well be taking place on the moon. The government is oblivious to social change and disruption. We are particularly vulnerable because we are an open society. In the Soviet Union there is no drug problem because drug peddlers are shot. Secondly, no one can afford to buy drugs. In the Soviet Union there is no problem of revolutionary radicals because revolution is frowned upon. Those who last fall paraded in Red Square on behalf of imprisoned intellectuals were allowed to parade exactly 14 minutes. They are now in Siberia.

Some of the people who in the name of Marxism and Maoism have unloosed bloody riots in America should attempt to organize a protest in some of the countries where Marxism and Maoism are in effect. Let them try to organize public protests in Moscow, Peking or Cuba. Does anyone think there is no oppression in those countries? Does anyone think there is no oppression in Czechoslovakia, Hungary or Poland? The Chicago trial which has become the target of all the professional do-gooders in Canada and the United States was a model of propriety, an extravagant exercise in liberty and license compared with any trial ever held at any time in any Communist-dominated country, and yet the professional apologists criticize it in the name of Marxism.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

• (9:40 p.m.)

On Sunday, March 15, at ten o'clock in the morning CBC radio staged a long, critical attack on the conduct of the trial in Chicago by Judge Hoffman. He was not of course referred to as Judge Hoffman but as Julius Hoffman, in order to undermine the respect listeners might have for the judiciary. They interviewed by telephone persons connected with the defendants who were allowed to use Canadian network facilities to attack the procedures of an American court. They quoted selected excerpts from the Bantam Book publication of the trial transcript which includes also a scurrilous attack on a judge who was attempting to do his duty under great difficulties.

One wonders why the Canadian taxpayer should be footing the bill for the dissemination of this kind of propaganda on the CBC. It was pure propaganda because only one side of the question was given. Not one word was said in defence of Judge Hoffman or his court. It may be that there is no defence of Judge Hoffman's conduct of the trial. The CBC is not in a position to know that. It is significant that if there was a defence, no one who could have given it was asked to be on that program. Secondly, and most significantly, the only question is whether the defendants had a fair trial, and that is not a question for the CBC to determine, particularly when it concerns a court proceeding in another country: it is a question for an appeal court.

The program made much of the alleged harshness with which defence counsel were treated by Judge Hoffman. Yet anyone who followed those proceedings knows that from the beginning of that trial the defendants, who are in each case professional agitators in their late twenties and thirties—one is in his fifties—went out of their way to disrupt the court, to hurl abuse at the judge and to mock at the very institution of justice. In that they were aided and abetted by their lawyers.

This is a tactic, with which we are all too familiar, which shows contempt for the institutions of democracy, yet these people are now being made heroes in the press and on the CBC. The tactics of disruption have been applied and are being applied in our courts deliberately to undermine. Canadian courts have followed the very commendable procedure of simply ejecting the disrupters.

I do not intend to dwell in great detail on this matter, but I deal with it because it raises fundamental problems in the protection of our institution and certainly it raises in a striking fashion the question of the responsibility of the media. As far as the CBC is concerned, there is no question that it acts with an absence of responsibility. Recently we had the National Film Board producing, at the taxpayer's expense, a full-length feature film starring one of those on trial in Chicago for organizing a large-scale, bloody riot at the Democratic Party convention. Why should Canadians pay the shot for making a hero of Abbie Hoffman, a professional revolutionary in his thirties posing as a leader of rebellious youth?

Those people who are persona non grata in the United States, who have broken the laws of that country, who are under indictment, are coddled and pampered by government institutions in Canada. One of the spokesmen for the defendants in the Chicago trial interviewed by the CBC took pride in the systematic disruption of courtroom proceedings in that country by stating that it was a political trial and that the defendants were right in treating it as a political trial.

The same charge has been made about a recent court proceeding in Canada. You do not have political trials in a democracy; people are tried for breaking the law. The laws are made by the elected representatives, and the suggestion that they should not apply to a hardcore band of revolutionaries is simply fascism. They, too, must be subject to the laws. If the laws are wrong, they can be changed by political action. Those who try to change them by violence should no longer be tolerated in our society.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but since it is nine forty-five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 60 (6), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question on the amendment now before the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment? All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

PROCEDURAL IMPLICATIONS OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I be permitted to refer at this time to the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates which appears in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings and is reported at page 615. The Chair has looked at this report, and I have to inform the House that I have serious misgivings as to its procedural implications. It has procedural implications not only because it appears to go beyond the terms of the royal recommendation but also because it might complicate things next week in view of the timetable for supply proceedings.

I would think that the House Leaders may want to consult in this regard. I will be in touch with them so that some decision may be reached on whether there may be some way by which this report can be considered by the House or amended, according to the wish of hon. members.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I comment very briefly. I had this thought in mind, and I realize that when we get into supplementary estimates items of this kind can create many problems. I am not going to go into detail now, but I do feel that discussion might be resumed later. On behalf of our party I believe I can indicate that, if the government is willing to make certain approaches with regard to waivers of some of the Standing Orders, then in effect any defect may be cured. However, I think the matter should be discussed on the floor of the House, and so there will be no repetition I shall defer my remarks till either later today or Monday.

INFORMATION CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 2, of Standing Order 41 I wish to lay upon the table a copy, in each official language, of a public announcement which I will be making immediately to the effect that it is the government's intention to appoint as the first director of Information Canada, effective April 1 next, Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon, distinguished Canadian journalist.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF JUSTICE AND PUISNE JUDGE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in announcing on behalf of the Prime Minister, who is absent in Winnipeg, the appointment of the Honourable Gérald Fauteux, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, to be Chief Justice of Canada, succeeding the Right Honourable John Robert Cartwright who will cease to hold office on the occasion of his seventy-fifth birthday, Monday, March 23.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Hon. members will understand that it is only a long and respected tradition that restrains me from speaking as I would wish in this place in high praise of the retiring Chief Justice. Until such time as Chief Justice Cartwright completes his active duty on the bench, I feel it is perhaps inappropriate for me to make the kind of comment I would wish to make on the outstanding contribution he has made to his court and to Canada during his tenure as Chief Justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: I may say, however, Mr. Speaker, that at this very hour during Chief Justice Cartwright's final appearance on the bench as the Chief Justice of Canada my colleague the Minister of Justice is leading the ceremonies of tribute before the Supreme Court in acknowledgement of his services to the people of Canada.

I am glad to say that the new Chief Justice has already enjoyed a long and honourable judicial career, having been first appointed as a Puisne Judge of the Superior Court for the district of Montreal on April 1, 1947. He was appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada on December 22, 1949. We wish him well in the high office which he now assumes.

On behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Justice, I also wish to announce the appointment of the Honourable Bora Laskin, now a judge of the Court of Appeal of Ontario, to be a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, filling the vacancy created by the retirement of Chief Justice Cartwright from that court.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO ADJOURN FROM PLACE TO PLACE WITHIN CANADA

On the order: Government notices of motions:

March 18, 1970—The President of the Privy Council: That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered, during its consideration of the subject-matter of ground transportation at airports, to adjourn from place to place within Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section 2 of Standing Order 21 this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders at the next sitting of the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—PROTEST COUPONS—ALLEGED CLOSING OF MAIL BOX OF COLIN BROWN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Postmaster General and the Prime Minister I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Is it a fact that the government has directed that the Ottawa mail box of Colin Brown, a London insurance agent who has attacked the federal white paper on proposed taxation, shall be closed in so far as the coupons are concerned to which the minister has taken such strong objection? Is he aware of the fact that if the letters or coupons are directed to members they are delivered but unless they are they are returned to the senders when there are no names?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, all I know about it is what I read in an Ottawa paper yesterday. To my knowledge members of the government as such have nothing to do with this. I will check with the Postmaster General but certainly I have no knowledge beyond what I read in the paper yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure, then, that the minister would agree that if this is being done it would be a shocking mistake and a denial of the rights—

An hon. Member: If!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —of every individual in Canada and would indicate a power-hungry government.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

URANIUM INDUSTRY—SALE OF SHARES IN DENISON MINES—FOREIGN OWNERSHIP REGULATIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning the statement by Mr. Steve Roman, president of Denison Mines, that he intends to sell his shares in spite of the statement which the minister made last evening. Has the minister any comment to make by which he can assure the people of Canada that the government intends to carry out the obligation, which the minister undertook last night, to see that any uranium operation does not have a greater foreign ownership than 33 per cent? What steps does the minister intend to take to make sure that any transfer of shares does not violate the proposal which the minister placed before the House last night?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr Speaker, as the hon. member knows from the statement, the methods whereby the enforcement of the government's decision will be achieved are to be the subject matter of regulations which will be disclosed as soon as we have fully found the methods, made up our minds in this regard and also have discussed the matter with the securities exchanges and so on. There is no question but that the intent of the government in this regard can and will be carried out, and any potential purchaser who does not qualify as a Canadian in accordance with the definition I gave last night would purchase entirely at his own risk.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister spoke of regulations. May I ask him whether he intends to introduce specific legislation to implement the policy outlined last night or whether there is some other act under which regulations will be made, and, if so, what that act will be?

Mr. Greene: Well, the statement reads as follows:

> The preparation of detailed regulations reflecting these criteria, in the course of which there will be consultation with interested parties, will go forward with all possible speed, and we shall make the results known as soon as possible.

We have not yet determined whether it should be done entirely under the authority of the Atomic Energy Control Act, under which we have very broad powers, or whether some new or special legislation or regulations will be required. As soon as a decision is made it will be announced in the proper manner.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether any thought was given by the government to the possibility of Eldorado, the government Crown corporation, acquiring the shares of Denison Mines?

Mr. Greene: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a possibility which may be worthy of consideration but to date there is no such thought in mind in respect of this announcement. If such action were to be taken it has not been decided upon at this time.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister state very briefly why the figure of 33 per cent was chosen as the limit? Is this a purely arbitrary figure pulled out of a hat or is there some particular reason for the 33 per cent figure?

Mr. Greene: I do not think there is any particular magic or wisdom from the mountain involved in the 33 per cent figure, but in respect of other institutions such as banks and finance companies I believe the figure is 25 per cent and it was determined that in a higher risk type of investment such as mining it might be advantageous to the country to have a greater incentive for foreign investment than in respect of financial institutions and thence the figure is higher than 25 per cent. The 33 per cent figure was deemed to be an applicable one.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister be prepared to agree that for all practical purposes corporations frequently are effectively controlled with less than 33 per cent of the shares?

Mr. Greene: That is possible, but with the rules as they are we think it highly improbable that any foreign investor, who would then be at the mercy of a Canadian takeover, as 67 per per cent of the shares are held by Canadians, would be likely to embark upon a financial adventure which might prove so risky. So we feel in this case that the 33 per cent will adequately ensure Canadian control.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the chairman of Denison has just completed a press conference in Toronto in which he stated that because of the government's policy it would probably be necessary to close the mine for three or four years affecting 1,000 jobs, and because of the importance of keeping Canada's largest uranium mine open is the government actively pursuing a policy of trying to help Denison find a Canadian buyer for the shares of the chairman of Denison?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the president of Denison is perfectly free to hold such press conferences as he sees fit. With respect to the employment of the men and the continuity of operations, certainly under existing programs, or other programs if they are required, we will consider such an eventuality if and when it occurs.

With respect to helping him to find a buyer, now that the rules are made and investors know exactly who may or may not qualify, I think that the question of a buyer or of a sale should probably be left to the entrepreneurs, to the private sector, where it properly belongs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algoma.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Then I take it that it would be government policy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized for the moment the hon. member for Algoma.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): I should like to ask the minister whether he will ensure that the interests of the workers will be considered in any agreements or any arrangements which are made with Denison Mines?

Mr. Greene: We do not contemplate any arrangements with Denison Mines at present, but certainly in any governmental action the well-being, employment and concern of the workers will have the highest priority.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to ask the minister whether he intends to apply the same regulations to the other energy industries like coal and oil?

Mr. Greene: There is no decision in that regard at present. I think the Prime Minister has made it manifest that the government is working very actively on an over-all policy decision in regard to foreign ownership of industrial and resource assets in Canada. When that decision is made and the announcement forthcoming, this question will be specifically answered.

Mr. Hees: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it from the minister's answer to my last question that if Denison is closed down by the decision of the chairman, it would be quite all right with the government, and that the extra 1,000 people laid off will simply add to the government's policy of increasing unemployment at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: This is the war on inflation!

Mr. Foster: I would like to ask the minister, in view of Mr. Roman's statement this morning that there is a lack of funds, whether the minister would consider extending the stockpiling program, of which Denison has made the most use, beyond the date of June 30?

Mr. Greene: In the event of a close-down, or possible close-down, we would have to meet that eventuality if it arose and consider the various alternatives that might be available to the government. But that bridge has not been crossed yet.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the uncertainty caused by the white paper and the announcement with regard to Denison Mines, I should like to ask the minister whether he will assure the country now that these regulations or special legislation which he has mentioned today will not apply to the petroleum industry of western Canada which at present has to suffer under the quotas imposed by the United States, a subject matter which the minister recently discussed in the House?

[Mr. Foster.]

Mr. Greene: I am not able to give the assurance that the hon. member requests in that, as I have stated, the Prime Minister has announced the fact that the government is reviewing the entire question of foreign ownership. I am quite certain that when the decision is made it will be announced as promptly as possible in order that the industry and entrepreneurs and investors may know the government's policy in this regard.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be prepared to make a definite statement prior to the Easter vacation in view of the effect that this is having on business generally as well as on the stock market in Canada?

Mr. Greene: I am in no position to make such an announcement, as I have stated, and I believe that the stock market, while it has its ups and downs, has not been deleteriously affected by the government's policy in this respect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the right hon. member for Prince Albert seeking the floor for a supplementary question?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It has to do with the province of Saskatchewan where tremendous developments in uranium production are expected. An American corporation has spent a great deal of money in Saskatchewan in the Woolaston Lake area and there is a distinct possibility of tremendous developments there. Since some $70 million in expenditures will, it is hoped, be made, will the decision that has been made in connection with Denison Mines apply to this company which has spent a couple of years in serious development and is now about to be in a position to launch one of the greatest mining developments in our province, where such development is necessary because potash and wheat are virtually unsaleable? Will the minister give reconsideration to those industries that have spent their money under the law as it was and never expected the changes to be made that have been made?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the situation that the right hon. gentleman has drawn to the attention of the House is one that the government had in mind when we declared in the statement:

A further point concerns foreign enterprises now engaged in uranium exploration which have not yet established the presence of commercially productive uranium deposits. Such enterprises will be given a certain period of time within which to establish the commercially productive capacity of their properties in order to qualify for the exemption from the ceilings which will be available to present foreign owners of existing mines—

That was the exact situation we had in mind in that exemption.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for that, and I then ask him what period of time will be given? What is the anticipated time? I am sure that uncertainty is not desirable on the part of the government in this regard. How many months or how many years?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, there is no specific time decided upon, in order to give the Atomic Energy Control Board some flexibility in this regard. This is one of the areas of regulation to which I referred earlier and the regulations will be made in the near future, but certainly the Atomic Energy Control Board which will administer these regulations generally, according to our present thinking, will be happy to discuss the situation with any particular developer to assure that there will be no prejudice to such developer by reason of any retroactive effect of these rules.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we should go on to another subject, but if the House will agree the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Waterloo and the hon. member for Algoma for a supplementary question, and then go on to the next questioner.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the cryptic nature of the minister's statement last night and the importance of that statement, will the minister seek time today to explain the government's reasons for bringing these regulations into force?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think that both the Prime Minister and other government spokesmen in this area have made manifest the reasons for the fact that a decision had to be made very quickly on this matter. A sale was pending of Canada's greatest uranium resource containing something like 50 per cent of proven reserves. That is the reason we had to act very quickly in the Canadian interest, and I think that is quite well known to the Canadian public.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, my question for the minister is: in view of the statement this morning by Mr. Roman that he is going ahead with his sale to American interests, does the minister expect to introduce emergency legislation on this matter? As the second part of my question, can the minister assure the industry that the Canadian stockpile will not be put on the general market until some time later, perhaps after 1975 when the general market has improved?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the sale of the stockpile, there is no government decision as to when to sell, but certainly the experience to date has been that we do not interfere unfairly with the market by dumping the stockpile at a time when this would hurt the natural market. With regard to what we would do in the eventuality of a sale which contradicts the decision of the government, then of course we will take any action that is necessary to assure that these rules are carried out.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the fact that we received every day calls for help from officials of the textile industry, several of the plants being about to close down, would the minister tell the House what action is contemplated to assist them?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am exerting an all-out effort, Mr. Speaker, to develop a textile policy, and I am to start this afternoon on a series of meetings with those concerned.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—EFFECT OF PROPOSED CONSUMER CREDIT CURBS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. I sought some information on this subject yesterday without success when he was not in the House so I would like to obtain the information today. In light of the most recent unemployment figures and in view of the fact that the minister has already recognized that his consumer credit proposals will further slow down the economy and therefore create further unemployment, does the minister still intend to go ahead with his proposals to control consumer credit?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated our intentions in my budget speech.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Did the minister have an estimate made of the probable increase in unemployment that would result from these consumer credit regulations? Was such an estimate made and, if so, what was the estimate?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we had estimates of the over-all probable levels of unemployment which are forecast. The consumer credit controls, as I indicated, would not affect, we estimate, more than one per cent of credit sales and to that extent would not have, in our opinion, a serious effect on the unemployment situation.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree, when unemployment has reached the figures it has now, that any further increase is serious? Is the minister telling the House that he has not really had an estimate made as to the effects on unemployment of this proposal or, if he has had such an estimate made, that he is not prepared to give it to the House? Is this what he is saying?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that I do not think the consumer credit item per se will have a serious effect on unemployment.

POLLUTION

SECOND VOYAGE OF "MANHATTAN"—POSSIBLE DISCHARGE OF OIL—USE OF U.S. ICEBREAKERS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. He is not on the roster to be present today and is not here, but neither is the acting minister nor the second acting minister so perhaps I had better direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister and he can distribute it where appropriate. What contingency plans have been made by the government to deal with any discharge of oil by the Manhattan during her second voyage through the Canadian Arctic?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Woolliams: They sent the Prime Minister up there.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has made many statements in the House on this subject and the related aspects of the trip. It is my understanding that he had advised the House he would have further information on the precise question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I naturally cannot get into a controversy with the Acting Prime Minister at this time, but I asked the question in the first place because the Minister of Transport has given information on other matters but not on that point. However, I would like to put a supplementary, if I may. If for any reason Canadian icebreakers do not accompany the Manhattan, will the government permit the tanker to proceed through the Canadian Arctic with the assistance of the United States icebreakers?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to have an answer to the question brought forward.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the statement made by the Prime Minister in a radio interview this morning that he was not aware of the extent of Canadian Arctic waters, would the Acting Prime Minister call this to his attention and say that the House is very anxious to know what the Canadian government claims as being Canadian Arctic waters?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon member for Surrey.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON MARGARINE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I want to ask the Minister of Finance. A few weeks ago in answer to a question the minister indicated he was giving consideration to the many requests of consumer groups and from the industry for the removal of the 12 per cent federal sales tax on margarine. Has a decision been made on that point and, if not, when can it be expected?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the budget a decision was made to make no tax changes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MONTREAL—DELIVERY OF OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Considering the uncertain postal situation in Montreal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You finally got the message.

Another hon. Member: When did you find out about it?

Mr. Allmand: —would the department consider an alternative method of distributing old age security cheques at the end of the month in order to guarantee that these are received by pensioners on the proper date? I ask this question today because there are only ten days left until the end of the month and we will be in recess when that date comes.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member that I will be glad to bring this suggestion to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[Later:]

MONTREAL—DELIVERY OF ALLOWANCE CHEQUES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Being very concerned about people who are expecting welfare cheques at month's end, I should like to ask the minister whether he has thought of asking the 24 members from the Island of Montreal to pass these cheques from door to door during the Easter recess?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): It has already been done. You are too late.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE—TRANSFER OF WORKERS' ACQUIRED RIGHTS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the distinguished Acting Prime Minister concerning the very serious dispute in the city just mentioned by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce regarding the right of job security for the workers of Lapalme and the very important matter of the commissioner's inquiry. Can the Acting Prime Minister advise if the Postmaster General was declaring government policy when at the Empire Club last night he is reported as saying that until "the transfer of acquired rights of workers was authorized by legislation such rights could not be transferred?"

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the benefit of seeing the report of the speech, but I will draw the hon. member's question to the attention of the Prime Minister on Monday.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the distinguished Acting Prime Minister is whether the Postmaster General would be better advised not to comment on the situation when Mr. Carl Goldenberg is trying his best to deal with it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to look into that suggestion.

FINANCE

TARIFF BOARD DECISION ON UNDERGROUND VENTILATING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is either for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of National Revenue, whichever gentleman would like to respond. In view of the recent decision by the Tariff Board that ventilating equipment used underground does not qualify for exemption from federal sales tax, and in view of the fact that such equipment is used underground, in coal mines, to eliminate the danger of methane gas explosions, thus preventing accidents and loss of life, would the minister consider having this decision by the Tariff Board reviewed? Mr. Speaker, I refer here to the recent decision regarding operations in British Columbia.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have made note of the suggestion.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if he would be kind enough to report back to the house, and in this instance would he not think that the Tariff Board in this case is really splitting hairs?

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Foresty, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the fact that the Canada water bill is now before a Standing Committee of the House for intensive consideration. Can the minister indicate when he will be bringing in suggested amendments to the Fisheries Act in order that we may have an opportunity, at least at the first reading stage, to assess to what extent his proposals will plug the loophole in his colleague's bill?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment to the Fisheries Act has been cleared by the government and the bill will be introduced perhaps after the Easter recess. I can assure the hon. member that the Fisheries Act amendments and the Canada Water Act are on all fours.

POWER

MINAS BASIN—FINANCING OF TIDAL POWER PROJECT BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In view of the fact that financiers have refused to carry out the project of operating a tidal power plant in the Bay of Fundy, does the minister intend to seek other means of financing the project and particularly using the funds of the Bank of Canada to accomplish what is physically possible?

Mr. Speaker: I feel that the hon. member's interesting suggestion could be placed on the order paper.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—TELEVISION STATEMENT BY MINISTER—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As the minister said in a television interview on the CBC news on Wednesday night that there are a number of things in the white paper on tax reform that he does not like, would he take the first opportunity on motions to enumerate what those things are and what he specifically intends to do about them?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I personally do not like to have to pay more taxes but am willing to pay them in order to help take some other people off the tax rolls.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Postmaster General has revealed himself as being a co-author of the white paper, does that minister's recent absence from the House stem from the fact that the Minister of Finance has asked him to undertake some revising?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker, not really.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of a sort that has been asked before. Is the minister now prepared to state what the changes are so that members of the public who are preparing briefs and the two committees making studies will know what they are supposed to be studying? Let us have a statement.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the two committees know what they are studying. They are studying the white paper, and it is up to them to make recommendations.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not ask this to be argumentative; the committees know what they are studying. Will the minister heed the suggestion that it would be better and have more merit if the committees were to study what the minister intends to implement and not withdraw?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so. These committees are studying proposals.

Mr. Stanfield: An exercise in futility.

Mr. Benson: I will not dictate to the committee as to what it should do, and I do not think my hon. friend should suggest that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the minister makes the ultimate decision.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is supplementary to one directed by the hon. member for Calgary North to the Minister of Finance. Since the minister has clearly indicated that he does not intend to dictate to either of the two committees studying the tax proposals, may I ask whether the hon. gentleman has suggested a date by which the committees should complete their studies in order that the subject matter could then come back to the House and the legislation proceed, bearing in mind the target date of January 1, 1971, which the minister has announced.

Mr. Benson: I have not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nowlan: Then we and the chairmen of the respective committees may understand that the period during which these important proposals can be studied is not limited by the suggestion of the minister that the legislation should proceed by January 1, 1971, but that the date will depend on when the two committees report on the proposals before them?

Mr. Benson: I indicated earlier what our target date would be for implementing tax reform proposals. The committees know that date. But I am not in a position to dictate to committees—

Mr. Stanfield: That's right. Better leave it at that. You are not in a position.

Mr. Benson: At least I have a position for a while.

Mr. Hees: There is still the next election.

OIL

STATEMENT BY U.S. OFFICIAL ON SECURITY OF SUPPLY IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of a statement of Mr. Philip H. Trezise, United States Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, relating to the recent imposition of import quotas with respect to Canadian oil. Does the Canadian government share the view that one of the substantive reasons for such action is a lack of security of oil supplies in western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question is not phrased properly. Perhaps the hon. member might like to reword it. He is inviting the minister to express an academic opinion. Perhaps the question might be reworded.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, does the Canadian government feel that there is a shortage of emergency supplies of oil in western Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board is the custodian of the public interest in that regard, and if at any time if feels or believes on the basis of the scientific information available that there is such a shortage of supply it can, of course, cut off exports and divert the available supply and pipeline capacity to Canadian needs.

Mr. Mahoney: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs of the United States correct in stating that the United States government anticipated Canadian government action vis-à-vis this situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked in not in order.

ENERGY

URANIUM—EFFECT OF REPORT OF SENATE COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE POLICY

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister yet been apprised of the contents of the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, which is purported to bear directly on the operations of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and which may further affect the uranium industry?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not been apprised of the report. I have seen press statements from time to time, but that is all, with regard to the work of that august body.

FISHERIES

DAMAGE TO SEAL HERDS AND FISHING RESOURCES BY CHEDABUCTO BAY OIL POLLUTION—DATE OF SEAL HUNT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. What is the extent of the damage caused to the great seal herds off the east coast as a consequence of the oil pollution in Chedabucto Bay, Nova Scotia? The second part of my question relates to the same subject. To what extent has this pollution damaged the general fishing resources of the Atlantic coast?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any damage has been done to the herds by the oil spill from the Arrow but some damage has already been reported by our people in respect of other elements of the fishery, more particularly in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received representations, on behalf of the captains and crew members of two sealing ships, to advance the date of the seal hunt on the front to enable them to avail themselves of the herds of seals in which they now find themselves?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge. I have received a representation from an hon. member opposite who is now home in Newfoundland, and the answer to his request to advance the date was a flat no.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House the extent of the damage caused to the fishery off the coast of Nova Scotia and who will be liable for the losses of the fishermen?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has officers in the area endeavouring to determine the extent of the damage. We shall be costing this and presenting the bill in the right place. We will be backing the fishermen, in other words, in their claims.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister not undertake to make a flying visit to the ice fields and talk to the sealers and get first-hand information on the effect these crazy, stupid regulations are having on the seal fishery?

NATURAL RESOURCES

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF INDUSTRIES

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the crucial importance of the resource industry to Canada's future as a viable, economically independent nation, will the minister assure the House that in considering the problem of foreign ownership the government will give very serious consideration to utilizing the concept of public ownership in this area?

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a general recommendation and submission to the government which he must assume will be taken into account.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all respect, I was not making a representation but asking the minister if the government has given consideration to utilizing the concept of public ownership in the field of resources?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interpret the hon. member's question as a representation.

FINANCE

ADOPTION OF POLICIES TO LOWER INTEREST RATES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance which I believe to be very important. Now that United States authorities have indicated they are clearly moving in the direction of adopting policies to lower interest rates, is it the intention of the government of Canada to adopt any such policies that will lower interest rates in Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, statements on monetary policy are ordinarily made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am perfectly well aware that such statements on monetary policy are usually made through the Governor of the Bank of Canada but I am asking the minister whether he, as Minister of Finance, intends to adopt in Canada, presumably in association with the Bank of Canada, any policy comparable to that recently announced in the United States?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will have to be specific as to the United States policies he is talking about. Although the Minister of Finance has power to direct the Governor of the Bank of Canada with respect to monetary policy, the government has not done so. We have never found it necessary to do this because we have agreed with his policy.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to assume then, that the Minister of Finance is quite happy to see the present high interest rates continue in Canada?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am very unhappy.

POWER

APPLICATION TO FLOOD PART OF SKAGIT VALLEY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he or has his office received any application from the government of British Columbia to this date to flood 6,000 acres of the Skagit Valley in southern British Columbia?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the status of this matter that has been drawn to my attention. Whether there is a specific request from that government to this effect I am not quite certain and therefore I will take the hon. member's question as notice.

Mr. Rose: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which the minister could take as notice as well. Can he assure the House that if this matter comes before this department a great deal of study will be given to all possible implications of this project and that the government's approval for the project will not be automatic?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VAL D'OR—USE OF TRAILERS AS HOUSING

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Is he aware of the fact that the Val-d'Or military base is supposed soon to receive from 100 to 125 trailers to be used as living quarters by families of armed forces members?

Mr. Speaker: The question might be considered at the time of adjournment or the hon. member may prefer to put it on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYED AUTO WORKERS—FURTHER HEARING AS TO TAB BENEFITS

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the unemployed auto workers in the Oshawa area be given a further hearing with respect to TAB benefits by the board which makes decisions regarding eligibility under this program?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but only if new facts can be brought out.

NATIONAL PARKS

SUPREME COURT DECISION UPHOLDING VALIDITY OF PERPETUAL LEASES

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In his absence I will direct it in a gentler form to his Parliamentary Secretary. In light of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision announced just a few minutes before the question period began, upholding the validity of the perpetual leases in the national parks of Canada, can the holders of those leases now be given an assurance that the department will recognize them, and, further, that leaseholders who gave up valid perpetual leases under duress and compulsion from the department will have their leases reinstated and, further, that the Crown will reimburse the people of Waterton Lake, Banff and Jasper for the extremely heavy expense to which they were unnecessarily put?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As the hon. member has mentioned, the decision of the Supreme Court was released less than an hour ago. I am sure the minister would like to read the reasons for judgment and consider them, and that in due course he will deal with the questions raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Would the Parliamentary Secretary, after he has read the decision, be prepared to withdraw the bill setting up a Crown corporation and doing what the Supreme Court of Canada says this government and the department cannot do?

Mr. Honey: As I have indicated to the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, the minister will read the reasons for judgment and consider them. If I may express an opinion, I think there is no relationship between the decision of the Supreme Court and the legislation now before the House.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

TARIFF TREATMENT ACCORDED TO MICHELIN RUBBER COMPANY—SIMILAR CONCESSIONS TO CANADIAN TIRE COMPANIES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. It concerns the government's policy of allowing the Michelin Tire Company of France to put duty-free Michelin tires on the Canadian market, and the serious effect this will have on the sale of tires made in Canada. I wish to ask the minister whether concessions similar to those offered to Michelin in connection with locating in the Maritimes were also offered to existing Canadian tire companies? If so, what was the response of those companies? If such concessions were not offered, why were they not offered?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): We study each of these cases on its own merits. This is what was done in the Michelin case. I think the decision was a good one.

Mr. Saltsman: Regardless of the merits of the decision affecting Michelin, would the minister consider calling together representatives of the industry to see whether some policy could be worked out in this situation, bearing in mind the serious difficulties which are now facing tire manufacturers?

Mr. Pepin: I will do that, Mr. Speaker. I think there is a question of specialization involved here. I understand that the type of tire provided by Michelin is not produced by others in Canada.

INDUSTRY

REORGANIZATION OF E.M.I. COSSOR COMPANY

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, of which, oddly enough, he has given me notice. Is there any news concerning E.M.I. Cossor to report this morning?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): With respect to E.M.I., the company which was in trouble, I am pleased to announce that with the good co-operation of the various federal departments, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in particular, and my own, and with the collaboration of a provincial entity namely General Estates, the company is now being reinstituted, reorganized under different ownership.

[Mr. Honey.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SHIPBUILDING

COMPLETION OF ROBERTSON INQUIRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce before he goes out to look after another industry which is closing down. Can he tell us when the report on shipbuilding is likely to be ready, bearing in mind the distressed state of that industry, particularly in Saint John?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): It was to have reached me by March 31 but Commodore Robertson has asked for an extension of one month. I have agreed to this, and I hope to be in a position to report by May.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question period expired some moments ago but perhaps the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby might be allowed to ask a question in view of the difficulty he encountered with one previously.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYED AUTO WORKERS—FURTHER HEARING AS TO TAB BENEFITS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Thank you for your consideration, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising from his answer to the hon. member for Ontario in which he indicated that workers might reapply for TAB benefits after their original applications had been turned down, if new facts were brought forward. Can the minister tell us why this procedure was not made available in two recent cases to workers in Oshawa?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Because the new facts were not considered to be new by the Board, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS) AMENDMENT ACT, 1970

MEASURE TO SUPPLEMENT PENSIONS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-194, to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain Acts which provide for the payment of those pensions, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee of Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions in connection with the motions which a number of hon. members have set down, and since I have to attend a meeting in Ottawa this afternoon which would make it difficult for me to be present when motion No. 10 is put to the House, I wonder whether the House would agree to putting it first in order that I might be present.

Mr. Speaker: Before that is done, the hon. member might give the Chair an opportunity to explain the result of a consideration which has been given to the marshalling and disposal of these report stage motions which now have to be considered.

Hon. members will notice there are 16 notices of motions proposing to amend Bill C-194. For the purpose of consideration of the proposed motions, it is suggested that when motion numbered 1 is proposed by the Chair, debate be permitted on motions numbered 1 to 8 inclusive. When that debate is concluded, a division on motion numbered 1 will be deferred.

Motions numbered 2 to 8 inclusive will then be put separately from the Chair, without debate or amendment. For the purpose of voting thereon, the said motions will be grouped and set down for a single division thereon. That division also will be deferred.

When motion numbered 9 is proposed, it is suggested that debate also be permitted at that stage in relation to the proposed motion numbered 10. When that debate is concluded, it is suggested that the recorded division on motion numbered 9, if requested, be deferred.

At this stage, motion number 10 will be put from the Chair, but without debate or amendment. The question thereon will be forthwith deferred.

When motion numbered 11 has been proposed by the Chair, it is suggested that consideration of motions numbered 12 to 16 also be permitted at that stage. When that debate is concluded, motions numbered 12 to 16 inclusive would then be put separately from the Chair without debate. All of the said motions will then be grouped and disposed of in one recorded division. In all, there might be five recorded divisions as follows: (a) on motion No. 1; (b) another on motions Nos. 2 to 8 inclusive; (c) one on motion No. 9; (d) one on motion No. 10; and (e) a further division on motions Nos. 11 to 16 inclusive.

As hon. members will judge, it was a little difficult to try to organize the consideration of these several motions. I hope that these suggestions will be acceptable to hon. members, but all of what I have said will be subject to the suggestion just made by the hon. President of the Privy Council, the Government House Leader, that he might be allowed to make a statement on his amendment at the start of the debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I find your proposal eminently fair and satisfactory, and I am sure it will commend itself to the House as being logical. I should like to make a suggestion with respect to the request that has been made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). I am prepared to agree that he be accommodated so that he can present the amendment in his name this morning, but there are two considerations that I think we have to look at. First of all, we do not want to add to the number of debates; I take it from Your Honour's suggestion that there will be three debates. Also, it would be impossible, as I see it, to take a vote on motion No. 10 until a decision has been made on motion No. 9.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, if the President of the Privy Council is agreeable and Your Honour regards it as fair, that the President of the Privy Council be permitted now to move his motion No. 10 and to make his remarks thereon, but that other remarks be deferred until we have the combined debate on motions 9 and 10 with, of course, the vote being deferred until later. In other words, I suggest we give precedence to the President of the Privy Council to make his statement on motion No. 10, and that we then go back and take the order Your Honour has suggested from the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: If it is agreeable to the House, it will be understood that we will first put the motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council and allow him to make his statement, following which we will return to motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That Bill C-194, an act to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be amended by striking out lines 32 and 33 on page 17 and substituting the following:

"Widow is dead, eight-tenths of the basic allowance." and by striking out line 10 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"in approximately equal instalments commencing immediately after the death of the member or former member, and in the case of an allowance payable to the widow shall continue during her natural life but shall cease on her remarriage."

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all may I express my appreciation to the House for its courtesy in permitting me to take precedence to present these two amendments. Both amendments arose out of the committee discussion on the bill and from questioning that took place at the time.

As the House will notice, there are two amendments: the first to extend the benefits that would be payable to the orphaned children of a deceased Member of Parliament; the second deals with the situation of the widow of a deceased Member of Parliament who subsequently remarries. I think the first will probably be found to be generally acceptable; the second, I agree, perhaps may be the subject of debate.

The bill, as originally presented to the House, by clause 21 sought to amend section 23 of the Members of Parliament Retirement Allowances Act. At page 17, that clause provided that in the event of the children of a deceased Member of Parliament being orphaned—that is to say, in the event that the other spouse either predeceased the Member of Parliament or surviving him died after she and the children had commenced to draw benefits—then the children of a deceased Member of Parliament would be entitled to share in the surviving allowance to the extent of two-tenths each, up to a maximum of six-tenths.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre.]

The change proposed retains the two-tenths formula per child, but raises the maximum to eight-tenths—that is to say, 80 per cent of the deceased member's pension rather than 60 per cent. This change results from discussion in the committee which indicated that the lower 60 per cent level was not one that was observed in other government of Canada pensions, for example the Public Service Superannuation Act where the maximum was set at 80 per cent. That is the first of the changes. Because it would involve a further demand on the consolidated revenue fund, a recommendation was sought from His Excellency, and hon. members will note that, pursuant to Standing Order 75 (6), the recommendation is printed immediately after motion No. 10.

The second amendment resulted really from a drafting oversight. The previous Members of Parliament Retirement Allowances Act section contained the provision that when a widow or, in a conceivable case, the widower of a deceased member who became entitled to a surviving benefit remarried, then the benefit would cease to be payable. As I say, there was a drafting oversight in the bill and this restriction was not included as far as Members of Parliament were concerned, though it was included with regard to senators. My information is that most other government of Canada pension plans—for example, the Public Service Superannuation Act—contain this stipulation.

It may well be argued that there should not be this restriction on a surviving spouse who is drawing a benefit and remarries. Some legitimate arguments, I think, can be made in this regard. However, it seems to me that they should apply across the general field of government of Canada pension plans, and therefore the government feels that for the time being the structure should be kept consistent. This is without prejudice, of course, to subsequent discussion regarding whether or not this provision should be changed.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I put forward on behalf of the government the two amendments which I would commend for the consideration of the House.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes.

Mr. McBride: In view of the fact that when we discussed this bill in committee it was generally assumed that the pension would accrue to the widower of a female Member of Parliament who was deceased, and of course to the widow as stated in the second part of motion No. 10 that is before us in the name of the President of the Privy Council, would the President of the Privy Council comment on whether or not the reference to the widow only would be taken to include a widower if a widower were to remarry, and that the same benefit would ensue?

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I believe I am right in saying to the hon. member that the point is hypothetical. I cannot put my finger on the appropriate section, but my understanding of the provisions of the statute is that for the purposes of the act the definition of a widow is deemed to include also a widower.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to say that we in this party appreciate the action the government is taking to change the maximum rate that an orphan can receive from 60 per cent in the case of three or more children to 80 per cent in the case of four or more orphaned children.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As agreed, the procedure will now be to put the first motion in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That Bill C-194, to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain Acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be amended by deleting therefrom Clause 13 of the said Bill.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will we be permitted to speak further about the general implications arising from amendment No. 10 or is the matter closed now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My understanding is that when we get to motions Nos. 9 and 10 the debate will be resumed on motion No. 10.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware there are 15 amendments on today's notice paper, put there by members of this group, that seek to amend Bill C-194. That may sound like a complication compounded, but under the rules the only way at this stage to deal with a number of clauses of a bill is by putting down amendments in respect of each of those clauses. However, the Chair has already made a very acceptable ruling which groups these various amendments so they are in packages that stand by themselves.

However, may I make it very clear, and I think this is a very simple proposition to put forward, that the purpose of the total group of 15 amendments placed on the notice paper is to amend Bill C-194 and to remove from it all the things that Bill C-194 does for Members of Parliament which it does not do for civil servants and the others covered by Bill C-194.

The main purpose of Bill C-194, the purpose that runs throughout and the purpose that applies to everybody who is covered under this bill, is to provide for the escalation of pensions after people have retired. It does this under two headings. In the first place, it does it immediately, this very next month, for all people who are now retired; civil servants, R.C.M.P. and armed forces personnel, Members of Parliament and so on, by providing a supplement to their pensions based on the length of time they have been retired.

The second way in which this purpose is carried out is by providing that all persons who are now employed, whether they are in the civil service, in Parliament or wherever they are, will, when they become pensioners, have the possibility of having their pensions increased each year provided the cost of living continues to rise.

This is the main purpose of this bill. That is what it does for everybody who is mentioned in it. But my complaint and the complaint of a number of my colleagues is that there has been put into this bill something that is foreign to and beyond its original purpose, namely a complete revamping and recasting of the pension plan of Members of Parliament.

The purpose of these amendments of ours is to take out of the bill all of those clauses that do that revamping, and to leave in it only what is there for all the others. If all our amendments are carried, then there will be left in the bill for Members of Parliament and for senators just two things. The first is the guarantee of escalation of our pensions after we retire and, secondly, the requirement that we pay one half of one per cent of our indemnity into the fund out of which these escalated payments are made.

In other words, it would put us on all fours, a phrase used earlier today, and in the same position as all of the others covered in this bill. That is what we think Parliament ought to accept. It is my view that there is no justification for our using this bill, which was brought in after many years of pleading and many years of study by committees, departmental groups and so on, to revamp and upgrade the pensions of Members of Parliament and Senators.

I have said on other occasions, both when the bill was at the second reading stage and in the committee, that everybody else is being told that he must wait. In particular, the old age pensioners are being told that they must wait until we get the white paper on social security. Veterans who are on war veterans allowances are not being considered under the terms of the study being made of the Woods report and are being told that nothing can be done about their allowances until we have the results of this study presented to us in the white paper on social security.

I find it hard to understand how Parliament or the government can say to all these other groups that they must wait but that we can go ahead and act on our own behalf. When I made this point in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, to which this bill was referred, the reply of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) was to cite the Curtis report. He said, and I think I am being fair to him, that in the case of the pension plan of Members of Parliament there had been this special study made, separate and apart from the white paper on social security, and since we already have the Curtis report that gives us the basis for acting.

I do not accept that argument at all. As a matter of fact, I do not accept the device that the government used in setting up Dr. Curtis as being justifiable. Professor Curtis was not commissioned by Parliament to do this job, and he was not asked by Parliament to do it. As a matter of fact, there was not even an announcement in Parliament that he had been appointed.

I remember very well a few years ago when the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who was then the President of the Treasury Board, wanted to do this, and even asked us if we would agree to a motion in Parliament to have such a study made. Many of us indicated to him that we were not favourable to such a course being taken, so the government went ahead and did it anyway, but entirely on its own.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

If I read correctly the letter from Professor Curtis to the President of the Treasury Board, it would seem that this study was made just on the basis of a letter written directly from the then President of the Treasury Board, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to Professor Curtis. So, it seems to me this Curtis report is not a Bible that can be used for the purpose of doing something the government simply wants to do. I heard of no public hearings. I remember hearing after a while that Professor Curtis was carrying on the study, but the information was conveyed to us as though we were being given secret information. There was no publicity or mention about the Curtis report until suddenly it was tabled on the very day the minister indicated that Bill C-194 would include the provisions improving the pension plan for Members of Parliament. So I think it is clear that we have no right at this stage to ask for consideration of our pensions when war veterans on the allowance, old age pensioners and others are being told they must wait until there has been a complete review of social security.

I also feel very strongly, in light of the austerity that is being preached and the restraint people are being urged to exercise, that it just does not go down for us to be urging this course on our own behalf. When that is coupled with something else that is being studied by another three-man committee, namely a possible pay increase, the announcement of which was made in the House, it adds up to a serious question of whether we in the House of Commons are prepared to accept the same proposals for restraint and austerity we are imposing on everyone else.

I feel very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the time to be doing this kind of thing. I believe that if we go ahead and do it we will just give the people of Canada an opportunity to say that the Members of Parliament are certainly moving very fast in doing something for themselves and that they are moving a lot faster in that regard than they are moving in respect of doing something for the people of Canada as a whole. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is the author of the statement that one difficulty in time of inflation is that those who can protect themselves do so and therefore do not fight as actively as they might against inflation. It certainly looks as though that is what we are trying to do both in respect of the pay question which is to come up later and more specifically now in respect of the pension question. We would seem to be using our position in Parliament to protect ourselves. I do not think this is something we should be doing. I do not think we can expect the people of Canada to have the respect for Parliament they ought to have if we go ahead with this proposal.

No doubt today, as on other occasions, there will be arguments concerning whether or not the proposals contained in this bill are too generous. I think they are. I shall reserve my comments on that until we reach motion No. 9. But whether they are or not is a matter of judgment, and I think it is wrong to consider any improvement in our position when we are not prepared to act on behalf of the old age pensioners or the war veterans allowance recipients until we have the white paper on social security and when we are not prepared to do anything else for civil servants except provide for the escalation of their pensions after retirement. I think this adds up to a situation which puts Parliament itself under a cloud.

I know there is one other thing that is being done in the total bill for the civil servants. But that one other thing is by no means any change in the pension formula. It does not provide any change in the amount of pension people will receive. All it does is provide for a straightening out of an anomaly between the various pension plans and the Canada Pension Plan. This arises because of the integration of all these other plans with the Canada Pension Plan. It has been discovered that when people retire early they lose something under the form of integration arrived at which is a bit unfair. That is being straightened out. But do not let anyone tell me that because we are straightening out that anomaly we have the right to revamp our whole plan because there is no such anomaly in our case because our plan was not integrated with the Canada Pension Plan. We pay for our plan separately and obtain the full benefit of the Canada Pension Plan over and above our pension as Members of Parliament. So, I say it really is unanswerable that in this bill we are doing just one thing for everybody else and are doing more than that one thing for ourselves. We are providing that our pensions will be escalated and on top of that are making our pensions much too generous and are placing ourselves in a position where we are protected in ways that others are not.

May I point out there are those who say it is different here and that because of the hazards in this job we should be protected. I find it difficult to accept that argument. This is not a job that we seek in order to better ourselves and obtain higher pay or pensions. It is a job we are prepared to take as a service to our people. I have not heard anyone say during an election campaign that he should be elected so that he could have a good job, good pay and good pension. No; at election time we make a pledge to serve our people. I do not believe it is fair to make comparisons between the pay and conditions here and the pay and conditions of other people in other places. They are not comparable. This is a service operation. When we come to Parliament we make a certain commitment to our people. Because of all these reasons I feel in all honesty and fairness to our concept of responsibility we should not be including in Bill C-194 these things for ourselves which as I say I think are too generous. I shall come to that more properly when we are discussing my amendment No. 9 because it deals with the clause which contains the pension formula and so on.

So far as this motion No. 1 is concerned I shall draw my remarks to a close by zeroing-in on what motion No. 1 deals with. If I seem to have been wandering from motion No. 1, it is because the Chair said that on motion No. 1 we could discuss motions 1 to 8 inclusive. I am glad the Chair has agreed there shall be a vote on No. 1 by itself. I hope members will examine their consciences very closely when they are thinking about how they will vote on motion No. 1.

An hon. Member: Examine yours.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do not worry about my conscience. I will look after that.

Mr. Deachman: You let us look after our conscience and you look after yours.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is fine. Hon. members opposite can make suggestions to me, but I will make suggestions to them. I suggest to them that this motion No. 1 which seeks to strike clause 13 from the bill is one which every member of this House should support. Clause 13 says that the expense allowance we are receiving, and which we have been saying for years is an allowance only and that is the reason we do not pay tax on it, shall for purposes of this pension be called "indemnity". Mr. Speaker, we really cannot ask for it both ways and expect to be respected. Either that $6,000 is salary, in which case it could apply to the pension or it is an expense allowance and should not count as salary for pension purposes.

There are examples in the public service where people get lump sum payments in lieu of back pay. These are payments for work and they are really salary, but because they are called something else than a salary they are not applied to their pension credits. Yet, here we take something that is not a salary at all—at least we have been saying for years it is not a salary—and we say that it shall be applied for pension purposes. I think there is an inconsistency here that is very severe, and parliament should not be asked to do it. I urge therefore that we strike clause 13 out of the bill.

When I proposed this in the committee the other day the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) cited the Curtis report at page 29. I have already indicated that I do not think the basis on which we received the Curtis report makes it an authoritative document for us to follow, but even when I read what Professor Curtis had to say about whether to apply the percentage to the $12,000 or to the total $18,000, it does not really resolve the issue. He admits it can be done either way and that it is an arbitrary decision, but I would point out that the way this act is set up and the way the statute now stands, if this goes through, the pension contributions that are supposed to come off our expense allowance will not come off our expense allowance cheques but off our salary cheques. The statute is set up in such a way that it has to be done. We are carrying forward that inconsistency. If we wanted to raise the contribution to the size it will be under this provision, why not make it that much higher a percentage of the indemnity itself? To try to call the expense allowance a non taxable expense allowance on the one hand and a salary for pension purposes on the other, as I say, will raise some serious questions in the minds of the people who are watching what we are doing here.

For these reasons I feel that we should make this change in the bill. We should cut out all the clauses that give to Members of Parliament a benefit that we do not give to civil servants generally. That is the effect of the 15 amendments that are presented from this part of the House. So far as the first one is concerned, its purpose is to say that the expense allowance shall remain as that and not be counted as an indemnity for pension purposes. I would not object if we went the other way, if we decided that because we are going to treat it as indemnity for pension purposes we will also treat it as indemnity for taxation purposes. But let us not be in the dual position of saying one thing at one moment and another thing at another.

I heard some comments across the way about conscience. Perhaps I provoked them by what I said because I was the first to use the word. I am quite aware of the fact that one who takes a position as strongly as I have with respect to both the pay and the pension question has to be consistent in what he does later. I intend to follow a consistent course and I shall let my constituents know what that course will be. But whatever other individuals might do with respect to either of these questions, in my view that does not give parliament the right to follow a policy which says to old age pensioners and war veterans allowance recipients: "You must wait", and which says to federal civil servants: "This is all we are going to do for you, but for ourselves we are going to make substantial improvements in our own pension plan".

Therefore, I hope the House will support all our amendments, but in particular I hope it will support the amendment striking out the reference to the expense allowance being treated as salary for pension purposes.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I had not intended to repeat the debate that took place in the committee, but it seems to me the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said something when putting forward these proposals with regard to pensions of Members of Parliament which I feel should not remain unanswered and some of his comments should not be allowed to go on the record uncontradicted.

The first comment with which I would like to deal is with regard to the appointment of Dr. Curtis, a decision with which, incidentally, I was not associated because it was taken several years before I became a member of the ministry. However, I believe the decision was a sound one. I have no doubt in my mind that the community generally will recognize both the ability and fairness of Dr. Curtis. There is really nothing more I can say in support of the choice of Dr. Curtis for this purpose or the wisdom of the decision than does the Curtis report itself, which is a very concise and thorough analysis of the problem of providing retirement pensions for those who take the position of Member of Parliament and by that reason lose other opportunities for providing for their retirement. At the same time, they undertake a hazard as to shortness of tenure which does not exist in other occupations.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that there should have been wider publicity and wider public knowledge of and participation in that question. Perhaps the procedure was wrong and there should have been widespread public hearings on the matter. We all should be more candid about these questions of salary and pension. I must say that what has disturbed me ever since I first became a member, and what was particularly disturbing to me in 1963 when I had been a member for a little more than a year and the House acted to increase our salaries, was the want of candour on the part of many Members of Parliament and many members of the public about the realities of the position taken by Members of Parliament. I do not think that any sensible country can expect good people to come forward from private life and to take responsible positions at a financial sacrifice in terms of day to day salary—a sacrifice to the member and to his family—if he is not receiving high enough emoluments and a fair opportunity in terms of pension. I confess that as a man with a young family I am particularly concerned about survival benefits which would be paid for the benefit of young children. I do not intend to stand up and wring my hands and apologize to anybody for bringing into effect comparable pension benefits to what I would have been entitled to accrue for myself and my family had I remained in private life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I want to be understood perfectly clearly, and I am not just directing my remarks to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I am addressing them to wide numbers of people in the Canadian community who, if there is any policy issue with which they disagree, feel they have a licence to make snide remarks about the emoluments or pension provisions that Members of Parliament may be drawing. I am prepared to say here, as well as to my constituents, that if you think you can get someone who is prepared to work for a lesser salary or not to provide for his children in the event of an early demise, then go out and find him and elect him because I am working here on a basis which is at least competitive with what I might earn in private life.

I, therefore, think that it was reasonable that Dr. Curtis should have been appointed. I must agree that perhaps the government of that day proceeded on a less candid basis than I have and did not recognize that some people in the community at large might try to draw adverse conclusions from the appointment of Dr. Curtis for this particular study. Perhaps they proceeded in a non-public way. Notwithstanding that, I think it was a reasonable course of action. I think it was a good report, and I think the choice of Dr. Curtis in particular was very good.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said he cannot accept the argument that there is anything particular or unique about the position of Members of Parliament that they should be provided for in their retirement. Probably nothing that I can say in this context would provide a better answer for the hon. gentleman than what his former leader, Mr. M. J. Coldwell had to say when the Members of Parliament retirement allowances plan was first brought into effect on June 25, 1952. I refer to Hansard of that day when Mr. Coldwell made what was a particularly eloquent, reasonable and responsible statement. He said:

• (12:40 p.m.)

> As one of the senior members of the House with some seventeen years' service, I merely wish to state that during that period of time—hon. members will probably know some of the personnel to whom I refer—I have seen men and women who have served the country long and well pass beyond the portals of the parliament buildings after a general election, or forced to retire through ill health, only to return to a condition bordering on relative poverty. I do not think the people of Canada want that to occur in the future.

He continued:

> When I have gone to my constituency or have been talking to people elsewhere in Canada I have taken the trouble to say privately that such a scheme was being discussed by the members of the House, and I have not found any citizen, who has given any consideration to the matter and to the welfare of the membership of the House of Commons and of the country, who has uttered one word against a scheme of this description.

I am prepared to adopt that statement. I am confident all fair-minded Canadians would show that same attitude now, and it is for that reason that I, as the minister responsible for putting this bill through, have no hesitation in saying on behalf of my colleagues and the government that we should put it through at this time.

The hon. member made great substance of the fact that we were including provision for MP's benefits in the bill for Supplementary Retirement Allowances. He said there was no reason why it should have been included in this bill, and that it should have been done at a later time. He used two arguments. He asked why was it being done in this bill, and secondly why was it being done at this time whether in this bill or otherwise.

With regard to the first question, the fact of the matter was that the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act was being opened up by this bill which we are putting forward and the government had received this report from Dr. Curtis on which it had taken its decision. It therefore seemed reasonable to put all the matters amending the act into one bill, rather than to spread them between two bills. I do not think it is a matter of great substance whether we put all these matters in one bill or in two bills, but the fact is that we have put them in one bill.

As to the question of whether we should do this now or at some future date, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to other pension benefits drawn by members of the public, mostly on a non-contributory basis, but I agree that not all of them are on that basis. I point out that what is involved here is a measure which will reduce the take-home pay of members of the House because this is a contributory pension scheme although I agree from the standpoint of the support of the government of Canada, it is also going to cost the treasury and the taxpayers some money. But I point out that it is going to cost members of this House a great deal of money if they plan to avail themselves of all the benefits under this plan.

On this point I would say to the hon. member, as I said to him in committee, that the decision has been taken to provide, for example, survivorship benefits for children, and to provide a more reasonable level of allowance for the widows of members, and it seemed to the government that it should include these provisions in this bill which was opening up the statute for amendment.

The final point I wish to make is with respect to the hon. member's argument on this particular amendment, with regard to the decision whether the contribution should be paid on the $12,000 alone, that is, on the indemnity, or on the $18,000, which is the $12,000 indemnity plus the additional $6,000 expense allowance. I think it is fair to refer to Dr. Curtis in this regard, where he says:

> The use of the full emolument as a base—part of which is now tax free—raises some difficulties but upon examination these do not appear serious. In the first place some arrangement must be devised to increase the pensions base in absolute terms and secondly there seems to be no other group for which this would be a precedent. If the full payment is not used as a base it would require a 10½ per cent contribution by the member to get the entitlement set out.

After referring to the fact that both the Carter Commission and the Smith Commission in Ontario had raised questions as to the desirability of a tax free allowance, which I do not think are relevant at this point although they may well become so when the Beaupré Commission reports, as recorded at page 29 of his report Dr. Curtis says:

> However, subject to these considerations, it is true the base of contribution could be changed to the salary alone and the entitlements still be calculated on the combined return. It is simply a calculation and provided it comes out with the same allowance, the basis of making it has little significance—tax or otherwise.

I would say with regard to this particular amendment that frankly it is irrelevant whether the pension should be based on the full indemnity plus the expense allowance, or on a changed base of contribution. It seems to me, bearing in mind the situation hon. members would find themselves in, it would be better to spread out their contribution over the broader sum. These are the reasons why I would ask the support of the House for the bill generally, and the support of the House in defeating this amendment and the succeeding amendments put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleagues.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, this bill which is before us received second reading and was referred to committee on March 10, at which time there was debate on it. I regret I was not here at that time and could not participate in the debate. I join with my colleagues on both sides of the House, who have been pressing for measures to give some relief to those who have retired from the public service, in welcoming this bill. I regret that, as a result of the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I feel compelled, by just as strong motives of conscience as I am sure compelled him, to put some other things on the record regarding the amendments which are before us.

In his statement in this House on March 10, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a number of comparisons. I know he is essentially a very fair man, but his speech made it very clear that he was not only objecting to one particular provision being in this bill but he was objecting in substance to what was proposed, and he described the operations of the present plan in certain cliches. In particular he referred to the maximum pension of $9,000. In fairness to the hon. member I should quote him when he said, as recorded at page 4597 of Hansard:

> Incidentally, under the rules of the present pension plan nobody could ever get to that $9,000.

But he did not mention any of the other figures of actual pension payments. I feel that this calls for talk not about theoretical maxima but about what the amounts of pension presently are under the actual plan. I have before me the "Report on the Administration of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act for the Fiscal Year Ended March 31, 1969," and I wish to cite cases from it. My colleague, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), did some calculations with respect to those who have participated in the present plan. He calculated that of those who have contributed to the plan since its inception 88 per cent failed to draw any benefit whatsoever. With respect to those lucky 12 per cent who hit the jackpot—and here I recall that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the plan as being a generous one in some features, although I do not think he really intended to do that—I would like to indicate the actual amounts which they received. One of these pensions was between $4,000 and $5,000; three pensions were between $3,500 and $4,000; three pensions were between $3,000 and $3,500; less than 3 per cent of the total pensions paid under the act exceeded $3,000, and 31 per cent of them were smaller than $1,500.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the 60 per cent provision for widows, and indicated that the 50 per cent provision under the public service plan was less generous. But let us look at what that 60 per cent provision gave to seven widows under this act. Three received between $500 and $1,000, and four received between $1,000 and $1,500 per year. None of them received more than $1,500 per year. Now, the suggestion that this is a generous provision through the fact that it was arrived at by a mathematical formula which included 60 per cent, whereas the other schemes had 50 per cent, is in my opinion something less than the candour I normally expect from the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Francis: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will he not agree that when I talked about the plan being generous, I was referring to the new plan, not to the one now in existence?

Mr. Francis: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to clarify his context in that respect, then that is his wish, but certainly the present plan is 60 per cent. I might say that my reference to the hon. member's speech is based on page 4596 of Hansard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was talking about Bill C-194.

Mr. Francis: Let us look at it on the basis of comparisons that he has made. The hon. member compared the proposed changes, and I will quote him directly lest he fear I am quoting him out of context, as follows:

> • (12:50 p.m.)
> With the 3½ per cent per year after the first ten years plus the other arrangements down the line, it makes it possible in 25 years to reach a maximum of 75 per cent. Our civil servants take 35 years to reach a maximum of only 70 per cent. Just on the surface of it, I suggest that is too generous.

I am quoting him verbatim.

Does the hon. member believe there is the same security in being a member of this Parliament as there is in being a member of the public service? Does the hon. member really believe that the average age of entry into the public service is comparable with the average age of entry into this Parliament, or that it should be? Does he believe that this is a fair comparison? Some of us on this side, Mr. Speaker, have a feeling that there is an element of demagogy here. Some of us feel just as strongly that an amendment to an act which allowed only 12 per cent of those who contributed to ever draw a penny of benefits, otherwise they would just get their money back without interest, is not good. And if you were part of the lucky 12 per cent, your widow might get between $500 and $1500 pension if you died, with nothing for surviving children. If you are really lucky you would get a pension which, on the average, came very close to $2,000.

The hon. member talks about doing something for ourselves, doing something which is so terrible. He talks about those who are in a position to control things in their own interests taking unfair and undue advantage. I am going to ask, through you, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member in his conscience thinks the step to correct the kind of situation I have described is so unconscionable, so terrible, that he has to delete every reference to it from the measure before us. I find again a curious dichotomy in the thinking of the hon. member. When he talks about other pensions he is absolutely straightforward and asks for equity, asks for improvements in benefits. He made a slight slip the other day in committee when the government provision was going to deny a widow the benefit if she remarried; then he reverted to his usual way of looking at pensions and said this was not generous. But this slip did not last very long because when it comes to benefits for Members of Parliament he has a totally different standard than that which he applies to any other pension plan.

On March 31, 1969, for example I note that the excess of receipts over disbursements for this curious plan which the members of Parliament set up for themselves was $2,621,-185.88. A plan that gets 88 per cent of the people to put their money into it, leave it there interest free and just get a return of contributions at the end of the period, cannot lose. That kind of plan, if it existed in private industry and a union were to make representations in regard to it, would be subject to the most vicious attacks. But I have never heard the hon. member talking about low rates of pay, these low rates of pensions the scandalous rates for the widows or the excess accumulation in this fund, although he has asked numerous questions about the operation of every other fund that exists. If I am wrong, I invite the hon. member to correct me on this score.

What disturbs me even more is that whenever a comparison is made, and the hon. member was most explicit here, his comparison is with the old age pension, with the war veterans allowance recipients; it is never with an executive in industry. He expressly repudiates that concept. Yet he expects people to come here and give of their best. I know some hon. members on the other side of the House whose wives are working, not altogether from choice. I know one hon. member who sits on the other side—it does not detract from my respect and admiration for him, and although he is not here today, I hope I am not embarrassing him—who, in the course of providing university education for three children, has gone into debt to the bank substantially in excess of five figures. This is the situation that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) seems to put completely aside in his mind.

It is possible to come to this House and live frugally in the city. I have the greatest respect for the people who do this. You can have a room or two and eat your meals in the fifth floor cafeteria or even bring a sandwich or two. If you have the kind of constituency that returns you year after year, you conduct a heavy volume of correspondence and are active in participation, it is likely that constituents will continue to give their loyalty. But there are constituencies that have switched loyalties. I am thinking of my opponent who won the seat in Carleton with a 19,000, majority in 1958, and five years later lost the very same seat. Previously, every one of his opponents had lost his deposit, but within five years he lost his seat. This is the way some constituencies can change because people repudiate the policy of the government or of the candidate. Some constituencies with their record of repudiation of candidates, which is their democratic right and their privilege, can place a pension plan in very difficult circumstances.

In spite of what the hon. member may think—he is smiling now—a pension plan is an obligation not only to the people who run for the safe seats but to those who run for the seats that are not so safe, that is not only for the seats that have 35 years of loyalty to a member but for those that can switch loyalties. There may be a personal defect of the MP, but the point I am making is whether it is so scandalous, so wrong, so terrible to revise the rules for a plan that allows only 12 per cent to benefit and to benefit by the small amounts, I have indicated.

I respect people who come into public life and treat it as a form of service. But with the greatest respect, there are many people here who might have chosen the monastic life or some other life. They do not have the kind of family responsibilities that other members have and that is fine. Parliament is their whole life and their contribution is great, but those members have an obligation to be charitable, too. They have an obligation to recognize that Parliament consists of average Canadians as well as the type who might choose a vow of poverty. Parliament must include in its ranks men and women who at other times are carrying heavy loads in industry and society and who are capable of that kind of performance.

Thanks to some resources that I possess, Mr. Speaker, when my daughter comes to me and says that she wants to take a French immersion course this summer at Laval I can tell her to go ahead. But some other hon. members cannot afford to do that, to have their daughters participate in language immersion courses because there is not enough money in the budget. If they die they know that their widows and survivors under the present arrangements will be in penury, or absolute poverty in many circumstances. Some hon. members may feel that somehow self-denial and poverty are desirable virtues. We know that in some parts of the world people are put on a bed of nails because of the theory that this brings them to a higher degree of self-purification. I do not believe that we can run Parliament on that basis. I believe there is an obligation to members of this Parliament to vote for the proposals that the government puts before us representing a long overdue updating of what was a scandalously inadequate plan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

POWER

MINAS BASIN—STATEMENT ON FEASIBILITY OF TIDAL PROJECT

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the consent of the House to revert to motions for the purpose of making an important statement about the tidal power project in the maritimes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the recently completed study of the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board was a very extensive investigation of the technical and economic factors pertaining to the possible development of tidal power in the Bay of Fundy. The federal government contributed substantially to this study by meeting two-thirds of the total cost of approximately $2,300,000. In addition to this specific financial contribution, an appreciable amount of time and effort of a number of experts and senior officials of federal government departments has been contributed, without charge, to the activities of the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board and its engineering and management committee.

Although the immediate prospects for economic development of tidal power are not promising, it is conceivable that increasing restrictions due to the environmental side-effects associated with thermal power generation may become so significant in the future that tidal power, which is virtually free of environmental and pollution problems, will become much more attractive than it is today. The extensive background material compiled during the detailed study just completed will greatly facilitate a reappraisal of tidal power, if and when conditions such as environmental factors, technological advances in tidal power plant equipment, or reduction in the cost of money warrant such action.

The federal government has made significant contributions to the development of electric power in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The Atlantic Development Board provided a $12 million grant for the construction of the Trenton thermal-electric station in Nova Scotia and a $20 million grant towards the Mactaquac hydroelectric project in New Brunswick. In addition, long term loans in excess of $125 million have been made or committed under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act for construction of thermal generating stations and inter-connecting transmission lines and associated facilities in these two provinces.

Improving the competitiveness of the industrial base in the Maritime provinces remains an important element of the policies of the federal government. However, cost alone is not the only consideration. We must work closely with the Maritime utilities to ensure that sufficient spare capacity is built into their systems to meet the needs of new industries which cannot wait the four to five years necessary to provide new generation.

Obviously, tidal power is not the immediate answer to the electrical energy needs of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. These provinces do, however, have access to low-cost fuel in the form of imported oil. To use this fuel to maximum advantage large, efficient thermal electric generating plants must be built and the utilities of the two provinces must work in a fully co-ordinated manner to support such plants. This action, accompanied by the construction of strong interconnections with adjoining utility systems in Canada and the United States, will go a long way towards making power costs in the Maritimes competitive with other areas of Canada.

We, as a government, have already indicated our desire to help achieve this end. The government of New Brunswick will receive federal financial assistance of at least $4 million from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the electrical interconnection under construction between that province and Quebec. Through this tie, the Maritime area will receive power from the giant hydro complex now being completed at Churchill Falls.

This government stands ready to consider other appropriate assistance to projects of major significance to the power systems of these provinces. The utilities on their part must move towards the co-ordinated planning which is essential to the achievement of a low cost and dependable power supply.

Mr. Comeau: This is terrible.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, although I thank the minister for giving notice of his intention to make a statement in the House and for delivering to us a copy of the press release on the question of Bay of Fundy tidal power issued by his department, I must say that the report of the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board was very disappointing, as was the minister's statement.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: Certainly, those in the Atlantic area who twice a day have heard the roar of the Bay of Fundy tides and realized their potential for development are most disappointed. Notwithstanding this report, I still believe the potential for the development of tidal power in the Bay of Fundy is just as strong today as the sound of that Fundy tide when one stands at the edge of the shore. The bay is in my constituency, it is true, but the implications go far beyond my own constituency. They concern the whole of the Atlantic northeast, particularly the northeastern United States.

As the minister says, this has been a joint project shared by the federal government and the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I have just had a copy of the report delivered to me. I suppose I would have to agree with what the minister said in his statement; as far as the technical factors are concerned I am not in a position to question them at the moment. But they do not tell us anything new. We were aware that for technical reasons tidal power would be more costly than other sources of power. But though the press statement referred to it, the minister did not mention this afternoon that part of the report which states, on page 21:

> It is concluded that tidal output could become competitive with energy from alternative sources when the interest rate drops to about half its current value.

High interest rates are among the main reasons why, to judge from the attitude of the minister toward some of the opinions expressed in this report, this project did not proceed further. I shall not attempt to deal with the subject of interest rates today. I recognize they present a perplexing problem. But when interest rates so directly effect an area such as my own which lacks the economic potential of other provinces such as Alberta, Ontario and British Columbia, I had hoped—and I still hope—the governments which have power to control interest rates in some way, would try to eliminate or reduce their impact on projects such as the one I am considering now.

Both the minister's statement and the report are disappointing because of their negative outlook. As I say, we knew it would cost more to develop Fundy power. We had hoped, though, that after spending 2½ years on this survey, those responsible would have done more than clarify technical details; we had hoped that the report would contain positive recommendations to reduce or eliminate some of the problems which were bound to be connected with the realization of the project. I ask you this, Mr. Speaker: if people had paid attention to the arguments put forward by the minister and embodied in the report, founded on immediate economic considerations, would the CPR ever have been built from coast to coast across this land?

Let us turn to the present day. Would the consideration of immediate economic factors have justified the building of the St. Lawrence Seaway which is still a charge on the public purse? Yet this is another project which has been of benefit to all Canadians—perhaps it has benefitted us on the east coast least of all, but we agreed to it nevertheless because it was undertaken for the good of Canada. Then again, would immediate technical and economic considerations have justified Premier Bennett going ahead with the Peace River project? Today, we can see what this project has meant in so many ways for the benefit of British Columbia. If Premier Bennett had thought in that way, we might never have had the Peace River project. The experts said it could not be built at the cost assigned to it. The politicians said it could. The experts said that if it was, indeed, possible to build it, the power could not be sold because there would be no market. Yet already still more power is needed in British Columbia.

Speaking as a politician, but also as a concerned Canadian, I ask whether the concern so often expressed about area of economic disparity is to be only a phrase used at election times, and whether the sincere efforts of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand)—I am not complaining about the minister—

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Nowlan: This project could be the basis for a measure of economic development in the Atlantic area more important than all the piecemeal schemes and patchwork efforts of all the ministries concerned, both in the immediate future, to use the minister's own phrase, and for many years afterward.

If there is any doubt about the need for additional power supplies by the northeast of this continent, one has only to look at page 14 of the report. I intend to take some time reviewing the minister's statement, Mr. Speaker, because the single project with which it deals could do more to offset economic disparity in the east than anything else which could be undertaken. There is only one thing which could come near to it, and that is if we were to find oil off the coast of Prince Edward Island—

Mr. Peters: All that would do would be to eliminate the fishing industry.

Mr. Nowlan: I want to read page 14 of this report by the Power Programming Board which says, as far as the need is concerned:

> Turning to markets in adjacent areas, to which exports might be made, The Hydro-Quebec load in 1966 amounted to more than 33,000 million kwh and the peak demand was approximately 6,100 mw. Current forecasts predict that the requirements will increase to 110,000 million kwh and almost 19,000 mw in 1980 and to 231,000 million kwh and 29,000 mw in 1990.

Now, I come to the important part.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: Those who say "good" and those who laugh do not understand to what extent we in the east, together with the minister working to remove economic disparity, have set our hopes on this report which is before us today. It is not a laughing matter. I do not care what government is in power, either in Nova Scotia or in Ottawa; they will be working against economic reality in attempting to reduce this disparity of opportunities and living standards if they try to slough off a project which could do so much in a positive way to end the difficulties which the region is encountering.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) is involved in negotiations concerning the continental energy package. He said something about importing cheap oil. Perhaps there will be further questions about importing cheap oil for use in a thermal plant which will further pollute our air. Many questions were asked recently about the voyage of the Manhattan. The Manhattan and vessels like her, will not only pollute the Arctic but will bring back more oil to be made into gas with which automobiles will in turn pollute the cities. Yet here we have Atlantic tidal power which does not pollute the atmosphere, which is a constantly renewed resource, and which we now intend to neglect after 2½ years of study. In actual fact, interest in this project started before 1920. The president of the university in the town I reside in was, I think, the first I know of to take an interest in this, and he formed a company to do it.

• (2:20 p.m.)

But it is the negative element of the whole report which concerns me. I have not finished reading about the potential demand for energy. He said:

> In the United States the total requirements of the six New England States in 1965 were 41,782 million kwh of energy with a peak demand of 8,586 mw. The requirements are forecast to increase to 111,000 kwh and 41,000 mw in 1990.

There are billions of kilowatt hours of energy which are really just going to waste with the changes in the tides. Do you know how big those tides are, Mr. Speaker? I wish Mr. Speaker rather his deputy were in the chair because—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I do not want to prevent the hon. member making a very interesting and long speech, but it is the practice of this House that statements and comments thereon are to be short.

Mr. Nowlan: I apologize. I was not referring in any personal way to the Speaker but I should like to compare the potential created by tides that ebb and flow four times a day. Five days of the normal flow on the St. Lawrence at Cornwall would produce the same volume of water. That is the type of thing we are talking about today. I appreciate we are supposed to be short in our statements, and there are many other things I would deal with; but there will be many speeches made on the report.

As I say, the report stresses the negative. It does not refer to the billions of kilowatts of untapped energy that is going to waste. It does not stress the positive elements, such as the renewable resources. These are resources that are pollution free. While this energy potential may cost a lot to develop, once developed it is a fixed asset. Capital will have been expended, and in this way it will be a relatively inflation free resource. It will also be a source of foreign exchange because we will be able to sell this power to the northeast United States which is crying out for it. Judging from some of the articles I have been reading lately, if we do not start developing some of the power potential in Canada, then somebody will spend some money somewhere at rates of interest that the board have said are too high.

Most important of all, the report does not mention the fact that this development could be the base for a real, viable program to combat economic disparity. Not only would we build new plants, but this development would mean higher income for the people and increased tax flow back to the treasury to help offset the cost. For the first time ever, the Atlantic area would be able to pay in a plus way into the national purse rather than always being at the receiving end.

I have read the most important proposal which should be considered positively. But for the high interest rates, this tidal output would be competitive with other energy sources; the board says so at page 21 of the report. However, the board and the minister stop there, even though it is suggested that further construction or further generating capacity might make the project competitive and viable in the future.

I hope that this minister and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) will undertake to do some research into different types of power plant construction and into how you can reduce cost with new generating equipment. I suggest this question requires continuing consideration and perhaps it could be referred not only to a committee of this House but to a government committee with perhaps New Brunswick and Nova Scotia as members. This question is too large for one provincial government to handle on its own. We should look at the matter positively and see how best to tackle the many problems.

If there is anything that I have learned in my political life, especially from listening to my friends to the left, and one of them in particular who I will not name, it is that if you do not look at projects positively so you can avoid the hurdles, then you will never make progress. Instead of saying: "This is a good idea but we won't be able to do it", let us say we should do it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member will understand that there are other hon. members who want to comment this afternoon.

Mr. Nowlan: I apologize. In conclusion—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: —what concerns me most about the report is the positive-negative-pessimistic aspects of it, which the minister himself seems to have adopted in the brief time that he has had to look at it—though I do not know how long he has had. Instead of saying that it is a good project but that we cannot implement it, we should say that it is vital and necessary to implement it and ask ourselves how we go about solving some of the problems.

I have taken some time here this afternoon, in spite of some of the catcalls to the left of me that show that some members do not care about development of the east. The board that studied this matter did so at a cost of $2.5 million. We spent almost $2 million on the royal commission on the status of women. We spent $7 million odd on the bilingualism commission. All of these matters may be important. I do not know if the commission on women will change their status; but what I do not want to see is that, having gone into the technical approach to this question and expended a lot of government effort, especially at the federal level, we will say we will take a look at it again in another 20 years. If we do that, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion will never be able to get his proposal off the ground.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that the excellent speech to which we have just listened was given, in part, as an example of the tidal waves that one can see and hear on the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. Nowlan: That is right. I wish I had the kilowatt energy to go with it.

Mr. Lewis: I think the hon. member showed megawatt energy, let alone kilowatt. I assure him and others in the House that if some of my colleagues made some good-natured interjections it was not because of any lack of concern about the subject but because the hon. member, with an aplomb that I admire and do not condemn, went on several minutes longer than at this stage we are supposed to do.

Mr. Nowlan: You had better watch yourself. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have heard the hon. member for York South go on a little too long on some things that I did not think were half as necessary or important as the development of Atlantic tidal power potential.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I must admit, knowing the hon. member with great pleasure, that I should have known better than to make the remark that I did. I was merely explaining the reason to him. I loved what he said and how he said it, and as far I am concerned he could have gone on saying it. The matter he raised may be more important for the people of Canada than one part of the bill that is now before us.

Obviously, it is impossible for any member of this House who does not have engineering training to be able to quarrel with, indeed to evaluate, the report that has been placed in the hands of a few of us in this House. I do want to make a few brief remarks, however.

I am disturbed by the fact that the board said—and the governments concerned have accepted the proposition—that the idea of developing this tidal power must be delayed until interest rates drop down to about half the present level. Let me say to the minister this means that this tidal power will never be developed. There is not a chance in the world of interest rates going down to half their present level within foreseeable generations. Indeed, the whole tendency over a good many years has been for interest rates to go up. Interest rates will go down somewhat, I hope, but certainly not to the 4 or 5 per cent that the minister and the report talk about.

Secondly, if it were possible for this government and the maritime governments involved to think in terms of a public undertaking to develop this energy, then the interest rate may not be so important. It may be possible for the government to obtain and provide the capital for this development at a rate much lower than the present prevailing rate for the welfare of the Atlantic provinces and the people who live in those provinces.

The second point I want to make is that it seems there is a lack of imagination both in the report and in the minds of the government in accepting the report. The government seems to be overlooking the obvious importance of the fact that tidal power can be developed free of any environmental consequences or, to put it in simple English, free of stinking pollution. That seems to me in the long run to be a very important consideration. A very large expenditure in developing tidal power may well be justified in order to have a source of energy that is free of the effects of air pollution, which is not the case with thermal energy generating plants.

If I am correct in my reading of the report, this development would take a number of years. I think it mentioned five to nine years. It may well be that seven, eight, or nine years from now Canada, as a whole, would be grateful beyond description for having a power generating capacity in the Atlantic provinces that would not pollute the air around those areas, including a section of the United States as well.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the thing that perhaps disturbed me most about the minister's statement, and I say this to him very seriously, is that he presented no alternatives. He talked blithely about getting the existing generating companies to produce sufficient and surplus capacity. He talked blithely about the need for developing efficient thermal generating plants. He talked blithely about present utility planning. None of these things will happen until such time as the government of Canada in particular, and the maritime governments as well, have the courage and the imagination to take initiatives and spend vast sums of money.

To talk in terms of $4 million or $10 million—a lot of money though that may be—when you are dealing with building power generating plants is of course to talk of something that has no meaning at all. What will be required if any of these things are to happen, that is if there is to be sufficient surplus capacity and generating plants are to be increased and utilities are to plan, is initiative on the part of this government which must do these things

I wish to summerize what I have said in two sentences and then I will sit down. Like the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), I am not confident that governments are right in accepting this report. In view of the great advantages of tidal energy and the need for such power in the Atlantic provinces, I am thoroughly disappointed that when the minister accepts the idea of rejecting this development he does not have a tittle of a suggestion as to what might positively take its place.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I was quite disappointed when the minister announced today that the establishement of a tidal power plant in the Bay of Fundy would be delayed for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. Speaker, we remember that in ancient Greece, at a time when one of the finest civilization in the world was thriving, a great number of Spartans had several helots or slaves in their service. Today, thanks to science we have succeeded in controlling certain forms of energy to make them available like slaves to the individual.

I had the opportunity to visit some time ago the area which is concerning us today and I am pleased to state that it is perhaps one of the most beautiful areas of the country, after the Abitibi area of course. When I see that for economic reasons, the government is deferring some projects which could assure a considerable development in the depressed Atlantic provinces where the rate of unemployment is the highest in Canada, I cannot understand the thinking of the authorities.

I must congratulate the minister for the statement he made a short while ago, because it represents a substantial improvement over what we heard yesterday, namely that if that project is uneconomical, it is because the interest rate is much too high.

For financial considerations and owing to restrictions on credit, the development of an area is paralyzed. We have achieved important endeavours in the past, such as the St. Lawrence Seaway which cost a pretty penny because we had no idea how to finance it.

For instance, when one considers the balance sheet of the Canadian National, one finds that for the interest on the debt alone, we have paid out more than $225 million, which is about equal to the debt which the Canadian National must pay back.

Another project which would have greatly helped in the development of the Atlantic provinces, the building of a causeway between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, was postponed to a much later date. Today, we are giving up the building of a tidal power station in the Bay of Fundy.

I would also like to mention another project which could be carried out in my district, the building of a seaway in the Harricana River, or as is generally called the building of the Grand Canal. Even the study of this project is frowned upon because it is not known just how to finance it. I suggest, however, that, instead of letting financial interests, which control not only this country but the whole world, hamper development in Canada, the government should make use of existing possibilities in order to carry out such projects. As a matter of fact, we have the material, the scientists, the technicians and the engineers, in short, all the labour required. What we lack is the money.

Mr. Speaker, there is an institution in Canada called the Bank of Canada which should be at the service of Canadians. That is what the Créditistes are asking for more and more urgently. However, when they make that proposal those who serve the capitalists only smile.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain once more that should the government want to use the Bank of Canada to finance these various projects, they could be carried out within a few years.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS) AMENDMENT ACT, 1970

MEASURE TO SUPPLEMENT PENSIONS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-194, to provide supplementary benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain Acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I tried to outwait some of my colleagues, but I did not make it.

An hon. Member: You outweigh some of them.

Mr. Peters: I outweigh them, but I did not outwait them. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a number of comments to which I should like to refer. I agree with some of them but I disagree with others.

He referred to the way the government has gone about introducing changes in the Pensions of Members of Parliament. There are very few things more difficult when you hold office than making a decision which will result in a benefit to yourself. I am sure this has happened to most senior executives who have to make decisions which result in benefits to themselves and those who might follow them. For that reason I am of the opinion that the method which was used, and the fact that the Curtis report was made public, was a good way of handling what is without doubt a difficult problem in relation to benefits to people who are involved in making the decision.

I believe that the Curtis report indicated to those who read it the many difficulties involved in a consideration of pensions for Members of Parliament and the fact that there are many variables. I believe there should be as close as possible a relationship between the studies that have been done and the expectations because I, as one Member of Parliament, do not agree we should do something for ourselves in an economical manner which would be contrary to a policy we would be willing to see operate in other fields. There are members who believe an affluent society must be bad. There is the old Protestant adage that to be poor must be good, that hell exists on earth and that the worse one rewards oneself here the better it will be somewhere else. I never believed that. But certainly this type of thinking has plagued the party to which I have belonged for many years. There was always the wish to accomplish for everyone what you wanted for yourself. I think most people agree with the words Woodsworth used to the effect that what we want for ourselves we wish for all. I believe this applies to pensions as well. What I should like to see accomplished for myself I should like to see accomplished for everyone.

There is no doubt that Members of Parliament have been concerned with veterans' pensions, not only in terms of the Woods report but in terms of having the basic pension of the veteran raised substantially. I think everyone in Canada believes we should escalate pensions to the greatest extent possible. I believe there is a basic concern on the part of all Canadians that everyone should have as high a pension as the country can afford. I have heard some of my colleagues—and perhaps I have done so myself—speak about pensions like the pension of a former governor of the Bank of Canada. There was some monkey-business in that case. When it seemed that he would not hold that position for long, the pension was increased. Some concern was expressed about this, and I believe it was a legitimate concern. I think it would be very unfair to tax everyone with an income of less than $5,000 a year, $500 or $100 a year in order to pay all the old age pensioners more money than the country can afford. But I think it would be as great a crime not to pay them the highest amount the country can afford.

If I might return to the matter of the parliamentary pensions, I think a long time ago we should have devised a better system to maintain our wage and pension structure. I think this matter should have been taken out of Parliament. I believe it is a matter which should come under another government agency which would be in a position to make decisions. I am one who believes so far as pensions are concerned, unlike wages, that so long as one is willing to put in the money he should be able to get full value from it.

I carry a $10,000 20-year endowment policy. I will never get more out of it than I have paid in. I think perhaps I am a darned fool to carry it and I would not take out such a policy today. I think perhaps I was stupid. However, I hope and believe that some day if I live long enough I will get that $10,000 back. I will have put it in, so I should get it back. I would hope that if I wished to make the type of contribution that would be required to produce a certain type of pension I should be able to do so. I have been around in the labour movement and I know that when I make the type of contribution I like to make my employer makes it too.

Some of my colleagues consider that a Member of Parliament should not retire on the amount of money on which we would retire under certain conditions. If they say I will retire on too large a pension, then they will have to tell me the reason it is too large is that the pension fund cannot carry such a pension. Then, I will say I still want that kind of return and am willing to put more money in in order to produce that type of a pension. It has been said it is wrong to have a large pension and not that there is anything wrong with developing a pension fund to cover it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made two points on which I should like to comment. One was that this should not have been brought in in this manner. I sympathize with the government on many occasions when it looks at the political facts of life and decides to do something. I do not blame the government for doing this, even though I may not necessarily like it. I sympathize with what they have done. I think from these votes we will see whether or not this measure is supported by a majority of the Members of Parliament. I really think it will be supported. Personally, I would like to see our pensions separated from other pensions because we maintain a separate fund. I believe it could be operated separately. It may be that very soon Members of Parliament will find that they will have to contribute more money.

The second point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made is that the $6,000 was included as income. Personally, I think this is a great mistake. I see no legitimate reason for this. It really was not done by amalgamating the expense allowance and the salary. It was done in a loose way for the purposes of the pension. Before this report was made I recommended that the $12,000 be considered as salary, and if it took 10½ per cent to produce the desired pension then we should use the 10½ per cent figure on the $12,000 because I think we are stretching credibility if we consider the $6,000 as salary for one purpose and an expense allowance for another purpose. I agree the two should be separated, but I do not agree that it would make any difference. It would only mean that the percentage from salary to give us the full pension would have been 10½ per cent rather than 7½ per cent. It would not mean a greater contribution in dollars, either by the government or the individual. We would still be paying approximately $1,350 a year.

It seems to me that this pension is going to be fairly generous. It is probably in keeping with the salary we receive, which in terms of the general level of salaries in the country, is fairly generous. Therefore, in my opinion, it follows that what we have done in this regard is to bring the pension up to a reasonable level. Personally, I have known a great number of people who have retired on the previous pension. Hon. members should not forget that we only got around to receiving any kind of pension in 1952. Before that, I suppose, the wages of Members of Parliament were so low that they were not considered to be wages. They were probably more like the minister's clergyman's stipends and all they were supposed to do was to keep body and soul together. Members were not supposed to live on their indemnity.

When we passed the legislation in 1952 a pension was established which, in my opinion, was not satisfactory. It was mentioned here that M. J. Coldwell received a pension of $3,000 after 17 years here.

Mr. Francis: I do not think it was that much.

Mr. Peters: Yes, after 17 years he received $3,000. In those 17 years, he had not been connected with any industry or any educational institution. He was in no position to supplement his income when he was retired by his electors. This was not a voluntary retirement; he did not choose to retire at that time. He retired involuntarily and he did so after that many years of service for a salary that was probably $1,000 below the poverty line and which certainly was not in keeping with the contribution he had made to Canada. I am informed by my colleague that M. J. Coldwell was here 23 years, which does not make the situation any better. For 23 years of service to Canada, surely the people of this country should have considered it fair to donate to him $3,000 a year. Mr. Coldwell should not have had to contribute to a pension fund to receive that kind of money. I am sure there are many people in Canada who would have agreed that if the amount were doubled, and came directly out of the treasury, it would not have been too much.

My point is very simple. If this pension program that has been suggested by the government will not produce sufficient money to make it possible to make the payments that are indicated in this plan without additional money having to be provided by the treasury, then I suggest somebody should say so and we will change it. But if I wish to contribute 10 per cent of my wages to a pension plan, I should have the right to do so and would expect my employer to match that contribution.

When the Canada Pension Plan was passed I, and some of my colleagues, recommended to various organizations and agencies that the vested pension plans in Canada that were already in existence should be added to the Canada Pension Plan. If this had been done in a number of areas—one of them being my area where the engineers and firemen have been participating in an Ontario pension plan—and if those pension plans had been stacked on top of the Canada Pension Plan, the resultant pension would have been very close to $2,000 a month on the retirement of these people, which would have been almost $1,000 more than they were earning. I suggest there is nothing wrong with that if people want to contribute that high a portion of their wages to a pension plan and if that pension plan does not become a drain on someone else. I think this decision should be left up to the people who participate in the plan, and they should be allowed to make that contribution if they can afford it.

I suggest that there are differences of opinion. In many cases they probably stem not from people's conscience, as has been said, but rather from their environment and background, from the type of people they have worked with and the relationships they have had with other classes of people, sometimes much more fortunate than themselves. Sometimes these differences of opinion arise from the desire not to reduce everybody to a common denominator but to raise the lowest standard of living to the highest possible standard that people can afford.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I intend to be very brief and deal primarily with the amendment before us, but others have had one or two general comments to make on the bill and I understand that this is permitted in discussing the first amendment. It seems to me, and the point has been made before, that we should be dealing with two separate bills. One of them should be a bill dealing with the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and the other bill should deal, of course, with the legislation dealt with in the rest of the bill before us.

I have listened to the government speakers, or at least to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) who spoke prior to the lunch break. I did not hear him mention the specific amendment with which we are dealing. It seems to me that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is a sound one. He is asking that allowances, which today are classed as expenses, are not taxed by the government and are not classed as income, should not be included as salary for pension purposes. I go along with this. The previous speaker indicated that there are other methods of increasing the pension. You can raise the percentage on the sessional indemnity of $12,000. If an increase is warranted this is the way it should be done.

I, personally object very strongly to Members of Parliament setting such a poor precedent, not only for the House but for the whole country, by giving themselves special privileges in order to improve their own pensions. This is not right. Not only is it a poor precedent, it is mighty poor legislation. Surely, the government should realize this and should at least accept the amendment of my colleague. If they wish to increase the pension, they should increase the percentage on the $12,000. However, to write a provision into this act and not to allow the same provision to be written into other pension acts is not good legislation and should not be allowed. It is not in the best interest of Members of Parliament or in the best interest of good government. We should not accept this type of foolish legislation.

I should like to say one or two words on the pension proper. I would be very happy to know that we had legislation on the statute books before us that would give adequate increases to our senior citizens and to our veterans. I would be happier dealing with this legislation if I knew the other type of legislation for senior citizens and veterans was on the way and would be passed in this session of Parliament. I believe most hon. members feel the same way about the present bill and about pensions in general.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to members describing their financial troubles, and there is no doubt that some hon. members are having financial difficulties. But I point out that there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians from one end of Canada to the other who do not know what it is to have a pension, who do not know what it is to have a monthly income when they finish their normal term of employment. We should set up proper, portable pension plans for the whole country. We have never really done that. We have never really done a top-notch job in this field, although there has been some improvement in the over-all picture.

I have heard stories of hon. members who are having difficulty in sending their children to schools and universities. Mr. Speaker, I can name hundreds of children who could not go to university because their parents could not afford to put the money down on the line. This situation does not apply only to Members of Parliament; it applies to a broad spectrum of Canadian citizens.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I endorse this amendment which proposes that clause 13 be stricken from the bill. If the government wishes to propose other measures to make up the difference, that may be all right, but the $6,000 expense allowance in no way, shape or form should be used as a basis for pension purposes when it is not used for taxation purposes. If we adopt this bill we will be giving ourselves special privileges, which is something we should not do.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I think the government is to be commended for its courage in bringing forward this bill. To look after yourself is not a popular thing, although our Socialist friends are all preaching that it is. Speaking for the greater number of the members of this House, I say they are quibbling when they talk about whether or not the $6,000 is an expense account or is pay. It is probably an outdated method of paying people something in the nature of what they are worth. We have this situation because governments in the past have not had the courage to come forward and look at the question and bring it up-to-date. We know they should bring all pension rates up-to-date, but let us bring on one thing at a time.

Mr. Saltsman: Us first?

Mr. Bigg: I wonder if the hon. member who interjected would tell us how much money he has in his private fortune and what it is like to be so independent as to be able to devote your time to the Canadian people in such a fashion. I think there is hypocrisy here. I say that if you are rich enough, you should donate your time. Why don't you come here as a dollar-a-year man and give your member's pay to the starving children in Biafra?

I have been a civil servant all my life, very inadequately paid, and the pension is not worth mentioning. I heard no ravings from that corner of the chamber to increase my pay in that time—and they have had 40 years to do it. I heard no ravings from that corner about the soldiers' pay. To them I say, I know you are all pacifists. Why? You live in a country defended by the soldiers of this country. Are the soldiers of the past and the soldiers of the present being adequately paid? Are the paraplegics in our hospitals being adequately paid, those who suffered through defending our country? They defended their country to allow you to spout your socialism. You want it both ways. Do you want the soldiers to fight for you for nothing, to spend the rest of their lives in hospital beds for nothing? Why? Because you believe in western freedom?

Mr. Nystrom: You would like to see them in Viet Nam, wouldn't you?

Mr. Bigg: Where would you like to see them?

Mr. Harding: We have been trying to get a raise for them.

Mr. Bigg: They stand for western freedom. Where do you stand? Everytime you talk about Viet Nam I know it is the same old red herring, and I mean red. Why don't you talk about Laos today? Who is invading Laos today?

Mr. Peters: Would you call Spiro to order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Bigg: We are having interjections from my red friends to my left. If they will just keep quiet for a time we will get on with this bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. member to withdraw that remark, if I was one of those included.

Mr. Bigg: My bright pink friends, please keep quiet for a while.

Mr. Peters: I am not his bright pink friend, either, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bigg: My salmon-coloured friend, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must ask him to be as relevant as possible to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, I have always considered it a right and a privilege to answer the interjections of hon. members of the House. If my hon. friends will please confine their remarks to a positive contribution to this debate and to what they think Members of Parliament are worth, it will be better. I know what some members of Parliament are worth perfectly well. I know perfectly well what the price of treason should be, and I have heard a great deal of treason in my day.

As a civil servant I was not allowed to take the positive action which is usually necessary, but I know something about serving my country—very inadequately—and I know something about the fault of past governments in refusing to pay me personally for my service in the civil service, in the armed forces and in the mounted police. While I am at it, I also want to congratulate this administration for increasing some of those pensions, for example the mounted police pension. That pension has been increased 42 per cent in some cases. The only thing I can see wrong about it is that some of those pensions should have been increased at least 100 per cent—and if you pardon me for saying so, I think that includes mine.

It may be of some interest to you to know that for 23½ years service I get the magnificent sum of $100 a month. Is that adequate in this day and age, with the cost of socialism mounting daily, the socialism which my hon. friends on the left, the salmon-coloured gentlemen, are so fond of bringing forward? Everything free; medicare, education—everything but the protection of this country. And who is going to pay for it? Who is going to reward them adequately when it is over?

This bill is far from adequate; there are still holes in it. There are members of the mounted police who are not allowed to include their war service for pension purposes. You never heard that mentioned until now. Why not? Is active service and service to your country less valuable to the people of Canada than good, safe highway patrols at home? Where was your lobby then? Isn't it fair to assume that the reason is that they do not want to reward people for service to their country, for supporting western freedom and democracy, but only the new democracy? What is new democracy? Why use the word "democracy" if you refuse to reward one for service to it? I should think the New Democratic Party would rise to a man and say that a man who serves his country is just as entitled to a pension as one who stays home in a safe job. I am sorry I have to make such a plea to this House, to cut out hypocrisy and get down to the fact that hon. members should be properly paid.

Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from the Toronto Star asking me to explain how much money I am out of pocket by keeping two homes. I cannot afford to keep two homes. I do not own two cars, because I cannot afford it. If my wife comes here to visit me, I should not have to speak to my landlady and beg her to allow us to use the upper room, back, on the third floor. Surely, like a corset salesman, I should be able to put my wife up in an ordinary first-rate hotel without having to explain to the Toronto Star how much money I am out of pocket.

If you have a visitor from your own community who is travelling Canada—the most vital, prosperous young nation on earth—should you have to apologize for not being able to afford to take them out to dinner or send them home in a taxi because you do not have two cars and cannot afford anything but streetcar fare? When you represent 100,000 square miles of this wonderful country, are you supposed to travel over it winter and summer, day and night, at your own expense? Some hon. members pretend to be ashamed to stand up and ask the people of Canada to pay their reasonable expenses to get around.

If you have a constituency where you do not need $6,000 to get around, you had better take a constituency like Athabasca—as I did for ten years—and you will be $4,000 out of pocket every year. I do not have to tell the Toronto Star, Mr. Speaker: I am telling the House of Commons, if they do not know it already. The hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) covers 2½ million square miles, and you ask him to do it on $6,000 a year. How, in the name of decency, can any citizen of Canada ask a man to represent 2½ million square miles of this country on a miserable $6,000 a year?

Don't get me wrong. I did not come down here for the money. I did not even know how much the job paid when I came. But I know that the average Member of Parliament today does not have enough take-home pay to make it worth while to give up teaching public school to sit in this House for the number of days and hours that we spend here. I am willing to give the Auditor General or anybody else access to my books. He can publish them, and if he can show that there is any profit in being a public servant at this level I am quite willing to give all that profit to the starving people of Biafra or anywhere else. But there is no profit, and you know it. To criticize the positive parts of this bill is sheer hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker. It is a cheap political attempt to put Members of Parliament on the spot, and particularly members of the government who have the courage to update their own pay and allowances and pension scheme.

Mr. Speaker, I have never heard a positive suggestion from my Socialist friends on how anybody will be able to pay their bills unless we update our pay and allowances, nor as to who is going to raise the money or work a little harder to do it. Reformer as I am, I might be tempted to give them some political support if they had the answer to that question. How are you going to get individual Canadians to work harder and serve their country better? I have tried to serve my country but I have never been thanked for it from that corner of the House. My pension troubles have never been raised and no lobby has ever suggested that war service should count. Why shouldn't war service count in other service pensions? I can only assume it is because they do not condone the fact that I served my country as a volunteer soldier—but I did it willingly and I am not whining. Mr. Speaker, the alternative is simple: they can give the money back to the Crown, if they do not want it. This would be one way of avoiding income tax on it, and I am sure it would be most welcome.

By and large I think this bill is a step in the right direction. As I said before, I think it puts an unnecessary strain on the government and on this House to talk about what our pay should be. Perhaps the matter should have been put into the hands of an independent commission, but then I suppose they would have said, "Another royal commission; another bunch of Grits looking for good jobs; another waste of the taxpayers' money."

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take up any more of the time of the House except to say that I think this measure is long overdue, particularly for younger members who have to think about their families and for professional men who have given up lucrative positions to come here and donate their time. To those who think we are overpaid now, or that we will be in the future, I say the door is open to give back to a grateful country any overpayment they happen to receive.

[Mr. Bigg.]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in the debate, and I do not intend to take very long. I have been rather astonished and distressed by the reaction of hon. members to the fact that there are some in this House who question the wisdom of an increase in members' pensions as proposed. I think hon. members who have talked the way the preceding speaker spoke have gall. What they lack in intelligence and understanding of what this question is about, they certainly make up in nerve and extravagance of expression.

Mr. Bigg: You are the richest Socialist I know in this country.

Mr. Lewis: I want to say to hon. members, on behalf of my colleagues, that they should not think that anyone of us who opposes this bill, or even anyone who supports it, is less than dedicated to serving the people of Canada and the Parliament of Canada.

Let us understand the basis of this discussion. My friend, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says that we will be paying for this pension; we will pay a larger proportion of our salary and expense allowance. But so will the public treasury, Mr. Speaker. I am certain that other public servants in Canada would be quite prepared to pay a larger proportion of their salaries in order to have it matched by a contribution from their employers so that their pensions might be improved.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I am not one who says the Member of Parliament should not enjoy an improved salary or pension until everyone else in Canada has reached his level. That is an impossible, wrong position to take. It is simply not practical or sensible. But I do say that when the government brings down a bill covering public servants like Members of Parliament, judges, members of the RCMP, Senators and veterans, it ought to cover and treat all public servants equally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: That is my objection to this bill.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? Is it his opinion that the pension plan for civil servants is even remotely related to the kind of plans existing in the other sectors described?

Mr. Lewis: Of course not. The hon. member must not think I am so ignorant as not to know there are variations in wages and salaries all across this country, and in pension plans. Pensions are not equal, and I do not expect them to be. I do not take issue because the pension plan for Members of Parliament is to be improved. So it should be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I do not deny that it should be, nor does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). What I object to, and what he objects to is that Members of Parliament should improve their pension plan at a time when little is being done for other public servants and at a time when the government and Parliament ask working men of this country to tighten their belts. There is a time for things to be done. The workers always have a reason for asking that their incomes and pensions be increased.

Can anyone say that a worker earning $4,000, $6,000 or even $8,000 a year does not deserve an increase, especially when one considers rising living costs? Yet we are saying to them, "Don't ask for a big increase: Ask for a little increase, say of 3 or 4 per cent. We do not say you do not deserve 7 or 8 per cent; we merely say this is not the time to give you 7 or 8 per cent." When you say that to the working people of Canada, I submit it is not the time for Members of Parliament to improve their own conditions. It is as simple as that.

This is not the time to bring down a bill that deals with 99 per cent of our public servants one way and merely escalates their pension by 2 per cent, and deals with the other 1 per cent of public servants who happen to be sitting in this chamber and in the other place in a different way and gives to them a completely new pension plan that will double their pensions.

Mr. Francis: And their contributions.

Mr. Lewis: I ask the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis): Are there not many civil servants in Ottawa, and would not the civil servants he represents be prepared to pay another percentage point of their income to receive the kind of pension the hon. member is ready to vote for himself?

Mr. Peters: If he tries to negotiate it, the government will say no.

Mr. Lewis: As my hon. friend for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says, even if he tried to negotiate such a plan the government would say no to it. But in this chamber Members of Parliament negotiate among themselves on this issue and the government says, "You can have better pensions because you like the idea."

Mr. Whicher: That is NDP twaddle.

Mr. Lewis: There are differences of opinion on this matter in the chamber, and I know that many people are angry because we are saying these things. Whether their anger stems from their disagreement or a guilty conscience is something they must decide.

An hon. Member: That's cheap.

Mr. Lewis: Those who support my argument are doing what they think is right, and others who disagree with us no doubt think they are right. They are welcome to their opinions, and I wish they would give me the right to state mine.

An hon. Member: Nobody is stopping you.

Mr. Lewis: This, in our view, is simply not the time to do this kind of thing with the pensions of Members of Parliament. At a time when similar provisions are not included for all other public servants, and when we are asking the people of Canada to take smaller increases in wages because the situation is such that they ought not to receive what they think they deserve, Members of Parliament cannot, I think, justify this kind of measure. That is why I am against it.

Mr. Whicher: That is not the position of the hon. gentleman's party in the Ontario legislature.

Mr. Lewis: If the hon. gentleman wishes to ask a question and has the courtesy to say so, I will permit him to ask it.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder why my hon. friend has not had a chat with Donald MacDonald, the leader of the NDP in Ontario, who took an additional 100 per cent in the legislature at Toronto. He reached for it with both hands.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who asked the question was at one time, I think, a member of the Ontario legislature. He ought to ask Donald MacDonald, or John Robarts, or my son, about this. Frankly, I am not concerned about what Donald MacDonald, Stephen Lewis, John Robarts or anyone else did in the Ontario legislature. I am not a member of that legislature; I am a member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Whicher: But you belong to the same party as Donald MacDonald.

Mr. Lewis: I speak as a Member of the House of Commons. Some members of my party disagree with me. Without accusing anybody of displaying a lesser morality, lesser intelligence or a lesser concern for our country, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion the government is wrong and Parliament will be wrong in approving so substantial a pension for Members of Parliament without doing a single thing to improve the pension plan as a whole of other public servants.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a member of the opposition who spoke earlier in the debate congratulated the government for its courage in bringing forward this legislation. Whatever the government displayed, I do not think it was courage. May I refer to what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) suggested when he indicated that it was not a matter of great substance that pensions for public servants and Members of Parliament are dealt with in the same bill.

I think it is precisely because the government lacked courage that it introduced these separate measures in the same bill. In other words, the government knew perfectly well that a bill to increase pensions of Members of Parliament and Senators at this time—and it has been emphasized by others that the phrase "at this time" is all-important—would be unpopular with the public and embarrassing for Members of Parliament and Senators; so it decided to bring in under part II of this bill the provisions dealing with pensions of Members of Parliament and Senators. It brought in part II of the bill, which it knew would be unpopular, under the cloak of raising the pensions of civil servants, which it knew would be popular. That is exactly what it did, even though the bases of the two pensions are entirely different and the benefits paid under part II are far more generous than those to be paid to recipients under part I.

I therefore think the President of the Privy Council was quite wrong when he tried to pretend that it was not of great consequence that these two measures should be included in one bill. They were included in one bill quite deliberately, with the hope that the popular part, the pension increases relating to the public service, would carry the unpopular part relating to Members of Parliament and Senators.

The campaign to raise pensions of public servants has been fought long and hard by many boards, bodies, commissions, public servants themselves and by people like my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Of course, in this campaign my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has played a very consistent and persistent part in this victory which is by no means confined to a few people.

I want to touch on a point with which the President of the Privy Council omitted to deal. He was careful to say that the recommendations are based very largely on the Curtis report. But there is one part of the report with which he did not deal, namely, what appears on page 5. The report recommended that pensions be paid at age 55 on retirement, but not before that age. Mr. Curtis said in his report:

> It should also be stated plainly that the present system of paying allowances immediately upon retirement from the House is inequitable in that it gives younger "retirees" a great advantage over older members... The time has come to make the system more adequate, equitable and appropriate to present-day conditions and more in line with pension and retirement plans in general.

In other words, the report recommended that MPs be eligible for pensions henceforth at the age of 55. The government disregarded this advice completely when drawing up the new pensions schedule. So far I have heard no explanation from the government as to why they brushed off this recommendation.

Mr. Peters: The government wants retired members to be young enough to enjoy it.

Mrs. MacInnis: My hon. friend is not on the government side, yet. I said I had heard nothing from the government side. Now I want to touch on one or two points which were made by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). I see he has returned to the chamber, and I am glad he has. It seems that when he was worrying about members' pensions and being such a strong advocate of the needs of Members of Parliament, he was doing something which was important and about which he felt very strongly.

But I would just like to suggest—I will come in a minute to the need of Members of Parliament for this pension, and in some cases the need is very great indeed—that when the hon. member made at least the suggestion that for certain Members of Parliament who have safe ridings it is easy enough to go along with criticizing pension increases for Members of Parliament, but that for members whose ridings are not so safe it is a must to have very substantial increases in pensions, that having a riding which is reasonably safe for a member is not entirely unconnected with what one does in pleading the case for people who really need help in the riding, the people on low incomes and those who have no pensions or very low pensions.

Mr. Francis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has quoted me and I think in fairness she should quote me accurately. My concern was that for certain types of members the conventional rules of eligibility had the result of excluding 88 per cent of members of this House from any benefit whatsoever—not in regard to the quantum of the pension but mere eligibility for the pension. I believe the hon. member has misconstrued my remarks on this point.

Mrs. MacInnis: That was the next point I was going to make, but the one I have already made stays, because I suggest that there are very many people besides Members of Parliament who have very low pensions or no pensions. He may feel as righteously indignant as he likes over a pension which is as low as $3,000 under the old act, but I should like to know how many people in his riding, excluding perhaps some of the higher paid public servants, are enjoying pensions of $3,000 for the rest of their lives. I refer to ordinary members of the riding.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mrs. MacInnis: If you want to ask a question, let me finish with him first and then I will let you have a shot. I want to deal with this other point. The hon. member is melancholy about the old pension system, because he says only 12 per cent can qualify under it to get a pension. I ask him, what does he want? Is it a situation in regard to pensions where every member who is once elected to Parliament becomes attached to the public payroll and is pensioned for life? If that is not what he wants, I am at a loss to understand what he does want, because it seems to me very much like that. And don't let him make another speech on this clause. He can make another speech later, because we have other amendments.

I suggest that if he would put half the attention into pleading for a guaranteed income and for pensions for the low-income people in his riding as he has today for members of Parliament, perhaps he would find there would be less of a turnover in his riding when it comes to future elections. Perhaps the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) would like to ask his question now.

Mr. Anderson: I should like to clear up one point. I hope the hon. member does not feel, as I understood her to say, that one's performance in the House and as an MP entirely determines whether one is re-elected, whether in the same seat or not, because I feel that her hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) would take strong exception to that statement.

Mrs. MacInnis: No, no. I made no such suggestion. I said it was not entirely unconnected with that. You can find your examples where you like. Of course, accident also comes into it very definitely. Accident comes into our getting here in the first place and in our leaving it, in the second place.

I would also like to say that I wish the hon. member for Ottawa West would go back and read the speech which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre made on March 10 and from which the hon. member for Ottawa West was quoting so freely this morning. In every case he would find that my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre was not talking about the pension scheme already in existence, but about what is being proposed for us, when he said it was too generous and this sort of thing. Just let him read Hansard. You can get your shot on the next round. Look at Hansard in the meantime and it will save time.

Mr. Francis: The statement is on the record, and it is a misstatement. I should like to ask the hon. member: When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) referred to a ceiling of $9,000, which plan was he referring to—the present one or the new one?

Mrs. MacInnis: I am saying that when he referred to the plan being far too generous he used the words, "what is being proposed for us in the future." That is what he said. I guess I have dealt with everything up to date. I now want to come to my own position on this proposal. Of course, I am supporting the amendment which is before us. Oh, yes; I knew I had forgotten somebody. It is the member in our own group who referred to members who believed that the affluent society must be bad, and who prefer to wear hair-shirts and have long faces on Sundays. I am not in that category at all, believe it or not; but I do believe that in an affluent society, when we start to raise pensions and allowances it must begin at the bottom where the need is greatest.

I am not saying this today for the first time and if some of you have not heard me say it before I will speak more often in the future. The place we should seek to build security first is where the people are the least secure, those in the low-income groups, and we should seek it by every possible means. On the day we get a guaranteed income for low-income people in this country I will be far happier about our spending time and worrying about raising our own pensions and salaries.

I want to say one thing about my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). He said it was perfectly O.K. to go on putting any amount of money we like from our own salaries into a pension plan, and he said, "I would expect my employer to do likewise." Who is our employer? Our employer is the people of Canada, who foot the bills. Frankly, I do not think you can justify taking money to an indefinite extent from the pool of taxation across this country while we have people with so much less income and security than ourselves.

I come now to another point. I realize the need for increased pensions for Members of Parliament; I see the need and hear about it all the time. I know there are members who have very great family requirements, with youngsters growing up and needing education. Some carry the extra burden of supporting elderly relatives. Other members have large constituencies with particular travel problems, and so on. I realize all this. But I think we could find some way other than upping the pensions to cope with some of the expenses we have to bear.

There are also some members whose obligations are greater than one suspects. It is a rather dangerous thing to count the noses in a member's family and to say that he has 6, 8 or 10 children, that another member has no children, and therefore the need of the first member for a pension is 6, 8 or 10 times that of the other. I suggest that until and unless you know the obligations of each individual member, you could not begin to make any sort of rough calculation of what are his requirements.

Most of us are required to run two homes. At times certain individuals and organizations seem to feel that a money tree grows in our offices. We know, too, that constituency expenses are mounting. Therefore, I will not presume to judge the needs of anybody else by looking at their obligations. You could not begin to make any assessment, and there is no reason why you should be able to do so.

Certain people in this House are angry, upset, and feel badly about this situation. But I think we must admit that we are all here because we are trying to do a good job for this country, and that we are earnestly and sincerely trying to say that which we believe. I am not presuming to judge other people, but I have to judge my own position in this matter. In doing so I have to tell this House that as a representative of the riding of Vancouver-Kingsway I cannot go along with a pension increase for ourselves at this time. Neither, I think, should Parliament. I have the right to say that I do not think Parliament should do so because I am helping either to make the law or to protest the making of law, as the case may be.

My colleague has outlined specific features of the bill to which he objects and I do not need to repeat them. But I want to make this point, which is central to my argument. The people of the constituency of Vancouver-Kingsway sent me here to represent them and to do as much as I possibly could to further their interests. The great majority of these people have less income and less security than I have. At the present time no proposals are being put before us to help in any material way to improve the income or security of these people. The budget is quite fresh in our minds, and there is no provision therein that will benefit people of low or moderately low income. As far as the people of Vancouver-Kingsway are concerned, there is nothing for them.

For the old age pensioners, for the people who need housing, for the people who have large families and inadequate income, for people who are unemployed, for the youth of this country who will be pouring out of our schools in a month or two with no jobs to go to, nothing is provided. How can I at this time tell these people, "Although there is nothing for you, I have come back with something worth while: I have just helped raise, without protest, pensions of Members of Parliament and Senators"? You and I know, Mr. Speaker, how these people will feel, and I just cannot face them on that basis and I am not going to.

I hear somebody snorting. Perhaps it was three snorts that I heard combined into one large snort. I think it is a mistake for Members of Parliament to compare what they are getting with salaries and pensions paid in the business community. If a Member of Parliament feels that in comparison with somebody in the business community his salary and his pension are not what they should be, that his prestige is not what it should be, that his economic status will not allow him to get those things that a person he regards as of comparable ability and advancement in the business community can get, I suggest to that member that he get out of this House and join the business community.

We do not come to this Parliament essentially for the purpose of making a living. Certainly it is not why I came here. Nobody forced any member to come to this House. Hon. members know—at least, I give them credit for knowing—their abilities are such that they could get a better-paid job in private industry if they wanted to. I also give hon. members credit for coming here because they wanted to render public service. Therefore, since people are being told that they must exercise restraint, that they must go easy on any monetary increases, I give these hon. members credit for believing that this is not the time to take advantage of our particular position by putting our hands into the bill and taking out more than a fair amount, an amount that is more than other people can take.

That is the position I am going to take at this time. I realize that each hon. member has to decide this question for himself. Personally, I cannot support these pension increases for Members of Parliament. My people would regard such action as a betrayal of the trust that they have placed in me, the confidence they have that I will put their interests ahead of my own. I cannot do that if I go back and tell them that although I have looked after myself, there is nothing for them. For these reasons I support this amendment which will delete that part of the bill that makes special and different provisions for Members of Parliament and Senators.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have but a short comment to make. We have been told that this matter is one of conscience. Reforming the pension plan for members in this way has led to expressions of moral anguish on the part of the members of the New Democratic Party.

An hon. Member: Some members.

Mr. Perrault: Some members. The only rider that has not been added is, "Local papers, please copy". I am shocked, bewildered and dismayed that after all these verbal histrionics there has appeared on the Order Paper no proposal by the New Democratic Party to amend the measure before us by introducing a conscientious objector clause that would enable all members of that party to turn back their pension benefits to consolidated revenue if they so desire. There is no proposal on the Order Paper that would permit them to opt out and to back their moral outrage with practical dollar contributions, whether to consolidated revenue, Biafra relief, Canairelief or whatever they want to do with the money.

We have had a great deal of moral indignation but very little follow-through. However, perhaps I am being unfair. Perhaps these members are about to move an amendment from the floor for the purpose of making even greater dramatic impact. Perhaps we can now await an amendment from the New Democratic Party that will deny unto their members any benefits of the pension plan and turn them back to consolidated revenue. We will therefore listen with interest to find out how solidly is this moral anguish backed by performance.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I must say that when one talks in this House about histrionics, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) is usually quite capable of giving us a fair demonstration of what that word means. His remarks about amendments, and so on, implied that members of this House are not free to discuss the merits of proposals placed before us from time to time in various government bills. Some of us have proposed amendments in our names which we consider to be appropriate and in accordance with our judgment as members of the House of Commons of the merits of the proposal we have under debate. It is from that point of view I should like to speak for a few minutes on the matter before us.

It should be apparent, despite the allegations of the hon. member for Burnaby-

Seymour with reference to the political party of which I happen to be a member, that when it comes to discussing a bill of this kind it is open to us in this part of the House to discuss it as Members of Parliament and not as members with any particular political affiliation. This is the way I feel such matters should be discussed.

I rose to my feet because I felt I might forestall an impulse on the part of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to re-enter the debate. I am not quite sure from the exchange that took place a little earlier whether the hon. member for Timiskaming or the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) will wear the hair-shirt. But I am sure that whichever one of them chooses to come into the House in that apparel, Mr. Speaker will consider it suitable for this corner of the chamber and we can then judge which one looks the most becoming in that attire.

I rise to speak on this amendment to deal with two points, both of which have been mentioned before, about which I have some feeling. I have always felt that as far as it is humanly possible, members of this House should have the right to make a decision on a particular issue without having to be gummed-up by extraneous issues. I should like as a member of this chamber to register my personal objection to what I can only describe as the way the government has bootlegged the whole question of the pension plan of Members of Parliament into this bill. While it is true the bill deals with pensions it is, nevertheless, not directly related to them.

I do not know why it is, but every time we deal with matters which affect our own situation, particularly from the pension point of view, we seem to be swept into a situation which generates more heat than light. Because of the action the government has taken and the way it has chosen to bring this matter before the House, I suggest it has added to the heat of the debate. I wish the government had left these issues separate and apart in order that we could appraise them individually, on their own merits. Then none of us would feel, in voting on the proposal in the first part of this bill, that we were in fact having to compromise our position in respect of the other part.

The other point I should like to touch upon, because it has been debated, is the business of combining for the purposes of this bill our indemnity and expense allowance. Ever since I have been a member of this House I have tried to put forward the point of view that proper recognition should be given to the expenses which a member must incur in the performance of his duties both as a member of this House and in providing proper service to constituents. I have always felt that the present system, which sets a flat rate for every member of the House of Commons, is neither equitable nor fair and that this is a matter which should be considered and appropriately adjusted. I feel that by entangling our present, so-called expense allowance with our indemnity we are creating a snarl we probably will never manage to untangle, and we will never be able to take a realistic approach to the matter of expenses a member incurs in performing his function as a Member of Parliament.

Let me refer to the question of the pension proposal in respect of hon. members. In this regard I suppose my personal experience has been as varied as that of any member who currently sits in this chamber. I suggest in all seriousness that as the proposal stands we are moving very directly away from the original concept of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

An hon. member quoted and commended part of a speech on the original bill by a former leader of the party to which I belonged. When I first came into this House the Hon. M. J. Coldwell was that leader. Anyone who followed that debate on the matter shortly before I entered the House—I think in 1952 the plan came into effect, and I entered the House in 1953—will realize that the whole concept of that plan was based on the concept that the longer an individual was away from the normal employment or occupation from which he made his living, the more difficult it would be to readjust to what one might call civilian life after retiring either voluntarily or involuntarily from this chamber. It was on this basis that the special provisions of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act was developed.

No one would quarrel with the suggestion that the initial plan was not adequate. Speaking as an individual, I have no particular quarrel with the principle of the plan. When I was defeated as a member of this House in 1958, I had not been elected three times. I have no particular quarrel with the fact that the only benefit accruing to me was a refund of the amount I had personally contributed to the fund: I had not been a member of the House long enough, nor had I reached an age where it was impossible for me to re-enter employment which would earn me a living.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House should at this time turn to private members' business.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether hon. members would consent to extending this debate into the private members' hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that I had the experience of leaving this chamber and having my personal contributions refunded, and having to readjust to another way of providing myself with a living. I have no quarrel with the fact that at that time I had no pension entitlement as a Member of Parliament.

I did draw a pension for a short time, and while I freely admit it would have been nice if it had been larger, at least—as I sometimes put it—it bought the groceries and it was much better to have it than to have nothing at all. This was at a time when it was not quite as easy, having been longer in the House, for one to make a personal readjustment and obtain gainful employment. I think the original principle is still sound.

Without going into the amount of the pension, I feel one of the criticisms of the present proposal is that it departs radically from the concept of what is a Member of Parliament's pension. I disagree with the parallel which has been drawn in some speeches between the pensions of Members of Parliament and the pensions of civil servants, those in industry, and so on, in a situation wherein one would normally expect to work until a definite retirement date.

It seems to me the departure has stemmed from the fact that the proposed bill contains in it recommendation No. 3 of the report of Dean Curtis, to which reference has been made earlier. This recommendation would entitle a member to a pension after he had spent six years in the House. The bill ignores the parallel suggestion that if one is to be entitled to a pension after such a short period of service, the pension should not be payable until a certain retirement age, and the age suggested here is 55.

If a person has been here for only six years and presumably leaves at a fairly early age, it is evident that in the majority of cases no contribution would have been made in an amount that would pay for such a pension for the rest of that person's life. Nor do I think it is proper to argue that a member who has been in this chamber for only six years would not be able to make the necessary readjustment in respect of a previous occupation or find some other occupation after leaving this chamber.

On the other hand, in any ordinary concept of a pension with contributions calculated for a period of years into the future, a modest pension entitlement could be considered warranted. I would suggest that this consideration, apart from any other, is sufficient for not passing in its present form this particular part of the bill. As one of my colleagues quite properly noted, this whole scheme was hurriedly brought before the House. It was rushed through the committee and brought back into this chamber, and no one can say there was an opportunity for the proper, rational consideration to which such a proposal should be entitled.

Having said that, I must say that on balance I agree with what was said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), to the effect that the timing, apart from any other consideration, is not very appropriate in view of the stated policies of the government. I agree with him that if we are to be asked, as we are, to support the policies of the government in respect of the economy and the slowing down of inflation, regardless of what we may think of the merits of this proposal which the government is putting forward to deal with such matters, at least we should be asked to set a good example ourselves and the government should see that any measure it presents is in keeping with its general policy position at the time.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few remarks in respect of this particular motion. It deals with the base on which pension contributions are to be made. I believe Dean Curtis summed it up fairly well when he said we can take 7½ per cent on $18,000 or a higher percentage on $12,000 in order to reach the same amount. I suggested to Dean Curtis that it might be preferable to base the contribution on the $12,000 so long as the result could be adjusted in some way. However, that is not a point on which I feel strongly.

The government has decided differently, and it is the government's responsibility. The government is doing in this case what Dean Curtis recommended. Having said that, it is not my intention to support the amendment. This government has taken its responsibility and concurs with what Dean Curtis has recommended. I am content to leave it that way. I might add that in this matter which affects the conscience of all members, the members of this party personally are free to vote in any way they wish on any of these amendments.

Since the debate has taken a rather wide-ranging turn on this subject, I shall take the opportunity to say what I believe in general terms is the view of most members of this party although, as I have said, we are not bound to vote in any particular way on any amendment. Having said that, I should like to say that in general terms we support what the government is doing. I have always had a dislike for omnibus bills, but in this case the bill at least has the merit of dealing all the way through with pensions. It is true that some of these pensions relate to Members of Parliament and others relate to civil servants and members of the RCMP; but no matter what the category, all individuals concerned are or have been paid by the federal government. In every case the individuals were or are paid by the taxpayers of Canada. In that sense there is a common thread through the whole bill from beginning to end.

I agree with the statement I believe the the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made, to the effect that it is up to the individual member to express what he believes to be his own thoughts on the matter and what his own conscience forces him to say. I agree with that, but in that process I think people should attempt to be as objective as possible. I thought one thing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said was extremely unfair so far as public relations between Members of Parliament and the general public are concerned.

I hope his statement was unintentional. I shall paraphrase what I believe he said. He indicated he would go along with the improvement to the retirement plan for Members of Parliament only if it applied to all other categories of pensions, including the pensions of civil servants. I believe thereby he left the impression that every benefit that is available to civil servants is also available to Members of Parliament. It is because that is not the case I feel most strongly that amendments to the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act are long overdue. I am sick and tired of having the hat passed around for the children of some deceased Member of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. MacLean: The time is long past when the orphans of Members of Parliament should receive the same relative benefit that is received by orphans of civil servants.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Secondly—and this is most important—I see no reason why a Member of Parliament should not be just as entitled as is a civil servant to calculate his benefits from his best six years of service multiplied by the years of service. I see no reason why the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), for example, should have had to serve three years in this chamber some years ago to obtain the same benefit as a member now gets for serving one year. I think this is an amendment that is long overdue and if adopted, will only bring us into line with the civil service.

There are other points. For example, in some cases, at least, civil servants who served in World War II could include the years which they spent in military service for superannuation purposes. We are precluded from that and always have been. I think—although I do not want to go into that question now—the time is long overdue when there should be a further integration of pension plans in all cases where the federal government is the employer, so that if one moves from the civil service to the House of Commons, or vice versa, and has been in the armed services one should continue to accumulate pension benefits. We would then be in the same position as someone who stayed in the armed services throughout.

I do not want to be personal in this matter, but some people say, "I wonder if I am worth this?" Frankly, I have no hesitation in saying that most Members of Parliament I know are entitled to the benefits which these amendments will bring them. We should not forget that according to the latest figures available, for every Member of Parliament in this country there are 1,399 civil servants. I have the highest respect for civil servants but among that number there must be at least one who will receive a far larger pension than any Member of Parliament will ever see, and the same applies to the armed services.

If I were to cite a personal case, my contemporaries who were in the same class as I when I joined the armed services just before the beginning of World War II retired two or three years ago, and depending on their rank many have a higher pension than any of us here will ever obtain. Like them, I had the opportunity of staying in the services with a permanent commission. They, too, are employees of and are paid by the federal government. Please understand, Mr. Speaker, that I do not object to the rates of pensions paid either to civil servants or retired members of the armed services, but I do not subscribe to the philosophy that by humiliating ourselves and going around in sackcloth and ashes we will thereby win the adulation of our constituents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: If that is the only way to do it, then I will not adopt that method. I want to say also that there is a great deal of misunderstanding about retiring allowances of Members of Parliament among the general public, and I think that the members of the press here have a responsibility because they should know what they are talking about when they write about the bed of roses in which we in Parliament loll. They usually use the figure of the maximum pension that is available to Members of Parliament. The maximum that exists now is $9,000, which takes 30 years to attain. With the amendment, the maximum will be $13,500 after 25 years of service.

I want to inform the House that since P.E.I. came into Confederation, which is almost 100 years ago now, six members represented P.E.I. for some years, and four members since that time, and not one of the members who sat in this House from Prince Edward Island would ever have qualified for the maximum either under the present system or under the amendments. So we have to look at averages.

It has been said that this is an inopportune time for amending the act. There is always an inopportune time for doing anything, I suppose. I point out in this connection that any member who has been here since 1963 will have to make retroactive payments, in addition to his regular payments, of approximately $4,410 plus interest to cover the seven years. No member will benefit from his pension until after the next election. The only people who can possibly benefit between now and then will be some of our widows and orphans, if we do not happen to make it to the next election.

I think that this is all I want to say except to point out that the insecurity of service here makes it impossible to compare a retirement plan for Members of Parliament which would give a minimum of security to widows and orphans, with any scheme that might be used in either the armed services or the civil service which provides almost complete security of tenure. Anyone who does a reasonably good job in the civil service is perfectly secure in his employment so long as his health lasts, and even that is taken care of. That is not so in Parliament. You can be the best member in the House, but due to political trends or accident be defeated.

Mr. Woolliams: People ask you to leave so nicely.

Mr. MacLean: In my short time here I have seen about 1,000 members in this chamber. There are only 264 of them now here. Most of the remainder retired from this place, not of their own volition but because the majority of the people they represented thought it was a good idea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt amendment No. 1? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (4:20 p.m.)

According to agreement arrived at earlier this day, it is now my duty to put motions Nos. 2 to 8. Rather than do that, I suggest we consider the motions to be put and the votes to be deferred on them. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then we will proceed to motion No. 9. Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), seconded by Mr. Barnett, moves:

That Bill C-194, an act to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be amended by deleting therefrom all of clause 21 except lines 24 to 32, both inclusive, on page 19, and lines 30 to 39, both inclusive, on page 20.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the instructions from the Chair earlier today I understand that at this point comments are in order on motion No. 9, which you have just read, and also on motion No. 10, which is in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). In view of the fact that we have had a pretty wide-ranging debate, I suspect we would all be satisfied if the debate at this time could be a bit shorter. Therefore my remarks at this point will be brief.

Perhaps I might deal with the two motions in reverse order and say that if motion No. 9 is defeated—in other words, if we are going to keep clause 21 in the bill—we shall be pleased to support the amendment moved by the President of the Privy Council, particularly because of the slight improvement it makes with regard to the pensions available to the orphans of Members of Parliament who die having been predeceased by their wives.

Motion No. 9, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps the most all-embracing of the whole group of 15 proposed amendments, but that does not mean that the discussion has to be extended. It deals with clause 21 of the bill which, as hon. members realize, covers about 14 or 15 pages. It is the clause in which are spelled out most of the terms of the new provisions for pensions for Members of Parliament. My amendment would strike out everything in those 14 or 15 pages except the part that would require us to pay one-half of one per cent into the fund for supplemental benefits, it being understood that in an earlier part of the bill it has already been provided that Members of Parliament are entitled to the escalation that is paid out of that fund. That, then, is the purpose of this amendment. As a matter of fact, it gets to the heart of what we in this party have been talking about all day, namely, that the portion of this bill dealing with Members of Parliament should do only what the bill as a whole is doing for all of those others who are covered by it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not take exception to the words that the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) put in my mouth a moment ago because he was quite fair. At least, he did not do violence to what I said, but there was a slight difference which I think I am entitled to point out. He said that in light of what I said at an earlier point it appeared that I did not want to do anything for Members of Parliament at any time unless we were doing precisely the same thing for all others with regard to their pension plans. That is not what I said.

I recognize that there have to be some differences among the various pension plans, but what I objected to, what I still object to, and what most of my colleagues object to is the fact that in this bill when we are doing something with respect to pensions for all of us, all of us whose pensions come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, we have picked ourselves out to do something extra for ourselves, namely, to revamp our pension plan and recast it altogether.

The President of the Privy Council and others have said that this is a logical thing to do, that we are opening up the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, so why not do this now? By the same token, Mr. Speaker, this bill opens up the Public Service Superannuation Act, and there are things that need to be done to that act. So let us do them now. For example, a moment ago I said I had no objection to the proposal made by the President of the Privy Council in motion No. 10. One of the things it relates to is the pensions paid to widows, although his motion is imposing a slight restriction on their love life after they become widows. But may I point out that what we are doing with this combination is looking to the Public Service Superannuation Act, and we see in that act that the pensions available for the orphaned children of a deceased public service pensioner can go up to 80 per cent, and so we are saying, let us do the same thing for Members of Parliament.

That is a reasonable argument. But, Mr. Speaker, the civil servants then come along to us and say, "Why is it you take for yourselves a better point which you find in our act, but you won't do the reverse? You won't give us something for our act that in your act is better." I refer in particular to the provision for widows. One of the things civil servants are most anxious about is to have their plan amended so that widows will get at least a 60 per cent pension, comparable with the pension we pay under this plan to our widows.

Mr. Francis: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not agree that the public service superannuation plan payments actually made to widows are substantially in excess of payments that would be made, even under these amendments, to the widows of Members of Parliament, and that the specious comparison between 50 per cent and 60 per cent ignores the very basis of the contributions under the two plans?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree at all with what the hon. member has said, and I have not agreed with him all day. He quotes statistics regarding the old plan and then tries to say that the same statistics apply to the new one. The number of widows getting pensions under the old plan is very few. In the first place, there was no provision for a widow's pension at all from 1952 to 1963. Since then there have not been very many given, so that to compare these few examples with the total number of widows' pensions given under the Public Service Superannuation Act is a false comparison, and to try to tell us that the conditions that applied before are going to be the conditions under the new scheme, the new régime, is also quite false.

Under the new scheme the pensions that Members of Parliament will be able to draw will be larger. There will be more of them, and as time goes on there will be more widows and their pensions will compare very favourably with the pensions of the widows of civil servants. And as we get our $8,000, $10,000 and $12,000 pensions it must be remembered that the pensions of our widows will be 60 per cent of those amounts, and in the case of the widows of civil servants they will get only 50 per cent of the amount of their husbands' pensions. I say to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) that he is wrong again, even as he has been wrong two or three times already today. The comparison the hon. member is making is an erroneous one, and I say again that we are taking for ourselves a good thing that we find in the Public Service Superannuation Act, namely, an 80 per cent ceiling on pensions for our children, but we will not give to them from our act a better deal, namely, 60 per cent for their widows.

I suggest to the President of the Privy Council and others who stand up and say, "Oh, we are opening up our act so let us go through with this thing," that the same precept applies to all the other acts. We are opening up the Public Service Superannuation Act, so let us cover some of the crucial points that are of concern to those people. But if we are not prepared to meet any of these points that the public servants are calling for, we have no moral right in this bill, which does one thing for everybody, to give this special privilege to ourselves.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, this morning the hon. member for Ottawa West tried to suggest that in my speech on March 10 I described the existing plan as a generous one. I think he has had occasion to look at my remarks since then and I am sure he realizes that when I talked about the plan being too generous, I was talking about the new one. It is there in two or three places, and I have checked it. There is even a paragraph in that speech where I said that we thought the old plan was generous when we brought it into effect in 1952. But those like M. J. Coldwell who are now getting only $3,000 a year know that it is not. Incidentally, with respect to those expressions of concern for Mr. Coldwell, may I ask what we are doing for him under this bill? He has been out since 1958, 12 years, so he will get about a 25 per cent increase in his $3,000 a year pension. It will go up to only $3,750.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He was here for 22 or 23 years, but members here today who serve as long as he did will draw a pension of $12,000 or $13,000. I say to my hon. friend from Pembina (Mr. Bigg)—

Mr. McGrath: Two wrongs don't make a right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —that I agree with the point he made about the higher pension that people now retiring from the RCMP receive compared to the pension he receives. He need not be concerned that some of us have not worried about pensions for the RCMP and retired armed forces personnel; we have for a long time.

In this very debate I have been arguing the case of the war veterans allowance recipients who, when they get an increase in their civil service pension under this bill, will have it taken away by the means test in the War Veterans Allowance Act. I have waited each time for a voice to be raised from some other party in support of my contention. In committee the only other voice raised was by one who said it could not be done there, except for the minister who said the government had decided not to do anything about it. Who is it who has contended that we should not again penalize the veteran on the war veterans allowance? It is this member standing here right now, the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. The point was made very clearly in committee that there are a number of anomalies under the War Veterans Allowance Act that can only be corrected under that act. This is not the act to correct them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is no point of privilege. The hon. member is as dead wrong on this as he has been on it all along.

Mr. Woolliams: How is it you are always right?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Bill C-194 does not amend just one statute, it amends 15 or 20. It is an omnibus bill and it amends every statute that the government found it necessary to amend to carry out its purpose. If the government was willing to carry out as its purpose that war veterans would not lose the increase they will get in their retired civil service pension, this is the place to do it. If it is not done here, it will not be done.

I can see the day coming when members of this House will ask questions and complain because war veterans on the allowance are not getting the benefit of the increase in the civil service pension, yet they are saying nothing now. I say, Mr. Speaker, the operation we are going through is full of this kind of thing, where we are doing one thing for pensioners in the civil service generally but doing a special thing for ourselves.

The hon. member for Ottawa West is concerned about the 88 per cent of the people who have contributed under the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act since 1952 but who do not qualify for a pension. Of course, that includes all those who were elected only once or twice and it may even include some who have died and, of course, they do not get it. People coming to the civil service and working only four or five years do not get a pension either, and people who go into industry but do not work the minimum amount of time do not get a pension. Does the hon. member want us to come to the situation that when a person is selected once or twice he is on pay for the rest of his life? If that is what he wants, let him say so. Let us start by calling it a guaranteed annual income. If we do it for ourselves, let us do it for everyone, but let us call it a guaranteed annual income.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, there again the hon. member knows what I said. I am supporting the measure before this House which says six years; I am not supporting anything else nor am I alleging anything else. For the hon. member to suggest that I am somehow implying that everyone who is elected to Parliament can get a guaranteed income for life is the kind of distortion that is not worthy of the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is supporting a scheme under which anybody who gets elected twice, because six years is about that, qualifies for a pension. Oh, yes, and on that basis he will qualify. He was elected once, then defeated, then elected again and if this bill goes through he qualifies. If he is here for only six years, he qualifies for $3,780 a year for life.

I may have this protestant ethic or viewpoint that was referred to by one of my colleagues; I may look like a person who likes to lie on a bed of nails. I can live frugally, and all the rest of it. Maybe I come from that kind of constituency that is made up mainly of working class people who don't know pensions of that kind. I think that $3,780 a year after six years of service at whatever age you might be—30, if you please, becomes possible—for the rest of time is a pretty generous deal that we are providing for ourselves with this legislation.

I am sorry I got off into that, because that is not the issue. Whether it is mildly generous, moderately generous or too generous, the issue, as was so well stated earlier today by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), is that we have a bill here in which we are doing one thing for everybody but we have imported into it not only that one thing for ourselves but this special deal. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is fair and I do not think we should be doing it.

I have more notes, Mr. Speaker, but time is going on and I think during the course of the day we have made our position clear. I said earlier today that some of us know what consistency will call for in respect of this matter. I think we should be concerned as a Parliament as to whether or not we have the right, in face of the austerity and restraint we are preaching, to do this special thing for ourselves which we are not doing for others. I think we should not, and that is why I have presented motion No. 9, to delete all that portion of clause 21 except the portion that would require us to pay one-half of one per cent into the fund for supplementary benefits.

This would put us, so far as this bill is concerned, in the same position as everybody else.

If things have to be done to change the Public Service Superannuation Act to put the widows of public servants in the same position with respect to pensions as applies to the pensions we are providing for our own widows, let us make those changes. Let us not do something special for ourselves, which I think is a case of smuggling into this bill something that does not belong there at all.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two remarks about the amendment in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). What I want to say is really in the form of a question, but I do not see the President of the Privy Council here at the moment though perhaps there is somebody else who will be able to explain it. When he introduced the amendment the question was asked whether "widow" also meant "widower". I should like to pose the question: Why should the pension cease on remarriage in the case of a widow? If a pension is an entitlement, why should it not continue? As far as I can check out that part of the section, if widow means widower it means in effect that if a widower remarries his pension ceases.

It seems to me that concept is rather outmoded. Why should the question of whether you are going to lose a pension enter into the question of marriage? It seems to me this is a carryover of a rather archaic concept. A woman is necessarily an economic dependent of her husband. In this case it means that in reverse a man may become the economic dependent of his wife. I am wondering whether this particular aspect has been considered by the government and just what is the purpose of the President of the Privy Council in proposing this particular provision detail in amendment No. 10.

I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). If the part he referred to is to remain in the bill, I would agree with the other part of the amendment proposed by the President of the Privy Council. I am puzzled by the second part of the amendment particularly, since "widow" includes "widower". Could anybody on the government side comment on this matter?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, this type of question can best be pursued in committee. Perhaps the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) could reply.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, this question was extensively debated before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The matter referred to was raised at page 913 in Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 9, by the hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew (Mr. McBride). At page 915 of that report the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) said in part:

> Extensive consideration was not given to this point. I think the experience is that most of the other pension plans the government of Canada is responsible for, including the Canada Pension Plan, have a provision resembling this one. In effect, the supplementary changes were only to generally change the financial terms to increase the benefits. So this was not given a fundamental review at the time.

Earlier, at page 913, Mr. H. D. Clark, director, Pensions and Social Insurance Division of the Treasury Board, said:

> I might just mention, Mr. Chairman, that the Public Service Superannuation Act also provides for termination of the widow's benefit on remarriage and there were in the fiscal year 1968-69, 108 of these cases under the Public Service Superannuation Act. So in the over-all scheme of things there are a fair number affected each year.

At that time there was a general discussion in committee as to the general advisibility of asking the committee to take the matter up in a general way at a later date, but the chairman ruled that was beyond the bounds of the bill. There was an indication the matter would be dealt with when the white paper on social security was brought down.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to thank the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) for explaining the matter. I will go along with the idea of instituting this proposal under the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark and Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, we should not misunderstand what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has said, and therefore it is important to discuss the matter at the earliest opportunity in committee. The matter, of course, was touched on by my hon. friend for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). We should consider what happens to the widows and children of hon. members who have died. Pension benefits are usually cut off when a widow remarries, the idea being that the children will be supported by their stepfather.

My comment is serious although it may appear facetious. Rules like that in pension regulations means that a woman sometimes may be encouraged to live, shall we say, common law, in sin or in a similar condition with another man. Let us take a hypothetical case. A woman may be faced with a choice of entering into blissful or otherwise holy matrimony and giving up a sizeable pension, or steering clear of matrimony and keeping the pension: it seems that monetary and romantic considerations both are involved in the point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 9. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion is No. 10, in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on motion No. 10 stands deferred.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, does anyone wish a recorded division on motion No. 10?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear that the voting on motion No. 10 must wait until after motion No. 9 has been disposed of. Perhaps we could ascertain at that time whether a recorded division is necessary.

Mr. Monteith: Everyone accepts the proposal.

[Mr. McBride.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I was misunderstood. My understanding is that the question is deferred.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I do not see how the question can be deferred unless the question is put and there is unanimous consent to deferring it. I believe it is only the recorded vote that can be deferred.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I believe the understanding was that if motion No. 9 were defeated, motion No. 10 would be put to the House and agreed to unanimously.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that point clear?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is clear in our minds, anyway.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Some of us are slightly confused by what has gone on. Has the question been put on motion 10, and has the motion carried? First, has the motion been put?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My understanding is—and this is what I thought was the understanding of the House—that motion No. 10 can be put only after a decision on motion No. 9 has been taken. A decision on motion No. 9 has not been taken; it has been deferred. Therefore, I have deferred putting the question on motion No. 10 until after the decision on motion No. 9. Is that understood?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question now is on motion No. 11, in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That Bill C-194, an act to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be amended by deleting therefrom clause 22 of the said bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a few minutes. It is understood that while speaking on motion No. 11 we are free to discuss motions 11 to 16 inclusive. I might point out that they all relate to changes being made with respect to Senators in the other place.

• (4:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: You mean 11 to 16.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank my hon. friends. Yes, I mean 11 to 16. These amendments have the effect of opening certain options which Senators were given when they were placed on a retirement-at-75 basis, and they contain one or two other benefits which are being offered to them. My feelings about these proposals are similar to those I expressed earlier today with regard to those which affect ourselves, except that I feel even more strongly about them.

This bill would re-open certain options to Senators, some of them having decided, it would seem, that they chose the wrong option previously. I think it is a little much to allow them to go into that again. I think of the dozens of letters I receive from railroaders and others on pensions who want certain options to be opened or re-opened, but who are told this cannot be done because it would be in violation of the terms of a contract.

This amendment of mine would, therefore, remove all those portions of the bill relating to what is being done for the Senators except for clause 28 which would require them to pay one-half of one per cent to help pay for the supplementary benefits which they, too, will receive. I hope the House will support motions 11 to 16 inclusive.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) moves:

That Bill C-194, to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Funds and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be amended by deleting therefrom clause 22 of the said bill.

Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This vote will be deferred in accordance with Standing Order 75 (11).

Pursuant to the agreement arrived at earlier this day, may I suggest that motions 12 to 16 which were to have been debated at this time be deemed to have been put, and votes deferred on them and embraced within motion No. 11? Is that agreed?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House wish a recorded division on motion No. 1 now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Call in the members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 1, moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), as follows:

That Bill C-194, an act to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be amended by deleting therefrom clause 13 of the said bill.

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now consider motion No. 10 in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald):

That Bill C-194, an act to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be amended by striking out lines 32 and 33 on page 17 and substituting the following:

"widow is dead, eight-tenths of the basic allowance." and by striking out line 10 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"in approximately equal instalments commencing immediately after the death of the member or former member, and in the case of an allowance payable to the widow shall continue during her natural life but shall cease on her remarriage."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-194, to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Next sitting of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the House.

Order, please. I understand the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) wishes to revert to Motions for the purpose of tabling a document.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we are glad to give our consent but let me say, as a caveat, that it is not the intention of this party to give consent from now on to motions which are not made at the appropriate time unless there is justification for this being done, and we do not consider justification to be the need to synchronize with press releases.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

SPORTS

TABLING OF DOCUMENT COVERING ADMINISTRATION OF MONEY FOR NATIONAL GOVERNING BODIES

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short statement indeed. I desire to table a document. The main emphasis in the policy embodied here is a substantial reorientation of financial resources in the program to give more adequate backing for the administration of the money of the national sports governing bodies.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, and on this general subject matter of sports, I should like to recognize two youth ambassadors from Saskatchewan who are travelling across Canada inviting all provinces to participate actively in the 1971 Canada Winter Games at Saskatoon. The young ambassadors to whom I refer, Marie Robson and Bill Ehman, are outstanding athletes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the short statement made by the minister, along with all other members of the House I am very pleased that these two young athletes are with us today. We certainly wish them success in their travels across the country.

However, in respect of the smuggling-in of the minister's statement at this time of day, I suggest that perhaps the minister should have taken a hard look at the statement because it is rather ambiguous. The statement became available to members of the opposition only very recently, but in the brief review I have had of it, it would seem that the minister has gone astray on several issues. There is no question that if the statement had been presented in the normal way, the minister would have to be a good deal more physically fit than he is, because it is a rather lengthy document. It would have to be tabled, in any event.

On the subject of physical fitness, I repeat that the minister's document is very ambiguous. I suggest he should review it. To give an example, he might look at page 3 and then go on to page 13, where he will see that he crosses himself up. However, in order to keep in form with the minister's brief statement, I shall also be brief.

I think it is rather shameful that he did not put his foot down and get this done the way he wanted, rather than allowing it to kick around for months. I hope that the intention of Members of Parliament will be fulfilled with the support of the minister, who needs to be fit probably more than most of us, in respect of providing something for the members of this august chamber who need much in the way of physical fitness facilities. As the minister indicated, physical fitness does not enable everybody to perform his duties a lot better. However, there is no question that the more physically fit you are, the better you are able to think, and I think it is time this government started a physical fitness program for themselves in order to help them in their thinking.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to be able to reply to the statement on motions of that great athletic supporter, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). It is ironic, I think, that this government's much-touted and long-awaited sports policy for Canadians was tabled exactly on the day we learned of the collapse of Canada's amateur hockey team, the Nats. The Nats were shafted because the team had no place to play once the International Ice Hockey Federation ruled out the use of nine professionals on the Canadian team.

So in one sport at least the control of the commercial interests is now locked up. The minister's proposals cover a 50-page document chock-full of high-sounding phrases and good intentions. I was particularly interested in words like "participation", "involvement" and "status" which abound throughout. Sociological jargon such as "other directed" and "non goal oriented" appears there too, but I take it that "non goal oriented" is a phrase not specifically meant to apply to the Toronto Maple Leafs, although judging by their recent performance it fits. In any event, I hope that the minister, by dropping names of profound social thinkers like David Reisman and Paul Goodman, is not attempting to intimidate those of us who are not as well educated.

The report calls for such things as equal opportunity to play, the fun aspect of sports and industrial recreation, with which few could quarrel. It criticizes our North American work ethic as it has extended itself into sports, and at least in the lengthy preamble of the sports policy, enjoyment is stressed and competition played down. We in this party support the point of view that for too long the sole justification for mass sports activity on the part of Canadian children was to provide a screening device by which the athletic elite—the pros and the champs—could be identified and hothoused. "To win at all costs" is a phrase exchanged for the theme of "play and play the game", and rightly so. We feel that by broadening the base of sports activity, a higher pinnacle of international competition could be rationally achieved.

That Canada has a sorry record in both sports participation at home and international competition abroad is self-evident. For far too long, since 1961, the National Advisory Council on Fitness and Amateur Sport has professed to encourage mass participation but approves grants much more liberally for large national and international sports meets. Authorized spending by this body of $1 million rising to $5 million has never been closely approached, and it will be seen that what was spent went largely to the elite and not the masses. This emphasis may well continue, for after you wade through all the verbiage of the minister's report it will be found such proposals as Ottawa office space for government bodies, travel expenses for executives and paid executive directorships for priority sports may continue to encourage a sports bureaucracy with little to support it.

While agreeing that financing is far from the whole story behind our low-grade sports performance, there is no doubt there has been in sports, as in other economic areas, a starvation of public goods in favour of private ones. Those sports which are not marketable have a much more difficult time attracting private financing than do the others. Business in our affluent society only encourages mass participation in sports by those who are financially capable of consuming, such as skiing and golf.

The proposition of charitable tax exemptions to patrons of sports, such as outlined in the report, it seems to me may increase the amount of money available for such sports, but what I would be particularly interested to know is which sports will be selected and who will really control the priorities as to which sports are to be so favoured. Obviously, the man who pays the piper. This system may well perpetuate the ugly ramifications that the earlier part of the report pretends to abhor.

There is a certain fuzzy vagueness about this interim white paper on sports. What we and the public would like to know is whether this paper is really window-dressing or whether the government really means it this time. We know, for instance, that while the minister possessed the authority to do it, to date he has done absolutely nothing to democratize the major Canadian professional sports of football and hockey. How have players in these sports been helped by the minister, who professes such noble intentions, to have more say about their contracts and game rules? However, whenever there is an important sports announcement to be made, we can expect for certain to see our minister bathed in the full light of television publicity

After we have cleaned all the dust away, how precisely are the lower and middle-income groups going to achieve greater participation? Where do you put facilities in the dense urban parts of our cities without slum clearance destroying housing? Where are the proposals to grant funds directly to the communities that need it for non-competitive, recreational facilities?

I should like to say, in conclusion, that the paper ends with a long-term challenge for Canadians. The question is: How long, oh Lord, how long? All grandstanding aside, it should be the right of every Canadian, handicapped or not, to participate in a sport of his own choosing at his own level.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could confirm the business of the House for Monday. The first item to be called will be third reading of the bill that was under debate today, to be followed by the report stage of Government Order No. 72, the consumer textile articles bill, to be followed by Government Order No. 78 with regard to the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, to be followed finally by Government Order No. 47, second reading and debate on the standards council of Canada.

At 5.40 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF FRENCH NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Mr. Speaker: I am most happy to point out to the House that a distinguished visitor is in attendance in the Speaker's gallery. He is Mr. Achille Peretti, President of the French National Assembly. For his hosts at least, Mr. Peretti's stay in Canada, which is coming to a close today, will have been too short. Mr. President, we are greatly honoured to welcome you to our Parliament, and my colleagues and myself sincerely hope that you will long keep pleasant memories of your trip to Canada.

Very fortunately for us Mr. Peretti is accompanied by a colleague who has shown unwavering sympathy to the Canadian people and Parliament, Mr. Lucien Neuwirth, Questor of the French National Assembly.

[English]

On behalf of hon. members I am delighted to welcome our distinguished visitors. It is worthy of note, I think, that this is the first time a President of the French National Assembly has come to Canada as the officially invited guest of our Parliament. You have come here, sir, as a parliamentarian on a highly commendable mission of good will. You are here today as a friend and we greet you, of course, as a friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: This message, which was brought to us by Mr. Peretti and which he imparted earlier to us in such eloquent terms, conveys the sincere and deep-felt affection of France and the French people for Canada. On behalf of my colleagues in the House, I must tell you, Mr. Peretti and Mr. Neuwirth, that the Canadian people, likewise devoted to an ideal of liberty while respectful of the parliamentary institution, sharing your language and your culture, keep their long-standing links of brotherhood and friendship with France.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as usual, you have said what was essential, but I am sure you will not grudge me the privilege of subscribing to your wishes. I have had the pleasure and the honour of meeting President Peretti in the past, when we were both carrying out other functions. I just want to be the spokesman of government members and to join with you in welcoming President Peretti.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I, on behalf of the members of this party, associate myself with what you and the Prime Minister said. I assume that you have had an opportunity to discuss with your distinguished confrere your mutual problems. He has left his behind in France; Your Honour still sees yours in front of you here. I realize that these problems exist. I suppose, sir, you will be able to tell your distinguished colleague that you have problems which to some extent he does not have.

The very fact that I am able to address Your Honour today in one of the two official languages would indicate to him that your problems are twice as many as his. In addition, sir, there are other difficulties which we are going through right now. England has a Prime Minister, the United States has a President, France has both, but we are not sure what we have.

I hope, sir, you will express on our behalf our hope that the visit of our distinguished guest will be pleasant and happy and that he will come back again to see the Canadian west and the Canadian north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to take any more time than to say that my colleagues and I join with you in expressing to the President of the National Assembly of France and to his colleague our very warmest greetings and our pleasure at seeing them in this chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join you in expressing the best greetings of the House to our famous visitor.

I live in the oldest part of the country which was discovered by French pioneers and which is close to the old capital founded by Samuel de Champlain. The presence of our distinguished visitor gives me the opportunity to remind the House of those facts.

Since you extended best wishes to the President of the French National Assembly, I am sure he will be happy to be greeted once more in his mother tongue in Canada.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY SUPPORT PROGRAM FOR YEAR COMMENCING APRIL 1, 1970

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House of the dairy support program for the year starting April 1, 1970. Before giving the details, I might refer briefly to the circumstances which have had to be taken into account in the formulation of the program.

The major consideration, to which I have referred on several occasions and which is widely recognized within the dairy industry, is that Canadian production of certain dairy products is substantially above the quantity which can be sold at the Canadian price support levels. This surplus, in the past, has been concentrated mainly in skim milk powder. More recently a surplus of butterfat has developed. Present rates of butter production and consumption are resulting in a surplus to the order of about 10 per cent of Canadian production.

There are continuing heavy world surpluses of dairy products and depressed international prices. The situation on skim milk powder has improved as a result of the minimum price arrangement under the GATT, in which Canada played on important part, but those prices are still well below Canadian levels.

The cost of disposing of Canadian surpluses is a heavy drain on the funds provided to support the dairy industry. This results not only in lower returns to milk and cream producers but also impedes progress towards the long-term objective of a more self-sufficient dairy industry. The program, therefore, must be designed so as to achieve a closer balance between the production of dairy products and Canadian requirements.

In considering the most desirable program we have had the benefit of thoughtful and useful presentations from many sources, including the report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The dairy farmers' national organization, the Dairy Farmers of Canada, has presented a proposal which has created wide interest and which was endorsed in the report of the standing committee. This proposal is for a system of supply management through market share quotas. Under this, producers supplying milk or cream for processing into manufactured dairy products would have market shares related in total to Canadian requirements. For that quantity they would receive a price based on Canadian market prices for dairy products. Production in excess of that market share would be priced in relation to prices in international markets.

Since this involves pricing within a province, its adoption requires the co-operation of provincial agencies. My department, the Canadian Dairy Commission and the Dairy Farmers of Canada will pursue this actively with provincial authorities.

I turn now to the specifics of the program.

As hon. members know, there are two facets to the policy. One is the support of the market prices of major dairy products, which determines the market value of milk and cream to producers. The other is the direct producer subsidy.

There will be no change, as of April 1, from the product support prices established by the Canadian Dairy Commission for 1969-70. These are 65 cents per pound for butterfat, 20 cents per pound for skim milk powder and 46½ and 47 cents for cheddar cheese during the main producing season.

Producers are eligible to receive subsidy on their deliveries during the year up to the amount of their subsidy quota. The rate of subsidy for the year starting April 1, 1970, will continue at the 1969-70 level of $1.25 per 100 pounds of milk, or 35.71 cents per pound of butterfat.

Because of the cost of disposing of surplus dairy products there is a holdback, or deduction, from subsidy payments. On deliveries up to quota the holdback will remain at the same rates as in 1969-70. These are 26 cents per 100 pounds of milk deliveries and 1 cent per pound of butterfat on cream.

The deduction from subsidy payments on milk deliveries in excess of quota will be $1.25 per 100 pounds. In the year just ending it has been 52 cents. On cream deliveries in excess of quota the rate will be 8 cents per pound of butterfat.

The net effect of this is that the position of producers whose deliveries do not exceed their subsidy quotas will be identical to that in the year just ending.

For those who exceed their quota, the value of the over-quota milk is reduced by $1.25 per 100 pounds. If the market price of milk is $3.60 delivered to the factory, the actual value of the over-quota milk is $2.35. In terms of value at the farm, the cost of delivery to the factory would have to be deducted from that.

At a farm value of milk around $2 producers certainly would want to consider the advantage of feeding excess milk to calves or other livestock rather than marketing it. With good veal calves at current levels of about 45 cents per pound, 100 pounds of whole milk will produce about $4.50 worth of gain. Even after allowing for other costs, returns from surplus milk fed to calves should be considerably more than from the market.

Various representations, including the report tabled by the standing committee, have pointed to the fact that some portion of the surplus products is coming from producers who are not within the subsidy program but who benefit from the price supports on dairy products. This involves mainly milk from fluid milk shippers in excess of that which is sold as fluid milk.

The Canadian Dairy Commission cannot secure a contribution from such producers toward the cost of surplus disposal through the holdback from subsidy payments. Nor can the commission make a direct levy from the market price of such milk, since that is not within federal jurisdiction. The commission could, however, make it a condition of the purchase or subsidization of any product under price support that the factory remit to it some amount to be fixed on all milk used by that factory from producers outside the subsidy program.

The commission will continue on an urgent basis discussions with provincial authorities and marketing agencies to develop a program for contribution toward the cost of surplus disposal from producers not now contributing to it. Some important areas have agreed to co-operate to that end.

Hon. members will appreciate that it is not possible at this time to make a precise estimate of the extent to which the measures which are to be taken will restrain excess production and, because of that, of the cost of surplus disposal in 1970-71 and the extent to which the levies will meet that cost. It may be necessary for the commission to revise those levels during the year. The subsidy rates, though, will continue for the full year.

While the main thrust of this program or changes in the program is the containment of production, the government recognizes the need to exploit actively opportunities for market development and increased utilization. To this end the government has just sponsored a technical mission to Europe, the objective of which was to explore and assess the potential of new or different uses for milk and milk products on the Canadian market.

The government proposes to place increased emphasis on the use of dairy products in its foreign aid program. In this connection Canada's increased pledge to the world food program should be noted. Consideration will also be given to assisting reconstituting and allied facilities in developing countries.

In conclusion, the program provides for precisely the same level of support in 1970-71 as in 1969-70 for those who restrain their deliveries to their subsidy quotas and thus co-operate in the essential objective of restraining excess production. At the same time it places a heavier and proportionate charge on milk and cream which contribute to the surplus in order to provide the funds necessary to move the excess product to market.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, the statement made today by the minister provides the dairy industry with an indication of the government program for the coming dairy year. The fact that the government was disinclined to reduce the government subsidy by the proposed $10 million will bring some comfort to the dairy industry and would indicate that a tribute is due to the members of this industry who protested so violently against this reduction.

As I listened to the minister and began to assimilate the portent of this announcement it became clear that there is little else in it that will bring any comfort to the dairy industry of Canada. Under the terms and provisions set out here many more thousands of the dairymen of Canada will no longer be in business 12 months from now. The degree to which controls are spelled out one after another in this statement should cause the agricultural industry of this country to assess exactly what the proposed program of the government is, because the statement indicates in no uncertain terms the degree of government intervention in a once free enterprise industry.

When the National Dairy Commission was established it was thought by the dairy industry that it would have at its command access to all the pertinent information and statistics and that it would work with the dairy industry to promote the well-being of the industry and those engaged in it. But the first thing the National Dairy Commission did was to establish a system of quotas across the country and dairymen were paid a subsidy on the basis of those quotas. Subsequent steps show the degree of control that has been exercised. First, Mr. Speaker, no dairy producer received any consideration in the form of subsidy on shipping milk outside the quotas. Then the subsidy that was paid had subtracted from it the government costs of shipping surpluses out of the country, which further reduced the subsidy to the Canadian producers.

Now there is to be a third step. Not only are the first two commitments costing the dairy farmers a lot of money but the government has now indicated that it will assess a fine of $1.25 per hundred pounds on all milk produced beyond the quotas established by the government. Not only will the farmer not receive the market value for the milk he produces but he will be fined $1.25 per hundred pounds for any milk produced in excess of the quota. This is government intervention to the nth degree. It seems that the emphasis has been applied in the wrong direction. Instead of trying to curtail production in this country to meet the demands of a strictly domestic market and limiting international sales, this government should be directing its best emphasis toward putting this country into a competitive market position vis-à-vis other nations in the international field.

The minister has indicated that only now have we sent a commission to Europe to study what other dairy products may be introduced to increase domestic consumption and our share of the international market. Only now is the government investigating the possibility of sending our dairy products abroad to feed the hungry peoples of other nations. These decisions have come after the government has announced that our domestic production is to be curtailed. Would it not have been more logical, reasonable and businesslike if the government had taken these steps first in order to assess how much of our production could be utilized before deciding the degree to which dairy production should be curtailed? What has happened, Mr. Speaker, is just another indication that the government still does not understand the problems of the agricultural industry of Canada.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, we support the principle of market management with regard to dairying in Canada. We also support the idea of utilizing our surplus dairy products to feed hungry people, both at home and abroad. We think there are people in Canada who could well consume more of our dairy products; this is also true, of course, of the people of the hungry nations of the world. In this regard we think that some form of consumer subsidy ought to be considered to help needy groups in Canada acquire the necessary food.

The statement makes little or no mention of the increased costs facing dairy producers. The farmer has tried to increase his production to meet these increased costs, and that is one of the underlying reasons for the dairy surpluses. The government's refusal to face this awkward problem confronting the dairy farmers and, indeed, all farmers in Canada, will only add to their woes. If we permit our farmers to meet the problems posed by increased costs, other factors will fall naturally into line and may resolve themselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply disappointed about the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) on the dairy policy for the year 1970-71. And when the producers of manufacturing milk know about it, they will surely approve the remarks which I intend to make.

In his statement, the minister thus resumes his policy:

—the program provides for precisely the same level of support in 1970-71 as in 1969-70, for those who restrain their deliveries to the subsidy quotas and thus co-operate in the essential objectives of restraining excess production.

Up to now everything is fine, because what had been requested has been granted. But the farm organizations, such as the C.F.U. and the Federation of Industrial Milk Producers had asked that the increased production costs be taken into account. They thought that, even if the government raised the export tax rate from 52 cents to $1.25, industrial milk producers would be able to have an income commensurate to their efforts and they would themselves have taken the necessary measures to avoid exceeding their quotas. But, at least, industrial milk producers would have been assured of an income compatible with the needs for the year 1970-71. The industrial milk sector is the only one that is to be penalized. I wonder why we are persistently being blamed for inflation, when all responsible people recognize that the price of industrial milk is not excessive.

The 10 per cent butter surplus is causing a lot of worry. Now that I have heard serious evidence from well-informed people in this field, I think that this surplus of 10 per cent is not harmful for Canada, but rather beneficent. If, during the year 1970-71, a drought should last for a few months, a reduction in the production would quickly result, such reduction could not be compensated during the following months. We must foresee such happenings. We should not worry about this surplus of 10 per cent, because it is the basis on which the dairy policy for 1970-71 was developed.

As a member of the committee, I feel that we have lost our time travelling in the eastern provinces to go and visit farmers and ask them their views about their financial situation and their annual income, because today we find that the government policy has been established even before the report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture had been presented to the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to keep on trying to co-operate with the government so that the necessary steps may be taken to help manufacturing milk producers control their production so as to avoid surpluses. But it is also incumbent on me to intervene vigorously in order that the cabinet does not cease to look at the situation and improve it during the year because I think it is quite unfair to penalize so many producers who for the most part are living in a certain province.

It is not to the advantage of Canada to have such a situation in view of the conditions now existing in Canada and in Quebec. In my opinion attempts should have been made to encourage those who really want to work for Canadian unity, and to have the same justice applied to all.

ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF BARBER COMMISSION ON FARM MACHINERY PRICES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief report on the action the government has taken thus far with respect to the recommendations of the Barber Commission. I gave an undertaking to make this report and I am sure that hon. members in all parts of the House are interested in the action that has already been taken and will be taken on the Special Report on the Prices of Farm Machinery.

It will be recalled that Dr. Barber, in this report, made seven specific recommendations. These involved consultation and negotiation with the governments of the countries concerned and with the companies involved, negotiation and discussion aimed at making tractors from non-traditional sources available to Canadian farmers and the possibility of the imposition of a special "reverse dumping duty."

I am pleased, in this interim report, to be able to indicate that the government has taken and is continuing to take positive action in respect of six of Dr. Barber's recommendations. The seventh, that of a "reverse dumping duty", is under study, as are certain other alternative approaches.

Discussions between government representatives and those of the companies involved have led us to the conclusion that, in line with Dr. Barber's recommendations, one of the most effective approaches would appear to be that of increased competition in the Canadian market. I wish to report that interest in expansion has been expressed by a Canadian manufacturer and also that at least two and possibly three newcomers to the Canadian farm machinery scene are planning trial marketings for the current season. While the impact of these actions on prices and the market situation in general will doubtless be limited this year, we are convinced, with Dr. Barber, that this approach is sound.

In the meanwhile, the interdepartmental committee continues to work on the study and development of related actions that could supplement or reinforce those already under way.

Action Concerning Farm Machinery Prices

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I realize this is Holy Week and it is customary for those in the habit of doing so to make confessions. There are two types of sins which one usually confesses, sins of omission and sins of commission. This government is guilty of the sin of omission. In presenting this report the government has indicated there is nothing positive it can report at this time.

The same week that the Barber report was presented the Minister of Agriculture indicated he was already taking steps to consult with the machinery companies; yet he does not have any positive statement to make at this time. The minister has no encouragement for those farmers who have already purchased or may be purchasing farm machinery at prices which the Barber Commission indicated were high. The minister has not indicated that there have been consultations with regard to financing.

It is indicated in the fourth paragraph of the minister's statement that two or three machinery companies have shown interest in the Canadian market. I am not excited about the minister reporting that to the House at this late date because I read a report to that effect in the newspapers three or four weeks ago. Had the minister come into the House and stated that he had had discussions with the Minister of Finance who in turn had consulted with the banks and that the banks had indicated they would maintain a moratorium on the present rate of interest instead of advancing it from 5 per cent to 8½ per cent, I would feel that some positive action had been taken. However, he did nothing of the sort. If the minister had told us that the machinery companies, which finance much of the machinery sold, were prepared to lower their interest rates or to grant a moratorium on payments for machinery, I would have felt there was some positive action. He did nothing of the sort. In other words, there has been no commitment from any of the manufacturers at this time.

The minister stated that some foreign machinery companies will be entering the Canadian market. However, this will not help the dairy farmer in the east nor the prairie wheat farmer at this time. Everybody knows that a system of dealerships must be set up. If that is done, established dealers will go by the board.

Financing must be dealt with. What will happen with regard to trade-ins? Will these dealerships be prepared to accept trade-ins?

[Mr. Olson.]

What is going to be the value of the machines that may be purchased? In my experience I find that a machine bought on a short-term basis usually depreciates very rapidly. I can only say I am sorry that the time of the House has to be taken to listen to that type of report by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the minister said he was pleased to report that the government has taken and is continuing to take positive action in respect of six of the recommendations of Dr. Barber. I have checked those recommendations. Among other things the report recommended that the companies concerned, particularly those with European sources of supply, should be asked whether they are prepared to establish prices in Canada more in line with those in Europe. The minister in his statement did not mention any discussions with these suppliers and the co-operation or lack of co-operation that he may have been offered by the companies who were charged in this report with mulcting the Canadian consumer.

This statement does not deal effectively with recommendation No. 3, which reads:

> It should ask the Combines Investigation Branch to review the findings of this report and discuss them with the counterparts in the United...and other countries, with a view to possible action.

This statement does not deal effectively been done in this regard. It does not cover the very considerable field of repair parts. Evidence was given to the commission that excessive prices were being charged for repairs and repair parts compared with the cost of parts and the repairing of other automotive equipment such as cars.

Surely it is within the competence of this government to have the Department of Justice, under the Combines Investigation Act, institute action at the national level on this matter in view of the fact that millions of dollars worth of farm machinery in this country must be repaired. This problem will not be solved simply by going to Czechoslovakia or some other place in Europe to import machines. This effort may be laudable in itself, and the more power to the minister and the government if they can find other sources of machines and bring them in so that the farmer will be at a better advantage in purchasing machines. But I do say that not enough action is being taken against the machinery companies which have been and will continue to take advantage of the farmer unless there is positive action to prevent them from doing so.

The farmers in my area are not buying new machines; they are operating the old ones. Any farm machinery dealer knows that his bread and butter comes from providing repairs on these old machines. I hope the government will take some action on this matter. If local machine companies are prepared to import new machines and develop new machines in Canada, because there are signficant operations in western Canada of local companies and co-operatives, will the minister and the government not consider giving these companies support in terms of research and development so that they can compete more effectively with the companies that have been overcharging?

The hon. member for Mackenzie quite properly raised the matter of interest rates. The government should also give this matter serious attention at this time.

MANPOWER

TABLING OF REPORT, "SUMMER EMPLOYMENT SURVEY OF POST-SECONDARY STUDENTS IN CANADA, 1969"

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), the report of the Summer Employment Survey of Post-Secondary Students in Canada, 1969.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD POWERS, STUDIES AND MEMBERSHIP

Question No. 819—Mr. Thomson:

1. Is the National Energy Board empowered to regulate exports and imports of crude petroleum and/or petroleum products?

2. Is the National Energy Board empowered to regulate imports of electric power?

3. What special studies on energy have been conducted by the National Energy Board in co-operation with governmental and other agencies both in and outside Canada since 1967 and, with whom did the NEB co-operate in each case?

4. (a) Who are the five members of the National Energy Board and where did they work before their present employment (b) do any of the members have financial interests in the energy field and, if so, what are they?

5. What are the (a) total reserves (b) commercially marketable reserves presently on hand of petroleum natural gas in Canada?

6. What are the (a) total reserves (b) commercially marketable reserves presently on hand in Canada of all other minerals or fuels which are marketed in Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Not at the present time. Should the Governor in Council, pursuant to subsection 87(1) of the National Energy Board Act by proclamation extend the application of Part VI of the Act to oil, the effect would be, in the absence of exempting regulations, to subject the export and import of oil to the licensing control of the National Energy Board.

2. No.

3. Under the National Energy Board Act the Board is required to study and keep under review matters on which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, relating to the exploration for, production, recovery, manufacture, processing, transmission, distribution, transportation, sale, purchase, exchange and disposal of energy and sources of energy within and outside Canada and to report thereon from time to time to the Minister. In carrying out this function, the Board is continually engaged in the study of matters relating to energy, many of which are carried out in conjunction with other government departments and agencies as well as with provincial authorities concerned. In most cases, the results of these studies are for the confidential information of the Government.

One major study which has occupied the Board's staff over the time period referred to in the question has been the preparation of a long-term energy forecast. This work was completed in 1969 and published as a document entitled "Energy Supply and Demand in Canada and Export Demand for Canadian Energy—1966 to 1990". In the preparation of this work, consultation took place with the federal Department of Transport and the Economic Council of Canada as well as with provincial departments and agencies in each of the Canadian provinces and with energy oriented industries throughout Canada.

Other studies included; an appraisal of future power supply alternatives for Prince Edward Island; an appraisal of system reliability of supply alternatives to Newfoundland; economic and technical feasibility studies related to the tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy; energy supply and demand, aggregation of statistics dealing with energy obtained from different sources and in various forms; feasibility and optimal design of gas pipe line facilities; transmission of oil in pipe lines also designated to carry other commodities; and oil and gas pipe line material, metallurgy and welding.

4. (a) Dr. R. D. Howland, Chairman—Member—Royal Commission on Energy 1957-59; Mr. D. M. Fraser, Vice-Chairman—Director of the Energy Studies Branch, Department of Trade and Commerce; Mr. H. L. Briggs, Member—General Manager of the British Columbia Power Commission; Mr. Maurice Royer, Member—Consulting Engineer; Mr. J. G. Stabback, Member—Chief Engineer, National Energy Board.

(b) No. Section 3(5) of the National Energy Board Act prescribes as follows: "A person is not eligible to be appointed or to continue as a member of the Board if he is not a Canadian citizen or if as owner, shareholder, director, officer, partner, or otherwise, he is engaged in the business of producing, selling, buying, transmitting, exporting, importing or otherwise dealing in hydrocarbons or power or if he holds any bond, debenture or other security of a company".

5. (a) Based on estimates of the volumes of sediments within the various basins in Canada and a comparison with other sedimentary basins of the world, which are in more advanced state of development, the Canadian Petroleum Association estimated the potential reserves of raw natural gas in Canada, to be some 725 trillion cubic feet.

(b) The Canadian Petroleum Association's estimate of proved remaining marketable reserves of natural gas at 31 December, 1968, was some 48 trillion cubic feet.

6. (a) Based on estimates of the volumes of sediments within the various basins in Canada and a comparison with other sedimentary basins of the world, which are in more advanced state of development; the Canadian Petroleum Association estimated the potential reserves of crude oil and natural gas liquids to be some 120 billion and 20 billion barrels, respectively. In addition, recoverable reserves of upgraded synthetic crude oil, have been estimated to be some 300 billion barrels.

(b) The Canadian Petroleum Association's estimate of proved remaining recoverable liquid hydrocarbon reserves in Canada, at 31 December, 1968, were 10 billion barrels. The Association has estimated that the remaining proved reserves, which could be recovered by the existing oil sand plant, is some 6 billion barrels. (The National Energy Board does not have information on other minerals or fuels marketed in Canada.)

[Mr. Greene.]

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD PLANNING

Question No. 820—Mr. Thomson:

1. What planning has been carried out by the National Energy Board in conjunction with the Emergency Supply Planning Branch of the Department of Supply and Services?

2. For what types of emergency in the petroleum industry is contingency planning made?

3. Does the government have any knowledge of overcapacity at any level of the petroleum and natural gas industry in Canada at the present time and, if so, what is the nature and extent of the overcapacity and what effect does it have on prices?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. The National Energy Board has played a major role in studies and the development of plans concerning energy by the Emergency Supply Planning Branch (ESPB) of the Department of Supply and Services in accordance with the latter's responsibilities for such matters.

2. Contingency planning is made relating to the petroleum industry against the possibility of an armed attack on Canada.

3. The National Energy Board is not aware of any significant overcapacity in the natural gas industry in Canada. During 1968 the level of production of crude oil was about 53 per cent of the oil field's ability to produce crude oil. The transportation facilities had a capacity to deliver some 25 per cent in excess of the 1968 level of production. There are no indications that the overcapacity has had any effect on prices.

COMPANION OF THE ORDER OF CANADA AWARDS

Question No. 874—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many awards of the Companion of the Order of Canada have been made to date?

2. Of the awards made, how many of the recipients have been Civil Servants present or past?

3. What persons constitute the Committee on recommendations?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the Registrar of the Order of Canada as follows: 1. As of March 10, 1970, 100 Companions have been appointed to the Order of Canada, of whom 16 are deceased, leaving a balance of 84 living Companions.

2. Of the 100 Companions appointed, 11 were serving and 25 were former federal public servants. They may, however, have been awarded Companions for achievements unrelated to their service as a public servant.

3. Names are submitted by individuals or organizations to the Advisory Council which, by the Constitution of the Order of Canada, is composed of the following: The Chief Justice of Canada (Chairman); The Clerk of the Privy Council; The Under Secretary of State; The Chairman of the Canada Council; The President of the Royal Society of Canada; The President of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

SALARIES OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 905—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the salary of Mr. Basil Robinson, the new Deputy-Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, what was his salary in the Department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

2. What is the salary of Mr. Sylvain Cloutier, the new Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Taxation and, what was his salary in the Treasury Board Secretariat?

3. What is the salary of Mr. John A. MacDonald, the new Deputy-Minister of Public Works and, what was his salary in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

4. What is the annual salary of Mr. John Boucher, the new Deputy-Minister of Supply and Services, what was his salary in the Canada Council?

5. What is the salary of Mr. Gordon Hunter, the new Master of the Mint and what was his salary in the Department of Supply and Services?

6. What is the new salary of Mr. M. J. MacMillan, the Chairman of the Canadian National Railway Company and, what was his previous salary with CNR?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Mr. Basil Robinson, Deputy-Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, $33,000-37,000; Department of External Affairs, $28,000-33,000.

2. Mr. Sylvain Cloutier, Deputy-Minister of National Revenue (Taxation), $28,000-33,000; Treasury Board, $28,000-33,000.

3. Mr. John A. MacDonald, Deputy-Minister of Public Works, $33,000-37,000; Deputy-Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development; $33,000-37,000.

4. Mr. Jean Boucher, Deputy-Minister of Supply and Services, $28,000-33,000; Canada Council, $28,000-33,000.

5. Mr. Gordon Hunter, Master of the Mint, $28,000-33,000; Department of Supply and Services, $28,000-33,000.

6. Mr. M. J. MacMillan, after reappointment; as Chairman $5,000 and as President, $70,000; Before reappointment; as Chairman $5,000 and as President, $70,000.

COMPUTER DATA STORAGE OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 986—Mr. Kaplan:

1. Does the government use computer facilities which store data outside Canada?

2. Which departments and agencies use such facilities and to what extent?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. and 2. The Department of Agriculture use on a limited scale for computer program development the Computer Time Sharing, Place de Ville, Tower A. (computer is at Boston, U.S.A.) and the Greyhound Computer of Canada Limited, 1740 Woodward Drive (computer is at Stanford, Conn., U.S.A.)

The National Research Council of Canada participates in continuing international scientific programs, by acquiring information concerning such matters as cosmic ray intensities, meteorites, solar radio waves and transmitting this to the internationally appointed agencies which store, collate and disseminate it.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police use the National Crime Information Centre in Washington, D.C. for the purpose of tracing criminals in connection with offences committed in Canada, plus exchange information on stolen motor vehicles and other identifiable stolen property. This information is also kept in Canada.

COMMEMORATIVE STAMPS, MANITOBA CENTENNIAL

Question No. 1,013—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

Were postage stamps issued to commemorate Manitoba's Centennial Year and, if so (a) was the Government of Manitoba consulted on the design of these stamps (b) when were they consulted (c) who was consulted and did they approve?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Yes; (a) No; (b) Not applicable; (c) The Manitoba Centennial Corporation was advised on November 25, 1965, of the department's intention to issue a stamp to commemorate Manitoba's Centennial Year and was invited to submit design proposals. No design proposals were submitted, however, and the only further contact in this regard was to advise the Corporation as to the appointment of a designer.

The selection of the designer, Mr. Kenneth Lockhead of Winnipeg, was performed by a design advisory committee appointed by the Canada Post Office. This committee is composed of six members who are internationally recognized Canadian philatelists or authorities in fields of the visual arts. This advisory committe selects the artists to be commissioned to design each stamp, chooses and approves all design submissions and the finished artwork.

GLACE BAY HEAVY WATER PLANT

Question No. 1,019—Mr. Thomson:

1. Has the Government of Nova Scotia recently requested financial and/or technical assistance from the Government of Canada with respect to the Glace Bay "Heavy Water" plant and, if so, what was the response?

2. Before approving the Heavy Water contract with the Nova Scotia Government, did AECL request full details of the "Spivak process" as to evidence of its success?

3. Did AECL carry out any of its own testing and research of the "Spivak process" and, if so, what were the conclusions?

4. If AECL did not approve of the "Spivak process", why was the "Heavy Water" contract agreed to with the Nova Scotia Government?

5. What method of producing "Heavy Water" is being used by AECL at the Douglas Point plant?

6. Is the government considering a completely independent appraisal of Canada's Atomic Energy Program and, if so, on what date and who will do the appraising?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices and the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited as follows: 1. In July of last year the government of Nova Scotia approached the federal government seeking various forms of assistance with respect to the Glace Bay heavy water plant. Several exchanges have taken place since that time and the matter is still under discussion between the two governments.

2. No. AECL was aware that Deuterium of Canada Limited proposed to use the same basic process as had been successfully used in the U.S.A. for many years, but with some changes covered by "improvement" patents.

3. No.

4. See 2 above.

5. The same basic process i.e. the hydrogen sulphide-water dual temperature isotope exchange process.

6. The government has kept and is keeping Canada's atomic energy program under continuing review and is not at present considering an independent appraisal of that program.

[Mr. Kierans.]

EXPROPRIATIONS, RICHMOND CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,156—Mr. Beaudoin:

Have expropriations been carried out by the federal government or any Crown corporation in the constituency of Richmond in 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 and, if so (a) how many (b) what was the site, reason, date and cost of each expropriation?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a) During the years 1966 to 1969 the Department of Public Works expropriated one site. (b) Site: St. Adolphe de Dudswell. Reason: To permit construction of a small Post Office. Date: April 26, 1968. Cost: $2,300.

PATIENTS UNDER DOMICILIARY CARE, CAMP HILL HOSPITAL

Question No. 1,171—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many patients are, or were, at Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax, under domiciliary care since October 15, 1969?

2. What range of charges per month did they pay?

3. How many are paying the new maximum charges of $300 per month?

4. What procedure is followed by the veterans or their families to obtain payments of lesser amounts than $300 per month?

5. How many domiciliary care patients at Camp Hill Hospital are paying less than half of the increase?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. October, 189; November, 193; December, 192; January, 187.

The above figures include those patients provided with chronic care under Section 29 of the Veterans Treatment Regulations.

2. Charges range from "nil" to $120 a month.

3. None.

4. The veteran or his family are requested to provide accurate information concerning the veteran's income and assets and the number of dependants so that his ability to pay up to $120 could be properly assessed after provision was made for all dependants and his personal needs.

5. Not applicable.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 1,205—Mr. MacLean:

What is the estimated expenditure to be made by the federal government in the fiscal year 1970-71 for highway construction in each of the four Atlantic Provinces, other than in national parks?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): So far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: Estimated contributions to Atlantic Provinces under the Trans-Canada Highway program for the fiscal year 1970-71: Newfoundland, $5,800,000; Prince Edward Island, $28,000; New Brunswick, $2,600,000; Nova Scotia, $1,900,000.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE DISCUSSION OF ILO SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC RIGHTS CONVENTIONS

Question No. 1,241—Mr. Orlikow:

1. In connection with the Canadian Charter of Human Rights, what Conventions of the International Labour Organization dealing with social and economic rights has Canada ratified?

2. Were these Conventions, ratified by Canada, which are now part of the legal structure of Canada, included in the documents prepared by the Government of Canada for discussion at the Federal-Provincial Conference and, if not, for what reasons?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Canada is a party to 24 of the ILO Conventions all of which construed in their broadest sense relate to social and economic rights. However, on the basis of a recent study by an ILO committee of experts, the following conventions to which Canada is bound would appear to be among those ILO instruments having the most direct relevance to these areas: No. 26, Convention concerning the creation of Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery; No. 88, Convention concerning the Organization of the Employment Service; No. 105, Convention concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour; No. 111, Convention concerning Discrimination in respect of Employment and Occupation; No. 122, Convention concerning Employment Policy.

2. The above ILO Conventions were not included in the documents prepared by the Government of Canada for discussion at the Federal-Provincial Conference of February 1969 when a "Canadian Charter of Human Rights" was discussed. Since the Conference was concerned with the possibility of entrenching in the Canadian constitution a charter incorporating the broad categories of human rights—political, legal, egalitarian, linguistic and economic—only those international conventions which enshrined the general principles governing human rights were submitted to the Conference as background material. With regard to social and economic rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights which subsumes the subjects covered by the ILO Conventions was a Conference document.

It should be noted, however, that there is continuing consultation and frequent meetings between the federal and provincial governments at the Minister and Deputy Minister level dealing specifically with ILO matters, including ratification and implementation by the provinces of ILO Conventions. The next such Federal-Provincial meeting at the Deputy Minister level will convene in Ottawa from April 30-May 1 of this year.

NET DEBT OF FEDERAL, PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS

Question No. 1,274—Mr. MacLean:

1. (a) What was the net debt of the Government of Canada on the most recent date for which figures are available (b) what are the carrying charges for this net debt on the most recent date for which figures are available?

2. (a) What was the net debt of each of the ten provincial governments on the most recent date for which figures are available (b) what are the estimated annual charges of the debt for each of the provinces on the most recent date for which figures are available?

3. (a) What was the total net debt of Canadian municipalities, including school boards, on the most recent date for which figures are available (b) what are the estimated annual carrying charges for the debt referred to in Part (a)?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. (a) As of March 31, 1969, $17,335,837,990. (b) For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1969, $798,181,536.

2 and 3. The government does not have responsibility for (a) the net debt, and (b) annual carrying charges of provincial and municipal governments. Figures are published on this from time to time by the provincial governments and municipalities, and by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

HOUSING AND APARTMENT STARTS, 1969

Question No. 1,312—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many houses were begun by builders in urban centres in 1969 and, of this number, how many were begun in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto,

Questions

Hamilton, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver?

2. How many apartment units were begun by builders in urban centres in 1969 and, of this number, how many were begun in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): 1. and 2. See Table 1 below.

LENNOX ISLAND CAUSEWAY

Question No. 1,365—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. On what date was it first suggested that a causeway be constructed from the mainland to Lennox Island

2. At what times were surveys carried out for this project?

3. What costs were estimated?

4. On what date is it expected this project will be commenced?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Public Works and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. August 1964.

2. June 1965, November 1965 and August 1969.

3. It is not customary to give estimated costs before contracts are awarded.

4. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and the government of the Province of Prince Edward Island are still discussing the possibility of constructing a causeway between the Prince Edward Island mainland and Lennox Island. As no decision has yet been made as to whether or not a causeway will be built, it is not possible to comment on a possible date for commencement.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

P.E.I.—SUBSIDY TO MILK PRODUCERS

Question No. 1,395—Mr. MacLean:

1. What was the total amount of subsidy paid to milk producers, in the Province of Prince Edward Island, in each of the past five dairy years?

2. What was the total number of milk producers, in the Province of Prince Edward Island, to whom subsidy was paid in each of the past five dairy years?

3. What was the annual decrease in the number of dairy producers in the Province of Prince Edward Island in each of the past five dairy years?

4. What has been the total quota eligible for subsidy allocated to the Province of Prince Edward Island by the National Dairy Commission in each dairy year since the inception of the Commission?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The statistics available on subsidies paid to milk producers have been retained by fiscal years rather than by dairy years. The total amount of subsidy paid to Prince Edward Island milk producers for the past five fiscal years as as follows: 1964-65, $598,971; 1965-66, $510,979; 1966-67, $1,196,226; 1967-68, $1,604,096; 1968-69, $1,696,869.

2. The number of milk producers is not available for the fiscal years 1964-65, 1965-66 and 1966-67. The total number of milk producers for the last two fiscal years is as follows: 1967-68, 3,411; 1968-69, 2,554.

3. The only federal government data on total number of producers is the census figure. The last (1966) census figure was 4,675.

	Pounds of butterfat
1967-68	5,691,000
1968-69	5,511,000
1969-70	5,105,000

REDUCTION OF RESERVE DEFENCE FORCES

Question No. 1,421—Mr. MacLean:

With regard to the reduction of the Reserve Defence Forces announced in December, 1969 (a) what was the reason for the disproportionately large reduction in medical units which wipes out 75 per cent of such units (b) what was the reason for the large cut in (i) the Provost Corps (ii) the Intelligence Corps?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Apart from the important considerations of economy, the main reason for the reorganization of Canada's Reserve Forces, is to complement the Regular Force. The units in the land reserve best suited to do this are the arms units—Infantry, Armour and Artillery. Consequently, the Service units suffer the greatest reductions. Apart from the RCASC which must retain a transportation capability, and Signals units which will be tasked to augment the Canadian Forces Communication System in times of emergency, the Service units are reorganized on the basis that their primary task is now that of support for other land reserve units.

The retention of small independent units is uneconomical in terms of administrative overhead. Consequently, the number of Service units has been reduced but appropriately sized detachments have been retained within Service Battalions. Six Medical units have been retained and 14 detachments included within the composition of Service Battalions. This compares with 22 Medical companies which were in existence prior to reorganization. This applies equally to the Provost Corps and the Intelligence Corps. Small security detachments have been provided within Service Battalions.

OLD AGE SECURITY CHEQUE GARNISHEES

Question No. 1,491—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

How many recipients of Old Age Security have had their cheques garnisheed by the Department of Veterans Affairs, through the Financial Administration Act, and in how many instances was (a) the total amount of the pension recovered by the federal government (b) more than 50 per cent of the Old Age Security cheque of the recipient recovered in the present fiscal year and in fiscal years 1967-68 and 1968-69?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1967-68: Number of recipients, six. (a), nil; (b), nil. 1968-69: Number of recipients, 36. (a), nil; (b), two. 1969-70 (to date): Number of recipients, 43. (a), nil; (b), two.

TREASURY BOARD GARNISHEE OF OLD AGE SECURITY CHEQUES

Question No. 1,492—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

How many recipients of Old Age Security have had their cheques garnisheed by Treasury Board through the Financial Administration Act for the present fiscal year and the fiscal year 1968-69, and how much money did Treasury Board recover by these garnishees?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): By virtue of Section 95 of the Financial Administration Act, the Treasury Board may authorize the Receiver General to retain by way of deduction or set-off the amounts of certain indebtedness to Her Majesty. This authorization is granted on the submission of departments and the Treasury Board does not, of itself, initiate such actions. Statistics are not kept by the Treasury Board of the numbers or amounts of such deductions or set-offs involving recipients of Old Age Security. This information should be obtained from the departments concerned, predominantly the Departments of Veterans Affairs and National Health and Welfare named in questions 1,491 and 1,493.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FRASER COMPANY SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANT

Question No. 1,501—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. Did the government assist the Fraser Company of Edmundston, New Brunswick, with funds to build a sewage treatment plant and, if so, on what date and to what financial extent?

Order for Return

2. Did the government receive any guarantee of minimum quality standards of effluent when it made these funds available?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

TOBACCO EXPERIMENTAL FARM—DELHI, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,504—Mr. Buchanan:

With reference to Question Number 962 answered on February 23, 1970, is the Delhi Research Station working on the development of a tobacco strain or variety that would make safer cigarettes?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The Delhi Research Station is conducting a tobacco breeding program for the production of strains and varieties with lower nicotine and tar content.

*PLACE DE VILLE, OTTAWA—RENTAL OF SPACE BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 1,584—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the government entered into a lease or agreement for lease for twenty years with Mr. Campeau or one of his Companies, to rent the Place de Ville—a building now under construction in Ottawa and, if so (a) on what date (b) what are the terms thereof?

2. What is the total amount that the lessor will receive from the government?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of this question is no. The second part, of course, is not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CENSUS POPULATIONS FOR CERTAIN PROVINCES, ASSUMED POPULATIONS WITHOUT INTERPROVINCIAL MIGRATION

Question No. 1,402—Mr. MacLean:

1. What was the population of each of the Provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec for 1871, and each census year since?

2. Using the population of 1871 as a base in each case, and applying the known birth rates and death rates, what would have been the population of each of these provinces for each census year since, if there had been no migration across provincial boundaries, and ignoring population increases of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec due to extension of their areas?

Return tabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—MEETING WITH CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS—CO-OPERATION IN CONTROL PROGRAM

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would he take the House into his confidence and advise whether, in his meeting with the leaders of the Canadian Labour Congress this morning, he was assured of their co-operation in the government's program to control inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to take the House into my confidence. The meetings were open and public, and I am sure they will be well reported. I suppose it would be a fair summary to say that the policies that we are pursuing did not meet with the enthusiastic approval of the labour movement.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. I take it from what the Prime Minister has said that the government was not given any assurance whatever of the agreement of the labour bodies to the proposals that it has been making for some time through the Prices and Incomes Commission. Did the leaders of the Canadian Labour Congress suggest to the government this morning that the government should reverse its policies, which have produced the highest cost of living ever and the highest level of unemployment for the past six years, policies which—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —are leading the country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: —in a disastrous direction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might like to ask a question. It seems to me that he is making a speech instead of asking a question.

Mr. Hees: Then I will put a supplementary question. Since the leaders of the Canadian Labour Congress very clearly pointed out, I take it, the inadequacies of the government's proposals—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: —is it the intention of the government to reverse its programs, which have led to disastrous results, accept the views of the Canadian Labour Congress, the opposition and other sensible people—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: —and introduce policies that make sense and will lead the country in a proper and sensible direction?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member for York South has a supplementary.

INFLATION—FIGURES ON DIVISION OF INCOME USED BY PRIME MINISTER AT MEETING WITH CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister arising out of some figures that he used this morning in regard to the division of the national income between the various sectors of the economy. Would the Prime Minister agree to table the schedule of figures, showing the position from 1950 to now, on which his statement to the Canadian Labour Congress was based?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the House desires this it will be done. They are figures produced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for York South has suggested that a certain document be tabled. Is there agreement that the document referred to by the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. member be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Could he tell the House whether he advised the labour leaders as to what level the government would be prepared to allow unemployment to rise to in its war against inflation before it came to the conclusion that the casualties were too great?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it was the labour movement that was presenting a brief, not the Liberal or Conservative party.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister seems to have chimed in about every two minutes with this labour bit, could he not tell us what he said out in the open so that we would have full knowledge of it?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the percentage of income that he attributed to labour, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether these were figures for working people or figures showing wages, salaries and professional fees?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there was so much noise as the question began that I did not understand it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, when he referred in his statement this morning to the percentage of income received by workers, he was referring to wages, wages and salaries, or wages, salaries and professional fees received by people in the labour force?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I referred to two sets of figures. One set of figures showed that in the past 20 years the share of profits in national income had dropped by 25 per cent. The other set of figures indicated that the share of salaries, including wages and earnings, had increased by nearly 20 per cent over the past 20 years.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the Prime Minister misunderstood the question. I understood my colleague to ask the Prime Minister whether the figures to which he referred this morning included the income of professional people.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member misunderstood my answer. The answer is yes. I said it included all of these things, and no member should take offence at this. I indicated that it was good that there had been a transfer of resources over the past 20 years, a very heavy transfer, from the profits sector to the wages, salaries and other income sector.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister, when he produces the figures asked for by my colleague from York South, whether he would break down the figures showing what percentage of the national income is wages, what part executive salaries, and what part professional fees, in order to give an accurate picture of the distribution of income?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the document, but if the leader of the New Democratic party wants me to make a little speech about it I will do so. As to the first question whether I would table the figures, my answer was yes. If he wants me to reiterate what I told the labour movement this morning I shall. I said that our fight against inflation was not intended to prevent redistribution of income in the country, nor would it have that effect. I said it was merely a short-term fight against inflation and I outlined the steps that had to be taken now. I will gladly include this in the document that I will table, but it will then no longer be the document authorized to be presented to this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There seems to be some difficulty. The House has agreed to allow the Prime Minister to table a document. The suggestion now is that something else be tabled. The consent of the House would have to be sought in this regard. Perhaps we might return to this subject later since other hon. members appear to be anxious to ask questions.

MANITOBA CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTED INVITATION TO QUEEN TO OPEN SESSION OF LEGISLATURE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it has to do with the suggestion of Premier Schreyer of Manitoba that, as part of the Manitoba centennial celebrations, the legislature of that province would like to convene on July 15, I believe, and have Her Majesty the Queen read the Speech from the Throne. For this to be done, of course, the favourable advice of the Prime Minister would be required.

Has the Prime Minister been consulted in this regard; and in any event, what would be his reaction to the suggestion of a visit that would be so widely welcomed not only in Manitoba but in the prairie provinces generally?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to consult my office on whether such a proposition has arrived there. I have no knowledge of it as yet, but I am interested to hear that the new government of Manitoba is taking the right hon. member for Prince Albert into its confidence on these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister should not be so touchy and petulant. He is getting worse every day.

DRUGS

APPLICATIONS FOR LICENCES UNDER PATENT ACT AMENDMENTS—PLANS TO REDUCE PRICES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? Is he now in a position to inform the House regarding the results of his department's investigation into the applications for drug licences under the recent amendments to the Patent Act passed by the House recently, and have these investigations ascertained whether there has been collusion by members of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association in not applying for these licences?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the program has been delayed because American Home Products have been contesting the right of Parliament to deal with drug patents. They have been testing it in court, but at this time we have been successful in the Court of Appeal of Ontario. There have been two licences issued by the Commissioner of Patents, both covering a drug called diazepam which I understand has a laid-down cost in Montreal of $87 per kilo and is now distributed by Hoffman-LaRoche at a retail cost of $9,000.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, since the minister stated before the House committee discussing the amendments to the Patent Act concerning drug licences that if the government's legislation did not lower drug prices immediately he would consider alternative action, and since drug prices in Canada are still the highest of any industrial nation, will the minister undertake to make a statement on motions in the very near future indicating what new plans the government has to reduce drug prices in this country?

Mr. Basford: As I said, Mr. Speaker, we have been delayed by reason of the fact that American Home Products have been challenging the right of this Parliament to enact the legislation it did last session. Presuming that case is not taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Commissioner is proceeding as fast as he can in dealing with some 62 applications for compulsory licences which he has received. He has rendered decisions in some 11 of those cases but the licences are not being issued at the present time because of the litigation.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may have anticipated my question but perhaps I could ask a further supplementary. Would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions in respect of this very important matter in order to put the minds of Canadians at ease?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think the last two answers I have given constitute a statement. I am not sure, until the matter of the litigation is cleared up, that there is anything more I can say that would be useful, except to reiterate that the commissioner is acting within the law as fast as he can in processing applications for compulsory licences which will be granted as fast as they can be. When they are granted, I think this will have a beneficial effect for drug purchasers.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether, in order to achieve the objective of lowering drug prices in Canada, he is considering the imposition of a tax or setting a maximum on the allowable deduction of expenses for drug advertising, sales promotion and detail men?

Mr. Basford: Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—REVIEW OF TRADE POLICIES

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is Canada reconsidering its trade policies in respect of South Africa in view of the long-time policy of apartheid in that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker; as the Prime Minister said, this question is under review.

Mr. Cafik: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs also review the policy in respect of the Polymer Corporation, which I believe operates in South Africa?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now making a representation or a suggestion to the minister.

Mr. Cafik: May I rephrase that question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might rephrase the question.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether, in the review the government is undertaking in respect of trade with South Africa, it is the intention to review the policy regarding Polymer?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, all aspects of our trade with South Africa will be reviewed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in this review is the government considering whether it is appropriate to have a preferential Commonwealth tariff in favour of South Africa long after South Africa has ceased to be a member of the Commonwealth?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, this preference is reciprocal and we would have to consider both sides of the question.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Government House Leader whether he can help to bring forward an answer to my question on Polymer's investments in the Republic of South Africa, which has been on the Order Paper for four or five weeks?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I will make inquiries, Mr. Speaker.

POWER

BAY OF FUNDY—CONSULTATION BY PROGRAMMING BOARD WITH DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Prior to the decision by the government not to proceed with the Atlantic tidal power development project, did the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board in the course of its studies consult in depth with the minister or his departmental officials?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and make a report later.

BAY OF FUNDY—RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION NOT TO PROCEED WITH PROJECT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the alarming increase in unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, will he reconsider the decision of his government not to proceed with the harnessing of the Bay of Fundy tides from a power development point of view?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to suspend construction of the new international airport in Quebec and to suspend the granting of interest free and low interest loans to underdeveloped countries in the world until interest rates decline?

BAY OF FUNDY—DEPARTMENTAL STUDY OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF PROGRAMMING BOARD

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the report released on Friday and some of the recommendations on Fundy power of the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board, is it the intention of his department to strike immediately a committee of departmental officials to study some of those recommendations and in particular the potential development of research to reduce the cost of generating equipment and construction in order that this project might proceed in the future?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): This is something we are looking into right now, Mr. Speaker. No decision has been made yet.

Mr. Nowlan: I wonder if I might ask another supplementary question? In view of the fact that the report was tabled on Friday, and the minister is looking into many facets of this very fundamental project that could bring so much to the east, would the minister make a statement on motions in the very near future as to what his department plans to do about this project?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will consider this request.

[Mr. Coates.]

[English]

FINANCE

INVESTIGATION OF OPERATIONS OF THE MINT

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, but in his absence perhaps the Minister of Justice will be able to answer it for me. In view of recent cases involving bribery and corruption in the Royal Mint, will the government assure the House that a thorough investigation of the operations of the Mint will be started immediately and, if necessary, a royal commission set up in order that the public interest may be fully protected?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I will transmit the question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

ALIENATED YOUTH PROGRAM—STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Could he inform the House whether it is the intention of the government to discontinue its alienated youth program in Toronto and Montreal and, if so, why?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not recognize the program as coming within my department.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, is the government planning any new summer student employment program in provinces facing economic difficulties, such as Saskatchewan and the Maritimes?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we are proposing and will implement a summer student employment program in all provinces.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INTRODUCTION BY IMPERIAL OIL OF REVOLVING CREDIT SYSTEM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is he aware of the recent announcement by Imperial Oil of Canada that it is switching its credit cards to a revolving credit system, thereby increasing the cost of petroleum products to consumers, and will he inform the House whether this action is in line with the government's anti-inflationary program?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on budget night the Minister of Finance made it very clear he disapproved of agencies, particularly oil companies, handing out credit cards wholesale, and he announced that legislation would be introduced in a matter of weeks.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, do I take it from the minister's answer that the legislation proposed by the government is designed to deal specifically with the transfer of general credit card systems to revolving credit card systems?

Mr. Basford: It is designed to deal with the matters the Minister of Finance discussed in the budget, namely, the level of commercial credit and down payments—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

THE ARCTIC—ASSERTION BY GOVERNMENT TO U.S. OFFICIAL

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell the House whether the government asserted Canadian sovereignty over the Canadian Arctic in general and the waters in particular when Mr. Alexis Johnson of the United States State Department led a delegation here last Friday to discuss Canada-U.S. matters such as pollution, fisheries boundaries and laws of the sea?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we informed Mr. Alexis Johnson when he was here exactly what I have informed members of the House and what the Prime Minister has informed the country generally, that we regard these Arctic waters as ours.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED U.S. NUCLEAR TESTS—INFORMATION ON FIRST TESTS

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, from time to time over the past two months I have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether they have received information from the United States concerning the first series of nuclear tests at Amchitka in Alaska. As the House will be in recess very soon, Mr. Speaker, would you allow me to redirect the question once more to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received this information. We are still inquiring and expect to get it.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL POSTAL DISPUTE—TRANSFER OF WORKERS' ACQUIRED RIGHTS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I directed a question to the Acting Prime Minister, which he indicated he would turn over to the Prime Minister, with reference to the postal dispute and the Goldenberg inquiry. Would the Prime Minister answer?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister did confer with me on some question. I cannot remember, unless the hon. member is specific, what the conference was about.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Solicitor General was not specific. It had reference to the Empire Club speech of the Postmaster General and the indication that job guarantees for the workers in Montreal would require legislation. My question was whether this was the point of view of the government and was the commissioner so advised?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have the answer of the Acting Prime Minister. He said he would be very glad to look into that suggestion and in effect he did look into it with me.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, that is a very clever but hardly a helpful answer. I think it is very important to know whether the Postmaster General, as reported, was in fact indicating that the job security rights which are so crucial to this dispute can be transferred only through legislation. If that is the point of view of the government, was Commissioner Goldenberg so advised?

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly that is not the position of the government. It is an opinion expressed honestly by a minister who believes in it but the government position was announced in the House about a week ago when we decided to appoint Mr. Goldenberg as mediator in this dispute. I indicated at that time that the government would await his decision before deciding what our policy would be.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Without being presumptuous, might I suggest to the Prime Minister that he acquaint the Postmaster General with the government policy?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LACK OF FOOD FRAUD PROSECUTIONS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that, according to the reply given to my written question No. 20 on the Order Paper, during the fiscal years from 1966 to that part of 1969 when the matter of economic fraud in food and food products came under the responsibility of the Food and Drug Directorate there were several dozen prosecutions, would the minister undertake to make an early statement concerning why, since this matter was transferred to his department in early 1969, there were no prosecutions up to November 14 last year?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look at the answer first.

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED KICKBACKS IN DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the demand by a union leader in Toronto recently that the government should inquire into the possibility of kickbacks in the dairy industry as between dairies and retail outlets, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether the government or the minister's department is prepared to undertake such an investigation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement. If it was so important to the union leader one would have thought he would send it to me. I would advise him to do so with whatever supporting evidence he has.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether he has made any inquiries or has concerned himself with the charges by the Ontario Food Council in late 1969 that buyers for wholesale stores were named as receiving kickbacks in the food industry in that province.

Mr. Basford: There were consultations between my officers and officers of the Ontario Food Council.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—PROTEST COUPONS—ALLEGED CLOSING OF MAIL BOX OF COLIN BROWN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, in the absence of the Minister of Communications, I asked a question in connection with Colin Brown who has paternity for some 57 advertisements which appeared in the press across Canada analysing the white paper. He has stated that his post office box in Ottawa has been closed, and that the coupons which have caused so much irascibility on the part of the government are being returned to the individuals who sent them, with the exception of those that are addressed to a Member of Parliament. Could the minister say whether this extraordinary order was made?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I wrote a very polite letter to Mr. Colin Brown advising him that I considered the use to which he was putting the box was an abuse of the privilege of boxholders. In effect Mr. Colin Brown had taken out a box in his own name and was inviting the world to address replies, through his own box number, to all hon. members of this House who have boxes of their own. I also stated in the letter that I would be quite pleased to discuss this with him and asked him to reply in seven days. I have not yet heard from him—

An hon. Member: He hasn't received the letter yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kierans: Well, Mr. Speaker, he apparently knows that his box is closed, which is what counts in this case. I am quite willing to discuss this with Mr. Brown, but I must say that all members of this House have suffered a great deal from that fact that people all across the country are addressing letters to Mr. Brown's box when it is difficult, particularly in respect of opposition members, to know who their member is. This involves a great deal of work and has really created very much unnecessary work for the postal service in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I notice that those who are dictator-minded sitting opposite in this House applaud that statement. What is the idea of interfering with an individual's rights? Is this another example of power at any price?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have never been particularly affected by the grunts that come from the opposite side of the House. When a minister rises in this House and, apparently acting with government support, says that my mail, because, it is going to cause trouble to the Post Office, shall not be delivered to me, it is time to protest. This is interference with freedom of the individual to communicate whenever and however he wishes, so long as what he sends through the mail is not filthy. Apparently, they regard protests as being filthy literature.

Mr. Speaker: The Postmaster General is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Kierans: I am simply reiterating that this has caused chaos in the postal service. I also want to state that while the people who would write to the right hon. member obviously know who he is, they do not always know who his leader is or who his colleagues are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this will help to solve the difficulty. Perhaps we might move to another question in a moment.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question for the President of the Privy Council. Could the hon. gentleman indicate when he is proposing to bring forward for consideration by this House the report of the Committee on Statutory Instruments which recommends certain protection against arbitrary ministerial actions?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Bill of Rights does that now. This post office order is flouting the Bill of Rights.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Postmaster General. I wish to ask him whether at some later date he could make a statement on motions or issue a press release outlining his side of the story on the cabinet split?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege concerning all members of the House regarding the longstanding principle of cabinet solidarity, which is of the essence of government in this country. I asked the Minister of Communications that question because of a bulletin put out by the Department of Labour in which the Minister of Labour referred to the cabinet split, and while patting himself on the back ran down the Minister of Communications.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—STRENGTHENING OF ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government taking any further action to strengthen economic sanctions against Rhodesia as a result of the recent resolution of the Security Council on that subject?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the hon. gentleman and the House know we have, of course, severed all relations with that régime. We have complied fully with all existing United Nations sanctions. We are now reviewing the situation in light of the latest resolution.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL—LOSS OF MAIL IN FIRE

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): My question is for the Postmaster General. I wish to ask the minister whether he can advise us on the extent of the loss of mail which was involved in the weekend fire at the central post office in Montreal, and also the types of mail that were destroyed in that fire?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): The mail that was burned, which consisted of approximately 30,000 letters, was mainly first class mail. Some mail that was damaged was second or third class mail.

An hon. Member: Were there any coupons in it?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Is the minister able to advise the post office patrons who lost the mail what prospect there is of receiving compensation for their losses?

Mr. Kierans: We will certainly do our best to ascertain the names and addresses of those who had their mail damaged or destroyed, and we will take it up with them.

MONTREAL—LIFTING OF PARCEL EMBARGO

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. Can he tell us when he intends or will be able to make an announcement regarding the lifting of the embargo on parcels to Montreal.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): That will certainly depend on the success which Mr. Goldenberg has. At present the mail is still being delayed and there is no immediate prospect of it; by that I mean to date.

MONTREAL—TRANSFER OF LAPALME TRUCKS TO NEW DELIVERY CONTRACTORS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications. Are the trucks now being used by G. Lapalme for delivery of mail in Montreal being transferred to the five companies which take over the mail delivery contracts on April 1?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker, they will make their own arrangements.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SECRETARIAL STAFF OF LEADER OF CREDITISTES

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the House Leader. This, Mr. Speaker, is a matter in which you and I have a mutual interest. Would the House Leader investigate the claims that were made in print by the leader of the Creditiste party on Saturday that he had 11 secretaries in his office and did not want to leave it? Are we all going to get the same treatment, and will he also investigate the other questions involved?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I am sure we are all curious as to whether Mr. Yvon Dupuis will be moving in with the 11 secretaries.

[Mr. Kierans.]

POLLUTION

AIR—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the Ontario government has proceeded on its own with action regarding air pollution measurement, can the minister tell us when we may expect the clean air act which he has been promising us for some time?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have already indicated that we have this under consideration for the next session.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—LEVY ON OVER-QUOTA PRODUCTION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of the statement he made on motions today. May I ask the minister if, under the terms of the new policy announced today, the government will in effect be placing a levy of $1.25 per 100 pounds of milk on all manufactured milk offered for sale in Canada, other than that under the government quotas established by the Dairy Commission?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The answer to that question is very clearly outlined in the statement that I made, a copy of which I sent to the hon. member's party at about 1.30 p.m. today.

Mr. Danforth: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister say either yes or no for the record?

Mr. Olson: The answer to the question has already been given in the House very clearly.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE RATES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In January, I asked if his department was looking into the matter of the increased rates for car insurance. I asked him that question again on February 9. At that time he said he was going to make a statement fairly soon as to the result of his department's investigation of these increased rates. Since it is now March 23, I wonder if the minister is able to make a statement as to what progress his department is making in this regard.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister whether the investigation is going on and if the minister expects to give the results of that investigation to the House fairly soon?

Mr. Basford: My officers are still considering the matter, and when it is useful for me to say something I will make a statement in the House.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FUTURE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister. As the control of inflation is impossible without the active co-operation of organized labour, and as the government has failed to receive assurance of that co-operation today, would the Prime Minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what steps the government intends to take in pursuit of its control of inflation in the future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Without waiting for that occasion, I will say that we do not share the opinion of the opposition that control of inflation is impossible.

Mr. Hees: May I take it then that it is possible to control inflation without the co-operation of labour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POLLUTION

NAMING OF MEMBERS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on February 20 the House agreed to a motion to set up a special committee of the House on pollution. I wish to ask the President of the Privy Council when we can expect a motion before the House listing the membership of that committee?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I believe I am correct in saying that we do not yet have the nominees from all parties, but I will check it.

PRICE STABILITY

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to ask either the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the President of the Privy Council why the government has not brought forward government order No. 53 which was put on the Order Paper on December 17 last for the purpose of setting up a joint parliamentary committee to study the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and whether it is intended to deal with that order very soon?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): The principal reason is that we wanted to give precedence to the second reading stage of legislation and, as the hon. member knows, there has been a considerable volume of legislation on the Order Paper. It is hoped we can get to it very quickly.

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

PROCEDURAL IMPLICATIONS OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to orders of the day may I refer to a suggestion I made to the House last week that the Chair had serious misgivings about a report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. I have studied the matter since then and might be in a position to give my view. However, I understand that the hon. member for Peace River has his own views which he wants to bring to the attention of the House. There is perhaps not all that much urgency about the matter, and it might wait until tomorrow at which time the Chair could hear the views of interested hon. members on it. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS) AMENDMENT ACT, 1970

MEASURE TO SUPPLEMENT PENSIONS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-194, to provide supplementary benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-194 has been considered and debated at each of the stages thus far, namely, second reading, the standing committee stage and the report stage. Our views on this legislation have been made very clear, I trust, both in the statements that we have made and in the recorded votes that took place in this House on Friday. Therefore, it is not necessary to extend the debate at this time.

I shall endeavour to take less than my allotted time. I shall endeavour not to provoke a lengthy debate, but there are a few things that I think should be said before we finish with Bill C-194. As we have made very clear, one part of this bill has our complete support. I refer to the portion of the bill that establishes the principle that pensions of retired civil servants and of others whose pensions come from the federal government should be escalated in the years after retirement.

This bill provides that there are to be increases in the pensions of all civil servants who are now retired, and of those who come under all the categories covered in this bill, and that from now on when persons on the various federal pensions retire those pensions will be subject to increases each year thereafter if the cost of living continues to rise. I need not take any time to remind the House of the urging that I have carried on with respect to this matter for a great many years. But I repeat that I am very happy that this principle is being written into law.

The other part of the bill is a part that some of us resent very deeply. We think it was quite unfair, almost an insult, to put into a bill that is providing just one thing for everybody else a substantial revamping of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act. Entirely apart from questions of judgment that one might make as to the generosity or otherwise of the changes that are made in our pension plan, we just do not think it is fair to ask Parliament in the same bill to do something for all pensioners that come under the federal wing and then to single ourselves out and do for ourselves something very special, something over and above what we are doing for everybody else. We indicated our opposition to this by the amendments that we moved at the report stage, and by the four recorded votes that took place last Friday.

Any vote at this stage would of course be meaningless because those of us who like one part of the bill but do not like the other would have to say that if we voted for the bill we would be voting for the increases in pensions for retired civil servants, but if we voted against the bill we would be voting really against the provision for increasing the pensions of Members of Parliament. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suppose we have to settle for the fact that, thanks to the report stage, we have been able to make our position clear by the way we voted on Friday last. But in my view there are, as I have already said, a few things that should be put on the record before this debate closes.

The first thing I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps a repetition of something I have said at other stages, but it concerns me even more now than it did when we were dealing with this legislation last week and the week before. I refer to the fact that there are many retired civil servants, and many widows of retired civil servants, who are due for bitter disappointment at the end of April. I refer to those retired civil servants and to those widows of retired civil servants who are receiving pensions so low that they are also receiving amounts under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

As hon. members know, there is no means test, no needs test or dollar ceiling, or any limit whatsoever on the escalation that is to take place in the pensions of retired civil servants or their widows. There is a formula, based on the number of years from the time they left the service, and that formula is applied mathematically. When the percentage calculation is made the person drawing the pension gets the increase. There is no question about it. There is no means test, no needs test, and there is no dollar limit.

But, Mr. Speaker, in the case of those who are receiving the War Veterans Allowance it is now quite clear that the amount they receive as an addition to their public service pension as a result of this legislation, will be cut off their War Veterans Allowance. I mentioned this at the second reading stage. I brought it up again in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I was told there that this would have to be dealt with in the general context of the War Veterans Allowance Act, rather than under this legislation. I made the same statement here at report stage, and got the same reply. I do not accept that reply, Mr. Speaker. It is in this bill, C-194, that we are making this provision for these supplemental payments, and I think it is in this bill that we should deal with all those pieces of legislation that are related to it.

As hon. members are aware, there is a schedule attached to the bill that lists 15 different acts that are being amended, and then it has a sixteenth item that is a sort of omnibus paragraph, naming many other acts that might also be affected by this legislation. In other words, the government quite clearly in this bill went out of its way—and I approve of this—to amend all those statutes that had to be amended to carry out its purpose. I contend, therefore, if it was the intention, so far as the government was concerned, that all these people should get the benefit of the increase it should have made the necessary provision in this legislation to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act.

• (3:40 p.m.)

On an earlier occasion, Mr. Speaker, I read a sentence or so from the letter which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) enclosed with the cheques that went out a month or so ago to all retired civil servants, their widows, retired armed forces personnel or their widows, retired RCMP personnel or their widows, and all the rest of them. The sentence is over the signature of the President of the Treasury Board and the letter is dated February 2, 1970. The key sentence is:

> I would also like to point out there will be no means tests or needs test in this connection and that all in receipt of pensions whether former employees or widows and dependents, will benefit from the new provisions.

I do not think I am doing any violence to that sentence if I pick out the key words to make clear what the President of the Treasury Board said to between 70,000 and 80,000 people. The key words are "all will benefit". Since December 19, I have received hundreds of letters, and I have one on my desk here and now, which just came in on Saturday. I found it particularly sad to receive a letter like this just a day after our debate of last Friday. I shall not quote the letter verbatim because I do not wish to identify the writer, but it is from a widow in Swift Current, Saskatchewan. Like a good many letters that I have received in the past few weeks it expresses great pleasure that this battle has been won and that pensions are to be increased. The lady mentions the letter she received from Mr. Drury, as she put it, informing her that all pensions would be increased effective April 1, 1970. Most of these people know that April 1 really means the end of the month, or they soon will know it.

The letter I received expresses thanks to the President of the Treasury Board and to the government for the increase and I have to say that the lady indulges in some kind remarks about my part in this over the years. In fact, she says she could not let the matter pass without writing to thank me but my modesty keeps me from reading that part.

Some hon. Members: Please do.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Another hon. Member: We will let you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): After the press gallery skit of Saturday night my modesty will not let me. The lady goes on to say how much it is going to mean to thousands of people like herself. At one point she is thanking me, not only on her own behalf but on behalf of all concerned. As an afterthought she adds the hope that in her case the war veterans allowance which she receives will not be reduced when she gets the increase in the pension as a widow of a civil servant.

How does one reply to a letter like that, Mr. Speaker? How does one reply to a widow who has expressed great gratitude for what has been done, who thanks me for my part in it and says that she is speaking for thousands of people, and I know that she is. I have to write back saying that I am grateful for her kind words but I have to tell her that under the legislation as it stands, the bitter truth is that she will get the increase in the pension as the widow of a retired civil servant but that the war veterans board will reduce her war veterans allowance by the same amount.

An hon. Member: The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, hon. members can make their comments but this is a disgrace. Letters like this will come to hon. members in the next two or three months as veterans and their widows on allowances discover that the words of the President of the Treasury Board are not being kept. I call upon this government to stand behind what the President of the Treasury Board stated when he sent this letter to the 70,000 or 80,000 people in receipt of pensions, telling them that "all will benefit".

As hon. members know I have taken up the matter by asking a question in the House of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé). This will be found in the February 9 issue of Hansard at pages 3358 and 3359. I also took up the matter in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The Minister of Veterans Affairs was good enough to write to me saying that he still felt very sympathetic toward my position but he saw a number of difficulties and he felt that the government would not be able to deal with this matter now. He continued:

> As you are aware, the Prime Minister, on June 17, 1969, advised the House that the whole fabric of federal social legislation was under review. As war veterans allowance is a social measure, it is included in this study. As this review is continuing I am unable, at this time, to indicate what changes, if any, may occur in the War Veterans Allowance Act. Your suggestion will be kept in mind when changes in the act are contemplated.

I suppose I should be encouraged by that, Mr. Speaker, but I do not know when the War Veterans Allowance Act is going to be amended. In the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs we are dealing with the Woods report and the Pension Act, but not with the War Veterans Allowance Act. It is obvious that nothing will be done about it until after we get the white paper on social security. In the meantime, this widow in Swift Current and widows of retired civil servants across Canada who are also receiving the war veterans allowance will discover that the letter from the President of the Treasury Board was wrong when it said, "all will benefit."

I suppose that the President of the Treasury Board will claim that what he wrote is technically correct; they will get a slightly larger cheque as far as superannuation is concerned but the war veterans allowance cheque will be reduced by the same amount, so these people will not benefit, despite his statement that all would do so.

In the main, Mr. Speaker, as far as the civil servants side of it is concerned, this bill is good. It is better than we recommended on May 6, 1967, from our special joint committee. It covers not only the immediate problem but the problem on a long run basis. I give all kinds of praise to that part of this legislation that provides for these pension increases for retired civil servants, but why not finish the job? Why leave in it this serious flaw which hits again at war veterans allowance recipients and the widows who come under the War Veterans Allowance Act. You can tell me if you will that it is going to be considered later on but I know the parliamentary processes better than that. You get something like this when the matter is before the House you get something like this when you are in a bargaining position, you do not get it later on. When letters start to come from other widows like this one, and from veterans across the country, I hope the government will provide us with an appropriate reply explaining why the clear statement of the President of the Treasury Board is not being kept.

That is the main thing wrong with this legislation, Mr. Speaker, but it does not detract from my general praise for it. However, there are one or two other things that I should mention about the civil service side of it. The first is the 2 per cent ceiling per year on the amount by which pensions can be escalated in the future. I recognize that this is tied to the Canada Pension Plan formula, and that that formula applies to old age security and the guaranteed income supplement but at some point we have to break that. It is not good enough to give pension increases of only 2 per cent per year when the cost of living increase is 4 or 5 per cent per year. I suggest that those who are clamouring for this formula to be geared directly to the increases in the cost of living have a point, have a case that the government ought to meet, and I press that case as strongly as I can.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I must move on. That is more or less what I wanted to say about the pension increase side of the bill, namely the part of the bill that raises the pensions of public servants now retired and provides for escalation of pensions in the future. With regard to the other part of the bill, that part which improves the pensions of Members of Parliament, I have let off steam among my friends for the last couple of days following Friday's debate and will therefore spare the House. I feel more strongly about the matter than I did on Friday and the more I think of it the more it seems to me that we will rue the day we brought down legislation that made it possible for a member who has served six years in Parliament to receive a pension of $300 a month for life, no matter what his age may be.

You know, you can argue all you like about the difference between our job and other jobs, about our responsibilities and the monkish life some of us are said to live; but the fact of the matter is that this pension scheme does not fit with pension schemes that apply in general. A pension of $500 a month for life after ten years' service is, to say the least, pretty good; and for us to be doing this at a time of austerity—and this morning in the Railway Committee room we again heard that restraint must be practised—and at a time when we are saying to all other pensioners that they must wait for the white paper on social security, will not help the good name of Parliament. I still resent this being done. We had the chance to vote against this proposal at the conclusion of debate on the report stage. We indicated where we stood, and it is still my view that Parliament is going too far in what it is doing with regard to pensions of Members of Parliament.

I said, however, that I would spare the House some of the steam I have let off over the weekend among my friends. I shall content myself with saying this: Now that we have done this, or will have done it once the bill has been read the third time and considered in the other place—and I do not imagine that will take very long—there is a real obligation resting on us not to let the matter of pensions rest where it now is. I have a four-point program; that does not mean I shall speak ten minutes on each point, for I do not have that much time left. I think we must soon review the Public Service Superannuation Act and all other pension acts similar to it. On Tuesday, March 17, as reported at page 9:6 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 9, of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I proposed a motion which was ruled out of order. I will not repeat the arguments I advanced but I should like to put my proposed motion on the record because I think it spells out what we ought to be doing. The proposal as reported in the committee proceedings, reads as follows:

> Mr. Knowles moved,
> That this Committee recommend to the House that there be an early reference of the Public Service Superannuation Act, and other similar acts, to an appropriate committee, for the purpose of reviewing such legislation to determine improvements that could be made therein, such review, notwithstanding the generality thereof, to include the level of contributions, the formula for the determination of pensions paid under such legislation, the percentage granted to widows and other dependents, the administration of such plans and the question of their being made subject to collective bargaining.

I find, on reading that proposed motion again, that it really does cover the points that ought to be dealt with in any review of the Public Service Superannuation Act. We did not ask for this last December 19 because the only thing then before us was the general question of escalation of pensions. Now, because we have opened the act governing our pensions, so to speak, I think we must open these other acts, review them, and look at the various points which have been raised.

I know there is a certain amount of feeling building up in the Public Service against paying this extra half of 1 per cent in contributions for supplemental benefits. I may say that I am not indulging in the privilege of which the opposition sometimes avails itself, namely damning the government on every point. I am not doing that. I am writing the kind of responsible letters we always write on this side, making it clear that by paying this extra money into the fund we are not only providing money for those already retired but we are buying an escalation of future pensions, of the pensions of those who will retire in future. I doubt if you can buy any better form of insurance. As an item off by itself, it is good, and as one who has worked for 25 years trying to improve the pensions of retired civil servants, I am glad to pay the extra $7.50 a month—and I hope other hon. members are equally glad—to make possible the escalation of their pensions.

I am saying to civil servants who come to me complaining about the extra one half of one per cent they must pay, "I understand how you feel; I understand this is a last straw; but what we really ought to be doing is not zeroing in on that extra half of 1 per cent, but calling for a review of the entire legislation, of the level of contributions generally and the formula under which pensions are determined; of the amount payable to widows, which is 50 per cent of a pension for the widows of civil servants and 60 per cent for our widows; and the big issues you must raise are the matter of administration and the question of pensions being made subject to collective bargaining." I hope this will be done; in fact it must be done.

My motion the other day was ruled out of order. I will not propose it again, since I know I cannot do so at this third reading stage. But I suggest that just because we have obtained this increase for retired public servants we must not assume that the job with respect to pensions is done. All these broader issues must be dealt with, especially in view of what we have done for ourselves. I, therefore, call on the government to take the initiative in seeing to it that the broader question of the operation of the pension plans and pension accounts under which federal employees receive their pensions is examined at the earliest possible date. I said I would propose a four point program, Mr. Speaker. This is the first point, that we ought to review the Public Service Superannuation Act and related pension acts, and in my book this is a must.

Point No. 2 is this. I think we simply must review the War Veterans Allowance Act and particularly its means test provisions. The most difficult letters I receive and have to answer every week relate to this. I do not get such letters as the one on my desk only once in a while; I get them all the time. We simply must review that piece of legislation, particularly in view of what we have done for ourselves.

My third point is that we ought to give more consideration to other pensions. The question of CNR pensions has been referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and the committee should get cracking on that matter. There is also the question of those people who are covered by the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees' Provident Fund. Some of these people thought they were covered by Bill C-194, but I find they are not. I find also that retired employees of the Bank of Canada are not covered. I do not mean the big people at the top; they fix their pensions very nicely. I am speaking of the ordinary Joes who are not covered so far as the increases in this bill are concerned. If we are to do a good job, let us consider all these people.

We must also take another look at the Pension Benefits Standards Act, that federal legislation governing the standards the pension plans of private companies must meet. The day must come when, through legislation, we shall require all pension plans to contain a pension escalation clause. The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications can tell the CNR to treat its retired employees the same way the federal government treats its retired federal servants, but it cannot say that to the CPR. But we can write that sort of provision into the Pension Benefits Standards Act. So, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who think our job with respect to pensions is over, I can say it is not over and probably never will be. But there are specific improvements that we can make.

My fourth point in my four point program relates to the Old Age Security Act. The government is saying to the people who come under that legislation that they must wait for the white paper on social security. We did not have to wait. We have gone ahead with ours.

This fact puts added pressure on us to do something about old age pensions at this session. We have been told since last October we were going to get the government's white paper. We will not get it in March, Mr. Speaker. We might get it in April, but more likely in May or June. Then, of course, it will have to be digested, sent to committee and all the rest. The way the present timetable is set up there is just no room for an old age pension increase at this session.

I come back ad nauseam to what we have done for ourselves. I say we have not made just a change of degree, we have made a change of kind. We brought in for ourselves the guaranteed annual income. It is a new concept. If you can win two elections, you will receive the guaranteed income. We have done it generously and handsomely. Having done that, we cannot go on leaving our old age people at $75 a month with a 2 per cent increase per year, $30 extra if you pass a means test. I think the time has come for a new guaranteed income concept that involves pensions of a level at which people can live. By all the gods of war, we in this House who are doing for ourselves what this bill provides, although it is over the protest of some of us, have an obligation not to rest and let this issue wait until the next session or the session before the next election.

As members of the House of Commons have made pensions a major issue, we have made pensions something worth getting, something which will add dignity and decency to life, at least that is so for ourselves. It is time we did this for all. The obligation to do this is made even greater because of what we have done for ourselves. Am I hopeful it will be done? I am afraid I am not. I have sat opposite this government long enough to realize it does not have any heart. It is not concerned about old age pensioners or war veterans allowance recipients. My prediction is that nothing will be done, not by this government.

Not only do I know this government, but I know the processes of Parliament. The only way you can get something is when you have a bargaining position. You do not get it afterwards. Members will say, having done this for ourselves, we will now do something for others. We do for others only as long as there is any point of pressure left. Once this bill is through, the Public Service Superannuation Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Pension Benefits Standard Act and the Old Age Security Act will wait. The member for Winnipeg North Centre will ask questions about them week after week, but come the end of the session nothing will have been done. That is not a very hopeful prediction, Mr. Speaker. Well, if it sounds a bit cynical, I throw to the government the challenge to prove me wrong.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I am happy to say, in contrast to the debate last week, that I agree with some of his remarks. Those of us who have followed the pension issue certainly agree that a good deal more should be done. Any groups that have been excluded from this measure should receive equal treatment. No doubt there are some basic principles that could be put into the framework of proper pension legislation. I wish to make a few comments in reply to some of the points that the hon. member has made. I feel these remarks should be on the record.

The hon. member referred to the pension plan for members of this House as a guaranteed annual income. I intend to make one or two observations in this regard. Contributions based on current service go from $720 to $1,440. Those members of this House who make up their arrears of contributions back to 1963 will have made a payment of $4,860, plus interest. This amount will be in addition to current contributions. When we talk of guaranteed annual supplements, guaranteed annual incomes and all the rest of it, I think there is some obligation to put the increased contributions and the actuarial sum on the record. A great many of those elected to this House will never draw a penny of benefits. They will have the privilege of paying fairly substantial amounts of money into this fund and those amounts will be refunded to them without a penny of interest after their service, even after the adoption of these amendments.

I wish to make a few comments on the important measure before us, the escalation of pensions for a large number of people. My colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard), chaired the committee which brought in a report three years ago recommending that increases be made in pensions of those who have retired. This recommendation has been consistently supported by a large number of members of this House. We are proud and delighted to see that something has come out of it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made a substantial point with regard to war veterans allowances and the increases under this bill. This point was discussed in committee, Mr. Speaker. There was an exchange between the hon. member and myself the other day during the debate on the report stage. I would like to review the point because I feel the hon. member is mistaken in what he is contending. I will refer to the situation of two widows, one of whom is eligible for war veterans allowance and the other not. If the hon. member's procedure were adopted, it would introduce into the war veterans allowance scheme a principle of discrimination. The widow who is receiving this benefit would be permitted an addition which would not be permitted to any other widow under the war veterans allowance scheme.

There have been only two revisions to the pensions of widows of civil servants. One was in the late fifties, under the previous administration, and this is the second. How often have war veterans allowances been adjusted? The last adjustment was less than three years ago. The widow who is benefiting from the war veterans allowance has at least had the benefit of a regular revision, however inadequate in the view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The attempt to introduce amendments to war veterans allowances by means of amendments in other pieces of legislation such as this, can only destroy the uniformity of the war veterans allowances scheme. The proposal to increase the ceiling of payments under the War Veterans Allowance Act by an amendment in this bill is not appropriate. I had hoped the hon. member would recognize that it is not a clear, logical or fair thing to pick out one category of war veterans allowance beneficiaries and say they should be given benefits which are denied to other recipients. If the hon. member would think it through, he would be the first to agree that if we once started on that thorny path we would make uniform distribution of war veterans allowance impossible.

I look forward to improved standards of pension administration. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has done an excellent job of setting some long-term targets to which many of us subscribe with all our hearts. The approach I had hoped the hon. member would have taken with regard to the measure before us would have been to say here is one small group of people, numerically, and any changes that are introduced should be consistent with the principles he advocates.

Statute Law Amendment Act, 1970

I heard the hon. member and other spokesmen for his party attempt to delete the improvements to the present scheme for Members of Parliament. Their approach was to strike out every single change proposed in this bill to the present scheme. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not offer a single amendment to improve the scheme. He deleted every change proposed. Instead of taking the opportunity of making the scheme, covering a relatively small number of people, consistent—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Was not the purpose of my amendments to strike out everything except what was proposed for all?

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Francis: The hon. member has given us a statement of principles that would guide him. He has indicated that in the amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act it should be possible to introduce new features which he may regard as an improvement. I offered him a challenge which I hoped he would take on this occasion to introduce amendments consistent with these principles and write them into the bill. Certainly, they should be applied across the board. The 60 per cent provision for widows was in a previous act; there is nothing new about that. There are many other amendments for which staff associations are fighting as a matter of principle. I am sure that all of us would have been delighted to see a model piece of pensions legislation that is consistent with the hon. member's principles, but his approach has been to delete every other change.

The only fallacy in his argument is that few widows of public servants get pensions between $500 and $1,000 a year, or between $1,000 and $1,500. The hon. member says that the husbands of these widows were not of long service, but the way the plan is set up they will never be able to get the benefits. Therefore, there can never be an average rate of widow's pension that is in any way adequate. I suggest that the hon. member did not attempt to deal with the substance of the matter at that point. However, that is the way he chose to proceed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the hon. gentleman what our widows will get under the new provisions?

Mr. Francis: The widows will get a substantial improvement under the new provisions. If a member had, say, six years service they would get 60 per cent of $3,700, which is a substantial improvement over what is offered now. I am sure the hon. member would agree that this would be desirable. Then, there will be the survivors' benefits for children on top of this, which were not there before, though they were available under the Public Service Superannuation Act. I did not hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre once say in committee that, although he was deleting this benefit, there should be a survivor's benefit in the member's plan. All of these benefits he denied, keeping the plan a substandard plan, the kind of plan that unfortunately has been in existence for too long.

I regret that I have had to speak on this question at such length. I am as strong in my convictions as the hon. member and I yield to no one. I know that the people I represent are civil servants, and that it is very easy to play to the gallery and to say that one did not take the pension for oneself. It is easy to tell them that we are terrible people who are lining our pockets instead of moving detailed amendments that will bring about an improvement in pensions legislation.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, there are, of course, some parts of this bill of which I am critical, but there are many other parts of which I approve. Other members have mentioned the escalation clause contained in the bill and looked upon it as of great benefit. I look upon it with perhaps a jaundiced eye. Perhaps it is that I am cynical, but it seems to me that by including this cost of living escalation clause in our pension plan the government has admitted there is no way to stop this terrible escalation in our cost of living, and this causes me a little concern.

Another item that really bothers me is this. The government engaged the services of Professor Curtis from Queens University to study this plan, and he has done so for a couple of years. In my humble opinion, he brought in some very excellent recommendations. I wish to refer to one only. As I understood it, he recommended that this benefit be treated as a pension, not as a guaranteed income. He further suggested that the pension should not be payable until the recipient had attained the age of 55. I think he also inferred that if the pension were paid at a younger age, it should be the actuarial equivalent of the amount that would be payable at age 55.

I would support this principle, but his advice has been ignored. I know that we play politics here, and that politics is the art of the possible. Therefore, I assume that as a result of pressure from certain quarters, perhaps, this proposal was left out. However, theoretically this situation can result. If a young man comes to this House at age 21, six years later, at age 27, he could start to draw a pension of $3,780 per year. Given a life expectancy of around 60 years, he will tap the treasury for $226,800. Yet a man who came to the House at age 51 and stayed till he was 57 would only get 50 per cent of that amount, given the same life expectancy. So, I would take exception to this particular provision in the plan.

My third complaint is this. There are few people in this great land of ours who at any time during their productive years or years of employment will be called upon to make such a fantastic deposit toward a pension as provided for in this plan. Very, very few industrial corporations have the unmitigated gall to charge their employees 12 per cent on their $12,000 salary by way of pension contributions. Some people like to say that it is 8 per cent on $8,000. I do not. I say it is 12 per cent on $12,000 salary.

Having said that, I am delighted that the constituents of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) are going to receive some benefit. However, the average Member of Parliament at the present time will have a hell of a hard time making the deposits required.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

TEXTILE LABELLING ACT

MEASURE CONCERNING CONSUMER ARTICLES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill S-20, an act respecting the labelling, sale, importation and advertising of consumer textile articles, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale (for Mr. Basford) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, before the bill is given third reading, I wish to make a few comments, since I think it will mostly affect textile workers.

We all know the textile industry is one of the oldest in the province of Quebec and even in the country. It is most vital because, with related industries, it provides a great number of jobs. In the province of Quebec alone, the primary textile industry employs at least 47,000 of the national total of 83,000.

The clothing industry is closely connected with that industry. In Canada, some 110,000 people are employed in the clothing industry, 60,000 of them in the province of Quebec alone.

Labelling should be carried out and that practice would be welcomed by all, because in the past importers have knowingly misled the good faith of Canadian buyers.

I greatly approve the step proposed by the minister (Mr. Basford) and while I do not want to delay the proceedings of the House, I will just the same add a few words.

I think that I will have the opportunity to bring the matter up again before too long and state to the House other reasons why the government should endeavour to protect that industry.

Mr. Speaker, the annual output of the Quebec textile industry is worth $850 million. It is also interesting to note that between 1961 and 1966, capital expenditures totalled $635 million in the province of Quebec. I am therefore of the opinion that that industry is of prime importance to the economic life of this country and our province, and we should do the impossible to try to assure its survival, for that is a truly domestic industry.

Between 1954 and 1968, the part of the textile industry in the Canadian trade fell from 68 to 60 per cent. If my information is correct, those imports are even less important now than they were in 1968.

From 1954 to 1967, imports of textile products and clothing from countries where production costs are low have increased from 5 to 43 per cent. Even if more information is given on the labels of consumer products, Canadian consumers will have lost much if Canadian workers lose their jobs.

From 1954 to 1967, the labour force in the Canadian textile industry decreased by 5.8 per cent, which represents 5,000 jobs. The other day I read in a magazine that if textile products imported in 1967 had been produced in Canada, 20,000 new jobs would have been created. Naturally, a large number of other jobs would also have been created in the related field of clothing.

The Canadian textile industry is much more in need of encouragement than of a measure making it mandatory for a manufacturer to identify in a particular way the various elements found in textile products. As I said before, the measure in itself is good, but it is not exactly what we wanted. Those involved in the Canadian textile industry claim that because of the very active competition, their warehouses are overstocked with enough merchandise to last over a couple of years. This situation could be remedied by merely guaranteeing some 70 to 75 per cent of the Canadian market to Canadian industry.

It does not strike me as an exaggeration to ask the Canadian government to reserve 70 per cent of the Canadian market for the Canadian textile industry. Expenses of this industry, the considerable amounts invested in it each year, deserve better consideration from those who are now in charge of the nation's affairs. According to information made available to me, Canadian manufacturers, provided they could depend on 70 per cent of the Canadian market, are in a position to guarantee that by 1975 they will have created from 16 to 18,000 new jobs within the industry itself. They also guarantee that the prices of their products will not be higher than they are now.

Moreover, it is very interesting to note that during the last ten years, the prices of textile products have practically not increased. In fact, they have increased by only a fraction of a cent while this industry has to pay for services much more costly than in the past and to make expenditures that have never been so considerable.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make in the matter. In the name of Canadian workers, I reiterate my request to reserve to the Canadian textile industry a reasonable portion of the national market, that is, from 70 to 75 per cent. In so doing, the government would help, not only the workers of the clothing and textile industries, but also the population in general, since people working in these two sectors spend their money in the country and therefore contribute to the economic life of Canada.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words about this bill before third reading is given. I feel that this bill meets with the approval of consumers across Canada in general, and the Consumers' Association of Canada, as far as it goes.

• (4:30 p.m.)

After all, this is only half a bill because it provides for labelling in respect of the fibre content of textile articles and lays down penalties in that regard but does not include the other provision which the Consumers Association wished to have included in this bill. I refer to care labelling; in other words, instructions in respect of the washing and care of the textile fabric or article. I do not think this is a matter which should be brushed aside lightly. The minister indicated he believed it would be better if this were handled on a voluntary basis. If it is deemed necessary for consumers to have legislation containing a guarantee in respect of fibre content labelling so that there will be no fraudulence or error in this area, I cannot for the life of me see why it should not be equally mandatory that once the consumers have purchased the article they should be able to see right on the garment or article instructions with regard to washing and cleaning.

The statement of the minister that later on he will introduce legislation in respect of voluntary care labelling does not meet the request of the Consumers Association of Canada. After all, this organization represents all the organized consumers in this country. I should like to point out that their request was not the result of a hasty decision. The Association has looked into this matter for many years and resolutions on that point have been passed at conventions over a long period. This request resulted from a definite resolution passed at the last convention, and was to the effect that both measures be included in the legislation. In my view, the absence of provisions in respect of care labelling in this legislation is a shortcoming in a bill which otherwise would be a satisfactory one. I am sure consumers will be waiting for the provisions in respect of voluntary care labelling, but rather than have them contained in separate legislation I would much prefer to have the minister open up this measure again and include them as a fundamental part of this mandatory legislation.

Rather than have legislation brought in which would contain purely voluntary provisions, we would like to have a bill which contains both halves rounded up in one package. Some of us will not rest content until we have the second half of these necessary provisions on a mandatory basis. Legislation in respect of textile labelling should also include care labelling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ASSOCIATED CORPORATIONS, RECOVERY OF GRANTS, CONTENTS OF AGREEMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-193, to amend the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, to become or remain, as the case may be, competitive in Canada and abroad in an ever freer international market, Canadian industry will have to innovate, and offer for sale goods that are increasingly useful, perfected, and sophisticated. That is its responsibility. Ours, that of the Parliament and the government is to help it, on occasion, to achieve that objective.

It must be noted that considerable progress has already been and is being achieved. For instance, in the last ten years, Canada has considerably strengthened its international position with regard to manufactured goods exports. Indeed, they represented 12 per cent of our total exports in 1959, and almost 40 per cent by 1969. That is very good.

However, that increase is not distributed equally throughout the industry. It is concentrated in a few sectors only, such as the automobile and the defence industries, where agreements with the United States on the removal of customs duties led to increased rationalization and productivity in our industry.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main functions of my department is to get other sectors of the Canadian industry to participate in the growth of our manufactured goods export trade, and one of the main ways to reach such a goal is to increase research and development in industry but also to point out their importance as well.

Research and development, that may be a stock phrase, but it is one of the main ways to realize fully our secondary industry's competitive possibilities. It is therefore essential for Canadian industry to allocate adequate funds to it and to boldly apply the results of such research to the creation of new products and new processes and turn those to account on the international as well as on the national markets.

Mr. Speaker, the amounts earmarked for research and development in Canada are fortunately increasing. Considering the contribution of all participants—the federal government, industry, universities, we come now to a total of $952 million, which can be broken up as follows: federal government: $501 million, or 52.5 per cent; industry: $267 million, or 28.2 per cent; universities: $171 million, or 18 per cent; other sources: $13 million, or 1.3 per cent. The total, as I said, come to $952 million in 1968-69.

Considering now those which used such amounts, the distribution is as follows: $312 million for federal government institutions, or 32.8 per cent; $347 million for private industry, or 36.5 per cent; $280 million for universities, or 29.4 per cent, and $13 million for others, or 1.3 per cent.

Although the level of expenditures for research and development in Canada has significantly improved compared to previous years, it is not considered as meeting the needs of an appropriate expansion of the Canadian industry. Industry, as I said before, carries out only 36.5 per cent of all the research and development activities in Canada. Since it is in industry that research and development are used for economic purposes, industry does far too little in that field.

Therefore, the government intends to promote the continuous expansion of this work which will be of major importance for Canada and, notwithstanding the effort of the government to restrict expenses in 1970-71, in most departments and agencies, within the framework of the restraint program, the estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce provide for supplementary funds under the IRDIA, PAIT and DIP programs; I will come back to them in a short while.

I have before me a short table which it might be worthwhile to place in Hansard if my hon. friends are agreeable. This short table indicates the amounts requested for 1970-71, compared to estimated expenditures of 1969-70. You will note for 1970-71 an increase of $20.6 million compared to 1969-70. If I may be allowed, Mr. Speaker, I should like to place this short table in the official report of the debates of the House.

Industrial Research Incentives Act

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Text of abovementioned table follows.]

	1969-70	1970-71 ($ million)	Increase
IRDIA	22.7	30.0	7.3	32.2%
PAIT	4.5	15.5	11.0	245.0%
DIP	25.0	27.3	2.3	9.2%
	52.2	72.8	20.6	39.5%

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in the past, the department has established five programs in order to assist research and development and I have before me another short table which I may be permitted, for the benefit of the House, to place in Hansard. This table indicates the increase in expenditures for each of these five programs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

	Estimated expenditures 1969-70	1970-71
1. Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act (IRDIA) Program of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to promote industrial research and development activities	22.7	30.0
2. Industrial Research Assistance Program (IRAP) Program of the National Research Council to increase personnel assigned to industrial research activities	6.4	7.4
3. Defence Industrial Research Program (DIR) Program of the Defence Council to promote industrial research activities	4.2	4.5
4. Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology (PAIT) Program of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to stimulate development of products and new production methods in industry	4.5	15.5
5. Defence Industry Productivity Program (DIP) Program of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to encourage development and manufacturing of military and non-military equipment for export. Share for developmental work	25.0	27.3

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, of course, such programs are constantly under review for improvement. And in 1968, an interdepartmental working group was formed to examine these programs and recommend amendments for improveent. A review of the working group's conclusions and of the action taken with respect to such conclusions was tabled in the House on February 20, 1970. In that report, I indicate amendments which have been made to each of these programs. Today, of course, we shall speak only about the IRDIA program.

The paper to which I have just referred is entitled:

[Mr. Pepin.]

A review of federal government programs to encourage research, development and innovation in Canadian manufacturing industry and expresses a consensus concerning the IRDIA program, that to which we now wish to make some amendments, and I quote the part of the report concerning this program:

There is a continuing need for the general incentive provided by the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act to encourage increases in research and development. While no changes are proposed to IRDIA at the present time, certain technical amendments are required to remove anomalies that have been noted as a result of experience to date.

So the amendments proposed in Bill C-193 which is now before Parliament do not aim at changing the purposes of the act; they are of a strictly technical nature and are suggested to remove the anomalies discovered by the working group I mentioned earlier.

We all know here about this IRDIA program, and that under this program, grants and credits are paid by the government, namely:

(a) 25 per cent of all capital expenditures involved (to acquire property other than real estate), to promote scientific research and development in Canada, and

(b) 25 per cent of the increase in current expenses made in Canada for research and development according to such average expenditures for the five past years.

Those grants are not subject to the federal income tax. Therefore, they should be added to the 100 per cent deduction allowed for research and development expenditures in Canada under the Income Tax Act.

It will be sufficient to quote a few figures to show what has been done in this regard since the act was passed three years ago. The grants were in the following amounts. I have here a small table which I should like to place in Hansard, Mr. Speaker, if the House agrees thereto.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Table referred to above follows:]

	No. of applications	Grants
		$ million
1967-68	111	2.3
1968-69	464	20.2
1969-70	630 (est.)	22.7 (est.)
Total	1,205	45.2
1970-71	not available	$30.0 (est.)

Mr. Pepin: The above table shows that, in the last three years, 1,205 applications have been made for a total of $45.2 million. I should add that, for 1970-71, appropriations of $30 million for that program have been included in my department's estimates. Each grant averages to date $37,700.

Experience has shown that about 78 per 100 of the grants have been used for current expenses. When one tries to estimate the general effect of that program on research and development, one can cite as an example that the amount of research made in Canada reached $80.8 million last year and that it went up this year to $100.8 million. These are current expenses allowable during the period between 1968-69 and 1969-70. The program has therefore led to a significant increase in the amounts earmarked for research in Canada.

[English]

We come now to the four amendments of Bill C-193. The four technical changes—I emphasize they are only technical—are the following: Section 1 has to do with associated corporations. At present, the act states that companies are associated with one another if they are associated for the purposes of the Income Tax Act. This provision was introduced into IRDIA in order to prevent associated companies not dealing with each other at arm's length from divesting themselves of base period expenditures by cycling research and development from one company to another year by year. Experience has shown that this provision creates an unintended hardship on some associated companies which actually deal with one another at arm's length and which cannot therefore influence the base period expenditures of one another. For example, two companies have been disqualified for grants which otherwise would have totalled $176,000 and 15 other companies have suffered reductions in grants totalling $325,000 because of the associated companies provision.

To remove this anomaly, the proposed amendment would permit the minister to decide that companies are not associated for the purposes of the act in cases where they are dealing with one another at arm's length. Apparently there is no other way to do it than by ministerial discretion. I promise my distinguished friend from Prince Edward-Hastings that I would be respectful of traditions and of virtue when I make such decisions.

Mr. Hees: Especially virtue.

Mr. Pepin: The second section has to do with repayments to Her Majesty. Under the act at present, a company may include in its grant application repayments to Her Majesty of amounts advanced to the company under an appropriation act for the purpose of advancing and sustaining the technological capability of the manufacturing industry. As a result, changes have been made in some of the programs under which advances to companies are made. These changes would involve some companies in repayments which would not be in respect of scientific research and development in their entirety. The purpose of the proposed amendment is, therefore, to ensure that only the portion of such repayment expended on research and development will be considered an eligible current expenditure for the purpose of the act.

The third section has to do with amalgamated corporations. Some companies created by statutory amalgamations have applied for grants without including in their base periods the expenditures of their predecessor corporations. If this were allowed under IRDIA, companies would be able to circumvent the intent of the act by divesting themselves of base period expenditures by going through a process of amalgamation. These cases have been administered under other provisions of IRDIA, but for greater clarity, and to make the result more certain, it is proposed that the requirement be covered by specific wording to that purpose. This would be consistent with the intent of IRDIA to increase the level of research and development in Canada upon an equitable basis for all companies.

Finally, clause 4 has to do with the sale or transfer of property. The situation is the following: The act now requires that all or part of a grant paid for the acquisition of capital equipment must be repaid to the Crown if the equipment is sold or otherwise disposed of during a defined period. This provision is considered to work a hardship in some instances, notably in those where a company wishes to form a research subsidiary and the equipment is intended, upon sale or transfer, to be continued in use for research and development.

I had a discussion about this point. People who were not satisfied with this particular aspect of the bill came to see me. Since it would not be consistent with the intent of the act to recover grants as the result of such transactions, it is proposed to amend the act to permit the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to annul the recovery provisions where he is satisfied that the equipment will continue to be wholly attributable to research and development.

So there you are, Mr. Speaker. These are four small, technical changes, and I am keen to see the bill go to committee where possibly my officials could give examples of the advantages of changing the act in respect of these matters.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition are perfectly agreeable to the changes proposed in Bill C-193. I have examined them. They tidy up the existing legislation, making it more operative, and therefore we are in favour of these changes. I want to speak for just a very few minutes on the need for tax incentives to increase productivity in this country in order to do two things; first of all, to help control rising prices, and secondly, to increase employment.

One of the principal reasons prices have been rising abnormally is that our productivity has not been increasing at a satisfactory rate. One of the principal reasons unemployment has been rising at an abnormally fast rate during the past few months is also that insufficient increases in productivity have made prices rise abnormally because costs have been rising far too fast.

Let us take a look for a moment at the productivity picture today and see how it compares with the productivity picture in the recent past. During the past 25 years productivity in Canada has been steadily increasing, due to the introduction into our economy of new machines and techniques year by year. In the 25 years that have passed since the end of the Second World War the average yearly increase in productivity has been 3.4 per cent. During the past ten of those years the average yearly increase was 3.7 per cent. During those past ten years, the first six of them had relatively high yearly increase in productivity, but during the past four years the yearly increase in productivity has fallen steadily, and during the past year, 1969, productivity in Canada increased by only 1.5 per cent.

During these last four years interest rates have been rising rapidly, as we all know only too well, and because of this increase in cost to companies requiring the purchase of new plant and machinery, and production systems to increase their productivity at a satisfactory rate each year, these new machines, plant and production systems have simply not been bought by industry to nearly the extent necessary to enable our yearly increase in productivity to maintain at least the rate of increase year by year of our principal competitors in world trade in the export market and to enable our industry here in Canada to compete against foreign competition

The government, through the Prices and Incomes Commission, has introduced measures to control rises in prices to make our products more competitive, more saleable. But unfortunately the efforts of the Prices and Incomes Commission, as we know only too well, have not proven to be effective. They have not proven to be effective, for three reasons. One is that no sanctions have been provided for those who do not live up to the agreement which industry made recently with the government. Second, as we have seen confirmed only this morning, organized labour has not agreed to give the government the co-operation which it needs to make control of inflation a reality. Third, because management is permitted by the government to add labour increases to its increases in costs, above which it is not allowed to raise prices no matter how high the increases in labour costs are each year, they can simply be added onto the increases in other costs and be perfectly well justified.

I believe the only practical method of controlling inflation, bringing prices to a reasonable level, and making our products competitive is to offer industry tax incentives for keeping price rises in a reasonable vein. I have proposed, and propose again, that industry be permitted a rebate amounting to 2½ per cent of its corporation tax each year if it does not raise prices on the average above the 2½ per cent guideline which the government has said is quite satisfactory to it for prices to be increased year by year, and an additional 1 per cent rebate in corporation tax for each percentage point below the 2½ per cent increase, down to no increase at all, so that if a company did not increase its prices in a year it would recover a tax rebate of 5 per cent of its corporation tax.

This would not cost the taxpayers anything because our tax intake, I believe, would increase rather than decrease. There would be more people working, more goods would be sold, our products would be more competitive against those with whom we are competing, more taxes would be paid by people working instead of their drawing unemployment insurance. There would be more commodity taxation collected because more commodities would be sold, and there would be more corporation taxes collected because greater sales reduce the unit overhead of the products we sell, making it possible for more profits to be taxed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the government to introduce such an incentive in order to make a practical reduction in our very rapidly rising cost elements, and in that way make our products more competitive, make our goods sell more readily against foreign competition in Canada and in the overseas market. In this way we would not only reduce the rapid rate of price increase in this country but rapidly reduce the rate of increase in unemployment which is growing far too fast in our country today.

Mr. Broadbent: May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Suggested discussion of Conflict of Interest Bill; the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin)—Canadian National Railways—shut down of some stations; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)—Research—Suggested grant to Canadian Peace Research Institute.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Notices of Motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO PROVIDE GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

On the order:

October 28, 1969—Mr. Broadbent—The following proposed motion:—That in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of ensuring by law a guaranteed annual income as a means of ensuring that all Canadians will have an income sufficient to provide for a life of dignity.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe there was agreement to let this one stand and retain its place, and to move on to the next notice of motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion stands.

• (5:00 p.m.)

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO BOARDS OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved:

that in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to provide for the appointment of some elected Members of Parliament to the boards of directors of the various Crown corporations and other federal agencies so as to assure a better and more direct control of the legislative power over the executive power, to restore to Parliament part if its authority and to better utilize the various talents of the parliamentarians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, throughout society we notice a series of balances and counterbalances. I think the balance of power here and there in society is very necessary to the maintenance of our sociological system. Certainly, I feel that there is something lacking in the balance of power as far as the running of government business is concerned.

Who really runs the government? We can ask this question and those of us who are here reply to our constituents that on their behalf we come as elected representatives in their interest, to spend their money in the way that the majority of Canadians want it spent. Do we say that with tongue in cheek? When we get here we see that most government affairs are handled by thousands of civil servants who are encrusted in regulations. With the number of ministers we have in the cabinet, I wonder if we really have our finger on everything that is going on in government. Certainly, many ministers run their departments, there is no question about that, but there are others who allow themselves to be run by senior members of their department and there is no doubt about that either. In any case, civil servants certainly have a great deal to say in the running of government.

When we look at the agencies of government, or Crown corporations, these are even further removed from the power of Parliament than is the Civil Service, and from the influence of the people who elected us here. When a question is asked of a minister who answers in Parliament for a Crown corporation, he is obliged to say that he must respect the independence and autonomy of that organization and he passes along the remarks made. When the estimates of Crown corporations are examined in the various committees, what usually happens is that the Crown corporation appears and exposes its program to a group of Members of Parliament who have relatively little research facilities and who know very little about the subject. The members of the committee ask questions in order to inform themselves of what is being done in a particular corporation, but they are not prepared to ask the kind of question that would probe into the day to day running of an organization. As a result, they get a little information, but are not in a position to dig deeper.

It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that if we are sent here to look after the affairs of the country we should be expected to have a little more authority in those Crown corporations. The country expects us to ask questions that are meaningful and which probe into the expenses of those organizations. In the case of the CNR, the CBC or CMHC, we know very little about how the operations are run. I suggest that Members of Parliament have a right to serve on those boards. They should be present to act as a watchdog for the people. Is there any reason why they should not be there? Is a member of Parliament any less capable of serving on a board than those presently appointed? I suggest that the level of talent in this House is such that many members would be more than capable. For example, who on the board of directors of the CNR has any more intimate knowledge of railway operations than the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner)? And who on the board of CMHC knows more about housing and urban matters than the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) or the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens)? I say the talent in this House should be put to its best use, representing the people and looking after their affairs.

I have spoken and written on this subject on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker. On one occasion my remarks were picked up by the Timmins Daily Press of February 12, 1969, the newspaper which serves most of my constituency. An editorial appeared under the title "Public Money—Keep Closer Watch". I should like to quote some of the remarks in this editorial. I certainly will not go through all of it because it deals with the various things I have done in my area and therefore is probably not too interesting to hon. members. However, one part that is pertinent reads as follows:

His most profound suggestion has got to be the parliamentary representation on Crown agencies.

He's probing into an area of administration that is worth millions to Canadian taxpayers. Just consider the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which makes requests for funds topping the hundred million dollar mark annually. That's a lot of loose change.

With income tax time here, a lot of Canadians will be thinking about disappearing dollars and the tax drain. Any accounting that can be given by Crown corporations, and most won't think much of the idea of a politician's doing the accounting, will be in the best interest.

Parliamentary watchdogs, if they are adopted, could save money. But equally important, initially, they can generate just enough scare to keep Crown corporations on their toes, and let their administrators know the public is watching.

It's a good idea.

In recent weeks, one of the committees of this House considered the International Development Agency and the possibility of placing a Member of Parliament on the board. This suggestion was accepted. An editorial against the idea appeared in the Globe and Mail the next day. I replied to that editorial pointing out that there seems to be a certain group in this country who suggest there is something unhealthy about the inclusion of Members of Parliament on these boards. Since we are held responsible for the money spent, I think we should be in a position to have some say in the operation of these agencies. It is not a question of running them, as we would be only one or two voices on the whole board. At least there would be a representative of the people working in their interest.

• (5:10 p.m.)

As a result of the remarks in the Globe and Mail and my letter, several prominent citizens wrote to me in support of the idea of Members of Parliament serving on boards; no one wrote against it. One very prominent man by the name of Thomas Marshall who lives in Oakville, in the constituency of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Whiting), wrote a meaningful letter. This gentleman, who is well respected across the country, submitted certain matters to the Glassco Commission. He is well respected in his community, and writes as follows:

I congratulate you on your letter which appeared in the Globe and Mail on Feb. 25th. I deplore as you do their editorial of Feb. 23rd. It seems to me the editorial writer has little or no knowledge of the day to day workings of a Crown company. If you combine this lack of knowledge with a naive belief that civil servants, because they have been given the stamp of approval by the Civil Service Commission, have a sort of divine right to run the country while thinking at the same time that Members of Parliament are inferior persons not to be completely trusted but who fortunately are not forever with us; you can see how the editorial came out as it did.

It is my opinion from personal observation that far too often the civil servant or Crown Company bureaucrat is ever ready to exercise authority arbitrarily, is excessively secretive and because he looks upon criticism within his own organization as disloyal, these organizations tend to become self-protecting bureaucracies, to be managed for the benefit of the people who run them to the point where in some instances they become almost the personal fief of the man at the top.

He goes on to say in his concluding paragraph:

—The way things are now I think the dice are loaded against the people. By simply stalling, the civil servant can frustrate a Representative of the people in any investigation, for the odds are better than even that, by withholding information that is pertinent but may not have been directly asked for, misinterpreting questions, giving partial or incomplete answers, the investigation can resist conclusion until such time as the hazard of election has removed the Representative.

That is how a man highly respected in his community expresses himself. I have another letter from Mr. Fred M. Halls of London, Ontario, who says:

Thank you on behalf of many of us ordinary citizens for your letter to the Globe & Mail printed in this mornings issue.

Many people feel that our duly elected representative to the three levels of our governing bodies have no control over and, indeed, very little knowledge of the day-to-day operations of not only Crown companies but Departments, Boards, Commissions.

Speaking Federally, there are those who contend that in many matters the Ministers of the Crown are but mouth-pieces for the senior Civil Servants in their various departments—

Please be sure my prayers and best wishes are with you in your good work.

I have read two letters to illustrate the kind of reaction I have been receiving. As I say, I have received no letters contrary to the idea of our placing Members of Parliament on boards of Crown agencies and corporations.

I feel that in this country today there is a desire to create more Crown corporations. I sometimes wonder if the reason behind this is that certain people wish to remove more of the business of government from the scrutiny of Parliament and the representatives of the people. Certainly, that is how it appears. A good example of what I am talking about, of complete disregard for the people, is to be found if one looks at Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. On February 21 of this year, that corporation arbitrarily passed two regulations of which no person would be aware unless he happened to tender an application to build a house or to obtain a mortgage loan. One of those regulations says that if you happen to live in a municipality of more than 12,000 people you will no longer be eligible to borrow money directly from CMHC. The other regulation says that if you are in a municipality with fewer than 12,000 people and if you earn more than $8,000 a year, you will be ineligible to borrow money directly from CMHC. In other words, no one can qualify because, if you think of it, you will see that no one earning less than $8,000 a year can afford to build a house.

This is the kind of regulation that emanates from some of our Crown corporations. They pass these regulations without anyone's concurrence, and then we bear the complaints of the people on our backs. When we tell the minister about complaints like these, his answer is, "After all, this is an independent organization." That simply is not good enough and will not be good enough in future. Over 100 new Members of Parliament came here with the idea of changing the system of government. How can we change anything if the entire reins of government are in the hands of the mandarins. It is impossible to change anything.

I know my time has almost expired, Mr. Speaker, and I know other hon. members wish to debate this subject probably until after six o'clock. This notice of motion will die on the Order Paper unless we take action now. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, and I realize I am not following a usual course of action, that in these circumstances, since much has to be learned about the problem, the matter should be studied by a committee where witnesses from the provinces and elsewhere can be called. For instance, members of the Ontario Legislature serve on the boards of Crown corporations. If we can examine this matter carefully from every point of view, and obtain the points of view of others, we shall be in a much better position to determine what can be done. May I suggest, if it is the unanimous wish of this House, that the subject matter of the notice of motion we are now discussing be referred to the appropriate committee of the House in order that the committee may examine it carefully and ascertain all the facts.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much interest to the debate so far and to the statement of the mover of this private members' notice of motion. I wish to commend him for it because it deals with a fundamental principle, a principle of public administration which will have to be considered carefully and studied by other members of this House. I hope this will be just the beginning of the debate. Whatever the forum of the debate, the question is of such fundamental importance that it must be weighed carefully and thoroughly before legislative action is taken on it.

In principle I support the motion, Mr. Speaker. In recent years we have seen the growth of the public service. We have seen, really, a major public service and a lesser public service growing up. Numerically, the members of the major Public Service are those employed in the regular departments of government under the control of a minister of the Crown who reports to Parliament according to the established constitutional principle of executive responsibility. The other civil servants, while they may be numerically fewer, in many ways have enjoyed growing influence and superior conditions of renumeration and employment. I refer to the field of the Crown corporations.

The reasons for establishing Crown corporations are well known and have been cited in numerous textbooks. A Crown company like Air Canada is established because we want it to be like a competitive private firm. In many ways it is in competition with private industry and therefore has to adopt a corporate framework. Its members must have the ability to make managerial decisions that will enable the company to hold its own in the world of private enterprise. The Polymer Corporation was created within the same framework. It was created under the exigencies of wartime to develop a formula for synthetic rubber to meet an urgent national priority. It was given the necessary capital to do so. It was given encouragement, personnel and access to the technical processes. It has established a record of success of which Canadians are justly proud.

• (5:20 p.m.)

In between the purely commercial type of Crown corporation, the government has developed a hybrid of another sort. I do not intend to be derogatory, quite to the contrary. I refer to the National Capital Commission which is officially described as a Crown corporation. Its responsibility is not like that of a commercial enterprise which is selling a product. The Commission is to carry out a federal purpose within an area defined by an act of this Parliament as a national capital region. That federal purpose is, in its application, the acquisition of a green belt for long-term planning, major national parks such as Gatineau Park and Vincent Massey Park and planning and development of government buildings. It gives guidance and grants to the municipalities for various public services considered to be in the interests of the nation. It establishes national monuments. This type of Crown corporation has come a long way from the purely competitive world of Air Canada and Polymer Corporation.

In addition we have the Defence Research Board. This Crown corporation attempts to apply capital, which is urgently needed for the training of our scientific manpower, to the unlocking of those mysteries and knowledge which are the key to the technology of a modern twentieth century nation.

The reasons for establishing Crown corporations are numerous. They relate to efficiency and the need to parallel the structure of private industry itself. They are often motivated by something a little less elevated than this. Those who direct them are often concerned about the ability to engage personnel without the bureaucratic organization of the Public Service Commission. I am not one of those who berate the Public Service Commission. It would be quite impossible to apply a merit system across the board without an agency like the Public Service Commission to make sure that there are uniform rules, appointments, promotions, hiring and training of staff. By going to the Crown corporation form, it is possible to come out from under the umbrella of the Public Service Commission for these personnel functions. They enjoy a great deal more discretion.

At one time I was a president of a national association of civil servants. Among the greatest frustrations we as a staff association had were those based on the managerial decisions of some of the Crown corporations. In many cases the Crown corporation was less autocratic in its behaviour, less demanding, less democratic and less consistent in the application of personnel policies than the public service.

Another reason that leads many people to prefer the Crown corporation over the public service is the ability to pay higher rates of salaries, especially to top management personnel. I do not believe that we should ever try to skimp on salaries. I believe the Governor of the Bank of Canada is worth the salary he receives. To do the job we expect of him, the head of the CNR must command the kind of salary which he receives. I do not believe that comparable positions can be found by a parallel within a deputy minister's structure of the public service. I do believe there has been an over-all inhibiting effect within the public service, especially at the senior levels, because of the application of consistency. This is because the Deputy Minister of Finance must be the senior paid deputy and others must be slotted in beneath him. Nowhere in the world is there any such orderly arrangement with Crown corporations. Crown corporations have the freedom to attract capital, recruit, select, train, promote, compete, choose the corporate forms and make the corporate decisions that are essential in some commercial types of operation in order that they can be successful in the purpose for which they were established.

Along with this Crown corporation idea, and the format which has developed, has come the problem of public accountability. Those who maintain that a Crown corporation is responsible to its shareholders are trying to give credence to a myth. The shareholders of the Crown corporations cannot be comparable to the shareholders of a private industry. The shareholders of a Crown corporation are the public and the government. Through the minister responsible there is a nominal reporting, and in many cases it is no more than that, to account to this place for the operation.

As the mover of the motion said, we have all had the experience of the operation of a Crown corporation giving us some concern, going to the minister and the minister replying that it is an independent body and there is nothing much he can do about it. I suspect that many Crown corporations, depending upon the personality of the man or woman in charge, exercise degrees of individual independence that are hard to reconcile with the formal structure of public accountability. It is to the credit of the hon. member that he has tried to propose a solution. I do not believe he is the first to propose it. My colleague the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) had a motion on the Order Paper to do the same thing.

I believe the solution lies in part along the lines that have been indicated. On the board of directors of such corporations can be placed members who also have responsibility in this House. This is breaking new ground, but it is ground that has been broken in the province of Ontario. In the case of the province of Ontario, every Crown corporation established in that province has one or more members of the provincial legislature on its board of directors. Examples of this are the Niagara Parks Commission, the Racing Commission—

Mr. Fairweather: The Milk Board.

Mr. Francis: —the Liquor Control Board. My friend opposite had some other suggestion.

Mr. Fairweather: I thought milk should come before liquor.

Mr. Francis: I thought the hon. member referred to liquor. I obviously did him an injustice in that respect. Knowing him as I do, I should not have made such a quick reference. The fact is that something has to be done to try to bring some degree of relationship between the legislative branch and the Crown corporation. The gap has become too wide.

I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) made some comments not too long ago that one would have to define carefully the role of such a member, the principle he would apply and the course of conduct he would have to follow. It has been alleged there would be a conflict of interest. I cannot buy the conflict of interest argument. The man or woman elected to this House does not serve anywhere else. The problem is that he or she does not have an opportunity to gain access to information that is essential to serve the public interest and on which judgments are based. This is where the gap lies.

As far as I am aware, the system in the province of Ontario has worked tolerably well. I am one of those who believe that if we were to adopt this procedure, no additional pay should be given members serving on such a board. This would be contrary to the practice in the province of Ontario. I believe that the pay, allowances and pensions of the members of this House should be decided here. There should be a uniform practice. However, additional responsibilities could be placed on members, based on their own experience, which would give them encouragement to specialize in areas in which they are most competent.

I believe that a very useful principle of public administration could be developed by the adoption of this motion. Individual members could be encouraged and trained to seek out those areas in which they are competent. When members are named to board of directors, I hope it will be on the basis of more than one political persuasion: I hope members from the opposition parties in this House would be named in order to give a balance in making reviews and in trying to determine how the public interest is involved.

I think that anyone who has studied the change in the concept of corporate directors—the province of Ontario recently had occasion to change the law in this regard—will admit there is a much greater degree of responsibility thrust upon those who accept directorships of corporations. Such appointments are not always a bed of roses. However, I think anyone chosen for such task will find a great challenge, an opportunity to contribute in breaking new ground in public administration. Members of Parliament would be able to develop a relationship between the committees of this House and that body which has been referred to by such groups as the Canadian Tax Foundation and others as the lesser public service of Canada, a growing number of people whose accountability to those who established them, at least in regard to some nominal ownership of the operation, is a rather tenuous one in many instances.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am participating in this debate as a result of popular demand, because there will be very few opportunities for my colleagues to hear what I have to say on this matter between now and Easter. I have become interested in taking part principally because the Notice of Motion of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) has been on the Order Paper for some time and resulted from an initiative of mine. I did not mean to detract from anything that he was doing, but I was able to persuade my colleagues in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, when the committee was discussing the International Development Research Centre, that it might be very useful to have a Member of Parliament serve on the board.

This, as the hon. member who has just spoken said, caused some consternation on the part of the minister concerned and I thought for a moment he was going to tear the purple off the cloths. However, the minister was faced with a substantial majority in favour, and after entering several caveats about having members on boards he graciously allowed the committee report to be adopted by Parliament.

My feeling about this matter is not totally in accord with that of the hon. member for Cochrane. I do not want members appointed to boards and commissions merely to act as a brake on or a watchdog over federal spending. There are many avenues, though perhaps they need updating, through which Parliament can check spending. Rather, I looked upon this hopefully as a very useful opportunity to provide the benefit of what might be called a rather more sensitive antenna, if I may use that expression, of boards and commissions. Let me give an example. When the B and B Commission was issuing questionnaires, without wanting in any way to be boastful I felt it would have been useful had they consulted the Member of Parliament concerned—namely myself—before asking high school students in the largest community in my riding to find out, among other things, how their parents voted at the last general election.

Research was undertaken without any consultation with the sitting member and the commission itself was embarrassed about this. Nothing partisan was involved, but had they had the courtesy to seek advice from the incumbent member, a little more groundwork could have been done, a little more educating or preparing, if that is a better word, in the community for the type of research questionnaire that was distributed, as I say, without notice. The riding of Fundy-Royal survived this questionnaire but I think it would have been far more productive had this opportunity been afforded.

Another committee that I think would have served this Parliament immeasurably better is the committee dealing with drugs. I say this without detracting one bit from the quality of people who served on the Le Dane Committee on Drugs. However, Members of Parliament could have been provided with a great opportunity to travel across the country seeking information on what is a major social problem facing us today in this particular field. I get carried away and regard certain things as major problems, and I presume others would pick different aspects of social malaise as being more pressing than the drug problem. However, I happen to think that the drug problem is a matter of very grave concern.

When a committee or commission was set up in the United Kingdom to study this matter, a couple of Members of Parliament were appointed to it. I do not know whether they were government members, but I do not think that matters. What is important is to have an avenue of communication, to be in touch with parliamentary thinking, and to have some degree of liaison as such bodies move around the country. To carry this to its logical conclusion, I think that in many cases commissions made up of members, or committees made up of parliamentarians, could serve the public just as usefully as the well-established technique of a royal commission.

Another problem faced by the federal administration is that of centralism of decision-making. This, again, is not to criticize what I believe to be the finest public service serving any government in the western world. I believe, because of the huge area of this country and the regional problems, in too many instances decisions are made in the central capital without sufficient sensitivity to conditions in what I might call the edges, if you like—certainly the economic edges of the country.

Last December the Film Board made a stupid decision about user fees for films. There was no way, it seemed to me, that ordinary Members of Parliament could get across to the Film Board that it might be fine to make that decision for Montreal or Toronto, but that the imposition of user fees in the province of New Brunswick would be disastrous. I might say this decision has been rescinded, and I think that is the proper course for the government to have taken. There was no way we could get this point across to the board itself. It seemed quite insensitive to the fact that in provinces other than Quebec and Ontario, in many instances the National Film Board is the only way for the public and for school children, and so on, to obtain any cultural experience whatsoever.

Had that decision not been rescinded, I am told by the provincial department of education it would have meant the end of audio-visual education in New Brunswick for this year. I am satisfied that had the Film Board had a Member of Parliament or two on its board, no such insensitive decision would have been made. This is not a matter of a policy measure; it is one of people really understanding the prime, or core issue. So I am glad to have been importuned to take part in this debate.

I congratulate the hon. member for having introduced this motion. I am a little disturbed by one phrase in his Notice of Motion, that is, "control of the legislative power over the executive power." I am not going to quibble about semantics in this regard, but I do not think we are legislators any more. We could have lots of speeches on this matter, but I think the way for control by Parliament over the cabinet would be by a greatly beefed-up committees system with very much more independent advice for committees. Having made that little qualification, I think the hon. member showed good initiative in giving Parliament this opportunity to get some things off its mind about boards and commissions.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to compliment the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) for putting forward this motion. I support the objectives contained in it. As I see the resolution, it is aimed at giving the public more control over public enterprises such as Crown corporations by the appointment of Members of Parliament to the boards of those corporations. I want the subject matter of this motion to go to the committee for detailed study, so I will confine my remarks to two or three minutes.

While I favour the principle the hon. member has advanced in his motion, I am rather dubious about some of the techniques which I understand would be involved. I wonder at the wisdom of appointing individual Members of Parliament—politicians—to boards of Crown corporations. Would this not tend to put additional powers and advantages into the hands of individual politicians, perhaps to the detriment of other members of the House? I do not know, but this is a criticism that I imagine might be raised in some quarters.

Second, is it altogether wise to put politicians in the position of being able to influence the operations of highly technical, in some areas, Crown businesses or public enterprises? Many Members of Parliament are already occupied with committee work, some members being on two or three important committees. They also have House business and constituency responsibilities. I think it would be very hard for them to find additional time in which to be effective members of boards of Crown corporations. Instead of placing Members of Parliament on the boards of Crown corporations, we would do better to consider sharpening up and adding considerably to the powers of committees of the House, enabling those committees to be much more searching and effective in dealing with ministers or those who report for Crown corporations.

I agree with what the hon. member on the government side said a short while ago, that there should and must be a closer relationship between the House of Commons and Crown corporations. As I wish to see this matter go to committee, let me summarize by saying I support the principle proposed by the hon. member, although I have some doubts about the technique. I resume my seat now and urge that a vote be taken so the matter can be further studied by the committee.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I share the comments and the feelings of the hon. member who spoke before me in complimenting my colleague who moved this motion. It was not my intention to speak on the motion, but having seen that there is no shortage of speakers this afternoon, and the likelihood of the motion being talked out getting stronger and stronger, I felt I should speak on it.

I did not write to the hon. member and express my support, but I have spoken to him personally to indicate that this is the kind of matter to which we should give more consideration. I have indicated to him the frustrations that one feels when serving on the Public Accounts Committee, which is faced with a situation that of course occurs after the fact—after the money has been spent and after the mistake has been made. We as members of the Public Accounts Committee have to make searching inquiries. We often find how difficult it is to get the kind of information we want from Crown corporations.

I agree with my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who has indicated that on many occasions it is necessary to have Crown corporations perform particular services. I submit, in support of the hon. member who moved this motion that it is equally true that Members of Parliament should be sitting on these corporations, not with the view of providing more money but with the view of doing the job we are required to do here, that is, to serve the public interest.

I have found the Auditor General's report to be quite unfair. I have told him in person, and I intend to tell him again before he brings in his 1969 report, that his reports are unfair and one-sided because we hear only one side of the case when it comes before the committee. We do not hear the other side until two or three years later. In the meantime, the contents of such an unfair report are spread across the country.

Let me refer to a recent situation. We directed questions to officials of the Department of National Revenue on eight different points. There had been eight different criticisms made, and in respect of each of them the Department of National Revenue was able to give a satisfactory answer. For a period of two years we had to sit back and observe the results of that report all across the country. We find the press leaping upon this kind of thing like over-zealous galloping gourmets. This is the kind of thing they want and the kind of thing they spread across the country. This might be fine, but I think it is unfair. To get that kind of fair information from Crown corporations, and to put that kind of defence before committees, I think it is necessary that we serve on these boards.

Let us not talk about semantics and the fact that we have committee work, work in the House of Commons and constituency mail to answer. The hon. member is simply suggesting a means of getting a point of view across. Let us study the question, and let somebody who perhaps has more time than hon. members to spend on this matter come up with a way in which such a system could be implemented so that the public interest could be best protected. It is for this reason I am speaking this afternoon. This is a matter which I think should be referred to a committee.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) for the idea behind this motion. I am afraid, however, that is as far as I can go. So far as I am concerned, he spoiled his motion when he added the words, "so as to assure a better and more direct control of the legislative power over the executive power", and so on. I disagree with the motive contained therein. Had he not included the second part of his motion, I would have agreed with it.

It seems to me directors are directors; it does not matter whether they are directors of a Crown corporation or of any other company. They have a job to do. That job is to run the company to the best of their ability in accordance with the objectives for which the company was established. In the case of a Crown corporation, the corporation is set up by an act of Parliament to achieve certain objectives. The directors should be left with the right to achieve those objectives. The matter of whether or not the directors should be Members of Parliament is irrelevant.

One of the best members of the board of the BBC in not so recent years was Sir Harold Nicholson. If one were to read his intensely interesting memoirs one would find he did immensely valuable work for the BBC as a director while he was a Member of Parliament. That affiliation did not necessarily play much part in his role because I believe he was sort of an independent quasi Labourite who was able to carry out this function during the coalition government of the war years. I do not know whether or not this would have been possible in peacetime.

However, he acted as an invaluable informal liaison between the cabinet and the BBC during all the war years when it was necessary that the BBC try to help reflect government policy. Above all, he was an independent director of the BBC chosen for his independence, ability and sense of judgment. So, while I am for Members of Parliament being allowed to be directors of Crown corporations, I am not for the suggestion, as I read it, contained in the motion which indicates that in some way these directors would still be responsible to the House of Commons. I do not think that should be the situation at all.

In the case of Crown corporations, I believe if Members of Parliament were directors they should, like any other directors, be responsible to Parliament under the terms of the act under which the particular Crown corporation was created. The objective, of course, should not be the control by legislative power over executive power. Executive power should have nothing to do with a Crown corporation other than to change the rules under which the Crown corporation functions or to suggest to Parliament that the act under which a Crown corporation operates should be changed from year to year.

But God help us if we allow the executive to dabble in Crown corporations, especially in more sensitive areas like the CBC and the National Film Board. We all know of too many instances where in some countries information services became disguised or undisguised propaganda machines for government. This has not happened here, and it would be a poor day if it did.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): How could one member have such an influence?

Mr. Osler: One member probably could create a nasty atmosphere of fear under some circumstances. If such a member were independent, I would have nothing against a Member of Parliament sitting on a board. I served on the CBC board for 3½ years and would have been very thankful had there been one or two Members of Parliament serving on that board, because the board members felt isolated from Parliament to whom they were responsible.

As I understand it, the worst cross we had to bear was that a member of the executive attempted to meddle too much in internal matters of the CBC. I could give you a beautiful example. There was an occasion on which we had a most difficult situation. This matter was actually resolved by the board of directors at a moment when word was received that a member of the executive had acted over-zealously. It was necessary for us to react and forget our resolution of the problem in order to keep the corporation from being tampered with by government.

I have absolutely strong feelings about the executive meddling in the affairs of a Crown corporation. If the executive wished to change something in respect of a Crown corporation, the executive would have to bring the matter before Parliament and have Parliament make the change. If we were to allow the executive to meddle in the affairs of a Crown corporation, we would be treading on very dangerous ground which could become sinister ground if allowed to continue unchecked. This is the reason I cannot accept the motion, although I would welcome another motion by the hon. member if it were differently worded, because I believe the underlying idea has great merit.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order. As I understand it, if a Notice of Motion is not talked out before six o'clock it can be voted on and passed; and if it is talked out, it dies. However, in the case of a bill, if the bill is not talked out it is referred to a committee. There is no provision for this matter to go to a committee. I have the feeling from the discussion which has taken place that members would like to have the matter discussed further in committee. Therefore I am prepared to move a motion to that effect, if it is in order.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say a word or two in this regard. This would be a motion to change the procedures of the House of Commons in respect of the method of handling motions before the House. Without a vote in the House I do not think we could change the procedures of the House of Commons. I believe there are other members here who wish to comment on the very interesting subject which the hon. member has raised.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

[Mr. Osler.]

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ASSOCIATED CORPORATIONS, RECOVERY OF GRANTS, CONTENTS OF AGREEMENTS, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-193, to amend the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the bill before us this evening. It might afford a reasonable amount of pleasure to hon. members to know that I have a cold and that therefore my comments will be briefer than they otherwise would have been. I hope, however, that their substance will not have altered and that there might even be some improvement in it.

The minister has already referred to the undoubted benefits to any modern economy of a country having a sophisticated, imaginative and vigorously financed research and development program. I shall not add to these generally true observations except to say they are true. There can be no doubt that in any industrial country in the world research and development not only plays a leading role in establishing current levels of employment and economic well-being but is of crucial importance to future levels of economic development and well-being. That principle does not need further comment.

I would now like to pass on to three or four specific areas. First of all I would like the minister—I assume he will conclude with a few observations before we vote—to really try to justify the IRDIA program. The judgment of the members of my party is that the IRDIA program represents millions of dollars down the drain. In terms of government finance there is not a great deal of money involved, but none the less these dollars are being wasted.

Why are they being wasted? In our judgment they are being wasted because they are being spent unnecessarily. Overwhelmingly, these funds are being spent to subsidize research and development in the private sector of our economy which would have been undertaken in any case by private firms. This judgment is very serious in its implications. Whether or not it is completely right I am not sure, but to my knowledge at least the government has not presented to the House or elsewhere any argumentation justifying the funds spent.

What is required is not a general outlay of funds providing benefits to any firm that would have carried out research and development anyway, but to make a very careful diagnosis of the Canadian economy and its potential, then make specific grants, and rely on them only. This the government does do in its other programs, but it seems to consider that having a twofold approach is necessary; a broad, general, over-all approach plus a number of specific programs.

It is the judgment of many economists that the general approach is a waste of public funds. It really amounts to the public subsidizing a private industry for what it would have done on its own. Although this program represents a small amount of money in terms of government spending—$30 million—it is no small sum to the average Canadian in terms of what the same amount of money might have been used for in alternative programs such as housing or a number of other socially meaningful uses.

As an example of this I should like to refer to the question that I put on the Order Paper in this session and to which I received an answer from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. My question concerned last year's and the present year's expenditure of funds on this program. For 1968-69 the expenditure forecast by the department was $31,300,000, and the actual expenditure was $19,592,000. For the current year there is a slight increase in what the government intends to spend, but I suspect a greater percentage of the funds will not have been used when the year concludes. My point is that this is a relatively small amount of money going into research and development in the yearly program, and to say the least it is not a major source of inspiration for research and development in this country.

I would think that if a careful look were taken at the companies which actually used these funds last year, it would probably be seen that about two-thirds of this $19 million going out from the federal treasury went to firms that would have spent that amount of money on their own without any encouragement by the government. Therefore, my conclusion is that this public money was wasted. However, the minister might be able to reply to that point and show us, in some fashion that has not yet been made apparent, that the funds were necessary to get research and development under way.

On this same point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a specific request of the minister. About a month ago he tabled a document which was really a summary of a research group's analysis of the government's research and development programs, which consisted of four pages plus a one-page abbreviation of what the government has done since in terms of that study's findings. Would the minister consider tabling the whole study so that the people of Canada, and more particularly the members of this House, would have an opportunity to take a serious look at what was presumably a serious study into the efficacy of the federal government's research and development programs?

The next point I would like to make is related to the first general observation about the need for significant capital investment in research and development and the overwhelming lack of success on the part of industry in Canada in doing research and development—and when I say industry I mean both foreign-owned and Canadian-owned industry. I suspect that at this point the minister might be jotting down the fact that if we look at the foreign-owned sector of the economy and compare it with Canadian-owned industry, we will find that it does more research and development than Canadian firms. This simply attests to a fact mentioned by many economists, that the main fault of Canadian capitalism is Canadian capitalists, who have been quite negligent in striving to become vigorous entrepreneurs able to face international competition.

We simply cannot go on talking about the present and the past: we must be concerned about the future. I suggest the minister should indulge in some serious thinking about one of the reports put out by his department which shows that American-owned subsidiaries in this country do much less research and development than their parent firms in the United States. I refer specifically to the report entitled, "Statistical Data on Research and Development in Canada," compiled by the former Department of Industry in 1967. The pages are not numbered, but I refer in particular to table 13. This table shows conclusively that American-owned industry in Canada—as an example, the petroleum industry—does considerably less research and development here compared with that industry in the United States, but even so it does much more here than is done by its lazy competitors in Canadian-owned firms.

The important point, in my judgment and the judgment of my party, is that it is essential for the survival of this country that not only do we get more control of the Canadian economy as such, but that we begin to get control in the crucial new areas of industrial development in which research and development programs play such an important role. We need a Canada Development Corporation that will mobilize Canadian capital to invest in new and growing sectors of the economy, which will provide a foundation for Canada from which it can launch into meaningful, successful competition in the international market and get us beyond the old, traditional branch plant structure.

One of the most important aspects of the Canada Development Corporation's activity would be to mobilize teams of experts for research and development programs. So far the minister has not had anything to say about this. Perhaps he is waiting for the cabinet report on what the government intends to do about the general problem of foreign investment. If he does not comment on this matter tonight, I look forward to his comments on it in the not too distant future. It is a serious point on which the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and other members of this party have spoken at length.

Dealing specifically with resource industry, I ask the minister this question: If it is the case, and I think it is, that one of the most exciting and interesting developments in modern industry is that which is taking place in the petro-chemical field, and if it is also the case that we have substantial amounts of petroleum in Canada, and further, if it is also the case that most of this industry happens to be foreign-owned, would the minister and the government give serious consideration to bringing the industry within public ownership?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

I ask the minister to consider this question and forget for the moment all the ideological implications, all the serious kinds of moral and socialistic arguments that could be made on the subject of public ownership. I ask him to forget these entirely and to deal solely with the question of an independent Canadian economy and the need to provide meaningful research and development programs that could stimulate real economic growth for Canada in the expanding international market.

In other words, instead of having an industry, in this case the petroleum industry, which is foreign-owned, which does the bulk of its research and development south of the border, would it not be desirable at this time to think not about nationalizing all Canadian industry but bringing this important, modern industry within public ownership and providing substantial funds to do research and development in the petro-chemical field? It is not just gas stations that are involved with petroleum; they are a very minor aspect of the industry. If publicly owned, I suggest we should provide millions of dollars for research and development in this industry and see where we can go as a country in the international field. This suggestion is being very seriously considered by my party.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I am not asking the minister an ideological question about the merits of public ownership as opposed to private ownership in general, but specifically at this time when the hour is late, to say the least, in terms of maintaining Canadian economic independence, whether he thinks this might be one area in which public ownership might be precisely the answer. I am asking whether this might not be the best means to regain Canadian independence and to provide research and development leading to real economic growth for Canada in one sector of our economy. To repeat the point I made earlier, most of the research and development in this industry is being done south of the border. Because it is foreign-owned there is always a net outflow of capital south of the border as well. Public ownership could be the answer, both to getting more research and retaining profits.

I am pleased to note one improvement in the government's research and development program. For the past couple of years our party has been critical of the net financial advantage the government was giving to military research and development. This has been redressed and what we have now is equality of condition between research and development in the military and non-military sectors. We no longer give the military an advantage or encourage more money to go into it and I compliment the minister and the government on this change.

The only further step to be taken is for the government to get out of the whole business of military research and development. It seems to me it is about time our country joined with others in taking this imaginative step. Let us say to the world that we shall cease this bloody activity and apply all our financial resources in research and development to the non-military sector. That is all, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the minister's reply.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a few remarks to the changes proposed to the Industrial Research Development Incentives Act in the bill before us this evening because I consider it an extremely important measure so far as business development in Canada is concerned. I listened to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and was rather surprised at some of his circular arguments.

Mr. Broadbent: Like what?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): He tells us that if the money for research purposes had not been put up by the government, research would have been done anyway. I find it a little difficult to understand how the hon. member was present in the boardrooms when decisions were made whether or not to go ahead with research, and how he would know whether the decisions were made on the basis of assistance available from the federal government. It is very difficult for any of us to know the exact basis on which a decision was made, but we do know that industrial development research is increasing in Canada. This is the objective sought by the government in making this assistance available.

The hon. member said something about the problem of American industrial development in Canada and the advantage the Americans have because of their research programs. I shall comment on this subject a little later, but I think that is exactly what this measure is trying to correct. If Canada is to maintain any kind of control over its economy, it will do so because we have industries that are in the forefront in patent and industrial development research.

I think it appropriate, while examining these changes, that we make some comment on and some examination of the whole subject of industrial research in Canada. Exports are the key to the health of the Canadian economy. It is well for Canadians to be aware of the changes taking place in our economy in the last few years. At one time much of our population was engaged in farming for a living. Now only 7 per cent of Canadians make their living from farming. To take its place, we have had to invest more and more in the extraction of raw materials and the sale of these at home and abroad, as well as in the development of our labour force in the manufacturing industries. Now, 23 percent of our labour force is in manufacturing and 75 per cent of our exports come from this area.

Canadians are blessed with a tremendous advantage in the abundant supply of raw materials, but liabilities come with these which are very serious. Our small population dictates an aggressive world trade policy if we are to survive. Mass production techniques mean mass markets, and the only way we can participate in these is to get into markets held by other countries. To do this we need up-to-date and distinctive products. We cannot compete by means of cheap labour because we do not have that, and we cannot compete with a large domestic market to absorb initial production costs.

Merchandisers tell us that on the average a new product introduced on the market today will have a life of only five years before it becomes obsolete. In order to be ready with a new product at the right time, manufacturers must resort to a tremendous amount of research and development on new product lines. In the past, many countries of the world, including Canada, have spent very little on product research. John Kenneth Galbraith says that the strength of American industry is based on the fact that 95 per cent of the research on product development is done by the Americans and 5 per cent of it by the other free nations of the world. This is a factor which gives American industry a tremendous competitive advantage, making it possible for it to establish satellite industries around the world to produce goods designed by Americans, employing American labour and bringing profits to Americans. Canada is one of the many nations that has felt the impact.

If we employ Canadians at this level of industrial development, we make it possible for our own specialists and highly trained people to remain in Canada and to foster Canadian-owned industries. There is probably no more important way to maintain a Canadian hold on Canadian industry and the development of Canadian products and manufacturing techniques than the fostering of Canadian product research. This fact was belatedly recognized when the change in the Income Tax Act was made in 1962, permitting special incentives to corporations which allowed them to deduct an additional allowance equal to 50 per cent of the increase of expenditure in Canada for scientific research over that of the previous year.

As a result of the favourable experience with this tax incentive, in 1967 the government enacted a new program to continue providing general incentives for scientific research and development after the tax incentive expired in 1966. The Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act was passed in March, 1967, to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research development in Canada.

This act is administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and provides for Canadian corporations to receive cash grants or credits against federal income tax liabilities equal to (a) 25 per cent of all capital expenditures for new property other than land for scientific research or development in Canada, and (b) 25 per cent of the increase in current expenditures in Canada for scientific research and development over the average of such expenditures in the preceding five years.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the act appears to have been successful. In 1968-69 total expenditures for research and development by government, industry and universities was $952 million. That represents a very substantial improvement over previous years, although I agree with my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby that this is not enough to put Canada into the forefront of industrial development. We have to do much more.

Each year Canada must provide 235,000 new jobs for Canadians coming on to the labour market. A very great number of these will have to be provided in industry, and many of them in industries that export abroad. The government is anxious in this case to foster continuing growth in industrial research and development which will be of vital importance to Canada. Clearly, despite a period of austerity and a freeze in the spending of most government departments, the government has authorized additional funds for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for purposes of industrial research and development through programs such as IRDIA, IRAP, DIR, PAIT AND DIP. I shall shortly describe what these letters mean. The government is proceeding to extend patent research. The total amount estimated for 1969-70 for these programs comes to $52.2 million. In 1970-71 the amount expended will increase to $72.8 million, an increase of nearly 40 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I concur most heartily in the government's efforts in this direction and only wish the program had been started many years earlier and that the expenditures were now very much larger.

A few moments ago I mentioned some initials to describe the patent and research development programs the government is undertaking. Perhaps I should enlarge on what I said. This is what the government is doing at the present time. First, this evening we are dealing with the amendment to the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, known as IRDIA. Second, there is the Industrial Research Assistance Program known as IRAP. This is a program for the National Research Council to increase the number of research personnel in industry.

Third, there is the Defence Industrial Research Program known as DIR. That program is to encourage research in defence industries. Fourth, there is a program for the advancement of industrial technology. Its name is PAIT, and it is a program to encourage the development of new products and processes in industry. Lastly, there is the Defence Industry Production Program, known as DIP, which is to encourage development and production for purposes of defence and civil export. These are the programs which in total will cost us $52.2 million during the current year.

In 1968 a special study group was established to investigate the relationship of these programs with each other and the needs of Canadian industry, and to recommend any desirable changes. A summary of the working group's conclusion and the action taken in respect of them was tabled in the House in February of this year. This report said in part:

There is a continuing need for the general incentive provided by the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act to encourage increases in research and development. While no changes are proposed to IRDIA at the present time, certain technical amendments are required to prevent problems that have been noted as a result of experience to date.

Although no changes are proposed to IRDIA at the present time, nevertheless certain technical amendments are being presented today for consideration. I wish to remind the House that the basic provisions for this bill are to increase research and development work in Canada. It is not always possible to measure the exact results of the IRDIA program. This is easier under a program such as PAIT, where successes have been counted over failures at the rate of two to one.

All in all, in Canada during the current year Canadians will spend about $952 million on research and development programs. This may sound like a lot of money, but the United States will spend $25 billion under this heading, more than 25 times what we in Canada will spend. But we can say that the Canadian program is growing and we can see that our research and development assistance is producing results. In particular, we can see substantial growth in Canadian companies that are investing heavily in research and development programs.

A recent review, Mr. Speaker, of federal government programs to encourage research development and innovation in Canadian manufacturing industries was undertaken by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The review states in part:

> The need to achieve a satisfactory rate of economic growth in an increasingly competitive environment makes it essential that Canadian government policies and programs encourage increased innovation by Canadian industry.

This will require improved incentives to encourage a greater readiness in Canadian industry to change established patterns of operation, to introduce new marketable products and to specialize and rationalize. Experience over the past ten years with the various government and incentive support programs indicates that improved production and marketing performance can be achieved through incentive programs extending over the entire product cycle, that is, in research, development, preproduction and marketing. The changes in the bill before us will contribute to the development of Canada's economy and deserve the support of members on all sides of this House.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words in closing the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I remind the House that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, may I make a brief comment? I believe Canada is spending less money on research and development than some of our industrial competitors are spending. I suggest that in some areas we could well afford to spend more. For example, let us consider atomic energy plants. We have, for better or worse, opted for a particular type of atomic energy plant in Canada. It is obvious that the rest of the world has decided to adopt another method of producing atomic energy. Not being in a position to utilize the technical innovations of other countries, we have of necessity had to develop our own system. Nevertheless, I suggest we have been somewhat lax in this field because we ought to have been spending more money on it. I am therefore glad to see introduced a bill which will encourage industrial research and make more money available for it.

A short while ago the cabinet decided that we should not in this country build an intense neutron generator. Whether that was a correct decision remains to be seen. I have the distinct impression that if we are to remain leaders in the field we have chosen, a field we have made especially our own, we shall have to undertake special research. If we wish to sell to other countries plants of the type we have developed, we must be prepared to undertake more research to keep those plants in the forefront of development.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, Canada has sold some Canadian-style atomic energy plants to Pakistan and India. It now appears that Belgium is to build a second atomic energy plant in Pakistan. May I ask why we were not invited to build it? Why are we not selling that second plant? Is something wrong with the first one, or do those who bought our original plants feel they must use plants of the type used by the rest of the world? If we wish to remain in the forefront of this field and sell our atomic energy plants and expertise abroad, we shall have to undertake more research. Pakistan's first nuclear power plant with a capacity of 137 megawatts is nearing completion in Karachi, West Pakistan. Built with Canadian aid, the Karachi atomic power station will swing into commercial power production early in the autumn of this year. Belgium is building the second plant.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Is our Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce not on the job, attempting to sell this country another plant, or do they have some doubts about our capacity to build these plants, keep them up-to-date and equal to atomic energy plants in the rest of the world?

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there are some theoretical possibilities for increasing the efficiency of the type of atomic energy plant which we have in Canada. We must do more in a practical sense, to develop these methods. I would not like to think that we have chosen wrongly in this regard. A lot of Canadian money has been invested in this field. Having chosen this field and having invested a lot of Canadian money, talent and expertise, and having committed our industry to this particular line, we should be spending a great deal more in this area so that these possibilities may be developed in future Canadian atomic energy plants.

As a further illustration I wish to refer to a booklet dealing with the study of intense neutron generators. I believe this study was carried out with encouragement from the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) when he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is suggested in this study that if we are to keep our engineers in Canada, we must provide them with jobs and a certain volume of business. This would keep them occupied and carry the industry, if you will. If we do not sell plants abroad, the volume in Canada will not be sufficient to do this. It is a similar situation to the chicken and the egg. I suggest it is necessary to obtain orders from other countries. To do this we must spend more money on research and development. I hope the minister will comment on this aspect of the matter.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): There are a few comments which I wish to make, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased with the way the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) spoke about what has been done in Canada in the field of nuclear energy. When speaking in the budget debate last week I did not get entirely on the record the fact that certain individuals in Canada are attacking our scientific community in the field of nuclear reactors and hydro power. I feel that Canadians working in atomic energy are top scientists and are doing an excellent job.

[Mr. Thomson.]

Per capita we have many good scientists compared with other countries. I think it is time all hon. members backed our Canadian scientific community instead of permitting individuals to tear it apart.

I have a great personal interest in this matter. At Chalk River and Deep River, both of which are in my riding, there are a large number of top-notch technical and scientific men. They have done a great deal to advise industry and hydro companies when building nuclear power plants. There has been much inaccurate information spread across this country about some of these nuclear power plants. I stand in their defence tonight, not just because they are in my constituency; there are many more in the same class across Canada. Canada is at a stage in scientific development today where we have to start thinking positively instead of negatively.

We must stop criticizing every little thing that goes wrong in the nuclear power and atomic energy field. This is a large field. Canada was one of the forerunners in the world in nuclear power. Canadians should be proud of this fact. As in any new field, small errors and mistakes are made. When Members of Parliament are elected to this House they make mistakes the first few times. They may make mistakes at the end of their time here: some hon. members never become total professionals. The same can be expected of our scientific community.

One thing we can expect is that our scientific community will be dedicated to its job. Our scientists do the best they can to keep Canada at the forefront in scientific development. If anything positive is to result from this debate tonight, it is that the Canadian scientific community deserves the praise of the Canadian people. Canadian scientists must be given leeway. If a few mistakes are made along the way, we must remember that we learn from our mistakes. Let us give them credit for the work they have done in this country, and encourage them to continue in this fashion.

I feel it is of great advantage if scientific help at the government level can be loaned to industry to help it develop, particularly in the nuclear field. This is the sort of thing we should be doing. There are many large industries in Canada which, because of their profit bases cannot afford to develop nuclear power to operate their plants on a more modern scale than is presently done in this or any other country in the western world. The Canadian government has a responsibility to loan these people in order that they may advise Canadian industry. I compliment the minister and the government on this legislation. I hope all hon. members and all Canadians will support our scientific community and give it the due it deserves. Our scientists have worked hard for this country.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I wish to make just a few points, Mr. Speaker, not wanting to filibuster my own bill.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) seemed to think that because this IRDIA legislation on research and development is general, it may not be as useful as if it were specific. At least this is the way his argument sounded. In answer to that I might say that facts do not seem to give any credence to this line of reasoning. We have a growing number of applications for support under IRDIA. In 1967-68, 267 applications were received; in 1969-70, 623 applications were received, and in 1970-71 it is estimated there will be 704 applications. This does not appear to give credence to the argument that because it is general, it is not being used. That may not be the full purport of the argument, but that is what I understood.

Further proof to the contrary is the growing amount allocated to it—$19.6 million in 1968-69, $22.7 million in 1969-70 and $30 million estimated for the present year. Indeed, there has been some falling short, mostly because of delayed applications and provisions for information. This is getting much better now. As a matter of fact, some of the amendments before the House this evening will lead to an improvement of procedures for acceptance of applications.

The information I have is that the review committee found that all programs were popular with industry, both the general and the specific ones. A few days ago I took part in a little ceremony at the Chateau where the department explained to a number of businessmen and provincial government officials the changes that were taking place. Although I had already left—I am never present when things like this happen—apparently at the end of the meeting the department was given a standing ovation. All programs seem most popular with industry, so much so that even though the general programs do not hit the point as well as others do, they nevertheless have been very well used.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question on this point? He dealt with one question that I raised concerning the general efficacy of the programs in terms of enticing firms to do research. The more serious point I wanted to raise was that the general programs serve as a means of publicly subsidizing private research that would have been conducted in any case. Has the minister access to any studies done either by his department or by others that would provide evidence one way or the other on this question?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen such analysis. However, as the hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary (Mr. Howard) said, this is the sort of research that would be most difficult to make, because obviously we are not there when the decision to use the program or not is made. But we are not taking chances. We believe very much in research and development. My department has tried to develop as wide a spectrum of programs as possible in order that no industry in Canada would be justified in saying that it was not conducting research and development because there was no program to suit its particular situation. We have tried to have variety in our programs, some are concerned with defence, others with the civilian sector. Some are specific, some general, in order to catch all possible flies.

Second, the hon. member asked me whether I should like to table the report of the committee that reviewed the different programs of research and development. There is a long debate going on now on the subject of the secrecy—as some points of view would allege—or the privacy of government operations. I have some very clear views on that matter. It should be obvious to everybody that industries which come to us for grants most of the time cannot afford the luxury of other companies knowing that they are going to conduct a particular type of research.

Thinking of it in terms of internal communication, if my department is to conduct research into the deficiencies of certain programs, and while doing so is led to think that those deficiencies are in part, for example, deficiencies of the minister, then I do not think anybody would accept the proposition that that kind of report should be tabled in the House!

Mr. Aiken: Well, not that particular one.

Mr. Pepin: Thank you. I think that a department such as mine cannot afford to table here correspondence it has had with companies. In many cases this would mark the end of our communications with industry. These communications have to be protected.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the minister again but he has been very cordial this evening and I hope he will continue to be so during a serious discussion of these points. If I understood him correctly, he was suggesting that what was being requested was correspondence and other matters referring to the performance of particular firms. It was not my understanding from the statement tabled by the minister about a month ago that this was what the study would consist of; rather, it was a comprehensive analysis of the efficacy of government programs in these areas. Am I correct in that understanding? If I am, would this not be precisely the kind of information that might raise the level of this debate if it were made available?

Mr. Pepin: I confess I am, of course, looking at the matter from the point of view of the government. I might look at it a little differently were I to have the privilege of sitting on the other side of the House, which I have never had. The fact that changes are being introduced is an obvious admission that the programs were not perfect. The arguments that we are putting forward today are an indication that we ourselves were not entirely satisfied with the way the programs were being operated.

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps they will be even less perfect now.

Mr. Pepin: That is for you to judge. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby wanted to make a distinction between research and development done by foreign-owned companies and that done by Canadian-owned companies. The department makes no such distinction. We are looking for research done in Canada, be it by Canadian-owned or by foreign-owned companies. We are looking for results, not at the way and by whom they are achieved. As a matter of fact, any money provided through these research and development programs must be used in Canada; this is part and parcel of the philosophy and practice of the research and development programs. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby then tried to incite me into a discussion on ownership of industry. I will resist that temptation because this question will be brought to the attention of the House by the government as a whole in due course.

[Mr. Pepin.]

On the subject of resource industries he seemed to say there was not much research taking place. If that is what he had in mind, this would be the wrong impression to give. For example, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources of the government of Canada does a substantial amount of research in the petroleum industry. If my memory serves me well, in Edmonton there is an Institute of Petroleum Geology, a federal government research institute, that also does quite an amount of work in this field.

The hon. member also tried to interest me in that very old debate about expenditure on defence research and civilian research. I was pleased to hear him say that he had observed a certain movement in the expenditures of the department from defence to civilian research. I thank the hon. member for underlining that because it is something we have very much at heart. At the same time, I am not at all willing to concede that there should be no research for defence purposes. We dealt with this question at some length a year or so ago in a House of Commons committee.

My contention at that time was that it was very difficult to identify what is civilian and what is military research in many instances; that a lot of civilian research led to military innovation, and a lot of military research led to civilian innovation. I do not think any country in the world—certainly I could not mention one of any substance—can afford the luxury of not undertaking any military research. Although I agree that the emphasis should be put on civilian research, I do not think this country could gamble on not doing the kind of military research that in most instances leads to important civilian progress.

I think if my hon. friend were to cogitate and meditate on the subject for a few minutes, he would himself realize that a tremendous amount of technological progress has been made in recent years which is directly related to military research carried out in the past. It is unfortunate that governments and people seem to give more easily for military than for civilian research. Personally, and in my department, we are trying to emphasize the civilian side, but I do not think we can change history and human nature completely. We can try to improve upon it, and this is what we have been trying to do.

Mr. Broadbent: Before the minister resumes his seat would he permit one further question? If I understood his last argument, he was saying there are certain spin-off benefits from military research which do have civilian benefits. If this is his argument, I completely agree with him; but that seems not to be his argument. If he were completely interested in the civilian benefits obtained as a result of this research, that should in fact be his initial object.

Does he not agree that if you are going to put so much money into "x" which is military, and so much into "y" which is civilian, your objectives would be best met if you put more money into civilian projects, and that the reasonable result would be that you would have more benefit from civilian than from military research? Is that not correct?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that people reading Hansard tomorrow will ask themselves why these two members argued when they seemed to agree on essentials.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to announce a change in the business for this evening which has been discussed with all sides. It has been decided not to go ahead with Government Order No. 47 with regard to the Standards Council of Canada, but rather to proceed first with consideration of Government Order No. 65 with regard to television in the House, then with Government Order No. 83 in respect of the Representation Commission Act, and lastly with Government Order No. 85 in respect of the Transport and Communications Committee.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I just say that there have been discussions at the usual high level and we have computerized these three measures. We have come to the conclusion that they will be finished very close to ten o'clock, and that Your Honour might well then call it ten o'clock if we have completed them on the right side of that hour. Am I right in that?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BROADCASTING OF DEBATES BY RADIO AND TELEVISION

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, in consultation with Mr. Speaker, be directed to study the question of radio and television broadcasting of the proceedings of the House and its committees, including the legal, procedural and technical aspects thereof, and the question of arrangements made for reporters for the electronic media in the Parliament buildings.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 11, before calling it ten o'clock, I was saying that I supported the recommendation of the government. It is obvious the government is seeking, by all possible means and as quickly as possible to reach the people and keep them in touch with what goes on in the House of Commons.

I also stated at the end of my speech, in connection with the broadcasting of information on radio and television and especially on television—if I refer to the resolution—that it was difficult for many people to sit in front of their T.V. set to watch the debates of the House.

Indeed, it is not always easy for someone who is working to see those programs. Nor is it easy for the housewife. On the other hand, it is said sometimes that housewives complain that they cannot do their ironing or their darning, because their T.V. set is out of order, but it is nevertheless the minority which is in such a situation.

In my opinion, to try to reach the people through this means would be costly in the first place for the taxpayer, because a sizeable investment would be needed to telecast the proceedings of the House, and it would be undoubtedly necessary to telecast the proceedings of the Senate as long as it lasts. It would also be needed to telecast the committee proceedings, so that the population could be fully informed of what goes on in Parliament.

I would like at this time to offer a suggestion, which I would ask the government to consider.

All those of my electors who have the chance to read the official report of the debates of the House are most happy to do so, and I suggest that the government should offer a free copy to all those who request one this could also apply to the report of the proceedings of the committees, which could be saved and read at a later date if it is not possible to do so immediately.

This would be of great help to Canadian taxpayers who are interested in public affairs, because if they miss the proceedings when they are televised, such programs cannot be repeated the way, for instance, hockey games are. It does happen also that we miss some comments on a program, even on television.

The advantage of the report is that it can be kept for future reference.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I feel this would be a much cheaper way to inform Canadians and they would all be satisfied. Some advertising might be required at certain times, at the beginning of each session, for instance, when people might be invited to ask for their copies of Hansard.

This is the suggestion I wanted to make in connection with the resolution moved by the government.

[English]

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF REVIEW OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER ACT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That in relation to S.22 of the Representation Commissioner Act, Statutes of Canada 1963, C.40, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to review the provisions of the Representation Commissioner Act and recommend to the House any amendments, alterations or modifications thereto that to the said committee shall appear to be necessary or desirable.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words of explanation in respect of the background of this motion. Perhaps I might refer hon. members to the Statutes of Canada for 1963, chapter 40. Hon. members will note in the statute which created the role of Representation Commissioner the following provision is contained which I shall set out in full to the House. It is section 22, which reads as follows:

The Prime Minister shall, at the earliest convenient opportunity after the commencement of the first session of Parliament after 1968, propose to the House of Commons that an order be made and referred to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons for the review by such committee of the provisions of this act and for the recommendations of such committee with respect to any amendments, alterations or modifications thereto that appear to the committee then to be necessary or desirable, and upon such order being referred to it the committee shall consider the matter of the order and report to the House its recommendations with respect thereto.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) I am moving this motion at the present time. This session which commenced in October, 1969, is the first session after the year 1968, and in relation to the business of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections this is the earliest convenient opportunity at which the matter can be dealt with.

The House will recall in a timetable which I think has been generally agreed to by the House that it was recognized that the first item of business to be dealt with by the House should be the general changes to the Elections Act. They are the most pressing in terms of time because, as hon. members will have noted from the report of that committee, they involve a substantial expansion of the electorate which will have to be taken into account by each returning officer in each of the ridings and by the Chief Electoral Officer in re-drawing each poll division. At the same time the changes discussed will involve an extensive change in the election procedure generally.

If the Chief Electoral Officer is to be prepared in 1972 or thereafter for the next general election, it would be necessary that these changes be dealt with by the House and enacted into law by the end of the present session. I am pleased that the committee has now reported on detailed recommendations or changes in respect of the Elections Act. Early in the next part of the session the government will be bringing forward a bill based on those changes and we would hope, in order to meet the timetable of the Chief Electoral Officer, it would be dealt with before the House rises in June. The way is now clear in the committee for this reference.

The terms of the present motion invite the committee to consider the institution of the Representation Commissioner, which was set up for the first time at the federal level in 1963, in light of the experience that gentleman has had in dealing with redistribution following the 1961 census. Now that the commissioner has had experience in dealing with the structure of redistribution set up by this Parliament, it is appropriate to make some decisions in respect of how his office should continue and in what manner he should carry on his operation.

I might mention a number of questions and invite the committee's consideration of them because I know they have been of concern to the Representation Commissioner and to the people who have been considering his role. The first is whether the office should continue to be separate from the general electoral system or—and I say this by way of a suggestion—perhaps it might be desirable to have the office of the Chief Electoral Officer with over-all jurisdiction, and have the Representation Commissioner as an autonomous division under the general jurisdiction of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Under the provisions of the redistribution legislation the Representation Commissioner is required to prepare preliminary maps on the basis of which the various provincial commissions set about carrying out their particular studies. Some question has been raised as to whether this role has been a useful one. Perhaps it has been useful in some provinces, and in the larger provinces like Ontario and Quebec it may have made a significant contribution to the job done there.

The question has also been raised as to whether it is useful for the Representation Commissioner to continue to be ex officio a member of each provincial commission, and whether in fact in order to carry out the functions of each commission it is necessary that he work along with them. A response to that argument might be an affirmative one, that in a sense the Representation Commissioner provides a continuity between all the representation commissions and brings to them some of the general consideration and experience gained across the country. On the other hand, however, it must be borne in mind that the provincial commissions are independent, and the provincial representatives are in a majority and are not bound to accept the recommendations of the Representation Commissioner.

Having set out these points, I shall go no further. I hope the committee will look fully into this matter. I think it is valuable to have the committee examine at this time the role which has been discharged in a particularly distinguished way by Mr. Castonguay. The committee will have the opportunity to hear Mr. Castonguay and other interested persons. Then we would hope the committee will make a recommendation to the House in time for it to be included as part of the Elections Act amendments, or perhaps in time for it to be dealt with in the latter part of this session or early in the next session.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have very little to say on this question. As the minister has pointed out, what we are doing now is what is mandatory under the provisions of the act. I only hope the committee will take a fair, honest and objective look at the act and its operations as a result of the last election.

I would urge the government to struggle desperately against its natural inclinations and be equally objective. Hon. members will recall that under the act as it was originally passed, after the various provincial commissions had made their inquiries there was an examination and discussion in the House. One or two fairly technical changes were made, but if I recall correctly, some very genuine objections were voiced in this House by members and unfortunately nothing was done.

As I say, I hope the representations made in committee will be made honestly and seriously and that there will be the objective, non-partisan approach by all hon. members that obtains when elections are involved.

When the results of the committee's considerations are brought to the House, if the proceedings are carried out in the way I have pointed out I hope the government will accept them. We will wait until the committee has had its deliberations and then we will probably make further comment on the matter.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to support this motion for a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. As the previous speakers have indicated, we are only doing something we are called upon by statute to do. Indeed, I found interesting the way the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) was able to explain that when the statute says we should do something in the first session after 1968, even though we are in 1970 he can say that this is the first session after 1968. I suppose it is his legal training which makes it possible for him to put it in those terms. At any rate, it is being done and we are quite happy to support the motion.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I think it has to be said that the three principal questions which the President of the Privy Council mentioned are serious questions that must be looked into by the committee. It may well be that in each of these three cases changes should be made. No one can deny the invaluable service of Mr. Nelson

Castonguay in this field, and I think that the members of the various provincial commissions would agree that he rendered a distinct service to them in the last redistribution.

However, I think there is some point to the suggestion that perhaps the provincial commissions should be given the greater sense of autonomy which they might feel they would have if they were entirely on their own. I may say that this fits in with the view that I hold very strongly, that we took the right step when we went in for redistribution by independent and impartial commissions and I hope that we will do nothing to withdraw from that position.

It is because of that that I think if we can give to the provincial commissions more autonomy and experience, we will be more satisfied with the job that they do. I know that in one or two provinces there are grievances about what was accomplished at the last redistribution but I think by and large we have to admit that across the country a fairly objective job was done, particularly bearing in mind the principles that we set down, namely, a much closer approach to representation by population than we had under the old regime.

I listened with interest to the remarks made by my friend, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), about the discussions that took place in the House of Commons during the course of the last map redrawing. I noted his reference to the fact that little attention was paid to those discussions. Speaking for myself, I hope the day will come when we do not have those discussions here at all, when sufficient confidence will have been built up in the independent commissions that we will not feel we have to have those discussions.

I am still of the view, as I know the majority of members are, that the drawing of the boundaries of our ridings is not our business, that it is the business of the people of Canada in some other way than through us, in view of our special interest. I recognize that it is difficult to make the shift, but I think we have taken the right step and I believe we can strengthen our confidence in this way of doing things.

I should like to conclude with a word of tribute to the decision that Parliament made back in 1963 after nearly 100 years of doing it the other way. I am glad to see this motion put before the House so that the committee can review some of the details of this operation. For my part, that is all I want to see, a review of the details. I do not want to see any derogation from the principle of redistribution by an independent body.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have just two very brief suggestions to make. I hope I am not being irrelevant when I suggest there is a need to take a good look at the armed forces with regard to this whole question. At present they have a choice of voting, but as I understand it the big error is that the voting is not secret. Surely in this day and age we can devise some way in which the armed forces of our country can have a secret ballot the same as anyone else. I hope that the committee when they consider this matter will be given sufficiently broad terms of reference to look into the subject and recommend to the government some reform in the voting of our armed forces.

I am glad the committee members still have an open mind on the question of redistribution. I think some gross errors were made at the last redistribution due to the fact that the preliminary steps were not made soon enough and that the recommendations from the right people were not put before the commission. I do not think that anybody knows the local situation better than the member representing the area. Although the commission must be independent, or as independent as possible, I think that a sitting member who has spent 15 or 20 years representing a riding would be an invaluable witness before the commission.

It would be a perverse commission which did not want to have at least his opinion. The fact that the member has been the choice of 75,000 or 80,000 people for 20 years should in itself be a sufficiently high recommendation so that his opinion would be worth something and should certainly not be neglected. I know in my own case that when Athabasca was redistributed, I could have given them one, or two hints which, if applied, would have better served the people, on matters such as unmarked roads, impassable river barriers, community of interests, and so on. Doing this would not have made any difference to me one way or the other. I think that any member who made a good representation on behalf of his people in order to give them better access to the polls and a better opportunity to be represented by people with a community of interest would risk nothing when it came to election time.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks concerning the responsibility of not only members of the House and the commissioner, but the responsibility of the government about the constitution as it pertains to the borders of constituencies and the number of constituencies in a province. While it may not be within the purview of the Standing Committee to look into the number of ridings in any given province, it seems to me that it is within the purview of the House to remind the government, in the whole business of constitutional reform, of how many Members of Parliament shall represent any province.

It seems to me we have an increasing tendency toward having a smaller number of members representing a larger number of people in a larger geographical area, while in other parts of Canada an equivalent number of members represent a smaller population in smaller geographical areas.

I was a member of the group which presented a brief to the Representation Commission in my province a few years ago. The three gentlemen who constituted that committee were very knowledgeable about the law and about the doings of legislatures and of Parliament, but they did not know very much about politics or about politicking. I do not mean that in any critical sense, but I say it because certainly two of the three had never been involved in politics and had never done any campaigning.

I hope that henceforth the Representation Commissioner will consider, when he is drafting or redrafting the boundaries of constituencies, what politicians of all political parties are faced with. The hon. Member who spoke just before me mentioned the geographical hazards. These have not only had to do with creeks, lakes, coulees, community pastures, sandhills and places which you have to go around, but in my constituency there is a lake which is one to three miles wide and 65 miles long. To get from one side of my riding to another I have to go around the lake. I am not complaining. It is a good constituency. It is one the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) used to hold, and I am determined that neither he nor anyone like him will get it back. But I know now the kind of problems he had in getting around the constituency.

It seems to me it is not enough just to consider the number of people in a constituency. It seems to me that the Representation Commissioner, within the legal limits to which he is confined, must consider how the candidates of political parties are able to get around a constituency during the course of the electoral process and, once that process is terminated, how the elected member will be able to get around the constituency. Until such time as Parliament and the people of the country agree that it is more important that Members of Parliament get around their constituencies than how much they are paid, the Representation Commissioner will have some handicaps. But if the Representation Commissioner, with whatever commission he has in a province, considers the geographical limitations and the hazards that there are, there will be much more equity in terms of political parties presenting themselves to a maximum number of the electorate and in assuring that whoever is elected is able to do a much better job of getting around a constituency.

There is a further item which, though it may not be strictly in order in terms of the exact words of this motion, still has to do with the representation of Members of Parliament. It has to do with the ability of a Representation Commissioner to consider all aspects of the work of those who must represent the voters of the various constituencies. This concerns how much Members of Parliament are paid. I suspect, Mr. Speaker, you will be wondering how the devil I can connect that matter with the Representation Commissioner, but the cost of travelling and being in one's constituency has more to do with the whole problem than the actual amount of the indemnity. This, again, takes into account the geographical layout of any given constituency.

I feel that in 1965 and in 1966 there was insufficient opportunity for individual citizens and organizations of any kind, be they political or non-political, to make representations and express their views before the commissions in the provinces. I hope that the Committee on Privileges and Elections after considering this motion will recommend to the House that ample time and ample financing be given to the Representation Commissioner. He in turn can authorize the respective commissions in each province to go much more extensively into the matter of holding hearings and receiving the views, first of the political parties—because they are the ones who have to go where the action is and have to do the job—and, equally important, the views of any and all kinds of organizations and individuals who are interested in and concerned with constituencies.

In my province, the way the deck is stacked at the moment, and according to the formula that is laid down constitutionally, even if we gain another 50,000 population we will lose one Member of Parliament after the next census. I could say that as long as it is a Conservative member I will not object. But whatever constituency is lost, it will mean that although 13 of us in the House now represent some 940,000 people, we will end up with 12 representing the same or a larger number of people, and we will have larger geographical areas to cover. This is almost impossible for any member. I hope that the committee when it reports back to the House, and the government when it is considering constitutional matters both in this House and with representatives of the provinces, will consider including in whatever new constitution Canada might have, however long that may take, a much better and more equitable formula for the basis of representation in this chamber.

This is a large country, thinly populated. To keep on compounding the folly we have engaged in since 1953 inhibits the democratic process in large geographical areas and militates against the participation of voters and citizens in the electoral process. It also militates against those who are elected to this chamber—against their ability to do an adequate job in representing their constituencies. I put these remarks on the record if for no other reason than to serve a warning on my colleagues on the Committee on Privileges and Elections that at least some of these areas will be discussed in the committee, and that we hope to get representation from people in other parts of the country on these matters.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO ADJOURN FROM PLACE TO PLACE WITHIN CANADA

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered, during its consideration of the subject matter of ground transportation at airports, to adjourn from place to place within Canada.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Transport Committee and have been since 1966, and when this proposal was put to the committee I opposed it. I opposed it because it is my feeling that too many committees of the House have been working outside Ottawa too often—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: —to the extent that I feel it is very difficult for many of us to do the work that we have to do in Parliament. I agree that parliamentary committees should travel in Canada when it is necessary for them to do so, that is, when there are people who have to be heard and who are not able to come to Ottawa to put forward their points of view, or when it is necessary for a committee, because of the issue, to go to the spot to study that issue. However, I feel that over the last year or two too many of our committees have been going away from Ottawa when for a lesser amount of money they could bring witnesses to Ottawa and pay their expenses. Members would then be able to carry on their work in this House and in other committees, in caucus and so forth.

Many of us now have a large amount of correspondence. We have to deal with correspondence in our offices. Most backbenchers are on two or three committees, and then of course we have to know what is going on in the House. I am not criticizing this committee alone, but I must point out that the committee which I am on travelled to Toronto and Montreal this year and Labrador and the Maritimes late last fall. In fact, this is the fifth time in less than 1½ years that the committee will travel outside Ottawa. I reserve my judgment on several of the other trips that we made but I think we have been spending too much time away.

I want to go on record as saying that I feel we should only take committees out of Ottawa as an exception rather than the rule. If it is possible to bring witnesses here, that should be done. In this particular study of ground transportation between city and airport we have already had hearings in Montreal and Toronto. If the argument is made that to be equitable we should have hearings in the west, I wonder whether we will learn much more by going out there. I understand the itinerary provides for visiting four cities in the west to study the same problem. Surely, one or two would be enough. The steering committee, which is representative of all parties, approved this particular motion. When it repported to the main committee I took exception to it, but I was voted down.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Another hon. Member: I wonder why?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I still feel that we in the House should look at this matter a little closer in the future.

Mr. Bell: Here we go. You started this.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): The particular problem which concerns this committee originated in Montreal. Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a good case to be made for bringing witnesses to Ottawa, that was it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I never heard that the hon. member objected to the committee going to Montreal—

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, I did object to the fact that we went to Montreal and I refused to stay there for the whole period and did not take up my full role on the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I am glad to hear that the hon. member did object. It was mooted, but we never heard it in this House. The issues were properly raised and the committee saw fit to go to Toronto subsequently.

This is a very good committee which has done an excellent job and learned a great deal during the course of its travels. In many respects I agree with the hon. member that the onus is upon the committee to satisfy members of the House that this journey is really necessary. But I think committees have become quite responsible. Certainly, the position taken by the official opposition in the early part of this session was along these lines. The members of the committee made a good case; they satisfied the House, and permission was granted.

At the present time people in this country are almost compelled to go to Montreal or Toronto in order to get to Ottawa. In my view, Mr. Speaker, some of the problems discovered as a result of the examination by the committee have now been found either to exist, or at least potentially exist elsewhere. In these circumstances, I think it is proper to allow the recommendation of the committee to stand. Although I do not deny his right, I am rather amazed at the hon. member objecting to the committee travelling elsewhere when it has virtually unanimously agreed to do so.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I agree only partly with the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). If we found out anything at the hearings of the Transport and Communications Committee hearings in Montreal and Toronto, it was that the problems they are facing are the same as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) mentioned as potential difficulties. I think the committee should be looking at these problems in the four cities named, if only to avoid the ground transportation difficulties experienced in Montreal and Toronto.

Before any committee of this House leaves Ottawa, I feel that much more preparation should be done and that people concerned with the problem in the areas to be visited should be notified and invited to appear at the hearings. Too often we arrive almost unannounced and the local people only find out afterwards. I do not think there is enough advance preparation and notification. It may well turn out that when the Transport and Communications Committee arrives in Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Winnipeg the taxi companies will not even know about it. It is possible that nobody will appear before the committee in any of these cities. I am prepared to overlook that, because at least the committee will receive some education in travelling to airports and its members will find out what the hon. member for Peace River referred to as potential problems as a result of some rather miserable experiences in larger cities. These four cities are growing and traffic will increase. Therefore, I hope there will be a better job done in regard to advance notice.

Some months ago, Mr. Speaker, I was on another committee of this House. We travelled to three cities and saw only one person in each, at a total cost in excess of $10,000. I am sure we could have brought those three people to Ottawa and given them a suite each in the Chateau Laurier for under $3,000. In committee I was shot down in flames when I suggested that we should advertise and notify organizations and individuals who would wish to appear before us on a matter that was fundamental to our whole society, the reform of our Elections Act. We did not do it, and I think we probably wasted $6,000, or $7,000 of the taxpayers' money. When we left, 24 of us travelled in a 96-seat passenger airplane. That was changed for the return journey because the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and myself moved that after the first city part of the committee should return to Ottawa to save time and money. There was nothing wrong with the purpose and intent of the trip, but where we failed was in inadequate notification to the people concerned that we genuinely wanted to hear what their problems were.

Frankly, I do not think we have done a good enough job even on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, which is a pretty good committee. That committee did an insufficient job in giving advance notice of its sittings. It may well be that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is perfectly right; perhaps the committee should not have bothered sitting at one or two sites because there were, so few people to appear before it. But that is not the fault of the people there; a good deal of that is our fault. That is no reason for opposing the trip in the first place.

I say we should do a better job in getting ready for the trip, because only then will we have a better response from the people concerned. If we tell the taxpayers where we are going, they will be glad to see us and will not object to how much money the trip costs. Only then will parliamentary committees make heard their voice and play the proper role this chamber has given them.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I do not find myself in agreement with the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). I find much good sense in what the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has just said about travelling committees. Perhaps one of the best things we have done in the House in recent years is evolve a new role for committees in which they carry the dialogue between the people and Parliament outside this chamber to the people, to where they can see us in action and talk to us while we are doing our work. I think the more we do of that, the better. I believe we have made mistakes and will make mistakes as we evolve this new role, as the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre said. He pointed out some of the mistakes we have made. But that should not deter us from carrying out this role and from learning to do it better.

One of the things we must learn to master is how not to proliferate those endless records which are ground to pulp, sent back to Hull, made into newsprint and utilized again in the printing of enormous records. We must learn not to proliferate them; we must keep track of the enormous records produced when our committees travel. But, it is not right to say that in travelling our committees are not performing a significant function. I think it is one of the most vital things we have done and is one of the most lively things that the House, which is often considered dead in modern terms, is learning to do.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to hold up this measure because I feel that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is neither so Simon pure nor as sanctimonious as he tries to pretend. If we look at the record—and I have not had a chance to get in touch with our members on the appropriate committees—I think it will be found that the hon. member has taken a few trips himself. I know he was at the United Nations during the past session. I therefore do not think he is so pure as Simon that he can criticize hon. members on either side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: However, the House Leader has done a good job and for the first time in a long while there is a spirit of comradeship and well-being among the members of different parties. I should hate to spoil the government's program by holding up this legislation, even though tempted to do so.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has made clear our position. In that light perhaps in future we shall have to examine some proposed committee trips. I recall at one time the Committee on Privileges and Elections went off on a wild goose chase. Some members of our party objected to that. I understand the committee came back to Ottawa and did not complete the trip because it was felt the whole thing was useless and without purpose. With that reservation about the sanctimoniousness of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, we give this motion our approval.

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I want to make clear that I was not opposing in principle the idea that committees should travel. I merely felt that in some cases they are travelling a bit too much and I thought we should examine the matter more closely.

Mr. Fairweather: That is not a question of privilege; that is debate.

Mr. Allmand: As was said a moment ago—

An hon. Member: The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Allmand: —the question is, how much time have committees spent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SUGGESTED DISCUSSION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST BILL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on March 3, as reported in Hansard at page 4310, I asked whether consideration was being given to arranging for a discussion of the conflict of interest problem either on the basis of my Bill C-188 or on the basis of some government initiative. As I recall, I was not given an answer on that occasion. I asked almost the same question on March 18, as recorded in Hansard at pages 5186 and 5187. On that occasion the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) was kind enough to answer, although all he did was indicate to me that no decision had yet been taken on this matter.

May I say that in raising this question tonight on the late show it is not my intention to talk about the substance of the problem, namely, the conflict of interest problem itself; nor am I trying to smuggle in a commercial for my Bill C-188. I am genuinely concerned and genuinely anxious to see this House come to grips with the problem of the conflict of interest, and that is my purpose tonight.

Perhaps I might take a moment to indicate at least part of the background to my question. On Friday, June 6, 1969, I asked a question about this measure of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It is to be found on page 9823 of Hansard for that date. I should like, sir, to read the Prime Minister's reply, which was as follows:

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the importance of the question and I appreciate the way it was worded. To make sure that there will be no conflicts of interest in the exercise of the functions of members of the House of Commons or of the other place, I said a few months ago, either when answering a question in the house or at a press conference that the government has the whole question of conflicts of interest under study. During the course of the summer—

That being the summer of 1969.

—I think we will be able to arrive at some view as to what reforms might be made in the Senate and House of Commons Act and in other statutes to ensure that this problem is dealt with in a satisfactory manner.

Then the Prime Minister said:

In the meantime if members of the other parties in the house have constructive suggestions to make, I will be interested to hear them.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I welcomed most heartily the Prime Minister's reply and the spirit in which it was given. Because he asked for constructive suggestions that we might wish to make, and since nothing was placed on the Order Paper relating to this when we met in the fall, I introduced my Bill C-188 which suggests a way to cope with this problem. I have tried to make it clear that I wish to see the matter discussed. Since I am the proposer of the bill I should be glad to see it discussed at some special time which might be set aside for it or to have it referred to committee. But I should be just as happy to see the matter discussed under some government initiative.

My purpose, therefore, in posting this question for the late show tonight—and I am glad to see the President of the Privy Council is here and will be responding to it—is not to raise an argument about the substance of the matter but to make my plea to him that some way be found to arrange for Parliament to come to grips with this issue at the earliest possible date.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): As the hon. member has indicated, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which the government has had under consideration for some time. The hon. member did not note this, but I remind the House that last summer a study was carried out the results of which were tabled in response to a Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers by the hon. gentleman.

While the study was prepared in a very scholarly fashion, it did not seem to certain members of the government and certain members of the opposition to provide a good response to a very awkward legislative problem, not only for this Parliament but for all democratic assemblies including the United States and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are agreed on that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): To a degree we already have a conflict of interest statute, more particularly, the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act. It is recognized in certain respects that it is far more restrictive than is necessary. We had an instance last year with regard to certain members of this House who were covered by the sections of the Senate and House of Commons Act far beyond its original intention, and special legislative measures had to be taken in that regard.

The government is not seeking a restrictive measure but one that will give Members of Parliament and others related to government a clear set of rules so that in advance they may order their private affairs in such a way as to avoid conflict with their public duties. The question is still under study within the aegis of my office. I regret I am unable to state at the moment a specific timetable. I agree it would be desirable to try and resolve this particular question at the present time when there is no problem with regard to conflict of interest, and when the question is not one of active partisan dispute in the event that in future there may be an instance in which specific rules will be required.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SHUT-DOWN OF SOME STATIONS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have already directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), as to the shut-down of some railway stations. That question, which was considered as being of general interest, has to do nevertheless with an abnormal situation.

Favouritism has existed for a long time in the Canadian National and in the Canadian Pacific Railways and the patronage handlers as we call the railway officers who, through their inefficiency, dilapidate the companies' profits, are now going after the employees with 35 to 40 years of service and want to dismiss some of them.

The proper authorities should put a stop to such a situation that leads to the debasement of the human being and of the worker. As the Canadian Pacific have already enjoyed grants and various other benefits from the government, their moral duty towards the Canadian people is as great as that of the Canadian National.

Most of the employees affected by the changes contemplated by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific are doubly qualified people, although they are 50 or older. It is obvious they have rightly deserved their present employment. I ask that all the positions filled by those gentlemen be maintained until their official retirement.

Can we allow people who have played an essential part in society, to be shunted in favour of a few technocrats who vote themselves salary increases? Can we, through a govenment organization, do everything possible to create jobs in so-called special areas, and at the same time order crown corporations to dismiss people in that same area?

Let us remember that for 20 years after the end of the last war, the government managed to finance the presence in Germany of thousands of soldiers. In my opinion, we should be able to find the financial means necessary to keep in their jobs some of those people whose health was ruined in the service of this Crown Corporation.

I have already emphasized, Mr. Speaker, the necessity of a royal inquiry into this matter. I am ever more convinced of the pressing need for such an inquiry. There may be a financial mess but there is also a mess of accidents which are endangering the safety of the public and cost the taxpayers millions of dollars.

Here is a striking example of how these changes are brought about in the administration. Eight years ago, in Quebec, there was a director, a certain Mr. Gauthier; today the director is still a Mr. Gauthier. Apparently, it is Mr. Gauthier's son, a tough man who makes it tough for the others. When a man who has done nothing to deserve it, is entrusted with such a position, we have some reason to believe that this high ranking official does not understand his mission too well. We may therefore ask Mr. MacMillan, president of the Canadian National, to reconsider the way promotion is granted in order to encourage those who have deserved it and have the necessary qualifications to do an honest job.

In Quebec City, in the Canadian National offices, there is a swarm of employees whose work overlaps that of their counterparts in Montreal. Those employees go about in the parishes promising changes in the administration, the efficiency of which has not been proved. Through veiled threats against local authorities, those employees are trying to force municipal councils to accept changes the people do not want.

It seems those gentlemen could not care less. To my mind, it aould be better for the railways, the Canadian National as well as the Canadian Pacific, to get rid of those gentlemen who go about hypocritically. I am told that in Quebec there are ten employees, if not more, who make $15,000 to $20,000 annually; this amount could be used to pay at least 10 or 15 station masters who would serve the population directly.

It may be that some of these officials will try to convince me that certain jobs are no longer needed in view of the progress in electronics. As some of the retired employees of the Canadian National receive less per month than people on social welfare, we are opposed to the lay-offs proposed by this company.

In view of the fact that the pension fund has accumulated something like $1.5 billion and that 2,500 C.N. pensioners get only $25 a month, 7,325, $100 a month, and over 8,000 less than $200 a month, adjustments are obviously needed.

I therefore echo, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations at one of the locals of the Transportation Employees Union, and I quote:

1. That a full inquiry be requested on the financial situation of the Canadian National pension plan.

2. That the C.N. pension plan become negotiable and integrated in the labour agreement.

3 That the C.N. pension committee be composed of an equal number of representatives of the company and the unions, plus a retired member of the union and a chairman chosen by the members already mentioned.

4. That the pension be computed as in the Civil Service of Canada, at the rate of 2 per cent per year of eligible employment, on the basis of the five best paid consecutive years, and that such pension be paid independently of the Canada or Quebec pension plans.

5. That the allowance paid to widows and legal heirs of retired personnel be 75 per cent instead of 50 per cent.

6. That a cost of living bonus be paid to retired personnel in order to adjust their pension to the present cost of living and that later on this level be prorated to the cost of living for all retired personnel.

7. That an employee may retire at 60 years of age with his employment years computed as if he had retired at 65.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the minister will get the full impact of these recommendations which are simply intended to ensure the security and welfare of a class of workers who have paid for it for a long time, and who are not responsible for the increase in the cost of living.

[English]

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister, and again in the unavoidable absence of his Parliamentary Secretary, I should like to reply to the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin). I must first of all say that he has raised questions this evening that are broader and more general, and in some cases more specific, than the question that was raised in Hansard for March 11, at page 4672. With respect to these questions, I will certainly draw them to the attention of the minister and trust that he will be making a reply to the hon. member.

• (10:10 p.m.)

What I am authorized to say with respect to the question that was raised in Hansard in regard to the closing down of certain railway stations is that this issue concerns a proposal by the CNR to implement a master agency plan in the area of Quebec City. In order to facilitate this, and to ensure public understanding, a railway representative is visiting local authorities in the municipalities in order to provide a full explanation of their plans and seek the co-operation of all interested parties. The railway is also informing its customers in this area. I am told no threats have been made by any officer of the railway. That is in direct reference to a question in Hansard.

Mr. J. A. Gauthier is the manager of the railways head office in Quebec City. He has endeavoured to arrange a meeting with the hon. member for Portneuf and the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) to explain to them the company's proposal. I understand that this will be done as soon as possible.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

RESEARCH—SUGGESTED GRANT TO CANADIAN PEACE RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on March 13 I addressed a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the following terms:

I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister about a matter in which I understand he demonstrated some interest as a private citizen before he assumed office. Does the government have under active or current consideration the question of granting some financial support to the Canadian Peace Research Institute, let us say, of the order of a quarter of one per cent of what we provide for the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Speaker then said:

I would suggest to the hon. member that although the question is an important one it is one which ought to be placed on the Order Paper.

I felt it was time the question of the Canadian Peace Research Institution had more airing in this chamber than it has had for some time, so I decided to raise the matter on the adjournment debate. I now have the opportunity to deal with this matter.

It might be appropriate if I were to call to the attention of members of the House some of the beginnings of the Canadian Peace Research Institute. I have in my hand an information report which was published in November of 1962, which sets out a little timetable. It says that in March, 1961, Dr. Alcock published 500 copies of "Bridge of Reason", which he sent to acquaintances in science, business and government in Canada, Britain and the United States. He has been the leading light in this organization.

It says that in August of 1961 Dr. Brock Chisholm, Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, Professor Kenneth Boulding and Right Reverend James Thomas joined Dr. Alcock to establish the initial plans. In November of that year the establishment of the Canadian Peace Research Institute was announced at a Montreal conference. Following, in January of 1962, the Department of National Revenue recognized the institute as a charitable organization for income tax purposes. On May 1 the first board of directors meeting authorized the initial operation of the institute.

I think it might be of interest to put on record the names of the early directors of the organization. They were Dr. Norman Alcock, Dr. Kenneth E. Boulding, Jacques Brillant, Dr. G. Brock Chisholm, Dr. Pierre Dansereau, Dr. Franc R. Joubin, Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, Walter C. Koerner, Right Reverend James S. Thomson, Mr. W. D. Tucker, Francis G. Winspear, Gerard Pelletier and Pierre Elliott Trudeau. So I think my reference to the fact that the Prime Minister showed an interest in this matter as a private citizen was warranted.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

Actually, my raising of this question was prompted because several of my constituents had written to me enclosing a copy of an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of Monday, February 2, 1970, which I feel is worth drawing to the attention of the House. I should like to mention that the editorial outlines some of the projects which the peace institute has undertaken in the last seven years. It states:

A study by Dr. Gideon Rosenbuth of the University of British Columbia which demonstrated that there was little foundation for the widely held fear that reductions in armaments would lead to a depression.

An international conference on means of improving United Nations peacekeeping methods, which was attended by representatives of 24 nations.

Publication of a regular series of papers and booklets on problems related to peace, which are widely used by governments and universities around the world.

A study of factors in the everyday life of societies—methods of child-raising for example—which favor the growth of militarism and totalitarianism.

Research on "indicators of tension," using data on arms expenditures to provide storm warnings of coming troubles in various areas—hopefully in time for preventive action to be taken before shooting actually starts.

The editorial continues to point out that all this has been carried out on a financial shoestring with an annual budget of around $60,000, and that in other countries such as Sweden and the Netherlands much larger grants are made to this type of organization by their governments. It is suggested this is an example Canada should follow.

I picked a figure out of the air in my question when I suggested one quarter of one per cent of our national defence budget. I might point out that in terms of the current estimates, where the figure is $1,591,776,000, this would work out to something like $3,979,440. In rounding out my argument I would like to suggest that if the government would consider even one-hundredth of one quarter of one per cent, this would work out to something like $39,794. I would suggest that if the government would be prepared to make a contribution to the budget of the Canadian Peace Research Institute on the basis of something like $40,000, this would be at least a commendable start.

I hope that whoever is to reply tonight for the Prime Minister, will indicate that the government under the Prime Minister's leadership agrees that my suggested figure of one quarter of one per cent of our national defence budget would be an appropriate start for this government to make in the form of a grant to the operations of this body, which has performed such very useful work in leading to an understanding of the causes of war and the ways of promoting peace since its inception in 1962.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is a question on which the government has already received representations from the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Groos) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth). I can assure the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) that the government has nothing but the greatest respect for those persons who are involved with the Canadian Peace Research Institute.

I recall when I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs I had the opportunity to meet Dr. Alcock and discuss with him a number of the projects. I regretted at that time that we could not be of more assistance to him. In the interval, of course, we have gone into a period of austerity in respect of the government's budget, and the government expresses regret that at the present time it is not in a position to contribute to very worth-while objectives such as those of the institute. I might say that basic research of the type advocated by the institute is now being indirectly supported by the government of Canada at Canadian universities.

As I have indicated I regret that at the present time the government is not in a position to assist the institute, although the government has great respect for its objectives.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 24, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-12, an Act to establish the International Development Research Centre, with amendments, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEWART (COCHRANE)—TREATMENT OF CERTAIN PRIVATE BILLS BY STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This question of privilege is twofold. It arises as a consequence of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections which appears in Votes and Proceedings for last Thursday.

One of the main considerations of that committee was the question of qualifications of electors and candidates in elections. I had presented a bill, C-120, similar to a bill which had been presented by the Minister without Portfolio from York-Scarborough and to two other bills which were on the Order Paper. All these bills, which were referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, provided that all people who vote in elections or who are candidates in elections should be Canadian citizens. The idea was that the Canada Elections Act would be changed so that British subjects who were not Canadian citizens would no longer be entitled to vote in elections or be candidates in an election.

Apparently this matter was considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections and in its fourth report under item 9 of Part I of the recommendations the sense of those bills has been completely reversed. It states in effect that only Canadian citizens would be qualified as electors and then in parentheses these words are added:

for this purpose British subjects, other than Canadian citizens, who were ordinarily resident in Canada on the 25th day of June 1967, be deemed to be Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot be deemed to be a Canadian citizen. Either one is a Canadian citizen or is not. This whole thing is a mockery of the bills that were referred to the committee. Under the guise of saying that one must be a Canadian citizen in order to qualify as an elector the committee has added in parentheses that a British subject is to be deemed to be a Canadian citizen.

• (2:10 p.m.)

My question of privilege is twofold. First of all, the committee has no right to take bills and turn them around.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why not?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Second, a committee, when considering a bill of an hon. member, should at least invite the hon. member who presented the bill to be present at the hearing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Who else is more qualified to speak about the bill than the author of the bill? This was not done and is never done. I suggest that these are two points of privilege which must be considered, and I am prepared to move a motion accordingly if Your Honour will accept this question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: May I first thank the hon. member for his co-operation in agreeing yesterday to postpone the consideration of this matter until this sitting of the House. The delay has made it possible to give additional consideration to the interesting point he has raised for determination by the Chair. The hon. member reminded the House that Bill C-120 standing in the hon. member's name was removed from the Order Paper some time ago after the subject matter thereof was referred by consent, to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Eventually, the committee reported to the House. The committee report does refer to the hon. member's bill and submits recommendations which the hon. member suggests differ from the proposals contained in his bill.

The hon. member suggests that he has a question of privilege on two counts: first, that the committee report does not conform with certain aspects of his private bill and, second, that he was not notified when the committee proceeded with the consideration of Bill C-120.

I wish I could say that as a result of the additional time I have had to consider this matter, due to the hon. member's forbearance and courtesy, the Chair has been able to conclude that he has a legitimate question of privilege. In my view, whether the committee's findings and recommendations conform or do not conform with the proposals contained in the private bill cannot constitute a question of privilege. There are no rules and no precedents to support the hon. member's contention.

The second difficulty raised by the hon. member for Cochrane to the effect that he did not receive advance notice of the consideration by the committee of the subject matter of the bill, while it may amount to a legitimate grievance, does not justify a prima facie question of privilege. All hon. members will agree, I am sure, that as a matter of courtesy an hon. member whose bill or motion is to be considered by a committee should be notified by the committee chairman, the committee clerk, or someone on their behalf. I believe that this is the normal practice. I believe that in normai circumstances, when a private bill, or more often the subject matter of a private bill, is referred for consideration by a committee, either the committee chairman or the committee clerk gets in touch with the member or the member himself takes the initiative to communicate with the officers in charge of proceedings in the committee to ensure that he will be available when the matter is considered and discussed in the committee. In any event I would like to suggest that the procedure should be reviewed so as to ensure that advance notice is always conveyed to the sponsors of private bills and resolutions which have been referred to committees so that the unfortunate incident of which the hon. member has been a victim cannot be repeated.

This having been said, I have to rule that although the hon. member would appear to have a very legitimate grievance, there is no question of privilege on which a motion could be founded and put to the House at this time.

MR. CAFIK—USE OF POST OFFICE BOX 4430

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 17 I rise on a question of privilege. Notice of this question has been given to Your Honour to fulfil the conditions of Standing Order 17(2). My question of privilege relates to the mail addressed to, and I quote, "My Member of Parliament, P.O. Box 4430, Ottawa, Ontario."

I raise this question at the earliest opportunity because it has only come to my attention that mail intended for myself was forwarded to another Member of Parliament, and because of other details regarding this case of which I was not aware prior to now.

I believe that Members of Parliament have the right to expect free access by their constituents to themselves without going through an outside intermediary, and I maintain that the action taken by those responsible for the dissemination of information indicating an improper address for Members of Parliament is a direct violation of my privileges and the privileges of all members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, as much as I laud the actions of those responsible for these advertisements in so far as they are attempting to involve more people in the democratic process and to advance the goal of participation in the Governmental Process, I feel that their ill-conceived actions have resulted in a backward step for genuine participation. It does not further the cause of participation to publish a misleading and erroneous address for all members of this House.

I further contend that no individuals or groups have the right, however lofty their motives, to place themselves as an intermediary between the public and their elected representatives, and to do so is to violate our exclusive rights as members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cafik: I further contend that no one has the right to intercept my mail and remove it from the post office for any purpose whatsoever. This is not only a violation of the Post Office Act, section 8, which gives the Postmaster General the sole and exclusive privilege of collecting, conveying and delivering letters within Canada, but it is also a violation of the privileges of this House in so far as this mail was directed to Members of Parliament. Furthermore, the Post Office Act, section 39, indicates that "mailable matter becomes the property of the person to whom it is addressed when deposited in a post office."

I further contend that the very act of establishing this post office box is a contravention of my rights as a member of this House and the Post Office Act, section 69, which makes it an offence for anyone other than the postal authorities to "undertake to collect, convey or deliver any letter within Canada."

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that not only was this mail removed from the post office box but that in many cases such mail was redirected to Members of Parliament on an arbitrary basis without due consideration to determine to whom it should have been directed. Consequently mail intended for one Member of Parliament was misdirected to other Members of Parliament.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that all hon. members have the right to know what happened to this mail following its removal from post office box 4430 and prior to it being delivered. Were tabulations prepared as to quantity, or was any attempt made to prepare mailing lists? If either of these things was done I feel, with all respect, that our rights have been most seriously violated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: There is one last point, Mr. Speaker, regarding the use of P.O. Box 4430. Many people in Canada may well believe that this is the official way to contact their Member of Parliament. How many may have set that address aside for use at a future date? There is enough alienation in our society without misleading the public as to how to communicate with the members of this House. In view of the importance of this matter I hereby move that the subject matter of this question of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for report thereon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. W. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say in regard to the question of privilege that has been raised that I have received hundreds of letters and coupons and they have come to me directly because my constituents know who I am.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Hees: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is now a question of privilege before the House and we cannot have two questions of privilege at the same time; the one before the House is complication enough. The hon. member seeks the floor either on a point of order or on a question of privilege but I wonder if it is a matter of urgency. If he has a legitimate point of order perhaps I should hear it.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A point of order, Mr. Speaker, which will not take very long. My point is that I believe the hon. member for Ontario did a disservice to this House by not reading that message nearly as well as the Minister of Finance who wrote it out for him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cafik: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario already has one question of privilege. He cannot have two questions of privilege at the same time.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I demand an apology—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has to wait until the Chair has had his say. For the moment the hon. member has to be patient. I wish I had followed my original intention and not recognized the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

I am sure the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings was not seriously suggesting that the statement made by the hon. member for Ontario was not his own or that he was not himself the author of the question of privilege which he has submitted to the House. I am sure the hon. member, who has long experience in the House, knows that he has no right to make this suggestion and I would invite him to confirm the understanding of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Cafik: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, you may be right in imputing to the hon. member rather facetious motives but I know that neither I nor anyone else in the House has the right to impute motives and I feel that on the basis of what he has said I deserve an apology for an absolutely inaccurate and insulting statement by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to impute motives in any way. All I did was criticize the hon. member's mode of reading a message that had been prepared for him by another hon. member.

Use of Post Office Box 4430

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please.

Mr. Hees: I will say it was well read and then everybody will be happy.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would not be happy. The hon. member cannot make this suggestion and he has to agree that when an hon. member has made a statement or a speech no other hon. member has the right to suggest that it has not been prepared by himself and is not an expression of his own views and thoughts. That is why I have invited the hon. member to indicate to the Chair that my understanding of his thoughts is correct.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as always I will be very glad to agree with your ruling and withdraw my remarks.

Mr. Baldwin: He could not write that well.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on the same question of privilege to say very briefly that while I do not mind getting coupons which should be sent to my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I do not even mind getting coupons from that part of the area which is now in the constituency of Selkirk, I do object to having to answer people who live in the constituencies of Winnipeg South Centre, Winnipeg South or St. Boniface. I think those members should deal with their own coupons and I wish they could be sent to the right members and not to me.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I need not mention names or name places because I think Your Honour is aware of the situation I am alluding to. Not only is there outside interference but there has been inside interference, so to speak, which has been drawn to Your Honour's attention. Not only is there interference with the mails but also with the operations in my own office. This matter, which has been brought to Your Honour's attention, could very well be tied in with any vote on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members will remember, yesterday the right hon. member for Prince Albert raised as a question of privilege the fact that the box in question had been closed. Today the hon. member for Ontario has raised his question of privilege on the grounds that the box has been opened. This leaves the Chair in a box.

[Mr. Hees.]

I will search for the key to the riddle and try to give an answer. I will consider the matter very seriously. I realize this is a matter of very serious import and have wondered myself for some time whether, in one way or another, the rights and privileges of hon. members were in any way adversely affected either by the opening of the box or by the closing of the box or by the operations which are related in some way to this question. I am pleased the matter was raised earlier by the right hon. member for Prince Albert and today by the hon. member for Ontario.

I should say that I have some procedural misgivings about the way the matter was raised today by the hon. member for Ontario. We all know that one of the most important considerations to be taken into account by the Chair in determining whether there is a prima facie case of privilege is whether the matter was raised at the first opportunity. The hon. member is really complaining that this box was opened some time ago. It seems to me that, so far as all hon. members are concerned, this has been common knowledge or should have been common knowledge for some weeks now. I therefore wonder whether the matter being raised now is being raised at the first opportunity. That is an aspect of the matter that the Chair cannot overlook. With this reservation, the matter will be looked into and tomorrow perhaps or on Thursday, if the House is sitting then, the Chair will give a decision.

Mr. Baldwin: Don't scare us, Mr. Speaker.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

TABLING OF VOLUME I OF REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1969

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have tabled today copies in the two official languages of volume I of the Report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31st, 1969.

As the House is aware, the Financial Administration Act requires that the report of the Auditor General be laid before the House on or before December 31st or, if Parliament is then not in session, within 15 days after the commencement of the next ensuing session. The Auditor General has asked me to extend his apologies to the House for the lateness of his report which has been caused by circumstances beyond his control.

In order to reduce the delay to a minimum, the report is being submitted in two volumes. Volume I contains the introduction followed by the usual summary of expenditure and revenue and comments on expenditure and revenue transactions. Volume II, which will be completed and tabled later, will contain the summary of assets and liabilities and the sections on Crown Corporations, departmental operating activities and special audits and examinations.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TABLING OF INCOME AND CORPORATE PROFIT FIGURES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday it was requested of me, and the House agreed, that I should table certain figures relating to wages, salaries and supplementary labour incomes and also figures relating to corporate profits before taxes for the last 20 years. I am prepared to do that now.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

TABLING OF CANADA YEAR BOOK AND BROCHURE "CANADA"

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, some time ago you kindly informed me that there was some delay in supplying hon. members with copies of the Canada Year Book and the handbook "Canada". You also suggested that I table those publications so that they could be distributed more quickly to hon. members. In accordance with your wish and with Standing Order 41(2) of the House, I am happy to table today copies of the Canada Yearbook and of the handbook "Canada" in the two official languages.

POWER

BAY OF FUNDY—TABLING OF FEASIBILITY STUDY OF TIDAL POWER DEVELOPMENT

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table in the two official languages copies of a feasibility study of tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HEALTH AND WELFARE

LIVING CONDITIONS IN CITY SLUMS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister was obviously well satisfied with the results of the six days he spent recently in the Arctic examining first-hand the living conditions of our native peoples, is he planning to spend an equivalent period of time during the parliamentary recess visiting the slums of our major cities, examining first-hand the living conditions of those living below the poverty line?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will return to the hon. member in due course.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UNITED STATES AIR FORCE EXERCISE OVER SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence regarding the announcement that United States military aircraft will undertake an exercise over the province of Saskatchewan? In view of the concern which has been expressed by people in that province because of the lack of information, can the minister tell the House the purpose of the exercise? Can he also tell the House at what altitude these planes will be flying and whether any Canadian planes will be participating in this exercise?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have to contest the assertion by the hon. member that there was a lack of information. We did issue a very comprehensive press release in which the altitudes, routes and everything were spelled out. The purpose of the exercise is, within the arrangements we have with the government of the United States, to help SAC pilots practise on different routes than what they are accustomed to. With regard to the last part of the question, there are no Canadians participating except with reference to the ground arrangements so that we have control of the operation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question. Will the planes in question be carrying any explosive bombs, incendiary bombs or any other explosive devices that could constitute a danger to the civilian population in the event of any of them meeting with a mishap?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): No, Mr. Speaker. I believe this was stressed in the press communiqué. There will not be any weapons aboard.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary. In view of the fact the minister has explained that the purpose of the exercise is to familiarize pilots with unfamiliar terrain, could this exercise not be held as well 100 or 200 miles north where there is less population and where it would be less likely to cause any concern on the part of the population?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, if I might again be allowed to refer the hon. member to the press release that was made, we did indicate that the routes which have been selected are the most sparsely populated in that particular area.

AGRICULTURE

REPRESENTATION ON DAIRY COMMISSION—POLICY RESPECTING SURPLUS MILK

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I wish to ask his Parliamentary Secretary a question.

Has the government changed the policy of the Canadian Dairy Commission which had been established by the former Minister of Agriculture who said that the Canadian Dairy Commission could hardly operate without a commissioner representing milk purchasers and concerned with the sale of dairy products, since the recent appointment to the Canadian Dairy Commission indicates that no commissioner has been named to represent purchasers?

Mr. Speaker: I take the liberty of suggesting to the hon. member that his question is rather argumentative. He could perhaps rephrase it, so that the Parliamentary Secretary may answer it.

Mr. Rondeau: With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I should like to rephrase my question.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House whether the Canadian Dairy Commission now intends to deprive itself of the services of a commissioner representing milk purchasers?

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at the present time as in the past years, three commissioners are members of the Canadian Dairy Commission. One resigned some two months ago. His post was filled and a press release was published to that effect. So nothing is changed.

Mr. Rondeau: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary indicate whether the surpluses of fluid milk which have been mentioned yesterday, when the government policy was announced, will also be submitted to a policy of penalization?

Mr. Côté: Mr. Speaker, the representatives of milk producers associations have undertaken a study with the milk producers in order to solve this problem themselves, since it lies outside the federal jurisdiction, but is within the provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a complementary question.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary explain why, according to the new policy, the sum of $1.25 per hundredweight will be deductible at the plant on surpluses, even if the producers do not receive a subsidy?

NATIONAL PARKS

SUPREME COURT DECISION UPHOLDING VALIDITY OF PERPETUAL LEASES—TEMPORARY HABITATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has to do with the judgments by the Supreme Court of Canada in the Queen v. Walker and the Queen v. M. E. Clark and Son Ltd., by which judgments the Supreme Court of Canada decided that the arbitrary order of the department that a 42-year perpetual lease could not be renewed were beyond the powers of the government or the department. Under the circumstances, will the minister say what will happen to those people who have lived either in Jasper National Park or in Banff National Park and who, under coercion, signed renewals and thereby through misunderstanding did away with their rights? Is the government going to place them in the same position as those who fought successfully against the orders that were made?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Supreme Court handed down a judgment and the officials of the Department of Justice and of my department are now studying it. I will certainly have comments to make in the House as soon as a policy has been established following the judgment of the Supreme Court.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the government cannot do this kind of thing. I ask the minister whether in view of this judgment, important in trimming down bureaucratic tyranny, the government will now give consideration to the orders respecting shack camps and temporary habitations in the national parks so that these places will not be subject to the orders which have been made during the past two years?

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to point out to the right hon. gentleman that the order in council relating to this matter of perpetual leases was passed by his own government. We are studying the matter now in all its aspects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. gentleman was endeavouring to make a statement precisely opposite to the truth, he succeeded admirably today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

CESSATION OF RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE IN WESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. I see he is not in his place today, though he is supposed to be here, and neither is the Minister of Supply and Services who sometimes answers for him.

Some hon. Members: Author!

Mr. Noble: I should like to make an apology. I have just been told that the minister's brother has died. Perhaps I can direct my question to the Prime Minister and he can take it as notice. Has the Minister of Transport received letters or briefs protesting a threatened cessation of railway passenger service over a wide area of western Ontario, and will he use his good offices to have the service maintained until a thorough assessment of the situation can be made by the people concerned and by the transport department?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I will see that the question is conveyed to the minister responsible and that the hon. member is notified of the information we have.

WHEAT—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OR ALTERATION OF ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Having regard to the widespread opinion among western farmers that the "lift" program will be largely ineffective would the minister consider withdrawing this plan either in whole or in part or making major alterations to it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Certainly not. I believe the hon. member is altogether wrong in his assumption that farmers will not participate in this program. In my view there will be significant participation leading to a reduction in wheat acreage. This is very important in view of the fact that a recent report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics indicates there might have been too great a switch into other grains.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Bearing in mind the situation of farmers who have already diversified and reduced wheat acreage, and the fact that farmers on one section or less would suffer severe loss of income under the proposed acreage reduction program, would the minister revamp this program in order that the quota might be more realistic in these cases?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member's supplementary is essentially a repetition of the original question.

WHEAT—PUBLISHING OF ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM REGULATIONS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the fact that the acreage reduction program as a whole is not being accepted by the farmers, and since there is a great deal of confusion about the regulations governing it, despite the nearness of the planting season, can the minister tell the House whether he and his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, will publish these regulations and let the House and the farmers know where they are heading?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Very full information about this program and its application to individual farmers was made available in a mail-out to every permitholder in the prairie provinces. It is, of course, not possible to put the regulations themselves in place until the items which are before this House, on which they would in part be founded, are approved.

Mr. Gleave: Since the minister has himself changed the regulations by public announcement at public meetings since that pamphlet was produced, I again ask him if he will move with all speed to get these regulations into the hands of the public?

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—ESTABLISHMENT OF APPEAL BOARD

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): The minister indicated that an appeal board would be set up. Since many farmers propose to make their plans on the basis of any decisions which the appeal board might reach, may I ask whether the board will be established before seeding time and whether the cases before it will be disposed of in time for plans to be formulated?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Provision along those lines will be made in the regulations which are being developed. Adequate information has been made available to farmers which should guide them in their plantings, and of course the appeal board will be dealing only with difficult and particular applications of the regulations to certain factual situations. I do not think that should lead to any uncertainty on the part of the farmers.

Mr. Korchinski: What would happen in the case of a farmer who was hailed out last year, put his land into summerfallow the previous year, and is going to put a crop in this year? Is he going to sell no crop at all? Will no consideration be given to his needs in these critical circumstances?

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM REGULATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): In light of the answers given by the minister, and of the letters and petitions which many of us have received protesting against the acreage reduction program, would the hon. gentleman, in formulating these regulations, consider making provision under the new delivery quota system for farmers who had no wheat carried over, and is further consideration being given to the situation of farmers who reduced their wheat acreage and increased their summerfallow last year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): As far as the second part of the question is concerned, it has already been made clear what action will be taken to recognize additional summerfallow put in last year. Farmers without surpluses are at least in a position where they can grow non-wheat crops with some security, knowing that there will be less acreage in these crops and therefore the likelihood of a better market. Should they feel they must grow wheat, they can do so in secure knowledge of what the quota will be on the balance of their land.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the grain trade for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the fact that the Wheat Board has been selling barley, since the fall of 1969, for 78 cents and even for 76 cents per bushel, whereas they charged $1.07 per bushel in eastern Canada, could the minister tell the House whether or not the province of Quebec may expect to benefit from preferential export prices if it becomes independent as a result of the elections of April 29?

TRANSPORT

SECOND VOYAGE OF "MANHATTAN"—AUTHORIZATION AND DATE OF TRIP

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I am sure all hon. members learned with regret of his sad bereavement. In the circumstances I will direct the question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, since this is a matter of considerable public interest and the House is to close tomorrow for a number of days. Can the House be informed whether the Manhattan has been cleared for passage through the Canadian Arctic and when will this voyage begin?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Department of Transport has written to the chief engineer and to the owners of this ship asking for their full co-operation in having a Canadian officer of the Department of Transport on board during the trip.

We should also like to have a man responsible for the company in Ottawa during that trip in order that communication between the department and the owner of the ship will be established so that each will know what is happening.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary to the Parliamentary Secretary. Along with the information that the Parliamentary Secretary has provided the House, which was very welcome, I am wondering whether he might also tell us the exact date on which the Manhattan will be commencing its voyage, and also whether the Humble Oil Company has accepted full responsibility for any possible pollution damage, and what is the amount of the bond the company is putting up?

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I do not have all the information requested by the hon. member right now. I know the department has asked the company to carry insurance of $6,500,000 in respect of responsibility. As to the other considerations, I will inform the hon. member.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a very brief supplementary. Perhaps the additional information that the Parliamentary Secretary does not have at his fingertips now could be provided to the House during the question period tomorrow, or perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary or the minister could make a statement on motions.

[Later:]

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Parliamentary Secretary. Can he advise the House also whether officials from the Department of Transport or other government departments will be accompanying the Manhattan on its voyage into the north and through the passage?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, as I have just said, an officer of the Department of Transport will be on board ship during the trip and a responsible representative of the company will remain here in Ottawa to establish communications.

[English]

SECOND VOYAGE OF "MANHATTAN"—ACCEPTANCE OF REGULATIONS BY HUMBLE OIL COMPANY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether the Humble Oil Company has informed the Department of Transport that it is prepared to accept all of the 24 conditions laid out by the minister as contained in the appendix to Hansard of Tuesday, March 17?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The list of the conditions laid out by the Department of Transport was submitted to the company which has agreed to fulfil all of them.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF LEDAIN COMMISSION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. May I ask him whether the government has received the report of the LeDain inquiry into drugs yet and, if not, how soon will it be forthcoming?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that it will be forthcoming forthwith.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF CANADIAN CORPORATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the question I have for the Minister without Portfolio from Windsor will also be answered by forthcoming forthwith. Can be inform the House whether he has completed his study on foreign ownership in Canada, which I understand he was instructed to make by his colleagues in Cabinet, and whether he has already presented recommendations to cabinet to deal with the subject?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the House the Prime Minister said a minister would be presenting a document in this area to the cabinet for study within a month. I understand that it is not proper to discuss matters in the House involving the business of Privy Council. If the Prime Minister feels it is appropriate to say more I am sure he will be happy to do so.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: He is right in line—yes, daddy.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I was perfectly aware of some of the things the minister has said, but I do not appreciate his saying them in answer to the question, which was rather carefully worded. I did not ask him to tell me what happened in the Privy Council. I asked him whether he has completed the study and whether he has already presented recommendations to cabinet. I am not asking him what the recommendations were, what the conclusions were of what happened in cabinet; I just want to know whether it was done.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, even though I do not appreciate the form of the hon. member's question, I will attempt to give him a further answer. I think I can say there will be no problem in meeting the date that the Prime Minister mentioned in the House.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBLE WORK STOPPAGE BY PEACE BRIDGE CUSTOMS OFFICERS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the statement by government customs officers that there is a dispute over holiday work schedules which could stop all traffic at the Peace Bridge this Easter weekend, I should like to ask the minister what steps he has taken to prevent customs officers from walking off their jobs at the Peace Bridge, leaving everything in chaos?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, officials of my department and of the Treasury Board as well as representatives of the Public Service Alliance of Canada will meet later this afternoon in order to find a solution to that problem.

POLLUTION

MERCURY CONTAMINATION OF FISH IN LAKES ERIE AND ST. CLAIR

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has he been made aware of reported mercury contamination of certain types of fish in Lake St. Clair, Lake Erie and their tributaries? If so, is the contamination level high enough to be dangerous to humans, and has the source of the contamination been found?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The very brief answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. We have received an official report from the Ontario Research Foundation that there is mercury in certain species of fish, notably pickerel, in Lake St. Clair, and that the level of mercury is unacceptable in so far as human consumption is concerned. We have moved immediately to ban the export of these fish since all of it was going to the United States. We have determined two sources, both of them chlor-alkali plants on the Canadian side in the vicinity of Sarnia. One has finished its conversion program and the other is in the process of correcting its cleanup procedures.

PHOSPHATE DETERGENTS—INVESTIGATION OF NTA

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this is a supplementary question—you might call it related; I do not know—to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the widespread public concern to get phosphates in detergents replaced by a non-polluting substance, would the minister make an early statement on motions about preliminary findings of the Fisheries Research Board as to the possibilities of sodium nitrilo tri-acetate, better known as NTA?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the question is not supplementary and that it is only distantly related. Perhaps the minister might indicate whether he is prepared to make such a statement.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we can make information along these lines available at a very early date.

SPORTS

MONTREAL BID FOR 1976 SUMMER OLYMPIC GAMES

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing a question concerning the bid of the city of Montreal for the 1976 summer Olympic games. Would he please indicate to the House whether Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has agreed to provide up to $120 million for the construction of housing for athletes and officials of the games as intimated on page 48 of the city of Montreal brief to the International Olympic Association?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, no such agreement has been made. As a matter of fact, there has been no communication, to the best of my knowledge, with me or any of the officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation about this proposal.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN QUEBEC—TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER ESKIMOS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. From time to time he has reported that discussions were going on between the Eskimos of northern Quebec and representatives of the government of Canada, and I think the government of the province of Quebec. Can he now give a report on those discussions, because the Eskimos are greatly aroused and fear being transported to another jurisdiction?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know that Mr. Neville, representative of the federal government, has come back to Ottawa during the weekend. He is making his report. As soon as I get it I shall be pleased to make comments to the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread opposition toward this move, which is almost unanimous among the Eskimos in northern Quebec, and the fact that they do not want to be removed in any way, shape or form from the jurisdiction of the federal government, will the minister give consideration to having representations made by way of a submission to the Supreme Court to ascertain whether or not the government of Canada has the power to do what it is endeavouring to do to these Eskimos who are under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament? Will he have a reference made to the Supreme Court of Canada, in order to protect the rights of these people, concerning whether such action is legal?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is a very important question. We are consulting the Eskimos, as I explained it several times. It is important to ensure that the basic rights of Eskimos regarding their language and their religion are protected. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that the aim of the policy followed by the government is to protect these rights. However, it should be recognized that these people are at the same time citizens of Quebec and this province being a part of Canada, they have rights both as Quebec and Canadian citizens.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I now ask the minister to answer the question. In view of the aroused feeling on the part of these Eskimos, will he be prepared to consider a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine whether or not they can be legally turned over to provincial control, in whole or in part, against their wishes?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have already said to the House that we are considering the problem now and that we have sent a team to discuss the matter with the Eskimos. This team has returned during the weekend and will soon present us with a report. We will then tell the House what their findings are.

BANK OF CANADA

EXTENSION OF SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS TO FORMER EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that former employees of the Bank of Canada—and I am referring to ordinary employees, not to former governors—will not have their pensions increased under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, will the minister discuss this matter with the officials of the Bank of Canada in the hope that their employees will be given the same treatment being given public servants generally?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

INVESTIGATION OF OPERATIONS OF THE MINT

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the recent cases involving bribery and corruption in the Royal Canadian Mint, will the government assure the House that a thorough investigation of the operations of the Mint will be started immediately and, if necessary, that a royal commission will be set up in order that the public interest may be fully protected?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if my hon. friend will check the record he will find that a thorough investigation was carried out immediately that the possibility of some defalcation came to the notice of the Minister of Finance. As a result, two or more persons have been prosecuted. There has been a complete reorganization of the accounting procedures of the Mint and as a matter of fact, as the hon. member knows, it is now to be operated by a Crown corporation.

Mr. Bigg: It is on that precise point, Mr. Speaker, that I wish a further investigation to be made. There seems to be some great discrepancy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask the question if he has a supplementary.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, would the minister look into this matter further to find out, if such is the case, why very strong steps are being taken to discipline minor members of the Mint when half a million dollars in gold currency disappeared and apparently the real parties have not been brought to justice?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—ATTITUDE OF QUEBEC LIBERAL LEADER

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that the Liberal leader in Quebec is attempting to ride into office on the back of the white paper on taxation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, lots of people, like the Leader of the Opposition, ride on the back of the white paper.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Bigg.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the original question was in order and I do not think a supplementary would be in order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I take it that the answer was also out of order?

Mr. Speaker: By all means.

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—EFFECT ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that United States accounting firms are advising clients not to invest in Canada because of the proposed tax reforms, will the minister advise the House if and when he will be withdrawing or changing those proposals in the white paper that are driving away investments in Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): In the first two months of this year the exchange fund had to buy over $200 million in excess foreign exchange coming into Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I bring to the attention of hon. members that it might not be appropriate at this time to embark on a debate on the white paper. Quite a few members appear to be anxious to ask questions.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ALTERNATIVE TO ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon. In view of the fact that thousands of farmers will not survive economically under the "Lift" program introduced by the government, is the government now developing alternative programs for these people?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me we have a repetition of the question asked originally. Many members seem to be anxious to ask the same question. It has been asked on a number of occasions now. I suggest that perhaps we should go on to another subject.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRINIDAD—POSSIBLE NATIONALIZATION OF BANK OF LONDON AND MONTREAL

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister say whether the government of Trinidad has been in touch with the government of Canada regarding the possible nationalization of the Bank of London and Montreal and, if so, have assurances been given that this would be done with full compensation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did discuss this matter earlier with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who had raised it with me. At that time we had received no information as to the mode and amount of compensation which is envisaged and this we are trying to establish. As of a few hours ago, however, we did not have it.

COMMUNICATIONS

TELESAT CANADA—LAUNCHING OF SATELLITE —IMPLEMENTATION OF SYSTEM

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. We have heard a great deal in recent months from the Minister of Communications about his handling of the Post Office, but we have heard surprisingly little about Telesat Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Scott: Has the minister now a definite timetable for the launching of the satellite portion of the system and for implementation of the system itself? If he has a timetable, is the program on schedule?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether this is not the type of question which might be placed on the Order Paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR MORE FREQUENT REPORTS BY BUREAU OF STATISTICS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. Due to the present six-year record of high and acute national unemployment, will his administration now ask for more frequent reports from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics indicating the week-by-week level of unemployment instead of monthly reports as at present?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure this question is in order at this time. It would seem the hon. member is making a request of the government which would normally be done by way of a question on the Order Paper.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It would seem to me that I could receive a yes or no answer. I just asked if he would not do so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—DEFINITION OF "CANADIAN CITIZEN"

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

[English]

I wonder whether the Prime Minister would tell the House what the intention of the government is, particularly in view of the fourth report of the committee on Privileges and Elections, and whether or not Canada is to deem anyone to be a Canadian citizen whether he is a British subject or any other foreigner?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a question about a matter which relates to an order now before the House.

FISHERIES

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF CANADIAN SALTFISH CORPORATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Now that the legislation to set up the Canadian Saltfish Corporation has completed its legislative passage through the other place, is the minister in a position to announce the name of the chairman of the corporation before the beginning of the new fiscal year? Can the minister also assure the House that the corporation will be established in time for its officers to establish our markets and market requirements for the current season?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, if the Saltfish Corporation legislation receives royal assent tomorrow, I hope we can name the chairman of the board before the end of the week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HISTORIC SITES

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REPORTED DESIGNATION OF Pprovince HOUSE AS NATIONAL SHRINE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is based on news reports following discussions that his Parliamentary Secretary had with ministers of the government of Prince Edward Island and specifically the report that the federal government is considering designating Province House as a national shrine. Can he advise if the Prince Edward Island legislature will still be allowed to function and also what other provincial Houses he has in mind for federalizing and enshrinement?

An hon. Member: What about the one in Quebec city?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

MANPOWER

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of the survey of summer employment which he tabled yesterday. I wish to ask the minister whether, in view of the finding that a very substantial percentage of the students who found employment last year were not able to find employment for the whole period for which they were available for work, and the serious effect this had on their ability to continue their education, the department is giving consideration to establishing programs to increase the possibility of providing full employment for the summer period?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have that point under consideration. I mentioned it in reply to a previous question that the hon. member asked. We are attempting to accelerate our program of publicity and to work with employers in every way we can to extend the period of employment. My hon. friend will realize that with such a large influx of students into the labour market as will take place this summer, it may be very difficult to provide all the students, or even a high proportion of them with full-time employment.

[Mr. Davis.]

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the minister would give consideration to making a statement on this subject in some detail after the Easter recess, in view of the importance of summer employment to students?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be happy to consider making a statement after the recess.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CLOSING OF DUNLOP PLANT—EFFECT ON YARMOUTH TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, this is a related question which has to do with unemployment. Can the Minister of Manpower and Immigration tell us whether the department has now studied the effects of the closing of the Dunlop plant in Toronto on related industries, particularly the Yarmouth textile mill, and in the event of the closing of such plant can he tell us what alternative employment will be offered to the Dunlop employees and to those in related industries such as the Yarmouth mill?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have considered the impact of the closure of the Dunlop plant on other industries. At Dunlop we have already instituted a very large-scale effort to assist the employees, and if that plant closes it is our expectation that we will succeed in getting work for all of the employees or nearly all.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OFFERS TO PURCHASE AIRCRAFT CARRIER "BONAVENTURE"

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. It will be some days before we will have an opportunity to question him again so I wonder whether he could answer this question now because when we come back after the Easter recess the Bonaventure will perhaps have been retired. Can the minister indicate whether or not he has received any submissions from any groups whatsoever for the purchase of Canada's aircraft carrier?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Not yet, Mr. Speaker; we have not as yet received any worth-while offer.

FINANCE

EXEMPTION OF URBAN RENEWAL CONSTRUCTION FROM FREEZE ON DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Minister of Finance but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. In view of the growing concern for the future of urban renewal, particularly since the tabling of the budget proposal on depreciation allowances, will the minister use his good influence to convince his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to exempt areas designated for urban renewal from the freeze on depreciation allowances?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): It is an interesting proposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kootenay West.

WATER RESOURCES

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS ON CANADA WATER ACT

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or his Parliamentary Secretary. Does the minister plan on calling an early meeting of those provincial ministers concerned with water resources in order to ensure as wide an area of co-operation as possible in the understanding and implementation of the Canada Water Act?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR EAST ASIANS IN AFRICAN COUNTRIES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Are any special arrangements being made to facilitate the movement of people of east Asian origin now in Kenya and other African countries, in view of the great difficulties these people are having in finding a place in which to live?

An hon. Member: What about Yarmouth?

Report on Miscellaneous Estimates

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, over the past year or so we have been studying this question with a view to assisting the movement of any such persons. I have not checked the situation recently but I would be happy to do so and report to my hon. friend.

NATIONAL PARKS

BONNE BAY, NFLD.—OIL EXPLORATION RIGHTS—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARING

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the complications which have arisen with regard to the establishment of a national park in the province of Newfoundland and the evidence of oil exploration rights, would the minister agree to hold a public hearing in the province similar to that held in Nova Scotia to ascertain the legality of such rights which are seriously hindering economic development?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there is no need to hold a public hearing to determine whether there can be oil prospection in a park. It is a well-known policy in Canada that no prospection of any kind whatsoever can be carried out in a park. If the government of Newfoundland wants to be given a second national park, it will have to abide by the federal legislation on national parks, just as do the other provinces.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES—PROCEDURAL IMPLICATIONS OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) knows, the point which he raised in the House the other day was again brought up yesterday and it was agreed that the hon. member would be given an opportunity today at this time to present the submissions he has in mind.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I think that Your Honour and this House are faced with a very interesting point, that is the extent to which the attempt by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to vary the supplementary estimates(B) for 1969-70 is valid and can be accepted by Your Honour and by this House now when we are dealing with the business of supply.

To start with, I suggest that this attempt to legislate by use of an estimate is most improper and should not be permitted.

Even more at fault, however, is the attempt by the committee to vary the original vote in two very material respects. In permitting this, we get away from the very wholesome restraints which the exercise of the legislative process permits us. I am amazed at what has happened here. I do not want to go into it to any extent, but certainly there must be some fault on the part of the Treasury or of the Minister without Portfolio who has been handling the particular item under discussion, namely, vote 17b which appears on page 2 of the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

This attempt to short circuit the normal legislative process by legislating by means of a vote is wrong, but it is even more wrong to attempt to vary the result later. However, I will deal with that later since it is a question of substance. Now, I just want to stake out my claim.

What we are faced with now is the fact that the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates purported to change in two very material respects the original vote 17b in the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture. In the first instance, what was done was to change the category of persons entitled to receive the grants from those who were described as holders of permit books under the Wheat Board Act to people who are producers.

Obviously, we are referring to the Wheat Board Act, but I will not take up the time of the House by quoting from it. However, there is no question that a producer is not necessarily the same as a holder of a permit book under the Wheat Board Act. Obviously, those who hold permit books must be producers, but producers need not necessarily be holders of these permits. The words, "providing for a board of appeal to determine disputes hereunder" were added by the committee to the wording of the vote. These words do not appear in the original vote, and constitute a very substantial alteration of the purposes of the original vote as brought down with the message of His Excellency, and contained in the supplementary estimates. I would suggest that under those circumstances there is no question but that this House should not consider the amended vote in the business of supply.

However, Mr. Speaker, because this is a very serious issue I would like to ask very briefly, what are the rights of committees in this regard? I would not ask Your Honour to make a judgment at this time covering what should be the terms and conditions with regard to committees in the future but we must remember, Sir, and I think the House should remember, that we have embarked on a completely new procedure. It could be a very excellent procedure, but we must remember we have taken out from this House the old committee of supply procedure, under which there was the right to have a careful examination of estimates and the ability to move amendments. This right has been taken away, and in the result we have put into the hands of committees the right to deal with these estimates.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what limitation should be placed on these committees, bearing in mind that in the period from 1958 to 1962, some 55, 60 and 65 days were often taken by some of the eminent members of the opposition at that time in their examination of the estimates. Are the committees to be limited to the simple right to say yes or no in dealing with these estimates? Are committees possibly to have the right—this is what I would ask Your Honour to consider because committees are now involved in dealing with these estimates—to add recommendations urging the House to consider what steps can be taken, whether by a humble message to His Excellency or by a simple recommendation, to ask for permission to vary the purpose of votes or to extend the amounts?

I have been in touch with members of various committees who are disturbed over the question of what are and what are not their rights in this regard. I do not expect Your Honour, on this rather narrow point which now confronts you, to make a decision on the wider aspect which I have asked you to consider. However, I hope that during the period of the Easter Recess Your Honour would give some consideration to this, and by a proposal to the Committee on Procedure and Organization, or by a statement in this House, be of some help to the Standing Committees that will be dealing with these estimates after the recess. I shall have something more to say after we get into the actual business of supply, but I wanted to make this narrow observation at this time on this point that confronts Your Honour.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because the point of order seems to me to be so clear, I shall take only a minute or two of the time of the House. I refer to the basic point of order that is before us, namely, as to whether or not a standing committee of the House can propose an amendment to a money vote which alters its purpose in any way.

Without reading it in full, I draw attention to citation 250(4) of Beauchesne, on page 216 of his fourth edition, which reads:

> The fundamental terms of a money resolution submitted to the House with the Governor-General's recommendation—and so on

> —cannot be amended.

Then I also draw attention to the important words in citation 246(3) on page 207, part of which says that once a financial initiative has been indicated it lays down once and for all the conditions about that charge. Then, I quote specifically these words:

> In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

That citation goes on to say that, of course, a minister could move for a change, but in doing so he would have to secure the Royal recommendation. All in all, Mr. Speaker, because Your Honour raised some question about this the other day from the Chair, and in view of the points raised by the hon member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), it seems to me that the case is so clear that one does not need to argue that the change proposed by the committee is not within its competence.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, to add to the unanimity of opinion, I wish to make a reference to Standing Order 58 as decided upon by this House in December, 1968. I draw particular attention to Standing Order 58(4) which refers to the requirement that written notice shall be given in dealing with estimates. I think there is some importance to be attached to the recital in that section of the various acts that must be preceded by notice, that is, a motion to concur in estimates, or a motion to restore or reinstate any item in the estimates. Again, looking at paragraph (10) of the same Standing Order, we also have a reference to the motion to concur in, or a motion to reinstate any item in the estimates. From that, and in the light of the citation cited by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I would argue that it is not within the power of the Standing Committees, when they are considering either final supplementary estimates or main estimates on an order from the House, to do anything other than concur in or reject those estimates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or to reduce them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Or to reduce them. In particular, I would argue that the proposal put forward in the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates would not be in order because there is not the additional recommendation from the Crown with regard to these particular items.

I submit that the standing committees in exercising their scrutiny of the estimates can do no more and no less than the committee of supply could have done before the amendments to the Standing Orders, and therefore that this section of the committee's report is not in order. On that basis, while it can be said that the opportunities for members of the standing committees have greatly increased, because they have the opportunity of examining both the minister and his officials and at greater length than was the case previously, the actual juridical effect of their examination can be no more and no less than was the case with the old committee of supply, that is to say, either to adopt the estimates, reduce them or reject them altogether. I would say that is confirmed by the Standing Orders when we changed them in December, 1968, indicating the very limited number of ways in which estimates could be changed.

I might indicate that after consultation with the Table the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) put forward a motion, which is the third item under Order No. 1 on today's Order Paper, and I quote:

> Consideration of a motion of the President of the Treasury Board concerning Votes 17b (Department of Agriculture) and 36b (Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce) of Supplementary Estimates (B) for 1969-70.

I should make it clear that this was put forward only out of an abundance of caution, in the event that the committee report was accepted and it should then be found necessary to restore or reinstate the items as put forward by the House. Of course, if Your Honour finds the report was in effect invalid, and therefore a nullity in respect to the amendments it proposes to make, it would not be necessary to put that particular motion, and the President of the Treasury Board would be seeking the consent of the House to withdraw it. On that basis, I would agree basically with the principle cited, that the report in this form should not be accepted by the House, and what we have before us is really the consideration of the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970, as originally tabled in this House.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their views. The fact that there is unanimity among those who have participated in the procedural discussion makes it easier for the Chair. In fact, for a moment, I wondered whether there was any point in giving a decision but I think it is probably wise to make a ruling based on the advice of hon. members who have taken part in the discussion and who have agreed on a conclusion. As hon. members know, the procedural point was raised last Friday and I indicated then that I had serious misgivings about the procedural aspects of this matter. I have had an opportunity to review it since then and my conclusions coincide with those we have heard during the last few minutes from the hon. members who have taken part in this discussion. It is hardly necessary to remind hon. members that paragraph 1 of the Fourth Report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates reads in part as follows:

> Delete in vote 17b, on page 2, the paragraph intituled "Grants", and substitute the following therefor:

The report goes on to rewrite in substantial manner vote 17b of the supplementary estimates (B). It is not necessary, I suggest, to compare in detail the terms of the committee's proposed recommendation with that of the original estimate to establish the fact that a change of substance has been suggested by the committee. In its recommendations, the committee has proposed an alternative to the proposal recommended to the House by His Excellency. No principle is more surely provided for by our constitution and our Standing Orders than that which provides that the Crown alone initiates financial proposals.

In this regard, section (1) of Standing Order 62 reads as follows:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

In the same regard, section (3) of citation 246 of Beauchesne's fourth edition reads as follows:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once and for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge. And this standard is binding not only on private members but also on ministers whose only advantage is that, as advisors of the Crown, they can present new or supplementary estimates or secure the royal recommendation to new or supplementary resolutions.

Along the same vein, may I refer to section (3) of citation 244 of Beauchesne's, as follows:

> Amendments proposing, in a money resolution, to substitute a loan for a subsidy; to change the destination, purpose and conditions of a subsidy; attaching a condition to a subsidy; affecting the ends and provisions of a subsidy, must be moved by a minister with the recommendation of the Crown.

There are a number of other citations that can be brought to bear on the same question, but I do not think it will be necessary for me to do so at this stage. It is not competent, I suggest, for the House or any committee of this House to substitute a financial provision in an estimate for one which has been recommended by His Excellency.

For the foregoing reasons, I must decide that the report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates presented to the House Thursday, March 19th last, is a nullity and that no subsequent proceeding may or need be taken in relation thereto.

In view of this decision I assume hon. members will want to give thought to the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council, although the request would have to be made, I assume, by the President of the Treasury Board.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): In the light of what you suggested, Mr. Speaker, I think the House would be prepared to give unanimous consent to the withdrawal of this motion from the Order Paper.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1969-70

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved that the supplementary estimates (B) of sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending on the 31st March, 1970, placed before the House on March 5, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-200 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1970, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask if it has been printed? Since I am now receiving the bill, that is fast service.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-200, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1970, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am going to launch into the icy waters of the second reading of this bill as free from care as was the Humble Oil Company when it sent the Manhattan into the Canadian Arctic.

Mr. Drury: Not as powerful, though.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope you are not going to engage in any polluting.

Mr. Baldwin: I see I made a mistake in attempting to be facetious, Your Honour. I have too many assistants here.

It will be my intention, at the conclusion of my remarks, to move an amendment to second reading. I have it before me and it will shortly be before the House but I have some observations to make. An examination of the bill indicates that attached to it as a schedule is the detail of the supplementary estimates (B). On behalf of this party, I must take exception to the bill and move an amendment for reasons which I hope will commend themselves to hon. members of this House. I direct my remarks particularly to the item which Your Honour just disposed of, item 17b of the Department of Agriculture, the details of which are set out further on in the estimates.

I want to make it abundantly plain, on behalf of this party, Mr. Speaker, that we are greatly concerned by the action of this government, in fact of any government, in attempting to use a vote on the supplementary estimates for the purpose of enacting what are in fact legislative proposals. We have been veering more and more toward that practice for the last three years. It is a very dangerous practice and a serious situation can be created where any motley collection of tinsel autocrats and sawdust Caesars, through the use of this method, would be able to virtually impose their financial will upon this Parliament and the country without the safeguards which are so essential to the legislative process. To see this done is bad enough but to see what has been done in this particular case is even worse. Thinking a particular vote did not contain that which was essential, the government attempted to amend it in committee. This bill, I think, brings into question the provisions of the schedule containing the supplementary estimates. I suppose one could say I am anticipating rebuttals to my argument, because some will no doubt say that there is no real principle to an appropriation bill. Nevertheless, the present provisions of the bill call into question every item of the estimates contained in the schedule, and that alone justifies the proposition I am trying to place before the House.

Here, the government has said, "We are going to spend $100 million on what we will call the wheat inventory acreage reduction program," and the Minister without Portfolio made a statement to the House. Subsequently, when the supplementary estimates were brought down, we found that Vote 17b was a legislative item in disguise. It is unfortunate that this legislative item should appear in this form. Actually, the government has three methods by which to legislate on this subject. The vote in question purports to give the Governor in Council the right to enact legislation. I have objected in this House on many occasions to the idea of improper legislative items giving to various bodies the right to enact regulations which will grant very considerable powers, but when the government attempts to do this through a vote in the supplementary estimates it is even worse.

This practice has been condemned by political writers, by hon. members in the House and by people in many areas of the world. The government's attempt to secure the approval of this House and Parliament by this method is a shocking abuse of its powers. In addition to that, as has been pointed out recently in the other place and as I have indicated myself, it is very likely that this vote may attempt to invoke the provisions of the Canada Wheat Board Act. That act is limited in scope and dedicated to marketing grain in this country, and any attempt to defy the announced purposes and objectives of that act through this particular vote is iniquitous. The House should seek in every way possible to show its disapproval of this particular measure.

If Parliament had the machinery which was requested in October when the Committee on Statutory Instruments filed its report, and if there could be a careful scrutiny of this matter by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) as well as by a committee of this House, I should feel much easier. But this vote, which seeks in this legislative form to give the government the right to spend $100 million, is so iniquitous that I can only express our views on it by moving an amendment, which I shall shortly propose. If accepted, the amendment would retain the vote but compel the government to bring in legislation to deal with this item.

Since the House first met last October, the government has known of the very serious situation in western Canada and appropriate legislation could have been introduced at any time if there had been discussions through the normal channels. Having examined the legislative record of the government during the last few weeks, I do not see why the minister or the government should now say, "We must proceed this way because there is not adequate time to do anything else." That does not answer the objection to the government's action in attemping to force this measure through this way. My views are reinforced by something very similar that happened in this House a few years ago.

I should like to refer briefly to Debates of the House of Commons of Canada for the 1964-65 session, Vol. XII. At page 13131 of that volume is to be found an exchange involving the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the house leader of this party at that time, Mr. Churchill, and the present Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) who was then the government house leader. The government house leader at that time was attempting to secure the passage of supplementary estimates which contained items comparable to the item about which we now complain. At that time, the right hon. member for Prince Albert raised the issue that has been raised today and was supported by Mr. Churchill. The government house leader then said he would be happy to accept the proposals made and admitted that it was not right to attempt to legislate in this way. The government withdrew the items in question and undertook to bring in legislation at a future date.

I will not read from the report, Mr. Speaker, but what happened confirms the correctness of the stand our party has taken. I, therefore, propose to move the following amendment at this time, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees):

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following added.

'this House declares that the bill contains a principle repugnant to this House inasmuch as Vote 17b of the Department of Agriculture, Supplementary Estimate (B), 1969-70, subverts the Message and Recommendation of His Excellency for the grant of supply, detailed in the Vote for the purpose therein specified, by attaching thereto terms and conditions which usurp the legislative function of Parliament and arrogate to the government an absolute discretion to distribute all or so much only of the said grant as the government sees fit and without regard to the principles of justice and equity and without a right of appeal by any farmer who may be aggrieved by the amount of any payment or by the refusal of payment to him.'

I submit this is a reasoned amendment by which I, on behalf of my party, indicate that my party has a special reason for not agreeing to the second reading of the bill. The amendment declares our opposition to the principle of the bill and its provisions. It is in that sense that I have moved it.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I ought to say that the Chair has serious reservations about the procedural acceptability of the proposed amendment. I should like a few minutes to look into the matter further. However, at first blush, I fail to see how this reasoned amendment, if it is a reasoned amendment, opposes the principle of the motion now before the House. The hon. member for Peace River knows better than I that the basic principle of a reasoned amendment is that it has first to oppose the principle or give reasons why the House is invited to vote against the motion which is before the House. This is the reservation which I have.

I would be very grateful if hon. members would guide the Chair and give advice on which I could base a decision at this time. If we were operating under other circumstances, I would tell the House I would give further consideration in the next hour, next few hours or wait until tomorrow, but we are under considerable pressure. I think hon. members would prefer that we go on with the substance of the matter referred to by the hon. member rather than have an extended procedural debate on the point. In any event if hon. members have views they could express briefly on the procedural aspect of the matter, I could hear them now.

Mr. Baldwin: Might I just add a few words on the procedural aspect, and then I will leave myself a sitting target for other hon. members. I realize the difficulty with which Your Honour has confronted me. On the other hand, Your Honour must recognize that an appropriation bill does not contain a principle, although when an appropriation bill has items of this kind in my opinion it completely lacks principles.

In any event, my submission is that we can interpret this measure in such a way that every vote in the estimates, which appear as a part of this schedule, must be read as part of the whole bill. Consequently, the operatives clauses in the bill must be applied to each vote in the estimates, in this case the supplementary estimates, which appear in the schedule. In that sense, I and members of my party object strenuously to this or any other attempt to legislate by a simple vote in the estimates, particularly one which is so obnoxious because of its reference to three different ways by which the Governor in Council can make regulations prescribing the way in which the moneys are going to be paid. Our only method of opposing this practice is by means of a reasoned amendment which states that we object to this principle. I will be frank. I can find no precedent for and no precedent against this method which leaves the matter directly in the lap of Your Honour.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, old timers know I am a veteran of the war against dollar items. That appears to put me on the side of the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: The side of the angels.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But I must say I am not really on his side in this particular respect. I wish also to say that my colleagues who represent rural constituencies in western Canada have authorized me to say they are against the Lift program. That, too, appears to put me on the side of the hon. member for Peace River.

However there are a couple of comments I wish to make. My opposition to dollar items is that in most cases they seem to import into a money bill legislation that may have no relation to money, or that does not call for the voting of money. We have often felt that these dollar items were devices to obviate the necessity of a piece of legislation standing on its own. In the case of this Lift program what is before us is not a dollar item, but a $100 million item. Money is involved. I do not think it is quite as foreign to a supply bill to put in a $100 million item with terms and conditions as it is to put in a dollar item.

Let me say again that my colleagues and I are against this $100 million Lift program. I am speaking procedurally, not in terms of substance. It seems there is that difference. I know this is said sometimes when we complain about dollar items, but we must remember that a supply bill is a bill. It is an act of Parliament. It is a form of legislation. I still think that dollar items are repugnant. They are as repugnant as omnibus bills sometimes are. There was one such bill in recent days which we did not like because two or three intems were included in the same bill.

Having said that, may I try to come to Your Honour's assistance by suggesting that I think that what the hon. member for Peace River has placed in this amendment is not so much an amendment as a point of order. He is arguing in his amendment that the government has no right to introduce item 17b, set up this Lift program and attach the terms and conditions to it. I am repeating ad nauseam that my colleagues will oppose the program. As a matter of fact, they want to get on with this job. They told me not to take too long on this procedural point because they want to get at the Minister without Portfolio and have a real go at the Lift program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Supplementary Estimates

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The applause I am receiving indicates I had better cut this short. I am pleased to do so. I reserve my right to continue the fight against dollar items during the months and years ahead. But if the government has decided on this piece of legislation, which involves both terms and conditions on the one hand and money on the other, it is pretty hard to say it is out of order to bring it in through the medium of his bill.

It seems that the interesting amendment of my hon. friend for Peace River is more a point of order than an amendment. I think Your Honour will probably have to rule that the bill is in order, now that item 17b is being left as it was originally. If Your Honour does so rule and we get into Committee of the Whole on the bill and get to the schedule, then my friends around me will say what they think about the Lift program.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their advice on the very interesting amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). My original reaction of course was that there was something that did not appear to be right. Perhaps even the comments made very generously by the hon. member for Peace River indicate that this is a novel attempt to get at a motion of this kind.

I believe even if we are operating under new rules, the principles which must guide the Chair in connection with reasoned amendments are the same. The reasoned amendment must oppose the principle of the bill. I refer hon. members to May's 17th edition, page 527, paragraph (2) and page 528, paragraph (3):

> An amendment, which amounts to no more than a direct negation of the principle of the bill, is open to objection.

It seems that the amendment which the hon. member has proposed to the House at the present time declares itself in principle, but is not opposing the motion which is before the House in the sense it would be opposing the principle of that motion. I have very serious reservations. It seems we would be opening the door rather wide if this kind of amendment to this motion were accepted at the present time. I can assure the hon. member that I will give the matter further thought. I would be prepared on some other occasion to give further consideration to an amendment such as this; I would be in a better position to accept it or refuse it having given the matter additional study. On the basis of the limited thinking I have been able to do, and on the strength of the views expressed both by the hon. member for Peace River and by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I would think that the amendment should not be put to the House.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

• (4:00 p.m.)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I think it would be appropriate for me to say a few things in response to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) concerning the item to which he has referred in seeking to move his amendment.

I believe the House appreciates that it is not by any means a minor item but that it represents in fact, a significant expenditure proposed on behalf of the people of Canada in the interest of the agricultural community of the west. The hon. member for Peace River chose to look to the form of the proposal and said it was iniquitous for us to use this form to pay to the farmers of the prairies the proposed $100 million in connection with the LIFT program. The hon. member has apparently missed the point. The totality of the LIFT program is by no means comprised in this item. The item contains the payments to farmers which it is proposed to make in connection with an acreage adjustment plan. It was apparent to us that this represented an extremely important matter for the prairie region.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would be delighted if the minister had been allowed to speak on my amendment, had it been put, but it seems to me he is speaking on an amendment which Your Honour ruled could not be put. There is some question, therefore, as to whether the minister can proceed.

Mr. Speaker: I must say I have serious reservations about the procedure we are now following. I thought the minister's comments perhaps were of an introductory nature and that he would return to the consideration of the motion which is before us at the present time. I have to remind the minister that the proposed amendment was ruled out of order and that what we have before us now is a motion for second reading. I wonder whether it would not be better procedure, if the House agrees, for this debate on the item in question to take place in the committee of the whole once there has been agreement to accept the motion and the matter has been referred to the committee.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Surely, Mr. Speaker, on the second reading of an appropriation bill it is appropriate to talk about any item in the appropriation bill and it cannot be out of order for the minister to talk about an item in a general way or explain the policy which the government may be following in that regard.

Mr. Lang: On the same point of order; although I was referring to certain things that had been said by the hon. member for Peace River it was my purpose to talk generally about the item, not to discuss it specifically in relation to the amendment which was so properly ruled out of order by the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the President of the Privy Council is well taken. It was my understanding there had been agreement that this debate would be—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No.

Mr. Speaker: The minister says no. I may say I had already reached that conclusion when I heard him raise his point of order. The minister now has the floor and may make his contribution to the debate on the subject he chooses. I am informed, now, that other hon. members are anxious to take part in the discussion and deal with other points.

An hon. Member: It is wide open.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But is it not one of our rules, Mr. Speaker, that on second reading we should not refer to particular clauses of a bill? Are we not running afoul of that rule if a debate is permitted on just one item in the schedule. What I am trying to do, I suppose, by raising a point of order, is to make an appeal to common sense. Would it not be better to give the bill second reading, get it into committee, come to the schedule and then have a full debate on item 17b, at which time the minister can make the speech he wishes to make now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member of Peace River chose to take the opportunity on second reading to open the debate on this question. It is fairly generally accepted, under our parliamentary procedure, that debate implies an opportunity for the minister to reply to what has been said. The remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might have been apropos had he uttered them while the hon. member for Peace River was speaking, but it seems to me that on the basis of reciprocity the minister should now be allowed to make his statement.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot agree with the position taken by the President of the Privy Council. The question was raised as a point of order and the minister had the opportunity, had he wished to take it, of speaking on the point of order. He did not participate in that discussion and the amendment was ruled out of order. The President of the Privy Council now suggests that the minister has the right to continue the discussion of the subject which was raised by way of a proposed amendment on the part of the hon. member for Peace River. I do not believe that would be the proper procedure.

I suggest to hon. members I was right in the first instance when I said he could not at this point engage in a discussion of the clauses of a bill. That is a basic rule of debate. When a motion for second reading is before the House we can debate in a general way the principle of the bill but not the clauses in detail. This is why I have some qualms about allowing a discussion at this stage on a particular aspect of the measure itself. I think it would have been better procedurally if there had been a debate, should one be required, on second reading, on the general principles, whatever they may be, followed by a detailed discussion of the particular clauses and schedules at another stage.

It is a little difficult to determine what might be said at this point if we are to limit ourselves entirely to the principle of the bill, which is a money bill. The point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is well taken. I agree fully with him. At the same time, if there is to be a general debate I would find it difficult to rule that hon. members cannot refer in any way to the details of the bill before us. So, perhaps the minister would endeavour to limit his remarks as much as possible to the question of principle. If he wishes to consider particular clauses in detail, that would better be done in due course when we are in committee.

Mr. Lang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly try to limit my observations to the general principle of the bill. As Your Honour has pointed out, a money bill has some peculiarities in that regard. So, while addressing myself to what is, no doubt, the most important part of the bill in many ways, I propose to refer to the general program involved in this one particular item.

This particular set of estimates contains provisions which are extremely important to the prairie farmers. I want to take this opportunity, in the presence of hon. members assembled in the House, rather than in committee, to point out that some of those who sit on the benches opposite have been misled, perhaps into thinking that this particular item in the estimates represents the totality of government programs in this field. It may very well occur that there are government programs which are ongoing or capable of implementation in other ways in conjunction with the required expenditure of money. This is certainly the case in connection with the matter before us today.

• (4:10 p.m.)

As an example of that principle, I want to refer to the fact that the program which the hon. member for Peace River discussed, the "lift" program, has in fact a major portion of its implementation in the general law of the land. Under regulations made in connection with the Wheat Board Act, the most important part of the program can in fact be put into place. The whole of the quota system, as an example, is in fact authorized to be put in place under the Wheat Board Act itself. This is what the government intends.

When the program was announced, the intention of the government along these lines was made clear. The expenditure of the $100 million, which has been referred to on previous occasions by the hon. member for Peace River as a shabby amount and I think by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) as a small crumb, is important and, of course, has to be included in the estimates themselves.

The authority to pay the money in conjunction with the program, as I indicated, is found in part elsewhere in the law. It is important for members to appreciate that, in this fashion, the expenditure of money which is of vital importance to the program, can accompany a program for which authorization is found elsewhere. This certainly puts to nought, if I may simply say that, the arguments which have been heard from time to time about what should or should not be included in the substance of an item in the estimates.

In a case like this, as an example, the vote of the money here is a very important part of the program, but it is certainly only auxiliary or ancillary to other parts of the program which can be put into place under the law generally.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, we are now permitted to make general remarks on programs of the government. I wish to take this opportunity to speak briefly about matters that were under very heavy discussion last week, specifically inflation and unemployment, and what the government's programs have done to make these situations considerably worse.

A week ago Sunday night, all of those who were watching the CBC television news were very surprised to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) disclose the latest chapter in the government's four year effort to curb inflation. At that time the final plans of his government, which claims to be a modern government using computers and a lot of bright young men who fill the Prime Minister's office called modern thinkers, was disclosed.

We were amazed to hear the Minister of Finance, in his disclosure of the government's present plans to curb inflation, disclose a plan that has been in operation in various countries throughout the world for literally hundreds of years. This government of computers and bright young men is now going to fight inflation by that age old process of slowing down the economy by restricting credit. That has always been followed in every country where it has been tried by workers being laid off. When they get hungry, these workers are willing to work for less. This brings costs down, prices fall and the country concerned considers that it has licked inflation.

We heard the Minister of Finance say very clearly on television the other night that this government considers it may be necessary to have higher unemployment in 1970 than it had in 1969, if, in his own words, we are really going to lick inflation. So there you have the policy of this government. After four years of failure in its efforts to curb inflation it is finally going back to policies that have been in operation for hundreds of years. It is finally admitting that the best the so-called just society can produce is that great reactionary and harsh policy of growing unemployment, growing misery and growing hardship, which has been in use for so long.

Let us examine for a moment this government's programs for fighting inflation in the past four years. During the first three of those four years it resorted, in various budgets, to increasing taxes, which did not work. The cost of living kept increasing year by year at a steadily accelerating rate. Finally, after three years of increased taxes the government decided this method was not effective.

Then, last June the government tried another method of fighting inflation. The Minister of Finance told us that the government plan consisted of slowing down construction over the next two years in the three most wealthy provinces, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, by withholding the 5 per cent capital cost allowance to builders in order to persuade them not to build for the next two years. The government forgot to take one important matter into consideration. The builders knew very well that building costs in Canada were going up at a rate of 12 per cent per year. Through a very simple process of arithmetic they knew that if they put off building for two years and started again two years later it would cost them 24 per cent more to build the same building at that time than it would today. They decided this was not good business, that is to increase costs in two years by about 25 per cent in order to save 5 per cent for two years. So, the builders simply laughed at the government and went right on building. That program proved completely worthless.

The other program the Minister of Finance announced last June was equally ineffective. He told us on the night he presented his budget that the Kennedy Round tariff reductions, which were originally supposed to be spread over the next three years, would become effective that very night. He said this lowering of tariffs on a great number of items would increase competition in Canada and lower the price of goods, thereby slowing down the increase in the cost of living and the rapidly rising inflation.

Once again, the government forgot one very important factor. It did not have any way available to require importers to pass on the savings to the consumer. I refer to the savings resulting from removing the tariffs. So the importers did exactly what the builders did. They simply laughed at the government. They did not pass along the tariff reductions; prices did not come down, prices kept going up at an ever-increasing rate. Once again all importers, as has been the case in respect of the construction men, simply laughed at the government.

How do we account for the action of a government in passing a budget which contains a measure that any businessman, had he been consulted, could have told them would not work. By passing this budget, the government made itself a figure of fun. It has lost the respect of the business community of Canada because when one mentions this government and its programs to businessmen, they either swear or laugh. Neither is good for the maintenance of the respect a government should receive from the people of the country. The people in the business community know this government is not a business government. One might ask why a government would pass a budget which contains these measures for fighting inflation which will prove to be absolutely worthless. Mr. Speaker, the answer is that this government is run by four men who, by no stretch of the imagination, are businessmen.

These four men are the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). These gentlemen are very nice men to meet and are charming men to whom to talk. In their own fields, I am sure they are very good and were very good before they entered government. Three were professors and one was a labour leader. I am sure they all did their jobs extremely well in the fields in which they were. But these men do not understand plain, ordinary business principles. These are the men who decide what the government is and is not to do. This is not done in an official way. This is the type of consultation that is carried on in any government by a group, usually of five, six or seven persons, which controls the government. These are the men in the government who quietly decide the direction in which the government is to move. This is not done officially. It is just one of the things that happen in every government.

These four men who run this government do not happen to be businessmen. They do not understand business practices. They have taken a completely impractical approach to the business affairs of this country. Most of the things a government has to deal with today are economic matters; yet, they are being dealt with by men who do not understand business and how it operates. So, the country is in a very serious situation. This is the situation which caused the present member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), the then deputy prime minister and a veteran of several governments, to resign his portfolio and become a private member. He simply could not stomach the impractical methods by which the government was operating. So, he stepped aside. Last fall, having had various failures on its hands and seeing the cost of living rise steadily at an ever-increasing rate year by year, the government tried another tactic; it appointed the Prices and Incomes Commission to control inflation. The program of the Prices and Incomes Commission to control inflation is now, and will be in the future, no more successful than the other measures the government has adopted.

There are three reasons that the program of the Prices and Incomes Commission is failing and will fail. First of all, the commission brought management together and persuaded management to agree not to raise prices by more than their increases in cost. But this was a gentleman's agreement. No penalties were to be imposed on those who did not conform to this agreement. Anyone who has been a businessman and who has had experience with businessmen knows that in business there is no such thing as a gentleman's agreement. That does not mean there are not a great many gentlemen engaged in business. Of course there are, but if an agreement is to work everyone must live up to his commitment. All it takes is one rotten apple in the barrel to make all the apples go bad. As soon as someone does not live up to the commitment, everybody else decides that since the commitment is not being lived up to they will not live up to it. No penalties are provided in respect of those who do not live up to the agreement management made with the Prices and Incomes Commission, and through that commission with the government, a few weeks ago.

Second, as was demonstrated yesterday, the leaders of organized labour have said clearly that they do not intend to limit their wage demands in any way. They say they will not do so for a very good reason. They say the government's program is doing two things; it is causing inflation to rise to record levels and at the same time is causing unemployment to go up to the highest level it has reached in six years. They say they will have no part of a program that is doing what they consider to be the wrong thing. So, they have made very clear to the Prime Minister and the cabinet that they will not co-operate and will not restrain wage demands.

The third reason the Prices and Incomes Commission program will not work is that management is permitted by government to increase prices by the amount of its increased costs. Its increased labour cost is a perfectly logical and fair increase in cost and therefore labour is quite free, so far as the government is concerned, to increase its demands by just as much as it wishes or as much as management will agree to, and management will add these labour cost increases to its other increases in cost and will be justified in raising prices by that amount.

These are the reasons the cost of living last month, as disclosed as recently as last week, went up by a record amount. The cost of living has gone up 5 per cent over a year ago. Every indication is that it will continue to go up at an equally accelerated pace in the future. This is because the approach of the Prices and Incomes Commission is a simply unworkable approach; it is an impractical approach; it is an approach which any businessman, had he been asked about it, could have told this government is an impractical approach. Once again this government is making itself a laughing stock. People are losing respect for the government. Any businessman would ask how in the world this government thinks it will be able to control prices in the way in which it is trying to do it.

This latest plan of the government which will increase unemployment is a harsh, cruel program which has been used for hundreds of years. Why it should be used by this so-called modern government is something any person with decent feelings would find difficult to understand. It is difficult to understand the willingness of this government to go ahead with a program of this kind. But to the Prime Minister it seems that unemployment is not misery, hardship and despair. This is apparent when he is asked questions about what the government intends to do to stop the rising rate of unemployment. He greets your questions with a wisecrack and a sly smile. The closest the Prime Minister has come to poverty was a year or so ago when he was taken down to see a housing development in Montreal. He spent a few minutes there. The people who gathered to see him asked him a few rather difficult questions that he found very hard to answer. He did not like the atmosphere. He turned on his heel and left. That was his only appearance in anything approaching an area where poverty exists.

A few days ago the Prime Minister returned from a six day trip to the Arctic. He enjoyed himself very much. He had a first-hand look at the living conditions of our Eskimos and our Indians. Today, I asked him if he intended using the same period of time to visit, as soon as possible, the slums of our larger cities to ascertain firsthand the conditions of those living below the poverty level.

He did not even deign to answer the question. The answer, of course, was no. What is the difference between the Prime Minister spending six days in the Arctic and six days finding out how people in poverty live in this country? The answer is that it is very pleasant to go to the Arctic, especially when you are accompanied by hosts of photographers, reporters and television cameras and you can get all dressed up, pose with Eskimo girls, beat drums, dance, and have pictures of you flooding back to the newspapers of the country and the television screens all across Canada. But slums make a very poor background for television cameras, for news pictures and for stories that come back. Poverty is a very unpleasant thing to look at—it is not very pretty. The Prime Minister did not think he would like to have the photographers down there taking pictures of the conditions existing in the just society that he and his government said they were going to create. So, he simply pretends that poverty does not exist. He looks the other way.

That is the kind of Prime Minister we have developing this so-called just society. That is why to him unemployment is just a statistic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am afraid his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hees: It just so happens that I had finished my remarks. Thank you all the same. It is kind of you to give me that consideration!

Mr. Dinsdale: The government does not want to hear about poverty.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I should like to say, with regard to this bill and the moneys it provides, that significant amounts of this money affect the people in the constituency which I represent and indeed the people all across western Canada. In making his brief comments, the minister said that he wanted to take this opportunity to point out some things to members who have been misled regarding certain facts related to these estimates and this bill. Having been out in Saskatchewan, it seems to me that if the minister thinks members of this House were misled, speaking in the vernacular, "he ain't seen nothin' yet". He was out in Saskatchewan, as I was, and if he listened as I did he should have found that a great many farmers believe that they were misled. In other words, they thought they were being led down the garden path.

When we look at the estimates contained in this bill we have to consider their purpose as stated by responsible ministers. The Minister announced that $100 million would be made available as an income supplement which would see the western farmers over the hump. When we look at this program closely, we find that there is no firm undertaking to spend $100 million. Indeed, if we consider whether that amount of money is going to be spent we must realize that the restrictions on the farmers are such, and the proposals inherent in the statements of the responsible minister are such, that many farmers will be prevented from taking part in this program. Of course, that may be just as well, because if enough of them took part in the program to achieve the declared intention of the government, that is taking out of wheat production 22 million acres in western Canada, we might very well be headed for a considerable disaster. But I do not think it will happen and the good common sense of the farmers will prevent such a catastrophe.

This proposal affects the livelihood of approximately 190,000 permit holders in western Canada. It is one thing to pass legislation which would permit these people to either take advantage of such a program or stay out of it, but it is another thing to propose a plan which does not give this large number of farmers a real choice. This is the point at which this bill goes past the ordinary prerogatives of the government. The government may have advisers who think that they have within themselves the knowledge to plan production on the individual farms in western Canada and to tell the individual farmer what he may or may not do. They propose to send inspectors to his farm to see that he does what he is supposed to do, and to see that he does it in the way in which it is supposed to be done. But I suggest that any department or any group of men or women who think they can undertake such a task are indeed taking a great deal upon themselves.

The hon. member who spoke just before me mentioned the difficulty of ensuring that a certain group of businessmen do a certain thing, but when you deal with a group of businessmen you are dealing with a relatively small group of men who control a great amount of resources. In this case, however, we are dealing with a numerically large group of farmers which makes it very difficult to ensure the achievement of the desired result from this program. The regulations will be promulgated in due course, so we are told, and the farmers will have to live with those regulations, whatever they are. But so will the businessmen have to live with them, Mr. Speaker, and the businessmen are serving those farmers. The downturn which will occur in the economy, as a result of the restricted spending in that prairie region, and in Saskatchewan in particular, cannot even be calculated. Already we find a serious slump in that prairie region, and in particular in the centre of that region where this program is expected to have its major effect. This is the thing that has been overlooked in connection with the program.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Agriculture is the strongest economic base in the three prairie provinces. Instead of reducing income from agriculture, we should be reinforcing it. We should be making sure that it is strong, positive and moving forward. This proposal is essentially a negative one, and the farmer and the businessman do not know what it may hold in the future. The man who may take a large amount of his land out of production and put it into summerfallow this year has no idea what he is going to do with it next year. Last week I attended ten meetings in Saskatchewan and talked to upwards of 900 or 1,000 farmers. More than that, Mr. Speaker, I listened to them. At each of those meetings the question was always asked, "All right for this year, but what do we do next year? What do we do when we have substantial amounts of land placed in summerfallow that will be ready for cropping in the succeeding year? Is it all going to be cropped? Is it going to produce more surplus wheat?"

Is the government already laying its plans for the future and not telling anybody? Does it have a nice little clutch of planners who are already making plans to keep this land out of production next year also? Is this what is taking place? In all conscience, to make economic or moral sense, the people of that region have a right to know where they are heading. Above all else the farmer is a planner. He has to be a planner. What farmers do next year is planned with what they are going to do the year after that in mind. If you are going to put in forage, then obviously you will have a cow herd to use that forage, or there has to be a market some place where you think you can sell that forage. Otherwise, you are going to plan things that way.

If certain amounts of land are going into forage, does the government have a plan for an increased cattle population? If certain land is going into summerfallow this year what is to be done with it next year? If the government devised a program to cover three or five years then, it might have had some justification for putting a program like this before the country. But it has not done so. Its program covers just one year. In our mythology we say that Saskatchewan is a next year country. Above all, the minister should know this. Admittedly he is not a farmer himself, but you do not have to be a farmer to acquire the wisdom to know what happens. Surely, he ought to know that this is a next year country.

I give you the example of a man who came to me and asked what he could do. He said, "I am operating 2,000 acres and I have 200 cattle." That is a fair sized operation. He said, "This program will divest me of my right to market wheat. If I lose my right to market wheat because I cannot fit into this program, then my gross income is cut by so much. What I have got to do in the next two or three months is figure out how to put another enterprise on my farm." He was talking about a hog enterprise. Whether he will undertake that or not I do not know. He said, "I have got to put some further enterprise on the farm to take care of the quota I am going to lose under this program."

Consider the individual who in the last two or three years attempted to adjust to the market circumstances which he knew existed and the changes which he thought were coming. He reduced his wheat acreage and sought to adjust. Where does he find himself under this program? He finds himself severely penalized, and unable to adjust his operations to fit the governments program. In its broad sweep this program is to be applied from the banks of the Red River in Winnipeg to the Peace River at Fort St. John, which takes in an area of a couple of thousand miles. This program takes within its scope farmers all the way from those in southern Manitoba, many of whom practice continuous cropping, intensive cultivation and who have discarded the summerfallow idea altogether, to farmers across the great plain in the drier region where you have a half or third crop practice. It also takes in the rancher, the one who may be a complete rancher, whose total income comes from livestock and to whom grain is secondary, as well as the mixed farmer. It also takes in the oil seed crop grower. Now, along come a bunch of brainstormers who think all these farmers can be fitted into a single pattern, a single plan.

The Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt has a copy of the letter I have in my hand, so I will not quote from it. This letter is from a constituent of mine, in which he asks how does he fit into this program with his 400 odd acres of land. He points out that he adjusted his cropping practices last year and most of his land is in summerfallow. He asks should he keep it in summerfallow again, and how can he protect his quota. This is the major problem connected with the program. Here is a program which is supposed to help the income situation in Saskatchewan, but which will make the income situation of many farmers much worse. We were told that this program would prevent expansion into other crops. Time will tell. Forecasts are now being made with respect to the amount of land being turned over to other crops, and left in summerfallow. I think that at this point all bets are off. Nobody knows what is going to happen.

Nothing is said here about a marketing program, about a program to move more of our products into the markets of the world. The government just says, "We are going to take 22 million acres out of production," despite the fact the minister himself has publicly stated that 20 million acres would be a desirable and manageable wheat acreage for the western plains. Mr. Claude Hudson, an unquestioned authority for the wheat industry in Canada has produced a study commissioned by the Economic Council of Canada in which he says we are going to need 25 million acres in wheat by 1975. Last year we only had 24.5 million acres sown to wheat and almost anyone would have to concede that this would have been cut this year to around 20 million acres. Now, the government pushes the panic button and disrupts the total economics of agriculture in western Canada, leaving the individual farmer to work himself out of the box he has been put in by the government.

Should we be unfortunate enough to experience a couple of dry years, on top of the economic dislocation inherent in this plan, we could have serious soil erosion as well. This program is proposed as a solution to an area already in the down-turn economically and asks the farmers to restrict production, not even, to use the basic resource already there. As far as economics is concerned, it is a weirdo. If agriculture were marginal to the area, it could be treated as a marginal industry not having top priority. But it is not marginal, it is the main industry and the economy of the region depends on the wealth generated by it. You cannot put it into mothballs because if you do the farmers and a lot of business go into mothballs with it.

Here we have this program purporting to put $100 million-odd dollars into the hands of farmers but nobody knows how much of it will actually get there. If it does get there the farmer will probably spend most of it trying to conform with the non-productive program which the government has dreamed up. The only advice I can give to the minister and those around him is to adjust the program before it is too late. Try to recapture some of the confidence of the farmers, try to get them to work along with you to achieve some possible objective. Try for a program which will improve the condition of the farmer and not add to his difficulties.

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the supplementary estimates introduced today by the minister and which have no bearing on any votes regarding grants to gold mines.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to say a few words about the situation of the mining towns in northwesternn Quebec, in particular Val-D'Or, Malartic, Cadillac, Chapais, Rouyn-Noranda and Chibougamau. These seven municipalities exist today mainly because of mining operations, which provide employment to 2,000 workers. They were established around the 30's. Millions of dollars were spent to provide the citizens with adequate public services and to make of these communities well-organized municipalities.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has not yet visited Abitibi, I am pleased to invite him to do so and I hope that he will come during the 70's. Several ministers of this government have already paid a short visit to Abitibi. They were surprised to find that our municipalities were modern and equipped with the same facilities as large urban centres in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, lately I received seven resolutions from city councils and school boards of my area asking the government to continue the grants to gold mines after the 70's and even asking for an increase. Several letters were sent for that purpose to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Speaker, here is one of the resolutions which was passed by these seven municipalities.

Whereas gold has for thousands of years been recognized as a precious metal and been sought after by all the peoples of the world;

Whereas Canada, as many other countries, has its gold-mining industry;

Whereas considerable capital has been invested to build up that important industry in our country;

Whereas, in 1939 there were 232 gold mines in Canada;

Whereas, 30 years later, namely in 1969, only some thirty of them were still operating;

Whereas that industry is threatened with extinction in the near future;

Whereas well-organized cities were built near those mines, for the miners and their families;

Whereas those cities were built in a large measure with funds provided by small investors;

Whereas the government of Canada recognized, in 1947, that the closing down of mines as a result of higher operation costs penalized and even ruined the defenseless small investor;

Whereas the government of Canada started, in 1947, to pay subsidies to the gold mines threatened with having to close down;

Whereas almost all Canadian gold mines operating today would have closed down had it not been for federal grants;

Whereas operating costs are still going up and subsidies have not been increased since 1953;

Whereas the Gold Mining Assistance Act will remain in force only to the end of 1970;

Be it resolved as moved by alderman Adrien Paquin, seconded by alderman Wilfrid Asselin, that the municipal council, in the face of so serious a situation, ask the federal government not only that assistance to the gold mines be maintained after 1970 but that it be increased to enable those mines to continue operating and to save from bankruptcy those municipalities which depend on them.

Mr. Speaker, I have just read the resolution approved by seven municipalities in my riding of Villeneuve. Everyone knows that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistanct Act expires at the end of December 1970. I beg the Minister and the government to study thoroughly all the elements related to that industry.

In January 1934, the United States increased the price of gold. It was at that time $20.67 per ounce and it went up to $35 per ounce. That rise led to an increase in prospection and prospectors thus discovered mines of all kinds. A rise in grants after 1970 would be beneficial, I think, to the government and the Canadian people. No doubt such a decision would be the beginning of a new development in prospection throughout Canada.

The word "emergency" was well chosen when the government passed that measure and it is still appropriate today. Without that measure, all gold mines could not survive, which would be unfortunate in a just society, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) so justly said during the 1968 election campaign.

In my area, 2,000 miners earn their living that way. They pay every year to the government large amounts of money in the form of taxes. If the government compared the income of employees and employers who must rely on gold mines to live, to the grants that amount to about $15 million, they would find out that those grants are largely made up through taxes paid by the workers.

The implementation of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act has enabled this country to overcome the economic difficulties created by the rise in operation costs and the stability in the price of gold.

Mining is one of the oldest industries in Canada. It goes back to the first French explorers and settlers, some 350 years ago. The first ore discovery was probably made by a mining engineer accompanying Samuel de Champlain during one of his exploration journeys in the New World, at the beginning of the 17th century. Champlain himself mentioned the existence of silver in Nova Scotia and of copper in the Gaspé peninsula.

It is, however, mainly in the course of the last century that the most interesting discoveries were made. Three important events were the highlights of this time: the building of the railways, the Klondike gold rush and the disovery of a silver field at Cobalt in Ontario.

In 1970, the Canadian government will pay many millions of dollars in subsidies to the western farmers, in order to prevent them from producing wheat. I want to be quite clear about that: I do not mind whether the government pays subsidies to the farmers for Canadians certainly need farmers to grow wheat.

The same could apply to unsold milk. But we could certainly sell all the gold we produce to the United States. Let me quote here from a newspaper article written by Mr. Amédée Gaudreault, which outlines very well, in my view, the situation now prevailing in the gold mines and I quote:

> Some experts have told me that gold mining operations have not changed very much over the last ten years and that no major improvements are foreseen in the near future. From 1950 to 1960 the important progress that was achieved then made it possible to increase the production of a miner by about 50 per cent, but that was all.
> Besides, the industry never stopped declining: production amounted to 4,541,962 ounces in 1955, to 3,606,031 ounces in 1965 and to about 2,500,000 ounces last year. As for the miners, they numbered 22,491 in 1950, 18,032 in 1955, 12,520 in 1965 and 7,800 in 1969; nearly 75 per cent of them are employed in northeastern Ontario and northwestern Quebec, where is located the famous "belt", comprising Timmins, Porcupine, Kirkland Lake, Noranda and Val d'Or.

[English]

A committee of six municipal members was formed to study the possibility of presenting a brief to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene). Preparing a brief every three years is certainly an expensive proposition for the municipalities concerned because the brief alone would cost approximately $15,000 and there would be the added expense of the delegates. In closing, may I point out to the minister that we are trying to help the government find a way to solve the problem of unemployment in Canada. Let us not add to the half million already waiting for work who are on the rolls of the unemployed. It would be helpful if the miners in my district could find employment. I, therefore, hope the government will support our proposition to continue the subsidies for 1970 and after. The government should make its decision as soon as possible because the municipalities in my district are very nervous and do not know whether the government will pay the subsidy on gold mining. I hope the government will decide this matter very shortly, because these municipalities could receive no greater gift than the knowledge the government is deciding the question of these subsidies in the very near future.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate I wish to make a few brief remarks about matters that concern my riding, my province and the nation generally. About two weeks ago we heard the budget speech presented in the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The budget speech confirmed what hon. members on this side of the House and the Canadian public have been thinking for the past couple of years, that there is now a new meaning to the old Liberal slogan, "participatory democracy". That meaning is summed up by the phrase, "sharing the grief".

While the Minister of Finance arrogantly balances himself on the edge of his House of Commons seat, almost 6 million Canadians living below the poverty line are trying to balance themselves on their meagre budgets and keep body and soul together on salaries which fall below the poverty level.

Much has been said of the present government and the fact that it was elected on the charisma of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); he made no promises, except that he would build a just society. He did not keep that promise. He built an unjust society. It is equally obvious the government is anxious to keep the Prime Minister's latest promise to force the unemployment rate in Canada up to 6 per cent. According to the latest statistics released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the unemployment rate as a national average is 6.5 per cent of our labour force. In the Atlantic provinces the rate has been forced—and I use the word "forced" deliberately, because the policies of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have forced up the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada—to 11 per cent.

In the absence of definite figures for Newfoundland, I predict that the unemployment rate there will probably exceed 20 per cent. When one realizes that one fifth of wage earners of a province of Canada will be unemployed, should not one be frightened? One ought to be alarmed at the 6.5 per cent national unemployment rate, the highest in six or seven years. Since assuming office in 1968, this government has embarked on a deliberate policy of forcing people onto the rolls of the unemployed. That is no laughing matter. The average unemployed Canadian must now be asking himself, "What is this all about and where will it end." Having spoken to the people of my riding, of my province generally and to other Canadians, I am convinced our people realize that the government does not know where it is going and what is worst they could not care less. The answer to the second part of the question, "Where will it all end," will be found in the ballot boxes after the next general election.

The government has embarked on a policy that is rapidly strangling the Canadian economy. Certainly, it has a stranglehold on the unemployed, on those living below the poverty line, on western farmers, Atlantic fishermen, small businessmen and Canadians generally. Its callous and indifferent attitude towards the economically depressed regions of Canada is sapping the spirit and initiative of our people, and in my opinion can only result in social and economic disaster. The government refuses to acknowledge that our economy is on its knees and actually bleeding to death. The Minister of Finance, his colleagues and the Prime Minister go about their merry way arrogantly boasting about the rapidly increasing unemployment rate and their phoney war on inflation.

At the same time, they have the gall to brag about how generous they are towards the depressed, have-not areas of Canada. Let the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance convince the unemployed in this country and those living below the poverty line that the government's anti-inflation policy is the right one. Let them try to convince the 83,000 Newfoundlanders who have been forced to accept welfare that the government's anti-inflation policy is the right one. The figure to which I referred a moment ago with regard to unemployment must give the Prime Minister a great deal of satisfaction.

This government appears to have adopted the attitude of "don't confuse us with the facts". The fact is that those regions of the country which do not contribute to inflation, such as the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, are being forced to take the same medicine as the wealthier provinces where there may be a need to impose anti-inflationary measures.

It is obvious there is a great deal of confusion in the government. In my two years as a member I have witnessed the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) continually battling the question of what comes first, the fishermen or necessary facilities for fishermen? This is similar to the question which came first, the chicken or the egg? I know in my constituency many people wish to return to the fishing industry but are unable to do so because of a lack of adequate facilities. The Minister of Public Works has refused to approve expenditures to build facilities because there are no fishermen in the area. He does not recognize the fact that these people are not actively engaged in the fisheries because there are no facilities. That is why I say they are arguing about what comes first, fishermen or facilities.

There have been a number of developments in recent months which are having a detrimental effect on the economy in the have-not areas. I do not want to drag out the subject of the seal fishery, but what my colleagues have said in this House bears repeating. Regulations have been imposed by the Minister of Fisheries, the basis of which stem almost entirely from the fact there have been representations by our embassies in Europe and other parts of the world because of pressure applied to them by the so-called sob-sisters, the bleeding heart societies and, in many cases, the vested interests. Our government has seen fit to yield to the pressure applied by those people at the expense of the Atlantic coast fishermen who, in many cases, augment their income from the seal fishery. Because of the regulations now imposed, it will be extremely difficult for these fishermen. There are fishermen in Atlantic Canada who desperately need the extra few dollars available from the seal fishery.

This government, with its typical arrogance and lack of interest or concern for the have-nots of this nation, has set about to destroy that industry. They have robbed those fishermen of the chance to earn a few dollars to tide them over until they return to their fishing boats or engage in some other job. I believe these regulations are crazy and stupid. They certainly were not well thought out by the Minister of Fisheries or his staff. Any reasonable person who has any idea of what is happening in Atlantic Canada would never allow this sort of thing. The Minister of Fisheries has done a great deal for the fisheries of Atlantic Canada. I am surprised that he permitted this regulation to be imposed on the sealing industry. It will have a ruinous effect on the industry, if not this year then next year or the year after.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) recently made a statement boasting of the fact that there were 22 areas in Canada designated to be special areas. There are eight such areas in Newfoundland. One area in my riding which is certainly more deserving than probably any other part of the province, was not even mentioned. I refer to the Argentia-Placentia area and the phasing out of the Argentia US naval station. There are approximately 200 fishermen and their families who were resettled in that area by this government and the Newfoundland government. They have not been provided with any facilities to encourage them to earn a living from the fisheries. It is a very depressed area. I am very disappointed that the minister did not see fit to extend the same benefits to that area that will be extended to other specially designated areas in Canada.

In that same area there is a great deal of economic and social unrest as well as uncertainty, brought about by the government's resettlement program. I have said before in this House and in committee, and I will keep saying that there has been a grave injustice done to the people who were encouraged and in some cases forced to vacate their former homes and properties to move to the so-called resettlement areas. These people were enticed to move by the government. They were helped financially to a certain extent to help defray the cost of moving and to resettle. They were then completely forgotten.

These people were treated like checkers on a board, like pieces of machinery, like little red pins on a map. They were taken away from the place their families had been for generations, in most cases in areas where they could earn a decent living for themselves and their families. In some cases, they were forced to move to the so-called growth areas. They now find they are completely incapable of carrying on their vocation of fishing. They have been almost forced to become welfare addicts. I believe this is a serious injustice.

I hope this government will recognize its responsibility and pay special attention to the people concerned. The government should help them to rehabilitate themselves in their new environment. These people should be given a chance to restore their independence. Like most Canadians, they want to be able to stand tall, walk straight and earn a decent living for themselves and their families. I have spent hours talking about this, written hundreds of letters and have made many speeches on the subject. Much to my regret and the regret of the people concerned, the government so far has elected to turn a deaf ear to the problem. Special attention should be given to these areas by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in view of the fact their way of life was destroyed by the government and they are now unable to help themselves. As I said a moment ago, they are unable to earn a living for themselves and their families.

• (5:20 p.m.)

There are a number of other matters which affect my area, one of which is housing. I was very interested in the question asked today by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). He challenged the Prime Minister to pay some attention and visit the slums of Canada in the same way which he did in the Arctic. As the hon. member mentioned later, this is not a popular suggestion because slums do not make good pictures. I would also challenge the Prime Minister and the minister responsible for housing to go into parts of my riding where people are living under conditions which are altogether substandard, and should not to be tolerated by anyone in 1970. The government does not seem to appreciate the need for decent housing which exists among Canadians. Hon. gentlemen opposite are making a lot of noise about urban renewal schemes and subsidized housing, but not enough is being done in an area which should obviously be given priority. I urge the government to step up its programs in this field. There is great need for urban renewal in Canada. There is great need for extensive studies to ascertain the fact of bad housing conditions, with their attendant inconvenience and squalor, and the effect it is having upon our young people who will be governing Canada tomorrow. Again, I urge the government to intensify its program to enable those now experiencing wretched-substandard housing conditions to enjoy some of the amenities that are being taken for granted by most Canadians.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): On rising to speak on this bill, may I say that I intend to confine my comments to the subject of the Lift program announced by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. I do not know how well this program has been named; I strongly suspect there is not much lift attached to this program and that it may never get off the ground. In some respects this is a pity, because it might have been a useful program. But it was ill-conceived and ill-considered; the most charitable thing one could say about it, I suppose, is that it was introduced in too great a hurry.

During his budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) told us that it would be necessary to introduce supplementary estimates providing $100 million for prairie farmers. The Lift program will certainly not need all that money. Upwards of half of it will be saved, unless all the reports I have received are misleading. I say from personal knowledge, and as a result of discussions with farmers and with hon. members of this House who come from agricultural areas, that it will be virtually impossible for farmers to follow this plan in its entirety.

The prediction in the Richardson Grain Letter that the figure of 15 million acres would be realized seems to be altogether optimistic. Reports indicate that the plan will have minimal acceptance in Manitoba and Alberta, and perhaps more effect in the great wheat lands of Saskatchewan. Statistics from the Dominion Bureau indicate that farmers will be planting about 18 million acres. If a figure of 15 million is realized, it means a net reduction of seven million acres.

The minister's plan to divert 20 million acres to summerfallow and two million acres to forage appear unrealistic and lacking in foresight. My criticism does not apply so strongly to the proposal relating to forage; that seems to be a useful program. The scheme as a whole would get rid of wheat, but at enormous cost. Because of the way in which surplus wheat is distributed all over the prairies, many farmers would still have very little to sell, while others will be left with a great deal. As the scheme was outlined by the minister, a farmer would receive payment for putting his land to summerfallow or forage, and be allocated a quota for delivering wheat, the quota being related to wheat he does not grow.

The second half of the program is, thus, attractive only to farmers who have sizeable surpluses of wheat on their farms. Their number is hard to assess but it seems likely it will amount to about 50 per cent, and to somewhat more in Saskatchewan. Farmers who have little wheat in stock would do best to try to grow a substantial crop on a small acreage. This is what often happens when an attempt is made to reduce acreage; farmers cultivate more intensively and end up with almost as many bushels as before. As a number of hon. members have pointed out, the plan tends to penalize farmers who have reduced their acreage in the past few years of their own accord.

I wish to turn, now, to a facet of the minister's announcement which seems to have escaped attention. All the announcements refer to an eight bushel quota. The minister did say the figure could be nine bushels if the maximum summerfallow came into being and no wheat were grown at all. In this respect he would seem to be on very safe ground, since some 50 per cent of farmers have no carry-over—though it is true they may be farming a smaller number of acres than the 50 per cent which hold a surplus.

Nowhere in the Lift program or in the minister's statements is the Wheat Board committed to taking more than eight bushels. However one tries to work out a quota to fit this new program, it seems the government is not committed to taking into the grain handling system more than about 300 million bushels of wheat. On the basis of 30 million acres of summerfallow this year, plus two million acres under forage crops, plus 25 per cent of last year's summerfallow, making up about 39 million acres of eligible quota acres, the amount of grain which can be delivered would total about 300 million bushels to reach an eight bushel per specified acreage quota. Four various reasons, though, many farmers would obviously not have the amount of wheat necessary if the full quota is to be reached. Even if the acreage under summerfallow were increased and wheat acreage reduced, there would still be less wheat delivered under the quota because many farmers would lack the wheat to fill their quotas if they reduced their acreage.

What about disappearances from the system? The minister has stated that this year 375 million bushels would disappear into export channels. Taking into account a further 100 million or 150 million flowing into domestic channels, there could be a total disappearance from the system of some 500 million bushels. But the Wheat Board is committed to taking only 300 million bushels of wheat, so there could be a loss from stocks of about 200 million bushels currently held by the Board. This would be a good thing for the government but it would really amount to transferring the burden to the farmer.

The really serious impact of this policy will be to reduce the cash flow to the grain farmers, computed on the basis of $1.25 a bushel for 200 million bushels, by about $250 million even at today's reduced prices. This would be nothing short of an economic disaster for the western grain farmer and indeed the whole grain economy throughout the country, particularly if this policy is carried out as bluntly as is suggested.

Even if two million acres of forage are put into crops and another six million in summerfallow more than last year, the government would contribute only $50 million to $55 million to the farm economy. Unless the government is committed to taking more than 300 million bushels into export and domestic systems, it seems to me the western farmer is in for a severe blow which will be felt throughout the entire western economy.

I should now like to turn to a more serious matter in its impact, at least in many ways—the new use of quotas to restrict deliveries. The government has proceeded in this matter by regulation, though many people still feel it should have been done by legislation. After all, this is a drastic change in the whole pattern of grain marketing and there has been no opportunity for debate on this important matter and no opportunity for the elected representatives of farming groups and other interested parties to appear before a parliamentary committee such as the Committee on Agriculture. This is what we would normally expect. It would seem that voluntary action might have been obtained with the same results.

The new regulations carry a very large stick indeed, since the producer's deliveries will be restricted if he fails to utilize his land in a fashion approved by the government. I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of March 20 under the title "Is it legal?" It refers to the regulatory powers of the act and states in part:

> But it is certainly not self-evident that there is any such power in the act. One looks for it in vain in article 4, which sets out the board's specific powers: for example: "to buy, take delivery or, store, transfer, sell, ship or otherwise dispose of grain"—

It goes on:

> These obviously are marketing powers. There are a pair of basket clauses at the end empowering the board to act as an agent on behalf of a minister or the government "in respect of any operations that it may be directed to carry out by the Governor in Council" and "generally to do all such acts and things as may be necessary or incidental to carrying out its operations."

It continues:

> Obviously an acreage reduction program cannot be classified as an "incidental" and it has not been "necessary" in more than three decades of Wheat Board experience. The preceding language is presumably to be read in the context of the whole act. At face value there would be no limit to what the board could do on government direction, but this would be a nonsensical construction. In fact the act has to do with marketing and it is certainly arguable that production is a quite different subject.
> Other sections of the statute, for example those dealing with permit books and powers of administration, appear no more helpful. Even the definition of quota looks difficult; it means "the quantity of grain described in a permit book as fixed from time to time by the board." How is "grain produced" to be equated with summerfallow or, for that matter, forage? While it is beyond question that the board's powers over marketing, as established by past cases, are very extensive, the presumption that they are ample enough to permit it to alter production patterns under threat of penalty certainly invites serious challenge.

Regulations ought not to have a retroactive effect. A farmer who summerfallowed land last year voluntarily is automatically being penalized by some loss of his quota entitlement. There is no escape from the penalty which is inherent in the quota, and the penalty is a matter of regulation and not of legislation passed by Parliament.

Further on the editorial states:

> In this case 188,000 producers, who were obviously not consulted as individuals, have been suddenly confronted with a requirement that they alter their whole scheme of production. Quantitative changes in quotas are, of course, usual but in this instance the whole basis of establishing quotas has been changed overnight from the practice of three decades.

So the workings of this act or regulation, which might have produced a useful effort, will not contribute much toward the reduction of grain without a serious loss of income and damage to the western grain economy. This program seems to have been devised hurriedly, and with little thought, by people who are not fully conversant with the needs of the western farmers. In concluding these few remarks, I urge the minister to withdraw or make major changes to this program. It might be a useful program, but I suggest that the problem of surplus wheat can be solved only by selling. We cannot in one year curtail the production of western grain to the extent that we will end up with little or no surplus. I sincerely hope the minister will take a good look at what he has proposed and make some very useful changes.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on the supplementary estimates and to deal further with a matter my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), initially brought to the attention of the House. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) has spoken on it, and I expect one or two more hon. members will deal with this matter when I have concluded my remarks.

For anyone to suggest that this so-called Operation Lift—I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) had different words for it, and I have regarded it as "Liberals Increasing Farmers' Troubles"—is being approved and accepted by anything more than half the farmers in western Canada, let alone the majority, is to indicate that he is suffering from delusions of some kind.

In true Liberal fashion the minister has dubbed and clubbed his hasty wheat acreage reduction plan as Operation Lift. It would be more appropriate, I think, to use the initials of the plan itself, WARP or operation WARP. My dictionary gives the following definition of warp: to change from straight or right or natural state; to make crooked or perverted. That is a pretty good definition of what this plan will do to Prairie farming. The minister laboured "Lang," or long, and concluded that we would have less wheat in 1970 if we did not grow any wheat in 1970. This was his conclusion after all that labour.

The Liberals have been somewhat less than honest in their promotion of operation WARP. They have implied that it will provide a large income supplement to grain growers. In the minister's words, "If farmers get behind this program.. the cash position of grain producers and the whole Prairie economy will be substantially improved this fall". I submit that is nonsense. The $6 per acre provided for summerfallow will mostly, if not entirely, be taken up in the cost of additional summerfallow. To suggest this is some kind of cash injection or additional cash in the farmers' pockets is dishonest and misrepresenting what the money will actually have to be used for. It is not—I repeat not—a cash injection of any kind in respect of farm income.

I for one, and the many farmers who have written to me—some of whom have even telephoned and spoken by the hundreds to my colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar in the past several days—resent the inference by any government spokesman and any headline writers of the press that by any means this is an injection of cash into the farmers' pockets, because it is not. Let us put this program in its proper place. All it is is a small carrot and a large club. The small carrot is the $6 an acre payment for converting wheat acreage to summerfallow acreage. A payment of $6 an acre to support the cost of summerfallowing is a mighty small carrot. But the club, or the gun at the head of the farmer, is the new quota system. The farmer who wishes to move a large amount of grain next year must take acreage out of production and must not use that acreage for any crop other than forage.

Whatever misgivings the farmer may have, that the new quota system will persuade him, because he has two choices: it will either be compulsory, or he has to do it. This new program, operation WARP, is designed to do one thing and one thing only. It is designed to drastically cut wheat production in 1970 without substantially increasing other grain or oilseed crops. On thing it certainly does not do: it does not in any sense relieve the serious cash shortage which has paralyzed the vast majority of grain farmers in Saskatchewan.

Payments under this plan will barely meet costs in the most favourable areas. Certainly, in many areas it will fail to even cover the farmers' costs. Perhaps this program would be tolerable if it were part of a comprehensive attack on the short-term farm crisis and longer term adjustments. But as a minimum it must be accompanied by substantial supplementary payments to farmers related not to next year's production but to this year's lack of income.

Every major farm organization has called for a program of supplementary payments to Prairie grain producers. They have pleaded for this repeatedly over the past several years. It was a central point in the farm program put forward by the members of the official opposition and of my party repeatedly in this House. Possibly in many respects this was as a result of the demand by farm organizations, but in other respects we were putting forward programs which were part of the policies of our respective parties.

We proposed that the federal government provide not less than $200 million to support payments across the three Prairie provinces. Not only did the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) turn a deaf ear to this proposal, but even the Liberal Premier of Saskatchewan went to the Federal-Provincial Conference in February and made not one demand for supplementary cash payments to meet Saskatchewan's farm crisis. To this day he has failed the farm organizations, the farmers and the small town merchants. His silence and the silence of many other Liberals on this question demonstrates better than anything else the true kinship that exists along the Thatcher-Trudeau axis.

We need, first of all, production guides which recognize the value of what farmers can grow as a national trading asset of benefit to all Canada. We need production guides which recognize long-term world food needs. We need production guides which recognize the contribution which satisfying rural life and employment can make to the economic and social structure of Canada. We need, secondly, trade policies to make possible more purchases by people who buy or who would want to buy what we can produce. We have accepted large sales to Russia and China. We accepted these sales as a matter of right. We have done practically nothing about going out and developing the type of trade policies which would solidify, expand or extend these things.

Third, we need government policies in respect of government guarantees. We need government guarantees to buy specified amounts of produce and to buy those specified amounts at prices which will make farming viable and which will encourage people to make it their lifetime work and thereby make possible diversification and other adjustments within the farm industry. What is happening today with regard to diversification is that the farmer is being urged to diversity in the face of excessive costs and a ruinous debt burden, in many cases. The farmer alone is carrying the unfair risk. The government ought to carry some of this responsibility.

We also need laws to prevent the extension of non-farm corporate ownership to larger areas of farm activity. We need laws to establish minimum prices for grain sold within the provinces. The provincial governments can act on this; they can act to establish minimum prices for grain sold within the province. We need laws to fully protect the farmer and others against foreclosure and any other punitive action when, through no fault of his own, he is unable to pay his debts. The farmer will not be able to use the payment of $6 an acre to pay off his debts; he will need this money to buy seed or for summerfallowing.

We need a provincial government, particularly in Saskatchewan, which will support orderly marketing and not attack it as did a Liberal minister in the legislature last month. We need provincial governments which will co-operate and not interfere with the government of Canada when it starts to enforce the necessary laws in respect of orderly marketing. On this score I am pleased that the Minister without Portfolio did not weaken in the face of the opposition he received from his friends in his own province.

Mr. Speaker, I and many members of this House have received many letters, petitions and resolutions either in partial or in complete opposition to, as I call it, operation WARP. I should like to quote from a petition forwarded to the Minister without Portfolio from the Raymore district of Saskatchewan. It had attached to it the signatures of 104 farmers and small businessmen in that district. The preamble reads:

> We, the undersigned farmers in the Raymore area, wish to submit to you the following information for your kind consideration, discussion and positive action:

It goes on to state:

> We believe that large wheat inventory is caused by poor distribution. Not overproduction. As long as there is one hungry human in the world we do not wish to cut production. We believe on farm wheat to be an asset, not a liability. We also regard wheat in our granaries as income for the year the wheat was produced, similar to stocks, bonds, cash accumulated by other citizens during previous years of work. No other segment of the population is obliged to opt out of production for twelve months through no fault of its own. No individual, be he the wealthiest man or the poorest, will tell you he can afford to go one whole year without production.

It continues:

> The effects of inventory on the farmer as compared to industry differs. If industry decreases its inventory its costs drop almost in direct proportion. In the farmers situation his costs are based on a year's operation. Cost of production per acre changes very little. Yields are affected by variables, not just by value of inputs.

They go on in their petition to cite the reasons they are not in favour of the minister's program. They state:

> The proposed plan offers in place of the 1970 wheat crop approximately $100 million as compared to 1969 value of production of $684 million at $1 + = $700 million. Therefore, the plan offers approximately one-seventh of value for the 1970 crop as compared to the 1969 wheat crop which is 15 cents a bushel for 1970 wheat.

They state further:

> Storage costs to the federal government will not decrease in proportion to a decreasing stockpile. If we have 450 million bushels stored on the farm, plus 450 million bushels stored in elevators and terminals, or nothing on the farm plus 450 million bushels in elevators, cost of storage will remain the same since the federal government pays storage to the elevator system, not to the farmers.

• (5:50 p.m.)

So there is no saving to the government or to the farmer in storage costs. They contend that the real problem is not one of large inventory but of low sales, low prices, high cost of inputs and high interest rates. They believe—I was particularly struck with this one because I have had similar submissions from people in many parts of the Prairies—that the estimate of the carryover of wheat is too high by at least 20 per cent. I know of substantial areas in Saskatchewan where there is no carryover of wheat. I would like to hear and see the minister's evidence of the 900 million to one billion bushels of wheat that is in farmers' hands and in elevator storage as of July 31. There are six or seven more reasons why these farmers signed this petition. I will read the last one, which says they are opposed to the plan because—

> There is no provision for farmers who have no wheat because he was hailed out, dried out, froze out, drowned out, wormed out or craned out—

And I will insert here, "or Liberaled out."

> —or the young man trying to start out.

They end their petition by saying:

> Therefore, we are opposed to the black paper on wheat reduction program and cannot, and will not, accept its implications.

The Archbishop of the Diocese of Qu'Appelle of the Anglican Church of Canada wrote:

> At the same time we feel strongly that the program to reduce wheat production by the federal government can be regarded only as a means of buying time in which to attack the root problem of food distribution around the world.
> We recognize that the decision to limit production of wheat was the only one to make on economic grounds.
> Morally, however, it is another matter. When two-thirds of the world population is hungry; when a child dies of hunger every three seconds while food is surplus in western Canada, it seems to us monstrous not to produce food.

I also have here a letter from Avonlea, Saskatchewan, and one from Lancer, Saskatchewan. This brings me to the question: What about next year? My colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar asked that question. I hope the minister will enlighten us some time this evening as to what is to happen next year. A gentleman from Lancer, Saskatchewan, wrote to me as follows:

> I have some 500 acres of fallow now and 500 acres of stubble. If I summerfallow the entire amount of 1,000 acres this year, next year I must seed 1,000 acres. I have no choice but to do this because I could not fallow any longer than two years.

So we would like to know from the minister what about next year? I have here another letter from Saskatchewan which says that it is going to be very hard, with no wheat payments this spring, to licence their vehicles, repair their machinery, purchase fuel and cover their day-to-day and monthly living expenses. The writer of the letter is saying this while waiting for the payment of $6 per acre which he is not likely to get by mid-July if he increases his summer fallow. What does he do for income? As yet they have not delivered their one-bushel quota and their crop year is over half gone.

Some of these letters are copies of ones that I have received. The originals were sent to the minister, and I hope he has read them all carefully. I hope he takes the time to answer the questions put forward by these farmers who have written from various parts of western Canada. One constituent started off his letter by saying:

> To pen a letter to me is like a bath to a hippie, however this plan our agricultural department has come up with, namely Lift, has lifted my hand.
> The only thing it will lift is a lot of good topsoil and a good many farmers' blood pressure. I can see some merit in this for a farmer who grew only wheat and never tried to reduce his wheat acreage or diversify and was fortunate enough to have a bumper crop every year since 1966. This will certainly help him out, but for people in the Park Belt it is more like a kick in the rear. Most of the farmers in our area have been trying hard to reduce wheat acreage by seeding oilseeds and specialty crops more out of desperation than anything else, as flaxseed, sunflower, buckwheat, safflower, which are a great risk because of frost—

The tone of that letter is similar to the tone of most letters that I am getting. I will not take the time of the House to read any more of them. I suggest to the minister that it is apparent that the program is a fait accompli. There is not the slightest possible chance that he and the government will decide to withdraw it and substitute something else.

I ask him with all the sincerity I can command to announce his regulations soon. I hope he will announce them tomorrow and not next Monday or Tuesday when the House is in recess, when all he need do is hold a press conference and he will not have to answer any questions from the opposition. In the course of that announcement I hope the minister will advise us that the government, in formulating regulations having to do with Operation Lift—or WARP as I call it—and with the new quota system, has recognized the problems of the farmers and has taken into consideration those farmers who reduced their wheat acreage.

I submit that the answer which the minister gave me today is insufficient. The recognition of 25 per cent summerfallow in 1969 is not high enough. I hope, also, that the minister will in his regulations give some recognition to farmers who do not have any wheat carryover and have no choice but to seed some more wheat. I hope he will put out regulations which will require his inspectors to inspect farmers' properties and granaries, and provide that those who do not have any carryover will receive recognition and some allowance for wheat growing will be made for them in the present crop year. I hope the minister will include these and many other improvements that are needed in this program, which otherwise I think will prove to be a disaster and certainly a disappointment to most farmers in western Canada.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House to concur in interim supply for the period April 1 to June 30 further illustrates the basic conflict which exists within the government. On the one hand we see the western farmer faced with an enormous surplus of wheat for which the government cannot find markets, and in fact through this motion it is asking the House to provide $100 million to pay the western farmer, in effect, not to grow wheat. On the other hand we find the government apparently about to embark on a policy which will further reduce the amount of wheat used for feed grain purposes.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in his estimates has reduced by some $5 million the amount for feed grain assistance for the coming year, and he has given indications that the entire program may be withdrawn. As the House is aware, since 1941 the federal government has paid a subsidy on the transportation of feed grains from the Prairie provinces to the Atlantic provinces and to British Columbia. The program was originally started as a measure to encourage livestock production in those areas where feed grains were in short supply. In effect, the feed grain assistance program was designed to move large amounts of grain from surplus areas to deficit areas.

As the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture points out in a recent statement on the program:

> With the vast amounts of feed grains on hand in western Canada, it seems to make good economic and common sense to move as much as possible of this surplus grain to eastern Canada and British Columbia, where relatively little grain is produced and feed grain requirements are far from being met by local production. Furthermore, grain should be produced for livestock feed where the necessary resources are available to produce grain most economically.

This has been the policy since 1941, but from recent statements it would appear that the federal government is now considering the total withdrawal of this assistance program. While it is true that a reduction in the program will mean an immediate saving to the government, any saving obtained will have to be passed on to the farmer in increased costs of production and so will eventually be passed on to the consumer. Here again is the conflict within the government, because this is in direct violation of the government's avowed position of maintaining the line on prices, and it is a direct contradiction of the purpose of the Prices and Incomes Commission that prices should be held down at this time.

The Maritime provinces already suffer from low incomes, and reduction or complete elimination of the feed freight assistance will certainly not help this situation. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has unfurled vast new programs to overcome regional disparities in the Atlantic area, but now we find his colleague proposing measures which will help to negate his efforts. The farmer in the Maritime provinces needs more government help, rather than a reduction in assistance. As the brief from the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture points out:

> The continuation of the feed freight assistance program can be justified by government and agriculture as an equitable program which gave rise to great development benefits in the past and which contains even greater potentials for the future.
> Removal of the program cannot be justified without simultaneously eliminating other restraints such as tariffs on United States grains, Wheat Board import licence requirements and Wheat Board pricing of feed grains so that our livestock feeders can look to other areas of the continent for a supply of feed grains at the lowest possible cost.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I think the federation is saying, in effect, that if the government does not want Maritime farmers to use western feed grains because they have suddenly found some market for those grains, then take off the other restrictions so that the Maritime farmers can buy feed grains from other sources. I hope the minister will take this into consideration. This action of the government is only another roadblock in our fight to obtain a comprehensive transportation policy for the Atlantic provinces.

It is an historical fact that because the Maritime provinces are situated at such great distances from the markets of central Canada, special freight rate assistance must be given to them so they can compete with other parts of the country. What is particularly disturbing to every Maritimer is the fact that for almost three years now the region has been in a kind of suspended animation interrupted occasionally by announcements from various transport ministers—and we have had quite a few—that a rational and sound transportation policy was being worked out for the area, and disturbed at other intervals by various railway freight increases.

We have had commissions and committees studying the problem, but as yet they have not come up with any solutions. The Transport Committee has made two trips to the region, and almost a year ago now presented a very comprehensive report containing their suggestions for a new transportation policy. The Atlantic Premiers presented an excellent report about a year ago and made many suggestions which would go a long way toward solving some of our problems.

In November, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) announced the formation of a new federal-provincial committee on Atlantic region transportation, and included in its terms of reference was to be a detailed examination of the Maritime freight rate assistance on rail traffic within the region. This committee was composed of representatives from each of the Atlantic provinces, with a federal appointee to act as chairman. We have been told by the minister the committee has met four times, and I am informed that they have agreed on two recommendations. These recommendations refer to two noticeable errors in the Atlantic Regional Freight Assistance Act passed in this House in the last year. This is the only concrete step that has been taken in some three years under three different ministers of transport to revise the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Because the Maritime Freight Rates Act has sometimes been deliberately misconstrued and misinterpreted, we have been accused of asking for things to which we are not entitled. For a moment or two I should like to refer to the background of this legislation. When this act was passed in 1927 it was a direct result of the recommendations made by the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims, commonly known as the Duncan Commission, appointed in 1926 to study the problems of freight rates in the area as compared with the rest of Canada.

The findings were very interesting because the study indicated that between 1912 and 1925 freight rates in the area had increased by 92 per cent, while rates elsewhere in Canada had increased by only 55 per cent. As the commission pointed out, this high increase placed a burden upon the trade and commerce in the region and, in fact, made it almost impossible for business to compete in the Canadian market.

The point that I want to make, because it has been deliberately overlooked, is that to adjust this discrepancy the Duncan Commission recommended that there be an immediate 20 per cent decrease in rates in the Maritime area. In other words, the 20 per cent decrease that is sneeringly referred to as the maritime subsidy is nothing more than this recommendation which was to bring our rate back to the same level that applied in the rest of the country. This interpretation is very irritating to people in the Maritime provinces.

The Maritime Freight Rates Act has served its purpose in some cases, but it certainly could not be called a rousing success nor an abject failure. It has helped business and commerce in the area, but it has not fulfilled the original intention of preventing rail rates there increasing more than in the rest of Canada. It has not kept transportation costs from being a barrier to the marketing of goods from the region throughout the country.

The philosophy in the act was good, but somewhere along the line the mechanics failed. To show what has happened in the erosion of our competitive position as compared with 1927, when the next round of railway freight rate increases come into effect on April 6 the rates will have caught up with three of the four rate hikes applied across the country which have meant increases of 20 per cent to 38 per cent in various categories since the National Transportation Act became effective on March 23, 1967. The Atlantic region will have had increases of 14 per cent to 28 per cent since September 23, 1969. In other words, the 20 per cent laid down by statute in the Maritime Freight Rates Act has gone out the window.

The only step the government has taken to implement the intent of the National Transportation Act, which was to develop a transportation policy for all modes of transportation in Canada, has been to pass Bill C-207, the Atlantic Regional Freight Assistance Act. This bill was supposed to extend the same assistance to truckers as that extended to rail carriers, but those who drafted it did a sloppy job and created the two inequities which are causing further confusion in the Maritime freight rates picture.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Two errors appeared in the drafting of the legislation which extended these subsidies to the truckers in the area. The subsidies were supposed to be comparable to those granted to rail carriers. By some quirk or error in the drafting of the legislation it turned out that the subsidy on the westward movement of freight was extended to household goods; in other words, furniture. The trucker hauling furniture for someone moving from the Maritimes to another part of Canada can collect a subsidy on the shipment. In other words, we are paying for the migration of maritimers. The second problem is that because different methods are used to compute the amount of assistance, the assistance paid can be substantially less for goods moved by truck than for the same type of shipment by rail.

The Saint John Telegraph-Journal had this to say about the matter:

> —in one category, a wide range of miscellaneous commodities in lots of 1,500 pounds or more, the rate by both truck and railway piggyback service is 99 cents per 100 pounds—but because of the different formulas under the two acts, the subsidy works out at 21 cents by truck and 26 cents by rail.

I am talking about the act the Minister of Transport introduced in the House with such flowery promises. The railways were to have no real advantage over the truckers. How the minister's draftsmen produced this mess, we shall never know. We simply must amend the act. The provision extending a subsidy to the movement of household goods must be corrected as soon as possible, before too many people move themselves and their furniture out of the Atlantic area.

The editorial in the Telegraph-Journal continues as follows:

> —the disparity between truck and rail subsidies would not have arisen if Ottawa had followed the recommendation of the Atlantic Premiers, based on the extensive task force study, that the subsidies be paid directly to the shippers instead of to the carriers. Such a system would also permit a desirable flexibility in using the assistance, and it would spur rather than dull the competition for traffic between railways and truckers.

The editorial deals with one of the most serious complaints that I and other members from the Atlantic provinces have against the whole approach displayed by the department and the Minister of Transport toward the problem of transportation in the Maritimes. The minister asked for advice from various sources. He asked the Atlantic Premiers for their recommendations and said he would consider them seriously. The Atlantic premiers submitted a comprehensive report containing excellent suggestions. The suggestions respecting the solutions to our problems have all been accepted by most shippers in the area. I suppose we shall discover that this report has been tossed under a desk somewhere and completely ignored.

The minister said he would appoint a federal-provincial committee to look into this question: why, I do not know, because he already had received the report of the Premiers. Why would he wish to appoint a committee? I can only suspect the reason, as can the people of my area. The minister must want further delay. The committee has met four times, and its chairman is a federal appointee. The question is, why cannot the Minister of Transport obtain a report from the committee? Is it any wonder the people of the area are accusing the minister and this government of deliberate heel-dragging on the promise to develop a new Atlantic transportation policy?

Mr. Nesbitt: The people sense this is just a lot of horseplay.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): The situation has become so upsetting in the area that hardly a week goes by without an editorial appearing in one of the local papers asking why no action is forthcoming. I thought the minister would begin keeping some of the promises he made when piloting Bill C-207 through the House. He said that would be an interim measure only, and that a completely new policy would be evolved. Our problems would be solved, the shippers in the Atlantic area would be governed by a definite policy and everything in the area would be fine.

In closing, I ask the Minister of Transport to redeem his promises by giving us something more than a shoddy, poorly drafted piece of legislation which instead of helping to solve our problems will complicate them still further.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I very rarely pass up an opportunity to speak on the subject that, depending on the way you look at it, either touches a raw spot or is my favourite topic for discussion. As you know, since the minister announced his latest program which was to be the salvation of the west, hardly a day passes without my asking a question about what I call the Lower Income for Tomorrow Program.

All the years I have been involved in politics I have tried to sense the mood of the electorate, and never in all those years have I seen a group of people, the western farmers, more hostile as a result of the minister's announcement of his program which is supposed to help them. I have been scanning the newspapers to see what the reactions have been to the minister's proposed program. I have never heard that any farm organization requested such a program, or that any individual expressed privately that he would like to have it. Nevertheless, the minister's program landed in our lap out of a clear blue sky.

The other day I read a newspaper article which indicated to me what was going on in the country. The article in question concerned the Canadian Federation of Agriculture meeting in Winnipeg. In my hand I hold a copy of Country Guide of March, 1970. An article in it reads in part:

> Grains policy highlighted the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at Winnipeg and heated discussion pinpointed crucial problems facing Canada's policymakers today—a direct conflict of views between some eastern and western farm people.

That, to me, indicates why there is a feeling of growing alienation in the west and why the minister's policies, no doubt aimed at quelling the rising resentment there, have aggravated the situation instead of smoothing it. This article continues:

> The Ontario group spelled out its position clearly on what it called the "Western Grain Problem" in a paper prepared at the request of the Ontario Hog Producers Association.
> 'It is alarming to contemplate what the effects could be on the eastern livestock economy if there is a big switch to livestock production,' said the paper.

• (8:30 p.m.)

> Demanding that the Prairie situation be isolated from the rest of Canada, the OFA paper stated, "Adjustments in Prairie agriculture will be painful but they are inevitable." And, in a further warning to Prairie delegates, it said the only solution is to cut back production to marketable levels.

This objective is all right for a group such as the Ontario Hog Producers Association. I believe the minister was more aware of what would happen to the livestock producers in eastern Canada than the farmers in western Canada. The article continues:

> Some Saskatchewan delegates took a stronger line. Said one, "If we can't sell our grain, we'll either go broke or convert some of it to livestock. There are a lot of us who aren't prepared to go broke yet!"

Obviously there was a confrontation between east and west on the question of who would be raising the hogs and cattle. For reasons best known to himself, the minister took the side of the eastern hog producer, leaving the western grain farmer high and dry.

Some people wonder why huge surpluses have been built up. One of the major reasons is that the grain producers have been constantly struggling to produce a few more bushels of grain in a vain attempt to get ahead of the rising cost of production. They thought that if they became more efficient a buyer would be found for the surplus grain and they would somehow be able to keep their heads above water. Eighty per cent of the wheat is produced by 20 per cent of the farmers. The minister made a statement of policy which apparently completely disregards 80 per cent of the farmers who by one means or another have been providing a livelihood for themselves and their families.

Although the minister said that wheat production must be cut, by some formula he has isolated the 20 per cent who are the main wheat producers. He said that since they are the people with the bulk of the surplus, a special policy will be designed for them. The minister has set a policy whereby it is impossible for anyone to must sell every bushel of his grain, every hog and all his cattle, and he must leave home in the winter to work in the bush or the mines so that his income will be sufficient to keep the family together.

The minister has now cut off one of the sources of the farmer's income, small though it may be. He has completely disregarded all these people. In the month that has elapsed since he made his statement, many hon. members have asked the minister to announce the regulations. Today the Minister seemed almost bewildered on the question of why regulations are necessary. Many people would like to know whether this is the end of the program, of whether the regulations will at least give them some hope.

The minister keeps kidding himself that this program will work. Anyone who has travelled to the west, talked to the farmers or received letters from them has a better appreciation of the situation than the minister. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics issued a preliminary report of the farmers' intentions with regard to seeding wheat. On the basis of information prior to March 1, indications were that even without the minister's announcement they intended to reduce their wheat production by 25 per cent, from a level of 24½ million acres last year to just over 18 million acres this year. The summerfallow acreage was to increase by roughly 1½ million acres.

If this is the type of advice the minister is receiving, then either the minister or his advisers should vacate their positions. It is impossible to see how there will be any increase. As I have already said, the farmers need this income. Not only do they need it, but many of them do not have surpluses. Over the years many of them have had to diversify. Many of them took advantage of the community pastures program because they did not have their own pasturage. Many of them have gone to work part-time in an attempt to maintain their family farm. They have tried to expand their farms. Many young farmers thought there was hope. This seems to the only policy the minister intends to announce. He has not indicated how these people can earn money with which to pay their taxes. The attitude is that if they survive another year, maybe another quota system or some other arrangement can be worked out. The minister leaves these people waiting and wondering.

The minister has indicated that an appeal board will deal with some of the difficult situations which are not covered by regulations or the policy announced. He has indicated that this appeal board is necessary. Even if the membership of the board had been announced immediately, he knows how slow some of these appeal boards are. The time for spring seeding is fast approaching and some appeals may not be heard before that time. Obviously there is no intention to hear appeals from some of these people. Regulations have not been prepared. At this stage everyone is left scrambling for himself and running in every direction, thanks to the minister. If it were a dollar item it would be closer to the amount that actually will be spent, not $100 million. A false impression has been left in this regard.

Everybody in the east thinks we are getting $100 million. On the basis of a 1.5 million acres increase in summerfallow, times $6, only about $10 million is involved. Another couple of million acres might qualify. If the total reaches $30 million you will be stretching it a long way. If there is to be a partial payment in July, the minister will by then have an idea who qualifies and who does not.

The economic squeeze is so hard now that the minister should immediately allocate $70 million, using whatever plan he wishes as a basis, in order that some of those people who will not be given a quota may be able to meet their bank payments and keep their families together. I do not care whether he uses the method of acreage payments or follows some other scheme. I wish he would have compassion for these people who have not been allotted quotas for several years and who will be denied an income this year because of the minister's action.

I do not know what it takes to move a heartless minister. I have said that an appeal board is necessary. Some of the questions I have asked in the House illustrate the need for an appeal board and for the prompt publication of regulations. What about the case of the farmer whose land was broken up last year? How will he be affected by the quota system? What about the man who was hailed out last year and put his land in summerfallow the year before? He will be bound to put in a crop this year, but he will not have the benefit of a quota. What is the situation of all those whose land was fallow last year, who paid their taxes but who have no hope of an income this year

Like other hon. members, I have received a number of letters on this subject and some of them are most interesting. One of them comes from Avonlea, Saskatchewan. The writer says:

> The program for summerfallowing and seeding to grass as the basis for next year's delivery quota can only favour one class of farmer—those who have been the prime contributors to the surplus. Those who seed most of their cultivated acreage, using heavy applications of fertilizer are the prime contributors to the huge surplus. I understand that they are now to be blessed with the opportunity of having the lion's share of the market if they will summerfallow for one year.
> Most producers in our immediate area have been following a one half crop-one half summerfallow operation.

Later, he says:

> I have endeavoured to reach an economical unit whereby my equipment can handle seeding, summerfallowing and harvest. It is inadequate to provide for summerfallowing all my land at the proper time in any one year or to harvest a crop from all my land in the following year.

The writer adds that according to the pamphlet he received from the ministry, the program is to be backed by on-the-farm inspection. This, he says, will entail the employment of thousands of administrators and the cost of such policing will be exorbitant. I raise this question: Will the Manpower offices be called upon to supply these inspectors, or will we use the same old political patronage system as in the past?

I wish the minister would tell us what to do. It was suggested by some officials with whom I met recently that application should be made to the branch administering PFA. I say to the minister that there would be so many applications that it would be necessary for him to reinforce the PFA staff immediately. Local people are quite capable of carrying out farm inspections. I hope he will not continue to use the old system whereby the only qualification needed was the approval of the local Liberal organization. Let me remind the hon. gentleman that there are not too many Liberals left in this area, and those who are left will probably not be qualified to say who is, and who is not, fit to inspect.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand an hon. member wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question. I have heard him speak about farming as a way of life, and I agree with part of what he has said. But is he suggesting that this way of life should be subsidized?

Mr. Korchinski: I am saying that these people were told by government economists that they ought to expand, borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation and make their production efficient by using modern methods and machinery. So in a sense we are no longer talking about family farms but about economic units, if we want to be impersonal. Over the years the people have tried to make profitable units out of their holdings. Many farmers, in addition to growing corn—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him under the rules has expired.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, under the unusual procedure we are following today in connection with the supply of certain sums of money to Her Majesty, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has been able to smirk quietly in his seat all through this debate, wearing the traditional expression of the cat that swallowed the canary.

I suppose he is happy about the situation in which he finds himself, but I should like to have been close enough to the hon. gentleman to see the whites of his eyes across the aisle between us. While he has been getting off scot-free, his hon. friend from Saskatoon has been bearing the brunt, if not quite all of the onslaught from this side of the chamber. For most of the day we have been discussing the production of wheat, or measures to prevent it being produced. I think, to speak in Biblical terms, that along with these loaves of wheat there should be some fishes.

The subject to which I should like to address my comments has to do with items in the estimates which affect the fishing industry, which may come as a relief to the minister from Saskatoon. Out of the $250 million provided in the supplementary estimates, the amounts under the heading "Fisheries and Forestry" are relatively modest. I find myself intrigued by them.

Over recent weeks the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has been making announcements of certain payments that were going to be made, arising in some cases out of emergency situations such as the loss to the fishermen because of contamination in the Placentia Bay area of Newfoundland. There is an item of $182,000 to cover the cost of this, representing a grant to the universities for assistance to educational work in fisheries. Then there is an item—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I realize that he is just starting his speech and that the remarks he is making are introductory in nature. But if I remember well, earlier today a suggestion was made by the Chair that until we were in Committee of the Whole there should be no detailed discussion of items in the estimates, and as much as possible we should limit contributions to this debate to the principle, if there is a principle, of the bill before us.

I think it would not be in order to refer to individual items and to consider or debate them except in a very general way. I appreciate that the hon. member knows this just as well as I do, and I hope he will keep it in the back of his mind during his speech.

Mr. Barnett: I appreciate the point Your Honour has raised, and I assure you that I am not mentioning these figures with a view to discussing the merits or demerits of particular items involved, but rather to lay the ground work of what I hope will be the principle involved. If Your Honour will bear with me a little bit longer, I will complete the factual position of this situation as I see it.

I was going to point out that there is an item of roughly $1,200,000 to recoup the fisheries price support account to cover losses. That comes to something over $1,500,000, but from that is deducted items taken from Fisheries and Forestries votes Nos. 10 to 40 of the previous estimates amounting to $854,000, which means that all we are being asked for is $682,000.

My point in referring to these figures is that I feel an important principle is involved. I do not know whether it is primarily the responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries, or the President of the Treasury Board—I suspect it is more the result of the actions of the latter—that we appear here to be involved in a situation where we are robbing Peter to pay Paul. This is something to which I strongly object.

It is all very well for the government to announce great programs to reimburse fishermen for loss because of pollution, or to announce grants to bolster the price that fishermen will receive for their fish through the support board, as if these were great programs and we were being asked to approve the funds to carry them out, but let us not blind ourselves to the fact that what appears to be happening is that in order to do this we are taking away from certain other very important aspects of public spending.

These are items referred to in the main estimates. The one that concerns me is vote No. 10 in the main estimates which has to do with fisheries management and development programs, including moneys for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including acquisition of land for the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission as required by article VIII of the convention, and payments to provinces or municipalities. The item goes on about details of the industrial development service, conservation and protection service, resource development service and inspection service.

My quarrel with what is happening here is that at a time when there is a crying need for expansion in the resource development aspect of the Department of Fisheries, the government is, willingly or unwillingly, taking from the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and his department moneys that Parliament in good faith appropriated to carry out certain purposes, particularly resource development, and is shifting that money to what may be worthy objects in themselves but certainly are not the objects for which we originally intended the money to be used when we voted it. As far as I am concerned, this is an important point at issue. If one were to examine the items in certain other departmental supplementary estimates, in the final supplementary Estimates B one could find that the same process appears to be happening.

The Minister of Fisheries was in British Columbia quite recently to speak to the annual convention of the largest organization of fishermen in that province. He was bandying figures around and talking about so many millions of dollars a year being spent on salmon spawning grounds, salmon hatching programs and this kind of thing. It is all very well to bandy these things around; it is all very well for the Minister of Fisheries to stand up at a convention in Vancouver expressing the hope that certain things will be done. But when we come back here, look at the fine print in the supplementary estimates and find that money that should have been spent this year on the expansion of salmon spawning facilities is, in fact, being diverted to a fisheries price support program, I think when we are asked to pass this bill or vote these supplementary estimates we should not be unaware that this is happening within the general policy restrictions which the government apparently has imposed on the department.

I do not know whether the President of the Treasury Board is going to take advantage of this opportunity to deal with some of the questions that have been raised today, but if he does I hope this will be one aspect of the proposal before us with which he is prepared to come to grips. As hon. members know, the standing committees of the House have been meeting and considering matters that have to do primarily with the estimates of the fiscal year that lies ahead. We have been hearing representations from various organizations. I have in mind the brief which was presented to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry by the Fisheries Council of Canada.

One of the points made in that brief was the importance and the value of investment in the resource-enhancing aspects of programs such as those of the Department of Fisheries. I raised some questions with them. Now, after looking at these supplementary estimates, I am glad I did. I asked them whether they had gone to the President of the Treasury Board and made this point. It is obvious that it is not enough simply for organizations of that kind to come before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, because we have to deal with matters that lie within the purview and the jurisdiction of the minister and the items put into a vote for the minister to spend.

I presume the Minister of Fisheries and his officials have had difficulty in making some decisions. At least, I hope they have had to wrestle with their souls about some of these matters. It is apparent they are forced into a position where they have to juggle money around and ask us to switch it back and forth from one program to another.

So really when members of this House of Commons deal with the main estimates they cannot know whether they are dealing with a proposal to spend money in a certain direction or not. This is the inference I draw from the little story told by the items in this supplementary estimate for the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. If I am placing a wrong interpretation on the situation, at some point perhaps the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will correct me. I find it difficult to reach any conclusion other than the one I have reached. We have a situation where $854,000 is taken out of two votes, one of which has to do with the forestry section of the department. I have taken the trouble to check this item. I know it has to do with a program involving a contribution to the province of Newfoundland for assistance in obtaining an inventory of the forest resources in connection with a land capability study. As I understand it, this program is near completion.

The main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1971, indicate that the forecast expenditure is slightly in excess of that provided in the main estimates for the fiscal year 1969-70. We were informed that when the 1970-71 period was completed, that program would be pretty well phased out. So, Mr. Speaker, I really do not think the money was taken out of vote No. 40 in respect of the forestry branch of the minister's department. It would seem that it is coming out of the heart of the expansion program with regard to our fishing resource, which is now so essential to the fishermen not only on the Pacific coast but on the Atlantic coast of Canada.

[Mr. Barnett.]

I wish to register as strongly as I can my objection to this type of tactic on the part of the government, because if it is considered necessary to meet a temporary situation in respect of a pollution kill of fish, or a temporary decline in fish prices which must be supported, I submit that those who are concerned with the logic and regularity of the resource development program will not any longer know where they stand or on what they can count. I think this is very germane to the principle of the bill before us if, as Your Honour has suggested, it really has a principle.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, with all the respect in the world, I shall attempt to find some way—and I am sure I can—to relate my remarks to the item which stands in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). The President of the Treasury Board must be the most distinguished member of the government with us this evening. He looks relaxed and in a good mood. I hope that having listened to me he will realize the concern some of us have about the estimates and the supplementary estimates that are before us.

I say to the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker, that the most damnable hoax ever perpetrated upon eastern Canadians in the last half century has been perpetrated in this House in the last four or five days. There has been no concern, no care and no consideration for the economic impact; no rationalization of the importance to industry, revenue and the potential to generate the means by which we in the Atlantic provinces can sustain ourselves, and an absolute abandonment of the desires and aspirations of the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick who hoped that this House would have the sense to develop Minas Basin tidal power. The hopes of the people in this regard have been dashed to the ground.

At the outset I should like to refer to the report and tell you, Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about and what, for the sake of $30 million or $40 million a year, this government has thrown down the drain. A very distinguished former member of this House could say, "What's a million?". Therefore, I have no hesitation in saying, on behalf of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, what's $30 million or $40 million when dealing with the lives of two or three million people and offering them the wherewithal to get out from under the yoke of criticism from Ontario and Quebec to the effect that they are saddled with the burden of subsidies for the Atlantic provinces?

I want to be serious because we are dealing with public money, and I hope I can keep in order with what I wish to say tonight. For two years I have been asking about the feasibility study. Your Honour knows my concern about it. God knows, it has been my dream for 20 years that I would see these tides harnessed, and I shall not rest until they are. I shall read one short paragraph from page 14 of the report:

> In the United States the total requirements of the six New England States in 1965 were 41,782 million KWH of energy with a peak demand of 8,586 MW. The requirements are forecast to increase to 111,000 million KWH and over 22,000 MW by 1980, and to approximately 210,000 million KWH and 41,000 MW in 1990.
> The foregoing predictions indicate the tremendous increases in generating capacity for which planning must be carried out in the northeastern region of the continent. Also evident is the fact that, from the standpoint of magnitude of requirement, there is a market for the disposal of large quantities of energy from any conceivable size of electric power development.

In this world there is only one source of energy which can meet that type of requirement, and we happen to have it in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It seems to me the government of Canada has adopted a shockingly short-term view in its decision not to proceed with the exploitation of the tremendous potential energy of the Bay of Fundy and Minas Basin tidal power. For over two years many of us have been anxiously awaiting this report. We have been concerned about the economic well-being of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. We are concerned about the future of these provinces and about people continuing to say in a snide, offhand way, "Oh, hell; it is just the Maritimes, give them a few dollars and they will carry on."

An hon. Member: They say the same about the west, too.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, but where the hell would we be without the wheat of western Canada? It is time we realized that a country of this kind demands of each one of us a particular price. Nobody in the Maritimes complained about the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway, and we had few editorials on the subject. Not too many years ago I stood in this House and said it was a good thing we developed the St. Lawrence Seaway—and I come from the port of Halifax.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I was saying that what is important is the development of the country and national unity, not the narrow-minded views of people who are afraid to spend a few dollars. Capital does not mean anything any more, in terms of developing a country like Canada. The cost of money is very, very important. I hope that I can keep my remarks in order when talking about the cost of money.

All of us who have read these reports and have been interested in the studies that have been carried out are aware of the ramifications and complexities of a project of this magnitude. We know it is literally a billion dollar project. The report suggests that the cost will be $700 million. What will the airport in Quebec cost? What will the airport northeast of Montreal do for the city of Montreal and its environs in the social, cultural and industrial context? It is another drop in the bucket. I suggest that to those of us in the Atlantic provinces this project might be the salvation of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in the context of confederation. I do not say that loosely, nor do I say it unadvisedly.

I say that the decision not to go ahead with the project because, as the report indicates, the cost of money is too high, is shortsighted. As the report says, the cost per kilowatt hour is beyond the range of industry to absorb. We are not unmindful of that. We know that an industry must have cheap power to keep it competitive with other industries. We know we cannot have power that will cost one mill or two mills more than power produced thermally or by some other means.

What we are talking about is the cost of being Canadian—and I want to pay that price. I do not know whether the rest of the members in the House want to pay it. I was prepared to pay it in terms of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Now I ask the rest of Canada to at least have second thoughts about the decision of the government not to go ahead with the development of this power.

As I said, this is one of the government's most shortsighted conclusions because it overlooks three major factors. The first is the potentiality of tidal power to meet energy requirements free of consequential pollution and at a constant, fixed cost once the capital requirement has been met. It would be pollution-free and constant in terms of the cost factor of annual operations. No other form of production of electrical energy provides that. Tidal power does provide it because it is constant, it is renewable and we could use it four times a day. Four times a day, 135 billion cubic feet of water moves in and out of the bay. All we have to do is to utilize the optimum effect and subsidize the cost of money.

There seems to be concern for the cost of capital during the period of construction, which is predicted to be nine years. I will bet you a dollar that I could find a dozen conglomerates or consortiums in this field that would guarantee they would have an operation in six to seven years, not nine years. I guarantee that I could walk out of this House and in 48 hours bring to the Prime Minister's office two dozen Canadian businessmen who would be prepared to go out and raise the money which the government of Canada does not want to put up.

We are not asking for the capital. This type of project would require co-operation from all levels of government as well as the private sector. It is a massive project. I ask the House, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and the government to consider the very simple proposition, within the concept of regional economic expansion and within what I know is a sincere desire on the part of the government to overcome disparity, to make Canada a whole unit in which each part feels as strong as the others—because truth is never what it is; more often it is what it seems to be. I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government if they would not reconsider the blunt statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday not to go ahead with this project.

I have mentioned the power that will be required in this section of Canada and the northeastern United States by 1980 and by 1990. No amount of thermal energy or nuclear energy will meet that demand unless we pay the price in terms of pollution, and not only pollution of our air in terms of coaldust and oil getting into the atmosphere but other forms of pollution. I ask the President of the Treasury Board where we will bury uranium in 1985, the uranium that they use to boil water to generate electricity in nuclear plants.

The U.S.A. are now down to two small areas, one in the mid-southwest and one in Alaska, where they can put away uranium which has a half life of 5,000 years, or whatever it is. I am not sure what it is today. I do not want it in Nova Scotia. Does the President of the Treasury Board want it in his backyard? I bet him a buck that he does not, yet here we are thoughtlessly casting aside another source of power because we are afraid of the cost of money.

The price of the power per kilowatt hour will bring it beyond competitive range. How shortsighted we are: I ask the President of the Treasury Board how many hours he has spent talking about pollution at cabinet meetings. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) is one of the finest men in this country but, good God, how can he stand up after hours and hours of conversation about pollution and say, "Let us build more thermal power plants. Let us pollute more air"? What are we talking about?

The short-range project is fine, because we will need more energy and more electrical power before we can tie into an international or national grid the power of the tides of the Bay of Fundy. Let us not bog down in the concept that we can simply shelve it until the interest rate comes down to 5 per cent. I pray God I should live so long, but I do not think it will ever be that low again. How can it? There is no hope for it since the Bank Act revision.

We cannot continue this type of philosophy. The report says that the construction will take nine years in its optimum arrangement, to utilize the tides going both ways. I am not sure what engineering principles are involved, but they say it will cost $724 million plus. Basing it on the 1968 rate of 7 per cent, it will be "X" dollars and it will put the mill price per kilowatt hour at "X" level. Even if, realistically speaking, the interest rate today is 10 per cent and will continue to be that over the nine-year period, which I indicated will not be that long, and even if the cost is so high, in order to bring it down to a competitive level some sacrifice will be required of all Canadians.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The government talks about the need for Canadians to make sacrifices. How long have we been paying for the St. Lawrence Seaway? It still cannot pay its debt out of operational cash flow. I suggested in this House three, four or maybe five years ago that we should extend the write-off period for the St. Lawrence Seaway to 75 years, in the hope that operational cash flow might begin to meet its debt retirement obligations.

I am suggesting that for a period of six or seven years we should subsidize the cost of money to enable us to reach a competitive level. Let us pay that simple price as Canadians. Let us do it and not be too concerned about what we are doing. Let us look at it in terms of the subsidies that have been poured into the Atlantic region, particularly Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, in years past, and which will have to be poured into it in future years until we build the market that will attract manufacturing industries.

Once the project is built, let us subsidize the cost of money over and above the competitive level, up to the point where the price per kilowatt here is competitive. In other words, let us tap the American market. Let us benefit the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick with massive, cheap energy the like of which has not been conceived in Canada previously. Mr. Speaker, where have you ever seen a report dealing so casually with billions of kilowatt hours? You have not seen any other and you will not see any other, because this situation exists nowhere in North America except the Bay of Fundy. We are shortsighted in not going ahead with this project. We are doing ourselves and Canada a disservice. The failure to go ahead with it now does not mean we will not have to go ahead with it in the future. We will have to go ahead with it in the future. We will have to go ahead with the development within the next decade, because we do not have any other sources of energy.

I have talked about pollution. If we do not think pollution is important, the message has not got through from the government down to the grass roots. It got through to me, Mr. Speaker, and I am aware of it. I do my laundry at home, and I do not buy the type of detergent about which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) talks; I buy the other stuff that does not have a pollutant in it. Much as we need electric energy, I cannot conceive of supporting any project that would spread pollution. I say that we should consider the stable cost factor that is represented by Minas Basin tidal power.

I quote recommendation No. 5, which is to be found at page 22 of the board's report, as follows:

> The board recommends further that additional detailed studies be authorized when (a) the interest rate on money drops sufficiently to suggest the possibility of an economic tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy—

In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, when is that going to be? Who is kidding whom? These 22 pages were designed to justify a no. I think that the whole 2½ feet thickness of study papers and working papers should be referred to an independent, outside agency or body for review, particularly as they apply to the cost of money. I continue the quotation:

> —(b) a major breakthrough in construction costs or in the cost of generating equipment suggests the possibility of designing an economic tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy—

We can wait forever for the sun to shine on Ottawa and the temperature to be 70 degrees all year. That is a bland comment. How will we evolve cheaper methods of developing tidal power unless we get into the business of designing equipment to capitalize on tidal power?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am afraid his time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention a chain of events which has taken place in the last few weeks and which has had a profound effect on the town of Elliot Lake in my riding. I have just returned from a series of urgent meetings with people who are involved in that community—the town council, the leaders of the labour unions, the businessmen's associations and the other people.

A few weeks ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced that the government had become aware that there were negotiations taking place between the Roman Corporation and the Hudson's Bay Company to sell the controlling interest in Denison Mines to that company, and he indicated that the government would move to block this sale, if necessary with retroactive legislation, because the Hudson's Bay Company was controlled by American interests.

A subsequent meeting between the Prime Minister and Mr. Roman seemed to end on a very amicable note with Mr. Roman indicating that the Prime Minister's approach was fair. At the same time there seemed to be an indication in statements by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) that arrangements could be worked out which would allow the government's policy on foreign ownership to be maintained and yet allow Mr. Roman to make his sale. However, last Thursday night the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced the details of the government's rules for foreign ownership and indicated that Canadian mining companies would have to have Canadian ownership of 66 per cent, with no individual foreign owner holding more than 10 per cent.

Last Friday morning Mr. Roman held a press conference in Toronto. I would like to read the news report which came out of that conference, as follows:

Denison Mines Ltd. may consider closing its huge uranium mine at Elliot Lake, Ontario, for three or four years if additional financial resources cannot be negotiated soon.

The chairman of Denison Mines, Stephen B. Roman, told a Toronto news conference today "without additional resources management definitely has to give consideration to closing the mines."

Mr. Roman had originally called the news conference to announce details of a sale of about one quarter of Denison stock to a U.S. controlled corporation.

He used it instead to comment on government restrictions announced last night, that apparently would block the deal.

Mr. Roman said he could not comment on his next step until the government's action had been thoroughly studied. He said many points were left open in the statement by Energy Minister, J. J. Greene, and he added "if possible I definitely will go through with the deal."

This news hit the town of Elliot Lake like a bombshell. Mr. Speaker, this town has been through some very bad years. When the American options to purchase uranium were not picked up in the early sixties, the town went from a boom to a bust situation. We had homes and businesses closed and fortunes lost. Fortunately, the government had introduced a stockpiling program in 1963 and a further one in 1965 which, incidentally, will be terminated on June 30 of this year.

In 1966 things started to pick up. Businesses reopened, homes started to sell and building commenced. During this period the government has poured upward of $100 million into the stockpiling program, which was utilized by the Denison Corporation. Though this program ends on June 30, Mr. Roman has indicated that he has enough uranium on hand to meet all his contractual commitments for the next three years and that he could close the mine and still meet his commitments for this period.

This may well be true, Mr. Speaker, but I say Mr. Roman has a responsibility to the town as well as to his board of directors. The town has been responsible for good things in his life, and he should now act responsibly toward the community. At the same time, I think the federal government has a responsibility to keep the mine open. They have already poured millions into the stockpiling program and if they allow the mine to close they will be faced with a terrific welfare expense, as well as moving expenses for the miners for the next three years.

[Mr. Foster.]

All indications are that world demand for uranium will greatly increase and that the mine will have to remain open. Indeed, Denison Mines closed a contract in the last couple of months with Japanese interests for something like $300 million. I say the government has a responsibility to take whatever action is necessary to see that this mine is kept operating and that the miners do not suffer hardship and unemployment.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments left at my disposal I should like to confine my remarks to the supplementary estimates before the House, with particular reference to those dealing with agriculture which represent approximately half the total estimates.

I should like to divide my remarks into two headings. First, the method by which this scheme is being introduced and, second, the principle behind the issue. First let us deal with the method. In common with many members, regardless on which side of the House they may sit, I do not like to see legislation brought in by means of estimates. The practice of making statutory changes by way of appropriation acts based on supplementary estimates is no way to bring in legislation. The importance of the disbursement of money to farmers as an incentive not to grow wheat is important enough for a piece of legislation or a bill to be introduced in this House.

Dealing with the method, let us look at the estimates and see what is said. This money is to establish a reserve of:

$100 million from which payments may be made in the fiscal year 1970-71 for wheat acreage reduction of $6 per acre.

I do not find any mention of $10 an acre for seeding into grass.

—in respect of such acreage as may be further prescribed by the Governor in Council—

Of course, the Governor in Council can prescribe whatever they like; Members of Parliament have no control over the matter.

—in accordance with the terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council to farmers—

It goes on to say, prescribed by the executive or Order in Council. I am saying that this amount of money should have been granted by means of legislation. Another thing I object to is that on the front page it says that these estimates are for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970. That is the end of this month.

We are asked to approve $100 million for this purpose, but the money is to be spent in the year 1970-71. This is an extremely bad practice.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: It is bad practice to be passing money this year which will be spent next year although it appears in this year's estimates. It should appear in next year's estimates, not last year's. It is a very bad precedent and a bad method that the government has chosen to have this $100 million appropriated.

While on the matter of estimates under agriculture, I see that there are three $1 votes here. This is a very dangerous way to pass estimates. Hon. members do not know what that $1 is for, and there is nothing here to explain it. I say again, Mr. Speaker, that I am definitely opposed to the way the government has chosen to get this $100 million from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Let us talk about the principle of giving $100 million to the farmers to sit and do nothing. This does not meet with my approval at all, and for the life of me I cannot see why an agricultural country such as Canada should have to do such a thing. By the time the money is administered and an army of people are hired to see that the program is conducted according to the regulations, about $200 million of government money will have been spent. Would it not have been better to buy $200 million worth of wheat from western farmers and ship it to starving people in other parts of the world?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: Surely, that would have made more sense than to pay farmers not to produce it. Also, our image throughout the world would not have suffered. Just this morning I heard of a missionary recently returned from India where there are thousands of hungry and starving people. He said that the news is getting to them that Canada is paying its farmers not to produce wheat, and he asks, "How can I go back to India and face these people, as a Canadian?"

This is a paradoxical situation. We have spent millions and millions of dollars on the Department of Agriculture, we have had experimental farms, we have a department of agriculture in every province, agricultural colleges all over the country, we pay civil servants, research people and others to produce a policy of foresight and vision so that we will not find ourselves in this position in Canada. What do we find? We find that beef in Canada is at its highest price since the war days. We know children are going to bed in Canada without having had a good meal of red-blooded, high-protein meat. Why is this, Mr. Speaker? It is because the price of beef is so high that the average family cannot afford to buy it for its children.

There are piles of wheat in western Canada and we do not know what to do with it, yet beef is so highly priced that few can afford to buy it. How foolish can we be? What have all the departmental researchers been doing? Why did they not provide us with a policy that would have averted this situation? Why was no foresight displayed? We live in an agricultural country but import every year about nine pounds of meat per capita. We import lamb, mutton, pork and even beef from other countries of the world, yet at the same time wheat is piling up in Canada. Is that not a strange paradox for this country?

I know some will say that this government should have adopted certain policies. Perhaps that is so, to a certain extent. I think the researchers of the various departments should have told us what policies to adopt in order to avoid our present situation. To anyone who says that the government ought to be the guiding star in presenting policies, I say, "If Alvin Hamilton had been minister of agriculture during these past years, farmers in western Canada would not have been growing so much wheat. They would have seeded to pastures and carrying on a cow-calf program. As a result, more cattle would have been produced and hopefully the price of beef would be low enough for every Canadian to afford it.

Now the government is asking this House to vote $100 million and get it out of this mess. Instead of introducing this measure as a vote in the estimates, the government ought to have introduced a bill which hon. members could debate. That way we might all understand what is to happen in western Canada. As I said before, these estimates apply to 1969-70 but the money will be spent in the period 1970-71.

I shall finish on this note, Mr. Speaker. Some of the best research people live in our country. If they put their minds to it, they can work wonders. Surely, wheat in this country can be used for purposes other than animal and human consumption. For all I know, it might be possible to make silk stockings out of wheat. During the last war the Germans ran their tanks and armour from the product of the lowly potato. Alcohol was distilled from the potato and was ultimately used to drive their vehicles. Yet in this country we sit on mountains of wheat and cannot find a use for it. We tell our farmers not to grow more wheat. How foolish can we be?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That this House do concur in Interim Supply, as follows:

That a sum not exceeding $1,916,293,691.67 being the aggregate of:

(a) Three-twelfths of the total of all the items set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st of March, 1971, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament—$1,857,452,800.00.

(b) An additional six-twelfths of the total amount of Finance item 20, Indian Affairs and Northern Development loans, investments and advances item L35, (Schedule A) of the said estimates —$5,016,500.00.

(c) An additional four-twelfths of the total amount of Industry, Trade and Commerce item 25, (Schedule B) of the said estimates—$1,176,000.00.

(d) An additional three-twelfths of the total amount of Consumer and Corporate Affairs item 25, Transport items 20 and 30, (Schedule C) of the said estimates—$10,211,250.00.

(e) An additional two-twelfths of the total amount of Energy, Mines and Resources item 35, National Health and Welfare item 50, Secretary of State items 15, 25 and 75, Treasury Board item 25, Veterans Affairs item 45, (Schedule D) of the said estimates—$20,431,666.67.

(f) An additional one-twelfth of Agriculture items 10 and 40, Energy, Mines and Resources loans, investments and advancements item L50, Finance item 5, Indian Affairs and Northern Development item 65, Privy Council item 1, Solicitor General item 25, Supply and Services item 10, (Schedule E) of the said estimates—$22,005,475.00. be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending the 31st of March, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-201, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1971, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-201, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We do not have a copy of the bill. We cannot speak to it, but if we had a copy of it, we could look at it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

• (9:50 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce that the business tomorrow will be Government Order No. 77, Bill C-192, an act respecting the Federal Court of Canada. Having made that announcement, perhaps we could call it ten o'clock.

At 9.55 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 25, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

25 March 1970

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. Gérald Fauteux, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 25th day of March, at 5 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier General,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAFIK—USE OF POST OFFICE BOX 4430—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday on a question of privilege the hon. member for Ontario took exception to the fact that mail intended for him and addressed to "My Member of Parliament" was being intercepted when addressed to a certain post office box. The hon. member represented that this action was an interference with his privileges as a member of this House.

• (2:10 p.m.)

While it may well be that this is the kind of situation which might be looked into by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as suggested by the hon. member yesterday, the Chair is bound by the rules and by precedents in determining whether there is a prima facie case on which a motion can be founded.

In particular, as I mentioned yesterday, a matter of privilege which claims precedence over other public business should be raised at the first opportunity. On this point I refer hon. members to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 104(3), as follows:

The matter should be raised at the earliest opportunity. A matter which occurred during recess was refused precedence because it was not raised on the first day of the session.

I also refer hon. members to May's seventeenth edition, page 378, as follows:

A matter of privilege which claims precedence over other public business should be a subject which has recently arisen ... a matter concerning an article in a newspaper published on 6 May was refused precedence because it was not raised till the 14th, and a speech reported on a Saturday because it was not raised until the following Tuesday.

These precedents, which have been observed faithfully over the years in this House, cannot be ignored even in the circumstances stated by the hon. member for Ontario. The hon. member complains of a situation which in fact arose over a month ago. I suggest that the Chair is not at liberty to ignore the precedents which clearly establish that a question of privilege must be raised at the first opportunity. With this in mind, I must come to the conclusion that the hon. member's proposed motion cannot be put to the House.

This ruling obviously does not preclude possible action by the hon. member, or by any other hon. member interested in this question, by other means or under other proceedings. While the matter cannot be pursued at this point as a question of privilege, its several aspects might well be considered, for example, by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, which committee has before it for consideration the estimates of the department concerned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO RIGHT HONOURABLE MEMBER FOR PRINCE ALBERT AND THE SOLICITOR GENERAL ON 30 YEARS OF SERVICE AS MEMBERS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to clarify information which I gave to the House some time ago. The statement to which I refer was correct but it is perhaps capable of misinterpretation, and for that reason I am anxious to remove any possible doubt which may be in the minds of hon. members.

On September 18, 1968, I reported to this chamber on the activities of one of the most select organizations in Canada, one which claimed but three living members, the Prime Minister's Alumni Association. I do not wish to become involved in a debate about the degrees of selectivity, Mr. Speaker, but I do feel it important that I discharge properly my responsibilities by reporting to this House on another, equally select organization, one which claims but two members, The Thirty Year Club.

Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, marks the thirtieth anniversary of the election to Parliament of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. McIlraith).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this record of service to Parliament is indeed a brilliant one. Measured in terms of sheer political survival, these gentlemen have illustrated their ability to understand and to adapt to the changing moods of Canada over a period of three decades.

It is not my purpose, nor indeed am I competent, to comment on the distinguished parliamentary careers of our two colleagues. Their records speak for themselves. I wish only to say that their continued presence here is evidence of the strength and the effectiveness of the democratic process in Canada.

Our friends in the Press Gallery usually use the term "30" to close their dispatches. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, as an hon. member opposite says, that they will not take that as any indication, and that they are astute enough to recognize that "30" will not close the public career of either of these two members.

Today, Mr. Speaker, is the last opportunity for us to look upon these two gentlemen while they are still "under 30." Before they pass that symbolic barrier let me, on behalf of the 261 other members of this House who are well under 30, present them with a touch of flower power.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon the Prime Minister presented the Solicitor General with a red flower, and the right hon. member for Prince Albert with a blue flower.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a great occasion. I am sorry that because this is the day before the recess there are not more of us here, but I am sure those who are agree that the cream of the members of the House of Commons are present.

I congratulate the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) on his long career which is a tribute to him as a parliamentarian as well as to the respect in which he has been held throughout the years by his constituents. Despite the great changes that have taken place in this city, he has retained the confidence of those people whom he has represented for 30 years. He strikes us as a fair man but a man who has obviously never carried fairness to the point where he has extended too much of it to his opponents and thereby run the risk of defeat.

As for the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), it is 30 years since he acquired whatever protection parliamentary immunity affords, in addition to whatever protection the game laws at that time afforded a Conservative in the province of Saskatchewan. He came to the House as a distinguished lawyer and very rapidly became a great parliamentarian. While he was Prime Minister of the country I was associated with him in certain endeavours in another capacity and had full opportunity to sense the depth of his feeling for the country, his compassion for the unfortunate and for the underdeveloped parts of the country. But there is no need for me to emphasize here the compassion of the right hon. member for Prince Albert because every day we see him exercise it toward the ministers of the Crown in the questions he asks.

We honour these two men, and I am proud to be associated with them, proud to be here on this day. On behalf of my colleagues, it is a great pleasure to wish them both the very best on this very wonderful day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is the understatement of the year to say that we have our differences in this House. However, on this occasion when we are extending our congratulations to two of our colleagues I know that the views which have just been expressed by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will meet with unanimous concurrence in all parts of the chamber.

• (2:20 p.m.)

It might seem out of place for me to say that these two members have been here a long time in view of the fact that I was here when these two new boys arrived. I remember their arrival very well. I remember the Solicitor General as a flaxen-haired, dedicated new member. The hair may have receded but the dedication has not diminished at all. On coming here he immediately modelled himself on the late W. L. Mackenzie King. As all hon. members know, the pupil has outstripped his mentor because while the teacher's answers were sometimes ambiguous, the pupil's are now completely incomprehensible.

I think the peak of the minister's career was when he was Government House Leader. All of us who had occasion to work with him developed a deep affection for him and found him to be a man of integrity and good will.

I recall the right hon. member for Prince Albert arriving like young Lochinvar from out of the west. He immediately took on the most formidable opponents he could find, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe and the Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner. He adopted Murphy's law: wherever there is trouble we will find it, and if there is no trouble we will make it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He became one of the most effective parliamentarians in this House. Like the Leader of the Opposition I had occasion to deal with him when he was Prime Minister of Canada and found him to be a man of deep compassion and concern for people. Certainly the people of Saskatchewan will always be grateful to him for the dam which was built on the South Saskatchewan River. I was deeply indebted to him on behalf of my province, as was the government of British Columbia, for the amendments he made in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. Those two provinces who had been carrying hospital insurance out of their own resources for many years were assisted. The amendments he brought in started the movement toward making hospital insurance universal across Canada, and for that the people of Canada will always be indebted to him.

On behalf of my own party and, I am sure, of every hon. member of this House, I extend congratulations to our two colleagues for 30 years of devoted service to the public life of Canada and to this parliamentary institution. We also extend our best wishes and hope they will have many years of good health to enjoy the affection and friendship of their colleagues and the gratitude of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, following the example of the previous speakers, I am happy to say a few words with regard to the announcement just made by the Prime Minister about our two colleagues' thirty years of political life. Those of us who have been in the House for a few years readily admit that to have been a member for 30 years is something quite remarkable, since it means a considerable amount of work. As a matter of fact, in 30 years they must certainly have faced all kinds of political events.

Personally, I have had the opportunity, since 1962, of meeting them and of taking part with them in the debates of the House, and I was thus able to appreciate their talents as parliamentarians.

I cannot, like some hon. members, pride myself on having been here for 30 years, nor can I say that I have seen my two colleagues take their seats for the first time. However, I can recall the events which took place in 1962 and afterwards.

But I have been in a position to see that those two hon. members have always strived to ensure the well-being of the Canadian people. Not only have they been great parliamentarians, but also builders who, through their goodwill, wanted to accomplish something good for all Canadians. If unfortunately they did not fulfil their dream, it is because they have been the victims of a system which prevented them from reaching the goal they had set for themselves.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I was ready to defer to the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith). I so indicated to him but he did not rise. Therefore it is my responsibility to speak first and to express, on this emotion-laden occasion, my deepest and most heartfelt appreciation for what was said by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) as the leader of the New Democratic Party, and the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

Most people do not understand the House of Commons. They do not realize that there develops in this institution a relationship unlike any to be found in other organizations —deep divisions but equally deep feelings of appreciation for all members, each endeavouring in his own way to make his contribution in his day and generation.

The Prime Minister referred to the fact that 30, when used by the press, has a certain connotation, one which I immediately suggest will not apply to me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I look forward to many more celebrations of this kind. I received a couple of years ago from a Jewish congregation in Vancouver, British Columbia, a plaque on which was the tree of life. I inquired from the chief rabbi the meaning of this great honour, and he told me it meant that those who received it would live as long as Moses. I immediately looked up the Scriptures and found that Moses lived for 120 years. I need not tell Your Honour what the reaction was when that news reached Ottawa!

I also wish to point out something that only we westerners can fully understand, and I say this to the leader of the CCF—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The NDP. I was never very good at letters. I still recall him in those days as one of the great orators of the House of Commons. As I was about to say, we westerners realize that even if there is snow on the roof, that does not imply that the fire has gone out in the furnace.

• (2:30 p.m.)

I do not know how to thank my right hon. friend and hon. friends for what has been said here today. It is a long way to look back. We saw the great ones of that day. We saw this House of Commons rise to heights of grandeur. We lived through days of darkness but never despaired. We never feared for the outcome, although daily we realized that we in this country and those within the British Commonwealth of Nations as it then was, stood alone, facing almost insurmountable odds against us.

The House of Commons is a place for which I have not only deep reverence but affection. Each of us as members of this House contributes something to the chamber. Ulysses said he was a part of everyone he had met. The House of Commons is a part of everyone who has ever sat in this chamber throughout its entire history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have seen the House at times when people wonder whether our disagreements are beyond what is reasonable. But the day the House of Commons becomes a place in which the cut and thrust of debate is absent, that day, freedom dies. While we do not all see things the same way, it is essential that each of us should come to realize that the other member has the same desire to help his country.

I will not say more. I have been to the mountaintops and I have been down in the valley. I do not want to mention personal matters, but on an occasion like this, filled with emotion, I do want to say that one's happiness is greatly increased by having a wife to support and to counsel one. I am not passing that on to the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: — by way of a suggestion, but I say to him that if he would follow my advice in that connection he would be amazed at the transition that would take place.

Today I look back over 30 years. Some will say: "What of the House of Commons?" Each of us has his life to live and I can say here today that no one could have had greater happiness than I have known through the fellowship, the friendship and the feelings that pass between those of us who, while we disagree as to the means of achieving them, join in working toward common objectives.

This morning somebody asked me what meant more to me than anything else after all these years as I approach the sunset of life. I sent out to my library, and took these words from John Masefield:

> In the sunset's flush...that most lovely hour
> When the light gentles and the wind is soft
> And beauty in the heart breaks like a flower...

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and friends in this House: This is a day for me to remember.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like my first words to be words of appreciation to my colleagues for this manifestation of their feelings on this day.

The Prime Minister raised a question of privilege and there have been many questions of privilege in this House, although I must say I can only recall raising one in my lifetime. He made reference to the figure of 30 used by the news media. May I remind him that this is a figure used by only one section of the news media—those who rely on the written word—and that the media in this modern age have other sections which rely on the spoken word and on pictures. One of these personalities who attained a great deal of fame in that part of the media used the figure of 39 when he was referring to anniversaries and things of that sort. I wonder what that means in terms of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. Maybe that is not quite equal to the number attained by Moses, but it is quite a large figure in terms of the proponent of that figure on the news media.

I am most appreciative of the gesture of hon. members. It is very interesting, you know, that the whole burden of the attack made against me by the official opposition 30 years ago was that I was too young. Regrettably they have stopped saying it these last few years. But some of them are still very helpful in keeping me here, and I wish them well in that mission in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: When there are two of us mentioned on an occasion such as this it means we were both here together in this House of Commons. I must say that the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert gave me a great deal of difficulty in those 30 years. When he was an opposition member in the earlier days he used to persist in asking questions. In those days, when notice was given of his questions and for written questions, I had to dig up the answers to them. Some of the questions were yards long and obtuse and others were very acute. Then came the time when the right hon. gentleman became Prime Minister of the country, and I had an opportunity to get some back by questioning him. I am sure I got a fair amount back, as the right hon. gentleman will remember. Now that the situation is once again reversed I think he feels—and I am sure I speak for him in this regard—that this is an opportunity for him to get some back from me, but I am afraid he has not been getting very much information from me in the last few years.

Some 25 years ago in this House, or a little more, a distinguished guest speaking from the head of the table—it was during the latter part of the war years—referred to "these tremendous times". I have always remembered that phrase in the context in which it was used then. I believe it is an apt reference to the whole 30 years during which the two of us have had the honour to serve in this chamber. They have, indeed, been tremendous times.

It is true there have been great changes. But throughout all this and whatever vicissitudes of work have been mine, I have become firmly convinced that this parliamentary system of government that we seek to practise gives the best opportunity for men and women and their families to develop their lives to the maximum. I only hope that this institution will be able to address itself to the adaptations that are necessary to meet the changing conditions of this day and the requirements of the future, which are coming upon us very quickly, and to do so in a way that those who come 30 years after us will as well say: "These 30 years have indeed been tremendous times".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members might allow their Speaker to add just one word to what has been said this afternoon. It is a great honour and privilege for me to join with the leaders of the parties who have expressed congratulations and good wishes to the right hon. member for Prince Albert and the Solicitor General for Canada.

The matter was raised as a question of privilege. Some members might say that the question was not raised at the first opportunity, that it might have been raised 30 years ago. However, I will rule, and I am pleased and honoured to have the opportunity to rule, that there is a question of privilege, that it was raised at the first opportunity, and that a motion would be entertained extending unanimously congratulations and good wishes to both the right hon. gentleman and the Solicitor General for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF MAYOR OF WASHINGTON AND WIFE

Mr. Speaker: While I have the floor, and the chair, perhaps hon. members might allow me to bring to their attention the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a very distinguished visitor to Canada and to our nation's capital, the mayor of the city of Washington in the United States, Mr. Walter Washington, and Mrs. Washington.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF MAYOR OF OTTAWA AND WIFE

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should take this opportunity to welcome to our House for the first time since his election to his high office the mayor of the city of Ottawa and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Fogarty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE ON COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TO NIAMEY CONFERENCE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies of letters and telegrams exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec concerning the participation of that province in the Niamey conference which ended recently.

[English]

I should like to table as well copy of the telegram sent by the government of Canada to the government of Manitoba concerning this same subject. In both instances, of course, the documents are tabled with the full consent of the respective provincial governments.

GENEVA DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE—TABLING OF STATEMENT ON CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WARFARE MADE BY CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on February 16 the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) directed a question to me about Canada's attitude on the subject of chemical and biological warfare. In response to that question I should like to table copies of the statement made by Mr. George Ignatieff, our representative at the Geneva Disarmament Conference, on this question.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND VOLUME I, AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that there was tabled yesterday volume I of the Auditor General's report on the public accounts ended March 31, 1969. If there is unanimous agreement, I wonder whether the following could be made an order of the House:

That the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1969, and volume I of the Auditor General's report thereon be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EASTER RECESS—ADJOURNMENT FROM MARCH 25 TO APRIL 6

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when the House adjourns on March 25, 1970 it shall stand adjourned until April 6, 1970, provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS

Question No. 514—Mr. Rynard:

1. Since becoming law, how many applications have been received by accredited hospitals for therapeutic abortions under Section 237 of the Criminal Code of Canada?

2. How many therapeutic abortions have been performed in the accredited hospitals?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. At the request of the Department of Justice, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has initiated arrangements with the provinces to secure monthly statistics on therapeutic abortions performed under the Criminal Law Amendment Act. A majority of the provinces are in the process of setting up appropriate arrangements with individual hospitals. As soon as these have been completed, and returns are made available to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, national statistics will be published on a monthly and annual basis.

LIBERAL CONVENTION, NFLD.—
CNR FACILITIES USED

Question No. 516—Mr. Carter:

1. Was the CN Ferry William Carson used by the Newfoundland and Labrador Liberal Association during the Leadership Convention in that Province October 31-November 1 and, if so, what amount was charged?

2. Were several CN railway cars used by the Newfoundland and Labrador Liberal Association during the same period for the same purpose and, if so, what amount was charged?

3. Was payment made in advance and, if not, has payment been made?

4. If such transportation services were used, upon the authority of whom?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1, 2, 3 and 4. Selling accommodation on trains and ships with the objective of gaining revenues is a normal part of the activities of the Canadian National system and no special authority is required for individual transactions. On the occasion referred to accommodation on the William Carson which was in St. John's for its regular refit, and aboard railway sleeping cars being stored in St. John's was rented to the Association. It is the practice of the Company not to disclose financial details of arrangements made with others.

DEMURRAGE FEES PAID BY WHEAT BOARD

Question No. 1,003—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

For the crop year ended July 31, 1968, and for the crop year ended July 31, 1969, what demurrage fees were paid by the Canadian Wheat Board to (a) ships at the Port of Vancouver (b) ships at the Lakehead terminals (c) CNR for box cars (d) CPR for box cars (e) any other demurrage fees not included above?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): As indicated in the Annual Report of the Canadian Wheat Board for the 1967-68 crop year, $86,187 was paid in respect of demurrage charges in that crop year. Of this amount $80,601 was applicable to vessels loading at the port of Vancouver and the balance of $5,585 to vessels loading at the port of Montreal. Particulars of demurrage for the following crop year, that is 1968-69, will appear in the Annual Report of the Canadian Wheat Board for that crop year when it is tabled in Parliament.

EMIGRATION FROM CANADA 1950 TO 1969

Question No. 1,048—Mr. Robinson:

How many Canadians have emigrated from Canada during each year 1950 to 1969 inclusive, to what countries did they go and have any of them subsequently returned to become Canadian citizens?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports: Estimated emigration from Canada, for the calendar years 1950-1969 and numbers going to United States and Great Britain are shown in the attached Table I. Emigration to other countries is not available. The number of Canadian-born who, after leaving Canada and becoming a national of some other country, returned to Canada and again became citizens are shown in Table II. There are no statistics on the number of Canadian citizens who are non-Canadian born, who leave Canada and later return, and then take out Canadian citizenship.

EMPLOYMENT BY PANARCTIC OIL LIMITED OF INDIANS AND ESKIMOS

Question No. 1,109—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. How many native Indian and Eskimo people are currently employed with Panarctic Oil Limited?

2. In what capacities are they employed?

3. What remuneration do they receive?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. None. Panarctic Oils' operations are conducted by contractors. Contractors working for Panarctic, however, have on their payroll three Eskimos at the Rea Point base camp, one Eskimo at the Drake Point well.

2. All four are labourers.

3. Wages for labourers are $1.75 per hour for an eight hour-day and time and a half per hour for any time in excess of eight hours.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—EFFECTS OF MARIJUANA

Question No. 1,160—Mr. Robinson:

Is the research branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare carrying out any studies on the use of marijuana and its effects on users and (a) if so, have any specific conclusions been obtained (b) if not, when will the Department be in a position to advise on the use and effects of marijuana?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No research is being conducted in the Department of National Health and Welfare on the use of marijuana and its effects on humans. (a) non-applicable; (b) further to above statement, it is therefore not possible to predict when the Department will be in a position to advise on the use and effects of marijuana on humans. However, the Commission of Enquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs is studying the current state of medical knowledge respecting the effect of drugs which are liable to abuse.

5. What is the estimated annual cost of servicing and repairs for the four Boeing 707 aircraft purchased by DND?

6. How many persons will be obliged to receive training to service these aircraft?

7. What will be the duration of this training period?

8. What is the estimated life of the existing Yukon aircraft?

9. What is the intended disposition of these aircraft?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Treasury Board approved the Boeing program January 29, 1970.

2. Two.

3. Yes, total program cost for four DC8/63CF was estimated to be $66.4 million (Canadian Funds).

[Mr. Mather.]

4. Informal discussions concerning the servicing of DC8F and Boeing 707's were held with Air Canada representatives.

5. The estimated annual cost of servicing four Boeing 707 aircraft is $3 million.

6. 283.

7. The longest course is of 19 days' duration, and the shortest three days. Training commenced in February and will be completed in June 1970.

8. The Yukons have an average of approximately 14,000 hours expended life against an estimated life of 40,000 hours. The unexpended life in the Yukons was taken into account in determining the economics of replacing these aircraft with Boeings at the present time. The annual estimated savings to be realized by operating the Boeings in place of the Yukons is six million dollars.

9. The Yukon aircraft will be declared surplus to National Defence requirements and turned over to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for disposal.

SALES OF TREASURY BILLS IN 1969

Question No. 1,350—Mr. Caouette:

1. In 1969, what was the volume of sales of (a) 91-day (b) 182-day (c) 253-day Treasury bills?

2. What percentage do banks have to pay to buy Treasury bills?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. The total volume of Government of Canada three month and six month Treasury Bills sold at tender and issued during 1969 was $6,910,000,000 and $1,785,000,000, respectively. There were no 253 day Treasury Bills issued in 1969, but special bills were issued on three occasions. These had terms to maturity of 268 days, 308 days and 364 days and were issued in amounts of $20,000,000, $175,000,000 and $75,000,000, respectively.

2. Treasury Bills are offered for sale to banks and other primary distributors of Government of Canada securities at weekly Treasury Bill auctions and are allotted at such auctions to the highest bidders. At the tender for three month bills held on February 19, 1970, the last auction before the date of the question, the average of successful bids was 7.66 per cent, and the range of such bids was from 7.65 per cent to 7.67 per cent.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING ACT, 1967

Question No. 1,381—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider the advisability of changes in the Adult Occupational Training Act, 1967, by extending the occupational training courses beyond 52 weeks duration of full-time instruction?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): At the present time a trainee may receive up to 52 weeks of educational upgrading and this may be followed by up to 52 weeks of skill training, for a total of up to 104 weeks of full time training. As part of its continuous review of the Canada Manpower Training Program, the Department of Manpower and Immigration is considering the issue of whether this is the best possible arrangement.

(iv) A personnel climate survey of a departmental area, to examine on a pilot basis the employee morale environment and the potential for improving communications between all organizational levels.

(c) The studies were carried out to develop and apply new organizational concepts and improved management and administrative techniques. Internal resources were not sufficient to undertake the studies.

PORT OF CHURCHILL REPORT

Question No. 1,399—Mr. Simpson:

1. What terms of reference were laid down in respect to the report entitled: "Port of Churchill—Potential for Development" prepared for the Department of Transport and the National Harbours Board by Hedlin, Menzies & Associates Ltd. and Gibb, Albery, Pullerits and Dickson, which was tabled in the House of Commons on January 14, 1970?

2. What was the cost of this report?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Terms of Reference for the Transportation Study of the Port of Churchill, Manitoba: 1. Study the present developments in Manitoba along the Hudson Bay rail route and connecting routes to determine: (a) the importance of Churchill to their initial development and present operation; (b) the importance of these various developments to the Port of Churchill. In addition, if it appears desirable, study possible future developments in Northern Manitoba to determine the importance of Churchill to them, and vice versa. Examples: (i) Nelson River Power Development; (ii) Churchill Forest Products Limited.

Examine the factors influencing cargo flows through the Port of Churchill and identify those factors which may have impeded the growth of traffic, and comment on the possibility of modifying the impediments. In this context, the following should be reported on: (a) effect of short shipping season; (b) shipping services and ocean freight rates; (c) vessel insurance practices; (d) navigation hazards —both at Churchill and the route from Atlantic Ocean incl. Hudson Strait and Hudson Bay; (e) port facilities and services (including manpower); (f) inland transportation rates and services; (g) import commodity distribution practices; (h) policies of federal government agencies directly or indirectly with the marketing of grain; (i) Other factors which may be of relevance.

Examine the cargo handling capability of existing port facilities under normal conditions in relation to (a) current and (b) anticipated traffic flows (see Items 4 and 5 below).

Forecast traffic volume (over 5, 10 and 20 years) that may be anticipated with no major changes in existing facilities and services.

Forecast traffic volumes (over 5, 10 and 20 years) assuming that existing facilities or practices are modified (as may be suggested under paragraph 2 above).

Traffic flows, both actual and potential, should be examined under the general headings of coasting trade and ocean traffic and each of these general headings should be further subdivided as follows: (a) general cargo; (b) bulk cargo; (i) grain; (ii) other bulk commodities.

Report on steps or procedures which may increase traffic flow through the Port of Churchill and estimate the benefits and costs of any expenditures (capital or operating) which may be involved.

In addition to studying Churchill as a deepsea ocean port and rail terminal, (a) appraise its role (both present and potential) as a supply and transportation service centre for Northern Canada; (b) appraise its need for highway transportation.

In carrying out the study, cognizance must be taken of such developments in modern transportation technology as containerization, increased use of larger bulk carriers, bubbler systems, technical innovations facilitating ice navigation cargo submarines, etc.

Questions

Cognizance must also be taken of existing studies, in particular the report by Sir Alexander Gibb & Partners, prepared for the Government of Manitoba, September 1962, "Port Churchill—Future Developments" and the National Research Council study on the "Feasibility of Extending the Navigation Season at Churchill Harbour" December, 1966.

Throughout the study, it will be mandatory to keep in close touch with the Manitoba Royal Commission's work, especially with its comprehensive examination of resources and economic developments in Northern Manitoba.

2. $56,500.

As there is no material suitable for tabling, the minister would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On behalf of the hon. member it had better be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE AUDITOR GENERAL

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE EFFICIENCY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the indication in the report of the Auditor General that all is not yet perfect in the area of government expenditures, can the President of the Treasury Board tell us when the government will be introducing the legislation the Auditor General has been seeking to better define and enable him to carry out his position, duties and responsibilities? Can the President of the Treasury Board give the House the time when this legislation will be introduced?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can give a time. I recognize that there are certain things wrong with the present legislative arrangements in respect of the Auditor General, and to this end studies have been conducted looking toward new legislation. I have not been able to get a satisfactory time as yet from the House Leader so I would hesitate to give any undertaking.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is apparently not only the existing legislation that is not entirely satisfactory. Does the President of the Treasury Board intend to take any steps to ensure that the arrangements in respect of staff for the Auditor General are more satisfactory to the Auditor General so that as an officer of this House he will not be dependent upon the overriding decisions of the minister and so that he will have the staff that he thinks he requires in order to do the job of investigation which obviously, as can be seen from his report, is required?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I might point out in this connection that the authorized establishment of the Auditor General has never up until the present been filled. The numbers authorized have always exceeded the strength. This continues to be the case. If the Auditor General, by filling his establishment up to authorized strength, indicates that it is possible to secure more people for his purposes and that they are indeed available and can be attracted and that more people are needed, then there is no question but that the authorized establishment would be increased. The principal purpose of trying to arrive at numerical ceilings in these cases is rather more for budgeting purposes in an effort to obtain some accurate forecast of the total cost of personnel in the government than to try to impose a manpower ceiling.

Mr. Stanfield: One further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It is apparent that the Auditor General is dissatisfied with the arrangements. Could it be that the positions are set up in such a way and that the salary and other arrangements are such that it is not possible for the Auditor General to have these positions filled under the arrangements which now exist? Is the minister saying the fault is the Auditor General's or would he admit that there must be something wrong with the establishment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REPORT ON ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNAL AUDIT SYSTEMS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. In line with the recommendation contained in the Glassco Commission report that an internal audit system be established in all departments of government and in view of the fact that the Auditor General reports that these have been established in only 13 out of a total of 40 departments, can the minister say how soon these internal audit systems will be established in the other departments?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as part of the internal organization we recognize it is an important problem. Without trying to establish a timetable I can say we are proceeding as rapidly as people can be recruited and the organization put in place to achieve this. It is recognized it is important. Indeed, in a number of major government departments such a system is already in operation.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this program was instituted one year ago does the minister not think it should have been completed by now?

Mr. Speaker: The question clearly is argumentative.

[Mr. Drury.]

CHANGE IN FORMAT OF REPORT

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. I wonder whether the President of the Treasury Board is going to suggest that the Auditor General change the format of the presentation of his report so that it could be more objectively presented and in a fairer manner than is the case at present?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who put you up to that one? Which minister wrote that question for you?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cullen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, following in the footsteps of my friend, the hon. member for Ontario, I do not wish to become involved in a debate, but I think it should be pointed out to members opposite that this is a question I worked on myself as a result of doing a bit of investigation and finding out that if the Auditor General presented a report on his own organization we would find that he overshot his budget—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure it is assumed and recognized by hon. members that all members prepare their own questions and give their own answers.

INDUSTRY

CRITERIA FOR PAYMENTS TO AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the Auditor General's report where he comments on the fact that in excess of $180 million has been paid to automobile companies under Order in Council P.C. 1969-172. In view of the statement by the Auditor General to the effect that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Finance follow criteria additional to those incorporated in Motor Vehicle Tariff Order 1965 and that the officials of these departments appear to place greater emphasis on criteria not included in the Tariff Order than on certain criteria which are included, can the minister tell the House what are the criteria used by the Department of Finance and by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and what is the basis in law for those criteria?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the minister to reply to this question if he can do so briefly. However, it is obvious that basically the question as asked by the hon. member is perhaps complex and the type of question which normally calls for an extended statement on motions. Second, I suggest to hon. members that we should not really get into a detailed discussion of a report which, if I understand the proceedings, was referred to a committee of the House a few moments ago. This having been said, perhaps the minister might reply.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend is following Murphy's law I should like to take the question as notice.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this happens to be Henderson's law and it is very important that we have some information. May I ask the minister whether or not the government intends to act on the Auditor General's recommendation that these criteria which have been used be incorporated in the motor vehicles tariff order in order that the payments made will be made under that order and not by the very dubious method of paying them through orders in council?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Henderson has many duties and one of them is not writing the law. I will be pleased to take my hon. friend's suggestion into consideration.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister, or any minister who is prepared to answer for the government, this question. Since the Auditor General has raised this matter in successive reports, why has no action been taken and why does the government continue to make these payments, which are now in excess of $180 million, by order in council rather than in the way set forth by the statutes of this country?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as an accountant I would simply like to say that accountants make poor lawyers.

An hon. Member: And poor politicians!

GRAIN

SUGGESTED DISSOLUTION OF CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since the Canadian Wheat Board has demonstrated its inefficiency at the international level, in letting mountains of wheat accumulate, could the Prime Minister tell the House if he is considering the abolition of the Commission in order to encourage free trade between eastern and western Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice. I must admit that I did not hear the question very well.

[English]

FINANCE

POSSIBLE REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement yesterday by the president of the Bank of America, the largest bank in the world, that he is confident that the prime interest rate in the United States will drop by June at the latest, does the information the minister has received from the governor of the Bank of Canada and the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada indicate to him that such an eventuality may also take place in Canada in the near future?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has certainly been some easing of interest rates in the United States and in Canada and I am hopeful that, as the effective methods we have followed in fighting inflation are successful, interest rates will ease further.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I notice the minister has been having some difficulty with communication. I wonder whether he has received any communication on the subject from Senator Lamontagne?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, I have not talked to him recently.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO SUICIDES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

I would have preferred not to deal with this matter today, because it is a memorable day for the Solicitor General, but as the House is about to recess for ten days or so, I should like to know—as a fifth suicide has recently happened at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary and due also to charges of negligence laid against the authorities of that penitentiary—if he has ordered a complete investigation on the causes of this disastrous situation.

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, an inquiry is going on into this particular incident. I should add that I am very concerned about the large number of these cases and I am giving attention to trying to find out what form of investigation we should have to discover more than we now know about the underlying causes for the number of suicides in that institution.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST COMMERCIAL SALMON FISHING —REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry arising out of the fact that the House is about to recess and that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will not have completed its consideration of the salmon licencing provisions proposed by the minister prior to the time when commercial fishermen will be applying for renewal of licences in British Columbia. In view of this, will the minister agree to suspend the application of his phase two proposals until the standing committee has completed its consideration? Alternatively, if he will not agree to a general suspension will he agree at least to suspend the application of these provisions so far as Indian fishermen in British Columbia are concerned?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): It would be impossible to accede to this request, Mr. Speaker. A number of the fishermen have already paid their fees for this year.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I address a related question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in view of the reply received from the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Will the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development say whether he agrees that all Indian fishermen, if they are not otherwise able to do so, should be assisted in paying the $100 salmon licencing fee, in order that they may not be squeezed out of their traditional method of earning a livelihood because of the action of his colleague the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry?

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon.—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I gather the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is waiting for a reply to the question he asked a moment ago.

Mr. Barnett: No, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that apparently I am not to get an answer from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I would like to address a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister see that the two ministers to whom I have addressed my questions get together and work out an arrangement which will protect the Indian fishermen of B.C. from being deprived of their basic livelihood?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I shall simply answer by saying that I shall look into this matter and that I intend to discuss it with the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in order to reach a solution.

NATIONAL PARKS

FORILLON—TRANSFER OF LANDS FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARK

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

As more than six million Quebecers are awaiting the development of a national park in Quebec and in view of a statement by the Hon. Marcel Masse in Rimouski two weeks ago, could the minister tell the House whether the province of Quebec has made available land for the development of the national park at Forillon and when work will start on the project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received official confirmation of this land transfer from the Minister of External Affairs or rather of Intergovernmental Affairs of Quebec. As I said before, we will start work when the land is transferred to us.

[English]

POLLUTION

MERCURY CONTAMINATION OF FISH IN LAKE ST. CLAIR

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Following the disturbing information given yesterday relative to mercury contamination of certain species of fish, particularly pickerel, in Lake St. Clair, can the minister say whether further tests indicate that harmful levels have been found in the other large catch in that area, namely perch?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Pickerel is the only species in which have been found amounts of mercury which might be deemed to be harmful. Other important commercial species such as perch are completely free of any of this contamination so far as we can determine.

Mr. McCutcheon: I ask the minister a supplementary question. Has any consideration been given, since the ban on pickerel fishing went into effect yesterday, to support the fishermen who depend on this fishery for their livelihood? Will there be something similar to what was done, for example, in Newfoundland?

Mr. Davis: Yes, this matter has been discussed with the Department of Lands and Forests in the government of Ontario.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has the industry responsible been told to curb this pollution, and has it in fact taken steps to do so?

Mr. Davis: The company which owns both of the plants in Sarnia was approached several months ago by the Ontario Water Resources Commission after we had begun our studies on mercury pollution. The company, was told in effect, to clean up the plants. One plant has done so and the other one is in the process of conversion at the present time.

[Later:]

MONITORING OF PLANTS USING MERCURY

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question about mercury poisoning. I ask the minister whether his department has a list of all the manufacturing plants in Canada which use mercury in their manufacturing processes and might be a source of contamination. If so, are they being monitored for possible contamination?

[Later:]

Mr. Harding: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry a few moments ago and I think he was not aware that I had put the question to him. Might I repeat it? Has his department a list of all the manufacturing plants in Canada which use mercury in their manufacturing processes and which might be a source of mercury contamination and, if so, are they being monitored by his department for possible contamination?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. We have prepared a list of all chlor-alkali plants which use mercury, and these have been checked out by our fisheries research people or by the provincial departments with which we work.

Mr. Harding: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does current legislation under the Fisheries Act allow the minister's department to handle the contaminants which are being put into the rivers, or does the act need amendment and, if so, will the amending legislation be introduced this session?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that his question is not in order.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the House when he expects to introduce legislation setting up the Canada Development Corporation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think it will be brought in within a month or two.

Mr. Thompson: Would the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government has reached a decision regarding the selection of a qualified person to serve as general manager or president of Denison Mines in the event of a takeover by the government?

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONTRAVENTION OF BILL OF RIGHTS BY HATE LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I asked the Minister of Justice whether following the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in The Queen v. Drybones the law officers of the Crown had been asked to give their opinion as to the competence of Parliament to pass the hate literature bill and its constitutionality.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I said at that time, Mr. Speaker, that the law officers of the Crown of course had passed on that bill before the case was decided but that as a result of the right hon. member's question I referred it back to the Deputy Minister of Justice and the law officers of the Crown. They have again confirmed to me that there is nothing in the Canadian Bill of Rights, as interpreted by the Drybones decision, which in any way would invalidate the hate literature bill.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

THE ARCTIC—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he either table a report or make a statement in the House as soon as possible on the results of the high-level discussions on the question of Arctic sovereignty that I understand are going on with the American government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no discussions going on at the present time with the American government about Arctic sovereignty. We did have a meeting last week with Mr. Alexis Johnson who brought some officials here with him to talk about this and other subjects. The next step in the procedure will be bringing legislation before this House.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AVAILABILITY OF DIABETIC FOODS ON PRESCRIPTION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the alarming statement made by a research doctor at the University of Wisconsin that saccharine used as an artificial sweetener and in diabetic foods may be cumulative to cancer-causing levels, and in view of the removal of cyclamates within the next few months, would the minister consider making available diabetic foods on prescription?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): That matter is under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

HAMILTON—ACTION TO REDUCE EFFECT OF LAY-OFFS BY NATIONAL STEEL CAR AND INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANIES

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was a little easier getting your attention today when I did not stand. In any event, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour since the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is not in the House. It has to do with the lay-offs planned by the National Steel Car Company and International Harvester in Hamilton which apparently will affect some 600 skilled and unskilled workers. Is the minister aware of this, and has there been any consultation or dialogue between these companies and his department in an attempt to reduce the effects of the lay-offs by way of financial assistance, special employment arrangements or special retraining programs?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that these problems fall under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario rather than under the federal government. In any event, I will bring the question to the attention of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration because it does not come under the Department of Labour. I do not know what correspondence, if any, he has received on the subject, but I certainly will bring it to his attention.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROTECTION AGAINST REFERRAL SALES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Have the abuses of the sales practice commonly known as referral sales been brought to the attention of the minister and, if so, what action has been taken by his department to protect consumers?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the hon. member is referring to a report from the Canadian Consumer Council, which of course I have read very carefully. The practice can most successfully be outlawed by provincial legislature and the legislature of British Columbia outlawed it last year. I was in Saskatchewan last week, and the legislature there was debating a bill introduced by the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, an amendment to the Direct Sellers Act of Saskatchewan, outlawing the practice in Saskatchewan. I would hope, with the Consumers Advisory Council, that other provinces might take similar action.

[Later:]

Mr. Dinsdale: As a supplementary question, is it the intention of the minister and the government to deal with the matter of referral sales by amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, as recommended by the Consumers Advisory Council of Canada?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the council made recommendations to the provinces and also to myself relative to the Combines Investigation Act. As the hon. member knows, or should know, we are currently reviewing the Combines Investigation Act and I hope to introduce a revised act this session. In the course of that review we are looking at a number of trade practices that may require attention.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LACK OF FOOD FRAUD PROSECUTIONS

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked a question on Monday, as recorded at page 5342 of Hansard, relative to prosecutions under the Food and Drugs Act with regard to economic fraud in the sale of food and food products, and why there were no prosecutions undertaken by my department from early 1969 to November, 1969. The reason is that the statistics on prosecutions were reported for that period by the Department of National Health and Welfare, who were actually undertaking the prosecutions for my department. Since we started doing the prosecutions ourselves in December, 1969, from then to the present day there have been 16 cases initiated, leading to two convictions, and the other 14 are still proceeding.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SYDNEY, N.S.—INVESTIGATION OF HUSTLER CORPORATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but since he is not here I will direct it to his able Parliamentary Secretary. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion recently begun an investigation into the affairs of Hustler Corporation in Sydney, Nova Scotia, with the intention of determining whether there has been a misuse of public funds?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I would have to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

INFORMATION CANADA

QUALIFICATIONS OF NEW DIRECTOR

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question would have been directed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of Information Canada, but he was not in the House on Monday and he is not here today although these are his duty days. Therefore my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the remarks of the new head of Information Canada to fellow federal information officers that he "belongs to a generation for whom the very word propaganda was a dirty word. I don't believe in propaganda"—end quote—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member reached the end of the quote just in the nick of time.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I had to give the quotation before asking the question. I ask the Prime Minister, is this the same Jean-Louis Gagnon who between 1955 and 1958, as set out in Who's Who of Canada, 1968, was the chairman of the committee on publicity and propaganda of the federal Liberal Party in Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question was not in order. Perhaps the hon. member has a different question to ask. I am sure he realizes that the question cannot be asked in these terms. He may have another question that could be accepted from a procedural standpoint.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate you ruling on the question, Mr. Speaker, but I just wanted to bring it to the attention of the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister consider that a man who was the founder of the Quebec Liberal Party in 1955, and served as chairman of the propaganda and publicity committee as set out in Who's Who, could be an objective, non-partisan head of the new service called Information Canada to allay the suspicions of many people in this country that it is going to be a propaganda tool?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned with allaying suspicions which are clearly unfounded. Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon is a very distinguished journalist and has been honoured as such by his fellow members of the press in this country. He has performed an excellent job as a royal commissioner, and whether or not he was active in politics ten years ago to me is irrelevant.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Has the government decided what it is going to do with the third report of the B and B Commission; and if that decision runs counter to the report, what is the position of Mr. Gagnon?

Mr. Trudeau: He would be in the position of other royal commissioners whose reports are not implemented. The question is purely hypothetical but that would be his experience, and it would not be unusual for royal commissioners to be in that position.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister now undertake to table in the House early after we return in April the white paper on social security, so that we can get moving on old age pensions and the war veterans allowance?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the white paper will be ready by the time the hon. member indicated.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When does the Minister of National Health and Welfare believe the white paper will be ready?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Munro: The only assurance I can give, Mr. Speaker, is that it will be ready before the end of this session.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will it be in time for any action to be taken on it during this session?

Mr. Munro: I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING NATIONAL ANTHEM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader. Has he, as a good little Easter bunny, any news for us about the status of our national anthem and the state of negotiations between the government and members of the Weir family with regard to releasing it, so that Canadians can have a national anthem in fact and in law?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that one of the other bunnies will have an opportunity during the recess to discuss this matter with the people involved.

Mr. Forrestall: No progress!

[Translation]

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—EFFECT ON ECONOMY OF QUEBEC

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Has he received any criticisms from the opposition leader in the Quebec legislature (Mr. Bourassa) who recognized at last that the white paper contains some proposals that will run counter to the best economic interests of the Quebec people?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the question as asked is in order. The hon. member is asking whether the minister has received a letter from the leader of a provincial party. It seems to me that the question as put is not in order. The hon. member could perhaps seek to obtain this piece of information by rephrasing his question.

[English]

HIGHWAYS

RECOMMENDATION THAT STANDING COMMITTEE ACT AS NATIONAL PROTECTIVE BODY ON SAFETY

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Transport but in his absence perhaps his Parliamentary Secretary could answer it. Having in mind the recommendation of the Engineering Institute of Canada this week that a standing committee of the House of Commons become, in effect, a national protective body on all matters of highway safety, would the minister consider encouraging such a step?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—AMOUNT OF SUBSIDY ON MANUFACTURING MILK

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, seeking further clarification of the dairy policy for the coming year as announced on Monday by the minister. The minister announced that the subsidy on manufactured milk will be maintained at the same level as this year, namely $1.25 per hundredweight. Does this mean that $125 million will be available if needed, which is the same amount as last year, rather than $10 million less, as was announced some time ago?

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): It is very difficult to know, Mr. Speaker, what the requirements of the Canadian Dairy Commission will be as the farmers associations are negotiating an agreement between themselves at the present time with a view to bringing all producers of industrial as well as fluid milk to contribute to the setting of marketing rates or marketing prices. Once these plans have been submitted to the government, we will be in a better position to know what marketing will cost.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette has the floor.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture if he can tell the House quite clearly, in the interest of the dairy producers, whether or not the $10 million subsidy will still be granted. I think it is important that this question be answered in the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I can only give the same answer. The announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture was based on one of the recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Agriculture. The hon. member for Joliette and my colleague who asked a question a moment ago, moved in the Committee on Agriculture that the price be maintained at $1.25.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

POST OFFICE

GOLDENBERG REPORT ON MONTREAL DISPUTE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Postmaster General. Can the hon. gentleman indicate whether the Goldenberg report on the Montreal postal dispute has been received and, if so, what is its nature? Second, what action will be taken to continue postal service in Montreal beyond the end of the month?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this report will be made to me as Prime Minister. I have spoken to Dr. Goldenberg. I understand his report is ready and that it will be delivered to me later today.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ARCTIC COMMAND POST

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of reports that the minister will personally tour the Arctic during the recess to check locations for a national defence command post there, will he say whether the preliminary studies have been completed in this matter and only his final approval remains?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to correct the hon. member: it is not during the recess but after the recess, from April 7 to 11. We have received some preliminary studies on all the locations we are going to visit. As stated by my hon. friend, the purpose is to find a location for a northern command post. The studies are continuing and will be completed, we hope, when we come back. After that I shall be in a position to announce the location.

SCIENCE SERVICES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POLICY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. I have asked this question several times. I wonder whether during the Easter recess he could prepare a statement outlining our priorities and laying down a science policy for Canada.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not quite understand the end of the question.

Mr. Comeau: I am asking whether the President of the Treasury Board would kindly make a statement after Easter with regard to a science policy for Canada.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think an analysis of the scientific effort of Canada is now being made and a report thereon is likely to emerge soon in the Senate. I think it would be a little foolhardy to make a statement in anticipation of this being done.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO FISHERIES ACT—BUSINESS FOR APRIL 6

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader. Could he inform the House as to when he plans to introduce a new Fisheries Act?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that the balance of the legislation we hope to deal with will be available as early as possible in the remaining part of the session.

While I am on my feet, perhaps I should indicate for the benefit of the House that upon our return on April 6 it is the government's intention to take as the first order of business Government Order No. 5, Bill C-3, an act to amend the Criminal Code.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED HARASSMENT OF FAMILY OF W. A. WILSON

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Like other members I am anxious to help him get started on his second 30 years. In view of the report in yesterday's Montreal Star by W. A. Wilson of certain harassment of his family by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, will the Solicitor General have an investigation made not only into this case but into the extent to which the RCMP is carrying on harassment of this kind?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am quite familiar with the subject matter of the story in the Montreal Star. I must say that the part which related to me personally and to the allegations about the telephone call from me is totally wrong in substance and in fact. As to the other part of the article, I did check into that matter rather thoroughly myself because I was concerned in case there had been harassment by the police. I found that there was no harassment by the police but there was some unfortunate and improper conversation by the police in that case. However, they were properly there, for a proper purpose.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister deal with the other part of my question and inquire to find out whether this kind of harassment has taken place in other cases?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it clear that I found there was no harassment in this case. That being so, I do not know how I can find out if there is similar harassment in other cases. If the hon. gentleman has in mind any other case that he would care to mention, I will certainly have it looked into.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question to the Solicitor General of Canada.

In view of the incident reported earlier, does he intend to ask the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not to question young children about their parents' behaviour?

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is not in the form of an instruction, although that point was discussed rather thoroughly as a result of the Wilson case.

POST OFFICE

INCREASE IN SECOND-CLASS MAIL RATES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I shall not recite the preamble to my question: I hope it will still be intelligible. I ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice whether the second-class mailing rate increases, due to start April 1, will be halted.

Mr. Stanfield: These government members would not know the answer.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General and I would have to take the question up with him.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, since the matter involves several government departments, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer either. I am not sure what the intention of the question is, and will therefore have to answer in the same way as did the Minister of Finance.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, it seems that I should recite the preamble, which is as follows: Since today is the last clear chance in Parliament to stop the statutory increase in second-class mailing rates which is to become effective on April 1, may I ask—etc.

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the hon. member for the preamble. I will try to give him the postcript later.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FEDERAL COURT BILL

MEASURE RESPECTING CONSTITUTION, JURISDICTION, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice and Attorney General) moved that Bill C-192, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think those of us who attended in the House today will agree this is one of Parliament's good days because the Prime Minister and the leaders of the parties showered tributes on two very distinguished hon. members who have enjoyed the confidence of the people they have represented for almost a third of a century. Both hon. gentlemen deserved the great, unanimous tribute of the House of Commons. They have also enjoyed the good opinions of their fellow citizens for many years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), my senior colleague representing Ottawa Centre, is present in the House and I therefore enjoy this happy opportunity to tell him, on behalf of his fellow Members of Parliament representing this metropolitan area, that we admire him for his good work, good judgment, capacity for friendship and loyalty to principle, and we salute him as the senior elected representative, in terms of years of service, of the people of Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is not much that I can add to what has been said about the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). May I say that he is undoubtedly one of the political and parliamentary giants of his age in Canada. I will leave it at that and say we sincerely admire his great abilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Bill C-192 respecting the Federal Court of Canada, the bill for which I bear responsibility, received first reading on March 2. It is designed to effect very substantial changes in the administration of justice in this country at the federal level. In so far as court reorganization is concerned, the bill represents the first significant reorganization of the Federal Trial Court since it was first established in 1875.

For the past 95 years litigants before the Court of Exchequer or the Exchequer Court of Canada have enjoyed but one appeal, namely, an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. I might mention here that no hidden meaning or significance ought to be injected into our abandoning the historical name "Exchequer Court". In truth, the court is no longer the exchequer court; that is, it is no longer a court of the Crown's exchequer because its jurisdiction ranges far beyond fiscal matters. It is not a Crown-oriented court. It is not a court destined or organized to protect the purse at the expense of the citizen. Although the name of the court may have great historical significance and enjoy a great deal of emotional attachment on the part of certain members of the legal profession, the purpose of the court under its present name is not readily apparent to the people of Canada.

The Supreme Court of Canada has been required to act as both a first appellate tribunal and a final appellate tribunal since it became the court of last resort in this country in 1949 so far as appeals from the Exchequer Court of Canada are concerned. This lack of an intermediate appellate court between the Exchequer Court as a court of original jurisdiction and the Supreme Court of Canada has given rise to a number of problems. I should like to mention one or two. First, it has meant that rulings of the Exchequer Court in relation to important matters of practice and procedure have been reviewed only infrequently on appeal, and this in turn has resulted in a lack of satisfactory jurisprudence. Second, it has meant that in recent times a very high percentage of the time of the Supreme Court of Canada has been taken up with appeals from the Exchequer Court. These appeals, in turn, have taken more time than they otherwise would if there had been an intermediate court of appeal to sift the record or to prepare the record on which an appeal is based.

Third, litigants who do not wish to accept a trial judgment as determining their rights and obligations have been forced to appeal immediately to the highest court in the land without the opportunity of going through an intermediate court of appeal. Under this new law as proposed, these litigants will be able to obtain not only a trial on their doorstep, because this court will be a circuit court, but they will be able to obtain as well an appeal at their doorstep, because the court of appeal will also be a circuit court. As a result, I anticipate that only more important matters will proceed to the Supreme Court of Canada, as is now the case with litigation before the superior courts of the provinces.

I have said on several occasions that I hope the Supreme Court of Canada can become a more creative court. In saying this I hope I am not putting myself in contempt. I also hope that it will deal primarily with questions of law, with matters of constitution and matters of public administrative law. The bill dealing with the Supreme Court of Canada that has been read the second time and is currently before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will, after it has been passed, be instrumental in filtering out a good many of the more factual appeals, that is to say, appeals depending merely on an interpretation of fact. The bill now before the House will also ensure that there is a further filtering process.

The Supreme Court of Canada can then be left as a final appellate court dealing with matters of law, matters affecting the constitution of this country, matters affecting public administration and the interpretation of the statutes under which administrative tribunals operate.

I wish at this juncture to underline the fact that the new federal court of appeal will be an itinerant or circuit court of appeal. Like the trial division, it will sit throughout Canada with a view to meeting the convenience of the parties. Indeed, the bill expressly provides in clause 16(3) that this shall be done. In other words, the court will continue the decentralizing process that was begun under the present President of the court. It will bring justice to the people, decentralize the operation of the present court, make the court more accessible, quicker and less expensive.

In addition to the fundamental change in court structure that I have mentioned, the bill proposes what I consider to be an important administrative law change in relation to the superintendence of federal boards, commissions and tribunals. For many years federal boards, commissions and tribunals have been subject to the diverse jurisdictions and practices of the various superior provincial courts in this country. For this reason federal boards, commissions and tribunals can be supervised to a much greater extent than can their provincial counterparts since provincial boards, commissions and tribunals of similar nature can be supervised only by their own provincial courts.

This multiple supervision, with a lack of consistent jurisprudence and application, can work serious hardship not only on the boards and commissions but on those who appear before them. Indeed, hon. members can readily see the possibility of harassment and the possibility of the misuse of this multiple superintending jurisdiction. It is for this reason, plus one other that I shall mention shortly, that the conclusion was reached that this superintending jurisdiction should be vested in a single court that enjoyed the same nation wide jurisdiction as the federal boards, commissions and tribunals themselves. The bill is therefore designed to create a single and uniform basis of superintending jurisdiction in relation to federal boards and commissions and to place them on the same footing in this regard as provincial boards and commissions.

I said there was another reason for this change in the administrative law applicable to federal boards, commissions and tribunals. It appears that the superintending jurisdiction now exercised by provincial superior courts over these federal tribunals arises out of what may be fairly described as pre-Confederation legislation that has not yet been repealed or modified by the Parliament of Canada. That being the case, it seems readily apparent that no significant improvements can be made in the existing superintending jurisdiction of the provincial courts over federal boards, commissions and tribunals by the provincial legislatures and that unless changes are made by Parliament, resort will have to be had to the ancient remedies of prohibition, certiorari, quo warranto, mandamus and the like. What I have said is based on the unanimous judgement delivered by Mr. Justice Fauteux, as he then was, in the Supreme Court of Canada—he is now the Chief Justice of this country—in the case of Three Rivers Boatmen Ltd. v. Canada Labour Relations Board et al, on May 13, 1969.

There is a growing feeling among those who practice law and those who observe the judgments of the courts that these ancient common law remedies are no longer adequate for present-day purposes. We as legislators must surely be certain that when we set up a statutory body to administer the fine legal principles in accordance with defined procedures, or in accordance with the rule of law and natural justice as interpreted by the courts, the jurisdiction we have created and conferred will be exercised properly and for the proper benefit of those for whom it was established. There is only one mechanism that can afford us that satisfaction, and that mechanism is the duly constituted and independent courts of this country.

I believe that our courts must be properly empowered to make certain that the jurisdiction which Parliament has created and given to boards and tribunals is exercised in the way that Parliament intended the jurisdiction to be exercised. For this reason, the bill provides that the new court of appeal will have jurisdiction to review the decisions and orders of the federal boards, commissions and tribunals stripped of the archaic legalisms that have traditionally applied to the old remedies.

I think I must make a distinction here between policy and administration on the one hand and the quasi judicial and judicial aspects on the other. Parliament sets up these statutory tribunals such as the Canadian Transport Commission, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, the National Energy Board and other boards. We deliberately delegate to all those boards and commissions a certain range of policy decisions that have to be made falling within a general area of competence. We do this because we want a certain independence in those decisions, because we want to withdraw the decision-making power to a certain degree from the political arena, and because ministers and departments do not have the necessary opportunity and time in certain cases to deal with and address their minds to those problems.

In so far as policy or the administrative function is delegated, there is no intent that the courts should supplant the policy determined by tribunals and commissions. Parliament delegated the administrative policy to those boards; the courts should not interfere. The courts should not supplant their policy for the policy that Parliament determined should be decided by those boards. There is nothing in this bill that does that.

Where an administrative tribunal—I am talking now within the federal sphere—exercises a judicial function, or that gray area between the judicial function and the administrative function which is known as quasi judicial, where there is a dispute or contest between parties by way of an application for a licence or the determination of a rate structure, or where two or more parties have to be heard and a decision rendered by the administrative tribunal, that judicial or quasi judicial function should be exercised according to certain principles, principles of natural justice. The members of the board should have no conflict of interest. Every party should have an opportunity for a hearing. Each party should have the opportunity to hear the other party's case, cross-examine, obtain production of documents and have before him the evidence upon which the board or tribunal makes its decision.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question in order to clarify a point? Would a party have the right to appeal a decision of the board which had refused to grant a hearing, if the legislation itself gave the board the discretionary power as to whether or not a hearing should be held?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a good question. It will depend on that individual statute. The remedies in this bill are wide enough to go beyond that type of privity clause. This bill sets out the reviewing power quite clearly. Where the principles of natural justice are not applied, where hearings are not granted, where each party does not have an opportunity to make his case, where the board has exceeded its jurisdiction or gone beyond the scope or ambit of the statute which gave birth to the tribunal or the administrative scope with which it was charged, where the board refused to exercise its jurisdiction, where the board has misinterpreted the law, whether the error in law appears or not on the record of that decision, the decision of the board can be set aside. It will not be open to the board to avoid declaring its reasons. The boards will have to declare their reasons. If they do not, that will not forestall the court from looking behind the reasons to ascertain why the decision has been made.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Is the question only on a matter of law, or is it on a matter of fact?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The court will not have the opportunity of reviewing the facts unless the facts were determined in accordance with an error in law. I think the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) understands what I mean. If the selection of evidence was based on an error in law, then, of course, the error in law would open the case to review.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. McCleave: Clause 28 speaks of "perverse or capricious manner".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Indeed, that is in there as well. One of the advantages of this review process will be the mere fact that the process exists. Those who administer and preside over federal commissions and boards in this country will know that their findings are subject to a review of this kind. I should like to recall what Louis Brandeis, one of the great associate judges of the United States Supreme Court, had to say about regulatory agencies. He said that over a period of years an agency begins to reflect the interest of the industry it is supposed to be regulating, and particularly of the establishment in that industry. Thus, the agency charged with regulation of broadcasting tends eventually to reflect the interests of the networks as against those of independent operators. The old Board of Transport Commissioners had the reputation, certainly among the truckers who I represented from time to time, of being a railway board, and so on.

For the independent businessman, for the man trying to succeed in an application which might not be favoured by the establishment, this is a step toward ensuring that he has a fair hearing, that the decision of the commission will be based on a proper interpretation of the law and that the policy embodied in the governing statute, whatever it may be, is fairly interpreted legally. The opportunity now provided for recourse will give such an applicant a better chance when he appears before an agency or tribunal.

Again I underline that the bill will not permit the courts to do the work of these federal boards and commissions. The courts will not substitute their judgment on policy for the judgment of the board. But this will permit the courts to make certain that boards and commissions perform their functions in accordance with the law and as Parliament intended, within their jurisdiction and following the law as laid down.

[Translation]

The bill contains several other elements which need mentioning; for instance, the Petition of Right Act is repealed. In the future, proceedings against the Crown will be instituted by simple declaration. In addition, the same prescription period will apply to the Crown as to the subjects who will thus be placed on an equal footing before the Court.

The bill clarifies and codifies the rules of law which will apply in the future to the production of documents in the course of legal action. But, where formerly their production might have been refused in the public interest, the rules of law provided for in the bill will allow the courts to decide on the merits of public interest by non-production, as opposed to public interest by proper administration of justice, subject to certain exceptions, such as national security, instead of having the government or a minister decide whether a document may or may not be produced.

[English]

The bill will also operate to increase the jurisdiction which has traditionally been exercised by the Exchequer Court of Canada. The court will, of course, continue to exercise its present jurisdiction in relation to industrial property, trademarks, patents and copyrights. It will administer the law of expropriation if Parliament in its good judgment passes the expropriation bill which is now before it. It will continue to be responsible for income tax appeals, estate tax appeals and appeals against decisions in citizenship cases. But it will also exercise new jurisdiction. For example, the new trial division of the federal court will exercise concurrent jurisdiction in relation to bills of exchange and promissory notes, in relation to aeronautics and in relation to works and undertakings extending beyond the limits of a province. This means that a member of the public will have resort to a national court exercising a national jurisdiction when enforcing a claim involving matters which frequently involve national elements.

In this way it will be possible for litigants who may often live in widely different parts of the country to find a common and convenient forum in which to enforce their legal rights. Consider what might happen after an unfortunate tragedy in connection with an aircraft. The passengers may reside in various provinces. Instead of being obliged to institute cases in the province which may have particular jurisdiction, all the claimants will be able to decide on a common forum, thus eliminating duplication of effort, and obtain one judgment.

I should mention also that the bill will give the trial division of the federal court jurisdiction in relation to persons and claims beyond provincial boundaries. Canada, as an international personality, enjoys rights and jurisdiction beyond the territorial limits of the provinces, and there must be a court that has competence to administer the rule of law in that regard.

As a result of the offshore mineral cases decided by the Supreme Court some years ago, provincial boundaries are held to extend only to the low-water mark. I suppose that according to the terms of the judgment this decision would be limited to British Columbia, but there are those who feel the judgment could be more widely interpreted. In any event, in terms of pollution control, in terms of admiralty jurisdiction, in terms of conflict over royalties and oil rights, or litigation involving similar matters beyond the territorial jurisdiction of provincial courts, a way is now open to litigate in the new federal court.

The bill also has important ramifications from the standpoint of navigation and shipping. The ancient and unsatisfactory Admiralty Act is to be repealed and the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the Exchequer Court on its admiralty side will from now on be exercised by the trial division of the federal court. The admiralty jurisdiction has been clarified and extended in relation to such matters as ships' mortgages, through bills of lading and state-owned ships.

[Translation]

Several other provisions in Bill C-192 should be stressed, but I must limit myself to the main points. With regard to the very structure of the courts, I should perhaps mention that the right of appeal from the court of first instance to the federal court of appeal entails no restrictions.

However, an appeal from the Federal Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada can be brought by right, when the value of the matter in controversy exceeds $10,000, or with the authorization of the Supreme Court or the Federal Appeal Court.

It should also be pointed out that the new Federal Court of Canada will be presided by a Chief Justice and an Associate Chief Justice. The Chief Justice will be the president of the Court of Appeal and ex officio a member of the Trial Division, while the Associate Chief Justice will be the president of and a member of the Trial Division and ex officio a member of the Court of Appeal.

Transitional provisions stipulate that the persons who, at the coming into force of the new legislation, were holding the office of judges of the Exchequer Court, will continue in office as judges of the new Court so that their independence and security are preserved.

Furthermore, the bill provides that the Federal Court of Canada will consist at the most of twelve judges, including the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice. Finally, four at least of these judges, that is at least one third of them, will be chosen among members of the Bar or the Queen's Bench of the Province of Quebec.

[English]

I should like to mention briefly the new provisions dealing with the publication of the official reports of the decisions of the court. At the present time the law is wholly silent with regard to the publication of the official reports of the Exchequer Court of Canada, and I have concluded that steps should be taken to provide new procedures for the publication of these reports. To this end, the bill will permit a person holding the office of Attorney General of Canada to appoint an editor and a committee of not more than five persons to advise the editor on the publication of the official reports of the court. The bill expressly provides that each decision reported in the official reports shall be published in both official languages.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I refer to one other provision of the bill which provides that judges appointed after the coming into force of the act will cease to hold office upon attaining the age of 70 years. Consequential changes are to be made in the Judges Act, including those provisions that provide for judicial annuities or pensions.

Although it is recognized, particularly in the atmosphere of today's House of Commons, that views differ in relation to the proper compulsory retirement age of judges, and while it is recognized that exceptional men perform important and useful judicial services after the age of 70 years, it is, I believe, generally felt that we should not in this matter legislate for the exceptional, of whom there are no doubt many, but that we should seek to find the rule that will in its application substantially favour and improve the administration of justice in this country.

This change in the law can be made without any constitutional amendment since we are not dealing here with judges who were appointed pursuant to section 96 of the British North America Act. Hon. members will doubtless remember that in 1960 an amendment was made to the British North America Act to provide for the retirement of provincial superior court judges at age 75. Before that amendment the only retirement was the grave. Although a few questioned the wisdom of that change in the constitution, and although some may question the change in judicial retirement now proposed, I am of the view that this change represents an important step in the right direction.

If this House moves the bill forward, I am sure that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will want to study its provisions very carefully. It is a complicated piece of legislation that involves fundamental changes in structure, fundamental extensions in jurisdiction, and makes what I believe is a very important advance in the public administrative law of this country.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa Carleton).]

I have had the benefit of consulting a number of leading practitioners and academics in law schools who are familiar with the practise of law before our administrative tribunals and the general principles that I hope to introduce in this bill. In addition, I have through the courtesy of the Canadian Bar Association, who allowed me to use their Addressograph facilities, sent out a mimeographed letter to all 13,000 members of the Canadian Bar Association asking them for their comments.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Not advice?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): For their comments.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): You would be charged if you asked for their advice.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am using the absolute privilege of saying that there is no charge attached to any of my words. As the hon. member for Greenwood knows, I did a similar exercise in regard to the expropriation bill. Some 1,200 lawyers asked for a copy of the bill; 400 replied, some in quite significant detail on technical aspects of the bill that perhaps we had not anticipated. There were significant improvements made in the expropriation bill as a result of lawyers across the country writing to me or to some of the members of the standing committee. I hope the same benefit of the advice of the profession can be given in a technical way to this bill.

Again, I believe that this is a further step toward balancing the rights between the citizen and the state, providing some sort of recourse against bigness, remoteness, alienation, distance from the decision-making power. I believe it will give the average citizen the power to enforce his rights against the government and against the structures that government sets up.

This is not the final step by any means. I hope that when this House has the opportunity to consider the report of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) on statutory instruments, Parliament will have a permanent basis for reviewing regulations made pursuant to statutes.

This bill adds a further dimension by allowing the courts of the country to ensure that administrative tribunals and federal boards are exercising their jurisdiction within that jurisdiction and in accordance with the law as set forth by Parliament, and without interfering with, interjecting or substituting policy or administrative discretion. I think that we in Parliament may have to look into an administrative procedures bill some day that will set minimum standards of procedure for these federal tribunals to ensure that federal boards and commissions operate procedurally in accordance with the principles of fair play and what the courts have called the principles of natural justice.

In any event, this measure does go some considerable way, I hope, toward improving an area of the law that has always been vague under the common law—public administrative law, the relationship between the courts and federal tribunals, and between the Crown and the citizen. I look forward to hearing what other members of the House will have to say about the matter.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a rather interesting day in the House of Commons. Perhaps it is of more significance to those of us who are lawyers because we are dealing with this very important measure, but it is also significant because two lawyer members of the House have received a tribute from everybody here. I refer to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and to the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith).

Ordinarily the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) would be replying to the Minister of Juctice (Mr. Turner). This is because the hon. member for Calgary North scrutinizes the Minister of Justice whereas I scrutinize the Solicitor General. However, the hon. member for Calgary North cannot be here today, and I think this is the kind of day on which it is safe to let the Solicitor General disappear from one's view for a while. I hope that after 30 years in the House he has earned at least some small celebration. As a matter of fact, I am going to be irreverent enough to hope that either the Solicitor General or the right hon. member for Prince Albert has bought the other a beer—just one beer; I do not want to be extravagant—and perhaps they are sharing it from two straws.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You don't know them very well.

Mr. McCleave: In any event, I join in the appreciations that have been expressed of their total of 60 years distinguished service.

Mr. Bigg: And sobriety.

Mr. McCleave: And sobriety. I think I know them well enough for that. Certainly they will be perfectly safe company for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) during an evening.

I think the minister is right in changing the name of the Exchequer Court since it has embraced wider purposes than those for which it was originally established. I have put down the irreverent note that we should call this bill the son of the Exchequer Court Act, but that is not really so; rather it is the creation of something that has the flexibility of provincial supreme courts, their ability to move about the country and exercise jurisdiction in certain fields. The aeronautics example given by the minister is probably as good as any. In this regard there will be no controversy. If there is controversy at all when the bill is examined in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, it will be as to certain of its details. In making a few remarks this afternoon I should like to mention one or two matters that bother me and my associates, so that the minister and his officials will have the chance to look at these points over the recess. I should also like to make a pitch for one important amendment to the schedule, one which I think could be made and would be very helpful to a lot of people to whom the new Divorce Act does not apply.

The minister has made much of the provisions of clause 28 concerning appeals from federal boards and commissions to the new federal court of Canada. I think this is an important step. However, I think its application will be a lot broader than the minister suggested. From reading the clause I would have thought some pretty good appeals could be launched on findings of fact, if only to determine whether those findings of fact were erroneous or not, in addition to whether they were perverse or capricious. All in all, I think the provisions relating to appeals from administrative boards, commissions, tribunals, and so on, are very generous and that anybody who feels aggrieved by decisions handed down by such tribunals will really be able to have his day in a federal court.

Federal Court Bill

One thing on which I should like to question the minister—which of course will be a matter taken up later in committee—is whether there was any consultation with the provinces in respect of this change from the limited amount of appeal or scrutiny that exists by provincial supreme courts over decisions of federal boards, and so on. I believe we could get into a field, where provincial supreme courts would be scrutinizing the actions of provincial boards and tribunals and where a federal court would be doing likewise. One would hope common practice could develop. Also, I would hope the provincial legislatures might show the lead. The minister has suggested that a similar type of appeal should exist so that there would tend to be uniformity. Because administrative law is the fastest growing part of the law, I think it is important to have as much uniformity as possible.

The minister mentioned the work of the Statutory Instruments Committee headed by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) and recognized, I believe, quite fairly that we still have not yet reached the stage in this Parliament where we have scrutiny of regulations, Orders in Council, rules and examinations which direct changes of patterns of behaviour of people or corporations. We still have nothing like that in Parliament.

The report tabled by the hon. member on the very last day of the last session sets forth pretty useful remedies, I think. I hope we will get around to it sooner rather than later. I say this particularly because I believe scrutiny as a process is probably a pretty good thing. Perhaps this would provide for correction early in the game so that a person who may feel himself aggrieved by the actions of a federal board or commission would not have to shoulder the rather costly burden of taking his grievance to a federal court in order to seek a remedy. I think the minister agrees with my argument in that regard.

I shall move on very quickly because I understand we will probably hear a knock on the door in 45 minutes' time and I know other members wish to speak. I shall shorten my remarks considerably. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make this point for the minister through you. I think the provisions set forth in clause 31, in respect of a $10,000 floor on the amount involved before an appeal could be considered, will be seriously questioned in the committee. Also, I believe the provision in the same clause in respect of the appeal being to the Supreme Court of Canada by leave of the federal court will be questioned in the committee. I think there will be considerable questions on these two points. We will also have questions concerning clause 41—

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the hon. member if he is aware that the $10,000 figure is to be in harmony with the amount already involved in an appeal from a provincial superior court. Is he also aware that leave can be granted by the Supreme Court of Canada itself at any time?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, I think I can say I am aware of both those points, but I do have objections for the reasons I state. I may be a lone voice crying in the wilderness on both points, but in any event I thank the minister for his interjection. Perhaps in my hurry I am omitting the preamble and other important statements, as I did today in respect of a question relating to first-class mail service.

I think the provision that the minister may declare that certain documents should not go before a federal court represents a power which could be abused. I think that from a practical viewpoint we will have to examine that provision pretty carefully in the committee. One thing that delighted me is perhaps a small point. I refer to the provision that a person who has received an adverse decision of the court cannot be taken into custody under process of execution for debt. In some provinces it is still possible to issue a capias and put someone in jail. I think this is a good, civilized step. I do not suppose anyone has gone to jail for evasion of a federal statute. Perhaps they have, so I had better be careful.

In the schedules there is a reference to a change in the Divorce Act which rather interested me. I have a point in this regard. I hope the minister will consider it before the bill goes to the committee. This change would permit the federal court to hear both petitions for divorce if the two parties should file their petitions on the same day. This is a neat way to deal with such a problem. I have no quarrel with that. However, the point I wish to make is that there still are thousands, perhaps tens of thousands of Canadians—certainly all those Canadians who are temporarily out of Canada—who do not now have a remedy under the Divorce Act of Canada because they simply do not qualify under the residence requirements of that act. It seems to me that obviously they would have the remedy of coming and humbly knocking on the doors of the other place and going through the procedure there which we have had for many years. I am quite convinced they could do that, because this is the court of last resort when there is no remedy in the other courts.

In cases where jurisdiction is in doubt, or in cases where there is a difficulty in respect of the residence requirement of the Divorce Act, the federal court, by a change in the schedule, could handle these cases and thereby save people considerable expense. A point which particularly appeals to me is, as the minister pointed out, that the federal court will go to the people and not be anchored here in Ottawa where it would be remote from the lives of Canadians. I understand it will function in all the provinces and in the territories. The appeal court, likewise, will be in these places so that the people may realize the majesty, if I may use that phrase, of the federal court.

These are some thoughts I have. By and large I hope I have left the impression—I certainly intended to do so—that I think this measure deserves the generous support of members of the House. It is a very important step forward to create a federal court. I would hope we will all unite to give this very important undertaking our unanimous blessing.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention today to disturb the harmonious and almost placid atmosphere that prevails in the House. I think that this is important but highly technical legislation. The appropriate time for serious discussion of this bill undoubtedly will be when it is before the committee. So far as this party is concerned, I undertake that when the matter reaches committee our representatives will do their best to give it a searching examination, because I think it must be accepted that in respect of a bill as sweeping as this in many respects—a bill which could have a very great impact on the property and lives of Canadians, and sometimes an unintended impact—we must exercise the utmost care.

• (4:20 p.m.)

As I read the act, there is in it a vast extension of jurisdiction to the federal court. The court is to be reorganized, and we welcome this feature of the legislation. If there has been a complaint about the Exchequer Court in the past by litigants and by counsel involved before it, it has often concerned the apparent remoteness of the Exchequer Court which usually, although not always, sat in Ottawa, and also about the high level of expense that was often involved in conducting litigation therein. But the proposed reorganization is to make the court more accessible and, I hope, when the rules are written, less expensive. If this is so, it will be a great gain.

The success of the court will depend, as the success of other courts depends, upon the quality of the people appointed to preside over the court. I want to take this opportunity—and sometimes I hate to do it as a partisan member of this House—to commend the minister for the high and non-political nature of the appointments he has made to the bench.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I will not go into detail, but I hope he is setting a tradition which will last a long time. The appointment of people for purely political and regional considerations is not good enough. It has happened in the past, although I do not think it has happened while this Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has held office. As we are creating a new federal court I hope we will continue to have a rule which will ensure that the appointments are made on non-political grounds, on the grounds of capacity to do the job.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No more Liberals.

Mr. Brewin: I think we could have a few Liberals in the court: small "l" liberals especially are badly needed. The most interesting feature of this legislation, in my opinion, is the novel extension of the power of review and control over the findings of boards, commissions and tribunals of a federal nature. It seems to me a very sweeping jurisdiction. I do not want to go into the details of the bill at this point, but I think I detect some confusion—at least it seemed confusing to me—in the bill.

Clause 18 deals with the exclusive original jurisdiction of the trial division to issue injunctions and various other forms of proceeding against any federal board, commission or other tribunal. It seems to me that the language of clause 18 is extraordinarily broad. There seems to be no limit to the degree of control that the trial division is said to exercise under clause 18. Yet when we come to clause 28 which deals with the jurisdiction of the appellant tribunal, we find what to me is a confusing provision. The clause reads:

> Notwithstanding section 18 or the provisions of any other act, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature—

Three alternatives are placed there: the failure to observe a principle of natural justice or a refusal to exercise jurisdiction, errors in law, and perverse or capricious findings of fact without due regard for material before the court. It seems that a much more limited power is conferred on the appellant tribunal under clause 28 than is conferred by clause 18 on the trial division.

I do not know whether the words "notwithstanding section 18 or the provisions of any other act" mean that clause 28 supersedes clause 18. This may be the intention, but I suggest it is not clear and that clause 18 standing by itself seems to give a very wide and extensive power of review. I think these two clauses should be harmonized.

Again, the confusion seems to me to be compounded by clause 28 (3) wherein the court of appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to review a decision, and the trial division has no jurisdiction to entertain any decision or order. I could understand it in cases where the court of appeal has exercised or assumed jurisdiction, but to say that it has jurisdiction although the trial division has none, when clause 18 appears to give a wide and sweeping jurisdiction, seems to me to be wrong. I think we have to give careful attention to both sides of the coin.

I agree with the principle that decisions of so-called inferior tribunals, tribunals with judicial and quasi-judicial powers, should be subject to review. I believe it important that that review be properly and clearly limited, because I think there are very serious dangers that judicial decisions can cause delay and vast expense.

I remember hearing of a case in the United States which had to do with labour relations, the right to be certified and to represent employees, which took four years to go through the various stages of decision in the courts. By the end of the four years the situation being reviewed had totally changed. The effect of allowing too many appeals and too wide a ground for appeal was to tie up the beneficial purposes of the legislation which, for very good reasons, conferred the powers on an expert tribunal. That is a side of the case that must be considered. I hope that when the committee studies this bill it will look at all the cases to see whether we may not have gone too far in this matter.

Just the other day in the Supreme Court of Canada there was a decision relating to labour relations with which I imagine the Minister of Justice is familiar, I would not criticize, if I could, their legal grounds for the decision, but I understand its practical effect is to throw Labour Relations Boards all over Canada into a state of utter confusion. I think that was the Metropolitan Life case. This is a danger that has to be observed when dealing with this matter.

I would like to mention one or two other details before I sit down. Clause 21 deals with an exclusive original jurisdiction vested in the trial division to hear and determine appeals under the Canadian Citizenship Act. These are appeals from Canadian citizenship courts. I call the attention of the minister—this may not be entirely in his jurisdiction because other departments are concerned with it—to the fact that in most practical matters of citizenship there is no appeal at present. Under section 10 of the Canadian Citizenship Act the minister is given the discretion at his own will to refuse a citizenship certificate without giving any reason or any hint as to why he has so acted. Many people who belong to cultural organizations which may have left wing tendencies, people among us who are politically minded, or even people who belong to cultural organizations are denied citizenship by a fiat of a political officer, namely the minister, presumably on security grounds.

These are people who have been in this country for many, many years. It is most unsatisfactory to have to go to them and say, "The minister cannot tell us or will not tell us why he is exercising this jurisdiction. We do not know whether justice is being done or not; we cannot tell you."

I believe that the recent Royal Commission on Security suggested that there be a review board. I believe there can be a review board on this very important matter of jurisdiction. I remember that even during the perils of war, when people were interned on security grounds, a procedure was evolved whereby not all the security details and the sources were disclosed to them, but particulars were given of the basic reasons for their internment, even though these were security reasons. A certain procedure by way of review was vested at that time, I think in the hands of county and district court judges. As I say, this was in wartime.

I do not believe there is any good reason why at this time people should be denied the right to citizenship in this country when very often the right is not of any great practical value but is of immense emotional importance to the people concerned. I do not think citizenship should be denied without any right of appeal. I point out that clause 21 does not deal adequately with that matter, and it is one which must be dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who preceded me and spoke for the Progressive Conservative Party, I express my reservations, indeed more than reservations, in regard to clause 41(2) of the bill. This clause deals with the important question of secrecy and the disclosure of documents when it is alleged that disclosure is not in the public interest. I think that clause 41(1) satisfactorily and adequately sets out the law as I understand it to be at the present time. It gives the court the ultimate right to inspect documents and decide whether the public interest is more strongly on the side of disclosure or non-disclosure, and I suggest that is where the responsibility should be.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question which might allow me to clarify a point made by him and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). Is he aware that the section he has recited really reverses the present state of the law as determined by the House of Lords case of Duncan v. Cammell, Laird which is followed in Canada, namely, that a minister's certificate to the effect that it would not be in the public interest to publish a document will govern and take precedence over a judge's discretion? We reverse this and allow the judge to go behind any certificate, except as subclause 2 says where publication would be injurious to our national security, international relations, federal-provincial relations or would disclose a confidence of the Privy Council. But, in general, we are reversing the whole state of the law and making the production of documents at the discretion of a judge.

Mr. Brewin: I am afraid the minister's intervention illustrates the difficulty which always arises when two lawyers get into a legal discussion, because I have never believed, and do not believe that the decision in the Duncan v. Cammell, Laird case, which has been severely criticized judicially in many different courts, sets out the law of this country. If it did, I believe the minister would be perfectly right. But starting from a different premise to him, I believe that the proper law is as set out in subclause 1, and I do not think it makes any difference. I have said I commend subclause 1, but I do not commend subclause 2 which gives an absolute right to a minister of the Crown by affidavit to prevent the discovery of documents, not only on the vague and general grounds of it being injurious to international relations, national defence or security, or to federal-provincial relations—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That happens every day.

Mr. Brewin: I don't know what would be injurious to federal-provincial relations, but if the minister's ipse dixit, his say so, is to prevail on this question, I feel the opportunities for maintaining secrecy will be carried on. What is wrong with letting the courts, as provided in subclause 1, look at the thing themselves? Surely we can trust the judges that the minister will appoint to the new federal court. Surely we can trust that they will exercise sound discretion. But if this provision preserves an absolute right, it may very well be abused. It has been abused sufficiently in the past to make it justifiable for us to think that it probably will be abused in the future.

If I had time I could cite to the minister case after case of judicial decisions, both in England and in other jurisdictions, where they have spoken about the tendency of the official mind to put a cloak of secrecy around some of their own proceedings when it would be far better, in the public interest, that these things be disclosed. I suggest we can properly leave that question to the courts and that subclause 2 should be deleted from this bill.

There is one matter in which I have been particularly interested. It has to do with the Immigration Appeal Board. Now that the appeal does not lie with the Supreme Court of Canada—it lies with a different tribunal—I would have hoped that the same provision which exists in clause 31 with respect to appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada might be introduced into the new section 23 which is in the schedule, and that that provision would give a right of appeal where the question involved is not one of fact alone. I suggest that the formula used in clause 31 might very happily be introduced into section 23 dealing with appeals from the Immigration Appeal Board.

I am delighted that the net effect of this legislation seems to be to relieve the Supreme Court of Canada of a very heavy or case burden. It seems to me that in the past the Supreme Court of Canada has often been involved in dealing with matters that should not have been before it, sometimes relatively small matters. I know that in the Supreme Court of the United States, another great institution, at least 90 per cent of the cases are of a constitutional nature or have to do with the rights and liberties of individuals.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Or interstate matters.

Mr. Brewin: I believe our Supreme Court of Canada should eventually be performing a similar function. I do not have any doubt that as this place remains busy and legislates, there will be plenty of opportunity for the Supreme Court of Canada to exercise its constitutional jurisdiction. I am glad this bill seems to move in that direction.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we support the general principle of this legislation. All I can do is repeat what I said at the opening of my remarks, that when this bill comes before the committee, the representatives of our party will do their best to submit it to a searching examination to make sure that the excellent intentions that are involved in it are in fact enacted in the wording of the law that Parliament will be asked to pass.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, you will have noticed that the speeches today on this bill have been relatively short. I think the reason is that so far those who have taken part in the debate have been lawyers, and you know, Mr. Speaker, the first admonition of a lawyer is never to talk for nothing—always be paid for it. I do not intend to break that very good rule or legal practice, and I shall be very brief.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) mentioned the problem arising with regard to clause 41 and especially subclause 2. The argument went something like this, that there is no reason to disallow the court or the judges to delve into the secrecy or the reasons for the certificate on national security, and so on. As the hon. gentleman from Greenwood said, surely we can trust judges to delve into this question.

I put it to these hon. gentlemen and to the committee that will be considering this bill that having gone into the reasons for the secrecy, what shall the judges do then? Shall they put in their judgment the reasons why such a document is secret? Shall they disclose it, or sit in camera and not give any reasons? If they give no reasons, I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the role of the judges because then there will be suspicion that somehow there was a political connection and the judges acted in concert with the minister.

I should like the hon. member for Greenwood to reconsider his stand on that matter and consider what would happen if, first, the judges had gone into the reasons why a document was secret and did not publish their reasons. What would the hon. gentleman have said then? And second, if they did not publish the reasons because—

Mr. Brewin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Otto: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brewin: Would he not feel that a judicial mind would be a greater degree of security to a person concerned with the document, and that he would be more likely to accept this than a political judgment by a political officer?

Mr. Otto: I think I would. I think the hon. gentleman would accept the judge's opinion in blank; that yes or no, it is a secret document and should not be published or produced. But a suspicion may still hover in the minds of many other citizens that possibly the judge's decision was not correct, and the same thing could come up again. As it stands, the bill gives much better protection.

The point I want to bring to the minister concerns clauses 19 and 32. The details of the bill be gone into very thoroughly by the committee, but here we are proposing to continue giving constitutional jurisdiction to our Supreme Court. I daresay that is not a good idea for Canada, for the Confederation that we have. It may be a perfect solution to a constitution such as the American constitution and the republican system and it may be good for other nations. However, if we consider our experience in Canada, I wonder whether Supreme Court decisions rendered in regard to constitutional jurisdiction have been beneficial to the unity of Canada or to our whole structure.

We now find that we cannot amend the British North America Act by a mere majority of the House and the Senate, as was originally anticipated, because over the years the Supreme Court has ruled certain things within and others without the jurisdiction of the federal and provincial governments. It also rules, or practically has ruled and now it is accepted, that we must have the consent of the provinces. These were court decisions that we must have the consent of the provinces in order to amend the constitution, otherwise we would have repatriated it a long time ago.

I think the Supreme Court has a great role to play if there is any dispute between a citizen and the state. The Drybones case was probably the first example of where the court exercised this jurisdiction. As most hon. gentlemen know, this was the case of an Indian who was prosecuted under the Indian Act for being drunk in a hotel. The final court decision was that according to the Bill of Rights, which is in our parliamentary library and is bedecked with red ribbons, the punishment was wrong. The decision was that unless there is federal legislation specifically excluding the Bill of Rights, it shall stand. The minister is nodding at me but he might remember that in the Criminal Code, with regard to the breathalyzer test there was no specific exclusion of the Bill of Rights. While it says in the Bill of Rights that a man shall not be forced to incriminate himself—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): By statement.

Mr. Otto: I have very grave doubts about the position of the Supreme Court on constitutional matters. I am much more likely to subscribe to the viewpoint expressed at times by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that there is going to be a meaningful role for the Senate. I know some hon. members would like to do away with the Senate, but that will not happen and a meaningful role can be given to the Senate with respect to just that question, the jurisdiction as between provinces and the federal government. Things change, and with a division of power over a period of 20, 30 or 40 years the whole structure of Canada will change and somebody will have to decide whether one area is no longer to be under the jurisdiction of the federal government and should be under the jurisdiction of the provinces, or vice versa.

For example, today we have the Trent Canal and the Rideau Canal system still under the jurisdiction of the federal government because it was originally a defence measure. Surely that is no longer so and it could easily be transferred to the provinces. But who is going to decide whether such use has expired? I strongly support the view that if the Senate is made up of members on a provincial participation basis, there should be no reason why it should not have that very important role, to decide or keep under constant review the question of jurisdiction. I would much rather see that than have this role continuing with the court.

I understand, of course, that the minister cannot remove this function or jurisdiction from the Supreme Court at the present time because there is no other agency. But I should not like it to be too solidly established in the minds of the people of Canada, and possibly in the mind of the court, that this is the strongest position they can assume. I do not believe that in Canada it should be their main role.

With these remarks I should like to support the bill and join with others who complimented the minister. We know the amount of work he put into this measure and the arguments he has had in connection with it. I hope the committee gives it careful consideration and that it passes.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, with my eye on the clock I shall keep my remarks brief. First, I want to say that the bill brings forward several new concepts in legal systems in Canada and gives more strength to the federal system, raising the status of federal courts and statutes. I believe it points up the great expansion of federal law-making in recent years and the extension of rules and regulations by the federal Parliament. Now it is necessary to recognize that while provincial courts are administered by provincial laws, there is a need for extensive and broad federal courts to deal with federal laws. I think this bill also recognizes the need for more direct means of access to the courts for people with complaints against federal government decisions and actions and, in fact, the increase in the number of such complaints that arise.

I shall refer to two points which have not been referred to by other hon. members. The minister might comment on them. The first relates to the question of veterans' disability pensions and appeals from Canadian Pension Commission decisions. The wording of the clause relating to jurisdiction with respect to appeals is very broad. It appears to give a right of appeal to the federal court of appeal from any federal court, board or commission. But the appendix to the bill does not mention the question of veterans' disability pensions or appeals from the Canadian Pension Commission. To that extent the bill contains an anomaly which ought to be cleared up, and I ask the minister to examine that aspect of the matter. I am also intrigued to see that marshals are to be ex officio officers of federal courts.

An hon. Member: You can almost smell the gunsmoke.

Mr. Aiken: The idea stems, I suppose, from our establishing in this way a federal presence; and we must distinguish and continue to distinguish in courts under federal jurisdiction, between the federal jurisdiction of marshals and the provincial jurisdictions of sheriffs. Will the minister advise us why it was necessary to include both marshals and sheriffs in the bill? Certainly, all this brings to mind the annals of the old American west.

We hope the provisions of this bill will not create the kinds of difficulties which seem to arise south of the border. There jurisdictional conflicts arise when people acting under the federal power step into areas that seem to lie within the jurisdiction of the local or city power. This causes me some concern. Although I wanted to make some other remarks, in the interest of seeing this bill pass I shall say no more.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I had in any event intended to be brief, and since there are only a few moments left for me to speak I am forced to be. I had intended to heap encomiums on the minister's head, and to describe the rungs in the ladder of law reform he is building. However, may I instead touch on several substantive points, including two raised by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

It is true that there is a fairly complex relationship between clauses 18 and 28. Clause 18 apparently retains all the old rights to the prerogative writs and leaves jurisdiction over them in the hands of the trial division, while clause 28 relates to certain new rights of appeal. That clause would appear to supersede clause 18, if an appellant were to take advantage especially of 28 (3).

[Mr. Aiken.]

It can be argued that clause 18 is not necessary at all, and that clause 28 could even have eliminated all recourse to the old prerogative writs in matters pertaining to review of decisions of administrative boards. I think it is fairly safe to predict that clause 18 will not be used very much in the light of advantages of the appeal procedure stemming from clause 28. In fact, it is hard to imagine circumstances which might lead to review under clause 18 and not under clause 28. Therefore, it seems safe to predict that clause 28 will supersede clause 18 from the point of view of practice.

The hon. member for Greenwood also raised the question of the breadth of the grounds for appeal granted by clause 28. Possibly he also had in mind the question of the grounds for review under clause 18. When I was studying administrative law in law school some 12 or 13 years ago, the whole course was devoted to the question of prerogative writs and how to make certain that a case which had been heard by a board came before some reviewing body. Anyone who has experienced that kind of frustration in study or in practice will appreciate the advantages of the tidy and effective procedure provided by clause 28.

It seems that the minister and the department have hit a nice balance. They have not taken away the rightful and necessary freedom of action which a board must have in order to fulfil the purposes for which it was set up; at the same time they have provided that in cases where there is a violation of natural justice, where a body has operated beyond its jurisdiction or where there is an error of law, there is a right of appeal as laid out in clause 28.

I should like to deal with these matters in more detail, but considering the hour I will sit down and await the further proceedings of the House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, while I know this House abhors a vacuum of silence, since I have not suggested another item of business for the House to consider I wonder if we might not sit here in respectful silence until the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod knocks.

Mr. McCleave: There you have it: the program of the Throne Speech is running dry already.

• (5:00 p.m.)

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (5:20 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Parole Act.

An act respecting the labelling, sale, importation and advertising of consumer textile articles.

An act to amend the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act.

An act to establish the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and regulate interprovincial and export trade in saltfish in order to improve the earnings of primary producers of cured cod fish.

An act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

An act to repeal the Deep Sea Fisheries Act.

An act to provide for the dissolution of the Dominion Coal Board and for the repeal of the Canadian Coal Equality Act, the Coal Production Assistance Act and the Dominion Coal Board Act.

An act respecting the use of national safety marks in relation to motor vehicles and to provide for safety standards for certain motor vehicles imported into or exported from Canada or sent or conveyed from one province to another.

An act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act.

An act to provide supplementary retirement benefits for certain persons in receipt of pensions payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to amend certain acts that provide for the payment of those pensions.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1970.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Before adjourning, I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that there will be the usual reception in room 16, where hon. members are invited, as well as members of the press and of course the staff of the House, to review the achievements of this part of the session and to plot the possible achievements of the second part of the session.

[Translation]

I am pleased, as I said a moment ago, to invite my honourable colleagues to come and fraternize at the Speaker's residence as soon as the House adjourns.

[English]

Pursuant to Special Order made earlier this day, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m., Monday, April 6, 1970.

At 5.24 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.
