AGENTS WANTED

Persons desiring to sell the Advance in their districts are invited to call on the Proprietor, D. G. SMITH, at his office, 210 St. John Street, Chatham, N. B.

THE SOUBRETTE.

CHATHAM, N. B., OCTOBER 3, 1895.

When Mary White married the young lawyer, Vincent Allison, she promised him she would leave the stage and never return to it. And it was no secret of release from her pledge that he had kept scarcely any of the many vows he had made to her at the same time.

Of course her name was not Mary White on the play bills. The profession knew her as Antoinette Le Blanc. The leading lady said she was sacrificing when she married. It was absolute madness to give up the stage. But there must have been sedate qualities in her, for she turned from the theatre where she had been applauded nightly and retired so happily into her "bracket" home that the whole period of her stage life began to seem like a dream.

Vincent Allison undoubtedly had a future. If he had paid his court to the deity of home as his own fated wife was doing daily, his marriage might have proved the wisest step in his life. But after a month he returned to his old companions and treated his home much as he had formerly treated his bachelor apartments—a convenient place to visit when all other places were closed.

One day he came home and found the rent man waiting for him. Mary said he had been waiting three hours. She wondered why he didn't wait at the office.

"I'll pay you when I get ready," said Vincent Allison, angrily, "I won't be hounded by your petty bills. If you don't like that you know what you can do."

The agent did. And the next day there was a "dispossession notice" in the house.

While the truckman was moving the furniture to the more modest flat Mary had selected, she, riding on an open street car, saw a great tally ho go by, and Vincent Allison, bordering on the hilarious, was of the party.

Instead of tossing her checks, as he had done formerly when she mentioned domestic needs, he presently gave her in cash rather than she asked for, and said he would hand her the rest "by and by."

Later, still, he sent her with notes to this man and that man in downtown offices. She supposed he was calling in loans he had made them. Time and again she recognized in these business men, those hurried, exacting, folly despising fellows, former habitués of the theatres where she had danced and sung. Of course they did not know her.

Presently she realized she was not collecting old loans, but making new ones. Vincent Allison was borrowing money.

One day a lawyer to whom she went—a man who had tossed her sonnets in the old days, and written her notes offering carriage rides and suppers—threw her husband's letter back to her with the explanation:

"I will not do it. I will not be a party to it. He is borrowing money from everyone he ever knew. Why don't he go to work? He had a better chance than any of us; if he hadn't married that Le Blanc woman. It is inevitable. Their extravagance would break a man with the income of a king."

"Wait a minute," said Mary; and the calm strength of her address compelled him to pause. You have yourself paid a good deal of court to those same women in the past. What you say now makes your motives thin as paper in a not altogether creditable light."

"What court have I ever paid to them?" he demanded.

"I think I have some of your notes—though none of them was ever answered."

"Who are you?"

"Marie Antoinette Le Blanc, and I'm not extravagant. I know how to save, and I'm saving. But I don't think it's fair."

"I beg your pardon, Mrs. Allison. I really beg your pardon. Don't say another word. I was a brute."

He nervously opened his pocket-book. He offered her twice the sum Allison had asked for. But she would not take it. When she got home a messenger boy was waiting for her at the head of the stairs, with a formal note from the lawyer, inclosing the money her husband had asked for. She returned it without a word of explanation.

Vincent Allison did not come home that night, but about noon next day he appeared. With a woman's dread of debt, she had refrained from buying anything; and the scanty luncheon she provided him was by no means equal to the demand of his pampered appetite.

"Why don't you send out and get me something to eat?" he demanded.

"I have no money."

"What have you got the roll you got from Littleton?"

"He didn't—I didn't get any."

But the lie half choked her, and she told him all the truth, and begged him to live differently.

"You have a future," she said, unconsciously repeating the general estimate which his youth had earned.

"Oh, we all have futures," he said. "The trouble is, some of us have pasts as well."

But he gave her a little money, and she went to the market. Awaiting her at the house was Essie Worrall, who used to be the greatest dancer at the Arcade, the lightest of laughter, and the sauciest of speech. Maybe the fact had been too fast for her. Anyway she was penniless now, and friendless and hungry. A former stage hand at the Arcade, now manager at Stout's, the big, cheap, East Side Concert Hall, had offered her a chance.

"And I'm so hungry and weak I can't dance. What will I do, Marie? Oh, what shall I do?"

Mary's heart went out to her in a motherly pity, indeed, the girl was not able to sit up! Her hostess put her in bed, jugged her kitchen utensils for a few minutes, and came in with what looked very like a supper. She was quite a magician in such affairs. Often she had to be. Bessie Worrall grew quiet presently and fell into a deep sleep. Manifestly she had not been so comfortable in a long time. Mary looked at her and then at the clock. It was nearly time for reporting at the concert hall. Failure there meant a good deal to Bessie. Yes, losing this sleep might mean a great deal.

And that is where Marie Antoinette Le Blanc broke her word.

At 8 o'clock she walked down the hall at Stout's and met the manager. He remembered Marie, and was frank enough to express himself as delighted at Bessie's illness since it gave him so valuable a substitute. Few singers ever faced an audience at Stout's in so modest a dress as hers. The auditors, of both sexes, lounging at little tables with bottles and glasses looking idly at this new woman. She sang an old-fashioned ditty, and some of them applauded—but not many. How little she cared.

The audience was a new one which she went on at 11 o'clock. Probably not more than half a dozen persons were there who had seen her earlier. She sang a homely ballad, but they didn't like it. A particularly boisterous crowd of well-dressed people in one of the front sections of the house expressed displeasure. Concert hall moods change a good deal between 8 and 11 o'clock at night. But they had aroused her combativeness and she turned back suddenly. She asked for a quick step, and she danced as few women had ever danced on the shoddy little stage at Stout's. They applauded her warmly. The leader of the orchestra—who had conducted in better places—was glad to second her. And when she asked for a medley—partly spoken, partly sung, and with a piquant dance—she followed her without a hint of rehearsal.

She captured the house and they would not let her go. The manager came back from the bar to revel in the fruits of good management.

And she faced the audience again—a little wearied, her heart full of the miserable sham of the night—all and she sang them a singular song.

For pleasure or pain, for weal or for woe,
'Tis the law of our being—we reap as we sow,
We may strive to evade them, may do what we will;
But our acts, like our shadows, will follow us still.

The painted girls stopped gossiping. The men stopped drinking. Even at the corner of the favored corner she was attentive. She understood—the knew—they wanted more; and she gave it them:

Though life may appear a desolate track
Yet the bread that we cast on the water comes back.
We reap as we sow. O wonderful truth!
Yet a truth hard to learn in the days of our youth.
But it shines out at last like the hand on the wall
For this world has its debt and its credit for all.
For weal or for woe, we reap as we sow—
For weal or for woe, we reap as we sow—
Sow—
"Think that at Stout's," said a man in the favored corner. "Where are you going, Allison?"

Mary, returning to bow her thanks, saw her husband rise from that group and pass out. At the door he was waiting for her.

"I'm much obliged," said the manager. "Tell Bessie it's all right."

Vincent Allison went out next morning and bought some provisions for breakfast. At 9 o'clock he went down town, and at night he came home again. At the end of three months they moved back to their former flat, and six months later he regained his old place in the firm.

Last year the "man with a future" and the "woman with a past" entertained him at dinner, and I don't know a happier home anywhere, nor one which seems more likely to remain happy.

When broken, I beg you to remember three promises that are better broken than kept—Commercial Advertiser.

How Blue Paper was Discovered.

It was by the purest accident that the simple process of tinting with blue paper was discovered. It was the result of sheer carelessness in a woman. The wife of an Eastern paper maker named William East; accidentally dropped of "blue" a small bag full of bluing with which she was about to bluing her washing into a vat of pulp where it lay long enough to give the entire mass a bluish tinge before, to her consternation, she discovered it. So terrified was she at the result of her gross carelessness and its disastrous result that she did not mention the fact to her husband whose dismay at what he considered discoloration and destruction of the entire lot of paper made from the mass was his worry for months.

He considered the paper spoiled and an entire loss, and sufficed it to remain in an out of the way place as unsalable stock for four years, when in order to get it out of the way and to make room for her husband's stock, he sent it to his agent in London asking him to get rid of it at any price. To the paper maker's utter surprise, in a short time he received from his agent an order for a great quantity of bluish paper, and found upon enquiry concerning the sanity of the agent that the bluish paper being a novelty had taken wonderfully with the public. But he was in a dilemma, for he had no idea as to how to give the blue tinge to the paper ordered by his agent and wearily tried without result for many days and nights.

Mentioning his trouble to his wife one day she admitted her carelessness and told of the way in which the pulp happened to become spoiled by the bag of bluing. The paper maker was overjoyed at the revelation, found it an easy task to give the bluish tinge to his paper, and until the time of his death, which occurred many years after, he was unable to supply the great demand for bluish paper, so acceptable and relieving to the eye of the writer.—Boston Herald.

Glass Imitation of Wood.

A patent has been taken out for a singular but ingenious process for making glass veneers. The invention relates primarily to the production of ornamental glass, which may be either semi-transparent or opaque, and is made to represent highly polished wood of any description. When used for veneering, it is particularly adapted for vestibule and other doors, the exterior of the glass having the appearance of polished wood, while in the interior of the house it shows semi-transparent. The process by which this material is produced is to cloud a sheet of ground or plain glass on one side with a liquid dye of the proper color to represent any desired wood. The dye is applied by means of a sponge, which is so manipulated as to bring out the semblance of the grain of the wood upon the surface of the glass. A baffle brush is used to soften the shading. The glass is then covered with photographers' varnish. This leaves the grain clear and fast, without the necessity of using any gelatinous substance, which would render it liable to crack and spoil the effect. To complete the operation the glass is slightly heated, and the various shades required for the particular wood to be imitated are caused to flow over it by means of a syringe. The merging of the shadings into each other is prevented by the heating of the glass. The whole is made semi-transparent by the application of another coat of photographers' varnish which preserves and protects the dyes. The exterior surface then presents the appearance of a finely-polished, solid wood finish.

THE MUTE APPEAL.

Residence in the country is commonly supposed to engender a virtuous and peaceable habit of mind; the simplicity and monotony of its condition to offer no occasion to the passion, and dry solitude to clarify the soul.

There is one such remnant, lying in the southern county, whose healthy slopes and miles of upland, rough with ancient forest, rise broad and high above the green and watered valleys; so that you may walk for hours and perceive no sign of man, save the tiny church spire on the sky-line, or the stone lodge of a game-keeper.

As the odorous spring evenings lengthened, Holt began to grow restless. Without formulating the desire, he felt, diversion he must have, whether fighting or love-making or both.

ported them. On the further side a man was standing on the floor beneath, lashing the clapper to the top of the bell. A patch of light glistened on his black hair, and illuminated a piece of the brilliant red of his cheek.

"What's that?" returned the astonished Holt. "You know what it is," Charlie went on with contained, sullen fury. "You know well enough. I see you and your goings-on down yonder, at more than once or twice. Oo are you! And what yer doing, messin' about? What'd yer mean by the girl?"

Holt regarded the fermenting shoppman with awkward interest. He remembered having seen Charlie hanging about the neighborhood of the mill, but the sight of him had aroused no other curiosity than an idle speculation as to the surname of his fellow-ringer; from his appearance he had thought it should be Gritten, or Pooley, or, perhaps, Chilcot.

"If I might suggest, Mr. Chilcot," said Holt, sullenly, "I should recommend you to mind your own business."

"My name's Moore," retorted the injured Charlie, heaving himself up on the platform so that he stood on the next cross-beam with a narrow gulf between his unconscious rival and himself. Holt looked at the coarse, weak, guileless face, disfigured and swollen with passion, and a pang of pity took him. But the thing is absurd, he thought, and if Mr. Chilcot had only learnt to talk, he said to himself, what an eloquent appeal he would make in this highly-wrought condition.

"It is my business," continued Charlie, and stopped to struggle after words. "God send it ain't too late," he burst out with a lamentable note in his voice; and flinging out his hand, whether of design or not, he struck Holt upon the forehead. Holt caught his wrist like a vice.

"Easy, man, easy," he said. But too fatuous Charlie had got beyond control and cast himself blindly upon Holt whose blood was already kindling at the touch. The two men closed; and in Holt who had ridden himself with a slack rein for months, the fighting fever rose in an instant; he put forth his strength upon his puny antagonist, and in less than a minute had him helpless across his knee under his hand, Charlie's muscles relaxed suddenly, and his head fell back. A horrible terror went through Holt like a knife.

thread, and, by long practice, the beads are placed on strings with inconceivable swiftness. And the children keep an exact count, too, so that the manufacturer knows just how many beads he is sending out. The threads are then tied into bundles.

THAT ACHING HEAD.

What Causes it and How Overcome. How often the remark, "Oh, my head aches," and there are so many varieties of aches and pains the head is subject to all the persistent, racking and torturing misery of Sick Headache. The cause is in most cases the same, the overflow of poisonous uric acid is not extracted from the blood by the kidneys, and accumulating in the blood, causes high and irregular pulse, headaches, mental depression and nausea. Chase's K. & L. Pills tone and restore the kidneys, excrete poisonous matter from the blood, sending it on its way pure and health-giving, curing Headaches, and removing all the attending symptoms from its wake.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC - AND - Stomach and Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years. It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar. It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk. This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the proprietors and manufacturers of the Great South American Nervine Tonic, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by a few of the most learned physicians, who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the general public.

IT IS A GREAT REMEDY FOR THE CURE OF Nervousness, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, Female Weakness, Nervous Chills, Paralysis, Nervous Palsy, Nervous Choking, St. Vitus' Dance, Nervousness of Females, Nervousness of Old Age, Neuralgia, Pains in the Heart, Chorea in the Feet, Falling Health, Broken Constitution, Debility of Old Age, Indigestion and Dyspepsia, Heartburn and Sour Stomach, Weight and Tenderness in Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Frightful Dreams, Dizziness and Ringing in the Ears, Weakness of Extremities and Fainting, Impure and Impoverished Blood, Bile and Carbacules, Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Ulcers, Consumption of the Lungs, Catarrh of the Lungs, Bronchitis and Chronic Cough, Liver Complaint, Chorea in the Feet, Delicate and Scrofulous Children, Summer Complaint of Infants.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutrient necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous derangement.

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS' DANCE OR CHOREA.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely affected with St. Vitus' Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus' Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, and for all forms of Nervous Disorders and Falling Health, from whatever cause.
